Some of them are other diseases, but being brought about by kidney derangement, the only way to cure them is to first get rid of the kidney trouble.

The indefinite symptoms which go with kidney derangement are a sense of general lassitude and indisposition, weakness, sickness, and depression.

Headache, back ache, and pains in the joints and limbs, irregular heart; stomach derangement, vomiting, nervousness, restlessness, sleeplessness, are also indications of diseased kidney poison in the blood.

Whenever you feel "under the weather" it is a good plan to take a few doses of Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy.

When any of the symptoms described above show that your kidneys are weak or out of order, and your system needs bracing, Swamp-Root will afford prompt relief and cure the most chronic and complicated cases.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals; recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney and bladder troubles.

To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you every reader of the Gospel Advocate who will send his name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. will be sent immediately, free, by mail, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. Be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate.

The regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles of Swamp-Root are for sale at all drug stores.

The Gates of Hell.

"And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." (Matt. 16: 18.)

There are several different positions held as to what the "gates of hell" in the above quotation "shall not prevail against." The most commonly received idea is that the "gates of hell shall not prevail" against the church. I wish here to present some thoughts on this passage that I think are worth considering. I do not claim the exposition as original, but I do not now remember from whom I caught the idea.

Webster thus defines the word "gate": "A large door or passageway in the wall of a city, or of an inclosed place. . . . The frame of timber, metal, etc., which closes the passage."

Evidently it is only the "frame of timber, metal, etc., which closes the passage" that can "prevail." When the "gate" or "passageway" is successfully closed by the frame of timber, etc., the gate prevails. If the "inclosed place" in a given instance be a horse lot, the "gates prevail" to keep the horse in or out, as the case may be; if the gates do not prevail, then the horse gets in or out. The "gates of hell" must be the "doors or passageways" into that place, or rather that which closes the passageway. Then if the "gates of hell" prevail, they will keep something denoted by "it" from getting in or out of hell. But as the "gates of hell shall not prevail," "it" will come out of or go into hell. If the pronoun "it" stands for the church, then the church either originated in hell and the "gates of hell" could not prevail to keep it from coming out, or it originated out of hell but is destined to go into that place, and the "gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Is that the church you belong to?

To what, then, does the pronoun "it" relate, for its antecedent? Was there ever anything in hell that its gates could not prevail over or hold within that place? To be sure there was, and it was the soul of Christ. (Acts 2: 31.) In the conversation between Jesus and his disciples in the text the theme was the Sonship of Christ. Peter had just confessed him to be "the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus declares this to be the rock or foundation of his church. (1 Cor. 3: 11.) But he knew that he must die and his soul descend into the confines of hell. If then the "gates of hell" should prevail and hold him there, this truth, this foundation, would be destroyed. But he declares that the "gates of hell shall not prevail against it." He rose from the dead and was thus "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." (Rom. 1: 4.)

C. W. SEWELL.

From China.

Allow me to thank you for publishing my last letter, forwarded by Brother McCaleb, and his notes preceding it. The world is large, indeed, and it is impossible for two or three persons to do all the work of evangelization; yet we must do what we can, and, as a part of the church of the living God, we should be in full sympathy with the rest, while doing each our utmost, and thus show we are obedient to the command: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark 16: 15.)

It has been my privilege to live among the heathen in Japan and China for more than twelve years, and the last year has enabled me to see something of them outside of the treaty ports, so a word or two from me, I trust, will not be out of place.

In addition to traveling in Hupeh I spent between two and three months in Hunan, the most conservative of all the provinces and the last to open to the gospel, if it be yet already opened. As you know, it was opened by the request of England, not that it was opened willingly, but, as we say in China, "muh-in-fah-tsi," or "no help for it." I began my work trembling, not knowing what might befall me. The first place, in which I sold a few Gospels, is to be the treaty port of this province. In it were soldiers, a customhouse, post office, and plenty of opium shops. Five miles farther was a large town, where up to one or two years ago foreigners have had to run on account of the stones thrown at them, one even swimming to get to his boat. Here the magistrate assured me it was peaceful and said he thought I would get through quite safe. They gave me five soldiers to guard me while selling Gospels in their city, but after two or three hours they left me, thinking, I suppose, they were no longer needed, and they were not, for I sold books among them two or three days without guards. In the next city of any size, I sold books for three days and talked on Sunday without an escort. The people were tolerably well behaved. When I left this part and entered another fu, or county, then I found the old-time spirit had not quite died out. The lower class said I was a foreign devil, that I came with foreign devil's books, so I must allow them to be stolen from me and myself either beaten or killed; while the better class of thinkers bought the books, and seemed pleased to talk with me. This occurred in a few places and in one of them I received a kick (not serious) from a lad who did not like to be reproved; and in another I failed to conquer the bad element sufficiently to be at liberty to sell books without stirring the people next to a riot, while the magistrate also confessed his inability to take care of me. In the capital, Chang-sha, the officials deemed it wise to give me an escort of from five to a dozen police, because I had no queue, though in other respects I was dressed like a Chinaman.

However, in all these places I had good sales, and do indeed trust the Lord will enable at least some of them, like others of their country, to read and understand God's way of salvation. Farther down in the province I found the people more friendly. In one place the magistrate asked me to leave at once and come back again, because, in an hour or two later, he was going to have a man executed who had been stirring up antiofficial and antiofficial ideas among the people, and was securing a good following, so he called for soldiers (perhaps as many as a thousand) and had this man and some of his headmen arrested, thinking he could stop the probable insurrection by having the leader executed and intimidating the rest.

Hunan has a population of probably about twenty-five million, some of the best blood, so I am informed, in China, and they are, up to this time, living without a knowledge of the true God, and are ignorant especially of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. True, in a few places, there are gospel halls, where natives, who, I should judge, hardly knew what they were attempting to preach, labor; for until recently no foreigner could live therein. province, for nearly two years, foreigners of the Alliance Mission have lived and been working very carefully; now the London Mission has bought a house and intends settling a preacher and doctor at once in Ich-cheo, the place where the magistrates were so friendly to me.

Between my going and return journeys, a foreign lady who married a Chinaman, formerly of China Inland Mission, came to settle in a town thirty miles south of the capital, but the magistrate desired her to leave. Up to the time I left she was still there and intended staying. In the capital, some scholars offered to assist a Southern Presbyterian to establish a school, but when he came to purchase, etc., they all backed down. This happened only a few weeks ago.

It is not all honey yet to try to labor in China, but shall the four hundred million souls be left to perish? God forbid. Their souls are as valuable as yours and mine. Pray for them and us.
D. F. JONES.

Han-Yang, China.

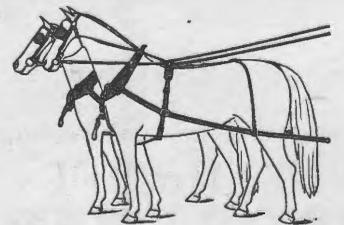

The day is happily past when the man who lives in the country thinks that a jolt wagon is good enough for his riding and driving. He now requires when he goes out on business or pleasure as good a rig as you will find in the cities, and this is right and commendable; for if any one on earth deserves the good things of life, it is the farmer who has worked so hard to advance the material interests of the country. But in buying a carriage or buggy, it is not necessary to go in debt or to pay the fancy prices that have too often been asked in the past. By buying on a strictly cash basis and by dealing direct with a reliable manufacturer, the farmer can now secure a really first-class piece of work for much less than he formerly paid for an inferior vehicle.

This change has been very largely brought about by the Elkhart Carriage and Harness Manufacturing Company, of Elkhart, Ind., which for twenty-seven years has been manufacturing high-grade vehicles and harness and selling direct to users. Their factory, one of the most extensive in the country, has every equipment for turning out fine work at the least cost, but even a great saving is effected by their methods of selling direct. They save all expense of putting men on the road to sell their goods. They save all of the expenses and profits of the dealer, agent, and middleman. The purchaser gets the goods at manufacturer's wholesale prices without anything added for bad debts or middlemen's profits. In most cases this saving amounts to 35 per cent or more.

Another extremely popular feature of this company's methods of doing business is the fact that purchasers run no risk in ordering the goods from a distance, as they ship with the privilege of examining before you pay the bill. If the shipment is not satisfactory in every way, the company orders the goods back and pays the freight charges both ways.

The accompanying illustrations will give the reader but a faint idea of the beauty of the one hundred and seventy-eight styles of vehicles and sixty-eight styles of harness the Elkhart company makes. A better idea can be obtained from the large, illustrated catalogue which they will send free to all inquirers. Do not fail to send for it.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR cooperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

Some weeks ago I read a tract by Flavil Hall, now of Lockett, Ga., who has recently been writing a series of articles for the Gospel Advocate on denominationalism. The tract is entitled: "Denominationalism—Its Opposition to the Teaching of the Word of God." I consider the tract a valuable paper for general circulation. It is a scriptural statement of the truth on an important subject which ought to be understood by everybody. I believe it will do good wherever it is read, and I hope it will be extensively circulated. I do not know the price of it, but from its size I suppose it can be had for about five cents per copy. Address Flavil Hall, Lockett, Ga.

F. D. SRYGLEY.

The following card states a difficulty and asks a question:

"Protection, Kan., February 24, 1900.—Of what religious denomination is the Gospel Advocate? I have searched the paper for its religious views in vain. I know it advocates immersion, which I like; but I cannot determine whether it is of the Baptist or Campbellite persuasion. Please let me know. Address Mrs. S. A. Ross."

Of what religious denomination is the New Testament? The Gospel Advocate tries to be exactly like the New Testament in teaching and practice, without regard to religious denominations, and it always states its "religious views" as clearly as it can. Has anybody ever searched the New Testament carefully to see "of what religious denomination" it is? Nobody understands that the New Testament is of any denomination. There were no denominations in New Testament times, and there ought to be none now. All Christians were "one body in Christ, and every one members one of another" in those days, and they ought to be that way yet. That "one body in Christ" was the church and every Christian was a member of it. Every Christian is a member of that same body now, and no one has any scriptural authority to belong to anything else. The Gospel Advocate is of that "one body in Christ," which is the church, and it is not of anything else. It belongs to no denomination; it opposes all denominations. It is not of the Baptist persuasion, nor yet is it of the Campbellite persuasion. It is persuaded to be a Christian, and nothing else; to belong to the church, which is the body of Christ, and nothing else; to preach and practice everything Christians preached and practiced in New Testament times, and nothing else. Is that right? If not, why not?

The following letter is worthy of attention in these columns because of the important question it raises:

"Palestine, Ark., February 27, 1900.—Dear Brother Srygley: As you have done so much to enlighten the readers of the Gospel Advocate on the church question, will you please give us a lesson on the 'invisible church' theory? I got a Methodist to read your discussion with J. N. Hall. He says that you 'did up' J. N. Hall; but that it is the 'invisible church.' Please dig up the 'invisible church' theory, and greatly oblige your brother in Christ,

"RYAN BENNETT."

I am not sure I know what the "invisible church theory" is. If people would "speak as the oracles of God speak," they would never talk about the "visible church" and the "invisible church." There are no such expressions in the Bible, and if there is any such idea in the Bible, it ought to be expressed in the exact words of the Bible. We would then be sure we have the exact Bible idea. Any idea that is in the Bible can be expressed in the exact words of the Bible; any idea that cannot be expressed in the exact words of the Bible is not a Bible idea. There is but one church in the Bible; it is the body of Christ, and all Christians are members of it. (Eph. 4: 4; Rom. 12: 4, 5; Eph. 5: 22, 23; Eph. 1: 22, 23; Col. 1: 18, 24; 1 Cor. 12: 12-27.) The church is as visible as Christians, for Christians are the church. There was no organization in New Testament times for religious work or worship, but local congregations. The Christians in any locality, and in every locality, were the church—the body of Christ—in that place. The thing that is "invisible" in the New Testament is ecclesiastical or denominational organization of every kind. There is absolutely no organization but local congregations in the New Testament, and there is no scriptural authority for any other organization now. The one and only church in the New Testament is the body of Christ; every Christian is a member of it; and there is no organization but local congregations in it. That which makes a man a Christian constitutes him a member of the church, and every Christian belongs to and works and worships in and through the local congregation wherever he is. Everything else ought to be dug up, and if I cannot dig it up, God can, and he will. "Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 13.)

The following circular letter recently came to me through the mail:

"Guide Printing and Publishing Company, 317 West Walnut street, Louisville, Ky., March 1, 1900.—My Dear Friend: We are making an effort to secure fifteen thousand new subscribers for the Christian Guide, and are anxious to have your encouragement and support in this work. We are trying to make the Christian Guide the paper for our Southern States. You can assist us materially in doing this by sending news items and letters, and by working up a club for the paper. The Christian Guide is $1.50 a year in advance, but in order to reach the fifteen thousand subscribers, we will give it to new subscribers from now until January 1, 1901, for sixty cents, with a free copy to each one sending us ten new names. In clubs of twenty, we will put it at fifty cents. All old subscribers paying up to the present time and sixty cents additional will have their subscription renewed to the first of the year. What we want is to make the Christian Guide a good family paper that will strengthen our faith in the Bible and that will edify us in the Christian life. If you will join us in this campaign, drop us a card. Thanking you for past favors and hoping that we may enlist you in this work, I remain,

"Yours very truly, JOHN T. BROWN."

There was a time when the Christian Guide had more subscribers and a stronger force of writers than any other paper in "our Southern States." Dr. Brents, J. A. Harding, J. M. Kidwill, W. L. Butler, G. G. Taylor, M. C. Kurfees, J. C. McQuiddy, W. H. Carter, and a host of others wrote for it and worked for it. They do not write for it now. Such men represent a constituency of subscribers that cannot be held by cheap rates to a paper which will not publish their articles. Brother Brown recently took charge of the Christian Guide, and he is trying hard to regain what the paper has lost in "our Southern States." His offer to send the paper, in clubs of twenty, until January 1, 1901—ten months—for fifty cents, is very liberal. This is a rate of five cents a month, or sixty cents a year. The price of the paper, however, is not the greatest hindrance to its success in "our Southern States." Its doctrine and editorial policy have been changed, and men who paid two dollars for it then do not want it at any price now. If Brother Brown thinks the statement that "its doctrine and editorial policy have been changed" is not true, I offer the following proof: If he will republish Allen's editorials and the articles of Harding, McGarvey, Butler, Kurfees, Taylor, and others when it was "the paper of our Southern States," and then tell his readers in an editorial note that in his judgment there has been no change in the doctrine and editorial policy of the paper, I will withdraw the statement. Or, if he will make such a fight as Allen made in the editorial columns of the Christian Guide against instrumental music in worship, against the Methodists and other denominations in everything, against the foreign Christian Missionary Society, in its policy with W. T. Moore, and against conventions and societies in general for numerous and flagrant violations of New Testament precepts and precedents, and then open his columns to such men as I have mentioned who are still living and anxious to write for it as of old—if he will do all this, I will admit that the doctrine and editorial policy of the paper are now what they were then, and I believe the writers and subscribers who made it "the paper for our Southern States" then will rally to its support and make it "the paper for our Southern States" again. A religious paper cannot change its doctrine and editorial policy without losing the writers and subscribers who make it what it is. A daily paper which pays for its matter and sells on its merits as a newspaper to people who care but little about its editorial policy and political doctrine can "swap sides" in politics without losing its constituency, and a literary paper which stands upon its literary merit can change owners and editors without damaging its circulation; but when a religious paper changes its doctrine and editorial policy its writers and subscribers abandon it, and cheap rates, "letters and news items" cannot hold them.

The common problem—yours, mine, every one's—
Is not to fancy what were fair in life,
Provided it could be; but finding first
What may be, then find how to make it fair.

—Browning.

The Word of God Powerful.

Henry Hardshell: "Godd morning, friend Faithful. I am glad to have the opportunity to talk with you again. I still desire to become a child of God, but I really do not know whether I am one of the elect or nonelect. I have thought much of what you claimed in our last talk—that the word of God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit are sufficient to guide us in the way of salvation without waiting for the Lord to work miracles or give extraordinary signs outside of the revelation he has given to the world in the Bible. I have been studying the Bible on this point and I find some things to favor your view, but I have not yet made up my mind to give up the notion that the Spirit, independent of the word, must operate upon the heart of a sinner, dead in sins, before he can become a child of God."

Frank Faithful: "What scriptures have you found that in your judgment seem to favor the idea that we ought to believe and obey the word of God without waiting for some sign or miracle independent of that word?"

Henry H.: "It may not be a case exactly in point, but there is one in which Zacharias believed not the word of the angel Gabriel, who foretold him the birth of John the Baptist. It seemed to be displeasing to the Lord, who made him dumb for a season, because he believed not the words of God's angel. (Luke 1: 11-20.) You mentioned the case of Christ raising Lazarus from the dead by the power of his word, and said there were other instances in the Bible which proved and illustrated the power of the word of God. I am much interested in the question and desire to hear you mention other instances to prove this."

Frank F.: "Time would fail us to examine all. We can only select a few here and there. The idea that the word of God is not sufficient in itself is an old one, but was always displeasing to God, who has magnified his word above all his name, so says the psalmist in Ps. 138: 2. Ps. 119, which has 176 verses, contains some praiseworthy mention of the word of God in every verse, except two of them, and I think a better understanding of those two would show the same thing. In some of those verses the word of God is mentioned more than once. It seems to have been in the heart of the psalmist, or in the mind of the Holy Spirit, by whom he wrote, to extol, praise, and magnify the word of God. The expression varies for the sake of euphony, but the idea is substantially the same. In the first verse it is 'law,' in the second it is 'testimonies,' in the third it is 'ways,' in the fourth it is 'precepts,' etc. This could not have been accidental; it was surely designed. Read it at your leisure and note this very prominent feature of this psalm, which shows that in 176 verses there are 174 which clearly magnify the importance of God's word."

Henry H.: "You say the idea that God's word is not sufficient is an old one and displeasing to him; where is an instance to show this, other than the case of Zacharias?"

Frank F.: "It is another Lazarus, who in this lifetime lay perishing with hunger at the gate of the rich man, and who was borne at death, by angels, to Abraham's bosom. Do you remember that account?"

Henry H.: "Yes; and I can readily anticipate the part to which you refer to show the importance of God's word."

Frank F.: "What do you say it is?"

Henry H.: "Why, it was the idea of the rich man in hell to send warning to his five brethren by Lazarus, whom he desired to go to them from the dead; and Abraham is made to say: 'They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them' or their writings. If they would not hear them, they would not be persuaded, though one went unto them from the dead. Am I correct?"

Frank F.: "I think you are; and we ought easily to see if men hear not Christ and the apostles, they would not believe, though the most astounding miracle occurred before their eyes. Can we not safely make this application?"

Henry H.: "I am sure we can, and allow me to own to you, friend Faithful, that I am beginning to see how lacking in faith a man is who now desires miracles and signs to cause him to believe the word of God."

Frank F.: "Since the eyes of your understanding are becoming enlightened, I desire to ask you, did you ever notice how prophetic the words of Abraham have proved to be?"

Henry H.: "What words, and what prophecy? I do not understand."

Frank F.: "The words: 'Neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.' Christ did arise from the dead, and yet with all the astounding proofs of the truth of his resurrection, they, the Jews, as a people, did not believe. How suggestive this fearful instance of unbelief ought to be to every one who is not satisfied with the plain word of God! It indicates that if the signs and wonders they ask to establish their faith in God should occur, they would fail to convince them, though sent in answer to their prayerful entreaties."

Henry H.: "So you think it would be sinful to ask now for God to give some extraordinary sign that we are his children, do you?"

Frank F.: "I do; and if Paul's quotation from Deuteronomy in his letter to the church at Rome (Rom. 10) were rightly understood, we would see that to ask for signs is actually forbidden of the Lord. To ask for signs not only shows a lack of faith in God, but also manifests a disobedient spirit."

Henry H.: "To what quotation do you refer? For I must ask you to explain."

Frank F.: "He says: 'Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down),' This virtually says: Do not pray for God to send Christ down, or anything else down, as to that matter. Do not pray that kind of a prayer. Christ has already come down. 'Or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead). But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach.' In this scripture we see we are forbidden of the Lord to ask for anything to come down or up, but salvation is near to every true believer in God's word. I hope, Henry, you now understand Paul's application of this Old Testament scripture. As the words of Moses, the man of God, were sufficient for the Jews, so the words of Christ, his great antitype, are sufficient to guide all who desire his salvation under the new covenant. Christ was that great prophet, like unto Moses, whom God raised up and said: 'Every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed.' Are you willing, Henry, to accept him as your Savior?"

Henry H.: "This does appear to be very encouraging to me, and I must thank you for opening my eyes to this much truth, but desire you to mention some other of those numerous scriptures which show the all-sufficiency of the word of God."

Frank F.: "I will at our next meeting. To you, Henry, let me quote an old couplet I have known from childhood. It contains the best advice:

"Go, seek the knowledge of the Lord,
And practice what you know."

Improve the Present.

In the improvement of life's opportunities disregard is not to be paid to the smaller ones. It is the improvement of these smaller ones that makes possible the full development of the larger ones, just as the learning of the alphabet makes possible one's ability to read. The individual cannot stand on the mountain's summit and gaze upon the enchanting vision of nature below him unless he shall begin at the base of the mountain and ascend its shaggy sides step by step to it; so we cannot ascend to the higher and greater opportunities of life, save as we rise to them upon the stones of life's smaller ones. We are first infants and then men, and so we must first improve the small opportunities which the present may present to us and from these pass to the improvement of the larger ones which the present may hold. That is a beautiful apothegm which comes to us in these words: "Despise not the day of small things." Every individual who has selected these words for his motto, or words containing a similarity of import, and has acted in harmony with them, has risen to the summit of success, and let us to us an example that is commendable and worthy of our imitation. Words similar to these composed the motto of Sir Isaac Newton, the greatest mathematician and philosopher of his age, and perchance of any age of the world's history. The golden opportunities that bubbled up from the fathomless ocean of the present he grasped; and, improving the smaller as well as the larger ones, they became jewels whose value was priceless not only to himself, but also to the world to whom his labors and life were given. He climbed to the highest altitude of fame. His star passed into the zenith of immortal glory, and it was thus because he had not despised the day of small things and had improved life's present opportunities. In beautiful modesty, a virtue which always characterizes the truly great soul, he himself thus has spoken: "I know not what the world may think of my labors, but to myself it seems as though I had been but a child playing on the seashore, now finding some pebble rather more polished, and now some shell rather more agreeably variegated than another, while the immense ocean of truth extended itself unexplored before me."

The improvement of the present requires the constant study of the mind and the continuous labor of the hands. Thus if we would improve the present, we cannot put off till to-morrow the things that are born for performance to-day. Each day comes laden with its own golden opportunities; and if we let these opportunities slip through the present into the past, we cannot recall them in order to improve them. They are gone. Regrets cannot awaken them from their long slumber. Like to the dead, their sleep is unto eternity. A diamond sparkled upon the ocean beach. Its brilliancy attracted the gaze of a pedestrian. Inactively he gazed upon it. While in this state of inactivity, the tide came in, and the sportive waves washed it far out to sea, and that which would have enriched him was to him lost for evermore. In like manner a golden opportunity to every individual glistens upon the beach of the ocean of the present. As you gaze upon it, put forth no action to obtain it, and the tide of the past will come in and wash it out into its mighty sea and leave you as poor upon the ocean's beach as ever before. In this connection how beautiful are the words of the immortal poet, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow!

Trust no future, however pleasant;
Let the dead past bury its dead;
Act—act in the living present,
Heart within and God o'erhead.

The individual who improves the present opportunities of life is not to be classed with idlers or loiterers. He has no time to spend with the idler, who usually occupies a goods box in front of a dry goods store or some other public place, whittling shavings for a pastime, or else with his mouth full of tobacco, the spittle of which is visible upon his foul lips, entertaining his baser companions with unchaste conversation and indecent stories. He is never found in the company of the loiterer, whose retreat is usually the saloon, to which he repairs to drink a toast at another's expense. Such characters receive none of his time. Upon the tablet of his mind are these words in brilliant letters: "Every moment of time which I possess must be utilized." Gazing upon these words which compose his mighty incentive, his life moves continuously forward to a glorious end, like fast-hurrying waters to their mouth. Such a one is not pulled aside from the improvement of the golden opportunities of life by the maiden of pleasure, who would entice him into some brilliantly-lighted parlor, where, surrounding marble-top tables, upon which appears the sparkling champagne, are seated young men and young ladies engaged in an amusement which disseminates the seed of gambling in the heart, a seed from which ripen the fruits of disgrace, debauchment, and debasement. Perchance she seeks to entice him into the gayly-decorated ballroom, where the sex, encircled in each other's arms, keep time with feet, with body, to the harmonious blending of music as it bursts from the several instruments, unmindful that many times the ballroom has been the stall where virtue was sold for vice; but, unheeding the siren voice which has allured so many to their doom, he keeps steadily onward, improving his present, until at last, an old man with furrowed brow and silvery locks, he stands in the last shadow of his life. One moment he gazes down a long vista of years, and, lo, he perceives not one opportunity that he failed to improve. The next moment he penetrates beyond the shadow, and, lo, he seems to see heaven open and to catch heavenly strains as they are wafted to his ears from angelic harps: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The voice of the present is calling one and all to take the thread of life, cast it into the loom, and weave it to-day. You cannot take the thread of yesterday which you failed to use and out of that weave a noble character. That thread is rotten. You cannot reach out into the uncertain to-morrow and from thence pluck a skein from which to make a beautiful life. God has not yet placed that skein in your reach. So if you would weave, you must weave the thread of the present or weave not at all. The present life stretches out before you to-day as a beautiful lake rippling with silvery waves, which, caught in the fiery scintillations of the sun, glisten like many diamonds. Pluck one of these silvery waves. It is one of life's opportunities. When you have plucked it, improve it, and out of this improvement there will accrue to you a nobility of character and a beauty of life whose attainment you had conceived as existent only in that world of eternal light and life, love and liberty.

Live, then, to-day, and nobly live.
And God to you an eternity of bliss will give.

The Fellowship. No. 2.

The great things of this partnership are supplied by divine power. The love of God, the grace of Christ, and the manifestations of the Spirit are from the divine side of the partnership. The gospel, with its facts, commands, and promises, is the summary of all the wisdom and power of God in an effort to save and perfect humanity. Man can do nothing to save himself without this divine plan. He is saved by grace through faith, not by works of his own planning. God has destroyed the wisdom of the wise. As long as a man clings to his own wisdom, on what to do to be saved, he cannot receive God's wisdom, cannot obey the gospel. The part which man performs in the coöperation directed to his redemption is submission to the will of God. Obedience is the whole of man's part in the fellowship.

God and Christ and the Holy Spirit are working together in a way to make man perfect through his obedience. "Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen." (Heb. 13: 20, 21.) "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 8, 9.) "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." (1 John 1: 7.) Our fellowship with God consists of obedience, while his fellowship with us is salvation from sin, with all its accompanying joys and benefits.

But what is our "fellowship one with another?" It consists of communicating with one another in the matter of supplying each other's needs; it is the outward expression of brotherly love. Every partner is ready to supply the needs of his brother, where his brother, walking with him, in light, falls short of any good thing which he himself possesses. He is willing to teach him, exhort him, warn him, incite him to love and good works, and pray for his salvation, because he loves him; he is willing to give and receive; but, beyond all this, he is ready to supply his brother's temporal needs. "But whose bath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" (1 John 3: 17.)

In Acts 2, where it is recorded, "They continued steadfastly in . . . fellowship," it is also recorded that they "had all things common, and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need." "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. . . . Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need." (Acts 4: 32-35.) In Acts 6 we read that "there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration." The complaint was founded on the well-established principle of equality of partners. The seven were chosen and appointed as a board of equalization of the fellowship in so far as it appertained to temporal necessities. In Acts 8 we have account of the scattering of this church by persecution. All, except the apostles, were dispersed. This itself would interfere greatly with their labors to supply temporal necessities. This persecution raged until Saul, the new addition to the apostleship, was sent from Jerusalem to Tarsus. "Then had the churches ["church," R. V.] driven from Jerusalem, then had rest. In Acts 11 we find it at home again at Jerusalem, calling Peter to account for the supposed misdemeanor of preaching to the Gentiles. By long dispersion it must be much hindered in the labors whereby to make bread; but they went everywhere preaching the word and thus broke the bread of life to multitudes of the lost. Some of them went as far from home as Phenicia, Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to Jews. Wonderful distribution of light! They sowed freely, and well they did; for they returned home in deep poverty. A great dearth throughout all the world came in the days of Claudius Caesar, not long after their return.

Their sowing the seed of the kingdom brought a harvest of souls as a first result. It also prepared the way to relieve their wants in time of the dearth. In Acts 11: 29, 30, it is recorded: "Then the disciples [at Antioch], every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea: which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul." Jerusalem had sown to them spiritual things, and now they sow to Jerusalem carnal things in return. This illustrates one important part of the fellowship. "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" (1 Cor. 9: 11.)

It is the duty and privilege of every Christian to be always sowing and reaping. He can sow things spiritual or carnal, and grace may so abound to him that he may be able to reap things both carnal and spiritual. He may sow in one kind and reap in another. He may sow in one kind and reap in both. He may sow both kinds and reap both. And in sowing or distributing to others things spiritual and carnal, he at the same time sows to his own spirit. (Gal. 6: 8.) This is the most important field to him ever touched for cultivation. If he sow not to others, selfishness, covetousness, extortion, and wickedness set themselves up in his heart, and he by necessity sows to the flesh, and corruption will be the harvest by and by. Too many hang around the fellowship to receive and not to give, forgetting that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Once more we find the church at Jerusalem reaping a harvest of carnal things to supply their wants, this time from the Gentiles. "Now after many years I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings." (Acts 24: 17.) Writing to the Roman saints, Paul says: "But now I go unto Jerusalem to minister unto the saints. For it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem. It hath pleased them verily; and their debtors they are. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things." (Rom. 15: 25-27.)

Concerning the generosity of this gift, I quote: "Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia; how that in a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power they were willing of themselves; praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints." (2 Cor. 8: 1-4.)

As to the method of gathering this gift and bearing it to its destination, I ask you to note the following: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. And when I come, whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your liberality unto Jerusalem. And if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me." (1 Cor. 16: 1-4.)

It would be well to pause and note a few things in regard to this example of fellowship: (1) It is a contribution for the poor, not for the clergy or the support of religious institutions which abound among denominations. The scriptures setting forth this fellowship are abused when summoned to the support of collections for all sorts of societies and concerns. (2) Each contributor is required to lay by him in store, not to put into some common church box, or into the hands of a church treasurer. There is no such office revealed in the divine will as a church treasurer. Nor is it proper for each Christian to lay by him in store in raising supplies for the need it; he should put it into their hands, not treasure it up by himself. But in the example before us the poor were in a foreign land, and he could not lay it by them, and hence is ordered to set it apart by himself, having it ready by the time Paul came; and then it was to be put, with other gifts, into the hands of approved men and by them borne to Jerusalem. (3) There is no statement in God's word to the effect that Christians laid by them in store, in obedience to this text, when they met together to break bread. They met on the first day to break bread, and were told to lay by them in store on the same day for the saints far away. But the fact that each laid by him, not by a treasurer who held the funds for all, goes to show that the assembly was unnecessary for compliance with the text; and not being informed that they assembled together and then each laid by him in store, it is too much to assume that they did that way, and establish thereupon the treasurer of the church, the contribution box, and the regular first-day collection for all religious purposes.

Perhaps the previous existence of the treasurer, the fashion of drawing crowds for preaching on the first day, and the crying need for money out of the mixed crowd to support the clergy and their appointments are responsible for putting this collection at the time of being in assembly. But I am perfectly certain that this scripture does not require the laying "by him" to be done in the assembly that breaks bread, or in any other assembly, as for that matter.

A Few Thoughts on the Organ Question.

While I have read more or less on both sides of the organ controversy, I have never been so interested in it as to consume time either in writing or preaching about it. The only plea for its use worthy of consideration is that it is a lawful expedient. The failure to justify its use in the church on the ground that instruments were used in the temple service should be apparent to all. The fact that the church, when first established, was composed of those who were accustomed to their use, and they were not incorporated in the church worship, is strong presumptive evidence against their use.

I have before me an article by Brother K. J. Pearson, in the Firm Foundation, of February 13, 1900, in which the right to use the organ, on the ground of expediency, is about as clearly put forth as I have ever seen it. The gist of the article is contained in an illustration, which I here reproduce: "If my neighbor and I are farmers, engaged in the cultivation of the soil, we are both alike interested in the final result—good crops. In order to succeed we are forced to coöperate with God's appointments. We understand God will do his part in giving a fertile soil, the change of seasons, dew, rain, sunshine, and all the conditions necessary. We have a divine commission to bring the horse into subjection (Gen. 1: 26) and to use him, but no intimation as to how to tie him, or the harness or tools to use. All this is left to human invention and contrivance. If my neighbor uses different harness or tools from mine, I may advise him, but I have no right to fall out with him about it. But if he treats his horse in a cruel and inhuman way, I have a right to remonstrate and do the best I can to make him mend his ways. I recognize his rights and respect them, and in this way we get along in peace and happiness." From this illustration the conclusion is drawn that as the "worship is a coöperation of human agencies with the appointments of God," and that "man's duty is to obey as far as revelation goes," therefore, "this duty of obedience requires a field of independent action, like the farmer is compelled to choose his crops and methods of culture."

If the strife and division over the organ was about its use at home, in the family, then this illustration would be in point; but as the controversy is over its use in the public worship, it is not. The use or non-use of the organ in the family is an individual affair. If my neighbor wants to use an organ and I do not, both are free, and there should be no strife between us, as there should not be if he in cultivating his farm uses the turning plow, and I use the bull tongue plow. His method of cultivation does not affect me, neither does my method of cultivation affect him; so his use of the organ at home does not affect me, neither does my nonuse of it affect him. When it comes to the membership of the same worshipping assembly the case is wholly different. The relation they sustain is not the same as that of two neighbor are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." (Rom. 12: 5.) "That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." (1 Cor. 12: 25, 26.) For public worship these members are to "come together therefore into one place," and, when they come together, to "tarry one for another." (1 Cor. 11: 20, 33.) In the case of this illustration, my using the bull tongue plow forces it upon no one, interferes with no one, forces no one to recognize it as a farming utensil; but when I go to the assembly of the saints if I should take my fiddle (I used to play, and perhaps could play "Old Hundred" now) and play it, would I not be forcing the other members to worship with it? Could I worship with it and the others not? Inasmuch as we have been worshipping for over thirty years without instruments, acceptably and without strife, if my use of the fiddle should stir up strife, would I not be responsible for it? And inasmuch as instrumental music is no part of the "doctrine we have learned," would not Rom. 12: 17 apply to me?

Viewing the matter without prejudice, inasmuch as the churches in days of inspired teachers worshiped God acceptably without instruments, and as no body claiming to be Christians used them for seven hundred years afterwards, and furthermore as the churches of Christ that have sprung up so numerous for the last seventy-five years did not use them and were at peace in this respect for fifty years, I cannot see it in any other light than that those who force them into the service are responsible for any strife that follows. "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things where with one may edify another." J. D. FLOYD.

CREEDS.

The Christian Leader, of Cincinnati, O., is responsible for the statement below: "An open church is the Second Presbyterian Church of Cincinnati, O., of which Rev. E. Trumbull Lee, D.D., is pastor. In a leaflet of January 21, 1900, is read: 'The Presbyterian Church will receive any one who gives credible evidence of being a follower of Christ. We require no assent to a formal creed. An honest confession of Christ as Lord and Master is all that the New Testament requires.'"

From this statement it will be seen that the Second Presbyterian Church of Cincinnati cannot receive "the children of believers," because such cannot give credible evidence of being followers of Christ, nor can they confess with their own mouths the Lord Jesus Christ. As this honest confession is required by the New Testament, it is not safe to set it aside. Hence that church can receive no infants.

It is also encouraging to note that the Presbyterian divine has learned that assent to a formal creed is not necessary to salvation. The acceptance of human creeds has ever been productive of strife and division. Every human creed contains a blessing for only the party which accepts it. The divine creed contains a blessing for the whole world.

"An honest confession of Christ as Lord and Master is all that the New Testament requires." This is requiring no little. An honest confession with the mouth, the belief that is in the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, is no little thing. We sanctify our lips with the very breath that we make that noble confession. It brought death to our Savior, it will bring life to us.

Men are not required to believe the doctrines of human creeds, but all are required to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. "But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 8-10.) The central truth of the Christian religion is that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. Around it every other truth in the system radiates. To believe with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, is to believe the entire Bible. It means to accept it from alpha to omega, the first word in Genesis to the last "Amen" in Revelation. Yes who believes with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ accepts the fish story and all, for the man who can accept the miraculous conception of Christ can as easily accept all the miracles of the Bible. To make an honest confession of Jesus the Christ means to take him as our Prophet, Priest, and King. By that act we say we accept the authority of the Lord and proclaim ourselves as ready to obey his commands.

Jesus' mission to earth was attested by miracles in order that the world might be led to accept him as the Christ. "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book: but these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." (John 20: 30, 31.) Peter confessed: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." The prophecies of the Old Testament center in the truth that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. It is preëminently the truth of the whole Bible. When all church members come to believe it and confess it as they should, lethargy and indifference will vanish away as the morning dew before the rising sun. To believe and confess this truth aright is to day by day present our bodies a living sacrifice, to live "soberly, righteously, and godly" in this present world and to take unto ourselves the whole armor of God.

The apostles would not baptize people until they were assured that they believed in Jesus the Christ. When the eunuch demanded baptism of Philip, he replied: "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him." (Acts 8: 37, 38.) He did not require him to give a Christian experience before he would baptize him. He could not tell a Christian experience before his entrance into Christ. After Peter had preached the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ on the day of Pentecost, he commanded them to "know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." They could not know this without believing it. Hence, when these believers inquired what to do, he commanded them: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." We read that believers were baptized in the city of Samaria. "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." (Acts 8: 12.)

It is refreshing in the midst of so many departures from the truth to know that this Presbyterian minister has renounced the authority of human creeds. Human creeds, disciplines and confessions of faith are made for parties, and produce discord and dissension in the religious world. All Christians can never unite on any creed made by man, but the Christian world can unite in the faith that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." (John 17: 20, 21.)

It is evident that no human creed could have ever originated without at least two wicked assumptions: (1) That God in his revelation failed to make his will plain concerning man's duty; (2) and that fallible men can improve upon the work of the Almighty. If it be argued that the creed is only an interpretation of God's will, then we must have an interpretation of the interpretation. If the creed is simpler and easier of interpretation than God's book, then man has improved on the work of God. What presumption! The creeds have only tended to mystify and darken the counsel of God. May the day speedily come when all will believe what God says, do what he commands, and enjoy his promises. "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17, R. V.) "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be per-

The Original Proposition.

Having received letters requesting copies of the original proposition on the operation of the Holy Spirit, which was to be discussed by Mr. G. A. Ogle and myself, at Auburn, Tenn., in July, 1885, and also the agreement which several Baptists, myself, and others signed, I have concluded to publish them again. The American Baptist Flag will please publish them also. They were published in the Gospel Advocate of August 5, 1885. Mr. A. C. Tatum, president moderator, a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher, is yet alive, and, if necessary, will testify again to these facts as he did on the occasion when they occurred. He who says the Baptists or any other people have driven the disciples of Christ to the proposition that the Holy Spirit operates through the truth only either has no regard for what he says or is profoundly ignorant. But one would better be driven to the truth than not to get there at all. We call especial attention to Mr. Tatum's statement on this point.

In regard to the proposition for discussion, I desire to say that Mr. Ogle framed it for me; he would not allow me to state in my own language what I believe in regard to the work of the Spirit in conversion. I finally accepted the one he stated, knowing that any one who understands language would see, as Mr. Tatum states, that the caption shows by whom the influence through the word is put forth—viz., the Holy Spirit. But after all this, when we met for discussion, Mr. Ogle and his brethren wanted to take off the head of the proposition he himself had framed and signed, and we would not consent.

E. A. ELAM.

"The debate began on July 7. Only two propositions were discussed—one on 'Setting Up of the Kingdom,' the other on 'Salvation Previous to Baptism.' On these, Brother Elam gave universal satisfaction to his brethren and friends. All were satisfied with his efforts.

"On the work of the Spirit, there was no debate. Our Baptist friends seemed to think that we had affirmed that the word without the Spirit converted sinners, or that there was no influence of the Spirit exerted in conversion. The proposition, with the caption, reads:

"PROPOSITION ON HOLY SPIRIT.

"The word of the Lord is the only influence put forth in conviction and conversion." E. A. Elam affirmed.

"The Baptists claimed that the caption had nothing to do with the proposition, and that it was simply word influence, and not Spirit influence, put forth through the word only. On our part it was contended that the caption, as the label on a bottle of poison, told the contents. Mr. Elam produced the correspondence and read from Mr. Ogle's letters, 'I am glad you [Elam] have accepted the proposition on the Holy Spirit,' showing that Mr. Ogle understood that it was the influence of the Spirit that was affirmed in the proposition. Mr. Elam further called attention to the fact that he had refused to sign the proposition until the caption was inserted. The moderator of Mr. Elam then offered to bring forward the proposition affirmed by A. Campbell in debate with N. L. Rice, in 1843, and have Mr. Elam to maintain it, if the Baptists would deny it; holding that it clearly set forth our teaching on this subject. To this it was replied that the Baptists could not deny that, as it was what they believed and taught, and in denying it they would deny their own doctrine. That proposition reads as follows (Campbell and Rice Debate, page 611): 'In conversion and sanctification the Spirit of God operates on persons only through the word.' Mr. Campbell affirmed; Mr. Rice denied.

"Not being able at this junction of affairs to settle the disputed points in the proposition, it was agreed to leave it to the president moderator to decide it. Here is his decision:

"PROPOSITION ON HOLY SPIRIT.

"The word of God is the only influence put forth in conviction and conversion." My decision on the above is that the influence is put forth by the Spirit.

"A. C. TATUM, President Moderator."

"Mr. Tatum then remarked to the audience that this had always been our teaching on this subject, and that he thought he was as well acquainted with our teaching as any man in the assembly. Our Bap-

PERSONAL.

Brother E. A. Elam will begin a meeting at Bowling Green, Ky., next Lord's day.

Brother S. P. Pittman, of the Nashville Bible School, preached at Bowling Green, Ky., last Sunday.

Brother Ridley called at the office on Monday. We were glad to learn from him that Brother Wright, of Hall's Hill, Tenn., is improving.

The meeting at South College Street church of Christ, near Ash street, this city, under Brother Larimore's preaching, has been announced to continue at least two weeks longer.

I notice in your paper that you state that the Pigue-Tant debate will take place at Waterloo, Ky. This is a mistake. I am to moderate for Brother Tant and know whereof I speak. The debate will take place at Pilot Oak, Graves County, Ky., beginning on March 26, 1900, and lasting six days. All parties from a distance will leave the train at Water Valley, six miles north of Fulton, Ky. Water Valley is five miles from Pilot Oak. We hope for a large attendance.—W. T. Boaz, Fulton, Ky.

The tract, "Going and Sending," is now ready. Any church or brother desiring to distribute one hundred of them will please send $1 to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, and one hundred will be forwarded to his address. This is one way you can do some missionary work. If you have not the money, but will, nevertheless, distribute some of these tracts, please drop me a card to that effect, telling me how many you want, and they will be sent you.—J. M. McCaleb, 2601 Montgomery street, Louisville, Ky.

The following amounts were received during February, 1900, to aid in the work in Southwest Texas: Mrs. Jane McVea, Flatonia, Tex., $1; H. F. Mustain, Horse Cave, Ky., $2.50; Sister Ella Keele, Sunny Lane, Tex., $1; Wildersville, Tenn., $1; Leesville, La., $2; Sister May Stout, Campbellton, Tex., $2. Total, $9.50. Many thanks. Most of this came from Gospel Advocate readers. While these contributions do not cover expenses, they are a great help and comfort to us. Let us go forward with the work.—G. W. Bonham, Berclair, Tex.

I have been made happy by receiving from the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company the liberality of the following: Brother Wier, $1.75; W. T. Warren, $1; "A Brother," $5. There was one confession on last Sunday night at Oakland, I. T. I preached at Oakland on last Saturday night and Sunday, and baptized Mr. Scott, of the Oakland News. I hope for others. I will preach at Hewitt, I. T., on the second Lord's day, and at Mansville, I. T., on the third Lord's day. Pray for me, and remember me in your fellowship.—C. C. Parker, Oakland, I. There is a great difference between a Christian and a religious partisan.

It is not hard for the man to overcome temptation who is close to the Lord.

Any man will find it a very hard job to love God without loving his brother.

The man who cannot disagree with people without disliking them is not a Christian.

Men who want to go to heaven desire to travel in God's way, and not their own.

We cannot make much progress in warming up the church until we get hot ourselves.

Men who love God with all the heart do not stop to count up the cost of serving him.

All men are interested in religious themes when they believe they are on their deathbeds.

Be careful how you receive the preaching when the ungodly are paying the preacher.

The man who will not be benefited by adverse criticism would be ruined by a compliment.

The man who does wrong because other people do is not striving very hard to go to heaven.

It is a great piece of folly to go to torment because you imagine some one else is in the broad way.

The person who demands good pay of the Lord before he will serve him is not ready to serve him.

The man who tries to control every one with whom he associates does not usually manage himself.

The man who finds fault with others, in order to appear smart, always makes himself ridiculous.

The farther a man gets from God, the harder is it for him to see any good in anybody but himself.

There is no hope for the man who can see more errors in the Bible than he can discover sins in himself.

The man who is afraid he will do too much in the service of the Lord never does anything for him worth mentioning.

The man who goes to perdition has a hard time even in this life. "The must go to ruin at the sacrifice of his best manhood. The pangs of a guilty conscience annoy him along the rough way. The wicked man must think meanly of himself. His self-respect is gone, so that there is nothing left in the world to make him happy and cheerful. The farther he travels the broad road, the rougher it becomes. Sin brings him down to the worst straits. The pleasures of sin are mixed with bitterness. It is strange that men love sin so dearly when it has nothing lasting to promise but sorrow and wretchedness.

It is considered terrible for the telegraph operator to go to sleep on the post of duty and allow two passenger trains to collide. It is bad enough. But how many Christians go to sleep on the post of duty, while souls daily are perishing for the bread of life! This seemingly attracts little attention, but it is infinitely worse than the neglect of the operator. What a thought! The Christian asleep on the post of duty, while the devil as a roaring lion is going about seeking whom he may devour. Not only this, his agents are ever active. Here are the saloon, the gambling hell, and the billiard hall used to entice the unwary down to hell. When the soul is at stake and the issues of eternity are involved it is wonderfully strange that the Christian can be indifferent and neglectful of duty.

Daily prayer and Bible reading indicate a healthy spiritual condition. Those who do not find time to read the Bible do not wish to do so. The man in love with the truth enjoys the time spent in the pages of the Bible; it is his chief joy to spend a considerable part of every day in communion with Christ and the apostles. The early morning, when the mind is fresh and vigorous, is the best time to devote to the study of the word of God. How seriously and carefully we should peruse the pages of the book that tells us where we will spend eternity, and how we may spend the ceaseless ages as they come and go! The life here about which we are so much concerned is but a moment in comparison with eternity. How quickly the years come and go, and yet we give more thought to these brief, fleeting years than we do to eternity! The man who prays morning, noon, and night, and who delights to study God's word daily, cannot fail in this life nor in the life to come.

The parable given below has a lesson for us all: "A tiny blue violet lay blossoming at the foot of a great oak tree. One day the oak said to the violet: 'Are you not ashamed of yourself, you little thing down there, when you see how small a space you fill, and how wide my branches are?' 'No,' said the violet, 'we are both where God placed us. God has given us both something. He has given you strength, he has given me sweetness; and I offer him back my fragrance, and am thankful.' 'Sweetness is all nonsense,' said the oak; 'a few days and you will die, and your grave will not lift the ground higher by a blade of grass. I hope to stand ages, and when I am cut down I shall be a ship to bear men over the sea, or a coffin to hold the dust of a prince. What is your lot to mine?' 'But,' said the violet, 'I hope to die fragrantly, as I have lived. You must be cut down at last; a few days or a few ages, my littleness or your largeness, it comes to the same thing. We are what God made us. We are where God placed us. God gave you strength; God gave

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

Send us $2 for Smith-Peloubet's Dictionary of the Bible, comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. It has over 800 pages, with 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. It is a valuable work of reference. Brother J. C. McQuiddy used this book for a long time in connection with his work on the Gospel Quarterlies and found it more helpful than any reference work used by him. "The chronological tables are very full, and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and their History' being added. It is a beautiful book, the pages clear, and the type everything that could be asked for."

We desire to call special attention this week to our new premium offer. For further description, see last page of this issue. We propose to make into a medallion a photograph of yourself, father or mother, sister or brother, friend or relative, and to finish same in good style, and, if you so desire, to frame it in the same manner. This is not common work, but it is first-class in every particular. A perfect likeness from the photograph submitted is guaranteed. These pictures will beautify your homes, and you will be justly proud of them. All of these medallions are made six inches in diameter and have easel attachment. It is not necessary that they should be framed, but of course the frame adds much to the appearance and finish of the picture. This is our offer on medallions: We will send a medallion not framed, made from a photograph sent us, to any one sending us twenty-five cents and one new subscriber to the Gospel Advocate for one year, at the regular price, $1.50 per year; or we will send the medallion not framed made from a photograph sent us to any new subscriber, or any old one who pays up his back dues, if he owes any, and the Gospel Advocate one year for $2.25. Pictures sent us from which to make these medallions must be cabinet, bust photographs on cardboard, with the name of the one sending same written plainly across the back. The better the picture, the better the medallion will be. We cannot accept any cut, faded, blurred, mutilated, or kodak pictures. These medallions are in two styles. Style 1 is a "steel finish," having the beautiful, soft tone and deep effect of a steel engraving, reproducing all the high lights and shadows shown in the photograph. Style 2 is the "Sepia," an artistic brown, having the clearness and fine tone of an etching. "Sepia" may be had in either "dull" or "gloss" finish. In ordering these be sure to state what style and finish are wanted, whether style 1 or style 2, and, if style 2, whether "dull" or "gloss" finish is wanted. The frames offered in connection with these medallions are of latest design, dainty, and give the picture an elegant finish. For further description of these frames, see last page of this issue. Any one securing medallions under either of the above offers can have frames, of any style, at the price advertised, or as follows: We will send style 2 for one new subscriber and twenty-five cents; styles 4 or 7 for two new subscribers and twenty-five cents. These medallions must be seen to be appreciated. You can soon earn a medallion

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: I believe you are correct in stating that the Mormons do not work any miracles. I would like to go with you the five hundred miles to see them perform. Brother McQuiddy gives what their success is due to, and this ought, as he says, to be a lesson to Christians in seeing how error succeeds with zealous work. Truth ought to succeed much better with this self-sacrificing work. Please give in the Gospel Advocate what you believe to be right in regard to Christians going to hear them preach and entertaining them in their homes. Does Heb. 13: 2 or John 2: 10 apply to them?

L. H. WILSON.

We have received two or three requests of the same purport of the above. I certainly think Mormonism as flagrant a rejection of the Bible as any form of infidelity. They reject the Bible and openly claim they have authority from God to set aside its commandments. They make a hypocritical pretense of miraculous power. Jesus Christ tells plainly the order of God is that one man must have one wife, and they must be true to each other. They claim that God revealed to them that they must have more than one wife, but show their insincerity and cowardice by annulling this command of God when a human government threatens to punish them for doing what they claim God commands them to do. It is much worse crime to commit a sin in the name of God than to do it as a sinner. While we should be kind and patient to all men, we ought to give no encouragement or help to the spread of pernicious and immoral teaching that turns men from God.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain Gal. 5: 16-18 and Rom. 7: 14-25. There is a difference here on the teachings of these scriptures. Our teacher takes the position that Paul teaches that all Christians are in the condition that he (Paul) assigned to himself in Rom. 7; and Gal. 5: 17 teaches the same. Please comment on these scriptures as fully as time and space will allow.

Corinth, Ark.

Paul, in Rom. 7, states the condition man is in without the law of God. "In me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing." All the impulses and desires of the flesh are evil. The soul may desire good, but the flesh overcomes it. The law of Moses is holy, and pure, and good, but it could not overcome the law of sin that dwelt in his members. Although the law of Moses was pure and holy, it could not overcome the law of sin and death in his members. Realizing this, he exclaims: "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" His body was doomed to death because the law of sin ruled in it. He answers: "I thank God [the deliverance comes] through Jesus Christ our Lord." In the eighth chapter, he tells he was made free from the law of sin and death by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. The succeeding verses repeat the insufficiency of the law of Moses to deliver from sin, and since it could not do it, God sent his Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh, to overcome sin in the flesh and so deliver man from its bondage. Gal. 5 warns Christians who have been delivered from the law of Moses, which could not free from sin, not to turn back to the law of bondage again; that they have been made free from the law of death by the Spirit of life. Verse 16 tells them if they walk in the Spirit they will not fulfill the lusts of the flesh; if they follow the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, they will not be led by the law of sin and death. Verse 17 tells that the flesh opposes the Spirit, as the Spirit opposes the flesh, and if you follow the flesh, you cannot walk in the Spirit; so you must follow the Spirit, and not the flesh, or you cannot do what you as spiritual beings desire. While the flesh is a coming the flesh; and unless it does overcome it, the flesh will drag it down to ruin. After telling what were the fruits of the Spirit, and what were the fruits of the flesh, he admonishes (verse 25): "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit."

Brother Lipscomb: Will you please give us a clear, scriptural comment on Rom. 4: 2-6? Some of our Baptist friends want me to give them a clear explanation on those verses, but I do not think I am capable.

There is no difficulty in understanding these verses if it is kept in mind that the "works" here referred to are the works of the Jewish law. All through this letter there is a contrast between the Jewish law and the faith of Jesus Christ, between the circumcision and the uncircumcision, between the Jew and the Gentile. In verse 19 of the preceding chapter he says, "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law," referring to the Jewish law, which had then been taken out of the way. Verse 20: "By the deeds of the law [the Jewish law] there shall no flesh be justified." "It is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins." (Heb. 10: 4.) This blood sealed that law. So there was a remembrance of sin every year until Jesus came and took it away by the sacrifice of himself once and forever. "Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also." (Rom. 3: 27-29.) He contrasts here the deeds of the law and the hearing of faith, the law of works and the law of faith, the Jews and the Gentiles corresponding to these two laws. He asks: "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law." (Verse 31.) The Jewish law was not made void by the faith that Christ brought, for the object of the law was to bring them to Christ, that ~~it might be justified~~ by faith. The contrast was between justification under the law of Moses and justification by the faith of Christ. He then, in chapter 4, shows Abraham was not justified by the works of the law. The law, with its works, was not given in the days of Abraham. Abraham was justified by faith, and not by the works of the Jewish law. He believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness. But when was faith imputed to him for righteousness? James (2: 21-23) says: "Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God." James explains when Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteousness. It was when that faith "was made perfect by works." What "works" made the faith perfect? The works of the Jewish law? No; but the works required by the law of faith. The law of faith had to be obeyed as well as the law of works, and the works to which faith led made the faith perfect. God commanded Abraham to sacrifice his son. To do this was to be led by faith, was to obey the law of faith, the law addressed to his faith, and was to make the faith perfect by doing things required by the law of faith. The law of Moses was not addressed to the faith of people. The law of Christ is addressed to faith. To do the things required by Christ is to walk by faith; to do the works of faith is to make faith perfect by works of faith. By this a man is justified, and not by the works of the Jewish law. "Now to him that worketh [the works of the Jewish law in the present past and future] that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness," because he obeys the law that justifies by faith, not the law of works. David presents the same truth. The law of works could not justify, but the law of faith could; but faith never justified or was imputed for righteousness until it had been made perfect by works required by the law of faith. There is not an example in the Bible of God blessing in response to faith before that faith proved itself by an overt act, a bodily act of some kind. Where God had given a law to guide and test the faith, as in the case of Abraham and in the law of faith given by Christ, that faith must prove itself by obedience to the law of faith before it could be accepted of God. So read the connection, and see the contrast is between the works of the law of Moses and the requirements of the law of faith, and there is no difficulty in understanding these and all similar passages.

A Short Cut.

Just behind our old schoolhouse was a field containing several large apple trees. Every boy on his way to school picked up stones and clubs to throw at these trees. While many hundreds of apples were secured, there was one tree whose branches were so thick that no stone or club could reach the large red apples that seemed to mock every effort to dislodge them.

One day as we sat at our desks in school the wind began to blow violently. Every boy's thoughts went toward that apple tree, and all were ready to bound out the door and make a dash for the apples that had blown from the tree.

I had conceived a sharp plan—a short cut to the apple tree. As soon as recess was announced and the teacher's back was turned, instead of rushing out of the door with the other fellows, I jumped out of the back window and ran across the brier field toward the apple tree. I was running at a rapid rate, when a brier caught my cap and pulled it off.

Reaching down to pick up the cap, something struck me on the wrist. Then, before I could breathe, two or three more blows came upon my neck and hands. In a moment I realized that my cap had fallen upon a yellow jackets' nest and the angry insects were surrounding me by hundreds.

Suffering from at least twenty of their stings, I ran to the swamp and covered my face and arms with mud. Then I met the boys returning with their pockets filled with apples. I shall never forget the shout they gave when they saw me. I never told them the cause of my plight, but God made it one of the most useful lessons of my life.

A great many boys and young men are looking for a short cut to honor and wealth, and even to heaven. Much of life's effort is expended in plans to outwit and deceive our fellows, and even, with some, to outwit God. But if a young man stops to consider, he will see that there are briars and bees' nests in every such path; and if he is wise, he will beware of short cuts, and in business and religion keep in the old paths of integrity and truth.—Forward.

The Way to Live.

Be patient. Keep sweet. Do not fret or worry. Do your best and leave results with God. Believe firmly in God, in the fulfillment of his purposes, and the march of his providences. God's laws are immutable, and work with undeviating regularity. Walk in fellowship with God, and every year you will be a stronger, better, happier, and sweeter man. Do not mar your peace or power by needless worry. Live by faith in the Son of God, who loves you and gave himself for you. On some bright to-morrow you will come to anchor under a haven of sapphire and in a harbor of calm, with chimes ringing their welcome from the spires that sentinel the city of God, while from the battlements millions will shout, "Well done!" while God himself will say: "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—George B. "SIMON SAYS."

Dick was eight years younger than any of his brothers and sisters; so while he played hauling and herding, they were old enough to play work in earnest, and could not join in a game with Dick every time he wanted them; but his time was at the close of day, when all were gathered about the hearth.

One evening his sister played cat's cradle with him until they were tired of it; then she told about the old game, "Simon says." This was new to Dick, and he wanted to try it. So they began, Dick did very well until she said, "Thumbs up!" when up went his straight as they could. He did not notice that Simon had not said so. They had a good laugh, and began again. Several times he obeyed her as promptly as he did Simon. Then he wanted papa to give Simon's orders to see if sister could be caught. So papa began, "Wigwag!" and Dick wagged away lively. He was the first caught. Afterwards Dick did the talking. He began, "Thumbs up!" and wondered why they did not do it. Why do you think?

Dick liked to have the older ones play with him, and they felt that when people grow too old to enjoy the sports of children they have separated themselves from one of the fountains of life and happiness.

SCATTERING, YET INCREASING.

A fresh spring of water bubbling forth from the mountain side sent down a little stream across the moorland slopes which lay below. As the brook danced merrily along its lonely path, it heard a lazy, drawing voice, and, listening, found that the sound came from a pool which was resting in a hollow close by.

"What a silly stream you are," said the voice, "to work so hard this hot weather! You are always coming upon stones which block up your way. Why can't you keep quiet and enjoy yourself?"

The stream rippled a merry laugh as it answered: "I never want to enjoy myself, my good friend. I enjoy everything else so much."

"Pray, what enjoyment do you find in grass burnt up and hard stones?" asked the pool, contemptuously.

"O, you cannot think," said the stream, "what beauties are scattered along my path. Lying still, down there, you only see rough tops of stones, but I live among soft, green mosses, and graceful reeds, and blue-eyed flowers. Even the stones look bright and polished, and they are not so troublesome as you think. When I cannot jump over I can always get around them."

"Seeing is believing," muttered the pool, "and I see none of these things." And the other had no answer ready, for neither of them knew that flowers, and mosses, and shining pebbles were caused by the brooklet's own flowing waters.

"I wish you could come with me, and share some of the pleasant sights which I enjoy," began the brook again, presently. "Often merry children come to gather the flowers by my side, and I have a chat with them; and sometimes weary travelers stop while I give them a fresh, cool draught of water. I dance with gladness to see how cheered they look as they turn away."

"And you mean to say you like that?" asked the pool, quite out of patience. "Well, I would not have my flowers taken away, and I am very glad no one asks me for water. I want every drop for myself; there seems every day less for my own supply. Sometimes I wonder what will become of me," he added, with a sigh.

The brooklet did not wish to be rude, so it said nothing; but it could not help thinking there were few who would care to ask water of the dark, sulky-looking pool.

"You will find out your folly when it is too late," continued the pool; "you cannot be forever giving and giving; you will have nothing left for yourself one day."

For a moment the brooklet's face was clouded, and it flowed less briskly, but it soon took courage; for did it not remember the deep spring that sent it forth, and could it not trust the spring to supply its need?

As the hot summer sun poured down on the pool, its waters became more muddy and more shallow, until at last not a drop was left. But the water of the streamlet grew deeper, and broader, and stronger, as it flowed over the parched ground and cheered many a dreary mile, until at last it reached a mighty, peaceful river; and as it joined its waters with those of the great stream, the brooklet knew that its toils were ended; there would be no more rough stones along its course, no more fear of its supplies failing forever.

There are lessons in this simple story—lessons full of wisdom for us all.—Young Folks.

THE HELPING BURDEN.

We were on a long day's tramp in the Adirondack woods, and the gulde was carrying strapped to his shoulders one of those curiously shaped baskets in which the woodsmen of this section transport what they call "camp duff"—supplies of food, cooking utensils, necessary tools, ammunition, and a score of things that one could not afford to be without in the wilderness. His load weighed about eighty pounds, and one wondered how he could carry it all day with so little apparent fatigue. But once, when asked if he would not like to transfer it to another's shoulders for a little while, he replied: "No; I like to carry it. It steadies me. I have carried a pack now for so many years that it is a help rather than a hindrance."

Here, then, was an actual physical burden that helped a man. That was a new thought. But after a while one could understand it. There was something steadying about that pack—something strengthening to the back; something to develop muscle and stimulate effort and promote careful footing. It was something to brace up against, something that gave a steady satisfaction in the carrying.

In like manner many burdens that are not physical may be helps to us. They are steadiers, developers of moral backbone, instruments for cultivating Christian manhood and womanhood. We are the better for them, because stronger, more self-reliant, more serious, more purposeful.

May God help us to think more about this quality of burdens—the helpful quality. It is a long journey through the wilderness of life (a beautiful wilderness, too, like the North Woods), and we all have our packs to carry; but besides the store of comfort bound up in that load, besides those necessities of the spiritual life upon which we must feed every day or die, what a blessing may the mere weight of the burden bring to us if we are wise enough to understand it! What a builder and conservator of spiritual energy it is! What a strengthener of character, what a promoter of responsibility! Thank God for the long road and the burden fitted to our strength! They are the pilgrim's heritage and blessing.—Forward.

A LITTLE WHITE JEWEL.

"A jewel." That makes one think of a pretty stone in a ring or a dainty bit of jewelry to wear on one's wrist or neck. Something precious, of course, it must be; but the precious thing I am thinking about is only a grain of rice. You little Americans who say you are tired of rice pudding, and who will not eat boiled rice unless there are raisins in it, and maple sugar heaped over it, and cream in abundance, ought, just for fun, to be for a while in China or India, in some small country place where rice is the chief thing that keeps people alive.

One little white grain, planted in a wet place, will make a stalk full of grains, more full than our beautiful wheat ears, which are another kind of jewel. But rice will grow where wheat will not, nor potatoes, nor corn; and if you lived in such a place, you would find all the grown people talking about the rice crop, hoping it would be all right, or in fear and sorrow if it threatened to fail.

The thousands—no, the millions—of Asian people who live chiefly on rice, eat it boiled, with no "trimmings." The poorer classes are glad if they can always have enough salt with it. You may ask why they do not grow other vegetables to take its place, and that does seem strange, as it does when one reads that the failure of the potato crop in Ireland produces a famine, and one has the same thought.

One reason is that rice and potatoes are easily grown by ignorant and lazy people. Rice is about the easiest thing in the world to grow, excepting weeds and bad habits. Another reason is that rice will grow best in low, swampy ground, where nothing else will. In fact, rice will grow without the ground, if you give it the water. The Chinese have floating rice beds, made on large, light rafts made of poles crossed. On the poles straw is laid, and on that some sticky mud from the bottom of the pond. Into that the white jewels are set, and there they grow, sending their toes down through the spaces in the raft to the water. This method is used because rice grown this way grows much faster than when planted on the ground. Besides, when there has been a season of drought, and fields are dry (which ruins rice), these floating beds get all the moisture there is on the pond bottoms, and if the season is too wet, and the ground fields are flooded until the rice rots, these rafts are always on top. Of course only a small proportion of the rice is grown this way.

You know that rice grows all over the world, in certain climates, and you have, many of you, seen rice fields in our Southern States, and also growing wild in Illinois and other Northern States. Wild rice and wild ducks belong together, as any hunting boys know; but it is the tame rice that is the friend of millions of human beings. What other jewel is there which could be planted and bring forth a hundred-fold? No diamond or turquoise or ruby, indeed! Only the good grains which God has given to man increase this way; and only the true Christian religion, planted in foreign countries, will grow as the rice does, to make the lives of millions strong and good.—Evelyn Muller, in the Young Christian Soldier.

HER PINT OF ALE.

A Manchester calico printer was, on his wedding day, asked by his wife to allow her two half pints of ale a day as her share of extra comforts. He made the bargain, but not cheerfully; for, though a drinker himself, he would have preferred a perfectly sober wife. His wife made the small allowance meet her household expenses, keeping her cottage neat and tidy, and he could not complain that she insisted upon her daily pint of ale, while he, very likely, drank two or three quarts.

They had been married a year, and on the morning of their wedding anniversary John looked with real pride upon the neat and comely person of his wife; and with a touch of remorse in his look and tone, he said:

"Mary, we have had no holiday since we were wed, and only that I haven't a penny in the world, we would take a jaunt to the village and see the mother."

"Would thee like to go, John?" she asked.

There was a tear with her smile, for it touched her heart to hear him speak tenderly, as in old times.

"Go?" asked her husband. "O' course I would, lass; but a poor man like me can't save a penny from his wages. It takes rich folks to go on holiday jaunts, wife. Yet I'd like fine to see mother again."

Mary smiled afresh; and this time there was an air of mystery and of pride in her smile, as well as affection. Then she said, slowly:

"If thee'd like to go, John, I'll stand the treat."

"Nay, but I've got the pint of ale," said she.

"Got what, wife?"

"The pint of ale," she repeated.

John looked at her in amazement.

"Whatever d' ye mean, lass?" he said.

"I mean this," said his wife. She went to the hearth, and from beneath one of the stone flags drew forth a stocking, from which she poured upon the table the sum of three hundred and sixty-five three-pences ($22.81), exclaiming: "See, John, thee can have a holiday!"

"What is this?" he asked in amazement.

"It is my daily pint of ale, John."

He was conscience stricken as well as amazed and charmed.

"Mary, hasn't thee had thy share? Then I'll have no more from this day."

And he was good as his word. They had their holiday with the old mother, and Mary's little capital, saved from the "pint of ale," was the seed from which, as the years rolled on, grew shop, factory, warehouse, country seat, and carriage, with health, happiness, peace, and honor.—Our Young Folks.

MORMONISM—ITS ORIGIN, ETC.

We have received a little tract from a brother, with request that we review it; but as Brother Lipscomb has recently given some very pointed things on Mormonism, in the Gospel Advocate, I will give, instead of a review of the tract, the origin of Mormonism as given by Robert Richardson in "Memoirs of Alexander Campbell," pages 344-348, Volume II., as follows:

"Toward the close of this year (1830) the delusion of Mormonism began its course in Northern Ohio. Chief among its promoters appeared Sydney Rigdon, who was believed, upon good evidence, to have been also its originator. Captivating as a public speaker by his fluency and his exuberant fancy, he had depended upon these superficial endowments for popularity and success. In private he had been found petulant, unreliable, and ungovernable in his passions; and his wayward temper, his extravagant stories, and his habit of self-assertion had prevented him from attaining influence as a religious teacher among the disciples. He was ambitious of distinction, without the energy and industry necessary to secure it, and jealous of the reputation of others, without the ability to compete with them. Floating upon the tide of popular excitement, he was disposed to catch at anything which, without demanding labor, might serve for his advancement, and was naturally led to seek in deception the success which he found denied to indolence. It appears that, while living in Pittsburg, he was connected with one of the printing offices, and obtained access to the manuscript of a romance written by a former Presbyterian preacher—a Solomon Spaulding—who, adopting the style of the Bible history, had, for his amusement, given a fanciful account of the nations inhabiting Canaan before the time of Joshua, and described, with great minuteness, their modes of life, wars, migrations, etc. He attributed also in it the settling of North America to the ten lost tribes, and, giving to his work the title, 'Lost Manuscript Found,' was wont to read portions of it frequently to his friends. Having copied or obtained possession of this manuscript, Rigdon seems to have secretly occupied himself during several years in altering and arranging it to suit his purposes; and discovering, at Palmyra, N. Y., as early as 1827, a suitable coadjutor in the person of Joseph Smith, a pretended fortune teller and discoverer of hidden treasure, noted for his idleness and love of everything marvelous and mysterious, he arranged with him the plan of future operations. Accordingly, in 1830, it was duly announced that Smith had by an express revelation disinterred certain golden plates, on which were inscribed, in the 'reformed Egyptian character,' important divine communications, giving an account of the ten lost tribes, the origin of the North American Indians, and revelations designed to usher in 'the latter days.' These plates Smith professed to have the power to decipher and translate by means of translucent pebbles which had been provided for the purpose, and by the aid of polygraphic angels; and a book in manuscript was speedily produced, called the 'Book of Mormon,' an edition of which was at once printed at the expense of a Martin Harris, who was so credulous as to believe in Smith's pretensions, and who alone, of those concerned, was able to defray the expense of publication. Meanwhile, Rigdon had been for some time diligently engaged in endeavoring, by obscure hints and glowing millennial theories, to excite the imaginations of his hearers, and in seeking by fanciful interpretations of scripture to prepare the minds of the churches of Northern Ohio for something extraordinary in the near future. He sought especially in private to convince certain influential persons that, along with the primitive gospel, supernatural gifts and miracles ought to be restored, and that, as at the beginning, all things should be held in common. From his want of personal influence, however, he failed in disseminating his views, except to a very limited extent. In Mentor, where he resided, he was quite unsuccessful, but was more fortunate in Kirtland, the adjoining town, where a flourishing church became much disturbed and unsettled by his plausible theories and brilliant declamations. Immediately upon the publication of the 'Book of Mormon,' Smith organized his dupes and abettors at Palmyra into the 'Church of Latter-day Saints,' and sent forth his 'apostles' to convert the people. Two of these, Cowdery and Pratt, soon made their appearance in Mentor, and were received as old acquaintances by Rigdon, who at once publicly indorsed their claims, and, with several others, was immersed into the new faith, which he immediately endeavored to propagate at Palmyra. The people there, however, knowing too well the character of Smith to believe that he could be charged with a heavenly message, treated the whole affair with contempt and ridicule. It became necessary, therefore, to change the basis of operations to some region where Smith was unknown, and the point selected was Kirtland, where the minds of the people had already become to some extent prepared by Rigdon, and where about one-half of the members of the church were soon led away into the delusion and filled with the wildest fanaticism. Mormon 'elders' and 'apostles' were speedily sent forth, who traversed Northern Ohio and gained many proselytes among the ignorant and superstitious, and some even among persons of intelligence, who had been filled with vague expectations of a speedy millennium. It is unnecessary to relate particularly the progress of this gross delusion or the history of its leaders, who, after erecting a temple and establishing a bank at Kirtland, found it necessary to emigrate to Independence, Mo., from whence, largely increased in numbers, they were soon driven to Illinois, where they erected another temple and built the city of Nauvoo. Nor is it necessary to detail their introduction of polygamy; their establishment of a grand and successful system of missions throughout the world; their fortunes in Illinois, where open war with the citizens was prevented only by the voluntary surrender of Smith and others to the civil authorities at the instance of the governor; or the subsequent death of Smith at the hands of a mob in the prison to which he had been committed for safe-keeping. Suffice it to say that upon Smith's death, Rigdon and Brigham Young disputed the right to the succession, and, Young prevailing, Rigdon was expelled from the community and retired into the interior of New York, where he afterwards lived in obscurity. Meanwhile, under their new and far more competent leader, the Mormons sought an almost inaccessible region amidst the mountains of Utah, beyond the boundaries of civilization, where, by incredible industry and the marvelous power of communism in promoting material interests, they have created, as if by magic, in the midst of an arid waste sown with salt, a magnificent city, through whose streets streams of pure water conveyed from the mountains impart freshness and verdure to rows of beautiful shade trees, and irrigate extensive orchards and fruitful gardens, and where on every side are seen commodious residences and vast public edifices reared by the hands of skillful artisans decyed from the Old World by the wiles of no less skillful emissaries. Here is presented the strange spectacle of a social, political, and religious absolutism in the midst of a free republic, and of an open, legalized licentiousness in the bosom of a Christian nation, which, extending itself around this corrupt community, gradually encircles it as a rapidly-growing tree incloses with its young wood a cureless canker in its heart. From the first moment of its appearance,

Mr. Campbell endeavored to stay the progress of this imposture and to expose the villainy of those concerned in it. Having obtained a copy of the 'Book of Mormon,' he published both in the Millennial Harbinger and in a separate tract of twelve pages a brief analysis of its contents and character, laying bare its flagrant falsehoods and its contemptible absurdities. The timely appearance of this tract, the active opposition of the intelligent preachers on the Reserve, and a visit which Mr. Campbell paid in June to Northern Ohio, where he spent twenty-two days, delivered eighteen discourses, and baptized twenty-seven persons, greatly contributed to expose this shameless imposition, soon after its first appearance, and to put a stop to its progress in the reforming churches, among which, indeed, with the exception of the one at Kirtland, it was far less successful than with the Methodists and other popular denominations, with whose views of special spiritual operations and communications it possessed a greater affinity."

Sydney Rigdon was first a Baptist preacher, and then accepted the truth when he heard it from Brother Campbell, and for a time advocated it; but, as stated above, not being a faithful and reliable man, he became one of the originators of Mormonism. This no doubt accounts for the fact that Mormons teach faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, which they retain to this day. But as a system, there never was, in my judgment, a greater delusion than Mormonism; and perhaps one of the very best arguments against it is to show up its corrupt origin as given above. These things were written soon after the war, when the memory of those things were still fresh in that section of country where they occurred; and, besides, Brother Campbell wrote and published the things as mentioned immediately after the "Book of Mormon" appeared, and when the whole affair was fresh in the minds of the people where this ism arose, and the people knew the men personally, and their character, that brought it forth. At the time a thing first develops is the time to show up its fraud; and this was done, as indicated by the above extract. E. G. S.

THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE ON THE WORK OF THE SPIRIT.

We publish, on another page, the conclusion of a sermon on "Spiritual Influence," by Dr. E. E. Hoss, editor of the Christian Advocate. We publish it not because we believe all it says, but because it tells much truth, and shows a marked improvement among the Methodists on the subject of spiritual influence. When men's faces are set toward the truth and they are progressing in that direction we are slow to criticise things in which they fall short. Then, too, I know from experience how slowly we unlearn error in which we have been trained, and learn truth. Then, too, on the subject of spiritual influence and guidance, the theories concerning them are nothing, further than they lead men to or turn them away from the truth. If we come to the truth of God and take it into our hearts, it will germinate and grow and bear fruit in our lives, no matter what our theories of its operation may be. The Spirit works in accord with the laws of his own being, and not in harmony with our theories. So, no matter how sound our theory of his work may be, unless we receive the word of God in which he dwells as the seed of the kingdom into our hearts, our theories will be barren and fruitless.

The Methodists and the Baptists for years combated the idea that the Spirit worked only through truth. They maintained that he worked independent of truth. They maintained children were born depraved and sinful, worthy of damnation, and were saved by the Holy Spirit directly working in their hearts and changing and fitting them for heaven. They had no evidence that they were depraved and sinful, only their theory of total depravity so held. They had and could have no evidence that the Spirit worked upon them to change them. But their theory of total depravity left innocent babes in a state so abhorrent to all principles of justice and mercy that this theory was devised to save them from the idea of teaching infant damnation. The Baptists have greatly abandoned the theory of abstract and direct influence. In the late discussions of these questions, they have held the Spirit is separate from the word, but always accompanies it. The word is the instrument through which the Spirit is conveyed to the heart, just as the pen is the instrument through which the ink is conveyed to the paper. The ink is separate from the pen, but cannot be used in writing without the help and presence of the pen. The Spirit cannot reach the heart without the use of the word to convey it, but it is separate from the word. While this theory is not in accordance with the truth, it carries man to the word of God, and leads him to take it into his heart; the Spirit will then do his work, despite wrong theories. It is better to have the correct theory because it is true; and, once seen, it is more easily understood, and leads on to other truths, and there is less danger of turning aside.

The truth is plainly taught that the Spirit is the life principle of the religion of Jesus Christ, that the word of God is the seed of the kingdom. The life principle dwells in the seed and is imparted to the heart by placing the seed in the heart, as the germinal principle of plant life is placed in the soil. Without this seed in the heart no spiritual life can be developed in that heart or can grow into the life. The quality and quantity of the fruit borne depend upon the purity of the seed, the quality of the soil, and the culture that is given it. So in the spiritual world the quality and quantity of the fruit borne in the life will depend on the purity of the seed, the freedom of the word of God from the customs and traditions of men, the depth and strength of the heart and soul, and the diligence with which the briars, thistles, and thorns that grow in the heart are kept rooted out, and the devotion with which the tender plant of spiritual life is cherished in the heart. So far the analogy between the seed and its growth in the soil is given by Jesus and is undisputed. There is a point of unlikeness in the material and the spiritual seed, pointed out by the Holy Spirit, that I would commend to the attention of Dr. Hoss and all desiring to know truth on this subject.

"Being born [begotten] again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." (1 Pet. 1: 23.) What can this mean, save that while the material seed may deteriorate and lose its germinating power, the word of God is incorruptible? It does not deteriorate; it never loses its germinal principle. It is a living seed, the vital principle of which abides in it forever. This idea is so in harmony with the analogies in the natural world to which Jesus compares it, and the point wherein the analogy fails is so clearly pointed out by the Holy Spirit, that it is difficult to see how it can be rejected. "The word of God is the sword of the Spirit." Does that mean the word of God is a sword to be used and applied by the Spirit as a person separate and distinct from man, or does it mean that the word of God is a sword molded and tempered by the Spirit of God, to be used by the Christian as a part of his armor? "Having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." (Eph. 6: 14-17.) Is not the sword in common with the other pieces of the armor provided by God for the use of his servants? In his temptation on the mount Jesus showed us how the sword must be used. Sometimes arrows and swords are poisoned. In this sword dwells the healing and life-giving Spirit, so the stroke that gives the death-blow to the life of sin imparts true spiritual life to the soul. The same stroke that cuts up the weed sometimes plants the good seed in the soil. Was not the other flock of Jesus the Gentiles, who would believe? Were they not taught to believe by the same means that brought the Jews to believe, by hearing the word of God? "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we [Jews] should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures." "Ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe." (Acts 15: 7.) Was not the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile broken down, and were they not brought into one fold in Christ Jesus? Why seek for doubtful interpretations, when clear and certain ones are furnished by the Holy Spirit? Did not Jesus Christ and the apostle Paul both belong to that class of theologians that believe that all are lost without the knowledge of Christ Jesus? If he died for all, was it not because all were dead in sin? And did not the scriptures conclude all "under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe?" (Gal. 3: 22.) Did not the death of Christ enable God to be "just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus?" (Rom. 3: 26.) How can men make these provisions stretch to the unbeliever? It is wholly a speculative question to us as to whether the Spirit goes to the heathen, for we can have no evidence of it unless the scriptures teach it, and it is worthy of consideration only as it may be the entering wedge to cause others to look to some influence exerted to save man outside of the gospel of truth. Any theory that encourages this injures man. The possibility of the Spirit saving the heathen otherwise than through the gospel of Christ, believed and obeyed, might excuse Christians in failing to send the gospel to them. It could do no good to any one. Then why speculate about it? Speculations of this age, like the traditions of the days of Christ, cause men to forget and set aside the commandments of God.

The incidents of remembering a mother's instruction, the death of a child, or any condition or circumstance that calls his heart away from the world and gives place to the word of truth that has been heard and forgotten through the business of the world, only emphasize the truth that the Spirit exerts his influence through that word. These circumstances of life give free course to the word of God in the heart. It roots out the weeds that the seed of the kingdom may grow. The office of the Spirit, as Jesus defined it, in coming into the world, was to glorify Jesus as the Son of God. "He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you." (John 16: 14.) This was spoken directly to the apostles. The Spirit did come from the council chamber of God, did make known fully of the things of Jesus to the apostles first and through their word to the world. This word is the seed of the kingdom, which, received into the heart, bears fruit to the glory of God and the salvation of men, in both the life that now is and in that which is to come. The Spirit of God works through the truth, and only the Scriptures of truth come to us with the stamp of Jehovah upon them as truth. These alone can be relied upon. All else is doubt and uncertainty. D. L.

We have received a pamphlet of thirty-one pages, on the subject of "Christian's Duty to Civil Government, and War," by William Josher Miller, Lometa, Tex. It is well and clearly written, the arguments are plain and pointed, the appeals to scripture well taken, and the explanations generally true to the Scriptures. The pamphlet will do good if read and studied. We hope it will have an extensive reading, as it is a question that needs to be studied. Address author as above. D. L.

HOW HE WON THEM.

Bishop Whipple says that when he went into the West to preach, he was exceedingly anxious to reach artisans and railway operatives, of whom there were hundreds in Chicago. He called upon William McAlpine, the chief engineer of the Galena Railway, and asked his advice as to the best way of approaching the employees of the road.

"How much do you know about a steam engine?" said McAlpine.

"Nothing."

"Then," said McAlpine, "read 'Lardner's Railway Economy' until you are able to ask an engineer a question about a locomotive, and he not think you a fool."

The clergyman had the practical sense to see the justice of that advice. So he "read up," and in due season went to the roundhouse of the Galena Railway, where he found a number of engineers standing by a locomotive which the firemen were cleaning. He saw that it was a Taunton engine with inside connections, and asked, at a venture:

"Which do you like better, inside or outside connections?"

This brought out information about steam heaters and variable exhausts, and in half an hour he had learned more than his book had ever taught him. When he said good-by, he added:

"Boys, where do you go to church? I have a free church in Metropolitan Hall, where I shall be glad to see you, and if at any time you need me, I shall be glad to go to you."

The following Sunday every man was in church.

We publish the above from the Youth's Companion as an illustration of what Paul meant by becoming all things to all men. This shows the way to reach men is to show a familiarity with and sympathy for them in their everyday lives.

I once heard of a man who had been in his early days a brick mason. He went to a city to preach, and got only a slight hearing for a few days. Passing a building in which a number of masons were at work, he went upon the scaffold, told them he was a mason by trade, and felt at home with them; finally he asked for a trowel and apron, and joined them for a little while in their work. After this he never lacked for a congregation.

But, unfortunately, while most of the preachers come from the working classes, they are often so lacking in good sense and religion they are ashamed to own their former colors, and keep aloof from those who labor. But to become all things to all men, as Paul did, is to learn their trials, difficulties, and troubles, and to sympathize with them and bear their trials with them, just as Jesus became a man and partook of his weakness, shared his trials, to save him. THE ORIGINAL PROPOSITION.

they believed that the Spirit in conviction and conversion operated only through the word. At this point it appeared there was no ground of difference between the parties and nothing to do but to shake hands and dismiss the debate on that topic.

"The following was demanded of us: 'Is the Holy Spirit the word of God, or is the word the Holy Spirit?' To which it was replied that our brethren believed that the Holy Spirit was a Person; the word, an instrument, or means. The Holy Spirit was the agent; the word, the instrument or means through which he put forth power or influence in conviction and conversion.

"The two disputants and the undersigned agree to the following, and dismiss the debate:

"The Holy Spirit operates through the truth only.

"The Holy Spirit and the word of God are different.

A Life and Its Lesson.

Every man's life is a book, written in living characters upon the open page of time. When we see the finished life of a truly God-fearing and God-serving man we have before us a book to be read and studied to our own edification. Such a life is to inspire us with nobler thoughts and to quicken us to better deeds. It is a life of love for humanity which goes out in practical deeds, and is a continual rebuke to those who are spending their own lives for base and selfish purposes. Through the study of such a life we are brought into touch with a power that will strengthen us in our efforts to steadily grow into a deeper kinship with the divine, and which will enable us to manifest more love and helpfulness toward our fellow-beings.

Something more than seventy-four years ago a life was begun on a little country place, only a few miles from the town of Woodville, Miss. The little farm on which a boy, the son of a widow, grew to manhood's years, was in a rugged section of country, and offered but few advantages. In the negro districts of the South, country schools were never well supported, and the poor boy on a farm had but meager opportunities for acquiring an education; yet the one to whom this sketch refers, by means of his studious habits and a few months occasionally spent in the public schools, managed to so educate himself as to be able to fill his mind with a large fund of profitable information. By some action of those mysterious forces which have to do with the shaping of human character, this orphan boy was early impressed with a desire to be correct in all things. This we may attribute to the influence of that noble mother, who thus sought to lay the foundation of a splendid manhood in the heart of her boy. It was this, no doubt, which led to his early adoption of the Bible as his only rule of faith and practice through life. Early in his career he was baptized into the faith of Christ, the world's only Redeemer, and all through life he endeavored to live as Christ teaches men to live. He was a constant student of the Bible, and became remarkably well versed on all Bible themes. While he never pretended to preach, he was an apt teacher of Christianity. All of his long life was spent in close proximity to the place of his birth, where he saw his children and grandchildren grow up to bless his memory. His loving and lovable wife was a veritable helpmeet to him in the performance of all duties, and together they successfully labored for the education and Christian development of their children; and now these children go out into the world as strong and well-equipped men and women to work for God in the cause of humanity.

What a life! Though humble it may appear to us, yet what a power for good! What an example for the young to follow! It is such lives spent in this unostentatious manner that do more for the solving of difficult problems which confront society than all of the eloquently moralizing sermons and fine speeches. Many of our educated young preachers in hunting places where they can do good, and at the same time make a name for themselves, lose the opportunities of their lives. Going from place to place, they often fail to do any work of permanent value. Notwithstanding their noble aims and fluent discourses, the ever-varying winds of adversity often soon sweep away all effects of their labors. But who is it that will presume to place a limit to the value of the long and exemplary life of the man of God who has lived out his days in a single community? It is an influence which will deepen and broaden as the years go by, and the effects of which will be lasting as eternity.

Such have been the life and the influence of Brother J. T. Netterville, who lived the seventy-four years of his life at the home where he was born, excepting only two or three years. On the morning of January 1, 1900, he passed to his reward, and by the hands of dutiful children and grandchildren his care-worn body was laid to rest in the little family graveyard, there to await the resurrection of the just. His life had been a life of devotion to his Savior, and in that devotion to his Savior he was not forgetful of the fact that to serve God acceptably it was necessary for him to be religiously helpful to his own children and to his neighbor's children. In that magnanimity of soul which always characterizes the true servant of God, he was willing to exercise his powers in that unostentatious manner best suited to the purpose of winning his intimate associates to Christ.

In Brother Netterville's Christian character we have an exemplification of that of which Jesus speaks: "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." First, there is the tender beginning of the spiritual life, the result of the implanting of the divine word in his heart; then the finding of the right work for heart and hand and brain to do; and, finally, the rich fruition of the perfected Christian character. When, in the midst of his sufferings, he was told that death was near, he said: "It makes no difference; death is to bring me to that happy abode for which I have given my service to my Master." By his faith in the promise of God he could see the bright sunlight on the eternal hills beyond that dark valley and that cold river which the unbelievers so much fear.

LEE JACKSON.

The Unpardonable Sin.

"But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils." (Matt. 12: 24.) By the consent of Brother Lipscomb I desire to give a few thoughts on the above subject, as I think there are some who would like to read a few thoughts on this subject.

Matthew, the apostle, gives us a record of the work of Christ. There was a man brought to Christ who was possessed with a devil, and Christ healed him. He says: "Then was brought unto him [Jesus] one possessed with a devil, blind, and dumb: and he healed him, insomuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw." (Matt. 12: 22.) After Christ had done this work by curing that man the Pharisees committed the unpardonable sin by saying that Christ did not cast out devils, "but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils." When the Pharisees had made this statement, Christ commenced to reason with them by saying: "And if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand? . . . But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you. . . . Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost [Spirit] shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost [Spirit], it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come." (Matt. 12: 26-32.) The blasphemy which the Pharisees had committed was attributing the work or the power of God to Beelzebub, the prince of the devils, and in saying this the Pharisees had blasphemed against the Holy Ghost (Spirit). This was committing the unpardonable sin, which has no pardon in this world, neither in the world to come, so said Christ to those wicked Pharisees who were standing near him when he was healing the unfortunate man.

One of the Pharisees said "this fellow," referring to Christ, was casting out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils. Saying this was committing the unpardonable sin, and for this saying Christ warned the wicked Pharisees not to commit this sin by blasphemy against the Holy Ghost (Spirit), and I think we have no record that the Pharisees after that time committed blasphemy against the Holy Ghost (Spirit). The Pharisees were a sect which observed Moses' law and they desired to be saved by keeping the law of Moses. They rebuked Christ for going into the cornfield and gathering corn on the Sabbath day, but Christ gave them an exhortation which silenced them, and he healed the man's hand on the Sabbath day. I think the Pharisees were a bad sect, or else if they had not been, they would not have attributed the work of the Spirit of God to Beelzebub, the prince of the devils. In this saying the Pharisees told a willful lie on Christ, and by so doing committed the unpardonable sin against God. Christ also said to the Pharisees: "But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." (Matt. 12: 36, 37.) The sinning against the Holy Ghost (Spirit) would be idle speaking and therefore at the day of judgment those who had sinned against the Holy Ghost (Spirit) would be condemned and truly lost, for they had committed the sin which has no forgiveness in this world and no forgiveness in the world to come. There is only one unpardonable sin, and this sin was committed by the Pharisees when they said that Christ was casting out devils through Beelzebub, the prince of the devils. All other sin can be forgiven by our loving Savior, even the sin against him (Christ); for the word of the Spirit says so.

I trust my few thoughts on the subject of the unpardonable sin will agree with many minds who may read these lines. Submitted to all in the spirit of love.

MAGAZINES.

Photographs of the most interesting and picturesque spots in America have been made for the Ladies' Home Journal, and they will be reproduced in that magazine on the finest coated paper. This series of pictures—"Picturesque America," as it is to be called—will show the great beauties of landscape and waterscape of this country in a way in which they have never been seen before. Many of the pictures are of places that have escaped the eye of the tourist following the beaten paths of travel. They were collected by one who has crossed the continent more than a hundred times, who has viewed the scenery with appreciative eyes, and who is, perhaps, the best qualified man in the country to describe them.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews for March discusses the war in South Africa in its various phases, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, the Puerto Rican tariff, our situation in the Philippines, the steamship subsidy bill, the Kentucky disorder, Governor Roosevelt's administration in New York, the approaching presidential campaign, and many other timely topics. President William Goodell Frost, of Berea College, Kentucky, contributes a study of those interesting people, the mountaineers of our Southern States. The article is illustrated from photographs of Kentucky and Tennessee mountain people in their home life and of Berea students.

Mr. J. Cuthbert Hadden's article, "The Tinkering of Hymns," in the Living Age for February 24 strikes a responsive chord in the hearts of all who object to the mutilation of the classics of hymnology. An article, "The Intellectual Future of Japan," in its issue of March 3, derives interest from the fact that it is the view of a native Japanese, reprinted from a Japanese magazine.

Self-Culture is thoroughly American in tone and spirit, and treats instructively American history, art, literature, science, commerce, and government. In the March and early succeeding issues will appear papers by some of the most eminent writers on the following subjects: "American Railway Passenger Traffic in the Nineteenth Century;" "Cornell University—Its History and Its Work;" "The New Province of the Trolley;" "Public Playgrounds in Chicago;" "Socialistic Tendencies in Anglo-Saxon Countries;" "Christianity and National Politics;" "Do the People Choose Their Own Officials?" "Women in German Universities;" "Wellesley College;" "Opportunities for Farm Women;" "Easter-tide Art and Its Makers;" "Glimpses of a Notable Life—Oliver Cromwell;" "Reminiscences of a Member of the Confederate Congress;" "The Weather in the Revolution—Washington's Best Ally;" "Homing Pigeons in War and Peace;" "Irrigation in the Great West;" "The American Seal Fisheries;" "Provincialisms, North and South;" "An Episode of Louisiana;" "The Crisis in the English Church;" and "Great Sea Fighters."

The Youth's Companion announces an article of permanent value—light and anecdotal in manner and matter, however—describing the Spanish capital before the outbreak of the war, from the point of view of Hon. Hannis Taylor, who, as the United States Minister, had exceptional opportunities to observe. Incidentally it gives as flash-light portraits such leaders as Emilio Castelar and the ill-fated prime minister, Señor Canovas del Castillo, who died by the hand of an assassin.

Visiting Texas Towns.

During the past two months I have visited Honey Grove, Bonham, Savoy, Sherman, Whitesboro, Collinville, Tioga, Pilot Point, Denton, Fort Worth, Weatherford, Dallas, Lancaster, Waxahachie, Italy, Milford, Hillsboro, West Waco, Hubbard, Dawson, Corsicana, Ennis, Garrett, Kaufman, Terrell, Greenville, Van Sickle, Plano, McKinney, Melissa, Anna, Van Alstyne, Gainesville, Wichita Falls, Iowa Park, Vernon, Memphis, Quanah, Henrietta, and Whitewright. I spent Saturday and Sunday, February 24 and 25, 1900, at Whitewright. I will remain in Texas about two months yet. I am anxious to return to my mission in West Africa as soon as there are sufficient funds to justify me in undertaking the work again. Send all donations to Brother Frank P. The Spirit Operates Through the Truth.

The Spirit operates usually through the instrumentality of revealed truth as preached from the lips of living men, and always through the truth in some form or other—that is to say, his method is not magical, but rational, harmonizing with the constitution of human nature and the fixed laws of the kingdom of heaven. The truth as clearly announced and intelligently apprehended is the medium of his energy. "God is wisely studious of congruities. He adapts the instrument to the effect. He selects that which is in its nature fitted to act upon mind, not upon matter. He chooses that which is preadjusted to the regeneration of mind, not to its creation. He calls to his service that which intelligence can perceive, heart can feel, will can choose—that which, therefore, the whole man can accept, trust, love, obey." (Phelps.) This is very different from saying that the truth itself has regenerative power, an error into which many religious thinkers have fallen. The Holy Spirit, who is "the Spirit of truth," the source and author of all truth, can alone by his personal agency, himself working in the truth and through it as a principle of life, make it quick and powerful for his own divine purposes. It is the sword which he wields. That this Spirit is always a personal agency behind the truth is evident from every one of those great and pertinent passages in John 14-17. It is necessary to quote only one: "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you. . . . And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment: of sin, because they believe not on me; of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged. I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you." Personality can be touched and quickened only by contact with personality. The finite spirit does not wake up save at the call of the Infinite Spirit. It is in the light of this statement that we must interpret the other disclosures of the New Testament. On the night of his arrest, our Lord said to his disciples, "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you;" and in his high-priestly prayer, uttered at the same time, one of his petitions was: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." St. James affirms, "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures;" and St. Peter declares that believers are "born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

of living men than when read from the written or printed page is a fact of general observation. Hence it is that we have a living ministry, it having pleased God "by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." Thus runs the apostolic formula: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?" (Rom. 10: 13, 14.) There was a time in my religious history when I almost envied the privilege of those Judean shepherds who heard the choring of the angels from out the starry heights on the advent evening, saying: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." But I am frank to confess that at fifty years of age I should rather hear the gospel from the most stammering and hesitant preacher who ever stood up to proclaim it, provided only that he has gained an experimental assurance of its verity, than from the tallest archangel in the hosts of heaven. What does an angel know about sin, and repentance, and crying out after pardon and a clean heart? Let some one speak to me of these things that has gone through with them—some brother man that has wrestled with God as Jacob did at Jabbok and has come off victor. No other man has a real message for our hearts, for no man can preach a truth until he has first lived it.

But while the Holy Spirit puts particular honor upon the spoken truth, he does not limit himself to it. The written or printed page is frequently the organ of his activity. Very often the naked Bible itself, or some book or tract that is full of Bible teaching, becomes "the power of God unto salvation" to an open-minded or sincere man or woman. There is a gentleman of my acquaintance in the city of Nashville—a most excellent and intelligent Christian—who once told me that the little pocket copy of the New Testament, which was the only instructor that he had when he was an orphan boy, was the means of leading him to repentance and a godly life. In more cases than one among heathen people, so the missionaries inform us, a single leaf of Holy Scripture, carried by a chance traveler or dropped by a colporteur in a new community and read in the hearing of a circle of eager listeners, has opened the doors of the kingdom to scores of earnest souls.

Sometimes it comes to pass that the Holy Spirit seems to select an incident in a sinner's life as a channel or pathway for his own advances, and this without the intervention of present or specific teaching. A great misfortune in business, a serious personal illness, a bitter social disgrace, a dead child in the house—any one of these may furnish an occasion for the fuller and more energetic display of the Spirit's power in the heart. In one of his best sermons, Dr. Sears tells of a sailor from Maine who once when his ship was lying off the coast of Florida was brought to conviction and conversion by listening to the cooing of a dove in the distant everglade. At first glance this looks like a very simple occurrence; but, as a matter of fact, it was very complex. The gentle notes of the dove stirred up old memories in the sailor's heart, brought back to him the home of his childhood, the vision of his mother's face and the sound of her voice, the religious instruction of church and Sunday school; in other words, it revived the truths that were lying in his mind, and these truths, thus revived, were the natural highway along which the Spirit of God found an opening into his heart, and wrought the achievement of the new birth.

May we not go farther than this, and say that even among the heathen who have never heard of Christ the Spirit has an avenue of approach through those truths of religion that are derived from the constitution and framework of the natural world, or from the operation of the moral law which is "written in their hearts?" There is, I am aware, a school of theology which gives over all heathen to damnation for the sin of not having formally believed in a Savior of whom they have never heard. But this is not the position of any reputable Methodist theologian. Neither is it in accordance with the teaching of the Bible. Such of the heathen as are finally lost will be lost because of their refusal to heed the light that is given them. "Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse." (Rom. 1: 19, 20.) Nor is it merely from "the creation of the world" that they may learn that which it is possible to know about God. They may likewise gather much from the instinctive working of their own moral natures: "For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves: which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another." (Rom. 2: 14, 15.)

On the other hand such of the heathen as are finally saved will be saved solely through the goodness and mercy of God as revealed in the life and death of Jesus Christ, and yet on the express condition of their improving the measure of moral advantages that they enjoy. The first part of this broad assertion is contained in the speech of the apostle Peter before the high priests and the other dignitaries of Israel: "This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4: 11, 12.) The second part is found in an address of the same apostle before the household of Cornelius: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

Will there be many or few of this class? God knows. But every true disciple of our Lord Jesus will wish that there be many. Who can tell what a depth of meaning there is in those words of the great Shepherd: "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one flock [R. V.], and one shepherd?" Are not these sheep in the outlying folds just as precious as those who are near at home? And how are they to be brought? Some of them will hear the gospel through faithful missionaries, and will respond to its authoritative call; and some others, though not reached by the active efforts of the church, will follow the fainter light of nature, and being created new creatures by the Holy Spirit, will at last find themselves safe in the eternal kingdom. What I wish particularly to insist upon is that in every instance of this kind the glad consummation is attained not otherwise than by the agency of the Holy Spirit in and through the truth.—A Sermon by the Editor of the Christian Advocate.

Kansas Notes.

Brother B. F. Martin had a good meeting with the brethren at Iantha, Mo. He will assist them again in a few months. Opposition from a combination of churches had to be met.

Brother W. F. Parmiter is in Oklahoma in a meeting. He is due at home, Winfield, next Lord's day.

Brother B. F. Rhodes will be in Stafford County next Lord's day.

Brother I. D. Moffit was at Cleardale last Lord's day. They are preparing to build a house soon. Their work is prospering with the assistance of Brother Moffit.

Brother J. E. Cain has been in a meeting in Butler County for the past two weeks.

Brother O. W. Thomason preached for the brethren at Mulvane last Lord's day.

Brother C. C. Houston will preach at Peck next Lord's day.

The writer was with the brethren at Kellogg last Lord's day and was much encouraged with the work at that place.

While in Winfield I had the pleasure of meeting with Brother J. H. Irwin and Brother B. F. Martin, at their homes. Brother Moffit and Brother Parmiter being absent, I did not get to meet them. Winfield is certainly blessed with faithful preachers.

"When wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul; discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee: to deliver thee from the way of the evil man, from the man that speaketh froward things." "A soft answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger." He that handleth a matter wisely shall find good: and whose trusteth in the Lord, happy is he.

"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." "A fool's lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for strokes. A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul. The words of a tale-bearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the belly."

"The hypocrite's hope shall perish: whose hope shall be cut off, and whose trust shall be a spider's web." "Knowest thou not this of old, since man was placed upon earth, that the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment?" "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another. For every man shall bear his own burden."

"Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

"The longer I live," said the famous Charles Simeon, "the more I feel the importance of the following rules: (1) To hear as little as possible what is to the prejudice of others. (2) To believe nothing of the kind until I am absolutely obliged to. (3) Never to drink in the spirit of evil reports. (4) Always to moderate, so far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed toward others. (5) Always to believe that if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter." If all would be considerate enough to follow these rules, what an amount of trouble would be saved and difficulties obviated! Many an innocent one would have his reputation saved. There are too many ready to repeat what they hear without stopping to consider from whence it came and what prompted it. I believe the wrong ought to be exposed, but we frequently hear things that are not true, and a full understanding of the circumstances will frequently change the phase of a thing. We do not exercise enough care in this direction. If more love and less vindictiveness of spirit were exercised upon the part of the majority of us, it would certainly be better, especially for the one who exercises such spirit. There is too much spirit of this kind to make the proper allowance for circumstances. May the Lord help all of us to improve "as the days go by."

Among the Churches.

The new schoolhouse at Forty Thicket, Tenn., was full to overflowing. A number of old friends that I had not seen for many years were present. If the Lord permit, I hope to hold a series of meetings there next summer.

It was almost like a dream. More than thirty years ago I had entered school there for the first time, a little barefooted boy of six or seven summers. I stood in the old doorway I entered for the first time on that autumn morning. The top has been torn away, but the long old window at the back end and the old chestnut tree that stood hard by the corner remain natural. The chestnuts from that old tree, brown and plump, that would occasionally tumble down on the hard patted ground in front of the door on an October day have caused many a boy to miss and lose his place in class, and have made the long columns of dry words in Webster's "blue back" simply intolerable.

Center Star is a new house still farther out on the "ridge." It was built by the colored people. I spoke there on Monday night. A goodly number were present, including quite a number of white folks, among whom were a number of old friends I have known from boyhood. The colored people were delighted. The laugh and face of one of the number go back to my earliest recollections. I remember him first at the back of our garden, around the furnace and neighborhood kettles of an old-fashioned molasses making. When the little red mule pulled the "slide" of green cane that our big old horse, Bob, would not budge, you could have heard this good old darky laugh almost half a mile away. His laugh and looks have changed but very little since then, which was about thirty years ago.

Pulling myself away from a whole community of old-time friends, and with a promise to return next summer and finish my visit, I returned to Columbia, Tenn., on Thursday morning, by stage. Brother William Anderson's oldest son, Clark, came for me at 2 o'clock, and after a two hour's cold drive we reached this hospitable home, on the Carter's Creek pike, ten miles north of Columbia. I spent a part of two days and one night in Brother Anderson's home, talking over old times, when I used to be one of his boys. It was pleasant to talk over these good old days, but—O—time is so quickly passed! I spent one night with Brother Jameson, whose boys, then little fellows at school, are now strangers. On Saturday I took dinner with Dr. Hardison, who now lives at the old home, where Brother Anderson used to live. Brother Anderson and I walked up to the room where we used to stay, poring over Latin and algebra and trying to keep the boys quiet. One night in particular, I remember that, since we could not study, Jeff, and I decided to put down the noise at any cost. We had started in on John and George in a very matter-of-fact way—Jeff's peculiar characteristic—when the professor came in and threw cold water on the whole party.

The cold night, indifference with some, and old age with others kept many away from the meeting at Beech Grove, Tenn. Brother Anderson thinks that the church is too well satisfied; that they have fought the battle and have the Book, and no mistake about it, and this ought to be enough to satisfy anybody. Whatever may be the condition of the church at Beech Grove, there is one thing I am assured of: When a church settles down contentedly with an indifference for the salvation of others it will certainly die. I have never seen it fail. I walked out in the back yard of a friend near Nashville, Tenn., and a very dignified-looking old pump was standing there. I took hold of the long, old handle and began to work it. It creaked away dry and rusty. I kept up the process for some time, but not a drop of water could I get. This fitly represents the condition of an idle church: it may have a name to live, but it is dry and empty, and sends out no living water.

February 19, 1900, found me back in Nashville, Tenn. I went to North Spruce Street church of Christ that night. Brother Harding and Brother Shepherd were also present. We all made talks. The brethren seemed to enjoy it and so did we. This is the church from which Brother Bishop went out. I hope the brethren will not be neglectful of this brother and his wife as they labor for Christ in a lonely, distant land, but send regularly and liberally to their necessities. I spent the night with Brother Harding and met with the Bible School the next morning in chapel services. The school is doing good, thorough work. Brother Sakakibara, who came over with me from Japan, is in school here, and is making a good record. All speak well of him. He has turned to the Lord since entering the school. It is his purpose to educate himself, and then return to Japan to teach his own people. He paid his way to America and is paying his own way in school by working in a suspender factory.

I spoke to the brethren at Gallatin, Tenn., and Bowling Green, Ky. The weather was bad and the audiences were small, but the meetings were profitable. I reached home on February 22, after an absence of a little more than three weeks. I found my wife and babies all well.

I am planning for other trips among the churches, not to beg money as I find it customary with missionaries on their return home, but to get the churches to give themselves more fully to God in the salvation of others. The Lord is stirring up the nations, is breaking down the barriers, and is opening new doors for the spread of the gospel as never before. We must not let the opportunities thus afforded us pass by unimproved. Every church should be a light center to send its golden streams of light out into the benighted portions of the earth.

At the Capitol.

I am in my seventy-third year, and for fifty years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion, constipation, and biliousness. I have tried all the remedies advertised for these diseases, and got no permanent relief. About one year ago, the disease assuming a more severe and dangerous form, I became very weak, and lost flesh rapidly. I commenced using Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir. I gained twelve pounds in three months. My strength and health, my appetite, and my digestion were perfectly restored, and now I feel as young and vigorous as I ever did in my life.

The Daughter.

The law of the Lord says it is the duty of parents to look after the interest of the children—their clothing, food, health, and withal to "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Some parents neglect the child both as to needs of body and proper culture of heart, and leave off entirely any religious training. Some look studiously after the body and neglect the heart. True heart culture, which embraces correct religious training, will lead to giving the body its share of attention.

While there are many snares and pitfalls to entrap the feet of the boy as he grows into manhood, the number is equally great to catch the wary feet of the girl growing into womanhood. Father and son are thrown together more than mother and son, consequently the responsibility of training a boy rests chiefly with the father. Just the reverse is true with mother and daughter. Paul says to Titus: "The aged women likewise, that they be in behavior as becometh holiness, not false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things; that they may teach the young women to be sober, to love their husbands, to love their children, to be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed." (Tit. 2: 3-5.) This will apply with double force to the Christian mother whose daughter is growing up to womanhood. If not already married, she will marry. The character of life that daughter will lead—her chastity, discretion; devotion to her home, husband, children—depends chiefly upon the training given by the mother. If trained right, she will make a wise selection for a husband. If trained right, the daughter will be a Christian, and will also marry a man that will help her to a faithful life as a Christian.

Many a mother—Christian mother—is so anxious for her daughter to shine in "society" that she never has a thought of the influence "society" will have upon the dear girl. She must attend every gathering the other girls attend, must take part in every frivolous amusement or pastime the other girls take part in, the misguided mother in the meantime making a slave of herself to keep the daughter in "society."

I will tell of a case: The mother was a widow, without means of support, except as she earned it with her hands, and had five or six children to care for, one being a daughter about twelve years old, when I first became acquainted with the family. The daughter had an amiable disposition and winsome ways, and she became a general favorite in school and with associates elsewhere. The mother was a Christian, and it was my pleasure to see the daughter baptized when she was about fourteen years of age. The daughter loved company, and the mother dressed her as well as she could, and pushed her out into "society." Sociables, singings, candy breakings, and finally the dance, were taken in; and in the meantime there were several suitors for her hand in marriage. She ran to such excess in this gay life, numerous courtships and engagements, that decent people became disgusted, and the girl was in a manner disgraced. But just at this juncture one of her suitors was successful and they were married. Just previous to this she confessed her wrongs, and was restored to the fellowship of the church. The man she married was of reckless disposition, and cared nothing for the church or pure religion; but she married him against the advice of one of the best friends she ever had. Since that time she has never had the opportunity to attend church, except occasionally. She has had a great deal of trouble, is the mother of five or six little children, a wreck in body, disheartened with life, and broken-hearted.

She, like all others, reaps what she has sown. The mother was largely responsible. The husband and father, if living, is the divinely appointed head and ruler in the family. In a well-ordered family the wife counsels with the husband and trains the daughter in harmony with his wishes. That is the Bible way and the best way to insure peace, happiness, and prosperity. The daughter that rebels against proper parental restraint is laying the foundation for a life of sorrow for herself—family quarrels and disgrace.

A Correction.

I have just received a letter from a brother, stating that some are saying that I am now working through the society. I ask space in your columns to correct such a statement.

I am not connected with the society people at all. I am opposed to the society in its workings. I believe in the God of the Bible, and follow him, by his revealed will, believing that it is all the knowledge I have of duty, and am not willing to bow to the "doctrines and commandments of men," which all who join the society do. I believe that "his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness," and that the gospel is the divine power. (Rom. 1: 16.) Then, as the gospel gives me all information concerning life and godliness, and yet the gospel does not say one word about the society, therefore I cannot and will not be one of its workers for all of its money. The Bible does say: "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." The society is not commanded by the God of heaven, therefore I can do my whole duty out of the concern.

I try to live a consistent Christian life in the "church of the firstborn," the kingdom of God, believing such to be the only divine institution of earth, and that all of its faithful subjects will hear the welcome call: "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." I content myself by remaining in the same. Hoping that those who think I am now connected with human concerns will read these few lines, I close by saying that I am now fighting everything that is of human origin. Success to the grand old Gospel Advocate and its many readers.

A Visit to Kansas.

Here I am, hundreds of miles from my home, visiting Kansas for my health. I left Portland, Me., in December and arrived in Parsons, Kan., on January 6, 1900, and as I have just read Brother J. T. Hinds' letter in the Gospel Advocate of February 1, 1900, I thought I would write a few lines in regard to it and also tell a little about the cause in this part of the vineyard.

Well, I give Brother Hinds my hand with regard to what he has written, and I realize the importance of what he has written since coming to Kansas, and I have been scolding the brethren since I came here for some of those very things. I have found many loyal brethren since coming here, and have enjoyed meeting with several congregations, and also hope to meet with more before going back East. While some of the congregations meet every Lord's day, yet some only meet when the preacher is present; and I want to know how we can condemn the sects for meeting only once a month, or once in three months, or once a year, when at the same time many of our brethren meet only when the preacher is present.

It looks as though the preacher is getting more honor than our Savior, as the Savior will be present whether the preacher is there or not. I think that the cost of the Christian life is not set before the people enough before they obey the gospel, and I think if one meeting of the day could be devoted entirely to the Lord's Supper, as we do in Portland, Me., and then have another service for the preaching of the gospel to the sinners, that the Lord's Supper would be made more impressive and important. There is one thing sure: whether there be a preacher present or not, we must meet to remember the Lord in his death and suffering or the cause will not prosper and we will not be an example to the world.

Perhaps I have said enough on that subject, as Brother Hinds did well, and I only wanted to indorse what he said. I will now tell something of my visit here among the brethren. I found, when I reached here, a big meeting, in the house of the progressives, with Updike amusing the people. I did not know there was a little band of loyal brethren here, until a day or so after being here, and so I heard Updike speak three times. I found a little band of loyal brethren and had the pleasure of meeting with them the next Lord's day, and found some grand disciples among them, meeting every Lord's day and observing the Lord's Supper, though they have no preacher, except Brother Mackintosh, who is too feeble to speak. I had the pleasure of meeting with the congregation at Franklyn the next Lord's day, and also found a band of faithful brethren there. I also learned that Brother P. W. Shiek lived near here, so I went down and spent the day with him, and last Lord's day I went with him to his appointment at Fairview. Brother P. W. Shiek is a grand old soldier of the cross, an able speaker, and great debater, having held some sixty debates. He is to hold a debate with a Mormon in a few weeks, and I hope to hear it. I am finding a little fault with the brethren here for not doing more work, since they have so many loyal brethren to cooperate with, while in New England we have only three loyal congregations; and the central one, which is at Portland, is about eighty-three miles south of Albion and about three hundred miles north of Bridgeport. I expect to meet Brother J. T. Bays, who is to come here soon to hold a meeting.

Parsons, Kan. W. B. HOUSTON.

The Cause in Arizona.

I have been in Arizona about two months. I came here for my health, which I have almost gained. I have been preaching nearly all the time since I came to this country. This country is almost destitute of primitive Christianity. I know of but about two congregations and about three preachers in Arizona Territory.

Dr. E. B. Ketcherside resides in this place, and has done a great and good work here. He has a noble family, all members of the body of Christ. Brother Ketcherside is well known by the publishers of the Gospel Advocate, as well as by most of the leading brethren in Middle Tennessee, and is known to be a man of ability and noble traits of character.

Now, brethren, there is one fact I want to call your attention to. Brother Ketcherside has bought a house in Camp Verde, in which to preach the gospel and worship God. The house needs some repairing, and therefore I appeal to the people of God for some assistance in this work. With one hundred and fifty dollars we can make a nice, neat, and comfortable house in which to worship. I hope the brethren will not pass this by without notice and attention, but will respond at once. Send your contribution to Dr. E. B. Ketcherside, Camp Verde, Ariz. Ter.

I have put in two months of hard work in this country, trying to build up the cause of Christ, and not one cent have I received. Talk about sending money and missionaries to foreign lands, I think something had better be done for this country. I baptized two persons last Lord's day. God help the people to send the word to every hungry and perishing soul beneath the skies.

"The National Crisis."

"O God, thou hast cast us off, thou hast scattered us, thou hast been displeased." (Ps. 60: 1.) David is here ruminating upon the judgment sent upon his people in a time when they were indifferent to the requirements of their God, when they had crowded out the proper reverence to God with enthusiasm and a rush for individual glory and worldly fame.

May this not apply to us, as a nation, and also to the Christian world, today, even more strikingly? Though nearly three thousand years have passed since, yet in the closing scenes of the nineteenth century one of the greatest powers of the earth is in a condition not remote from David's description.

It devolves upon the Christians of our land to teach unity and humbleness to God, and steadfastness; to command the people to "stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord."

God will not bless us nor pour out upon us his bountiful goodness unless he is sought after. Here are the terms of the restoration of a people who have forgotten God: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." Our land has a breach and the various factions are overrunning the true and humble people of God; and the mercies of God will not be accepted, so haughty are the people. If all could learn and realize the inaptitude of man to devise and work out methods conducive to unity and eternal good, possibly the majority would come to God for pardon and salvation.

Now is the time for the harbingers of the beautiful gospel of Christ and the good people of this republic to come to the rescue and beckon unredeemed souls and dying morality, and tell the raging world to come to the meek and lowly Jesus and learn of him whose yoke is easy, and he will make your burden light. What an appalling thought it is for a nation to go down to perdition, a nation whose mother is the Bible! How soon they forget to whom they owe their glory and their power! Will they not learn to give God the praise? Perhaps a few will, after eternity has swallowed them up into everlasting perdition. God is a jealous God and will punish those who will not humble themselves before his mercies and presence. God will show hard and bitter experiences to a people who do not reverence him.

There is a great deal of work and pleading now being done for unity and to save the world, but we need more work and greater zeal. Theory is good, but only work will help to push through a crisis. See the armies for the destruction of life are rapidly increasing; they are clamoring for blood and worldly fame, heedless of eternity. Let not the armies of Immanuel yield, but work and pray that they may gain thousands and overwhelm the powers of darkness and sin that prevail in wars and ravages committed upon the weak and helpless.

The very acts which should be gone into with the Spirit of Christ and enlightenment of the Bible are approached by the defensive steel-bound man-of-war, the rumbling cannon, and the sword. May the piercing gospel of peace spread its influence by our help.

Hon. Sydney Epes, Congressman from Virginia, died at the Garfield Hospital in Washington on March 2, after an operation for appendicitis. His home was at Blackstone, Nottoway County, Va.

The most disastrous mine explosion ever known in the New River district occurred at the Red Ash Mine, W. Va. More than fifty miners were entombed in the mine. The cause of the disaster is not known.

An appeal by Admiral Dewey and his men from the award of the Court of Claims in the matter of the bounty due for the destruction of the Spanish fleet at Manila has been filed in the United States Supreme Court.

The feeling against foreigners grows more pronounced in China. Never in the last forty years has the central government been so intensely anti-foreign. Several Chinese have been impeached and imprisoned because they have assisted in obtaining concessions for foreigners.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee sustains the Act of the Last Legislature known as the "no-fence law," which forbids owners allowing stock to run at large in counties having a population of fifty-nine thousand or over, according to the census of 1890 or any subsequent Federal census.

Gov. Benton McMillin addressed over one thousand citizens of Giles and surrounding counties at the opera house in Pulaski, Tenn., announcing himself for reelection as Chief Executive, stating in conclusion that it has long been his ambition to reach the United States Senate, but that he was ready and willing to abide by the will of the people.

The most costly book in the Royal Library at Stockholm is a Bible. It is said that one hundred and sixty asses' skins were used for its parchment leaves. There are three hundred pages of writing, and each page falls but one inch short of being a yard in length. The covers are solid plank, two inches thick.

Lewisburg, Tenn., has a factory for telephone insulating pins. The pins are made only of black locust, catalpa, and mulberry, all of which are found in abundance near that place. The factory makes large quantities of these pins each day, and finds a ready market for them at Louisville, Nashville, St. Louis, New Orleans, and other points.

A bill was presented in the House of Representatives similar to the one Mr. Gaines introduced some time ago, giving our soldiers, army, and navy, of the Mexican, Indian, and Spanish wars, equal rights to those of the Civil War to homesteads in our Territories or public lands. The bill applies to the widows and orphans, also, of the heroes.

A delegation of Memphians appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and asked for an appropriation of $150,000 for the improvement of the river front at Memphis, Tenn. A change in the current of the river has piled up a sand bar, which renders a good portion of the river front useless for wharfage purposes. The appropriation is wanted to remove this bar.

The Nashville (Tenn.) Hosiery Mills are nearing completion, and will be ready to start up about April 1, 1900. The capacity of the mills has been increased from the original plan of one thousand dozen pairs of hose per day to one thousand five hundred dozen pairs per day, and about four hundred operatives will be employed. The outlook for a successful business is flattering.

Commissioner of Agriculture Stevens, of Georgia, says the department has sold on a reasonable estimate one million more fertilizer tags this year than last. "This indicates," said the commissioner, "that the farmers are sowing every available piece of ground they have in cotton. In a few days they will be plowing up the oat fields, where the crop seems to be injured, and will plant it in cotton."

A large gray wolf was killed near Nashville. The wolf, when killed, weighed one hundred and fifty pounds, and measured six feet three inches from nose to tip of tail. Many sheep have been killed in the neighborhood and strange tracks have been noticed for several weeks. The beast must have escaped from captivity, as there are not any wolves in the State, as far as is known.

Berlin has a veterinary hospital for dogs, where many thousands are treated annually. At the head of the hospital are famous scientists, while the positions of internes and nurses are filled by students, who consider it a privilege to work under their instruction. Any person who has an ailing dog may take the beast to the hospital, where it will be examined and treated at a total cost of less than eight cents a day.

Prof. Marshall Saville, representing the American Museum of Natural History, of New York, has left for home, carrying many unique objects discovered by him at ruins near the prehistoric city of Mitla, in the State of Oaxaca. The principal work of the Professor was the uncovering of many ancient mounds, which were almost inaccessible, as they were overgrown with forests, and a road had to be constructed to them.

A steamship is now taking on, at Philadelphia, Pa., a load of nearly six thousand tons of agricultural machinery, chiefly mowers and reapers, from factories in Chicago. The cargo will be landed at Novorossisk, on the Black Sea, and be distributed from that point throughout Siberia and Russia. A shipment of such machinery to Vladivostok was made recently. Although the cost of important parts of agricultural machines has increased more than one hundred per cent in the last twelve months, the exports so far this year are thirty per cent in excess of those in the corresponding period of 1899.

Representative Harmer, of Pennsylvania, died in Philadelphia. Mr. Harmer was known as the "Father of the House," being the oldest member, both in length of service and in continuous service. As such it was his duty to swear in the incoming Speaker at the opening of each Congress. His only appearance in the House this session was when he made a special trip from Philadelphia at the opening of the session in December to administer the oath to Speaker Henderson. He was then in a feeble condition and his eyesight was so poor that John T. Chauncey, one of the oldest employees of the House, was obliged to prompt him while he read the oath to Speaker Henderson.

The experiment in rice growing, made by Captain Dunovant, near Eagle Lake, Tex., has been so successful that planters in all adjoining counties have planted a large acreage in this valuable cereal. In the western portion of this country experiments were made, resulting in the production of first-class rice, the soil being well adapted to the plant. Near Bay City there are now two large rice fields, one owned by Messrs. Vogelsang, Hebner Brothers, D. P. Moore, and others. A lot of up-to-date machinery for irrigating the land has been purchased to put the ground in good condition. The plot consists of five hundred acres. H. P. Barden planted three hundred acres in rice. The ramie (Chinese silk plant) is also engaging the attention of farmers who are interested in diversified farming, and extensive experiments will be made, and the adaptability of the soil to the cultivation of the plant will be thoroughly tested with a view of future investment.

The Independent says of the Puerto Rico tariff bill: "The Puerto Rico tariff bill has been forced through the House, and probably will be accepted by the Senate in substance, if not in form; and Puerto Rico must make up its mind to do the best it can without a free market. There are some very strange things in connection with this legislation, of which we must take notice while it is passing into history. First, the preamble of the bill declares that its purpose is to afford relief to a people deprived of markets for much of their products and impoverished by severe and unusual storms. How are markets opened by levying a tariff on goods seeking them? How are people, impoverished by the lack of a free market, to be relieved by making them pay to enter it? This bill puts us in the absurd position of levying a tariff for the benefit of Puerto Rico on everything it has to buy and sell. The tariff has often been eulogized by protectionists as beneficent, but it was never claimed that it is beneficent to those on whose products it is levied."

The more important of the new Southern industries reported by the Tradesman, during the week ending on March 3, include an asbestos goods factory in Virginia; brick and tile works in North Carolina; a broom factory in South Carolina; brownstone quarries in North Carolina; a carriage factory and coal mines in Kentucky; two cotton mills in Alabama, one in Georgia, three each in North Carolina and South Carolina, and two in Texas; a cotton seed oil mill in Texas; an electric light and power company in North Carolina; a fertilizer factory in Virginia; flouring mills in Georgia, Louisiana, Texas, and West Virginia; a foundry and machine shop in Virginia; two furniture factories in North Carolina; acetylene gas works in Virginia; an ice factory in Tennessee; knitting mills in Florida, Georgia, and North Carolina; lumber mills in Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, and Virginia; a machine shop and a mattress factory in North Carolina; a mosquito net factory in Tennessee; a naval stores company in Florida; ocher and sienna mines in Georgia; a paper mill in Louisiana; a petroleum company in West Virginia; a soap factory in South Carolina; telephone companies in Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia.

The Railroad Gazette presents a compilation of the train accidents in the United States during the year 1899, as taken from its monthly records, and, compared with the preceding year, and in fact, with several years, the casualties show a material increase. During the past year 589 persons were killed, of whom 113 were passengers, 402 employees, and 74 others. The total number of persons injured were 2,061, and of these 888 were passengers, 1,095 employees, and 78 others. In 1898, 426 persons lost their lives on the roads, and of that number 46 were passengers. In 1897, 62 passengers were killed, as against 128 in 1896. Thirty-five passengers were killed in 1895, and 178 in 1893, while there were 58 in 1891. In 1899, 888 persons were injured, while the preceding year the number was 616. As usual, the preponderance of deaths and accidents is among employees, and the record in this respect for 1899 is 1,095, as compared with 1,024 in 1898. Commenting on the figures, the Railroad Gazette says: "The accident record for the calendar year just closed shows the largest total in our history, as was to be expected from the great expansion in railroad traffic attendant upon the revival of business, and as has been foreshadowed by the monthly records."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

The following letter is published because many readers will probably be interested in it:

"Water Valley, Miss., March 3, 1900.—Brother Srygley: That you may know how bitter some preachers are against the Gospel Advocate, and, if you see proper, give them a word of admonition in regard to the matter, I give you a quotation from a letter from a sister in this State: 'Brother Kilby Ferguson organized the brethren here and advised them to burn the Gospel Advocate. Tommie has sent a few copies, however, to them, and some like it real well.' This is from a sister at —, —, and indicates how the minds of brethren in some places are prejudiced against the Gospel Advocate; but notwithstanding the opposition, I rejoice at the good the paper is doing."
"W. D. CRAIG."

Brother Kilby Ferguson's exhibition of ugly temper and a narrow, intolerant, proscriptive spirit does not meet the issue nor settle the question. Burning the Gospel Advocate will not change the convictions of the writers and subscribers who make the paper what it is, nor will it keep them from preaching and practicing their convictions to the extent of their ability and opportunity. If the purpose is to suppress their convictions by burning, it will be necessary to burn the men and women who hold such convictions. It will be necessary, also, to burn the Bible or keep the people from reading it to prevent others from forming similar convictions. This method of suppressing such doctrine by burning was thoroughly tested in the bloody days of bitter persecution and martyrdom years ago. The experiment was a failure then and it would hardly be a success now, even if it were practicable. Truth never manifests any such spirit or resorts to any such methods as this. If the Gospel Advocate is teaching anything the New Testament does not authorize, it does not know it, and its columns are open to Brother Kilby Ferguson or anybody else to show it. If they are wrong, the writers and readers of the Gospel Advocate will love and thank Brother Ferguson or anybody else to point out their errors in the light of New Testament teaching. If he will give them the opportunity they offer him in any State-work paper or organized effort convention, they will point out the errors they honestly believe he is teaching and practicing without one unkind word or the least unbrotherly feeling.

The following correspondence is published here because it is of general interest:

"Gallatin, Tenn., March 6, 1900.—Brother Srygley: Can you give me the reply I made in the Baptist and Reflector some time ago when you asked him if a person would be saved, no rejected baptism after having been sufficiently taught? I would be glad to get the exact language of your question and his reply. I am to have a debate in a few days in which I will need that statement. I would also be glad to know the date of the paper. I send you stamp for reply."
L. S. WHITE."

"Nashville, Tenn., March 7, 1900.—Dear Brother White: The question I asked the editor of the Baptist and Reflector was: 'Will a man who refuses to be baptized after he is fully informed as to the teaching of the New Testament on the subject of baptism, be saved?' His answer was: 'Such a man will not be saved, because his refusal would show that his heart is not right—his conversion is not genuine.' I write this without the paper before me, but I am sure I correctly represent the editor of the Baptist and Reflector. If you find a man who thinks one who refuses to be baptized after he is fully informed as to the teaching of the New Testament on the subject of baptism will be saved, why not let him affirm that proposition and you bring it and debate with him on that issue? That is what I would have done with the editor of the Baptist and Reflector if he had said such a man would be saved; but he did not say it. I incline to the opinion that, if you put that question to any man you debate with, he will answer it as the editor of the Baptist and Reflector answered it; but if he does not, you will at least have a clear proposition and distinct issue to debate with him."

"Very truly,
F. D. SRYGLEY."

I have received through the mail an envelope well filled with liberal propositions and a circular letter from the Oracle Publishing Company, Chicago, Ill., and addressed to "Rev. F. D. Srygley." The nature and scope of the liberal propositions and of the work to be done are set forth as follows:

"We are anxious to secure the services of a few good men and women to represent our company in the field. We are making extremely liberal terms with suitable parties, and have a plan which will enable one to develop a permanent, pleasant, and profitable business. If you desire to ally yourself with this Christian enterprise and to establish yourself in a business that will be most satisfactory in financial returns as well as in the realization of good accomplished, let us hear from you. If you are not in a position to consider this opening, you will confer a favor on us by referring us to suitable party. We believe our work on the liberal terms we offer will enable good solicitors to earn from $1,000 to $1,500 a year. Whatever else you may do, please do not fail to send us the name of a party who would be suitable and likely to take up this important work. We also desire to arrange with some active member of every church to act as our local representative, and will allow a fair commission for work done. We will ask you, as pastor, to kindly assist us by selecting a suitable party in your church who will consent to act, and send us his name or have him write us."

The following suggestions are offered on a neat circular as to how to "assist in pushing forward the interests" of the Oracle Publishing Company in general and the paper in particular:

"Send us the name of a party suitable for a field agent for our company who would consider a proposition to engage with us. See that your Sunday school gets its supplies from us. Be sure to see about this matter. See that your church and Sunday school are supplied with our new song book, the best song book published to-day for all purposes. See that all the officers of your Sunday school have copies of 'An Up-to-date Sunday School,' a worker's manual which we publish. See that your pastor furnishes us with all news from your church for publication." The price of the paper is one dollar a year, and the proposition is to give one hundred of "our song books" —price, $25—as a premium for twenty-five subscribers, which really makes the paper cost nothing at all in clubs of twenty-five.

When stockholders in the Christian Publishing Company declined to work with J. H. Garrison last fall because he was editing the Christian-Evangelist in the interest of higher criticism, which they "considered heresy," he stated in the daily papers that he owned a controlling interest in the Oracle Publishing Company. The Christian Publishing Company was reorganized, leaving him in control, so he now controls both companies and papers. The liberal terms proposed and the vigor with which the business management is pushing the paper and the company will greatly aid in the circulation of the objectionable doctrine if the enterprise proves to be a financial success.

The following paragraph was written about a year ago, but mislaid among other papers. I have just found it, and, though it is out of date, I publish it. The railroad granted the special rates asked for on this list of questions and answers:

One meets many difficulties when he tries to be a Christian, and nothing else; to be a member of the church, which is the body of Christ, and of which every Christian is a member, and nothing else; and to preach and practice all the New Testament teaches, and nothing else. For instance, the railroads propose to give preachers reduced rates of travel. Of course care must be taken in granting such favors to make sure that the applicant is a preacher. To systematize the business and facilitate investigations, each applicant is required to fill out printed blank applications. These blanks assume that every preacher belongs to some denomination, and no provision is made in the blanks for preachers who belong to no denomination. Each denomination is requested to file with this representative of the railroads a list of its preachers, and every applicant must appear in some list of denominational preachers, or else state what denomination he belongs to and give satisfactory explanation as to why his name does not appear in the list of preachers of his denomination. I have just filled and signed one of the blanks. The questions and answers are an interesting study to one who really wants to follow the New Testament in all matters of religious work and worship. They are as follows:

Question: "Do you now hold joint clergyman's credential for 1898?"

Answer: "No; I never applied for one before. I apply now because friends who hold such things say I can get it and ought to have it."

Question: "What line of religious work are you engaged in?"

Answer: "Evangelist and editorial writing."

Question: "Are you officially appointed by your denomination or society?"

Answer: "I belong to no denomination or society. I believe all denominations are antiscritural and ought to be abolished. The church of God, of which I am a member, is the body of Christ; it includes and consists of all Christians. I belong to nothing else."

Question: "State whether annual or limited time clergy credential is desired."

Answer: "Annual."

Question: "Do you depend on your religious work for a livelihood?"

Answer: "I depend on my religious work for a living."

Question: "In what manner are you compensated, by salary or collections?"

Answer: "By freewill offerings."

Question: "Are you an ordained minister of the gospel?"

Answer: "I have been preaching twenty-three years, but belong to no denomination that ordains ministers. I have never belonged to any denomination."

Question: "Do you devote your time exclusively to religious work?"

Answer: "Yes."

Question: "Have you secular work of any kind?"

Answer: "No."

Question: "Where is your field of labor?"

Answer: "Where there is demand for preaching and an opportunity to do good."

Question: "Give name and address of pastor of the local church where you hold your membership."

Answer: "I belong to a local church where I live—Donelson, Tenn., six miles from Nashville. The church has no pastor; it has elders."

This is the only way I can fill the blank, and yet I fear my answers will appear impertinent; that they will confuse the clerks and probably defeat my effort to get the rates I apply for.

Is Total Depravity True?

A very great hindrance in approaching Christ to be saved is the belief that some have on the subject of human depravity. The sinner is bad enough, but many have darkened his hopes by making him out worse than he is. There are those who have been reared to believe the sinner is totally depraved, and for this reason utterly unable to obey God until he is roused from this state of total depravity by an immediate and powerful operation of the Holy Spirit separate and apart from the word of God. There are exciting occasions, which are mis-called "Pentecostal meetings," in which it is supposed this power is frequently manifest.

This lowly view of humanity in general, and of oneself in particular, may not excite dislike toward one as where a person is too self-conceited with his own importance to obey Christ, but it will very effectually prevent one from obeying the gospel. As long as he is impressed with the idea he cannot obey God, he will make no effort to come, notwithstanding the Savior's precious invitation: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden." The sinner must use the power he has to come, however small that power may be. The following conversation between Henry Hardshell, who was trying to get religion and aspired to be a Primitive Baptist, and Frank Faithful, who had more than once been called a "stickler" for the word of God, will illustrate the point:

Henry Hardshell: "An unconverted sinner is totally depraved in sin. He cannot think a good thought nor do a good deed. I know I am dead in sins and can prove it by the Bible. A sinner can do nothing until God quickens him."

Frank Faithful: "What scripture do you think proves that a sinner is so dead in sins he can do nothing, not even obey the commands of God to him?"

Henry H.: "Why, do you not know Paul wrote to the Ephesians: 'And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins?' Can a dead man do anything? You may preach your powerful sermons and sing your sweetest songs before him; but he hears not, he moves not, because he is dead. Just so, when a man is dead in sins you do no good in preaching, praying, or singing before him; for that man is as dead spiritually as the man is dead physically. Neither one can do anything. I tell you, he is dead!"

Frank F.: "I know that is the substance of the creeds' teaching on the subject of man's state in sin, but you are trying to get more out of that passage than Paul ever put into it."

Henry H.: "I have shown you that Paul called the state of a sinner 'dead in trespasses and sins,' and I want to know right here, now, if you believe a dead man can do anything. If you do, be honest and speak it right out. Do you believe a dead man can do anything?"

Frank F.: "It would seem from your own example that he can argue, and even attempt a thing impossible—that is, to extract proof where there is none."

Henry H.: "Why, have I not shown the Bible proof that Paul says they 'were dead in trespasses and sins?' Now, I want you to answer this question right here: Do you believe a dead man can do anything?"

Frank F.: "I answer yes; those dead in sins can do something, they can obey God."

Henry H.: "But I have shown you, right there in the Bible, in Eph. 2: 1, that Paul says they 'were dead in trespasses and sins,' and you cannot deny it."

Frank F.: "Nor do I wish to deny it, as Paul gives it. It is true that Paul says they were dead in trespasses and sins, but he did not mean to teach by that figure of speech that those dead in sin could not obey the gospel of Christ."

Henry H.: "That is only your think so, and I will have my own opinion about it."

Frank F.: "No; it is not simply my opinion, it is rather my faith on that subject, as the testimony is clear to show, even from the same letter, that these very Ephesians who had been dead in trespasses and sins did do several things while they were in that state of death."

Henry H.: "I have never seen any such scripture, and I know it says right there in Eph. 2: 1: 'You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins.' Cannot you see that? I want to know here, right now, if you believe a dead man can do anything. I have proved to you from the Bible a sinner is dead and cannot do anything."

Frank F.: "Would you believe the proof, if I show it to you, that Paul teaches they did obey God, notwithstanding they 'were dead in trespasses and sins?'"

Henry H.: "Well, yes; I would believe if it were in there, but I know that what I said is there, in Eph. 2: 1. That verse is there, and I know it, and you cannot deny it."

Frank F.: "You ought to remember, Henry, that Paul did not divide his letter into chapters and verses. Those who burden their weak minds with chapters and verses may fail at last to understand the truths they contain. But even this corruption of the text does not destroy the testimony I propose to show you."

Henry H.: "Well, what is it, and where is it?"

Frank F.: "In what we call Eph. 1: 13, he says to these same Ephesians 'who were dead in trespasses and sins: 'In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise.' Here you see those who had been dead in sins could trust in Christ, could hear the gospel, could believe it, and under its provisions enter into Christ, where they were sealed with the holy Spirit of promise."

Henry H.: "Why, that contradicts Eph. 2: 1, where it plainly says they 'were dead in trespasses and sins.'"

Frank F.: "No; it only contradicts your interpretation of it. This ought to prove that interpretation wrong."

Henry H.: "Well, I never will believe that a sinner dead in sins can think a good thought or do a good deed. Isn't it old Isaiah who says that 'all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags?' I tell you, I do not believe a sinner can think a good thought or do a good deed."

Frank F.: "True, he will never be able to do anything which will merit the pardon of sin, but he can do much to please God and enter into that state where God, for Christ's sake, will pardon his sins, as the Ephesians had done. Man can do much that is commendable among men. You know men of the world are often very kind, hospitable, and liberal. You and I have personal knowledge of many kindnesses bestowed by those who did not claim to be Christians. Christianity has done much for those who have never obeyed the gospel. We have eaten too many good dinners prepared by our friends of the world to say in truth they cannot think a good thought or do a good deed. Henry, you can have good thoughts and do good deeds."

Henry H.: "I do not believe in arguing these questions. I do not think debates do any good."

Frank F.: "I am opposed to arguing, too, just for the sake of contention, and I have never been accused of it; but if I were so disposed, I could easily admit what you claim, that man in sin is totally depraved, which I do not believe, and then prove that God's word is able to save him from that awful death in sin."

Henry H.: "If you admit that sinners are totally depraved, you will have to look for some other means to save them than the mere word of God. It is a dead letter, anyhow."

Frank F.: "That is exactly where you miss it. God teaches us that his word thoroughly furnishes the man of God to all good works. Did you ever study closely Ps. 119, that incomparable eulogy on the word of God?"

Henry H.: "Now you are getting away from the point. Eph. 2: 1 says: They 'were dead in trespasses and sins.' How can the word of God in Psalms or any other place do a dead man any good? Ah, man, you have got to wait for that good Spirit."

Frank F.: "Do you remember Lazarus, whom Christ raised from the dead? He was dead, was he not?"

Henry H.: "O, yes, I have read about him. I guess he was dead enough, for he had been buried four days. He must have been dead longer than that."

Frank F.: "Christ knew he was dead before he came to Bethany. He went to the tomb, and as he stood above that new-made grave, he wept. I like to mention that, Henry, because it showed his love for frail mankind. He has yet as tender regard at the right hand of God for suffering man as when he wept over them on earth. But all at once his manner was changed. He ordered: 'Take ye away the stone.' Then he uttered just three words of authority, 'Lazarus, come forth!' and he that had been dead came forth, wrapped in graveclothes, with the napkin tied about his jaws. He said: 'Loose him and let him go.' Here is an exhibition of the power of the word of Christ. If I should admit, then, that man is totally dead in sin, I could well argue from this that the word of God is sufficient to raise him from that death."

Henry H.: "Is that all the proof you can show on this point?"

Frank F.: "No, this is not all, but this is clear and strong."

Henry H.: "I will admit this seems interesting and appears to prove it, but I would like to hear you present some other instances."

Frank F.: "This will do for one interview. At another time we will examine other proofs. In the meantime let us study carefully the word of God, that we may learn and practice its teachings."

G. LIPSCOMB.

The Parental Authority of God and the Corresponding Filial Subordination of Disciples in the Divine Family.

[A sermon preached by G. G. Taylor, at Campbell Street Church, Louisville, Ky., February 17, 1900.]

Text: "I will . . . be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." (2 Cor. 6: 17, 18.)

Among the many relationships used in the word of God by which to illustrate that which exists between God and his people, there is none which is more significant, more instructive, or more impressive than that of the family. The family circle is the most intimate, the most delightful, and the most sacred of all relations; it involves the origin, the development, and the perfection of the deepest, the tenderest, and the noblest feelings of the human soul; it comprehends the inception, the prosecution, and the consummation of the most important interests appertaining to the human race; it grasps all that is most desirable, most enjoyable, and most important in time and in eternity.

There is, therefore, in the text I have chosen, an exalted exhibition of inspired wisdom in choosing this relation as illustrative of that which God sustains to his people.

In every well-regulated family it is understood that the father is the natural as well as the scriptural provider.

The absolute helplessness of infancy and the incompetency of early childhood, together with the instincts and impulses natural to fatherhood, fix upon the father the office of providing for the children. The most savage and barbarous of all heathen nations, who have knowledge only as it is revealed through the dim light of nature, have nevertheless learned something of this most sacred trust. Indeed, the most besotted of brute creation recognize in some measure this paternal province.

Inspiration is in perfect accord with this universal sentiment. In support of this declaration I quote as follows: "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." (1 Tim. 5: 8.) "For the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children." (2 Cor. 12: 14.) So well is this principle understood and recognized among men that in case a father ignores or neglects this responsibility, he is execrated by his fellows. If a father is in this respect all that he ought to be, then so long as he has ability and opportunity to provide, his household is secure against all want and consequently may dwell continuously in a state of absolute freedom from anxious care.

Now, all concede that God, our Heavenly Father, is infinitely able and is in possession of unlimited opportunities for meeting all the wants of his children; that in him are located all the stores of divine wisdom, goodness, and power; and that these divine attributes constitute an inexhaustible fountain of supplies, on which we can draw for the blessings which we may need.

Whenever, therefore, the child of God indulges in anxious thoughts concerning blessings which are to come from his Father's hand, whether they be blessings physical or spiritual, whether blessings temporal or eternal, there is in every such indulgence an unwarrantable reflection upon the character of his Heavenly Father.

True, a child may alienate himself from the family, and in this way place himself beyond the limitations of paternal supervision, in which condition he may not only feel anxiety, but actually experience the absence of a Father's peculiar providence. But so long as he has any legitimate claims to sonship in God's family, so long doubt and solicitude in this respect are both unreasonable and unnatural.

It is also true that a child of God may not realize the gratification of all his desires; but our desires and our needs may be two different questions. Our Father, who alone is capable of knowing our actual needs, may from paternal love itself withhold very many things which we in our ignorance may desire. Of one thing the dutiful and trustful child of God may ever feel assured—viz., "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

I will close this part of my discourse by quoting the language of our blessed Lord: "Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek:) for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." (Matt. 6: 25-34.)

In the family relation the father is understood to be the natural and scriptural protector. When dangers threaten and the lives of the family are imperiled, the helpless children instinctively look to the father for safety. In every such emergency, the true and faithful father, with unselfish devotion, unhesitatingly interposes in the child's behalf. In the protection and defense of his children, any father who has the feelings natural to fatherhood will willingly lay down his life.

Contemplating the church as God's family, it is equally natural and scriptural to regard him as the natural and scriptural defense and protection for his family. Scores of scripture declarations might be quoted wherein absolute security is promised to the child of God. I will here quote but one: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Rom. 8: 35-39.) God has and does and surely will protect his children.

In every well-ordered family the father governs and is the teacher of his children. Intellectual maturity and experience are understood to qualify him for these most responsible charges. It would be regarded in the highest degree presumptuous, as well as extremely dangerous, for any child, unless expressly delegated by the father, to assume the rôle of instructor in the family while the father is on hand and fully competent to answer all demands of this nature. It would be regarded by all intelligences still more dangerous for a child to usurp paternal authority by way of directing and governing the affairs of the family even in the smallest matters while the head of the family survives to occupy his rightful place of authority in the family circle. Such a movement would be not a menace simply, but a usurpation of authority, presaging discontentment, disintegration, anarchy, and ruin to all the interests of the household. What is here affirmed of the individual child would prove still more disastrous should it become the project of a combination or a convention of children.

Now, God, as the Father of his family, is the legitimate ruler and teacher for his children. This being true, simple propriety suggests and filial subordination demands that we, as his children, shall sit at his feet and learn, and gracefully subordinate ourselves to his parental authority. The edicts of popes and the decisions of councils for guidance and rule, in the family of God, are open defiance to him who alone should direct and govern by virtue of paternal authority. All conventions of disciples to project and prosecute schemes and plans which engage the lives and energies of God's children in his family affairs are usurpations of God's paternal authority, and on this account should receive merited condemnation from every loyal child of God. It is not a sufficient reply to say that measures adopted by such confederations are not authoritatively binding. They are certainly rules of life formulated and adopted by those who enact them, and, to be effective at all, must be followed just the same as if they were authoritatively binding; and this is the utmost which authoritative deliverances can reach. Parental authority is the natural and scriptural fountain from which child life springs, and it is the natural and scriptural force by which childhood's activity is propelled and directed; so that any substitution for parental authority to reach these ends and aims is a perversion of both nature and scripture.

God's paternal authority in its divine purposes of reaching and controlling the active life of his children may not be superseded and set aside by the legislation of men under the specious plea that such legislation is not to be regarded as authoritatively binding. God, as the Father of his children, is degraded and dishonored in his own house when his government is thus usurped by his own children.

In one way only could such interference be tolerable—viz., by a voluntary surrender of authority upon the part of God, supplemented by a specific delegation of it to some one else.

This brings us to remark that this delegation of a Father's authority, as a matter of fact, has been done; but the Father in making this transfer has not vested such power in any convention of his children. For reasons best known to himself and in subserving the highest interests of his children, God has placed the mantle of supreme authority upon the shoulders of one "who thought it not robbery to be equal with God." This transference, prompted in infinite love and directed in infinite wisdom, has invested his "only begotten Son," the "firstborn among many brethren," with his paternal authority.

"The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand." (John 3: 35.) "All things are delivered unto me of my Father." (Matt. 11: 27.) "The God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory. . . . And gave him to be the head over all things to the church." (Eph. 1: 17-22.) From these declarations we conclude all that God could have been to the divine family, Christ by specific delegation from the Father has now become.

That we may see and realize our Father's delegated authority over us as his children, and that we may be impressed with a proper sense of our subordination to that authority thus delegated, we submit the following illustration:

In a family the father with paternal wisdom and affection had provided for, protected, and controlled his children. In this way all their wants had been met, every danger had been averted, and their highest welfare had been secured. In that family the eldest son, the firstborn, had imbibed his father's spirit of wisdom and love so that in every feature of his moral and intellectual character he was the equal of his father. For reasons sufficient, and in order to secure the best interests of the family, this father delegated to this son the paternal office of providing for, protecting, and governing his younger brothers. In the exercise of the same wisdom, the same love, and the same care which distinguished his father, the children were equally provided for, equally protected, and equally as well governed. With unselfish devotion and self-sacrificing consecration, he contributed to them his entire life, and as a consummating service he willingly and cheerfully threw himself between them and a fatal danger. He saved his brothers, but in doing so he lost his own life. In his dying hour, still moved by a supreme love and solicitude for the prosperity and happiness of his brothers, he left on record a transcript of his wisdom for their guidance. This document was perfect as a rule of life, and by it they were to be led, just the same as while he lived, into their chief good. Among the last items in this most important document were the following:

"Item.—For the life work of the family, I direct that each member thereof shall in due form become a joint partner with the others in the one common business firm which embodies the highest wisdom attainable, and by practical demonstration has proved itself eminently sufficient for all necessary purposes and affords ample range for the exercise of unlimited energies upon the part of all concerned."

"Item.—I appoint the first day of every May as a memorial occasion, and direct that on every such occasion the members of the family shall assemble at the old homestead and deposit upon my grave a simple rosebud in token of their remembrance of me and of my sacrifices in their behalf."

"Item.—I further direct that nothing shall be added to or taken from what is herein written."

Thus the father's delegated authority became in stereotypic form fixed for the perpetual observance of his children.

The years have come and gone. The times have changed and the people have changed with them. The will of the dead brother has well-nigh been forgotten. Its provisions are buried almost as effectually as the mortal remains of him who wrote it. Its stipulations have been broken and the business of the family is no longer prosperous. The firm which gave them prosperity and prestige has been supplanted by institutions too numerous to be mentioned. Conflicting interests divide and distract, and the old-time unity is gone. The very nature of the family life work has been changed, and its original projectors would not recognize it that which entailed their lives, and which they sought by all the force of principle and interest and gratitude to perpetuate in the future history of the family. In the light of all this transformation, I put the question: Is this a proper return for such services and sacrifices as have been expended in their behalf, and is this an appropriate recognition of paternal authority?

But again: The first day of May has come; it is memorial day; it is the day on which the children gather at the homestead and look upon the scenes of early childhood; it is the day for them to commemorate the services and sacrifices made in their behalf; it is a day to celebrate a brother's dying love.

But—alas!—where are those who from every consideration of respectability and gratitude should be present? The roll is called. One is absent because of business; another, from inconvenience; another, from indifference; and another, from sheer indisposition. I repeat the question: Is this a suitable return, and is this a proper manifestation of respect for such paternal authority and for such fraternal devotion?

Another first day of May has come. The multitudes have assembled. Throngs of people have come to witness the performances. A programme has been published. The curtain rises and the show begins.

But—alas!—the simple commemorative ceremonies for which the day was originally set apart have lost their charm. These have ceased to attract the attention of those who claim to be beneficiaries in the events celebrated, and the rosebud service, with its soul-thrilling memories, is relegated to the background. Music and oratory, oratory and music, with all their fascinating enchantments, hold the gaping multitude in captivity. As if bewitched the celebrators turn over the day to the masses, who without stint or restraint make it the occasion of pleasure and entertainment. I put the question once more: Can such performances, on such an occasion, under such circumstances, meet the demands of paternal love and authority, and can they be regarded as suitable and acceptable services commemorative of the tragic events which the prescribed services were appointed to celebrate? The common sense of mankind will pronounce such a perversion of the simple, loving, grateful memorial service to be rendered in memory of a brother's love into an entertainment for a crowd of giddy-headed and empty-hearted pleasure lovers and pleasure seekers. It is a gross insult to, rather than a reverential respect for, the memory of such a friend.

But we turn from the typical to the real. It is our Heavenly Father's family, and we, his disciples, are his children. Jesus, our blessed Lord, is our brother, to whom our Father has committed his paternal authority. Jesus lived for us and died for us, and has by this living and dying consecration become the Savior of our souls from death and hell. In the counsels of infinite wisdom and in the depths of divine love this blessedness can be reached only by the provisions made known in the Testament of Jesus our Lord. In this Testament is revealed what we must be and what we must do. To these we are obligated by the paternal authority of God, our Heavenly Father, delegated to Jesus Christ our Lord, and made permanent and perpetual by the force of his last Will and Testament. In this Testament occur in substance the following items:

Item.—Each child, by virtue of the fact that he is a child, becomes a member of the one and the only one institution which has been provided for in this Testament. This one common institution has from practical demonstration proved adequate for all ends to be reached by organized effort.

Item.—On the first day of each week every child in the divine family shall meet to reverence the Father in songs of praise, in prayers, and thanksgiving, and to commemorate the love and sacrifice of Jesus in the simple ordinance of the Lord's Supper.

Item.—Nothing shall be added to or taken from the things herein written.

Now, in all sincerity and truth, we submit that violence has been done to God's paternal authority, and the love and blood of Christ have been treated with contempt.

In the face of the stipulated items mentioned above, what other interpretation can be given to the act of adopting other institutions than the church to do what it in itself was designed to accomplish, and which as a matter of fact did more effectively accomplish before the adoption of these additional institutions than has ever been done since?

And what other interpretation can be given to the act of adding to the simple forms stipulated for the devotional and memorial services of God's children, and more especially since by their use it has been clearly demonstrated the very nature of the worship itself has been changed and its purposes have been thwarted?

Filial subordination upon the part of God's children to the paternal authority of God as the divine Father consists in obedience to all which God has commanded, and then a reverential pause in the proceedings. In conclusion I quote: "Now these things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and Apollos for your sakes; that in us ye might learn not to go beyond the things which are written; that no one of you be puffed up for the one against the other." (1 Cor. 4: 6, R. V.)

BAPTISM UNTO THE REMISSION OF SINS.

No one who accepts revelation can doubt for one moment that "God is love," since the apostle of love so declares. A God of love, mercy, and justice never commands his subjects to do one act which is nonessential. As he commands believers to be baptized, it follows that baptism is essential to salvation, and the wise thing to do is to obey God in this command as well as any other. God has never yet laid upon his subjects one unnecessary thing, and the man who so imagines has a very erroneous conception of the character of God. That baptism is commanded is beyond controversy. "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20, R. V.)

John's baptism was for the remission of sins. "John came, who baptized in the wilderness and preached the baptism of repentance unto remission of sins." (Mark 1: 4, R. V.) "To" and "unto" always look forward, and never backward. So great numbers went out to John and were baptized of him unto the remission of sins. "And there went out unto him all the country of Judea, and all they of Jerusalem; and they were baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins." (Mark 1: 5, R. V.) John understood very clearly that his baptism was unto the remission of sins, as the following conclusively proves: "Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to the Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John would have hindered him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? But Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffereth him." (Matt. 3: 13-15, R. V.) John, knowing his baptism was in order to the remission of sins, and realizing that Jesus had no sins to remit, and that he was the only absolutely perfect and sinless being that ever lived in the world, forbade him to be baptized. He insisted that he had need to be baptized of Jesus. John knew he made mistakes, but that Jesus made none. The purest of the pure, the stainless, the spotless Son of God did not need to be baptized of him, as he was baptizing those who confessed their sins, and was baptizing them that their sins might be blotted out. On the other hand, if he had been baptizing the good, Jesus would have been the fittest subject for his baptism. Without an evil thought, an evil desire or emotion, if baptism were for the good, Jesus is the very one who should have been baptized of John, and John, knowing the perfection of his character, would have been very anxious to baptize him. Hence it is conclusive that John was not baptizing good people, and that he understood that his baptism was unto remission of sins; but the kinsman of John, and the only being living greater than John, said: "Suffer it now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffereth him."

In this connection it is deemed expedient to quote a few authorities on the design of John's baptism. These quotations are made from Shepherd's "Handbook on Baptism: "

"Armitage.—'He made their immersion in water the exterior method of "confessing" the reality of an honest, heartfelt reform. Here, then, he required a spiritual revolution, a baptism for the "remission" or forgiveness of sins, and the implanting of a new principle of life in keeping with the kingdom of heaven at hand.' (History of the Baptists, p. 22.) Bickersteth.—'They who were baptized with his baptism confessed their sins, and thus made the first step toward the forgiving mercy which was to be found in Christ, and the seal of his forgiveness they were to look for in his baptism, which is a baptism ~~ru~~ ~~the~~ ~~remission~~ ~~of~~ ~~sins~~ ~~to~~ ~~all~~ ~~true~~ ~~penitents~~ ~~and~~ ~~faithful~~ ~~believers~~. Christ's baptism was, therefore, the perfection and consummation of the baptism of John.' (Exposition of Mark's Gospel, 1: 4.) Wilmarth.—'The first mention of baptism is in connection with the mission of John, the forerunner of Christ. He came "preaching the baptism of repentance unto [eis—i. e., in order to] remission of sins." This his father, Zachariah, had predicted, explaining how he "should go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways, in order to give knowledge of salvation to his people, in remission of their sins." "Confessing their sins" and being baptized, sincere penitents were sure of remission. That baptism, as commanded and administered by John, was not an emblem of remission previously granted, but (with repentance) a condition of remission promised, is clear, not only from the use of "eis," but from John's own words to certain hypocrites, Pharisees, and Sadducees, "Who hath warned you to flee from the coming wrath?" and also from our Lord's words, "But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God concerning themselves, not being baptized by him;" and in refusing baptism they refused everything.' (Baptism and Remission, in Baptist Quarterly, July, 1877, p. 308.)"

Many other authorities could be given, but these are amply sufficient, and I pass them with the simple statement that Brother Shepherd has not quoted scholars who agree with him on the design of baptism, but those who hold the opposite view.

Before passing from John's to the Savior's baptism, due emphasis should be given the fact that those who rejected John's baptism rejected the counsel of God against themselves, and those who accepted it justified God. "And all the people when they heard, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and the lawyers rejected for themselves the counsel of God, being not baptized of him." (Luke 7: 29, 30, R. V.) It was no little thing to reject the baptism of John, but it was fearful, and brought down the condemnation of God upon the man who did it. But what about the man who rejects the baptism of the spotless Son of God, who stands as far above John as the heavens above the earth, and of whom John said, "But he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear?" Of how much sorer punishment shall he be worthy? When the divine philanthropy had accomplished its work, when all things were in readiness, all authority and power in heaven and in earth being given to the Lord Jesus Christ, he commanded his chosen twelve to go and disciple all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit.

In our next issue attention will be given to the baptism ordained by the Lord. J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Evangelistic Items.

On Monday night, February 5, I began a meeting in the town of Covington, Tenn. This place is situated on the Illinois Central Railroad, about forty miles from Memphis, and is a thriving town of perhaps 3,000 population. This was my third meeting with the church within the last four years. The two former meetings were well attended, and resulted in a goodly number of additions. This time, however, the audiences were small, with the exception of a few times, and only one was baptized. The difference in attendance and additions is due to two things—viz., extremely bad weather and cold indifference upon the part of some of the membership. Several did not attend the meeting a single time, nor have they attended any of the meetings of the church for some time. This was indeed a sad feature to me. Unless these repent and return to their first love, there is no hope for their salvation. On the other hand, there are some as devoted and consecrated Christians in Covington as can be found anywhere. The church is not strong numerically or financially. It is what can be properly termed a poor church, and yet the few faithful are by no means lacking in missionary zeal. They feel the burden of the commission, which says, "Preach the gospel to every creature," resting upon them, and have been "sounding out the word" in their own county for the last few years. For the last two years this missionary work resulted in 270 additions to the church, which would have been sounded long and loud if done by the "board;" and yet these brethren have never mentioned the matter in print, and feel that they have done but little. They prefer to follow the Bible in all things, and hence have nothing to do with anything in religion in the way of organization, save the church. Their worship is in perfect harmony with the beauty and simplicity of that revealed in the New Testament. There are many churches known to the writer which are far more able to do missionary work than the church in Covington, and yet they do nothing, or comparatively little. There are fields right at their very doors uncultivated, while they content themselves with preaching at home.

If the churches would rise up and throw off the society yoke and each cultivate the field surrounding it, a thousandfold more souls would be saved and the churches become stronger spiritually. The nearer the church can get to the evangelist, the greater the sympathy for and the deeper the interest it will have in the work; but when the cumbersome machinery of the society comes between the church and the missionary, there is a great loss in the very elements necessary to successful work. I pray God that I may live to see the churches in Tennessee and elsewhere set free from the yoke of humanism. There are, I am glad to say, more encouraging conditions along this line in some quarters.

The Carlisle Murder Case Affirmed.

The Court of Criminal Appeals has affirmed the verdict of ten years assessed against John T. Carlisle for the alleged murder of Prof. William Lipscomb in the First Christian Church, of Dallas, Texas, last summer. The killing was done during services, and produced a sensation at the time. The defense was insanity, and the verdict was for ten years for murder in the second degree at the first trial of the case. A motion for a new trial was made, but overruled. An appeal was taken, and the decision by Judge Brooks is the result. In the opinion the court, after passing upon the various subjects in the petition, closed with the following:

"Appellant's last assignment is that the verdict of the jury is contrary to law and evidence, in that defendant proved he was insane at the time of the killing by a preponderance of testimony. This condition is not borne out in the record before us. The record amply supports the proposition that this was a cold, cruel, and deliberate murder upon express malice of his previous benefactor. . . . Man alone of all God's creatures gives no note of warning of a deadly assault; and so defendant, without any warning whatever, slew deceased. We are somewhat at a loss to understand how the jury reached the verdict they did. The evidence amply supports murder in the first degree and the highest penalty."

PERSONAL.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy preached at Franklin, Tenn., on last Sunday morning and night.

Brother J. P. Lytton, of Lyles Station, Hickman County, Tenn., made us a pleasant call on last Saturday. He was en route home, having just closed a meeting at Tarpley, Tenn.

All things are packed, and I am ready to start in the morning to Rogers, Ark., and Water Valley, Ky., to meet Stewart and Pigue. I trust the Lord will prosper me in the work after debates. I shall then be found somewhere preaching all the time until this year's work is over. I hope all the Advocate family are well. I am through planting corn, and am off to the war.—J. D. Tant, Hamilton, Tex., March 11, 1900.

We have just read a letter from Brother W. J. Bishop, of Tokyo, Japan, saying that his wife cannot live very long. She has for some time been having fevers almost daily. She has grown weaker and weaker since arriving in Japan, and cannot now sit up. The physician says she has consumption. It will be remembered that Brother Bishop was married last June, and with his wife went to Japan soon after. This is sad, very sad. Let us pray for our brother in this time of sadness, and for our patient, suffering sister that if it is the Lord's will he may yet restore her to health. Let us also see that they lack for nothing during our sister's illness.

I know but little to report concerning the work in this field that would likely be of much interest to Gospel Advocate readers. For several reasons I have spent every Lord's day (except two) at home since the third Sunday in November. Three Sundays in each month a few have met for worship at my house; on the other Sunday, at the public school building, that Sunday being my regular preaching day here. The attendance at these Lord's day meetings has ranged all the way from three to nine members. One time my family (three of us) worshiped alone. I am preparing to go on a visiting and preaching trip to Madison County, and this regular work will stop for the time. So, it will be seen, Berclair itself is a mission point. While I do not urge the matter now, still this work needs the prayers and fellowship of the saints abroad. Gifts large or small will be applied to the work. Anything sent during my absence will not spoil before my return.—G. W. Bonham, Berclair, Tex.

EDITORIAL.

One way to have a hard time is to be forever hunting a soft place.

We should allow no day to pass without performing some deed to bless another.

A man should never get so far from the Lord that he cannot reach him with a short prayer.

The poor man who serves God enjoys life far better than the rich man who does not serve him.

God never wastes any time in taking care of the man who spends all his time in taking care of himself.

We should spend our time in serving the Lord, and not in worrying over how the world and the church are run.

The harder you try to love your enemies, the easier it will be to understand why your enemies do not love you.

The man who always feels like the Lord is good and that he gives him the best of everything is not far from the Lord.

It is very hard for a man to keep up a fuss all alone. If you do not talk back, he will get ashamed of himself and quit after a time.

The man's spiritual nature is not right when he would rather make a two-hours' speech in public than spend ten minutes in secret prayer.

Place a man in bad company, and if he is a Christian, he will be ashamed of his companions; but if he is a sinner, he will be ashamed of his religion.

Good judges of human nature contend but two classes never speak a word of which they are afterwards ashamed: one is speechless, and the other is shameless.

Living with other people has a great deal to do with our happiness and our influence for good. The being who lives alone in the world can do no good. We are all so constituted that in some way we seek others to share our sorrows and our joys. No one would rejoice in the prospect of being cast upon a lonely island and compelled to spend life there without companionship. Our hearts would break for the want of love; our minds would almost fail us for want of inspiration from other minds; we would die of loneliness. As we must live with others, we should seek to live with them aright.

There is an art in living with people. Jesus gives us the keynote when he says of himself that he came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister." We may say that it was love that prompted Jesus thus to come. We are not selfish and exacting with those that we love. It is a pleasure to minister to their wants. We cannot be pleasant and agreeable to others as long as we are selfish, exacting, and stand up for our rights. If we were alone in the world, we need not think so much about our actions; for no one would be affected by what we might do or might not do. But there are other people all about us, so we should seriously reflect whether or not our actions are kind to others. We should strive, day by day, to do unto others as we would have them do unto us. We are to think always of doing good to others. That is our mission in this world. We should learn to deny self in all the walks of life in order to please and help others. This is the secret of true happiness.

No man lives alone in the world. We start life in a home, in the midst of other lives. We come into the world utter strangers, but we find waiting on us, in our helplessness, the purest, sweetest, and greatest of all earthly love. So we grow up among people, dependent upon them all along through the years of life. Father and mother first give us our lessons, and then others after them. Others are our companions, beginning with the playmates of childhood and continuing all through life in the friendships and fellowships which are very dear to us. Other people are our helpers in all the relationships of life. Others share our burdens, coming to us with their strength in our weakness, their sympathy in our sorrow, and their plenty in our want. It is very easy to see how necessary other people are to us. Still, we never realize fully how much we owe to them. Especially is this true of those with whom we have lived in the closest relations—for example, the beloved companion who was the light and joy of our own home. They are angels with us unawares. We do not know that they are angels until we see them on the rolling billow, vanishing out of our sight.

In this dim world of clouding cares We rarely know, till 'wildered eyes See white wings lessening up the skies, The angels with us unawares.

There are some persons with whom it is easy to live. They are so gentle, patient, thoughtful, and kind. They are congenial to us. We like them, and they always treat us in a courteous, gentle way. They will not allow us to bear our sorrows alone, but by many thoughtful deeds and acts of kindness they gently woo us away from the tender memories that make the heart ache and bleed. We never tire of being with them. But there are others with whom we are called upon to associate in the varied relations of life with whom it is hard to get along pleasantly. Their very presence is distasteful to us. They are sour and cross; they can see nothing good in any one but self; they are impatient and unkind; they have irritating ways, which sometimes try, vex, and pain us. The problem of living with such in love is a serious one. But we should not be discouraged. We should try. Any one can love the gentle, pure, and good. We are to be courteous to the rude and unkind as well as to the kind and congenial. "And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." The Christian should show meekness to all men.

There is a little sentence
Worth its weight in gold,
Easy to remember,
Easy to be told,
Changing into blessing
Every curse we meet,
Turning hell to heaven—
This is all: Keep sweet.

"Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous," says the apostle; "nevertheless afterward." That is the word of consolation. God himself never said that sorrow was easy or pleasant. He does teach that sorrow is the means to some beautiful end. If we will only keep our hearts from brooding over its great loss, if we will lead our thoughts away from our pain and suffering and upon God's "afterward," we are sure to conquer. All earthly hopes and comforts may fail us, but God's "afterward" can never fail. We may be comforted here; but whether here or not, it is waiting beyond, where eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, what God hath in reserve for those who wait on him. In the rough way and under dark skies, we should ever fix our hearts upon God's "afterward."

"In a recent issue of one of our exchanges the statement was made: 'The Ladies' Aid Society gave a New England supper on Tuesday evening, and the young people gave a valentine sociable on Wednesday evening.' We always feel sad when we see such a statement. It certainly is strange that our churches have not learned they cannot compete with the theater. Announcements of this kind are only used for the purpose of catching the public. It requires a long time for churches to learn that the way to do church work is by teaching the people to give direct for the support of the gospel, rather than go some indirect way to the public. The fact that we do not ask the outside people to give direct to the support of church work is a confession that we do not think we have any claim on them. Many a man not a professing Christian would give more, and think better of the work of our churches, were we to ask him to give money for the support of Christian work, rather than to make an effort to obtain it in some indirect way." (Baptist Outlook.) Good! May God speed the day when all may realize that we need consecration more than money for the conversion of the world.

Queries.

Brother Sewell: I wish to thank you for your articles on the book of Revelation. They are practical and full of information, and must do good to all who study them. Tell us more. The Gospel Advocate is generally full of good things. Long may it live! Now a question: Has Christ any ambassadors on earth? If so, who are they? I understand the apostles to be the last ambassadors. Am I right?

Doziers, Tenn.

T. P. BARFIELD.

You are certainly right about the apostles being the last ambassadors from God to men, and there will certainly be no more. The apostles gave fully the conditions of pardon, upon compliance with which we can have peace with God, and the conditions upon which eternal life can be obtained; we have all these conditions on record, and do not need any more ambassadors now. What we need now is for men to repeat the conditions of salvation the apostles gave. But the trouble with the religious world now is that there are men who think they are ambassadors, and they give different conditions from those the apostles gave, and thus turn the ears of the people away from the conditions the true ambassadors gave and turn them to the doctrines and commandments of men. There are no conditions of salvation now from God to men except those given and left on record by the apostles. All others are conditions given by uninspired men to men, and all of these combined cannot save one sinner. Let all those, therefore, that propose to labor for the conversion and salvation of men see to it that they repeat the terms of peace and redemption that the apostles gave, under guidance of the Holy Spirit. Then all will preach alike, and all can be saved if they will comply with the terms.

Brother Lipscomb: Please answer the following questions at your earliest convenience: (1) "Owe no man anything, but to love one another." (Rom. 13: 8.) Does this embrace our business affairs or not? Do the Scriptures teach us to forgive any one without repentance? (2) What "powers" does Paul refer to in Rom. 13: 1, 2? (3) What part can women take in our meetings and not violate 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35? A full explanation to these questions will help us out in our Bible class. May God keep and bless you.

A. F. HALL.

(1) I think it refers to business affairs and is a command not to go in debt. Owe him nothing, save what the obligations of love require at your hands. He is speaking of business affairs. Verse 7 says: "Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor." This relates to the dues to the government. He then adds: "Owe no man anything, but to love one another." After telling to pay what is due the government and rulers, he adds: "Owe no man anything." It can mean nothing else. Under the Jewish dispensation, when a man became indebted to another and could not pay, the creditor could sell the children, the wife, and the man himself to pay the debts. (Ex. 21: 2; Levit. 25: 39; Deut. 15: 12.) It has been displeasing to God for his children to be in debt and unable to pay, and under Christ he tells them not to go in debt. The creditors are required to be merciful to the debtors. (2) A man cannot forgive one fully until he repents; but he must maintain a forgiving spirit to him, ready to do him good, that he may bring him to repentance, that he may forgive him. We are to treat those who sin against us just as God treats those who sin against him. (3) A woman can do all that a man who does not lead in the service can do. All participate when one leads. Woman as well as man can do this.

Brother Lipscomb: In studying the New Testament, how are we to determine the parables from the other teachings of Christ? In Luke 16 do you consider the lessons of the unjust steward and the rich man and Lazarus as parables? The headings in our Bibles call them "parables," but some say they are not. For the benefit of myself and others please explain through the Gospel Advocate. W. E. WARREN. Rives, Tenn.

I suppose our brother means by a parable a supposed case to illustrate a truth compared with a real one. I do not see that it makes much difference whether the illustration be a supposed case or a real case so we get the lesson taught by the illustration. The example of the rich man and Lazarus illustrates a truth: that those who trust in God, though poor and neglected in this world, are infinitely better off than the rich, who, while enjoying the good things of this life, fail to hear the teachers sent of God, so are lost in the world to come. The truth taught is the end desired. That truth is taught with equal clearness, whether the example be a supposed case or a real case. Webster defines "parable:" "A fable or allegorical relation or representation of something real in life or nature, from which a moral is drawn for instruction." He says the word it comes from means a placing beside or together, a comparing. A fable is an imaginary thing which is used to illustrate a truth. But he says it is also a comparison with something real in life or nature. If the case of the rich man and Lazarus was a real one, it would be a parable just as much as if it were a supposed case. A parable is a comparison to illustrate an unknown truth by some well-known facts in life or nature. These may be supposed or real. It is equally a parable in either case. While this is true, my ideas of Christ and his teachings lead me to believe he always used real, and not supposed or imaginary, facts to illustrate the truths he taught; because I think he could find a sufficiency of real ones to illustrate his teachings, and because he would prefer the real to the fictitious. When he says, "There was a certain rich man, and a beggar was laid at his gate," I think there was just that case, as he tells it; the same of the unjust steward. All time and all events are present to him, and he may use a future event as an actual occurrence before it would take place to men. But it is actual to him. While I do not see that it makes much difference whether the well-understood illustration in a parable is real or supposed, I think Jesus preferred the real, and when he says, "A man went down to Jericho and fell among thieves," I think he tells what had really taken place; but it is none the less a parable, a comparison to illustrate a not well-understood truth by a plain example, because the example was real instead of supposed. A parable is a comparison. The things may be real or supposed.

Brother Lipscomb: Is dealing in futures gambling? Should a Christian deal in futures? If dealing in futures is gambling, what step should a congregation take in such a case? Please answer through the Gospel Advocate for the benefit of some congregations. Some brethren deal in futures in Texas. We want your answer by way of help to decide for the satisfaction of one church. N. S. WILLIAMS. Bryson, Tex.

We published the following on November 23, 1899; we do not see we could improve it: All trade or business with others that is legitimate for Christians is that which helps both parties to the trade; the trade which helps me, but injures another, is not lawful for a Christian. Only that business is legitimate for a Christian which benefits and helps both parties or all parties affected by it. What injures or wrongs any, a Christian cannot engage in. All gambling schemes or games by which one gains and another loses are sinful. One gains without any adequate or just returns; another loses all, gets nothing in return. No Christian can engage in such games. Men are led into such by the love of money. They love money better than they love justice, fairness, uprightness; better than they love God. Under this head of gambling come all speculation and buying of futures. This is gambling upon what may be the price of goods or values of any kind in the future. In this trading, you get or lose money without any compensating good. Selling and buying wheat or cotton is legitimate business. The owner needs the price of his wheat or cotton and is accommodated by the sale. The man buys for use or to hold and sell to another when he needs it, and accommodates him by buying and holding until he is ready to use it. He is entitled to pay for taking and holding it. All parties trading are accommodated and benefited by this trading; but when a person "buys a future," he buys nothing that accommodates any one, has nothing to sell that will benefit any one. He stakes his money on what the price of the article will be in the future. What he makes, some one else loses, without anything in return; or, if he loses, some one gets it without giving a consideration in return. It is in all essential features gambling, getting something for nothing; and this is not honest, tested by Bible principles. That the others agree to take the chances does not change the moral character of the transaction. If a dozen men were to agree that they would engage in stealing one from another, and they would not prosecute one another, and he who succeeded in stealing the most could hold it, this would not prevent it being stealing or change its moral character in the sight of God. Nothing of value is bought or sold in buying and selling futures; no one is profited, save he who gets his fellow-man's money for naught, and they who lose are injured. This is gambling; it is getting another's goods for naught; it is dishonesty. This is more hurtful than other forms of gambling or dishonest gains, because it is regarded as more respectable and honorable than these. Men are led into this kind of business by the love of money. Let all such heed the exhortation: "Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth." It is injurious and hurtful to the man engaging in it in many ways. He is badly injured in his moral and spiritual character when he becomes willing to make a living for himself and family out of the losses of others, for which they get nothing in return. The gains are generally from the most needy and helpless classes. The habit of making a living by these futures begets a feverish state of mind that disqualifies the person for regular productive business of any kind that will bring good to all; it unfits him for the regular habits of worship and for attendance upon the services of God; it violates the laws of the land, and so violates the law of God, which commands Christians to "obey the powers that be;" it sets a bad example to others, young and old—especially the excitable and the young—to lead them to seek to make a living by chance or gambling, that injures all and helps none, and unfits them for regular habits of industry in that which is good; it is not only sinful, but it is supreme folly from a business standpoint. Where one succeeds, a thousand fail—spend their all and become pecuniary wrecks. A man is a fool to engage in a business where the chances of success are so few; those of failure, so many. No sensible man would think of engaging in any industrial calling with the chances of success so few. It is only the gambling mania that leads them to risk so in dealings in futures. We write this at this time because the renewal of prosperity and the increase in values of cotton and stocks excite this mania, and many are tempted to try their luck on rising values. A few gains in the beginning lead on to greater risks to all who engage in it and bring ruin to nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand. The Bible and common sense alike warn not to engage in such means of gain.

ONLY AN ECHO.

"Mother! mother!" shouted little Andrew Brett, as he stumbled over the threshold into his sister Amy's arms, as she was hurrying out on her way to the factory.

"Will I not do just as well?" Amy said, setting the small man on his legs again. "Tell sister what you want, Andy."

"There's another boy out there," Andy jerked out. "He mocks me. When I hallooed, 'Mother,' he said it right over after me. Make him stop, Amy!"

"Let's go and see about it," said his sister, soothingly, drawing him unwillingly along to encounter again that unseen boy. "Where is he, Andy?"

"Down behind that barn," answered Andy, pointing to a large, half-ruined structure set back a good distance from the road.

"Yes, I see," smiled Amy. "Tell him to come out here."

Fortified by his big sister's presence, Andy sung out, defiantly: "You come out here!"

"Come out here!" sounded back quite as defiantly, and Andy took a good grip of his sister's dress.

But her laugh rang merrily out, only to be answered in the same strain by that mysterious person behind the old barn. Then she explained to the puzzled child, as well as she could, that it was only the echo of his own voice which he had heard, and it would answer back just as he spoke. If he spoke pleasantly, the echo would be pleasant; if crossly, he would have a cross answer every time. They practiced a minute, and then she hastened off, Andy earnestly assuring her: "I'll halloo good, every time, Amy."

"I suppose that what we all do, think, or say in our daily living finds an echo somewhere, only it is mostly a silent one, so we do not recognize it," she mused, thoughtfully, as if struck with a new idea. But that and all other musings were swept aside, as she became one of the throng hurrying up the factory stairs.

What a hurrying world this is, to be sure! How can one stop to think whether answers are good or bad, when every faculty is kept on the alert to do the mechanical work in hand, and one becomes almost a machine oneself in the effort?

So Amy Brett thought no more about echoes until the foreman's sharp reprimand of some worker drew her attention; for the circumstance was accentuated by being almost immediately followed by the sharper tones of the delinquent to a fellow-laborer, in both cases the cross words being wholly uncalled for.

Amy involuntarily smiled as she thought of small Andy's experience, and that if the foreman had only "halloed good," one unpleasant echo would surely have been avoided. A glance at two or three harassed faces made her wonder if that echo had not reverberated all around the room.

She did not know how her own smiling face had unconsciously cheered her right-hand neighbor, and for the time proved a neutralizing influence.

At noon, Amy took her lunch to go outside to a retired spot, where the fresh air and silence would be delightful after the ceaseless hum of the morning. Halfway across the room she caught the wistful look of a delicate-faced girl—a new hand—and, after an instant's hesitation, invited her to go along. The invitation was gladly accepted, and soon the two were chatting cozily over their noonday lunch.

Lottie Newberry looked far too frail to be out in the world earning her own living, and during their friendly converse Amy said something of the kind, to which Lottie responded with a weary sigh: "I know it, Miss Amy, but there seemed nothing else for me to do. I thought of housework, which would be healthy work, and I should have the shelter of a home; but I really do not know enough to undertake it. I know nothing of preparing meals, and cannot now spare daytime to attend a cooking school, even if I could afford the price of tuition. I guess it will be work in some kind of a factory to the end of the chapter."

"O, perhaps not," quickly responded Amy, whose sympathies were strongly enlisted for her companion. Then, with a ready comprehension of present need, she enlivened the remainder of the noon hour by a funny account of one of Andy's numerous scrapes. Her cheerful spirit soon found an echo in Lottie's own, and the two went back to their work refreshed.

At the supper table, a few evenings later, Amy found a guest, a gentleman for whom her father had just completed some cottages.

Said Mr. Savery: "Nothing could be more conveniently arranged, and there is nothing to prevent them from becoming model homes for my men, unless it is their wives."

Amy looked up in surprise.

"Fact," he reiterated, noticing the look. "So many men are attracted merely by a pretty face, that, without properly considering its possessor's qualifications to be the wife of a workingman, the two marry, and too late discover that the wife is totally unfitted for her position. A poorly kept home and poorly cooked meals will ruin the best disposition and waste money faster—short of the drinking habit—than anything I know of. So I say it is yet to be seen whether or not these pretty cottages of mine will become the model homes I wish to see them."

Then he added: "I do wish the young women of to-day would see the importance of learning to keep house in a thorough, economical manner. Their chances of happiness would be vastly increased by such knowledge if they only realized it," to which Mr. Brett heartily agreed.

Lottie Newberry came to Amy's mind, and she indignantly thought that "Mr. Savery needn't talk as though girls could always do just as they would like. Lottie couldn't." And forthwith this well-bred girl fell to wondering if she could not, somehow, make life easier for this new friend. Herebefore Amy had given little thought to the girls about her. While treating them all with the utmost friendliness, she had neither time nor taste for the frivolities which seemed to engage the attention of the greater number, and so, outside the great building, she went always her own chosen way. Her present work was but the temporary means to a coveted end—a course of study in the seminary.

But Lottie Newberry was different from the others, as Amy had recognized from the first, and now her longing grew to help the delicate girl find a more congenial place in life.

"Good morning, girlie!" sounded pleasantly on Amy's ears one morning, as she passed the house of Miss Judith Spring, and that lady herself suddenly stepped out from behind the syringas at the gate.

"Wouldn't these make the morning a trifle sweeter?" questioned Miss Judith, offering, as she spoke, an enormous bunch of roses just from the bush.

"Indeed they would; thank you!" said Amy, eagerly accepting them. "How do you make your rosebushes thrive so wonderfully?"

"Love and care are all the magic I use. You know I have plenty of time," replied Miss Judith.

A quick thought brightened Amy's eyes. "O, Miss Judith, will you not invite me to tea to-morrow? I have something of importance to consult you about, and if I can stop on the way home, it will save the little bit of time that I have to myself," said she, sure of the cordial assent of Miss Judith, who had petted and counseled her from childhood. Indeed, this young-hearted, single woman was quite one of "the girls;" and the girl's own mothers were scarcely wiser or safer counselors. Now she saw at once that a special need underlay Amy's request, and promptly gave the required invitation.

The tea party of two came off in due season. The hostess was a model cook, but Amy almost forgot to eat as she eagerly laid before her kind listener the idea which had taken possession of her brain.

She had prefaced the subject by saying: "Mother thinks it a splendid idea if you can be induced to consider it, dear Miss Judith, and only wishes that we were situated so that she could be the good fairy herself."

Miss Judith listened, looking at first dubious, then interested, and finally as animated and enthusiastic as Amy could desire, and the young girl went home with a bright face.

Some days later there was a holiday at the factory where Amy was employed, and she begged her father's permission to accompany him out to the cottages, having learned that Mr. Savery was to meet the builder there.

"Well, Miss Amy," said that gentleman as he gave her a cordial greeting, "how would you like to set up housekeeping yourself in one of these cozy nests?"

"Not at all; thank you," promptly replied Amy. "My present wishes run in another direction; though I'm glad to say," she added, spiritedly, "that I know how to keep house, thanks to my mother and to my own efforts. But I came here with father on purpose to consult you on this very subject of housekeeping—on behalf of another"—she interpolated, noting the surprised look. "Can I have a talk with you, please, after you have finished with father?"

"Certainly," replied the gentleman as he hastened away, decidedly curious as to what this clear-eyed young woman had to say.

She went straight to the point in a way that delighted his businesslike soul when he presently rejoined her on the steps of one of the tiny porches.

"You will remember saying, Mr. Savery, how important you consider it for young women to gain a thorough knowledge of housework, including cooking." The gentleman nodded emphatically.

"What I have to ask is this: Is your interest in the subject sufficiently strong to lead you to give a little practical aid to a young woman who is desirous—yes, anxious—to get that knowledge, so that she may be fitted to earn her living in some pleasant home, instead of a factory, which is suited neither to her taste nor strength?"

"It certainly is, my dear young lady," said Mr. Savery, with delightful promptness.

Then Amy, whose heart had quaked in prospect of her bold request, took "heart of grace," and talked away as only one full of her subject could.

After telling her attentive listener all she knew about Lottie Newberry, she said: "You know, sir, there is no cooking school in our place; so I thought that if some lady who had the time and ability would consent to have Lottie come to her house one or two evenings a week, and, allowing her the use of the kitchen, give practical instruction in simple cooking and housework, it would be a good thing. Of course, the girl would furnish her own materials. The lady who has consented to teach should not be allowed to bear any actual expense, as she is in very moderate circumstances and alone in the world. I ventured to think that perhaps you would kindly send a load of fuel, as it would be used in fitting a young woman to keep house, perhaps in one of your own pretty cottages—who knows?" she added, archly, which brought a twinkle into Mr. Savery's eyes.

"With all my heart, my dear, and there's my hand on it!" taking Amy's hand in a fatherly clasp. "I always feel an 'echoing chord,' as some one puts it, in my heart to all such schemes as this. Let me advise your friend, though, to board herself as soon as the lessons begin. I'll warrant that the result of her own first attempts will be as wholesome as the third-rate fare that she now gets. Just tell her so for me."

"O, thank you, sir! I'm sure that is good advice. I shouldn't wonder if some of the other girls would join in this coöperative housekeeping," said Amy, fairly radiant. "The whole idea grows more delightful every minute, and there's no telling how it will end."

"Why," laughed Mr. Savery, "it will end in one of my men marrying a competent wife. You see if it doesn't!"

When the load of fuel was delivered at Miss Judith Spring's door, a barrel of flour and a bucket of sugar accompanied it, with Mr. Savery's card, on the back of which was written:

"With the best wishes of one deeply interested in the training of young women in the art of housekeeping."

As Miss Judith absently twirled the bit of cardboard she said to herself: "With already four girls coming twice a week, there's no telling, as Amy says, where the work will end, and the feeling that I am giving material help to these dear girls is a satisfaction to me. I wonder if Amy realizes what forces she has set in motion. She says that the whole matter is only an echo, so to speak, of little Andrew's determination to 'halloo good;' and the inspiration that it was to her to act and speak kindly, especially to a lonely stranger."—Helen A. Butler, in Forward.

THE MEANING OF "BAPTIZO."

Brother Lipscomb: Will you please answer a question for me either through the Gospel Advocate or otherwise? In an argument with a Methodist circuit rider on the meaning of the word "baptizo" I used Shepherd's "Handbook on Baptism." He disputed several of the authors given by Shepherd as being misquoted by him. Among them was Groves, on page 30, which he said was a standard lexicon, and that Groves' rendering was "immerse, pour, or sprinkle." He claimed to have it copied from the lexicon, and said that he knew he was right. Among the others were Robinson and Stockius. Please tell me who is right, and oblige one who is seeking for the truth. J. M. CARPENTER.

Brother Lipscomb: The letter from Brother Carpenter is before me. This is not the first time that my quotations from lexicons have been called in question by the class of men to which Brother Carpenter refers, but they universally make assertions without producing proof. Groves does not define "baptizo" by "immerse, pour, or sprinkle," but he says: "Baptizo (from 'bapto,' to dip)—to dip; to immerse, immerge, plunge; to wash, cleanse, purify; to baptize; to depress, humble, overwhelm." This I copy from Groves' Lexicon, and not from my book. Robinson and Stockius have also been misrepresented by the circuit rider. I hand you herewith an exact copy of Stockius in the Latin, that you may examine and see that my quotation is correct.

Some years ago one Daniel B. Turney stated in a debate that I had not quoted John Dawson's Lexicon correctly. His opponent was unable to meet the charge, and Turney was so encouraged that he wrote me the following note: "I certify that Dawson's Greek Lexicon, London, 1822, defines 'baptizo' thus, 'Baptize, mergo, lavo,' and does not define it as stated in Shepherd's 'Handbook on Baptism,' page 27.—Daniel B. Turney, Hutsonville, Ill., September 29, 1898." Mr. Turney raises a dust, but nothing more. I never quoted from the edition that he arrays, and so state it in my book. I am not responsible for changes made by authors in different editions of their books. I want to emphasize this, so that those who use my book may be ready to meet such charges as Mr. Turney's. Let him who claims that I pervert authors bring forth the editions I quote from, and pay no regard to their assertions till they do. When this is done, I am sure no one will prove any author's language has been perverted. J. W. SHEPHERD.

Groves' Lexicon is a common-school Greek-English lexicon, used in every school in the land that teaches Greek. For a man to misquote and misrepresent as well-known a book as this would prove him to be both a fool and a knave. Brother Shepherd is not the one in this case. Your circuit rider never saw such a definition of "baptizo" as you quote him as giving in Groves' Lexicon or any other lexicon in his life. All the libraries in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America have been ransacked to find such a lexicon. Rewards of thousands of dollars have been offered for such. It never has been found. The only lexicon that ever gave the definition of "baptizo" "to pour upon" was Liddell and Scott's. Liddell and Scott both occupied high positions in the Church of England, and were affusionists. In the first edition, as a remote meaning, "to pour upon" was given; but the demand was made for a single example of such meaning in Greek literature. When none could be found, this meaning was left out of all succeeding editions. To wash, to moisten, to wet, are sometimes given as secondary meanings, because these are sometimes effected by dipping in water. When "baptizo" means to wash or wet, it shows it was done by dipping. Sometimes "bantizo" (to sprinkle) means to met or moisten. When so, the wetting or moistening is done by sprinkling. These primary meanings follow the secondary meanings. It is a very sad state of affairs when religious teachers will falsify and misrepresent facts, especially in matters pertaining to man's duties to God and involving his eternal salvation. He cannot produce a lexicon giving such a definition; and, unless you misunderstand him, he ought to repent, confess his sin, and sin no more.

Brother Shepherd has misquoted no author or lexicon. Sometimes variations in different editions may be found. They are generally slight, though sometimes important. Mr. Wesley's "Notes on the New Testament" have been changed in important points. On Rom 6: 4 he said: "'Buried with him,' alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion." This has been left out of the later editions of his "Notes," and is a mutilation and perversion of them on an important point. D. L.

REV. 12 and 13.

In Rev. 12 a woman is introduced, who is said to be clothed with the sun, and the moon is represented as being under her feet. A great red dragon was also present to destroy the child of the woman when born, but to prevent this the child was caught up unto God and his throne. "And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days. And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him." (Verses 6-9.) Now the question is: Who does the woman represent, and who was the man child that was caught up to God, and what was the heaven where the war was, and such like? There is a pretty general agreement among commentators that the woman in some sense represents the church of God; but there is no agreement as to who the man child was or as to the heaven where the war occurred between Michael and his angels and the dragon and his angels. Every commentator almost that you can find has an opinion about it, but there is no means by which we can tell whether any man's opinion is right or not. No one can tell, on the other hand, what or where the wilderness was to which the woman fled, nor by whom she was nourished twelve hundred and sixty days, nor when this count of time began, nor when it ended. Nothing better than opinions or theories can be presented regarding these matters, without any fixed standard by which to determine who is right about it. A few points may be approximated with some degree of satisfaction, but not with certainty. It is likely that the woman does represent the church in some sense, as her seed are spoken of in the last of this chapter as keeping the commandments of God and as having the testimony of Jesus Christ. Besides, the woman is represented as defended, helped, and cared for as none but the people of God would be cared for; and none but children of God in Christ Jesus would have the testimony of Christ. Hence the passage indicates very great troubles on the part of the Lord's people during the thousand two hundred and threescore days mentioned. Also the great red dragon, which sought to destroy the man child and make war upon the woman and her seed is described thus in the chapter: "And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth." (Verses 3, 4.) This description would most reasonably indicate some sort of world powers, with crowned heads, all of which are under the control of Satan; and many of which have sorely persecuted the church of God.

This dragon, or beast, is introduced three times in the book of revelation, and every time with some new features connected with it. We have it in chapter 12: 1-3: "And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast. And they worshiped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshiped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him? And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." This vision indicates a very strong and terrible enemy to the cause of truth, and is by many understood to be pagan Rome, or the Roman Empire, which terribly persecuted the church of God for a long time, acting with high claims and presumptions; and it would embrace any worldly powers that did the same things during those times.

But there was another beast, another opposing power, that arose in connection with this one, as given in the same chapter: "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." (Verses 11-13.) This beast is generally understood to represent papal Rome, or the Roman Catholic Church, with its pretensions and assumptions, and also the same power that Paul speaks of as the man of sin that exalts himself so highly as to assume that he is God. This may be correct; but if it is, then evidently it does not stop with that church, for a very large part of the Protestant world make some as high claims in some things as the Catholics do. So this last beast may mean any sort of erroneous or false religion that combines with worldly wisdom or with worldly powers to advance its interests. Protestantism has its creeds, made by man's wisdom, and holds its councils and synods, and devises ways and means by human wisdom for its advancement, its defense, and its aggrandizement. One of the leading traits of Catholicism is in changing God's appointments into something else that suits human wisdom better, and Protestantism in many things has fallen into line. Even many of those who claim to take the Bible, and that alone, for their guide are in some things doing precisely the same way. This is one of the most dangerous things religious people ever did. Another item that is ruinous to the religion of Christ is union of church and State, or a combination of religion with the governments of this world. The Catholic Church for a long time not only combined with the governments of this world, but used the government—its wealth and its authority—for the upbuilding of the church and its advancement, and held such sway over the governments of the world as to control kings, to depose or set them up at will through the pope; and they never let go this power till compelled to do so. The Protestant world are so mixed up with the politics and wisdom of this world that they are trying to run their churches by the wisdom of the world instead of by the wisdom of God. Every effort of this sort will bring ruin, and only ruin, upon every church that attempts such a course. Religion and politics are so mixed up to-day that it is hard to tell where politics ends and religion begins or where religion ends and politics begins. It is also true that religion and the executive powers of the governments of this world are so jumbled together that if one goes down the other will be caught in the wreck. There is not likely an army in any civilized nation of earth that has not more or less of the so-called members of churches in all of its departments, from generals down to privates; and seldom does a war occur that preachers do not come to the front and by their inflammatory speeches urge the people, and church members as well, to rally and fight for their country. When the very destructive Civil War came upon our country, no class of men were more enthusiastic in raising the war cry and arousing the spirit of warfare and destruction among the people than many of the preachers were. I knew some preachers that, so far as I could tell, were as bloodthirsty as any generals that fought in the armies, while hundreds and thousands of church members enlisted and went into the armies and fought, some on one side and some on the other, and, just to that extent, were endeavoring to destroy each other from the face of the earth. The same sort of thing is going on to-day in all countries that have wars and churches. In this way whatever calamities of war befall the armies and governments where there are churches befall the churches and church members; and, so far as I know, there is not a government on earth where the Bible is that church members are not more or less mixed up with all the civil and military offices and executive power and work of that government; and to-day if a war of persecution were to arise in any government against any so-called church in the land, opposing churches and church members would be in it and fight in it and be as destructive as, and sometimes even more so than, those not members of any church.

Hence this woman that fled into the wilderness, where she was helped and cared for during the forty and two months, must have reference to those who are truly the Lord's people, and who stand aloof from governmental powers of this world, stand aloof from their offices and executive work, all of which is carried on by force, and not by the mild principles of peace and good will toward men. When these governments are destroyed one by one, as they certainly will be, sooner or later, then what will become of those churches and church members so thoroughly mixed up with them as to become a part of them? The prospects are that they will all go down together.

But in this great conflict that occurred in heaven, wherever and whatever that is, between Michael and his angels and the dragon and his angels, the dragon and his angels prevailed not—in other words, were overcome. "Neither was their place found any more in heaven." After the dragon and his angels were cast out upon the earth, the record says: "And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death." (Chapter 12: 10, 11.) This great victory over the dragon and his angels was gained through the blood of the Lamb and by the words of their testimony. Thus by the means that God has ordained, and through them alone, are the Lord's people to triumph over all the powers of darkness; and if the Lord's people lose even their lives in standing by the word of God, they are victors in the end, and will rest in the arms of eternal love. In this way the true church of God triumphs even in death, triumphs over all combinations of erroneous forms of religion and the powers of this world. This sort of combination seems to be the very thing represented by the second beast as given above; and although, as already intimated, the power of erroneous religion to earthly governments, as such, has already been broken, so far as any one church is concerned, the principle still remains in large measure; so that the popular religion of the day is helping to run governments, and governments in a way are helping the churches thus mixed up with them; and if this sort of mixture does not in large measure make up the second beast as given above, then what does? It is true that for a long time the church controlled the government by actual authority exercised over them. This power was usurped, but it nevertheless existed. This power is not claimed now, yet the governments and modern churches are so mixed up that in large measure the life and success of the one depends upon the other; and if one goes down, and the other does not go down with it, it will be terribly shaken up. If those who undertake to develop theories as to when and where and how the things foretold in these prophecies were or are to be fulfilled would labor more to impress Christians with the danger of mixing up with and seeking to help build up and to sustain these governments by physical force and violence, they would spend their time to much greater profit for the truth; but it will doubtless cause much persecution against the Lord's people to do this, for the serpent, the dragon, the devil, will continue to follow the Lord's people with persecutions as long as he has the power to do so.

When the woman, supposed to represent truly the church of God, fled into the wilderness, the serpent tried to destroy her with a flood cast out of his mouth. Failing in this, he was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with her seed, who were keeping the commandments of God, and who had the testimony of Jesus Christ; but persecutions and threats from the powers of darkness should never move the Lord's people from their faithfulness to him. They are safe so long as they are loyal to Christ. This lesson can be learned all along through the most intricate of these prophetic figures and prophecies of Revelation, and these lessons will do Christians practical good; while the theories that men build on their fulfillment, if true, would not practically benefit the children of God. WE ARE MARRIED TO CHRIST.

The relationship of the church to Christ is represented by the marriage of a woman to a man. The church is composed of individual members, and the union of the church as a whole is effected by the action of each member uniting himself with Christ Jesus on coming into Christ. The union which a person forms with Christ on coming into Christ is the marriage of that person with Christ. When the members are married to Christ, the church composed of these members constitutes the bride, or wife, and is married to him. In this relation Christ represents the husband, the head that directs, cares and provides for, loves, and cherishes the wife as his own flesh and his own body. "They twain shall be one flesh." The two constitute one whole. The church is the wife, loyal and true to her husband, looking to him for support and guidance, and whose interest and welfare she holds above all selfish considerations.

A marriage is a union into which the parties enter from a principle of approval, love, and affection for each other. Without this esteem for each other the marriage is formal and the union is imperfect, and not from the heart. This love and esteem must be present in this spiritual marriage with Christ Jesus. He reveals to the world his qualities, character, and honors; his possessions, and the principles on which he will conduct the affairs of his family. He reveals the character and the qualities that he loves, the devotion and self-denial he expects, his own love and sacrifice to draw human souls from a love for and union with the evil one, and the sacrifices and self-denials that he requires in turn for his love and devotion to them; and he invites all who possess these qualities and are attracted by his character and by his love and sacrifices to come and enter into this marriage relation with him and to share his possessions with him forever.

A person, to accept this invitation, must do it from the heart. A belief and trust in him as a true lover and as one that will make a true and faithful husband, and will use all his powers and possessions to promote the good and happiness of each member of his family, will turn the feelings, the affections, the love toward him. It will draw the person away from love for all others and concentrate it all on Jesus as the one altogether worthy and lovely and the only one worthy of true confidence and affection. That person then formally accepts Jesus as his Lord and Savior before the world, renounces all love and loyalty to others, and is married to Christ. Baptism is the act in which that union with Christ is completed and declared. Baptism declares publicly and to the world two things. First, it declares a death and separation from all other lovers and rulers than Christ. It declares a death to all affection or loyalty to others. It is a pledge of fidelity of love and devotion to Christ as the husband, and that they arise to henceforward live this life of union and devotion to Jesus Christ. They have vowed in that act of marriage that they renounce all other lovers and husbands, and that, leaving all others, they will cleave to him alone. They arise to a new life in this married relation, and henceforward they are members of the family of Jesus Christ, will look to him as the Head, will seek his honor, because in his is their honor and good.

In 2 Cor. 11: 2 Paul says: "For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy; for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ." He has presented Christ to them as a worthy husband and Lord, and he was jealous of their serving any one else. He desired the church to bring all their affections and service to Christ as their true Lord; not to divide the affections, service, and loyalty with any other being on earth. Undivided affection, undivided loyalty, undivided service to Christ the Lord, is the duty he expected of those he had converted to Christ. The figure of the marriage is a little changed in this to represent another feature of the union. In this the church is represented as a virgin espoused to Christ, and he, as the ambassador who promoted the espousal, desired she should be a chaste virgin who had not lavished her affections on others when Jesus shall come to take her to himself and abide with her. He represents it as a marriage already accomplished. "For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the savior of the body. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church: for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Nevertheless let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband." (Eph. 5: 23-33.)

Christ is presented as the Head of the church, the husband of the church, who loved the church and gave his life for it. "Having cleansed it by the washing of water" (R. V.) when he received it, his desire is to have "a glorious church, not having spot [of adultery], or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish"—no blemish of lack of fidelity to her husband. The Lord nourishes and cherishes the church as his own true and faithful wife and as the mother of his children. This union thus consummated is a spiritual union. It should grow stronger and stronger every day until the flesh is laid aside and a perfect, everlasting union with Jesus Christ in the spirit land is accomplished. Then there will be no more temptations or attractions to draw us away from God, because we lose all the emotions and fleshly desires that attract us to others than Jesus. True fidelity to him, as the faithful wife is loyal and faithful to her husband, is the duty of every one. No one should divide his service or affections with any other teacher or ruler or leader than Christ Jesus. If we are faithful and true to him here, the richest joys and highest glories we are capable of enjoying he will freely bestow upon us in his eternal kingdom. We will share his honors and glories and partake of the blessedness of his everlasting home.

It is a high and exalted honor that the Lord of heaven and earth bestows on poor mortals: that he is willing to take them in their weakness and sinfulness and is willing to cleanse them from their filth and sinfulness and to make them fitted for his bride, and then to train them so they may share his possessions and honors and glories forever. All should gladly accept the proffered honor, leave all others, and cleave to him alone. After they are married to him, each should do all in his power to keep the bride pure and chaste, loyal and true as wife, that he may find her without spot or blemish, so will enter into his joys forever.

In this marriage we may have the love, the desires, the affections suited for a bride to her lover, and must have them before we are fitted to enter that relation; but no one can lay claim to the privileges and benefits of the marriage relation until the marriage has been consummated in a legal and proper way. To neglect to comply with this prescribed way would be to show a disregard to the laws and appointments of him who has the right to rule and prescribe the terms on which he would be accepted or owned. The terms he prescribes are tests that he imposes on the love that is professed for him. If the love cannot comply with the terms and conditions imposed, it cannot stand the test he has made, and it is rejected as a spurious and unreal love. The person who refuses the test imposed pronounces himself, under the tests imposed by the Master, unworthy of the love he claims. A proved, tested love is accepted by Jesus. A faith that works through love and does the will of the Lord is that which Jesus demands from his bride. Let us see if our love can stand his test.

Denton-Penick Debate.

On February 13, 1900, Elder E. C. L. Denton (Christian) and Elder I. N. Penick (Baptist) met in debate at Buena Vista, Tenn., and continued the discussion four days, each affirming two propositions. This debate was well attended throughout the four days, and the attention given the speakers, with a few exceptions, was all that could be desired.

Brother Denton opened the debate, affirming for one day that "the Scriptures teach that the baptism enjoined by Christ in the great commission is for (in order to) the remission of past sins." His first argument was drawn from the commission. After making a summary of its items, he then turned to the Acts of the Apostles and showed that they applied it just as he had. The only reply this argument received was on the order of faith and repentance. It seems like Baptist preachers, one and all, think if they can prove repentance to precede faith, then we are saved by faith only, and that baptism is not one of the conditions upon which God offers pardon. He also founded a number of arguments on such scriptures as Acts 2: 38 and 1 Pet. 3: 21, and asked Brother Penick from what did baptism save, and to this he (Penick) replied that it saves us from disobedience to that command.

On the second day of the debate Brother Penick affirmed the counterpart to the first proposition—viz., "The Scriptures teach that remission of sins is received before baptism." I have no time to give more than a passing notice to this proposition. Brother Penick took the usual course by putting one scripture against another and trying to prove that Christ did not mean what he said when he gave the commission, which says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

During the discussion we had preaching at night. The writer, who was also Brother Denton's moderator, preached one night, and Brother John Johnson, of Clarksburg, Tenn., preached one night. Neither of us touched the questions in debate, but when the Baptist brother preached the second time it seemed he was somewhat sore over their defeat and tried to bolster up a sinking cause by bringing the questions into the sermon. This the people did not fail to see.

Brother Penick told Denton that he (Denton) baptized people without a scriptural faith, whereupon Brother Denton propounded the following question: "Is it scriptural for a sinner to believe that God is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, also to believe that Christ died to save him and is willing to save him if he will obey him, and to believe that Christ is the Son of God with all the heart?" This he did not answer, and when pressed to do so, he arose and said: "I will answer, but I am going to take my time to do so."

On the third day of the debate Brother Denton again affirmed. His proposition was: "The Scriptures teach that the child of God can sin to condemnation, or so fall away as to be finally lost." On this he made it all turn on man's responsibility and accountability; if he could not sin, then he was not possessed with volition of any kind. Brother Penick never came to the issue on this, but made all of his speeches on the thought that if the man did not want to sin, the devil could not make him.

On the last day Brother Penick affirmed that "the Scriptures teach that in regeneration, or salvation, there is an immediate or direct operation of the Holy Spirit on the sinner's heart." On this proposition he met his "Waterloo." In giving his definition of terms he defined everything except the point at issue, or how the Spirit operates. In his speech he said he did not exclude means, that he believed in preaching and all the means. In reply Brother Denton pointed out the issue and showed he might admit all Brother Penick had said and yet the proposition was not proven. He then read from Webster the definition of "immediate" and showed it excluded means and was the opposite of "mediate," or means. Brother Penick then seemingly begged the question and accused Brother Denton of writing a proposition which he knew did not embody Baptist doctrine. Brother Denton told him he did not think he would play the "baby act" inasmuch as he had signed the proposition and returned it to him, but if he did not want to continue the affirmation, he could withdraw it. Then Brother Penick showed himself to be a pre-regenerationist by making an argument to show the Spirit had to first prepare the soil (heart) for the reception of the good seed (word).

Royal Baking Powder possesses peculiar qualities not found in other leavening agents, which arise from the superior fitness, purity and healthfulness of its ingredients.

Royal Baking Powder leavens the food perfectly by its own inherent power without changing or impairing any of the elements of the flour.

Thus the hot-breads, hot-rolls and muffins, and the delicious hot griddle-cakes raised by the Royal Baking Powder are wholesome and digestible, and may be eaten without distress, even by persons of delicate digestion.

This closed the debate, which was indeed a pleasant one. Brother Penick is a ripe scholar and a debater of no mean ability. Brother Denton is his senior in years and also a ripe scholar. Brother Denton has fought many a hard battle for the right, and is yet able to defend truth valiantly against any man. When we look upon this man of God, grown old in the cause of his Master, our earnest prayer is that God may grant him many years yet of usefulness, and then when he has finished his course may he fall gently asleep in the arms of his Savior, and be carried to a rich and unfading reward.

Heart Thoughts.

We should not ask God to guide our footsteps and then be too indifferent to go to his word to get that counsel. Solomon gives wisdom and understanding a very high rank among the mental acquisitions, but he says we should not lean unto our own understanding, but trust in the Lord with all our hearts.

The many religions of to-day are the result of the violation of this advice. Some of the worst deceived people in the world have the Bible, but they are leaning unto their own understanding. It is very essential that we fall before God with a pure and honest heart and pray that we be able to acknowledge him in all our ways, pray that we understand his word correctly, and pray for the inclination to perform it.

God "made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is." He "bringeth the princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity." All of man's great inventions are but the utilization of laws God created thousands of years ago. Who is more able to direct us than the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; the God who "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life?" Blessed is the man whose God is the Lord. His is the only hand that can support in the hour of death.

Longview Mission.

Texas now stands first in the list of contributions: Texas, $21.70; Tennessee, $10.15; Kentucky, $7.25. Small donations have been received from the following States—Alabama, Arkansas, Indiana, Missouri, Washington, Colorado, Mississippi, Georgia, Nebraska—and Oklahoma Territory.

This shows a pretty wide circulation for the Gospel Advocate, and it shows a live church. I have rented a hall and bought a few seats, and have ordered two dozen each of hymn books and Testaments, and as soon as I can get the room fixed up I will begin the work in big earnest.

The Lord bless you, brethren and sisters, for your noble and prompt response to my call for aid. If others feel disposed to contribute, send it along; we need—and need badly—at least twenty-five dollars more. However, the work will go on as best it can whether we get another dollar or not.

An Example.

We have our church house, in East Florence, Ala., sufficiently advanced to worship in, and will try to ceil and furnish it with lights this month, in order to have services at night. I began the work in East Florence, in August, 1897, preaching to an audience of two Christians and four sinners. We have never failed to meet on the Lord's day since. We now have about forty members. There are about that number of young people in the Sunday school, who use the Gospel Advocate literature.

This work has been done by the individual zeal and devotion of a few members. I write this to show what may be done in any community by a few consecrated individuals who are willing to work for the salvation of men and women, simply as Christians.

Second Time on Earth

No Boils Nor Carbuncles Now—A Good Blood Medicine.

"I became convinced of the merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla when I took it myself as a blood purifier. So, when my husband had boils and carbuncles I urged him to take Hood's and the result was that when he had used but one bottle the boils had nearly all disappeared. He continued the use of the medicine and after taking two bottles he was completely cured, and, as he expressed it, felt as if he was on earth for the second time. He has never had any boils since. We take Hood's as a spring medicine and gladly recommend it." MRS. A. E. STATSA, Yonkers, N. Y.

Scrofula from Birth.

"I have found Hood's to be the greatest blood purifier I ever took, and I have tried many medicines. I was a sufferer with scrofula from birth. My eyes were so badly affected I would be almost blind for a week at a time. My neck began to swell so that I could not breathe freely. Medicines failed to do me any good until I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Today I have excellent health and my eyes give me very little trouble. I owe it all to Hood's, which I recommend to all suffering from any disease of the blood." MISS KETTIE McGUIRE, Silver Creek, Ky.

That Tired Feeling.

"I cannot say too much for Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for that tired and worn out feeling one has in the spring. As a strength builder and appetite creator it has no equal." Mrs. L. B. WOODARD, 285 Ballou Street, Woonsocket, R. I.

A Sermon on Denominationalism, Concluded.

Having shown that denominationalism is utterly contrary to the teachings of God's word, and cannot meet his approval, and that there is but one body, or church, in the New Testament for Christians to belong to, out of which salvation is not promised, the writer wishes, before concluding this sermon, to make clear the law of induction into this one body, or church—the church of God.

It has been seen that all the children of God belong to the church of God, for it is the house or family of God; that it is the one body, or church, that Christ saves, and that therefore, to be saved, one must enter into and become a member of it; that it is the church that Christ gave himself or shed his blood for, and that therefore, in order to get the benefits of his blood, by which we are saved, or become Christians, we must enter into and become members of the church; that in Christ all Christians have redemption and forgiveness of sins, and that to be in Christ is to be in his church, for the church is the body of Christ. In the light of these facts, it is very clear that the process by which one enters into and becomes a member of the one body, or church of God, is the same as that by which he becomes a Christian.

Therefore no question of greater importance has ever demanded the attention of poor dying mortals than the following: What must I do in order to enter into the church of God and become a Christian? This question is clearly answered by holy writ. In 1 Cor. 12: 13, Paul says we are baptized into the one body, or church. While the apostle does not mention faith and repentance here, there are many other scriptures which show that faith and repentance must come before baptism. In the great and final commission given by Christ to his apostles, he said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Here the Savior declared that such as should be saved were such as would believe and be baptized. And these are the characters that Luke says the Lord adds to the church: "The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2: 47.) Thus we see that when sinners believe on Christ and are baptized in obedience to his will the Lord saves them from their sins and adds them to his church. No one should concern himself about joining some church. The law of induction into the one body, or church of God, is clearly laid down in the New Testament, and it is man's business to comply with this law of induction, and the Lord will then add him to his church, the only institution that a Christian has any divine authority to be in. Entering the one body, or church, he reaches the blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin (1 John 1: 7), for we have seen that Christ shed his blood for the church: "Feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." (Acts 20: 28.)

In the language of Jesus—"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"—in the great and final commission, as recorded by Mark, which we have quoted above, repentance is included in the word "believeth;" for no sinner has faith enough in Christ to be baptized without its leading him to repentance, and no sinner is ready for baptism until this is done. When the apostles went forth preaching under this commission, they carried it out to the very letter. Beginning their work on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of Christ, in the city of Jerusalem, they preached the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, and his ascension to heaven, and that God had made him both Lord and Christ. They commanded their hearers to know assuredly that God had made that same Jesus, whom they had crucified, both Lord and Christ. (Acts 2: 22-36.) To "know assuredly" means to believe without doubt. We find that many did believe, for we read that when they heard this they were pierced in their hearts, "and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" This was a cry of faith. These Jews had despised Jesus and had him crucified; but now they believe. They have heard the gospel preached; they believe it, for "faith cometh by hearing." (Rom. 10: 17); and they earnestly call for their duty by saying: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" The answer is given in the next sentence, as follows: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.) Surely this answer is right. It is the answer of the Holy Spirit, for the apostles spoke as the Holy Spirit gave them utterance. (Acts 2: 4.) Peter told these people: (1) To believe on Christ; (2) to repent of their sins; and (3) to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, promising them remission or forgiveness of sins and the gift of the Spirit upon compliance with these conditions. We find that as many as gladly received his word complied with these conditions, and the same day there were added unto the saved about three thousand souls. (Acts 2: 41.) In complying with these conditions they entered into Christ, for they were commanded to do these things for the remission or forgiveness of sins, and we have seen that it is in Christ that this is obtained. Hence Paul says: "So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death." (Rom. 6: 3.) Thus they entered into and became members of the church of Christ, for we have seen that to be in Christ is to be in his church. This is the way that all others entered the church of God and became Christians in apostolic times; and it, of course, takes the same process to make people members of the church of God and children of his now that it did then. There is but one way leading into the state of life and salvation, and that is the "strait and narrow way," which "few find." (See Matt. 7: 13, 14.)

Friendly reader, if you have never entered the church of Christ, the spiritual ark of safety, and become a Christian, be entreated to enter now, in the divinely appointed way, and remain a faithful member of it unto the end of life by being true to God and to the word of his grace, and Jesus will be with you and bless you while you live, and will grant to you the "inheritance that is incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away," when this life is finished; when its labors, sorrows, disappointments, persecutions, conflicts, and afflictions are all over.

M'CANLESS.

Clyde Bennett, the infant son of Brother J. C. and Sister E. C. McCannless, was born on June 13, 1898, and died on November 25, 1899. The little one came and cheered the hearts of his father and mother for only a short time.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

BAYLOR.

Gallie P. Baylor, of Atlee, I. T., was born on September 8, 1874; obeyed the gospel in August, 1897; and died on December 15, 1899. Brother Baylor was full of zeal for the spread of the gospel. He stood firm for it, and seemed to enjoy the religion that he loved. Our hearts bleed because of his very sudden departure. I would say to parents, sisters, and brother: Live faithful to the end, and you will live with him again.

J. H. R.

GILL.

Hiram C. Gill was born on January 1, 1872; obeyed the gospel in September, 1895; was baptized by Brother A. J. Luther; and died at his father's home, near Jones Creek, Dickson County, Tenn., on August 20, 1899, aged twenty-six years, seven months, and twenty days. Brother Gill was a consistent Christian, and will be missed by his father, mother, brothers, and a host of relatives and friends. Let us all strive to meet him in that home where sad parting cannot come.

THOMPSON.

Robert E. Thompson died on Sunday, February 18, 1900, at 3:05 P.M., at his residence on Short street, Nashville, Tenn., aged thirty-eight years. For fifteen years he had been a member of the church of Christ. He was a member of Cherry Camp, No. 9, Woodmen of the World. His remains were forwarded to Rucker Tenn., for interment. The writer conducted the funeral services. Brother Thompson was a courageous, strong man, devoted husband and father, and true Christian. May the Father be merciful to his loved ones in their bereavement.

W. L. LOGAN.

PERRY.

Brother John T. Perry died on January 26, 1900, at his home, in Bradyville, Tenn. On the following day, in the presence of a large concourse of friends, the writer conducted the funeral services at the residence. Brother Perry was forty-eight years old, and for fifteen years had been a member of the church of Christ. All who knew him had the utmost confidence in his integrity and religious sincerity. In his death the church has lost a consecrated supporter; the town, a useful citizen; his family, a stay and support. In this night of sorrow, we point his loved ones to the "bright and morning Star," hoping he may throw light into their dark lives.

BOGART.

The death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bogart, on October 31, 1899, and took Brother J. M. Bogart from his wife. They lived a happy Christian life. It seemed that she could not give him up. He was born in Michigan, in 1834. His parents came to Texas when he was small. He lived in Fannin County until 1862, when he joined the army. He obeyed the gospel while in the army, and was baptized by Brother Gano. He moved to Coleman County in 1877, and there remained until his death. He left many friends and relatives to mourn their loss, but loss to them was gain to him. May all his kindred and friends prepare to meet him.

WADE.

On March 4, 1899, death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Wade, of Iron City, Tenn., and took from them their youngest daughter, Minnie, who for several months had been suffering with that terrible disease—consumption. Had she lived until March 19, she would have been nineteen years old. She obeyed the gospel when quite young, under the preaching of T. B. Larimore, and spent nine years of her life in serving the Lord. She is greatly missed in this community, and especially at church, for she was a regular attendant and delighted in singing and taking a part in reading. It was sad indeed to give her up just as she was blooming into womanhood, but I would say to the bereaved parents, brother, and sister: Weep not, for dear Minnie is at rest.

JONES.

Orren Alston Jones was born in Hickman County, Tenn., on August 10, 1826; was married to Malinda T. Grimes on July 1, 1847; was added to the church of Christ at Dunlap, Tenn., about the year 1868; and died on February 7, 1900, aged seventy-three years, five months, and twenty-seven days. He lived a consistent Christian life until his death. He was the leading elder in the Little Lot congregation. He was opposed to everything in the worship that was not in harmony with the teaching of God's word. In his death his lifelong companion has lost a loving husband; the two children, John A. and Irene, have lost a kind father; the five grandchildren have lost a benevolent grandfather; and the church has lost one of its brightest jewels. May the bereaved family look to our Heavenly Father for comfort, and remember that God's dear children will meet in the reunion and receive the everlasting crowns that are in reservation for the faithful. There was a large concourse of relatives and friends at the funeral. The writer conducted the funeral services.

MELEAR.

At 6:30 o'clock in the evening of February 9, 1900, after three months' suffering, Brother P. V. Melear passed quietly over the river of death. He was born on March 24, 1832, and was, therefore, sixty-seven years, eleven months, and fifteen days old. He obeyed the gospel in 1866, and was baptized by J. M. Barnes. He has been a consistent member of the church of God ever since he obeyed the gospel. He made his life conform to the Golden Rule: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." He was a great admirer of the Gospel Advocate and its bold stand for the word. The church at El Bethel, Ala., owes its existence to his tireless efforts and earnest work. In his death the church has lost its most zealous and ardent worker and supporter. To his relatives and many friends I would say: "Sorrow not as those who have no hope," but strive to cultivate the example he has given you during his Christian days, that you may meet with him and the redeemed of all ages. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors."

ROBERTS.

Little James Edwin Roberts, son of E. E. and Elizabeth Roberts, was born on August 7, 1899, and died, or rather commenced to live, on January 9, 1900, making his stay here short—only five months and two days. But his life was long enough to confirm God's promise: "It is appointed unto men once to die." It is hard, dear friends, to kiss James Edwin good-by; but let me admonish you to raise your tear-dimmed eyes and aching hearts to Christ and be consoled by his blessed words, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," and to "sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." While we stand in need of the shed blood of Christ, little James Edwin does not; for he was never lost, but ever safe. Do not weep for him. One blessed thought should entwine around your hearts: We cannot bring him to us, but we can go to him, by being true and faithful in all the blessed Master has commanded us to do. May God help us to so live that when the summons comes for us to go we all may be prepared to meet little James Edwin, and all our loved ones that have gone before, in that blissful home our Savior has gone to prepare for all those who love and serve him. In that home there will be no sorrow, sickness, or death. All will be joy and peace.

VICK.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." It is with a sad heart that I write of the death of Sister Elizabeth Jane Vick, who fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of February 23, 1900. Sister Vick was a daughter of our esteemed Brother and Sister E. A. Land, and was born and reared near Brush Creek, Perry County, Tenn., where she continued to live until God called her home. Sister Vick was born on May 31, 1853, and died on February 23, 1900. She was married to Brother Cullen S. Vick on September 6, 1868. Brother Vick left her and went to the scenes beyond several years ago. Sister Vick was reared by Christian parents. She obeyed the gospel and was baptized into Christ when a mere child, and lived an earnest, faithful Christian life up to her death. It has been my pleasure frequently to be at her home, and I have always found her to be zealous, firm, and true to the cause of her Master. She was first taken ill with measles, from which she relapsed into pneumonia, from which she quietly and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus a few days afterwards. Her remains were laid to rest in the burying ground at Brush Creek Church, in the presence of a large and sorrowing concourse of relatives and friends, where she now rests from her labors. She cannot come to us, but we can go to her. To her church, her parents, her children, and her friends, we say: "Be ye faithful unto death," and Jesus will give thee a crown of life.

RICHARDSON.

Elizabeth J. Richardson was born on August 28, 1851; was married to Brother Henry L. Richardson on July 13, 1871; and departed this life on December 18, 1899, aged forty-eight years, three months, and twenty days. Several children were born unto this union, five now being grown to manhood and womanhood; three of whom have made the good confession, while two are still out in the cold world. May the Lord speed the time when they shall come into the fold, so they will be prepared to meet their good mother in the sweet by and by. Sister Richardson made the good confession under the teaching of Brother T. B. Larimore, in the year 1874, at Old Liberty. She lived a devoted Christian, and was a loving wife and good mother until her death. She loved her children dearly. She left three little children at home with their father to battle through life as best they can. Harvey, the oldest son, preceded his dear mother to the grave only two months and eighteen days in the far-off State of Texas. He was twenty-seven years, six months, and twenty-two days old at the time of his death. Sister Richardson was afflicted for a good many years, having to use crutches during part of her life. She was so afflicted she could not walk, but she bore her affliction with great patience. She has now gone over the dark river to rest in the sweet fields of Eden.

Rain or Shine,

The station agent is on duty. On his exact communication of train orders depends thousands of lives, and millions of dollars in property, each day. In his haste he runs out in the rain or the snow hatless and unprotected. Then comes the sequel—bronchitis, or some other disease of the respiratory organs. The most effective remedy for bronchial or pulmonary disease is Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Almost all remedies prescribed for such diseases contain opium or some narcotic which soothes by stupefaction. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains neither narcotics nor alcohol. It stops coughs by curing their cause. It heals weak lungs, builds up wasted tissues, and promotes the health of every organ of the body.

"I am a railroad agent," writes I. B. Staples, Esq., of Barclay, Osage County, Kans., "and four years ago my work keeping me in a warm room and stepping out frequently into the cold air gave me bronchitis, which became chronic and deep-seated. Doctors failed to reach my case and advised me to try a higher air, but, fortunately for me, a friend advised me to try Dr. Pierce's medicines. I commenced taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and by the time I had taken the first bottle I was better, and after taking four bottles my cough was entirely gone. I have found no necessity for seeking another climate."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate the stomach, liver and bowels.

ville, Tenn., on the morning of February 10, 1900. She was foully murdered by a trusted servant, who, a few days before the awful deed was committed, saw in her possession some money, which his fiendish heart coveted. Thus in the most cruel and tragic manner was cut off a young life of much promise, leaving behind dark shadows of gloom in two homes. A young husband, whose life was filled with the sunshine of happiness and love, is left to walk alone the gloomy pathway of life; an aged father and mother and brothers and sisters remain to contemplate with aching hearts the departure of their loved one. Sister Rawlings was known by the writer from her childhood, and I can truthfully say that I never knew a young woman in whom were combined more of the elements of graceful and charming womanhood than she possessed. Her accomplishments were many. She was not only fitted for the parlor, but also to keep the home. A bright and beautiful young wife and daughter has been cut down in the bloom of life. Nora was nineteen years, ten months, and seven days old; had been a member of the church five or six years, and a bride about one year. Shall we meet again? Yes, thank God, where the cruel hand of the assassin will never again cause hearts to ache. She was beautiful in life, beautiful in death, and will be beautiful in heaven. F. W. SMITH.

MINGS.

Again our hearts are made sad by the severing of fond ties and the loneliness we feel in the absence of a dear, precious soul, beloved for her works' sake. Vannie Berthnel Brown was born on July 22, 1861; bowed to the Savior and obeyed the gospel in early girlhood; and was married in early life. Her first husband's name was Rollins, who some years ago was thrown suddenly from his horse and killed. Within two or three years she was married again to W. P. Mings, one of the most consecrated and godly men it has ever been my lot to know. They lived happily together for about eighteen years, when Sister Vannie was called up higher. She died of typhoid pneumonia, on February 3, 1900. The writer was called to make a talk at the grave, and deep was the affliction both felt and witnessed. The burial took place at the family burying ground, in the very neighborhood where Sister Vannie had spent all her life. People came from far and near. Even the colored people who lived on the farm and in the community turned out en masse to show their loving regard. No wonder, with such endearing ties! Every member of the family was present in her last affliction, some having come hundreds of miles. Her dear old mother seemed as if she had never known grief before. May God smooth the path of the dear old people in their declining years and comfort them in this sad bereavement. After all, she is not lost, but gone before. It is as though a lonely maiden had left the old home and become a bride. We are sad when we behold the vacant seat and miss the cheerful and loving smile, but rejoice that she has left us to enter the real enjoyments of life. We sorrow not as those who have no hope. May our loving Father look in tenderness on the bereaved parents, husband, and children, is my prayer. L. M. OWEN.

WILLIAMS.

Sister Mary D. Williams, of Hollow Springs, Tenn., died on December 2, 1899. She was about sixty-five years of age. Her face was deeply wrinkled with the cares, and her hands hardened with the labors, of life; but beneath this rough exterior was a heart of faith and hope and love toward God, manifested in a humble, but persistent and strong way. She was born and reared in perhaps the poorest section of "The Barrens," and, from what I have been able to learn, a section over which, years ago, sin seems to have had almost undisputed sway. Brother Nix Murfree, who had been trained in early life under the influence of the Old Cross Roads Church, near Bellbuckle, Tenn., preached the gospel to and baptized the subject of this sketch. Years afterwards, through the entreaties of Sister Williams and encouragement of Brother Dr. Mankins, of Beech Grove, Coffee County, Tenn., I was induced to enter this still uninviting field. Much opposition, manifested in stoning the little schoolhouse during the first sermon, and ridiculing the work, was engaged in. Sister Williams was hopeful, strong, and patient in the midst of it all, and constantly held up before me the needy condition of the souls of her friends and neighbors. Brother James H. Coop, of the Cross Roads Church, and the lamented Brother Z. T. Beachboard, of the Bellbuckle Church, visited this place with me and gave much encouragement and help to the work. The members of the Bethlehem and Bradyville churches, seven or eight miles away, joined in the work at times also. Especially has Brother Robert Journegan, the teacher at Bradyville, contributed to this work by much self-sacrificing labor in preaching to these people for two or three years. I am sure the origin and success of these efforts at Hollow Springs, Tenn., resulting in establishing a congregation of more than fifty members and the building of their house of worship, can be traced to Sister Williams' burning zeal for the salvation of souls. Her maiden name was Whittemore. She married David Williams. Though but few followed her remains through the cold, gloomy weather, to the grave, may we not conclude that from an earthly home of poverty and affliction she "was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom?" R. A. HOOVER.

D'BOW.

At seven o'clock in the morning of January 14, 1900, the life of our friend and brother, John L. DeBow, was ended here; and the gentle, kindly spirit, weary of the body's disease and suffering, entered, we trust, into that rest prepared for the children of God. In his death the community of Dixon Spring, Tenn., suffers a great loss, for surely no more popular man has lived and died in our midst. man, he was never too busy to accommodate a friend, never too tired to lend a helping hand to any one who might call on him. Mr. DeBow was born forty-six years ago in Dixon Spring, Tenn., and was educated at Knoxville, Tenn. In January, 1884, he was married to Elvira Crenshaw, daughter of Dr. J. C. Crenshaw, of Hartsville, Tenn. Nine years ago he confessed his faith in Christ, and was baptized by Brother J. C. McQuiddy. He was never very strong, and perhaps the close confinement incident to his business life as a druggist rendered him powerless to escape the disease which eventually killed him. About five years ago his health became so feeble that his physicians sent him to Texas, hoping that the change of climate might be of benefit to him; but, while he seemed to have gained strength, when he returned home, he and his friends realized that his stay among us must be brief. Still, he never lost his courage in the battle of life, and took an active interest in his business and gave it his personal attention to within two days of his death. He was stricken down on Friday night and died on Sunday morning, surrounded by those who loved him and whom he loved—wife, daughter, and little son, and friends who had known him all his life. The beautiful burial service was conducted by Brother E. A. Elam. It has been my pleasure to be a frequent visitor in the home of Brother DeBow, and I have never been in the presence of a kinder, gentler husband, father, or friend. I never heard him speak an ungentle word to any member of his family in my life, and his tenderness toward his wife and children was very beautiful. Words are so powerless to express sympathy, and though my heart would comfort the grief-stricken wife and her fatherless children, I can but point them to the one Comforter, the great, loving Heavenly Father, who is touched by our cries of suffering, and "who giveth his beloved sleep." What must that sleep mean to a tired soul! And the separation is for so short a time, though it seems long. F. M. JORDAN.

An Admonition.

To the Members of the Church of Christ at Salem—Greeting:

As my race is almost run here, I feel a great desire to write you all a few words of admonition. As it is near where I was born and reared, it is where I first obeyed my loving Savior, and where I have been meeting with the dear brethren for nearly fifteen years.

On the third Lord's day in August, 1883, I confessed my faith in Christ, and was baptized by Brother E. A. Land; and never for one day have I regretted it.

At Salem my heart has been made to rejoice so many times by having good preaching, praying, singing, and seeing people turn from their wickedness and obey the Savior.

I can well remember when the house was built, and when there were but few members. O, how my good father did work to help build the house, for a place where they could have preaching, and where he could meet with the members on the "first day of the week," and exhort them to be faithful! And now as he is gone and I must soon follow, why should Salem go down?

I pray that it may grow strong, and that the members may be at peace with each other—that they may see eye to eye, and speak the same things, and that there be no divisions among them (1 Cor. 1: 10); for where there is division there is strife and every evil work. It is the love I have for the cause of Christ and for the brotherhood at Salem that prompts me to write this admonition. I know, too, that I must leave my dear, loving children, that are as dear to me as life itself, behind me; and

I want them brought up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and when they come to the years of accountability may they hear the gospel preached, and while their hearts are tender may they obey the commandments of the dear Savior, and live Christian lives, and be eternally saved in heaven; and not only mine, but all the young generation, and for this great reason, dear brethren, why let Salem die?

When we read of that beautiful city—"a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God;" when we think of its beauties and the happiness that there will be; "no sickness, no sorrow, no pain, no death, to separate us, no more good-byes, where all is love, joy, and peace;" then think of the sufferings and sorrows and the wickedness that are in this world, I do not see why people who are prepared for heaven should have such great desire to stay here.

Let me admonish you as one that loves you, and one who wants to meet you all in heaven, to read the blessed Bible day by day, lay down novel reading and the secular newspaper, for there is no comfort in them. They fill our minds with "worldly things," and disqualify us for receiving "heavenly things;" and, sooner or later, those who pursue this course will cease to bear fruit for Christ, and will be cut off of the vine. (John 15: 1-7.) This is a sad picture, but God hath said it, and it will stand.

Paul said: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." (Col. 3: 16.)

Dear brethren, if we do not read the word, how can it dwell in us? If we do not fill our hearts with it, we cannot live Christians; for it is a lamp to our feet, and they will be led astray without it. (Ps. 119: 105.) We need "reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness." The word of Christ furnishes this thoroughly. (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) Just think of the comfort we can find by reading it! It tells us that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." (2 Cor. 4: 17.) I know there is comfort in this to me. I know, dear brethren, that we are not doing our duty on this line. Be admonished. And I know, too, that we should give as we are prospered. (Luke 12: 22-37.) God loves those who give cheerfully, and promises to give us one hundred-fold more in this world, and in the world to come eternal life. (Luke 18: 30.)

If we would do our duty along here, the gospel would be "sounded out all around us," precious souls would be converted, and in heaven we would be "laying up our treasures."

Paul says that "the love of money is the root of all evil," and I believe it. (1 Tim. 6: 10.) For what is it worth when death comes? "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (Matt. 16: 26.)

I know my race is run; and if I had the whole world at my command, what would it be worth to me?

No, my dear sister, I would not give my bright hope for a home in heaven for all the millions of earth. Paul said: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." (1 Cor. 15: 19.)

There is no one, when he sees his time is done, when he sees death staring him in the face, who would not be the same way. O, to be prepared to meet Jesus is worth worlds like this! "For the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." (2 Cor. 4: 18.) "For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever." (1 Pet. 1: 24, 25.)

Dear brethren, I want you to think of these things. Death will come to every one of us sooner or later, and should it find us unprepared, it will be too late. Then just think of that awful denunciation: "I never knew you: depart from me." (Matt. 7: 23.)

O, will not that be awful? I think some people read this passage and think: "Well, I know it says that, but I think that he is a God of mercy, and that he will save us all." Yes, I know that God is good and kind to his creatures, but the will of God makes no provisions for those who do not obey him (Heb. 5: 9); and as it is sealed with his precious blood and cannot be broken, therefore he cannot save those who do not obey his Son. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." Here is God's love. "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Hence we see that God's love embraces only those who believe and obey Christ. It is wonderful to think that Christ came to earth and was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin; that he is now at God's right hand in heaven to make intercession for us. But he can only intercede according to his will (Mark 16: 15, 16; Acts 9: 1-6); and when I see, dear brethren, that God has blessed or cursed the people for good or bad, from the beginning, I see no chance for us if we fail to obey him.

When we look at the beautiful sun, moon, and stars, when we read that it is "appointed unto men once to die," and we see them dying daily, how can any one disbelieve the Bible? O, how sad to see so many people just put it aside and say, "Well, I do not know how it is," and just put it off until they are lost—lost forever! I would be so glad if people would see the right way and turn and be saved. It seems to me that if I can just get to heaven and could know my people and dear brethren, I would be so happy. If I could look around and see my dear mother and father, how happy I would be!

Poor old mother! She has been a faithful friend to her children, and surely she will be blessed for waiting on father so long and with so much patience. God bless her, and may she live a faithful Christian her few remaining days.

Then, next, it seems that I would think of husband and children and brethren. But if we can get there, we will be happy, whether we know our friends or not. So, dear brethren, let us strive earnestly, that we may enter into that rest that remains for the people of God. (Heb. 4: 9.)

Then let us lay down the pride and vanity of this world, and strive harder for heaven than we have ever done. You know that we are commanded to "love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." (1 John 2: 15.)

Then, just think what the wisest man on earth said, after trying all the pleasures of this world: "All is vanity and vexation of spirit." Listen to him again: "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." (Eccles. 12: 13, 14.)

In conclusion, let me ask you, let me earnestly plead with you, let me beseech you, dear, loving brethren, never, never—no, never—let Salem go down; but walk in the footprints of a crucified but risen Lord until death, and an unfading crown will each of you wear, in heaven above, where all is love. I wrote to the writer of the letter given below some weeks ago, asking him to write in such a way that I could use it for publication.

There are three points in this letter I call special attention to: (1) they do their missionary work as a congregation, (2) the number of missionaries they have sent to the field, (3) the amount they give for their support. They number only two hundred and fifty members and give $1,500 for the spread of the gospel in foreign lands. This looks like a large sum for so few, but it is only an average of $6 each.

Supposing their income, on an average, to be $200, this would be only 3 per cent of their substance set apart for missionary work, which would leave 7 per cent for home work, on the basis of giving one tenth.

This little church in Brooklyn illustrates the point that any little church, though poor in this world's goods, can send out laborers, if only it has a heart to do it. J. M. M'CALEB.

"My Dear Friend: Looking over my back correspondence, I find a letter from you dated November 8. I am not sure that I have answered it. We have a membership of about two hundred and fifty nominally, but some are nonresidents, and perhaps some are not citizens of the heavenly country; but such as we are, the Lord is using us for his glory. You asked how I raise the money. Simply by giving out envelopes to those who have promised certain sums to our various missionaries. We have collectors for each circle, and when there are deficiencies, we trust the Lord to make them up; no begging, entertainments, fairs, etc. We have just sent Mr. and Mrs. Cossum to China. They make a strong team for independent work. Most of our missionaries are members of our church. Others are studying, and one is supported by the China Inland Mission. We have one self-supporting missionary in the West Indies, and Mr. Markham; in South Africa, partly supports himself and wife. We send about eight hundred dollars a year to Mr. and Mrs. Keyes in Zululand, three hundred dollars to each of the Hitchcock sisters in South Africa, two hundred and fifty dollars to Mr. Tarbox in Quito, and one hundred and fifty dollars to Mr. Chapman in another part of Ecuador. Our people are not rich, mostly poor and working on salaries. We have one who is able to support her own missionary. We are about seven years old. God has given us three city lots, worth about five thousand five hundred dollars, and a good, comfortable building, which would have cost eight or nine thousand dollars under contract. Our people take much interest in the study of the word, and avoid all hobbies and controversies. I will mail you copies of our church paper, that you may get a fuller idea of our position. Come and worship with us when you are this way. Praying for God's richest blessing upon you and your work, I remain,

"Yours in his fellowship and service,

WONDERFUL CURES BY SWAMP-ROOT.

To Prove What This Famous New Discovery will do for YOU, Every Reader of the Gospel Advocate May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

65TH POLICE PRECINCT, GREATER NEW YORK, November 11, 1899.

Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Gentlemen: In justice to you, I feel it my duty to send you an acknowledgment of the receipt of the sample bottle of Swamp-Root remedy you so kindly sent me. I had been out of health for the past five years with kidney and bladder trouble. Our best physicians prescribed for me. They would relieve me for the time being, but the old complaint would in a short time return again. I sent for a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and I found it did me a world of good. Since then I have taken eight small bottles purchased of my druggist and I consider myself perfectly cured. I do not have to get up during the night to urinate as I formerly did, three or four times a night, but now sleep the sleep of peace. My back is all right again, and in every way I am a new man. Two of my brother officers are still using Swamp-Root. They, like myself, cannot say too much in praise of it. It is a boon to mankind. We recommend it to all humanity who are suffering from kidney and bladder diseases.

My brother officers (whose signatures accompany this letter), as well as myself, thank you for the blessing you have brought to the human race in the compounding of Swamp-Root. We remain Yours very truly,
JAMES COOK,
HUGH E. BOYLE,
JOHN J. BODKIN.

Officers of the 65th Police Precinct, Greater New York.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root, the one published this week for the benefit of the Gospel Advocate readers speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood; that is their work.

So when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince you, and you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, excess of uric acid, gravel, rheumatic pains, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night to empty the bladder; sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness; sallow, unhealthy complexion; puffy or dark circles under the eyes; sometimes the feet, limbs, or body bloat; loss of ambition, general weakness, and debility.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

To prove its wonderful curative properties, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book by mail prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health—in fact, their very lives—to the wonderful curative properties of this world-famous kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that all readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle and to be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

for glass making in Cologne. Among the many advantages claimed for the new process are an economy of 60 per cent in fuel and the absence of any risk of coal or cinders spoiling the product. It is also said that a mass of metal which requires thirty hours to melt in the ordinary glass furnace can, by employing electricity, be reduced to the plastic state in fifteen minutes.

The bacillus of the bubonic plague was thought to have been discovered in 1894. The only remedy for the disease yet proposed is by antipest serum, secured by infecting horses. Recent treatment by this means is said to have shown 70 per cent of recoveries. The preparation of the serum has already begun in the laboratory of the Marine Hospital at Washington for use if any cases should break out in this country.

One result of the famine in India—which, it will be remembered, is a "famine of water as well as of food"—is that the cotton crop has been so much reduced by drought that there will be little or none for export, notwithstanding the fact that the natives of a large part of the empire are unable to purchase any of it for home consumption. This single statement is a graphic object lesson on the terrible character of the famine.

F. M. Gilbert, Hamilton, Mo., quotes from these columns the statement that "a preacher or any one else who claims to be a Christian ought always to be willing to give chapter and verse for anything he believes or practices without a reward," as a basis for the following:

"Information is wanted on the following: (1) Chapter and verse where one who had been baptized by the apostles ever giving the gift of the Holy Ghost or the authority to baptize to the third party; (2) For the proof that one who fashions himself a minister now is any better than one who did so in Paul's day; (3) For proof where the ecclesia ever ordained a minister—fashioned him; (4) For the expressions, 'miraculous gifts,' 'ordinary gifts,' 'alien sinner.'"

(1) I do not believe or teach that "one who had been baptized by the apostles" ever gave "the gift of the Holy Ghost or the authority to baptize to the third party." The authority to baptize is not given by one man to another, but is given by Christ to all Christians. The "gift of the Holy Ghost" which enabled persons to perform miracles was imparted by imposition of hands in some cases; directly by God in other cases. (Acts 2: 1-22; 8: 14-21; 10: 44-48; 1 Cor. 12: 1-11.) (2) "One who fashions himself a minister now" is no "better than one who did so in Paul's day." (3) I know of no proof that the ecclesia ever ordained a minister—fashioned him. Paul and Barnabas "ordained them elders in every church" (Acts 14: 23); and Paul left Titus in Crete to "set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city." (Titus 1: 5.) (4) I do not believe or teach that there is any such expression as "miraculous gifts," "ordinary gifts," or "alien sinner" in the Bible. If I ever use either one of these expressions or any other expression that is not in the Bible, I will withdraw it and express the idea in the exact language of the Bible whenever my attention is called to it. Any idea that is in the Bible can be expressed by the exact words of the Bible. Any idea that cannot be expressed in the exact words of the Bible is not a Bible idea. If a man will always express Bible ideas in the exact words of the Bible—as I always do when my attention is called to it—he is not to blame and will not be held responsible if people do not understand him.

The following communication makes a point that is worthy of consideration:

"Longview, Tex., March 5, 1900.—Dear Brother Srygley: A remark of yours in an editorial in the Gospel Advocate of March 1 struck me forcibly, where you said you had no doubt, or rather, was not sure but, that many a man had lost his own soul trying to save others. Now, there is much more in that than you seemed to think at the time. Many have turned away from the true church—the church of God—and joined something else, to be with wife, or husband, or child, or friend, while instead of saving them, they have stayed with them and been lost themselves. I had a good sister in the church once to tell me she did not believe instrumental music in the worship was right, but by giving her vote for it, and bringing it into the worship, she hoped to save her son; who was very fond of the organ in worship. She showed plainly she loved her boy more than she loved God. She is still with the organ, which rent in twain as fine a church as I ever saw, when it was put in the worship. There are many other ways in which I think souls are lost in trying to save others by working in a different way and on a different line from that laid out by divine wisdom.

"JOHN T. POE."

Any one who does what he believes is contrary to the will of God in religious work or worship for the sake of peace and harmony with men debauches his conscience and destroys the foundation of his moral character. This is an elementary principle of moral philosophy clearly taught both in the Bible and in all text-books on moral philosophy. This principle of morality in its bearings upon organized religion is more fully discussed in the article in reply to Brother Cunningham in this issue of the Gospel Advocate, to which the reader is referred.

Brother Cunningham has written again, but shorter and weaker:

"Burnsville, Miss., March 6, 1900.—To the First-page Editor of the Gospel Advocate.—Dear Brother: In all the published articles between Brother Sewell and myself, and also between Brother Lipscomb and myself, my object was to do good for the cause of Christ. Now, while I do not belong to any moral organization of mortals on earth, except the church, Masonry, and the Royal Arcanum, I claim that I and all my Christian brethren have the right, as individuals, to associate ourselves together, just as the owners of the Gospel Advocate have done, to sound out the truth. Hence, I hold that the editors of the Gospel Advocate are inconsistent in their course of contending that in some cases, where God has left us free to choose how we will do things, we are not really free, but must let the editors of the Gospel Advocate dictate. This position makes the editors of this otherwise good paper, ridiculous—wiser than God, it seems, in their own estimation. I know they do not see it this way, but this is the consequence of their position. Hence, they have done the beloved cause of Christ much harm. They have divided congregations, created hard feelings, and sown the seeds of discord, claiming all the time that these results have come from those who oppose them; but this is not correct, for those who oppose them are willing for the majority of congregations to rule about how they will do things where God has not specified the modus operandi. For instance, our liberal brethren, that are as liberal as the Bible, hold that in singing praises to God, either in family worship or in the assembled congregation, it does not matter whether the songs are pitched by guess or from an instrument, just so they are started so they can be sung with spirit and understanding; nor does it matter if an instrument be used all through the song service to render the music the more harmonious; that whether an instrument be used or not used, the intention being to sing with spirit and understanding, either way is fulfilling the Bible on this point. Now, if your side of the house so held, there would be no trouble; but you editors of the Gospel Advocate and your followers want to dictate your opinions to God's congregations as laws by which they shall be governed; hence, the trouble, divisions, contentions, and such like. Now, I am ready to defend God's word along this line, but you must arrange for me to get your articles. I have not seen a copy of the Gospel Advocate in all my travels for near two months. In argument, I am sometimes caustic, but I am after erroneous teachings, not the persons of those who may be honestly deluded. With love for all right and righteousness,

"JO. A. CUNNINGHAM.

"850 Sixth street, Louisville, Ky."

I am sorry, but not surprised, that Brother Cunningham has not seen a copy of the Gospel Advocate in all his travels "for near two months." He has been traveling in Mississippi, where Brother Kilby Ferguson is organizing "the brethren," and advising them "to burn the Gospel Advocate." I do not know how I can arrange to get my articles to him. I am sending the paper, at his suggestion, to his home in Louisville, Ky. He said he could have it forwarded to him from there every week, but if he cannot do that, I will adopt any other plan he suggests to get my articles to him.

I accept Brother Cunningham's explanation as to his "object" in all of his "published articles." I always deal with an opponent in discussion on the hypothesis that his object is to do good; I shall treat him with this courtesy and try to show how far he misses his object. There is no issue between us as to "the right as individuals to associate ourselves together, just as the owners of the Gospel Advocate have done, to sound out the truth." He need not rush to the defense of this "right," for I have not attacked it. The issue he made with me was on the proposition which I affirmed and he denied—viz.: "Organized effort among the Disciples is denominational organization." Passing by minor issues and collateral questions, I challenge the transparent denominationalism of organized effort among the Disciples in its general, incorporated institutions. The American Christian Missionary Society, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization, and the Church Extension Fund are all general organizations, each under the management of an executive committee and a corresponding secretary, on a competent salary, who devotes all of his time to the business. These organizations have a list of all of what they call "our churches" and "our preachers." Each has a certain day set apart for a general collection of money in all of "our churches" every year, and some of them annually assess each church the amount of money expected and requested to be raised during every year. Constant appeals are made through the mails during the year to every preacher and every church to raise money for each one of these general organizations. The avowed object and constant effort of each of these general organizations is to control all the money, direct all the men, and monopolize all the business in its particular line for the whole brotherhood of Disciples. To this end every man, and especially every preacher, who does not approve and aid the effort is ostracized as a disturber of the peace of the brotherhood; and the circulation of every book, paper, or tract which interferes with the denominational monopoly is discouraged and prevented as far as possible. This is what I affirm is denominational organization. If Brother Cunningham or anybody else denies, I am ready to discuss the issue; but when I make an argument against denominational organizations among the Disciples, I shall not allow an opponent in discussion to dictate the point at which I must make the attack, so as to enable him to confuse the readers by a plausible evasion of the issue instead of a discussion of the question. If we discuss the question, Brother Cunningham may as well understand now as later that my arguments will be that these general, chartered, and centralizing institutions are denominational organizations. They are the very vitals of denominational organization among the Disciples, and I propose to make the issue with them. Everything else in organized effort is tributary to them, and if they cannot be successfully defended, the whole system will inevitably go to pieces. The issue in this discussion is not whether we have "the right as individuals to associate ourselves together, just as the owners of the Gospel Advocate have done, to sound out the truth," but whether these general, centralizing, chartered, and monopolistic institutions are denominational organizations among the Disciples. I affirm, and Brother Cunningham denies, that they are. That is the issue. If they are denominational organizations, everything that aids them is denominational, while the tendency of everything that is not denominational is to disintegrate and dissolve them. If the Gospel Advocate should put itself under the management of a self-appointed board of directors and a corresponding secretary on a competent salary to devote all of his time to raising money to run it; if it should set apart a certain day in each year for collections to be taken in all of "our churches" to raise money to pay its employees; if it should assess each church the amount of money expected and requested to be raised every year to support it; if it should openly avow and constantly press its determination to monopolize all the newspaper and other publishing business among "our brethren;" if it should seek to control all the money and manage all the men in the publishing business for the whole brotherhood of Disciples, so that no man could publish a sentence or draw a cent, except under the dictation of the board of directors and the corresponding secretary; if it should ostracize every man, and especially every preacher, who would not approve and aid such a monopoly, as a disturber of the peace of the churches; if it should discourage and prevent as far as possible the circulation of every paper, book, and tract which interfered with its denominational monopoly of newspaper and publishing business in the whole brotherhood of Disciples—if it should do all this and much more which is no better, if not a little worse, it would be a denominational institution exactly like the general, centralizing, chartered, monopolistic organizations I have challenged in this discussion, and Brother Cunningham would probably be the first man to denounce it as unscriptural and outrageous, while I hope and believe I would be the last man to defend it.

The proposition of Brother Cunningham is to end the controversy and settle the question by allowing "the majority of congregations" to decide how the work and worship of God shall be conducted. He says there would be no more divisions in churches if the editors of the Gospel Advocate and everybody else would do this. Sure enough! The trouble is, however, that the editors of the Gospel Advocate and thousands of others all over this land believe that all questions of religious work and worship must be settled, not by what "the majority of congregations" think, but by what God teaches in the New Testament. Does Brother Cunningham seriously think the editors of the Gospel Advocate or anybody else ought to do anything which they believe is contrary to the will of God because "the majority of congregations" approve it? Perhaps his reply to this will be that his proposition to leave it to "the majority of congregations" contemplates nothing but "cases where God has left us free to choose how we will do things;" but who is to decide whether or not God "has left us free to choose how we will do things" in any particular case? Shall that question be decided by Brother Cunningham for everybody and the rest of mankind? The editors of the Gospel Advocate and everybody else will readily yield their preferences in deference to the feelings and wishes of others for the sake of peace and harmony in every case where they believe "God has left us free to choose how we will do things;" but suppose Brother Cunningham thinks God has left us free to choose, while somebody else believes God has clearly taught us "how to do things" to please him, what then? My contention is that every man must walk by his own faith and form his faith "by the word of God," else he cannot please God. (2 Cor. 5: 7; Rom. 10: 17; Heb. 11: 6; Rom. 14: 23.) What right has Brother Cunningham to decide any question in religion for others? I am not disposed to dictate to anybody as to how to do anything in religious work or worship. All I contend for is the right of each man to walk by his own faith and form his faith "by the word of God." I am as ready to defend this right for the man who differs from me as for the man who agrees with me. If Brother Cunningham or anybody else believes God has left him free to choose how he shall do things in a given case, I am perfectly willing for him to choose. In fact, I believe it is his duty to choose, and I am ready to defend his right to choose, and to oppose all efforts of everybody to deprive him of that right and dictate to him how he shall do things. However, I cannot see why a man who believes God has left him free to choose how he "will do things" should choose to do things in a way he admits Christians did not do in New Testament times under the leadership of inspired men. No man knows better than Brother Cunningham that Christians did not use instrumental music in worship, or any organization save local congregations in work, in New Testament times. Why should he choose to use instrumental music in worship, and other organizations than local congregations in work, even if God has left him free to choose? He seems to have a prejudice against the way which Christians did in New Testament times under the leadership of inspired men. I cannot understand this. Every man who believes God has left him free to choose seems determined to choose something he knows is not in the New Testament. It is remarkably strange that no man who believes God has left him free to choose how he "will do things" ever chooses to do like Christians did in New Testament times. There are many people who do not believe God has left them free to choose how they shall "do things," but has clearly taught them how everything must be done to please God. I am unwilling, because it is wrong, for Brother Cunningham or "the majority of congregations" to set aside their convictions and dictate to them that they must choose, or rather let "the majority of congregations" choose for them, to do things in a way which they honestly believe is contrary to the will of God. No man can do that which he believes is contrary to the will of God without defiling his conscience and condemning himself, even if "the majority of congregations" advise him to do it. This is an elementary principle in moral philosophy, which is too self-evident to need any argument to sustain it. Every man must be true to his own convictions, else he will debauch his conscience and destroy the very foundation of his moral character. This brings me to a fatal error in organized effort from a moral point of view, which is involved in Brother Cunningham's position. It is demoralizing because it encourages people to trifle with their religious convictions, and even tries to convince them that it is their duty to ignore their convictions, defile their consciences, turn away from God, and follow "the majority of congregations" for the sake of peace and harmony. It organizes people into partisan brotherhoods in religion, and trains them from infancy to the grave to debauch their consciences and follow men rather than God. Such teaching never made a saint nor a martyr since the world began. It emasculates the world of heroic manhood and makes a direct assault on the sovereignty of God. The communicants in every form of ecclesiasticism the world has ever known have graded low in morality and spirituality in proportion as the organization has been strong in its power to enforce its authority against the personal convictions of its constituents. One of the commands of God to Israel was: "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil." (Ex. 23: 2.) When a man begins to ignore his honest convictions as to what God teaches, and to settle questions of religious work and worship by "the majority of congregations," he weakens the foundation of his moral character.

Our Contributors.

Henry Hardshell and Frank Faithful.

Henry Hardshell: "Good morning, friend Faithful. I am glad to meet you once more. At the close of our last meeting you promised to point out to me some other instances on record in the Scriptures which prove that the words of God and Christ are powerful in themselves, and that we ought not to wait for special signs and wonders to turn us unto God."

Frank Faithful: "I am glad to see you looking so cheery and hopeful, and hear you say 'good' morning. Do you know, Henry, I never hear that salutation but I think how gracious God is to us? It is indeed a good morning, for it is by the goodness of God we live and move and have our being. We live day by day through his goodness, and every day is a new day, requiring new thankfulness. This is a day we have never seen before, and one we shall never behold again. It always adds to the interest of anything, Henry, to know that it is new. Every day is a brand-new day. To make it acceptable to God we should spend it in his service."

Henry H.: "Just so, and I do not know any better way of spending this day than by searching his holy word, and for that reason I desire to hear something of those scriptures you promised to mention which will show the power of God's word."

Frank F.: "If what I have mentioned do not impress your mind, I will despair of helping you by the mention of others."

Henry H.: "They have impressed me, and I am anxious to follow up the subject."

Frank F.: "It is then with pleasure I point you to others, and give line upon line, precept upon precept. Among others, I cite your attention to the raising from the dead the son of the widow of Nain. The account is in Luke 7. Christ uttered the words: 'Young man, I say unto thee, Arise.' Then 'he that was dead sat up, and began to speak. And he delivered him to his mother.' There is much to admire of the divine compassion shown in this occurrence, but I would have you particularly note the power of his word. The raising to life the daughter of the ruler Jairus (Luke 8) is another instance of the power of Christ's words. He 'took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid, arise.' Her spirit came again and she rose up immediately. To have raised a son or a daughter would bring indescribable joy to parents, but these two instances tell of the resurrection of an only son and an only daughter; this raises the joy higher still."

Henry H.: "Isn't there a passage somewhere in the Bible which says: 'Blessed are the ignorant?' I do not know much of the Bible and I was thinking if I could be blessed on the ground of ignorance I would just rest easy."

Frank F.: "I read in Luke 12 of that servant who did not know his Lord's will and did not obey it and was beaten with few stripes, whereas he who knew it and did not do it was beaten with many stripes. 'Stripes' here means punishment, and is no blessing at all. We read of others who 'did not like to retain God in their knowledge' whom God gave over to a reprobate mind. (Rom. 1: 28.) The opportunity to know the will of God will make you as accountable as if you knew it. Besides, you do know much of it, and my exhortation to you when we separated was to practice what you know. He who obeys what he knows of God's will, and is striving to learn more of it, is walking in a safe path. You surely will not try to seek salvation by such ignoble means as ignorance. If you do, your hope is in vain."

Henry H.: "Well, I do not know as I will, but I would like for you to mention some other instances. I have heard some preachers say the written word is a dead letter."

Frank F.: "Yes, but Paul says: 'The word of God is quick [living] and powerful.' Do you remember the temptations of Jesus, how the devil made three strong attempts to lead him away from God?"

Henry H.: "Yes, I remember the accounts of those temptations."

Frank F.: "How did Christ meet those temptations? Was it not with the 'written' word? In each instance, he said to Satan, 'It is written;' and in one of them he shows clearly that the written word of God was equal in authority and power to that which 'proceedeth out of the mouth of God.' Read it in Matt. 4: 4. So, if God, without the intervention of prophet or apostle to write us his word, were to speak it out of his own mouth, it could add nothing to its truth or importance. Henry, we lack faith in God when we discount his written word."

Henry H.: "Well, what is the matter with the world, anyway?"

Frank F.: "The world lacks faith in God. This is man's besetting sin; and another trouble is, we have been looking at mankind as uninspired men have viewed him. Your trouble about man being totally depraved and unable to obey God comes of your believing what John Calvin and Saint Augustine before him taught about man. They were great men, but they saw not man as he is presented in the Bible."

Henry H.: "What was that the poet, Burns, wrote about seeing ourselves as others see us, which made his fame so great in the literary world? That would seem to make it right and important to see ourselves as others see us. What was it he said?"

Frank F.: "Well, to strip it of the Scottish dialect in which he wrote it and state it in plain English, it is this:

"Would some power the gift to give us
To see ourselves as others see us;
It would from many a blunder free us,

Henry H.: "Isn't that a smart saying? Just to see ourselves as others see us! It would free us from so many errors."

Frank F.: "Yes, that does pretty well for Robert Burns, who saw better than most men the aims, sympathies, and follies of the human heart; but, Henry, you know we often complain of the estimate our best friends form of us, and they complain that we fail to do them justice even in our best judgment of them. Allow me to state that is the trouble with you now: you are looking at sinners as John Calvin and others saw them. God's estimate is true if every man is a liar. Whatever light God views man in is the true light. As I said just now, our best friends fail to do us justice. A man will say to his wife, 'Wife, you judge me wrongfully,' and she does sometimes. I have heard some wives say of their husbands that 'one might live with him forty years and not find him out.' But God sees all wives, all husbands, all children, all parents as they really are, because he has perfect knowledge of all hearts. Every heart is an open book to him. He sees us as we are in truth. Henry, with all due deference to Robert Burns, and to all who admire his striking heart touches, make it read this way for improvement:

"Would some power the gift to give us
To see ourselves as God sees us;
It would from many a blunder free us,

This is changing only one word, but it makes a world of difference. I will leave it to you, if it is not a thousandfold better in this form than the way the poet left it. His purpose in that particular poem, addressed to a louse on a lady's bonnet, was best served to write it as he did; but, as a great and important truth, I think all must admit this change would make it far superior."

Henry H.: "Now you are talking to the point, friend Faithful, and I will ask you, right here, this question: How does God see us? Can we, as we are, obey him, or have we any means of knowing what God's estimate of man is? I am asking for information, and not simply to argue."

Frank F.: "Certainly; we have God's estimate of man revealed to us in the Bible. This book throws a flood of heavenly light on man's state and relation to God. He who made man knows him better than any one else. His knowledge of man is perfect, therefore his estimate of man is exactly the true estimate. It is not too low nor too high an estimate; it is precisely correct. What that estimate is we will find in our next interview."

Henry H.: "I will be glad to know it."

G. LIPSCOMB.

A Tour Around the Globe. No. 30.

After entering the Atlantic Ocean, ships became numerous, and their appearance broke the monotony to a great extent. The Bay of Biscay, of deservedly evil reputation in sailor song and story, though by no means calm, was not severely stormy as we sailed over it.

On the morning of August 27 we passed within plain view of the celebrated Eddystone Lighthouse. It is, indeed, a wonderful structure, rising abruptly out of the sea; the rock on which it stands being entirely covered by it. The Eddystone Rocks are in the English Channel, and are so called from the variety of currents in their vicinity. They are about fourteen miles from Plymouth, in the direct line of vessels sailing up and down the channel. Before the lighthouse was erected they were very dangerous, and ships were sometimes wrecked on them. They are so exposed to the swell of the ocean from all the south and west points of the compass that the heavy seas come, uncontrolled, and break over them with awful fury. Sometimes after a storm, when the sea in general is to all appearance quite smooth, its surface unruffled by the slightest breeze, the growing swell or undercurrent meeting the slope of the rocks, the sea beats dreadfully upon them, and even rises above the lighthouse in a magnificent manner, overtopping it, for the moment, as with a canopy of frothy waves. Notwithstanding this tremendous swell, Henry Winstanley, in 1696, undertook to build a lighthouse on the principal rock, and completed it in 1700. He was so confident of the stability of his structure that he declared his wish to be in it during the most tremendous storm that could blow. He obtained his wish, for he perished in it during the dreadful storm which destroyed it, on November 20, 1703. In 1709 another lighthouse was constructed of wood on this rock, by John Rudyerd, which stood until 1755, when it was burned. A third one was begun by the celebrated John Smeaton, on April 2, 1757, and completed on August 24, 1759. It was eighty feet high, and stood for one hundred and thirty-three years, during which time it was assaulted by all the fury of the elements. Fears were entertained as to its safety for several years, but it was replaced by a new one in 1882. How gratifying it is to know that so much interest is taken in the safety of those who "go down to the sea in ships and travel over the great waters!"

Within an hour after passing the lighthouse we cast anchor in Plymouth Harbor. This is the harbor whence the Pilgrim Fathers sailed to the American colonies, and also that from which Captain Cook sailed when he discovered Australia and New Zealand. While anchored here it began raining, and when we reached the channel we encountered quite a gale, which blew furiously until we reached the Thames, and to make it more disagreeable we were enveloped in a dense fog.

We anchored at Tilburg, on Sunday morning, August 28, and after much time had been spent "passing our baggage through the customs," we went ashore, and went by train to London, arriving at our lodging place at 3 P.M. Before leaving the ship, Mr. Farrar, who was brought up in the city of London, volunteered to do everything in his power to assist my wife and myself in seeing all we could of that wonderful city. We accepted his kind offer, and he proved to be a most excellent guide.

London is the greatest and most wonderful city that has ever been on this earth. It is without a parallel. I have seen no other city which has so impressed me. Of it some one has truly said: "I have seen the greatest wonder the world can show to the astonished spirit. I have seen it, and am still astonished. Forever will there remain, fixed indelibly on my memory, the stone forest of houses, amid which flows the rushing stream of faces of living men, with all their varied passions and their terrible impulses of love, of hunger, and of hatred."

Its statistics are all on such a gigantic scale that we stand amazed at the revelation of them. It now has a population of six million two hundred and fifty thousand persons. Thousands of these rise in the morning knowing not how they are going to earn breakfast or where they shall lie down at night. It is said that a large portion would certainly starve anywhere but in this amazing metropolis, where the crumbs which fall from so many hundreds of thousands of tables are picked up by those who are on the alert, and who thus gain a living by the habits, foibles, fortunes, and misfortunes of their neighbors. Every year this vast population increases at the enormous rate of one hundred and eight persons daily. It has been reckoned that in London there are more Roman Catholics than in Rome, more Jews than in all Palestine, more Scotchmen than in Aberdeen, more Welchmen than in Cardiff, and more Irishmen than in Belfast. These millions dwell in over eight hundred thousand houses, which are increasing at the rate of over six thousand eight hundred annually. There are seven hundred and fifty miles of railroad, and enough streets, if placed end to end, to reach from London to New York; and other things are in like proportion.

There was a city here before the Romans came, which the Britons knew as the city of Lud. The present name is derived from the Latin word, "Londinium," mentioned by Tacitus in A.D. 61, as "a city not indeed dignified by the title of a colony, but frequented by a large number of merchants, and by many ships entering its port." The Romans built the old city walls and forts, and fixed the position of the city gates. They reared fine buildings and brought the civilization of the world to London; but when they retired, after nearly five hundred years' occupation, they seem to have left behind them no adequate impression upon the people. The Anglo-Saxons were but barbarians compared with the Roman invaders, and they destroyed, or left to decay, the structures which were the legacy of Rome. For many centuries it was often visited by plagues and fires, and it seemed destined to retrograde rather than to progress. On the nominal conversion of the Saxons to Christianity, a Bishop's See and Saint Paul's Cathedral were here founded in 610. In the next century the city was four times on the verge of ruin by fires. In 962 pestilence swept away thousands of its inhabitants, and twenty years later it was swept by another fire which almost completed its ruin. William the Conqueror brought with him the arts and sciences which the Normans had acquired in the South of Europe, and from his time began a new era of improvement.

London had been ravaged by plague on many former occasions, but the pestilence which commenced in December, 1664, will ever live in history as "the plague of London." The ravages increased daily, and business was stopped. Grass grew in the area of the Royal Exchange and in the principal streets of the city. As many as six thousand died in a week, and little noise could be heard day or night but tolling of bells. This plague carried off one hundred thousand people. The plague was scarcely stayed before the whole city was in flame, a calamity of the first magnitude, but one which in the end caused much good, as the germs of disease were destroyed, and London has never since been visited by such an epidemic. The extent of the calamity may be estimated by the fact that there were consumed in it eighty-nine churches, four city gates, the Guild Hall, and other public edifices; thirteen thousand two hundred houses, four hundred and sixty streets, and property in all worth $50,000,000. Within a few days after the fire plans were submitted and adopted for the complete rebuilding of the city. Merchants carried on their business abroad as though no such disaster had happened, and within four years a city of brick was reared upon the site of the old wooden houses. Much more might be said in a general way of this city, but I must confine myself to a few of the things I saw.

The Monday following our arrival was spent "passing baggage through the customs" and making preparations to see all that could be seen during our short stay.

Tuesday morning we climbed to the top of a "bus," on which we rode into the main part of the city, passing alongside the celebrated Hyde Park, with its fine expanse of grass, its bright flower beds and clumps of shrubbery, its noble trees, its beautiful, ornamental lake, the Serpentine; its broad avenues were crowded with carriages, its Rotten Row was alive with equestrians, and its walks lined with thousands of loungers of almost every nationality, profession, and grade of social position. It presented a scene which in brilliancy and its peculiarly mingled contrasts I have never seen paralleled anywhere else in the world. After passing the Marble Arch we entered into Oxford street and Holborn, past the City Temple (where Josef Parker preaches), and on until we reached the Bank of England. At first ev-everything was so confusing and bewildering. Here humanity runs in no fixed channels, but ceaselessly ebbs and flows like the sea. The tide of travel everywhere seemed to overflow. Cabs, buses, and vehicles of every description, shifting, rattling, and going on, on, and on! Names of places which I had read in histories and storybooks passed before my eyes.

The first place we visited was the Bank of England, which occupies about three acres of ground. It was projected in 1691, and incorporated by William and Mary, in 1694. The building was begun in 1788. It is interesting to note the many ingenious contrivances here to secure the bank against frauds. One of them is the weighing machine, which is so contrived that when one hundred sovereigns are placed in a round tube, as they descend on the machine the coins of full weight are carefully separated into one box, those of light weight pass into another, and those of over-weight are passed into a third. The bank-note machinery is just as accurate and unerring in numbering and registering each note. There are bank notes in circulation to the value of nearly one hundred million dollars, but every note is canceled immediately on its being paid in. The registration of Bank of England notes is so perfect that any note paid into the bank during the last five years can be produced in a minute or two, with information as to the channel through which it found its way back into the bank, although the register contains almost a hundred thousand notes packed away in thousands of boxes, and the notes, if stitched end to end, would reach all the way from London to Australia, a distance of thirteen thousand miles. The bank is the agent of the British Government, on behalf of which it receives the taxes, pays the interest of the national debt, about one hundred and twenty-five million dollars in dividends to nearly two hundred and fifty thousand holders of stock, and, in return for work done, the bank receives a percentage, together with profit derived from the discounting of mercantile bills, with the floating balance of public money left in the bank. Since the riots of 1780, a military force has been stationed nightly within the bank. The chief accountant and chief cashier have official residences within the buildings; and in addition to the military guard a certain number of clerks sit up nightly to watch and patrol the building.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

BAPTISM UNTO THE REMISSION OF SINS.

It is but reasonable that all who recognize the necessity of obeying Jesus in his commandments also acknowledge the necessity of being baptized, for baptism is one of his commandments. If it were the least of commandments, still the righteous thing to do with it would be to obey it. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.)

The commission as given by Matthew reads: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20, R. V.) Mark records: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16, R. V.) Luke reads: "Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." (Luke 24: 46, 47, R. V.) Where Mark gives "shall be saved," Luke says "remission of sins," showing that the salvation promised by Mark is remission of past sins. The man who is saved has his past sins blotted out, and the one who has his past sins remitted is saved. The conditions as required by all three of the evangelists in order to the remission of sins are faith, repentance, and baptism.

Of whom does Mark affirm salvation? Of the person who does nothing? Most emphatically no. Of the man who is baptized without faith? As-surely not. Of the one who simply believes and is not baptized? No; salvation is here affirmed of one character, and only one. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." It does seem that this language is so unmistakably clear that no one would fail to understand. Language precisely similar to this in the ordinary affairs of life would not be misunderstood. I say to a man: "Build me a house and paint it, and you shall receive one thousand dollars." If the man were to build the house and stop without painting it, no one would claim that he had complied with the terms of the contract and was therefore entitled to the one thousand dollars. The faithful mechanic would build the house and paint it before claiming he was entitled to the amount promised. This is no clearer than that "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Salvation is placed beyond baptism.

It is sometimes argued that if baptism is essential to salvation, the Savior should have said: "But he that disbelieveth and is not baptized shall be condemned." This is very poor reasoning. What the Savior says in the latter part of this verse by no means contradicts the positive statement: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." But the Savior did not wish to say, "He that disbelieveth and is not baptized shall be condemned;" for to have done so would require a failure to do two things before a man is condemned. As it takes both belief and baptism to reach the "shall be saved," so it would take a refusal to do the two things before the man would be condemned. He might refuse to believe and yet be baptized, and still not be condemned, according to the language our critics would put in the mouth of Jesus. However, this is not true. "He that offendeth in one point is guilty of all." The man who refuses to believe is already condemned. He need not refuse to do another thing that God commands before he is condemned. "He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." Baptism without faith is of no avail. "But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Heb. 11: 6.) Baptism without faith would be worse than folly. "And he that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.)

In the everyday affairs of life we speak as did the Savior. We say: "He that soweth and cultivateth will reap, but he that soweth not will not reap." We do not say: "He that soweth not and cultivateth not will not reap." When a man fails to sow he will not reap, no matter how much he may cultivate. So the man who disbelieves the truth is hopelessly lost. While in this condition he can do nothing pleasing to God. The same reasoning that makes belief necessary to salvation also makes baptism essential to the same end.

Again, we quote from Shepherd's "Handbook on Baptism." Brother Shepherd does not make these quotations second-hand, but direct from the authors themselves:

"Willmarth.—'In giving the "great commission" to his apostles, the risen Lord commanded: "Go ye therefore, and disciple all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. . . . He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Here, faith and baptism are united as conditions, to the fulfillment of which is affixed his royal promise of salvation, including, of course, remission. The circumstances invest this declaration with peculiar solemnity. It is a part of the fundamental law of Christianity, ordained by the great Founder himself, in his last hours on earth; it is a part of the prime Article in the charter of the Christian ministry; it is the last direction and promise to lost sinners that fell from our Redeemer's lips ere he ascended to the right hand of God.' (Baptism and Remission, in Baptist Quarterly, July, 1877, p. 309.) Barrow.—'He that shall believe, and shall be baptized, shall be saved, is our Savior's own word and promise. "Shall be saved"—that is, shall be put into a state and way of salvation, continuing in which state, proceeding in which way, he assuredly shall be saved.' (Theological Works, Vol. VI., p. 552.) Bickersteth.—'These words are very important. The first clause opposes the notion that faith alone is sufficient for salvation, without those works which are the fruit of faith. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"—that is, he that believeth, and, as evidence of his faith, accepts Christ's baptism and fulfills the promise and vows which he then took upon himself, working out his own salvation with fear and trembling, shall be saved.' (Exposition of Mark's Gospel, 16: 16.) Adam Clarke.—'He that believeth [he that credits this gospel as a revelation from God] and is baptized," takes upon him the profession of it, obliging himself to walk according to its precepts, "he shall be saved"—redeemed from sins here, and brought at last to the enjoyment of my eternal glory.' (Comment on Mark, 16: 16.)"

It is so remarkably strange that any trusting, confiding heart should wish the Lord to save it without baptism. Among the last words of a merciful, loving Savior was the command to the apostles to baptize believers. When we see Jesus leaving heaven and descending to earth on the wings of mercy, while here leading a life of constant toil and sacrifice to lift up a fallen race, and finally dying the terrible death of the cross, it is very hard to conceive of the heart that truly loves Jesus, asking: "Is it necessary to be baptized?" Jesus, who has given us the greatest demonstration of his love the divine power was capable of giving, commanded baptism a very short time before going back to glory. "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous." (1 John 5: 3.) See Jesus in the garden of Gethsemane, bowed beneath the sins of the whole world as they weigh upon him like a mountain weight until his sweat, in his awful agony, became as great drops of blood. While thus suffering, agonizing, draw close to him and ask: "Lord, is it necessary to be baptized?" Hear him say: "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." See the crown of thorns, the purple robe, mocking his pretensions as king; hear the sound of the hammer as the nails go crashing through the tender hands and feet; thrust your hand into the pierced side and with an eye of compassion and pity behold the bruised, mangled, bleeding body; hear the agonizing cry of despair: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Still come nearer and see him bow his head and give up the ghost, and then let the heart that loves him say: "Lord, is it necessary to be baptized?" Methinks such a heart would be harder than stone. It is not like the loyal, trusting, loving heart to ask such a question. In the obedient, penitent heart there is no room for such a thought.

See, from his head, his hands, his feet,
Sorrow and love flow mingled down!
Did e'er such love and sorrow meet,
Or thorns compose so rich a crown?

Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

The greatest test of character is to be found in what is common rather than extraordinary. It is easier for the soldier to be faithful in the rush of battle, when sustained by a catching enthusiasm, than to maintain a high tone of consistent principle under the many trials of daily drill.—Dr. Macleod.

PERSONAL.

Brother Granville Lipscomb preached at Carthage, Tenn., last Sunday.

Brother E. A. Elam, of Bellwood, Tenn., is in a meeting at Bowling Green, Ky.

Brother F. W. Smith, of Franklin, Tenn., is in a good meeting at Winchester, Tenn.

Brother Joe Harding ("Weeping Joe"), of San Antonio, Tex., was in the office last Friday.

The meeting at South College Street church of Christ, Brother Larimore preaching, continues. This meeting began on December 31, 1899. There have been about seventy additions since the meeting began. Brother Larimore preached three times last Sunday, and there were sixteen confessions.

Brother L. S. White, of Gallatin, Tenn., recently closed a six-days' debate with T. J. Eastes, at Brush Run, Smith County, Tenn. The debate was well attended throughout. The church question was discussed. While there arrangements were made for debates with Oakley and Grimes, which will come off in the near future.

Brother Granville Lipscomb: You are now producing some excellent articles in the Gospel Advocate—well-timed, thoroughly digested and prepared. Every one shows deep thought, and all on scriptural lines. I like them, and for your encouragement I feel I ought to tell you so. So many write without saying anything that it is cheering to find one, now and then, who does say something. Make them better still. I pray God to make you the instrument of much good.—John T. Poe, Longview, Tex.

Several persons have sent for my tract, "Going and Sending." A brother writes of it: "I think I will mail one with a little circular of my own composing to each family represented in the congregation, if you have them to spare. Can you let me have one hundred?" We hope others will follow this brother's example. If you are able to pay for it, it will cost you at the rate of $1 per one hundred; if you will distribute them, but are not able to pay, send for them, anyway.—J. M. McCaleb, Louisville, Ky.

Mr. George Boyd and Miss Fannie Williams, both of Tracy City, Tenn., were married on March 18, 1900, at the home of Brother F. W. Stepp, the writer officiating. They are both loyal and devoted members of the church of Christ, and reflect honor upon the local church at Tracy City, with which they hold membership. It is the writer's wish that they may be happy and successful during the period of life, and he feels sure that such reward will accrue to them from a life well spent in the divine vineyard.—Garrett W. McQuiddy, Tracy City, Tenn.

Brother S. M. Jones, of Nashville, Tenn., began a meeting with the congregation at St. Catherine's on November 12, 1899, continuing until December 24, 1899. In this meeting eleven were added to the "one body" by baptism, and four took membership. The congregation was greatly strengthened and encouraged to greater devotion and zeal for the Master. He also held a very profitable meeting at Jordan Station, commencing on December 31, 1899, and closing on January 28, 1900. Four baptisms and the congregation greatly built up in the truth were the results of this meeting. After the meeting closed an interesting debate was held at this place on the "Mode, Design, and Subjects of Baptism," between Brother S. M. Jones (Christian) and Mr. T. L. Wilkinson (Methodist). The truth, as at all times, was conqueror. Brother Jones in now in a good meeting in the city of Hamilton. Last report from him there were eleven baptisms.—D. H. Stirling, Jordan Station, Canada.

Brother McCaleb is one of our missionaries from Japan of almost eight years' experience in that far-away field of labor. Let everybody come and hear him; he will stimulate us all to do more missionary work in the name of Christ.—T. A. Smith.

John T. Oakley (Baptist) and Brother W. H. Bird (Christian) debated at Smithville, Tenn., in February. The Baptists claimed a great victory. Brother O. P. Barry preached at Smithville on the third Sunday in this month, on which day, we are informed, two Baptist preachers renounced Baptist doctrine and said they were convinced of its error in this debate. In the Baptist and Reflector of February 1, 1900, the said John T. Oakley writes to Editor Folk: "Go for the Mormons, Brother Folk, and I will go for the Campbellites." Is this the way Oakley "goes for the Campbellites?" Editor Folk replied: "All right; and when we get through with the Mormons, we will join you in going for the Campbellites." Mr. Folk would better hurry on his victory over the Mormons, because it seems that Oakley needs some help in the matter of "going for the Campbellites." Editor Folk seems to think that it is easier to "get through with the Mormons" than with "the Campbellites," and we agree with him. If Oakley and Folk want to make a success of "going for the Campbellites," they would better commence at the right place—"go for" the New Testament; for until they do something with a part of the New Testament their combined efforts against the church of God, which they so irreverently call "the Campbellite church," will avail them nothing.

We have received all we asked for, and will now endeavor to carry on the work—with God's help—to the accomplishment of good. We have secured a hall, and the church at Corsicana, Tex., has paid three months' rent on it. We have seated the hall and bought books, and had appointed our first meeting for Lord's day, March 18, 1900, but the rain poured down all night and through the day until after the hour for meeting, and one man only met me at the place of worship. I want to say to the brethren everywhere that we now have enough money for the purpose we asked donations for. The response was prompt and has secured for us a place of worship, and with God's blessing I hope we may do great good here. I first made an offer to our digressive brethren that if they would put away unscriptural things from the worship we would unite with them, and all together work for the salvation of souls upon God's own plan. They refuse to give them up, and so no union is possible. I pray God to grant they may see their error and repent before it is eternally too late. If other contributions come in now, I will apply the money to a protracted meeting effort in this place, as we think this would do great good. Thanks, dear brethren and sisters, and may God bless you abundantly for your aid to his cause here. Every donation came accompanied by an earnest prayer, and we expect to succeed. When we do right God is with us, and one man, with God on his side, is a big majority against the whole world.—John T. Poe.

EDITORIAL.

Stubbornness robs us of many of the joys of life.

It is dangerous to be happy when ignorance is bliss.

The man who tries to do everything is a failure at everything.

No one can enjoy religion while following the Lord from afar.

A short prayer is often more effective than a long sermon.

Without singleness of purpose no man can accomplish anything noble.

There is a great difference between steadfastness in faith and stubbornness.

It is very hard for the man who has a large following to keep on the right road.

The right side is the bright side to those engaged in the service of the Lord.

The man who is on the right side of every issue is sure to often be in the minority.

The man who has done his best during the day goes to bed and sleeps as sweetly as the innocent babe.

A man grows weary of his own way after he enjoys a short experience in the sweetness of the Lord's way.

Men who never decide what is right until they see "which way the wind blows" are not fit to be trusted as leaders.

No man can understand the teaching of the Bible until he ceases to listen for the approving voice of the multitude.

A sinner is very dangerous to society because there are so many things he cannot do without somebody to help him.

Temptations do not usually come to us in the path of duty, but when we are in the wrong place and in the wrong company.

As long as a man is afraid of the frowns and jeers of the multitude, he cannot be a bold and aggressive servant of the Lord.

There is something wrong with the heart of the man who cares more for the good opinion of the world than he does for the approval of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The ready reign.

Those in idleness are not ready. Only the busy are prepared.

Those who are ready for the coming of Christ are ready for anything.

A guest is welcome only in a prepared home.

Those who are not ready are not reliable.

Unreadiness is the secret of most failures in fortune and in soul. In the moment when Opportunity knocked at the door, the answer had to be, "Wait." But Opportunity never waits; her watchword is "now," and her invitations can be accepted only by those who are ready. Not to be ready means failure.

Why is youth so important a period in life? Because it is a period of getting ready to live. In youth one equips himself for life. If his preparation be thorough and wise, he enters life a master, strong, and not weak. So many young people fail in life because they undertake work for which they are not prepared. They have not taken the time to get ready for it. Those who undertake work without careful preparation are almost sure to fail. Painstaking preparation will fit us for any duty the Lord calls us to perform.

We should be ready for that brief experience which we call death. Life is serious, but not death to those who are prepared. By preparation we conquer the terrors of death while living. The ready soul has no fears of death, but welcomes the summons to pass over the river. To such death is only a glorious exchange—a passing out of the shadows of earth into the glory and bliss of heaven. But how fearful for death to find us not ready!

The disciple should ever be ready for work. Work for the Master is a delightful service. Our time in which to work is very brief. The years chase each other like shadows. We should work while it is day; for soon the night of death will come, when no man can work. Work for the Master is the most glorious of all work. It is not work for a day, but for eternity. Souls are involved. How important the work! Are we ready for it? The destiny of souls is depending on our readiness.

We should be ready for living. Our lives were not given us by accident, but God gave each for a purpose. It is a sin to happen upon a course of life. As one must get ready to be a carpenter, a printer, or a school-teacher, so one must get ready for living. What are we placed on earth for? What was said of one man, "There was a man sent from God," is true of every man. Each life is sent from God. God has a work for every man that comes into the world. No life should fail to glorify God in both body and spirit. Our aim in living should be: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." This gives life but one aim, the highest possible aim, and makes it very simple. Life with such an aim will be wonderfully beautiful and cheerful. Some people seem in all their labors never to have a higher thought than simply making a living. Life with such a motive is to drag out a miserable existence. All their life is spent among the things of earth, and they never lift their eyes to the skies, where the stars of God shine. But with a single purpose in life—to please God—all their labor is pleasant. It takes the gold from earth and places it in the skies. The end of life is not to toil and moulder in the dust, but to glorify God in all that we do, so that we may reign with him in that land where our treasures shall never be taken from us again.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Is it right for me to put my membership in with the Presbyterians when there is no other church, if I do not believe in their doctrine? I would like to know the scripture that teaches on that point, if there is any. I belong to the church of Christ, and the Presbyterian Church is the only church in six or eight miles of me.

Spring Water, Ore. E. L. HUTCHINS.

If I could worship with the Presbyterians in one place, I could in all places. If one member of the church of Christ can worship with them without sin, all members can. So if you can meet and worship with them without sin in Oregon, all can and should do it, wherever they are. The will of God ought to guide a man in all these things. If the Presbyterians teach and practice the will of God, it is every man's duty to worship with them and build them up; if they do not teach the will of God, it is wrong to give your influence to build them up and spread their teaching. If there is only one man in the community that knows the truth, there is so much the greater obligation resting upon him to teach and practice that truth in the community. It is every man's duty to practice the Christian religion as the Bible teaches it. It is as much his duty to do it where no one else does it as it is where there is a large church to meet with, and there is the greater call for him to do it. To give up the truth and build up error because there are no friends of truth in a community is to betray the truth because it is unpopular. The duty is to practice and teach the truth. Worshipping God is not a matter of convenience, but of solemn duty that each owes to God.

Brother Lipscomb: Please give me some light on John 6: 53, 54: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day." A brother preached; another brother and my wife and another sister confessed Christ. The preacher said to me, "These sisters have no life in them yet," and had me take these women fifteen miles on the next Lord's day, and then they did not have the bread and wine. This was eight or ten years ago. I have been pondering on these scriptures, and do not know whether they belong to us or not, as they were spoken to a mixed multitude. So give us some light.

JOHNSON PERRY.

The verses quoted do not refer to partaking of the Lord's Supper, I feel quite sure. They were spoken before the Lord's Supper was established; and if they referred to this, the hearers could not have understood it. To eat his flesh and drink his blood was to take his teachings into their lives and let them enter into their spiritual lives, as his flesh and blood entered into his life. It is a comparison like drinking of the living water in John 4: 6-15. While the teaching of the preacher was misleading in reference to these passages, if our brother has lived with these sisters eight or ten years without partaking of the Lord's Supper, the fruits would indicate a lack of spiritual life. Jesus instituted the Supper as a memento of his love to man, and tells his disciples they are to observe it in memory of him, and that where two or three meet together in his name he is in the midst of them. This brother and these sisters ought to have gone to meeting and worshiped God in their own community, and by this time they would have converted a number of their neighbors that are lost because of their failure to do their duty. Meet and worship God, and he will bless you.

Brother Lipscomb: About thirty years ago my attention was called to the Gospel Advocate by a Baptist preacher holding it up between his thumb and forefinger and calling it "a little filthy sheet." I took it and compared it with my Testament, as I carried it in my pocket. I have read and compared it with my Bible ever since; and, as I understand its teaching, God is a God of means in every sense. Now in this community are two ladies, friends and neighbors, that claim to cure all maladies flesh is heir to without means. It is new to me, and I am so blind I cannot consider the matter. They require no faith on my part, only to quit my medicine for a few days and give them a chance at my ailment. As a son with a father, I want you to give me light on the system. They call themselves "Christian scientists." When, where, and by whom was this system organized, and does it not upset James on healing the sick? Hico, La. N. R. FUNDERBURK.

What is called "Christian science" originated with Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy in 1866, a resident of Lynn, Mass. She claims that all believers can cure diseases. Many ridiculous theories are attributed to them; whether real or not, I am unable to tell. I have the statement of faith as given by Mrs. Eddy herself, but I am unable to understand it. Her statement is: "When apparently near death, my convictions laid hold upon the divine verity that all evil, whether moral or physical, must be nonexistent, because contrary to the omnipotent Good, God." That is interpreted to mean that all disease is imaginary and all sickness is imaginary, and all that is to be done to cure a person is to get him to think he is well. I do not understand them; I do not think they understand themselves. They claim to have made a number of converts. This is not strange; nor is it strange that they should make the impression they heal some. Imagination has much to do with a great many cases of sickness, and such can be helped if they can be got to think they are well; but smallpox, measles, cholera, and a broken leg are not wholly imaginary and cannot be healed by imagination. An old physician, lecturing to his students, told them that of the number that send for a physician, three-fourths or over would get well of themselves, and that this proportion getting well would give a physician the reputation of a good physician. So if they could get a number of patients and be careful to do nothing to kill any of them, they might be sure of making a good reputation. In medicine you never are able to tell whether a patient would have got well without the medicine or not. A "Christian scientist" goes to see a number of patients; three-fourths of them would get well without any attention, and they claim, and the people give them, credit for healing that number. I have no idea they ever healed a single sick person. They may have, through the assurances given, cheered up some despondent ones; but the whole pretense of divine power to heal is an absurd pretense.

Brother Lipscomb: For some time we have been using your lesson helps in connection with the Bible. In our Bible school—or, in other words, the church—here, which meets to worship each Lord's day, we take up the study of the Bible as mapped out in the international arrangement; but Brother — has taken rank exceptions to them, and denounces all as disloyal who use them, thereby causing some to stumble, bringing about strife, contention, and confusion; for, you know, no matter what one may advocate, he will have his following. Now, Brother Lipscomb, I would like a personal letter from you on the subject, for I desire to continue the study as we have been doing. We have grown "in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" very fast, and all we want is the truth.

A private letter was asked, but we mark out all names and places and give an answer here. We have nothing to say to one that is not for all. Jesus plainly teaches that God gives different talents to different persons, and each is held accountable for the use of the talent committed to him. 1 Pet. 4: 11 says, "If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth;" but these objectors to private teaching say, practically: If a man has not the talent to make a public oration, he must bury his talent and do nothing. The obligation to teach the Scriptures to men in any and every way that it can be done ought not to be yielded for a moment. God has made it the duty of every Christian to teach in every place and in every way the word of God to every creature in the world. No one can surrender that right and be true to God. Every creature in all the world is to be taught, and God has made no restrictions as to how it is to be done. It is as great sin to restrict the methods and hinder the teachings of God as it is to add to his appointments. Those who thus assume to do what God has not done in each extreme are to be resisted, for both extremes destroy fidelity to God and corrupt his service. Objections, of course, can be found to the methods of teaching. They are left to man, and all his methods are imperfect. It is better to have the Bible than to have the lesson in a book to itself. We all admit this, and urge the use of the Bible. The reason it is better is that they get a better acquaintance with the Bible and see the connections better; but the trouble is that you cannot get them to bring the Bible. As between the lesson in the Quarterly and the preached sermon, the pupil gets much the better idea of the scripture from the lesson when he reads it himself and sees other scriptures to explain it than he does from the preached sermon, when he hears a passage read out of its connection here, another there, without seeing or knowing the connections. Another point is that the comments made on the scriptures in the lesson are much more intelligently and carefully made than those in the preached sermon. I have no doubt the average pupil learns more of the Bible from the printed lesson than he does from the average sermon preached. A man who makes war upon this or any other method of teaching and studying the Bible shows he fails to understand the Bible on a vital point. When they confound these methods of teaching where God has made no order with the substitution of human ordinances to do the work God ordained the church to do, they at once show they are led by narrow prejudices, and not by the understanding of the Bible. The extremes on each side subvert the order of God, and are to be resisted—kindly, but firmly, resisted.

Vicious Boys.

Now, boys, let me beseech you not to be vicious. Do not, because you have it in your power, tease a cat, worry a dog, or run a horse almost to death simply because you want to be doing something. I know that you are bubbling over with fun and frolic, but it is quite as easy and much more to the purpose to indulge in manly sports—something that will bring the ruddy color to your cheeks, the brilliant, healthful flush to your eye.

When I see a boy pouring coal oil over a cat, and then setting it afire, just to see her run, I say: "Woe, woe! The gallows will get him yet!" I am sure that some boys indulge in many foolish freaks, without thought of the consequences, who are not really vicious, but it is no good sight, and from which many will prognosticate an evil ending, to see him idling off his time in harmful play—torturing dumb animals who cannot speak their misery.—Youth's Southland.

Working with an End in View.

Every boy should start out in life, and the starting point should begin in the schoolroom, with the determination to do something, to be something in the world's great drama. You are not placed here merely for the purpose of eating, drinking, and being merry.

No; God has work for every one of his creatures, and while some are compelled by nature to be hewers of wood and drawers of water—and all honor to them if they perform these duties well—yet what a noble calling it must be to be a molder of thought among the world's greatest intellects! All men who strive are much more beautiful than those who are content with mediocrity. Though, while striving, dear reader, be open and aboveboard in all your dealings with other boys. Let it be said of you that your word is as good as your bond, than which nothing better could be said.—Youth's Southland.

Who is so guided that he cannot stray.

BETH'S BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT.

When Mr. Morton learned that his mining interests would detain him in Zacatecas the entire year, he sent for his family, knowing that the different climate, and everything connected with the quaint Mexican city, just within the torrid zone, would be a pleasing change to his children, accustomed only to their northern home.

His daughters, Beth and Bertha, were especially pleased with Zacatecas, and for some time after their arrival they were too much interested in things in general to give much attention to anything in particular. They roamed here and there; investigated this, that, and the other thing; and were as busy and curious as bees in a new hive.

Zacatecas is a quaint, Oriental-looking town, very much like the towns of Palestine. The houses lie among the hills as grain lies in the hopper of a mill. The low, flat-roofed, square buildings are after the Moorish style, and rise in terraces up the steep declivities. They are so crowded that there seems no room for growth, unless it be up the mountains, or down the one valley toward the plain of Guadalupe. The surrounding hills are rich in silver, mines having been opened here nearly four centuries ago. Many thousands of men still find employment in re-opening the old mines or in discovering and working new ones.

To the two northern girls the customs and costumes of the people were quaint and interesting. The men dress in coarse white cotton; wear the broad-brimmed, sugar-loaf sombrero, or hat of straw; and wrap themselves in a zarape, or shawl. The women dress in all the colors of the rainbow, and are partly wrapped in a dark-colored reboso, or large scarf. All the natives who are not barefooted wear sandals.

"They must be a very religious people," said Bertha; "they are always attending mass, going to this or that shrine, or doing penance for their sins."

"And always praying to the Virgin and los santos, as they call the saints," said Beth.

"O," cried Bertha, "I heard a curious thing yesterday. Have you noticed the queer-shaped mountain high above the town? It looks like a buffalo with its back up, and is called the 'Bufa,' the Spanish for 'buffalo.'"

"It has a trail running to the very top," said Beth. "I often see people going up and down and wonder what they are doing."

"They go to do penance and get absolution in the chapel called Los Remedios, away up on the mountain. To make the penance more difficult for themselves, and more acceptable to the saints, many climb up all that long, steep trail on their knees."

"Poor things," said Beth; "and many of them seem to have such hard, scanty lives anyway, especially many of the women."

"And especially Dolores," said Bertha; "she has the right name. I never saw a more doleful countenance."

Dolores was the woman who came in occasionally to do the Mortons' washing and help Annita, the housekeeper, about her work. Although a young woman, she looked worn and weary, and seemed oppressed by some great sorrow. Beth and Bertha often wondered about her, but, because of her quiet, repellent manner, forbore to question her.

But one day, moved by pity for silent, sorrowful Dolores, Beth asked Annita about her.

"Si, Señorita, Dolores have much sorrow," replied Annita. "When she be married only one little year they bring her young husband, Juan, home from the mines with a hurt back and head. He lay sick so many days that the food and money all go, and Dolores must turn lavandera and go here and there washing for the Americanos, leaving poor Juan and the little babe much alone. Then the poor little babe sicken and die, and Dolores grieve much. But Juan know not the babe have gone. He know not Dolores, either; he know not anything, but is always in a sort of siesta, his eyes dim and roving, and his words without meaning. It is the wound on his head, Señorita."

"O, poor Dolores; no wonder she is sorrowful!" cried Beth. "Is there anything I can do for her, Annita?"

"Dolores is poor, and Juan need much," replied Annita. Then she added significantly: "The Señorita have much."

Beth took the well-meant hint, and that very day sent a basket of dainties for the sick man, and a roll of clean linen for his bed. Thereafter many things much needed found their way to the poor little home. Dolores was very grateful.

"May the saints reward you, Señorita," she said fervently to Beth. "I mention your name to them in my prayers, and I pray to them always for my dead babe and my sick Juan."

"O, Dolores, your little baby no longer needs your prayers; it is safe and well with the dear Christ. Pray to him for Juan, Dolores, and for yourself. He alone can answer prayer and send comfort."

But Dolores shook her head. "The Señorita be Protestante, she not understand," she said, sadly. "As for me, I fear el Christo, and pray only to los santos and the blessed Mary."

Nevertheless Beth often told her of Christ, and as the girl talked lovingly and earnestly, strange new thoughts came to the sorrowful woman. Was el Christo really so merciful and helpful, and was her babe already safe in his bosom? If she told him of her poor Juan and his strange siesta, would he hear and pity and help? But her early teaching was strong upon her, and she continued to say: "I pray only to los santos and the blessed Virgin."

One day Beth went with a party of friends to visit the chapel of Los Remedios on the top of the Bufa. They went on donkeys, and were a merry party. It was some saint's day, and many believers were climbing the mountain to do penance and get absolution in the chapel on the summit. Slowly they toiled up the long, steep trail. Most of the pilgrims were walking, but here and there were little groups on their knees, moving slowly and laboriously upward.

Among these kneeling, moving figures was one that attracted Beth's attention. Surely that dotted gown was one she herself had worn; and the brown cotton reboso about the shoulders, the pathetic droop of the dark head, and the whole weary figure were all familiar. It was Dolores going up the mountain on her knees to entreat the saints for her sick Juan.

"O, poor thing!" cried Beth. "And she is already so weary and worn that the exertion will kill her. She shall mount my donkey and ride up to Los Remedios, if she must go there."

And springing from her donkey, she hastily approached Dolores. But the Mexican woman was too absorbed to notice her. She was holding her rosary and praying audibly, using not the customary formula, but an intense little prayer of her own: "For my poor Juan," she moaned. "O, saints in heaven, that he may know me once again; that he may but speak my name!"

The words were full of agonized entreaty, and Beth felt that they removed the speaker far from her. What could she, the happy, care-free girl, say to this half-frenzied woman? She looked up the Bufa to where the spires of Los Remedios were dimly outlined against the blue Mexican sky, then turned again to the kneeling, praying Dolores; and suddenly a gracious thought came to her—a thought suggested not by los santos to whom Dolores was praying, but by el Christo, to whom she herself was lifting a wordless cry.

"What a simple, easy thing to do!" she said, gladly. "I wonder I did not think of it before."

So mounting her donkey, she rode down the mountain, into the town, and straight to the office of an American surgeon whom she knew. Presently she was in the street again, and with her was the surgeon. Straight to Juan's little cottage they went, making haste, that there might be time for a thorough examination of the sick man before the return of Dolores.

"Father," said Beth that evening, "what will be the cost of that little excursion you promised me into tropical Mexico?"

"Fifty dollars, perhaps," replied Mr. Morton. "Why do you ask, my dear?"

"Because I want to give up the trip and use the money for something else. Dr. Dayton says Juan's trouble is caused by some pressure on the brain, and that a surgical operation will probably cure him. O, father, think what that would be for Dolores!"

"And you want to give up your pleasure trip and spend the money for this operation," said Mr. Morton, much impressed by his daughter's generous self-denial. "Well, well, do as you please, child. But remember that you cannot eat your pudding and have it, too. This is all the money I can spare now, and if you spend it for the one thing, you must do without the other."

But this was just what Beth had planned to do. It was the beautiful thought that had come to her on the Bufa.

The next day the operation was performed, and a few hours later Juan awoke both from the effect the drugs given him and from the stupor that had so long oppressed him. He looked calmly from one to another of the little group about him, and when his dark eyes, full of the old familiar light, fell upon his wife, into his wan face came the long prayed-for look of recognition.

"Dolores," he said, softly, "what a long night it has been, dear! But it is morning now."

"Very good, very good, indeed," said Dr. Dayton, rubbing his hands with satisfaction. "We shall soon see him a well man, I think."

Then Dolores, with a glad cry, fell upon her knees, sobbing joyfully and uttering thanks—not to los santos now, nor to the Virgin, but to el Christo, whom she no longer feared.

"He alone could put it into your heart to do this heavenly thing for me, Señorita," she said to Beth. "It was because of your love for him that you did it. Only he can answer prayer and send comfort. I love him dearly, and will pray to him only as long as I live."—Anna E. Hahn, in Forward.

THE WILLING HEART.

They kept no maid in that household. Auntie had been up all the previous night engaged in a struggle with bronchitis, and grandma was prostrated by the sudden heat of the June day, when a pair of cousins and a lady from Chicago dropped in unexpectedly to luncheon, and the cousins, who wished to catch a train, wanted the meal to be ready within half an hour.

Now, though given to hospitality, it must be owned that just at this time auntie felt that she could have wished that these visits might have been delayed. However, the guests were welcomed and made as comfortable as possible in her shaded parlor with palm-leaf fans and ice water, and then auntie returned to the kitchen and examined the larder with a sinking heart. There did not seem to be enough of anything. Just at this moment in came Marjorie. She was only half past ten years old, and it had not occurred to auntie that she could be of much assistance, but the little girl herself was the picture of hearty good cheer.

"I'll help you," said she. "You'll want more things from the market, won't you? Where shall I run to first?"

She put on her hat, took a basket, and in a wonderfully short time she was back again with chops, strawberries, and bread.

"Now, I'll set the table, and you do the other things," she said.

So, with her prompt and willing help, lunch was ready at the desired moment.

"Well," said one cousin, with cousinly frankness, "how did you manage to get such a fine lunch as this in such short order? I told you to get just a cup of tea and a piece of bread and butter, but to look at the table one would suppose you had been preparing for a week."

Auntie laughed. "Thank Marjorie," said she. "It took her help to get this lunch together."

The lady from Chicago glanced down with an appreciative eye at the round, flushed cheeks of the little girl, and marked the "dewdrops" that besprinkled the bridge of her dear little nose. Then she laid her hand gently upon Marjorie's heart and felt its beating. "I can tell that she was a great help," she said, "for she has the willing heart, and if one has a willing heart and obedient hands, one can do a great deal."

Lads and lassies, I am going to tell you a secret. It is a great happiness to us "grown-ups" when the children we love give us a willing service. Your quick footstep, your ready answer, and your smile make all the difference in the world to us. Even if you are a little clumsy, it doesn't matter, if you have what the lady from Chicago called "the willing heart." You can learn, and we love to teach you when you like to learn; and what you learn while young will be useful to you all your life.

When the boys and girls of a family do willingly and well their part of the daily work, the life of the household moves on like a piece of well-oiled machinery, and mother, who is always the chief engineer, enjoys governing the machine. See to it, then, my boys and girls, that it is never one of you who causes any friction or jar.—Eleanor A. Hunter, in Good Cheer.

They that give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety.—Franklin.

Editorial.

REV. 14, 15, and 16.

Rev. 13 ends with an account of the second beast, that is usually interpreted to represent papal Rome, which is a combination of religion and temporal or governmental power. It represents that combination as going to such excesses as to cause all, great and small, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their forehead, or in their hand; and that no man could buy or sell that did not have the mark or name or the number of his name, and that the number of his name is six hundred three-score and six. We cannot tell what the mark was or in what sense it gave the right to trade, or what is meant by the number of his name; but, granting that this whole vision refers to any sort of combination of religion with worldly governments, it is very clear that the whole matter is out of harmony with the will of God, and is doomed to come to naught, and Christians, therefore, should be exceeding careful not to form any sort of combination with the kingdoms or governments of this world, further than complete submission to them, unless their laws and requirements conflict with the laws of God. In that case the apostles decided that it was better to obey God than men, as the highest obligation resting on the children of God is submission to his word.

Then Rev. 14 opens with a vision of the Lamb, and of a hundred and forty-four thousand with him, having his Father's name written in their foreheads; and these were singing a new song before the throne, "and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. . . . These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb; . . . for they are without fault before the throne of God." I do not know who these are, only that they represent faithful servants of God and of Christ, and are beyond the reach of all harm, and this scripture shows that such will be the outcome of all who do as they did. It is truly refreshing to read of such right by the side of those who follow the popular tide, the wisdom of the world, and bring such awful ruin upon themselves and the world. The wisdom of this world always has been, and always will be, foolishness with God. All, therefore, who follow the wisdom of men in their religion, instead of the wisdom and word of God, are certain to end in ruin. But how precious to the faithful child of God is the certainty that, come what will, he is safe in the hands of God and can suffer no real loss here, and in the end will stand with all the redeemed, singing the praises of God and the Lamb forever! No one who loves and serves the Lord faithfully need have any dread of the awful calamities that are to come upon the world and upon all false systems of religion.

Next follows the vision of an angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to every nation, kindred, and tongue that dwells upon the earth. And he said, "with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Whatever else may be couched in this vision, it shows God's goodness and love and tender mercy in providing salvation for men, and sending it to them, inviting them to partake thereof and live, and warning them of the danger that awaits them if they refuse it. Thus God gives men fair opportunities; and if they are lost at last, it will be their own fault. I had much rather spend my time in calling sinners to the Lamb of God and teaching Christians how to walk the narrow way than to spend my time and talent trying to tell people when and where and how these wonderful visions of Revelation will be fulfilled; for if I were to succeed in telling these things correctly, the people would not know it to be so, and it would not save a soul of them if they did. But when I preach the gospel of Christ to sinners, that shows them the way into salvation, and then they can read that for themselves in the word of God and can know it is there for themselves. In this I may save myself and those that hear me, but in speculating on the fulfillment of prophecy I may become so engrossed in that as to neglect practical duties, and may lose my own soul and cause the loss of those that hear me. In this one matter of salvation I want to be on infallibly safe ground, and I thank the Lord he has provided that I may; and so may all others if they will.

Immediately after the vision of the angel and the everlasting gospel comes a dark picture again: "And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." (Rev. 14: 8-11.) This represents an awful ending to those who partake with the beast and his image and receive the mark of his name; and while I need not try to tell anything definite about this false religion, this Babylon that is to fall, I can say with certainty that no man will come to this end that will read, study, and practice the pure word of God as it stands in the New Testament, and forms no alliance with any system of error, and that stands aloof from all institutions of man's wisdom, and has nothing to do with any of them except to obey the law of the land and be a quiet, submissive citizen. A man that obeys God will of necessity obey the laws of his country, unless they bid him do something that would be disobedience to God; in that case he will still obey God, and not obey men. All the world knows, if they would think for a moment, that this course is safe. If we begin to obey men in things contrary to the word of God, we may take the mark of the beast upon us before we know it, and then at last find ourselves involved in the fall of Babylon, the destruction of the beast; but if we stand squarely upon God's word in all things, we will be infallibly safe.

Verse 12 says: "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Such a passage as this in the midst of such dark pictures as are drawn in this chapter as connected with the downfall of the beast is like a beautiful oasis in the midst of a great desert, and is calculated to fill the soul of the faithful child of God full of joy and consolation, and give him a feeling of the greatest security amid the terrible crash of ruin indicated in the connection.

This consolation is completed in verse 13: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." In order to die in the Lord, we must live in him; and in order to live in him, we must enter into him by obeying the gospel. All who do these things are safe, no matter when Babylon falls. There is nothing else that can be safe for us.

The rest of this chapter is taken up in an account of the angel reaping the earth with a sharp sickle, and gathering the clusters of the vine of the earth, which are understood to represent the wicked, into the great wine press of the wrath of God. "And the wine press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine press, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs." This is an awful picture of ruin, but it is so assuring to know that none of God's faithful children will be involved in it. This is our wisdom: that we stand aloof from every sort of error and every phase of combination with the institutions of man's wisdom, no matter what or how inviting they may be.

Chapter 15 is a short one, but it introduces in rapid succession some more wonderful visions. First are introduced seven angels, having the seven last plagues, in which is fulfilled the wrath of God. Then, before introducing the pouring out of the vials of God's wrath, another one of those pictures is given that so wonderfully encourage God's children to continue faithful: "And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God. And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest." This is another rich oasis in the desert for the children of God. It shows that the people of God can refuse the beast and the mark of his name, and can gain the victory over him if they will, and that many of them do so, and the joyful outcome of so doing. Brethren, let us be faithful, and never allow ourselves to form any of these alliances with the beast, with the world, and with false religions.

Then next he presents seven angels coming out of the temple, having the seven last plagues, clothed in pure white, and their breasts girded with golden girdles; and unto the angels were given seven golden vials, full of the wrath of God, who liveth forever and ever. Then the chapter closes with this wonderful statement: "And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled." I am not going to try to tell what this part of the vision represents, what the temple represents, and such like, simply because I do not know. But it all shows that God had an important hand in the matter, whatever it is. In fact, all these visions show that he has a hand in all the things that are indicated as occurring among men, and with worldly governments, or kingdoms, and all politico-religious institutions as well. It is all a mistake to suppose that God has no hand in the affairs of men and nations.

In chapter 16 the seven angels were directed to go their way, and to pour out their vials of the wrath of God upon the earth. "And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshiped his image." (Verse 2.) Those that had the mark of the beast and worshiped his image are generally supposed to be religious people, who had formed improper alliances with worldly powers; and if that be true, then that is the class of men this plague was poured out upon, and that for their disregard of God's authority.

"And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea." This is an exceedingly strong figure, and indicates terrible punishment.

"And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus. For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy." This indicates great wrath poured out upon people who have persecuted the Lord's people. Wicked governments have done this, and so have false religions that have been allied with the powers of this world; and upon such these vials of wrath were poured out. They had thirsted for the blood of the Lord's people, and now he gives them blood to drink. Yet people say the Lord has nothing to do with the affairs of this world. I do not see how any one can read these chapters and say so.

"And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire. And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory." Thus God sent these awful plagues upon men, that they might be warned thereby, and repent; but they repented not.

"And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain, and blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds." This indicates punishment beyond expression, punishment sent by God upon men in this life; and yet for all that they will not repent. Such are hardened and steeped in sin beyond the power or inclination to repent. Nothing but ruin awaits such men. O that the wicked of this world would repent!

"And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared." At the same time three unclean spirits like frogs went forth to the kings of the earth, and the whole world, to gather them to the great battle of Armageddon.

"And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done." These seven plagues are called the "last;" but I do not know how to explain as to time, country, or nations. We have first seven seals, then seven trumpets; and then seven vials; and it is possible all three of these run over the same periods of time, and pertain to the same countries and people, but to different phases of events, plagues, and blessings. Of this I have but little to say.

In verse 15 is something practical and important to all Christians: "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." We need, therefore, to be always on our guard, lest in an evil hour we be led away from the truth, and these awful plagues come upon us. E. G. S.

ADOPTION.

To adopt is to receive the child of another as one's own and to bestow upon it the affection, treatment, and privileges of one's own child. Christians are spoken of by God as his adopted children. They are his by adoption. This would indicate they are not his naturally—they are not born by natural birth into the family of God. This is true. Man was in the beginning a child of God. God created him as his own child, and as his child placed him to reign over the world. The genealogy of the human family, as given by Luke, traces all back to "Adam, which was the son of God." Adam was created by God as a member of his family. But now the children of Adam are not by virtue of their birth in the family of God's children.

Paul, writing to the Ephesians, represents them as walking "according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience: among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. . . . At that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." (Eph. 2: 2-12.)

God had created the world and Adam, and had placed man in the world to control and enjoy it, and he dwelt with him as his Father and God. Man sinned against God, accepted the devil as the ruler, and carried the world into rebellion against God. He alienated himself and the world over which he ruled from God, and brought them under the dominion of the evil one—"the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." He thus alienated himself and his home from the family of God, and became a member of the family of the evil one. He breathed into the spirit of the evil one, and the children born unto him were by nature children of wrath, born in the kingdom of the evil one, and breathed its spirit from birth. Such could be only vessels of wrath fitted to destruction.

"But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." Man, by his sins, forfeited his favor and his inheritance as a child of God, became a child of wrath, and God, through Christ, proposes to readopt him into his family, or so many of the children of men as will trust him, follow him, enter his family according to his appointed way, drink into the Spirit of God's family, and thus in truth and spirit become one of them. To become one in spirit and in truth is to be willing from the heart to live according to the laws that regulate the family of God. If he drinks into the Spirit of Christ, he is willing to obey him from the heart. Having the Spirit of the family means doing from the heart, obeying from a feeling of love instead of fear. The difference between obeying from the heart and obeying from a sense of fear is the difference between a son and a servant. Under the Mosaic law the service was rendered as fear. It was not from the heart. Under the Christian law it must be from the heart, so it is a service of love.

Paul, in Gal. 4: 4-7, says: "But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." Those of the Jews who received Christ were promoted from the state of servants to that of sons. As preparatory to being received as sons, the Spirit of adoption must be in their hearts, a desire to become members of the family of God. This desire is imparted through faith in God. Without faith in God none could love him or his service or desire to become members of his family. When the Jews believed in Christ they were promoted from the state of servants to that of children, and when they became children then they drank into the Spirit of the family, so could call God "Father."

Paul, in Rom. 8: 13-15, gives the same thought: "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father." He seems to place the relying upon the fleshly family of Abraham and giving rule to the lusts of the flesh together. This is because the Jewish law could not restrain the lusts of the flesh, "in that it was weak through the flesh," and those who relied upon the fleshly relations for salvation would be ruled by the fleshly lusts. Those who are led by the Spirit of God entered the spiritual family of faith, and were not again to receive the spirit of bondage (or slavery of Judaism), but the Spirit that pertained to the state of sonship, into which they were adopted. This adoption must carry with it and grow out of the Spirit of adoption, or the desire to live as "sons and daughters of the living God."

The change from the state of alienation to that of sons is adoption. While the person must in faith, feeling, and purposes be prepared for entering into the family of God, he must by formal act be adopted into the family before he can enjoy the privileges and possessions of the family.

A child might be fond of the family, love the members, enjoy the associations, and in turn be loved by the family, yet without compliance with the laws of adoption could never enjoy the privilege or inherit the possessions of a family. There have been examples of children being taken into the association of a family of wealth, and trained to enjoy its luxuries and expect its favors, yet when the head of the family dies, because of failure to comply with the legal forms of adoption this child could not inherit, so was left helpless. It were better such had never known the luxuries of wealth than, after it has learned to enjoy them, to be cut off from them and be forced to a state of want and poverty for which it was unfitted by the life of luxury led for a time.

When the person has been fitted in heart and life, by faith and repentance toward God, for the enjoyment of the privileges of the family of God, he is then by a burial out of his old family relations and a resurrection in the new ones adopted into the family of God. Baptism is the act of adoption by which we pass out of one family and are brought into the new one with God as our Father, Jesus as our elder brother, and by which we acquire the right to the blessings and favors of the family of God. After we have been legally adopted into the family of God we must, by a cultivation of the associations of the family, attending its family gatherings, engaging in its life and callings, drink more and more into the Spirit of the family, that we may not lose our fitness for its privileges and forfeit our rights to its inheritance. A woman may have her feelings and desires for a marriage all aroused, and if the marriage is not legalized, her love and affections render her the more miserable, and her condition is the more pitiable. The adoption, like the marriage, does not help us unless it is legally perfected. D. L.

Idle Foot was Tired.

A lady was watching a potter at his work, whose one foot was kept with "never-slackening" speed, turning his swift wheel round, while the other rested patiently on the ground. When the lady said to him in a sympathetic tone, "How tired your foot must be!" the man raised his eyes and said: "No, ma'am; it isn't the foot that works that is tired; it is the foot that stands! That's it."

If you want to keep your strength, use it. If you want to get tired, do nothing. As a matter of fact, we all know that the last man to go to for a helping hand for any new undertaking is the man who has plenty of time on his hands. It is the man and woman who are doing most who are always willing to do a little more.—Youth's Southland.

I am in my seventy-third year, and for fifty years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion, constipation, and biliousness. I have tried all the remedies advertised for these diseases, and got no permanent relief. About one year ago, the disease assuming a more severe and dangerous form, I became very weak, and lost flesh rapidly. I commenced using Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir. I gained twelve pounds in three months. My strength and health, my appetite, and my digestion were perfectly restored, and now I feel as young and vigorous as I ever did in my life.

A Funeral Sermon.

Death is no respecter of persons. He sends his shaft accurately to every heart. He never stops to ask: "Is this the palace of the king, or the cottage of the poor?" He sees no difference between the rich and the poor, between the wise and the simple. All are alike to him. He never heeds the piteous wail that comes welling up from bruised and bleeding souls at his approach. He has no mercy, and therefore he spares not. His mission is to steal the luster from the eye, the bloom from the cheek, the motion from the body, and the pulsation from the heart. This accomplished, he glides noiselessly out and goes in quest of another victim. Death is omnipresent. We cannot escape him. Like a Nemesis, he hounds our footsteps. A smile may play upon the face to-day, and to-morrow, perchance, death will chase it away. One moment laughter may break upon our lips, and the next they may be mute in death.

As we stand here in the presence of death, a thought that breaks the train of our perceptions is: We all live but to die. Like a flower that blooms, fills the air with its fragrance, and then dies, we pass upon the stage of action, inoculate the world with our influence, and then the light of life burns low, fluctuates, and goes out. Existence would be miserable—aye, a curse—were it true that death ends all. But death does not end all. The universality of belief in a future existence gives us an evidence weighty and irrefutable that we shall live after death. The idea of annihilation is repugnant to all souls. Did no repugnance grow out of this idea, we would reason that annihilation is the soul's destiny. Then why may we not reason, since the idea is repugnant, that annihilation is not its destiny?

To those living in the Lord there is no death. What seems so is nothing more than transition. That which we call death is but a suburb to the life elysian. 'Tis true the voice is silent—the utterance has ceased; 'tis true the eyes are glassy—the light has fled; 'tis true the body is cold and rigid—the movement has perished. But that which gave speech to the voice, luster to the eyes, and activity to the body, is not dead; it has passed by death untouched, unscathed, unharmed, and rests now in slumber in the sacred paradise of God.

Asleep in Jesus! Blessed sleep. From which none ever wake to weep; A calm and undisturbed repose, Unbroken by the last of foes.

Death does not result from chance. Like all evils, it follows the violation of some law governing the organisms of the body. Our bodies are composed of various organisms. These organisms are created to correspond with environment, and yet not all environments. There are some environments with which they cannot command correspondence. The result of their failure to do this is death. Let us reason from this that some time, somewhere, somehow, we will receive a body with organisms that shall be adapted to every environment, and death will no more ensue. Paul, in speaking of the soul, says that God shall give it a body as it shall please him. This is to be that body which disease cannot waste, which death cannot destroy. We would call this the body with perfect organisms adapted to every environment, and therefore its existence is without end. This is the body for which our sister has gone in search, and with which, because of her loyalty and devotion to his laws, God will clothe her.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Sister Mollie Walker, whose maiden name was Thompson, was born on December 10, 1859. At quite an early age, perchance in her sixteenth year, she accepted Christianity as from God. When she put on Christ she did not shun the sacred obligations which the holy relationship imposed upon her. She went into the divine vineyard, not as a sluggard, but as an earnest, faithful, conscientious worker. She was happiest when she could serve Christ the most. Sometimes beneath the clouds and sometimes in the sunshine she did her Master's work. Perchance she grew weary at times in her work of faith and labor of love (for what Christian soul is it that does not sometimes grow weary in the battle, and would not fain lie down to rest?), but she never murmured at the duties which came upon her for performance.

From her Savior she learned the lessons of patience and resignation, and, practicing these lessons in her life, she passed gradually into the likeness of the world's Redeemer. Her life was pleasant and beautiful. She had made it so by her deeds of love, which lifted the shadow of sorrow from many souls; by her words of kindness, which made life's pathway smoother to many feet; by her maternal care and interest for her children; by her fidelity and unselfish devotion to him who led her years ago to Hymen's altar; and, above all, by her sacrifices for the extension of God's kingdom and her unswerving devotion to his precepts. Such a life as this is indeed commendable, and you, her friends and relatives, have no words with which adequately to praise such a life. Think, then, what must be Heaven's laudation for this life. You cannot conceive it; you can only know that she is blessed.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." As her life was pleasant and beautiful, so her death was calm and serene. Like a cloudless day, she smiled upon the earth, then the night of death came, threw his shadows upon her peaceful face, then vanished; but—lo!—though death had touched there, peace and serenity still sat upon the countenance.

Yes, she has gone, and her departure has crushed your hearts. But do you know that by obedience to those laws which are born in Heaven's council chamber you can bridge the chasm which separates you from her, and in the sweet by and by cross over and join with her in singing the song of deliverance and of ascribing honor and praise to the Lamb?

Husband, children, I cannot gild the grief of your souls with words. In the presence of so deep a bereavement words seem hollow mockery. I may urge you to lift your crushed and saddened souls to God, whose blessing is as the balm of Gilead to heal. Put your hands within his, and he will lead you through the shadow of this immeasurable sorrow; then through the region of death; and at last to an unbroken association with wife and mother, who now waits for you on the golden strands beyond the river, where the surges cease to roll. You cannot call mother back from the echoless shore. She now sings the new song; she now wears the jeweled crown; but—O, sweet, sublime, seraphic thought!—you can go to her. Only a few more hours of pain, only a few more days of labor, and then you, too, may close your eyes upon the visions of earth and yourselves lie down in the great slumber hall of the dead, from which, by and by, you will open your eyes upon the glories of paradise, where mother, in seraphic loveliness, awaits you to welcome you to a home not made with hands. I perceive that you weep, but I know that you weep not as those who have no hope. The book of her life, which was forty years in completion, gives you many assurances that all is well.

Let us not wish her back. She rests in bliss with the angels of paradise. Let us live as nobly and as godly a life as did she, so that when the summons come for our ascension, we, as was she, will be ready to make the long and last journey.

A man to succeed in anything must be firm and persevering. He must form his purpose, and then adhere to it with tenacity. Of course, before a man engages in anything he should endeavor to ascertain if it is proper and practicable; and if he finds that it is, and he determines to engage in it, he should stick to it with the greatest persistence. He must not become discouraged and relax his efforts if he would succeed. This is true in regard to worldly pursuits, and it is equally true in regard to religious interests. A man who would be a Christian, and who would perform the duties of a Christian, must be persistent in his efforts; as the apostle has it, he must be instant in season and out of season. He must continually be dominated by one purpose and aim, and his efforts to accomplish his purpose must never be relaxed. He that is faithful unto death shall receive the crown of life.—Methodist Recorder.

Total amount for the month, $138.25. Besides the above, the Twenty-fifth and Portland Street church of Christ here has made us several nice little donations in the way of family supplies, the price of which we do not know.

I have omitted any personal names, having come to the conclusion that probably some would prefer it so.

I express my gratitude to our Father for the fellowship of his children. In my visits among the churches I find I am expected to make appeals for collections. This is not my habit. I do not consider this the chief end of missionary work. In the language of Paul: "I seek not yours, but you." What the heathen world needs is not money, but men—consecrated, godly men, who seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Such men will receive as much as is good for them and for the work into which they enter.

When I am out of means it is not the fault of others, but my own. He who knows us better than we know ourselves always teaches me a lesson by such experience, Some of these lessons, it seems, cannot be learned in any other way.

Religious people generally, with some grand exceptions, have all gone a-begging. This is not the Lord's order. God's people should be taught to give because they love him, and not because they are begged to do so. The church at the beginning was not begged to give, but they gladly sold their possessions and gave freely. They did it gladly because they loved things above more than they loved things on earth.

Heathen countries are open for the gospel to-day as never before. I am daily praying the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into the harvest. J. M. M'CALEB.

Why Neglect the Jews?

For some time we have felt this to be a neglected field. The time seems to be ripe for their ingathering. They have much to begin with that many do not have. They believe in God; they are not idol worshipers; they are acquainted with the Old Testament Scriptures; they believe the prophecies, and only need to be shown from them that Jesus is the promised Messiah. The clipping below shows that some of them can be reached. Ought we not to invite them into our meetings and take a greater interest in them? J. M. M'CALEB.

"A LOST NEW TESTAMENT."

"Le Reveil d' Israel has published a singularly interesting story of a Jewish convert. A native of Russia, M. L. K., was early put in training for a rabbinical office, but his mind revolted against Talmudical puerilities and contradictions. Becoming a medical student, he made the acquaintance of revolutionists, and, conceiving a contempt for Christianity—which he knew only in a perverted form—he declared himself a Nihilist and an atheist. After being under police surveillance for two years, he fled to Geneva, and while engaged upon an anarchical newspaper, he determined, in order to attack Christianity, to secure a copy of the New Testament, of which he knew nothing whatever.

"Crossing a public garden one day, he picked up a small book, which was the very volume he required. The coincidence set him thinking, and a study of the book opened his eyes. After reading Matt. 5: 25, 26, he concluded that Jesus was a philosopher. A closer acquaintance in the light of the Old Testament convinced him that the Messiah of ancient promise had indeed come. Two years later the young man was baptized at Cologne, rejoicing in the knowledge of God through Jesus Christ.

"The unknown Christian who left the New Testament on the bench in the public garden was an instrument in God's hands of opening the eyes of the blind child of Abraham."

Field Gleanings.

I have recently had a letter from Brother Neff, of Donelton, Tex., saying that the church of Christ there has decided to hold two or three meetings in destitute fields. Good! No one doubts the scripturalness of such work, and the church that so labors will let its light shine. I would be glad to hear from other churches that will do such work. Donelton church of Christ has engaged in such work before, and has sent "once and again" to Brother Officer and others in the mission field. May the Lord bless them in this work.

My brother in the flesh, P. D. Lawson, has moved to Texas and located at Denton. He desires to spend his time preaching the gospel, and can be had for protracted meeting work or regular preaching. He is young in the work, but the brethren say he can preach the gospel in a plain, simple way, so as to be well understood by all. If any congregation desires a meeting in the spring or early summer and can use him, please write him at once at Denton, Tex. I am anxious to get him well in the work, for I have reasons to believe that he will be a power for good if properly encouraged.

Brother T. W. Phillips, of Grapevine, Tex., can be secured for a meeting the last of April.

Brother A. D. Rogers, of Waco, Tex., writes me that he is devoting all his time to Waco, Rosenthal, White Rock, and Patton. He has been preaching at Waco and Rosenthal for the last six years. He will hold meetings at Rosenthal, White Rock, and Patton.

Brother E. H. Rogers recently held a meeting at Savoy, Tex.

I am booked for a month's meeting with my home congregation, beginning on the fourth Lord's day in April.

Arrangements have been made by which Brother T. B. Larimore will spend 1901 in Texas.

I have recently received a number of orders for my little tract, "Which Church Should I Join?" I brought this little tract out for free distribution in my protracted meeting work, but can furnish them to any one at twenty-five cents for three dozen.

Brother Joseph S. Brown, of Exchange, Mo., is to visit Texas in the near future.

Will the preachers of Texas please send me postal card reports of their work?

Protracted meeting work will soon begin in Texas, and what will the harvest be?

Why not hold a meeting in some destitute field?

May God's blessing attend all the faithful in Christ Jesus. Denton, Tex. J. H. LAWSON.

A Few Days Brew of Deadly Uric Acid.

In a few days you may brew enough uric acid in your body to produce death.

Your kidneys are your only salvation.

Because when they are well, they filter out this deadly poison.

So, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

Uric acid poison irritates the nerves, and causes rheumatic pains in joints, muscles, and limbs, catarrh of the bladder, headache, back ache, stomach and liver trouble, shortness of breath, heart trouble, dizziness, nervousness, irritability, lassitude, loss of ambition, weakness, and wasting away.

Red brick dust and similar sediments in the urine are also caused by various salts of uric acid.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy.

It instantly relieves the congested, overworked kidneys, and gradually brings them back to health.

Healthy kidneys keep down the excess of uric acid, and you soon feel the benefit in new health and strength.

"The Conversion of the Maoris." By Donald MacDougall, B.D. Pages, 216; price, $1.25. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia.

In this volume Mr. MacDougall treats of two very interesting races. He gives an interesting account of the early history of the Maoris, the native inhabitants of New Zealand; he deals with their heathenism and how it was overcome. The missionary in New Zealand has ever been recognized as a powerful factor, and our author emphasizes the personal factor in mission work. The second part of the book is devoted to a similar account of work among the Samoans. The book is nicely printed on good paper, well bound, and contains nine beautiful pictures.

"Search Lights on Christian Science—a Symposium." Pages, 126; price, paper, twenty-five cents. Fleming H. Revell Company.

This book contains a series of articles, recently published in the Chicago Standard, by a number of competent and thoughtful writers. It contains "The History of Christian Science," by J. R. Slater; "The Theology of Christian Science," by H. P. Beach; "The Philosophy of Christian Science," by W. H. P. Faunce; "The Inherent Difficulties and Absurdities of Christian Science," by J. W. Conley; "Explanation of the Growth of Christian Science," by Franklin Johnson; and "The Future of Christian Science," by B. A. Greene. The book is interesting and helpful, and deserves a hearty reception.

"The True Estimate of Life." By G. Campbell Morgan. Pages, 127; price, thirty cents. Fleming H. Revell Company.

The contents of this book were first given in lectures, at Northfield, Mass. The topics discussed are: "Paul's Estimate of Life," "Wilt Thou Be Made Whole?" "Health of Soul," "The Cleansing of Naaman," "Clay in the Potter's Hands," "The Divine Government of Human Lives," "Redeeming the Time," "Gathering or Scattering," and "Lessons from the Life of Lot."

Virginia Jottings.

Well, after so long a time, I find that it is among the possibilities for me to write a few "Jottings." On account of having to be a shepherd of sheep and a nurse for the sick, as well as having to attend to a great deal of other business, no time has been found for "Virginia Jottings." In former years, when younger, even the midnight oil was sometimes burned in order that the writing might be kept up, but duty to self forbids that now; although health is good enough, three-score years testify against that course. Then, too, there are so many "ready writers" that manuscript is frequently delayed some time before it appears.

Sam. P. Jones has been in these parts and given three lectures—one at Eastford, one at Christiansburg (both of Montgomery County), and one at Pulaski City, Pulaski County. From what I hear of him he fired away in his usual style. It seems that he displeased some very much, but he got the money all the same—about one hundred and twenty dollars at each place—for himself and company. However, he made some happy hits against immorality, and left some admirers. One sad feature is that some of his admirers, whom he struck heavy blows, make no reformation, but go on about as they did before.

In the congregation at Laurel Hill, Montgomery County, Va., on the first Lord's day in March, where the writer preached, was a Presbyterian preacher. The subject was "The Evidences of Christianity." After preaching, liberty was given to any one that might wish to say what he might desire. Said preacher, thinking no doubt that a very important internal evidence had been overlooked by the speaker, arose, and spent a few minutes in dwelling upon the approving conscience and consequent good feelings as the one great evidence which proved the whole thing to be true. Reply was made in substance as follows: Conscience approved what one believed to be right and disapproved what was believed to be wrong. The woman who casts her babe into the water to be devoured by the crocodile has an approving conscience; the wife who burns herself upon the funeral pile of her husband has the same; any one that has any form of religion and lives up to what is believed to be right has an approving conscience; Saul certainly had a good conscience when he persecuted the Christians, for he said so; yet he styled himself on account of doing it, "the chief of sinners." The only safe course is to believe the truth as it is, let conscience approve, and then be happy in doing that which is surely believed and approved.

I always did believe a man ought to practice what he preaches and preach as he practices. On the fourth Sunday in February I had an appointment to preach at Bethany, Montgomery County. It was a very cold, snowy day. The ground was covered with snow and ice, and a very strong, cold wind was blowing. It was about ten miles distant. When I arrived at the meetinghouse one man, Brother W. R. Shelburne, and his dog, were there. The dog, however, was on the outside and the master on the inside, like it ought to be—that is, if the dogs go at all. The brother told the writer that about all of the church were sick. We waited awhile, and warmed, and nobody else came; then we sung, read some of the scriptures, prayed, and I talked from the scrip-

I have always preached that thus it should be, and am glad that I had the opportunity of doing what I preach—viz., that if no more than two or three can come together and break bread it should be done. One very good brother was astonished when he asked me afterwards if I went and an affirmative answer was given.

I will say to parties sending for the tract, "The Relation of Christians to Civil Governments and War," that as it costs one cent to mail one, and only one cent to mail two, I have put the price for single tract at six cents and two at ten cents; one dozen, as before, at fifty cents. CORNISH & CO., WASHINGTON, N. J. ESTABLISHED 50 YEARS

Kansas Notes.

Brother J. E. Cain was recently in a meeting at Superior. The weather was very unfavorable for a meeting. It is a mission point, supported by congregations in the county. Many of our congregations could do more work of that kind. Much needs to be done.

Brother I. D. Moffitt is in a meeting in Ness County. I had the pleasure of a short ride with him on the train a few days ago. He is a busy man in the field.

Brother B. F. Rhodes is now in Stafford County, and at last reports was just beginning the work there. He is engaged for meetings for two months yet.

Brother O. M. Thomason is now in Oklahoma again, preaching the gospel. He will likely return to Kansas in a few weeks, and be ready for work in that part.

The relationship existing between preachers in their work, in the great harvest field, is a close one, and I am afraid is not always regarded as it should be. We ought to appreciate the fact of being collaborators in the great work before us. It requires strong faith and much courage for the work in many fields.

Brother J. R. Graham, an earnest, faithful preacher of Southern Kansas, is now having to take a vacation on account of bad health. May he soon be restored to such strength as will enable him to be in the field again.

The brethren at Cleardale will soon have a new house ready to occupy. It will be much more convenient than the schoolhouse, in which they have been meeting for several years.

The congregation at Trenton, Kingman County, are also preparing to build. The house they now use is much too small to accommodate the people who attend.

I filled my appointment at Minco last Saturday and Lord's day. The audiences were good. There were more than the house could accommodate on Lord's day night.

I am now near Waukomis, O. T., at White Schoolhouse, for a week. I came here at the request of Sister Sadie Hurst to preach the gospel to a people who have heard very little of it. I only hope to sow some seed and pass on; the harvest may come by and by.

The misfortunes of people oftentimes appeal to our sympathies, and sometimes we can help; at other times we cannot.

Misfortunes call to mind the troubles of Brother J. M. Taylor's family, near Belle Plaine. Six belonging to that family have been called away within a few years. The last to go was a son, who lost his wife a few years ago, and had three little children left. Thomas W. Taylor, the son referred to, passed away in last month. He has been battling with the dread disease, consumption, for some time. He obeyed the gospel several years ago; he often talked of preaching the gospel, but circumstances were such that he could not prepare himself for the work; he passed away, leaving assurance with his friends that he has entered into the saints' eternal rest. May Heaven's rich blessings be with the sorely bereaved family. May they be faithful to the Master, so that when their troubles are over here they will be over forever.

God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform.

This is often quoted in reference to our misfortunes here. I think we many times make a misapplication and charge much to the Lord that he does not directly perform.

Life is before us full of duties. Many possibilities are before us: Our lives ought to be pure and noble, our aims high and exalted. We cannot set the standard too high. The opportunities for doing good are so great that we cannot fail to see them if we are watchful. Our mental and moral natures need continual improvement. There are many doubtful practices, many doubtful places, and many doubtful amusements to avoid. Think of the characters blighted, lives of usefulness destroyed and shipwrecked by yielding to a single temptation. One inadvertent step may drop us down never to rise. How careful we ought to be! The very appearance of evil should be shunned. The safety is in watching the beginning, or the appearance of evil; the danger lies in the things that appear small. If you find the poisonous reptile when small, that is the time to kill it. If you nurse it and cherish it, it will by and by destroy you. D. T. BROADUS. Waukomis, O. T.

This debate was held at Cottage Grove, Tenn., commencing on March 6, 1900, and continuing four days. It was well attended, and much interest was manifested in it among the people. It was conducted by A. P. Johnson (Christian) and T. F. Moore (Baptist). It was Brother Johnson's first regularly organized debate; Brother Moore is an old, experienced debater. The propositions were: "(1) The Scriptures teach that the New Testament church was set up during personal ministry of Jesus Christ;" T. F. Moore affirms. "(2) The Scriptures teach that to a believing penitent baptism is one of the conditions of the pardon of past sins;" A. P. Johnson affirms.

Brother Moore is the fairest debater I ever heard among the Baptists; hence, he is a pleasant and easy man

A Happy Mother

Frolicking with her baby makes one of the prettiest spectacles ever seen in the home. But nothing is sadder to see than the unhappy mother, weak and nervous, striving in vain to hush the cries of her weak and nervous babe. There can be no happiness for either mother or child without health. Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription "has done wonders" for many a woman, by restoring her health and opening for her the way to happy motherhood. This really wonderful medicine is not a cure-all. It is a preparation specially designed to cure diseases peculiar to women. It dries debilitating drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, cures female weakness, and removes the causes which generally make women nervous and sleepless.

There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription" and it contains no opium, cocaine or other narcotic.

Mrs. James W. Blacker, of 629 Catherine Street, Syracuse, N. Y., writes: "Your medicines have done wonders for me. For years my health was very poor; I had four miscarriages, but since taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' I have much better health, and now I have a fine healthy baby."

Use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets with "Favorite Prescription" if the bowels are inactive or irregular.

to debate with. He is also a man of ability, but he utterly failed to prove his proposition, just because there was no scripture to support it.

Brother Johnson showed that if the church was set up during personal ministry of Christ, then it was without the shed blood of Christ; without the gift of the Holy Spirit, as promised by Christ to his disciples; without a crucified and risen Savior; without a tried foundation stone; and without a head (Christ). Hence it was a dead, spiritless, and lifeless church. These objections Brother Moore could not meet or set aside, so his proposition was lost; for Brother Johnson forced him to admit that the church could not exist now without these characteristics. Brother Johnson then took the lead on the second proposition, and, to the satisfaction of the Christian brethren, fully sustained the affirmative of it. The usual arguments, pro and con, were made on it. Brother Johnson is a good debater for a boy. He is full of points and arguments, and makes them clear and presents them forcibly, and is always ready for his adversary.

There were six Christian preachers and five Baptist preachers present during the debate. W. T. Boaz moderated for Brother Johnson; Fleetwood Ball moderated for Brother Moore. It closed pleasantly, good feeling prevailing. It is believed and hoped that good will result from it.

"A Contented Mind is a Continual Feast."

A contented mind cannot exist, however, with a diseased body. But what is disease? Just what the word indicates—dis-ease, the opposite of ease and contentment. The troubled condition may be in the stomach, the liver, the nerves, the skin, or some other organ; or it may be more general and include the whole body, as in the case of anæmia and that tired feeling.

It is a mistake to regard the disease as the object of medical treatment. The true way is to remove that which causes it. This is the secret of the remarkably prompt and permanent cures effected by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Impure and deficient blood is the fundamental cause of the disease that comes from rheumatism, dyspepsia, catarrh, scrofula, salt rheum, nervousness, and a host of other ailments. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood pure and rich, tones and strengthens the stomach, quiets the nerves, and the dis-ease is gone, for the reason that the cause of it no longer exists.

How Many Isaiahs?

"O, that mine adversary had written a book!" The statement is made that there were at least two Isaiahs. Some go further, and insist on a goodly company of prophetic men whose words got into the book called by that name. It has been difficult to have them assign reasons for the position. It seems not to have occurred to them that their bare statement is not sufficient. The many opportunities for fair investigation have been refused. It is possible the refusal is because there are no men who favor the unity of authorship in the book worthy of their time and attention.

For the want of authorized statement on their part, I have to do the best I can, under the circumstances, in gathering up, from different sources, what I suppose to be their strongest arguments.

The first writer I have been able to find who denied that the last twenty-seven chapters were a part of the original Isaiah, and must, therefore, have been given by some one else, was Koppe, in 1779; the same position was taken by Döderlein in 1789. Then we have Paulus, in 1793; Bertholdt, in 1812; DeWette, in 1817; Eichhorn, in 1816-1819; Gesenius, in 1820; Hitzig, in 1833; Knobel, in 1838; Umbriet and Ewald, in 1841. These are great names, and those who settle questions by quoting names are confirmed in the faith of unbelief by a single glance at the bright array. Nor should it be forgotten that these Hebrew scholars are supported by Jahn, Moller, Kleinert, Hengstenberg, Stier, Keil, and Havenrick. Indeed, it is proper to remember that nearly all German authors for a hundred years have held that all after chapter 39 was from another author or other authors than the Isaiah of Isa. 1: 1. But when we remember that those who oppose their view are to be counted by the thousands, we may be emboldened to ask for the reasons for refusing the last part of the book. Indeed, we have been quite too ready to accept the ipse dixit of German critics without examination. I feel safe in saying that they are not more learned and candid than those who differ from them. Still, if all were on that side instead of one out of one hundred of the real scholars of the last century, it would be our right to demand the reasons, and show, if we can, that they are not well founded.

1. The prophecies of Isaiah related to Israel and Judah, while there are many concerning other peoples.

2. He lived only until the middle of the reign of Hezekiah, and could not have recorded the death of Sennacherib, who was killed some time in the early reign of Manasseh; and yet the book records his death.

3. The language and style of the book change greatly.

4. He would not have been transported to Babylon many years before the city existed, and one hundred and seventy years before it was destroyed, for the purpose of giving assurance to Israel concerning their safety.

5. He names Cyrus one hundred and seventy years beforehand, and it is not reasonable that he should have done so.

6. In the latter part of the book he uses the past tense, which indicates that the writer lived after the events occurred.

7. In Part I. he gives the comforts to Israel; in Part II. he gives the woes. This indicates that another Isaiah is at the helm, who has a different feeling toward them.

Some of these might have been divided, but they are not worth it. Besides, we can give all under the headings already presented. And now, while we regard these reasons as utterly unreasonable, it is for us to deal with them in candor; hence, with respect for those who hold them.

1. The burdens of Babylon, Philistia, Moab, Damascus, Ethiopia, Egypt, Edom, Assyria, Arabia, Samaria, Tyre, etc., were because these countries were related to Israel and Judah in some way, either as friends or foes; and one could not have seen all that concerned Israel without having in mind the fortunes of these places and peoples.

2. As to Isaiah only living to the middle of the reign of Hezekiah, it will not be insisted upon by any one well informed in the Scriptures. At the close of the life of that good king, it was said: "Now the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and his good deeds, behold, they are written in the vision of Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel." (2 Chron. 32: 32, R. V.) It is certain, from this statement, that Isaiah lived until the close of the life of Hezekiah, and there is no reason to suppose that he died before the death of Sennacherib.

3. The language and style of the book change greatly. This might be true, and still not indicate a change of writers. A man with the versatility of Isaiah would change the form of speech according to the change of subject. If he prophesied during a period of sixty years, even his phraseology might pass through quite a change. This is simply a demurrer. Admitting all they claim in the case, there is nothing in it. But the facts are not as they have stated. Really, there is more similarity in the forms of expression in Isaiah than in any other book, ancient or modern, written by one man during so long a period. This will appear later, when we come to opposing views.

4. Would Isaiah have been transported to Babylon one hundred and seventy years in advance of the time when the vision was given in order to make known a coming event? It is argued that if he had intended to give to the Jews the destruction of Babylon, and assure them that the assailants would not injure them at the time, he would have done so from the standpoint or view point of Jerusalem, and not Babylon. Of course, no one who believes that he did foretell future events at all would deny that the Spirit might choose that method of revelation. Hence they can only say that, in their opinion, it was not the best method of revealing an event. But in this they are mistaken. Judah, having these prophecies, would by them see at the time of their fear just what was foretold, and in the prophet they would find that event foretold, and would feel safe; but if it had been foretold from a Judaic view point, the picture would not, and could not, have been given. Hence there was divine wisdom in giving this knowledge in the way we find it in the language of the man of God.

5. He mentions Cyrus by name. Well, what of it? Josiah had been mentioned centuries before he came, why should not Cyrus be mentioned? He was not only mentioned as destroying Babylon, but as returning Judah to their home. According to Josephus, he learned from Isaiah that it was his place to help them back to their former home. He certainly had what he regarded sufficient evidence to believe that that prophecy was from a man a century and a half before the hour that he came into the control of Babylon. The treasures of Persia would not have been emptied at the suggestion of a man living at that time, for Cyrus would have said he got his inspiration from his national interest.

6. In the latter part of the book, the past tense is used instead of the future, as he would have done if he had spoken of these things in advance of their occurring. This is a feeble objection, and indicates that the critic knows nothing of the principles of exegesis. If we turn back to the beginning, we notice that this book is made of visions seen by the prophet. The vision is seen before there is any writing about it, hence the past tense. A large part of the Messianic prophecies are in that form. The prophet saw the events in vision, and then tells what he had seen. He saw him maltreated, and said: "His visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men." (Isa. 52: 14.) "He grew up before him as a tender plant; . . . he was despised, and rejected of men; . . . he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted." Go on and read through chapter 53 and very many of the Messianic prophecies, and they use the past tense for the reason I have stated. This is the form of John on the Isle of Patmos: "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; . . . the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them." Did John wait until after the general resurrection before he told that? All this indicates that the critic is in the past tense.

7. In Part I. we have the comforts given to Israel, and in Part II. we have the woes. This might be, and not in any way indicate a change of writers. Of course, if one does not believe in prophetic knowledge, but regards the whole as the thoughts and convictions and guesses of a man, it would be something of an argument. But to one who believes that the contents of the book are real revelations from God, there would be nothing in it to indicate a change of authors. But one of the strangest things to me is how any one got that into his head. It is not true. There are many comforting things said in Part II., as they call it, and there are many denunciations in Part I. Most of the Messianic prophecies are in Part II., and these are full of encouragement and comfort. The fact that he was to pass through death was not a woe to the people, it was for their healing. By his knowledge he should justify many, and though he should pour out his soul unto death, yet he would spoil the enemy, and bring to them captivity itself bound in chains.—D. R. Dungan, in Christian Standard.

Strange New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.—Free.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by uric acid in the blood, or disorder of the kidneys or urinary organs. It is now stated that Alkavis is a product of the well-known Kava-Kava shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases just as quinine is a cure for malaria. Hon. R. C. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks Alkavis cured him of rheumatism and kidney and bladder disease of ten years' standing, and Rev. Thomas M. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. The only importers of Alkavis so far are the Church Kidney Cure Company, of No. 400 Fourth avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the Gospel Advocate who is a sufferer from any form of kidney or bladder disorder, Bright's disease, rheumatism, dropsy, gravel, pain in back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the kidneys or urinary organs. We advise all sufferers to send their names and addresses to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative power.

We would be glad for every subscriber to the paper to send us at least one new subscriber.

Some More Incidents.

I suppose almost every congregation has its "big-meeting" members. These usually start in cold, but as the meeting progresses the temperature rises, and before the close of the meeting fever heat is reached. I used to get out of patience with such members, but I do not so much now.

Brother Smith Bowlin, of blessed memory, once baptized a habitual drunkard. He stayed sober some two weeks, and then fell into his old habits. Some one twitted Brother Bowlin with this, and charged the failure to his religion. Brother Bowlin replied that a religion that would keep a drinking man sober for two weeks was better than none.

So I have got to conclude about these "big-meeting" Christians. They had better be hot annually than not at all. One of this sort was attending a meeting held by G. W. Elly. As he got warmed up, he gradually moved toward the front, and finally was on a front bench in the "amen corner." Standing with the congregation as they sung as an invitation hymn, "In All My Lord's Appointed Ways," loudly he sung:

"Through floods and flames, if Jesus leads, I'll follow where he goes."

"Brother," said the old preacher, "you know that is not so; you would not follow him through a light shower, to say nothing about 'floods and flames.'"

Most preachers desire to have additions. This, I take it, is a laudable desire. On one occasion Brother "Billy" Dixon and myself were holding a meeting together. Not a great many outsiders were attending, but among this number was an old man who lived some distance from the place of meeting. He was only attending in day-time.

One day we had gone out some distance for dinner. On our way to the night service we talked over the prospect for more additions, both agreeing that unless this old man came in there would be no more. We reached the church early and found the old man already there. As soon as Brother Dixon saw him he said: "We are sure to get him to-night; he would not have come this far at night if he had not been interested." It was Brother Dixon's time to preach. As an old Baptist brother used to say, he had "good liberty" and preached with much force. The old man seemed to be deeply interested, and when Brother Dixon was well on in a warm exhortation, he arose from his seat, half-way down the aisle, and came forward, as we both thought, to make confession; but on getting close to Brother Dixon, he flanked around and went to the water bucket and took a hearty drink. I told Brother Dixon we would have to give him up, as he was not thirsting for the right thing. We saw him no more after that night. I have sometimes thought I would rather undertake to win to the truth a bitter opponent, if he is a person of convictions, than an easy-going, indifferent person.

In 1869, A. D. Fillmore, the sweet singer, of Ohio, was drilling the congregation at Flat Creek, Tenn., in vocal music. Brother T. J. Shaw was present a day or two. He told Brother Fillmore about taking the confession of a woman the Sunday before whose husband threatened his life if he baptized her, and asked what he would have done. Brother Fillmore said: "I would have baptized her, and then I would baptize the husband also." Sure enough, at Brother Shaw's next monthly appointment at that place he did baptize him.

I knew a man who had been living with a good wife for fifteen or twenty years, who gathered up his clothes and left her for no other reason than that she, as he expressed it, had joined the "Campbellites." He traveled on in an aimless way for a mile or more, when he asked himself the question: "What am I doing? I am leaving my wife. For what? Because she did what she believes is right, and something I do not know anything about, for I have never heard one of those people preach. I am acting the fool. I will go back and hear for myself, and then I will decide what I will do." Go back he did, and a meeting coming on near two weeks afterwards, he went, heard, and obeyed.

These sounds penetrated through a white floor of cloud which hid the earth from sight. In the perfect silence of the air around the balloon they were startled by what seemed stealthy footsteps close at hand. Investigation showed that this sound was caused by the stretching of the ropes and the yielding of the silk as the balloon continued to expand.

Writing editorially in the American Baptist Flag about a recent debate at Alexandria, Tenn., between F. B. Srygley and J. H. Whitlock, Brother J. N. Hall says:

"Elder Srygley seems to be a man of some forty or more years. He is regarded by Campbellites as a sort of ready-wit champion in that section of country, but he is not really a fair representative of Campbellism. He is very coarse, disrespectful to his opponent and to his audience, and very unfair in his attempts to ridicule and belittle his antagonist; he seeks to reduce everything to the level of a low grade of wit, and appears to be happiest when he can provoke laughter by some contemptible insinuation on some one; he seems to think brusqueness is bravery, and that a low-grade witticism is wisdom. The presiding moderator had to interfere in a most emphatic way to stop his insinuations upon persons in the audience, who had nothing at all to do with the debate."

If this fairly represents F. B. Srygley, I have no words of apology, excuse, or defense for such conduct, and I hope he will profit by Brother Hall's criticisms. It is but simple justice and fairness, however, to publish his statement concerning the matter and leave the readers who were present at the debate to decide the question of veracity between him and Brother Hall:

"Donelson, Tenn., March 21, 1900.—I have read what Brother Hall says about me in the American Baptist Flag in the debate at Alexandria, Tenn. The moderators interfered but one time during the debate and that was to stop interruptions from Brother J. H. Grimes, a Baptist preacher in the audience, so that I might proceed with my argument. The interruptions from Brother Grimes came about in this way: Whitlock affirmed, and I denied, that 'the Holy Spirit in conviction and conversion operates independently of the written or preached word.' During the debate Whitlock asked all the Baptists present who indorsed him to stand up. After that vote was taken, I asked all the Baptists present who indorsed the position of Brother Whitlock on the operation of the Spirit to stand up. Brother Grimes stood up, and

I told him he could not vote on that proposition because he surrendered on that point in the Elam-Ogile debate in July, 1885, as follows:

"The two disputants and the undersigned agree to the following, and dismiss the debate:

"The Holy Spirit operates through the truth only.

"The Holy Spirit and the word of God are different.

"Signed: E. A. Elam, F. B. Srygley, T. E. Tatum, J. K. Walling, A. Alsop, disciples.

"J. T. Oakley, M. A. Cathcart, J. H. Grimes, Baptists."

"July 8, 1885.—I know that the above agreement is true, and that the two disputants came together and joined hands upon the agreement. All of which occurred in my presence.

"A. C. TATUM, President Moderator."

"This put him in the attitude of voting on opposite sides of the same question, which, of course, greatly confused Brother Grimes, 'who had nothing at all to do with the debate,' and produced considerable 'laughter' in the audience at his expense, for which I was not to blame. There was no 'contemptible insinuation' or any other kind of insinuation about it. It was simply a clear case of Grimes against Grimes, and it does not relieve the situation any to abuse F. B. Srygley. In trying to extricate himself from the embarrassing position he was in, Brother Grimes continued to interrupt me until the presiding moderator ruled that it was out of order for me to give the matter any further attention, requested Brother Grimes not to interrupt me any more, and asked me to proceed with my argument, which I did.

"F. B. SRYGLEY."

This springs a question of veracity between J. N. Hall and F. B. Srygley, in which Srygley backs his statement by documentary evidence against Hall's assertion without proof. As I have published Hall's statement, he ought, as a matter of fairness and justice, to publish Srygley's statement and proof; but it is not probable that he will do it. It has not been long since A. Malone, Baptist preacher and debater, charged that in discussion J. N. Hall suppressed a letter written by request for publication, made statements about it that are not true, and represented Malone as taking a position which Malone says he did not take and does not believe. If Brother Hall thus misrepresented one of his Baptist brethren, it is hardly probable that he will correctly represent F. B. Srygley. Brother J. H. Grimes writes in the American Baptist Flag about the Srygley-Whitlock debate as follows: "His [Whitlock's] arguments on the operation of the Spirit were simply unanswerable, and his opponent, with all his known egotism, showed his defeat." Brother Grimes is a Missionary Baptist; Brother Whitlock is a Separate Baptist. On "the operation of the Spirit," Grimes signed the statement, on July 8, 1885, that "the Holy Spirit operates through the truth only." Other Missionary Baptist preachers present joined him in signing that agreement, and claimed that it is Missionary Baptist doctrine. Brother John T. Oakley, a Missionary Baptist preacher and debater, held two debates immediately before the Srygley-Whitlock debate at Alexandria—one with Brother Pullias at Henderson's Cross Roads, and the other with Brother Bird, at Smithville, Tenn. In both of these debates Oakley read as part of his argument the agreement signed by himself, Brother Grimes, and others, on July 8, 1885, and claimed that it is Missionary Baptist doctrine. Brother Hall was present at the Smithville debate and Brother Grimes was Oakley's moderator at Henderson's Cross Roads. Neither offered any protest when Oakley read the agreement and claimed that it is Missionary Baptist doctrine. During the Smithville debate the Srygley-Whitlock debate was announced at Alexandria and the audience was requested to attend that debate and hear Whitlock argue that the Holy Spirit operates independently of the written or preached word in the face of the agreement Oakley had read as Missionary Baptist doctrine. Brother Hall eulogized Oakley as a debater in his editorial account of the debate in the American Baptist Flag, without a word of dissent or protest to the agreement signed by Oakley, Grimes, and others, on July 8, 1885, and read by Oakley in debate as Missionary Baptist doctrine, that "the Spirit operates through the truth only." Whitlock's "arguments on the operation of the Spirit," which Brother Grimes says "were perfectly unanswerable," squarely antagonize this agreement and affirm that "the Holy Spirit operates independently of the written or preached word." A. Malone, a Missionary Baptist preacher and debater of good standing and recognized ability among Baptists, in a letter to F. B. Srygley, written since the Alexandria debate, expresses regret that his Missionary Baptist brethren at Willette, Tenn., have gone off after Whitlock on "the operation of the Spirit." Malone still stands on what he considers Missionary Baptist ground as defined by Brother Grimes and others in the Ogile-Elam debate, and he is no doubt ready to affirm in debate that "the Spirit operates through the truth only." In a letter to W. J. Barton, Lynn, Ala., written from Franklin, Ky., March 15, 1900, A. Malone says: "I regard it as provident and exceedingly unfortunate that men whose caliber is but 2x4 should pose as representative Baptists. . . . The great lights among the Baptists hold that . . . it is the work of the gospel, through which the Spirit operates in conversation, to enlighten the sinner. This I know to be true." As Brother Grimes is something of a debater himself, perhaps he will meet Brother Malone on this proposition and give him Whitlock's "unanswerable arguments," which caused Grimes to "go off after Whitlock" with "men whose caliber is but 2x4." Brother J. N. Hall was present at the Alexandria debate when the vote was taken, but he did not stand up with Brother Grimes and others to indorse the position of Whitlock in that debate on the operation of the Spirit. I am advised that Brother Hall stands with Oakley, Malone, and others on the agreement which Grimes signed, but now repudiates that "the Spirit operates through the truth only." If he is not correctly represented to me, I will be glad to publish any statement he wishes to make as to what position he takes in this issue between Baptist preachers and debaters. One other matter: Writing about the Alexandria debate, Brother Grimes says: "One of the leading Campbellites said to this scribe at the close of the debate that Whitlock had Srygley down, and that mighty bad." Brother Hall says: "Some of his [Srygley's] own people frankly conceded the fact that Brother Whitlock was more than enough for him in the matter of argument." Will Brother Grimes and Brother Hall please give the names of the persons who made these statements? If not, why not?

"Norman, O. T., March 14, 1900.—Brother Srygley: In reply to Brother Turk you say God permits many things in our homes he does not permit in worship. So far, so good. (1) Can we sing sacred songs other than in worship except by sinning? (2) When we sing songs containing God's name and words of praise just for pleasure or pastime, do we not sin, or bring the name of God in vain? (3) When we sing songs for pastime which we sing in worship, do we not thereby prostitute them and sin thereby? These questions are not asked with a view for argument in favor of organs, but for truth's sake.

"J. A. MINTON."

God has taught in the New Testament what Christians shall do and how they shall do it in the congregation, when they come together on the first day of the week to break bread and engage in other acts of public, religious work and worship. Those who oppose the use of instrumental music in these public assemblages contend that God has not authorized it by precept, approved precedent, or necessary inference. This is the issue between those who use instrumental music and those who oppose instrumental music in such assemblages. God has taught in the New Testament how Christians should live when not in these public assemblages. Brother Minton's questions all refer to what Christians should do or should not do when they are not in the public assembly. Whatever may be the scriptural answer to his questions, therefore, that answer cannot possibly have any bearing at all on how the public worship and service of God should be conducted on the first day of the week, when the disciples come together to break bread and engage in other acts of religious worship and service. With this distinction clearly drawn, I would say in answer to his questions: (1) One can sing sacred songs other than in worship without sinning. (2) and (3) If by "pleasure or pastime" he means a pleasant way of passing time in idleness and frivolity, it is contrary to the spirit and teaching of the New Testament to pass time that way in any manner. So far as I can see, it is neither better nor worse to pass time that way in singing sacred songs than to pass it that way in any other manner that is not morally debasing.

The following communication will be of interest to those who are studying the question of denominations and denominational organization:

"What is commonly called 'organized effort' among the Disciples is denominationalism. Admitting this proposition to be true, we fail to see any evil results. 'Denomination' means name. 'Denominate' means to name. Should a number of persons discover from God's revelation the true apostolic order of things and associate themselves together to carry out truly God's will, we would denominate such an association as the church of God in Christ. Would not such, therefore, be the true denomination, the true name, the true sect, the true party, the true association, or the true church of God in Christ in contradistinction to those who assumed unauthorized observances? We answer yes. Therefore we affirm that all who associate themselves together correctly for worship, and carry out God's will, must of necessity have a name and are, therefore, a denomination, unless, indeed, the true church is nameless. There is nothing wrong in a name, denomination, sect, party, or an association of professed Christians, unless they deviate in some way in the observance of God's will. If the professed Christian world were all united in harmony with God's will, and worshiping accordingly, such an association would be a denomination, known as the church of God in Christ, ordained of God to destroy the works of the devil. If this is not true, there is no reliance in English lexicographers. There cannot be anything wrong in a name, in a denomination, or in an association of Christians, unless they deviate in the name or in their observance of God's will. This we regard as the key to the situation. Luke says that 'the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch' (Acts 11: 26), and also that 'Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian,' and Paul in his reply acknowledged himself to be a Christian. (Acts 26: 28, 29.) Paul says: 'I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named.' (Eph. 3: 14, 15.) Peter says: 'If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf.' We see that it is wrong to adopt a name or denomination that God has not authorized, because such is divisive and obnoxious to Christian union. Are the American Bible Society, the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, the organized missionary societies, and the unorganized effort for missionary work, denominations? They each have a name peculiar to itself, and it is therefore a denomination more or less intent upon its mission. We must, in justice to the true followers of Christ, denominate them 'Christians,' 'disciples,' or 'saints,' or deny them any name. If we give them a name, we make a denomination, for nothing can exist in name without being a denomination. If there is no better argument to down the organized missionary societies than to prove that they have names and are therefore denominations, we are indeed hard pressed for proof to uproot organized effort.

Mo., Tenn. J. W. M'D. MOORE." The brother admits that "organized effort among the Disciples is denominational organization," but says that does not "down organized effort." Of course it does not "down" it with people who are in favor of denominations and denominational organization, but it hits the thing hard with those who believe all denominations and denominational organizations are unscriptural and wrong. He talks about a number of persons who "discover from God's revelation the true apostolic order of things." No man has discovered "the true apostolic order of things" who does not see anything wrong in denominations and denominational organizations. There are no denominations or denominational organizations in "the true apostolic order of things." The only way to restore "the true apostolic order of things" is to abandon and abolish all denominations and denominational organizations; be Christians, and nothing else; belong to the church, which is the body of Christ and of which every Christian is a member, and nothing else; preach and practice all the New Testament teaches, and nothing else. The brother talks about "the true denomination, the true name, the true sect, the true party, the true association, or the true church of God in Christ." According to the New Testament the true—all of these things—includes and consists of all Christians, and there is absolutely no organization in it but local congregations. Anything that does not include and consist of all Christians, anything that has in it any organization but local congregations, is not the true any of these things. It is an unscriptural and antiscriptural denomination, sect, party, association, or church. There is no scriptural name for it because it is not a scriptural thing. It is the plain duty of every Christian to get out of it; and the sooner, the better. No one but a partisan, a sectarian, a denominationalist will stay in it or defend it after he knows it is not a scriptural thing.

As God Sees Us.

Henry Hardshell: "Good morning, friend Faithful. We ought to rejoice in this day, but according to the sign we will have bad weather the next forty days, as this is ground hog day, and it is clear and the sun shines brightly."

Frank Faithful: "We must admit, Henry, it is bright and beautiful overhead, and this should suit those who are traveling in that direction. Unworthy as I am, I profess to be journeying that way, and I hoped you were, too, the last time we were together. So no matter what may be in store for us in the weather forecast, let us try to put in this bright day as a day's journey toward heaven and eternal life. How are you progressing in that direction?"

Henry H.: "Sometimes I try to think I am a child of God, and then I have my doubts; but these I am told are proof that I am one of the elect. This seems to me to be a strange kind of proof, but this is what I have been told. I hear those who profess to be of the elect say to each other that 'if you do not doubt for yourself, I will doubt for you.' So it goes. I have been much interested in searching the Scriptures of late, and if I remember correctly, you promised to show me some scriptures which would show God's estimate of man, and especially how God sees or looks upon the unregenerate sinner. I have lost much time in studying myself and mankind in general as John Calvin and others estimated man. While I know we are dead in trespasses and sins, as Paul taught the Ephesians, yet I am sure he never intended to teach by this that we cannot obey the Lord."

Frank F.: "I remember well the trend of our conversation and the ground we have gone over. The idea with us when we separated was to know how God sees us, knowing that our best friends are unable to do us justice, or may, on the other hand, place too high an estimate upon poor humanity."

Henry H.: "Yes; I now recall the whole subject and pray you to proceed along this line in searching with me the word of God, which I am beginning to believe is our only infallible means of instruction in righteousness. The Bible, you say, is the true light of heaven on man. We should study it, I do believe, although Pope says: 'The proper study of mankind is man.'"

Frank F.: "That is true, as Pope says, and that is what we propose to do, to study man; but the Bible is the true text-book on man. He who studies not man in the light of this book will never know very much about man. The reason is apparent. The Bible is the revelation which God, the Creator of man, has given to man, the chief of his creation. It reveals God to man and man to himself. To know what God says of man is to know man as he is. He is not too wicked nor too good in the estimate formed of him, but simply as he is, as we have before agreed. The Bible contains many witnesses of God bearing on this question. We will make it our pleasure just now to hear some of Christ's testimony. 'No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.' Christ's view of man must be the same as God's view. This must necessarily follow, from the intimacy which exists between the Father and the Son. 'The Father loveth the Son, and showed him all things that himself doeth.' The Father 'hath committed all judgment unto the Son: that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father.' He who saw Christ saw the Father. Jesus says: 'The Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.' Henry, do you remember the claims of Christ to the glory and divinity of God the Father?"

Henry H.: "Yes; and I am prepared to receive whatever he says as truth, whether it be of this world or the world above, whether it be of God or man. Whenever we see ourselves as Jesus sees us, we see ourselves as God sees us and as we are in deed and truth."

Frank F.: "Exactly so; and we are now prepared to consider some acts and words of Jesus which bear directly upon this question. Take Christ's Sermon on the Mount, for instance. Our Savior preached that sermon to great multitudes of people."

Henry H.: "Why, I thought it was spoken to his disciples only. Does it not plainly say that his disciples came unto him and he opened his mouth and taught them? We must find some place where he taught those not his disciples."

Frank F.: "True, Henry, he taught his disciples, as that verse shows, but at the same time he also taught the great multitudes who followed him 'from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan.' All this we learn from the close of Matt. 4, which is a part of the unbroken history of the event, and stands in immediate connection with it. Besides all this, it is clearly stated in the close of the sermon that he taught the people, or 'multitudes,' as the Revised Version reads. Much of the sermon was particularly adapted to his disciples as such, and was teaching which was important for both saint and sinner."

Henry H.: "That seems plain enough now, but I have heard preachers say that sermon was addressed to none but Christ's disciples."

Frank F.: "Preachers can be in error as easily as others, and just as inconsistent. In all probability, the preacher who said all that sermon was addressed to the disciples only, in his exhortation to the sinners, used much it contained. Since you see so plainly now it was addressed to both saints and sinners, allow me to cite your attention to what all this proves. The very fact that Christ preached to the people clearly implies they could do something, that they were not totally dead in sin, so as to be unable to think a good thought or do a good deed. It would have been worse than nonsense for Christ to have held out the idea to men they could avoid the wide gate and broad way to destruction when they could not avoid it. It would also have been cruel mockery to have exhorted them 'to enter in at the strait gate and travel the narrow way when they were bound hard and fast in the chains of total depravity, without God and without hope.'"

Henry H.: "Allow me to ask you, did Christ say anything in that great sermon about a sinner's doing anything to be saved? I have heard it said he was teaching his disciples only."

Frank F.: "Remember, Henry, you have already plainly seen and admitted Christ did teach the multitudes as well as his disciples, and I am sure you will admit these words of Christ apply with great force to all men who desire to be or remain the approved children of God. 'Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. There is no rebuke in these words to calling upon Christ as Lord, Lord, for it would seem to be the natural inclination of every one whose heart was touched with a sense of Christ's love to call upon him as Lord; but the important thing here taught is to do the will of God. If they could not do that will, you see, Henry, how utterly senseless are these words. It is needless to say this scripture applies exclusively to the worshiper or the child of God, for the illustrations which follow prove it is universally applicable to all those who would or should enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Henry H.: "What illustration do you refer to?"

Frank F.: "The wise man and then the foolish man. The word 'therefore' indicates what follows is illustrative of the principle stated. 'Therefore' what? Why, 'Whosoever heareth and doeth these sayings of mine,' says Christ. The words 'whosoever heareth' distribute the application to all accountable persons, to all who are subjects of gospel address. You know who they are, do you not?"

Henry H.: "Yes; it was intended for all the world and every creature, as Mark says, or as Matthew and Luke say, for 'all nations.'"

Frank F.: "This lesson, therefore, teaches that all these can and ought to obey Christ. This was and is Christ's view of man. His view is God's view. As he sees us, so God sees us; as they see us, so are we; as we are, so are mankind in general. All have sinned and come short of the glory of God. Henry, may I ask you, what was the difference between the wise man and the foolish man?"

Henry H.: "Why, one of them did the sayings of Christ, and the other did them not. They both heard."

Frank F.: "Whose teaching is this, John Calvin's or St. Augustine's?"

Henry H.: "Neither; it is the teaching of Christ, the greatest Teacher, who taught as one having authority, and not as the scribes."

Frank F.: "Which example will you endeavor to follow?"

Henry H.: "That of the wise man."

Frank F.: "God grant you may."

The Fellowship. No. 3.

Giving to the poor is the principal part of giving in New Testament fellowship. God makes great blessing abound unto those who distribute to the necessities of the saints. "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me." (Matt. 25: 34-35.) The righteous, not knowing when they thus minister to him, receive the following explanation: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Matt. 25: 40.) Jesus Christ is in his people, and in ministering to them we minister to him. For this service we are to be admitted into the eternal kingdom. "Sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." (Luke 18: 22.) "Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that falleth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." (Luke 12: 33, 34.) In the light of this teaching, the exhibitions of generous fellowship of the poor in the church at Jerusalem, and among the Gentile Christians for the poor of Judea, are not to be looked upon as the transient displays of fanaticism, but as devout obedience to the will of God. God's blessing, the heavenly home, and partnership in the eternal inheritance are only for him who gives to the poor.

It is evident that all the contributions of New Testament Christians were used in the fellowship of the poor and of men who preached the word. "Let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that teacheth in all good things." (Gal. 6: 6.) This is fellowship with the teacher. Elders were supported in their labors by this fellowship. "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine. For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The laborer is worthy of his reward." (1 Tim. 5: 17, 18.)

Many interests which call now for pecuniary support in religious denominations were not thought of in the apostolic age. Then Christians gave to the poor and to the elders that labored among them and to preachers who went forth among the lost to open their eyes and turn them from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God. This was the whole extent of their giving.

They ran no "church organizations," which now express denominationalism locally. They had no money-collecting agency whose office was to raise funds for the support of "church services" for the public—both saints and sinners—to attend. Instead of attending services run by some body, they served the Lord themselves. They did not "attend church" or "go to church." They were in the church always, and assembled themselves together in the church. The idea of Christians being at any time away from the church, some having the advantage of being near it, while others were less fortunate and lived too far to "go to church" often, would have been a startling absurdity to people who walked by the faith of the New Testament. In this day and time I often read of Christians living where there is no church; but in the New Testament the only way for Christians to live where there is no church is to quit being Christians, for as long as they are Christians they are in the church.

The church that people build and organize and set in operation, with its manifold and expensive services, to which they are fortunately near or from which unfortunately far, to which they go, from which many stay away, is not in the New Testament. Hence the money expended in running it is not spent in faith, and as a consequence there is no promise of blessing to those who run it, no treasure laid up in heaven by expenditure of money on such an institution.

The relief of the poor and the support of elders, which the New Testament teaches Christians to perform, are much hindered by the setting up and operation of human institutions. Fellowship is extended beyond the bounds of faith with great injury to the people who should be in the fellowship of faith. We are saved by grace "through faith." (Eph. 2: 8.) "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) Giving to what God has not expressly commanded is giving without faith, and hence no blessing is promised to such giving. No grace is there to save. The diversion of money from its divinely appointed uses in the fellowship is the most enormous sin of this time among religious professors, and those who set up and support their own institutions in religion will ere long come to a fearful reckoning.

I sometimes call attention to the fact that elders were to take care of the church and that they were rewarded for their labors, and am met with the response that the reward of elders is impracticable. No wonder! With so many unauthorized things practiced, the things authorized must needs be impracticable. The true remedy is simple enough. Withhold all support from teachers, workers, officers, and organizations not appointed of God, and turn back to what God has appointed. Then the widow, the orphan, and the elders will again receive support. Let the clergy and "the churches" go, and come back to the pure and undefiled religion of the New Testament. His faith must be very weak who thinks God's word is not sufficient.

I cannot adequately describe the awful spiritual destitution of those who set up their organizations and teach the people their wisdom. They have sat in judgment on the Almighty, have weighed him in the balances and found him wanting. Charmed with the dreams, visions, and conceits of their own hearts, they have turned from what the Lord says to what they think. Many are following their pernicious ways, and by reason of them the way of truth is evil spoken of. They devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayers; they make clean the outside of the cup and platter by harmonizing, pacifying, and covering up the discordant and factious elements of the whited sepulchers over which they preside, that they may advance "the cause" in the eyes of men, but within are the dead men's bones of pride, worldly wisdom, glory among men, covetousness, extortion, and wickedness; they compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made they make him twofold more the child of hell than themselves; they have taken away the key of knowledge, they enter not themselves and others they hinder; they have stolen the word of God from their neighbors by their dreams, the grandest larceny ever perpetrated, for without the word men cannot have faith, and without faith cannot be saved; they have robbed God by turning the gifts and offerings from the use he appointed unto the support of their appointments and concerns; they love places in the uppermost "churches" of the uppermost denomination, and the chief seats in the finest "church houses," and to be called "orthodox," "doctors of divinity," etc.; they lead men with burdens grievous to be borne, and touch not these burdens with one of their fingers.

I close by quoting one admonition of our Savior to their ancient, but less-favored, predecessors: "Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without make that which is within also? But rather give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you." W. L. BUTLER.

How Much Shall We Give?

Is it possible that a duty is laid upon us, as Christians, to give of our resources—our money, our cover, our meat, and our clothing—to the cause of Christ, to the poor of the church, and for the spread of the gospel, and yet no law or rule is laid down in the word of God for our guidance in such duty? If it is a Christian duty for me to give, where is the law or rule in the word of God which makes it my duty to do so? How much am I to give, and by what rule am I to be governed?

I feel safe in the assertion that if there is no law or rule expressed in the New Testament by which I am to be guided in this matter, then I commit no crime, no sin, in neglecting or refusing to give at all. If the Lord or his apostles have not bound this duty upon me, does not he who would do so now add to the law of God? I can see it in no other light. Again, if God has not commanded me to give, how can I do so walking by faith? For faith comes by hearing the word of God. But further, if God has commanded me to give and yet said nothing about how much I shall give, how shall I know when I have done my duty in the premises? I know that pretercraff says to give all, but what does God say?

The proper answer to these difficulties will settle the question in one of two ways: Either that we are not commanded to give at all, and hence not bound to do so; or, being under law or rule to give, God has told us how much to give.

I affirm, then, that it is the duty of every Christian to give of his substance to the cause of salvation—to the uplifting and upbuilding of humanity; and if this be true, God has told us how much we shall give. A law which defines nothing can have no penalty, and a law without a penalty is void—of no force at all. When Jesus sent out his twelve apostles to preach (Matt. 10), he commanded to make no provision for their sustenance in the work, assuring them that the work they were to do was worthy of a support from those to whom he sent them; and when they returned at last, he asked them if they had lacked anything, and they said they had plenty, or that they had lacked for nothing. I note this as a pointer. Again, when Jesus speaks of the last great day, when all nations and people stand before him for judgment, he mentions two classes of men—these: One class had fed him and clothed him, etc.; the other class had not. When they inquired how this could be—inasmuch as neither class had ever seen him—he declared that inasmuch as they had done these things to any of his brethren (his disciples), even the very least of them, they had done it unto him; or, neglecting his brethren, they had neglected him. One class, in consequence of what they had done, go away into life eternal, while the other class, as a consequence of what they have not done, go away into everlasting punishment.

The salvation of the righteous hinges upon what they did. This clearly shows that it is right to divide our substance with others. If right, then it is right because God requires it of us.

In his travels through Galatia, Paul instructed, or gave orders to, the churches that on the first day of every week, each one—each individual Christian—should give into the Lord's treasury, as the Lord had prospered him, for the relief of the poor in Judea. (See Acts 11: 29; Rom. 15: 26.) So he commanded, or gave orders to, the church at Corinth. We have now found the command to give and the time when: "Upon the first day of the week" is the time; "as God hath prospered" us is the amount. (1 Cor. 16: 2.)

But now how shall we arrive at that portion to be given out of the prosperity God has given? Turning back to 1 Cor. 9, Paul is arguing with the Corinthian brethren that he had a right to a support from them, as well as, or rather in preference to, the Judaizing teachers, who had taken from them a fat living. And to prove he had a right to a support from them, he says: "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with [or off] the altar?" He says, too, that in this way, or, "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." Now if the Lord appointed that they who preach the gospel should be supported in that work in the same way the Levites were supported in their service at the temple—and I take it that this is precisely what Paul means—then the how of it will be readily and easily understood when we find how the Levites were supported. When we have found that, then we can find this.

For the support of the Levites, God appointed that every Jew should give one-tenth of all he made. They were to give one-tenth of all produce, as well as of their flocks and cattle. (Levit. 27: 30-33.) This was assigned as a support for the Levites who served in the temple and at the altar. The Levites themselves were required to give one-tenth of all they thus received to the support of the high priest. (Num. 28: 21-23.) Now, if they who preach the gospel are to be supported in the same way, are we not by that rule to give one-tenth of all we make into the Lord's treasury, for the support of the poor and for the spread of the gospel? In this way, by giving a fixed, stated sum—a certain portion of what we make—every one will give the same to the cause, and all have equal partnership in every good work. The poor will give as much as the rich, and have the same interest in every good work.

By reference to Deut. 12: 5-18, it will be seen that the offerings of the Jews were also to be brought to the chosen center, or place of worship. So, Paul instructed, or commanded, the Christians to bring their offerings to the Lord's treasury, to be there, ready for any necessity that might arise.

Nor was this tithing of one-tenth peculiar to the Mosaic code simply; but it was practiced in the patriarchal dispensation, and doubtless by divine command. Abraham paid one-tenth to Melchizedec, the high priest of patriarchal days; Jacob paid one-tenth to the Lord. And we believe all this was by divine enactment. Now, if Jesus has appointed that way they who preach the gospel should give one-tenth of the gospel, it ought to be plain to all who are seeking for duty—a rule of duty simply, that they may know what to do—that they should give one-tenth. And unless the Lord has given us a rule as above, by which we may know how much to give, then there is not a man on earth who can fix the rule of giving; and if there is no rule or law of God by which to give, then he who gives nothing infringes no law, and commits no wrong. But we have, I think, clearly established the following points in this article:

1. God has commanded us to give of our substance to the poor and for the spread of the gospel.

2. He required his people, under patriarchal and Jewish dispensations, to give one-tenth of all they made—of their prosperity.

3. Jesus appointed that his followers should do the same, putting it in the Lord's treasury on the first day of every week.

In this way the widows and orphans could all be cared for, and the gospel spread by faithful preachers from pole to pole; in this way the elders—and not the evangelists—could control the finances of the church. An evangelist, or board of evangelists, has no more right to control the finances of the church of Christ than an evangelist has to exercise the rights of the President of the United States; yet in every false religion the preachers collect, control, and appropriate the finances. In the church of Christ it must not be so. The Lord places this matter under the direction of the elders.

I submit these things for the thoughtful among the brethren, and specially commend it to the consideration of Brother L. M. Owen and Brother G. Lipscomb. If I am wrong in my reasoning and conclusion, I ask that they show it and point out the better way.

JOHN T. POE.

The contribution of five dollars from Fort Worth, Tex., for Brother Asadour Paul was from the church of Christ on Weatherford street. This statement is due them, as there are other churches in the city to whom it might be credited. We have thought it well to credit churches with donations, and not well to publish the names of individuals.

BAPTISM UNTO THE REMISSION OF SINS.

The next scripture to be examined showing the essentiality of baptism is the language of Jesus to Nicodemus. Nicodemus thought that, because he was related by blood to Abraham, by birth he would enjoy blessings in the kingdom of God. His idea was that the Jews would still be the peculiar people; that they would still enjoy special favors and therefore would be born in the kingdom of God, as they were born in covenant relation in the days of Abraham. With this view, and doubtless intending to please the Master, he put on the very best address he could command: "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these signs that thou doest, except God be with him." (R. V.) Such an address would be very pleasing to the Jewish rabbis, so he expected by this fair speech to initiate himself into the good graces of the Lord Jesus Christ. But while endeavoring to bring himself in a favorable light before Jesus, still he had sufficient discretion not to sacrifice any part of the truth. He gave the best reason that can be given for knowing that he was a teacher come from God: "For no man can do these signs that thou doest, except God be with him." All was clear to Jesus. He looked down into the most sacred depths of the soul and saw all the thoughts that had been slumbering there for years. A man would as well seek to blot out the sun as to conceal his thoughts, his emotions, and his purposes from the Lord Jesus Christ. "But Jesus did not trust himself unto them, for that he knew all men, and because he needed not that any one should bear witness concerning man; for he himself knew what was in man." (R. V.) So the very first sentence Jesus uttered he swept from under Nicodemus his entire religious foundation. "Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born anew, he cannot see the kingdom of God." (R. V.) This teaches most conclusively the absolute necessity of the new birth. Man must be born anew, or from above. It is vain, it is wicked and presumptuous, to talk about men entering the kingdom of God who have never been born from above. Jesus has spoken the truth, and the necessity for men being born again will remain the same whether we accept it or not. Our opinions will not alter God's eternal truth, which shall live throughout the never-dying ages. In obedience to this truth we shall obtain freedom from our sins. (John 8: 32.)

After having emphasized the necessity of being born again, in answer to a question of Nicodemus, Jesus proceeds to show the elements that enter into the new birth: "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (R. V.) The Savior's own comment on "Except a man be born anew" is: "Ye must be born anew." So with him as our authority we are perfectly safe in saying a man must be born of water and the Spirit, otherwise into the kingdom of God he cannot go. It is not the thing to do to try to obscure the meaning of this passage by arguing that the Savior did not say what he meant. Self-evident propositions are hard to demonstrate. It would be quite hard to frame a proposition to prove that corn bread is corn bread. I take it that when the Savior said Spirit he meant Spirit, and did not mean water, and that when he said water he did not mean Spirit, milk, or elder. If water does not mean water, what does it mean? The philosophy of the little girl was good when she said of this passage: "If the Savior did not mean water, why did he not say what he did mean?" We cannot afford to stultify our own consciences and offer insult to our dear Savior by intimating he did not mean what he said when using ordinary words of which we all know the meaning. Water means water and Spirit means Spirit. This needs no demonstration to the man who takes God at his word.

It might be well to give some attention to the phrase "born of water." Does this mean baptism? It is preferred to allow scholars to answer this question who have held a different view from myself on the necessity of being baptized. As scholars and commentators these men state fairly what they regard as the true meaning of the text, regardless of their religious prejudices:

"Adam Clarke.—Baptism by water into the Christian faith was necessary to every Jew and Gentile that entered into the kingdom of the Messiah." (Comment on John 3: 5.) Browne.—The necessity of baptism has constantly been inferred from our Lord's declaration: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5; Exposition of Article 28, p. 672.) Benson.—"Of water"—that is, baptized. (Comment on the Bible, on John 3: 5.) Barnes.—"Be born of water." By water here is evidently signified baptism. Thus the word is used in Eph. 5: 26; Tit. 3: 5. (Notes on John 3: 5.) Hovey.—We may say that being "born of water" (baptized) must signify being cleansed from sins or forgiven, while being "born of Spirit" cannot signify less than being ingenerated, if we may use the word, with a new and holy principle of life by the Spirit of God. It is not, therefore, surprising that Jesus alludes to baptism in the briefest manner, while he dwells with special emphasis upon the work of the Spirit." (Comment on John, Appendix, p. 422.) Schaff.—"In view of the facts that John baptized, that Christ himself was baptized, that his disciples (John 4: 2) baptized in his name, it seems impossible to disconnect water from baptism. Calvin's interpretation arose from doctrinal opposition to the Romish Catholic overvaluation of the sacrament, which must be guarded against in another way." (Footnote on John 3: 5 in Lange's Commentary, Vol. III., p. 197.) Wall.—There is not any one Christian of any antiquity in any language but what understands it of baptism; and if it be not so understood, it is difficult to give an account how a person is born of water any more than he is born of wood." (History of Infant Baptism, Vol. I., p. 92.)

Authorities of the same character could easily be produced in much greater number. While some of the authorities would make it appear that baptism is of little importance, yet not one of them, when his scholarship is at stake, will say that "born of water" does not mean water baptism. While we attach no efficacy or virtue to the water to take away sin, yet Jesus has fixed this as one of the conditions through which we enter that state where the blood of Christ cleanses us from all sin. "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3, R. V.) When baptized into his death we come in contact with the blood of Christ which flowed in his death and thus are cleansed of our guilt. As to the importance of doing this, Jesus says we must in order to enter the kingdom of God. We can make no mistake in following him.

It is agreed that the phrase "born of" is metaphorical, and not literal. While the learning of the world makes it water baptism, the plan of salvation is so clear that we need not appeal to scholarship to know that we are right. By placing plain, literal language by the side of John 3: 5, we can readily see when we are born of water and the Spirit.

The man who is in the kingdom of God is saved. So without any violence to the truth, for the time being, we may substitute "saved" for "the kingdom of God." "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot be saved. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. Therefore he that believeth and is baptized is born of water and the Spirit. Those who obeyed the truth under the teaching of the apostles were born of water and the Spirit. They believed and were baptized. God, and God alone, has the right to fix the terms of salvation. This he has done. He will forgive us when we faithfully obey him in his commandments. His command, ours to obey; ours to trust him in obedience, his to forgive the trusting, obedient soul; ours to trust and not doubt the wisdom of his commands, his delight to bless us while we cling to him; ours to confidently place our hand in his, obey his commandments, trust him for the fulfillment of all his promises, his pleasure to lead us gently and securely out of earth's shadows into the house of many mansions, where doubtings are forever unknown and where no fear ever reigns; ours to pillow our heads upon his bosom amid the storms of life, his to shelter us under the shadow of his wings from the blasts of the tempests, and at last crown us heirs of eternal glory in that city where dwells God's eternal sunshine.

"The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit." (Ps. 34: 18.) "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." J. C. McQUIDDY.

Have you missed in your aim? well, the mark is still shining;

Did you faint in the race? well, take breath for the next;

Did the clouds drive you back? but see yonder their lining;

Were you tempted and fell? let it serve for a text.

Christianity and Pleasure.

Some time ago I stopped off the train in a city to visit relatives. While in the town I was invited to dine with a lady who was a member of a church. The conversation, as usual, on occasions of that kind, turned on religious work. She asked me whether I would not "rather have charge of a church than do evangelistic work." The questions one asks are an index to one's way of thinking and looking at matters. I answered that I would, so far as my natural feelings and comforts were concerned. I told her that there was nothing pleasant or desirable in spending the greater part of my time away from home—away from my family. Life in this world is short and replete with difficulties at its best, but much harder to the members of the family when scattered the greater part of the time. But it seems to me that the wife makes a greater sacrifice for the cause of Christ than does the preacher. Many are the lonely, sad days of her life. Many of the sisters whose husbands are at home, perhaps to their annoyance, the greater part of the time, do not think to call on her and help by word and deed to cheer her up in the sacrifice that she makes. This is one of the many ways in which they might have fellowship with them in the work of Christ. How many preachers have left home numerous times with some of the members of the family sick, to preach the gospel to the world with a view of saving souls! Sometimes sheer poverty helps to send them out on their mission as well as the love of Christ. Until men cease to act from pecuniary considerations in other relations of life, we cannot reasonably hope to see the preacher entirely free from an ordinate anxiety about the things that are needful to the body. If we were constantly thinking of what we ought to do as members of the household of faith, and acting consistently with the claim that we make, it would soon displace what we actually see to be wrong with that which we know to be the will of God concerning us. We think too much of our own comfort and consequently overlook that which concerns the welfare of our neighbors. We have a better conception of the duty of the soldier than we have of the duty of the preacher. We are willing to go forth as "good soldiers" of the cross, and who live by the gospel of Christ. Such men work hard, endure suffering, bear the sins of whole congregations, and receive but very little in the way of compensation for the sacrifices made. People of the world, as well as church members, look askance at them when they enter a strange community, exhaust their store of pent-up curiosity in unbecoming comments about their clothes and general physique, and do not hesitate to say that such men ought to stay at home with their families until the church sends for them. Christ and the apostles might have done the same thing.

I told this lady that it would suit my natural feelings much better, and those of my wife, for me to take "charge of a church" and stay at one place, I could stay with my family the greater part of the time, and enjoy in a measure whatever of the comforts of home we might possess. I would much rather have a good salary and a large congregation to preach to than take my chances for both in going, as I often do, without any assurance of man that I will have either. But over against this possible ideal of comfort, good salary, and ease is one thought that outweighs all the comfort gathered into the life of ease, and that is the question of duty. What I ought to do outweighs all other considerations with me, at least I try to view it in that light. I think I ought to do all I can to save men from sin. What is my duty? What ought I to do? These are the first questions for Christians to settle. Is it my duty to go to the large, wealthy church? Do you think I ought to accept the big salary? I know the man who talks thus in this age of grasp and greed is thought a fool. But what does it mean to follow Christ, if it is not to make duty the first consideration? There are loopholes, of course, for the dishonest to escape this embarrassment. The family argument is apt to come to the rescue at this crisis. It is a strong appeal to the natural man in the spiritual Adam, and, if not properly resisted, will prevail. Think of this declaration: Christ "pleased not himself."

I went on with the line of thought before us. Of course I was not as elaborate as in this paper, but I presented the same ideas. Suppose I receive simultaneously two calls to preach the gospel to two churches. One of them comes from a large, wealthy congregation, made up of the wealthy people of the town, including the educated and influential; the house of worship is one of the best in the city, and the call is emphasized with a large salary and the assurance of little work. The other call comes from a small church of Christ, poor, without influence, and located in one of the most wicked cities in the whole country. It is the same old Macedonian cry: "Come over and help us." There is not the assurance of any stipulated salary, only the promise of what a very poor church can do to help on in the Master's work. Which of the two calls should I accept? The world would say, and the average church member would sanction it: Why, accept the call to the wealthy church, of course; none but a fool would think of going to a church that could pay nothing; and, besides, it would give a preacher no prestige to locate in such a town as that. Am I not correct in saying that is just what the people say about such matters as that? That is what men in business would do, and preaching the gospel is viewed in the same light. It is all right to put preaching and business on the same footing, if the business itself is made a means of serving the Lord as it should. But suppose we put the matter of acceptance in this way: Which one of the two calls to preach ought I to accept? What would Duty, in view of all the circumstances, say for me to do? I do not think that we must always go to the poorest place. It will help us to get at the question of right, perhaps better, if we substitute for the words "duty" and "ought" the question: "What would Jesus do," or have us do? But, as a rule, on occasions of that kind there are so many voices of a mercenary character clamoring for audience that the voices of Duty and God are seldom heard above the jingle of mammon. The person that sacrifices duty—what he knows he ought to do—upon the altar of pleasure or money is not a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, but is serving himself.

But to be true to oneself and to the Christ, he must, after deliberate and serious thought, do what he thinks he ought to do. It is said of the ancient Egyptians that they deified a fly, then offered oxen in sacrifice to it. Not unlike this is the habit of many so-called Christians. They make a god of pleasure and lust, and offer Christianity upon the altar. It is as if one paid two dollars for a dress pattern, and then gave ten dollars to have it made according to the latest fashion; it is like the people who think more of the preacher's manner in delivery than of the message he brings them from the Lord. Talk about sacrifice! I fail to see where the majority of the people are doing anything that would come under that head. Even if they all did what they ought to do—did their duty—still there would be no sacrifice in that. Sacrifice is something beyond duty and justice and right. Does the preacher who resigns his present charge, as many do, and accepts another, always do it for the sake of greater opportunities to serve Christ and his brother man, or for the sake of a larger salary and greater prestige? O, how very little of the Christ there is in men and churches!

The preacher is not the only one that sacrifices Christ on the altar of mammon; many of the followers of Christ are doing the same thing. Suppose there are in your neighborhood two families in need of some of the necessities of life. There may be another family, all sick, but wealthy. The one is able to pay you for your services, the other is poor and not able to give you anything for your time and labor. Which one would you look after first? Here may be an opportunity for a little sacrifice. People that are looking to their own comfort and pleasure will help neither. "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not himself."

Our own pleasure is the first consideration with all who do not make any effort to follow him who "pleased not himself." Do you not know people who think we ought to "join the church of our choice" instead of joining the church of Christ's choice? "We must have things our way," is the idea of the average man. If we go to "divine services," there must be a big pipe organ to make the music, and an eloquent preacher to entertain us. The seats must be cushioned and very clean, if we are to sit on them; the weather must be composed and tranquil, if we are to venture out to church; the walks must be in first-class condition, if we are to go on them; the services are to be short, if we are to survive them; in short, we must have things our way, if we are to worship at all. This is the prevailing idea of sacrifice in the religious world to-day. "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." Why are so few prayers heard to-day? There is no sacrifice. "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." (James 4: 3.) Coal City, Ind. W. J. BROWN.

The Habit of Happiness.

Our habits make us. Like wheels running on the road, they wear the tracks or ruts in which our life runs. Our character is the result of our habits. We do the same thing over and over a thousand times, and then it is part of ourselves.

For example, one is impatient to-day in some matter. To-morrow there is another trial and the impatience is repeated. Thus on, from day to day, with the same result. It begins to be easier to give way to the temptation than to resist it. Again and again the stress is felt and yielded to, and at length we begin to say that the person has grown very impatient—that is, he has given way so often to his feelings that impatience has become a habit. If he had resisted the first temptation, restraining himself and keeping himself quiet and sweet in the trial, and then the second, the third, the fourth, the tenth time had done the same, and had continued to be patient thereafter, whatever the pressure of suffering or irritation, we would have said that he was a patient man—that is, he would have had formed in him the fixed habit of patience. As we say again, it would have become "second nature" with him to hold his impetuous feelings in check, however he might have been tried.

In like manner all the qualities which make up disposition are the result of habit. The habit of truthfulness, never deviating in the smallest matter from what is absolutely true, yields truth in the character. The habit of honesty insisted upon in all dealings and transactions fashions the feature of honesty in the life, fixes it there with rocklike firmness.

It is proper, therefore, and no misuse of words, to speak of the habit of happiness. No doubt there is a difference in original dispositions, in the quality of cheerfulness or gloom that belongs to them. Some persons are born with a sunny spirit; others, with an inclination to sadness. The difference shows itself even in infancy and early childhood. No doubt, too, there is a difference in the influences which affect dispositions in the first months and years. Some mothers make an atmosphere of joy for their children to grow up in, while others fill their home with complaining and discontent. Young lives cannot but reflect somewhat of the home atmosphere in the disposition with which they pass out of childhood.

Yet in spite of all that heredity and early education do, each one is responsible for the making of his own character. The most deep-seated tendency to sadness can be overcome and replaced by happy cheerfulness. The gospel of Christ comes to us and tells us that we must be born again, born anew, born from above, our very nature recreated. Then divine grace assures us that it is not impossible for the most unholy life to be transformed into holiness. The being that is saturated with sin can be made whiter than snow; the wolf can be changed into lamblike gentleness; the fiercest disposition can be trained to meekness. There is no nature, therefore, which cannot, by God's help, learn the lesson of happiness.

The way to do this is to begin at once to restrain the tendency to gloomy feeling and to conquer it. Check the first shadow of inclination to discouragement. Choke back the word of discontent or complaining that is trembling on your tongue, and speak instead a word of cheer. Set yourself the task of keeping sweet and sunny just for one day. This should not be impossible. Anybody can sing songs of gladness through the hours of a single short day. At the time of evening prayer confess your failures. The next morning begin for another day to be kept bright and joyous, unstained by gloom.

At first the effort may seem almost utterly to fail, but if the lesson is kept clearly before your eyes, and you are persistent in your determination to master it, it will not be long until the result will begin to show itself. It takes courage and perseverance, but the task is not an impossible one. It is like learning to play on the piano, or like training the voice for singing. It takes years and years to become proficient in either of these arts. It may take a lifetime to learn the lesson of joy, but it can be learned. Men with the most pronounced and obdurate gloominess of disposition have, through the years, become men of abounding cheerfulness. We have but to continue in the practice of the lesson until repetition has grown into a fixed habit.

The wretched discontent which makes some people so miserable themselves and such destroyers of happiness in others is only the natural result of the habit of discontent indulged through years. Any one who is conscious of such a misanthropic disposition should be so ashamed of it that he will set about at once conquering it.—Forward.

FILLING THE GRAVE.

Much has been justly said and written concerning the large, warm heart of the Irishman; of his devotion and fidelity to those he loves. Live worthy of his esteem, and, as a rule, he will almost die by you.

Twenty-four years ago one of Ireland's native sons, John Patterson, was employed by my father-in-law to do some work on the farm. He was alone and dejected, thousands of miles away from home and relatives. The blue Atlantic, so broad, so deep, lay between him and the home of his youth; all his near relatives, except one sister, slept beneath British soil; he was among strangers, without money, and in feeble health. But the friendly steamer that landed him safe on America's soil did not fail to bring with him that large, faithful, Irish heart, which soon won for him many friends. He became devoutly attached to my father-in-law and my mother-in-law, who shared with him their comfortable home, and he loved each member of the family. For our firstborn, George L. Meeks, then a wee infant, he soon began to manifest fond attachment, which continually increased with the passing years. He would gladly linger around the country church and "take care of the baby" during services. Just before George was two years old his friend was caring for him during the services of a protracted meeting, and one day led him to where—very near the church house—the road diverged into three roads. There he let go his hand to see which way he would go. The little boy turned this way and that, quickly surveying the three roads, paused and looked very serious a moment; then with a look of assurance, a brightened countenance, and quickened step he started toward home, to the delight of his friend, who thought it marvelous that his little charge could tell which road he was in the habit of travelling.

At any time when George would see Mr. Patterson returning from work his ready little feet would run to meet him at the front gate, or in the yard, and with dimpled hands uplifted, his prattling tongue would joyfully exclaim: "O, Pash, Pash!" No matter how far Mr. Patterson had walked or how hard and rough had been his work, he was never too tired to take the child into his arms, carry him to the house, and entertain him with a little fond play.

Years have sped away. Time has wrought many changes. Two other little jewels have been set in our family ring. Five years ago the ring was broken, and the first jewel dropped out—our George is no longer with us here. Near that same old church to-day, March 15, 1900, a white mantle let down from the clouds keeps the cold north wind from his lonely bed in the "silent city," and a marble shaft tells us where his body lies, while we sadly miss him from our cozy fireside.

The devotion of his Irish friend had grown stronger and stronger. After the little mound was raised over the silent remains, this friend said to us: "You need not be afraid of George's grave being neglected while I live." His word has proved true. Month after month, year after year, he has carried his shovel two miles, filled every sunken portion of the grave, and watched after it with proverbial care. Sometimes the gentle zephyrs fan the cedars that wave over the inclosure, the mocking bird sings praises there, and the lark warbles a welcome to its mate; sometimes the dewdrop paints a little rainbow and throws kisses at the morning sun; sometimes the drought parches the clay lips that seal from human sight the once stalwart figure of our boy; but this faithful friend carries the key to the iron gate, and forgets not his charge. The bodies of the dear old couple he so much loved now sleep in the same inclosure, and their graves, as well as those of their departed children, are cherished, filled, and guarded by him with the same loving care. Sometimes frost nips the buds, paints the foliage, and drives the birds to the far-away sunny Southland, while on that hillside "the seeds of the future are sleeping under the leaves of the past," but those hallowed mounds are not neglected. Sometimes, even when the rippling streams are frozen over and the trees are brown and bare, he rides through naked forest and barren meadow from the dear old cottage home to the old churchyard, to see if the graves need care.

When his earth life is ended, when those industrious hands shall have grasped for the last time their shovel and spade, when his worn-out body shall be sleeping on the same quiet hillside, may some thoughtful friend be left to see that his "grave is kept green;" for hard indeed is the heart that would neglect him. If living, I want to claim the honor of assisting in at least raising a marble shaft in his memory as near as possible to the graves he has so long and so tenderly cherished.

For many years he has been a faithful soldier of the cross, keeping his armor far brighter than many with better advantages, and we trust he will live prepared for that blessed land that needs no graves.

IF I ONLY HAD TIME.

Ruskin keeps on his study table a handsome block of chalcidony on which is engraved, "To-day."

We all know people who, according to their own account, would be very philanthropic if they had but the time; who would visit the sick, relieve the poor, and comfort the widow and the fatherless in their afflictions, did leisure permit.

Others would become great authors, singers, orators, inventors, statesmen, if they only had the time. But—alas!—they have absolutely no time, no more than two or three hours a day at most; and what does that amount to?

Some boys will pick up a good education in the odds and ends of time which others carelessly throw away, as one man saves a fortune by small economies, which others disdain to practice. What young man is too busy to get an hour a day for self-improvement?

An education that would adorn a man of letters or qualify a college professor has been secured in the fragments of leisure that are often wasted because they are so brief. You will never "find" time for anything. If you want time, you must take it.

If a genius like Gladstone carried a little book in his pocket lest an unexpected spare moment should slip from his grasp, to what should we of common abilities not resort to save the precious moments from oblivion? What a rebuke is such a life to thousands of young men and women who throw away whole months and even years of that which the "Grand Old Man" hoarded up to even the smallest fragments! Many a great man has snatched his reputation from odd bits of time which others, who wonder at their failure to get on, throw away. In Dante's time nearly every literary man in Italy was a hard-working merchant, physician, statesman, judge, or soldier.

Rufus Choate used to lay out a course of study in the classics practically parallel with that of the younger men in Harvard University, and by improving the few spare moments which his immense practice left him would keep pace with the students year after year.

The earlier works of John Stuart Mill were written in the intervals of official work while he held the office of principal examiner in the East India house in which Charles Lamb; Peacock, the author of "Headlong Hall;" and Edwin Norris, the philologist, were also clerks. Macaulay wrote his "Lays of Ancient Rome" in the war office while holding the post of Secretary of War. It is well known that the writings of Arthur Helps are literally "Essays Written in the Intervals of Business."

"Nothing is worse for those who have business than the visits of those who have none," was the motto of a Scottish editor. The worst of a lost hour is not so much in the wasted time as in the wasted power. "If you are idle, you are on your way to ruin, and there are few stopping places upon it. It is rather a precipice than a road," says Beecher. Let no moment pass till you have extracted from it every possibility. Watch every grain in the hourglass. Let your record be: "No moment wasted, no power perverted, no opportunity neglected."

"There are moments," says Dean Alford, "which are worth more than years. We cannot help it. There is no proportion between spaces of time in importance or in value. A stray unthought-of five minutes may contain the event of a life. And this all-important moment—who can tell when it will be upon us? Drive the minutes, or they will drive you."

Success in life is what Garfield called a question of "margins." Tell me how a young man uses the little ragged edges of time while waiting for meals or tardy appointments, after his day's work is done, or evenings, what he is revolving in his mind at every opportunity, and I will tell you what that man's success will be. One can usually tell by his manner, the direction of the wrinkles in his forehead, or the expression of his eye, whether he has been in the habit of using his time to good advantage or not.

"The most valuable of all possessions is time; life itself is measured by it." The man who loses no time doubles his life. Wasting time is wasting life. An officer apologized to Gen. O. M. Mitchell, the astronomer, for a brief delay, saying he was only a few minutes late. "Only a few minutes late!" exclaimed the General. "I have been in the habit of calculating the value of the thousandth part of a second."

A crown fit for a king can be made out of the sweepings of a goldsmith's shop. So an hour or two saved by Napoleon might have made Waterloo as proud a remembrance for France as it is now for England.

Some squander time, some invest it, some kill it. That precious half hour a day which many of us throw away, rightly used, would save us from the ignorance which mortifies us, the narrowness and pettiness which always attended too exclusive application to our callings. It would tinge and color the day as the drop of ruby liquid imparts its hue to the gallon of water in the druggist's globe.

Four things come not back: the spoken word, the spent arrow, the past life, and the neglected opportunity.—Success.

THE AUTOCRAT'S ADVICE.

An association of young women in a Western city wrote through a committee of one—the most effective sort of a committee—to their favorite authors, asking advice which would be profitable. The Springfield Republican published the answers, and among them is a reply from Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, penned a few days before his death, and from which we cull the wise words:

"You will remember, doubtless, that Lockhart tells us, in his 'Life of Sir Walter Scott,' that when Sir Walter lay upon his dying bed he said to Lockhart: 'My dear, be virtuous, be religious, be good. Nothing else will give you any comfort when you come to lie here.'

"I know of no better words of advice that I can give to you and other girl readers of my writings than those of the author of 'Waverley,' which I have just quoted.

"Be clever, if you will, and can; but first of all be good.

"I think I cannot do better than to urge upon you and all my other young women readers the importance of sincerity and earnestness of purpose. Let it be your aim in every act of life to be rather than to seem.

"Avoid all hypocrisies and shams of every kind. Be wholly sincere in every word you speak and everything you do.

"Remember that intense earnestness and earnest, conscientious labor are the keys to success in every undertaking. Be in earnest, then. Work hard. Having formed a purpose, let nothing tempt you from its accomplishment.

"If you have high and lofty aims, no matter how hard a struggle you may have to make before they may be realized, press on, fight on, till you have attained them.

"What if you do have to sacrifice the thousand and one pleasures of life? Let them go without a thought. Time enough for them when sincerity and earnestness have made you more than conquerors; have brought you, the triumphant winner of a good fight, to a commanding elevation, whence you can look down in peace and contentment upon the rugged path up which you have struggled.

"If you and all my other young women readers will conscientiously follow this advice, and be true to yourselves and to God, you will do all that is possible to attain the happiness that is sincerely wished you by Oliver Wendell Holmes."

Eternity is not, as men believe, Before and after us, an endless line; No, 'tis a circle, infinitely great, All the circumference with creation thronged. God at the center dwells, beholding all; And, as we move in this eternal round, The finite portion which alone we see Behind us the past; what lies before We call the future; but to him who dwells Far at the center, equally remote From every point of the circumference, Both are alike—the future and the past.

Editorial

REV. 17, 18, and 19.

These chapters give more definite details of the downfall of Mystery, Babylon the Great, than the preceding chapters, and tell more definitely how it will be brought about. In the first part of chapter 17 one of the seven angels told John he would show him the judgment of the woman with whom the kings of the earth had committed fornication and by whom the inhabitants of the earth had been made drunk with the wine of her fornication. "So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: and upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH." And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus; and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration." (Rev. 17: 3-6.) It is almost universally claimed by commentators and Bible scholars that this magnificently bedecked woman represents popery, the Roman Catholic religion. Church and State were united by Constantine the Great early in the fourth century, and this power and authority of the bishop of Rome gradually grew and increased, and became so enlarged, his presumptions and claims of authority so great, that early in the seventh century he secured to himself the title, "Universal Bishop," and thus popery was inaugurated with all its claims of both temporal and spiritual power; and, having chief control of both church and State, it became an exceedingly wealthy church, and could well afford to dress in purple and precious stones and revel in gold. This claim regarding the woman may be correct, so far as I know. I have nothing any more plausible to suggest, inasmuch as the history of the Roman Catholic Church corresponds well with the vision and picture here given of this woman.

For quite a while the pope of Rome held authority with an iron grasp over church and State, and enforced the execution of his decrees and anathemas by the strong arm of temporal government; and it seems reasonable enough that this unlawful alliance of church and State and the control of the State by the church is the thing represented by this extravagantly dressed woman, sitting upon the scarlet colored beast with the seven heads, and ten horns, which beast is understood to represent the government, kings, and powers which the woman for a good while controlled. But the woman is represented as the mother of harlots, and now the question comes: Who are her daughters? These daughters are represented as like the mother, as possessing the same sort of character. If it be true that the corrupt character of the mother consisted in this unlawful union of church and State and the use of the human law in enforcing the decrees and doctrines of the church, then the words used in the above passage would indicate that the daughters were possessed of the same characteristics of the unchaste mother. Hence we conclude that if the mother is Rome, is popery, the daughters are those religious people and denominations that either directly or indirectly came out from Rome. This would include all parties in Christendom that do that way, for all of them have directly or indirectly derived their origin from Rome, so far as ancestry is concerned.

In the first place, the mother, even to-day, though her temporal power is lost so far as force is concerned, yet, true to her instincts, she is trying to reach and exercise all the influence and power in all the governments under which they live everywhere and in every way that an opportunity is afforded for such an effort. This is not truer anywhere, I presume, than in the United States. Catholicism would fasten her grasp on this country if she could; and the Protestant world is marching right along in the same direction, only perhaps not with the intent to control to the same extent. All the religious people of the land are trying to a greater or less extent to enforce certain principles of their doctrines by the strong arm of human law. Very many are trying to have their doctrine of observing the Sabbath day enforced by the law of the land. They want to force railroads and all other corporations and individuals to rest on that day. Now, what is the difference in spirit between these efforts of Protestants to enforce their doctrines by human law and those of Catholics to enforce their doctrines and ideas by the same power? There are also efforts, from time to time, all over the country, to enforce prohibition by the law of the land, thus trying to bring the arm of human law to bear in order to enforce the word of the Lord and its teaching upon this subject. Others have tried to stop the issuance of the daily papers, because the Sabbath, as they call it, is violated in getting out these papers and because their moral character is contrary to the word of God. Then again, Christians, are those calling themselves such, as before intimated in these articles, are all over this country going into these governments, becoming officers to execute the laws of the land, to arrest and punish criminals, to thrust into prisons those adjudged guilty, to hang murderers and such like; and not only this, but they go into armies and become officers and privates to overpower and bring into subjection the enemies of the government by the sword and to punish other nations for their injustice or depredations toward the government. Hence if you look at the execution of civil laws, and see Christian constables and sheriffs arresting men by force of arms, carrying them to prisons, and executing murderers, and see the Christian soldiers, privates, captains, colonels, generals, and such like fighting in battles, destroying human lives, and devastating countries, making widows and orphans, and cripples, and sufferers for life, what difference can you see between the spirit of this and the spirit of the church that ruled in the governments of Rome in the ages gone by? Vengeance is mine; "I will repay, saith the Lord." Hence he requires his people to feed and clothe their enemies, rather than destroy them. It seems to me that it is high time the religious people of this age were beginning to think whether they are drifting, for this unchaste woman, with her unscriptural alliances with the world, is to be destroyed; and when the mother goes, what will become of her daughters that are following so closely in her footsteps?

One of the things that the angel proposed to show John was the judgment which was to befall this unchaste woman, who he said in verse 1 of this chapter sat upon many waters; and farther on in the chapter he tells us these waters upon which the woman sat "are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." The ten horns, which represented ten kings, were to hate this wicked woman, this unholy alliance, and were to make her desolate. Some time ago the temporal power was taken away from popery by force of arms, and it is not likely ever to return. But we do not understand that this one feature makes up all of the unholy alliance of church and State, and therefore she was not wholly destroyed at all when her temporal power was taken away. The other features of which we have just spoken are as large as life yet, and certainly will be destroyed sooner or later. She was to be made desolate and burned with fire. The record says, regarding these ten kings, that they were to do this work: "For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled." Thus God put into the hearts of these kings to cooperate with and give their power to this alliance of the church with the world until the time should come for its destruction, and then he would use them for its downfall. When people will be wicked, and will not submit to God's will, he lets them go their way for a time; but their destruction is sure. Now, of course, I cannot say certainly that the religious world is right in its interpretations of these prophecies regarding popery; but if it is right, and I cannot say it is not, then the unchaste woman of Revelation is not dead yet, and the sufferings that are yet to come upon this world before the work is completed are inexpressibly great.

As this suffering goes on, the cry is: "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." The Lord's people everywhere should hasten to cut loose from every particle of this unholy alliance between the church and the world, and should cease all attempts to run the religion of Jesus in any of its parts by the wisdom of the world or by force of arms, for those that continue to do these things will partake of the sins and will receive the plagues sent upon the woman. Many of those calling themselves disciples of Christ are into these things all along the line. They are amalgamated with the governments of this world, partaking of their spirit, holding offices, working by force in executing the laws, going into armies, fighting battles, and doing everything of this sort that denominations do; they are introducing institutions of human wisdom to do the work of the church, and making void the commands of God by the doctrines and commandments of men, and such like. Where are the people to-day that have cut loose from the world and from its spirit, and who are living purely and only by the word of God as did Jesus and the apostles? Who are the people to-day that are holy, harmless, and who are not conformed to this world, but are as a city set upon a hill which cannot be hid? Who are the people that love the Lord with all the soul, mind, and strength, and are indeed a peculiar people, zealous only of good works, and are so transformed from the world that they are proving what is the good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God all the time? When the Lord's people are fully divorced from this world, though living in the world, they will not be of the world; they will form no sort of unholy alliances with the governments of earth, but will live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. All who live thus will be infallibly safe, and will be helped and cared for in all things that are for their good.

There is a sad picture given in these chapters of the fall of Babylon, and the wailings of kings and merchants over her sad fate. Awful will be the upheavals of peoples and nations when Babylon, the wicked woman, the false religion, shall fall; and whether the general interpretation of these visions be correct or not, there is something terrible indicated by them that is certainly yet in store for the people of this world that will not recognize Jesus as Lord and be loyal to him. It would be especially well for all the religious people of this world to open their eyes to the danger of the intoxicating wine of the mother of harlots, the unlawful union of the church of God with the governments and institutions of man's devising. There is a thoroughly safe side in all these conflicts, and that is to stand firmly upon the word of God and follow the wisdom of God as therein given.

In the first part of Rev. 19, when the conflict seems to be over and the fall of Babylon is complete, we have this: "After these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God: for true and righteous are his judgments: for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up forever and ever." This passage shows that this unchaste woman was a persecuting power, that it had shed the blood of saints, and that God avenged their blood by bringing about the downfall of the unholy alliance, or whatever you may call it; and great acclamations of praise immediately followed from the Lord's servants over the downfall of Babylon.

Then follows a description of the bride, the Lamb's wife, who had made herself ready: "And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." (Verse 8.) The fine linen of the bride is the righteousness of saints, which consists in doing just what God says. Only the true woman, the church of God, does this. The false woman, the false church, instead of having such robes to wear, will be destroyed for their unfaithfulness.

Then follows a grand description of the Son of God upon a white horse, clothed with a garment dipped (sprinkled) in blood, and the armies of heaven following him clothed in white. And he had "a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS. And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God; that ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great." What an awful picture of the final crushing out of the wicked that oppose this King of kings and Lord of lords! It is something terrible to contemplate, but it is certainly coming, and the final ending of all the wicked will be in eternal ruin; but all will be safety then for the faithful servants of God, they shall dwell forever with the Lord. It is wonderful how the safety of the Lord's people is made so prominent through all these visions of the ruin that is to be hurled upon false religionists and upon a wicked world; and what a wonderful encouragement this fact is to the people of God to stand aloof from every alliance with earthly powers and human wisdom, and cling close to the word of God, whether they live or die! The Lord help us all to do this to the end. E. G. S.

THE TRUE ISSUE.

"One of our learned confrères says: 'When any one claims that baptism is essential to salvation, he shuts out such men as Martin Luther, John Calvin, John Huss, Philip Melancthon, John Knox, Jonathan Edwards, George Whitefield, John Wesley, William Tennant, Edward Payson, Asahel Nettleton, Charles G. Finney, Dwight L. Moody, and a great multitude of others, whom no man can number.' That these good men and the 'great multitude of others' gathered by them into the fold of Christ were baptized, they fully believed. Our learned brother simply means to say that they were never immersed. Charity believeth all things except that sprinkling or pouring is Christian baptism."

The article the Christian Advocate quotes and comments on is the appeal of some of our cowardly Baptist brethren to a list of big names to scare others they think as cowardly as themselves from a Bible truth, which they cannot set aside by the Scriptures. It is as if, when Jesus taught, that no drunkard or liar or adulterer shall be saved, some Jew had said: In this you assign Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and David and Solomon to perdition. A man who is moved by such appeals shows he has more respect for man's opinion than for God's will. He sets what men think and do above what God ordains and requires. What we think of these or other great men will not affect their real destiny; what we think and do of God's command will fix our present and eternal destiny. If we set aside the law of God to avoid condemning the course of these or any other persons, great or small, we do not help them, we do lose our own souls. Such appeals are treason against God, and should not weigh a feather with a true believer in Christ.

But the Christian Advocate is right when it says charity cannot believe sprinkling or pouring is Christian baptism, because charity "rejoiceth in the truth," and there is no truth in that claim. It is utterly without foundation, so charity cannot believe it or allow the claim. The editor of the Christian Advocate knows there is not a lexicon in the world that translates the original of "baptize" by "sprinkle" or "pour" as a secondary or remote meaning, even: He knows the literature of the Greek language has been searched, every use of the term found collated, and not one example found of its being used in that sense. It is true some partisans, in their anxiety to justify the substitution of these for baptism, claim the word in general literature means "immerse," but that it has a sacred meaning that differs from this and in this sacred sense it is used in the Bible and admits of pouring or sprinkling. But do these persons consider in what light they put Jesus and the inspired men? They came to reveal, make known, make plain the will of God, and these men charge they use a word with a clear and well-defined meaning in common use among the people, in a wholly different sense, and give not the least intimation of such changed meaning. To say this was done is to charge Christ and the Holy Spirit, with misleading men and with introducing confusion and strife while praying and pleading for union and peace among their followers. Such a claim is a reproach upon Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit. The Christian Advocate claims these men believed they were baptized. Were it granted, does that prove they were or that it would be acceptable to God? Saul believed he served God in persecuting and imprisoning the saints, yet he says he obtained mercy only after he had repented of it, turned from it, and he obtained this mercy because he did it ignorantly in unbelief. But we are disposed to call in question the statement that some of the more eminent names here did believe sprinkling or pouring was the baptism taught in the New Testament. We refer especially to Luther, Calvin, and Wesley. All three of these bear unequivocal testimony to the fact that immersion was the baptism taught in the New Testament and practiced by the apostles and the early church.

Luther says, in his work on "The Sacrament of Baptism: " "First, 'baptism' is a Greek word. In Latin it can be translated 'immersion,' as when we plunge something into water, that it may be completely covered with water; and although that custom has been given up by most persons, for they do not wholly submerge the children, but only pour on them a little water, yet they ought to have been completely immersed and straightway drawn out again." He translates John's language: "I indeed dip you with water." "Baptism then signifies two things, death and resurrection—that is, full and complete justification. When the minister dips the child into the water, this signifies death; when he draws it out again, this signifies life. Thus Paul explains the matter: 'Therefore we are buried with him by baptism.' (See Rom. 6: 4.) . . . When the washing away of sin is attributed to baptism it is rightly so attributed. But the meaning of the phrase is too slight and weak to fully express baptism, which is rather a symbol of death and resurrection. For this reason I could wish that the baptized should be totally immersed, according to the meaning of the word and the signification of the mystery; not that I think it is necessary to do so, but that it would be well that so complete and perfect a thing as baptism should have its sign also in completeness and perfection, even as it was doubtless instituted by Christ." ("Primary Works," p. 192.) Luther tells what Christ and the Holy Spirit required, but states he does not think it necessary so to do.

Calvin says: "From these words, John 3: 23, it may be inferred that baptism was administered by John and Christ by plunging the whole body under water. Here we perceive how baptism was administered among the ancients, for they immersed the whole body in water. . . . The word 'baptize' means to immerse, and it is certain the rite of immersion was observed by the ancient church." ("Institutes," Book IV, chapter 15.) "Here we see the rite used among the men of old time in baptism, for they put all the body into the water. Now the use is this, that the minister doth only sprinkle the body or the head." (Commentary on Acts 8: 38.) "Whether the person baptized is to be wholly immersed, and that whether once or thrice, or whether he is only to be sprinkled with water, is not of the least consequence. Churches should be at liberty to adopt either according to the diversity of climate, although it is evident that the term 'baptize' means to immerse, and this was the form used by the primitive church." ("Institutes," Vol. III, p. 344.) Calvin says on the practice of sprinkling: "Wherefore the church did grant liberty to herself, since the beginning, to change the rites somewhat, excepting the substance. It is of no consequence at all whether the person that is baptized is totally immersed or whether he is merely sprinkled by an affusion of water. This should be a matter of choice to the churches in different regions." He tells what the Bible requires, but claims the right of the church to change it.

Mr. Wesley, in his Journal, Vol. I., page 20, says: "Mary Welch, aged eleven days, was baptized according to the custom of the first church, and the rule of the church of England, by immersion. The child was ill then, but recovered from that very hour." He says the first church practiced immersion. Vol. I., page 24, says: "May 5, 1736, in Savannah, Ga., I was asked to baptize a child of Mr. Parker, second bailiff of Savannah, but Mrs. Parker told me: 'Neither Mr. Parker nor I will consent to its being dipped.' I answered: 'If you certify that your child is weak, it will suffice (the rubric says) to pour water upon it.' She replied: 'No; the child is not weak, but I am resolved it shall not be dipped.' This argument I could not refute, so I went home and the child was baptized by another." This did not end the matter. The English law was in force and on September 1, 1737, Mr. Wesley was tried by a grand jury of forty-four men, found guilty, and ordered to leave the country. He gives this account of it (Journal, Vol. I., pages 42, 43): "Therein they asserted, upon oath, that John Wesley, clerk, had broken the laws of the realm, contrary to the peace of our sovereign Lord, the King, his honor and dignity: (1) By speaking and writing to Mrs. Williamson against her husband's consent; (2) by repelling her from the holy communion; (3) by not declaring his adherence to the Church of England; (4) by dividing the morning services of Sundays; (5) by refusing to baptize Mr. Parker's child, otherwise than by dipping, except the parents would certify that it was weak and was not able to bear it; (6) for repelling William Gough from the holy communion; (7) by refusing to read the burial services over the body of Nathaniel Polpill; (8) by calling himself Ordinary of Savannah; (9) by refusing to receive William Aglionby as godfather, only because he was not a communicant; (10) for refusing Jacob Matthews for the same reason, and baptizing an Indian traitor's child with only two sponsors. (This, I own, was wrong, for I ought at all hazards to have refused baptizing it till he had procured a third.)" So John Wesley was tried, found guilty, and expelled from the country for refusing to sprinkle a baby, insisting it ought to be immersed. In his notes on Rom. 6: 3, 4, he says: "We are buried with him," alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion."

Nothing could be made clearer than that Luther, Calvin, and Wesley all believed that the word "baptize" means to immerse. Hence immersion alone is baptism. They believed it was the scriptural and primitive baptism. Wesley was no doubt immersed in infancy. It is probable the others were. Luther and Calvin, while affirming immersion was the primitive and scriptural practice, claimed, like the Catholics and Episcopalians, that the church has the right to change the ordinance from baptism to affusion. So if they were sprinkled, they could not believe they were baptized scripturally, when they believed to baptize was to immerse. Exactly how Mr. Wesley justified the change I cannot tell, probably as the others did. If so, the Christian Advocate is not correct in saying they believed they were baptized. They believed they had received what the church substituted for baptism; they thought the church had the right to make the substitution.

They came out of the Roman Catholic Church, which then and now claims the right to "change not the essence," but the mode of "administering the sacraments." "Not only the Catholic Church, but also the pretended reform churches have altered the primitive custom in giving the sacrament of baptism, and now allow of baptism by sprinkling and pouring water upon the person baptized." (Notes on the Douay Bible, approved by Pope Pius IX.) In the time of these eminent reformers the right of the church to change the ordinances was not called in question. They all justified the change, and all scholars acknowledged it. In later years the right of the church to change the appointments of God has been vigorously denied, and some of those practicing the substitutes and unwilling to maintain the right of the church to change the ordinance or to surrender the substitutes have sought to justify them as embraced in the word "baptize." This has been done not by the scholars, but by the partisans. The real scholars of all ages say "baptize" means to dip, and that it was the primitive practice. It would very greatly simplify the discussion if a fair and just statement was made, so the true issues could be seen and investigated. The real question is, as the Catholic Church and Episcopal Church claim, has the church the right to change the ordinance of baptism to affusion? If she has not, but if God's appointment is to stand without change, immersion must be practiced. These three eminent men all claim the baptism of infants right. Of their position in this we say nothing now, as our point is, neither one of the three believed anything was scriptural baptism save immersion, and with them agreed all the scholars of their age and succeeding ages. Since "charity rejoiceth in the truth," it cannot accept sprinkling or pouring as baptism. The founders of the Lutheran Church, Presbyterian Church, and the Methodist Church did not believe sprinkling or pouring was scriptural baptism. Let us keep the true issue before the people.

One of the blessed, unending needs of heaven must surely be the need of giving forth into other lives the blessedness which God has poured into ours.—Lucy Larcom.

WORRIED WOMEN.

Women Worry About Little Things More Than They Ought.

Not enough iron in their blood.

What has iron to do with it? The iron of rich, red, strengthening, nourishing blood is one of the chief builders of nerve power.

Iron makes strength.

Weakness causes worry.

Women who are weak and nervous are thin, pale, or yellow-faced. They lack the rounded form of beautiful womanhood; they are irritable and hard to please; they suffer from headache, back ache, rheumatism, neuralgia; they feel weak, tired, unhappy, miserable.

Their pale color proves that they need iron to color their blood; their irritability and nervousness, that they need it to tone up and strengthen their nerves; their thinness, that they need it to cure their dyspepsia.

They can get what iron they need, in its best form, from Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

Not an empirical solution of iron salts, but a scientific preparation of tested value—a preparation that for forty-two years has been curing the sick by hundreds of thousands.

Health comes with plenty of iron in the blood. So does a strong constitution. The strength of iron is made from iron.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic banishes pain, brings back roses to faded cheeks, builds up nerves, conquers sickness.

A worthy lady of South Portsmouth, Va., Mrs. M. J. Welch, corroborates the above in these words: "For many, many years my blood was iron poor, though I did not know it. I used to have fresh, rosy cheeks and a plump, rounded form, but by degrees my good looks faded away until I began to look like a ghost. I lost strength and ambition and suffered from pains in my stomach, head, heart, back, muscles, and bones. I gave myself up in despair. Finally, a good friend induced me to try Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. From the good symptoms which at once began to show themselves I saw what had been wrong with me. I had suffered from want of iron, and it remained for Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic to supply it and cured me. I am now in good health and feel better than I have for years."

Here is evidence from near at hand:

"Dallas, Tex., December 16, 1897.

"Dallas News—Gentlemen: I can cheerfully recommend Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic to any one as a strengthening tonic. After suffering some months with slow fever I used one bottle, and can now thank this splendid remedy for the fact that I am living and well. Very respectfully,

To those living under the gospel covenant, who love and serve God, he has given "exceeding great and precious promises." He has promised them salvation from sin, salvation from the grave, and eternal redemption; all of which Christ, the Savior, wrought out for them by the shedding of his own blood and his glorious resurrection from the grave, in which he burst the bars of death and brought life and immortality to light. He has promised them an entrance into his eternal city, where he shall dwell with them and be their God, and they shall be his people; where they shall pluck and eat of the fruit of the tree of life and live forever beyond the reach of sorrow, pain, sickness, disease, and death; where they shall be permitted to drink of the crystal stream of the water of life, which shall flow from the throne of God and of the Lamb, of which he who drinks shall thirst no more; and where they shall be permitted to raise their voices in anthems of praises to God and to the Lamb, their adorable Redeemer, with angels around the eternal throne, in strains sweeter than mortal tongues have ever made.

Those who lived previous to the introduction of the Christian institution did not receive these promises, yet many of them were faithful to God. The writer of the letter to the Hebrews mentions a number, of whom he says: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." (Heb. 11: 13.) Of others he says: "Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection; and others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; (of whom the world was not worthy;) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." (Heb. 11: 32-40.)

Surely we, to whom God has given the "precious and exceeding great promises," which we have mentioned above, should be moved by this great "cloud of witnesses," who did not receive these promises, to lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us," and to "run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." (See Heb. 12: 1, 2.) These ancient worthies could have no clear conception of the eternal redemption which the Savior wrought out by his blood. We can scarcely learn from the Old Testament, which contains the only teaching to which they had access, of an existence beyond the grave, without the help of the New Testament; but they served God faithfully, subjecting themselves to the severest of tortures and afflictions, to destitution, and to cruel death. Is it not then sad and shameful that the great majority of those living under the gospel dispensation, to whom God has given "the greatest and most precious promises," on condition that they will serve him faithfully, are disregarding his great mercy and the better provisions which he has made for them?

Every transgression and disobedience under the Jewish covenant received a just retribution, or recompense of reward; but there is a retribution threatened those who neglect the provisions of the gospel covenant far more severe than those inflicted upon the Jews, who disobeyed and transgressed the laws of the Mosaic covenant, which they cannot escape. (See Heb. 2: 1-3.) This retribution will consist in departing from Christ, at the judgment of the great day, and going "into everlasting punishment"—into "the everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels;" it will consist in being "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." (See Matt. 25; also 2 Thes. 1.)

O, friendly sinner, will you not avail yourself of the merciful provisions of the gospel of the Son of God, that you may escape this terrible retribution and enjoy forever the "exceeding great and precious promises" of God? Lockett, Ga. FLAVIL HALL.

Following hard upon The Hague Peace Conference of the Nations comes a large increase in naval means of warfare in every government represented there. All seem to be acting on the principle that the way to insure peace is to be prepared for war. According to the Kaiser's new naval programme, Germany will have 40 battle ships in 1910, instead of the 17 she has now; 26 large cruisers, instead of 11; 48 small cruisers and gunboats, in place of 32; and 114 torpedo boats, instead of 84, as at present. The United States has now a navy that compares favorably with any of the European powers. England is adding new and more powerful vessels to a navy that already outranked any other. Russia, Japan, France, and Spain are all increasing their naval power at a rapid rate. The Hague Peace Conference seems to have been a failure.

A Reasonable Conclusion.

Stopping a day at a summer resort, I made the acquaintance of Brother A., a very earnest preacher, who was taking a rest there. A number of families and individuals were there spending the hot months. Among these were a man and his wife from a town out West. They were active members of the Methodist Church. They had never heard a preacher who claimed to be simply a Christian preacher, but the gentleman hearing Brother A. the day before, became interested, sought an interview, and asked many questions about this, to him, new doctrine. He also requested Brother A. to visit him at his lodging place, so his wife might hear also about these things. At Brother A.'s request, I went with him.

We were cordially received. The gentleman was indeed very favorable, but the wife seemed unapproachable. Being called out on the question, Brother A. told about "our people;" their wonderful growth, great institutions of learning, periodicals, missionary enterprises, etc. He then unfolded the doctrine as held, and after telling what they taught about faith, repentance, baptism, etc., he made a number of quotations from Wesley and Clarke, fathers of Methodism, showing that they taught the same things.

The gentleman seemed to accept everything, but the wife would occasionally put in an objection. Finally, she came at Brother A. this way: "Where we live we have a large, good, working church; we have a good house of worship; are able to have, and do have, a good preacher all the time; there are none of your people there, so that, if we should go with you, we would be alone, having no place to worship nor anybody to worship with; and now if, as you say, the Methodists teach these same things that you teach, I cannot see what we will gain by going with you."

This coming, as it seemed to me, unexpectedly, so completely floored Brother A. that he was unable to recover himself.

This is a faithful recital of a real incident, which impresses a very obvious lesson. If we have nothing better than others, let us give up our contention; if we have something better, let us not fail to teach and impress it. J. D. FLOYD.

Wild With Eczema

Fire Could Not Have Been More Painful.

"After spending two years in taking all kinds of medicines that were suggested for eczema, but without avail, my mother was induced to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. The result was wonderfully gratifying. Her limbs had been terribly lacerated by the disease, and there were times when fire could not have been more painful. She was, in fact, almost wild. Two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla completely cured her, and not a trace of eczema was left." E. W. DECKER, Gardiner, N. Y.

Eat Well, Sleep Well.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has been a great blessing to me. I was weak, irritable, tired and nervous; had no appetite and was always sad and despondent. One day I got hold of a little book about Hood's Sarsaparilla. I looked it over and resolved to try a bottle. I was better before it was gone, so I kept on until I had taken five bottles. I can now sleep well, feel cheerful and can do all my work, including plain sewing, and I can walk two or three miles a day. I am 55 years old and now feel that life is worth living." Mrs. EMMA SMITH, 68 E. Mitchell St., Oswego, N. Y.

Critical Period of Life.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla during the critical period of my life, and now, at the age of 60 years, I am strong and healthy. It is a great medicine for the blood. I find Hood's to be the best." Mrs. H. POMROY, 22 Lansing Street, Auburn, N. Y.

You can buy Hood's Sarsaparilla of any druggist. Be sure to ask for Hood's and do not accept any substitute.

Binding and Loosing.

"I visited, for the first time, Alexandria, Gadsden, Albertville, Guntersville, Madison, Huntsville, Mooresville, Decatur, and New Decatur. I met with some noble men and women in these several towns and cities; but the cause of New Testament truth and teaching is weak at all these points, and the outlook at most of these points is not flattering, the chief obstacle being the prevalence of 'anti-lam.' The intentions of these brethren are, as a rule, good, but they have been misled. They have been taught that whatsoever the apostles bound on earth is also bound in heaven; but they have not been taught that whatsoever the apostles loosed on earth is also loosed in heaven. They proceed, therefore, to bind where the apostles did not bind, and to make tests of fellowship that are altogether unwarranted by Holy Writ. Many of the brethren of North Alabama, particularly the better informed among them, are opening their eyes to the fact that they have been misled, and that what they have been induced to believe and practice is sectarianism in disguise." (S. R. Hawkins, in Christian Standard.)

It seems from the above that Brother Hawkins (who is an old friend of the writer) is having a tough time planting "State work" in Alabama. The Savior says: "Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 13.) Moses E. Lord once said: "Abrupt changes will breed suspicion and lead to talk. Avoid these." If the "State evangelist" of Alabama would quit trying to explain the gearing and internal boxes of his clumsy machine known as "State work," and go to preaching sin and salvation from sin, as taught in the New Testament, I doubt not he would receive a cordial reception by the disciples of the State of Alabama. He has the ability and attainments to make a very useful man in the world if he would come back to the church of God and abandon "State boards," "State work," and all such things which are producing so much discord and strife among the churches of Christ. When a man of Brother Hawkins' erudition, who has been trained under such professors as McGarvey, Graham, and Grubbs, wrests the Scriptures as he does in the above, it shows that he realizes the weakness and folly of his man-made machine. If he will examine any good commentary on Matt. 18: 19 and Matt. 18: 18, he will find that the terms "bind" and "loose" do not in any way justify "State work" in Alabama.

I quote from Dr. Albert Barnes, that eminent Presbyterian scholar, who needs no introduction to the great world of thought and learning: "These words were spoken to the apostles. Jesus had before addressed the same words to Peter. (Matt. 16: 19.) He employs them here to signify that they all had the same power, that in ordering the affairs of the church he did not intend to give Peter any supremacy or any exclusive right to regulate it. The meaning of this verse is, whatever you shall do in the discipline of the church shall be approved by God, or bound in heaven. This promise, therefore, cannot be understood as extending to all Christians or ministers for all others, but the apostles may err." (Barnes' "Notes on Matt. 18: 18.")

I also refer Brother Hawkins to such commentators as Lightfoot, Dr. George Campbell, and Dean Mansel, in Bible Commentary. He will find that the "binding" and "loosing" belonged to the apostles, and not to any "State evangelist." To bind a thing was to forbid it; to loose it was to allow it to be done. Now, if he will find where any of the apostles "loosed" any missionary society other than the church of God, then, and not till then, will his point be well taken in regard to "binding" and "loosing."

We have a missionary society here in South Kentucky that is incorporated under the laws of the State. It is an ecclesiasticism to all intents and purposes. The writer has faithfully and earnestly warned the general manager of this institution to abandon this wickedness, come back to the church of God, and flee from the wrath to come, but without avail. It is high time that men should cease to corrupt and dishonor the church of God, the Lamb's bride, the light of the world. How awful must be the doom of those who persist in enticing her from the pathway of truth and virtue, and converting her into a crimson queen or scarlet woman of Babylon!

I hope Brother Hawkins will come back to the church of God and send greetings to Brother Spicer and Brother Spiegel that together they may battle for New Testament Christianity in Alabama; that they may abandon all man-made machines and devices, and preach Christ, and him crucified, to their dying fellow-men. Weak men wait for opportunities, while strong men make them. Some good men get entangled with these societies and almost before they know it they are past redemption point. They lack the courage to come out from among them and stand on the Lord's side. May the good Lord help us all to do better, is the sincere wish of the writer.

WONDERFUL CURES BY SWAMP-ROOT.

Deacon Pollard Finds Swamp-Root Present Help in Time of Trouble.

Among the many famous cures of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver, and bladder remedy, the ones published this week for the benefit of Gospel Advocate readers speak in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great remedy.

Deacon Charles F. Pollard, a prominent Baptist deacon, of Lynn, Mass., residing at 74 High Rock street, adds his testimony to the wealth of others, as to the wonderful curative effects of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. Deacon Pollard, on January 2, writes:

"For years I had kidney and bladder troubles, and was also a victim of acute rheumatism in my arms and legs. The pains from the latter affection were very hard to bear. I tried many doctors and medicines without benefit. Some time ago I commenced to take Swamp-Root. It has entirely cured my rheumatism and has greatly helped my other troubles. I should not think of keeping house without having Swamp-Root as a conspicuous feature of the housekeeping utensils. I can only speak in the highest praise of its health-giving properties.

"C. F. POLLARD."

What a Woman Says of Swamp-Root.

Mrs. H. N. Wheeler, of 268 Boston St., Lynn, Mass., writes on December 11, 1899: "About 18 months ago I had a very severe attack of gripe. I was extremely sick for three weeks, and when I finally was able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, but I felt certain that they were the cause of my trouble. My sister, Mrs. C. E. Littlefield, of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle from my druggist and found it a very pleasant medicine to take, and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one, found I was completely cured. My strength returned, and to-day I am as well as ever. My business is that of canvasser; I am on my feet a great deal of the time, and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is therefore all the more remarkable, and is exceedingly gratifying to me.

"MRS. H. N. WHEELER."

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince you, and you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, excess of uric acid, gravel, rheumatic pains, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night to empty the bladder; sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness; sallow, unhealthy complexion; puffy or dark circles under the eyes, loss of ambition, and general weakness and debility.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

To prove its wonderful curative properties send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book by mail prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health—in fact, their very lives—to the wonderful curative properties of this world-famous kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that those of our readers who have not already tried it are advised to write for a free sample bottle and to be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

The Shed Blood of Christ.

How often during the last thirty years have I heard the argument that Christ shed his blood in his death; that we must come into his death to come in contact with his blood; that we are baptized into his death, and, therefore, only in baptism do we reach the blood of Christ! Quite recently I heard it again from the pulpit, and now comes Brother Jesse D. Walling with it in the Gospel Advocate of February 8, 1900.

This argument, like many other unnecessary ones, is intended to strengthen the position that baptism is for the remission of sins, and like some others, it can be taken up by those we call sectarians and used by them as a club to beat out our theological brains.

Truly, "we are baptized into Christ's death." Paul says so. This means that in baptism we enter into a new relationship to Christ; we become dead to former things; we become alive to God through Christ; we live the Christian life by faith in him. God forgives our sins, and that, too, for the sake of the shed blood of Christ. By faith in the light which he gives us in the gospel, we are led to "walk in the light, as he is in the light, . . . and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.)

True, also, Christ shed his blood in his death, at the time of his death—an idea of his death by no means akin to that into which we are said to be baptized. It is folly to talk of being baptized into the time of Christ's death. Hence, to argue that we reach Christ's blood by being baptized into his death—i. e., passing into a relationship, because he shed his blood in his death, at the time of his death—is to make a jumble of ideas in which one idea cannot be so much as a figure of the other.

Whatever we may mean by this unnecessary and illogical argument, it is so easily perverted and misconstrued by our opponents that it renders us vulnerable to some of their attacks. If we must be baptized, in order to come into contact with the blood of Christ, then the conclusion is that we receive none of the benefits of his blood before baptism. We are outside of its influences, and all changes wrought within us before we submit to baptism are produced independently of Christ's blood. Hence we have a formal, heartless something called faith, repentance, and confession, after which baptism brings us into Christ's death; and as he shed his blood in his death, we thus come into contact with his blood and are saved by it.

We all know that this representation is false. The gospel is God's power to salvation. The preaching of the gospel by the apostles is the word, the good seed by which we are begotten. The death of Christ, the shedding of his blood for the remission of sins, is an essential and fundamental part of that gospel. We know that the individual's heart must be thoroughly changed before he is a fit subject for baptism. This change in the affections, the purpose, the will, and the practice is wrought by faith in the shedding of Christ's blood on the cross. By that faith the creature's will is subdued to the will of God. He is now begotten (not born) of God; he is no longer a sinner in heart, in purpose, or in practice; he hates sin and loves righteousness as much, other things being equal, as he can ever do. Until he is thus crucified with Christ he is not a fit subject to be buried with Christ in baptism.

We find this idea abundantly proven by the typology of the Old Testament. The Israelites in Egyptian bondage could not start on their journey after Moses through their baptism in the Red Sea till they had first slain the passover lamb and surrounded the doors of their houses with his blood. So the sinner in bondage must first behold Christ upon the cross as "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," and sprinkle the door of his heart with Christ's blood. So, also, we find the priests, type of Christians in God's temple, the church, could not pass on to the laver, type of baptism, till they had first made an offering of a bloody sacrifice upon the altar of burnt offerings. Even so the alien that essays to come to God must come by Jesus Christ, offering his blood, as it were, upon the altar of his heart and invoking the name of the Lord. The only part the creature can perform in making the application of Christ's blood is to believe in it and trust it. God's part is that he forgives man's sins for the sake of the blood of his Son. Faith in the merits of that blood is just as strong in the believer's heart before baptism as after. But God's promise is to forgive the sins of him who obeys him in baptism. In that ordinance he has promised to meet the loyal, loving heart and acknowledge him as his child—not begotten only, but "born of water and of the Spirit."

Brethren, the Bible teaches plainly enough that baptism is for the remission of sins. There is no need that we should undertake to sustain it by fallacies. L. C. WELLS. Sidney, Tex.

Southern Railway's New York Office.

Since the reorganization and consolidation of the various railways of the South into one great corporation—the Southern Railway Company—under the admirably conducted management of the banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co., and the consequent presidency of Mr. Samuel Spencer, this trunk system has taken its place as one of the greatest of this country. The remarkable industrial and material development of the South, together with the developed comforts of a winter sojourn there, have given to it an enormous passenger traffic, which year by year increases. To meet the demands and to further the convenience of the public the company has recently established an uptown office at No. 1185 Broadway, where the General Eastern Passenger Agent, Mr. A. S. Thweatt, is located. The office has been handsomely and luxuriously fitted up with every accommodation for the patrons of the road in the transaction of business, purchase of tickets, securing of berths, etc. These tickets may be procured to Cuba, Mexico, California, or any other point in the great South and West. To an old-timer of thirty years ago, recalling the discomforts of a trip through the Southern States, the up-to-date luxury of travel over the Southern Railway and its connections is a gratifying surprise.—Town Topics, March 15, 1900.

It is not what we wish to appear, nor even what we think ourselves to be, but what we really are, that is doing business in the world—doing our work, filling our place, making the record that we may meet with astonishment by and by. The self our next-door neighbor sees in us may be a very different person from the one we fancy we see in the mirror every morning. It is easy to look into our minds and find that we approve of this virtue and that goodness, that our views concerning truth, justice, and kindness are all right, and so complacently to conclude that we are very good people, when in point of fact our daily living has become uncoupled from our opinions and is far back on the track. A very short-sighted teacher had left her glasses at home one day, and, though sorely missing them, she attempted to carry on the session as usual. She stood at the blackboard explaining a problem in a way that seemed to her very clear and simple, but the children only tittered. At last, one bolder than the rest explained: "Please'm, that's just a piece of rolled-up paper in your hand, and 'twon't make a mark. The figgerin' in your head's all right, but you ain't workin' out nothin' we can see." It is the working out theories out into sight—our religion out into daily life—that counts.—Forward.

A Baptizing Incident.

People, as a rule, will respect those who respect themselves. It is often the case where there is misconduct at church those who are carrying on the service are responsible for it. As a striking illustration of this I relate that which follows:

Several years ago I was holding a meeting at Tracy City, Tenn. Quite a number were added to the church during the meeting. Old Brother Warren, having the time, prepared a beautiful place for baptizing, in the little mountain stream that ran by the place. This he did by making a dam and by clearing away the bushes from a small space on the side next to the town. On the opposite side there was a cleared space that had been in cultivation. On the second Sunday of the meeting six were to be baptized, and 3 P.M. was the time announced for that purpose.

The M. E. Church had had a revival a short time before, and of those who joined the Methodist Church, six demanded immersion. The Methodist preacher had appointed 2 o'clock of this same evening as the time to immerse his candidates. Going to a place above the town, and finding the pool filled with coke ashes, he came down to our place. He and his crowd reached the place a little before 3 o'clock.

On Sundays there are many idle people there, and two baptizings brought out a great crowd. The cleared space on the side from which we approached the stream was packed full, while on the opposite side there were not less than three hundred; some women, but mostly young men.

There had been much shouting in the revival at the Methodist Church. The preacher was a jovial man, who enjoyed a hearty laugh. To get to water of a suitable depth it was necessary to go down into the stream and then go about twenty feet up it.

When I reached the place the Methodist preacher was about ready to take his first subject, a lady, in. When he raised her up she was very happy and she began to shout. The preacher, I suppose, was happy, too, and he began to laugh very heartily. This seemed to be infectious, causing much merriment among the spectators. The same was repeated in each case.

As soon as I saw how things were going, I suggested to some of my subjects that we defer our service, not feeling like engaging in such an important work amid such disorder.

The last one baptized was a tall, robust lady, and when she began to shout the preacher pulled loose from her and marched right out of the water, saying as he did so: "When you get enough you can come out." This capped the climax, and such laughing as that crowd did I scarcely ever heard.

At this, an old man whom I was to baptize came to me and said: "This is a shame; let us go home and come back to-morrow." I readily assented. Brother W. P. Sims, of Pelham, Tenn., was there, and, overhearing our talk, said: "Let us not give up until we make an effort to have order." I replied: "You are right." Then Brother Sims, in a strong and commanding tone, asked the attention of the people. I stepped down to the edge of the water, where all could see me, and made a talk on the death of Christ, closing with the best description I could give of his burial and resurrection. I then said: "Ladies and gentlemen, we understand the institution to which we are about to attend represents this burial and resurrection of Christ, and is, therefore, a very solemn institution. Will you please conduct yourselves in a quiet and orderly way while we attend to it?"

A hot August sun was beaming down on that crowd, yet some one in front set the example by taking off his hat, when, seemingly, the whole audience removed their hats, and all remained as still as death until the service was over. I never witnessed such a scene before, and will likely never witness such a scene again.

The next day I met a young man of the world on the street. Stopping me, he said: "You must not be too hard on us. I was in that rollicking crowd down at the baptizing yesterday, and if that other preacher had behaved, we would have behaved. In proof of this you saw how we did when you took hold."

I have always blamed that preacher for the disorder of that day.

People who take it at this season say they are kept healthy the year round. It is because this medicine expels impurities and makes the blood rich and health giving.

A New Work.

During the twenty years that I have been a preacher of the gospel, I have never devoted all my time to preaching. I have usually held protracted meetings in the summer and fall, and worked at the newspaper business in the winter and spring. In these summer meetings I estimate that some fifteen hundred or two thousand persons have been brought into the kingdom of God. A good many years ago I held quite a number of meetings in Northeastern Texas, in Titus and Morris Counties. Within a space some twenty miles square, east of the town of Mt. Pleasant, I held twenty protracted meetings, which resulted in some four hundred conversions and the establishment of five or six churches. These congregations, with one exception, have declined in membership and usefulness in recent years, and are at present mere skeletons of their former proportions. I have recently accepted work among them and expect to devote the whole year to that section of country. It is my intention to confine my labors to Titus and Morris Counties and build up these little congregations, and preach the gospel in the regions contiguous to them.

Each church has agreed to hold at least one protracted meeting in a destitute neighborhood—an adjacent town or community where there are no Christians. This I consider true and genuine missionary work, and I shall expect good results to follow. The churches at Mt. Pleasant, Cookeville, Rocky Branch, Omaha, Center Grove, and perhaps one or two other places will support the work and give me such financial assistance as they are able. There is not much money in sight in the work, but I think great good can be accomplished, and I expect to realize a fair remuneration for the labor. My post office will still be Dallas, Tex.; whence all mail will be forwarded to me here. I shall write some for the Gospel Advocate and for The Way, and shall try to put these two papers in every Christian family in my new field of labor. To the work, to the work!

From Japan.

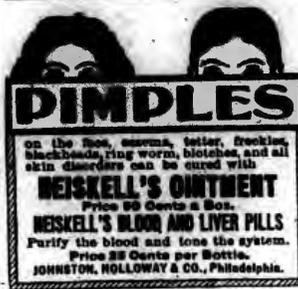

I have nothing especially encouraging to write from Japan. This winter has been the severest in my twelve years' experience in Japan. The opposition to Christianity has settled into almost insurmountable indifference, and mission work has made little progress.

The people still continue to read, particularly the student class. We have been endeavoring to establish an industrial printing press by which we may help to give the people Christian literature. By the generous help of a brother in America we have been enabled to build a small house for the printing office. We have also bought about fifty dollars' worth of type. Miss Nettie Craynon has taken stock in a printing press which has been bought for one hundred and twenty-five dollars, on which, however, fifty dollars is yet to be paid. This amount is due the last of this month, and there is no money in the treasury, but we have a good supply of faith on hand.

Besides the Voice, which we publish in English and Japanese, we get out now a weekly, Child's Paper, in Japanese, containing the Sunday school lessons. Miss Penrod, Miss True, and Miss Craynon share the expenses of the Child's Paper with me and also help in its get-up. But we are not yet able to print these papers ourselves on account of lack of sufficient type and other equipments, so we have to put the work out to other printers. It would require only two hundred dollars to put our industrial printing press to work, when we would be able not only to print our own periodicals, but to take in work for other printers. It would help to make the work more supporting. Besides this, it is intended to help destitute and needy people by giving them work to do and an education, while at the same time they may be learning a trade.

If any brother or church wishes to have part in this work, now is the special time of its need. So far as my own ability extends, I am doing all I can. A very little from many will go far in helping to spread the gospel in Japan. We have all been more or less afflicted with colds this winter, and Sister Bishop is now (February 22) not very well.

Seventy Years in Dixie By F. D. SRYGLEY

An intensely interesting book, consisting mainly of the recollections, sayings, and doings of the inimitable T. W. Caskey. Compiled, arranged, and written by F. D. Srygley. It gives interesting descriptions of the manners and customs of the country when Indians were here, when people lived in log huts and hunted deer, bear, and other wild animals for a living. It tells how the country was cleared and how houses were furnished. It describes marriages, funerals, revival meetings, political gatherings, logrollings, corn shuckings, singing schools, dances, frolics, quiltings, making soap, carding, spinning, weaving cloth, etc., in the olden times. It tells about slavery, secession, and the war. It is humorous, pathetic, religious, biographical, and full of deeply interesting information. Illustrated.

The Bible and Japan.

Social, educational, and political conditions in Japan have undergone a great transformation from what they used to be. Village neighbors with village, town with town, and city with city in the most friendly manner; the samurai's two swords have long since dropped off, and he goes along like common folk—friendly and un-molested; the moat, the high stone wall, the barred gate, and the frowning castle have been abandoned, and are only preserved as relics of an age that is past; the boys and the girls go to the common schools and study a very carefully prepared course, the completion of which requires eighteen years, including from A B C to the completion of the course in the Imperial University; and the emperor again sits on the throne and wields the scepter, while petty wars and untold cruelty have gradually ceased. Why all this?

of the Bible directly was almost an impossibility. To teach a few "English students" and devote his time to a study of the language for a translation of the Scriptures was about all that could be done for several years. Portions of the Scriptures in Japanese in time began to be given out to the people, and before many years the whole Bible was translated. The people were anxious to learn about the great Western countries. The emperor himself, then but a boy deprived of his power, began to feel the influence of the West. His eyes were opened to his situation as being practically a prisoner and deprived of the throne.

In 1868 there was a revolution and a civil war. The Tenshisama was again restored to power and the feudal system was at an end. A good system of public schools sprang up all over the country and a university was established at Tokyo. The missionaries were given places in the schools to teach English and were consulted as to school systems, the best methods of teaching the best English text-books, and so on. True, other foreigners besides missionaries were employed as school systems, the best methods of teaching the best English text-books, and so on. True, other foreigners besides missionaries were employed as school systems, the best methods of teaching the best English text-books, and so on.

It was only last year, that Mr. Buck, Minister of the United States to Japan, said to a fellow-missionary that the missionary force in Japan was a greater civilizing influence than all others combined. He does not claim to be a Christian himself. They are civilizers because of the message they carry. One thing that the missionaries do that should be commended (Catholics excepted):

...of freedom and is turning Japan and other Asiatic countries upside down also. It is the same power that broke the back of Rome and gave the people religious freedom; for it is worthy of note that though the Roman Catholics had been in Japan some three hundred years, they had not enlightened the people nor caused a reform. Their method was much the same as the Buddhist priests, to rule the people by ignorance and superstition. The change in the life of the worshiper was but little more than to turn from the image of Buddha to bow before the image of the Virgin Mary; hence until some fifty years ago Japan went on as of old—shut up in ignorance and idolatry.

The time had come for God to open a door for his word. There was a man who had fitted himself for this work and God used him. In the year 1853 Commodore Perry sailed into a port of Japan, near Tokyo, with some warships. He fired some powder-loaded cannon as salutes that scared the people into a consternation, and caused a feeble attempt on their part to open battle against the "hairy foreigners." Perry explained the shooting of his big guns and told the officials that he had only come to make a treaty of peace and for commercial purposes, etc., between Japan and America.

After this treaty among the very first to enter Japan were the missionaries. They had their faults that could be pointed out if we were on that subject, but one thing they did and that was the thing that has revolutionized the country: they gave the people the Bible. It was slow work at first and against many odds. Public meetings were not allowed, and even the teaching done in the missionary's home was watched with great suspicion and often prohibited. Teaching other nation owes her enlightenment and elevation to the teachings of this book; and the missionary is the earthen vessel in God's hands to carry this elevating power to the nations. Charles Denby, former Minister to China and member of the Philippine Commission, in a late article on China, given in Callie's Weekly, says: "The silent but persistent worker, the missionary, has been the pioneer of modern civilization as well as Christianity." He also adds that "China in her length and breadth is open to-day to the missionary of every nation and every creed." The Lord is opening up the nations for his word as never before. His people should be ready to enter the open doors.

Literary Notice.

The press of the Vir Publishing Company, of Philadelphia, established two years ago, to issue purity literature of the most candid but cleanest kind, has fully demonstrated that books like those to men, by Dr. Stall, and those to women, by Dr. Wool-Allen, can secure the most eminent commendation and extensive circulation. This company is soon to publish a series of booklets by eminent writers in England. The brochure, by F. B. Meyer, of London, with an introduction by Theodore L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, entitled, "A Holy Temple—Words of Purity to Young Men," will be issued in a few days, and that they may circulate by the million they are to be sold at the low cost of five cents per copy.

Church News.

TENNESSEE.

Nashville, March 20.—On Wednesday, March 7, at 2 P.M., I preached in Sister Eliza Baker's house, near the lines of Davidson and Rutherford Counties, and baptized her son; on Thursday and Friday following, I preached in Sister Mamma Charlton's house; and I preached at Johnson Chapel on Friday night, the 9th; pretty fair crowds attending these meetings. At 11 A.M., on the second Lord's day in March, I held services at the chapel, and at 2 P.M., at Sister Baker's house, and much interest seemed to be manifested. Maple Hill, Lebanon, North Street, and Owens' Chapel continue to have my thanks for their fellowship in this work. I follow their examples. We all times see and know the good we are doing, but we should and must do our duty. The gospel fields are now ripe, but the true laborers are few. I am glad to say that some few of the colored congregations and many of the whites are becoming more and more interested in this work. The more I come in contact with them, it seems the better we understand each other. May the Lord have all the glory. S. W. WOMACK.

TEXAS.

Charleston, March 20.—Please allow me space in the Gospel Advocate to say I am once more able to be in the field, sowing the seed of the kingdom to a lost and dying people. I was greatly hindered during the winter, having lost almost all I had when my house burned, and being confined to the bedside of my sick babe for twenty-seven days. But, thank God, I am once more preaching the story of the cross. I am giving three Lord's days in each month to destitute places. Is that doing the work of an evangelist, or must I preach to strong congregations that pay well? Some practice this and call themselves "evangelists." Last year I traveled something over thirteen hundred miles and preached two hundred and ten discourses at my own expense. This year I enter the field with a greater zeal than I ever had before, notwithstanding I am as poor as a church mouse. I made an appeal for help when my house burned, and the brethren and sisters remembered me to the amount of $32.10, also three quilts and a nice Bible. I have received since I reported last: From Lon. Ga. (no name), $0.50; Brother R. W. Huddleston, Sipe Springs, Tex., $0.60; Brother R. J. Gulley, Hutto, Tex., a nice Bible; "A Sister," Hatchie, Tenn., $1; and a letter, containing $1 and many kind words from a sister of Leipers Fork, Tenn. I wish to say the last two letters mentioned were full of comfort and show the love that some sisters have for the poor preacher's wife. May God bless all those who have aided us in getting straightened out to keeping house again. I have many friends and relatives who live in Monroe, Blount, and Loudon Counties, Tenn., and long to go back to teach them the gospel of Christ. There are some brethren going to the Bible School at Nashville that I learned to love while they were at home. Yes, there are Brother Abe Foster and Brother Cap Foster. God bless them! They have relatives not far from me, who have treated me kindly. They will not be soon forgotten. May God bless those who are faithful.

A New Work.

During the twenty years that I have been a preacher of the gospel, I have never devoted all my time to preaching. I have usually held protracted meetings in the summer and fall, and worked at the newspaper business in the winter and spring. In these summer meetings I estimate that some fifteen hundred or two thousand persons have been brought into the kingdom of God. A good many years ago I held quite a number of meetings in Northeastern Texas, Morris Counties. Within a space some twenty miles square, east of the town of Mt. Pleasant, I held twenty protracted meetings, which resulted in some four hundred conversions and the establishment of five or six churches. These congregations, with one exception, have declined in membership and usefulness in recent years, and are at present mere skeletons of their former proportions. I have recently accepted work among them and expect to devote the whole year to that section of country. It is my intention to confine my labors to Titus and Morris Counties and build up these little congregations, and preach the gospel in the regions contiguous to them.

Each church has agreed to hold at least one protracted meeting in a destitute neighborhood—an adjacent town or community where there are no Christians. This I consider true and genuine missionary work, and I shall expect good results to follow. The churches at Mt. Pleasant, Cookeville, Rocky Branch, Omaha, Center Grove, and perhaps one or two other places will support the work and give me such financial assistance as they are able. There is not much money in sight in the work, but I think great good can be accomplished, and I expect to realize a fair remuneration for the labor. My post office will still be Dallas, Tex., whence all mail will be forwarded to me here. I shall write some for the Gospel Advocate and for The Way, and shall try to put these two papers in every Christian family in my new field of labor. To the work, to the work!

From Japan.

I have nothing especially encouraging to write from Japan. This winter has been the severest in my twelve years' experience in Japan. The opposition to Christianity has settled into almost insurmountable indifference, and mission work has made little progress.

The people still continue to read, particularly the student class. We have been endeavoring to establish an industrial printing press by which we may help to give the people Christian literature. By the generous help of a brother in America we have been enabled to build a small house for the printing office. We have also bought about fifty dollars' worth of type. Miss Nettie Craynon has taken stock in a printing press which has been bought for one hundred and twenty-five dollars, on which, however, fifty dollars is yet to be paid. This amount is due the last of this month, and there is no money in the treasury, but we have a good supply of faith on hand.

Besides the Voice, which we publish in English and Japanese, we get out now a weekly, Child's Paper, in Japanese, containing the Sunday school lessons. Miss Penrod, Miss True, and Miss Craynon share the expenses of the Child's Paper with me and also help in its get-up. But we are not yet able to print these papers ourselves on account of lack of sufficient type and other equipments, so we have to put the work out to other printers. It would require only two hundred dollars to put our industrial printing press to work, when we would be able not only to print our own periodicals, but to take in work for others, which would help to make the work self-supporting. Besides this, it is intended to help destitute and needy children by giving them work to do and also an education, while at the same time they may be learning a trade.

If any brother or church wishes to have part in this work, now is the special time of its need. So far as my own ability extends, I am doing all I can. A very little from many will go far in helping to spread the gospel in Japan. We have all been more or less afflicted with colds this winter, and Sister Bishop is now (February 22) not very well.

Seventy Years in Dixie

By F. D. SRYGLEY

An intensely interesting book, consisting mainly of the recollections, sayings, and doings of the inimitable T. W. Caskey. Compiled, arranged, and written by F. D. Srygley. It gives interesting descriptions of the manners and customs of the country when Indians were here, when people lived in log huts and hunted deer, bear, and other wild animals for a living. It tells how the country was cleared and how houses were furnished. It describes marriages, funerals, revival meetings, political gatherings, logrollings, corn shuckings, singing schools, dances, frolics, quiltings, making soap, carding, spinning, weaving cloth, etc., in the olden times. It tells about slavery, secession, and the war. It is humorous, pathetic, religious, biographical, and full of deeply interesting information. Illustrated.

The Bible and Japan.

Social, educational, and political conditions in Japan have undergone a great transformation from what they used to be. Village neighbors with village, town with town, and city with city in the most friendly manner; the samurai's two swords have long since dropped off, and he goes along like common folks—friendly and unmolested; the moat, the high stone wall, the barred gate, and the frowning castle have been abandoned, and are only preserved as relics of an age that is past; the boys and the girls go to the common schools and study a very carefully prepared course, the completion of which requires eighteen years, including from A B C to the completion of the course in the Imperial University; and the emperor again sits on the throne and wields the scepter, while petty wars and untold cruelty have gradually ceased. Why all this?

"The entrance of thy word giveth light." The same power that led mediæval Europe out of feudalism and barbarity, and planted a nation in America on principles of freedom and equality, has turned and is turning Japan and other Asiatic countries upside down also. It is the same power that broke the back of Rome and gave the people religious freedom; for it is worthy of note that though the Roman Catholics had been in Japan some three hundred years, they had not enlightened the people nor caused a reform. Their method was much the same as the Buddhist priests, to rule the people by ignorance and superstition. The change in the life of the worshiper was but little more than to turn from the image of Buddha to bow before the image of the Virgin Mary; hence until some fifty years ago Japan went on as of old—shut up in ignorance and idolatry.

The time had come for God to open a door for his word. There was a man who had fitted himself for this work and God used him. In the year 1853 Commodore Perry sailed into a port of Japan, near Tokyo, with some warships. He fired some powder-loaded cannon as salutes that scared the people into a consternation, and caused a feeble attempt on their part to open battle against the "hairy foreigner." Perry explained the shooting of his big guns and told the officials that he had only come to make a treaty of peace and for commercial purposes, etc., between Japan and America.

After this treaty among the very first to enter Japan were the missionaries. They had their faults that could be pointed out if we were on that subject, but one thing they did and that was the thing that has revolutionized the country: they gave the people the Bible. It was slow work at first and against many odds. Public meetings were not allowed, and even the teaching done in the missionary's home was watched with great suspicion and often prohibited. Teaching of the Bible directly was almost an impossibility. To teach a few "English students" and devote his time to a study of the language for a translation of the Scriptures was about all that could be done for several years. Portions of the Scriptures in Japanese in time began to be given out to the people, and before many years the whole Bible was translated. The people were anxious to learn about the great Western countries. The emperor himself, then but a boy deprived of his power, began to feel the influence of the West. His eyes were opened to his situation as being practically a prisoner and deprived of the throne.

In 1868 there was a revolution and a civil war. The Tenshisama was again restored to power and the feudal system was at an end. A good system of public schools sprang up all over the country and a university was established at Tokyo. The missionaries were given places in the schools to teach English and were consulted as to school systems, the best methods of teaching the best English text-books, and so on. True, other foreigners besides missionaries were employed in this work, but the missionaries constituted by far the greater part.

It was only last year that Mr. Buck, Minister of the United States to Japan, said to a fellow-missionary that the missionary force in Japan was a greater civilizing influence than all others combined. He does not claim to be a Christian himself. They are civilizers because of the message they carry. One thing that the missionaries do that should be commended (Roman Catholics excepted): they give the Bible to the people and encourage them to read it. It is now translated into some six hundred languages, and is sold and given away by the million copies. Japan and every other nation owes her enlightenment and elevation to the teachings of this book; and the missionary is the earthen vessel in God's hands to carry this elevating power to the nations. Charles Denby, former Minister to China and member of the Philippine Commission, in a late article on China, given in Collier's Weekly, says: "The silent but persistent worker, the missionary, has been the pioneer of modern civilization as well as Christianity." He also adds that "China in her length and breadth is open to-day to the missionary of every nation and every creed." The Lord is opening up the nations for his word as never before. His people should be ready to enter the open doors.

TENNESSEE.

Nashville, March 20.—On Wednesday, March 7, at 2 P.M., I preached in Sister Eliza Baker's house, near the lines of Davidson and Rutherford Counties, and baptized her son; on Thursday and Friday following, I preached in Sister Mamma Charlton's house; and I preached at Johnson Chapel on Friday night, the 9th; pretty fair crowds attending these meetings. At 11 A.M., on the second Lord's day in March, I held services at the chapel, and at 2 P.M., at Sister Baker's house, and much interest seemed to be manifested. Maple Hill, Lebanon, North Spruce Street, and Owens' Chapel congregations have my thanks for their cordial hospitality and co-operation. May others follow their examples. We may not at all times see and know the good we are doing, but we should and must do our duty. The gospel fields are now ripe, but the true laborers are few. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. A brother in Texas, whose name is withheld at his request, writes as follows:

"Brother Srygley: Is it true that the ablest commentators admit that the water mentioned in John 3: 5 is the water of Christian baptism? If so, I shall be obliged if you will answer the question in the Gospel Advocate and give quotations."

Men might differ as to who are "the ablest commentators," but I know of no commentator able enough to write a book who does not "admit that the water mentioned in John 3: 5 is the water of Christian baptism." The Methodist Discipline says: "Dearly beloved, forasmuch as all men are conceived and born in sin, and that our Savior Christ saith, 'None can enter into the kingdom of God, except he be regenerated and born anew of water and of the Holy Ghost,' I beseech you to call upon God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, that of his bounteous mercy he will grant to this child that thing which by nature he cannot have; that he may be baptized with water and the Holy Ghost, and received into Christ's holy church, and be made a lively member of the same." (Section II, page 100, "The Ministration of Baptism to Infants.") I quote from an old edition of the Methodist Discipline, not having a later edition; but this, as I understand, is still the doctrine of the Methodist Discipline, which all Methodists, whether commentators or not, are under obligation to believe and teach. The Cumberland Presbyterian Confession of Faith—edition of 1884—says: "Water baptism is a sacrament of the New Testament, ordained by Jesus Christ as a sign or symbol of the Holy Spirit and as a seal of the covenant of grace." In proof of this statement, Matt. 3: 11; John 3: 5; and Tit. 3: 5 are quoted in a footnote. This is the doctrine of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, which all Cumberland Presbyterians, whether commentators or not, obligate themselves to believe and teach. J. R. Graves, in the Tennessee Baptist, said: "If Brother Vaughn convinced us that 'born of water' refers to anything but baptism of one previously born of the Spirit, we never knew it, and we would have owned it to him and to our readers. It means nothing else, and no Baptist that we ever heard or read of ever believed otherwise, until A. Campbell frightened them away from an interpretation that is sustained by the consensus of all scholars of all denominations in all ages." There is probably no higher authority among Baptists in the South, and especially in Texas, than J. R. Graves. "Handbook on Baptism," by J. W. Shepherd, quotes forty-nine different authors who say John 3: 5 refers to Christian baptism—authors "of all denominations in all ages." John Wesley and Adam Clarke, the well-known Methodist commentators, are in the list. The quotations make about twenty pages in the book and would make several pages in the Gospel Advocate. I cannot take space to reprint them all. The book can be bought from the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company for $1.50.

Sam. Jones recently closed the longest meeting he has ever conducted in Nashville; and, so far as I know, the longest one he has ever held anywhere. He received his first general notoriety in Nashville, in 1885, in the attention that was given him in the daily papers. Since then he has conducted seventeen meetings in this city, and has perhaps had a stronger following here than anywhere else. His last meeting was a special effort, long and extensively advertised in advance of his coming, and thoroughly worked up by general cooperation of the preachers in the city. Measured by every criterion, it was the most signal failure he has ever made in Nashville. He was severely criticised in the papers both editorially, and by numerous writers. The amount of money raised during the whole period of near three weeks was less than he has heretofore raised at one time. His audiences lacked the enthusiasm they have heretofore manifested in his Nashville meetings. In the reports of his sermons in the daily papers explanations occurred to the effect that many people at certain points "arose and left the house." This was something new in a Sam. Jones meeting in Nashville; and if the reporters did not misrepresent him, he lost his head and displayed both an ugly temper and very poor tactics in some of these breaks. Complaints appeared in the daily papers while the meeting was in progress that results were unsatisfactory and disappointing in the number of converts; and in the matter of additions to the churches, the meeting accomplished very little, if anything. In his last sermon he said:

"There is something I feel in the moral atmosphere as surely as I could feel a cyclone. Things will not hang where they are. . . . I love you preachers, but you people had just as well quit looking to them. I have never talked to such a heartless lot of people as your pastors are. If they had sat on this platform as corpses, they could not have appeared more impotent and helpless than they have. You need not look to your church officials, either—they seem to be paralyzed; you need not look to the rank and file of church members, for it looks like they have all run off after strange gods."

Brother Jones blames the preachers and the churches, and the preachers and the churches blame Brother Jones for the failure. What Brother Jones "feels in the moral atmosphere" is nothing but heavy loss in his enthusiastic following in Nashville; what he denounces as general worthlessness in preachers and churches is simply lack of admiration for Brother Jones and his methods. The preachers and churches in Nashville are probably no worse than they have been for several years. Brother Jones simply failed to rally them to his support as he has heretofore done. That is all. They are beginning to conclude he is losing his drawing power, and they have not enough of the stuff in them that martyrs are made of to follow a leader whose power and popularity are waning; they want a boom in religion to boost their business, and if Sam Jones cannot furnish it, they have no use for him. That is all there is of it. They are all right to hurrah for Elijah on Mount Carmel; but they are not the kind of birds that carried food to him when he lost his popularity and had to flee to the mountains to save his life, nor yet are they the kind of angels who went into the wilderness with him and baked him a cake on the coals as he slept under a juniper tree in hiding from those who sought his life to "take it away" because he was "very jealous for the Lord of hosts." Brother Jones has never preached the gospel according to the New Testament in his meetings, and his supporters have never been willing that sinners be told in the very words of the New Testament what to do to be saved. In all the preaching he has done in Nashville he has probably not quoted an average of one sentence to the sermon, outside of his text, from the word of God; and the workers in his meetings have been equally scant in the use of the word of the Lord. Brother Jones is the chief apostle of a sort of brass-band religion that cannot be maintained without the wind of public sentiment in its favor to blow the horns. His work will collapse whenever the popular breeze subsides or shifts its course. A Nashville preacher has sent me an article and has written as follows:

"Inclosed find clipping from the Sunday American, which I noticed and thought that you would like to use it in your work, and clipped it for you."

The article is as follows:

"The threat made by Rev. Sam. Jones, including a notice to get the family ready for a funeral, and the brand which, in his parting salute, he puts on all who criticize him, will, I suppose, save him from unkind criticism while he is gone. Letting Mr. Jones go free, I propose to deal with a subject of general public interest. The question is: What has the public to say of the debasing literature which Mr. Jones has introduced into religious services? In politics there has always been a class of public men, illiterate men, who indulge in vulgar anecdotes and uncanny expressions as a means of drawing a crowd, but these men are rapidly being driven to the rear. That now, when a higher sense of chaste language is manifest in politics, a debasing and degrading literature in the pulpit is accepted as the winning card, is a startling fact. To say nothing of Christianity, it is startling in a broader sense. Just in proportion as large masses of people are drawn by this new church literature, so should intelligence be awakened to the innovation. A religion that finds its nourishment in vituperation, coarse epithets, and vile, nauseating witticisms—just such as are heard among the lower and vulgar classes in all communities—is indeed a religion which, if not checked, will undoubtedly demoralize and degrade the community at large. The coarseness of the language used, and which thoughtless religious people seem greatly to enjoy, is so offensive that, even to illustrate, common decency forbids repetition, but some faint idea may be given. In one of his recent sermons in Nashville, replying to some lady who had criticised his preaching, he drew upon his imagination and pictured her as covered over with vermin, pointing out by name the most offensive vermin ever found on the human body—a vermin whose name, if spoken in any parlor in Nashville, would degrade the household; and this lady, for criticising him, is compared to an unfortunate old sheep standing up against a post rubbing off the vermin. Another favorite diabolism now engrafted on pulpit literature is the preacher's contemplated soap factory in h—, where he would not receive the carcasses of many of his audience because he could not deodorize them before making soap. These are given as illustrations, but not in the coarse and vulgar language used. Common expressions when addressing the audience are: "You old devil!" "You old buzzard!" "You old scoundrel!" This is the new pulpit literature, and the churches, the ministry, after hesitating for many years, seem to be staggered, and do not know what to do. This paper is not written specially with a view of asking a correction of this abuse in pulpit literature in the interest of the church, but it is an appeal that public and private intercourse between men of the world shall not be corrupted by church literature. That the refined people of the leading churches in Nashville have already condemned this coarseness is manifest, for they have persistently absented themselves from the meetings. The criteria in determining the class to which men belong is found in the use of language. Refinement in the use of language marks the mental and moral make-up of the man. Coarseness, on the other hand, in the use of words, is abasement itself. So marked is this distinction now that no gentleman in conversation with other men ever tells a vulgar anecdote. The Nashville people, I suppose, in culture and refinement would, at least, average with other cities, and taking the people here who make up society, including church people as well as those who go to the theater, those who make up the social clubs—indeed, all who cultivate the mind, whether they be church people, theater-going people, or gentlemen who belong to clubs—they are all equally and alike interested in having our language kept pure. I know but little of the clubs in Nashville, I do not go to the theater once a year; but I know some club men and many people who attend the theaters, and I do not know one among them all who would, under any circumstances, use the coarse language which has now, under the teaching of Mr. Jones, become familiar church literature—church literature to the extent that Mr. Jones can make it so. The denunciation of people by Mr. Jones who indulge in what they believe to be innocent amusements and social organizations is a matter of taste and manners, but the constant use of epithets, of profane and blasphemous similes, of degrading caricatures, all in the coarsest language, cannot be justified or defended as a new pulpit literature any more than Mormonism can be defended as a religion; and all who believe in an elevated social life and in the preservation of our language, freed from vile impurities, whether church people, theater people, club people—all who believe in the purity and modesty of the home circle—have a right to protest against this wrong to society, though it have the sanction of the pulpit.

This is a sample of much that appeared in the papers and was indorsed by preachers and church members on the streets during his meeting. If there is not a reaction in his favor, the time is not distant when Brother Jones will be discussed as an historic character in Nashville. I fully appreciate his ability, and I have always admired the originality and vigor of his oratory; but there is a limit to every man's career, and the most ardent friends and admirers of Brother Jones will admit, if they recognize the facts, that he has passed the zenith of his glory. It will be fortunate for him and for humanity, if he has wisdom enough to grasp the situation and grace enough to gradually pass into a good old age without an effort to maintain himself by abusing the people because they see his power is waning and turn from him to follow others, just as they turned from others to applaud and follow him years ago. Very few preachers in Nashville or anywhere else have ever approved in him that which the article above quoted criticises. They have tolerated it because they could use him to boom religion and boost their business. If he lives to be very old, without an unprecedented freak of the frailty of old age, he will become stronger in these objectionable things as he grows weaker in the originality of his intellect and the vigor of his oratory. With God's help he can prevent this to some extent by constant watchfulness and heroic effort, if he will take himself in hand and begin to ease down before it is too late; but if he does not do this, he will be a public nuisance, and in his last years he will destroy the reputation he has made in the vigor of his manhood.

Aunt Parthenia Piety's Experience.

Frank Faithful: "Good morning, Henry! How are you to-day?"

Henry Hardshell: "I am well in body, but depressed and troubled in spirit, because I am not yet satisfied about my soul's interests. I have not yet abandoned all hope, but I desire to feel worthy of being a child of God before I am willing to call myself one in deed and in truth."

Frank F.: "It is vain to hope that any of us can ever be worthy of the high honor of being a child of God. You remember we have already discussed that matter and agreed that salvation must be by the grace of God. If you should feel worthy of being a child of God when the proof clearly shows you are not worthy, you would be in a sad situation. To be feeling good and doing bad by living in disobedience to God would place one in a bad fix. Try, Henry, to see yourself as God sees you—that is, wholly dependent upon his mercy and grace."

Henry H.: "I fear you do not understand me. I am not expecting to be worthy or fit in myself to be saved, for it seems to me that I am not fit to be fit, as to that; but I mean this: I have no experience to tell of any wonderful or extraordinary change that has taken place with me."

Frank F.: "A person of your temperament may never even imagine he has been changed; but you certainly feel a lively interest in the subject of your salvation, and it occurs to me that you ought to become a Christian now by going forward in obedience to Christ, just as thousands of others have done, of whom we read in the New Testament."

Henry H.: "What! Without an experience of grace?"

Frank F.: "Not exactly so; but you have had some experience already which should be of benefit to you, if followed up. You have been sincerely searching your own heart and the word of God. Yours reminds me of Aunt Parthenia Piety's experience of grace."

Henry H.: "I was well acquainted with her, but I would not dare to compare my claims to be a Christian to Aunt Parthenia Piety's. I never heard her tell her experience, yet I never had a doubt but what she had one of the brightest and best experiences of any person I ever saw, for she was so consecrated a Christian."

Frank F.: "I knew her well, and have often heard her mention it. Yours, if I understand your frame of mind, is very much like Aunt Parthenia's."

Henry H.: "What was it? I am anxious to know it; for if I have experienced anything like Aunt Parthenia experienced, I shall be greatly encouraged."

Frank F.: "It occurred when she was quite a young lady—in her teens. She, with others, applied for baptism under the preaching of Elder Addison Lewis, in Virginia. Some of them had very strange experiences to relate. One told she had been in a trance, in which state she had gone to heaven. There she said she saw the Lord himself, who broke the bread of life half in two, gave her one-half and kept the other half for himself. No mention was made of the shares of others. This was counted an extraordinary experience. The question was then asked her: 'What else did you see in heaven?' She replied: 'I saw a heap of pretty blue bowls and a ham of meat.' At the time this was told blue was very stylish queensware. Aunt Parthenia was sorry she was unable to report anything like that, and when Elder Lewis asked her to report her experience, she simply said: 'I have nothing wonderful to relate, only I have a very great desire to be a Christian.' She said she was fearful this would be accounted no Christian experience at all. The minister asked her one other question—viz.: 'Why do you wish to be baptized?' She answered: 'Because it is a command of the New Testament.' She was baptized without protest from any one. She lived to be seventy-eight years of age, lacking one week, and you know her Christian life. At the time she became obedient to Christ she was embroidering a collar, and upon the pattern she recorded the first time she with joyful heart came to the Lord's table. This relic has been preserved in her family."

Henry H.: "And you say that was all the Christian experience she had?"

Frank F.: "That was all she had to start with; that was very good; and, Henry, it seems to me that you, as a believer in Christ, have 'that great desire to become a Christian.' You examine those converted in apostolic times and that was about the start they made when they became Christians."

Henry H.: "But I want to hear more about Aunt Parthenia. What denomination did she join?"

Frank F.: "They called themselves 'Baptists,' but regarded themselves children of God—Christians in deed and in truth. Aunt Parthenia's desire was just to become a Christian according to the word of God, and she could tell no experience, only that she had a very great desire to be a Christian."

Henry H.: "Was that all the baptism she ever received?"

Frank F.: "That was all; and yet she read much that was written on the subject of sect baptism and heard many an argument about these questions. She always seemed to know her object in obeying was simply to do the will of God, and for this reason she was content."

Henry H.: "O, if I could be as devout a Christian as Aunt Parthenia was, I would be the happiest man I know; if I could think my experience was as her experience, I would be ready to be baptized right now."

Frank F.: "Well, Henry, to be plain with you, I do believe if you would make up your mind to walk in obedience to all the commands of God, you are now well prepared to go forward in the work. Understand me about Aunt Parthenia: I do not commend her as a divinely approved pattern, only so far as we see and know her experience and Christian example to have been in harmony with the word of God. Rather let us examine those cases of conversion the Holy Spirit has recorded for our imitation. The reason I mentioned Aunt Parthenia was because her experience, in substance, was as those in the Scriptures; and yours, so far as you have taken an interest, is similar to them. O, that 'great desire to be a Christian' is a better heart preparation than any uncertain dream or trance of mind, for that great desire to be a Christian will lead you to render obedience to the gospel, which will make you one."

Henry H.: "But what denomination shall I join?"

Frank F.: "Well, for this time try to forget there are divisions and contentions about what denomination is the true church, but with that 'great desire to be a Christian' that you now have, go forward without delay and obey the gospel of Christ which was preached in all the world to every creature. Henry, I ask you in all seriousness, will you do that you know is right—will you do it?"

Henry H.: "If that will give me peace of mind, a conscience void of offense toward God and man, I will; but may I ask, what am I commanded to do?"

Frank F.: "The same that every accountable person under the gospel is required to do—that is, to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, repent of your sins, confess the Savior, and in his name be baptized 'into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.' Read for yourself, if not already convinced."

Henry H.: "Will not this be trusting to the merit of human works?"

Frank F.: "O, no; to do what God commands is to do the work of God. When God directs and we obey, it is God's work, and not our own. You trust in Christ for salvation."

Henry H.: "Well, after I obey all these commands of the gospel, how will I know then that I am pardoned and a child of God?"

Frank F.: "You will have this blessed assurance by faith in what God says, what Christ says, what the Holy Spirit says, what holy apostles and other inspired teachers of God have taught."

Henry H.: "Where do they all say this?"

Frank F.: "In the gospel according to the Scriptures."

Henry H.: "Friend Faithful, do you really think I ought to risk it that way—just to take the word for it?"

Frank F.: "There is no risk about it. God's words cannot fail. Henry, if God were to cleave these blue heavens above our heads, reach down his omnipotent arm, take you up into his glorious presence, and tell you by word of mouth that your sins are pardoned, would you believe it then, or, as you say, would you risk it?"

Henry H.: "Why, yes; you know I would."

Frank F.: "Well, what evidence would you have that you were pardoned then?"

Henry H.: "Why, I would have God's word for it; that would be good, strong evidence."

Frank F.: "That is true, and God's word is as good on earth as in heaven. It ought to be received by men as well as angels; it ought to be as good with you, Henry, as with the saints, angels, apostles, or any one else; it ought to be revered in time as well as eternity. "Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above:) or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart." Obey that word and trust in Christ for salvation." G. LIPSCOMB.

Modest Apparel.

A request has been made for an article on "costly raiment" and outward adornment. With pleasure this request is granted in so far as I am able to present the scriptural teaching on this subject. "In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broided ["braided," R. V.] hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." (1 Tim. 2: 9, 10.) "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing [jewels] of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands." (1 Pet. 3: 3-5.) These passages make our duty in matters of apparel clear and plain. Women should "adorn" themselves in apparel, but it must be modest apparel. There is nothing in this to encourage carelessness and slovenliness in dress. Untidiness and looseness in dress is not "adornment" in modest apparel. When women's clothes are neat, clean, well made, and properly fitted, and not gaudy or extravagant, they are adorned in "modest apparel." Good material, well made, is frequently less expensive than some cheap and shoddy stuff, carelessly made. I know of no standard by which to determine the material and cost of our wearing apparel, except that it must be modest, and not "costly;" but I do not know who is to determine what is "costly." I cannot judge others by my own tastes and standards of extravagance and economy. That which appears economy and modest apparel to me seems "gaudy" and extravagant to others. Striving to be in the extreme fashion shows a worldliness condemned by the Bible, while striving to be extremely out of fashion shows a pride equally condemned. "Modest apparel" is dress which does not attract attention by being in either extreme. I do not know of any Bible standard of patterns or styles by which clothes should be cut. With a sincere, honest desire to please God in this particular we can always be satisfied as to what is his will. Jesus wore clothes like the men of his day—neat and modest.

Plaiting the hair to keep it up and out of the way and for the sake of neatness is not condemned. This is right. The women then of the East and of Greece and Rome braided their hair into various folds, interweaving sometimes thin plates of gold for ornamental purposes, and using golden buckles in different parts, or pearls and precious stones of different colors. Christian women, while they keep their hair clean, neat, and in order, refrain in modesty from such ornamentation. While their attire is neat and modest, their chief ornament is "a meek and quiet spirit," "shamefacedness," "sobriety," and "good works." These are true ornaments and of great price in the sight of God. They are quite the opposite of pride, outward adornment, and display. Meekness is gentleness under provocation, persevering control of temper, and quiet obedience to God under difficulties. A meek and quiet spirit is not one which has no temper and resentment, but a tranquil one amid the disturbances of life, all because God requires it. Shamefacedness is retiring modesty, one of woman's chiefest charms and a Christian virtue. It is opposed to outward display and all effort to attract attention. Sobriety embraces thoughtfulness, seriousness, and practical good sense, which studies economy and avoids extravagance. The "good works" are those which God has ordained for Christian women to do. (Titus 2: 1-8.) A good woman with her heart set on these things, whether young or old, will not go wrong on the subject of jewels and costly raiment. Those who have not these good qualities of heart and who desire them not are the vain ones who spend their time and money in decorating the body. People in calico or rags may be as proud and vain and as destitute of a meek and quiet spirit as the giddy, gaudy, butterfly belle, who seems to be ignorant of the fact that she has a soul, and whose chief aim in life is to shine in society through brilliancy of diamonds and costly raiment.

In wearing jewelry, as in other things, many are governed more by the fashion than by what Paul and Peter say. Many good men and women do not wear jewelry as an ornament because of what these scriptures say, but others are governed by the fashion. Since it is the fashion to wear several finger rings at a time, we may see from four to six rings on many hands. For the same reason many who once wore earrings do not now wear them. If it were now the fashion, how many sisters would return to the practice we will not pretend to say. It will be fashionable again to wear them. We may presume to say that many brethren would wear them, too, if it were the fashion. It is just as wrong for men to adorn themselves with jewels of gold, pearls, and "costly raiment" as it is for the women.

Yet the use of a pin, buckle, button, watch, or chain, which is practicable and useful, is not forbidden. It is right to avoid extremes in this as well as in other things, especially in our criticism of others—that is, we should not measure them by our tastes and standards. In this, too, the safe course to pursue is quite plain. E. A. ELAM.

The Fellowship. No. 4.

Heretofore I have alluded to the detrimental influence of human institutions on the fellowship of faith. It matters not what may be the statistical showing of a human organization in the so-called work of the Lord, it nevertheless damages true religion; it excludes faith from the hearts of men, hinders individual activity in God's service, creates and fills offices of honor in the eyes of men, cultivates pride and hypocrisy, and turns the money given in the name of Christ from the uses God appointed to the support of things devised by human wisdom. It is simply impossible for men to set up and operate their expedients in religion and at the same time do all the will of God. What could not be done in our Savior's time cannot be done now, what was hypocrisy then is that same bad thing now; and if tradition made void the commandment of God then, it must result in that now; if supporting institutions not of God, with money given to God, robbed God and annulled his word then, it cannot do less than that now.

"And he said unto them in his doctrine, Beware of the scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the market places, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts: which devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayers: these shall receive greater damnation." (Mark 12: 38-40.) The scribes were operating human institutions in a divine religion, devising the best plans their wisdom could suggest to maintain pure orthodoxy. The clergy of our time are in the same business, and how can they escape the scathing criticism of this passage?

But the scribes devoured widows' houses. The clergy do the same thing in the same way now. It was done then by supporting human institutions in religion with the money God had appointed for the widows' support. The clergy use nearly all the money given for God in the support of human institutions; very little of this consecrated money goes to the widows under their administration. The scribes taught the people to build and run synagogues, and, according to Geikie, they had four hundred and eighty in Jerusalem. The clergy teach the people to build meetinghouses, houses of worship—"churches"—and if the interest on the money invested in the church architecture of a modern city were applied to the relief of the poor, every widow in that city would be comfortably housed, clothed, and fed.

The dispensation run in a church house is equally unauthorized with the house itself. The church organized in it is necessarily a sect. God's church cannot be housed; sects may. Housing God's people is making a sect; or, perhaps more properly, fencing in and fortifying one previously made. He who belongs to God's church and nothing else, preaches and practices what New Testament Christians preached and practiced and nothing else, is in the church that does not own a meetinghouse and does not spend any money in keeping up meetinghouse officials and services.

A man who gives $1,000 for the erection of a fine "church" in his own city, $100 to the Church Extension Board, $50 to the Foreign Mission Board, $100 to the Home Mission Board, $100 to the Woman's Board, $40 to the Negro Evangelization Board, $20 for the new pipe organ, $20 to support the Endeavor Society, $10 to support the Young Men's Christian Association, $20 to the Band of Juveniles, $10 for Sunday school work; $25 for janitor, fuel, and lights; $200 for the pastor's salary, $10 for the Charity Fund, and $5 in nickels to straggling, strange beggars, in one year, will feel exempt from the pure and undefiled religion which is "to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction" himself. It would look like he must have exerted himself to do all the above in the service of God. But who told him to do it? The clergy. Can they save him?

But I must not fail to introduce another passage in which our Savior clearly passes sentence on the practice of turning money from the use God appointed to the support of religious institutions and works which men devise: "Then the Pharisees and scribes asked him, Why walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashed hands? He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do. And he said unto them, Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition. For Moses said, Honor thy father and thy mother; and, Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death: but ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me; he shall be free. And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother; making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many such like things do ye." (Mark 7: 5-13.)

God ordained that children should honor their parents to the extent of supplying their wants, but Pharisees and scribes introduced so many things for the people to support with their money that, after paying their dues to the appointments of men, there was nothing left for father or mother. So when the destitute parents came for bread and raiment to their pious son, he would say, "All the money I have is corban—given to God already;" and with this excuse he would send them away empty. By using money to support institutions appointed by men for the service of God people take it from the support of the institutions God has appointed for his service. The money God ordained for the poor and the elders among the saints is corban—dedicated to God—through fine buildings and magnificent denominational organizations. The secretaries, sextons, choristers, presidents, treasurers, pastors, traveling agents, etc., of these concerns are on good salaries, and thus the money is corban, taken up with man's works, but there is no pay for elders. The tradition mongers have set the people free from supporting the divine by enslaving them to the human. To pay elders is impracticable in the same way that to honor father and mother became impracticable in the example just given.

It has ceased to shock men to stand under the shadow of a sixty-thousand-dollar meetinghouse, with a paid choir sitting within around a five-thousand-dollar pipe organ, blowing the praises of God, with collectors and deacons scouring the land for two thousand five hundred dollars per annum for the pastor, who preaches a man-pleasing gospel and announces the meetings of the societies and lodges which claim attention during the week, while some worthy widows enrolled as members here are passing the lonely hours in the dreary confines of the County poorhouse—all because the money which God ordained for their support is corban to the stupendous works of tradition, which men have delivered. And many such like things they do. Every institution of God must become impracticable where the honor and support due to it is paid to some institution of man. Nor is it possible for men to support their organizations with mind and purse without making void God's word.

"But," it is argued, "some things not laid down in the Bible must be instituted and supported in order to successfully carry on what is ordained." To this I reply: "Where people are content to do simply what Jesus Christ ordains they need no institutions but his. There is not an organized, officered institution in religion set up by men that does not do some works God does not require. God's organizations are sufficient for his works. Men's organizations have no place till men's works are added to God's, and men's organizations for the work of the Lord require more money to keep them in running order than God's.

If one thing not in the Bible is right in religion, everything not in the Bible is right in religion. If not, why not? If there is any one thing that can be shown to be wrong in religion because it is not revealed in the Bible, then everything not in the Bible is wrong in religion for the same reason. If not, why not?

BAPTISM UNTO THE REMISSION OF SINS.

The apostles were not permitted to tell any man that Jesus was the Christ until they were endued with power from on high. "Then charged he the disciples that they should tell no man that he was the Christ." (Matt. 16: 20, R. V.) The reason for this inhibition is clear. At this time even the apostles did not understand the nature of Christ's kingdom. Some time after this they said to him: "Lord, dost thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" (R. V.) Hence, it is easy to be seen that they could not represent the claims of Christ truthfully, to say nothing of infallibly. In view of this fact, they were commanded to tarry in the city of Jerusalem for the baptism of the Holy Spirit. "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." (Acts 1: 8, R. V.)

In obedience to the command of Christ, they assembled in Jerusalem and waited for the Holy Spirit to guide them into all truth and to bring all things to their remembrance. According to promise, the Holy Spirit came, the apostles were filled with the Spirit, so that it was not possible for them to teach error. They were supernaturally endowed to bring the truth to a lost and ruined world. "For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father that speaketh in you." (Matt. 10: 20, R. V.) Peter had been promised the keys of the kingdom of heaven, with the assurance that whatsoever he bound on earth should be bound in heaven and whatsoever he loosed on earth should be loosed in heaven. God's promises can never fail, so at the right time they are baptized in the Spirit of God. "And when the day of Pentecost was now come, they were all together in one place. And suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of the rushing of a mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them tongues parting asunder, like as of fire; and it sat upon each one of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." (Acts 2: 1-4, R. V.)

For the first time Jesus is preached to devout Jews, from every nation under heaven. The sermon preached by Peter was a remarkable one. Preaching the gospel—preaching Jesus—is the grandest and most glorious work in which mortal ever engaged. It is a theme that should arouse the noblest endeavor of every soul; it is a theme that should fill us with the noblest emotions and loftiest aspirations. The preacher who is truly in love with preaching Jesus has a power unknown to the man of the world. His earnestness is pleasing to the world, and his eloquence such as the people delight to hear. The multitude eagerly listen to catch every word that falls from his lips. It was so with Peter on Pentecost, and it is so now with the preacher who preaches the gospel of Christ because he loves Jesus with all his heart. The preacher can make no greater mistake than to seek to preach something besides a pure gospel in order to please the people. Man's wisdom may tickle the fancy of the worldly, but there is nothing in it to save the soul. "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (1 Cor. 2: 4, 5.) The man who preaches any other gospel than the one Peter preached on Pentecost brings down the condemnation of God upon himself. Listen to Paul, who preached the same gospel as did Peter: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1: 8, 9.)

Peter preached to them, on Pentecost, the death, burial, and resurrection of our Lord and Savior. He convinced them that they had been very wicked in nailing Christ to the cross. They realized that they were condemned and guilty sinners in the sight of God. Peter gave them a positive command to believe when he said: "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ."

Fearing the condemnation might come upon them which their course of conduct so justly merited, "they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" To these believers who realized their awful condemnation, Peter said: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38, R. V.) It is so clear that both repentance and baptism look forward to the remission of sins that it is very strange that any one would contend otherwise. If repentance is unto the remission of sins, so is baptism. The penitent believer comes to the act of baptism relying upon God for salvation. While he can see no special wisdom in being baptized, while he claims no virtue in the water to take away sins, and his sole reason for being baptized is because God has commanded it, still the very fact that he submits to the institution shows that he recognizes God's ability to save and his own inability to save himself by works of his own appointing. Passive, arms folded over breast, eyes closed, he goes down beneath the yielding wave, looking up to the Lord for strength and salvation. He realizes that he is wonderfully indebted to the mercy of the Lord for the salvation of his soul. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." (Tit. 3: 5.)

It is not questioned by any that Christ shed his blood unto the remission of the sins of many. In Matt. 26: 28, R. V., the same word is used as in Acts 2: 38. "For this is my blood of the covenant, which is shed for many unto remission of sins." If Christ shed his blood unto the remission of sins, then it follows that baptism is unto remission. But that our readers may know that we are in good company, I quote a few authors from Shepherd's "Handbook on Baptism: "

"Adam Clarke.—'For remission of sins [eis aphasis hamartion].'" In reference to the remission or removal of sins.' (Comment on Acts 2: 38.) Armitage.—'Peter offered them salvation through the blood of Jesus for the sin of shedding it, and urged them to leave the wicked hierarchy and enter the new kingdom by faith and baptism.' ('History of the Baptists,' page 73.) Doddridge.—'They are not only called here to repent; a submission also to the ordinance of baptism is required of them, in order to the forgiveness of their sins.' ('Family Expositor,' Acts 2: 38, Vol. III., page 27.) Willmarth.—'It is feared that if we give to "eis" its natural and obvious meaning, undue importance will be ascribed to baptism, the atonement will be undervalued; and the work of the Holy Spirit disparaged. Especially is it asserted that here is the vital issue between Baptists and Campbellites. We are gravely told that if we render "eis" in Acts 2: 38 "in order to," we give up the battle, and must forthwith become Campbellites; whereas, if we translate it "on account of," or "in token of," it will yet be possible for us to remain Baptists. Such methods of interpretation are unworthy of Christian scholars. It is our business, simply and honestly, to ascertain the exact meaning of the inspired originals as the sacred penman intended to convey it to the mind of the contemporary reader. Away with the question: "What ought Peter to have said in the interest of orthodoxy?" The real question is: "What did Peter say, and what did he mean, when he spoke on the day of Pentecost, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit?" But having entered this "caveat," as a lawyer might say, it may do no harm to show that dogmatic dangers here exist only in imagination. The natural and obvious interpretation cannot give undue importance to baptism, for baptism is here united with repentance and faith. It cannot undervalue the atonement, for baptism is one resting upon, and deriving all its value from, the name of the Lamb of God; and this is distinctly understood by the person baptized, who submits to the rite as a believer in that name. It cannot disparage the work of the Spirit, since he alone effectually calls men to repentance and faith; and it is "by [Greek, "en," in, with the influence of] one Spirit" that "we are all baptized into one body"—that is, the Spirit leads the penitent sinner to baptism and blesses the rite. And as to Campbellism, that specter which haunts many good men and terrifies them into a good deal of bad interpretation, shall we gain anything by maintaining a false translation and allowing the Campbellites to be champions of the true, with the world's scholarship on their side, as against us? Whoever carries the weight of our controversy with the Campbellites upon the "eis" will break through; there is no footing there for the evolutions of the theological skater. Shall we never learn that truth has nothing to fear from a true interpretation of any part of God's word, and nothing to gain from a false one? The truth will suffer nothing by giving to "eis" its true signification. When Campbellites translate "in order to," in Acts 2: 38, they translate correctly. Is a translation false because Campbellites indorse it? ('Baptism and Remission,' in Baptist Quarterly, July, 1877, pages 304, 305.)" J. C. McQUIDDY.

Little Things.

In our eagerness to find opportunities to do something great, we overlook our everyday surroundings.

Little moments, deeds, and thoughts make up our lives. Is it not strange that we so often disregard the fact that we can help those with whom we daily come in contact? There are constantly many about us who are hungering and thirsting—not for literal bread and water, but for little simple acts of kindness, a smile of approval, a tear of sympathy, a word of cheer or encouragement—those things which should flow out by nature and cultivation until they become a part of our very lives, elevating us and cheering others, thereby rendering us all better and happier.

At best our lives are short and uncertain; then let us give heed to the little things, praising all worthy deeds to-day, not reserving our appreciation until the tired form is laid in its narrow grave. A little word of encouragement to those who are growing weary on the earthly march may do much to scatter the clouds of doubt and gloom which sometimes darken the way.

Recently a quiet, unpretending old gentleman died after a long, patient illness. I read a touching tribute to his memory written by a man who was many years his junior. He said he owed much of his success in life to the encouragement given him by this thoughtful old gentleman. When he was a timid little boy, attending a small country school, this kind old gentleman visited the school. Speaking kindly to the little boy, he said: "Be a good boy and study hard; you may be a great man some day." Ambition's little fire was kindled, great resolutions made, and the young man rose above many who were more favorably situated, and now has a professorship in a leading college.

I thought long and seriously of the great, good, and lasting impressions made in so short a sentence. It is well to try. No doubt many well-spoken words fall upon dull ears; but if we should only arouse one earnest heart in a lifetime, we should not become discouraged nor feel that we have labored in vain. Many lights go out for want of a breath of cheer and love, which can even be rekindled by a word, a touch, a smile. Shall we withhold them from God's struggling children while we all ask blessings of the same Father? MARY ELLEN WOODSON.

Glad to Help.

It is a pleasant thought that many of the men whom the world delights to honor are proud and glad to do the little, humble, helpful services for which opportunity comes to us all. An incident told of a beloved minister and worker who has passed from this life is a good illustration.

Dr. G., accompanied by a friend, was one day hindered on a crowded street corner. Near them stood an old, feeble, poorly-dressed woman, evidently in nervous terror at the thought of attempting the dangerous crossing. Noticing her distress, Dr. G., in his beautiful, gracious way, drew her trembling arm within his strong one, and carefully piloted her to the other side.

On returning, he was met by the inquiry on the part of a friend: "That was one of your flock, I suppose?"

"No," was the answer. "I never saw her before, but she was in need of help, and I was glad to give it."

If we have within our hearts the same spirit, if we are glad to give help whenever and wherever we can, we can make our lives beautiful through the doing of such a small service.—Sunday School Evangelist.

PERSONAL.

Brother Dan. Gunn, of Sparta, Tenn., was in the office one day last week.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy preached at Concord, Ky., ten miles from Hopkinsville, Ky., last Sunday.

Brother E. G. Sewell preached on Hurricane Creek, near Hurricane Mills, Tenn., last Lord's day. This is a new congregation.

We have just learned of the death of Isaac C. Sewell, at the home of the family of the late William B. Sewell, in what was formerly Overton County, but perhaps Clay County now. He has been suffering for some years from paralysis, and likely his death was hastened by la grippe. He was nearly seventy-eight years old. An obituary will appear in a short time.

During March I received the following contributions: Sister K., Louisville, Ky., $1; church of Christ, Sellersburg, Ind., $6; church of Christ, Clarksville, Tenn., $5.30. Total amount for the month, $12.30. I am now in West Tennessee, visiting the churches. The brethren, receive me, thus far, very gladly. I will be in this part of the State, according to announcements, about all of April. Mail can be sent me during the month to any of the appointments mentioned in the list, if sent so as to reach the place before the date of the appointment; or I can be addressed at any time at 2601 Montgomery street, Louisville, Ky. I am hopeful of doing much good while here.—J. M. McCaleb.

"I now mourn the loss of my faithful little wife. She was sick a little over a month. On Wednesday, March 7, she grew suddenly worse, and after suffering much she fell asleep at 11:25 A.M., on Friday, the 9th. She was buried in beautiful Aoyama Cemetery, in foreign section, on Saturday afternoon, March 10. She died joyously. Her last hours, like all her former life, were filled with thoughts and desires for others. She was altogether unselfish. E. Snodgrass made a talk in English and H. H. Guy made a talk in Japanese at her funeral, both nationalities being represented in the assembly. Mourn with me.—William J. Bishop, Tokyo, Japan." The news of Sister Bishop's death was not unexpected. We had heard that the doctors offered no hope for her recovery. We deeply sympathize with Brother Bishop in his great loss, and point him to the patient, suffering Savior and to the "word of his grace" for comfort and consolation.

The Lord does not require the preacher to please everybody. He demands of him that he preach the gospel. Every preacher can do this, while no one can please everybody.

It is no easy matter to convince the "new woman" that "the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world." She has abandoned the old way and is anxious to try her skill on hardened sinners.

It is an undeniable fact that those who are the most faithful in teaching the Bible in their homes are the most earnest in teaching the truth wherever they may be. They do not only teach it in their homes, but in the church, in the school, in their offices and stores, and wherever an opportunity presents itself. Why should not a man teach the truth beyond the confines of his own home?

"A letter has just come to our notice stating that a certain brother is declaring that there are no preachers now, and have not been since the days of the apostles. He refers to Rom. 10: 15, and asks: 'Who now has the authority to send a preacher?' In answer we refer to Acts 11: 22 and state that if the church at Jerusalem had authority to send Barnabas to Antioch, certainly any church of Christ now has authority to send any preacher to any place that may be mutually agreed upon." (Octographic Review.) The Octographic Review has certainly found a very clear case of the church sending the preacher; but the brother who says there are no preachers now must imagine the Lord is dead, since the Lord does the sending referred to in Rom. 10: 15. Every Christian who has the ability to preach, he authorizes to do so; if he fails to preach, the failure is at his peril. The man that loves God with all his heart finds his sweetest joy in preaching Jesus. Rallying sinners around the cross of Christ is the noblest of all work. "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come." (Rev. 22: 17.) Here is a license to every Christian man to preach the gospel to the very best of his ability. Would that all were enough in love with the truth to do this! If so, how rapidly the truth would grow!

"Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Prov. 22: 6.) Train, compel by throwing right influences around the child until principles of right are fixed and become as it were a part of his nature. This does not mean to train the child until ready to leave home for college and then cease to throw around him influences for good. As he goes out from under the parental roof, he needs to read the word of God possibly more than ever before. In our colleges, universities, and schools the Bible should be taught—taught not only to a class, but taught to all; taught not especially to make preachers, but to prepare for life. It is the best, the purest, and the noblest book this world has ever known; it treats of the eternal destiny of men; it is the best book that can be adopted in any school. It is hard to conceive of any one being opposed to this book being taught everywhere. The Christian at Work very pertinently remarks: "It is both humiliating and shocking that our choicest young men can be guided through both an academic and a collegiate course, embracing from six to eight years of life, without being introduced to those inspired prophets and apostles whose thoughts have shaped the centuries, and who to-day are the highest as well as the mightiest power in Christendom."

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: I and my cousin would like to know the true meaning of "Thy kingdom come." (Matt. 6: 10.) We have always heard that it refers to the establishing of the church of Christ on earth, and that one should not pray for the coming of the kingdom now; but we believe it refers to his second coming and think that part of the verse should not be left out of the prayer, as so many teach, and we concluded to ask you if we are right or wrong. Please answer soon in the Gospel Advocate. Long life and success to the dear old Gospel Advocate.

LENA L. HARWELL.

At the time Christ spoke this he was present. The disciples knew nothing of his going away. It would have been ridiculous to pray for him to come when he was present. The disciples at this time had no idea of his going away and could have none of a second coming. The prayer was not for the coming of Jesus, but for the coming of his kingdom. Jesus in teaching his disciples to pray for the kingdom to come showed his first coming did not bring it. If his first did not, they could have no idea that his second coming, had they known of it, would bring it. The first coming did not bring it, nor will the second. Christ's coming and the establishment of his kingdom are wholly distinct events. Christ at his second coming will come to reward for the service done in his kingdom, not to establish it. It is right to labor and pray for the more general prevalence of Christ's kingdom, for the truer and fuller appreciation of its laws and principles; but it is established on earth, and a prayer for its coming in that sense is meaningless.

Brother Lipscomb: Paul says: (1) "A bishop must be blameless;" (2) "vigilant;" (3) "of good behavior;" (4) "apt to teach;" (5) "no striker;" (6) "not greedy of filthy lucre;" (7) "patient;" (8) "not covetous;" (9) "of good report of them which are without;" (10) "not self-willed;" (11) "not soon angry;" (12) "temperate." If it is known by the church that a man holding the position of elder does not possess any of the qualifications above mentioned, and it is demonstrated in his actions that he does not, do the members who refuse to submit to his dictations do wrong or commit sin? What is the duty of such members under the circumstances? Please answer in the Gospel Advocate.

J. T. MARTIN.

It is singular how a person as deficient as here described could ever have been considered an elder. Certainly the scripture was not much regarded when such a character was selected an elder, and a people that do not obey the scripture teaching in selecting elders, as in doing other things, are not a church of Christ. Such a person is not an elder in the church of God; he cannot be; all the elections and appointments in the world could not make him such. If such a person has been unlawfully assigned the work of the eldership, he ought to be made sensible of his lack of qualification, and he ought to cease to act as elder. Much of the difficulty in such cases arises from a lack of candor and frankness in making known a brother's deficiencies. Generally much talk is done about him and his unfitness for the work, and none done to him. The reverse ought to be true. The influence of the best elder in the world can be destroyed by a carping, fault-finding spirit about him and behind his back, with never an admonition or frank remonstrance to him. He is the first man to be talked to about his deficiencies, and if this is done in kindness, it is a very rare case that it cannot be remedied either by getting him to correct them or in getting him to realize his unfitness for the work. It is wrong and sinful to excite dissatisfaction toward him and never talk to him about his wrongs. The talk to him ought to be done in kindness and love, but with firmness. All who think he is unfitted for the work ought to tell him so, or at least so many as are needed to cure the evil, in one of the ways intimated. The elder has no authority in a congregation; the authority is from God. The elder's duty is to present the scripture teaching and lead in obeying it. He is to be an example to the flock, lead them in the right way. Acting against the word of God he has no authority. When difficulties arise between brethren it is not the province of elders to undertake to decide what is right and wrong. It is their duty to see just and fair brethren do make this decision. Very frequently an elder is unfitted to act as judge in the case. 1 Cor. 6 clearly intimates just and fair men of the church are to be selected to decide differences between brethren. A jury, if you please, of such men are to consider and decide. So if a question as to the fitness of a person to do the work of an elder arises, it should be left to just and fair men satisfactory to all parties. The church really decides the differences that arise, not the elders. They lead in carrying out the law. While I do not believe putting questions to the vote is right, because that is calling for a division where there ought to be no division, where unanimity ought to exist, yet if a decision is reached by brethren to whom a case is submitted, and it is announced to the congregation, it ought to be done calling for any objections to the decision reached, and as long as there are such existing the question ought not to be considered settled by the church. The elders are not the church. They lead the church in reaching the decision, but every member should be satisfied and have and bear a part in the decision. Unanimity in judgment should be the aim, and this can be reached by patience in getting all to see and act upon the truth. Taking the vote as it is usually done calls for a division where all division should be avoided. Yet each member should feel he has a part in the decision, that the decision is his. For elders to pronounce a decision for the church in which the church feels it has no voice is to destroy the peace and harmony of the church. The elders should announce the judgment as that of the church, not of themselves.

Odds and Ends.

"To him give all the prophets witness." (Acts 10: 43.) Philip said to Nathanael: "We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." (John 1: 45.) Jesus, in John 5: 37, says: "The Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me." In verse 39, he says: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." Again, in verse 46, he says: "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me." Peter, in Acts 8: 18, says: "Those things, which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled." In verse 24, we have these words: "All the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days." In Rev. 19: 10, we read: "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Whether this passage teaches it or not, it is nevertheless true that the testimony concerning Jesus is the very soul of the Bible. Leave him out and it is an empty shell. From the standpoint of Jesus all is made plain. Hence the inspired Philip "began at the same scripture [Isa. 53: 7, 8], and preached unto him Jesus." (Acts 8: 35.) He "began at the same scripture," but did not end there. He struck a "bee line" for the truths of the New Testament. Remember, in Luke 24: 27, the memorable words: "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself." Then again, in verse 44: "And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me."

Pentecost is the key that unlocks all the puzzling problems of providence and redemption for four thousand years. Calvary throws its illuminating glory over all the Old Testament. No wonder, then, that Jesus made the confession of his divinity by Peter, in Matt. 16: 16, the all-inclusive creed and the corner stone of his empire. Prophets and apostles may all out the measure of their days and die, being associated with some particular age of the world's history, "but Christ is all, and in all." (Col. 3: 11.) He is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." (Heb. 13: 8.) He is the grand theme of the Scriptures, the Center and the Sun around which all revolves. Christianity is not built upon an idea, a theory, nor a class of opinions; its basis is the sure foundation stone that God hath laid in Zion. Christ, the beginning and the end, the first and the last, is the grand object to which all scripture directs our eyes. God at sundry times and in divers manners spoke unto the fathers by the prophets. By types, ceremonies, and ordinances; in visions, dreams, and in special inspirations; by floods of heavenly light bursting upon their anointed eyes; by exhibitions of divine magnificence, amid clouds, and fire, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words—in all these ways did God reveal his truth unto men.

And what for? It was that these prophets might foretell the glories of Christ, who was to come. Abraham rejoiced to see his day afar off; the dying Jacob looked for him as the Shiloh, to whom the gathering of the people should be; the types and shadows of the Levitical economy foreshadowed his coming to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself; his name and fame were the sweetness of the songs of David; Isaiah foretold him as the Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace; Jeremiah predicted his peaceful reign and called his name the Lord our Righteousness; Ezekiel pointed him out as the King of Israel and the heir of David's throne; Daniel beheld him as one like unto the Son of man, coming in the clouds of heaven; Haggai foretold him as the Desire of all nations; Zechariah described him as the Royal Branch out of Jesse's stem; Malachi beholds him as the Sun of righteousness, bright robed and radiant, arising on earth with healing in his wings; apostles and evangelists unite to record his excellencies. Yes; "to him give all the prophets witness," and without him the whole Bible would be a body without a spirit, a wheel without an axis, a system without a sun. He, therefore, that preaches the word will surely preach Jesus Christ; and he who faithfully preaches Jesus Christ will be sure to "preach the word."

Pitching Tents Toward Sodom.—1. Lot "beheld all the plain of Jordan." (Gen. 13: 10.) 2. "Chose him all the plain of Jordan." (Gen. 13: 11.) 3. "Journeyed east [left Abraham]." (Gen. 13: 11.) 4. "Pitched his tent toward Sodom." (Gen. 13: 12.) 5. "Dwelt in Sodom." (Gen. 14: 12.) 6. "Sat in the gate of Sodom [elected to office]." (Gen. 19: 1.) 7. Married his children to the Sodomites. (Gen. 19: 14.) We can count the same downward steps toward Sodom to-day: Beholding, choosing, journeying toward, tenting in, residence in, mixing with, and amalgamated with.

Peter's Downfall.—1. Boastful and self-confident. (Matt. 26: 33-35.) 2. Sleepy—too lazy to watch. (Matt. 26: 40.) 3. Forsook Jesus—gave up near fellowship. (Matt. 26: 56.) 4. Followed afar off—lost sight of Jesus. (Matt. 26: 58.) 5. Sat without—made himself one with enemies. (Matt. 26: 69.) 6. Denied—told an untruth. (Matt. 26: 70.) 7. Denied with an oath—lost all courage. (Matt. 26: 72.) 8. Began to curse and to swear. (Matt. 26: 74.)

Peter's Restoration.—1. "And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter." (Luke 22: 61.) 2. "And Peter remembered." (Matt. 26: 75.) 3. "Wept bitterly [deep contrition]." (Matt. 26: 75.) 4. "Go... tell his disciples and Peter [shows Jesus had forgiven]." (Mark 16: 7.)

"He will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he shall answer thee."

We will not weep, for God is standing by us;
And tears will blind us to the blessed sight.
We will not doubt; if darkness still doth try us,
Our souls have promise of serenest light.

We will not faint; if heavy burdens blind us,
They press no harder than our souls can bear.
The thorniest way is lying still behind us;
We shall be braver for the past despair.

O, not in doubt shall be our journey's ending;
Sin, with its fears, shall leave us at the last!
All its best hope in glad fulfillment blending,
Life shall be with us when death is past.

Help us, O Father, when the world is pressing
On our frail hearts, that faint without their friend!
Help us, O Father; let thy constant blessing
Strengthen our weakness till the joyful end!

GOD'S OPENED WAY.

"How can I earn something for Christmas? I want a different kind of one this year. It seems as if I didn't want ever to see anything called 'useful' again," said George Allen, dropping into a chair by the evening fire. The boy stopped, glancing in the direction of the sewing table, where his mother sat.

"O, don't think the useful things you and father always give me are what I'm complaining about! They're mighty handy when I need them, but—" he hesitated.

"But what, my son?" asked the mother.

"O, I don't know; I want something different. I'd like to feel I could have something real extravagant for once; and he laughed heartily—" say a microscope for the flowers or an opera glass to study the birds with; just something to satisfy me and keep me satisfied. Hosing potatoes and driving cows to pasture won't bring 'em, though," he added, moving about restlessly.

The mother's face grew earnest as she laid down her work. "Your father said only last night that if his fruit crop had not failed he meant to give you a microscope. He counted upon a hundred dollars more this year than he will have. He knows how much you love the birds and the flowers, and he was anxious to have you gratified, but he cannot do it now," she said.

A sudden change came over our boy. From restless impatience he grew quiet and serious.

"What! Father make me such a present as that, when he's working his fingers off already!" he cried. "Mother," he continued, after a pause, "I mean to do a great deal for you when I'm a man; but—I must say it—I don't want to be digging potatoes and hosing cabbages. I want another kind of a life. Poor boys make great and good men if they only start out, don't you know they do? I don't like this beaten track," he added, vehemently; "it's just like our cow path all the way to the clay pits, trodden bare, with not a blade of green grass in it."

"Well, my son, there is always a way opening for us. We are walking in it, though we make crooked lines crossing and recrossing the straight one. You know Uncle Joel used to say that a good, everyday boy would find his right place in the world, and not have to go hunting for it, either," she replied.

It was weaving along toward Christmas when the mother and son sat again in the twilight.

"How near Christmas!" said he.

"Yes; but I'm almost afraid you children won't even get your 'useful' presents this year," she said, with a sigh. "Your father is saving every cent from the farm to make up his loss on the fruit. You see he wears that old seedy overcoat again."

"And you, mother—what kind of a cloak do you wear? You'd better tell that," cried George. "Why, I wouldn't touch a Christmas gift from you and father. I should feel too mean to ever hold up my head again!" he exclaimed, his face flushed with emotion.

The way had not seemed to open yet.

In a neighboring city there was a laboratory in utmost confusion. Mosses, shells, pressed flowers of every order and genus lay about, slides with sections of wonderful rock, and corals in every stage of formation. The good professor was arranging for his winter classes.

"Let me see," he said, stopping. "I have twenty-five pupils coming for this quarter, and here are twenty-six microscopes, just one extra. I declare, I'll send it to the boy on the Allen farm, where I boarded last summer. I shall never miss it; or if I do, I can get another. The truth is, I was helped when I was a boy, and I may as well pass it along now," he soliloquized. "That lad was a splendid fellow, working like a beaver on that rocky farm. I'll do this, and tell him to get ready for a course of lessons in February. It will brace him up and make him think if he does well what he has to do now he'll be fit for something else when it comes."

"John," he called to his man, "pack this up in that black walnut case, and put in a lot of our best alides, too. Don't let them get broken. The boy knows well enough how to put it all together; he was always working over mine last summer."

As last the day before Christmas came. A beautiful, clear winter day it was. George had not trusted himself to think of it since morning. After dinner he wended his way down past the clay pits, through the old sheep pasture, to "the maples," the spot on the farm that he loved most. He wanted to be quiet and think. "But what can Rob. mean by waving his handkerchief so wildly from the steps of the kitchen door?" he thought, as he quickened his pace homeward.

"O, George!" cried Rob., at the top of his voice, as he drew nearer the house. "Come quick; there's a big box for you!"

"I must wait a minute, I've run so fast," he answered, catching his breath, as he dropped into a chair. "O, what can it be, mother?" he gasped.

"Use your hammer and chisel, and you'll soon find out," she replied.

One nail out, another, and finally the whole. The top gave way and disclosed a smooth, black walnut case beneath.

"O, it's just like Professor Bryan's box he had here; you don't suppose—O, but it is, it is a microscope!" he cried, raising the lid. "Who ever heard of anything like this? And it's all my own!" He hugged his treasure in his joy.

How long a time it took before quiet was restored no one in that happy company would be able to tell to this day; but after the excitement had subsided somewhat, Rob. bethought himself to look into the box. There at the bottom lay a letter half hidden by the crumpled paper, as if it were waiting for its own time to speak and make a full explanation. It ran thus:

"My Dear George: I send you a Christmas gift. I believe there is nothing that you will enjoy more than this microscope. I want to say to you that when I form my next class in February, I want you to come and study with me free of expense. I have just the place for you in my family, and, aside from the instruction mentioned, it is arranged that you are to be fitted in our High School for a collegiate course. If this proposal meets the wishes of your parents, I hope it is—but the beginning of what you may do in the future. From your friend of last summer,

There was a dead silence in the room, broken at last by the mother's low voice:

"The way is opened, my boy. If we fill the places well that we are forced to occupy, we shall always be ready for what may come that is better."—Suzanna B. Merrifield, in Exchange.

JERRY'S DAY IN TOWN.

Jerry was to go to town on Saturday. "I reckon the boy can get off for one day," said Farmer Higgins. "We can spare Lem. for the berry picking in his place."

Jerry's brown eyes sought his father's blue ones in grateful thanks. To go to town meant a great deal to little Jerry—six miles in the jolting farm wagon and then a whole day of pleasure. It was on Monday that they decided the boy could go, and on Monday Jerry began to make his plans.

There would be so much for him to do—to sit in the cool park and watch the play of the fountain, to eat ice cream from a pretty dish, to look at the gay windows and many people. There were so many things, indeed, that Jerry's brain was bewildered to think of them all. Then he began to think of how his father could spare him. Things were busy at the farm. A hand, more or less, meant much to Farmer Higgins.

"I reckon not many farmers would do like that," said young Jerry, proudly. "And he gave me twenty-five cents, too. Perhaps, though," he reflected, "he thinks I'm sick;" and he surveyed his fat, rosy cheeks in the cracked mirror that hung in the shed. But seeing this vision of himself, he shook his head.

"No," he said, slowly; "it isn't that. Guess it must be just because he's mighty good." And Jerry wondered that he had never thought of his father's goodness before. There were so many things he had done for him. The boy could remember something for almost every day—little things, but kind—and his heart swelled when he thought of them. Then he sat down on the doorstep and wondered what he had done for his father. He looked very sober over it, indeed, for he could think of nothing at all. "Why, I should like to do something big for him," said Jerry to himself—"something that would cost just lots!" and he took out his shining bit of silver and wondered what that something would be.

A heavy rainstorm came up on Sunday evening. The wind blew and the rain poured from the clouds in torrents. "Peep, peep!" came to Farmer Higgins' ears. "I do believe, Mary," he said to his wife, "that one of Speckle's little folks is left out in the rain. I must go and see." And without waiting for hat or umbrella, he hurried into the yard.

Jerry arose with the sun the next morning and slipped quickly into his holiday suit. Then he went into the yard and fed the chickens, wondering all the while why his father did not appear. "Dear father!" the boy said to himself, "and I haven't even thought of a little thing I could do for him, much less something big."

"Jerry, Jerry!" called Mrs. Higgins.

Jerry turned toward the house. And the "big thing" was there, waiting. But would Jerry do it?

"Why, what is it, mother?" said the boy, seeing her distressed face. "Is something wrong?"

"Yes, everything," answered Mrs. Higgins. "Here's father tied down with a cold and rheumatism, and he won't be able to get up to-day. Then there's the milk to be taken to town, and it's near six o'clock now. O, dear, if I hadn't told Sam not to come to-day! I'm so afraid that if the milk isn't delivered at some places just on the nick o' time your father will lose his customers. I'm sure I don't know what to do;" and she went into the room where her husband lay.

Jerry stood irresolute in the hall and looked thoughtfully down at his shining new shoes.

"We cannot spoil the lad's pleasure, Mary. Do not trouble him on his one holiday," said Farmer Higgins' voice. And then—why, it was no "big thing" at all, just a very little thing that Jerry seemed given the privilege to do for his father: for the boy slipped into his little back room and was arrayed in his working clothes in a wink.

"I wonder if I couldn't deliver the milk as well as you, father," said the boy.

Farmer Higgins turned surprised eyes toward him. "If you give me your list of customers. You know I've been with you often. It's getting late, you see."

"But your holiday in town," said Mr. Higgins, feeling a great pride in the rosy-cheeked little boy standing before him.

"I reckon I will go to town, anyway," said the boy, smiling, "and I might as well be doing something for you as for myself."

It was so much warmer in the closed milk wagon than in the open cart in which Jerry had intended to go; and the boy's heart was beating hard lest he should be late in reaching some of his customers. But no; the town was certainly reached, and the milk delivered.

"Well, you are a small milkman," said one good-natured woman to him, as she pinned a pretty rose on his old jacket. "Tiresome work, I suppose, eh?"

"O, no," said Jerry, quickly. "It's—it's just beautiful, and not like work at all;" and then he ran happily back to his wagon.

There was no time for ice cream for the little milkman that day; no time for anything, save a hurried spring into a fruit store, where he lavishly spent his silver piece in buying goodies for the invalid at home. He was a very tired and warm boy by the time the milk wagon reached the farmyard, but he was happier than all the other boys in the town put together.

"I reckon it is going without what you want that makes you glad, as much as it is doing something for some one else," he said, as he laid his withered rose on his father's pillow.

The father took Jerry's warm hand in his and held it tightly as he smiled up at him. "He's right there, mother," he said; "and we know that Jerry's heart will never lead him wrong, for love will always show the way, and perhaps, after all, Jerry's holiday has been a happy one." The look on Jerry's rosy face answered, "Yes."—Gertrude Robinson, in Young People's Weekly.

THE TWO PICTURES.

Once an artist painted the picture of a pretty little boy. When it was done it was such a perfect picture that the artist would not sell it. He called it "Innocence," and hung it upon his wall to look at. A good many years afterwards he was asked to paint a picture that would represent guilt. He looked around for some one to sit for the picture, and at last found in prison a man who had a very wicked face. The artist painted this man's likeness, and when it was done he found out that this bad man was the very child he had painted years ago. That sweet child had grown to be the awful man. Sin always changes our faces and makes us ugly.—Boys' Lantern.

REV. 20—THE MILLENNIUM.

When the crash, and din, and smoke, and ruin of Rev. 17, 18, and 19 had passed, and that vision had closed, another very wonderful vision immediately follows. "And I saw an angel coming down out of heaven, having the key of the abyss and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, the old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him for a thousand years, and cast him into the abyss, and shut it, and sealed it over him, that he should deceive the nations no more, until the thousand years should be finished: after this he must be loosed for a little time. And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that had been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God, and such as worshiped not the beast, neither his image, and received not the mark upon their forehead and upon their hand; and they lived, and reigned with Christ a thousand years." (Rev. 20: 1-4, R. V.) This is the leading passage relied upon for the many and varied theories of the millennium.

The word "millennium" is a compound word, made up of two Latin words: "Mille," a thousand; and "annus," a year; and means, therefore, a thousand years. This word is applied by men to the thousand years during which Satan is bound and during which certain ones live and reign with Christ. It makes one weary to read the theories which have been published and are extant in the world; and when he has read, he knows little that he can say is certainly true. I have no theory to give; but the passage is here, and its statements are cheering to the righteous.

The first question is: Who are these that are to live and reign with Christ a thousand years? The Authorized Version makes it pretty clear that it is the souls of the martyrs, and that all other dead will remain in their graves during the thousand years; but the Revised Version makes it possible to consider others in the number, but not necessarily so. The Revised Version, instead of saying, "and which had not worshiped the beast," in verse 4, says, "and such as worshiped not." This expression may possibly take the faithful in general who had died up to that time, but not necessarily so. I cannot see enough in it to justify a theory on the subject, though it may be intended that way. But even granting that it means that, no man can tell when this grand period will begin, and all the theories yet presented have broken down at this point. Even in the days of Paul there were some who said the day of God was then at the door, and he corrected the matter in 2 Thess. 2.

Church history shows that about the end of the first thousand years of the Christian era many thought that would usher in the millennium; but the time passed on, and nearly another thousand years have passed, and still no millennium such as looked for. There has been no period in the history of the church that there have not been men telling the world when the millennium would begin. So I do not believe any man can tell anything certain about it, beyond the fact that there will certainly be such a reign, and as a matter of prophecy we can believe the statements; but that is as far as we can go. In fact, the chances are that all those who have advocated a personal reign of Christ on earth are altogether mistaken, about it, for several reasons. One reason is: This earth in its present form lies under the curse of God, and cannot, as it is, form a suitable dwelling place for the Lord and his people in the glorified state. Another reason is: The passage does not say that this thousand-years' reign of Christ will be on this earth. So we do not know, and should not pretend to say. But there will be such a reign, and it will be glorious to them that shall be in it; and it is perfectly certain that none but the righteous will be in it. Whatever is in store for the righteous will be theirs when the time comes, whether they understand it all beforehand or not. It is also clear that this thousand-years' reign will be before the final end of this world and before the wicked will cease to live on the earth, for there is to be an awful destruction of the wicked after the time indicated for the thousand-years' reign. Hence, it is utterly vain to try to locate this reign, either as to time or place. It is enough for us to believe the truth of it.

There are other passages that indicate that all the Lord's people will be received into the Lord's presence at the same time. Paul says: "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." (1 Thess. 4: 15-17.) The word "prevent," as used in this passage, meant to anticipate or go before, when the Authorized Version was made. Hence, it means that those living when Christ comes will not anticipate, or go to dwell with Christ, before those who are asleep, or in their graves. It is not safe in our interpretations of God's word to so interpret or apply figurative language as to make it conflict with plain, unfigurative language. So I am led to doubt the whole theory of a personal reign of Christ with his people here on earth, as many claim, in the millennial state. But one thing about the matter is certain, and that is, if there should be such a reign in store for the Lord's people, it will be grand, and they will enjoy it to the full. So the main thing is to so live and honor God as to be ready for it, if it should come.

Then after the thousand-years' reign, and of the bound state of Satan, he is to be loosed for a little time, and is to go out to again deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth. So there will be nations, or people, all over the earth when the thousand years have expired. And Satan "shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them." (Verses 8, 9.) This passage also expresses something very wonderful; but I do not know how to explain it, and will not even try to do so. But no faithful child of God will suffer any sort of inconvenience from the fulfillment of this very wonderful prophetic vision. No man can tell as to when the time will come for its fulfillment; no one can tell when the thousand years began, or will begin, and consequently cannot tell when they will end. Hence, although the time is indicated as short after the thousand years, it is still entirely beyond our reach to even approximate the time of the end.

But when these last wicked hosts are destroyed, the next scene to which we are invited is the last and final judgment: "And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works." The word "hell," in this passage, is from the Greek word "Hades," which does not mean the place of torment for the wicked, but the unseen world into which all the dead go. There is another word that means the place of torment for the wicked. This passage, therefore, means that all the dead, whether in the sea or in the grave, will be present. This will be indeed a solemn and awful day for the wicked and rebellious people of all the ages and countries of this whole world; and all will be there, whether prepared or not. But there is one very practical point about the whole matter, and that is that in this judgment the books will be opened and the dead will be judged out of the things written in the books, according to their works. The books of God given to men to guide them in doing his will in this life are evidently the books that will be opened, and the Lamb's book of life, in which the names of the saved are recorded. This last judgment, therefore, will not be by what men say and think is right, but by what God says in his word; and this matter of being judged by the book, by the divine record, comes in at a very opportune place to make a lasting impression upon men.

We have had so much in these wonderful visions about false religions, in which the words of men prevailed instead of the word of God, and these words and opinions of men were the rules by which all those deceived by the gold-bedecked woman were led, and the utter ruin of this woman, this false religion, this Mystery, Babylon the Great, and all led by her, that surely people are in better condition, after reading these, to appreciate the word of God as the only safe rule of life. This passage distinctly says the dead are to be judged by the things written in the books. The claim of so many that whatever a man thinks is right will be right to him will count nothing at the great judgment day. What is written will be the rule. Men's interpretations of the will of God will count nothing. Everything will be determined by what is written in the book. Men interpret God's will to mean that baptism is a nonessential, that therefore men can be saved as well without it as with it, and thousands accept that as true, and disregard the ordinance; but the record says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Men interpret the will of God to mean that if a man really thinks that sprinkling or pouring is right, and does that, it will be right to him; but the divine record says, "buried with him in baptism," and the record, not what men say, will be the standard of judgment at that last day. Men interpret the will of God regarding the Lord's Supper to be not that they must of necessity meet regularly on the first day of the week to break bread, but that when they do partake of the Lord's Supper it must be on that day; but the record is that the disciples came together on the first day of the week to break bread, and in such a way as to plainly indicate a regular custom of meeting on every first day of the week to break bread; and then says: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." Such are the things that are written on this subject, and these are the things by which we will be judged in these matters. What men think on these things will be worth nothing then. The judgment will be on what is written in the books.

Not one human creed, confession of faith, or article of agreement written by uninspired men will be opened in that day as the rule of judgment. Jesus said: "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day." Men may hear the words of God and believe not, but these words will be the standard of judgment. Jesus said again: "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock." "He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them." It is not enough to do what men say or what men may think was meant, but we must do what Jesus says, must follow the divine record; if we faithfully follow that, then there can be no mistake about the outcome. There will be a great many mistaken and wonderfully surprised and disappointed people at that great day of accounts. Jesus says: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." This passage shows the difference between doing what the record says and what people think will do. When Jesus says he will say, "I never knew you," it means he never approved them as doing his will, doing what he said do. They had done what they thought, what men said would do, but not what is written in the books. That will be an awful day with that class of people. It will be awful when the Judge says: "Depart from me, ye that work iniquity." In this last judgment the decree will be for every one whose name is not found in the book of life that he shall be cast into the lake of fire. Only those who do what is written will have their names written in the Lamb's book of life. Those who do something else, and not what is written, have not the shade of a promise that their names will appear on the book of life. What awful wailing and gnashing of teeth there will be at that day among those that have done what men say, and thought it was right, but did not do what was written in the books! If people would read and digest this one passage, that they will have to be judged by what is written at the last day, it would do them more good than all the finespun theories that have ever been written about when the millennium will come. "What is written in the books!" This is plain and practical; but when men begin to theorize on when the end of the world will come, and such like things, that is all speculation, merely the opinions of uninspired men, and can neither benefit nor save any one. To do the things which are written will secure our names to be written in the Lamb's book of life, and give us entrance through the gates into the eternal city of God.

O that men everywhere could be impressed with the importance of doing the very things the word of God says! Thus in all the strange prophetic visions of this wonderful book of Revelation there are plenty of plain expressions to show to all the certain safety there is in learning and doing the revealed and plainly-expressed will of God, and the danger and utter ruin that await all those that follow the wisdom and opinions of men. Let me learn and do God's will, and have my name written in the book of life, and I will not fear what men may say or do. There is a day coming, as revealed all along in this book, when the righteous will be called home, where the wicked will cease to trouble and where the weary shall be forever at rest; also, it is plainly revealed that the day is coming when all the wicked, and all who have followed false teachers and false religions, and who were not willing to accept and do the plain word of the Lord, will be cast off forever. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Let all, therefore, be wise, seek the truth, and obey the truth, that the truth may make them free. E. G. S.

CAN MEN UNDERSTAND THE BIBLE ALIKE?

Do Christians agree on what the Bible teaches? Divisions on the subject of religion confuse many minds, discourage efforts to learn the truth, and work injury to man and dishonor God. The Son of God foresaw the evil that the rending of his spiritual body on earth would bring to man, he felt it more keenly than the rending of his fleshly body; so he spent the last moments after the Supper before he entered the garden of Gethsemane in agonizing prayer for "them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

Jesus laid the failure of the world to believe that God sent him to the divisions among those who would believe on him. Yet many professing to be his disciples justify and glory in these divisions, the foreseeing of which added deepest anguish to the dying sorrows of the Son of God. Not only did Jesus pray they might be one, but the apostle Paul besought and entreated in all his letters to the churches, as a father his children for their good: "I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.)

This entreaty for the oneness of the children of God is repeated in some form or other in every letter written to the churches under the guidance of the Holy Spirit; this oneness is not only required, but the things that divide and the course that will promote unity are pointed out in the Bible. In this very prayer of Jesus for the unity of his followers, he prays God: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." (John 17: 17.) "Sanctify" means to set apart, or to use for a sacred end and purpose.

The prayer, then, is that God would use his word to lead them into this unity. To do this, they must all walk by his word. The word of God is the essence and standard of all truth. By it all truth is to be tested. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 31, 32.) Jesus Christ said: "If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." (John 14: 23.) "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love." (John 15: 10.)

God is the great Ruler of the universe. There can be no possible good to any being save in harmony with the will and in obedience to the Ruler, and God can dwell with no being out of harmony with his laws. God cannot rule and bring good to beings refusing to obey him and to honor his rule. Even Jesus remained in his Father's love by keeping his commandments. Men become sons of God and remain in his love by keeping his commandments. "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." (1 John 5: 3.) The love that God bestows and requires is not a mere sentiment, but is practical. God demands his children shall be one, but they must be one in obedience to his laws. Union not in obedience to God would be union against God, and all refusal to obey God is war upon the rule of God. It is an effort to dethrone him. Hence: "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.)

There are two ends to be accomplished in one effort. We are to have fellowship with one another, and we are to be "cleansed from all sin by the blood of Christ." Both are brought about by walking in the light as Jesus walked in it. He had no will, but to do the will of his Father. The servants of God are to be one, then, by walking in the commandments of God. His children cannot become or remain one by compromises and agreements among themselves any more than an army could be one in their operations by agreements and compromises among the soldiers. The unity and harmony of the army is brought about and preserved by all refusing all other directions, and obeying only the commands of their chief. So the people of God can be one only by all ignoring and rejecting all else save the commands of their Ruler, the God of heaven and earth; and if all are led by him, they will be led in the same pathway of holiness and will constitute the one fold of the divine Shepherd. The Bible contains the commands of the Ruler. Can all understand its teachings alike? If not, why not? Are not its commands in all practical matters given in plain and simple terms? God desired man to understand and obey his commands. Did he so give them that men cannot understand them? My contention is men do substantially understand the teachings of the Bible alike, and that the religious differences among the believers in the Bible do not arise from a failure to understand the teachings alike, but from the introduction of things into the faith and practice of the church not taught in the Bible.

When I say they understand it alike I mean men who come to it to study it to learn its teachings. Of course, partisans who come to it to hunt reasons to sustain their party will find what they seek; but men earnest to know its teachings do understand it alike. A striking evidence of this is found in the agreement that the leading commentators of different parties show. When they come to say what this word, this clause, this sentence means, the harmony is remarkable. These commentators give their opinions why things are so, or what they think God will do outside of what the Bible says, and then there is divergence, but it is not about what the Bible teaches.

Take the subject of how and where the guidance of the Holy Spirit may be found, which, though not so apparent, is probably the most fundamental and far-reaching question of dissent in the religious world. The Bible teaches that the Holy Spirit revealed the things in the Bible; hence, the teachings of the Bible are the teachings of the Holy Spirit. A person obeying the Bible is guided by the Holy Spirit. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." (John 6: 63; see also John 14.) Again, Jesus says, "The word of God is the seed of the kingdom"—that is, the word is the seed in which the germinal principle of spiritual life dwells. To receive that principle of life we must take into our hearts the word in which it dwells. On this point that the Spirit of God works through the word there is no dissent. The Bible teaches it, but many think he works outside of and apart from the word, and on this there is dissent, because the Bible does not teach it.

There is dissent concerning the subject, action, and office of baptism. The Bible teaches: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." No one doubts the true believer is a fit subject for baptism. All teach it because the Bible teaches it. Some think the infant children of believers are entitled to it. None believe the Bible requires this. This causes dissent.

The word translated "baptize" had a distinct meaning, and all lexicographers define its meaning to be: "immerse, dip, bury." There is no dissent from this. All candid Bible students say it was so practiced in primitive times. The Catholics and Episcopallians and many Presbyterians say it was so practiced, but claim the right of the church to change it. Mr. Wesley and Dr. Clarke, eminent Methodists, say immersion was practiced in primitive times. The Bible teaches this. All agree to it. These latter think assuasion was also practiced as baptism. The Bible does not teach this, nor does it teach the church has a right to change the order given by God. The introduction of a practice on these grounds causes the dissension, not what the Bible teaches.

The Bible teaches that faith perfected by obedience saves. Some think faith separate from obedience saves. The introduction of this as an article of faith causes dissent. The Bible teaches, and for fourteen hundred years all divisions and parties in the churches, without a dissenting voice, so far as history records, held, that baptism is the act in which faith expresses itself and in which man is promised forgiveness of sins. None deny such person has the promise of pardon. Some teach he is pardoned before faith is thus perfected, and this causes dissension. The Bible gives the names, order of worship, of church organization and work. Over these there is no dissent or contention, but some think that these may be changed and different ones introduced. This brings dissent.

These examples are sufficient to illustrate and enforce the truth that the dissensions and divisions among Christians do not arise over a misunderstanding of what the Bible teaches, but over things not taught in the Bible that are introduced into the faith and practice of the church. These cause divisions. The way to remove the strife is to drop everything not taught in the Bible, and to cling to and practice the things taught in it. In doing this all walls of partition and division will be broken down, and the believers in Christ Jesus will flow together as kindred drops mingle in one stream, as they all flow downward, guided by the will of their Maker and Master.

"The charge is often made that heresy trials hurt the church and hinder its progress and work. This assertion has been frequently repeated concerning our brethren in the Presbyterian Church, North. But the figures do not bear this out now in the Presbytery of New York, and still less in the whole of that large body. If the statistics prove anything, they show that during the past ten years or more the decline in additions by examination appears when the church was in danger of tolerating loose doctrinal views, and not when the effects of heresy trials were felt. The year after the Briggs trial was marked by the largest increase of membership in the history of the church. During the past four years, when the church has been shirking the trial of Dr. McGiffert, there has been decline. The Herald and Presbyter of last week shows how baseless is the charge that heresy trials hinder the progress of the church. It is loose doctrine that hinders and hurts it."

The above statement from the Christian Observer, of Louisville, affords food for thought. The history of all religious movements and bodies proves that a rigid adherence to the fundamental principles secures the activity and energy of the members of the church and commands the respect of the world. Loose latitude, narrow principles, or indifference to principles, may excite no opposition, but they command the respect of no one and do not arouse the activity and zeal of the members of the church. The days of rigid adherence to the foundation principles of the church are the days of activity and zeal with the members and of progress and effectiveness in convincing the world. The seasons of liberality, so-called, and indifference to foundation truths are days of laxness, looseness, and indifference that result in weakness and inactivity.

Noble deeds and kind words through life are worth far more than flowers on the coffin.

The Mormon-Christian War.

I aim in this article to present as impressively as possible the magnitude of this battle with Mormonism. It is not a local issue in any sense.

Seer Wilford Woodruff said: "I remember the last speech that he [Joseph the prophet] ever gave us before his death. It was before we started upon our mission to the East. He stood upon his feet some three hours. The room was filled as with consuming fire, his face was as clear as amber, and he was clothed upon by the power of God. He laid before us our duty; he laid before us the fullness of this great work of God; and in his remarks to us he said, 'I have had sealed upon my head every key, every power, every principle of life and salvation that God has ever given to any man who ever lived upon the face of the earth;' and these principles and this priesthood and power belong to this great and last dispensation which the God of heaven has set his hand to establish on the earth. 'Now,' said he, addressing the twelve, 'I have sealed upon your heads every key, every power, and every principle which the Lord has sealed upon my head;' and, continuing, he said: 'I have lived up to the present time; I have been in the midst of this people and in the great work and labor of redemption; I have desired to live to see this temple [the Nauvoo temple] built, but I shall never live to see it completed, but you will.' After addressing us in this manner, he said: 'I tell you the burden of this kingdom rests upon your shoulders; you have got to bear it off in all the world, and if you do not do it, you will be damned.'"

The weight of these words, with Mormons, can be partially comprehended by the following, to me blasphemous, remark of Seer Woodruff. He said: "Now we [the twelve Mormon apostles] did not suppose but what he would live. We did not comprehend what he meant. Neither did the twelve apostles in the days of the Savior comprehend what he meant when he said: 'I am going away from you; if I go not, the Comforter will not come unto you.'" That Seer Woodruff meant all that is necessarily implied in this presumptuous parallel is evidenced by the following remarks in the same speech: "As I have said, Joseph Smith organized the church. He lived but a short time with us, though longer than the Savior did after he entered the ministry. . . . But before he died, he organized the church with apostles, patriarchs, pastors, teachers, and the whole government of the church of God. . . . Joseph was trained in the priesthood before he came to this planet. He understood the priesthood perfectly before he came here." (President Wilford Woodruff in "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," page 118.)

My readers right here will pardon a seeming excursion while they ponder the above words and cease wondering at the zeal of Mormon elders or evangelists in propagating their doctrine. All my tracts, so far, have been written along this line. "Mormonism is refuted by Mormons." The similia similibus curantur principle will solve the riddle.

David Whitmer was one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, and was the third man baptized into the church. He says: "If you believe my testimony to the Book of Mormon, if you believe that God spoke to us three witnesses by his own voice, then I tell you that in June, 1838, God spoke to me again by his own voice from the heavens and told me 'to separate

ROYAL Baking Powder

The strongest, purest, most efficient and wholesome of leavening agents. Not lowest in price, yet the most economical; indispensable to all who appreciate the best and most healthful food.

Our country is enjoying prosperity almost unsurpassed in its history.

For every one there is money enough to buy that to eat which is pure, sound, good, wholesome.

Why should we use cheap, impure, unhealthful articles of food? There is no economy in them; they endanger the health, they may cost life. There are reported almost daily cases of sickness caused by eating cake, puddings or biscuit made with the cheap, alum baking powders.

In all articles for food buy and use only the best. The good health of the family is of first consideration.

Alum is used in many baking powders because it makes them cheap. It costs less than two cents a pound. Alum is a corrosive poison. Think of feeding it to children! Yet the manufacturers of well-known alum powders are actually denying that their goods contain it.

myself from the Latter-day Saints, for as they sought to do unto me, so it should be done unto them." Either horn of this dilemma pierces Mormonism at Salt Lake City and Lamoni to the very vitals. Whitmer further says, page 54 of same book: "To show you that Brother Joseph and myself still loved each other as brethren, after this, I will tell you that he had so much confidence in me that in July, 1834, he ordained me his successor as prophet, seer, and revelator to the church. He did this of his own free will, and not at any solicitation whatever on my part. I did not know what he was going to do until he laid his hands upon me and ordained me. . . . I suppose this is news to many of you—that Brother Joseph ordained me as his successor; but it is in your records, and there are men now living who were present in that council of elders when he did it, in the Camp of Zion, on Fishing River, Mo., in July, 1834."

So Whitmer got "all the keys" as well as the so-called "twelve apostles" represented by Woodruff. More, Whitmer says there are "no apostles" in the so-called Mormon Church. He says: "The twelve at Jerusalem are called in the written word 'apostles.' They are apostles because they were special witnesses to the sufferings of Christ, his death, burial, and resurrection; but the twelve Christ chose on this land [the Western Continent, and whose successors Woodruff, Pratt, Cannon et al. claim to be] are called 'disciples' or 'elders,' and are not once called 'apostles' in the 'Book of Mormon.'" This is certainly a solar plexus blow on that body of so-called apostles.

More and worse still, speaking of that great heavenly visitation at Nauvoo, in the temple to which Woodruff refers and upon which he bases so much, it seems to have been a grand fizzle. The elders were assembled on the appointed day, which it was promised would be a veritable day of Pentecost, but there was no visitation. No Peter, James, and John; no Moses and Elias put in an appearance. "I was in my seat on that occasion," says Mr. Whitmer, "and I know that the story sensationally circulated, and which is now on the records of the Utah Mormons as an actual happening, was nothing but a trumped-up yarn. I saw a great many of these things which I knew were not right, but I clung on in patience, trusting everything would eventually be put right." If this is not a clear case of seer vs. seer on vital points, one cannot be found.

Now, again, to the magnitude of this battle. The tract is the favorite weapon of Mormon elders. Tract must meet tract; free tracts must be met by free tracts.

B. H. Roberts says in his work on "Succession": "Since the death of the prophet Joseph, in addition to maintaining the missions in those countries where proclamation of the gospel had been made during his lifetime, missions have been established in the following countries and tens of thousands of the honest in heart gathered out of them: France, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Iceland, Italy, Switzerland, Jersey, Islands, Hindustan, Malta, Cape of Good Hope, Mexico, among a number of Indian tribes in the Western States and Territories in the United States, Sandwich Islands, Samoa, Friendly Islands, New Zealand, Turkey, and lately the mission has been reopened in Palestine."

In 1894 Roberts says of the "Seventies": "They number one hundred and seven quorums, comprising a body of seven thousand men, whose special calling is to preach the gospel abroad." Bear in mind that this is one denomination of the Mormon Church doing all this. It does not take in the count of the "Josephites" and the other "ites" of that body who accept Smith as a prophet and the "Book of Mormon" as divine.

The "Book of Mormon" has been translated and published, since the death of Joseph Smith, in the following languages: French, German, Danish, Italian, Dutch, Welsh, Swedish, Spanish, Hawaiian, and Maori. It has been translated, but not yet published, unless it has been done very recently, in Hindustan and modern Hebrew.

The above will give the reader an idea of the magnitude of the conflict. The battlefield is the world. From it they also can learn of my manner or style of battling the ism. Only those in the fight can appreciate its ferocity. It is a black flag fight. There is no room for compromise if compromise was sought by either side. The "elders" are busy as badgers. They claim seventy or eighty thousand additions this last year in our own land.

What I need is money to print and scatter my tracts everywhere. If deemed worthy, they ought to be translated in the various languages and scattered with a free hand in every land in which Mormon elders are laboring. Those interested can secure a complete set of my tracts, five in all, for the asking. I have others ready for the printer. The twentieth century Christian ought to battle as never before the false prophet of the nineteenth century. R. B. NEAL, Grayson, Ky.

Notes from the Field.

I want to speak briefly of some Texas points which I have recently visited. On the second Lord's day in March I went to Roane to fill an appointment at 11 A.M.; but upon arriving there I learned that a Methodist Protestant preacher had published an appointment, prior to mine, for the same hour, and, being present, he occupied the time.

In the afternoon I went to Corsicana, and preached there at night. I had a large and attentive audience; and, having work to do for the Gospel Advocate, which made it necessary for me to remain in the city the next day, I published an appointment for Monday night. My audience was smaller than on the preceding night, but close attention was given. While these brethren are doing much good, I consider that "a great door and effectual is opened unto" them, through which they could accomplish much more good. I consider their chief trouble the fact that they are "resting on their oars," so to speak. They seem to think, at least some of them, that if they can continue to do as well as they are now doing, this is all that is required of them. Of course, it is possible for us to transgress and go beyond that which is written. We should guard against this, but we should also guard against the other extreme—i. e., fail to take advantage of every scriptural opportunity, for fear that we do too much. I make these suggestions in the spirit of love, trusting that the brethren there and elsewhere may be aroused from the lethargic state into which some have fallen, and may leave no scriptural effort untried to advance the cause of our Master.

On the third Lord's day in March I preached at Philip's Chapel, about five miles from Corsicana. This, like Roane, is another destitute place. The weather was very threatening, in consequence of which our audience was small, the attention, however, being all that could be desired.

At this writing I am at Bardwell, in Ellis County. I came here on March 21, with intentions to begin a meeting on the 23d; but on the next day after my arrival it began to rain, and the result is we have had no meeting. I expect to preach some before leaving, as it will be impossible to get away for several days, even after the weather becomes settled. Bardwell is situated in the black land, and to those acquainted with this kind of land in wet weather this is explanation sufficient.

I will say to the brethren and readers of the Gospel Advocate that I am now identified with the paper as agent, and it is my purpose to travel in the interest of the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. As soon as the weather becomes settled, so that I shall be able to get away from Bardwell (where I am at present "mud bound"), it is my intention to visit the brethren in this (Ellis) county. After this I shall start on a canvassing trip through Tarrant, Denton, Grayson, Fannin, and Lamar Counties, and will preach at the different places I visit, if arrangements can be made. I would appreciate the kindness if brethren in these counties would write me at once. In this way it will enable me to send appointments ahead. Address me at Bazette, Tex.

WILLIAM M. JORDAN.

The editor of the Christian Guide says in a circular letter: "We are trying to make the Christian Guide the paper for our Southern States." This is not the first time we have seen this statement, or one similar, from Brother Brown. Why not make a paper for all who will read it? Is there anything sectional about Christianity? The gospel, which means good news, knows no north, east, west, or south. The command is: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." It is good news for all alike. It does seem that all religious journals should discourage partyism and sectionalism in the kingdom of Christ. "And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God." (Luke 13: 29.) Our aim shall ever be to advocate the gospel in such an earnest, clear way that the east, west, north, and south will all be benefited by perusing the pages of the Gospel Advocate.

The ruling is made that the pilot may have nothing to detract his attention from the running of his boat.

Carsten E. Borchgrevink, the leader of the South Polar Expedition fitted out in 1898 by Sir George Newnes, of London, who, with the surviving members of his party, has arrived on the steamer Southern Cross, at Campbelltown, near Bluff Harbor, New Zealand, telegraphs to Sir George Newnes that the object of the expedition has been fully obtained and the position of the South Magnetic Pole has been located. He adds that the expedition reached the farthest point south, with sledge, of which there is any record—namely, latitude 78 degrees, 50 minutes south.

April Showers

wash away the filth and waste that have accumulated during winter.

In like manner Hood's Sarsaparilla expels from the blood impurities that have been deposited during the season when there has been but little perspiration, and perhaps constant confinement in impure and vitiated air. It is a boon to tired mothers, housekeepers, teachers, and others who spend their time indoors.

It gives the blood richness and vitality, fitting it to nourish and strengthen the nerves, muscles, and all the great organs of the body; it cures all spring humors and banishes that tired feeling.

Texas Notes.

I have written no notes for the Gospel Advocate for some time; but, hoping that by reporting work done by different congregations and by speaking words of encouragement and exhortation I may be able to help some of the many readers of the paper on to a higher Christian life, I shall write more in the future.

I am rejoiced to announce to you that I feel sure that the churches of Christ throughout North Texas are awakening to a higher sense of their responsibility and a fuller discharge of their duty. I know of many that are doing more this year than ever before to have the gospel preached at home and abroad. This is as it should be. The greatest trouble with those who have not accepted the innovations of modern "churchanity" has always been a lack of sacrifice and consecrated effort to save souls and establish New Testament Christianity. This is our trouble yet. We are too much satisfied to believe God's word and oppose every departure from it, without making an earnest, continued effort to cause others to see, believe, and accept it. We lack the zeal and consecration of the New Testament churches by which they saved great number in their own vicinities and preached the gospel to every nation under heaven.

We should always remember that the Master says: "Ye are the salt of the earth." We, as Christians, are God's instruments to save the earth; but if we allow ourselves to be satisfied with simply opposing sin, that power which destroys the earth, without being ever up and earnestly working to establish Christ's gospel, that power which saves the world, do we not lose our "savor" as "the salt of the earth"—our power as instruments in God's hands to save the world? Of us, then, the Master says: Ye are "thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men." I fear that thousands of would-be loyal disciples are in this awful condition today, because they are simply negative Christians.

On the first Sunday in March I preached at Weatherford. Will. H. Sewell works with the church there, and they are doing good work. Most of the members seem to be very much interested in the work of the church. They attend the services well themselves and make an effort to get others to attend. In this way their audiences are good, and all along people are persuaded to obey the gospel. Every church should be engaged in a work like this. Many people seem to think that as a few people have obeyed the gospel and begin to meet on the first day of the week the work is done; they may shut the doors, meet together, edify each other, have the gospel preached to the poor sinners out in "deserted" places, let their neighbors and friends go on to hell, while they sail on to glory. This is a fatal mistake. It is the duty of every church to preach the gospel to the sinners of its own number and to those at its own door as much as to send it off somewhere. If they have no one in the congregation who can do this, they should get some one. When there are no more sinners in the neighborhood about you, then it will be right for you to quit preaching the gospel at home, and send it all off somewhere else. If the church at Weatherford faithfully continues to work, many more of their neighbors will be saved; and I believe they will continue.

From Weatherford I went to Dallas, and spent one day with Brother J. S. Dunn, who works with the Pearl and Bryan Street church of Christ. They are doing a good work also. The congregation is in much better condition than it has been in for a long time; so I was told by one of the elders.

Bonham, Tex. J. P. SEWELL.

The Famine in India.

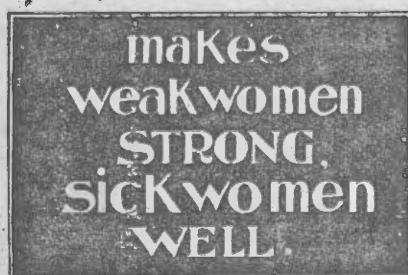

Nearly everybody, I suppose, is aware of it. Fifty million people are actually starving to death. A person can live on five cents a day there. One dollar will save a man's life for twenty days. I want to ask the churches to make a certain contribution for this great mass of suffering humanity. I will take the responsibility of seeing that the offerings are put into the hands of reliable parties there for distribution. Let us act at once. Men are perishing daily. If you have poor at home, make this contribution to the perishing in India and then help your poor at home. One woman carried her little girl to the river to throw her in to keep from seeing her die before her face. The little girl begged her mother to spare her life, and she would go and beg.

Louisville, Ky. J. M. M'CALEB.

The beet crop of the Utah Sugar Company for 1899 is fifty-three thousand tons, or three thousand tons more than was anticipated at the opening of the season. The crop has averaged twelve tons to the acre. Some of the beets ran as low as six tons, while some went as high as eighteen. The price paid for the beets this year was $4.50 per ton, delivered at the factory, which would show a gross income to the farmer of $54 per acre on his beets. The company is paying out for beets this year, $250,000; it is paying for labor, about $100,000; and next year it proposes to expend $500,000 in improvements.

"I had been a sufferer for many years from nervousness with all its symptoms and complications," writes Mrs. O. N. Fisher, 1861 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y. "I was constantly going to see a physician or purchasing medicine. In the spring of 1897 my husband induced me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. After taking one bottle and following your advice I was so encouraged that I took five more bottles, and then stopped for several weeks as I felt so much better, but still I was not completely cured. I commenced taking it again and felt that I was improving faster than at first. I am not now cross and irritable, and I have a good color in my face; have also gained about ten pounds in weight and one thousand pounds of comfort, for I am a new woman once more and your advice and your 'Favorite Prescription' is the cause of it, coupled with the 'Pleasant Pellets' which are not to be dispensed with. I took eight bottles of the 'Prescription' the last time, making fourteen in all, and will not take any more unless you so advise, for I do not see as I need it."

Articles of Merit Well Advertised.

It has been truthfully stated that Messrs. Sutcliffe & Co. spend a great deal of money in advertising. Of course their business must be large to justify this expenditure in publicity.

There is no fallacy more dangerous than that success can be gained by advertising articles of indifferent merit. It pays to advertise articles of merit, especially when they are in demand and the price is right; then the greatest measure of success is attained by keeping them continually before the public.

Merit and good advertising are both essential in making an article a great success. Their goods possessing the first, Messrs. Sutcliffe & Co. have wisely used the second, and the result has been very satisfactory.

Messrs. Sutcliffe & Co.'s large, general catalogue (sent prepaid FREE on receipt of ten cents to pay part postage) contains thousands of useful articles of merit at the right price. Messrs. Sutcliffe & Co., whose advertisement appears in this issue, believe that there is no medium like the newspapers, since in these enlightened days everybody reads them.

The Mormon-Christian War.

It is known that there have been several editions of the "Book of Mormon." It is not generally known that over two thousand changes have been made in the first edition, published at Palmyra, N. Y. This is a deadly blow to the "ism," in view of its claims about the translations of the golden plates.

Those who have started out to find a copy of the Palmyra edition know the almost impossibility to find a copy. Then, too, it is placed at a fabulous price.

Neither the "Brighamites" nor "Josephites" care about being confronted with a copy of the first edition of the "Book of Mormon."

Now, I have run up on a limited number of copies, cloth bound, a reprint, pimples and all, of the Palmyra edition. These will be invaluable to Mormon polemics.

With it and a twenty-five cent book published by Lamoni Call, a former Mormon, showing these changes in a tabulated form, saving much labor on your part, you are prepared to spike the claims of the elders about a divinely correct edition.

It costs ten cents in stamps to mail this edition of the "Book of Mormon." Now, for $1.50 I will send this "Book of Mormon," a copy of Call's "Changes in the 'Book of Mormon,'" and my five tracts, all postpaid.

As there are only a very limited number of these copies of the "Book of Mormon," you need to be spry to get one of them. If you do not wish a copy of Call's "Two Thousand Changes" or a set of my tracts, send $1.10 for the "Book of Mormon."

ARE YOU A MINERAL?

There Are Minerals in Your Blood.
You Think You Belong to the Animal Kingdom.

And so you do; but your body contains minerals that are absolutely needed to keep you in health and alive.

You are like a quartz mine. There are veins of phosphorus, sulphur, magnesia, calcium, iron in your blood.

They are nerve and tissue foods, just as starch and meat are. What we call "poor" blood is nearly always the lack of one or more of these mineral physiological foods.

The rich, red strength and nerve power in good, healthy blood is due to its vein of iron.

Pale people are poor-blooded people; they lack strength and stamina; they are nervous; they catch cold easily; they suffer from headaches, rheumatism, dizziness, sleeplessness, depression of spirits, fever, ague, general lack of health and vitality.

They may build up an iron constitution with Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

Swallowing an iron bar will not help you. A chemical salt of iron is needed, so that it can go through the natural chemical processes of your body.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, a medicine which contains a new salt of iron, is more easily dissolved into the blood and turned into strength than any other.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic makes you as strong as iron.

Read this from a Texas man:

"Office of Texas Farm and Ranch.

"Dallas, Tex., December 15, 1897.

"Gentlemen: It affords me pleasure to add my short testimonial to the merits of your Iron Tonic. I secured from the Palace Drug Store, of this city, a sample bottle of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, and after using same, according to directions, can say that I derived so much benefit from the same that in future Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic will occupy a prominent place in my medicine cabinet. I find that it builds up the system, aids digestion, and will greatly benefit those suffering from indigestion.

Questions for Brother Brown.

I have been intensely interested of late in reading a little book with the title: "In His Steps; or, What Would Jesus Do?" I would like to see it in every home. It is published by the David C. Cook Publishing Company, Chicago, Ill.; it costs but five cents in paper cover. It deals with practical, everyday life in its different phases, and illustrates in novel style the probable effects of copying the principles of Jesus' life in all lines of business enterprise, as well as church life; it cannot fail to interest the old, and be of untold benefit to the young.

In line with this work are the articles of Brother W. J. Brown, of Coal City, Ind., which are appearing in the Gospel Advocate of late. They are indeed timely, and deserve more than a cursory reading. It cannot fail to comfort the poor toiler in life's common drudgery that "whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free;" and, what interests me more, that selfish or mercenary motives should not prompt us to follow any of the avocations of this life. Brother Brown holds that I had as well preach for money as sell goods for money. It is under this head that "I see men as trees walking."

Now, as a preacher, I have never received a stipulated support for my labors. Am I right in this? Should I make it a matter of conscience to refuse to go into a contract to furnish "so much preach for so much pay?" I mean, of course, where the people need the preaching and are able to pay for it. The freewill contributions of brethren are sometimes insufficient for the needs of my family. In this case I turn aside from preaching and work on the farm for Neighbor H. at fifteen cents an hour. That is common wages where I live in California. Is this right, or should I work freely, without charge?

Of course, this is supposing that Neighbor H. needs the work and is able to pay for it. It is no generosity to him on my part if I work for nothing, for he does not need charity. Should I work for him at all? Do you think Paul made tents for a price or simply as a duty in the abstract? Did Paul preach for a set price, or simply as a duty and for the love of souls? Is there no difference between "carnal things" and "spiritual things?" If not, why does Paul use the two expressions? If I work an hour at fifteen cents—with the proper motive—and then give the money to the poor, will God reward me for both? Have I in that case given the Lord one hour's service in working for Neighbor H., and given the Lord the worth of another hour's service in bestowing fifteen cents on the Lord's poor? Can I thus crowd two hours into one? Is that what Paul means by "redeeming the time?" May I preach for fifteen cents an hour, give that to the poor, and receive a reward for both?

You say I cannot serve God by proxy. Suppose a poor brother is sick. He has no one to sit up with him. I cannot go. I pay a man of the world two dollars to sit up one night. Is this praiseworthy? Is it benevolence to the well man or the sick one? If to the sick one, was it by proxy? If not, how could anything be done by proxy, and is there any such thing as proxy in the world?

I paid three dollars an hour to a dentist not long since to work on my teeth. The material cost almost nothing. Of course this must be extortionate. Should he have charged what other people commonly make at other callings, or just enough to support his family? If he had a right to make some over for the poor and the support of the gospel, who shall say how much? Please apply these principles to preaching, if it is the same. These questions are not for criticism, but for information.

You say the poor preacher must make a fair trial of the promises of God. To me that would mean to preach without charge, and trust God for his promises. I am hired to Christ, and not to man. I am worthy of whatever hire God chooses to give me. Should I work the same way on the farm? May I choose to work for one man who is able to pay, and not for another who is not able to pay, if I am needing the money? May I thus choose between churches where I shall preach, and choose the one that will pay the best, if I am needing money?

I like nearly all you say, and pray God it may bear fruit. I am a young preacher.

PAUL HAYS.

Srygley-Hicks Debate.

I am home from Lynn, Ala., where I served Brother F. B. Srygley as moderator in a six-days' debate with W. M. Hicks, or W. M. C. Hicks, or W. M. C. C. Hicks, or W. M. C. O. Hicks.

This debate (if it be lawful to call it a "debate") began on March 1, and closed on March 7. I undertook to keep the debate down, and went to the leading Baptists in the place, in person, with the purpose of warning them concerning Hicks and to ask them to withdraw him and to put a clean man in his place; but they gave me to understand that they cared nothing for his character, saying it made no difference if he proved to be a cutthroat, thief, or robber, or if he was just out of the State prison, just so he could gain their point, and if Srygley did not meet him, it was a square backdown. I contended with the brethren to the last that it was best to positively decline to have anything to do with Hicks, but I was overruled by the other brethren; so the discussion opened, according to agreement, and we made the very best fight we could (for the truth) under the circumstances. I can safely say that Hicks is the most insulting and abusive man I ever met with.

We felt very proud of the Christian dignity of Brother Srygley. When Hicks called him many things too bad to appear in print, Srygley never showed the slightest color. Under the circumstances, Brother Srygley made a noble stand for truth and right, and I think some good will come of it. I warn the brethren everywhere against Hicks, as a man that no one can afford to spend time with. He is published unfavorable in several Baptist papers. For information concerning his past history, write F. B. Srygley, Donelson, Tenn.; C. A. Wheeler, Lynn, Ala.; or the writer, Jasper, Ala. We have it in the original packages from Baptist headquarters.

Field Gleanings.

I have carefully read Brother W. L. Butler's articles on "The Fellowship," and find many things that I can commend as truly scriptural and very helpful to any Bible student; but in his "No. 2" appear some things from which I dissent, and which I desire to review briefly. I hope that Brother Butler will carefully note my arguments, and, if not in harmony with the Bible, will point out the discrepancies. I will give his quotation at length and ask the reader to turn to page 163 of Gospel Advocate of March 15 for his article in full. I give the closing paragraph as follows:

"As to the method of gathering this gift and bearing it to its destination, I ask you to note the following: 'Now, concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. And when I come, whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your liberality unto Jerusalem. And if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me.' (1 Cor. 16: 1-4.) It would be well to pause and note a few things in regard to this example of fellowship: (1) It is a contribution for the poor, not for the clergy or the support of religious institutions which abound among denominations. The scriptures setting forth this fellowship are abused when summoned to the support of collections for all sorts of societies and concerns. (2) Each contributor is required to lay by him in store, not to put into some common church box, or into the hands of a church treasurer. There is no such office revealed in the divine will as a church treasurer. Nor is it proper for each Christian to lay by him in store in raising supplies for the poor at home, for in that case the giver should lay his gift by the poor. They are in reach of him, and need it; he should put it into their hands, not treasure it up by himself. But in the example before us the poor were in a foreign land, and he could not lay it by them, and hence is ordered to set it apart by himself, having it ready by the time Paul came; and then it was to be put, with other gifts, into the hands of approved men and by them borne to Jerusalem. (3) There is no statement in God's word to the effect that Christians laid by them in store, in obedience to this text, when they met together to break bread. They met on the first day to break bread, and were told to lay by them in store on the same day for the saints far away. But the fact that each laid by him, not by a treasurer who held the funds for all, goes to show that the assembly was unnecessary for compliance with the text; and not being informed that they assembled together and then each laid by him in store, it is too much to assume that they did that way, and establish thereupon the treasurer of the church, the contribution box, and the regular first-day collection for all religious purposes. Perhaps the previous existence of the treasurer, the fashion of drawing crowds for preaching on the first day, and the crying need for money out of the mixed crowd to support the clergy and their appointments are responsible for putting this collection at the time of being in assembly. But I am perfectly certain that this scripture does not require the laying 'by him' to be done in the assembly that breaks bread, or in any other assembly, as for that matter."

The particular points that I will notice are as follows: "Each contributor is required to lay by him in store, not to put into some common church box, or into the hands of a church treasurer. . . . There is no statement in God's word to the effect that Christians laid by them in store, in obedience to this text, when they met together to break bread."

The point Brother Butler seems to try to make is that Christians have no divine authority to place their money in a common treasury when they meet upon the first day of the week to break bread. In relieving the poor at home, his idea seems to be for each individual to give directly to the one needing without laying it by in the "church treasury" for that purpose; in giving instructions to the Corinthians, as Brother Butler quoted, they were to "lay by him in store;" and Brother Butler says that as they were to "lay by him," then they were not to lay by in a "church treasury."

Now, notice carefully the reason given by Paul for them to "lay by him in store." He says: "That there be no gathering when I come." If Brother Butler's idea is correct, when Paul came they had to "gather" the money, for it was in as many different places as there were disciples in Corinth. If his idea is correct, it seems to me that Paul should have said: "Let each of you lay by in store, that there be a gathering when I come." But the very fact that he said "that there be no gathering when I come," shows conclusively to my mind that the "gathering" was to be made before he came, and the time or times for this "gathering" was "upon the first day of the week."

In further support of this idea, I quote: "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." (Acts 2: 42.) The word "fellowship" is rendered "contribution" in the Emphatic Diaglott rendering, which clearly shows that the fellowship, or contribution, was at the time of the "breaking of bread."

In Mosheim's "Church History," page 48, in speaking of the worship of the early Christians, he says: "During these sacred meetings prayers were repeated, the Holy Scriptures were publicly read, short discourses upon the duties of Christians were addressed to the people, hymns were sung, and a portion [not all, but a part] of the oblation presented by the faithful was employed in the celebration of the Lord's Supper."

In the relief of the poor, we learn from Acts 6: 1-7 that seven men were selected from the number of disciples to attend to that work. Brother Butler's idea would destroy their work, and if each individual were to give directly to the one needing assistance then there would be no use to select the seven to look after them. Christian people should meet upon every first day of the week to worship God, and, while together, give as God has prospered them; and then if there are needy ones, let the deacons supply them from the treasury.

There are many other things that I could say to profit on this line, but I must forbear for the present. Let every reader give this subject a careful study.

A letter from Brother G. W. Gann, of Campbell, Tex., says: "I went to Sterrett, I. T., on Friday before the fourth Lord's day in February. I preached there two weeks. I found the brethren scattered and doing nothing. I set them to work, appointed elders and deacons, and they covenanted to keep house for the Lord. Three were baptized into the one body. The preacher's got mad, the brethren rejoiced, and sinners were made glad through the gospel of Christ."

At this writing I am at Jameson, Tex., preaching the word of God. There is no congregation here, but I hope to sow some good seed that will be as bread cast upon the waters.

My brother, P. D. Lawson, is sounding out the word in the regions about Denton. If you can use him in a meeting, write him at Denton. May God bless all the faithful.

Finding God Within.

The man who finds not God in his own heart will find him nowhere, and he who finds him there will find him everywhere. The reason why men are so often disappointed in their search for God is that they do not look for him first of all where he should chiefly be sought—in the manifestations he makes of himself in their own minds and hearts. They suffer the noises of the world to drown the "still small voice" that never ceases to plead with them to keep in the path of righteousness and peace.—David Swing.

Their Distinctive Plea.

We should like very much to see a formulation of "the distinctive plea" of those brethren who went out from the church of God as progressives. Their distinctive plea was once the union of all Christians upon the Bible—the only authoritative rule of faith and practice.

What is it now? They cannot consistently plead for a union on the Bible, for the sects and the world would at once reply: "Physician, heal thyself! Go to the Bible yourself! We have as much of it as you have, and are as nearly in accord with its teaching." They cannot plead the Bible as an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice, for they know it does not furnish them instruction for much of their present teaching and practice—traditions of their own manufacture. What, then, is their plea before the world? What reason can they give as to why they, as a new sect, should have a place among other sects?

It would be interesting indeed to see one of their "D.D.'s" endeavoring to enlighten us on this point—spreading himself out on their oft-misapplied motto: "In faith, unity; in opinion, liberty; in all things, charity." They generally spread themselves on the two last items named, but on the first they cannot say much, further than to state the proposition so as to look logical and scriptural; for since faith comes by hearing the word of God, as said in Rom. 10: 17, it follows they could believe nothing necessary to true worship which God does not direct in his word. No one can do a religious act—walking by faith in the matter—where God has said nothing about it, for faith comes by hearing the word of God; but the digressives do many things in religious worship which God has said nothing about. They do not, therefore, walk by faith in doing it, and cannot, therefore, please God; for "without faith it is impossible to please him." (Heb. 11: 6.) So they commit sin in the very things which they call religious worship; "for whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.)

Our blessed Savior says this is vain worship. "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

JOHN T. POE.

Early Obedience.

I took down the "Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell," not long since, for the purpose of refreshing my memory about some things in it. I became so interested in the sketch of his life, by Brother Lipscomb, that I never laid the book aside until I had finished it. I believe it would be a good idea for preachers who think they have a hard time to have the book at hand, and, when threatened with a complaining mood, to read this sketch. I was so impressed with Brother Lipscomb's observations on early obedience that I am led to copy them for the Gospel Advocate:

"Many think this [ten years of age] young to join the church; and many who come into the church so young, through evil surroundings, forget the obligations they take upon themselves, and turn back and walk no more with God. But after giving special attention to the subject for years, I think not so large a proportion of those who start when young fall away as of those who await a more mature age; and, after considerable inquiry among those devoting themselves to the service of God, I am sure a larger proportion of those who begin early are apt to make faithful, consecrated Christians than of those who start later in life. Of course, children need to be kept under good influences and to be encouraged in the right way. Without these, but few will grow up to morality and righteousness; but with proper parental care, children that start early in the Christian life make the most faithful, earnest, and devoted Christians; they are kept back from evil habits, make the most successful and moral men here, and are better fitted for the eternal home with God. I do not believe that all children are fitted for church membership at so early an age. A sense of personal responsibility develops in some children at a much earlier age than others. Until this is developed the child is not fitted for church membership. It develops earlier in those that are thrown on their own resources and are left to provide their own amusements and to think and act for themselves. As a rule, it is developed much earlier in the children of laboring people, and children left to depend on themselves and who are early trained to do their part in life than among the wealthy. . . . A child ought never to be discouraged from obedience when it feels the obligation resting on it to obey; it ought to be instructed, and care should be taken that it is acting from faith in Christ, that it feels a sense of responsibility arising from a clear apprehension that man is a sinner, in need of a Savior, and that Jesus Christ as the Son of God died to redeem and save sinners. But it is a most dangerous state when a person sees the right, yet refuses to do it. To discourage children from obedience, when they see the truth and feel the obligation to obey, is to school them to do violence to their own consciences. Man cannot fall into a more dangerous and fatal habit than that of living in violation of his conscience. Jesse Sewell's prompt obedience when a mere child was the indication and promise of his readiness to act on his faith and of his fidelity to all the demands of truth, as he learned them through life."

"I found a little sermon in the street to-day," said Polly, coming in from her walk. "It is queer how we run across them everywhere. Then I came to an iron fence; the top a smooth rail perfectly straight, but that also appeared bent and crooked as its shadow lay upon the walk. I reminded myself then of what I might have known all the time—that it was the uneven pavement which was responsible for the ragged lines. No matter how clear the sunlight or how faultless the outlines of the object, the imperfect surface of the walk distorted every impression that came to it. Is not that the way with many of the impressions our minds receive? We let our thoughts and feelings get so warped and morbid that they will not allow us to see things as they really are, and many of the rough, crooked lines we grieve over would be straightened for us if we could only see them as God's sunlight sends them, and not as they are shown us by our own uneven tempers."—Forward.

The National Museum in Washington has come into possession of a meteorite which fell on Thomas' Hill, in Allegan, Mich., on July 10, 1899. The fall occurred about eight o'clock in the morning. Observers noticed a slight bluish tinge and a hazy appearance in the track of the descending stone. Some report that they heard a rumbling and rushing noise. The meteorite probably weighed originally seventy pounds, but it was shattered by its fall, the largest piece weighing sixty-two and one-half pounds. It buried itself eighteen inches in the ground, and was picked up while yet warm. It is friable, and contains finely disseminated metallic iron, olivine in the form of black glass, and some undetermined sulphides.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red  at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

Brother Cunningham has collapsed, as follows:

"Now, I do not see how you and I can have any discussion unless you will affirm that the Bible teaches Christians shall sing praises to God only, without connection with instruments, and shall work for God only, without any convention with any kind of association or society other than the church of God. If you will so affirm, of course you can get a discussion; but I take it for granted you have too much common sense to affirm any such absurdities.

"J. A. CUNNINGHAM."

I made the statement in an editorial paragraph that "organized effort among the Disciples is denominational organization." Brother Cunningham denied the statement, and announced himself ready to discuss the issue. I have published two articles from him, and now, in his third communication, he says he does not see how we can have a discussion unless I will affirm an entirely different proposition. If this means anything at all, it means that Brother Cunningham cannot discuss the issue he made. This ends the matter, so far as any discussion with him is concerned, on the proposition that "organized effort among the Disciples is denominational organization." I am still ready to discuss this proposition with anybody who will deny it, but I decline to change the proposition to enable Brother Cunningham to proceed with the discussion after he has written three articles.

I publish this week A. Malone's article on "The Universal Church." With this article he sends me the following letter:

"Franklin, Ky., March 30, 1900.—Elder F. D. Srygley, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother: Your favor of the 29th inst. is at hand, and I send you by return mail the article which you request, which I am willing that you shall publish upon the following conditions—viz.: First, that you publish the inclosed letter from the Western Recorder, sent me when they returned the article; second, that you state that the editor of the Baptist Argus sent me a long and kind letter—too long for insertion—when he returned the article, in which he states that the controversy on this question in his paper closed some time ago, since which time he has returned other manuscript, or articles, and also that he was sorry that I did not send the article sooner; third, that you state that you requested me to send the article; fourth, that you send me a copy of the Gospel Advocate containing it. I submit these conditions that all may know that I have not sought room in your paper to attack my brethren; in fact, there is no fight between me and the recognized authorities in our church on this question, nor do I object to a "comment" on this article. Fraternally,

A. MALONE.

"P.S. Remember that Brother J. N. Hall did not return the article which he declined to publish, and which I read to you.

A. M."

The letter inclosed from the Western Recorder is as follows:

"Louisville, Ky., February 12, 1900.—Mr. Malone.—Dear Brother: We return the article which you so kindly sent us, solely because we have had so much on the subject in the Western Recorder that, with what we have already accepted, our readers would not like more, no matter how well written or how thoroughly in accord with their doctrines. We would take pleasure in publishing had it not been for this.

"Yours truly,
WESTERN RECORDER,
"J."

The only "comment" I care to make is a statement of facts. In discussion with J. N. Hall, I quoted F. B. Srygley to the effect that A. Malone, in debate at Epley Station, Ky., took the position that the church includes and consists of all Christians; that he read from the Philadelphia "Confession of Faith" to prove this, and said Baptists have been teaching it for two hundred and fifty years. Brother Hall wrote to Brother Malone to know whether F. B. Srygley correctly represented him. Malone wrote Hall a letter which Hall did not publish, but claimed that the letter showed that Srygley misrepresented Malone. Malone wrote Srygley a letter, which I published, and which showed that Srygley did not misrepresent him. From this it was perfectly clear that either Malone or Hall had made a statement that was not true. To settle the question of veracity between them, I asked Hall to publish Malone's letter. He declined to publish it on the ground that it was "too long for our space," and contained much that was "personal and private." Malone said it was "brief;" that he wrote it for publication at Hall's request; that he expected it to be published and thought Hall ought to publish it; and that there was nothing "personal and private" in it. I offered to publish it without taking any of Hall's space if he would send it to me, but he declined to send it. Malone then wrote an article for Hall's paper on the church, which he read to me before he mailed it. In that article he took the same position he takes in the article I publish this week, and supported it by the same arguments and authorities. This is exactly the position F. B. Srygley represented him as taking in the debate at Epley Station, Ky. Hall refused to publish that article and "did not return" it. F. B. Srygley stands before the readers of Hall's paper to this day charged with misrepresenting Malone, and Hall has refused to allow Malone to correct that charge; Malone stands before the readers of Hall's paper to this day represented as taking positions which Malone says he did not take and does not believe, and Hall refuses to let him correct the misrepresentation. From all this it is perfectly clear that in that discussion Hall represented Malone as teaching what he knows Malone does not teach and does not believe. Would not the same principle which knowingly misrepresents Malone misrepresent also the New Testament? If not, why not? Would not a man who represents Malone as teaching what he knows Malone does not teach, on the same subject and in the same discussion, represent the New Testament as teaching what he knows the New Testament does not teach? If not, why not? He knows he has misrepresented Malone, for Malone has told him so, and he has refused to publish Malone's comment. What evidence have we that he does not also know he has misrepresented the New Testament? I am advised that there is a movement on foot to get up "a representative debate" between Brother Hall and somebody in the region where such men as Butler, Elam, Carter, Srygley, White, Pullias, Kidwill, Harding, Lipscomb, Brents, Fleming, and Bird have debated with such Baptists as they could get. If I catch the meaning of this, it is that Brother Hall is the only man who can conduct "a representative debate" for the Baptists in this country. Such men as Malone, Moody, Oakley, Grime, Eastes, etc., cannot debate on a "representative" scale. If this is the meaning of it, the predicament Brother Hall is in is exceedingly unfortunate for the whole Baptist fraternity. It would seem from this that a man cannot be "a representative" debater for the Baptists in this country unless he misrepresents A. Malone and what Malone calls "the recognized authorities in our church."

Brother Malone's article is as follows:

"THE UNIVERSAL CHURCH.

"The term 'church' primarily denotes a congregation of baptized believers; secondarily, it denotes the aggregate of all of the churches of Jesus Christ. To this secondary meaning it came under a law of language as old as human speech and as imperishable as the conditions of thought. The philosophy of this fact is found in the infallibility of the Holy Spirit, under whose direction the churches of Christ were constituted. For example, the church at Corinth was established under the direction of the Holy Spirit, under whose inspiration the church at Ephesus was constituted. They were, therefore, just alike. What was true of one was true of both, and so of all of the primitive churches of Jesus Christ; nor did any church differ from any other church until innovations and departures made them dissimilar. For this reason, while every church was entirely independent of all other churches, they all held the same fundamental principles which constituted 'the unity of the Spirit' which they held 'in the bond of peace.' They, then, were one—one in doctrine, one in life, one in thought, and one in purpose. Every idea comprised by the term 'church,' when employed to denote the congregation at Antioch, was necessarily in the same term when employed to denote the congregation of disciples at Ephesus. Every idea legitimately found in the term, when employed to denote a congregation of disciples at one place, was necessarily in it when employed to denote a congregation of disciples at any other place. To know what was true of one church was to know what was true of all churches. In this way, under this condition of thought and law of language, the term, in its logical extension, came to denote all of the churches of Jesus Christ. This fact is clearly established in the New Testament and accepted by many distinguished Baptists. 1. I want, first, to examine the New Testament. 'Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria,' etc. (Acts 9: 31.) Now, take up the American Bible Union, a Baptist translation, and read 'church' in the singular; take the Revised Version and read 'church' in the singular; take Hackett's 'Commentary on Acts' and read 'church' in the singular. But there is a passage in the Authorized Version of the New Testament where, or in which, it is impossible that the term 'church' should denote simply a local congregation. That passage is Heb. 12: 23. There we have the phrase: 'Church of the firstborn.' In verse 22 it is called 'Mount Zion, . . . the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem,' etc. Now, it is impossible that these phrases should denote simply a local congregation of disciples. 'John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven,' etc. (Rev. 21: 2.) What John here calls 'the holy city, new Jerusalem,' Paul calls 'the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem,' and 'church of the first-born.' It is evident, then, that the term 'church,' in Heb. 12: 23, is used in its secondary sense. Other passages, where it evidently has the same meaning, will yet be given. 2. I want, in the second place, to ask: How do Baptists understand this question? Answer: Baptists have ever understood the term just as it is used in the New Testament. The London Confession (1689) says: 'The Catholic Church, or Universal Church, which (with respect to the inter-work of the Spirit and truth of grace) may be invisible, consists of the whole (a) number of the elect that have been, are, or shall be gathered into one, under Christ, the head thereof; and is the spouse, the body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all.' (Section I, page 38.) This section is supported by the following passages: Heb. 12: 23; Col. 1: 18; Eph. 1: 10, 22, 23; Eph. 5: 23, 27, 32. At this point I wish to call special attention to the statement of the London Confession concerning the invisibility of the church of God. It says the church, 'with respect to the internal work of the Spirit and truth of grace, may be called invisible.' It is, then, the work of the Holy Spirit and the word of truth which this confession says is invisible; yet I never use the term 'invisible' to denote the church of God. The churches of Jesus Christ which I do not see are as real and visible as those which I do see, and so have been all the way down the line. To illustrate: Go, stand upon the bank of the Ohio River, where but three miles of its length can be seen, and you will only a small part of the river; yet the parts which you do not see are as real as the part which you see, and are visible to others. But, by a figure of speech, you put the part which you see for the parts which you do not see, and say: 'This is the Ohio River.' When I say a figure of speech I do not mean that the term or phrase sustains to the thing which it is employed to represent the relation of shadow to substance, but I mean that figure by which we put a part for the whole. The part which we employ to represent the whole is real, and the whole represented by a part is real. Every part, whether figurative or literal, is an essential part of the whole. Dr. J. R. Graves maintains this truth when he says: 'There are ten instances in the New Testament where the term "church" is used figuratively—by synecdoche—where a part is put for the whole, the singular for the plural, one for all.' ('Old Landmarkism,' page 39.) But Dr. Graves does not believe in 'the universal or provincial idea;' nor do I, when the term 'universal' is employed to denote a provincial church—that is, a church which covers a province or country. No such an organization was ever established by the apostles of Jesus Christ; yet the term 'church,' in its logical extension, is, by a figure of speech—the synecdoche—put for 'the redeemed in the aggregate.' Now, to save time and space, I wish to mention a few distinguished Baptist authors who maintain this fact, without quoting their language: James M. Pendleton, D.D., 'Christian Doctrines,' page 329; Alvah Hovey, D.D., LL.D., 'Manual of Systemic Theology,' page 302; Prof. A. H. Newman, D.D., LL.D., 'Baptist Doctrines,' page 246, revised edition; Prof. H. Harvey, D.D., 'The Church,' page 27. To these might be added Dr. Dargan, Dr. Hiscox, Dr. Dagg, and others. Again, Baptists hold as a fundamental truth that the terms 'church' and 'kingdom,' when employed to denote the saved, are synonyms. On this point, Dr. J. R. Graves says: 'We should feel obliged to any one who will produce one instance where the phrases, "the kingdom of Christ" and "the church of Christ," refer to different institutions. A church of Christ differs from the church as a part differs from the whole, but we think that church and the kingdom of Christ refer to the selfsame institution; and though they may never have been translated by the same phrase, it is no evidence they do not refer to the same organization. The kingdom of heaven, and the kingdom of God's dear Son, and the church of Christ, we also think refer to the selfsame organism—the churches, considered as one institution, under one headship.' (Quoted in the 'Ray-Lucas Debate,' pages 255, 256.) Then, to enter the kingdom of God is to enter the church of God—that is, in its New Testament sense; for in the apostolic age, these terms seemed to be, in many instances, synonymous. But I do not maintain that the term 'church,' in its present latitudinous sense, is synonymous with the term 'kingdom.' I am speaking strictly of its New Testament sense; and when, in this sense, it is used as a collective noun in the singular number, it is synonymous with the term 'kingdom.' This fundamental truth is maintained by the ablest Baptists, living or dead, whose writings have come to us; nor is there any reason why this question should be agitated in this age of New Testament exegesis.

A. MALONE.

"Franklin, Ky."

To make the issue between Brother Malone and Brother Hall clear and distinct, it should be remembered while reading the foregoing article that Brother Hall said repeatedly, in discussion with me, that the word "church," in the New Testament, never means anything but a local congregation. It was against this statement that I quoted a long list of eminent Baptist authorities and published F. B. Srygley's statement as to the position Malone took in debate.

Our Contributors.

Henry Hardshell Under Conviction.

Henry Hardshell: "I am glad to meet you, friend Faithful. Your pleasant smile, which seems habitual, has a cheering effect upon me."

Frank Faithful: "Well, you know the wise man says: 'Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.'" (Prov. 27: 17.)

Henry H.: "By the way, friend Faithful, what do you understand to be the meaning of that proverb?"

Frank F.: "Just what you have expressed in your own words to me of the effect our friendships have upon each other. Allow me to thank you for the assurance you have given me of the wholesome influence my presence has upon you. I doubt not it is mutual. I like your candor and earnestness. I have continually prayed for you, that you might see the truth as it is in Jesus, untrammelled by any denominational influences. There are those in whose company we delight, not only on account of congeniality of dispositions, but because, in some inexplicable way, they give you the strength you need in the great battle of life. Their presence encourages you in the attainment of that which is noble and good. Such friends we are commanded to hold in estimation. It is of such the wise man says: 'A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity.'"

Henry H.: "I am glad you have mentioned that proverb. I have often wondered what it meant to be 'born for adversity.' I have supposed it might refer to the eternal decrees of God, implying the great doctrine of election and reprobation."

Frank F.: "O no, Henry; it has no such reference, but means simply what we have supposed. The reference is to true and solid friendships. They are lasting and stand the test of hardships and all kinds of emergencies. A friend who does not love at all times is not worthy the name of friend; a brother who shows not his brotherhood in your times of need is no brother, though born of the same parents, guarded by the same father's care, and reared in the sunshine of the same mother's love and smiles; a brother worthy of the name will manifest a brother's interest."

Henry H.: "Shall I understand you as applying this true test of friendship to you and me, when we are not related in a family tie, nor yet in a spiritual one? We admit mutual helps."

Frank F.: "Yes; I would have this test applied to ourselves, if indeed it meets your approval."

Henry H.: "It does, I assure you. Just at this time, friend Faithful, I am the one in need, and you will do me the kindness of a true friend, I hope. I am seeking the way of salvation. You have already helped me."

Frank F.: "You are more than welcome. I shall be glad to aid you further. It is but civility and politeness in one to do that much, I am sure."

Henry H.: "I have heard it said that true politeness is to do the kindest thing in the kindest way. If you call it but politeness, it is true politeness, as I am witness. I have seen and felt the force of the truths you have so clearly shown me from the word of God. I am convinced that, however sinful and unworthy I am, I can do something to obey God, and I certainly believe I ought; but, friend Faithful, I find it so hard to trust myself."

Frank F.: "Well, cease to think so much about yourself, study closely and try to follow the character of the Son of God. By these sweet influences you will soon be saved by his gospel. Study the personal Son of God as he is revealed to us in the Scriptures, and then you personally and individually follow him. This will place you right in your relations to God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, yourself, and fellow-men."

Henry H.: "I can see the propriety and importance of doing all this, and I believe I now know what my individual duty to God is, but when I think of it there looms up before me this question: What church shall I join? My own people were of the Baptist persuasion, and—"

Frank F. (interrupting): "You are on the right track, Henry, if you will only keep it and not turn aside after such questions. Let this now be your guiding star: Do your individual duty to God; do nothing but what God commands you to do; do not join the church, even, until God commands you to do so. You just simply render that personal obedience to God's commands he requires of you, and this difficulty you mention and many others will adjust themselves. 'Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.'"

Henry H.: "Nothing would suit me better than just to be a child of God, a Christian, but am I not commanded to join the church?"

Frank F.: "Not that I have ever read in the New Testament. We are commanded to believe on Jesus Christ, and otherwise obey his commandments. If he ever told any one to join the church, I do not remember the passage."

Henry H.: "Why, I thought everybody was commanded to join the church!"

Frank F.: "There is much said in the New Testament about the church, or body of Christ, but the obedience which one renders to the gospel of Christ constitutes him a member of his body, or church."

Henry H.: "Ah, is that the idea? I am so glad to see it clearly. It is strange I did not see it before now, since I have been so anxious to become a Christian."

Frank F.: "I am glad you can see the way out of the difficulty. Now, Henry, do you understand that God commands us to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?"

Henry H.: "O yes! Christ said: 'He that believeth not shall be damned.'"

Frank F.: "Well, that is not joining the church; no one says it is. The same divine authority commands you to repent. You understand we must repent, do you?"

Henry H.: "O yes! God commands all men, everywhere, to repent. There is no salvation without it."

Frank F.: "Well, you repent of your sins, which means to be sorry for them, and turn from them in purpose and life. That is not joining the church, yet in that you continue to obey Christ. Are you penitent?"

Henry H.: "Yes, deeply so. I abhor sin. I wish to publicly confess my faith in Christ."

Frank F.: "That is noble and approved by Christ, but that is not joining the church, although some call it that. What do you say?"

Henry H.: "No; that is not joining the church, for I could confess Christ, as did the Ethiopian nobleman, where there was no church to join."

Frank F.: "Just so; and, Henry, are you not willing to be baptized in obedience to Christ, as the Ethiopian nobleman also was? It seems to me you might properly ask the same question: What hinders me being baptized? A lack of faith might hinder, but you profess faith; a lack of repentance might hinder, but you claim to be penitent; a desire to build up some man-made denomination, or institution, might hinder, but this you deny for yourself. On the other hand, a desire to be saved from sin, a desire to please God, a sincere desire to obey Christ—one or all of these—will qualify you for baptism. Following this line of obedience to Christ, after baptism, this is still to be your guiding star. He tells you to forsake not the assembly, to continue in the apostles' doctrine, in fellowship, in breaking of bread, and in prayers."

Henry H.: "Why, if I did all those things, people would say I had joined the church, and the Campbellite—"

Frank F. (interrupting): "No matter what people say of you; as long as you are obeying Christ, you will have the approval of your God, a clear conscience, and cannot doubt you are saved from sin and an heir of heaven and eternal life."

Henry H.: "I will let you know my decision the next time we meet."

Frank F.: "I hope you may, but something like this Felix once said. Henry, be careful."

The Fellowship. No. 5.

That much importance is attached to money in the religious works of this day and time is shown by the efforts made to collect it.

Men's organizations in religion are money-collecting and money-disbursing concerns. Nearly all of them have gifted and well-trained financial agents laboring all their time, on good salaries, to raise money for the so-called work of the Lord. The appeals are made publicly, and from house to house. Every feeling and sentiment of the human heart is stirred up in order to influence people to "shell out" the cash. Still the sad wail goes up from the secretaries: "All we lack is money!" "Give us money and the good work shall go on." "Five dollars put into our hands will bring a soul into the kingdom of God." So on ad nauseam.

If a man goes to a foreign land to preach without the support of a society, a number of religious periodicals keep his name before their readers every week as in need of money, and the editors of these journals are expected to receive and forward the funds, which their advertisements have called forth, to the needy parties. That pasture must be thin where so much territory must be fenced in to support one sheep! Nor is this confined to foreign work. Preachers at home are constantly placed before thousands and tens of thousands of newspaper readers as in need of money; and frequently I read of a church, embarrassed with a heavy debt, calling through the papers for money to help pay out. The New Testament furnishes no example of a church in debt. What could a New Testament church go in debt for? Will any one attempt to name a single thing for which the church at Thessalonica (a church in deep poverty) could have gone in debt? The things for which churches now go in debt New Testament churches did not have.

There is perhaps no greater hindrance to generous giving than the support of human institutions with the money given in the name of Christ. There is no end to the growing list of things started by men, totally unknown to the New Testament, which call for money. The effort to connect God's promise with the support of these things is far-fetched and unsatisfactory. A new scheme is announced, and the financial agent, amid his urgent calls for cash, quotes: "The liberal soul shall be made fat." A brother, not yet excited out of all bounds of faith, says: "Yes, 'the liberal soul shall be made fat;' but does the Lord mean to make men fat by supporting this thing? It is a new diet. My father and mother never heard of it. Were they made fat? Not on this thing, for it was only organized in 1875, and they died in 1874."

The agent quotes: "He that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

The brother reflects: "But the apostles and New Testament Christians never sowed their money in such patches as human organization."

The agent quotes: "God loveth a cheerful giver."

The brother continues: "Cheerful giver to what? Does he love a cheerful giver to these new agents to carry on all these works totally unauthorized by the Bible?"

"O," says the agent, "the 'giving' of this text was to the poor!"

The brother: "Then we know God loves a cheerful giver to the poor; for giving to the poor God promises treasure in heaven, but he promises nothing to those who set up and support human organizations."

"But," says another agent, "my appeal is for money to support the Widows' and Orphans' Home."

The brother replies: "The Widows' and Orphans' Home is an institution not in the Bible, neither is the denomination to which it belongs."

The agent: "But does not the Bible teach us to support the widow and orphan?"

The brother: "Certainly; but not the Widows' and Orphans' Home. It is an institution of men, with salaried agents, that proposes to do up the widow and orphan business for the denomination in a whole State, provided the churches will furnish the money—a concern which takes in two applicants and turns off nine for lack of funds. The Lord requires people to give to the widow and orphan directly; support them in their own homes, and turn off none."

Elders, evangelists, the widow and the orphan, and the Lord's poor have a divine right to all the money given in Christ's name. New Testament Christians applied all their contributions to the fellowship of the poor and the religious teacher. They were too full of faith to devise their own institutions through which to serve the Lord with money.

Now, the custom of denominations is to support institutions of men with money given in Christ's name. The meetinghouse, for a time, claims the greatest financial effort of a community of Christians. The pastor serves in the house, presides over the house institution, called a "church"—a thing unknown to the New Testament—and his salary is a perpetual strain on the Christians in the organization. His support absorbs nearly all the funds given year by year, if it does not leave the congregation in debt. Then comes the sexton for his salary; the Sunday school, with its financial agents, conventions, picnic parties, and literature, calls for another share of religious money; the missionary societies—home and foreign, male and female, district and State—lay in their claim with great urgency, claiming to be the most soul saving of all the institutions among men; the Widows' and Orphans' Home calls with emphasis for money; religious colleges and publishing concerns of each denomination also claim their share; and so on. Elders are not supported at all. The preachers in the evangelistic work are supported through institutions which violate the fellowship; and the poor get meager support through obstructive machinery, or are totally neglected.

This is very much like it was with the Jews, in the days of Jesus Christ on earth, when human institutions were set up in the interest of orthodoxy. They devoured widows' homes. Hypocrites were installed, and God's service of faith was neglected and overthrown through traditions that men had set up to receive the support and honor of the people. Is there any remedy? Yes, there is. Let every one withdraw all money support from institutions of men; let every one give to the poor, to the widow and orphan himself, directly, and to the preacher, elder, or evangelist whose work he approves, knowing it to be according to the divine will. Practice what New Testament Christians preached on this subject, and nothing else, and all will be well with every one who does it. Never mind your church. A church that must stand through the support of human institutions is not divine, and ought to go down. It is God's will that it should. Nothing but what God appoints should stand.

A Treatise on the Priesthood of Jesus.

It is generally conceded that Christ's priesthood is referred to in the following: "The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." (Ps. 110: 4.) From the language used in this psalm, some have been led to believe that Christ was actually a priest on earth. I would here inform the reader that the Hebrew and the Greek, here translate "Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec," do not contain any verb, while the general teaching of the Bible requires the following reading: "Thou shalt be a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec."

Permit me to lay down the following rule of interpretation: Where a scripture seems to be susceptible of two or more meanings, give it that meaning that will harmonize with other scriptures on the same subject. We learn that our Savior received the priesthood by God's own appointment. "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day I have begotten thee." What by necessity preceded his appointment to the priesthood? (1) His incarnation, (2) his life, (3) his death and sufferings, (4) the abolishment of the law of Moses. Does the reader ask: Why could he not have acted as priest under the law? He was not of the right tribe. According to the law of Moses the tribe of Levi filled the office of priest; but in Heb. 7: 14, we have this language: "For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood."

If you will read carefully Num. 16-18, you will learn that it would have been a violation of law for Jesus to have ministered at the altar in the Jewish tabernacle as a priest. That privilege belonged to the tribe of Levi. The law of Moses rested on the Levitical priesthood, hence when the priesthood was changed there was of necessity a change in the law. "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." (Heb. 7: 12.) But when was the law abolished? We refer our readers to two passages only: "For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace." (Eph. 2: 14; 15.) Again: "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross." (Col. 2: 14.) That Christ was not a priest while the law was in force is made apparent by the following: "For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore." (Heb. 7: 28.) Will our readers examine the last scripture closely? Then answer the following: (1) Was not Christ made priest by an oath? (2) Was he made priest before the law? (3) Was he made priest on the cross? (4) Was he not made priest since the law? We are clearly taught that he was made priest since the law was abolished. Do you ask: May he not have become a priest between his resurrection and his ascension? "For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law." (Heb. 8: 4.)

This declaration of scripture precludes the possibility of his being a priest on the earth. Was he not put to death as a priest? No; but as an innocent victim he was put to death by wicked Jews and Gentiles. "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth." (Isa. 53: 7.) But when he entered heaven, the antitype of the most holy place in the Jewish tabernacle, he then, as our great High Priest, once for all offered his blood as a sacrifice for the sins of the entire race. "But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. . . . For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us: nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." (Heb. 9: 11-26.) "By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." (Heb. 10: 10.) "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.) "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood." (Rev. 1: 5.) "Who his own self bare [Greek, "bare away"] our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed." (1 Pet. 2: 24.) Shall we not consider the qualifications of our High Priest? He is the embodiment of innocence; perfect in knowledge, power, and goodness; able and willing to help all that trust him, and full of sympathy.

We learn that Christians are all kings and priests to God. John, the beloved disciple, speaking of our great High Priest, says: "And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever and ever." (Rev. 1: 6.) What would we be without sacrifice? Without the shedding of blood there is no remission. Now, as priests, through our great High Priest, Jesus Christ, let us continually offer our sacrifices of praise. "Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach. For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come. By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to his name. But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." (Heb. 13: 13-16.) THEOPHILUS.

It is He whose very infancy not only startled a king, and made him fear his throne, but also affrighted the powers of darkness and silenced the heathen oracles; whose childhood puzzled the knowledge of the aged and confounded the doctors of the law; who ruled the course of nature, and made the strong winds obey him, and could walk on the billows of the sea as on a pavement; who fed multitudes by his word, and healed all manner of diseases without medicine; who could break the gates of death, and open the doors of the grave, and call back the spirits of the departed—a Royal Brother, truly!—Henry Scougal.

BAPTISM UNTO THE REMISSION OF SINS.

As in this article it is purposed to close the series on this subject, a number of passages will be given in this paper showing the importance of baptism. Our great concern is more to do just what God has commanded than to inquire why God has commanded it. The man who is more concerned about the why than the doing of God's will is on dangerous ground, to say the least of it.

Ananias was sent to Saul to tell him what he must do. Mark the language is "must," and not what he should, if he felt like it. The man sent of God to tell him what he must do said to Saul: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22: 16, R. V.) While he was a believer and was a praying penitent for three days and nights, refusing to take nourishment for that time, yet he was not freed from his sins. As Ananias told him what he must do, and he commanded him to be baptized, it follows that Saul must be baptized in order to be saved. If Saul must, what about the sinner now? It is folly to cry out "water salvation," "a baptismal regeneration!" We are seeking to know and do the will of the Lord. God, and God alone, can take away sins, but he has the right to fix the conditions of salvation. This he has done, and baptism is one of the conditions, and it seems to us that only the rebellious soul protests against what the Lord has done. "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3, R. V.) "For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27, R. V.) In Christ's death his blood flowed. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." Those who were baptized into his death in that act came in contact with the efficacious blood of Christ, which took away their sins. In the act of baptism we put on Christ. Salvation is in Christ, and not out of him.

John Wesley says of Saul's baptism: "'Be baptized, and wash away thy sins.' Baptism administered to real penitents is both a means and a seal of pardon. Nor did God ordinarily in the primitive church bestow this on any, unless through this means." ("Notes on New Testament," on Acts 22: 16.) Willmarth: "Ananias, divinely sent to Saul of Tarsus, blind, penitent, and prayerful, thus instructed him: 'And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.' The washing away refers to remission; the last clause requires the exercise of faith in Christ." ("Baptism and Remission," in Baptist Quarterly, July, 1877, page 310.)

"For I would not, brethren, have you ignorant, how that our fathers were all under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." (1 Cor. 10: 1, 2.) In the deliverance of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage the whole plan of salvation opens up most beautifully. They must believe in Moses; we must believe in Christ. Moses came working miracles that they might believe; Christ opened the eyes of the blind, fed the multitudes from a few loaves and fishes, and raised the dead in order that we might accept him as our Savior. "Many other signs therefore did Jesus in the presence of the disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written, that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye may have life in his name." (John 20: 30, 31, R. V.) The Israelites had to turn their backs on Egypt, so the sinner has to turn his back on sin; must repent or perish. The Israelites could believe, leave Egypt, and journey until they came to the Red Sea. Their enemies, the Egyptians, were in hot pursuit, and close upon them. Hemmed in by the mountains on either side, their enemies just at their back, and the sea just in front, the wisdom of man could see no way of escape. To retreat was certain ruin. Moses looked to God for relief. God always does for man what he cannot do for himself, and ever requires him to do what he can for himself. Man's extremity is God's opportunity. God opens the passage through the sea. They were first told to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. There is a great difference between seeing and enjoying. So when the way is provided, they are commanded to go forward. Just so with the sinner. He was hopelessly lost and undone forever, without the grace of God. He could not of himself provide any plan of salvation, but God in infinite mercy and goodness did this for him. The grace of God came streaming down through the dark and riven clouds of sin, offering a wonderful redemption to the children of men. "For by grace have ye been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God; not of works, that no man should glory." (Eph. 2: 8, 9, R. V.)

But when God had opened the way for the Israelites and the command came to go forward, every Israelite who reached the other shore went forward. It would have been worse than folly for one to have stood still longer, shouting: "I am saved by grace!" The same grace that had provided salvation now required him to go forward. God would not pick them up bodily and set them down on the other shore. Neither does grace save us now without our compliance with the terms offered by Jehovah. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them." (Eph. 2: 10, R. V.) "For the grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men, instructing us, to the intent that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world; looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works." (Tit. 2: 11-14, R. V.)

Another truth worthy of note is, there was only one passage. The Israelite must go by this route. It was important to get away from the Egyptians, but there was only one way of escape. Are there a thousand ways leading to glory now? Will you be satisfied with the Savior's answer? "Enter ye in by the narrow gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many be they that enter in thereby. For narrow is the gate, and straitened the way, that leadeth unto life, and few be they that find it." (Matt. 7: 13, 14, R. V.)

But their baptism unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea is a type of Christian baptism. Between the type and the antitype there is always a striking likeness. When were they saved from their enemies, before the passage of the sea or afterwards?

After the Israelites had passed through the sea the Egyptians attempted to do likewise. "And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the sea returned to his strength when the morning appeared; and the Egyptians fled against it; and the Lord overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea. And the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them; there remained not so much as one of them. . . . Thus the Lord saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians; and Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore." (Ex. 14: 27-30.) Where did they lose their enemies? In the sea. Why could not God destroy them there as well as anywhere? Why cannot God bring the sinner in the institution of baptism in contact with the blood of Christ and thus take away his sins? Why not as easily here as in the grove or anywhere else? God saves us, but we must allow him to save us in his own way, as did the Israelites.

After the passage of the sea, and not before, they sang the song of deliverance. "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the Lord, and spake, saying, I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea." In infinite mercy and goodness God has offered redemption to us all. It is the part of wisdom and trust to accept of the proffered mercy and be saved on the terms ordained by Jehovah. "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 3: 21.) If God saves us by baptism, who has a right to object? May God help us all to know the truth, to love the truth, and to obey the truth. Such will be happy and useful in this world, and a peace and joy unspeakable will be theirs throughout the never-dying ages of eternity. J. C. M'QUIDDY.

FAIRVIEW CHURCH, HUMPHREYS COUNTY, TENN.

The brethren have just put up a new house of worship, near the home of Dr. G. W. McMurry, on Hurricane Creek, and occupied it the second Lord's day in April. Heretofore they had been worshipping at Hurricane Mills, and perhaps some of them at a house above them, on Hurricane Creek. But they were a little inconvenient to both places, and in a neighborhood where a number of the people did not go to either place. So a few brethren went to work, and have put up a neat and comfortable house, and have begun the good work. They propose from this time on to meet there regularly every Lord's day to worship the Lord, and to study God's word, and to teach it to as many as they can induce to attend and learn, whether old or young. They expect to make special effort to interest the young and as many grown-up ones as they can to meet with them, to study, and to learn the way of salvation; and if they persevere in the good work, there is much for them to accomplish in the way of edifying one another and in converting and saving souls. We are satisfied a long and strong effort will be made along that line. Those who are the leaders in the work are decidedly in earnest about the success of the work, and they will hold on. We were with them on the day they began meeting in their new house, and while their number is not large now, we were much pleased at the earnestness with which they started in the good work. They expect to have some preaching along, and occasionally a protracted meeting. We hope there is much success awaiting their earnest efforts. E. G. S.

During the Revolutionary War a Dunker leader named Miller was grievously insulted by a man named Widman, who was afterwards sentenced to be hanged as a British spy. Miller went to General Washington and begged for Widman's life. The commander in chief replied: "I would like to release Widman because he is your friend; but I cannot, even for that consideration." "Friend!" cried Miller. "He is not my friend; he is only my enemy, and, therefore, I want to save him." The General was so touched that he pardoned the man.—The Myrtle.

The idle man is the devil's cushion, on which he taketh his free ease; who, as he is incapable of any good, so he is fitly disposed for all evil emotions. The standing water soon stinketh, whereas the current ever keeps clear and cleanly, conveying down all noisome matter that might infect it by the force of its stream. If I do but little good to others by my endeavors, yet this is great good to me, that by my labor I keep myself from hurt.—Bishop Hall.

The race of mankind would perish did they cease to help each other. We cannot exist without mutual help. All, therefore, that need aid have a right to ask it for their fellow-men, and no one who has the power of granting it can refuse without guilt.—Exchange.

If we all would say a kind word every day to our associates, how full the world would be of sunshine!

Christians are to be a peculiar people, zealous of good works. The call to come out from the world and be separate often means sacrifice and sorrow. This separation does not simply mean from leisure, self-indulgence, and closest friends. This is a one-sided view. The child of God should be separated from unrest, discouragement, loneliness. This means to be separated "unto the gospel of God." The man separated unto the gospel of Christ will be filled with strength, joy, and peace. The Christian is separated unto the infinite and unchangeable love of God. He is separated unto the purest and noblest ideals of life, and is moved by the loftiest aspirations in his actions. It is a glorious thing to be separated unto the gospel of God.

As we study the great, ever-open book of the world's biographies, we find little trace of "luck" upon its pages. Gladstone worked eleven hours a day, even in youth; Pasteur, the great French scientist, spent whole days and nights in the laboratory; Agassiz copied book after book that he needed, but could not buy, and learned them in the copying; Prescott, the historian, almost wholly blind, traced out his notes with incredible care and labor, and spent ten years on one book, toiling ceaselessly every day; Lincoln worked all day at the hardest manual labor, and studied by the firelight hour after hour. Greatness is no sudden or unearned affair; it is the victory of a powerful nature, developed by thorough preparation. Of the two elements of greatness, the world and the individual are the better off for preparation without unusual power than for unusual power without preparation.—Forward.

The baby was taking his first steps, uncertain and faltering; but he was very proud, crowing and laughing over his achievement as he tottered across the floor with his mother following, her outstretched arms encircling, but not touching him. There is a lesson in this for all God's children. God is ever present with them to protect and shield them from all harm. The Lord said: "Fear not, Abram; I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." We may often fancy that we are going our way alone; we may feel that we are deserted and alone in the world; but God is always with us, and never leaves nor forsakes us, but will support and succor us as long as we walk with him. When we turn to Satan, he can no longer be our walking companion. When we are in the "narrow way," he leaves us free to take step after step, to do the wise and noble thing, but he is ever present to uphold and protect us. How sweet and assuring are all these promises of the Lord Jesus Christ!

The command is clear, inevitable: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." But it is impossible, we say, and the eager excuses rush to our lips; there are home duties laid upon us, and must not home come first? Or we are frail in health, and only the strong can be sent. Or perhaps we have tried to go and the way has been closed before us, and so of our necessity we make the compromise: Go or send. Yet that was not what Christ said. The Master's word had no alternative; it was: "Go ye." But how we misread it sometimes! Who can tell where the world begins? It may be across the street, at our next neighbor's—nay, even at our own doorstep. When we thought that we were hindered, was it not because we were trying to go to places of our own choosing, not God's? The command still claims our obedience. Are we "going" day by day through the familiar paths about us preaching the gospel of love and joy and strength and power? Or have we been trying to still our consciences with the annual missionary offering and the contents of our mite boxes? Ah, the lives we might be living, and are not; the joy that the Master left for us which we will not take!—Forward.

How fleeting, how transient, are all things earthly! The joys of this world come and go like shadows. But there is a comforting thought in the midst of all this: "In my Father's house are many mansions" (the Greek has it "abiding places"). The thought is one of permanency—things that last. In our Father's house there are many things that last. That is a comforting thought in the hours of gloom and sorrow. Things change so in this life! Vigor, youth, and beauty, while we are clinging to them, slip away from us. We spend long years in building homes for ourselves and those we love, fashioning it all after the pattern of our happy thoughts; then a single night may blight all our labors and the dreaded Reaper may steal away forever the light of our home. One by one we behold the friends who are the life and joy of our lives go down the Silent Way. Even our very life work may prove a failure, may fail us at the last, and leave us sitting under the willows, with a broken heart, and sighing with the wise man: "All is vanity and vexation of spirit." But that is only the earthly side of it. In the sweet beyond, strength, beauty, joy, work, friends, home, loved ones, angels, Christ, and God are all waiting to welcome us home. There they will never steal away from us, but will abide forever.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: I have some scripture I cannot harmonize. Please explain the following through the Gospel Advocate: Jacob saw God face to face. (Gen. 32: 20.) Moses saw God's back parts, but not his face. (Ex. 33: 23.) "No man hath seen God at any time." (John 1: 18; 1 John 4: 12.) I do not think the Bible contradicts its word, but these verses do not agree, one with the other, to me. The Lord put a mark on Cain, and he went to the land of Nod, and there knew his wife. (Gen. 4: 15-17.) Some people tell me Cain's wife was his sister. I cannot find who his wife was. It says he knew his wife in the land of Nod. Some tell me the mark put upon Cain made him black, and that is where the Ethiopian, or negro, race sprang from. I know Moses married an Ethiopian, but I cannot find where it says Cain was black.

A SISTER.

Jacob had only met the angel of God, not God himself. Mortals who met angels were so overawed by their presence they called them "God." We have a number of examples of this. So Jacob called the angel "God." No one knows what the mark put on Cain was. Our sister can make as good a guess as any one else. Of course when there was but one family brothers married their sisters. When it says Cain knew his wife it does not mean he was acquainted with her; it means he had intercourse with her; so a child was begotten. "Know" is so used as to Joseph and Mary (Matt. 1: 25), and in other places, and is so defined in the larger dictionaries.

Brother Lipscomb: Is there any harm in a church member playing social games of cards at home? Does the Bible condemn such? L. M. NEALY.

Playing cards under such or under any circumstances is undoubtedly wrong. Christians are commanded to avoid the very appearance of evil. "Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died. Let not then your good be evil spoken of. . . . Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another. For meat destroy not the work of God. . . . It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." (Rom. 14: 15-21.) "But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." (1 Cor. 8: 12, 13.) Certainly card playing comes under the condemnation of all these scriptures, with a number of others. Card playing is the commonest method of gambling, stands associated with it, and leads to it. People learn to play cards and are then continually tempted to gamble. This is especially so with the young. I do not see how a man could encourage gambling more effectively than by encouraging them to play cards. It would be more effective than to encourage gambling directly. If this were done, men would see the evil and draw back; but they are encouraged to play cards as an innocent pastime, and then they are brought under the influence of the gambler. Many youths are tempted and led into gambling by virtue of having learned to play cards. No Christian can set an example that so certainly leads into the most ruinous sins and practices that carry so many down to ruin. The Christian is to set examples of good, not of evil; examples that draw men away from the paths of ruin, not those that drag them down. The social game of cards, the social dance, and the social dram are all of a class that lead to much evil, and no good. It would be hard to tell whether gambling, or drunkenness or lewdness is the more corrupting and widespread evil. They go hand in hand, and the young are led into the temptation by these social games in which they engage, and to which they are encouraged at the homes of professed Christians. But no one whose heart is under the influence of the Spirit of God can encourage in these practices that bring evil. A man cannot do this and maintain the respect of his fellow-man as a Christian.

Brother Lipscomb: When a church of Christ forsakes the right way of the Lord by uniting in all progressive movements which are destroying the union and harmony of the one body and supplanting by innovations the true worship of God, should the members of such a church be fellowshipped as brethren in the Lord or as Jesus required (Matt. 18: 17), and Paul commanded (2 Thess. 3: 6; Rom. 16: 17)? Ocala, Fla.

J. H. M'CLYMONDS.

Unless a person is true to himself and to his own convictions of right, he can never be true to any person or principle. He cannot be true to God and his teaching unless he is true to his own sense of right. A man who is not true to his own convictions of right cannot be true to God. God requires all of his service to come from an honest and true heart. "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned." (1 Tim. 1: 5.) A man ought not to do violence to his convictions of right in any service to God. God will not accept such service. A church, like a person, is judged by God according to the sincerity of the desire to do the will of God, and not according to his attainments—that is, a church or a person may really know but little of the will of God, but doing that little faithfully and loyally to God as the Ruler, God accepts the service and the church or person is approved of him. Another person or church may know much more of the law of God and yet be not loyal and true to it; may set aside, add to, or take from what God has commanded. This church or person will be rejected of God. The true test of a servant of God is a determination from the heart to do in all things as God commands. Whoever claims the right or shows the desire to depart from the order of God is disloyal to him and will be rejected by him. "Whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing." (Phil. 3: 16.) Christians may have attained different degrees of knowledge of the divine will, but so far as they have learned it let all walk by the will of God. A church that is trying sincerely to follow God, even though it knows but little of the truth, is accepted of God, and must be accepted and helped by all his followers. But when a church shows a determination to set aside the order of God, or shows indifference to his order, it shows disloyalty to God and is to be rejected for its disloyalty; and a true child of God cannot work to build up a church that manifests this spirit of disloyalty. This disloyalty can be shown in little things just as in great ones, just as our first fore parents showed their disloyalty to God in a seemingly small matter. The great thing with every child of God is to cultivate a spirit of loyalty and fidelity to Christ Jesus and do nothing that encourages a disposition to set aside God's law. One of the most blameworthy and absurd courses is to cease to meet with those going wrong, and then do nothing. Where two or three are gathered in his name Jesus is in their midst, and the obligation rests on all his followers to meet and worship him in his appointed ways. Fidelity on the part of the Christian is demanded; then leave results with God, and he will bear testimony against all departures from the will of God.

WHAT CATHOLICS AND EPISCOPALIANS SAY.

Archbishop Kenrick ("Baptism," page 1741) says: "The change of discipline which has taken place to baptism should not surprise us; for, although the church is but the dispenser of the sacraments which her divine spouse instituted, she rightfully exercises a discretionary power as to the manner of their administration. She cannot change their substance. Baptism essentially consists of a washing with water under the invocation of the three divine Persons. She cannot substitute any other liquid, however precious, or any other formulary. The ablution can in no cir-umstances be dispensed with, but the manner of making it can be more or less solemn, according to her wise discretion. Immersion was well suited to the Eastern nations, whose habits and climate prepared them for it, and was therefore practiced in the commencement, whenever necessity did not prevent it. Cases, which were at first exceptional, gradually multiplied, so that at length the ordinary mode of baptism was by affusion. The church wisely sanctioned that which, though less solemn, is equally effectual. The power of binding and loosing, which she received from Christ, warrants this exercise of governing wisdom, that, the difference of time and places being considered, condescension may be used in regard to the mode of administering the sacraments without danger to their integrity. It is not for individuals to question a right which has been at all times claimed and exercised by those to whom the dispensation of the mysteries is divinely intrusted." (Copied from J. T. Christian's Book on "Baptism.")

Pope Pius IX. approved Haydock's "Notes on the Douay Bible." On Matt. 3: 6, he says: "The church, which cannot change the least article of faith, is not so tied up in matters of discipline and ceremony. Not only the Catholic Church, but also the pretended reformed churches have altered the primitive custom in giving the sacrament of baptism and now allow baptism by sprinkling and pouring water upon the person baptized." The Catholic bishops accept this as standard authority. Cardinal Gibbons, the foremost Catholic in the United States, says: "For several centuries after the establishment of Christianity, baptism was usually conferred by immersion, but since the twelfth century the practice of baptizing by affusion has prevailed in the Catholic Church, as this manner is attended with less inconvenience than baptism by immersion." ("Faith of Our Fathers," page 2757.)

The Rubric of the Episcopal Church to this day requires immersion, except the subject be in ill health. Bishop Coxe, of Buffalo, N. Y., says: "The word means 'dip.' . . . In the Church of England dipping is even now the primary rule, but it is not the ordinary custom. . . . It never has become obsolete. I myself have baptized by dipping both adults and babes. . . . I wish that all Christians would restore the primitive practice." Dean Stanley says: "Baptism was not only a bath, but a plunge—an entire submersion in the deep water. . . . This was the part of the ceremony that the apostles laid so much stress on. It seemed to them like a burial of the old, former self and the rising up again of the new self." Dr. Geikie, in his "Life of Christ," page 276, says: "It was hence impossible to see a convert go down into a stream, travel-worn and soiled with dust, and, after disappearing for a moment, emerge, pure and fresh, without feeling that the symbol suited and interpreted a strong craving of the human heart. It was no formal rite with John." Dean Alford says: "The baptism was administered in the daytime, by immersion of the whole body." (Greek New Testament, Vol. I., page 20.)

There is now manifested a desire among many leading Episcopalians to return to the practice of immersion as the one undisputed baptism. All real scholars and men of character that rise above a narrow party spirit agree both as to the meaning of the word and the early practice of the church. What we now plead for is that the question may be put on the true issue, and not be obscured by false issues. The whole church or churches of the past and the candid scholarship of all ages stand for immersion as the thing commanded and as the practice of the early church. Let this be agreed to. The leading men of the churches who practice affusion are responsible for the deception on this ground. The little, narrow partisan who is tempted to testify that he copied Groves' Lexicon as defining "baptizo" to pour or sprinkle is guilty of willful and personal falsehood that ought to exclude him from the countenance of honest men; but intelligent men who accept such help in maintaining the practices of the church, and do not both correct the wrong and stop the misrepresentations, partake of these sins and are responsible for them. Men should be frank and candid on the subject of religion above all other things, and should reject all falsehood to support truth. Falsehood never aids truth. Let the truth, as it is, be seen by all the people. Any other course will make him who accepts false grounds for the support of his position responsible for the wrongs and mistakes of the ignorant and the deceiver. D. L.

A MIRACULOUS MEDICINE.

A well-dressed, intelligent man entered a Christian hospital in China recently and requested treatment. The medical missionary examined him closely and asked many questions. Some facts were learned without questions.

The man was evidently educated, and from the better class; but his tastes were low, his character was depraved beyond the average, and he was a combination of good and bad to a remarkable degree. His dress and intelligence were in keeping with his statements that he was the chief—we may call him "the mayor"—of a large town, and one of the wealthiest in it.

His disease, though serious, was not hopeless, and he was told that if he would remain a few months in the hospital, he might return home cured; but to insure favorable results he must submit to all the rules of the hospital. The mayor proved a good patient. Not only did he obey the rules, but he did his utmost to regain his health; nor did he neglect the religious services in the hospital. Perhaps he thought it would impel the physician to show greater attention to his case, perhaps he supposed there was some healing power in the daily preaching and other Christian worship; for he attended regularly.

He became interested in the gospel preaching, and no less in the gospel practice; for he saw that the poor, who had nothing whatever to pay, received just as faithful treatment as was given him, and that the missionaries did what they promised. Patient after patient was sent home cured, and several were dismissed who had in the hospital become "every whit whole." The spiritual change in them was so real and so great that the mayor saw it had been caused by something of which he had no knowledge. He could not explain it, so accepted their statements that it was caused by the mighty and merciful power of the true God.

Long before he was cured the mayor discovered that another and far more serious disease was working ruin in his soul. He became a patient of Jesus, the great Physician, and gave himself to him for salvation. The change in the moral character of the man was greater and even more rapid than the change in his physical self. He left the hospital cured, and evidently a Christian.

Some time after this patient was discharged a woman called at the hospital and asked for the doctor. When requested to make known her wants, she said that she had come to get a remarkable medicine which had cured the mayor of the city in which she lived. She then described the mayor and the town, and so made known her home.

"For whom do you wish medicine?" she was asked.

"For myself."

"Why do you wish medicine? What disease have you? You appear to be well and strong."

"I have no disease, but wish the same kind of medicine you gave to the chief man of our town."

"But he had a serious disease, and you say that you have none. We only give medicine to the sick."

"I do not know what disease he had, but I do know what kind of a man he was; I know that he came from this place entirely changed, and every one says it was because you give such good medicine. Now, I want some of the same."

"Tell us your difficulty and we may help you."

"Let me tell you first about him, then you may learn something about me. He had a fearful temper, and, when angry, beat his wife, children, and servants, so that all were afraid of him. His language was so vile that the worst men and women were almost ashamed to listen to him. We were all ready to run and hide when he was angry or excited; and as for gambling, he was the worst in the town. He would rather gamble than eat or sleep, and often took no time for either when he found those willing to play whom he selected. He made the children imitate him, and when they saw that the richest and chief man of the town was guilty of such evil, they thought they could copy, and they were rapidly becoming bad. Our town became notorious as a place for gamblers, and good people wished to leave. Though all good men and women wished better examples set for the young, they dared not complain of the mayor, lest he should become angry and punish, if he did not kill them.

"But all this is so changed since he came back. He tries to control his temper, and hardly ever gets angry. He is always gentle, kind, and loving to his family now, whereas he was so only once in a while before. His mouth is clean, and for days at a time not even his wife hears a vile word from him. What is more wonderful still is that he has given up gambling. He neither gambles himself nor will he allow others to do it.

"The people have wondered greatly; nor could they explain the change. But he says that it is all owing to what he received here. My husband asked him one day if the medicine of foreigners had made such a change in him, and he said it had. Though we do not care for foreigners very much, we do if they can give medicine that will change men so entirely. It is remarkable. People in other towns wonder at the power of your medicine, and praise it. Surely, it is wonderful.

"Now, I want some of it for myself. To tell the truth, I am not as kind to my neighbors, nor yet to my children, and not even to my husband, as I should be. I become very angry at times and beat my children, but I cannot help it; the anger comes before I am aware. My mouth is not always clean; I use bad language when angry, and I must have that medicine to cleanse it. It is wonderful medicine, and I must have it, no matter what it costs."

Could there be a better testimony for the gospel? And it was the testimony of a heathen who did not know that it was the religion hated by her people which had wrought that change in the chief man of her town, and through him in the town itself.—Ex.

THE CARE OF SQUIRRELS.

Some boys and girls think it necessary to their happiness to have a pet squirrel. Though the custom of catching these frisky little creatures and depriving them of their liberty is not the kindest thing, yet a pet squirrel can be made happy in captivity if properly cared for.

Do not cage striped or black squirrels. The first are too timid and the latter too wild to tame. Select the little gray squirrels that rather like captivity and are easily taught tricks. Red squirrels, too, make handsome pets and like to be handled.

If a squirrel is to be bought, look carefully for signs of ill health. See that the teeth are perfectly white; for yellow teeth indicate age, and an old squirrel is not easily tamed.

The fur, also, should be closely observed. It should be sleek and glossy and the eyes bright; dull eyes and dry, lifeless fur are sure signs of a sick animal.

The feet must be perfectly clean, as dirty feet are another sign that the sick squirrel has lost all pride in its personal appearance and will soon die.

Having secured just the squirrel you wish, your next thought will be of suitable quarters for the little captive.

Do not restrict him as to space, and give him every comfort possible.

The squirrel, in beginning its housekeeping, will set apart for its sleeping room a place in the cage remote from the public gaze. A wheel is an absolute necessity, since this is the only exercise the squirrel has.

The squirrel's diet should consist of dry bread, a little boiled potato, and on rare occasions a bit of cooked meat, and always plenty of nuts—those containing the least oil preferred.

Patience and kind treatment will win you the affection of your pet. In all your dealings with him remember to do as you would be done by. If he is inclined to rest in his sleeping retreat, do not force him from it nor compel him to enter his wheel when he is unwilling.

Always give him his meals yourself, and have some special call or whistle which summons him to his meal. He will soon learn to answer to this call, and before long will feed from your hand, run over you, and poke his inquisitive nose into your pockets.—Birds and Animals.

FOR THE MASTER'S USE—A PARABLE.

The writing desk lay open. Its owner had been called away in the act of beginning an important letter. On it were laid a sheet of Note Paper and the Envelope; beside it stood the Ink Bottle, and close by lay the Pen, the Blotting Paper, and the Penwiper. The silence of the room was broken by the Note Paper speaking to his companions.

"You needn't look so consequential," it said scornfully; "it is on me the letter will be written."

"Yes," said the Pen, "but you forget it is I who write it."

"And you forget," said the Ink, "that you couldn't write without me."

"You needn't boast," said the Ink Bottle, "for where would you be but for me?"

"It is ridiculous of you all to be so conceited," interposed the Blotting Paper; "only for me what a mess you'd be in!"

"And may I ask," said the Envelope, "what use would any of you be if I did not take the letter safely where it is to go?"

"But it is I who write the directions on you," snapped the Pen.

"Dear sirs, please stop quarreling," gently said the little Penwiper, who had not spoken yet.

"What have you to say?" asked the Pen, contemptuously. "You are nothing but a door mat;" and he laughed at his own wit.

"Even if I am only a door mat," said the Penwiper, humbly, "only for me you would be so rough with dried ink you couldn't be used. And that is all any of us are good for—just to be used. We might all stay here for the rest of our lives, and not all of us put together could write that letter. Only the hand of our master can do that."

"I believe he's right," said the Envelope and Note Paper together.

"Yes," said the Ink. "It was foolish of us to forget that we can do nothing unless we are used."

"True enough," murmured the Ink Bottle. "For what use would I be if you were not in me?"

"Yes, to be sure," said the Blotting Paper, "we ought to have thought of that."

"Indeed, yes; and I'm sure I beg your pardon, Mr. Penwiper, for calling you a door mat," said the Pen, in a very humble voice.

"Please don't mention it," said the little Penwiper, "but I do think we would all be happier if we would just do the best we can, without being jealous."—Our Young Folks.

JOE, THE BOOTBLACK.

Down Connecticut avenue, city of Washington, came Joe, one fine day, whistling and singing, gazing nowhere in particular, when a boy twice his size "dared" him to fight. Joe accepted the invitation with vigor, but soon got the worst of it. They rolled over and over on the dirty pavement, Joe howling with pain and rage at his tormentor, who finally left him to his fate.

Mrs. Hayes came out of a house just opposite, where she had been calling, and was attracted by the groans and wails of a child. Seeing Joe, she walked across the street, beckoning the driver to follow. The blood was running down the poor little face, his eyes were shut, and his clothes were torn. In her elegant costume, Mrs. Hayes knelt by the boy, wiped his face with a dainty bit of lace, and in a strange, gentle voice asked kindly about his pains. He concluded he must see what it meant. While the big boys were stepping down to Sampson alley he sat up at Mrs. Hayes' feet, looking into her beautiful eyes with all his might, and said at last: "O, no, ma'am! I never, never will fight a boy again; not a big boy, anyhow."

Sampson alley was thrown into confusion to see Joe Davis come home in an elegant carriage; to see him lifted out by a driver, and carefully handed to the washerwoman mother. And when Mrs. Hayes said at leaving, "Remember your promise to me, Joe, and as soon as you feel well come to the White House and ask for Mrs. Hayes," Joe's mother sat down on the doorstep speechless. But Joe waved his little dirty hand and screamed after her: "Yes, ma'am, I've fit for the last time; an' I'll come roun', I will."

In two days Joe appeared at the rear door of the White House. The servants refused to speak to the madam for him. He marched to the front door, and said: "Mister, I must see the lady; she told me to come."

The doorkeeper made all things easy for him, and in a few moments Mrs. Hayes was welcoming him with smiles and pleasure as an honored guest. She walked with him through the conservatory and grounds, told him about her Sunday school, and told him also of her newsboys' evening class, taught by a dear young friend.

Very proud, very happy, and wholly content with life, Joe went home from his first visit to the President's wife. He was a new Joe in a new world. From that day he rose from a bootblack to a school-boy. Not a Sunday was he absent from Sunday school. From school to store; then to business. At present Joe is a bookkeeper on Pennsylvania avenue. When he read the news of Mrs. Hayes' death, he said: "She was an angel long before she died."—Selected.

MAGNETIC HEALING, OR HYPNOTISM.

We have been asked to write something on this subject, and the trouble is, we know very little about it to write. We have long been hearing of something called "mesmerism," "clairvoyance," and such like things, but have never known much of what there is in these things. It seems but rash to doubt that there is something in them.

It is claimed that mesmerism was first made known to the public at Vienna, about 1775, by a man named "Mesmer," and hence the name. Mesmer was a German physician, and when the matter of mesmerism was first developed, he thought he would astonish and revolutionize the world with it; but his expectations largely failed, and he spent the latter part of his life in obscurity. Mesmerism has never been regarded as a science, because there are so many things about it that cannot be satisfactorily defined or explained. It is in some sense a development, or a result, of animal magnetism. Animal magnetism is but another name for some sort of electrical power or influence by one person over another, supposed to be exerted through some power of electricity. All men are supposed to have more or less electricity connected with their mental and physical organization. Some are supposed to possess this in much larger quantity and force than others. A man of strong mental and physical power may have very strong development of electrical power over those of feebler mental and physical organization, and can mesmerize, or hypnotize, them, and carry them through the varied stages of these things, whatever they are. Hypnotism seems to be only a larger and fuller development of what has heretofore been called "mesmerism" and "clairvoyance."

Clairvoyance is a degree of mesmerism in which an individual ceases to be himself, and is controlled, mentally and physically, by the will of the operator, and can tell anything the operator knows, if he wills it. On account of the connection between the mind and the body, and the power and influence the mind has over the body, and the power that one mind may have over the mind of another, and through the mind over the bodies of others, healing powers have been claimed all along the line; and that something has been done along this line can hardly be doubted, since sickness has been both induced and healed by the power of the mind over the body. But that anything has been or can be done beyond this is not admitted. Comparatively little is known about electricity and its connections with the mental and physical organization of man; and it may be that the less that is known about it, the better for all concerned, for there is scarcely any blessing from God that has not been turned into a curse by man. We doubt not that this power of electricity has been perverted into a curse by very many in this world, and in this age, as well as former ages.

Paul speaks of a people who had "walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." (Eph. 2: 2.) Here he speaks of a power of the air, of which Satan is prince—that is, a power which Satan uses as a means of inducing or bringing about disobedience, disregard of the authority of God on the part of man. This power has been used in different ages, in different ways, and under different names, but is most likely the very same power. This connection of electricity with the mental and physical organization of man is a great blessing, the removal of which would likely bring blight and ruin upon man. But it can be easily perverted, by shrewd and designing men, into a very great curse. This was done in the days of Moses and the ancient Jews, as is plainly indicated by the word of God. "There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord: and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee." (Deut. 18: 10-12.) Some of the things mentioned here were very much the same as modern spiritualism, such as holding communication with familiar spirits and necromancy, or bringing back information from the dead. This is just what modern spiritualists claim to do; and whether anybody really communicated with the spirits of the dead or not, the Lord enacted a law against it, with a penalty of death to those that persisted in it, and God would hardly enact such a law, with such a penalty, against a thing that could not possibly take place. At all events, it was necessary in God's divine arrangements to protect his people against these things. He told the Jews plainly that they should not suffer such to live. While the people then may not have understood anything about electricity, this was doubtless the very power and channel through which these things were carried on, whether real or pretended. Those claims of communicating with familiar spirits, necromancy, modern spiritualism, mesmerism, hypnotism, magnetic healing, and all such like things have their origin and development in electricity. This is the power by which all these things were and are carried on. So all these things, as carried on to-day, are in very bad company.

When I was a boy spiritualism was carried on through table tipping. I have been told that if a handkerchief or garment of silk were put on the table, so as to be between the hands of the operators and the table, they could not move it a particle. I never saw it tested; but silk is understood to be a nonconductor of electricity. Now, I do not mean to say that there is any such thing as actual spiritualism; but if there is, all such power is from Satan, and the whole tendency of it is to take people from the Bible, and accomplish their ruin, both in time and for eternity; and whether it be a reality or only a fraud, the tendency to ruin is just the same to all that believe in it. Neither do I mean to say that mesmerism, hypnotism, and spiritualism are the same things, but they are certainly all carried on through the same channel—electricity; and this puts all of them in very bad company, to say the very best. If it should so turn out that electricity is the power of the air, as spoken of by Paul, that the prince of this world dominates for evil and leads men away from God, that makes it awfully dangerous for men that want to be the servants of God to have anything to do with any of them; for if a man begins to tamper with one, that may lead into others until it may lead him to ruin. The safe thing is to touch not, taste not, handle not. Modern magnetic healers claim to do much of their work by hypnotism.

I have just examined a copy of a journal of "Suggestive Therapeutics," in which a number of cures are claimed to have been in large measure accomplished by the aid of hypnotism. Some of these things, if true, are rather marvelous. However, I do not believe all that is on record in that journal. But some people doubtless do, and that opens the way for deception and fraud. So in a moral or religious point of view, I am sure it is best to let hypnotism severely alone. So far as cures are concerned, there can be nothing in it beyond the influence that the mind has over the body, or that one mind can have over another's mind and body. This is as far as man, as such, can go in such cures. If there is anything in these cures beyond these natural influences of mind over mind, and mind over both mind and body, then its origin is evil, and there can be no permanent good in them for man.

Since the apostolic or miraculous age, there is no evidence that God has ever healed one single individual by any direct or miraculous way, and any claims of such cures are frauds out and out. They are either utterly false, or, on the other hand, they are from Satan, the great enemy of souls; and in this case, of course, there can be nothing of good in such things for men that want to do good and serve the Lord. Everything that is true and honest in the matter of healing, that is legitimately in the reach of man, can be secured without hypnotism; and anything that has to be secured through the power of the devil had better be let alone.

In this matter of hypnotism there is a strange and inexplicable power exerted. According to the claim of those that perform it, they can bring those upon whom they perform it thoroughly under their power, mentally and physically, and can keep them so considerable periods of time; and this being true, it puts a very dangerous power into the hands of designing, bad men. But I do not mean all are bad men. The idea, however, of a wicked man holding such power over a woman is suggestive of no good, but of much evil. It is only the stronger minds that can exert such power over the weaker, or such as give themselves up voluntarily to be so influenced, and this fact circumscribes the power of bad men to do evil on this line; while all should watch as well as pray.

I should have to be thoroughly converted on the subject before I would ever allow a hypnotist to experiment on me; for, while I believe I could resist their power, I believe in avoiding all appearance of evil. Anything that has any possible wrong in sight had better not be indulged. There is not only the question of morality in it; there is the question of mental or physical injury in it to the performer. I have heard two men say that it had a very weakening and injurious effect upon them to perform it. It is exhausting. It takes about all the electric or magnetic power that any man has to thoroughly hypnotize another; and a man that has any sort of weakness of physical organization had better, for his own good, keep out of the way of all such risks; and those that have any sort of ailments, and wish them cured, had better try legitimate and safe remedies and means of cure, and let these things, that are at best doubtful, go to the four winds. I heard one brother say that he had stopped pains in others by slight manipulation and a vigorous exercise of his own will upon the sufferer, which seemed to be a step of hypnotism; but he said he did not like to do it because he said it made him feel so unpleasant afterwards. If there was nothing else to condemn hypnotism, this one fact ought to kill it. The men I heard say these things are truthful, reliable young men. I would therefore advise all, both young and old, to steer clear of such doubtful things. I know of no real good in it; but, on the other hand, there are strong appearances of evil, both to the spiritual and physical man.

There is always something good for a Christian to engage in without rushing into anything that may be fraught with so much of doubt and actual evil as hangs around hypnotism. Besides, a man that takes the word of God, and lives by it closely, will never have any time to throw away experimenting with things that may bring untold evil upon himself and others. We will have to watch and pray continually if we keep ourselves free from the wiles of Satan, who goes about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. The only safe way is to show this archenemy of man no favors, and to give him no opportunity to get a hold upon us. E. G. S.

Editor of the Gospel Advocate.—Dear Brother: The last time I wrote to you I was living at Dunnington, Ala. Before going there I had returned from a trip through Tennessee, Kentucky, and into Indiana. During that trip I heard considerable talk about the term "pastor," as applied to one who has the pastoral care of a church. None spoke about it except those who denounced it to me. Inasmuch as I have not associated myself with profound teachers in the church of Christ, I am at a loss to know what is the cause of this denunciation. Furthermore, I do not take a church paper of any kind. In the line of religious literature I know nothing but the Bible and that kind of historical matter which is closely connected with it.

In Young's Concordance I find that the word "pastor" is used in the Old Testament eight times, and in the New Testament one time. So far as the religion which we have to live is concerned, we lay the Old Testament aside. The New Testament is the one which we must take up in order to know how to live the religion of God. Notwithstanding that the

How a Little Boy Was Saved.

Washington, D. C. — "When our boy was about 16 months old he broke out with a rash which was thought to be measles. In a few days he had a swelling on the left side of his neck and it was decided to be mumps. He was given medical attendance for about three weeks when the doctor said it was scrofula and ordered a salve. He wanted to lance the sore, but I would not let him and continued giving him medicine for about four months when the bunch broke in two places and became a running sore. Three doctors said it was scrofula and each ordered a blood medicine. A neighbor told me of a case somewhat like our baby's which was cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I decided to give it to my boy and in a short while his health improved and his neck healed so nicely that I stopped giving him the medicine. The sore broke out again, however, whereupon I again gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla and its persistent use has accomplished a complete cure. I do not think there will be even a scar left. I cannot speak too highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla and I recommend it every where I get a chance." MRS. NETTIE CHASE, 47 K St., N. E.

Like Magic.

"A complication of troubles, dyspepsia, chronic catarrh and inflammation of the stomach, rheumatism, etc., made me miserable. Had no appetite until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acted like magic. I am thoroughly cured." N. B. SEELEY, 1874 West 14th Ave., Denver, Col.

ago, for the purpose of caring for them in their declining days; and it now makes our heart ache with sympathy to know that Brother and Sister Sellars, in their old age, have lost such a friend. I never saw her but that she had a pleasant word for every one, and in the most tender and affectionate way did she care for the father and mother of her husband. She was a true friend; an affectionate wife; a loving, devoted, and hopeful mother; and an earnest, faithful Christian. Surely "another angel hath joined the choir." Her many friends and relatives will sadly miss her, but it is true that "we gain only as we lose;" then lift up your eyes to the Father's eye and catch the clear depts of an imperishable hope. Look not upon the darkness of death, but behold the light of life immortal, abundant, and complete. In these hours of grief and sorrow, let us go to the Christ, who can best sympathize with us, and who alone can quiet the troubled heart and wipe all tears away. While we sorrow, we realize that we sorrow not as those who have no hope. May all her relatives and friends so conduct themselves in this life that they may meet her where sickness, death, and sad parting shall be felt and feared no more; but where all will be peace, joy, and happiness forever, and where the presence and smiles of the Lord shall eternally feast the soul.

BEASLEY.

Sister Ola, wife of Brother W. J. Beasley, was born on May 12, 1873. She was married to Brother Beasley on March 6, 1894, and in October, 1895, obeyed the gospel of Christ, under the preaching of Brother Holt, at Beardstown, Perry County, Tenn. She lived a consistent Christian life until February 19, 1900, when, at the age of twenty-six years, nine months, and seven days, she fell asleep in Jesus, and her spirit wending its way heavenward returned to God, who gave it. Sister Ola was a zealous Christian; a true, devoted wife; and a tender, loving mother. She leaves a bereaved husband and three small children, besides a great number of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss; but we must remember that while it is our loss here it is her eternal gain up yonder. She was sick for a long while, but bore it all with patience and fortitude, held up bravely to the last, and died in the full triumphs of a living faith, and thus expressed herself only a short time before her death: "All is well with me." To the weeping ones we would say: Weep not as those who have no hope. She is gone, we cannot recall her; but with an effort in the right direction we can rejoin her in the great beyond, where no separation will ever take place. She leaves not an enemy behind, and those who knew her best loved her most. May the Lord's richest blessings abide with the sorrowing companion and little children.

Southwest Texas—Gone Abroad.

On March 16, 1900, the writer and family, in our own private conveyance, started on a visiting and preaching tour through Victoria, Lavaca, and Fayette Counties, our objective point being Midway, Madison County. That is the place where I first lived in this State, where I was married, and where my wife and I both have relatives.

Passing through Goliad, I stopped to see Brother W. S. Dabney a few minutes. He is afflicted with cancer, though I hope he may yet recover. I preached at Nursery, Victoria County, on the third Lord's day, and on the fourth Lord's day I preached at Colony, Fayette County. I have held meetings at both places in the past.

Brethren along the route have entertained us, so that our expenses are light, besides the comfort of a good shelter and the encouragement of a hearty welcome. I am selling books and tracts published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, and taking orders for such as I am not already supplied with.

After visiting and preaching some in Madison and Robertson Counties, I hope to reach home again about May 1. I have no guarantee or promise of financial assistance on this visit for our Southwest Texas mission work, and for aught I know I may return to that field with an empty purse. So those who have it in their minds to fellowship me further in the work should send on as in the past. It will doubtless reach me in good time and when needed. I forgot to say that at our evening service at Colony, one confessed Christ and is to be baptized right away. G. W. BONHAM.

IT IS quite generally believed, particularly by large consumers and practical painters, that Pure White Lead is the best paint. It is because of this belief that manufacturers of the so-called White Leads, mixtures of Whiting, Barytes and Zinc, brand them "White Lead," "Pure White Lead," etc., etc. You can avoid these by making sure that the brand is right.

FREE For colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

THE series of Helps prepared by the GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY has no superior. Much time, labor, and thought are bestowed on the entire series. The Quarterlies all abound in SCRIPTURAL TEACHING and are full of WHOLE-SOME DOCTRINE. The man that is not interested in the Bible will not take any interest in the investigation of these. A good way to use these Helps is to study them carefully at home during the week and leave them there when you go to the class on Lord's day. Helps thus used cannot prove otherwise than very beneficial.

The old town of Concord, Mass., has just voted an appropriation of $2,500 with which to celebrate, on April 19, the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening fight of the Revolution.

California is now coming to the front as an oil-producing State. There is a monthly production of above 160,000 barrels, and active prospecting operations are under way which will doubtless soon increase the output.

In the United States Congress, the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections decided by a unanimous vote to recommend the adoption of a resolution declaring that Hon. W. A. Clark, of Montana, is not entitled to occupy his seat as a Senator from Montana,

The whole West and Southwest, including the States of Colorado, Wyoming, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Kentucky, is experiencing a series of rain storms and snowstorms, accompanied by temperature ranging from fifteen to thirty degrees below normal, with heavy frosts over a large section of the wheat belt.

Col. J. H. Lifford, who died recently in Texas, was a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. He served through the Civil War with the Union forces, and went to Texas at its close. He took with him colonists from Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio to his adopted State, and was probably the greatest colonizer that Texas ever had. For years he had been living the life of a hermit on a little farm which he personally cultivated.

For some time past the reports from the Tennessee prison and branches have been very gratifying. The Committee on War Claims in Congress reported favorably the bill of Congressman Cox, of Tennessee, to pay ex-Confederate soldiers for horses that were taken from them in violation of the terms of the Grant-Lee surrender. Mr. Cox says he will push the bill vigorously in the House, and believes that it will meet with no opposition. The amount involved cannot be estimated, as it depends upon how many will prove their claims before the quartermaster general, as provided in the bill.

On May 15 an examination for statistical field agent of the Fishery Commission will be held in places where there are local Boards of Examiners.

The State Department at Washington has made public a report from United States Consul Fee, at Bombay, which presents startling figures to illustrate the extent of famine in India. Mr. Fee says that notwithstanding the season of acute distress has hardly commenced, the returns far exceed those recorded during the initial stages of the famine three years ago. It then affected only 1,000,000 persons; now the number is 3,500,000, and the daily expenditure is placed at $84,000. The famine area covers 300,000 square miles, with a population of 40,000,000; and there is a further area of about 145,000 square miles, with a population of 21,000,000, in which more or less distress prevails, and where relief has been or will be given.

Cleaning House

Once or twice a year the good housewife has a thorough house cleaning. The house has been swept and dusted every day in the year, but the housewife knows that in spite of vigilance dust accumulates in cracks and corners, and is only to be removed by special effort.

It's the same way with the body. You look after it every day. You take all the ordinary precautions of cleanliness and health. Yet the body needs its special cleaning to rid it of the accumulations of waste and poisonous matter which invite disease. Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, taken regularly once or twice a year, would save many a sickness. It purifies the blood, strengthens the stomach, and cleanses the body of poisonous accumulations.

"Last spring I had a severe attack of pneumonia, which left me with a bad cough, and also left my lungs in a very bad condition," writes John M. Russell, Esq., of Brent, Chesapeake Nat., Ind. Ter. "I had no appetite and was so weak I could scarcely walk. My breast was all sore with running sores. I got two bottles Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which I believe saved my life. I cannot express my gratitude to you. I am able now to do very good work."

posing 15 per cent of the Dingley rates on goods going into Puerto Rico from the United States and coming from Puerto Rico into the United States. As amended by the Senate and agreed to by the House, all restrictions on goods coming into the United States are eliminated, and certain food stuffs and other articles which heretofore have gone into Puerto Rico by executive order are excluded from the operation of the 15 per cent duty imposed on goods entering the island from the United States. A complete scheme of civil government for the island is also attached to the measure.

Under authority of Section 5193, United States Revised Statutes, national banks have heretofore been permitted to deposit with any assistant treasurer of the United States lawful money in sums of not less than $10,000, and to receive therefor a certificate of deposit, which certificate they were authorized to count as part of their lawful money reserve. Section 6 of the Act of March 14, 1890, known as the "currency bill," repeals this entire section of the Revised Statutes, and in consequence the banks will hereafter be prohibited from counting such certificates as part of their lawful reserve. There are about 14,500,000 of these certificates now outstanding, which are held entirely by the banks in the principal cities of the East, with the exception of two or three Western cities, and are indicated in their reports as United States certificates of deposit. The result of this repeal of Section 6 will be the reappearance in circulation of the legal tenders against which the certificates have been issued.

Floods in the Brazos, Colorado, Rio Grande Rivers, and in other streams in Texas, have done incalculable damage to buildings and lands, besides destroying a number of lives. At Austin the dam of the reservoir was broken and all of water was precipitated upon the lower parts of the city. The electric light plant was destroyed and the city was left in darkness. The International and Great Northern reports two bridges destroyed between Taylor and Austin. On the Aransas Pass Railroad, the Guadalupe River bridge is gone on the Kerrville branch, and also the Cibolo River bridge on the Gulf Shore Railroad. The Salado Creek bridge, on the Corpus Christi line, had its approaches washed away, and several washouts are reported on the Waco line of the Aransas Pass, and the bridge of that road over the Colorado River at West Point was swept away by the flood from the Austin dam, as was also the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas bridge lower down. The storm was particularly furious at Corpus Christi and Rockport, on the gulf coast.

It was not until 1877 that oxygen and nitrogen, two gases which compose the air, were liquefied. During that year, however, a few drops of liquid oxygen and nitrogen were produced. This was done at great expense. The first drop of liquid oxygen probably cost more than $5,000. The atmosphere which we breathe contains one-fifth oxygen and four-fifths nitrogen. Many investigations have been made during the past two decades to discover methods of cheaply liquefying the air. Success was not achieved, however, until 1895, when Dr. Karl Linde, of Munich; Dr. William Hampson, of London; and Charles E. Tripler, of New York, each, at about the same time and independently, brought out apparatus which readily and cheaply compresses, cools, and liquefies the air we breathe. Still later Ostergren and Burger have patented a process which is still more successful, and their plant is said to have a capacity of over 1,500 gallons of liquid air daily. All the machines for liquefying air compresses it and cool it by running water; it is compressed still more and cooled again; then a part of the cooled, compressed air is allowed to escape around the tube containing the remaining part, and this cools it still more. This process is repeated until the air which enters the machine comes running out into a Dewar flask as a liquid at a temperature of 310 degrees below zero.

TENNESSEE.

I preached at Spencer's Hill on the second Lord's day in April to a large congregation. The house was full. They keep up regular worship at this place and use the Gospel Advocate literature. They appeared to manifest some interest in the study of the Scriptures. E. S. B. WALDRON.

Trenton, April 10.—We had a small audience, but a good meeting, here last night. One young woman came forward and made the good confession. A sister who was formerly a Baptist united with the congregation. There was one addition at Bethany on Sunday night. Brother Smith went to baptize her this morning, while I attended to the baptism of the young woman here. Brothers Thornton, Rodgers, and Stiles are here in the cotton factory. They are old friends I knew back at Pinewood in the sweet long ago. They are faithful and true. They want some good man to come and help them. Trenton is a good point to do evangelistic work. If I were laboring permanently in America, it is just such a place as I should like to labor in. Those that can be reached are generally poor, the class Jesus came to save.

Aubrey, April 9.—Brother J. H. Lawson, of Denton, preached at Pilot Point yesterday and last night, and I preached at Denton. It was an exchange suggested by Brother Lawson. There was one confession last night at Denton. I will preach this week at night at a schoolhouse near here. I preached last week at the schoolhouse near my home, in Hunt County. Let us fill the country with the gospel.

F. L. YOUNG.

Sherman, April 4.—Brother David Walk, my old-time friend, has just closed a series of sermons in the Houston Street Church at Sherman. What a feast of good things night after night! Brother Walk has no fads; there is with him no garish tinsel, no effort at display. His concern is not what the age demands that it may be pleased, but what the age needs—the truth itself. Upon the truth as it is in Christ he relies to convict, convert, and strengthen. How I wish that every community in the land could hear him! To hear him is to be impressed with the height and depth, the grandeur and the glory, of the gospel of Christ, God's own power to save. He has few equals in the pulpit. I am proud of him and of the fact that he is in Texas and that Sherman is his home. O. A. CARR.

Dallas, April 9.—Brother J. S. Dunn closed his labors with us last night, after a stay of about ten months. We deeply regret his departure, and but one ray of light lingers to dispel the gloom of his going, and that is the hope that he will return to again take up the work so nobly begun (though so sadly unfinished) and carry it on, as much as in him lies, to the honor and glory of Christ, our Lord. We feel he has already done a good work here. I do not know the number of additions to the congregation, but I do know that all his "children in the gospel" are very much attached to him. From the first time he stood before us and in a kind and gentle, though forcible, manner told us of his purpose in coming into our midst, to the present time, he has steadily gained the love of his congregation, until now, as he goes out from us, our hearts are filled with grief. In his first talk to us he told us he had come to us to be one of us; he wanted to share our joys and our sorrows; he wanted to work for the Master and try to save souls; and right well has he filled his place. Shortly after his arrival here our beloved elder, Brother William Lipscomb, was cut down by the hand of an assassin. This was his first opportunity to share our sorrows; and—O!—how good and kind and sympathetic was he to the bereaved widow and her children and to the congregation, for he knew how much we loved Brother Lipscomb. Often was he called upon to preach the funeral of some one in our midst, and always showed a ready sympathy with the sorrowing ones. He was often called upon to unite in marriage some of our young people, and was ever ready to enter into the joys of the occasion. Socially, he was always pleasant and agreeable; so that, in fact, he was one of us. Last Friday, just three days before the close of his labors with us, he was again called upon to sympathize with a bereaved widow and a sorrowing congregation. Another one of our beloved elders, Brother J. A. Ruff, was run over and instantly killed by a freight train. It is a strange coincidence that at the beginning and the ending of his stay with us we should lose two of our much-loved elders. On funeral occasions I have never seen his superior. He always said the right thing in the right place and at the right time. I could say much more, but will close by saying that we all hope and pray that Brother Dunn may yet be made to see that it is his duty to return in the near future, if his life is spared, and take up again the work and carry it on at least till the young members become established in the faith, that they may take up the work and carry it on when we who are on the descending side of the hill of life are gone. May God's richest blessings attend our dear Brother Dunn wherever he may be, and may he bring many souls to Christ, is the wish of one of his best friends.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has awarded the initial contracts for the erection of what will probably be the longest solid masonry bridge structure in the world, and which, when completed, will have cost $1,000,000 or more. The new bridge is to be erected across the Susquehanna River at Rockville, almost adjoining the present structure at that point, which it is to replace, and will require several years to construct. It will consist of forty-eight solid masonry arches, constructed upon Pennsylvania Railroad standard masonry plans of cut stone, each arch being seventy-two feet in the clear, and giving it a total length, when completed, of between three thousand six hundred and three thousand seven hundred feet, and will be built sufficiently wide to accommodate three tracks.

The Bible and Japan.

There is an old Japanese story, told as follows:

"A young fisherman was once strolling along the seashore. A group of unclad, brown-skinned, bushy-headed boys attracted his attention. Something in their midst excited them. The young fisherman drew near to see what was the center of attraction. True to the nature of cruel boys the world over, they were pelting a little turtle with stones. He took pity on the poor little turtle and bought the boys off by giving them a copper each. All the boys ran home, to the village near by, delighted with their new possessions. The young fisherman picked up the little turtle and cast it back into the sea. Many days hence the same young fisherman met by the sea a fair being. She told him she was the same little turtle, now transformed, who had come to thank him for his kindness; that she lived in a palace far out in the sea, where there were many delights. She proposed to conduct him to that fair place, if only he would consent to go. He consented. Once in the sea again, she was only a large turtle that asked the young fisherman to get on its back while they went to the palace of the sea. The young man found all as it had been told. After spending three days most delightfully he felt that his parents would be uneasy and he must return. When he reached the shore he expected to walk up home as usual; but, to his perplexity, he could not find his home. No one to whom he turned could tell him anything about it. He, moreover, was a stranger to all, and all were strangers to him. Out in the village cemetery, back of the village temple, he found some tombstones on which were carved the names of his father and mother, and the dates showed that instead of three days he had been absent three hundred years, which accounted for his strange surroundings."

If a Japanese, after an absence of fifty years, should return to Japan today, he would find himself no less surrounded by a new situation than the young man in the story. The country is called "Old-New Japan." Considering the starting points of each country, America herself has not made more rapid progress than Japan during the last fifty years. Fifty years ago Japan was shut up, like a turtle in its shell, ready to snap at every passer-by. Even villages looked with enmity upon each other, and so little was the common intercourse of the people that every little province spoke its own dialect. Human life, except in the person of a few nobles, went for naught, and the value of the individual was not considered. When a noble died his attendants committed harakiri (suicide), or otherwise threw their lives away. Such a thing as moral purity was unknown. Women were not considered fit to educate, but only fit to look enticing and serve the lust and selfishness of man. The schools were the Buddhist temples, where the boys were sent to learn how to write and read a little dry Chinese philosophy. If one wished to go a distance of a hundred miles, he generally went on foot. There were no orphan asylums nor other charitable institutions. The petty lords were continually at war with each other, and would sacrifice the lives of thousands for a trifle. The samurai walked the streets with his two swords; he laid them off by his couch at night, and put them on in the morning as a part of his apparel. The feudal lord spent the wealth and strength of the country in digging deep moats, building great stone walls, barred gates, and frowning castles, without which he felt entirely unsafe. He slept within at night and went forth surrounded by an army of attendants in the day. Labor was looked upon as dishonorable, and honesty and integrity were no tests of a true man. The emperor was kept shut up in ignorance, and practically a prisoner, while others usurped the throne.

Such were some of the conditions of Japan less than fifty years ago. All of which are more or less changed at the present day. What has brought about the change? J. M. M'CALEB.

A Fair Test.

John Wesley's mother once wrote to him when he was in college: "Would you judge of the lawfulness or the unlawfulness of pleasure, take this rule:

"Whatever weakens your reason, Impairs the tenderness of your conscience, Obscures your sense of God, or takes off the relish of spiritual things, Whatever increases the authority of your body over your mind— That thing, to you, is sin."

White-Eastes Debate.

This debate was held at Brush Creek, Tenn., beginning on March 15, 1900, and continuing six days. While the weather was so very fair, crowds greeted us each day.

The church question was affirmed three days by each disputant. Brother White took the lead the first three days, affirming: "The church of which I, L. S. White, am a member is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." Scriptural arguments were made to show when, where, and at what time the church of God had its "origin," or beginning on earth. Points of identity were discussed at some length, Brother White showing the church of which he is a member is identical in points of doctrine and practice with the church of which the New Testament speaks so repeatedly. Brother Eastes tried to prove him to be a Campbellite and the church of which he is a member the Campbellite Church, and that it began at Bethany in 1827. He read many extracts from the "Memoirs of A. Campbell" and other authors to prove these charges true, but failed to carry his point. Brother White also introduced a strong argument to show the church of God includes and consists of all Christians. It seems that Baptist preachers cannot evade this argument at all, neither can they meet and refute it; so they let it alone.

Brother Eastes affirmed this proposition: "The Church of which I, T. J. Eastes, am a member is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." Brother Eastes tried to find the establishment, and finally said it was in the days of John, or the personal ministry of Christ. This is as near as he came to it. It was shown that it could not be apostolic before the cross. He showed the doctrine he claimed for the Baptist Church and tried to identify himself with the apostles; but his opponent would not allow him to do it, by showing his errors and claims to be false. Brother Eastes is a "Landmark Baptist," so-called. Therefore he attempted to trace a line of duly-baptized persons from the apostles until now, but signally failed, inasmuch as he himself traced it into "the remotest depths of antiquity," from which it would be difficult to determine what spot gave birth to it.

He was met fairly on his historical arguments. He read from Baptist authors principally to prove Baptist claims; so Brother White read from Baptist authors to disprove Baptist claims, inasmuch as one Baptist author is as authentic as another; so he failed to establish an unbroken line of succession. Baptists themselves say it cannot be done. This must suffice.

"A Good Maxim is Never Out of Season."

That is apparently what the proprietors of Hood's Sarsaparilla believe, as their advertising is now full of proverbs, old sayings, wise saws, and other quotations. It may be said, too, that a good medicine is never out of season, and we believe Hood's Sarsaparilla is a good medicine, because it does everybody good who takes it. No preparation has ever been placed on the market that won and held public confidence, year after year, as Hood's Sarsaparilla has done and is doing.

There must be a reason for this, and it is found in the remarkable cures that are constantly being effected by its use. Only the other day a gentleman was saying how much this medicine had done for his family. It completely cures scrofula, salt rheum, and all sorts of eruptions; it gives to the young rosy cheeks and a clear, healthy complexion, and is better for them than all the cosmetics ever produced. Women who are weak, tired, and worn out by constant household cares say that Hood's Sarsaparilla gives them a good appetite, sweet sleep, physical strength, and abounding health.

In cases of dyspepsia and indigestion it actually seems to have a magic touch. It is wonderful for giving strength to the nerves and curing neuralgia and nervous prostration. Rheumatism, catarrh, malaria, kidney troubles, etc., promptly yield to its curative power; while for those who are recovering from fevers or other serious illness Hood's Sarsaparilla is indeed the best medicine that money can buy.

NATURE MEANT IT.

When Nature Put Iron Into Your Blood She Meant It.

She did not do it for fun. It was not an accident.

Our bodies need iron, or we would never find it in the blood, in the gastric juice, in the chyle, in the lymph, in the bile, in the pigment of the eye, in the milk, and in other natural secretions of the body.

What is the iron for? It is for strength; it is a food; it is necessary for certain processes of living.

The want of it makes us sick.

How can we tell the want of it?

Paleness is a sign. Weakness, thinness, general debility, depression, nervousness, rheumatism, chills, ague, and lack of ambition and vitality.

All these mean the want of iron.

People who are always ailing, who catch cold and other diseases easily, who suffer from aches and pains, who are too weak to work and too depressed to enjoy life—such people need iron. Do you?

Many remedies for all these ills contain drugs and minerals that are never found in the body unless put there. Can they be natural?

Better take a medicine containing ingredients which Nature uses herself in building up the body.

You would not patch up an iron building with wood.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic puts iron in your blood—iron in the form most easily used. Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic builds you up and makes you strong as iron.

"Dallas, Tex., December 15, 1897.

"Dallas News—Gentlemen: Answering your inquiry of to-day, I cheerfully recommend Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic for a general household medicine. I have used several bottles in my family, and for building up the system, loss of appetite, and indigestion it cannot be beat. In future I will always have a bottle of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic in the house. J. J. BINGON.

"218 N. Harwood."

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic has been used by and has brought health to thousands. A letter received from one of the most prominent men in Ohio, Hon. J. W. Cruikshank, of Troy, ex-clerk of the Supreme Court of Ohio, will serve as an example. He says:

"For the benefit of other sufferers I consider it my duty to speak of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. My wife was an invalid for several years, had lost nearly all vitality; she could not eat and was reduced in flesh to an alarming extent. All medicines failed to give relief until we tried Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, which restored her usual health and strength in a very short time. Words cannot express our appreciation of this valuable remedy. It is certainly a wonder and worthy of a place in every home."

Jones-Wilkinson Debate.

Brother S. M. Jones (Christian), of Nashville, Tenn., and T. L. Wilkinson (Methodist minister), of Hanover, Ontario, engaged in a public discussion at Jordan Station, about fifteen miles west of Niagara Falls, beginning on Monday evening, February 5, 1900, and closing on Monday evening, February 12, 1900. The following propositions were discussed: "(1) A burial in baptism is the only mode of baptism—i. e., water baptism—taught in the Scriptures;" Brother Jones affirms. "(2) The Scriptures teach that baptism in water is for the remission of sins;" Brother Jones affirms. "(3) Infant children of believers are proper subjects for Christian baptism;" T. L. Wilkinson affirms.

It was agreed that two evenings be devoted to each proposition, but Mr. Wilkinson requested (on Wednesday evening) that the first proposition be taken up again on the Monday evening following. To this Brother Jones agreed.

The discussion passed off with a good attendance, considering the weather, and with less display of partisan feeling than usual. The disciples of this locality were well pleased with Brother Jones in this discussion. He calmly and earnestly affirmed his propositions, quoting again and again the scriptures which plainly supported his position. He also found time to give several powerful and eloquent exhortations to obedience and to take the safe course.

As usually happens, partisans were made stronger, while those with open minds learned something more of the truth. The opinion of the latter is voiced in the following statement, made on Friday evening, at the close of the discussion (privately, of course): "I am neither a Methodist nor a disciple, but I can understand Jones; I cannot understand Wilkinson, and I do not believe he understands himself." L. E. HUNTSMAN.

Texas Notes.

The church of Christ at Bonham now has W. A. Sewell, a faithful gospel preacher, spending all his time in mission work. Every church in the country should be doing as much of this work as possible. It does not take a large or rich church to do a great deal. It takes a church that is really in love with the Master; it takes a church willing and anxious to sacrifice something for the salvation of souls. The church of Christ at Bonham is neither large nor rich, but they have a good, able preacher spending all his time in mission work, and they support him—not simply promise it. Of course, those who have no one in their midst who can do the preaching they need at home without support cannot do as much work away from home as those who have, but we should do all that is in our power. We should not forget that the Master says: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Those churches that are having no preaching at all or that are only having preaching at home once each month are making slow progress in carrying out the commission of our Lord.

Brother Bishop is now in Japan—as you all doubtless know—busily engaged in the Master's work among the heathen. He and Brother Snodgrass are not asking us to support them; they are working with their own hands; but they can do much good in the Lord's work with the help we may send them. It will enable them to do work they cannot do without it. Deny yourself some pleasure; send them the money you would spend for the pleasure. It may save a soul. It will be used in the Lord's work.

You may live in a town or neighborhood, within reach of Bonham, where there is no church of Christ. If so, and you think good can be accomplished, write to me or to the elders of the church of Christ, Bonham, Tex., and we will arrange a meeting for you. Do not let having no money stand in your way. It is not money, it is you, we want.

W. A. Sewell preached at Savoy on the third Sunday in March. He will hold a meeting there in July, beginning on the third Sunday.

Last week I was called to Dodds to attend a funeral. The departed one was not a Christian—had not obeyed the gospel of Christ. What an awful thing to fall into the hands of the living God unprepared! Brother, while you have obeyed the gospel, are you sure that you are prepared? We know not the day; we know not the hour. We should ever be ready. This calls for a constant, Christlike life.

Brother E. H. Rogers, of Collinsville, recently preached for us two nights and spent two days in our town. Brother Rogers is a very fine man, and a fine preacher. We always like to have him visit us; he does us good.

Do you realize that your influence and work are absolutely necessary in order that the church where you live may do the greatest possible good? You cannot carry one of your hands in a sling and ever accomplish all the work possible for you. Neither can the church accomplish all the work possible for it without the assistance of you—one of its members.

Will. H. Sewell, of Weatherford, recently spent a few days with us. He gave us two good sermons.

Our missionary is preaching now every night, when the weather will permit, at the schoolhouses about. We hope the brethren near us will take an interest in this work. All we ask is that you will assist us in finding the places where the most good can be accomplished, and help us in arranging for meetings at these places. If you live near any of these places, you should attend and help by singing, encouragement, etc. We can do more good if you will help us in these ways. Bonham, Tex. J. P. SEWELL.

Evangelical Religion and Liberalism.

In a recent number of The Interior a despondent note is sounded over the falling off in the number of accessions to the membership of the "evangelical churches" in America during the past four or five years, and especially in 1898. Our contemporary fears that very soon the statistics will begin to show "a decline, not in increase only, but in membership." It has nothing else to urge but renewed and vigorous efforts on the part of ministers, and also of the individual members of congregations, to stem the tide and reverse this downward movement; and that, no doubt, is the good old Christian way. But is it not worth while to inquire into the causes of this ominous decline? We know of congregations in large towns which are, to all appearance, very prosperous. The attendance is large, both at the principal Sunday services and on certain weekday occasions. As an "institutional church," such a society has its parlors and exhibition rooms, where a round of attractions is presented which would certainly have astounded the Puritan forefathers. In fact, it is the center of the social life of the place, so far as young people are concerned. The question is whether all this has any relation to the purposes for which a Christian organization is supposed to exist. Does it tend, directly or indirectly, to the conversion of souls? Again, the preaching too often exhibits a wide departure from what used to be considered necessary to the character of gospel preaching. It may deliver the gospel of to-day, whatever that may be; it is certainly not the gospel of yesterday. It is doubtful whether it is in any way calculated to arouse the conscience, bring men to repentance, or build them up in the faith of Christ.

At first sight it seems hard to understand why there should not be large and increasing accessions to these "evangelical churches" from the ranks of the young people who are growing up from year to year. We are pointed to the immense numbers who flock into the Christian Endeavor, the Epworth League, and kindred associations; as evidences that religion has not lost its power over the rising generation. But it appears that these organizations are not to any great extent feeders of the denominations which have fostered them; otherwise, surely, there could be no talk of a decline. Is it not the truth that these bodies of young people are really themselves religious denominations, fulfilling for their members all that is understood to belong to the sphere of a "church"? At the same time, the obligations are much less. A definite belief is unnecessary; baptism is not required. The quality of religion, as it is understood by the membership, is purely subjective and sentimental. Nowhere is the distinction which some people are fond of making between "theology" and "religion" more appreciated. The former, it appears, may be disregarded; the latter only is needful. When these aspects of the young people's associations are taken into account, the wonder ceases that they are not seeking membership in the older evangelical churches; it would be a wonder if they were. We are told, indeed, on good authority, that the influence of these associations, with their nebulous notions of the Christian religion, is bound to react upon the denominations out of which they have sprung. This is asserted by those who think it a result to be wished for and welcomed. It means that to attract young people these churches must become liberalized.

In fact, in many quarters it is held that the real antidote to the alarming tendencies of which The Interior speaks is the adoption of the "liberal" platform—that is, the "evangelical churches," in order to maintain themselves in existence, must repudiate everything which made them "evangelical," except, perhaps, a certain pietism or religious sentiment destitute of any permanent foundation. The trend in such a direction is evident enough in many quarters. Undoubtedly the liberal movement is making great strides in the bosom of the old evangelical confederacy. But is it approving itself as a cure for the evils complained of? Is it arresting the decrease or filling up the thinning ranks? Alas! What if, after every conviction for which the founders of these sects and their leaders in the days of highest success would have laid down their lives has been flung to the winds, after everything which formerly gave them character and strength has been sacrificed to the one consideration of numbers, the numbers, after all, should not come? The plain truth is that liberalism does not tend to the building up of religious bodies, but to their disintegration. Its logical result is to prove them superfluous. It is worth the serious consideration of our brethren in these churches whether the evils which confront them have not kept pace with the rise and growth of liberalism within their borders.

What we mean by "liberalism" in religion—or, as some phrase it, "liberal religion"—will not be misunderstood by our readers. It is not liberality, or generosity, or tolerance, or charity. What it really means is a free dealing with religious truth—or, in other words, the Christian faith—and a repudiation of the idea that external institutions or observances possess any binding character. All is brought down to the level of individual taste or preference. The idea of a revelation of truth from God coming to men from a realm above nature and from outside the soul which is the recipient, not the originator, must necessarily fade away. If there are no institutions possessing the same divine authority, then must soon disappear all thought of church and sacraments. Such things are nothing more than the survivals of a superstitious age. In short, in this movement is involved—by a gradual process, it may be, but none the less certainly—the repudiation of supernatural religion and the substitution of that which is merely natural.

This form of religion, if it is to be so called, takes men back to the position of the thoughtful and wise before the light of Christ dawned upon the world. For its "theology" we have to read Plato's "Dialogues" and Cicero on "The Nature of the Gods." It acknowledges the existence of divine forces, but can never be sure that they have their center in a personal God who cares for men; it acknowledges the existence of sin, but denies its nature. Sin is confounded with ignorance. The sense of responsibility is weakened or destroyed. One thing remains, and is likely to remain, whether it be logical or not—the acknowledgment of the beauty and perfection of the moral teachings of Christ, especially where they do not involve self-discipline, but simply the regulation of conduct in the relations of man with man. If church organizations do not disappear under the influence of this movement, it will probably be because they will transform themselves into centers of charitable, philanthropic, or social work.

Such seems to thoughtful people, within or without the churches, to be the inevitable result of the liberal movement, so far as it is allowed to gain foothold in the denominations which have hitherto been termed "evangelical." The time is coming, if it is not already at hand, when the ministers and other leaders will find it necessary to consider whether the kind of liberality which it is so fashionable to encourage—which began in the exchange of pulpits, and has gone on, to the disparagement of "dogma" and of creeds, and, finally, to the rejection of all authority in religion—is consistent with any genuine form of the Christian religion or belief in a divine revelation.

Nor is this problem one for those denominations alone. It is only too clear that the Anglo-Catholic Church, "known in law" as Protestant Episcopal, has the same tendency to meet within its own fold. But at least we have the strong vantage-ground of a perfectly definite creed, of an order and polity which have survived many onslaughts, of sacraments still universally venerated, and of forms of worship which furnish an unsurpassed training in the thoughts and habits of supernatural religion. All these, moreover, are believed and accepted upon the ground of a divine authority inherent in the church. All this forms an immense contrast to any form of liberalism. With such an advantage, it is hard to believe that these destructive tendencies can ever gain anything more than a fleeting and ephemeral place within our boundaries. The antagonism of such views to all that we maintain, to the whole character of our constitution and formularies, is far too glaring to be glossed over, even for a time. It is a case in which "the lion and the lamb" cannot "lie down together." The conflict may be sharp, but surely it can have but one result.—The Living Church.

An antileprous shrub has lately been brought to notice by the Department of Agriculture. It is the Jatropha gossypifolia, of Venezuela, called by natives Tua-tuo, or the Failejon purgo, on account of its purging qualities. A number of natives have been cured, according to the account of a priest, who gave a detailed account of the cure of his nephew, which is given in Harper's Weekly. Surgeon General Wyman has sent vials of the poisonous extract from the shrub to Carmichael, of the United States Marine Hospital Service at Honolulu, where there is every facility for testing and experimenting as to its value for the alleviation and cure of the terrible scourge of leprosy.

Intensely interesting. Dedicated "to all boys who love their mothers, serve the Lord, and strive to be educated, useful, and good." A biographical sketch of T. B. Larimore, and short sketches of more than fifty "boys" who attended his school at Mars' Hill, Ala. It describes the rough mountain country of North Alabama, and gives many funny incidents of country life in the "backwoods;" it tells the story of "Hard times in Dixie during the War." Uncle Minor's Stories

By V. M. METCALFE
(Uncle Minor.)

A book of real incidents selected from the author's experience and observation. Uncle Minor's life was devoted to the young, and everywhere he went the children became attached to him. He thought there was too much reality in life to spend his time in writing fiction, so in this book he confines himself to real incidents and true stories which point the mind to "some virtue to practice or vice to shun." It is an exceedingly appropriate gift for the young. Sent postpaid. 256 pages, 6½ x 9½; bound in cloth.

Brother Grimes makes the following explanation in the American Baptist Flag:

"Elder F. B. Srygley (Campbellite) dies hard, but he must die. In the Whitlock-Srygley debate, at Alexandria, said Srygley referred to a document which J. T. Oakley, M. A. Cathcart, and myself signed, with a number of Campbellite preachers. He quotes it thus: 'The Spirit, in conviction and conversion, operates through the word only.' I denied his quotation emphatically, but he stuck to it; so afterwards he resorted to the columns of the Gospel Advocate for relief, and here is what he found: 'The Holy Spirit operates through the truth only. The Holy Spirit and the word of God are different.' When they saw they were gone, some of the Campbellites tried to hold out that the truth and written word were coextensive, as though God had revealed all there was of truth in one small volume. If this be true, a man could memorize the Bible and be as wise as God. Now, let me say, that every Baptist believes the Spirit operates within the limits of truth; no one believes he operates through falsehood; and every one believes he is circumscribed by the limits of the atonement in conversion. But, on the other hand, I know of no Baptists who believe he is circumscribed by the written word. If a man will quote me correctly, he will find me unflinching."

I have no desire to do Brother Grimes or anybody else injustice. If the agreement of July 8, 1885, that "the Holy Spirit operates through the truth only," is consistent with the Whitlock proposition that "the Holy Spirit, in conviction and conversion, operates independently of the written or preached word," as Brother Grimes contends, those who signed the agreement should have so understood it when they signed it, and they ought to abide by it in good faith or else frankly admit that they have changed their convictions since they signed it.

As I understood the matter when I wrote a former article against Brother Grimes, and as I still understand it, the point of conflict between the agreement of July 8, 1885, which Grimes signed, and the Whitlock proposition in the Alexandria debate of 1900, which Grimes indorsed, is not a question as to whether "the truth and written word are coextensive," as Brother Grimes seems to think, but a question as to whether the Holy Spirit operates through the truth only, or independently of the truth. The doctrine of the Whitlock proposition is and has always been that the Holy Spirit operates upon the heart of man abstractly, directly, immediately, and independently of the written or preached word or any other truth. Those who heard the Alexandria debate say this is what Whitlock tried to prove by the arguments which Grimes has pronounced "unanswerable." This, then, is the doctrine Grimes indorsed when he indorsed Whitlock. Whitlock neither affirmed nor tried to prove that the Spirit operates independently of the written or preached word in the sense that he operates "through the truth only;" but the written word is not "coextensive" with "the truth," as Grimes explains. What he affirmed, tried to prove, and Grimes indorsed is that the "Spirit operates independently of the written or preached word," in the sense that he operates otherwise than "through the truth." The doctrine of the agreement of July 8, 1885, which Grimes signed, is that the Spirit does not operate this way at all, but "through the truth only." This is the issue that has been made in debate on the operation of the Spirit always and everywhere. Brother Grimes is clearly on both sides of this issue:

Brother Grimes puts himself into another difficulty in his explanation. He says the Holy Spirit is "circumscribed by the limits of the atonement in conversion," but he is not "circumscribed by the written word." If this means anything at all, it means that there is some truth about "the atonement" for the Spirit to operate through which is not in "the written word." If the Spirit operates through truth that is beyond—outside of—"the written word," but not beyond the limits of the atonement, as Brother Grimes says, it is perfectly clear that there is some truth about "the atonement" outside of the written word. What is that truth, where did Brother Grimes or anybody else learn it, and how does he explain the fact that God failed to put it in "the written word?" On what authority does he accept a truth about "the atonement" that is not in "the written word?" If it is not in "the written word," how does he know it is truth?

As to the merits of Brother Grimes' explanation, I raise the vital question: Does the agreement of July 8, 1885, mean what he says it means? This is a question to be settled, not by the ipse dixit of one man who signed it and who needs a special construction of it to extricate him from an embarrassing position, but by all the men who signed it and all the circumstances under which it was signed. Did those who signed it understand it when they signed it as Brother Grimes now explains it? Would they have signed it if they had understood that it means what he now says it means? Did Brother Grimes or anybody else in any way intimate when it was signed that it means what he now says it means? Was anything said by anybody when it was signed to indicate that those who signed it and everybody else present clearly understood that it positively does not mean what Brother Grimes now says it means? A. Alsop, one of the men who signed it, explained very clearly what he understood it to mean in the Gospel Advocate immediately after it was signed, as follows:

"On the work of the Spirit, there was no debate. Our Baptist friends seemed to think that we had affirmed that the word without the Spirit converted sinners, or that there was no influence of the Spirit exerted in conversion. The proposition, with the caption, reads:

"PROPOSITION ON HOLY SPIRIT.

"The word of the Lord is the only influence put forth in conviction and conversion." E. A. Elam affirmed.

"The Baptists claimed that the caption had nothing to do with the proposition, and that it was simply word influence, and not Spirit influence, put forth through the word only. On our part it was contended that the caption, as the label on a bottle of poison, told the contents. Mr. Elam produced the correspondence and read from Mr. Ogle's letters, 'I am glad you [Elam] have accepted the proposition on the Holy Spirit,' showing that Mr. Ogle understood that it was the influence of the Spirit that was affirmed in the proposition. Mr. Elam further called attention to the fact that he had refused to sign the proposition until the caption was inserted. The moderator of Mr. Elam then offered to bring forward the proposition affirmed by A. Campbell in debate with N. L. Rice, in 1843, and have Mr. Elam to maintain it, if the Baptists would deny it; holding that it clearly set forth our teaching on this subject. To this it was replied that the Baptists could not deny that, as it was what they believed and taught, and in denying it they would deny their own doctrine. That proposition reads as follows ('Campbell and Rice Debate,' page 611): 'In conversion and sanctification the Spirit of God operates on persons only through the word.' Mr. Campbell affirmed; Mr. Rice denied.

"Not being able at this junction of affairs to settle the disputed points in the proposition, it was agreed to leave it to the president moderator to decide it. Here is his decision:

"PROPOSITION ON HOLY SPIRIT.

"The word of God is the only influence put forth in conviction and conversion." My decision on the above is that the influence is put forth by the Spirit.

"A. C. TATUM, President Moderator."

"Mr. Tatum then remarked to the audience that this had always been our teaching on this subject, and that he thought he was as well acquainted with our teaching as any man in the assembly. Our Baptist friends then replied that they would not, in the light of that decision, debate the proposition; that they believed that the Spirit in conviction and conversion operated only through the word. At this point it appeared there was no ground of difference between the parties and nothing to do but to shake hands and dismiss the debate on that topic."

This explanation of it was published when all the facts were fresh in the minds of the people, and no one offered any protest. If it means what Brother Grimes now says it means, it is remarkably strange that neither Brother Grimes nor anybody else explained it as he now explains it, when it was signed, or till fifteen years after it was published in the paper with the explanation which he now repudiates. Brother John T. Oakley, one of the Baptist preachers who signed it, in a newspaper discussion with Brother Griffin, another Baptist preacher, not long after it was signed, argued distinctly, vigorously, and voluminously that the Holy Spirit operates through the written or preached word only. This shows very clearly what the position and understanding of Oakley was at that time on this subject. This clearly defines the understanding of two of the signers of the agreement of July 8, 1885. I have submitted the following questions to others who signed that agreement:

"Dear Brother: When you signed the agreement on July 8, 1885, that 'the Holy Spirit operates through the truth only,' and dismissed the debate between E. A. Elam and G. A. Ogle, (1) Did you understand that 'the truth' in that agreement means 'the written or preached word,' and nothing else? (2) Was it your understanding that all who signed that agreement understood that 'the truth' means 'the written or preached word,' and nothing else? (3) Would you have signed that agreement if it had not been your understanding that all who signed it meant 'the written or preached word' by 'the truth?'

I have received answers to these questions as follows:

"Donelson, Tenn., April 5, 1900.—Dear Brother: In answer to your questions: (1) When I signed the agreement on July 8, 1885, that 'the Holy Spirit operates through the truth only,' I understood that 'the truth,' in that agreement, meant 'the written or preached word,' and nothing else. (2) It was my understanding that all who signed that agreement understood that 'the truth' meant 'the written or preached word,' and nothing else. (3) I would not have signed that agreement if it had not been my understanding that all who signed it meant simply and only 'the written or preached word' by 'the truth.' (4) If this is not what the Baptist preachers who signed it meant, they misled Elam, Tatum, Walling, Alsip, and myself; they also misled A. C. Tatum, president moderator, a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher, who stated publicly, at the time, that he was familiar with our teaching, and that he knew we believed and taught that the Spirit operates through 'the written or preached word only.' It was his understanding that the agreement meant this, and we signed it with this explanation, made by him, publicly, to the audience. The Baptist preachers present heard him make this explanation, and offered no protest.

If Brother Grimes really had in his mind, at that time, any such understanding of the agreement as he now avows, why did he not state his understanding then? If he signed the agreement with this public explanation, while in his own mind he attached to it a meaning he did not avow and nobody understood or suspected that he held, did he not deliberately practice fraud upon others who signed it, and intentionally deceive the whole congregation? Does he or anybody else believe that the debate would have been dismissed and that the agreement would have been signed and accepted as satisfactory if he or anybody else had clearly explained, as he now explains, that "the truth" is something different from "the written or preached word?" If the agreement of 1885 and the Whitlock proposition of 1900 are perfectly consistent, as Brother Grimes contends: (1) Why did not Brother Ogle or some other Baptist debater, present in 1885, propose to affirm the Whitlock proposition, and proceed with the debate? (2) Why did not those who signed the agreement simply sign the Whitlock proposition, and be done with it? (3) Why did it ever occur to anybody to agree upon anything else than the Whitlock proposition? (4) Why did John T. Oakley argue that the Spirit operates through the written or preached word, only, in a newspaper discussion with Griffin, not long after the agreement was signed? (5) Why does A. Malone say some of his Baptist brethren have "gone off after Whitlock"—a Separate Baptist, by the way; with "men whose caliber is but two by four?"

"Bellwood, Tenn., April 10, 1900.—Brother Srygley: Your letter of recent date, containing certain questions concerning the agreement signed by several Baptist preachers, myself, and others, at Auburn, Tenn., July 8, 1885, came duly to hand. Answering in order, I desire to say: (1) Yes; I understood the expression, 'the truth,' in that agreement, meant the word of God as revealed in the Bible. I do not know where else any one could go to find the truth. 'Thy word is truth.' (John 17: 17.) (2) Yes; all who signed it understood that it meant the written word of God, or the debate on that proposition would have proceeded. The original proposition framed and written by Mr. Ogle himself contains this expression, 'the word of God,' instead of 'the truth.' He signed it in the negative, and sent it to me to sign as affirming it. I wrote him fully, beforehand, what I understood him to mean by that proposition; but when the time came, and our presiding moderator, Mr. A. C. Tatum, a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher, who is yet living, explained the meaning of the proposition—viz., that the Spirit operates in conversion through the word of God only—Mr. Ogle, to our profound astonishment, declined to discuss it, saying that was what he believed. Messrs. Oakley, Grimes, and others of his brethren agreed with him. Let it be understood that Mr. Ogle declined to deny the very proposition which he himself drew up and signed in the negative. Mr. Tatum also took pains to explain that he understood the position of the disciples on the operation of the Holy Spirit, and that we were affirming that day what they had preached all the time. So when the Baptists signed the proposition that the Spirit operates through 'the truth only,' etc., they must have understood the expression, 'the truth,' to mean 'the word of God'—'only this, and nothing more.' (3) No. (4) I do not believe that the Spirit, in conversion, operates independently of the word of God as written in the Bible. That proposition that the Spirit operates through the truth only can in no way be construed to mean that he operates independently of the word of God. Fraternaly,

Alsip, Elam, and Srygley all state that Brother Tatum, a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher, explained, publicly, in the presence of Brother Grimes and others who signed the agreement, at the time they signed it, that "the truth" means "the written or preached word," and nothing else. If Brother Grimes had in his mind, at that time, any such understanding of the agreement as he now avows, why did he not state his understanding then? If he signed the agreement with this public explanation, while in his own mind he attached to it a meaning he did not avow and nobody understood or suspected that he held, did he not deliberately practice fraud upon others who signed it, and intentionally deceive the whole congregation?

Our Contributors.

Henry Hardshell Backslides.

Frank Faithful: "Good morning, Henry. How do you find yourself by this time?"

Henry Hardshell: "Well enough in body, but I am still bothered about my spiritual interests."

Frank F.: "Why, I thought you were about satisfied with your experience, as we had found about the best one consisted in having a very great desire to be a Christian, as in the case of Aunt Parthenia Piety, whom you knew to be one of the best of Christians. How is it? Have you backslidden on that point?"

Henry H.: "Well, you have been advising me to study the Bible to gain light on this subject, and I have. I find Saul of Tarsus to have been truly converted to Christ, and I think I ought to be saved like he was."

Frank F.: "Well, you can be. Paul says: 'I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.' The power of God to save sinners is in the gospel of Christ, which Christ commanded to be preached in all the world to every creature, and said: 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.' You are in the world, and one of those to whom it has been preached. It saved Paul, as he says; it can save you. Yes, Henry, be saved, as Paul was saved. He was the chief of sinners, but was cleansed by the blood of Christ when he obeyed the gospel of Christ, which he himself says, as we have just noted, is the power of God unto salvation."

Henry H.: "O, yes, friend Faithful! I am willing to all that, but you do not quite understand me."

Frank F.: "If you are willing to all that, why do you not do all that, and arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, as Saul did? I fear, Henry, you do not understand yourself."

Henry H.: "What I mean is this: It seems that, to be genuinely converted, I ought to see some great light, or hear a heavenly voice calling me. You know Saul saw a light above the brightness of the sun, and heard a voice calling him."

Frank F.: "That is all true. In the history of Saul there are some things extraordinary, and some ordinary. It is one of the ordinary things which concerns us, that of obeying the gospel, which was preached in all the world to every creature, which is God's power to save. The miraculous, or extraordinary, things belong to the apostolic office and formative period of the church of God."

Henry H.: "But somehow I think every true convert ought to have some testimony of his conversion which is comparable to the great light and voice which occurred in the history of Saul of Tarsus. There must be some regeneration of the whole man, because he himself says to the Galatians: 'When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace,' etc. It looks like in his conversion, or regeneration, he was as passive as the other; he had no agency in being born into the world, and he had no agency in being born again."

Frank F.: "You should have quoted the whole connection, when you would see the reference is to the extraordinary ministry of the apostleship. He says, 'And called me by his grace to reveal his Son in me,' by preaching him among the Gentiles, etc. Henry, do you believe in unchristianizing everybody in the world at this day and time?"

Henry H.: "No; of course not; but as you have mentioned that, I will say I have heard you accused of unchristianizing many, because you teach baptism is a part of that obedience God requires in the gospel, and that those who have not obeyed Christ in baptism have never fully obeyed the gospel. How can you think I would unchristianize anybody?"

Frank F.: "I know you do not intend it, but nothing more effectually unchristianizes any one than to insist on the proposition that every genuine convert to Christianity must see a light as Saul saw, and hear a heavenly voice as he heard in that miraculous appearance of Christ to him; for no man, woman, or child can give any proof at all that they ever have or will see or hear any such thing. If that is the way to be a genuine convert to Christ now, your case is hopeless."

Henry H.: "But I have heard some wonderful experiences related in which the convert was remarkably illuminated."

Frank F.: "Yes, and I have, too; but I have never heard any credible statement that would at all compare with the light which shone around Saul and his company. The most extravagant claim yet heard from any sane person would not at all compare with it. Understand that I believe in divine illumination, for the word of God is a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. We need much divine aid to become and live the Christian, but the word of God makes wise unto salvation, and thoroughly furnishes the man of God unto all good works."

Henry H.: "Well, you will fall back upon the written word."

Frank F.: "You do not state the case just as I see it. I am going forward upon the word of God, and you, who were almost ready to go forward with me, have fallen back upon the words, or supposed experiences, of those who are not mentioned in the word of God."

Henry H.: "I have mentioned Saul's case; he is one of those in the Bible."

Frank F.: "But you have mentioned those miraculous occurrences which pertain to the signs of his apostolic office. Suppose you ask any truthful, thoughtful person who claims he has been converted by a direct operation of the Holy Ghost if the light by which he was divinely illuminated was one which shone all around him and his companions. He would doubtless tell you no. 'It shone,' he would say, 'into my mind and heart.' But this one did not, but was an exterior light above the brightness of the noon-day sun. Ask him further if the light in his case was so brilliant as to put out his eyes for three days, and he would answer: 'It had no such effect. Ask him if its brilliancy astounded others who were not converted, and he would say: 'No; they knew nothing of it until I told them, and then they were good enough to rejoice with me, and hope that I might be faithful as a Christian.'"

Henry H.: "Well, it pardoned Saul's sins."

Frank F.: "No; you are wrong again. His sins were not pardoned until three days afterwards when he obeyed the word of God which Ananias was sent to tell him."

Henry H.: "Well, it gave him the Spirit of God, and that converted him."

Frank F.: "No; he had no measure of the Spirit of God until the visit of Ananias. This is also taught in his history."

Henry H.: "Well, if that appearance of Christ did not pardon his sins, and did not give him the Spirit, I would like to know what it did for him."

Frank F.: "Doubtless we all feel some interest in that question, and, happily for us, the word of God gives instruction on the subject; but this must wait another interview. I am sorry to see you falling back, but will yet patiently search with you for the truth."

G. LIPSCOMB.

The heaviest words in our language are the two briefest ones, "yes" and "no." One stands for the surrender of the will; the other, for denial. One stands for gratification; the other, for character.—Theodore T. Munger.

Faithful unto the End.

A hard thing to do? Likely enough it is harder than the first obedience to the gospel. It is much easier to start than to persevere. How often we begin things we never finish! A hundred young people begin a college course—how many of them graduate? The world is full of "jacks at all trades, and good at none." It has been thus in all ages. "I fear the man of one book," said Cicero. He meant the man who began and persevered in the study of one book until he reached his success—a thorough knowledge of it. Few do this. It is not human nature to be industrious, but lazy; not thorough, but superficial; not firm and steadfast in purpose, but weak, wavering, changeable.

Happy is the man whose well-trained character will permit him to work steadily and earnestly toward a great end, whom no allurements of the present can entice from the path he has chosen. He disdains the pleasures that would detain him; he conquers obstacles; he endures pain and makes sacrifices, gladly, to reach his goal. If he is a Christian, he sees before him the New Jerusalem, with the eye of faith. Thither he must go. Like the birds that fly southward in the fall, that rise up, disdaining the ripened fields and the inviting chatter of the crowd below, and go onward in straight course to the land where winter's blasts cannot come, so he travels on far above this sordid world toward the land of eternal spring and the city which hath foundations; like Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, he deems himself a stranger and a pilgrim here, unmindful of the country whence he came out. Another may take hold on the plow and look back, not he; he has found the pearl of great price, and goes and sells all he has to obtain it.

Such characters are few and far between. Perhaps no more than one man in ten thousand has such disposition. The great mass of humanity act upon the impulse of the moment, prompted by present desires for pleasure and convenience. The Christians, also, that hold out faithfully to the end are not many.

"That is my trouble," says the sinner, "I would become a Christian if I could hold out, but I would rather be a sinner than a halfway Christian." How often we hear this! "I sought God and tried to please him," says a fallen brother, "but I was weak. I knew I was weak when I obeyed the gospel, but still I wanted to obey God. By ill training, having, perhaps, an hereditary predisposition, I formed a weak character. The task was too much for me. It is hard, very hard, to live a Christian, and now I am worse than if I had never received the holy commandment."

There is something radically wrong about the matter. Christ's religion was for all men—for sinners of the deepest dye; hence we would infer that it is adapted to human nature. If it were possible only to a few grand characters to hold out, the religion of Christ would be a failure, yet we see hundreds of members returning to the world, churches splitting up and dying. Ask them why and they will tell you: "It could not be helped." That is a mistake, to begin with. I boldly declare that it is possible to hold out faithful. God requires it! God asks no impossibilities of any man. Moreover, it has been done, and what has been done can be done again. Yes, "it is possible" to walk a rope one hundred feet from the ground. I have seen that myself. It has been done, and therefore can be done again. There is your logic.

But I answer: It is not only possible, but also practicable, to hold out faithful. The call was to the great mass of humanity. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden." "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Not even to the best elements of human society did Christ appeal, but he came to seek and save that which was lost. He came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. He proposed to take them, and sanctify them, and cleanse them, to lead them to a higher plane, to fit them for heaven. It was the Father's will that he should lose none of them, but raise them up at the last day. Surely Christ expected them to hold out. Had he overrated the capabilities of men? He knew what was in man; he knows now, he understands the weaknesses of every one; yet he makes it necessary that we should hold out. He required his apostles not only to teach and baptize all nations, but also to teach them afterwards "to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," and that not for a week, or a month, or a year, but until death. "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him," says Paul: (Heb. 10: 38.)

There is much in knowing how to do a thing. The Bible tells us how to hold out, so that everybody can do it unless they do not want to do so for pure meanness. It is not such a terribly difficult matter, either; it is a thousand times more satisfactory than backsliding to an honest man. All resolves itself now into one question: How? A few easy lessons will teach you how. Each one can be carried out by any man that has any aspirations to hold out; but each is absolutely necessary. Most Christians neglect some of them; many are ignorant of all. No wonder things go wrong!

1. If you have any will power at all, whether little or much, make it up to serve your God. Without this determination you cannot go. It is this spring that gives you the first impulse. God will see to it that it is kept up if you are in earnest. God requires no more will power of you than you have. Use it, if it is but a little, to its fullest extent, and he will increase it. Talk like the prodigal son: "I will arise and go to my Father." From the moment that you set your heart to do God's will you have his help. (Dan. 10: 12.) This done, we pass on to the next lesson.

2. Trust in the Lord. "Commit thy way unto the Lord; . . . and he shall bring it to pass." Do not draw back for fear you have not the perseverance to hold out. This I say to the sinner, also, that would obey "if he knew he could hold out." "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man," says Paul. But he does not stop at that. "God is faithful," he continues, "who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." (1 Cor. 10: 13.) Some can bear much; some, but little. God knows your strength, and he will not overtax it. Can you trust in him that he will help you, that he will hear your prayers and watch over you in your battles, lest the enemy strike too hard? When I was a little boy I enjoyed riding on the loads of hay pulling in from the field, and once my father stood in the barn lot, where the wagon had stopped, and extended his arms, and said to me: "Jump!" The load was high; it looked like a great distance to my father's arms. I hesitated. "Jump! I will catch you," said father again. I feared to offend my father and I feared to jump, but at last I resolved to throw the responsibility on him, even if I broke my neck, and jumped; and he caught me. I have often thought of that little incident since. That is what God does. His arms are extended, and he says: "Jump!" He is almighty; he knows how to deliver the godly out of temptation; and I jump, and hope to land in his bosom. If you jump as he tells you, you may lay the responsibility on him if he does not save you. Trust in God for help and strength. "All things work together for good to them that love God." Never will he let you perish. "O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee!"

3. Courage is needed everywhere you would succeed. A discouraged man is a living failure; a man that gets frightened at the task before him is not likely to do very much. Two men went to weed their gardens. One started and made slow progress. He had worked hard for two hours, and half a row was weeded. Then he lifted up his eyes and looked over the length and breadth of the garden, and his heart fainted within him. "There is no use of trying," he said; "the task is too great." The other man began and worked until dinner, and from dinner until sundown. He knew the task was not small, but it never occurred to him to get frightened at the size of it. He did not every ten minutes compare what he had done with the work still before him. Steadily, patiently he toiled along, and before he realized it his work was done. Many of us are appalled at the immense work before us. A whole long lifetime, thinks one, year after year serving God, fighting, working, until

In this desert of sorrow and sin,
Lo, I faint as I journey along,
From the warfare without and within;
See—my strength and my hope nearly gone!

Too much, too much! The clock, it is told, once became tired of its work, and stopped. "So many millions of times have I to beat every year," it said. "It is simply too much. I am the hardest worked thing in all the household." Its owner remonstrated with it: "Truly, you have to tick millions of times every year, but why worry about that? If you have to tick billions of times, you have space enough to do all that work easily. You need but tick once at a time; and every time you must tick you have a moment to tick in, and you have nothing on earth to do just then but to tick once." Brother, you do not have to live forty years of Christian life all at once; you need not fight a lifetime's battle in a day; you have to live for Christ only a minute, an hour, a day at a time. You have to fight your battles one by one; and in every conflict God stands by you. Do not measure the future by years. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." If you have learned the last lesson well, this one almost comes of itself.

4. If a soldier, after a day's fight, returns weak wounded, and bleeding, he would hardly be able to fight next day. From the wounds of several days' battles he would faint away and die. But suppose some magic salve would heal him every night, and next day he were whole again, and strong, and fresh, what an amount of fighting he could do! With that salve to heal his wounds he would be invincible. Sometimes you will stumble. "The best men are men at best." James said: "In many things we offend all." (James 3: 2.) Peter did things for which he was to be blamed. (Gal. 2: 11.) Paul declares that he was willing to do good, but often failed. (Rom. 7: 18, 19.) Why is it so? Alas! Often we play with temptation and meddle with sin. Sometimes carelessly, sometimes from force of old habits, we do wrong. If at that time the devil can get you to believe that the Lord hates you because of the wrong you have done, and it matters not how much more you sin, he has gained a great advantage over you; he has wounded you deeply, and you are despairing of life. But if you only knew it, the Lord has a healing balm for you. He still loves you. "These things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." (1 John 2: 1.) "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (1 John 1: 9.) Here you become sound and whole again; ready for new battles, stronger and more determined than ever. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin." This blessedness has come upon us; for if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins; and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." This is not an invitation or encouragement to sin. Quite the contrary. In the next chapter the apostle says, in continuation of the same subject: "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not." It is a revelation of that great spirit of love which pervades the whole gospel and is designed to capture the hearts of the lost and the forsaken. "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." (Heb. 8: 12.) But this is told us not that we may sin, but that we may not sin. Because God is so loving, so kind, and so tender toward us, we must the more strive to please him and show him in return the honor and gratitude of a noble heart. Two little boys were walking through an orchard, and passed by a young tree laden with beautiful fruit. "Let's try some of these," said one of the boys, who was a visitor. "My father won't allow it," answered the other. "He asked me specially not to take any fruit from this tree, as he intends to save it for some purpose." "But your father doesn't see you, and he won't miss a couple of apples; besides, if he were to find out, he wouldn't say much. If it were my father, I'd catch a terrible whipping; but your pa is so kind and easy-going, I wouldn't be afraid of him." "And that is just the reason why I won't take any of the apples. I know I have one of the best fathers that ever lived, and because of that I wouldn't, for my life, do anything to wound his kind heart," replied the boy. He was a noble little fellow. Can we do as much as that for Him who so loved us that He gave his only begotten Son to save us from perdition?

5. One more item. We are upheld, strengthened, and guided by the Spirit of God, who dwells in us in measure as we become fitted to receive him who helps us to overcome the flesh and the powers of darkness. By him we mortify the deeds of the body; by him we fulfill the righteousness of the law; by him we cry, "Abba, Father!" "And if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." He, the Holy Spirit, will teach us how to pray, how to fight, how to live, and how to die; and by him in God's own home shall our bodies be raised and redeemed from sin and corruption unto a glorious immortality. This is supernatural help. It comes by the study of God's word, and by obedience, and by prayer. For "if ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" (Luke 11: 13.)

By this power we shall press forward and reach the goal; and at every one of the journey's steps we have the help and love of God, before us the example of our Master, the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and the hope of eternal life.

TWO RICH MEN.

There is no intimation in the Bible that it is wrong for a Christian man to make money, provided he does so honestly. The great danger with those who accumulate money is that they will not use it to the honor and glory of God. They grow to love their riches more than they love the Lord Jesus Christ. They deify their gold, and fail to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. This is not always true, but—alas!—too often so. We, with the apostle Paul, would encourage all to be "diligent in business," for we should serve God in secular matters as well as spiritual. The rich man who has consecrated his talent, his time, and his pocketbook to the Lord is capable of doing far more good in this world than the man who is daily in a desperate struggle to keep the wolf from the door. It takes money to build orphans' homes, meetinghouses, colleges, and universities. If the glad tidings of salvation are to be borne to a benighted race, money is a necessary factor in doing so. If the dark clouds of hunger and poverty are to be driven from the humble homes of thousands who are dragging out a miserable existence, money may be very beneficial in bringing about this much-desired result. In the homes of sorrow, affliction, and death money may be helpful in dispelling the dark clouds and letting in the rich, mellow sunshine. It may be so used as to convert a desert into a paradise, or a paradise into a hell upon earth. What a curse it becomes when used for the oppression of the poor and for sinking them to the lowest depths of degradation!

Let it not be imagined for one moment that it is contended that money is a more potent factor than other things in the accomplishment of good. Far from it. Money alone will fail. For its best and noblest attainments a consecrated life must be back of it. A godly life will exert a mighty influence for good even without money. It may encircle the globe and fill the nations of earth with gladness in the years to come. A kind word spoken in the name of the Master can never die. It may convert the "cold dark, and dreary" day into one of bright sunshine and joy. Our time, sympathy, and talents may be so used as to bless thousands yet unborn. God could use the dead Elisha as well as the living.

Two dangers should be sedulously avoided: earthly treasures accumulated dishonestly and the wrong use of the means which God gives us. Of the two rich men to whom we have reference in this article one used his riches to the honor and glory of God. The other flatly refused to do this. In this refusal he sold his Lord, as did Judas, for money. Many are selling him for less money than did Judas.

"And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and knelt to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God. Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honor thy father and mother. And he answered and said unto him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth. Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow me. And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions." (Mark 10: 17-22.) This young ruler was under the law, and according to his statement had kept it.

But he had great riches with which he was not willing to part. These he loved more than he did the Lord Jesus Christ. He lacked the one thing needful. He trusted in his riches more than in the Lord Jesus Christ. To them he looked for joy, peace, and happiness. While he had many noble traits of character, while he would not be regarded by the world a bad man, yet he loved his riches far too well. How did he prove this love? By refusing to sell whatsoever he had and giving to the poor. In thus declining to obey the command of the Lord he showed a rebellious heart and that his love for the Master was not very great. He was ready to serve him if it did not cost him anything. But when the cross must be borne in order to serve the Master he preferred to part company with the Lord rather than his riches. Sad as this picture is, there are thousands like it to-day. "And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!" This statement filled the disciples with amazement. The Savior explained to them that it was as hard for those who trust in riches to go to heaven as for a camel to go through the eye of a needle. It is not possible for the man who trusts in his riches to be saved. Riches bring with them a fearful responsibility. Only the man who is faithful in the use of them will enter at last through the pearly gates into the city. This leads us to the examination of a brighter picture.

"And, behold, there was a man named Zacchæus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich. And he sought to see Jesus who he was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature. And he ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see him: for he was to pass that way. And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up, and saw him, and said unto him, Zacchæus, make haste, and come down; for to-day I must abide at thy house. And he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully. And when they saw it, they all murmured, saying, That he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. And Zacchæus stood, and said unto the Lord; Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold. And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, forso much as he also is a son of Abraham." (Luke 19: 2-9.)

Note the difference between the two men. Zacchæus received Christ without delay. (1) He did not wait in hesitation, but made haste to come down to receive him. (2) He received him joyfully, cheerfully, with all his heart. Christ seeketh such to worship him. We should come to him with all our hearts. (3) He received the Master amidst the murmuring of the people. The jeers of the multitude did not have any effect on him. (4) He received the Lord in that way which led him to give half his goods to the poor. When he had taken anything from a man by false accusation he restored him fourfold. If all rich men would use their means as did Zacchæus, their riches would become wings to enable them to fly heavenward. Money should prove a blessing to us all, and not a curse. God simply loans it to us to use in blessing others and in making the world better. With it we may bless our own lives and the lives of all about us. The man is wise who heeds the language of Jesus: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." (Matt. 6: 19-21.)

CHURCH STATISTICS.

The Western Recorder gives the following article on church statistics:

"According to the statistics gathered by Dr. H. K. Carroll, the gains and losses of the leading denominations in the United States for the past year are as follows: Regular Baptists gained 86,189; Congregationalists gained 1,766; Disciples gained 32,781; Episcopalians gained 13,738; Lutherans (all) gained 74,462; Methodists lost 4,356; Presbyterians gained 10,339; Roman Catholics gained 43,173. It thus appears that the Baptists made the largest gain of any denomination. The Lutheran figures include the Lutherans of all sorts, because we were not sure how to distinguish between the regulars and others. A large part of their gain, as well as of that of the Roman Catholics, is due to immigration. The Baptist figures are to be divided as follows: South, Baptists (white) gained 50,270; North, Baptists (white) gained 6,072; Baptists (negro) gained 29,847. These figures are instructive. The white Baptists in the South are less than double the number in the North, and yet our net for the year is more than eight times as great. Why is this? Northern Baptists have ten times as much money as have their Southern brethren. They have five well-endowed theological seminaries, while we have but one; they have twenty times as much money invested in schools and colleges as we have, and yet their gain is less than one-fourth as much, in proportion to numbers, as is ours, despite all these apparent advantages. But it is to be remembered that Southern Baptists are more tense Baptists than their Northern brethren. There is far less denominational laxness of doctrine in the South than in the North. The various isms that have seriously affected the North have gained but little headway in the South. It seems to us that herein is an important element in the explanation of the figures. We hope the South will continue to be true to the faith, and we hope our Northern brethren will stiffen and straighten in the matter of Baptist orthodoxy."

The Independent gave these general statistics in the beginning of the year:

"The whole number of churches, or organizations, is given at 187,803; the ministers at 153,901; and the membership at 27,710,004. In most of the instances there has been a gain over last year, and in a few instances there has been a loss. The Christian Scientists claim a gain of 14 per cent; the Church of New Jerusalem (Swedenborgian), 11 per cent; and the Catholic Reformed, 50 per cent. The average gain for the whole is 1 per cent. With regard to the larger denominations the Catholics have increased only six-tenths of 1 per cent; while the Baptists have increased 2 per cent; the Methodists, five-tenths of 1 per cent; the Presbyterians, one and two-tenths per cent. The Unitarians have increased to the extent of one minister and six churches, and the Universalists have decreased to the extent of three and seven-tenths per cent. The Episcopalians have decreased by one and five-tenths per cent; the Christians, by 9 per cent; and the Disciples have increased 3 per cent. The Jews are estimated at 1,043,800; the Lutherans at 1,575,778; the Disciples at 1,118,396; the Presbyterians at 1,560,847; the Methodists at 5,809,516; and the Baptists at 4,443,628. As to the regular Baptists (North and South, white and colored), they number 4,141,995. The Methodist Episcopal Church, North, numbers 2,697,710; the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 1,456,272; the African Methodists of various organizations, 1,201,462; making the entire Methodist denomination number 5,355,394. The past year is regarded on all sides as not having been notably fruitful in harvests. There have been many things to distract, and it is held positively, in some quarters, that the discussion of questions affecting the Bible and different phrases of truths has not been favorable to ingatherings and expansion, though it may be that there has been an increase of needful strength. It is probable that Christians have a more intelligent conception of what they believe, or what is held by their own denomination, than they had two or three years ago. The foundations of the faith have been materially strengthened by the controversies over them, and truth is triumphant. Hard battles have been fought, and, with hardly an exception, the tide has been turned in favor of the evangelical faith and the integrity of the word of God. The minister of to-day, who learned his Bible, his exegesis, his history, and his theology thirty years ago, and has kept himself abreast of the age in his studies, need have no fear of a fire in the rear as he goes about his preaching and his teaching to-day. New things have been suggested all along the way, and some of them worthy of attention; but, after all, the old things stand secure, and he who stands with them will not be confounded."

The Independent makes a comparison with the last census reports, and comments on per cent of increase as follows:

"There is an interesting comparison between the figures for the current year and those of the census, showing that the largest per cent of gain has been by the Disciples of Christ—71 per cent; then follow the Lutheran Synodical Conference, with 52 per cent; the African Methodist Episcopal Zion, 51 per cent; the African Methodist Episcopal, 42 per cent; the Roman Catholic, 36 per cent; Protestant Episcopal, 30 per cent; Southern Baptists, 29 per cent; Northern Baptists, 24 per cent; Congregational, 23 per cent; Presbyterian, 22 per cent; Southern Methodists, 21 per cent; Methodist Episcopal, 20 per cent; colored Baptists, 18 per cent. The largest numerical gain during the current year is by the Lutheran Synodical Conference, which reports 120,545."

It will be seen the churches stronger in wealth, learning, and with the strong general organizations and the greatest number of societies, make the least growth. It is true that, with wealth, strong organizations, and a multiplicity of societies, personal zeal and devotion fail. These last, together with fidelity to truth, are effective means for converting the world. An earnest, ignorant man true to his faith can stir a commotion where learned indifference will fail.

I was present at their marriage, and have heard good reports of their Christian fidelity through life. They died of la grippe.—D. L.

EDITORIAL.

Grace is God's remedy for disgrace.

Those who walk by faith never die in doubt or despair.

The test of love is what one is willing to do for others.

It is not nearly so difficult to learn the truth as it is to practice it.

The closer a man gets to the Lord, the easier is it for him to pray.

The happy man is the one who spends his life in blessing others.

The selfish man is not only miserable, but thinks meanly of himself.

When a man humbles himself, he never tries to humiliate any one else.

If we will only be true to what God intended for us, we are sure to succeed.

It is poor policy to increase your speed when you are on the wrong road.

Blaming other people with our faults does not help us to get rid of them.

We should never cease to do good because our motives are sometimes impugned.

We should not imagine our work is good because people indorse our bad motives.

Bad people are far more interested in the duration of punishment than the good.

A good way to backslide in religion is to stop to rest while engaged in good works.

Prayer is the golden key which should open the morning and lock up the evening.

If you think it not safe to follow a man's example, be careful about how you receive his advice.

God finds no difficulty in making people good who follow the directions laid down in the Bible.

True greatness consists in doing small things, when called upon to do them, in the right spirit.

It is better to have your heart without words when you pray than to have your words without heart.

The man who is too far from God to obey his commands is not close enough to him to trust his promises.

Duties are not hard to perform when one does them to please God. This motive lightens every burden.

It is a very difficult matter for the man who has a large slice of earthly treasure to lay up any in heaven.

The man who loves his neighbor as himself does not find it necessary to stop to explain that he has nothing against him.

A man may read his own destruction out of the Bible. The Bible is worth nothing to those who interpret it to suit their theories.

The church that increases its membership by substituting the loaves and fishes for purity of life is taking the short route to trouble.

An old writer says: "The love of Christ hath a height, without a top; a depth, without a bottom; a length, without an end; and a breadth, without a limit."

It is good to live only a moment at a time. That moment should ever be in the living now, and not in the past or the future. We have nothing to do but to obey and trust.

We look with too much allowance upon our sins of temper, our sins of prejudice, or our sins of unreasonableness. We find a kind of gratification in snubbing or ignoring some one whom we do not like, or one, who we imagine, has slighted us. Some find pleasure in making a cutting remark to one who they fancy deserves it. If our vision was perfect, if we never made any mistakes, we might be justified in acting thus, but then we would never have personal dislikes. There are many people, not intentionally bad, who are doing awful work in this world. What a crime to needlessly cast a shadow over any life! Whoever needlessly puts a drop of gall in another's cup and thereby darkens a day that would have otherwise been bright does Satan's work. As we make the journey of life but one time, how strange that any one would seek to fill another's life with sadness! Such conduct is of the evil one, and there is no excuse for it.

Among the New-year resolutions of well-known people, sent to a recent magazine, at the editor's request, Helen Keller gives the one which she says has become the keynote of her life: "Always to regard as mere impertinences of fate the handicaps which were placed upon my life almost at the beginning, I resolved that they should not dwarf or crush my soul, but rather be made to blossom, like Aaron's rod, with flowers." That unflinching note of courage comes from a soul shut in to utter darkness and silence; no window in her prison can give her so much as a glimpse of passing clouds, no loving human face nor tender human voice can touch her solitude; and yet what a joyous hope is in her brave words! There is not one of us, perhaps, who does not feel himself hindered by some "impertinence of fate." Poverty, ill health, loneliness, lack of opportunity—if it were not for these, we say, we might accomplish something; but, so bound, what is the use of trying? And yet this girl, a thousand times more hampered than any one of us, not only refuses to be discouraged by obstacles, but even wrests victory from them, making her life a joy to herself and to all who come in contact with her. Should not the high courage of her resolve rebuke our half-hearted efforts and stir us all to pure endeavor?—Forward.

"Faithfulness" is a great word. It indicates the standard by which we all must be judged when we stand before the great white throne. "Thou hast been faithful" will mean honor and glory in the presence of the assembled universe. "Thou hast been unfaithful" will be a brand of dishonor. A life is made up of numberless acts, small and great. If the final judgment is to pronounce the whole life faithful, then the acts that compose that life, one by one, must bear the stamp of divine approval. The whole cannot be better than its parts, hence the importance of being faithful in every act of life. This must include our business, our social life, our friendships, and whatsoever we may do every day in the week. We are too prone to look upon religion as having to do only with spiritual matters, while it has to do with everything. God requires fidelity in everything. The farmer should farm to the honor and glory of God. If he should slight his work, some one is sure to suffer on account of his neglect. The shoemaker should be faithful. If his work is faulty, some one may take cold from his defective work, pneumonia may set in, and death follow as the result. A man should mend a shoe as though his salvation depended on it. Another man is a bricklayer. In building the flues in a house he gets in a hurry and does faulty work at one place. It is near the end of a wooden beam. One night, years afterwards, there is an alarm of fire in the house. Two lives are lost. It is learned on examination that the fire originated in that defective flue. A spark found its way to the beam which lay near. Who was to blame? If a man be a carpenter, it is his business to build a house just as Jesus would build it if he were here. A Christian man engaged in this business is required to do the very best work that he can do at every place. If he does loose-jointed, rough, careless work, he robs God, and cannot atone for this neglect by making beautiful talks in the prayer meeting. The servant that sweeps the floor, dusts the room, and makes the beds should do the very best possible work. God is glorified here as well as elsewhere. The faithfulness that Christ requires extends to everything in every life.

"The Relations of God to the World," by Hiram Christopher, A.M., M.D., of St. Joseph, Mo., will soon be issued from our press. We quote the following from the author's preface: "It is the object of the author in the following pages to present some evidence, derived from certain facts and phenomena of the material universe and the life kingdom of the earth, in support of the thought that the forces operating in these departments of nature are but phases or different manifestations of one and the same force—namely, the power of the Creator which he has exerted in effecting special and general purposes which find their realization in the object for which the whole scheme of nature was devised and completed." This book will be neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and will contain 192 pages. It will be sent, postpaid, for $1.

"Seventy Years in Dixie" is an intensely interesting book, consisting mainly of the recollections, sayings, and doings of the inimitable T. W. Cash. Compiled, arranged, and written by F. D. Srygley. It gives interesting descriptions of the manners and customs of the country when Indians were here, when people lived in log huts and hunted deer, bear, and other wild animals for a living. It tells how the country was cleared and how houses were furnished. It describes marriages, funerals, revival meetings, political gatherings, logrollings, corn shuckings, singing schools, dances, frolics, quiltings, making soap, carding, spinning, weaving cloth, etc., in the olden times. It tells about slavery, secession, and the war. It is humorous, pathetic, religious, biographical, and full of deeply interesting information. Illustrated. Four hundred large octavo pages. Large, clear type. Price, $1.50.

In this issue of the paper appears an advertisement of the Castner-Knott Dry Goods Company, of this city. John T. McQuiddy, brother of our office editor and manager, is with this firm, and would be glad to have the readers of the Gospel Advocate call to see him when in the city. Mail orders entrusted to him will receive prompt attention. Abernathy, Langham, & Shook, clothiers, also ask for patronage from our readers. We would be pleased to have them call to see this firm. Timothy Dry Goods Company have an advertisement in this paper. This is one of the oldest and best-known firms in the city. We take pleasure in commending these firms to our readers, and hope that when they call to see them they will mention they saw their advertisements in the Gospel Advocate. This encourages them to advertise, and we will try to help our readers by calling their attention to the best firms in the city.

Religion in Business.

Since the days of my youth it has been my desire to see the church of God reestablished as it was under the apostles, when the disciples continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, as they should do to-day and on while time shall last.

The church of God proper is equivalent to the kingdom of God, and Christ is its absolute monarch. He is our Prophet, Priest, and King. All things, whatsoever the Christian does, should be done in the name—by the authority—of the Lord Jesus, who defines our relation to the world, to the civil governments, and to God. The church of God should be as a city upon a hill, and the light of the world. Christians are in the world, but not of the world. (John 17.)

They are in Christ if they walk in him. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." (Rom. 8: 1, 2.) I understand that freedom to be deliverance from the law of Moses and also from civil governments. The law of Moses was and all proper civil governments are "for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well." (1 Pet. 2: 14.) A person might not violate any command in the decalogue and still be a worthless beggar. The same is true of the civil laws. No man is worthy of the name "Christian" who needs to be kept under restraint by civil authority; no Christian has a divine right to execute the civil laws. God has reserved to himself the right to execute punishment. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." (Rom. 12: 19.) Rulers are appointed of God for this purpose. "Rulers are not a terror to good works. . . . For he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." (Rom. 13: 3, 4.)

"As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." (Rom. 8: 14.) The Spirit's guidance leads in all truth; it separates us from the world, and from worldly powers. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers. . . . Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." We have two kinds of governments in the world: one human, one divine; unbelievers constitute the human, believers constitute the divine. Each is ordained of God for its special use: the human to execute God's wrath, the divine to manifest his love. No human government can continue to stand that shall curse the church of God; no human government can be destroyed that will bless the church of God. God said to Abraham: "And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." Such was God's promise to Abraham and to his seed, both natural and spiritual.

The church of God is under the reign of Jesus Christ. He alone is responsible to the Father for its complete subordination and conformity to the will of God, looking to the end that the will of God shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven, which would be inconsistent if the church of God itself be made a leading factor in human governments. "Man by wisdom knows not God." Because of this alliance with human governments the church of God, since the days of the apostles, has made comparatively little progress in delivering its subjects from the power of darkness and translating them into the kingdom of his dear Son. (Col. 1.) Christians should recognize Jesus the Christ as their only Prophet, Priest, and King. All should be consecrated to his service. Houses, lands, money, or talents, all belong to God, and should be consecrated to his use. Therefore, being deeply impressed that all that we possess, with all our faculties of mind and body, should be consecrated to God and his service, we want to know how we may accomplish the end most effectually.

We believe that at Jerusalem, when Christians had all things common, they were actuated mainly by the spirit of love, guided by the Holy Spirit through the apostles. The same guide is with us to this day, and will be to the end of the world. It is only the proper training of the heart we lack. What the disciples did was just to use what they had for the relief and comfort of all. No Christian should consider aught that he possesses his own to-day; it belongs to God, and we have but to love the brotherhood without respect of persons, and apply the means we have for the good of all, guided by the Spirit's teaching (plainly laid down in the Scriptures, and in the hands of competent elders, full of the Holy Spirit—that is, having a thorough knowledge of the Bible, God's blessed book—with the facilities of the present time), and our possibilities are just unbounded. What they did was just the best that could be done with the means they possessed, guided by the Holy Spirit through the apostles. Our resources are far more ample to-day, and with the love of God and the love of the brotherhood in our hearts, there can be no failure. We need no more inspiration than we have in the Bible; we need the will. The help from God is at hand.

At Jerusalem they simply used such things as they had for the relief and comfort of all. Their supplies were doubtless reproduced by the industry and proper use of the means the times afforded. The same spirit of love for the children of God in us to-day, in the use of the means and facilities we have, would reproduce equally good results—and, indeed, far better. With nineteen hundred years' experience, with the indefatigable labors of the church of God, their sufferings and endurance have taught the world that it is hard to kick against the goads.

If Christians will but return to God to-day, with the fear of God before them, with the love of God in their hearts, with their present facilities, with labor-saving machinery and the general improvements of the age, I say their success is simply unbounded. But I mean Christians. "For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." (Eph. 5: 5.) "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." (1 John 2: 15.) Such have doubtless hitherto been the potent obstacles in our way. Let us lay aside all these, and learn each to seek another's wealth, and not his own, and the way is clear. What we want now is the counsel and coöperation of our wisest, best, and most consecrated brethren—brethren who earnestly desire and pray for the prosperity of Zion.

A few brethren here have large, rich plantations, and some money, and desire all to be used in the interest of Christianity. How it may be effectually done is the sincere desire of our hearts. Pursuant to the above conclusions, we propose to build at Pineapple, Ala., a cotton factory to be run in the interest of Christianity. I think we can raise here at Pineapple about thirty or forty thousand dollars to put into the building of a cotton factory for spinning, weaving, etc.; we would like to be able to double that amount, if possible. All is to be run in the interest of Christianity. Our plan at present is to form a stock company, made up of Christians only, with an agreement that at no time shall more than ten per cent of the net dividends go to the stockholders—that is, ten per cent, or no more than that, to each stockholder on the amount of stock he holds. All dividends that may accrue, over and above that amount, shall be used for the benefit of the operatives and for the interest of Christianity.

If any donations should be made for the benefit of said enterprise, by any person or persons, it shall be reckoned as so much stock in the company, and all dividends accruing therefrom shall be used for the benefit of the operatives and for the interest of Christianity. Connected therewith shall be good schools for the education of all the children within its domains. The schools shall also be run strictly in the interest of the church of God. As soon as practicable the whole business shall be operated by Christians only. Every person of sufficient age connected therewith shall vow allegiance to Christ alone, and take no part in human governments or human societies for any purpose or cause. It is proposed also that the farms or plantations belonging to said Christians, or to any person or persons who may hereafter be associated with them in said enterprise, shall be operated by Christians only, and who will obligate themselves to take no part in human governments or human societies of any character that may tend in any wise to divert their hearts or minds from strict loyalty to Christ.

Operatives on the farms will be expected to pay a reasonable rent for same. Good schools and religious culture will be connected with all.

DAVID ADAMS.

There is no doubt but that Christians should conduct their business on Christian principles—that is, they should be strictly truthful, just, and upright in their statements and in all transactions among themselves and with others. Christians should be noted for their truthfulness, fairness, and fidelity in their dealings and transactions. There is no point at which there is greater failure than in this. They should be honest with God and in the sight of both God and man. More reproach comes upon the Christian religion from this than from any other one cause. Christians think nothing of making promises and not complying with them, and of getting in debt and not paying the debts. As mechanics and workmen the same unreliability shows itself. Christians ought to be reliable, faithful, and trustworthy in all they attempt; but they are not. Frequently those not Christians are more reliable and trustworthy than those who claim to be Christians. We need, above all things, to learn that Christians must be faithful and trustworthy in all they do. In a manufacturing establishment, fidelity, promptness, and a desire to do everything well are especially essential; but until there is a reformation among Christians as a class, they will not make successful business managers, superintendents, and operatives. Skill and fidelity must be preferred to church membership. It would be a desirable thing if the two could be found together; but, unfortunately, this cannot always be done. We American people are not exact and faithful in what we undertake. We can often find a skillful and reliable machinist or workman among the foreign Catholics more readily than among the American Christians. The reason is not because one is a Catholic and the other a Protestant, but because the foreigner, in his oppressed condition, learns his trade better than the American. The American is not content in the condition in which he is; he is always looking forward to some calling that releases from labor, so he does not learn his calling or trade thoroughly. In managing extensive business and mechanical operations other qualifications than church membership will be found necessary. It is well to try to convert all to Christ; but often, with our best efforts, like Christ and the apostles, we will fail. Some people do not wish to be Christians. All business ought to be conducted on Christian principles—justice and fairness to all. Every one should seek the good of others, not of himself alone. The employer must seek the good of the employee. In business conducted on Christian principles the interest of all will be one, for all share the prosperity of each. All efforts looking to this end ought to be encouraged, because the Christian religion is intended to direct and harmonize the conflicting interests of all the business relations of life. If it cannot do this among Christians, it is a failure in the vital points. While all this is true, and efforts to harmonize interests of employer and employee, or of capital and labor, upon true Christian principles, are commendable, yet it is not well to mistake the things taught in the New Testament.

There is no evidence that any business at Jerusalem or elsewhere was conducted on common-stock principles, either by the church or by individuals—that is, they did not farm, or merchandise, or run any business as common stock. There is no intimation of this. Each performed his own labor, disposed of his own products and possessions, and each gave to the others according to needs, or laid at the apostles' feet for distribution among those in need.

They did not run any business in which all performed a part and in the proceeds of which all shared. What is needed is fidelity to God and right in making and using property, each looking not to his own good, but to others' good as well. D. L.

A man should select his business when young, and learn everything that will throw light upon that subject. Thorough preparation in this day of shrewd competition is strictly necessary. Men do not nowadays of organized effort and shrewd acumen accidentally stumble onto success. When you see a man enter mercantile or other life after he has reached the meridian of life, having had no previous preparation, he can hope for nothing except failure.—Youth's Southland.

DOTTIE'S HAPPY THOUGHT.

"If the money isn't ready for me when I come in the morning, out you go, bag and baggage. Understand that, hey?" The loud voice had a threatening ring and the sordid face a vindictive look.

"It is impossible!" the old man exclaimed. "O, Mr. Page, give us a few days' time! We've always kept up before this; and if it wasn't for sickness—" the imploring tones faltered and stopped.

"Always whining," the agent answered with a sneer. "You all sing the same song—harp on the same old tune. You know what to expect when I come to-morrow; pay up or get out!" and he sprang into his buggy and rode away.

The old man stumbled into the house and sat down heavily by the door, striving to control himself.

"Father," called a weak voice from the inner room; he appeared. "I heard it all, Amos," she said, pull-iously.

A little girl who had been standing by the window came and took his hand. "Gran'pa, don't you hear gran'ma calling?" she said in surprise, for grandma was never allowed to call in vain.

His old wife reached out her trembling hands as he appeared. "I heard it all, Amos," she said, pulling him down beside her on the bed, and they clasped each other in silent misery.

They had passed many long years together and borne many trials which had knit them the closer in heart and soul, and though there seemed now no help nor relief possible, the Christian hearts still looked up with confidence and hope.

"I know whom I have trusted," grandma repeated softly after a time. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee; and what is that in Isaiah? I cannot remember it all. Get the Bible, Amos, and read it."

The child ran for the book, and the old man, turning to chapter 51, read:

"I, even I, am he that comforteth you: who art thou, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass; and forgettest the Lord thy maker, . . . and hast feared continually every day because of the fury of the oppressor?"

"That means us, Amos. Haven't we feared every day continually, and will he not comfort us? They cannot leave us in the street, they will have to take us to the poorhouse; but he says, 'I, even I, am he that comforteth you,' so let us go to him and believe and receive that comfort, and fear no longer."

Together they bowed and sent up a petition for help and comfort, with thanksgiving for past mercies, and then the old man and the little grandchild prepared the simple meal, which they ate at grandma's bedside, for she was not yet able to sit up, having been sick for weeks.

"Does Mr. Page need the rent money so bad, gran'pa?" Dottie asked, thinking of the urgency with which he had demanded it.

"Mr. Page does not own the house, Dottie; it belongs to Mr. Orton. Mr. Page is his agent and goes about getting the rent money for him," grandpa explained, patiently.

"Mr. Orton who has the big store, gran'pa?" she asked. "Why, he couldn't need such a little bit of money when he has so much."

"You don't understand, child; he wants what is owing him—everybody does—and he ought to be paid. That is but right, only—"

"Only gran'ma's been so sick and you couldn't go away to work, an' we're so poor, I know, gran'pa," the child nodded wisely, and then added: "I don't think Mr. Orton knows all that or he would wait. Don't you think he would wait if he knew, gran'pa?"

"Yes, perhaps," said grandpa absently, only half hearing her; he was trying to coax grandma to eat an egg.

Dottie washed the dishes carefully and then ran out to her playhouse, but she could not forget that to-morrow they were to be turned out into the street, and she wondered how they could put grandma out when she could not get up.

"If grandpa would go an' tell Mr. Orton, I believe he would wait, but then gran'pa can't leave gran'ma." She studied the subject a little while longer. "Why, I could go; I know where his store is. I'll ask gran'ma if I can't."

But grandma had fallen asleep and she was never allowed to disturb her; grandpa was out at the wood pile, but she felt in such a hurry and so sure that he would not care that she put on her hat and ran away without waiting to ask him.

"This little girl says she must see you, Mr. Orton," and the smiling clerk pushed Dottie forward, for now that she had found him she felt shy and confused, but she had not relinquished her purpose even when the clerks had teased her about her business with the busy merchant.

Mr. Orton was talking to a gentleman, but he turned to her and said, kindly: "Well, little one, what is it?"

"Please, Mr. Orton, won't you wait an' not turn us out in the street? Gran'ma's sick an' gran'pa hasn't any money now, but he'll work an' get some as soon as he can to pay the rent. Please, Mr. Orton, we haven't any place to go to, an' gran'ma's sick." Dottie ended with a frightened wail, vigorously rubbing her eyes.

Mr. Orton looked blankly astonished as he exclaimed: "Why, what is it, little girl? Why do you think I would turn you out in the street? Come, stop crying, and tell me all about it;" and he lifted her up on a stool and wiped away her tears.

"Mr. Page said this morning he'd put us out to-morrow, if gran'pa didn't have the money," Dottie sobbed, "an' I asked gran'pa did Mr. Page need the money so bad, an' gran'pa said he did it for you, an' I knew you couldn't need it with all this big store, an' I thought you'd wait if somebody asked you. Gran'pa'll pay you, he always pays, an' gran'ma makes carpets when she's well."

"It's some of Page's work," the other gentleman said; "he is brutal in his treatment sometimes. I shouldn't wonder if her story is all true, and he will put the sick grandmother into the street."

"No; he will not," Mr. Orton said, decidedly, his face flushing. "I had no idea he was that kind of man. I let him take charge of some property that Morris used to handle; and I'm ashamed to say that I pay very little attention as to how the agents manage."

"That is a common failing among business men, and things are done in their name that they would not sanction at all, if they knew," the other replied.

"I am going home with you, my dear," Mr. Orton said to Dottie. "There! don't cry now. Grandpa shall have all the time he wants."

"My buggy is at the door, I'll drive you there and back," said his friend.

Dottie had been missed, and her grandpa was anxiously searching for her when they drove up.

"O, gran'pa, here is Mr. Orton! He came to see you his own self; he won't let us be put out in the street!" Dottie cried in a great flurry of joy.

"No; indeed he will not," Mr. Orton echoed, following her inside and shaking hands with the respectable, intelligent-looking old man who met them. "I am very glad you sent her to me. I do not allow my agent to abuse any one."

"I did not send the child," the old man answered; "I do not know how she came to do it, but I will be very thankful for your kindness, and you will give me time. I have never failed to pay before, but my wife's sickness has hindered my work."

"And sickness is always an extra expense, too. I am sorry you have been threatened and abused in my name; it shall not happen again. What are you paying Page?" he asked abruptly. He had been looking about keenly while he talked. He looked surprised when told, and, going outside, went over the small premises, examining everything. "You are paying too much," he said finally, "and there are some repairs needed that shall be attended to at once. I am not an extortioner; I want my renters to have things as comfortable as possible. This room shall be plastered whenever you are ready, and the rest, too, if necessary."

They had gone into the back room as he talked, and grandma called: "Amos, bring him here, that I may thank him. Dottie has told me how good he has been to promise that we may stay."

"Why, grandma," said Mr. Orton, huskily, taking her thin hand, "I do not deserve your thanks. I profess to be a Christian, and I am ashamed that you have been oppressed in my name. I am afraid I have neglected my duty to my neighbor in taking no thought for my renters." He took out his pocketbook and laid some bills on the bed, saying: "You have been paying too much for this little place, and that is rightfully yours. And here, Dottie, is a round dollar for your happy thought in coming to me;" and he went away leaving joy and thanksgiving in place of trouble.

"I, even I, am he that comforteth you," grandma whispered, the happy tears streaming down her hollow cheeks.—Louise J. Strong, in Western Recorder.

WHAT MADE THE DIFFERENCE.

The new boy was sitting on a big stone post at the foot of his driveway when Peter drove the cows to pasture.

"Halloo!" said the new boy, pleasantly. "Come fishin', will you?"

"Can't," drawled Peter. "I've got to work! Wish I was you," he said enviously, "an' didn't have nothin' to do but go fishin', an' sit on a post an' let my feet hang down!"

The new boy laughed. "We have cows," he said, shortly, "a whole dozen of them!"

"But you don't have to drive them to pasture," declared Peter.

"Don't I?" said the new boy. "I take them away down to Mr. Lane's pasture every morning 'fore breakfast!"

Peter eyed him curiously from top to toe. "Well, you're a queer one," he said. "But perhaps if I only had the cows to drive, I'd get up early, too."

The new boy laughed again. "We've got hens," he said quickly, "an' chickens, an' pigs, an' horses, same as you have! I guess what makes the difference 'tween you 'an me is 'cause you don't do your work by my grandma's rule."

"Seein' I never heard of it, I guess I don't," replied Peter, with a grin. "Supposin' you tell it to a feller."

"I 'most know that you've heard it," said the new boy, "only you've forgotten. It's 'work while you work,' an' 'play while you play!' An' I tell you it's a fine one!"

"Ho, ho, ho!" laughed Peter. "That's a dandy rule, isn't it? Maybe it does for you, but when a feller has to work all the time, same as I do, why, then, it's only 'work while you work,' an' 'no time to play while you play,' at all!"

"Are you working now?" asked the new boy, with a smile.

"Not 'zactly!" answered Peter.

"An' you're not playing, are you?" he inquired.

"No," said Peter, "I ain't!"

"Then you're doing nothing," declared the new boy.

"Same as you be," said Peter, crossly. He knew that he was lazy, but he didn't enjoy being told about it one single bit.

The new boy jumped down from the post in a hurry. "You're right," he said, with a laugh. "Supposing you let me drive your cows while you run home an' do the rest of your work. An' supposing you an' I go into partnership, an' take my grandma's rule for our motto. An' then every morning after we get our chores done, supposing we go fishin'."

Peter looked at him in surprise, and then he said, earnestly: "Shake on it!"

And—O, dear me!—weren't those fishes sorry?—Youth's Companion.

SURE IT WAS RIGHT.

"If I was only sure that is right!" whispered Sam. to himself after he had finished his sum and was about to take it up to the teacher.

"Pooh!" whispered Dick over his shoulder; "take it up. She's too busy to look at it closely, and won't know whether it is right or not. What difference does it make in the end?"

"What did you tell me that for?" Sam. demanded of Dick, when they went out at recess.

"That's the way to get along easy," answered Dick.

"But it isn't getting along easy that I'm after; it's being and doing right. It won't do me any good to have it passed by the teacher. I want to be sure I'm right."

A great man once said: "I would rather be right than President." A small man—I mean in spirit—would have said: "I would rather get along easy than be right." The boy who looks at getting through more closely than he does at being exactly right is apt to make a small, mean man in character, however much money or success he may gain.—Sunday School Evangelist.

In this chapter we have a number of very wonderful things. John is shown by vision the end of time, the end of the world; the eternal home of the saints, and many very practical things for our benefit. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea." This is the way the chapter opens. The things here introduced are most wonderful. The passing away of the heavens and the earth that are now, and the introduction of the new, and the absence of any sea, are very wonderful in many ways. The language used expresses so much in very few words that it overwhelms us with wonder and admiration; and yet it is expressed with such plainness and simplicity that every one can understand. This is one of the characteristics of the word of God: that it expresses the grandest truths mortal ears ever heard, and that in the simplest and most unpretentious way.

Uninspired men always want to express what they consider great and exalted ideas in high-sounding and eloquent language, but the words of inspiration are just to the reverse. The grandest and loftiest thoughts are expressed in the fewest and plainest words that will express the idea. This, indeed, is one of the strong evidences that the word of God is divine. What John saw in this vision is just what will occur when the time comes. Men will theorize on every subject that comes up, and try to tell how and when God will do everything that is to be done. I am glad I have not got this far in these matters. Some tell us this old world will not all be burned up, that the surface will be burned, and changed in form, and made ready for the presence of the great city of God and the eternal abode of God, Christ, and all the righteous. This may be true, or it may not. No man can tell with any certainty, and I will not try. To us it will be just what the record says—It will be "a new heaven and a new earth"—and that is enough for us, and we should not try to go beyond this; for if we try to go beyond, we will be spending our time in vain on two accounts. One is: We will be trying to find out what has not been revealed; and in the next place it is something that would do us no good if we understood it. So I am satisfied with the statement of facts as it is. I heartily and fully believe that just what is said will be brought to pass, and that is enough for me. I do not know why there will be no sea in the new earth, but I am perfectly certain it will be best that way or it would not be so; hence I am willing to leave it as the Lord leaves it, and I believe with my whole heart it will be brought to pass. This old earth was cursed on account of sin, but this curse will be removed when this earth is burned up, and not an iota of it will linger upon the new earth.

"And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." This at once introduces to the children of God the kind of home that is being provided for them; and the Lord has satisfied his people in what would be an anxious longing in the soul, if it had not been revealed. We would be anxiously inquiring: What is to be the end, the final outcome of all this self-denial and tribulation, of bearing the burden and heat of the day? Thus the Lord tells us beforehand what it will be, and thus puts the heart of the child of God at rest on this matter. There is now no room for anxiety. We are plainly told what the outcome will be. This grand city will come, and will surely be ready. Just as a prepared bride is ready for her husband, so will this prepared city be ready for all who are prepared for it; and this is the great matter of our lives here on earth in this probationary state. The city is certain to be ready for all that shall be prepared for it by faithfully serving God in this life. So we need simply to walk by faith in this matter. If we faithfully do the part assigned to us, God will be certain to do what he has promised to do for us.

The grandeur and beauty of this home are further expressed in this beautiful description of it: "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful." This gives full assurance that no more trouble of any sort can overtake the soul when we reach this happy home. Here we have our sad trials and afflictions; we suffer all sorts of crosses and losses; our nearest and dearest friends die and leave us weeping on the shore. There death will be forever barred. Not a possible pain or ache can ever enter that lovely abode. In this happy and eternal home God himself will dwell with his people, and they shall dwell with him, where all will be light and glory and bliss for evermore. This leaves no child of God in any uncertainty as to what shall be the outcome of a lifetime of service—a life of self-denial and devotion to him who doeth all things well.

"Behold, I make all things new." Everything has to be made new under the religion of Jesus. Man once had a beautiful home in Eden, but when sin entered, everything was blighted, and man was turned out of his Eden home, to enter it no more. The earth was cursed, and ever since has been bringing forth its thorns and briers, and can never, in this condition, be a fit home for God and his people. Man became a sinner, and was shut out from the garden of Eden, and on this account was shut out from the tree of life, and thus doomed to return to the dust again. In this state he was estranged from God, and now he has to be made new. He must have a new heart and a new life here, and must continue this new life till he dies. Then he is to be raised again, receive a new, a spiritual body, and then he will be ready for the new home, the wonderful city of God, so beautifully described above.

But still further descriptions are given of this beautiful city. One of the seven angels that had the vials, the last plagues, proposed to show the city to John, and thus give him a beautiful view of that lovely home. "And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; and had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel: . . . and the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. . . . And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal." I do not know how to apply this measurement. Some claim that the length, breadth, and height are each twelve thousand furlongs. Then, counting eight furlongs to the mile, makes the city fifteen hundred miles in length, breadth, and height, each. This certainly makes a very tall city. I freely confess that I do not know how to apply the twelve thousand furlongs, but I am perfectly certain it will be large enough to hold all that will prepare themselves to dwell in it, and that is enough for me. I am perfectly certain that if I succeed in living a life that shall make me worthy to dwell in that home, there will be plenty of room for me; hence I have no anxiety on that score. I am equally well satisfied that if I do not live right, there will be no room for me there, if the city were twelve times as large as it is; and, therefore, my chief study in the matter is to be ready by leading a godly life. No man will live this life except by learning and doing God's will; but surely any man, with such a wonderful prospect before him, will strive prayerfully and unceasingly to know and do the Lord's will, that he may enter and dwell in that home, while eternity endlessly endures.

But the glowing description goes on. "The foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones, . . . and the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass." Now, I do not think we need understand that the heavenly home will be formed of material things, as real jasper, pearls, gold, and such like; but these are the most precious, beautiful, pure, and desirable things that we know anything about, and thus the Lord uses these things to give us the very highest and most desirable conceptions of the holy city that we are capable of. If we consider these precious stones and gold as only figures or illustrations of the preciousness and beauty of the home of the soul, then we may be assured that the reality will far surpass anything we have ever seen on this earth; for these precious stones, pearls, and gold put up into a city as this is described would be the most beautiful city mortal eyes ever beheld, and the most precious, valuable, and desirable that we can possibly conceive of. When we attempt to contemplate something clear beyond these we are lost in wonder and admiration. What wondrous blessings the Lord has in store for those that will love and honor him in this life!

The Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are to be the temple of this city. "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. . . . And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Still further we are told that the river of the water of life will be there, and the tree of life, and no night; one eternal, joyful, and happy day in which to praise the Lord for his wonderful goodness and mercy. We cannot conceive of anything that could possibly add to the beauty and enjoyment of this home, as described above; and this bright picture of the future home of the soul is given as an inducement ment to Christians to be faithful to the end. It is a most solemn fact that this home is promised to none but the faithful. The Lord has never promised heaven to just anybody that might want to go there, but has promised it only to those that prepare themselves for heaven by doing God's will. Hence, the language in this chapter is: "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." This is truly an expressive passage. "He that overcometh." Overcometh what? Everything that lies between him and heaven.

The Christian must learn to overcome sin in every shape and form, and continue to overcome it to the end of life. So long as he is clothed in flesh and blood temptations to sin will come up. Passion and impulse in their varied forms will continue to rise, and these are to be put down every time they rise. The conflict, therefore, will last as long as passion and impulse last. Some never seem to realize that anger must be overcome; hence we have a great many peevish, pettish, fretful, petulant old people that have been members of the church for almost a lifetime. These things ought not so to be. Those that do this way are not overcoming sin, but are allowing sin to overcome them. These passions will naturally grow on men if they do not strive earnestly against them every day. There are some whose morals are good, who will not lie, will not cheat nor defraud their fellow-men, will not go into places of doubtful propriety, and, in a word, are well behaved in a general way; yet they are fractious and ill tempered about home, and their company, on this account, is not sought.

Now, if we make a literal application of the word "overcome," such people do not overcome sin. Some men cultivate the spirit of jealousy and suspicion, and are always feeling themselves slighted and mistreated, and their work or dignity not appreciated, and are always in a stew about it, and always criticising and fault-finding, and making it unpleasant for themselves and everybody around them. Such are always unhappy and keep up a constant trouble for others. No Christian has the right to pursue any such course, nor have those that indulge and cultivate such a temperament the promise of entering the holy city described in this chapter; for the promise is only to him that overcometh, and such as these do not overcome. Such become contentious and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness and place themselves outside of the promise. Every wrong practice in life must be overcome if we would reach heaven. Every man, therefore, must learn to watch himself and see to it that day by day he is overcoming everything that can possibly stand between him and this beautiful home of the soul. E. G. S.

BIBLE INTERPRETATION.

Friend Turner, from Wartrace, gives some illustrations of the evils we were seeking to find a cure for. He thinks it is right to have different parties in religion, following Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and other great men. Jesus prayed those who believe on him may be one as his Father and he are one, and the Holy Spirit said those following after Apollos or Paul or Peter as leaders were carnal, and not spiritual. (1 Cor. 3: 1-9.) Certainly Jesus and his Father did not and could not belong to, and the Holy Spirit could not lead into and dwell in, different and rival parties.

He found, too, a woman who thought she was baptized in infancy, and a preacher who believes that only the immersion of a believer is scriptural baptism. Such differences are common, and produce strife among Christians, drive the world from Christ, and wound afresh the Son of God. Is there no help for this? Does thinking a thing is right make it scriptural? Paul thought he was doing God's service in persecuting the church of God. Did his thinking it so make it so? Why could not that woman and the preacher understand the law of God alike? If a human law was expressed in the same terms, could it not be understood? And does thinking a violation of a human law make it right? Jesus prayed those who believed on him through the word of the apostles might by that word be made one. Is it possible the word spoken to make them one cannot be understood, so that it divides instead of unites? We all understand what friend Turner writes. Had he written certain persons were buried or that corn was planted, we could understand him alike. Why cannot we understand God when he uses the same simple terms of persons being "buried," "planted," and "raised again?"

Friend Turner thinks I ask all to believe in my interpretation of these things. In this he is mistaken. I ask all to accept the understanding of these things that was universal for thousands of years before I was born. I ask them to accept what Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and all scholars for all ages of the church say the Bible means and the apostles preached. Mr. Wesley says: "Buried with him," alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion." ("Notes on New Testament.") On the first day of September, 1737, Mr. Wesley was tried by a jury in Savannah, Ga., and ordered to leave the country. The fifth count in the indictment was: "Refusing to baptize Mr. Parker's child otherwise than by dipping, except the parents would certify it was weak and not able to bear it." ("Journal," Vol. I., page 42.) Religious matters were enforced by civil courts. Wesley believed sprinkling was allowable only to the feeble.

John Calvin says: "Churches should be at liberty to adopt either [mode], according to the diversity of climates, although it is evident the term 'baptize' means to immerse, and that this was the form used by the primitive church." ("Institutions," Vol III., page 344.) Calvin in this tells the meaning of the word, the apostolic practice, and the grounds of the change. With him Mr. Wesley, Luther, and all scholars agree. There is not a lexicon in the world that gives a different meaning to the word, nor has an example of its use in a different sense been found in all the literature of the world. On the office of baptism Mr. Wesley says: "Baptism administered to real penitents is both a means and seal of pardon. Nor did God ordinarily in the primitive church bestow this on any unless through this means." ("Notes on the New Testament"—Acts 22: 16.)

Mr. Wesley says: "If infants are guilty of original sin, then they are proper subjects of baptism; seeing in the ordinary way they cannot be saved unless this be washed away in baptism. It has already been proved that this original stain cleaves to every child of man, and thereby they are children of wrath and liable to eternal damnation. It is true the second Adam has found a remedy for the disease which came upon all by the offense of the first, but the benefit of this is to be received through the means which he hath appointed through baptism." (Doctrinal Tracts, "Baptism," page 250.) Mr. Wesley makes infant guilt and infant damnation, coupled with this office of baptism, the ground of infant baptism. Jesus says: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." The Bible does not teach, nor do any now believe in, infant guilt and damnation. So there is no ground for infant baptism.

The writer has studied these questions with a good degree of care for over fifty years, has tried to do it without prejudice to learn the truth. He has not found, for fifteen hundred years after Christ, a single party or division of the church or a single writer that did not believe immersion was commanded in the Bible and practiced by the primitive church, and that persons were baptized in order that their sins might be forgiven. He has frequently asked those who have studied and discussed these questions for a single example of either class. He has never heard of one. He does not know of a single commentary on the Scriptures, written by Catholic or Protestant, Baptist or pedobaptist, that does not say the Scriptures teach that people are commanded to be baptized in order that their sins may be forgiven. They may try to explain the language, but when they tell what it means they agree. He still would be glad to hear of an example of either class, and, if it can be found, will join in asking the American to publish it. In view of this unanimous agreement of all parties and all the learned writers of all countries as to what the Bible teaches and what the apostles practiced, can it not be said that men can and do agree as to what the Scriptures teach, and the differences arise from bringing into the church things not taught therein, or in efforts to change and modify the teachings of God? After these changes have been made millions receive them from their parents and hold them as Bible teaching without investigation. Would it not honor God and bless man to drop all these additions and changes, and unite on what God requires?

DAVID LIPSCOMB.

The foregoing appeared in the American of April 7. We put as little in as possible to clearly state the points, as long articles are not relished by the readers or editors of the secular papers; but we could add much to these quotations. Calvin and Luther both taught clearly and fully that union with Christ, putting on Christ, the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Spirit come to the person in baptism. To obtain these is the end or purpose of baptism. They both go much farther on this subject than I believe true, as does Mr. Wesley. They all believed in infant guilt and condemnation, and that the infant was freed from guilt or sin by baptism, or by the Holy Spirit received in baptism. This must mean that baptism alone, without faith or repentance, will secure these blessings. I do not believe baptism without faith is scriptural baptism. I do not believe that the infant is guilty of sin, hence it needs no forgiveness until it sins.

But we would emphasize one point and request made in the foregoing. I have read with care much of the teachings of all the divisions and creeds of the churches, and I have not been able to find a single creed, church, or Christian writer for fifteen centuries that did not teach that immersion was both the meaning of the word and the practice of the apostolic church.

I have not been able to find a single commentary, Catholic or Protestant, Baptist or pedobaptist, that does not say the words used mean: Be baptized in order that your sins may be remitted. No scholar has ever been found who does not say that is the true meaning of the words. Some of them, after saying this, try to explain it is used figuratively, or that it is symbolical and represents something else, but they agree the words mean unto the remission of sins, or in order that your sins may be remitted. God remits the sins, but the person must comply with the conditions on which he remits them.

Dr. J. M. Pendleton, the author of "Landmark Baptists," in his "Notes on the New Testament"—Luke 3: 3—says: "'For the remission of sins'—unto the forgiveness of sins as connected with repentance." On Acts 2: 38 he says: "'For the remission of sins'—that the sins really remitted in the exercise of repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ may be formally and in symbol remitted in baptism." He claims it means baptism is in order to remission, but gives it as his opinion that it is a formal or symbolical remission. What the words mean is the point we are after, not Mr. Pendleton's opinion as to whether they are literal or symbolical, formal or real. We find in the Scriptures no example of merely formal and symbolical forgiveness as distinct from the real forgiveness. Mr. Pendleton, on verse 40, says: "'Save yourselves from this untoward generation'—save yourselves by repenting and being baptized."

We could quote other admissions from them to the same effect as to the meaning of the words. The point we emphasized was, I had not been able to find a single commentary on the New Testament that does not give this meaning, and I asked if any one knew of such I hoped they would make it known through the American, which I am confident would publish it. There is, I think, unanimous agreement among all scholars as to the meaning of "baptism," and as to what was the practice of the early church, and as to the office that the Scriptures assign to baptism. It is the ordinance in which God promises to forgive the believer's sins. This ordinance is the declaration of faith. D. L.

Sorrows are often like clouds, which, though black when they are passing over us, when they are past, become as if they were the garments of God, thrown off in purple and gold along the sky.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Odds and Ends.

Man is so constituted that you might as well forbid him to think altogether as to prevent him from thinking on religious subjects. There are times when he will and must "feel after God;" periods when, though the dust of earth cleaves to his wings, he will spread them for flight toward the invisible; and periods when he will turn in disgust from the viands of earth to clamor for the spiritual clusters of heaven. The springtime excites the throat of the singing bird; evening calls forth the vesper hymn of the nightingale, and morning evokes the matin song of the lark. So when the natal hour is contemplated, and young life comes from the unseen into the seen, and when the shadows of life deepen around its pathway, and when the soft light of a coming morning is felt with approaching death, the mind is moved to ask: "Whence came I, and whither am I going?"

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Are not these fair questions? Can any man add one true line to the moral and spiritual teachings of the Bible? Can any man publish an appendix of omitted morals? Can any man add to the tender balms and solaces provided in the Bible for broken hearts and wounded spirits? We have had centuries of education; this age represents the latest wisdom of the world. Can we with such advantages add a solitary fraction to those scriptures which are "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, . . . for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works?" That is a reasonable challenge. It is in the line of questions which are asked in the Bible itself. God challenges the deities manufactured in all the machine shops of the world. He says that no man can add one cubit to his stature or turn one hair black or white. Can man enlarge the circumference of the earth by one-half inch? Why not, then, boldly challenge the world to add one line or tint to the moral excellence of the Bible? No such addition has been made. Variation, illustration, adaptation we have had in happy abundance, and we desire to have more and more; but to the substance nothing can be added. Art sits before the same landscapes; music interprets the same breezes; poetry handles the same harp; one generation passeth away and another generation cometh; but thy throne, O God, is forever and ever. Another fair question is: If the moral code of the Bible is complete, how is that completeness to be accounted for? Can any theory answer but the one the Bible gives? "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

"For she said within herself, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole." Jesus said: "Thy faith hath made thee whole." At this time there was a crowd thronging Jesus, and they touched him, but received no blessing. We must touch in faith to be made whole. Believing that virtue would come out of him, she was made whole. There are Christless husbands, fathers, and citizens thronging Christ every day, but none the better, so far as healing is concerned, by it. To some Jesus is nothing; to others he is life, joy, hope, inspiration, and salvation. Millions have seen apples fall, but only Newton saw in the falling apple the law of gravitation. Men and women will go through the world with "eyes and no eyes," and one writes a book, while another sees nothing. Some men have been compared to birds on a telegraph wire, who are utterly uncon-

The manufacturers of Royal Baking Powder have always declined to produce a cheap baking powder at the sacrifice of quality.

The Royal is made from the most highly refined and wholesome ingredients, and is the embodiment of all the excellence possible to be attained in the highest class baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder costs only a fair price, and is cheaper at its price than any similar article.

Samples of mixtures made in imitation of baking powders, but containing alum, are frequently distributed from door to door, or given away in grocery stores. Such mixtures are dangerous to use in food, and in many cities their sale is prohibited by law. Alum is a corrosive poison, and all physicians condemn baking powders containing it.

I heard Dr. Dowling, of Boston, electrify ten thousand people once by telling how he went into Tiffany's great jewelry establishment, in New York, and was handed an opal that was dull and lusterless. Then Mr. Tiffany told him to put it in his hand and hold it for some seconds. After he opened his hand it gleamed and flashed with opalescent splendor and rainbow glory. It needed the touch and warmth of a human hand to bring out its beauties. Many lives are dull, hopeless, lusterless, only needing our sympathy, the touch of our compassion, our love, to make them whole, to make them beautiful. That is our mission: to lift up, to cheer, and reconstruct.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Two painters each painted a picture to illustrate his conception of rest. The first chose for his scene a still, lone lake, hid far off amid the mountains, with no breath of air to ruffle its tranquil surface. The second threw on his canvas a thundering waterfall, with a fragile tree bending over the foam-flecked waters; at the fork of the branch, almost wet with the cataract's spray, a robin sat on its nest. The first was only stagnation, the last was rest. In rest there are always two elements—tranquillity and energy, silence and turbulence.

Rest is not quitting
The busy career;
Rest is the fitting
Of self to one's sphere.

'Tis the brook's motion,
Clear, without strife,
Fleeting to ocean

'Tis loving and serving
The highest and best;
'Tis onward, unswerving,
And this is true rest.

It is estimated that the State of Maryland lost $3,000,000 during the past season through the ravages of the pea louse, which Prof. W. G. Johnson, of the Maryland Agricultural College, says is an insect new to science. It belongs to the well-known group of the aphides, or plant lice, and on account of some change in conditions has become suddenly abundant, appearing for the first time on the cultivated pea. It is of a green color, and only an eighth of an inch long. It sucks the juices from the leaf and stem, and the plant dies. Not only in Maryland have growers of peas suffered, but in New Jersey, Delaware, New York, Virginia, North Carolina, and Connecticut also. Fortunately the pea louse has many insect enemies, which played havoc with it before the close of the season.

The rapid destruction of our forests is brought out strongly in the following statement: "The annual cut of lumber in the United States now amounts to no less than 40,000,000,000 feet. Of this immense quantity the first place is held by white pine, of which 12,000,000,000 feet are cut every year. Then come hardwoods, with 10,000,000,000 feet; yellow pine, with 7,000,000,000 feet; spruce and fir, with 5,000,000,000 feet; hemlock, with 4,000,000,000 feet; cypress wood, 500,000,000 feet; redwood, 5,000,000,000 feet; and 1,000,000,000 feet of other conifers."

Prof. Charles Young, of the University Astronomical Department, Princeton, N. J., has announced that preparations are now being made by him to observe the total eclipse of the sun, which will take place on May 28, 1900. The instruments necessary for the work are in course of construction. Wadesboro, N. C., has been selected as the place where the best observations can be made. The work undertaken will be mainly spectroscopic, including particularly a determination, both visual and photographic, of the position of the corona line.

It begins to appear that even the few conclusions reached by the Hague Peace Conference will not be accepted by the nations. But little interest is being shown in the programme agreed upon to be submitted to the powers represented in the conference. As to the United States, Captain Mahan, who was a prominent delegate, says we must at once build a great big navy according to the most approved modern plans and equip it with the best armaments to be secured at any price.

UNDERWOOD.

It has become my painful duty to record the death of Sister Mattie Underwood, who died at the home of her father, Mr. E. P. Underwood, near Vesta, Wilson County, Tenn., on December 31, 1899, after lingering for some months with that dread disease, consumption. She was in the twenty-first year of her age. She obeyed the gospel in the year 1896, under the preaching of Brother Gilbert. It was my pleasure to visit her during her illness and read and pray with her. I found her convictions of truth strong and her faith in Christ firm. She seemed perfectly willing to die by her religion, and we have every hope that she is now at rest. All who knew Sister Underwood loved her for her womanly virtues and her Christian graces. We tender to the family and friends our deepest sympathy in this sad bereavement, and point them to the Lamb of God, who can heal all our sorrows. J. E. B. RIDLEY.

BARNETT.

Nellie A. Barnett was born on April 12, 1848; married J. W. Barnett on March 2, 1865; and died on March 24, 1900. She was a loving and faithful companion, a kind and affectionate mother, and a true and tried Christian. She obeyed the gospel in 1880 while living in Lauderdale County, Ala. Her daughter preceded her to the spiritland just fifty-two days. How soon we pass away! Indeed, "man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble." This is the third time within the short space of fifty-two days I have been called to Blue Ridge, Texas, to "weep with them that weep." This is the fourth one to pass over the river in the last few days. The little congregation is melting away; one by one they pass over to the other side. May the Lord in mercy look upon our dear brother in his sore trials. A few more days, and he will join them where pain and parting will be no more.

THOMAS E. MILHOLLAND.

M'GEE.

Died, April 11, at her home in Sumner County, Tenn., Sister Mollie McGee. She was fifty years old on March 29, last, and had been a member of the church of God since some time in 1875; and the testimony of those who knew her is that she was a consistent member, and that she kept up her attendance at the regular service as long as she was able. It is a grand thing to be a Christian and devote the life to the service of God. This prepares all those who do these things for the enjoyment of the home beyond. To such the encouraging assurance is: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Death is but a happy passport to the Christian to a brighter and better home. The loss of a Christian may be great to the surviving friends, but no calamity whatever to the loved ones that live and die in the Lord. Let all the living ones of the family follow in her footsteps in the service of the Lord, and they may meet her beyond the reach of sad partings and farewell tears.

SANDFORD.

Sister Annie Bell Sandford was born on August 30, 1858, and died on March 28, 1900. She was a daughter of Brother Carol McCannless, who lived and died near Triune, Tenn., who we might say, was the father of the Arrington congregation. Sister Sandford obeyed the gospel at eighteen years of age, and lived a devoted, Christian life until death. She leaves a devoted, Christian husband, two sons, and one daughter to mourn their loss. I have known Sister Sandford for only four years, but must say the better I knew her, the more I loved her, as a sister in Christ. My wife and I had the pleasure of spending two weeks with her last summer, during the meeting at Arrington, Tenn., and we shall never forget the hospitality of Brother and Sister Sandford we shared then, nor the many kindnesses shown to us when we lived near them. The many Christian deeds of this sister will be missed by the poor of that community, but their loss is her gain. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14: 13.) The writer conducted the funeral services at the home. May the loss of this Christian mother and companion be the means of bringing them closer to one another and to God. May her absence here be a constant reminder of another charm in heaven for them. P. H. HOOTEN.

MORRIS.

The death angel visited the home of James Morris and removed from his fond embrace his beloved wife, on Wednesday, March 21, 1900. Sister Morris was born on January 10, 1843; aged fifty-seven years, two months, and eleven days. She confessed faith in Christ about 1880, and obeyed her Lord in baptism. She lived a true and devoted Christian till death called her to reap the reward of all true Christians. Sister Morris was a kind and loving wife and a good neighbor, always having a kind word for all. She always filled her seat at the church of which she was a member. The neighborhood in which she lived has lost a good neighbor; her husband, a most affectionate and loving wife; the children, a loving and kind mother; the church, a devoted member. Sister Morris had been a sufferer for two years, and was never heard to murmur or complain, only praying to God to be relieved of her suffering. On Thursday evening before she died she talked freely of her future, and expressed a perfect willingness to die and be believed of her suffering. In the evening just before death called her home, the last words she uttered were: "All is well." I would say to her grief-stricken husband and the sorrowing children: Weep not as those who have no hope; only live as your dear wife and mother lived, that when you, too, must cross over the Jordan of death, you can say as she said: "All is well," and go home to live with God and the angels forever.

THE series of Helps prepared by the GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY has no superior. Much time, labor, and thought are bestowed on the entire series. The Quarterlies all abound in SCRIPTURAL TEACHING and are full of WHOLE-SOME DOCTRINE. The man that is not interested in the Bible will not take any interest in the investigation of these. A good way to use these Helps is to study them carefully at home during the week and leave them there when you go to the class on Lord's day. Helps thus used cannot prove otherwise than very beneficial.

Buchanan withdrew from the Populist convention because he favored the nomination of W. J. Bryan for President. The division in the Republican convention was between the Brownlow and the Evans factions of the party. The friends of Brownlow were in the ascendancy and controlled the meeting. The Evans party withdrew and held a separate convention.

The chancellor, board of trust, and faculty of Vanderbilt University have arranged to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the university on October 21-23, 1900. When the university was opened for the reception of students in 1875 the occasion was celebrated in October of that year by exercises of dedication and inauguration extending through two days. The completion of a round quarter century of continued and growing work and the simultaneous completion of the new large dormitory, Kissam Hall, the gift of Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt, have determined the date of the occasion, which, it is believed, the reputation which the university has achieved and the number and prominence of its alumni, especially in the South, justify making an elaborate, memorable educational function.

Giving.

Brother Poe: I note your article and personal request in last number of the Gospel Advocate with deep feelings of joy and satisfaction. I most heartily commend the spirit of your article, and especially the personal allusion. If all brethren would write in that spirit to and of each other, it would certainly exhibit more of the spirit of Christ in discussion and investigation. On the subject of giving I do not see the matter just as you do, and will try in my humble way to set it forth just as I do see it. I think there is an underlying principle that it seems to me you fail to discern. I will speak of that first.

When the apostle says, "Ye are not under the law, but under grace" (Rom. 6: 14), you will say that was the law of Moses. True, and we are not under it now. But you will say we are under "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." Very well; but we must remember it is the law of the Spirit, and not a law of outward form. This distinction, I think, will help us wonderfully.

Now, let us get a thought from Gal. 4: 1-5. A child, though lord of all its father's estate, is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father. Then Paul makes the application of God's keeping his people under the law until the fullness of time in his own wisdom. It is such like a boy in school or in the family who is so faithful and obedient he does not need any rules. Little boys are unable to see the force of such an example at first, so must be forced into obedience; but after training them until they are able to appreciate, in some measure, the advantages of faithfulness, the father, in loving tenderness, can then cite them to some exemplary boy who is so good he does not need any law. God exemplified that principle in training Israel under the law, then called their attention to his Son, who was so good he did not need any law. Jesus obeyed his Father so perfectly that he did not need any law. It became worthless. Jesus fulfilled it to perfection. Then God took it out of the way, telling us to do as he did and we would not need any law. Hence, all the law we need now is "the law of the Spirit." Our spirits must be led by the Spirit of God, and thus brought into harmony with his will.

In the beginning of Gal. 5 Paul exhorts them to "stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." After telling them, in verse 6, that nothing avails in Christ except "faith which worketh by love" he reaches the conclusion in verse 13: "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." It must all be done by love, and when love fills the heart no outward law is needed.

Abraham introduced the custom of giving the tenth, as you say (Gen. 14: 20; Heb. 7: 4), and Jacob pledged himself to adopt it as a rule. (Gen. 28: 22.) God confirmed it unto Jacob for a law, but this law is all canceled in Christ. Have we, then, no law on how much to give? Yes; but it is a law of the Spirit. Listen: "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." (2 Cor. 8: 12.) But you ask: "How much are we to give?" "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give." (2 Cor. 9: 7.) Is not this law enough on how much? But suppose when a man is left with such liberty he does not purpose to give anything. It will simply be because his mind is not willing. Then, can you not tell me, dear brother, what condition of his heart is indicated, and what the result will be? But you say if there is no rule or law guiding you in the matter, you will commit no crime in not giving at all. The law just at this point is this: "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." (Gal. 6: 8.) No apology or excuse can change it. It is an established principle. Can you not see, then, what will be the result of a man's not giving anything to the Lord or sowing to the Spirit? But suppose a man should decide to give one-fiftieth or one-hundredth part, how would you reach such stinginess? "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly." (2 Cor. 9: 6.) God has simply left us free in this matter, as in others, to register the condition of our own hearts in what we do; and we are doing it.

God might have given us the law of the tenth or any other amount, but such stipulations of law do not reach the heart. The pure heart needs no rigid ruling. The law of the tenth is cold and formal. It was the woman who gave "all her living" that Jesus commended; and if we, as Christians, fall below the law of the tenth that God gave to Israel, it only shows what a low appreciation we have of God's abounding love, and in what imminent danger we stand. Let us study the principle, dear brother, and try to reach the hearts of careless and indifferent Christians that we may raise their aspirations to the exalted privilege of exemplifying the God-given principle of love. Jesus said: "Do." He also said: "If a man love me, he will keep my words." Every man's giving, then, will simply be the register of his love for Jesus, and the interest he feels in the glorious cause of redemption and salvation. "Fellowship"—partnership in the work of the Lord in saving the world—is indeed an exalted

Springtime

Is the sweetest season in human life, as it is in Nature generally. It is the time of promise. As the young girl draws near to that mysterious line "Where womanhood and girlhood meet," her whole destiny is in a measure being determined. How often the sweet young girl, under the influence of the change, withers and droops like some blighted bud. Nature generally needs some little help at this critical period, and this help in its best form is contained in Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It establishes regularity, and gives the vigor of perfect health to the womanly organs. It contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, nor other narcotic.

Miss Emma Lee, of Williford, Sharp Co., Ark., writes: "I was suffering severely and tried several doctors' remedies, but received only very little relief; therefore, I feel it my duty to write and let other sufferers know what your 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets,' have done for me. I took eight bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' six vials of the 'Pellets,' also one bottle of your 'Compound Extract of Smart-Weed.' As soon as I had taken the first bottle I could see that the medicine was helping me. I had disease of internal organs with bronchitis and catarrh. I also used the local treatment you suggested."

The sluggish liver can be cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

An Interpreting Merchant-Millinery Firm.

We take pleasure in recommending to our readers the firm of P. J. Tinsley. During the past season this firm has had by far the largest trade in its history. The wholesale department has been taxed to its utmost capacity, and at times has fallen a little behind in filling orders, but by very persistent effort has been able to fill all orders with a little delay.

The firm extends its thanks to its patrons for the patience manifested when orders were slightly delayed.

The retail trade has been larger than ever before, and the firm feels thoroughly prepared to please its trade in the retail department. Mr. Tinsley, the head of this firm, has demonstrated in the last six years what fair dealing and courteous treatment will do in building up a large trade. He has engaged no drummers, has traveled no men, but still his house has come steadily to the front until it is now one of the best patronized in our city.

As he has traveled no men, he has been able to sell goods at a very low price, which is always pleasing to customers. We hope our readers will call to see this firm when in the city, and wish to assure them that they will find it, as we believe, to their interest to do so.

Good for All Three.

The greatest good for the greatest number is the mark aimed at by all reformers, and to reach it secures the greatest acclaim of fame that can be had. It is a good thing for the consumer, for the manufacturer, for the newspapers, when an article of merit is put upon the market, is made known by newspaper advertising, and, through a series of years, proves its worth to lessen labor in millions of homes, profits the newspapers, and gives its makers a fair living. Pearlina, the great washing powder manufactured by James Pyle & Sons, New York, has done all this. If it is not making labor easier in your home, it is your fault. Something of its history is made plain in an advertisement in another column.

Kansas Notes.

The meeting at Winfield was progressing nicely the last report I had. Brother Hay was doing good preaching.

Brothers Moffitt and Rhodes were at Cleardale last Lord's day at the opening of their new church house.

I listened to a conversation recently in which three men were discussing the merits of their respective lodges. One man gave as one of the advantages of his lodge: "They give a dance every Wednesday night, and occasionally a moonlight picnic." I presume many of them think that part very commendable. Of course some would object to that feature. There are many things devised to entertain the people. People become more restless and are looking for something new to entertain them. Many who belong to the different churches are not satisfied and must have something else. Christ's church is not satisfactory to many people, and they must have other churches; and all the churches are not sufficient, and they must have many other institutions; and something new is continually coming up. Many think these and other things signify that the world is growing better.

Recently, in a lecture in our town, Dr. Hughes, of Kansas City, stated in a very emphatic way that he did not believe "such stuff as that the world is growing worse." It may not be best for us to take such a positive stand and be so dogmatic about such a matter. While I like to see men positive in their convictions, with courage enough to express them, yet we ought to weigh a matter very carefully before expressing such decided convictions. One reason that men differ in regard to such things is because they use different standards by which to measure. If we are to measure it by progress in inventions and art, we will decide that it is improving; if we are to judge by increase in lodges and institutions of that kind, we may decide that it is making rapid progress; if we are to decide by the increase of institutions called "churches," our decision will be that it is growing better. Dr. Hughes being a Methodist preacher, we would think he would likely measure by growth of Methodism; but he certainly did not do that, if we are to judge by the address of the bishops. Read the following extract: "To-day our Methodism confronts a serious situation. Our statistics for the last year show a decrease in the number of our members. The year before last our advance was checked. The past year our advance column has been forced back a little. The lost ground is paved with the dead. We are confronted by powerful enemies. The attack is on every side.

It is high time for every Methodist to betake himself or herself to prayer, to call mightily on God for help, that each may know for himself that he is accepted of God, and that in this testing time each one may hear the Lord say: 'Be of good cheer; thy sins are forgiven thee.' If we are to judge by the standard of Methodism and this address of the bishops, we would not decide that things are growing better. Of course I do not advise that we measure by the standard of Methodism, for there is a higher standard of measurement by which we must be measured. If we are to measure by the growth of spirituality and true apostolic Christianity, it is difficult for many to see that the "world is growing better."

Let us try a few questions here: Are not the majority of people becoming more worldly? Is not the drink traffic on the increase? Is not the tobacco habit greatly on the increase? Are there not many more divorces granted now than formerly? Are not creeds multiplying? I submit these for our consideration, and leave them to suggest the investigation we ought to make before deciding a question. I withhold any decision so far as I am concerned in the matter. My opinion or decision in the case would not change it or change people's minds; but I hope by this to suggest investigation before we decide.

What do we think of people who say that a certain man "is a Christian, if there is such a thing?" Men are very careless in their expressions, and express doubt when they probably do not intend it.

Speaking of standards brings to mind other false standards that men erect. Many people have different standards by which to measure the characters of men and women. They measure the man by one standard, and the woman by a different one. They erect a much higher standard of morality for women than for men. What of a man whose system is full of the cigarette poison, whose language is foul and blasphemous, and who is a base adulterer, setting himself up to talk of the corruption of women and to judge of their character? He wants us to believe that there is much impurity among the opposite sex, when the one who is making such a charge is as base as he can be. The Lord made one standard to measure both sexes. Man has made the false standards.

Brother O. M. Thomason was with us at Belle Plaine on the first Lord's day in this month. He was having trouble with his throat and we could not induce him to preach. He is now making a tour through Oklahoma Territory and Indian Territory. He will be at Minco next Lord's day. He will return to Kansas for some work this summer and fall.

Brother J. E. Cain is now looking after his regular appointments.

I have begun a meeting here and will continue it for several days. I cannot say much of the work here yet, as I have just reached the community, but will report the condition here at some future time.

BLOOD MONEY.

Consider Your Body as a System of Government—Your Blood as its Bank.

What currency does it use? Gold? No. Silver? No.

The currency of your blood is iron. The stability of your government depends upon its funds. Its strength depends upon its iron.

Too little iron in your blood means bankruptcy.

Are you bankrupt? If you are weak, thin, pale, nervous, and easily tired, you are at least on the verge of it. If you have no reserve, you had better create one.

Lay in a fresh stock of blood money. Put iron in your blood: Take Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

This will bridge over the crisis. Nature will do the rest.

Rich blood is red blood. The red color is caused by iron. "As strong as iron" is literally true. It means red blood and red cheeks, pink nails, pink skin, iron and the strength of iron in every part of your body.

If you haven't got it, Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic will give it to you.

Weak organs of every sort—stomach, liver, heart, lungs—come from the want of vitalizing blood—blood with plenty of iron in it.

Indigestion, loss of appetite, headache, back ache, lack of vitality, depression of spirits, anæmia, female troubles, general weakness, and chills and ague can be cured by Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

Virginia Jottings.

It seems to me there has never been a time more favorable for considering the relations of Christians to civil governments and war than the present. Politics and war are raging. Look at Kentucky for politics and the United States and England for war. Is such work that in which Christians should engage? Kentucky is only showing what spirit animates politicians a little more plainly than the other States in the Union. All are of the same kind. It is the spirit of the world, the flesh, and the evil one. It is antagonistic to the spirit of Christ and the peace of the gospel. The wars now going on, with England and the United States, on the one hand, and the Boers and Filipinos, on the other hand, show beyond a reasonable doubt what even so-called Christian nations can do and will do when war is declared. The manufacture of widows and orphans by the wholesale is just what war means when it is declared. How any man, as a Christian, can defend the position that Christians should engage in the corrupt work of politics or the diabolical war business, and try to support it by the Scriptures, is one of the difficult problems. However, when a man advocates the war business, and then practices what he preaches by going and enduring the hardships and privations of camp life—and that, too, as a humble private, and not in some bomb-proof department—then I can always respect and honor him as a poor deceived one; but when he advocates the business, and is always of too much importance at home to get into the ranks, he does not impress me very favorably as a sincere man. I believe it was Sherman who said: "War is hell!" He had a fair idea of the evil of the war business. Sad and broken hearts and weeping eyes accompany war; desolation and ruin of fair fields and otherwise pleasant homes follow in the wake of the army; and even the burial of soldiers is revolting to the senses of civilized and enlightened people. The burying grounds present a grewsome appearance, as witness Colenso, Spion Kop, and other places where the English soldiers and those of the Boer army were buried—if, indeed, such might be called a "burial." In the face of all this unholy, un-Christlike, and ungodly work, men claiming to be Christians advocate and defend the work as the duty of the followers of the meek and lowly Prince of Peace. At the present time turn on the light of the Holy Scriptures, scatter the tracts on the subject, and so ventilate the matter that the boldest advocates of war will be afraid to lift their tongues or pens in its defense.

A brother—W. O. Baldwin, of Malden, Mo.—recently wrote for two tracts, inclosing a dime, and then wrote a postscript requesting me to write more for the Gospel Advocate, and stating that he enjoyed reading the "Virginia Jottings." I write neither for bread nor for popularity nor for praise, yet I always rejoice to find a happy response on the part of the reader on what the Bible teaches. Thanks to you, my unknown, yet much-esteemed, brother. The tracts were sent promptly, and I hope that before this they have been received and that their contents have been carefully perused.

After a ride on horseback of about thirty-five miles on Saturday before the second Lord's day in April, 1900, the writer, as twilight began to make its appearance, arrived at the house of Brother John Burton, Mechanicsburg, Bland County, Va. The common sickness of the season had invaded the home and most of the family had been sick, but were convalescent. During the four months of absence many changes had taken place. The year had changed from 1899 to 1900, and sickness and death had come along at more than usual pace.

Nearly three weeks ago I attended a burial at home—or, rather, near my home. Old Miss Kate Simpkins—or "Aunt Kate," as many called her—died on Monday, March 19, 1900, about 3 o'clock P.M., at the age of seventy years and about seven months. She was buried late in the afternoon of the following day. She had been a member of the primitive Baptist Church for years previous to her death, so a Mr. Wilson, a preacher of that order, was requested to assist the writer in the funeral exercises.

This leaves me in Red Oak. I have been from home one month. That which is common with the congregations of this country has happened to the congregation here. It is on the eve of being broken up by moving. This congregation has been a great blessing to the people around it.

Now, the good they may do will be in the fact that the members will be scattered abroad. Some of them are off for New Mexico. They insist that I go with them. It is a great temptation. The coming change in our country has created a restlessness on the part of the people. In particular is this true of congregations in the country and in small towns.

It is somewhat discouraging to build up congregations, worship with them a year or more, and then see them pull up and leave, making a new field of the old one. To say the least it is disappointing. I shall go from here to Allen, and from there to Duncan, where we (D. V.) will set a congregation in order. I will be there perhaps indefinitely.

"Deride Not Any Man's Infirmities."

You may, however, tell any man how he may get rid of his infirmities. Most infirmities are due to an unhealthy condition of the blood. It is full of impurities and is poor in quality. This condition causes weakness of some particular organ or of the whole body—weak nerves, weak stomach; weakness of the kidneys, heart, muscles; and that tired feeling. In all such cases Hood's Sarsaparilla goes directly to the seat of the trouble by making the blood rich and pure.

The Awful Results of Diseased Blood, and Cure—Trial Treatment Free.

From impure blood come all sorts of pains, aches, and sores, ending frequently in deadly cancer or some chronic sore. If you can answer "yes" to any of the following questions, your blood is diseased and impure:

Do cuts or scratches heal slowly? Does your skin itch or burn? Have you pimples? Eruptions, so you feel ashamed to be seen in company? Aching bones or back? Eczema? Old sores? Boils? Scrofula? Rheumatism? Foul breath? Catarrh? Are you pale? Do scabs or scales form on the skin, hair, or scalp? Prickling pains in the hair? All run down, get easily tired, and as tired in the morning as when you went to bed? Fluttering heart? Have you ulcers? Eating sores?

Any Gospel Advocate reader who suffers is advised to take a few large bottles of B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm). This remedy is undoubtedly the best and only perfect blood purifier made. B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) has a record of thirty years of cures, hence is thoroughly tested. By taking a few large bottles of B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) the blood is made pure and rich, all the sores are healed, and aches and pains vanish as the mist before the sun. B. B. B. has cured over four hundred cases of cancer, many of them pronounced incurable by doctors and specialists. Eating sores, ulcers, and scrofula are healed so that they never bother the patient again. Eczema in its worst form is cured by from three to eight large bottles. B. B. B. cures by draining the poisons and humors out of the blood; at the same time B. B. B. builds up the broken-down constitution.

For sale by druggists, $1 per large bottle, or six large bottles (full treatment), $5. Complete directions with each bottle. Be sure the bottle reads Botanic Blood Balm. So sufferers may test it, a trial bottle is given away. Address BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Describe symptoms, and free medical advice will be given.

"One Long Sermon." By R. A. Cook. Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, 1900.

Having examined this book, I have one adverse criticism to make. It contains two hundred and sixty pages without any divisions. It is naturally divided, but in the book there is not an indication of it that will attract the eye. This, I think, is unfortunate, for otherwise the book is an excellent one. The author discusses such subjects as: "The Bible—reasons why it is not read and studied more, what it has done for the world, its proper divisions and applications;" "Salvation—the human and divine sides." "What the lost sinner must do to be saved" is discussed from three standpoints: "The commission—what they were required to do;" "Acts of apostles—what they did;" "The Epistles—what they had done." Here the author makes a strong argument and leaves no room for mistake. The subjects of faith, repentance, baptism, man as he is and was, the Holy Spirit's work, the evidence of pardon, the things required of the Christian, falling from grace, prayer, and the judgment are all dealt with in a scriptural way. It is a good book to put into the hands of those inquiring the right way of the Lord, and I heartily commend it. It can be obtained from the author, at Fulton, Ky., for $1, or for $1.25 you can get this book and another by the same author containing four lectures on: "Creation, or the Origin of Things;" "Man as He Was, Is, and as He Will Be;" "Sin;" and "Is the Foreknowledge of God Equal to Foreordination?" This is also a good book, and worthy of a wide circulation.

The life of a boy in Georgia before the Civil War; his recreations, including wolf hunting; his friends among the slaves; his schools and schoolmasters, yield the material of a charming sketch by the distinguished author and soldier, Gen. John B. Gordon, which he has written for the Youth's Companion.

People who are contemplating a visit to Paris this summer will enjoy the pleasant sketch of "Paris and the Exposition" which the Living Age for March 24 translates from a recent article by M. Gabriel Hanotaux.

The Record of Christian Work is now being published from Northfield, Mass. Among other good things it is now publishing a series of timely articles on the "Inspiration of the Bible."

"Church Defense" is the title of a neat monthly magazine which is published to defend the Episcopal Church against the attacks against its false friends—the "higher critics." It speaks in no uncertain sound against these. It says: "It may seem that we speak overmuch of that fad of the hour which is enjoying its triumphal progress along the Broadway that leadeth unto doubt, unbelief, and spiritual desolation. It is because the higher criticism is the rampant evil of the times, and the faithful need to be warned against it, and they need to be shown how baseless are the assumptions which the higher critics palm off as 'results' of their exclusive knowledge" that this magazine is published. It is well edited, handsomely printed, and costs only one dollar a year. It is issued by the Church Defense Company, Room 73, Tribune Building, N. Y.

A Memorial.

Mary Williams Sparkman was born on October 4, 1823; was baptized into Christ in October, 1839; was married to John C. Alexander on December 15, 1845; and on April 15, 1900, she fell asleep in the hope of the gospel, thus closing a life of great usefulness and faithfulness to the Lord. Sister Alexander was endowed with a fine appreciation of the responsibilities of life, with great prudence and forethought; she was an exceedingly good helpmeet for her husband, a noble Christian wife, and an affectionate mother.

When married, Sister Alexander was a member of the church of God, and her husband was a Cumberland Presbyterian. When children began to bless their home she saw plainly the confusion that such division would bring to them, and asked him to read the New Testament with her to see if they could not thereby heal these differences, and be one, promising that if she found the New Testament taught what he and his people believed she would go with him, but asking him at the same time if he would not go with her if he found the teaching of the word of God leading that way. The proposition was so sensible and fair that he readily accepted. They read and studied till he was thoroughly convinced of the whole truth as taught by the Holy Spirit through the apostles. He then went and was buried with his Lord in baptism, and side by side they walked in the truth, built a happy Christian home, and both lived to see the last one of their six children come into the church, and left them battling for the Lord.

After Brother Alexander came into the church of God he and Sister Alexander read and talked the truth to his relatives and friends, and practiced in their presence the plain, practical principles of Christianity; so that in a few years most of his relatives in that community, with many neighbors and friends, came into the church of God. I had the pleasure of seeing most of them living in that neighborhood come into the church of God at a protracted meeting, in the summer of 1859, and a large congregation at that place was the result, over which she was greatly rejoiced. Her work and influence, so far as human agency is concerned, were largely the foundation of all these grand results. The success of the truth and the conversion and salvation of souls were ever uppermost in her heart, and in the efforts of her life, as well also, the edification, peace, and harmony of the church. Truly was she a mother in spiritual Israel in that community, and she was greatly beloved for her works' sake. She was constant and untiring in her efforts to serve the Lord, and to bless her home, family, and neighbors. She was modest and unassuming, and was exceedingly careful never to make a step beyond the position the Lord has assigned for woman in the church of God.

On one occasion, when only a few met to worship and there was not a brother present that would lead at the table, she proposed that they all give thanks individually and in secret to God for the bread, asking brethren that were present to distribute it, and likewise for the wine; and so they worshiped and went home, thus inducing all to worship without herself taking a step or saying a word that was out of harmony with woman's work in the church. She was wonderfully respected by the whole community, and was held in high esteem with those not members. While no one would claim faultless and sinless perfection for any mortal of earth, she likely came as near it as any.

In testimony of the esteem and good will of the community a large crowd attended the funeral, although a heavy rain had just fallen, the streams were swollen, the roads very muddy, and the clouds still threatening rain. Thus passed away another useful and godly woman. But her family and friends sorrow not as those who have no hope, for their knowledge of the word of God and her earnest life enable them to confidently hope for her a home among the righteous forevermore. Let them, therefore, follow her example and be faithful to the Lord till death, and then a happy reunion may take place in the eternal home, where not another pain will be felt, not another tear will be shed, and sad farewells will never be said, and where the weary will be forever at rest, and earth's troubles be felt and feared no more.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR cooperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

I have placed in the hands of the printer the manuscript of a book, entitled "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," which I am exceedingly anxious to see extensively circulated, though I have no financial interest in it. The Gospel Advocate Publishing Company will pay all expenses of bringing out the book, and if there is any profit on the sale of it, Larimore will receive it. The book consists of twelve sermons preached in the long meeting which recently closed in Nashville, interspersed with quotations from his private letters and selections—both prose and poetry—which he has made from books and papers in promiscuous reading during a long period of years. The sermons were reported by Miss Emma Page, of Nashville, a competent stenographer. The book will contain over four hundred pages, and will be made in the very best style of the bookmaker's art. I know it will be ornamental, and I believe it will be both interesting and wholesome reading. It will be illustrated with first-class engravings, and will sell for $1.50 per copy. Address all communications to Gospel Advocate Publishing Company.

F. D. SRYGLEY.

I have often said in these columns that any idea that is in the Bible can be stated in the exact words of the Bible. Any idea that cannot be stated in the exact words of the Bible is not a Bible idea. I also stated some weeks ago that the right to baptize is not given by one man or set of men to any man, but is given by Christ to all Christians. Brother F. M. Gilber, of Hamilton, Mo., on the basis of these statements, writes:

"Brother Srygley: Will you please express 'but is given by Christ to all Christians' 'in the exact language of the Bible?' I have never seen such an 'expression,' and I think that I have looked rather carefully. Paul wrote, 'For we know in part,' and John was to write the thing to be hereafter; but I am quite sure John never wrote anything of the kind, neither Paul. Yours for 'the oracles.'"

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 28: 19.) "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "And they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles. . . . Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. . . . But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." (Acts 8: 1-12.) This is the idea I accept, and if the expression "but is given by Christ to all Christians" does not convey the exact idea expressed by these and other passages of scripture, I hereby withdraw that expression and stand upon the exact words of the Bible, no matter what idea or ideas the Bible words express.

The Baptist and Reflector corrects and explains as follows:

"Rev. F. D. Srygley, in the Gospel Advocate of last week, in reply to a question of a brother Campbellite, states that he once asked us the question, 'Will a man who refuses to be baptized after he is fully informed as to the teaching of the New Testament on the subject of baptism, be saved?' and that our answer was: 'Such a man will not be saved, because his refusal would show that his heart is not right—his conversion is not genuine.' Brother Srygley's memory failed him just a little. The question he asked was not what he says above. It was this: 'Can a man be saved who is fully informed as to the scriptural teachings upon the subject of baptism, and who knows his duty upon the subject, and yet deliberately and persistently refuses to be baptized?' Our reply to the question was that such a man could not be saved, not because he was not baptized, but because such a deliberate and persistent refusal upon his part, after having been thus fully informed as to his duty, would show that his heart was not right, and that his conversion was not genuine. In this answer we only took the old Baptist ground that if a man has religion in his heart at all, it will find expression in his life. No true Christian would deliberately and persistently refuse to do his duty in any respect after being fully informed in regard to it, and having the ability and opportunity to perform it. The same principle may be applied not only to baptism, but to attendance upon church and prayer meeting, and any other duty of the Christian life. A Christian is 'created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.' But he is first created in Christ Jesus, and the works follow, as the stream flows from the fountain or the fruit springs from the root."

I accept the correction without taking time to look up the papers to see whether it is correct, because the principle involved is neither changed nor modified. If the editor of the Baptist and Reflector will be as just with others as I have been with him, he will state to his readers, by way of correction, that there is no "Rev. F. D. Srygley" and that the question was not "from a Campbellite." It is in violation of the plain teaching of the New Testament, as L. S. White and F. D. Srygley understand it, to be either a "Rev." or "a Campbellite." They consider it a violation of the New Testament to be called "Rev." and an offense to be called "Campbellite." If the editor of the Baptist and Reflector will dismiss all thoughts of "the old Baptist ground" and study this question and all other questions in religion as a Christian with a desire to understand the "ground" of the New Testament, without any regard at all to any other "ground," we will probably reach better and more satisfactory results. If we come to New Testament "ground," what difference does it make whether we so much as know that there is any such thing as "old Baptist ground," or new Baptist ground, or any other kind of ist, tist, ite, lite, or tite ground?

The principle involved in the answer of the Baptist and Reflector is that baptism is a test of a right heart and of genuine conversion. If the preacher does his duty, no man can believe on the Lord Jesus Christ without being "fully informed as to the scriptural teaching on the subject of baptism." The scriptural teaching on this subject was made perfectly clear to every one who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ under the preaching of inspired men in New Testament times. That which makes it a man's duty to be baptized is "the scriptural teaching upon the subject of baptism," and it is the duty of every man to be baptized, therefore, so soon as he understands that teaching. Any delay to be baptized after he believes on the Lord Jesus Christ and understands the scriptural teaching on the subject of baptism is a deliberate and persistent refusal to do the duty God plainly requires. If not, why not? For this reason no one should ever tell any one that his heart is right and his conversion is genuine till he does that present duty. The way to determine, according to the New Testament, whether a man's heart is right, his conversion is genuine, is to state clearly "the scriptural teaching on the subject of baptism" and see whether he will be baptized. Inspired preachers, in New Testament times, did this. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 28: 19.) "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." (Mark 1: 4.) "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.) "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.) This is the way inspired men taught the people. Under this teaching all who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ were baptized. Those who refused to be baptized simply declined to become disciples, or Christians. In New Testament times they baptized all the converts they made. All those who received the teaching were baptized. "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." (Acts 2: 41.) "Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John." (John 4: 1.) He baptized all the disciples he made. "The Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him." (Luke 7: 30.) Those who received his word were baptized; those who declined to be baptized rejected the counsel of God. Whether a man received the word of God or rejected the counsel of God depended, therefore, upon whether he was baptized. The idea that a man can believe on the Lord Jesus Christ to the saving of his soul and still neglect or refuse to be baptized is not in the New Testament at all. The editor of the Baptist and Reflector admits that such a thing cannot be done by a man "who is fully informed as to the scriptural teaching upon the subject of baptism, and who knows his duty upon the subject." New Testament preachers fully informed people "as to the scriptural teaching on the subject of baptism," and there were no preachers then, such as we have now, who tried to convince people that they could be saved without being baptized. Any man who makes more converts than he baptizes fails to fully inform the people "as to the scriptural teaching on the subject of baptism." Otherwise, all who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ under his preaching would be baptized, and he would explain to the people in general that any man who refuses to be baptized "shows that his heart is not right, and that his conversion is not genuine," as the editor of the Baptist and Reflector puts it. This clearly makes the point that no man can be saved without baptism, except in cases where the preacher neglects or refuses to declare "all the counsel of God" "upon the subject of baptism." In such cases what will become of the preachers? If I catch the Baptist and Reflector's point, every time a man is saved without baptism the preacher neglects or refuses to declare "all the counsel of God" "upon the subject of baptism." There were no such preachers in New Testament times, and there ought not to be any of that kind now. If we accept the theory of the Baptist and Reflector, the question for preachers who try to save people without baptism to consider is: What is a man profited if he should save a multitude of people without baptism and lose his own soul for failing to fully inform those people "as to the scriptural teaching upon the subject of baptism?" One other question especially for the Baptist and Reflector: Can a preacher who fails to fully inform people "as to the scriptural teaching upon the subject of baptism" be saved? Would not that show that the preacher's heart is not right and that his conversion is not genuine? If not, why not?

I agree with the Baptist and Reflector that if a man, such as we are considering, is lost without baptism, it is not because he was not baptized, but because "his heart was not right, and his conversion was not genuine." I also agree that obedience to God in everything follows a right state of heart "as the stream flows from the fountain or the fruit springs from the root." The point I make is that when a man refuses to be baptized there is neither stream nor fruit, and I doubt the assertion of the Baptist and Reflector that there is a vigorous root when there is no fruit, or a brisk fountain when the stream is as dry as a powder horn. In New Testament times inspired preachers not only baptized all who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ under their preaching, but they baptized them as soon as they believed. There was no waiting time or lingering period between believing on the Lord Jesus Christ and being baptized. They baptized them "when they believed" (Acts 8: 12); "as they went on their way" (Acts 8: 35-39); "straightway," "the same hour of the night" (Acts 16: 29-33); "the same day" (Acts 2: 41); and in one case they baptized a man who had not eaten a bite nor drunk a drop in three days, and who was weak from his long fast, before they fed him. (Acts 9: 1-20.) Under the preaching of the editor of the Baptist and Reflector and other preachers of his sort, a large minority, if not a majority, of the converts are never baptized at all, and in many cases where converts are baptized there are days, weeks, months, and years between the time they believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and the time they are baptized. Why this difference? Why did inspired preachers in New Testament times baptize all the converts they made and baptize them as soon as they believed, while preachers now probably do not baptize half the converts they make, and of those they do baptize it is days, weeks, months, and years in many cases after they believe before they are baptized? It must be because preachers now do not teach the people as inspired preachers taught them on the subject of baptism. If this is not the reason, what is the reason?

Henry Hardshell and Feet Washing.

Frank Faithful: "Good morning, Henry. Are you now ready to waive all excuses and objections and accept Christ as your Savior by obedience to his gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation?"

Henry Hardshell: "I wish that I could answer that I am ready, but to be candid with you, friend Faithful, I must tell you that I am now greatly bothered over the subject of feet washing. There is one thing in the Bible which you folks who say you take the Bible as your guide do not comply with, and that is the command to wash feet. Christ said to his disciples, as recorded in John 13: 14: 'If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet.' Now, there is a plain command you folks do not practice. The Old Baptists do, but it seems to me you all are too proud to do it."

Frank F.: "In answering your difficulty, Henry, allow me to say first that I do not feel bound to defend the practice of any religious party or denomination. What my folks practice or your folks, the Old Baptists, practice has but little to do in determining the meaning of any scripture. However, the view of any honest, sincere student of the Bible, in some degree, is worthy of respectful attention at the proper time, as it may lead to a better understanding of the sacred word. Your sweeping assertion, however, that it is not observed because of pride is unwarranted and uncharitable."

Henry H.: "Well, can you not see it is a command of Christ, just as plain as words can make it? I believe the Bible says what it means, and means what it says. I tell you, friend Faithful, it looks to me like a plain, positive command."

Frank F.: "I agree with you; it is a plain command of Christ, and embodies a very important principle of humility and brotherly kindness."

Henry H.: "Well, if it is such a plain and important command, why do those who make so much ado about obeying the Bible not obey it?"

Frank F.: "You reason as though all the commandments of Christ had to be obeyed at the meeting-house, or wherever the assembly is met. I am aware of the fact that the conduct of some professed Christians would seem as if they thought so, too, because you would never know from their behavior away from church that they even claimed to be Christians. There are commands of Christ to be obeyed by Christians at home, in business circles, or on a journey which are not church ordinances to be observed by the saints in public worship. Some of these would be wholly out of place in the assembly. Your difficulty on this subject grows out of the fact that you do not discriminate at this point. When the church was established on Pentecost, the historian says: 'They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers.' Acts 2: 42.) But if they ever met to wash feet, Luke failed to record the fact."

Henry H.: "The apostles, being weak, frail men, like ourselves, may not have understood the command of Christ as plainly as we who have read John 13, which, of course, was written afterwards; or they may have forgotten it, as the human memory is very faulty."

Frank F.: "It is true if they had been left to depend on their own mental powers, they might have forgotten many important things, but you forget that Luke, who wrote this, says that he 'had perfect understanding of all things from the very first.' (Luke 1: 3.) As to the idea of forgetting it, Christ provided against that. He said: 'The Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.' (John 14: 26.) So in this promise their understanding and memories were to be strengthened by the coming to them of the Holy Spirit. That Spirit did come, and they spoke as it gave them utterance. (Acts 2: 4.) So if Christ required them to meet and wash feet, they could not have misunderstood the order nor have forgotten it."

Henry H.: "Why, at the Primitive Baptist Association last summer, which I had the pleasure of attending, this subject of feet washing was discussed. They unanimously decided that it was a church ordinance, and gave counsel that all church of their faith and order should adhere to it."

Frank F.: "For them, as a people, I have great respect for many reasons. I myself am an Old Baptist extraction, and early learned to love their plain, honest ways and strict adherence to what they believed to be right; but their 'counsel' on this subject could not have been the 'counsel of God.'"

Henry H.: "Why so?"

Frank F.: "Because Paul said in his farewell address to the elders of the Ephesian Church, 'I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God; yet he failed to declare feet washing as a church ordinance.'"

Henry H.: "Well, if this command to wash feet is not to be obeyed in church, when and where is it to be obeyed?"

Frank F.: "Whenever it is necessary and we have the opportunity. It would be a poor system of good works to feed those who had plenty to eat or clothe those who were already well clad; so it would be quite as unnecessary to wash feet that did not need washing. I am told that those who practice feet washing at church cleanse them well before going to meeting where they are to be washed. Paul calls feet washing a 'good work' (1 Tim. 5: 10), and commands Titus: 'Let ours also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful.' (Tit. 3: 14.) I will say I witnessed, when a boy, a colored feet washing which did seem to be for a necessary use."

Henry H.: "Your idea, then, is that according to the example and command of Christ the washing of feet ought to be done in his name to the humblest disciple who needs this and like attentions."

Frank F.: "Exactly so. Henry, you could have had ample time to study this and all such subjects after you became a Christian. Why not be obedient to the gospel now? All such questions will be interesting and profitable afterwards."

Henry H.: "O, I want to count the cost; I want to understand every step I take; I want to be sure I am right."

Frank F.: "You act unwisely. You admit now you are out of Christ, in disobedience, and yet persuade yourself you are only kept back by your love and reverence for the truth. Will you let me tell you what I think of your course at this time?"

Henry H.: "Yes; say what you think, even the worst."

Frank F.: "You are in jeopardy every hour."

Henry H.: "But I want to know something more about feet washing. Did Paul ever write anything on the subject?"

Frank F.: "Yes; one time he mentions the washing of the saints' feet. I referred to it just now, where he called it a good work, along with bringing up children, relieving the afflicted, lodging strangers, and such like. You will find it in 1 Tim. 5."

Henry H.: "What is your idea about the subject, anyway, as taught in the Scriptures?"

Frank F.: "I thought you had already understood me, but as near as I can state it, in a few words, it was one of those acts of hospitality practiced in Palestine and throughout the Orient which was essential to the comfort of the guests. Usually it was a part of the entertainment. Palestine is about the same latitude as Savannah, Ga. They wore sandals, and their feet became soiled with dust, and needed to be washed, that they might rest in comfort and cleanliness."

Henry H.: "Can you tell me a few scripture passages which show this to be true? Honestly, I thought it was a church ceremony, like the sacrament, or something of that order."

Frank F.: "My recollection is it is never mentioned that way at all, but always, excepting the washing the priests' feet, it has some reference to the hospitality or entertainment usually performed by a servant. Christ acted the part of a servant when he bestowed this amazing act of condescension and love upon his disciples. I will give you some references, but not all, perhaps."

Henry H.: "Thank you. I will here note them down with my pencil, and study them carefully."

Frank F.: "Put down Gen. 18: 4, in which Abraham offered water to the messengers of God with which to wash their feet. This was a part of his entertainment. Put down Gen. 19: 2, in which we learn that Lot treated them in like manner. Put down Gen. 43: 24, where Joseph, when he entertained his brothers, among other attentions had water brought to wash their feet. In 2 Sam. 11: 8, King David urged Uriah to go to his home and wash his feet, which was among home comforts. In 1 Sam. 25: 41 Abigail asked to be allowed to wash the feet of David's servants, which marks the service as done by a menial. In Ps. 58 David speaks of the righteous washing their feet in the blood of their enemies, which could scarcely refer to a church ordinance. In Canticles 5: 3 feet washing is mentioned as preparation for retirement to sleep. Put down also Luke 7: 44, in which the Savior rebuked his Pharisaical host, Simon, for criticising a penitent woman's washing his feet with her tears and wiping them with her long tresses, when he had neglected the common civility of feet washing."

Henry H.: "I will read these passages, and try to understand the subject. I never knew they were in the Bible. I never doubted before that feet washing was commanded as a church ordinance."

Frank F.: "Let me cite you one more passage for your own personal benefit: 'Be not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is.' (Eph. 5: 17.)"

G. LIPSCOMB.

A Tour Around the Globe. No. 31.

We next went to Paternoster Row, which is famous throughout the civilized world as the center and fountain of English literature. It is a dingy street of old houses, and is only seventeen feet wide from house to house. Here are the stores of Bagsters, Longman, Nelson, Religious Tract Society, and Chambers. I was surprised and disappointed on finding the sales rooms of these great publishers to be about fifteen feet wide and twenty feet long.

St. Paul's was the next place which attracted our attention. This is a magnificent structure, being the third building which has been reared on this site—originally the place of a temple in honor of Diana. The first was built in A.D. 610, and stood till the time of William the Conqueror (1087), when it was burned. The second, usually known as "Old St. Paul's," was six hundred and ninety feet in length, one hundred and thirty feet in breadth, and its tower and spire five hundred and twenty feet high. It was reduced to a heap of ruins in the great fire of 1666. It was eight years before the site was cleared for the present structure, the first stone of which was laid on June 21, 1675, by the architect, Sir Christopher Wren, who spent thirty-five years in its construction, expending on it nearly four million dollars. Of course it is no mean, humble synagogue, in which to bow the knee of prelate grandeur or aristocratic pride. It is built in the form of a Latin cross. The length from east to west is five hundred feet; the width at the transepts, two hundred and fifty feet; and the choir and nave, one hundred and twenty-five feet. The dome rises to a height of three hundred and sixty-five feet, or four hundred and four feet to the top of the cross by which it is surmounted, the height of the interior dome being two hundred and twenty-five feet. To reach the whispering gallery it is necessary to ascend two hundred and sixty steps, and six hundred and sixteen steps to the top of the ball. It covers nearly two and one-half acres. I have neither time nor space to describe in detail its immense balustrade of cast iron, its seven beautiful gates, its grand entrances, its superbly rich double portico, consisting of twelve lofty Corinthian pillars below, and eight composite columns above. It is remarkable chiefly for its massive simplicity and beautiful proportions.

The whispering gallery is one of the most remarkable places in the world. The least whisper on the opposite side sounds as if it were just at your ear, although one hundred and twenty feet distant; and the shutting of a door resounds as a peal of thunder, or a heavy discharge of artillery. The floor below, laid with black and white marble, forming a mariner's compass, with its thirty-two points, looks superbly beautiful and grand when viewed from this gallery.

But—alas!—this splendid edifice is but a proof of the folly and emptiness of modern and fashionable religion. The interior of this great pile is but a receptacle for the dead—for the dust of military heroes—and is really a house sacred to the god of war rather than to the Prince of Peace, and Paul, his humble servant.

Many, indeed, are the gems of sculpture, the triumphs of the chisel, and the proud achievements of genius treasured up within these walls. But the subjects of these trophies are not saints, but heroes; their glories are not those of martyrdom, but of violence and blood. Among the many great generals and admirals whose remains repose here in state are Cornwallis, Howe, Nelson, and Wellington, "who fought gloriously, fell gloriously," and are gloriously embalmed in the memory of Britons, and sculptured within the walls of St. Paul's Cathedral.

We next made our way to the Tower, stopping at Guildhall, the official headquarters of the city corporation. The interior of this hall is one hundred and three feet long, fifty feet broad, and fifty-five feet high. It will hold seven thousand persons. Here the Lord Mayor's annual banquets have been held since 1501. This hall has been the scene of many stirring historic events. Here, in 1483, Richard III. strove to persuade the citizens to accept his usurpation; here Anne Askew, who was subsequently burned at Smithfield, was tried and condemned by Bishop Bonner for heresy; here the Earl of Surrey was tried and convicted of high treason, as were also, soon after, Lady Jane Grey and her husband.

We also made a hasty visit to the celebrated Billingsgate Fish Market, where we found great activity, noise, and bustle. In years gone by these markets were the scene of crowds struggling amidst a Babel din of vulgar tongues, screaming, fighting, and fish-fag abuse between the women. For this it is historically noted. While I saw nothing of the kind, I felt a relief when I passed beyond its precincts.

We entered the Tower under the middle tower, which is defended by gates and guarded by old soldiers who still wear the queer old costume which was made for their order—Beefeaters, or Yeoman of the Guard—at their institution by Henry VII. A history of this place would be almost the history of England; but it would be the history of broils and battles, of imprisonment and murders, of implements of death, of coats of mail, targets of iron, ancient cannon, and so on.

According to tradition the Tower was originally built by Julius Cæsar, but the nucleus of the present building was begun in 1078, by William the Conqueror. Additions were made at various periods. It now occupies an area of thirteen acres, surrounded by a moat, constructed in 1190, inclosing a double line of fortifications, behind which is a ring of buildings consisting of various towers and the barracks and military stores, while in the center is the massive quadrangular White Tower. On entering we passed over the moat and by the Traitors' Gate, which has clanged behind so many illustrious prisoners, brought to the prison in the fatal barge: Anne Boleyn, Cranmer, More, bad men, and good men. How it swung behind them, and ended even hope!

I was much interested in the Wakefield Tower, where the crown jewels are kept. At these crowns and jewels I took a grave look. Most prominent among them, of course, is Queen Victoria's crown, made especially for her coronation. "It is composed of a cap of purple velvet, inclosed by hoops of silver, covered with precious stones in such numbers as to present to the eye one blaze of diamonds. The hoops are surmounted by a ball covered with small diamonds, and having a Maltese cross formed of brilliants at the top of it. In the center of the cross is the celebrated 'inestimable sapphire,' and in front of the crown another jewel of equal celebrity—the heart-formed ruby said to have been worn by Edward, the Black Prince."

St. Edward's crown, made for Charles II., and used at every coronation since, is of gold; embellished with diamonds, rubies, emeralds, pearls, and sapphires. The Prince of Wales' crown is made of pure gold, and without jewels, and on state occasions is placed before the chair in the House of Lords, on which sits the heir apparent to the throne. The ancient queen's crown is of gold, set with diamonds of great value, intermixed with pearls and other costly jewels. It is used at coronations when the sovereignty exists in the male branch.

St. Edward's staff, four feet seven inches long, of beaten gold, surmounted by an orb said to contain "a portion of the true cross," is carried before the king or queen at the coronation. The royal scepter of gold, the pommel and cross adorned with jewels, is placed in the right hand of the sovereign by the Archbishop of Canterbury at the coronation, having been previously blessed by his grace at the altar.

The rod of equity, or scepter with the dove, is placed in the left hand by the archbishop. I have not the time to describe the coronation bracelets, the royal spears wrought in gold, worn at coronation by king or queen; the golden vessel for holding the oil at coronation; the anointing spoon; the golden salt-cellar; the baptismal font used at the christening of the children of the royal family. These are parts of the royal treasure valued at the enormous sum of $15,000,000, all of which is contained within a circle about nine feet in diameter. Such is the price, glory, and trumpety of royal consecration and coronation.

We walked through the dark cell, eight by ten feet, in which Sir Walter Raleigh was imprisoned for twelve long years, where he beguiled the time as well as he could by experiments in chemistry and by writing his celebrated "History of the World;" and Beauchamp's Tower, which has walls fifteen feet thick, the prison of many illustrious persons, among whom were the husband of Lady Jane Grey and Anne Boleyn.

I was particularly interested in the apartment called "Horse Armory," a building over one hundred and fifty feet long, where is kept a collection of armor which presented a spectacle that filled me with wonder. It seemed like a sudden reproduction of the faded days of chivalry. On each side of the room is a row of knights in armor in different attitudes, looking as though they were real knights under some spell of enchantment waiting for the magic word to start them into life again. In this room I saw the ax, the sharp but speedy cure for many an agony, and the block on which some of the victims of royal hatred expiated their real or alleged transgressions.

Divorce.

"Mr. John T. Poe: One of the best articles, if not the best, I ever read on the subject of 'Divorce' was written by you some five years ago for the Gospel Advocate. I had a copy of it, but somehow it is lost or mislaid. As divorce is now one of the crying sins of America, and on the increase, I would like exceedingly well to see another article from you—your views as to the following: (1) Is divorce allowed by the Christian Scriptures? (2) May the divorced marry again while both parties are living? (3) If not, what is the remedy in the case of those who have so married?"

CICERO C. STONE.

"Bloomington, Tenn."

To the first question I answer yes, and the reason will be made plain in my reply to the second query. The reply to the third will also be included in answer to the second.

As remarked by the writer, "divorce is now one of the crying sins of America, and on the increase;" and I believe the church is largely responsible for this horrible disregard of the marriage ties. When religious teachers become apologists for any sin, for any crime that afflicts humanity, it does not take long to make it popular, and to canonize it as a virtue instead of an evil. It is argued by many that if one of the parties in marriage be guilty of adultery—fornication—the innocent party may put away the guilty, and marry again. So reasoned the Jews in Matt. 19. The Pharisees propounded the divorce question to Jesus—to try him—to see, no doubt, whether he would contradict the teaching of Moses. They asked the question: "Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for any cause?"—the question asked above, the first. Jesus replied that in the beginning it was not intended for a man to divorce his wife at all, but when a man married he left father and mother, and was to cleave to—grow to, adhere to—his wife; and the reason assigned is that in their marriage God has made and constituted them one flesh: Paul says the husband should cherish his wife as his own body. (Eph. 5: 28.)

God joined them together in wedlock, and made them one flesh—two members of one body. This is the way God arranged the matter in the beginning. "Well, now," said the Pharisees, "if that be so, if God did not intend husband and wife to be divorced at all, why did Moses permit divorce?" Jesus replied that Moses permitted it on account of the stubbornness of their hearts, but from the beginning it was not so, for he says above that the original intention of God was that they, being made one flesh, were to cleave together; and he adds: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder"—that is, marriage is an institution of God, and in that ordinance he has united the two and made them one, and no man has a right to change God's order, or to undo what he has done. If it was not right that a man should divorce his wife in the beginning, how can it be right now? But Jesus seems to permit a separation on account of adultery—fornication—and this, I think, forms the one exception to the rule. One may divorce the other for this sin—the sin of adultery.

Paul afterwards found it hard to deal with members of the church who had unbelieving partners, and who thought that they had a right to divorce on the ground of the unbelief of the other party. He commands them from the Lord (1 Cor. 7) to stay together; but if they would separate, they must remain unmarried to other parties. So Jesus taught that if they did separate on account of adultery, which was the only reason for a separation at all, they must remain unmarried, or, as Paul says, be reconciled to each other; for Jesus plainly teaches that either party marrying another after separation is an adulterer.

In permitting the innocent party to marry again, then—after divorce—he or she commits the same sin for which he or she divorced the former partner. Now to the proof. In Matt. 5: 32, Jesus says: "Whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her [being so put away] that is divorced committeth adultery [in marrying the divorced party]." It is clear, then, that a man cannot put away his wife for any cause save that of adultery, and none may marry the wife so put away; and this law will apply to the woman putting away her husband the same as the husband putting away the wife. But may not the innocent party marry again? I think not. Let us see.

In Mark 10: 11 we have an account of the same matter we have considered in Matt. 5. The disciples asked him more particularly about it after they went into the house, and he plainly and positively says: "Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery." Remember, there is only one sin (adultery) for which he may put her away, and having put her away for the only cause upon which he is allowed to put her away at all—having put her away for adultery, the only cause allowable—if he marries again, he commits adultery; or, if the woman puts away her husband for the one only cause for which she may put him away, and marries again, she commits adultery. Can anything be plainer? Is Mark 16: 16 or Acts 2: 38 any plainer than our Lord's language on this subject?

Turn now to Luke 16: 18: "Whosoever putteth away his wife [and there is only one cause for which he may put her away; do not forget that], and marryeth another, committeth adultery." In the face of this positive, unqualified, emphatic teaching of Jesus, the Son of God, how dare men assert that a man may put away his wife and marry another? "But," says one, "he may not marry another unless his wife was put away for whoredom." But, sir, where is the exception that permits this? There is none save in the teaching of men. In the beginning God made man and woman one in the holy bonds of wedlock. Jesus possibly grants one cause of divorce—adultery—and makes this the one exception; and then teaches positively that those who put away a wife for this one—this only—cause of divorce, and shall marry another, commits adultery. So, too, if the woman puts away her husband, and marries another, she commits adultery.

No qualifying clause accompanies these expressions. It is simply a command of God not to do it, and in the face of these positive and emphatic scriptures I had as soon argue in behalf of the baptism of an infant as to argue in justification of divorced persons marrying again while the other party lives. Paul says that the woman is bound to her husband as long as the husband lives. (Rom. 7: 2, 3.) The husband or the wife cannot divorce the other, then, for any cause (under Christ) save adultery, and neither party can marry again without committing adultery, and no adulterer has any part in the kingdom of heaven. But since many have so married, what is the remedy? Repentance, separation, and earnest godly living. None can repent while they keep up the sin that damns and ruins the soul. The Jews who had married strange wives had to put them away before God accepted them. I see no other way now. The civil laws permit divorce and marriage to another party. God's law does not. Carry out the law of God in this matter and divorce would almost cease among professing Christians.

It will be seen by our worldly-wise teachers, after a while, that divine wisdom knew best, and that it were always best to let God direct us.

JOHN T. POE.

FANNING ORPHAN SCHOOL—ORIGIN AND PURPOSE.

"It was the cherished desire of Elder Tolbert Fanning that his property should be devoted to the establishment of a school in which girls would be trained in habits of useful industry, as well as schooled in letters, morals, and religion. He died without putting his desire into execution. His widow, Mrs. Charlotte Fanning, in full sympathy and accord with his wishes, and desiring to carry them into effect during her lifetime, selected thirteen trustees, to whom she deeded a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of land, upon which are located the Hope Institute buildings, for the purpose of founding a school for the training and education of destitute orphan children. To utilize this generous gift, the trustees obligated themselves to raise an equal amount in cash and notes and other revenue-bearing funds, which obligation they fulfilled; and, in accordance with the design of the deed of gift made by Mrs. C. Fanning, on November 30, 1883, and of the charter obtained from the State of Tennessee, on October 8, 1881, the Fanning Orphan School was permanently organized on February 11, 1884. The following extract from the deed points out more definitely the purposes of the school: 'The purpose of this conveyance is to establish a school under the patronage and management of said corporation, wherein white orphan girls may be instructed in books and trained in habits of industry. I am a communicant of the church of Christ, and I wish every person officially connected with the management of this institution to be a member in good standing in said church. The trustees of said school may admit to the school so many destitute orphan girls as the means at their command will allow. They are vested with authority to adopt all needful rules for the government of the school, but I require that the Bible shall be made a regular text-book and shall form a part of the daily study of all the pupils. The pupils must be instructed in household duties, and be required to perform service as cooks, laundresses, dairymaids, housekeepers, etc., so that they may earn in such employment, if necessary, an independent and honest living. The trustees may admit white girls, not orphans, in destitute circumstances, as pupils, on payment of tuition; but no such pupils are to be admitted if such an arrangement shall in the least interfere with the training of the destitute and orphans, who are the peculiar objects of my solicitude.' The school was formally opened for the reception of pupils on September 15, 1884, under the superintendency of Brother A. J. Fanning.

"The following brethren were selected by Sister Fanning, and constituted the original Board of Trustees of the Fanning Orphan School: John G. Houston, C. W. McLester, P. S. Fall, O. T. Craig, J. C. Wharton, Thomas Herrin, S. S. Wharton, Dr. J. P. McFarland, A. J. Fanning, Dr. E. Charlton, John R. Handley, John H. Ewing, and David Lipscomb. Out of the above thirteen eight have passed over the river, three resigned their places on the board, and two yet remain, after a lapse of sixteen years, to administer in company with other brethren selected to fill the vacancies in the board, the sacred trust committed to their charge."

The pupils do the entire work of the school—cooking, washing, ironing, house cleaning—and make their own clothes.

Ten thousand dollars in subscriptions were raised in compliance with the conditions of the gift of Sister Fanning. Owing to business depressions some of this was never collected. The school has in addition to these subscriptions received in donations five thousand dollars from Brother James H. Davis, late of Decherd, Tenn.; three thousand six hundred and forty dollars from Mrs. Nettie Fraim, of Flippin, Ky.; and eleven hundred dollars from Brother B. D. Johnson, of Allensville, Ky. Part of this money was used in relieving of debt a tract of land owned by Mrs. Fanning, which she then gave to the school; so the school now owns a tract of three hundred and forty acres of land. Part of it was spent in fitting up, repairing, and furnishing the buildings; furnishing the farm with stock and implements; and in building a farmhouse and dairy barn. So the place is now in very fair repair and supplied with needed stock and implements. The school is out of debt, save small amounts incurred in running expenses, and has notes and claims worth about twenty-five hundred dollars at interest. Brother J. C. Sewell, who recently died, willed his property, supposed to be worth about five thousand dollars, to be invested, and the interest to go to the support of the school.

Brother William Carman, of Cannon County, Tenn., for himself and wife, donated fifteen hundred dollars, to be spent in the education of orphan girls, which has been so used. A brother of Texas has, year by year, from the beginning of the school, paid enough to sustain one girl at school. Other smaller donations have been made and used and some churches and individuals have supported girls at school for a longer or shorter time. The school has sustained as many destitute orphans, free, as it has been able, and furnished advantages, at low rates, to others, of limited means, who could not have gained an education at the common schools of the country. It has thus furnished a good, solid education in literature and the domestic arts and helped to lives of usefulness many who else would have been deprived of these advantages.

For a time the buildings would accommodate about thirty pupils, in addition to the superintendent's family and teachers; latterly they accommodate about forty pupils. They have been fairly filled during the sixteen years the school has been in operation, so that several hundred girls have been cared for, educated, and trained in the school. Some of these were by their condition and surroundings exposed to evil influences. A happy home has been provided for them during their years of danger. The educational advantages, in the elements of solid learning, have been equal to the best female schools in the land, and they have been practically taught the arts of domestic life. Some of them are now occupying positions as teachers in the first schools of the land, many have married and are now honored wives and mothers in happy homes, and others are engaged in callings by which they make a competent and worthy living for themselves. The managers of the school view with satisfaction and pride the work it has done in helping to lives of usefulness and helpfulness to society many who, if left alone, were liable to evil courses.

Now, the school is full, with at least twenty applicants for whom there is no room. We frequently receive such applications as this: "To the Fanning Orphan School: I am a widow, with three little girls. I am dependent on my own labor for a living. I could make out to live if I could leave home to work in the factory, but I have no one to leave my girls with or to look after them and keep them out of bad company. If I could get them in the school, I could clothe them and pay for their books. Unless I can make some such arrangement, I do not know what is to become of me and them." This was from a woman that had been fairly well reared, but was left in reduced circumstances. We were compelled to decline this application because we lacked room and means to support them, although we know the dangers that beset girls thus circumstanced in the cities.

Had we the room, the cost of teaching one hundred girls would be but little more than for less than half this number. The trustees, for two or three years, have been contemplating raising means and erecting a larger and more suitable building. In January, last, they appointed a committee to look after this matter. The present building was erected over fifty years ago, for a female school, with servants to wait upon the girls. It is a substantial building that can be utilized for workrooms or other purposes; but more modern buildings, with modern conveniences and better sanitary arrangements, would greatly lighten the labor of the pupils, add to their comfort, and help forward their improvement. The trustees believe they can introduce some light, mechanical industries that will prepare girls for making a living in the future, and help them in clothing themselves while in school; but it will take means for this that the trustees have not at command. This statement is made public to see if there are not persons who will volunteer to aid in this work. It is thought the proper building to accommodate one hundred girls, with the furnishing, will cost not less than twelve or fifteen thousand dollars. Are there not men and women that could promote their own happiness and the good of others, both in time and eternity, by helping forward this work? The trustees will publish a formal appeal soon. In the meantime we would be glad to hear of any who will help in this matter. D. L.

A Gentleman.

I was once spending the night in a beautiful home in a large city. At about 9 o'clock my host, a gentleman about fifty-five years of age, got up, went into the hall, and put on his overcoat and rubbers. Returning to the parlor door, he said: "Excuse me, please, for just a few minutes. I am going to say good night to my mother."

His mother lived three blocks distant, and for thirty years her son had never failed to go and bid her good night, if he was in the city.

"No matter what the weather may be, no matter who his guests are, my husband never fails to run over to his mother's and bid her good night," said the gentleman's wife when he had gone. Neither he nor she could sleep if this duty had been neglected. When his business compels him to be away from the city, he writes to her every day, if only a single line. Her mental powers are beginning to fail, and she forgets many things, so that her mind is a blank on some points; but when 9 o'clock comes she always knows the hour, and says: "It is time for Henry to come and bid me good night."—Exchange.

The religion that fancies it loves God, yet does nothing to help its brother and evinces no sympathy and love for its brother, is not the genuine article. It may be a theory, a dogma with a cruel heart. But if you love God, you will love your fellow-men also. If you love God, you will labor to advance his kingdom.

Dr. A. C. Dixon relates that a certain man had a weather vane made for use on one of his buildings, in which were wrought the words: "God is love." Some one said to him: "You have placed an immutable truth on a very changeable thing." "Well, sir," replied the man, "I want you to understand that that means God is love, whichever way the wind blows." This is a sermon we should ever remember.

An important lesson for all to learn is to depend upon self. It may not be the easiest way, but it is the right way. Naturally we like to be helped and ministered unto by others, but the best way to grow is to carry one's own burdens, to think for self, to act for self, to decide for self. If our friends do love us very tenderly and would lift every burden from our shoulders, yet they cannot, for it is a law of God that "every man shall bear his own burden." Every man must live for himself. He must eat, sleep, and breathe for self; and just so he must think, act, and be responsible for self. Though kind friends take every task from our hands, do all our thinking and acting, still we have simply shirked our duty without freeing ourselves from the responsibility. God holds us responsible for the performance of our duties, and not our friends.

We do not grow while allowing others to bear our burdens for us. All life comes to us in germs and possibilities which must be developed by exercise. The mind is developed, made strong, by continual thinking. Metals rust in idleness, while in use they shine. Stagnant water is foul and full of poison, while running water is clear and refreshing. The arm fulfills its prophecy of strength by doing its own labor. The latent music in the heart and fingers can be brought out only by patient, painstaking, and continued practice. "The heart grows rich in giving." The wonderful dreams and visions of the artist can become pleasing realities after long, weary years of labor. We do not make full-grown Christians in a night. We climb a little higher each day that we live. It is only by continued effort that the passions are subdued, the lusts of the flesh crucified, and the pride of this world deposed. Every time we gain the mastery over self we grow stronger in the Lord and in the power of his might. We are not put here to be greenhouse plants, but by toil and labor are expected to develop and grow.

A danger to be avoided in happy homes is overkindness to children. Many fond parents who owe much to the discipline of hardships through which they passed in early life treat their children unkindly when they say: "Our children shall never toil as we did; we will make life easy for them." While not doubting their affection, this is a very unwise course. One reason that some rich men's sons do not succeed as their father's is that they have not had their fathers' discipline, toil, and hardships. The successful men in our large cities are those who were reared in poverty or taught self-reliance in early life. Those reared in the lap of luxury usually never learn that endurance and perseverance so necessary to success. While an education in books is not undervalued, yet an education in the everyday duties of life should not be overlooked. The discipline that grows out of toil and trial is very essential to the rounded education. In childhood the foundation for the character in after years is laid. How carefully parents should guide their children in laying the foundation!

Young people themselves should insist upon being self-dependent so far as possible. Of course there is a measure of help that can be received without any loss of self-respect and dwarfing of manhood. Infancy and childhood must be tenderly nourished and cherished by parental affection and care. But so soon as young people are old enough to think for themselves they endeavor to help themselves and to fight their own battles. Strength is gained every time they do their own tasks. In school nothing worse can be done than turning to others for help every time a hard problem is to be solved. In such experience one fails to grow to one's best. The child is robbed of the thought and labor so essential to his growth and development. He is deprived of the privilege of learning patience and perseverance, characteristics so essential to the accomplishment of any good in life. The student should think for himself, and not shine in borrowed plumes. Knowledge must come direct, and not second-hand. The young man should think his problems through and through for himself. No one can do this thinking for him. The only way to become truly wise is to dig in the mines of wisdom for yourself. Intellectual power is obtainable only by persistent effort.

No one can build character for us; no one can be good for us; no one can do our praying for us; no one can walk in the steps of Jesus for us; no one can conquer temptation for us; no one can glory in the cross for us; no one can cultivate humility, goodness, fidelity, meekness, patience, and temperance for us. These noble characteristics each must cultivate in life for himself. God's own way of helping us is not to do things for us, but to inspire us to do them for ourselves. God has not promised to carry our burdens, but to give us strength to bear them if we will only fight life's battles bravely. We fall in line with God's plans when we accept life's duties and responsibilities and faithfully meet them. In the midst of the gloom and sorrow of life the best God can do for us is to put strength and courage in our hearts to endure and overcome these. Peter gave the lame man at the Beautiful gate something far better than silver and gold; through Christ he made him strong, enabled him to help himself, so it was not necessary to ask alms again. The best we can do for those who are weary and discouraged is not to help them in their weariness, but to inspire them with a new strength and courage, so that they may for themselves meet life's duties and responsibilities bravely and nobly. Fill them with a new determination, so that they may carry their own burdens.

Christianity is suffering more in the "house of its friends" than anywhere else. One hypocritical pretender can do more to injure the cause of Christ than one hundred avowed infidels. Sinners are disgusted with those who put on a devout face, say long prayers, and make great claims, yet when it comes to their manner of living they are no better than those who lay no claims to goodness. In business they are not truthful and honest, their morality is of a very doubtful kind, and yet they are retained in the churches as members in full fellowship and good standing. It occurs to us that it is time to purge out this wicked leaven. Their power for evil is great. Many people without discriminating minds imagine that all professed Christians are no better. A young lady said to me a few days ago: "There is nothing good in me, and I am as good as the church members with whom I associate intimately." Judging Christianity by the hypocrites with whom she had associated, she had decided it to be a failure. She seemed to think no one was any better than she; hence it was not possible to create in her mind a conception of the higher, nobler, and purer life. Here is food for much reflection. Are we living such a life as will disgrace the cause of Christ? It cannot be successfully denied that almost all kinds of sin are tolerated without rebuke in the church. Paul advises to deliver the wicked "unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." It should be so now. God, the salvation of souls, and our eternal interests demand it. A thorough, a decided reformation is needed at once. Every Christian should begin at home and continue the work until the church is freed of the corruption that is robbing it of its power and influence. Every preacher, every teacher, and every earnest Christian should cry aloud and spare not. We believe that a number of subtractions would prove very beneficial.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: I would like to ask you one question: What is the scriptural reason for observing the first day of the week instead of Saturday? Please answer through the Gospel Advocate, and oblige a brother.

Savannah, Cal.

To avoid the constant repetition of answering this question, we published in a tract more than we could give in response to a query in the Gospel Advocate. It is advertised in the Gospel Advocate at only two cents per copy. Send a postage stamp for it; or, better, send for a number and read and circulate them.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain the latter part of John 10: 9. What do they go in and out of, and what is the pasture they find? Please give your explanation of same for the satisfaction of myself and several others.

T. L. LEWELLEN.

Woodbury, Tex.

The sheep go out of the fold to get food, pasture, and water, and go in to find protection from beasts of prey and robbers. Because pasturage and protection are found by being led out and in, when calling his children his "sheep," he calls the food and protection given them by the terms by which the sheep get these; just as he calls those who mislead his sheep for gain, "thieves and robbers;" just as he says our hearts are sprinkled from an evil conscience, because sprinkling the blood of purification was the method of purifying the Jews from fleshly uncleanness. The means are used to indicate the results. "Going in and out" is used to indicate the results that follow food and protection. So, giving food and protection to the children of God by Jesus is represented as leading them out and in, because that is the way sheep get food and protection.

Brother Lipscomb: We are having trouble over our treasury money, in the way it should be spent. Some contend that it should only be spent for the poor saints. Others say that it should be spent for such things as it takes to keep up worship—such as lamps, song books, coal, and literature to help in the study of the Scriptures. Again, some say that we should separate our Sunday school and scripture study from the worship. Please give us some information along this line.

F. C. MUIR.

When people want trouble they can raise it over anything or nothing. I do not think there is any sin in passing all that is used for current expenses through the treasury. The disciples of Jesus bought what was needed for the feast, and gave to the poor out of the treasury. (John 13: 28, 29.) Paul commanded the Corinthians to lay by in the treasury upon the first day of the week, as they were prospered, to send to the poor in Judea; but that by no means implies that money for other things should not go through the treasury. What was cast into the treasury of the temple went for all the expenses connected with the temple service, keeping the temple in order and the support of the priests and Levites while serving in the temple. Paul (1 Cor. 9: 8) uses these temple offerings to illustrate that those who preach should live of the offerings made through the gospel. A treasury is a common receptacle for means contributed by each to be used for purposes in which all are interested. Let it be understood by all how the money is to be used, so each can direct his means in the channel he desires. A Sunday school as a separate institution from the church ought to be closed.

Brother Lipscomb: Please give a weak brother some light on 2 Cor. 6: 14-18 through the columns of the Gospel Advocate. While verse 14 is generally understood and construed so as to apply in a matrimonial sense, does it not equally—and, in fact, more forcibly—apply to a partnership in any and all business dealings with an unbeliever? Please give your views, or what you understand the Scriptures to teach, on this chapter, and greatly oblige a brother in Christ.

E. L. LEEPER.

In the Gospel Advocate of February 8, 1900, we said about all we know to say on this subject. We there said that we believe the command covers all relations in which the Christian is controlled by the actions of those not Christians. That is what "yoked together" means—so connected that the actions and course of one not a Christian control the actions of the Christian. This general rule is laid down; then it is pointed out that a neglect of it leads, first, to destroy the distinction between righteousness and unrighteousness, then between light and darkness, then it leads into idolatry. The safe ground is to avoid the association that weans from Christ and leads to idolatry. As a precaution against that, the command is: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." We have no formal idolatry, but a great amount of informal idolatry—real idolatry without the forms of idol worship. Whatever a man esteems above service to God is idolatry. Covetousness is idolatry, because a covetous man is more eager to gain money than he is to honor God or to gain his favor. Whatever man holds above service to God is his idol. This scripture tells Christians to avoid the complications and alliances that lead into idolatry. All that wean man from God are embraced. He tells them to come out from among them, from this idol worship, and to withdraw as far as possible from the associations that lead to them. Some associations, like marriage, cannot be broken without violation of other laws of God; so 1 Cor. 7 gives the rules regulating those so circumstanced.

Brother Lipscomb: Is it right for a member of the church of Christ to join the Odd Fellows' Society? The reason I ask you is because a bishop that has been serving us for years has joined them. One of our preachers has also joined them. I want to know if it is right, and would we do right to turn them out of the church? Please explain this in the Gospel Advocate; it will do much good.

J. H. WILLIAMS.

Mathews, Ala.

It has not been long since I answered this question. A prominent Mason, not a Christian, once told me that while he was a Mason himself, and thought Masonry did good in a temporal way, and in various ways, he did not see how a preacher or member of the church of God—which is claimed to be the perfect organization, able to bestow all good and entitle to all the service, time, and means of a person—could join another institution and divide with it his time, means, and affections. He said it in speaking of the death of one of the most prominent preachers that ever lived in Nashville, who died and was buried with Masonic honors. He clearly intimated his respect for that man was lowered by his joining a human society, while claiming to be a leader and teacher in a divine one. Preachers and others often join organizations of this character thinking it will give them influence, but it seems to me it declares to the world that they do not find their religion and their church as good as they claim to believe it, else they would not divide their time, service, and means with other institutions, seeking the little good they give. It seems to me an elder or preacher that does this weakens his religious influence and character, in so doing, with all who know the claims of Christ and his church. Teachers that do this certainly do not love the Lord with all the strength, and the mind, and the soul, else they would have no time to devote to these worldly institutions, and in this fail to set the example Jesus requires of his teachers, as such lack the essential qualifications of elders and teachers. The best way is to teach them better. Show them the example of earnest fidelity and singleness of purpose to serve the Lord. Perhaps you show a failure to hold the church of God and his religion in high esteem in some other way as displeasing as this. Let us try the healing and saving process rather than the destroying one. But Christians should do all they do in the name of Christ and as members of his body, not as members of other bodies. Christ provides for all good to his servants in his church.

THE USE OF TONGUES.

Some time since we said that the power to speak with tongues was given that those possessing them might be able to teach the different people in their own language. A good brother has called it in question, and says Paul said: "Tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not." Most certainly this was one end or purpose of tongues, but not the only one, nor do we think it was the chief one. Did he give any other end? Most certainly, by example and practice, if not in words; and example speaks louder than words. What was declared so plainly in all the actions of the inspired men needed not to be repeated in specific precept. When Paul and all the apostles, day by day, were using the gift of tongues to teach all peoples, there was no requirement to tell this was the use of tongues. Tongues are given for a sign to them that believe not, that they might believe a divine power was present speaking in this tongue through one who had never learned the tongue. On Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit was first given to the new church, "they were all amazed and marveled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? and how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?" He enumerates from fourteen to seventeen different people, each speaking a different tongue, yet each heard these Galileans speak in his own tongue. "We do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God." This says all those who spoke were Galileans, showing that others besides Peter spoke the works of God in these tongues. When Peter began his recorded discourse it is probable the others kept silence, since he bore the keys and was to open the door into the kingdom of heaven. Yet each must have heard these words spoken in language each could understand, since the three thousand who gladly received his word were certainly not all of one province, and so could not all understand the one Galilean dialect. Then when the converts were scattered abroad they went everywhere, even to foreign nations, "preaching the word."

Paul asks: "If I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine? . . . So likewise ye, except ye utter by [in] the tongue [spoken] words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air. . . . Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me. . . . Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue pray that he may interpret. For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful [bears no fruit to the hearers]. What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding [so as to be understood] also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding [so as to be understood by the hearers] also. Else when thou shalt bless with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen at thy giving thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? For thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified [seeing he does not understand your tongue]. I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all: yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding [so others can understand], . . . than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." (1 Cor. 14: 6-19.) The context shows clearly the understanding means spoken so those who hear can understand.

If "all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad? . . . If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret. But if there be no interpreter, let him [that speaks in the unknown tongue] keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God." (1 Cor. 14: 23-28.) This all shows that while the ability to speak with tongues was for a sign that God was present, its use was to instruct and teach those who understood the tongue in which the speaking was done. Paul said he could speak with tongues more than they all. He used these tongues in speaking to the people of many different dialects to whom as the great apostle to the Gentiles he preached through Asia and Europe.

THANKSGIVING WITH A CAPITAL "T."

"I have studied this matter from an economic point of view, and I understand it as a casual observer cannot."

It was a striking tableau. Madame, the fashionable modiste, quivering with excitement, yet discreetly struggling to control her tongue that she might not offend a valuable customer, Mrs. Chauncy Remington, even more impressive than usual in her high-bred displeasure, and a small audience of fitters and finishers, whose elaborately preoccupied air betrayed the depth of their interest.

"I certainly supposed," the lady continued, "that in this establishment I ran no risks of having my gowns sent into the slums to be made—"

"And you were right, Mrs. Remington. This woman is one of my regular finishers, and takes my most particular work. Lately she could not come to the shop because of her little boy—"

"Ah! smallpox or typhoid fever, very likely."

"No, Mrs. Remington, a broken hip—a most painful injury, that threatened to cripple him for life. It seemed a bad time to take the bread out of their mouths, and, though it is against my rules, I felt it was a special case—"

"The world is full of special cases—"

"So it is, Mrs. Remington. That is why I say you cannot have cast-iron rules, as if people were machines. You have to deal with them separately."

"Where does this woman live?"

"On River street, No. 640. We will send for the dress if Mrs. Remington wishes."

"I will go for it myself. I prefer to see where it has been before I decide to wear it," said Mrs. Remington.

Mrs. Remington went out, and more than one pair of eyes came up from the work for a swift glance at Madame. The white dents that wavered about the compressed mouth and inflated nostrils were not difficult to interpret, but Madame had not lived fifty years without learning that silence, if not exactly an extinguisher, at least permits the fires of anger to smolder harmlessly.

"She belongs to the Consumers' League," she said by and by, with a nervous laugh; "they are pledged not to take any work that is done in sweat shops. They are all right as far as that goes, but it is kind of funny that an association got up on purpose to help working women should set itself against common humanity. Slums, indeed! If she ever saw anything cleaner than Sarah Barry's room, I would like to know—"

Having yielded thus far to the weakness of the flesh, Madame promptly closed the door against possible comment by saying, sharply: "You are getting that shoulder too high, Thompson."

River street was not an attractive place of residence, and curious eyes followed Mrs. Remington's carriage as it slowly picked its way between the black, stagnant water, with rotting docks on one side and dilapidated buildings on the other.

"Don't seem to be any numbers, Mrs. Remington," said the coachman, surveying the neighborhood, with an injured expression on his highly respectable countenance.

"Ask at that store, but do not go inside. I feel as if I were absorbing malaria."

"Yes'm; it do smell unpleasant," assented Thomas, and presently brought his mistress to an unpromising doorway from which a narrow stairway led upward into darker regions. With indignation growing in her heart, the ornamental vice president of the Consumer's League started on her quest, scarcely pausing for breath at the dirty landings until, on the fourth floor, she stood panting at a door conspicuous for its cleanliness. A card bore the name of the tenant, and a tiny square of oilcloth at the threshold seemed to individualize the premises. Through the open transom came the sound of a fresh young voice slowly feeling its way along a story.

"And then, mammy darling, the dwarf said—he said—you must come with me. The princess has sent for you to live in her country. And he had a—a—what is it, mammy, that fairies have?"

"A wand?"

"Yes, a wand, and he touched the boy and made him well in a minute. And there were two splendid white horses with gold bridles—no; a chariot, all gold and silver. You'd rather have a chariot, wouldn't you, mammy, and red velvet cushions? Do you like red best, mammy, or purple?"

Mrs. Remington found her displeasure vanishing like a mist in the sunshine before this cheerful optimism, but her knock made itself heard, and as she stepped inside—a beautiful vision in her soft furs, rich garments, and drooping plumes—it might well have seemed to the boy as if his fairy tale had suddenly come true. Her eyes swept the clean, bare room in search of the boy, and she moved impulsively toward the cot, not unlike a stretcher, on which he was lying, so incased in a cruel-looking frame that he could only move his head and arms.

The one window was full of sunlight, and in front of this the mother had been sitting, her table, a box covered with a white sheet, on which lay the gown with its glistening folds and delicate laces.

She was a small, slenderly made woman, whose lessons in life seemed to have been prematurely learned, but with a cheerful, self-respecting dignity that was not discomposed by the advent of her visitor. Rather it was Mrs. Remington who was embarrassed, feeling herself suddenly deserted of her assured superiority, and discovering that "the working woman," as an item in a report, was more easily reckoned up than the flesh and blood creature whom she was assumed to represent.

She took the chair which the mother proffered and drew it close to the cot, finding a sort of protection from herself in the delighted gaze of the great, intelligent eyes and the little claw of a hand put out shyly to touch the fur at her wrist.

"I suppose you came about your dress," said the mother, who had easily divined her identity. "I ought to have taken it back yesterday. Madame said it might make her trouble if it was known she let work go out, but they took the cast off from Robbie in the morning, and I was afraid to leave him till he got a bit used to the frame. You see he couldn't move in the cast, but now, if he isn't careful, he may undo all they've gained these weeks."

There was an absolute terror in her voice, and the boy said, eagerly: "Don't you fret, mammy. I shan't move the leastest, tiniest bit. Are you a truly princess?"

"No, indeed," laughed Mrs. Remington. "But it doesn't matter in the least about the gown. I only want it for Thanksgiving."

"We made up a fairly story about it, it was so pretty and shiny. We pretended it was for a princess to wear at her wedding. Part of the story mammy made up, and part I made; but her part was best."

"And is the story finished?" asked Mrs. Remington, unpinning the bunch of violets at which the boy was gazing hungrily, and putting them in his hand.

"O, mammy, smell!" he called in delight. "Real live flowers! I guess the story isn't finished. I made up the end last night, and now seem's if it was going to happen—only I didn't s'pose the princess would come herself. You going to wear your shiny dress to a wedding?"

"No; to a party—a Thanksgiving party."

"We're going to have a party our own selves if Madame don't forget to pay mammy. We're going to have—"

"Robbie!" protested his mother.

"O, let him tell me," begged Mrs. Remington.

"Oysters," shouted Robbie, "and sweet potatoes, and, if it snows, ice cream. You know you have milk and sugar and stir in snow. It's 'most as good as bought ice cream if the snow ain't smoky. Sometimes 'tis."

"Who is coming to your party?"

"Just mammy and me and the Golliwoggs."

"What a funny name! Do they live here?"

"Why, yes; they live anywhere you want 'em. They're a kind of make-believe people, you know, but they're awfully funny. There's a book about 'em, and mammy's going to buy it for me when her ship comes in. You know that big, big bookstore on Lincoln avenue. They've got lots of the jolliest books there, and when mammy isn't too late she goes in and takes a peep, and when she comes home she tells me about it and we make up the rest."

"What fun!" said Mrs. Remington; quite convinced by the boy's shining eyes.

"Isn't it! She's a dandy mammy to make things up. She thought of having the Golliwoggs at the party. I did want Patsey and little Nan, but they're—well, kind of hungry, and you know you can't get so very much oysters for—"

"Robbie!" this time with very much distress in his voice.

"O, mammy, she's so nice. I like her;" and the homely little face smiled confidently at the visitor.

"And I'll see you, Robbie. I wish I were coming to your party with the Golliwoggs, but I'll come another day very soon. Barry, if the gown is done, I'll take it to Madame, and save you the trouble; or will you go, too, in the carriage?"

"O, do, mammy darling, and find out some more about the Golliwoggs! And, mammy, come here a minute—stoop down your head—pretend, just pretend, I'm going too, riding on the seat with the coachman. Will you, mammy?"

She nodded and smiled as she kissed him, and Mrs. Remington felt ashamed to have seen that there were tears in the brave eyes.

"Now, tell me about Robbie," she said, when they were on the way. "I couldn't ask you before him. I shall never forget crushing my finger in a door when I was a child, and the agony I suffered in hearing the accident described to every visitor. It was like having it happen over and over again."

"It was an electric car. He is only eight years old, but he wanted to earn some money to surprise me. A big boy let him have some papers to sell and—it happened. When they first took him to the hospital they were afraid—O, I don't think I can talk about it; it is just as you said, like having it happen over again. But he's the bravest little fellow. I could often see he had been crying, but he would always think up something funny to say when I came in. Dr. Lyman is very kind. He had him brought home as soon as it was safe, though it makes him more trouble, and Madame lets me take my work home. There are lots of kind people, Mrs. Remington. I used to think folks were hard and cruel and didn't care, but I believe it's just because they don't understand."

"I'm not sure the Lord will think that's any excuse in my case," said Mrs. Remington, more to herself than her companion; "I've been so very sure I did understand. Stop a minute, Thomas."

She went into a bookstore and came out with a white parcel.

"It's the 'Golliwogg book.' I want to send it to Robbie, but don't give it to him till after the party; they'll seem more like people if he just imagines them; and, Mrs. Barry, I want to send the Thanksgiving dinner. Let him ask Patsey and little Nan, and they shall have ice cream and everything that children like. I only wish I could come myself, but I shall give thanks at my party, though I didn't expect to."

"O, Mrs. Remington, you ought to have the blessedest Thanksgiving—"

"I? Ask Madame if she thinks so. I don't believe I ever before thought of thanksgiving except with a capital 'T.' No; I'm not coming up; you take the gown with you."

Mrs. Barry looked puzzled and was hardly enlightened when Madame said in her explosive fashion "Well, Sarah Barry, you've got me into a great scrape, not bringing that dress home last night, and now you've missed Mrs. Remington, and she'll go smelling round your old rookery and be more vexed than ever."

"O, Madame Wenson, she brought me here in her carriage, and she isn't vexed at all! She was lovely to Robbie, and to me, too. She's going to send him a Thanksgiving dinner—a regular party dinner—and here I was only yesterday wishing Thanksgiving never'd been heard of. She is the sweetest woman, but what did she mean by thanksgiving with a capital 'T'?"

"H'm," grunted Madame, "so she does believe in special cases. Most people would if they'd take the trouble to see for themselves, and I guess a lot of us know more about a thanksgiving with a capital 'T' than about giving thanks."—Emily Huntington Miller, in Congregationalist.

Editorial.

REV. 22.

The first part of this chapter is taken up in finishing the description of the wonderful city of God and the home of the saints, which was sufficiently presented in our last.

Next we read: "And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done." (Verse 6.) These sayings are faithful and true. While men have been working all sorts of theories regarding the visions and prophecies of this book that have failed, and proved the writers did not know what they were talking about, yet the things themselves are true, and will be fulfilled in their time, just as presented. The history of the last thousand years, and more, has shown plainly enough that men cannot tell beforehand about the fulfillment of these prophecies; but there is one thing we can do, and that is, to believe most heartily that they are true, and that they will not fail of fulfillment, as time goes on. God sent an angel to testify these things to John, and they will be accomplished as certainly as the prophecy uttered by the angel Gabriel to Zachariah, concerning John, was brought to pass. But the record says: "The things which must shortly be done." That language would indicate a fulfillment very soon after being uttered.

Nearly two thousand years have passed since these things were uttered, and yet it is understood that these things have not yet been fulfilled, and how about that? There certainly need not be any trouble on this score, for "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." So with the Lord it has been but a little while since these things were uttered to John. Then, again, many of these visions evidently covered long periods of time; and some of them began very soon to be fulfilled, likely, but are not completed yet, and may not be for many years yet to come. So, that allowing the Savior to have spoken of the completion of the whole, they began to be accomplished a short time after being uttered; but the last end has not been reached yet. Let no one think that this puts any difficulty in the way of the truth of these visions. They will surely come to pass. So we can just go on, walking by faith and getting ready for the outcome. This, with us, is of paramount importance; for if we do as Jesus represented in one of his parables—say, "Our Lord delayeth his coming"—and begin to riot, the Lord will come at an hour we think not, and when we are not ready, and then we shall lose our souls. We need to live every day as if that were to be our last; for any day may be our last, and the day of our death is the last to us and brings us to the judgment seat. Immense time has been worse than wasted by spending life and its energies trying to tell when the world will end, and when the millennium will begin, and such like. The Lord has left us a more practical and a much more valuable work to do than that.

"Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book." (Verse 7.) There are two ways to keep the sayings of this book. One is to believe the truth of all that is said, whether we understand it or not; and the other is to do all the plain and practical things that are required of us. These practical matters are kept up all the way through. There is scarcely a prophecy uttered, by word or symbol, that there is not something closely connected with it that involves an earnest, devotional life on our part; and what we need to do is to scrupulously keep this up, and at the same time be assured all the prophecies will be fulfilled in their proper time and place. I am exceedingly interested in being ready for a place in this magnificent city so beautifully described in these last two chapters. I am sure I cannot be ready except by keeping the sayings of the Lord's word, and I want everybody to go with me there; hence, I have been trying to turn sinners to God, and to encourage and help my brethren, for half a century, and am still trying to keep the work going on, and expect to do so as long as I am able.

"And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still." (Verses 10, 11.) So John was to put these things to record, and keep them going; and by putting them to record, they have been speaking to the world from then till now, and will till time shall be no more. It is our duty to keep repeating them, and sounding them out, all along the line. Verse 11 is exceedingly full of meaning. It shows, beyond all doubt, that when a man gets through this life his character is unchangeably fixed. "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still"—that is, if a man lives an unjust life, he will be unjust at death and throughout eternity. This life is our only probationary state. If we go through without serving the Lord, without making our calling and election sure, we never can make it sure at all, for we will have no further possible opportunity; but, on the other hand, if we lead a righteous life here, then we will be righteous at death, and at the judgment, and on through eternity, and there is no power that can then take us out of the hands of the Redeemer. This is an encouraging thought: that the man that is faithful through life is perfectly safe for eternity, and it will still be true; for "if God be for us, who can be against us?" If we will so live as to be holy when we die, we shall be forever holy then; and Satan, with all his combined legions, cannot then harm us. We may then be assured of hearing our Redeemer say: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Such is the assurance Jesus has given all that will love, serve, and honor him to the end of this life. Who would not do this for such an outcome?

Again, he says: "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." (Verse 12.) The Lord's people should never cease to be thankful for such assurances as these."

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Verse 14.) The Revised Version has: "Blessed are they that wash their robes." This a very decided change in verbiage, but no real change in the outcome. No man can wash his robes without earnest and faithful obedience to the word of God; and the Revised Version requires, in reality, the same things as the Authorized Version. There is no teaching in the word of God anywhere that promises heaven to any but the obedient—the finally faithful—and no man need make his calculations of heaven upon any other principle. So, whether we read it "do his commandments," or "wash their robes," it means continued and earnest service to God to reach the heavenly home. The matter of going to heaven is upon a union or combination of the grace and mercy of God, and obedient, humble submission on the part of man. Without God's grace no sinner can be saved, and with his grace no disobedient sinner can be saved. The two must go together in order to salvation. The grace of God provides the way, while the obedience of man accepts what the Lord provides and offers. Christians should not only be anxious to save their own souls, but should seek to save others.

"The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." (Verse 17.) The Spirit through the word and by the church, is to continually say: "Come." This involves quite a responsibility on the part of the church. It is the church that is to sound out the words, the teaching, of the Holy Spirit. The Spirit does not sound out his own words without the agency of man, and never did. In the days of the Old Testament the Spirit spoke to the masses through Moses and the prophets; in the New Testament he speaks primarily through Christ and the apostles. Jesus required the apostles to go and teach all nations, preach the gospel to every creature, and to teach the disciples to observe all things that were commanded them. Hence, Christians now are under obligations to continually sound out the word of God. This is the way in which the Holy Spirit is to reach the world, convince them of sin, and turn them to Christ. Those who are praying God to send his Spirit into the hearts of sinners to convert them might just as well be asking God to clear and plow their lands, plant and reap their crops, or run their business for them in order to secure their daily bread; for he would be just as likely to hear them in the one case as the other. Christians must be active in these matters. "Let him that heareth say, Come." When any one hears, learns, and embraces the gospel, then he should be ready and eager to tell the old, old story to others; and when sinners hear and learn the way, it is the privilege of all to embrace the gospel and be saved. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life." But if he never partakes, then he will never enjoy the rich blessings of salvation. The thirsty sinner will partake of these waters so soon as he sees the way; but it is hard to induce one to drink of the precious water of salvation that is not thirsty. So when we go to sound out the word we must sound it out as given, must sound out the words of the Spirit, and not the words of men.

Jesus further says: "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." (Verses 18, 19.) This puts a fearful responsibility upon those who teach the word of God to others, to teach it just as it is. There are many ways of taking the word of God from the people. One is to speak God's word as it is, and then claim that it does not mean what it says. A man, for instance, will read Acts 2: 38 to the people, as it is, and then preach a long sermon to prove it does not mean what it says, as thousands are doing; or he may propose to tell sinners what to do to be saved, and not tell all, and in this way take the word away from the people; or a man may spend his time in preaching parts and features of God's word that are not applicable to his hearers, and thereby add to or take from the word of God, and cause them to miss their souls' salvation. Those men that are always trying to explain some theory on the fulfillment of prophecy, and never feed the souls of the hungry with the plain word of the Lord, will tend to tire and disgust them with the whole matter. Men, therefore, should be exceedingly careful to rightly divide the word of truth and give to each his portion according to his needs, and give it in its purity, as the Lord presented it in his word. Some men are so wedded to party that they will not present passages that in their own simplicity would in any wise conflict with their party. The doom of such as in any wise interfere with the plain word of the Lord and prevent the people from learning and receiving the whole truth will be terrible, will be awful, beyond expression.

This article brings us to the close of this very interesting book. In what we have written we have not attempted any general explanation of the symbols, visions, and prophecies of this most wonderful volume, nor have we given the theories of others, but have tried to find the plain, practical things that are calculated to benefit the Lord's people practically. There is much more of this than people generally realize. Most men that have written and spoken on this book have spent their time in building up theories for the fulfillment of the prophecies, and have overlooked the plain and practical matters that all can understand and by which all can be benefited.

These plain, practical matters God intended his people to profit by, and they must certainly need it or God would not have given it to them. The prophecies will be valuable to the people among whom they are fulfilled, as the prophecies of the Old Testament, concerning Christ, were valuable, and are still valuable, in establishing the claims of Jesus to be the Son of God. If we misinterpret these prophecies, and run them out into theories of things never intended, like the Jews did those concerning Christ, we would not understand if they were fulfilled before our eyes. The Jews had false theories regarding Christ and what he should do for the world, and how. Although he came in exact fulfillment of the prophecies, they rejected him and clung to their theories, and are still looking for a Messiah to come that will fill their ideas of the prophecies. For nearly two thousand years they have been clinging to their theory and rejecting the reality, the only hope of a perishing world. False theories regarding any part of the word of God are terribly in the way of understanding the plain truth. Let all, therefore, be careful about adopting theories for the fulfillment of prophecies, but grasp in all earnestness the plain, practical lessons the Lord has given us all along through this book.

THE WORD OF GOD, THE ALL-SUFFICIENT RULE OF FAITH.

"The Christian Advocate (Nashville) apologizes at length for the observance of Easter, and among other things says:

"It is said 'there is no thus saith the Lord for the celebration of Easter.' That is true. But to press such an argument and abide by it would put an end to some of the most efficient agencies for the spread of the gospel. It would kill our great missionary and Bible societies, our Sunday schools, Sunday school literature, our newspapers, and all our book publishing business."

"This is the stock reply to any one who objects to departures from Bible teaching and practice; and, strangely enough, to some persons it seems to be satisfying. If the Christian Advocate will put 'extreme unction' in the place of 'Easter,' its argument will be equally valid. It will then read:

"It is said 'there is no thus saith the Lord for extreme unction.' That is true. But to press such an argument and abide by it would put an end to some of the most efficient agencies for the spread of the gospel,' etc.

"And the same plea can be made for the confessional, for priestly absolution, for penances, and a whole catalogue of departures from Scripture teaching. We wonder our friends who use this plea do not see how they are, by making it, striking a blow at the authority of the Bible. Better, ten thousand times better, that 'our great missionary and Bible societies, our Sunday schools,' etc., should have millstones tied to their necks, and they should be thrown into the sea, than that people generally should be made to believe they are not bound to conform their faith and practice to Bible teaching.

"Whatever there may be in any of these 'most efficient agencies' that is not according to the Scriptures should be eliminated. The Bible is not alone the only, but it is the all-sufficient, rule of faith and practice. Once admit that things are right in religion that have no warrant in Scripture and the flood gates of error are opened. To take such a position is a distinct repudiation of the Bible as the only and the all-sufficient rule of faith and practice. This is to break down the authority of the Bible.

"We believe and are ready at the proper time and place to maintain that there is Scripture warrant for our missionary organizations, Sunday schools, etc. If we did not believe that, we would not advocate them. But it is not claimed there is any Scripture warrant for celebrating Easter.

"Easter was a Saxon idol, the goddess of spring, under whose favor our heathen ancestors believed the flowers, grass, and vegetables sprang up. They took the egg as a symbol of life coming up from apparent death, and hence the 'Easter egg.' This heathen celebration was adopted by the corrupt Roman church when they 'converted' the Saxons. The Reformers threw off this Easter observance, along with many other unscriptural practices of the Papists; and now, behold, many Protestants and even Baptists are taking up again these 'rags of Rome,' and decorating themselves with them. It is not a wholesome sign. Those reformers knew what they were about, and to take up these discarded practices is a distinct letting down of the spiritual tone of our people.

"And here is the leading Methodist paper in the South, the official organ of the M. E. Church, South, arguing that it is no valid objection to a religious practice that there is no Scripture authority for it. The reformers did not talk that way; the Bible itself does not talk that way; the early Methodists did not talk that way.

"It is painful to us to see the spread of this Easter observance. We are persuaded that many who take up with the practice have not studied the subject nor stopped to consider what is involved in it. We would affectionately urge all evangelical Christians, and especially all Baptists, to be true to their history, and, above all, true to the Bible."

The above criticism of the Christian Advocate is by the Western Recorder. We agree with both of them and we disagree with both of them. The Christian Advocate is right in saying the principle that condemns the observance of Easter because it is not commanded condemns every other service and organization not found in the Bible. We agree heartily with the Western Recorder in saying that the Scriptures are the only and all-sufficient rule of faith for the Christian and for the churches of Christ. "The Bible is not alone the only, but it is the all-sufficient, rule of faith and practice." To once admit that things are right in religion that have no warrant in the Scriptures is to break down the authority of the Bible. The Bible is the only and the sufficient rule, or it is no rule and carries no authority at all. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." This confines all our acts of service to the things commanded by God. To bring other acts of worship not commanded by God, or to bring institutions into his service not ordained by him is disloyalty to God. I am glad to see the principle maintained as true, even if those who maintain it violate it in practice.

If we firmly maintain it and teach it to others, we will learn to practice it; and if we do not, others to whom we teach it will practice the truth. In the belief and practice of this truth is the salvation of man to be found. Especially in coming to and maintaining this can the favor of God and the blessing of man be attained. With the Western Recorder we say, too, better all the agencies for the spread of the Bible be dropped, every society and organization for the spread of the gospel better be dropped, than this principle be surrendered. I agree with the Christian Advocate that it would kill all societies to do the work of God, save the church of God. It would not stop the printing and publication of truth for the old or the young people. Indeed, the churches best equipped with what the Christian Advocate calls the efficient agencies for the spread of the gospel show less activity and do less in converting the world than those less equipped. All human organizations weaken instead of help the work of the church.

THE GOSPEL ZEAL.

Zeal is as essential to the growth of the truth as light is to seeing or sound to hearing, but zeal to be effectual must be guided by the gospel of Christ. Paul testifies that Israel had a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. The early church succeeded and grew with an astonishing rapidity because an earnest and consuming desire for the salvation of souls was coupled with the gospel of Christ, which is God's power unto salvation. "We believe, therefore we speak," exclaims Paul; and again: "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" When the Lord called Paul to preach the gospel among the heathen he did not confer with flesh and blood, but immediately threw his whole soul into the work. The zeal of the early disciples was contagious.

The conditions that led to their earnestness were these: (1) They realized that the world was lost and undone forever without they were saved by the Lord Jesus Christ. (2) They appreciated the truth that the gospel is God's power unto salvation to every one that believeth. (3) They realized the fact that they had been saved through the mercy and love of our Heavenly Father. (4) Filled with gratitude for the wondrous love that had redeemed them, they felt under obligations as pure as heaven, as terrible as hell, and as enduring as eternity to preach the gospel to every creature under heaven; yea, they felt called upon to press this gospel upon the attention of the world. Their highest aim in living was to preach Christ, and him crucified. With them Christianity was not a theory, but the business of a life. "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." (Phil. 1: 21.) "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 12-14.)

Filled with such lofty aspirations and spurred on by such noble impulses, the gospel of Christ was soon proclaimed throughout the entire Roman Empire—yea, throughout the habitable globe; for "their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world," and the gospel, says Paul, "was preached to every creature . . . under heaven." It is worthy of note that this glorious result was brought about without any missionary society or any other system of coöperation, save that laid down in the New Testament. There is no power on earth that can withstand such consuming zeal, such singleness of purpose. It will melt stones out of the way. With every member of the body of Christ zealous of good works, with all following in the steps of our Savior, and that dear Leader now in heaven directing the affairs of his people, we will have the most glorious coöperation ever known to mortals. It led to victory in the primitive church, it will lead to triumph and glory now. Wherever there is a Christian in the wide, wide world he will be moved by the same lofty aspirations as every other Christian and will be reaching forth unto the same glorious end. Such oneness, such godly living, would soon influence thousands who are now in darkness to enter the fold of Christ.

In the days of the Campbells, Scott, Stone, and many other noble souls the people returned to apostolic Christianity with a rapidity that confused and amazed the denominations. These godly pioneers grew heartsick and weary of human systems and creeds which were robbing the church of God of its influence and power. Throwing off these shackles, they went forth clothed in heaven's armor and made a very effective war upon the human wisdom and philosophy that had robbed the church of its strength. The Christian Standard remarks very pertinently on this subject:

"The current movement for the union of God's people through the restoration of primitive Christianity scored its early and wonderful successes in the evangelistic convictions which possessed the primitive church. The church had been torn by party discords and weakened by the pursuit of philosophic theology in the shape of human creeds, and the world was starving for the bread of life. Discovering that the simple gospel would unify believers and save sinners, the pioneers in this movement left everything to urge their brethren and friends to accept the teaching and authority of Christ, and to discard everything else in the realm of faith. Having themselves come into the fuller liberty of Christ and away from the despotism of human opinion, they felt that they must proclaim and offer the same liberty throughout the land and unite all the inhabitants thereof."

The early disciples went everywhere preaching the word. They were never indifferent to the salvation of souls. They did not organize societies to supplement their lack of zeal. The man who will allow a few dollars to stand between himself and the salvation of a soul does not love the Lord Jesus Christ with all his heart. This is not only true of preachers, but of every member of the body of Christ. When Christians are lacking in zeal and individual consecration they try to study up some plan through which they imagine they can serve the Lord and thus satisfy their consciences. But these plans always prove to be weights, and not wings, in carrying forward the work of the Lord. God does not need and is not pleased with any such help. If Christians would only be in earnest as they should be, the truth would grow and spread as it did of old.

Self-improvement.

Mental power depends less on the gifts of nature than on the fruits of culture. When an old lady in England heard that Southey, Coleridge, and Wordsworth, with other distinguished men, were about to associate themselves into a literary club, she said she was "so glad they were going to try and improve their minds." We laugh at her simplicity, but it is not without a lesson of wisdom. Native mental gifts will avail little unless we improve ourselves. Native mind is but the rough stone in the quarry; it will depend on our aspiration and diligence whether from that quarry come the hewn blocks, the squared and polished stones, and the carved and chiseled columns. Young people ought to give strict attention to the cultivation of their minds. It is work that will pay exceedingly well.—Our Young Folks.

BURNS.

Sister Julian Burns was born on February 2, 1856; was married to John Burns in 1872; obeyed the gospel in 1892; and died on March 14, 1900. One married daughter had preceded her to the Spirit world. Her mother, who had come to wait on her, died also a few days before her. Finally she bade us adieu, and passed over the river to meet her loved ones. All died in the faith. Sister Burns went to church just as long as she was able. She leaves a husband, three girls, one boy, and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

THOMAS E. MILHOLLAND.

M'WHIRTER.

Brother George McWhirter was born in the State of Georgia, on May 1, 1847, and died in Montgomery County, Tenn., on January 4, 1900. He united with the Baptist Church in 1877. Some two years afterwards, when living in the vicinity of Nashville, he was fortunate in learning the "better way" from the preaching of Brother David Lipscomb, and united with the church of Christ in 1879. After this he moved to Montgomery County, and worshiped with the congregation at Oakland, near St. Bethlehem Post Office, until his death, in January, 1900. Brother McWhirter was an honest and conscientious Christian, and in his death we have sustained a great loss both as a brother and as a useful member of the community. He had acted as sexton for the congregation a long while, and was faithful and prompt. His wife and eleven children survive him. We commend his excellent character to all, especially to his surviving sons and daughters.

ANTHONY.

Francis Ann Rankin was born on December 12, 1824; was married to Joseph W. Anthony on January 10, 1849; obeyed the gospel about forty years ago; and fell asleep in Jesus on January 21, 1900. She leaves an aged companion and several grown children, besides a large circle of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. It was my pleasure to visit Sister Anthony's home occasionally for a number of years before her death. She was a devout Christian and firm in her convictions of right. She loved her husband and her children, not through mere magnetism, but with that true love that showed itself in her every act toward them. She was good to the sick and the poor, and was kind to everybody. Some one said the day of her burial that no one ever left her home hungry. I was present at her burial, and tried to comfort the living by preaching to them the promises of God. She lived near Enon College, Trousdale County, Tenn. She will be greatly missed, not only by her family, but by the entire community; but by a life of faithfulness we can meet her in heaven.

M'CORKLE.

John Ewing McCorkle, son of John E. and Mary McCorkle, was born near Newbern, Tenn., on November 14, 1883, and died on February 27, 1900. A purer, truer boy is seldom found. He was gifted with a bright mind, a genial, affectionate nature, and a self-sacrificing disposition. The happy blending of these qualities caused many admiring friends to predict for him a grand and useful career, and, when the solemn words, "Ewing is dead," went forth, many hearts were saddened and many lips exclaimed: "That is a good boy gone!" In our shortsightedness we cannot see why one so useful, one whose every purpose was to do good to others—the staff of his father's and mother's declining years—should be snatched by the cruel hand of death. We can only put our trust in Him "who doeth all things well," and "meekly wait and murmur not." The closing lines of an essay on "Roses," written by Ewing a year ago, seem truly a prophecy of his own life: "The roses when full blown are beautiful and fragrant for a few days, but they do not stay this way long before they fade and are gone, like good people, who seem to die just as soon as they are thought to be so good and beautiful that it seems impossible for them to die. They pass out, but are remembered." May God sustain us in this hour of sorrow and bereavement.

ORA M. HUIE.

MATHESON.

The angel of death visited the home of D. A. Matheson, Bartonville, Tex., on February 24, 1900, and claimed as its victim his devoted wife. She moved with her husband from Tennessee to Texas about two years ago. She leaves seven children, a husband, an aged mother, and brothers and sisters to mourn their loss. Seven little children are left motherless, one a babe of only a few months. It will never know the tender and devoted love of a dear mother. For a number of years Sister Matheson had been a consistent member of the Christian Church, ever living up to her duties as a Christian. Her husband told her the doctor had said she would die, and asked if it excited her. She replied: "No, not in the least; but I hate to leave you and my other loved ones." She then asked for her children, and as they came to her bedside she called each by name, telling it to obey its father and grandmother, be a good child, and to meet her in heaven, and kissed it good-by. She talked to each member of the family, and to her devoted husband she talked of the responsibility resting upon him, but said the Lord would help him in his great sorrow. She did not forget to admonish all present to live Christian lives, and to meet her in heaven. Special mention should be made of the kindness of their neighbors, and especially Mrs. Taylor, her friend in health and illness.

LEOLA.

BONNER.

Brother Redding Bonner died on November 30, 1899, being seventy-nine years, five months, and twenty-four days old. He obeyed the gospel in early life, being one of the oldest members of the church of Christ in Warren County, Tenn., meeting with the congregation at Old Philadelphia, near Verrilla, Tenn. He was married to Elizabeth Rutledge on June 11, 1846, whose companionship, which added so much to his usefulness and happiness, was his almost to the end of his life, she being taken from him only a few years since. Unto them were born twelve children, three dying in infancy, and nine now living with families of their own. The home of Brother Bonner was well regulated, being governed by the principles of the religion of Christ. Brother Bonner was a Bible reader, and for over forty years was scarcely ever absent from his place in the assembly of the saints. While he did not strive for worldly goods to leave his children, he left them the example of a noble Christian life, the greatest heritage a child can possess. There is no cause for sorrow, but all should be thankful for such lives to encourage them in striving for the crown. So live, then, as to be worthy of your parents and that you may be united at last with them and all the saved in the blessed home of the soul. After funeral services at the Philadelphia meetinghouse, the remains of Brother Bonner were laid by his dear companion, among a host of others, to await the resurrection.

J. R. STUBBLEFIELD.

Attorney General Pickle, of Tennessee, and Attorney General Montague, of Virginia, appeared before the United States Supreme Court and filed papers in regard to the boundary dispute between the two States. Governor McMillin and Governor Tyler were also present. In a few days the attorneys will present an agreed decree to the court which will authorize the Governors to appoint a commission to rerun and remark the old line which was decided by the Supreme Court in 1803. The line to be run is one hundred and thirteen miles long, running from the eastern boundary of the State to Cumberland Gap. Virginia's original contention was that the line lay south of that which has been observed by both States. The contention, if successful, would have placed all of Bristol in Virginia, and also a long strip in places as wide as two miles or more.

Second Time on Earth

No Boils Nor Carbuncles Now—A Good Blood Medicine.

"I became convinced of the merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla when I took it myself as a blood purifier. So, when my husband had boils and carbuncles I urged him to take Hood's and the result was that when he had used but one bottle the boils had nearly all disappeared. He continued the use of the medicine and after taking two bottles he was completely cured, and, as he expressed it, felt as if he was on earth for the second time. He has never had any boils since. We take Hood's as a spring medicine and gladly recommend it." MRS. A. E. STAYSA, Yonkers, N. Y.

Scrofula from Birth.

"I have found Hood's to be the greatest blood purifier I ever took, and I have tried many medicines. I was a sufferer with scrofula from birth. My eyes were so badly affected I would be almost blind for a week at a time. My neck began to swell so that I could not breathe freely. Medicines failed to do me any good until I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Today I have excellent health and my eyes give me very little trouble. I owe it all to Hood's, which I recommend to all suffering from any disease of the blood." MISS KETTIE MCGUIRE, Silver Creek, Ky.

That Tired Feeling.

"I cannot say too much for Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for that tired and worn out feeling one has in the spring. As a strength builder and appetite creator it has no equal." MRS. L. B. WOODARD, 285 Ballou Street, Woonsocket, R. I.

Purity of Heart.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." (Matt. 5: 8.)

The above is a beautiful and inspiring promise. It opens up to view a home in the paradise of God—citizenship in God's own beautiful city—where we may look upon and be in the immediate presence of God and all the holy angels, and with the pure of all ages, whose robes have been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb; and where the trials, troubles, and sorrows of this life can never come. This rich inheritance is within the reach of and graciously promised to all; but it must be remembered that, like all the promises of God, it is conditional. Every affirmative has its negative; and in this it stands unmistakably clear that without purity of heart we can never see God in peace. Therefore, will not each reader of this article look into and thoughtfully examine his own heart?

Are the motives, purposes, and intents of my heart always pure? Have "all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, with all malice, been put away?" If not, with your best efforts to that end, you will be barred from the privilege of entering that heavenly home. Heaven is, and always will be, a place of perfect purity. Nothing impure, therefore, can ever enter heaven. Hence, let us emphasize the importance of cultivating and attaining to a pure heart and life; and now, watchfulness should be used here, for it is written: "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" It is possible, then, for us to use deception along this line.

We may appear to the world to be pure in thought and purpose, by paying our debts promptly, and seemingly upright in all our dealings and transactions—doing this through fear of the law and public censure—when the heart is all wrong. Our Savior says of all such: They are "full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness." Listen to this injunction: "Keep thy heart with all diligence: for out of it are the issues of life." The heart, then, is the fountain source of all thought, word, and action; and this being true, it may be urged by some, in mitigation of wrong words and actions, that thought cannot be controlled; but in answer to this, I would reply that in a great measure it can. We realize that sometimes evil will, unbidden, find its way into the heart or mind, but when such is the case we should at once remember that it is said in the book of guidance: "If thou hast thought evil, lay thine hand upon thy mouth."

Now, I trust the reader will note carefully that which follows: The heart or mind of man is a kind of reservoir or receptacle, so to speak, into which enters subject-matter, and from this subject-matter thought is generated; and thought being the mold from which all words and actions come, it will be readily seen that the character of subject-matter we take into the mind or heart determines the character of both life and destiny.

Now, it will be well, as a help or safeguard here, to know that the eye and the ear are fruitful avenues to the mind, and that we can, in very large degree, control, in regard to this matter, by keeping aloof from evil and corrupting associations, where slang, vulgarisms, and other disreputable practices are engaged in, and also in regard to the reading matter which we allow to come before us. It is sadly true that the larger number of books which are being flooded over the world to-day have a poisonous and demoralizing influence upon the mind of the reader. Again, the many places or occasions for amusement and entertainment which are being got up around us, and which are alluring and pleasing to the eye and ear, of which the larger number, perhaps, send forth impure, vitiating, and corrupting influences, and which are attended by many who claim to be children of God, and looked upon or claimed by them to be innocent pastime, are, in fact, but shrewd machinations of the evil one, set by him as decoy traps to catch thoughtless seekers of worldly pleasure. Would that those who attend such places would stop and know that all such things are as destructive to the purity of the heart as is the dreaded malaria which infects certain districts is to human life!

Now, I feel sure that if all those who have desire to read the character of books mentioned will lay them aside, and cease to attend the places alluded to, and instead keep their hearts and minds filled with the precious truths, admonitions, and promises found in God's word, letting the words of Christ dwell richly in them, all these unholy desires and sinful appetites will be rooted out or kept in check; and then when we go hence we shall be among that happy number of whom the Lord says: "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." (Mal. 3: 17.) M. N. MOORE, Tullahoma, Tenn.

The consequences of a diseased condition of the stomach and digestive and nutritive system are most disastrous to the whole body. One by one every organ may become involved. The misery is maddening. The most extreme cases of "stomach trouble" and the evils resulting from it have been cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood and builds up the body with sound healthy flesh.

Swartz, Box 103, Sub-Station C, Columbus, Ohio, then cramps in the stomach, and my food would not digest, then kidney and liver trouble, and my back got weak so I could scarcely get around. I just gave money to the doctors whenever I thought they would do me any good, but the more I doctored the worse I got until six years passed. I had become so poorly I could only walk in the house by the aid of a chair, and I got so thin I had given up to die, thinking that I could not be cured. Then I saw one of my neighbor boys and he said, "Take my advice and take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and make a new man out of yourself." The first bottle helped me so I thought I would get another, and after I had taken eight bottles in about six weeks I was weighed and found I had gained twenty-seven (27) pounds. I have done more hard work in the past eleven months than I did in two years before, and I am as stout and healthy to-day, I think, as I ever was."

From the Nashville American we clip the following: "The statement that Nashville is the foremost hardwood market in the United States, and one of the foremost in the world, will surprise many citizens of Nashville, but it is a fact. One hundred million feet of hardwood are handled here annually, amounting in dollars and cents to from $2,500,000 to $3,000,000."

The Democratic State Convention of Alabama nominated for Governor, W. J. Samford, of Lee; Secretary of State, R. P. McDavid, of Montgomery; Auditor, W. H. Matthews, of Marion; Attorney-general, Charles G. Brown, of Jefferson; Treasurer, J. Craig Smith, of Dallas; Superintendent of Education, J. W. Abercrombie, of Calhoun; Commissioner of Agriculture, R. R. Poole, of Marengo; Delegates to Kansas City: John T. Morgan, Frank S. White, A. H. Merrill, and R. J. Lowe. J. R. Graham and John R. Tally were nominated electors at large.

The public library building in Chicago is protected against the invasion of fire from the outside by means of a so-called "water curtain." At the top of the building is a system of tubes through which water, supplied from a tank, can be caused to flow over the outside walls. Recently the efficiency of the water curtain was tested by the occurrence of a fire in a large spice mill adjoining the library building. The water being turned on, the outer walls were immediately covered with a liquid sheet which, as the temperature was low, became eventually a sheet of ice.

The first shipment of steel nails from the new steel rod wire and nail mill of the Alabama Steel and Wire Company, at Ensley, Ala., has been made. This shipment is the first finished lot of steel nails manufactured in the South. The new plant will henceforth make regular shipments of steel wire fencing, etc., as it has a large number of orders. It gets the raw steel from the steel plant of the Tennessee Coal, Iron, and Railroad Company, which is adjacent. This plant is now turning out six hundred tons of steel per day, and is regularly shipping it to customers as far north and east as Massachusetts.

Silver is in great demand just now in the far East, India and China importing large quantities. The relief given by the Indian Government to the four million persons suffering from famine seems to have called for the coinage of silver, which has been purchased in Europe. The silver shipped from London to the British East Indies in January and February aggregated $4,960,390, an increase of 51.4 per cent over the like period of 1899. To China the exports were $961,995, an increase of 63.7 per cent. The outflow to China is thought to be silver for railroad work and payment of troops. Russia and Germany are both spending money on railroads and mining concessions. The large eastern demand steadies the price of silver. Some twelve million fine ounces of silver have gone out, the United States supplying 80 per cent of the amount. In addition to the London shipments, China took during the two months $1,458,482 in silver direct from San Francisco, making the total sent to the East about fourteen million four hundred and fifty-five thousand fine ounces of silver.

Kansas Notes.

He that soweth and reapeth shall obtain a crop. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." What kind of a crop are we sowing? What will the harvest be? We should answer these questions before it is too late.

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Why should there be any discussion as to what this means? There would not be if no man had a theory to sustain. It would be as easily understood as any other simple proposition, were it not for previous false education.

We must be "careful what we say, when we say it, how we say it, and to whom we say it." These rules, strictly observed, would save much trouble. We certainly ought to be careful what we say. Always say the truth. Be certain we do not misrepresent anybody. Do not leave wrong impressions. Do not attempt to mislead. There is a proper time to say what ought to be said. At one time it may accomplish much more than at some other time. The way in which a thing is said has much to do with its effect. We may leave false impressions by the way in which we state a thing. It is sometimes done for that purpose. By that means men may try to justify themselves. We can sometimes say a thing to one that it would not be prudent to say to another. Some people know how to dispose of a thing; others do not. A word or sentence may sometimes turn the tide of a life. Much care should be used to encourage others to pursue the proper course in life. Anything that will defeat that purpose ought to be omitted.

"The wish is father to the thought." This is a saying that sometimes becomes true. A man may be corrupt, and want others to be on a level with him. The desire may become so strong that he, at least, tries to believe that certain other people are as bad as he. He may work himself up to the point that he will endeavor to bring others to his level by false reports.

Brother D. W. Way is in a meeting at Winfield.

Brother W. B. Houston, of Portland, Me., recently made a visit to Kansas for the benefit of his health. He has visited Parsons, Winfield, Wellington, Belle Plaine, etc. He, in company with Brother W. F. Parmiter, spent one night with the writer. He is a very zealous worker in the Master's cause. He reports good work done by the Portland congregation. There are three loyal congregations in the six New England States. Brother Houston thinks we could spare a few preachers from Kansas to go to the East. He says we need not cross the ocean to find plenty of people who never heard the gospel. Plenty of missionary work is needed in New England, with its boasted intelligence.

Brother I. D. Moffit preached at Hewins last Lord's day.

Brother B. F. Martin is doing some good work at Eatonville.

Brother B. F. Rhodes closed a meeting in Stafford County, and returned to Winfield not long since.

Brother J. H. Irvin and wife, of Winfield, recently celebrated, in a delightful manner, their fortieth wedding anniversary. About seventy-five of their brothers in the Lord gathered at their home, with well-filled baskets containing a variety of good things to eat. About the hour of noon they were called into the parlor, and had presented to them a beautiful and valuable present, as a slight token of the high regard in which they were held. The preachers present were: W. F. Parmiter, B. F. Martin, B. F. Rhodes, I. D. Moffit, of Winfield; J. E. Cain and D. T. Broadus, of Belle Plaine; and D. W. Way, of Missouri. Brother Irvin is one of the pioneer preachers of Kansas. He did faithful work here. In many places we find the influence that has been wielded by this faithful man. For the last few years he has not been actively engaged as an evangelist, but is one of the elders of the Winfield congregation. He has faithfully looked after the interest of the congregation for several years. He is held in high esteem by the brethren of Southern Kansas. His home has been the home of the preachers who pass that way. He and his estimable companion live in the hearts of many of the preachers and other people. May the blessings of the Lord continue with them along the path of life, and may they spend many more happy years together, and yet be enabled to do more in the service of the Master.

The hallowed association of the saints on earth is enjoyable. Then we may certainly expect much when we can associate where no trials will come to us.

Cured By Swamp-Root.

To Prove What This Great Kidney Remedy Will Do For YOU, Every Reader of the Gospel Advocate May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root the one published this week for the benefit of Gospel Advocate readers speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy:

"Kansas City, Mo., November 30, 1899.

"Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.—Dear Sirs: During three years I was frequently attacked with severe spells of sickness; many of these sick spells kept me in bed, dangerously ill, from three weeks to three months, under the constant care of the best physicians in Kansas City. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, but I felt sure they were the cause of my trouble.

"Some doctors pronounced my case gall stones, and said I could not live without a surgical operation, to which I would never consent. In May, 1898, I had the most severe attack, then the doctors said I could not live. It was during this illness that a friend suggested I try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. I began to take Swamp-Root regularly, and when I had used only three fifty-cent bottles I felt fine, and was able to do more work than I had done in four years. It has made a new woman of me. I have only had one slight attack since I began to take Swamp-Root, and that was caused by being drenched with rain and catching cold. This stomach trouble had bothered me for about twenty years and had become chronic. I am now forty-four years of age, and feel much younger than I did ten years ago. My friends say I am looking younger every day. Five years ago I only weighed one hundred and four pounds; I now weigh one hundred and eighty-five pounds.

I freely give this testimonial for the benefit of those who have suffered as I have. (Mrs.) M. E. DALLAM, "Proprietress of Criswell House, 211 West Fifteenth street, Kansas City, Mo."

Swamp-Root will do just as much for any housewife whose back is too weak to perform her necessary work, who is always tired and overwrought, who feels that the cares of life are more than she can stand. It is a boon to the weak and ailing.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorders of these most important organs. The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

So when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty. If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince any one; you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

Many women suffer untold misery because the nature of their disease is not correctly understood. They are led to believe that womb trouble or female weakness of some sort is responsible for the many ills that beset womanhood. Neuralgia, nervousness, headache, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, rheumatism, a dragging pain or dull ache in the back, catarrh of the bladder, weakness or bearing-down sensation, profuse or scanty supply of urine, with strong odor, frequent desire to pass it night or day, with scaling or burning sensation, sediment in it after standing in a bottle or glass for twenty-four hours—these are all unmistakable signs of kidney and bladder trouble.

Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are sleeplessness, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness; sallow, unhealthy complexion; plenty of ambition, but no strength.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, and is taken by doctors themselves, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

To prove its wonderful curative properties, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, also a pamphlet of valuable information pertaining to kidney and bladder troubles, by mail prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health—in fact, their very lives—to the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that all readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle and to be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores.

BLOOD WILL TELL.

No Blood, No Life! Poor Blood, Poor Life! Pure Blood, Good Health!

No person can have good health without pure blood, as all diseases are directly traceable to a diseased or impoverished condition of the blood. Impure blood falls short of its duty of nourishing the system. The color and life in the blood is the iron there is in it, and with the lack of iron there is just as certainly a lack of health.

Read this testimony of W. C. Josselyn, regarding Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic:

"State of California, City and County of San Francisco.

"Before me, the undersigned authority, a notary public in and for said city and county, personally appeared W. C. Josselyn, who, being duly sworn, on oath deposes and says:

"I am a merchant tailor, doing business at 9 Geary street, Rooms 1, 2, 3, and 4, in the city of San Francisco. I am now nearly sixty-nine years of age; came to this coast on the bark Rocket in the year 1850, and have been here ever since.

"Twenty years ago, at White Pine, Nev., I was attacked with what my doctors termed rheumatism. My case baffled the skill of the physicians at that place and those at Virginia City, who advised me to come to this city for treatment, which I did fourteen years ago, and placed myself under the care, one after another, of the best physicians that money could procure. I kept growing worse all the time, and supposed that I never would get well. For the last eleven years I was unable to put my coat on without some one helping me. During this time I lost the use of my left hand, which had become drawn out of shape and badly swollen from the effects of this disease. About nine years ago ulcers formed on that hand; they grew so large that a walnut could be dropped into them. About a year ago ulcers formed on my right temple, one on my forehead, and one on my left cheek. My physicians decided that a portion of my cheek bone must be removed before I could recover, but I declined to have it done. I was in this ulcerated condition, very much debilitated, confined to my bed, with no appetite, my friends having given up all hopes of my recovery, when, during January last, I received one of Dr. Harter's almanacs, read it, and resolved to try Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. I quit using all other medicine and commenced taking the Iron Tonic as directed, occasionally taking a dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills.

"After taking one bottle I felt a change; the ulcers commenced to heal, my sufferings grew less, and I regained my appetite. After taking five bottles of the Iron Tonic the ulcers were completely healed. I now feel as free from aches and pains as a six-year-old boy; can dress myself without assistance, attend to my business, and walk miles without fatigue. I attribute my cure, not in part, but wholly, to the use of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

"(Signed) W. C. JOSSELYN."

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 9th day of May, A.D. 1896.

"The Gift of God."

"By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast." (Eph 2: 8, 9.)

There are few passages of scripture that have been preached from and written about more, perhaps, than the one that heads this article, and strange it is that there are so many varied positions and ideas entertained regarding it, especially concerning that which it says is a gift, not of works. I have some thoughts about this gift differing slightly from anything I have yet seen written, which, by the permission of the Gospel Advocate, I will lay before its readers to be taken for what it is worth.

The emphatic "not of works" justifies the conclusion that the gift is free to man, and does not depend upon anything either said or done by him. Here I raise the question: Can this be said of faith? No; for the Scriptures say: "Faith cometh by hearing." (Rom. 10: 17.) So, then, our faith is a result of hearing; hearing is an act of man. True, we read, faith is the gift of the Spirit (1 Cor. 12: 9), but it is there classed with the supernatural gifts of the Spirit, which were to be done away, or to cease. (1 Cor. 13: 10; Eph. 4: 13.) Therefore we read Eph. 4: 5: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Thus we see that faith is not the gift of the text, as it depends upon a work of man. Can it be said that salvation is the gift? Consistency requires that we stick to our conclusion that the gift of the text is without work upon man's part of any character.

Here I beg permission to part company with my own brethren and enter a demurrer. As many of them teach that salvation is the gift spoken of in Acts 2: 38-40, the apostle Peter exhorted the Pentecostians, saying: "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." How? By doing those good works that God has ordained you should walk in. (Eph. 2: 10.) "Add to your faith virtue, knowledge, temperance," etc. "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall"—the implication being: If ye do not do these things, you shall fall. These, together with a host of other scripture quotations, teach clearly that salvation, either from the past or in the future, depends altogether upon a faithful, pious, and consecrated life in this world, and so we all teach. Then to say that salvation is the gift of the text is to me very inconsistent. I shall, therefore, suggest that grace must be the gift which the text says is "the gift of God, not of works."

To the following thoughts I now invite attention: The term "grace," in its primary signification, means favor, and the apostle Peter talks of the manifold grace of God. (1 Pet. 4: 10.) We look, then, for its synonym by which man is said to be saved: "The gospel . . . by which also ye are saved." (1 Cor. 15: 1, 2.) See Rom. 1: 16: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Then see Tit. 2: 11, 12: "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching," etc. Hence, we conclude that the "gospel" of 1 Cor. 15: 1 and Rom. 1: 16 is a synonym of "grace" in the text; and Tit. 2: 11. Conclusion: Was the gospel of Christ given to man? Yes. Was it given upon conditions? No. Then it was a free gift, without works of any character upon man's part, a free-will offering from the great, merciful Father above to a fallen and helpless race—a grace, a favor, indeed, it was and is. Is this readable? "For by the gospel ye are saved through faith." Again, the gospel of God that brings salvation has appeared unto all men, and is in accord with Paul (Col. 1: 23): "The gospel . . . was preached to every creature which is under heaven."

The difference existing among us is about this. I understand the gift of the text to be the gospel, the means by which salvation is obtained or attained to, while others seem to understand salvation to be that gift. I must think there is a marked difference between the means that procures and the thing that is procured.

Virginia Jottings.

On arriving at Mechanicsburg, I found quite a bunch of papers and other mail matter awaiting me. On account of my address appearing in a yearbook as Mechanicsburg, Va., instead of Snowville, Va., no doubt this mistake has been made. The same yearbook for 1900 has it as it should be, and I trust all will soon be right in that respect. I have never felt that I was under any obligation to send my name to any self-constituted agency to have it enrolled upon any yearbook, but of course when any wish to put J. T. Showalter down as a preacher or minister of the gospel of the grace of God, all right; but always bear in mind that my address is Snowville, Va. I no more stand identified with all the so-called "loyal preachers" than I do with the Modern School Disciples, but all may put me down as one loyal to the one Book.

Among other mail matter I find the "Minutes of the Cincinnati Convention of the American Home Missionary Society," which celebrated its fiftieth anniversary on October 17, 1899. That jubilee convention not only marks the date of the departure of the so-called disciples of Jesus from their preaching and practice of the nineteenth century, but it also points to their departure from the teaching and practice of Christ and his apostles as well. The whole thing (the minutes) looks more like some business affair of the world than it does like the gospel. There is nothing at all like it in all the New Testament. With its presidents, vice presidents, treasurers, and corresponding secretaries it presents a grewsome appearance to the man of God in the light of what Jesus Christ and the apostles taught. It rests upon a money basis, which would have excluded the Savior, Peter, John, Paul, and all the rest of the apostles. It takes one hundred dollars to become a "life director," fifty dollars to become a life "member," and five dollars to become an "annual member." Men in the church (?) cry out in the political world: "You shall not crucify the poor man upon a cross of gold!" They declaim against moneyed monopolies, trusts, and combinations, and then willingly and cheerfully work in all this unscriptural machinery, standing upon a money basis!

Like unto it I found in the same batch the "Proceedings of the Virginia Christian Missionary Society," at its twenty-fourth annual meeting, held at Richmond, Va., on November 8-10, 1899. In it can be found the names of all the active workers of the machine, so that no one need be deceived as to where such belong. "By good words and fair speeches" they ought not to be able to "deceive the hearts of the simple," even.

As it is now past the hour of midnight (1 o'clock), and the inmates of the house in which the writer has a room, which has been cheerfully made pleasant and comfortable, all appear to be asleep, as well as all the rest of the now silent village, and as he whose hand now moves the pencil feels the need of "nature's sweet restorer," a stop is made till another sitting.

After the lapse of near six hours, during which time not only have I been refreshed with slumber, but a bright sun is casting his brilliant rays across this earth and even through the window and upon the wall, and the silence of the night has given way to the crowing of "bold chanticleer," the tramping of the horses' feet, and other sounds, I resume "Jottings."

As the jubilee convention declared its age, that of the Home Missionary Society, to be fifty years, so the Virginia Christian Missionary Society declared itself to be twenty-four years of age. It is too young for primitive Christianity, and twenty-six years younger than the American Home Missionary Society, organized in 1849. Is it not strange that men claiming to go back to apostolic Christianity would so laud and magnify merely human organizations, established over eighteen hundred years after the apostles of Christ brought into existence the church of God? If they date from the time similar organizations began, with other religious bodies, after which they were modeled, the case is not relieved. It would then be not less than one thousand seven hundred and fifty years after the Pentecost on which "about three thousand souls" were made to stand together. Passing by the individual expenses of about one hundred and twenty-two delegates and fourteen visitors, and others whose names appear in the proceedings, which is no small amount, in even reduced railroad fare, boarding, etc., I will notice the account of the State evangelist, J. N. Harman. There is a discrepancy of nine days and eight sermons in the itemized account and the grand totals, the former being fifty days and forty-three sermons, and the latter fifty-nine days and fifty-one sermons. Give the discrepancy in his favor and take the grand totals and we have fifty-nine days, fifty-one sermons, and four additions, and two hundred and fifty dollars for his pay. Now, is not that enough of itself to condemn the whole thing as a "magnificent failure," even as a human organization?

I see that J. N. Harman gave forty-one dollars and fifty cents, if I understood the account, which I suppose is by the rule which the society makes, or has made, that the State evangelist must at least raise enough to pay himself and as much more as he can for the society. So it appears that all the begging for the society turned out to be a begging for himself. Does not such work smack of guile or hypocrisy? It looks as if the Old Dominion disciples do not work very enthusiastically in the machinery harness of societyism. Two hundred and fifty dollars for fifty-nine days, fifty-one sermons, and four additions does not present a very flattering appearance. Brethren, I advise you to get out of the harness of societyism and go back to the good old apostolic way of preaching the gospel.

On Tuesday, April 10, the writer left the home of Brother Burton and Brother Songer, and made the distance of about thirty-five miles to his own home as twilight was giving place to the darker shades of night. Those brethren and their wives always willingly make the stay of a preacher, in whom they have confidence, just as pleasant as possible, and contribute regularly to his support as a preacher. Also when the poor in the community need help they are found on the practical side with a helping hand.

Some people take it all out in telling others of the needs and wants of the poor, and give but little or nothing themselves. Sickness and death had visited the community, and Brother Burton and his wife were unable to attend the meeting. The same was the case with Brother J. P. Roach.

Take the delegates, visitors, and others at the proceedings of the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the Virginia Christian Missionary Society, held at Richmond, on November 8-10, 1899, numbering, perhaps, over two hundred, and multiply that number, say, an average railroad fare of five dollars each, to which add five dollars for the three days in Richmond and two days to go and come (which is low as compared with prices as they appear in the minutes), and you will have at least two thousand dollars or more which it costs to move the wheels of the machine, in time and money, of which no account is kept, and you will have some little idea of the cost of machine work. THE series of Helps prepared by the GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY has no superior. Much time, labor, and thought are bestowed on the entire series. The Quarterlies all abound in SCRIPTURAL TEACHING and are full of WHOLE-SOME DOCTRINE. The man that is not interested in the Bible will not take any interest in the investigation of these. A good way to use these Helps is to study them carefully at home during the week and leave them there when you go to the class on Lord's day. Helps thus used cannot prove otherwise than very beneficial.

Reflections.

A day or two since I received a note from an old, disabled sister in Christ, whose husband, a shoemaker, fell not long since and was crippled. The old couple are trying with all their might to support their three little grandchildren, besides themselves. A noble sister in the Lord assisted in clothing the little ones for several years; but the continued sickness of her husband, coupled with other circumstances, renders her unable to do so longer. So, in this Christian city, in this Christian nation, these poor old people and little children are almost, if not entirely, without friends. It is true that in modern phraseology the old sister once held membership in one of the uptown churches, but a year or so ago the only notice she had received from the church for a long time was a circular letter urging her to give the church liberal financial support, as it was deemed very important to pay the interest on the church debt, the pastor's salary, etc. If I am not very much mistaken, such letters are sometimes addressed to those who no longer reside in the same world, to say nothing of the same city, in which the church is located.

From sermons, songs, and prayers one would think that there is much love in the earth, but of what avail is the love in sermon, song, and prayer that has no echo from the poor and needy, the sick, the suffering, and the sorrowing? Do we not love eloquent sermons, sweet songs, and beautiful prayers more than we love Christ? Hear his words: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." (Matt. 25: 45.) How can we pray, "Thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven," while we are living in disobedience to his command: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself?" "And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love."

The Indian Sufferers.

A number of brethren and churches responded liberally to the call for sufferers in India. I have already received nearly fifty dollars. Let us continue contributions till the distress relieved there. I have the names and addresses of three of the missionaries who are in the famine-stricken district and who are personally engaged in relieving the starving. True, they are connected with one of the denominational missions, but my experience is that the missionaries of the various missions are the most reliable parties for such work, and since this is a work of relieving humanity, we had better send through them than not at all. One dollar will save a man from starving in India for twenty days. I shall ask for letters directly from those to whom I send, and have them published. J. M. M'CALEB. Louisville, Ky.

THE WONDERFUL VAPOR BATH.

Invention of an Ohioan that Guarantees Perfect Health, Strength, and Beauty to Every User, and Cures Without Drugs all Nervous Diseases, Rheumatism, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Blood and Kidney Troubles, Weakness, and the Most Obstinate Diseases, by Nature's Method of Steaming the Poisons out of the System.

Ministers and Those Who Have Used It Declare It To Be The Most Remarkable Ever Produced, Better Than Any Treatment at Hot Springs, Sanitariums, or Health Resorts.

38,478 "Quaker" Cabinets Sold Last Month.

A genius of the Queen City has placed on the market a Vapor Bath Cabinet that has proven a blessing to every man, woman, or child who has used it. Recent investigation of this remarkable invention was so very satisfactory there is no hesitancy in indorsing the same as just what all readers need. It is an air-tight inclosure, in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and, with only the head outside, enjoys at home, for 3 cents each, all the marvelous, cleansing, curative, and invigorating effects of the famous Turkish Bath, Hot Vapor, or Medicated Bath, with no possibility of taking cold afterwards, or in any way weakening the system. Hundreds of well-known physicians have given up their practice to sell this Cabinet—such eminent men as Emerson McKay, Detroit, who has already sold over 700; and John C. Wright, Chicago, who sold 125 last month. Thousands of remarkable letters have been written the makers from users, some of which, referring to

will be interesting to those who suffer from these dread maladies. W. L. Brown, Oxford, O., writes: "My father was down in bed for months with rheumatism; this Cabinet did him more good than $50 worth of drugs." G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., writes: "Was compelled to quit business a year ago, being prostrated with rheumatism and kidney troubles when your Cabinet came. Two weeks' use cured me; I have never had a twinge since." Rev. Geo. H. Hudson, Okemos, Mich., says: "I gave up my pastorate on account of nervous prostration and lung troubles; my editor so highly recommended your Cabinet, I tried it; from that day I have steadily grown better! am now well; nervousness gone; lungs strong; am a new man." Mrs. Ober, No. 994 Broad street, Columbus, O., writes: "It is grand for curing colds, la grippe, inflammation, aches, pains; it cured my uncle of neuralgia and sleeplessness with which he had long suffered. A neighbor cured herself of la grippe in one night, her little girl of measles, her son of croup. Another neighbor cured eczema of many years' standing." Hon. A. B. Strickland, of Bloomington, writes that the Cabinet did him more good than two years' doctoring; entirely cured him of catarrh, gravel, kidney trouble, and dropsy, with which he had long been afflicted.

Hundreds of Ministers

write, praising this Cabinet. Rev. H. C. Roerhaes, Everette, Kan., says: "It's a blessing; made me full of life and vigor; should be in use in every family." Rev. J. C. Richardson, N. Fifth street, Roxbury, Mass., was greatly benefited by its use, and recommends it highly, as also does Prof. E. P. Kline, of Ottawa University, who says: "I find it a great benefit. No Christian should be without it." Hon. V. C. Hay, St. Joe, Mo., writes: "Physicians gave me up to die; was persuaded by friends to try this Cabinet, and it cured me. I cannot praise it enough." Rev. Baker Smith, D. D., Fairmont, N. J., says: "Your Cabinet rids the body of aches and pain, and as cleanliness is next to godliness, it merits high recommendation."

Congressman John J. Lentz; Mrs. Kendricks, principal of Vassar College; John T. Brown, editor Christian Guide; Rev. C. M. Keith, editor Holiness Advocate, as well as hundreds of clergymen, bankers, governors, physicians, and influential people, recommend it highly.

It Prevents Disease, and physicians are unanimous in claiming that colds, la grippe, fevers, smallpox, consumption, kidney trouble, Bright's disease, cancer—in fact, such marvelous eliminative power has this Cabinet that no disease can gain a foothold in your body if you take these hot Thermal Baths weekly. Scientific reasons are brought out in a very instructive little book, issued by the makers. To this Cabinet has marvelous power. Dr. Shepard, of Brooklyn, states that he has never failed to draw out the deadly poison of snake bites, hydrophobia, blood poison, etc., by this Vapor Bath, proving that it is the most wonderful blood purifier known. If people, instead of filling their system with more poisons by taking drugs and nostrums, would get into a Vapor Bath Cabinet and steam out these poisons, and assist nature to act, they would have pure blood, and a skin as clear and smooth as the most fastidious could desire.

The Important Feature of this Cabinet is that it gives a hot vapor bath that opens the millions of pores all over the body, stimulating the sweat glands, drawing out all the impure salts, acids, and effete matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs, and cause disease, debility, and sluggishness. Astonishing is the improvement in health, feeling, and complexion. The first bath makes you feel like a new being, ten years younger.

With the Cabinet, if desired, is a Head and Complexion Steamer, in which the face, head, and neck are given the same vapor treatment as the body, producing the most wonderful results; removes pimples, blackheads, skin eruptions; cures Catarrh, Asthma, and Bronchitis.

O. C. Smith, Mt. Healthy, O., writes: "Since using this Cabinet, my Catarrh, Asthma, and Hay Fever, with which I have been afflicted since childhood, have never returned. Worth $1,000 to me. I have sold hundreds of these Cabinets. Every one was delighted. My wife finds it excellent for her ills."

Will Hasten Perspiration

every one knows is beneficial, but other methods are crude and insignificant when compared to the convenient and marvelous curative power of this Cabinet, known as the new 1902 style

Square Quaker Folding Thermal

Bath Cabinet. It is a genuine Cabinet, with a real door, opening wide as shown in cut. When closed it is air-tight; handsomely made of best, most durable, waterproof goods, rubber lined. A heavy steel frame supports it, making it a strong and substantial bath room within itself. It has top curtains—in fact, all the latest improvements.

The makers furnish an excellent stove with each Cabinet, also valuable recipes and formulas for medicated baths and ailments, as well as plain directions. It folds flat in 1-inch space, when not in use; easily carried; weighs but 10 pounds.

People don't need bath rooms, as this Cabinet may be used in any room; and bath tubs have been discarded since this invention, as it gives a far better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water. For the sick room its advantages are at once apparent. There have been on the market, but they were unsatisfactory, inconvenient; simply cheap, flimsy affairs.

After investigation it can be said the Quaker Cabinet made by the Cincinnati firm is the only practical article of its kind, and will last for years. It seems to satisfy and delight every user, and the Makers' Guarantee Results.

They assert positively, and their statements are backed by a vast amount of testimony from persons of influence, that this Cabinet will cure Nervous Troubles, Debility, Purify the Blood, Beautify the Skin, and Cure Rheumatism. (They offer $50.00 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures the most obstinate cases of Women's Troubles, La Grippe, Sleeplessness, Neuralgia, Malaria, Headaches, Obesity, Gout, Sciatia, Eczema, Scrofula, Piles, Dropsy, Blood and Skin Diseases, Liver and Kidney Troubles. It will

with one bath; breaks up all symptoms of La Grippe, Fevers, Pneumonia, Consumption, Asthma, and is really a household necessity. Gives the most known, and all those enjoying health should use it at least once or twice a week, for its great value is its marvelous power to draw out of the system all impurities that cause disease, and for this reason is truly a Godsend to all humanity.

HOW TO GET ONE.

All our readers who want to enjoy perfect health, prevent disease, and are afflicted, should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Space prevents a detailed description, but it will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and curative properties.

Write The World Manufacturing Company, 2188 World Building, Cincinnati, O., and ask them to send you their pamphlets describing this invention. The price is wonderfully low, only $5.00, complete, with heater, directions, and formulas. Head Attachments, if desired, $1.00 extra; and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much health, strength, and vigor.

Write to-day for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet; you won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and agree to refund your money after 30 days' use if not just as represented.

We know them to do as they agree. They are reliable and responsible; capital, $100,000.00.

The Cabinet is just as represented, and will be shipped promptly. You can remit safely by express, post office money order, bank draft, or certified check.

Don't fail to send for booklet, anyway.

The Cabinet is a Wonderful Seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and many are making from $100 to $150 every month and expenses.

Last Saturday the writer dropped into the millinery store of P. J. Tinsley, and was surprised to see the store packed with customers, all buying hats, bonnets, and millinery goods. The growth of this house has been very rapid, and observers, in trying to account for this wonderful growth, have reached the conclusion that short profits and fair dealing are responsible for it. The motto of the head of the firm is: "Quick sales, small profits, and integrity and honesty in business." This house has a full and well-selected line of millinery which it offers to both its wholesale and retail customers at prices that cannot fail to please. The people who visit the May Festival in this city, on May 7-12, will find it to their interest to examine the goods of this firm. Those visiting the city during the May Festival will secure half-fare railroad rates on all roads coming into Nashville, and Mr. Tinsley extends an earnest and very cordial invitation to visitors while in the city to make their headquarters at his store. He has a comfortable apartment for this purpose. Visitors may spend their time pleasantly and profitably in reading the best magazines.

In quotation from Brother Cunningham, in the Gospel Advocate of April 19, 1900, by mistake of proof reader the word "convention" appears where he wrote "connection." While the context shows the error plain enough to keep it from doing any harm, I regret that it occurred. F. D. SRYGLEY.

I have received another article from Brother Cunningham, which I decline to publish because it is another effort to discuss an issue I have not made and do not intend to discuss. The issue I make is on the proposition that "organized effort among the Disciples is denominational organization." This is the statement which caused Brother Cunningham to write his first article, and I have explained in every article I have written that it is all I affirm and all I propose to discuss just now on the subject of organized effort. Brother Cunningham quotes this proposition in the article before me, which I decline to publish, and says: "I agreed to deny no such proposition as he alleges. I know of no body of Christians properly designated Disciples with a capital 'D.'" Then there is no issue between us, and I do not see why he rushed into print to deny something I did not affirm or affirm something I do not deny. All I affirm is that "organized effort among the Disciples is denominational organization," and if Brother Cunningham does not deny that proposition, he may stand aside. I am still ready to discuss that proposition with anybody who will deny it; if no one denies it, the proposition stands unchallenged, and everybody knows organized effort is denominational organization. Brother Cunningham's statement that he knows "of no body of Christians properly designated Disciples with a capital 'D'" is a mere evasion. I know, and of course he knows, "of a body of Christians" that has "organized effort." I shall not stop to bandy words about how it is designated. I challenge the scripturalness of the thing itself, no matter how it is designated. This body of Christians holds annual conventions; has five or six general, chartered societies; publishes a yearbook in which, and in the census of the United States, it gives statistics of its churches, preachers, communicants, educational institutions, home and foreign missions, missionaries, etc., just like other denominations. Its "origin, aims, and progress" are as clearly defined by its own writers as those of any other denomination. This is the body of Christians I affirm is a denomination, and the organized effort of which I affirm is "denominational organization." I have no time and less inclination to higggle with Brother Cunningham or anybody else over irrelevant questions or collateral issues. The point I make is that this body of Christians, no matter how it is designated, is a denomination, and therefore an unscriptural and antiscritural body. The arguments and appeals I make are intended to disperse this ecclesiastical or denominational combine, "for we are in danger to be called in question" for the very existence of the thing, "there being no cause whereby we may give an account" of it. The only body of Christians there is in the New Testament is the church, which is the body of Christ. Every Christian is a member of it; Christ is head over it; there is no organization in it but local congregations. This is the only body of Christians any one has any scriptural authority to belong to or be a member of.

W. F. Roberts, Polk, Tenn., sends the following paragraph, clipped from the Pentecostal Herald, Louisville, Ky., with request that it be published in these columns, with such comments as may be deemed proper:

"The word of God does not put any great stress upon water baptism. The stress is upon the baptism of the Spirit. Looking back at the past, we can see how men, to a greater or less extent, have magnified water baptism out of proportion to its importance; and in proportion as they have done this, they have plainly failed to give the baptism of the Spirit its due place of prominence. As a result of this perversion, we have a formal, unspiritual church membership; many of whom are positively antagonistic to the deep, spiritual demands of the Bible. Some have gone to the extreme of saying that the gift of the Spirit is dependent upon the water, thereby seeming to attach more importance to water than Spirit. Such a false view cannot fail to result in untold hurt to the church of God. It is not our intention to forbid water nor to neglect water. The rite of water baptism must be perpetuated in the church; but, above all, let us preserve the precious doctrine of the baptism with the Holy Ghost."

In what book, chapter, and verse does "the word of God" put great stress, or any stress at all, on "the baptism of the Spirit" since the days of miracles? Why did the brother fail to cite any passage of scripture in support of his assertion? It could not have been because he did not think the world needed scripture teaching and admonition on the subject, for the best way to counteract the indifference he deplores would be to quote the plain teaching of "the word of God" to those with whom the word has great weight. The baptism of the Holy Spirit imparted power to perform miracles which was never intended to benefit those who received it. It was given to them for the benefit of others. There are but two cases of the baptism of the Spirit in the New Testament. (Acts 2: 1-21; 10: 44-48.) "And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning. Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." (Acts 11: 15, 16.) Why did Peter say "as on us at the beginning" if there had been anything like that which occurred at the house of Cornelius since "the beginning?" If the like of this occurred in every case of conversion, why did Peter say "as on us at the beginning" eight years before? Why not say as in every case of conversion? Why did this cause him to remember "the word of the Lord, how that he said, . . . Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost," if that "word of the Lord" meant anything else to him than what occurred in this case and "at the beginning." "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. . . . For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God." (Acts 2: 4; 10: 46.) These two cases occurred eight years apart, according to the commonly received chronology of the New Testament. It is strange that Peter would pass over eight years to find something like it if anything like it had occurred since "the beginning." If anything like it occurred afterwards, no mention of it is made in the New Testament. These two things are like each other; there is nothing else like them in the New Testament. They caused Peter to remember how the Lord said: "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." If anything else ever caused anybody to remember how the Lord said, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost," no mention is made of it in the New Testament. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit in Christians is an entirely different thing from the baptism of the Holy Spirit—so different that it never even caused anybody to remember how the Lord said, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit," in New Testament times. In it there is nothing miraculous. It is wholly a matter of submissiveness to the will of God as revealed by the Holy Spirit through inspired men in the holy Scriptures. To the extent people receive into their hearts the divine ideas thus revealed and make them the guiding, controlling principles of their lives they "drink into the Spirit," they "become partakers of the divine nature," they are "spiritually minded." Christians were doing this all the time in the days of the apostles, but it never caused anybody to remember how the Lord said: "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." Why not? What is the answer to that question unless it was because no one in New Testament times ever thought it was the baptism of the Holy Spirit or anything like it—not even resembling it enough to cause any one to think of the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit in Christians is not especially or specifically "dependent upon the water;" it is dependent upon submission and obedience to God. Men in rebellion against God or in disobedience to God do not receive or enjoy it. "And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him." (Acts 5: 32.) God does not give the Holy Spirit to people who do not obey him. To reject or refuse to obey any command of God, given by the Holy Spirit through inspired men in the holy Scriptures, is to reject the Holy Ghost. When an inspired man, speaking as the Holy Spirit gives him utterance, commands people to be baptized or to do anything else, it would be a strange freak of inconsistency in the Holy Ghost to enter into and abide with one who deliberately refused to obey the command.

In a recent issue of the American Baptist Flag Brother J. N. Hall says, editorially:

"We unhesitatingly assert that no man living has ever been, or ever will be, 'simply a Christian and nothing more,' unless he absolutely goes in a gang to himself. His church life will identify him as part of some sect."

In discussion with me this same Brother J. N. Hall—there is but one J. N. Hall—in his third reply, published in the Gospel Advocate of August 24, 1899, said:

"Baptists are simply and only 'Christians.' They are 'nothing else.' To be a 'Christian' is to be a follower of Christ. When a Baptist trusts God, he is a Christian; when he is baptized, he is still a Christian, just a step in advance of his condition as a believer; when he puts his light on a candlestick, joins a Baptist Church, he is still a Christian, but just a step in advance of his baptism; when he sits scripturally at the Lord's table, he is yet a Christian, but a step in advance of his membership; when he is faithful unto death, he is still a Christian, an advancing Christian, and he has also been a Baptist at every step. Every scriptural step is a Baptist step and a Christian step. A believer is a Baptist as far as he has gone; a baptized believer is a Baptist as far as he has followed the Scriptures. So with every step. Baptists are 'only Christians,' nothing else. They belong to 'the body of Christ,' nothing else."

Brother Hall has evidently abandoned this position which he argued last year, else he would see that a man can be "simply a Christian and nothing more" and "go in a gang" with the Baptists. What caused him to abandon the position he argued in discussion with me? The only reply I made was as follows:

"Brother Hall says: 'Baptists are simply and only Christians.' Then why call them 'Baptists?' Strange that it takes some other word than 'Christian' to designate people who are 'simply and only Christians.' If Baptists were simply and only Christians, no man could be a Christian and not be a Baptist. There is some difference between Baptists and Christians, else no man could be either without being both."

He never referred to the matter again in that discussion, and the words I quote at the beginning of this paragraph are all I have seen or heard from him on the subject since then. Was he knocked entirely out "in a gang to himself" by that one little paragraph? Suppose Brother Hall is now correct in the statement that no man can be "simply a Christian and nothing more, unless he absolutely goes in a gang to himself," what then? Does God require or even authorize any man to be anything more than a Christian? If so, what more and how much more than Christians does God require us to be? If God neither requires nor authorizes any one to be more than a Christian, every man ought to be simply a Christian and nothing else, even if he must "absolutely go in a gang to himself." It is not the straight and narrow way which leads unto life eternal to be something and do something God does not require or authorize in order to have a "church life," be identified "as part of some sect," and keep from "absolutely going in a gang to himself." That a man can be "simply a Christian and nothing more" without going in "a gang to himself" is easily demonstrated, however, by the historical facts of the New Testament. In New Testament times every Christian was "simply a Christian and nothing more," and no Christian went in "a gang to himself." They all went in one gang because there was only one gang for any of them to go in. They were all "one body in Christ," and that one body was the church. Every Christian was a member of it and Christ was head over it. There were no Baptists, no Methodists, no Presbyterians, no denominations of any kind; there ought to be no such things now; and no Christian can be anything of the kind without violating the plain teaching of the New Testament, even if he has to go "in a gang to himself."

I publish the following communication with pleasure because it calls attention to a subject that ought to be carefully studied:

"McMinnville, Tenn., April 6, 1900.—Brother Srygley: Knowing you as I do, I feel sure that one can take issue with you without in the least causing offense. I am sure you are anxious to come to a knowledge of the truth on all subjects that pertain to life and godliness; therefore, I desire to take issue with you on your position that 'the same "process" which makes one a Christian adds him to the church.' I know you will be surprised that I should object to this statement; but, as I understand you to use it, I do. I am aware of the fact that the brotherhood in general agree with you; however, we understand it to be every Christian's duty to search the Scriptures for himself, and that we should be ready at all times to give up any position that we may hold when it is proven to be false. Trusting that you are in such a condition of mind, I come to the question. If you use the word 'Christian' in the sense that it is used in Acts 11: 26, I agree with you, but I understand you to use it in the sense that the same 'process' that brings one into the remission of sins adds him to the church. It is this use of the word and 'process' that I object to. I understand that you so use it in the Hall-Srygley debate and other writings of yours. I understand remission of sins to be as equal with pardon, forgiveness, cleansing, and salvation from past sins. The issue, then, is: Does the same 'process' that brings one into the pardon of sins bring him into the body of Christ, which is the church? This I understand you affirm, and I deny. The Bible plainly teaches that whoever enters the body of Christ enters by a birth, yet the Bible plainly teaches that no unclean person can enter the church. Then the cleansing must take place before the birth. When and how does one come into the pardon of sins? We read: 'For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.' (Matt. 26: 28.) It is the blood of Christ that cleanses from sin. None but the cleansed can enter the kingdom of God. God's Holy Spirit will not take up his abode in an unclean heart. No unclean or unsaved man can be built into God's building. Salvation, cleansing, pardon, and remission of sins all take place before one can enter God's kingdom. Therefore, the same 'process' that brings one into the remission of sins does not add him to the church. Since it is the blood of Christ that cleanses from sin, the very moment the one dead to sin comes in contact with the blood of Christ he comes into the remission of sins. If we can locate the place where one comes into the blood of Christ, we have then located the place where the sinner comes into the remission of sins; and it follows that the same 'process' that brings him into the blood of Christ brings him into the remission of sins. Where does one come into the blood of Christ? In order to locate the place where one comes into the blood of Christ it will be necessary to locate the blood. Where is it? Is it in the body? If 'the same "process" that brings one into the remission of sins adds him to the church,' the blood must be in the body, or church. If it is then true that 'without the shedding of blood is no remission,' you have a sinner in the body. If it is the shed blood of Christ that cleanses from sin, there is no cleansing without the blood; and if the blood is in the body, the sinner must come to the blood, hence into the body in order to reach the blood; so you have a sinner in the body, which is the church. That will not do. It can readily be seen that the blood is not in the body. Where is it? It is the shed blood of Christ. Where was it shed? That is the place we will find it. 'But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs; but one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out blood and water.' (John 19: 33, 34.) Notice that when they came to Jesus they saw that he was dead. We are trying to find where Christ's blood was shed. Now, where was it shed? In his death. He was dead. Where is the blood of Christ? In his death. How may one come into it? By coming into his death. Therefore, when one comes into the death of Christ, he comes into the pardon of his sins. Now, by what 'process' does one come into the death of Christ? By the same 'process' he comes into the remission of sins. 'Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.' (Rom. 6: 3, 4.) Where is the blood of Christ? We have found it to be in his death. How do we enter his death? Paul says that we are buried with him by baptism into it. 'Process' No. 1: Where, then, do we come into the blood of Christ? In the baptismal tomb. Where was Christ laid when dead? In the tomb. Where did he (Christ) receive life from the dead? In the tomb. Paul says if we have been planted in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. Therefore, where is the sinner quickened, made alive? It is the blood that makes alive. The sinner, dead to sin, comes into the blood of Christ in the baptismal tomb, and there in the watery grave he is made alive—cleansed from all sin by the blood of Christ. (Read Lev. 17: 11.) This being true and the blood of Christ cleansing from sin, how can the sinner come into the pardon of sins this side of the baptismal tomb? Now, since the sinner has come into the blood of Christ and thereby into the remission of sins, we are now ready for 'Process' No. 2, or a birth from the watery grave into the body of Christ, which is his church. 'For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.' (Rom. 6: 5.) 'Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.' (John 3: 5.) I say it is the blood that makes alive. I understand that it makes alive in the sense that it cleanses the sinner dead to sin and makes him alive to God. I understand that the word of God quickens. (Ps. 119: 50.) In fact, I believe all the requirements of the sinner have something of a cleansing effect. Faith cleanses the object and motives of life—the heart; repentance cleanses the acts of life—the character; confession cleanses or separates the believing penitent from the world of skepticism. The burial of one thus prepared brings him into the death of Christ and cleanses from all sin by his blood. The resurrection from the watery grave brings the one now cleansed into the family of God, and he is now in the condition of those who were 'called Christians first at Antioch.' 'And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.' And now, beloved, 'if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.' (1 John 1: 7.) May God help us to so walk. Dear brother, I trust that you will see that this is written in the love of the truth and that, if you can see where I have missed the truth, you will lead me into the light.

"JESSE D. WALLING."

It had not occurred to me that baptism was more than a part of "the process which makes a man a Christian;" much less had I considered it two processes by itself. As I understood the matter, the process which makes a man a Christian and adds him to the one body—the church—is to be born of water and of the Spirit. (John 3: 5.) I do not understand that a man is born of water and of the Spirit till he is baptized, and I do not understand that he is baptized till he is buried and raised up. When I baptize a man I am as careful to raise him up as I am to bury him, and if from lapse of memory or from any other cause I should leave him in the creek, under the water, I hardly think I would feel that I had baptized him. At any rate, I would not think I had baptized him "decently and in order," as Paul says all things should be done. For this reason it had not occurred to me to make the point Brother Walling makes. Brother Walling will no doubt agree that the process which makes a man a Christian is to be born again; he will also agree, I presume, that he is added to the one body—the church—by that same process, which is all I have ever affirmed.

Why Christ Appeared to Saul.

Henry Hardshell: "I am glad we meet again, friend Faithful, and I wish to express once more to you the pleasure and benefit I derive from your company. I have not taken those important steps in obedience to God you have repeatedly urged upon me, yet I like you and like to talk to you of these things."

Frank Faithful: "I have enjoyed these interviews because I hoped you would soon become obedient to the gospel, as so many thousands did in apostolic times who did not have half the instruction you have. Talk may be very helpful, but

"A man of words, and not of deeds,
Is like a garden full of weeds.

The Savior said to those who approved his teaching: 'If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.'

Henry H.: "You must be patient with me. I try to be sincere and have already told you that I have a very great desire to be a Christian. It may be I am one of those who require 'line upon line and precept upon precept.' I heard of a lady who repeated, by actual count, one word twenty times to her son before he learned it. On being asked how she could tell him twenty times over the same thing, she answered: 'If I had stopped at nineteen, he never would have learned it.' I hope our interviews are not in vain, if I am a dull student. In our last meeting you showed me clearly that the salvation of Saul of Tarsus was by the power of the gospel of Christ and insisted that I ought not to wait for any great miracle, as the light which shone about him, nor to wait for any voice or extraordinary occurrence."

Frank F.: "Yes, Henry, I remember the investigation and promised to show you why it was the Savior appeared to Saul in that miraculous way. Indeed, Paul himself has satisfied our curiosity on that subject. When we note the reason he gives for our Savior's miraculous appearance to him, I think we will understand why we ought not to look for anything of the kind to accompany our salvation now. Although Paul, by this appearance of Christ to him, was called to the highest position under Jesus Christ that any man ever held, that of the apostleship, yet we have found in regard to the pardon of his sins he was required to obey the gospel the same as the humblest convert in the ranks of the army of the saved."

Henry H.: "As I now recall the subject, you proved that the appearance of Christ to Saul did not pardon his sins nor give him any measure of the Holy Ghost, because the record clearly shows these were not received until the visit of Ananias to him, which was three days after the Savior's appearance to him on the road. As the appearance of Christ, according to your argument, did not give him these blessings, I become anxious to know why he did appear to him. Now, you have told me that Paul explains that very question. I would like for you to show me the book, chapter, and verse where I can find it."

Frank F.: "In Acts 26: 16 he says the Savior said to him: 'Rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose.' Note the fact, Henry, that he here mentions the appearance and uses the word 'purpose' in telling the end or design of this miraculous apparition. He says, 'I have appeared unto thee for this purpose'—to pardon your sins? No; he does not say that, but says: 'To make thee a minister and a witness.' What kind of minister and witness? An apostolic minister and witness, one whom he would send to the Gentiles to open their eyes and turn them from the power of Satan unto God. To be a minister of this high order one must have seen Christ after his resurrection and be called by him to do this work. Paul received from Christ, in person, this high commission; hence he said to the Corinthians: 'Am I not an apostle? Am I not free? Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?' He was not inferior to the chiefest apostles and did more work than all of them. Henry, if you ever expect to be called to be an apostle of Christ, as Paul was, you had better keep your eyes wide open, because you must see Jesus with your own eyes before you can be one. Then you must be able to show the signs of your high office, which in his case were so abundantly wrought. You may, by obedience to Christ, be a very good Christian and reach heaven and immortality at last; but an apostle of Christ, as Paul was, you cannot be unless you see the Lord Jesus Christ."

Henry H.: "I have no such aspiration for myself, but I have supposed the apostles had successors."

Frank F.: "They had no successors as apostles. The gospel of Christ they preached they committed to others to preach, but as apostles of Christ they never had and never will have any successors."

Henry H.: "Are there not some who now claim to be successors to the apostles of Christ?"

Frank F.: "I am sorry to say there are, but, in truth, they cannot be. Among the claimants are the Pope of Rome, some Mormon pretenders, and others. Henry, are you prepared to admit their claims?"

Henry H.: "No, not their claims, but I have been taught to believe that John the Baptist established the church and that from his time on down to the present there has been a regular line of Baptist churches in succession. This is the kind of succession I believe in."

Frank F.: "This would be just as hard to prove as the Romish or Mormon claims to the apostolic succession. There were 'false apostles' and deceitful workers who transformed themselves into the apostles of Christ at Corinth. (2 Cor. 11: 13.) In the church at Ephesus there were those who said they were apostles, whom the church tried and 'found them liars.' (Rev. 2: 2.) They were unable to show the signs of an apostle."

Henry H.: "Well, be that as it may, it does seem to me that a real, genuine conversion to Christ ought to be attended by something out of the ordinary hearing and obeying the written gospel."

Frank F.: "I know, Henry, how hard it is to yield a notion, and regard it untrue, in which we have been reared by pious parents, whom I will not condemn; but they always taught us to search the Bible and act for ourselves, because each of us must give account to God for himself. Henry, you have clearly seen we have no reason to expect any marvelous, abstract operation of the Holy Ghost to be converted and are clearly invited and admonished by the Spirit of God to obey the word which is nigh unto us, and not pray God to send down anything from above or up from beneath to save us. From what we have clearly learned from the Bible we know that if a man had seen Jesus Christ in person, as Saul saw him, and had seen a great light from heaven shine around him, and all this could be proven by ten thousand credible witnesses, even then this would not prove that the man was pardoned. Saul saw all that and then had to obey the gospel to be pardoned of sin. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation. If an apostle, angel, or man preaches anything else as the power of God to save man, he comes under the anathemas or curses of God Almighty. Paul clearly teaches this in Gal. 1. Henry, be it far from any of us to fight against God by denying the use and authority of his appointments in the gospel. Think on these things."

Henry H.: "I have at least one more difficulty, which I will mention when we meet."

The Pastor System a Failure.

Some able and valuable articles that have appeared recently in the Gospel Advocate have stirred up my spirit on this very important subject so that, with the editor's permission, I will say a few words upon it. First, I desire to call especial attention to the article by J. C. McQuiddy (March 1, 1900), entitled, "Sadly Scattered Disciples." It is good—all good. I wish it might be put in tract form and scattered broadcast over the land; and the Gospel Advocate readers who have not read it should turn back and do so at once. Read, ponder, act—provided you have a desire to act, have a hungering and thirsting after righteousness that you may be filled.

It is right here that I locate the taproot of the pastor system, and all the ills that afflict the church. It is the want of that hungering and thirsting after righteousness that our blessed Lord taught us to have in his service, and the natural and necessary consequence of this vital lack in the heart is the want of steadfast obedience in the life. It seems to me that there must be almost an entire abandonment of the present modes of thought and lines of action, a readjustment of all on Scripture lines, and a more submissive appeal to the Scriptures for all we say and do. It appears to me that it is self-evident that the pastor system is a failure; but will not the average mind conclude that the mutual edification system is a worse failure? Beyond all controversy it is scriptural, and it is our most sacred duty to strive to make it a success. A clipping from the Gospel Advocate of January 7, 1897, page 1, that I recently found among my treasures, reads thus: "That the opportunity was offered for all to exercise their gifts in the edifying service of the principle meeting of the New Testament churches when all the members came together on the first day of the week to break bread is not a debatable question. That proposition is established by the unanimous testimony of Bible students of all denominations of every age and country since the days of the apostles. The modern custom of having nothing in the way of teaching and edification but a sermon in that meeting is a departure from New Testament order, and a violation of the judgment and experience of men."

It seems to me that the Protestant conscience is limited to a choice of one of three modes of conducting the worship of the church: the pastor system, the mutual edification system, or the mixed system. The latter call their pastor a preacher, and do not hire him by the year, nor give him any stated salary, for these things would be very wrong; but, as long as he is with them, he usually leaves out the better part of what the pastor does—the caring for the church—and cleaves to his worst and most damaging apostasy, that of closing all mouths but his own. The brethren wish it so; but why? Because they have neither been taught to do the will of God in these things nor strengthened for the service that he requires of them. Had the preacher been a man of God, an evangelist, he would have done for them the work of an evangelist, and would have taught them that in every department of the work and worship of the church they should be doers of the word, and not hearers only.

That we may the better grasp the situation, let us consider for a few moments the reasons why the pastor system is necessarily a failure. The first and best reason is because it is not of God, and therefore is not written in the book of God. There is not one word concerning the pastor or preacher, in the Bible, in all that makes them different from private members, elders, or evangelists. If a man be a scriptural character, we can find and apply the laws that govern him; but for these men there is no law, and they are, in truth, a lawless set of men—not bad men, necessarily, but without law, and not conforming to the law of the Lord. By what law does he become pastor? By what law is he sent for to become "the pastor" of the church? By what law is his tenure of office regulated, and how long shall he stay? What law regulates his salary, and what are his authority and work? Chapter and verse, please, for no other arguments or evidences will be allowed. To the law and to the testimony! Not once is it recorded that the church may ever relax its steadfastness and allow any man to do all their edifying for them; no, not for a single day. If so, where? Not once is it written that the whole church kept silence through the whole time of their worship, while the pastor preached a fine sermon for them. It could be so written now.

The above reason for the necessary failure of the pastor system is a sufficient one for all God-fearing people, if they have the ability to grasp and apply it; but, for the benefit of weaker minds, I will give some of the practical workings of the pastor system. It fails to develop the pastor, and it fails to develop his flock. So soon as his two sermons are preached on Sunday the poor pastor is in deep perplexity as to what to preach on the next Lord's day. Then two texts are selected and two sermons are elaborated. The audience is pleased with their delivery, and the pleasant performance is pronounced a success; but neither pastor nor people are developed in the divine life, and why? Because they have neither of them done the divine will. The pastor cannot thus develop himself in the work of God, for he is not doing the will of God, for he is hired to do for the church what the Lord wants the church to do for themselves, and in doing this he fails to develop the church as well as himself. Let us illustrate. A father, wishing to develop physical strength in his little son, required him to split the wood for the family stove; but the boy hired a chum to do the work for him. Wishing to strengthen his son's mind, the father sent the boy to the best teacher of mathematics; but the youngster persuaded a friend to do all the harder problems for him. When this sharp lad became a man, the Lord, as one of the best means for his development in spiritual strength, required him to assist in the private and public edification of the church; but they all agreed to hire a pastor to do all this work for them, giving as a reason that he could do it much better than they could. He removed to a part of the country where the pastor system was not popular, and there he united with others to get rid of the most laborious part of the worship by hiring one preacher a little while, and then another a little while, and he found himself nearly as well pleased with this plan as the other. It will not be difficult, I think, for all to see that if a man, from childhood up, hires all his harder tasks done for him, he can never develop much physical, mental, or spiritual strength; and he will be ill fitted for the conflicts of life or for the enjoyments of heaven.

But the preacher is not hired like the pastor. No; and that is the main reason, I suppose, why the poor, abused man gets so little pay. But that sort of thing cannot last long, for what you call preachers are rapidly becoming pastors—pastors by the year, instead of for a shorter period; pastors for a longer term, and for better pay. The fact is, the half-preach and half-edification system is a very poor makeshift. Under this kind of discouragement the edification of the brethren becomes worse and worse, and this makes the demand for the preacher more and more till things finally settle down to business in the shape of the regular and inevitable pastor system. And here let me say to those who will have preaching whenever they can, and whenever they have a preacher, will have him do all their edifying for them: it is not worth while to worry the Lord longer with your ungainly makeshift. He said to the Laodiceans, "I would thou wert cold or hot;" and if you will not do your own duty as to edifying in the worship, it were as well to come out boldly and at once for the pastor by the year, and then pay him well for his job, and be fair enough to allow him to do the work of the elders, as well as that of the members. Why not? It is as fair for the one as for the other. If one should have his harder work done for him, so should the other; and this is just what is usually done in the regular pastor churches; but in the half-and-half churches it would seem, from all accounts, that the "preacher" does all he can of the public work of the members, but the work of the elders is almost totally neglected. Is it not so?

So I regard the pastors, regular and irregular, all who are not written in the book, as out of their place, and the churches that hire them as badly out of order; but there is a cause back of all this, a cause that leads unsuspecting churches into the first stages of the pastor system. Let us watch the drift of things a little, and see. They hire a preacher to hold a meeting of from two to six weeks for them. This appears to me the easiest kind of pastor work in the world, for it allows the revivalist, sometimes falsely called "evangelist," to use the same sermons over and over till he can fairly eclipse the poor regulars, and leave the luckless elders entirely in the shade; and he can have a kind of a holiday picnic sort of a time just as long as he can succeed in holding sufficiently the popular favor to make it win. This may seem hard on the revivalist, but they have been hard on the churches, and it is time for an effort to be made to turn the tide in favor of truth and righteousness in the ministry of the word. It is a kind of a high pressure pastor system and a work that the regular pastor often insists on doing himself; for it does not seem fair to allow the revivalist to do the easiest work, and receive the most pay, and go off with the greatest honors, while it is the pastor that cares for the church, sows the seed, and bears the burden and heat of the day. The brilliant and spasmodic efforts of the revivalist often leave the regular pastor in a sad plight, and he is often tempted to get even by joining the ranks of the revivalists himself; and this he often does, the churches, the while, faring worse and worse, as every reaction carries them farther back than the unhealthy excitement carried them forward.

Now, let us see what effect this work of the revivalist kind of a pastor has on the steadfast continuance of the church in the efforts to edify itself. To my mind it has a most disastrous effect, and it is this phase of the matter that suggested to my mind the propriety of calling him a "kind of pastor." Let me illustrate the matter by narrating an incident that is still fresh in my mind. A little, struggling church was striving earnestly to edify itself according to the teaching of the word and example of the first church, but ceased all efforts in that direction as soon as the preacher came who was to hold a meeting for them. He remained for several weeks, and all that time that part of the service that was calculated to enrich the church in all utterance and knowledge was set aside; elders and members were silent, and, so far as that duty was concerned, they became, for the time, hearers only. A brother protested, but they remained steadfast in their disregard of the divine will in this respect, till just at the close of the meeting, the last meeting that the good preacher would be with them at the Lord's table, the brother earnestly begged that for this one time the brethren might have the opportunity of encouraging each other around the Lord's table. The preacher and temporary pastor was a good and sympathetic man, and he seemed deeply moved by the earnest entreaty of the brother, and said: "I will ask the elders about the matter." He did so, and, having gained their consent, the coveted opportunity was given at the close of the sermon, and the dear brethren responded so earnestly that the impetus given by that meeting was felt for a long time after. But notice that the consent of the elders was deemed necessary to set aside for a single Lord's day a human law to allow the divine law in the case to be obeyed, and every protracted meeting was conducted on a similar plan; and so they are all over the world, I guess, and thus are the converts biased at the very outset in favor of the preacher doing all the work in the public services of the church. This is certainly one of the root causes for the present drift toward the regular pastor system and innovations, and thus we see that the short pastorates, as well as the long pastorates, fail to develop the church in the direction of robust strength and of faithful obedience to the word of the Lord.

It will be readily seen, I think, that the whole pastor system, of whatever grade or shade the pastor may be, is a failure not only in the development of the church, but also in the work of preserving the purity of the worship and in the effort to keep out innovations; for it is itself a grievous departure from the purity of the worship, a corrupting of the simplicity that is in Christ, and one of the worst of all the innovations to be found among us and the weakness and bias it produces tend strongly to the development of every other fad, fancy, and folly that hinder our progress and prevent our success. But many that highly disapprove of the pastor system seem to think it all right to allow a preacher, when they have one with them, to occupy all the time usually allotted to the edification of the brethren. Allow me to ask: What is the standard of right in our worship of the Lord our God, and by what word or law of his can we lawfully set aside for a single day any part of the worship that he established?

The hireling works for wages, and he will strive to please those he is working for, he will delight their itching ears; but he will not, in time of trouble or danger, risk himself to shield or protect the flock. It would destroy his influence, he says, to get mixed up in any of the fusses of the church; and this may be true if he be not one that is a spiritual man. The hireling is unfit for that kind of work, but it is to his everlasting misfortune that he should be a hireling. He is a man that wants a job, not for the good he can do to others, but for the wages that come to himself. The pastor may or may not be a hireling. I am not able to see that the wages make the hireling. It is the motive that rules the act. How can we conclude that "pastor" and "hireling" are synonymous terms? The evidence that the Lord gives of a hireling is not that he receives wages, but the fact that he cares not for the sheep; and we well know that this is a characteristic of those who work for wages only, and not for the Lord. They are not spiritual men, and they are neither able nor willing to stand by the flock in time of trouble and danger. This failure to care for the sheep is not confined to the regular pastors, but it seems to me that it is much oftener found among the preachers and revivalists, or the irregular pastors. They seem neither able nor willing to help the flock out of trouble, and it seems to me that this is the reason, more than any other, why the people so soon weary of the "preacher" and demand a "pastor." But whether the pastor be regular or irregular, whether he be well paid or poorly paid, and whether he be honest or dishonest, the fact remains that to do a brother's work for him is a damage to that brother; and if any kind of a pastor or preacher is hired, persuaded, or allowed to do the work of a church for them, then a grievous work is done to that church.

Odds and Ends.

"If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." Sidney Lanier, the Southern poet, tells of a woman whom he knew, and counted it a high privilege that he knew her. She had been confined to her bed for twenty years, by a form of spinal disease, which prevented all locomotion. She had to be cared for like a little child, every meal brought to her, every drink of water handed to her, and she was not rich to command service. Surrounded by such circumstances, shut up with such vexing contradictions, she yet was so bright and cheerful that her room was called "Sunnyside." She was so fragile that she was known as the "White Flower," and yet strong men came to her in their trouble for the peace of her smile and the strength of her faith and courage. I recall, in almost every place where I have labored and lived, just such persons who, transfigured by Christ, have lived to bless the world and shame it for its lack of patience, hope, and courage.

Oneness (John 17: 21).—One with him in life—quickened. (1 John 5: 11.) One with him in suffering—"heirs." (Rom. 8: 17.) One with him in death and resurrection—baptized. (Rom. 6: 4, 5.) One with him in service—co-laborers. (2 Cor. 6: 1.) One with him in heart—"no divisions." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) One in spirit and body—members of each other. (1 Cor. 12: 13.) One in love and assurance—knit together. (Phil. 1: 27.) One in conflict as good soldiers. (1 Tim. 6: 12.) Oneness of the Spirit to be kept by us. (Eph. 4: 3.) One with him in place—heaven. (1 Thess. 5: 10; John 14: 3.) "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, . . . and in you all." (Eph. 4: 4-6.)

The Spiritual Man.—Spiritual birth followed by a spiritual life. (John 3: 3.) Spiritual life followed by a spiritual walk. (Gal 5: 16.) Spiritual walk needs spiritual strength. (Eph. 3: 16.) Spiritual strength necessitates spiritual food. (John 6: 51.) Spiritual food requires spiritual appetite. (1 Pet. 2: 2.) Spiritual appetite needs spiritual atmosphere. (Col. 3: 1.) So he quickens, raises, and seats us in heavenly places. (Eph. 2: 6.) The spiritual man puts faith above sight. (2 Cor. 5: 7.) He has nothing in himself, but all in God. (Phil. 4: 13.) He is taught of God to know him. (John 17: 3; 6: 44.) He is drawn of God to love him. (John 12: 32.) He is persuaded of God to trust him. (Phil. 1: 6.) He is satisfied with God and rejoices in him. (Phil. 4: 4.)

Heaven is not reached by a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

And I count this thing to be grandly true—
That a noble deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common clod
To a purer air and a wider view.

"Tacking."—Adverse circumstances are not to be taken as an adverse providence. I was once on the coast of Florida, ten miles from my preaching place, on the other side of the sea, or Indian River. Opposing winds kept us in camp all day Saturday. Hoping for a favoring breeze, we waited until Sunday, but still the wind was adverse. The appointment must be filled, so my companion and I started to town in the very "teeth" of the gale. Being in a sailboat, we had to pursue a zigzag course, or "tack" from side to side. We made a chain of letter "Z's" ten miles long. No mere on-looker could tell whether we were heading for the shore, or whether our goal was a distant point up or down the river. But at last, after traveling thirty miles, we reached our point, ten miles away, having fought and conquered the wind that tried its best to blow us from our course. We harnessed that opposition and made it do our bidding. We made that seeming impediment a stepping-stone to sure success. Like the kite, we were borne on the wings of the wind that fought us. Our whole life is a zigzag course. Every one who has a well-defined purpose in life must make up his mind that the wind will often be against him. Shall he give up? Shall he reef his sails? Shall he lie idly in the bottom of his boat, and say that he will drift with the wind? If circumstances seem adverse to his original purpose, shall he abandon all purpose? For the present the wind appears to be against him, not that he may give up to it, but that he shall develop his wits and his energy in making use of it. A boy of fifteen made up his mind that he would be a professor of science. He started as a typesetter, ran a small grocery, obtained a clerkship, entered college for a scientific course, worked where he could during vacations, became a tutor in a new and rising college, and was finally elected to a professorship. Everybody blamed him for not sticking to one thing, but he had his eye on that professorship from the time he was fifteen years old. He had no money to start with, but he had a fixed purpose. He had to "tack" his vessel, so that he was blamed for being so unstable and fickle; but he was not unstable. He believed that God's hand was in the opposing wind, and that God meant him to find out how to grasp that almighty hand and pull himself along by it.

Through bitter medicine comes health;
From plowing deep, abounding grain;
From white-hot crucibles, golden wealth;
From threatening skies, the grateful rain.

GEORGE GOWEN.

A Queen's White Doves.

One of the prettiest features of the installation of Wilhelmina, as Queen of the Netherlands, was the releasing of six thousand carrier pigeons to bear to every part of the low countries the message of joy to the Dutch people that their beloved young queen had really come into her own—had taken her oath of fealty to them and received through their representative their own pledge of loyalty and devotion.

In quaint little towns, where windmills turned and where lazy-looking sailboats drifted up and down canals, Dutch peasants watched for the white-winged messenger whose coming would announce the enthronement of the young girl Holland loves.

In her childhood she was allowed a rare privilege for royal children—to play with other children in the streets. Once, when she was about ten years old, she was enjoying a sleigh ride with her mother, the Queen Regent, and came upon a large group of children, playing snowball.

Wilhelmina asked permission to join the sport, and the royal sleigh stood still for half an hour, "while the future sovereign of the Netherlands was boisterously hitting and being hit by nobody knows who."

Her teachers were charged by her mother to treat her as they would any other schoolgirl. The mother's purpose was to make Wilhelmina just what she is—a sweet, wholesome, healthy, and well-educated Dutch woman.—Exchange.

PERSONAL.

Brother Joe Foster, of Carter's Creek, was in the office on last Friday.

Prof. Z. McConico, of Franklin, Tenn., was in the office on last Saturday.

Dr. T. J. Hardison, of Jameson, Tenn., was in to see us one day last week.

Brother E. A. Elam, of Bellwood, Tenn., will preach for the church of Christ worshipping on Tenth street next Lord's day.

Brother Paul Slayden, pastor of the church of Christ at Columbia, Tenn., is at Riverside, Wayne County, Tenn., in a meeting.

Brother F. W. Smith has recently returned from Detroit, Mich. He preached one week and baptized one person. He is now in a meeting at Tullahoma, Tenn.

Brother George Gowen, of Lancaster, Ky., has gone to Franklin, Tenn., to accept the place made vacant by the resignation of the former pastor, Brother Hall Calhoun. Brother Gowen stopped over in Nashville, en route to Franklin, and made us a pleasant visit. Brother Calhoun has gone to Henderson, Tenn., to teach in the Georgie Robertson Christian College.

A few days ago, at the home of the writer, Brother T. E. Burke, of Mount Juliet, Tenn., and Miss Cynthia Warren, of Rogana, Tenn., were quietly married in the presence of a few friends. They left immediately for the home of the bridegroom. Both are consecrated members of the church. I join their many friends in wishing for them a long life of usefulness.—L. S. White, Gallatin, Tenn.

I have now taken up Brother McCaleb's work in Kanda Ward. The Lord's Supper is observed each Lord's day by a few brethren. The day school is doing well. About forty children are being educated. Not long since forty-one children were present at one time to be instructed in the Bible. It would have done you good to have seen the eager, glowing face of their teacher, Hatsu San, as she told them the story of Jesus and the woman at the well. Not long afterwards the ready, original answers of the children in the review lesson were very encouraging. An hour is spent in Bible study on each Sunday and each Thursday. Pray for us.—William J. Bishop, Tokyo, Japan.

EDITORIAL.

An old truth is better than a new error.

God sees a vice in us every time we seek to exalt ourselves.

Many people are asking blessings instead of giving thanks.

It is not possible to manufacture ideas by multiplying words.

Lost opportunities make up some of the heaviest burdens of life.

It is a great mistake to neglect duty in trying to please the world.

God does not waste much time with people who will not obey him.

The best preparation for to-morrow is to attend faithfully to duty to-day.

The man who seeks peace without resting in the Lord will never find it.

People who would rather do wrong than suffer wrong never get very close to God.

The best way to keep out of temptation is to keep busy in the service of the Lord.

The Bible nowhere requires Christians to confess their goodness one to the other.

We sometimes overlook our opportunities while looking at the favors others enjoy.

It does no good to rebuke wrongdoing in others if we apologize for sin in ourselves.

It is better to be censured for doing right than to be complimented for doing wrong.

It is a waste of time to ask God to help you when you are not endeavoring to help yourself.

Those who exaggerate your virtues will probably magnify your faults when behind your back.

We never do much for ourselves until we begin to help other people. "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Josh Billings was in a New York office one day when an overdressed young man entered. After a few moments' conversation the celebrated humorist said, "Young man, may I ask you how long you have worn that collar?" referring to a collar of prodigious height, of which the youth seemed very proud. With considerable self-satisfaction the young man responded: "Why, a week." "Well, I want to say," drawled Mr. Billings, "that a man who can wear a paper collar for a week ain't good for anything else." The stricture was severe, yet the criticism came very near to being deserved. There are more young men than the victim of Josh Billings' cutting remark of whom it may be said that they are not good for much else than tailors' dummies. It is proper to be well dressed; but clothes are only an incident of life. There are men, we regret to say, in this great land of ours, who boast of wearing half a dozen suits of clothes a day; but it is the only thing they have to boast of. Clothes are not an important part of life. To give to them the time, attention, and money that belong to the worthy interests of a soul is to mark oneself as neither very wise nor very broad. The man who has time to follow all the trifling fashions of the day and to spend hours before his mirror, in his dressing room or at his tailor's, is not the man upon whom the nation or the church can lean very heavily.—Forward.

The people are living too fast. With many life is a daily struggle for existence. Almost daily the expression is to be heard: "The world has gone mad after money." But as people must have money to live comfortably, there is some excuse for them. The masses of the people must spend weary days and sleepless nights in planning, scheming, and executing. I venture the assertion that over half of the people are compelled to plan to make money more than they would like. They must do this or lose their positions of trust and influence. A constant and tremendous strain is made upon both the mental and physical manhood. Poor man! His store of energy is soon exhausted, his nervous system is all shattered, and he perishes for the want of rest. A great French writer asks: "Where are the old calm faces we used to see? Now we see only a dull restlessness, a restless dullness." Still another says: "How rare it is to see those faces that have the stillness as of hushed water in them, the exquisite eyes of a silent blessedness, the luminous beauty of a great peace! The calm faces have gone because the calm life is gone." One cannot have the face of the dreamer without the dream. Our faces are anxious and careworn because of the restless, uneasy lives we are leading. One cannot have the peaceful brow without the calm soul. We shall never find peace and rest until we conform our lives to the will of God, and thus find perfect rest in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,

As the swift seasons roll!

Leave thy low-vaulted past!

Let each new temple, nobler than the last,

Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,

Till thou at length art free,

Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea! —O. W. Holmes.

One need of the hour is more personal piety. We do not pray as much as we should. We go to church thinking and talking about business and seldom pray while engaged in business. We do not go to the assembly of the saints to worship, but to gossip, to criticize, to be entertained. Instead of thinking of meeting Jesus there, many go to see others who attend the service. We should go to the place of worship with a happy, cheerful spirit that we can pray, sing, and commune with Christ. The house of the Lord is such a sweet place of peace, rest, and comfort when we go there to meet Jesus and worship God as we should. "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Rom. 14: 17.)

There is too much worldliness among professed Christians—tattling, gossiping, dancing, card playing, theater going, tipping, gambling, pride, covetousness, cheating, lying, coldness, selfishness, indifference, infidelity, uncleanness, fornication, strifes, seditions, heresies, and revelings. There is too little courage in contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, too great a readiness to compromise the truth for the sake of a vicious peace. We are too slow in warning our friends to flee the wrath to come.

Our homes are not what they should be. Very few good people come out of bad homes. The government, the training, in our homes should be corrected. God's order is reversed. Instead of parents training their children, many parents are led by their children. Nothing can be more important than the home training. The children should be taught Bible stories; parents should pray with them every day and teach them to read the Scriptures morning, noon, and night. We should take more interest in our children's salvation. We teach them only a smattering of God's word. They attend the Bible class for one hour during a week of seven days. In other words, out of one hundred and sixty-eight hours one hour is given to the study of the Bible. We look little after their associates during the week. Much of their time is spent on the streets with bad boys. It is no wonder that many tares are sown in their hearts; the wonder is that they are good at all. Christ has taught us to bring the little children to him in order that he may bless them. He cannot bless them unless we bring them. Those who come to Christ early are usually far more consecrated. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." (Eccles. 12: 1.)

Another great need in the churches is congregational singing. The paid choir, with the ponderous pipe organ, often produces great trouble and confusion in the churches. Operatic singing by paid singers for the entertainment of the worldly is not a little pleasing to the Lord. Singing is a part of the worship. Every Christian is under obligations to do the best he can in singing with the spirit and the understanding. Good singing stirs the soul and lifts it heavenward. In singing we should sing to glorify God, and not to make an exhibition of our voices.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

The first order through the mail for our new book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," came from Brother A. Foster, Carmen, Manitoba, Canada. Agents have taken advance orders for many copies in Nashville and other places, and we feel hopeful that the first edition will be sold within a few weeks after it is ready for delivery.

"The Relations of God to the World," by Hiram Christopher, A.M., M.D., of St. Joseph, Mo., will soon be issued from our press. We quote the following from the author's preface: "It is the object of the author in the following pages to present some evidence, derived from certain facts and phenomena of the material universe and the life kingdom of the earth, in support of the thought that the forces operating in these departments of nature are but phases or different manifestations of one and the same force—namely, the power of the Creator which he has exerted in effecting special and general purposes which find their realization in the object for which the whole scheme of nature was devised and completed." This book will be neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and will contain 192 pages. It will be sent, postpaid, for $1.

We have decided to grant agencies for "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," edited by F. D. Srygley, to agents by counties. This book will be sure to sell and will do great good. It consists of twelve sermons preached in the long meeting which recently closed in Nashville, interspersed with quotations from his private and personal letters, and selections—both prose and poetry—made from books and papers in promiscuous reading during a long period of years. The editor says: "I know it will be ornamental, and I believe it will be both interesting and wholesome reading." In granting territory to agents we of course reserve the right to fill all orders sent direct to us, and orders sent now will be filled in their order as soon as books are ready for delivery, which will be about the middle of May. We want earnest, working agents all over the country. Apply at once for terms.

"Gospel Praise" is the name of a new hymn book edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell. We think this will prove to be the best and most popular hymn book we have ever published. It is copyrighted this year, will contain three hundred and twenty pages, and will, we think, be ready for delivery by the last of this month. The Armstrong Company, of Philadelphia, music typographers, write: "We think the book will be a success; as you have so many new compositions and by such good authors of note, we do not see how it can be otherwise." Brother Boyd, of Donelson, Tenn., says: "From even a hasty examination of the new song book, 'Gospel Praise,' I am very much pleased with it. I consider the arrangement of subjects a good feature, the music excellent, and feel quite confident it will be heartily received." Advance orders will be filled just as soon as books are ready for delivery.

Microbes.

The early Christians were not aware that among the manifold objects of God's creation and providential care there was a countless host of the little bugs that now pass under the name "microbes." This fact was left, like destructive criticism, to be discovered in our own scientific age. Now the microbes are as well known as gnats and mosquitoes. It is known, too, that they are widespread and are exceedingly dangerous; for they float in the air, they swim in the water, and we drink them in with our mother's milk. When they once get in us they begin to eat away our vitals, and they bring on all diseases. If we could only keep them out, we might live forever, unless somebody kills us. The doctors have warned us not to spit on the sidewalks, lest our microbes, swarming up from the spittle, be swallowed by some passer-by to the utter ruin of his constitution; and they object to horses and other animals being allowed on the streets, unless we sweep up after them with great care.

Under these circumstances, it ought not to surprise anybody that some among us, who think that religion ought to keep pace with scientific discoveries, have become dreadfully alarmed over some of our ancient religious customs which originated before the discovery of microbes—for example, the custom of passing the same cup of wine to a large number of persons when observing the Lord's Supper. We have always been a little squeamish about drinking out of the same cup with certain persons that we could name; and now, seeing that by doing so there is a risk of our swallowing some of their microbes, the practice has become intolerable. It is true that our Lord appointed it this way; but then he may have forgotten, just at the moment, that he had made all these microbes, and that they were such awful things; or else he thought that, as in the case of our new criticism, the age in which he lived was not prepared for a revelation on the subject, and so he left matters as he found them. Perhaps he reflected that the many millions who were destined to premature graves by swallowing these microbes at the Lord's Supper would die in a good cause, and he therefore left them to their fate until an enlightened age would correct the evil. We have now reached that enlightened age, for the Spirit is still leading us into new truth; and we propose to stop that needless waste of human life by having individual cups from which to drink the wine. If any man cries out against it as being unscriptural, exclusive or finicky, or anything of that sort, we will call him a legalist, a literalist, a Pharisee, a back number, a last year's almanac, and a whole lot of things that we use to silence croakers with.

This is not all. Revolutions, we have learned, never go backward. When the wheels of progress once get up steam behind them they are going to roll on, and the man who gets in the way will be run over. Upon further reflection about these microbes we have been forced to observe that there is just as much danger of swallowing other people's microbes when we pinch a piece from the same bread from which they have pinched as when we drink from the same cup. Microbes come from the tips of the fingers when they are a little soiled or a little sweaty, and we are not going to run the risk of eating any of these. We have not yet completed our plans for avoiding this imminent peril to our lives; but, as we have already secured the manufacture of tiny little individual cups, we shall probably have the bread cut up into nice little cubes, which will be dropped into the little cups, so that we can swallow both at once. This device will charmingly harmonize with the time-saving device, which some of us who hate long services have already adopted, of passing the bread and wine both at once.

Do not be alarmed and cry out, "Innovation!" "Wolf in sheep's clothing!" "Heretic!" or anything of that nature until you hear us a little further. It is a fact, a very alarming fact, strangely overlooked hitherto, that there is a great deal more danger of these microbes when we are baptized in the same water with other people; and we are bound, in all honor and consistency, as well as by a supreme regard to life and health, to put a stop to that.

Here we shall encounter some difficulties; but difficulties are made to be overcome, and we must meet them courageously. At first thought some one may propose, as a remedy, to dispense with baptisteries, and go to outdoor pools and streams; but it only requires a moment's consideration to be reminded that dead dogs, dead cats, and other dead things are constantly thrown into these outdoor waters, and that the very worst of microbes emanate from these.

Moreover, frogs, tadpoles, and snakes frequent these waters, while horses, cows, and hogs go there to drink, and we might get some of their microbes if we are baptized in such places. The remedy seems to be to retain the baptistery, but to have it washed, rinsed and scoured, and fumigated after each individual baptism. This can be done very easily in some of our churches, especially where the preacher is a scientific critic, whose cases of baptism, like angels' visits, are few and far between.

There is another imminent peril to which church people are exposed, and for which science, in God's own good time, has furnished a remedy. It is the peril consequent on a large number of persons being shut up together for an hour or two in the same room and breathing the same air. On such occasions a swarm of these mischievous microbes keeps rushing out of every man's mouth with every breath he exhales, and the air gets so full of them that sometimes we can smell them. This is far more perilous than drinking of the same cup, breaking pieces from the same loaf of bread, or being baptized in the same water. This must be remedied, and the Heaven-sent remedy to which I have made reference is the telephone. We will supply every family with one of these instruments, so that they can assemble in their own parlors, at the appointed hour, and listen, while the preacher, alone in his parlor—for we shall need no meetinghouse then—stands in the middle of the floor and talks into the other ends of these instruments.

There may be some defects in this scheme as yet; for all schemes, even those invented by inspired men and by Christ himself, are found by experience to need improvement as men become more enlightened; but progress is the law of religion as well as of nature, and we cannot doubt that in the progress of religious evolution all defects will finally be removed, and the fittest will survive.

Good-by to the old conceit of restoring primitive Christianity!—J. W. McGarvey, in Christian Standard.

The Fellowship. No. 6.

The extension of fellowship beyond the bounds of light, so as to admit in Christian assemblies wicked persons, is a great hindrance to the fellowship of faith, especially that part of it which pertains to contributing to the relief of the poor.

Let the assemblies be purged of idolaters, fornicators, extortioners, revilers; effeminate, covetous persons; liars, lovers of pleasures, idlers, tattlers, busy-bodies in other men's matters, etc., and the poor among them will receive a more generous support.

But the question is: How can we purge the assemblies and so remove this hindrance to New Testament fellowship? It used to be a common practice among denominations to turn those judged unworthy of fellowship out of the church, to exclude them from the local congregation, to excommunicate them from the folds of the denomination. The doctrine and practice on this subject have not been changed, except that there is an evident decline in the practical application of this sort of denominational discipline. Exclusions for heresy and immorality are not so common as formerly. The process of exclusion, though somewhat different in different denominations, is generally carried out in the regular meetings at the house of worship, or fixed place of meeting, and is done by reading out the party tried as unworthy of fellowship and as therefore withdrawn from and to be no longer recognized as a member of that church. Thus his connection is severed with the church in which he held membership. I have never felt able to give the scriptures which authorized the above process, and the course has long been questionable with me; and upon my best study of the subject and in the light of what appears to me clearly taught in the holy Scriptures I am fully convinced that the above process of exclusion or withdrawal of fellowship is unauthorized by Jesus Christ. The Scriptures do not authorize any church to exclude members from the church, and, as a matter of course, do not reveal any course of action in so doing. Men cannot put people into the church, and hence cannot turn them out. The Lord adds the saved to the church (Acts 2: 47), and he alone can put them out. "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away." (John 15: 1, 2.)

Any church that takes action against its own members and turns them out for any cause is a sect, a human institution, a denomination, and not the one body of Christ. From this body God himself does the turning out. Men cannot turn people out of that into which they cannot bring them.

But there is something authorized of which men do have control and from which they can exclude people. They are authorized to meet together, to form assemblies. The assemblies they create under divine instruction, and from these they can exclude people. "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." (Heb. 10: 24, 25.) "The disciples came together to break bread." (Acts 20: 7.) "When therefore ye assemble yourselves together, it is not possible to eat the Lord's Supper." (1 Cor. 11: 20, R. V.) "If there come unto your assembly." (James 2: 2.) God creates the church, which is the gathering together of the saved in Christ; men create assemblies in this church. They can go to or refuse to go to these meetings, and they can put people out of these assemblies. "Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us: therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. . . . But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no not to eat. For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person." (1 Cor. 5: 7-13.)

It is evident that this passage makes Christians responsible for the character of persons they associate with in the assemblies where they keep the feasts of the Lord. It is equally evident that putting wicked persons out from among themselves, purging out the old leaven, has no reference to turning people out of the church, but to keeping them out of their assemblies. Christians cannot turn people out of the church, but they can avoid them in making up their assemblies.

They are not told to turn people out of the church, but they are told to dissociate themselves from wicked professors and avoid them. From the proud, perverse, and corrupt the divine admonition is: "Withdraw thyself." (1 Tim. 6: 5.) In another place the same apostle describes a dangerous class which have "a form of godliness, by denying the power thereof," and his exhortation is: "From such turn away." (2 Tim. 3: 5.) "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.) "If any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother." (2 Thess. 3: 14, 15.) "A man that is a heretic after the first and second admonition reject ["refuse," R. V.]; knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself." (Tit. 3: 10, 11.) "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." (Rom. 16: 17.)

There is nothing here about turning people out of or excluding from the church, which is the body of Christ; but to keep them out of the assemblies by avoidance is clearly expressed. The assemblies that keep the feast appointed in the house of God, which is the Lord's Supper, are in the closest association, and are required to be purged of wicked members.

The practice of these scriptures is by no means realized among the denominations. They turn people out of the church, a thing they are not told to do and which it is utterly out of their power to do, and admit all sorts in their assemblies where they are associated to keep the feast, a thing they are told not to do. They leave undone the things they are commanded to do, and do what they are not told to do and which it is impossible for them to do in a New Testament church.

Disobedience to these scriptures hinders New Testament fellowship, inasmuch as it is a fellowship in light. "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another."

THE CHANTINGS OF CHANTICLEER.

It was half past twelve o'clock, on a warm spring day, and doors and windows were wide open in the little kitchen where Mr. Brockway and his two daughters were eating their dinner. Of this fact a very large number of flies had taken advantage, and they seemed to be under the impression that the meal had been prepared entirely for their benefit.

Mr. Brockway was a patient man, and it was not easy for him to put his thoughts into words; so it did not occur to him to grumble, and Annie, the elder daughter, was thinking of various things, and accepted the flies as merely a necessary part of that which she considered her very hard life. Ever since her mother died, two years ago, and just when Annie was thirteen years old, she had "kept house," after a fashion, for her father and younger sister, but her heart was not in her work.

Little Betty, who was only eight years old, and "small for her age," as the neighbors said, found no trouble about giving words to her thoughts. "I do believe these flies think they're the folks and we're the flies!" she said, crossly. "I don't see why we've got to be pestered so!"

Mr Brockway looked up, and smiled across the table at his little daughter, with the slow, kindly smile which always, as she put it, "uncrossed" her. "We haven't," he said. And then he finished his dinner, and, as he had a few minutes to spare before he went back to his carpentering, he filled the wood box for Annie and set beside it a little basket of lightwood kindlings.

Betty danced about him as he did it, and a sudden memory made her laugh. "O, father," she said, "one of the girls at school told us such a funny thing this morning! Just come here a minute—you come, too, sister—and listen!"

They stood together at the door, and for a moment there was nothing but silence; then, from far away across the fields, came the long, high crow of a cock; presently a nearer one answered him; and then the proud Shanghai, master of their own chicken yard, took up the strain, with a crow so long drawn out and full of self-importance that they all three laughed.

"Now, father, sister, do you know what they're saying?" asked Betty, eagerly, and, without waiting for them even to guess, she answered her own question: "That way-off one, that crowed first, says, 'Woman rules here!' and then the one that was a little nearer says, 'So she does here!' and our Dewey finishes up—he says: 'So she does ev-er-y-where!'"

Betty's clear, high little voice rose in a very fair imitation of a crow, and her father and sister both laughed heartily.

"Is it true, father?" asked Betty, as he turned to reach his hat from the peg behind the door.

"Well," he said, consideringly, "I should say that, in a sense, it is—in a sense, yes, it's quite true! But she doesn't rule where I'm due in ten minutes; the boss rules there, and he might rule me out if I was late; so come on, little 'woman-rules-here,' if you're going as far as the schoolhouse with me."

Betty clapped her old straw hat on a head of hair which sadly needed brushing and danced after him down the garden walk; then she ran back and put her head in at the kitchen window long enough to say, "Annie, why can't you 'rule here,' the way mother did?" and then she was gone, before her sister could answer her.

But she would have been obliged to wait long for the answer to that question. Just as one vivid ray of sunlight will show the dust in a dark corner, it pierced through the other thoughts in Annie's heart, and would not be shut out.

The few dishes which had been used for the comfortless dinner were soon washed and put away, and then Annie stood, irresolute, in the middle of the not very orderly kitchen. Although the wood fire had been allowed to go out as soon as the dinner was cooked, the room was still uncomfortably warm, while the little darkened parlor, as she knew, was delightfully cool. She had intended to spend the early afternoon practicing her last music lesson, and, later to visit one of her school friends, with whom she had many talks about life as it was and as they would like it to be—talks which always left them both more discontented than they had been before, yet gave no help toward the fulfillment of their wishes.

Annie's mother had been her first music teacher, and it had only been within the last few months that the young girl had found a way to earn a little "extra" money, enough to take one music lesson a week. She had no especial gift, but she played quite nicely, and they all sung; she knew that the Sunday evening "sings" were her father's chief pleasures.

"So it can't be wrong," she said to herself, speaking quite aloud in her earnestness, "to take the lessons and practice. Father was more than willing; he said he was only sorry he couldn't give me the money himself. It's just a puzzle, and somehow saying my prayers doesn't seem to help a bit. If only mother—"

A sob rose in her throat and stopped her speech. But a little light had come with that dear memory. Would "mother" have left the kitchen like that and practiced and made visits, with no idea as to what was going to be for father's supper?

Annie's face grew resolute. She pulled her sweeping cap firmly down over her hair and swept and dusted that kitchen thoroughly. Then she darkened it, as an inducement to the flies to visit elsewhere, and went and sat down in the parlor to think before she did anything else. What came first? Supper. Yes, she could make the fire now, instead of late in the afternoon, and boil some potatoes and the end of the ham, and make the tea for her father; there was a lemon in the pantry, and the tea would be, not cool, but really cold, by tea time, if she put it in the cellar, for it was only two o'clock. Potato salad and cold ham and some of the little onions from the garden would give her father and Betty a real "company tea;" she would go and get some milk for Betty, for the child had eaten scarcely any dinner.

She wondered a little, as she briskly carried out her plans, why she felt so much more contented than she usually did when she was working. All was done by half past three o'clock, and she was very warm and a little tired; but, as she worked, a sudden thought had visited her, and she meant to follow its leading.

She no longer went to Sunday school, but she had never ceased to love and admire the teacher in whose class she had spent most of her time there. Would Miss Birchfield think it was "queer," she wondered, if she should follow the impulse which had come to her and go for a talk over her troubled thoughts? No; it was certain that she would not.

So Annie washed and dressed herself speedily, but very carefully. Miss Birchfield was at home, on the large, cool veranda behind the house, and she did not think it the least "queer." She listened with affectionate interest to Annie's somewhat mixed-up account of things, and laughed as heartily as Mr. Brockway and Annie had laughed at the "woman-rules-here" part of it.

"And father said two things that bothered me," concluded Annie. "When Betty said she didn't see why we had to be pestered so, he said, 'We haven't'; and about the crowing, when Betty asked him if it was true, he said it was 'in a sense.' But it just seems to me that I can't let things go as I've been doing, any longer, and yet—O, Miss Birchfield, won't you just say it all out clearly, the way you used to do when anything in the lesson puzzled us?"

"I am not sure that I can, dear, but I will try, and you must help me," said Miss Birchfield; and then she sat still, thinking, for several minutes. "I do not know your father very well," she said, at last, "but I have always liked his face; it is so good, and patient, and gentle; and so I think he meant, when he said, 'We haven't,' that we must not let ourselves be 'pestered'; but, if I were you, I would look a little farther. A great many of the 'pesters' over which we fret could be changed and made less, and even, sometimes, entirely removed, if we would think them out, as we would if we were studying a hard lesson, instead of just worrying about them. Plant that little seed in your heart, dear, and tell me, by and by, what comes of it. As for our 'ruling' here and there and everywhere, we certainly do, 'in a sense,' as your father said, whether we mean to or not. Just to take one little instance—women do a good deal of the cooking that is done in this world, but I wonder how many of them think how much more it might mean than just the bare satisfying of hunger. A wise and witty man has said that some of the gloomy books about religion, which were written in the early days of New England, ought to be labeled 'Pie Crust,' because, when people live largely on indigestible food, they think, after a while, that the dark and uncomfortable state of mind which comes from a wrong state of body is a real thing, and not just an effect."

Annie felt the color deepening in her face. Had Miss Birchfield guessed, she wondered, guiltily, that the bread was sometimes tough and heavy, and things which might have been pleasant food only just eatable? And could Betty's sudden explosions of temper sometimes be caused by uncomfortable feelings which she herself did not understand?

The tall clock which stood in the wide hall slowly struck five, and Annie reluctantly rose to go.

"Must you go, now?" said Miss Birchfield, holding Annie's hand in a kind clasp which somehow seemed strengthening. "I suppose you must, though, for Betty will be at home by this time, and you will not like to keep your father waiting for his tea after such a long, warm day. But we haven't half finished. I cannot come this week, but next week I am coming to see you, and, meanwhile, I think, I am sure, that you have enough for a clew to lead you on to some of your 'next things,' and you will not forget, dear child, that nothing is too small to need the 'ever-present help.'"

It seemed to poor Annie that Betty's question, as they sat down to the cool and pleasant supper, "Why, did you ask somebody to tea, and didn't they come?" was a very keen reproach, and her heart was full of grateful love to her father when, after a glance at her distressed face, he answered for her: "I think she has all the company she was expecting, little 'woman-rules-here.'"—Margaret Vandegrift, in the Young Christian Soldier.

WHAT BECOMES OF THEM?

Down in the Treasury Department at Washington there is a queer machine with a queer name. They call it the "macerater." The business of this machine is to receive all the old bank bills and other forms of paper money that are worn out or to be used no more and grind them to pulp. The machine is round and is provided inside with jaws that grind and grind and grind until nothing is left of the once beautiful and valuable notes except a mass of soft gray paper. Every year an astonishing number of bills is thus put out of existence.

Watching this machine as it swiftly does its work, I cannot help thinking about the maceraters that destroy so many of our boys and girls every year. What are some of these destructive machines? One of the most terrible is the saloon. Only the other day we were told about a little girl who was arrested in one of our great cities for being drunk. Who knows how many go that way each year?

Then, evil companions destroy many more. Nights on the street lead still more to ruin. Sabbath breaking and bad books are also spoiling hosts of boys and girls.

The machine I have been telling you about at Washington is only set in operation now and then when a great many bills have been saved up; but the maceraters that destroy our youth never cease to grind by day and night.

The bank note cannot escape its fate. If put into the mill, it must be turned into pulp; but boys and girls can escape the things that tend to injure them. They can keep out of the saloon; they can shun bad companions; they can read only good books and papers; they can be true to the right. If they do avoid these dangers, they may be sure of reaching an honest, earnest, and helpful manhood.—Our Boys and Girls.

CHANGING GOD'S APPOINTMENTS.

To add to, take from, or change the order of God in any way, or to displace his appointments with the inventions of man, has in all ages and in all countries caused division and strife among the people of God. How does God regard it? God is the only law-maker for his people. It requires the same authority to repeal, amend, or modify a law that it takes to enact it. For any other than the lawmaking power to repeal or modify a law is to usurp the authority of the lawmaking power; for any person or body to seek to change or modify his laws or institutions is to usurp the prerogative of God.

In the law given by Moses, the great fundamental law of the universe, as interpreted by Jesus Christ, is: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." This limits all service to the things required by God, and stamps all service not required by God with the brand of disloyalty to God. This is the first great law of the universe: God is the omnipotent and only ruler of the universe. Man is so prone to set aside God's appointments with his own wisdom, he is continually warned of his danger. "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you." (Deut. 4: 2.) This implies if anything is added to or taken from the law of God, it ceases to be his law, and to observe the changed law is not to obey God. "Ye shall not do after all the things that we do here this day, every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes." (Deut. 12: 8.) The idea now so popular, that men are safe when they do what they believe right, prevailed among the children of Israel. This thought flatters men, so at all times has been popular with them; but it is not pleasing to God.

Man cannot do what he believes to be wrong, yet his own idea of right is not the standard. God's will, what is right in the eyes of God, is the only standard by which man's thoughts must be tested and to which they must be conformed. So Moses concludes this chapter with the rule: "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it; thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it."

God established among the children of Israel the government of judges. The sons of Samuel succeeded as judges. They "turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment." The people were dissatisfied and asked for a king instead of judges. It grieved Samuel. But the Lord told them: "They have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." To seek to change the order of God, even when perverted and prostituted to defeat the very end it was established to promote, was to reject God as their ruler.

God commanded Saul: "Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass." (1 Sam. 15: 3.) "And he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, and utterly destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword. But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them: but everything that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly." (Verses 8, 9.) Verse 15 tells: They "spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed." In executing the command they found fat cattle and sheep. Under their order of worship, the sacrifice of such animals would be acceptable worship to God in his own land. They concluded it would bring more honor to God to take these animals to Israel and there sacrifice them to God. The law would be changed in a nonessential point and greater honors would be given God. But Samuel said: "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. . . . Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king." (Verses 22, 23.) No sacrifice or offering man can bring to God will be accepted in lieu of obedience. Indeed, God will accept no offering from him who sets aside or changes the law of God, even when done to honor him. "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him." (Eccles. 3: 14.) "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord: but the prayer of the upright is his delight." (Prov. 15: 8.) "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." (Prov. 28: 9.)

Jesus Christ introduced his teaching with the Sermon on the Mount: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. 7: 21-23.) The context shows he means, "Not every one that worships me 'as Lord, Lord,' shall enter into heaven; but that many who think they do these wonderful works in his name are so fearfully deceiving themselves that only the sentence, at the last day, 'Depart from me, ye that work iniquity,' will undeceive them. He adds: "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: . . . and every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand." (Verses 24-27.) He presents the custom of washing the hands before eating which the Jews observed as a religious service. Observed as an act of cleanliness, it was commendable, and had grown out of the laws of cleanliness given by Moses. They had changed it into a religious service. As an act of cleanliness, it pleased God; as an act of worship, it was sin. So the disciples of Jesus had ceased to observe it. The scribes and Pharisees asked Jesus: "Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread." (Matt. 15: 2.) He responded, "Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?" and warns them: "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." (Verse 9.) To add things to the worship of God, no matter how harmless in themselves, is sin against God, and he who consciously does this vitiates all the service he renders. Jesus adds, by way of warning: "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." Everything added to the worship of God by human hands must be rooted up and destroyed. God can be served only in his own appointments.

Jesus prayed "for them also which shall believe on me through their [the apostles'] word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." (John 17: 20, 21.) Jesus certainly means parties among his followers would hinder the world from believing that God sent him. Then the Holy Spirit, through the apostles, warned them against divisions. "While one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?" (1 Cor. 3: 4; see also 1 Cor. 1: 12, 13.) "So we, being many, are one body in Christ. . . . Be of the same mind one toward another." (Rom. 12: 5-16.) "With one mind and one mouth glorify God." (Rom. 15: 6.) "The body is one. . . . There should be no schism [division] in the body."

(1 Cor. 12: 12-25.) "Ye are all one in Christ Jesus." (Gal. 3: 28.) That "he might gather together in one all things in Christ, . . . which is his body." (Eph. 1: 10-23.) "Hath broken down the middle wall of partition, . . . that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross. . . . In whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." (Eph. 2: 14-22.) "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

"Why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances, (touch not; taste not; handle not; which all are to perish with the using;) after the commandments and doctrines of men?" (Col. 2: 20-22.) Then the Bible closes with the caution: "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." To make the first last, death and suffering and ruin came upon the whole world through our first parents thinking they could change the law of God so as to bring greater good to man. Eve was deceived, but as really believed what she did would bring good to man as ever man or woman did. Her thinking it would bring good did not make it so. All the sufferings of earth flow from this mistake, and should warn us all that it is a fearful sin against God to change or modify his appointments or his laws. He is God, and he alone. Man's province is to learn his will and do it. When "we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.)

ISAAC C. SEWELL.

Isaac C. Sewell was born on June 6, 1822, in Overton County, Tenn. His father and mother were Stephen and Annie Sewell. Fourteen children were born to them, twelve of whom grew to maturity. They possessed but little means and trained their children to habits of industry and frugality. The Sewells were a religious family. Stephen Sewell and his wife were Baptists. A brother of Stephen, W. D. Sewell, was a Baptist preacher. The children of Stephen Sewell became members of the church early. The older ones, including Isaac, became members of the Baptist Church. Jesse, an older brother of Isaac, began to preach as a Baptist. A still older brother, William B., had married a member of the church of Christ, was much thrown with the disciples, and became enamored of their plea to return to the Bible as the only rule of faith and action in religion. He was tried and excluded from the Baptist Church for heresy. Jesse took no part in the public trial, but undertook privately to show William he was wrong. They met, discussed the questions of the sufficiency of the word of God, the work of the Holy Spirit, human creeds and confessions of faith, and the doctrine of total hereditary depravity. These discussions were kept up, from time to time, for several weeks. They had their effect on Jesse and the younger brothers.

Jesse, though quite young, studied the Bible closely, and began to preach the word of God. This was an unusual style of preaching. To illustrate the feeling among Baptist preachers, Brother Sewell and another Baptist preacher went together to preach at a certain place. Brother Sewell carried his Bible with him. The other preacher said: "Brother Sewell, I am sorry to see you carry that book with you to church." Brother Sewell asked: "Why so?" The preacher said, "I am afraid the people will think we learn our sermons out of it"—the very thing Brother Sewell was trying then to do, and gloried in as long as he lived. Jesse was soon tried for heresy and excluded from the Baptist Church. Isaac was young and had taken no active part in the trial of Jesse; but he had been an intensely interested hearer of all that passed, and down to old age he could repeat the positions taken, the arguments, and even the very expressions, used by those engaging in the discussions. So, when Jesse was excluded, Isaac arose and asked that his name be taken from the list also; so sentence of exclusion was passed on him at the same time. Both Jesse and Isaac had been baptized while quite young; but, thinking they had not sufficiently clear conceptions of the scripture teaching on the subject, they were both baptized again. While not sympathizing with the party spirit of the modern rebaptists, they both held through life that there should be a clear understanding of the duties and obligations assumed in being buried with Christ.

After Isaac saw the truth he was a diligent student of the Bible, to learn what it taught, not to support a theory. The Bible was the book of his constant study, and I have known few persons that could quote more scripture or better understand its teachings. I do not know how long before he began to preach publicly himself, but it was not long. He continued to work so long as he was able. He was not so fluent a speaker, had not so melodious a voice, nor was he so sympathetic in his preaching, as his brothers; but none of them surpassed him in his knowledge of the Scriptures nor in the clearness of his presentation of it. He was not so active in his temperament, but he preached much through Middle Tennessee. He planted a number of churches, among which was the church of Christ at Lebanon, Tenn. Some twenty years ago he went to West Tennessee and purchased a home near Reelfoot Lake, since which time his preaching was chiefly in West Tennessee. He was economical and careful in his habits, punctilious not to incur debts or obligations he could not meet, and was anxious to do good with what means he obtained. During his life he contributed two hundred dollars at one time to the Fanning Orphan School, and willed that his land should be sold and invested and the proceeds go to the Orphan School so long as it remained in operation, conducted by the disciples of Christ.

Brother Sewell never married, but was strong in his attachments for his friends and brethren and the places in which he had lived. He was partially paralyzed some years ago, after which he spoke and moved about with difficulty. A year or two since, realizing his end on earth could not be far off, he returned to his native county, and died at the home of his nephew, Ed. Sewell, on March 30, 1900, near where he was born and reared to manhood. He was nearly seventy-eight years old. Though not aggressive in his temperament or offensive in his style, he was always decided and firm in his convictions and was always on the side of truth and right. For such God has a place of honor and trust in reservation at his own right hand. D. L.

INSPIRATION.

[This article appeared in the American of April 30, 1900.]

It is frankly conceded that the subject of inspiration is not only one of very great importance, but also a very difficult one. Indeed, there is no subject on which one is in more danger of saying unwise, hurtful, and unwarranted things.

It is assumed by some that Homer and Shakespeare were inspired as well as Isaiah, and Calvin as well as Paul. If this be true, the Bible is no more than any good, wise, and moral human production.

I must beg leave to dissent most earnestly from the following view of inspiration: "As to the nature of divine inspiration, doubtless all agree that it is the Spirit or power of God working with or through us, and that this Spirit of God was of old and is now imparted to each and every acceptable child of God. Lastly, we believe that the entire body of Christian principles and divine laws center in Christ and cluster around his teachings, and that the office of the apostles in their letters to the churches was only that of giving practical application to the broad ethics of Christ to carry the general into special details of everyday life—precisely the office of our present-day ministers and teachers of the gospel."

This conception of inspiration makes any good preacher of the gospel as much inspired as was John or Paul. Accepting the above as a correct premise from which to reason, we could not successfully combat error in any form. Mormonism, Mohammedanism, and every other ism lay claim to inspiration. Men claiming inspiration are teaching doctrines as contradictory and antagonistic as virtue and vice, truth and falsehood, heaven and hell. Can all be inspired, though claiming to be very devout and moral? Such ideas of inspiration make it a myth and reduce the authority of the apostles to an equality with that of the Mormon elder.

What is inspiration? The Century Dictionary defines: "In theology, an influence directly and immediately exerted by the Spirit of God upon the soul of man; in Christian theology, used especially with reference to the Old and New Testaments, regarded as written under the direct influence of God exercised upon the thoughts and feelings of the writers." In the most general sense I would define inspiration to be a divine and miraculous illumination and guidance of the human mind. This being true, it was not possible for the apostles and prophets to teach error. Sometimes the words were inspired, and not the thought; sometimes the thoughts, and not the words. Peter did not himself understand all the Spirit spoke through him on the day of Pentecost. While he said, "The promise is unto . . . all that are afar off," he would not preach the gospel to the Gentiles until convinced by a miracle that he should do so. The prophets often did not understand their own prophecies. In such cases they were inspired to write, and not to know.

The writers of the Bible were men possessed of "common sense" as other men. They understood, felt, and resolved as did other men. Consciousness, intuition, experience, and reason did the same for them as they did for other people. But the Holy Spirit was ever present with them to guide them into all truth. When brought before rulers and their lives were threatened, they were not to take any thought or to be anxious for their lives, for the Holy Spirit should teach them what to say. All would be anxious under such circumstances now, and must take thought about what they should say. Why? Because they are not inspired. It was said to them: "For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you." (Matt. 10: 20.) "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (2 Pet. 1: 21.)

This leads me to the affirmation that the holy Scriptures are inspired of God. By these we mean the thirty-nine books of the Old Testament and the twenty-seven books of the New Testament. All errors of transcription, all interpolations, and all apocryphal portions are excluded as forming no part of the Bible.

1. My first proof is found in the nature of the things written. The writers did not and could not understand much they wrote, hence God must have written through them. Any one who reads the Bible is convinced that the writers were under some restraining influence. The Bible is as remarkable for its silence as for its wonderful revelations. There is no gratification of idle curiosity or wonder. When we consider how intense the longing to peer into the future, how great the desire to know the unseen, and how readily false prophets yield to this desire, and yet reflect on the silence of prophets and apostles concerning these matters of so keen interest, we are forced to the conclusion they were guided by a super-human power.

For example, who has not been curious to know something more of the youth and childhood of Jesus? Yet the evangelists make no effort to gratify this curiosity. This was a restraint in the writing, and not in the knowing.

Another proof of the inspiration of the Scriptures is the manner in which the writers portray alike the virtues and vices of those of whom they write. There is no effort made to throw the mantle of charity over David's sin; no apology made for Peter, who denied his Lord. When Barnabas is at fault, inspiration allows him thus to stand out on the canvas, without seeking to cover up his mistake. For a wise purpose inspiration mentions their faults to us that we may avoid them. As they made mistakes, so we are encouraged not to despair in the midst of the conflicts of life. The Holy Spirit did not compel them to do right, as this would have robbed them of individual responsibility; but he never permitted them to teach error, as this would have involved the human family in ruin.

How differently do all biographers act now! If the biographer is under the influence of love, he paints the subject as large as life and as pure as an angel; if hatred be the controlling passion, he makes the same as black as hell. Again, the marvelous unity of the Bible implies a oneness of authorship; as the variety of style indicates a variety of writers, so does this unity of thought, plan, and language indicate a divine guidance.

The unity of the Bible is of itself a miracle. Everett says: "Forty different writers, in various countries, during sixteen centuries, and under varying circumstances of civilization, freedom, and tribal prejudice, produce sixty-six treatises in differing languages, and on many subjects, prose and poetry, history and philosophy, law and morals, and yet they all unite in presenting one grand system of religion—a system beginning with the creation and ending with the consummation of human history.

Is such oneness in the religious world to-day? Where is the unity of the present-day inspiration? We have all sorts of men teaching all sorts of doctrine, all claiming to be equally inspired. Suffice it to say this confusion does not come from the Bible.

2. The Bible is inspired because the men who wrote it were inspired. Moses could never have written as he did of creation without inspiration. The apostles spoke with tongues, worked miracles, and performed wonder after wonder. They could not have done this without God's help.

They were baptized in the Holy Spirit to enable them to represent the claims of Jesus, infallibly.

Before the baptism of the Holy Spirit they were not permitted to tell any man that Jesus was the Christ. Those who claim the baptism of the Holy Spirit and inspiration now should make good their contention by healing the sick, raising the dead, and speaking, without education, all the languages of earth.

3. The testimony of Christ and his apostles is another proof of the inspiration of the Scriptures. Christ has filled the hearts of men for over eighteen centuries. His religion has proved beneficial to all ages, nations, temperaments, and conditions. Wherever Christ and his religion have gone the world has been elevated, made happier and purer. His religion has done more to regenerate and soften mankind than all the disquisitions of philosophers and all the exhortations of moralists.

There is no conflict of doctrine between Christ and his apostles. While he had all authority in heaven and in earth, he did not organize his kingdom, but gave that into the hands of his apostles. He sent them the Spirit to guide them in this work. He said to them: "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me." (Luke 10: 16.)

4. The fourth argument is the testimony of the writers themselves. The writings of these men give evidence that they were good and true. They claim to have written by the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Isaiah, Zechariah, Malachi, Paul, and Peter all wrote as God inspired them.

Many scriptures could be quoted to show this. Paul says of himself: "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power; that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (1 Cor. 2: 4, 5.) Paul then taught the Corinthians the wisdom of God which the Holy Spirit revealed unto him. Paul closes a very valuable series of statements by saying: "We have the mind of Christ." A REQUEST.

All subscribers whose subscription is past due are earnestly requested to pay their subscription to one year in advance. This sum does not amount to much with each subscriber, but the aggregate is considerable to us. Besides, subscribers who keep their subscription paid in advance, as a rule, enjoy reading their papers more than those who do not. Promptness on the part of subscribers helps to lighten the burdens of editors, publishers, and bookkeepers. The burdens of those who have the management of a paper are not a few.

We have no way of paying our bills, only as we collect from those who are owing us. If our subscribers are prompt, this enables us to be prompt. This is the only satisfactory way to do business.

We never have so much cash on hand that we do not need all that is due us. We would not make this request just now if we were not in need of what you are due us to meet our obligations. We feel that this plain statement will be all that is necessary to lead you to pay your subscription at once. Look at the date on the little yellow slip on your paper. The date shows the time to which your subscription is paid. From that time pay at the rate of $1.50 per year. If you should think there is some mistake in the date, please call our attention to it; and, if on investigation we find such to be the case, we will take pleasure in correcting accordingly.

We wish to appeal to every subscriber to send us at least one new subscriber. If the Gospel Advocate is contending for what you believe is right, why not help extend its circulation and thereby increase its influence for good? A good religious paper should be in every home. People will read something. Will you not help us to place good reading before them?

PUBLISHERS.

We are like soldiers in a vast, widely extended battlefield wrapped in obscurity, of which we seem utterly powerless to control the issues; but we are responsible for our own part—whatever goes on elsewhere—let us not fail in that. The changes of the world which men think they are bringing about are in the hands of God. With him, when we have done our duty, let us leave them.—Boys' Lantern.

WORLEY.

Sister Caroline Worley departed this life on February 27, 1900. She was about fifty-six years of age. Sister Worley had been a member of the church of Christ for a number of years, and lived a consistent member. She leaves a husband and six children to mourn their loss. She was reared in Maury County, Tenn., and came to Arkansas about ten years ago. Let us all strive to meet Sister Worley; and may the Father be merciful to the bereaved ones: NATHAN CATHEY.

BARNETT.

Nelly A. Barnett was born on April 12, 1848; married J. W. Barnett on March 2, 1865; obeyed the gospel in 1880, while living in Lauderdale County, Ala.; and died on March 24, 1900, at her home at Blue Ridge, Tex. She was a loving and faithful wife, a kind and affectionate mother, and a true and tried disciple of the meek and lowly Jesus. Her daughter had preceded her to the spirit world just a few days. A few more days and we will all pass over the river. "The time is short; it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none."

THOMAS E. MILHOLLAND.

TRAMMEL.

J. M. D. Trammel was born on June 10, 1864, and died on May 23, 1899. Brother Trammel lacked but little of being thirty-six years old when the unrelenting disease—consumption—claimed him for a victim, at Italy, Tex. He leaves a wife and two children and a host of relatives to mourn his untimely death. His companion of only a few years is the daughter of our dear brother, A. C. Borden, who has done so much preaching in Central, Eastern, and Southern Texas in the past fifteen or twenty years. Brother Trammel was a member of the church of Christ, and, so far as known, was a consistent and earnest Christian, and his loved ones are assured of meeting him on the banks of the crystal stream in the paradise of God. The loving father and husband, the kind friend and dutiful son, the affectionate brother and earnest Christian has finished his earthly career, and invites, by his example, all his loved ones to follow on in the footsteps of Jesus, that there may be a joyous meeting and unending union in the mansions prepared by God's own hand.

HARRELL.

David J. Harrell was born on August 26, 1826, and died on January 31, 1900, after a long and painful illness. His wife preceded him to the grave about thirty-two years. He had been sick so long that death came as a relief. He had belonged to the church of Christ about twenty-five years. He leaves four children: Mary Smith, David Harrell, Orlena Kyeager, and Willis Harrell. All but one are members of the church of Christ, and I pray that he soon shall be. Brother Harrell was humble and meek in life. He realized, as well as his friends, that his life work was done and the end was drawing nigh. While clinging to life with all the vigor of a strong interest in its activeness, he faced death with a calm submission and breathed his last in the assured faith of a bright immortality. His remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground. There the flowers of spring will bloom in beauty above his sleeping dust, the earth will decay, and the heavens will be rolled back in a scroll; but his spirit will live when the universe shall be no more. COPELAND.

Sister M. J. M. Copeland was born near Clyattville, Ga., on March 17, 1873, and was married to Brother P. D. Copeland on January 21, 1891. During the summer of 1892 she obeyed the gospel, and from then until the day of her death she lived a devoted wife and a consecrated Christian. On April 12, after two weeks of suffering with pneumonia, when she could suffer no more, she fell asleep in the arms of Jesus. On the morning of April 14 loving hands laid all that was mortal of Sister Copeland to rest, near her old home. Sister Copeland leaves three little children, a loving husband, and a host of friends to mourn her death; but they mourn not as those who have no hope, for no one could know Sister Copeland and not be impressed with her consecration to duty and fidelity to the truth. She loved her home, her husband, and her children; but above all else she loved the Lord and his cause and manifested that love in her daily walk. May God comfort the hearts of the bereaved ones, and in this hour of trial may they learn to trust him the more who does all things well.

SULLENGER.

G. T. Sullenger was born in Kentucky on April 12, 1823, and died at Pilot Grove, Tex., on April 16, 1900. He obeyed the gospel at Smith Grove, Ky., when he was sixteen years old. Brother Calloway was doing the preaching—the first gospel preaching Brother Sullenger ever heard. Like many, he fell from his first love for a while; but, unlike many, he remembered from whence he had fallen, repented, and confessed his sins at Kentucky Town, Tex., during a meeting held by B. F. Hall. From that time to the day of his departure he increased in the knowledge of the word and his faith grew stronger and his hopes brighter. I knew him well for years. His approving nod and frequent exclamation, "Hear!" were helpful to me in preaching. When I last saw him—about a year ago—he said: "I want you to write a short notice or obituary to the Gospel Advocate when I die. I want no eulogy, no funeral sermon; I want some Christian brother to read Rom. 8, for that consoles me while I live, and ought to comfort the living when I am gone." His body awaits the resurrection in the old Kentucky Town graveyard. Services were conducted by Brother Lawson. One by one they are going home. F. L. YOUNG.

DAVIS.

James H. Davis departed this life at ten minutes before 1 o'clock, on April 9, 1900, after a short illness of five or six days. His health had been reasonably good during the winter. On Monday, April 2, he went to his mill and was taken down on the same day, in the evening, with la grippe, bordering on pneumonia. He had the best of nursing and was attended by the faithful Dr. Thatch, of Decherd, Tenn., who called daily and hourly to try to overcome the disease; but nature was too weak, and all efforts failed. He leaves a devoted wife and three little children, two boys and a little girl just one month old. He realized from the time he was taken sick that life was near a close and expressed a desire to see his boys, six or eight years old, so they could remember him, but said it could not be. He made his will, leaving his effects in the hands of his wife, making her sole administratrix of his property, advising and stating that it should be used for the rearing and educating of his children. He left many friends in Decherd and Winchester who say he has been to them like a father, advising and rebuking them if necessary. He was respected, even by enemies, for his firmness and uprightness.

Decherd, Tenn. W. R. ELDER.

GIDDENS.

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14: 13.) Mrs. Lula P. Giddens, wife of W. J. Giddens and daughter of Brother E. J. and Sister Linna Griffin, aged twenty-five years, departed this life on April 18, 1900, after a brief illness. The writer had been personally acquainted with Sister Giddens for several years, and can truthfully say that she was a Christian in the true sense of the word. She leaves a husband and three little children, the youngest being not quite six months old, to whom she was truly devoted. Just a few days before she died my mother was at her home and has since remarked how well she loved her little ones. It seems hard to be called away from those that are near and dear to us, but He who rules all things knows what is best. To Brother Giddens we will say we truly do not sorrow as others who have no hope. Although we may have trials and temptations in this life, if we will be as faithful and patient as she was, it will not be long until we will meet her again in the holy city, where "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

"Fishers of Men."

"Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." Thus spoke Jesus to Peter and Andrew; and he called James and John also, who left their nets and their father, and followed him. What a wonderful power in his word to draw men to him! John had introduced the Savior to the multitude, and had pointed him out especially to two disciples, saying: "Behold the Lamb of God!" One of these was John, the beloved. The word went around: "We have found the Messiah." There was, then, the preliminary calling; but no obligations were imposed. Afterwards, as is recorded in Matt. 4: 18-22, there was the selection of those who were to be constant attendants, and the Lord said: "I will make you fishers of men." The details of an incident in connection with this calling them from their employment as fishers we find in Luke 5: 4-10.

Then, finally, there was the choosing of the twelve to be his apostles. (Matt. 10: 2-4.) Jesus named the work to which he had called them by using the word that designated their old occupation—"fishers." This indicates that there must be a similarity between the old occupation and the new, else the word "fishers" would not have suited. From the sea of the world, by devotion, by prudence, by perseverance, they were to gain souls for the kingdom of Christ.

Some of the qualifications of a fisherman are: (1) He must know the sea; (2) he must know how to allure; (3) he must be able to patiently wait; (4) he must cast out the net in confidence.

Are Peter, James, and John the "fishers of men" now? Yes; just as they are apostles now. They have never resigned, nor have they been superseded, so far as we know. They preach yet, or rather what they once said with their own lips is true now, and is to be said with human lips to the end of time. The apostles continued to preach through and in Christians. The very fact that one is a Christian seems to imply that what constitutes a Christian, how people become such, how they continue to be such, and the blessings of so being, as revealed by the apostles of our Lord, are to be taught by the individual Christians. The expression "fishers of men" seems to have in it the thought that Christians are to win souls to Christ by direct, individual address—by direct, earnest appeal of one man to his acquaintance, relative, friend. The first five disciples were thus gathered in: By John speaking to two, Jesus to one, Andrew to one, and Philip to one.

How many of us, for years, have supported those societies whose object is to spread Christianity—supported with our means and aided with our personal service—but who seldom, if ever, have sought by our direct, personal address to influence one human soul for spiritual and eternal good! Poor fishers we are! We are so absorbed in organizations (almost too numerous to mention) and so intent on making an expression by moving in processions, and wearing badges, and being known (what a mistake fishers make when they make a noise!), that we almost forget to cast the net. We busy ourselves with organizations, without which we think we can do nothing, from prison reform to Ladies' Aid Sewing Bee for the purpose of keeping up the organizations that will employ some one to do our fishing for us.

Whatever may be said of "methods" and of "adaptations to the age in which we live," or the use of this or that "lovely thing," our Savior would have us remember that only he is a fisher who casts the net. O. A. CARR. Sherman, Tex.

Martin Meetings.

I have just closed a two-weeks' meeting at Martin, Tenn., with six baptized and two reclaimed. I find the church of Christ at Martin strong financially, but weak in zeal and knowledge. This church should locate some strong man there to sound out the gospel, strengthen the brethren, and build up churches in the surrounding country. Some of the members there are having a desire to be at peace with all men, and especially with the religious denominations of the town. I have long since learned the only active life a church can lead is a fighting life against sectarianism in all its forms.

I promised, if the Lord wills, to help the church of Christ at Martin in another meeting during October, 1900. There are many who want the Baptist and Methodist ministers to go in with me during that meeting and let the Baptist preach why he is a Baptist, the Methodist preach why he is a Methodist, and myself preach why I am a Christian. This arrangement will suit me. Let us come together for a good meeting. I am sure such a meeting will cause all to know more of each other and much lasting good will be done. J. D. TANT.

Young says that the insurgent general, Tinio, holds this belief.

The new Croton dam, which will supply the city of New York with water, will be two hundred and sixty feet high, above rock foundation, and will taper from a thickness of two hundred feet at the base to twenty feet at the top. It is situated about four miles below the old Croton dam and about three miles above the junction of the Croton with the Hudson. The lake formed by the dam will receive the drainage of a watershed of three hundred and sixty square miles.

All the leading book paper mills of the West were closed on May 6 for an indefinite period on account of overproduction. The Western Book Paper Manufacturers' Association held a meeting and practically decided that a cessation in the manufacture would be to the best interests of the trade. The association is composed of representatives of the leading manufacturers west of the Alleghany Mountains and controls the bulk of trade in this section of the country and in the far West.

Representatives of the American Publishers' Association presented a memorial to the Senate Finance Committee finally asking that some relief be ordered on account of the higher price of paper. The delegation said the association represented two thousand newspapers. The addresses cited that the price of news paper has increased from sixty to one hundred per cent without reason or warrant to be found in the condition of the industry, which was believed to be the working of a trust.

Church News.

ARKANSAS.

Pea Ridge, April 24.—It has been some time since I have reported to the brethren through any of our papers of my work. I closed out my six years' work with the Rocky Comfort Church, Mo., last year and turned over the work to young Brother William Detherage, who moved into their community and who is a worthy and able young brother. I still preach at home, Pea Ridge, once a month, in connection with Brother H. L. Wilson. I have been preaching here over seven years. There were four additions last month. The church of Christ here is weak, but might be stronger. Because of the college here it is difficult to maintain numerical strength. I visit Jane, Mo., a mission point, once a month. Our success has been reasonable, though not what we desired. The cause in this part of the country seems to be on the wane. The last two years I have not been as active in my work as in the past on account of the afflictions of my wife, who has been a faithful companion in my labors the past thirty-two years. The older I get, the more I am convinced of the uncertainties of the things of this life and the less charms the things of this life (world) have for me; but I shall continue my labors in the future as in the past, as circumstances will permit, until the Master shall say: "It is enough." May the Lord bless all the faithful, is my prayer. S. R. BEAMAN.

ARIZONA.

Safford, April 23.—When I left Texas, last winter, for the West I promised many of the brethren that I would give them a short article in the Gospel Advocate on the spiritual condition and wants of Arizona and Mexico. I will state at the beginning that it has been my good luck to meet with but very few brethren since I left Texas. I found a small congregation at Lordsburg, New Mexico; they treated me very kindly. Here I met Brother J. T. Jones, of Texas, a kind, noble-hearted, good Christian preacher, the first and only one I have met with since I left Texas. From Lordsburg I went into Arizona, visiting a few old-time friends and isolated brethren. I have traveled from the head almost to the mouth of the Gila River Valley. It is a fine farming valley. The Mormons have the best and greater part of this country and they practice so much sin in their religion that the whole country is contaminated with it. Many of them have two or more wives. They have dancing in their church every week. Consequently, they get more in their church by the dance than by any other process. To build up the cause of Christ in this country the church should locate a good evangelist, at Safford or Solomonville and support him until the cause is planted. I saw a statement some time back that there were only two congregations of Christians in Arizona, and they are not self-supporting nor doing much good. I also saw a statement from Brother J. M. Austin, of Camp Verde, Arizona, relative to the work there with Brother Dr. E. B. Ketcherside. Why not all the good brethren help these two brethren plant the cause at Camp Verde as a starting place? I can sympathize with Brother Austin. He says he has put in two months' hard work, not receiving one cent. Well, Brother Austin, I have put in more time than that and have paid out one hundred and forty-five dollars of cash and received only eleven dollars for my work. I shall return to Texas soon to hold some protracted meetings. My desire is then to return to this country and help to plant the cause of Christ permanently. Where is the preacher that will locate in Gila Valley; and, next, where are the congregations that will support him for one or two years until he can become self-supporting? Here are my heart and hands for this work. We need many good preachers and workers for this country. Write me at Wimberley, Tex. H. H. TURNER.

Kansas Notes.

Brother J. E. Cain went to Tivoli, O. T., on the fifth Lord's day in April to be with them at the opening of their new house. The brethren of Oklahoma are building houses rapidly for a new country. In many places in older countries they are yet worshipping in schoolhouses.

Brother B. F. Rhodes will probably do some work for the brethren at Hoyle, O. T., this year. Brother Rhodes will find some very faithful brethren at Hoyle, and they will find in Brother Rhodes an earnest, faithful proclaimer of the word.

I have recently been with the brethren at Carwile, O. T., in a meeting of nearly two weeks. I found some very faithful brethren there, but some not so faithful. Our meeting had many hindrances—much sickness, very busy planting corn, etc.; and last, but not least, quite a number that were once faithful members are now using their influence against the cause of Christ. Some of them are assisting the Presbyterian Sunday school, etc. Such people are great barriers to the church of Christ, and the cause would be in better condition if they would identify themselves wholly with the sectarians. Two preaching brethren, Steed and Fakes, visited us during the meeting. These two brethren are faithful preachers in that part of the country. Brother J. A. Walters and Brother Frank Bland, with their wives, from Hoyle, twenty miles away, spent about two days with us. They are among the most faithful Christians that I have ever met. I have labored with them in other places in bygone days. They are the kind that never quit.

This age, like all others, needs men of strong faith. We may sometimes be deceived as to the strength of our faith. We learn that when it is put to the test. There is another word and principle that grows out of this; that is "faithfulness," and of course that is the need of the hour—faithfulness to God and Christ, faithfulness to the word, faithfulness to our fellow-men. Faithfulness is fidelity; unfaithfulness is infidelity. There are many more infidels than many suppose, when we view the matter properly from every angle. Unfaithfulness to God is infidelity to him; unfaithfulness to Christ is infidelity to him; unfaithfulness to the Bible is infidelity to it; unfaithfulness to our fellow creatures is infidelity to them. determine our attitude here. If we are found wrong, we ought to change at once; for we certainly do not intend to be infidels in any sense nor to any degree. Are we sure that we are not? All is well if we are; all is not well if we are not.

Our love to God should be the supreme affection of our hearts. He must reign supreme in our hearts if we are accepted of him. Our love for our fellow-men should be strong, of such strength as to lead us to do them good under all circumstances. Love is the remedy for all the ills that belong to us—morally, socially, and spiritually. It will settle all differences and difficulties. Love for the truth and for each other must be mutual, must belong to all parties concerned.

Made Money on Round Bales.

Patrons of Roundlap Gin Plants Tell of Their Big Profits.

The past ginning season again demonstrated the incomparable superiority of the American Cotton Company's Roundlap bale. Not only were farmers benefited who had their cotton put up in Roundlap bales, but even the patrons of old-style gins profited by the presence of Roundlap competition.

Farmers all over the cotton States have written letters to the owners of Roundlap plants telling of the profit that has come to them from having their cotton put up in Roundlap bales. Mr. W. F. Hartley, Sr., who patronized the Greenville, Ala., plant, wrote on February 3, 1900: "The most important point in the Roundlap bale's favor to the farmer is the advance in price above that of the square bale. It has averaged the entire past season $2 per bale more than the square bale. More than $5,000 has been placed in circulation by the advanced price caused by this one press."

Mr. F. M. Rogers also wrote from Greenville, Ala.: "I have received from $\frac{3}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound more than the market price here for square bales. The Roundlap bale is a Godsend to the farmers, and has saved them thousands of dollars in a few months."

Mr. J. D. Reily, Centerville, Miss., wrote on December 4, 1899: "Another advantage to the farmers is that Roundlap cotton brings such a good price that the buyers of square cotton have been forced to put their prices up. Thus all the farmers are benefited in a town where there is a Roundlap press."

Mr. F. B. Simonton, Temple, Tex., November 12, 1899: "I have received from $1.50 to $3.50 per bale more for my cotton than if I had ginned and sold in the square bale. Besides, I know that the prices the American Cotton Company has paid for seed cotton have been the cause of those buying the square bale paying from ten to fifty points more for it."

Mr. J. L. Wood, of Venus, Tex., December 2, 1899, wrote: "I sold to the American Cotton Company at its East Waco plant the first bale of cotton that was ever ginned by the Roundlap bale system in Waco, and have been selling my cotton in the seed to you since that time. For the last three years, including 1899, I have sold my cotton to your Venus plant. I can safely say that I have made $2 per bale more by selling to you in the seed than I would have made if I had ginned it into square bales, besides saving a great deal of annoyance with the street buyers. In view of the fact that the custom ginners and those opposed to the Roundlap system say that you do not let the farmer have cotton seed, I will say that I have always got seed when I asked for it."

Mr. P. B. Hall, a merchant and planter, of Waynesboro, Ga., wrote on November 10, 1899, to Messrs. Wilkins & Jones, owners of the Roundlap plant at that place: "I had one lot of twenty bales turned out by you, and without saying anything to anybody I put the samples on the market. All of the buyers in town bid upon same, thinking it square bale cotton. One of the buyers bid $5\frac{3}{4}$ cents, another bid $5.87\frac{1}{2}$ cents, and another bid 5.95 cents, the latter remarking at the time that he was really bidding a full sixteenth more than the lot of cotton was worth. Without knowing what bids I had received—in fact, I did not tell you that anybody had bid upon it—you offered and paid me 6.50 for the lot of cotton, which was a clear difference of fifty-five points in favor of the Roundlap bale. I believe that the Roundlap bale is the bale of the future, as it effects a large saving of waste and enables the planter to get a higher price for his cotton."

Mr. Abram Williams, on November 10, 1899, wrote Messrs. Wilkins & Jones: "To-day I had two Roundlap bales of cotton packed on your Roundlap bale press, for which you paid me $7\frac{3}{4}$ cents per pound, when the same grade of cotton in the square bale here to-day is bringing only 7 to $7\frac{1}{8}$ cents per pound."

Mr. J. S. Collins, Pike Road, Ala., on November 11, 1899, wrote: "I have got for my cotton $2.50 per bale more than I could have got for it in square bales. I believe that the Roundlap press is the salvation of the farmers of our country. I believe that it has saved in our neighborhood, of eight or ten miles square, $5,000 in the price of cotton and twenty thousand pounds of lint cotton that would have been lost in samples, theft, and weight, and $1,500 in warehouse charges, besides drayage and railroad expenses."

The England Gin Company, which operates a Roundlap plant at England, Ark., on December 13, 1899, wrote: "We are very much pleased with the Roundlap bale press. It is a recognized fact in this community that we have made the price of cotton from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ cents higher than it would have been. Only this last week, when we were out of the market about four days, seed cotton dropped from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 cents per pound."

IRON IN THE STOMACH.

You May Perhaps Think it Strange that there is Iron in Your Stomach, or should be. Do you?

At any rate, it is true.

If there is no iron, you are sick. If you are sick, it is probably because you need iron.

Indigestion, with all its discomforts, is caused by the want of iron. Your gastric juice contains iron. When it doesn't, it lacks virtue.

Headaches, dizziness, yellow complexion, stomach ache, offensive breath, bad taste, eructations, fever, ague, nausea, heartburn, flatulence, constipation, prostration, exhaustion, general weakness, tiredness, loss of ambition, nervousness, irritability.

All these troubles come from indigestion, caused by lack of iron in the stomach and blood.

Have you any of them?

You can drive them away with Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. It puts just the right proportion of iron into your stomach—the form of iron that is needed—the sort that doesn't disorder your digestion or discolor your teeth.

It is not a theory, it is a scientific fact, that iron is found in nearly every part of the healthy body.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic supplies the iron that is needed to make you well. Tones up your stomach, enriches your blood, and puts strength and vitality into your system.

Indigestion can be cured with Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. The bad results of indigestion may be righted. Your health will be restored if you take it steadily and perseveringly until your system has all the iron that it needs.

You can tell when you are well.

E. W. Erickson, No. 305 Main street, Dallas, Tex., says one bottle of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic has had marked effect toward the cleansing of his blood, and he considers it a good medicine.

Brother Yohannan.

I have recently received a letter from Brother Kh. B. Yohannan, of Urumiah, Persia. The readers of the Gospel Advocate will no doubt remember that Brother Yohannan was in this country for eighteen months, some years ago, studying at the Bible School and traveling among the churches in the interest of pure Christianity in his native country.

He went back to his home and began, amid much opposition, to preach the pure gospel to the people of that benighted land. He writes that he is faithfully preaching the word still, under better surroundings and more favorable circumstances than at first; that the people are more willing to hear, and that many are accepting and walking in the truth. He speaks pathetically of the sad condition of the poor in that country, something well-nigh a famine having prevailed there for several years; and while he doesn't speak of being in want himself, I know he makes sacrifices to preach to the poor, and I propose that the readers of the Gospel Advocate send him a substantial token of their appreciation of his work, as a matter of encouragement in the same. I propose that we raise fifty dollars to send to him, as was done for Brother Asador Paul.

All who wish to have fellowship in this worthy work will please send their contributions to me, and when the amount called for has been received notice will be published and the donation forwarded to him. We that know Brother Yohannan intimately have confidence in his integrity and prudence and believe that anything sent to him in this way will be faithfully used for the spread of the gospel. So now, brethren, let us gladly and promptly take part in this matter and show the brother, by our liberality, that he has not been forgotten in the land in which he learned the truth. J. W. GRANT.
Bible School.

As stated by Brother Grant, Brother Yohannan was at the Bible School parts of two sessions. He made the impression on those who knew him best as an earnest, devoted, Christian man. I doubt not the money asked for him would be gratefully received and well used; so I hope it will be given. D. L.

Double-minded. No. 1.

"A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." (James 1: 8.)

The burning glass collects the sun's rays and concentrates them upon a given point until fire is produced; in fact, in Paris there has been in operation, recently, what is known as the "solar engine," because the heat is drawn from the sun by means of mirrors.

In warfare a scattered army may be not only powerless, but really a hindrance; but by gathering the army together and concentrating its power upon a particular point the greatest of victories may be won. So it is with regard to the Christian life. If our energies are spent on not only scattered, but diversified fields of labor, results often will be unimportant for any good, and sometimes signal for their baneful productions.

It is "the man who seeks one thing in life, and but one," who succeeds. Men of fame are not only men of action, but men of action well directed. Men who have really benefited the world—who have given it something, who have taken nothing seemingly are those whose aim was single and whose efforts were concentrated. We may respect highly men of scholarship, of breadth and depth of learning, and look with some degree of yearning upon their acquirements and their consequent pleasure and satisfaction in them, but let us remember that the world's benefactors have been men of action rather than men of learning. Men of rare attainments and broad education are seldom those who accomplish the great things in either the trades or professions. Think of inventors, discoverers, doctors, lawyers, preachers, and authors. Have they been men to bless the world? Were the greatest of them those of liberal education or those with limited educational opportunities, who by persistent effort won success and fame?

But in church work this idea is made very prominent. Among the churches the scholarly men do not accomplish near the amount of work that is accomplished by men of less learning. Education, it appears, tends to an apportionment of effort to diversified fields of both thought and action.

After all, it has been the "men of one idea" who, though in life they were called "cranks," "mossbacks," etc., are now recognized as among the greatest of the ancients. No doubt the apostle Paul, in his day, was a "crank" and a "mossback" to many people, but he gives us a noble example of concentration of all our energies upon the vantage point: "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 13, 14.)

This expression from the great, bounding heart of the great apostle is but a plain statement of his lifetime concentration of effort. He was not a "double-minded man, unstable in all his ways," but one steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that in him his labor would not be vain, but productive of good unto himself and his neighbor, and of glory to God through Christ Jesus his Lord, both his and ours. Chinese Language.

The Eastern languages are not, at the best, very easy for us of the West to acquire, but ordinary people and especially good linguists who, with determination, cheerfully take up the task need not think it impossible to learn.

In the greater part of China, Mandarin is the spoken language, while the southeast and a few other sections have their own dialect, which seems almost like another language. The Mandarin itself, in different parts, has different pronunciations; so that when a foreigner comes to China the first thing is to decide where to locate as a center, the Lord willing, for future labors; go there, or as near as possible, get a good Chinese teacher of that locality, and go to work with a vim. I do not mean to use every moment in study, for that is apt to bring on sickness, dullness, etc., but let that be his chief business for a while. For the encouragement of such, if one learns thoroughly the Mandarin language of almost any given place, no matter where he goes, as a rule, he is understood, and he generally understands them. There are exceptions; but, as far as I see, they are rare. I notice the rule is every Chinaman speaks (and prides himself in it) his own dialect, yet invariably understands those who speak another; but he takes care to keep his own pure. This seems especially true of the scholars. Foreigners often change to the dialect of the people of their new locality. Some change very readily; while to change outside of Mandarin is partially like learning a new language.

From what I have written it will be gathered that Mandarin may be said to be the language of China. While it has its different dialects, we have outside Mandarin dialects such as Shanghai, Ningpo, Foochow, Soochow, and Canton. So, unless one labors in these outside Mandarin speaking places, his Mandarin is sufficient to enable him to do Christian work in any place in China.

Japanese is hard because of its variety of forms of politeness to suit different conditions, while Chinese is hard because of its different tones, inflections, and sounds, and both are hard to us because they have no grammar; but learning Mandarin in China has been simplified by Mr. F. Baller, of the China Inland Mission, and now quite recently their mission has adopted a Frenchman's principle—viz., learning more after the kindergarten system. It is as follows:

The teacher takes the sheet on which the lesson for the day is printed in clear Chinese characters.

1. The teacher first briefly announces (in English) the "aim" in the lesson, or the "end" to be attained, and this usually forms its title.

2. He then sets forth (also in English) the "means" by which this "end" is to be attained, which forms the consecutive steps of the exercise, in as realistic and dramatic form as possible.

3. One or two of the students are then asked to repeat this from memory, verbal exactness being less important than accuracy in regard to the idea to be expressed, as the aim is not so much to translate words as to reproduce conceptions, and thus learn to think in Chinese.

4. The teacher now detaches each verb in the first paragraph in turn, and slowly repeats aloud the Chinese verbs as they are learned. The rest should articulate the words in a low voice as they do so. M. Gouin says, in this connection: "Do not attempt to obtain a perfect pronunciation all at once. Let the teacher talk continually, and let the pupil at first attempt to speak but little. It is in his ear, and not on his tongue, that it is important to fix the word or phrase."

5. Taking the verb as the basis, the teacher then proceeds to build up the sentence of the first paragraph, adding the subject and complement in their order, and deals with them as with the verbs. The remaining paragraphs of the exercise are, of course, taught in the same way.

6. The students may then write the exercise, first in Romanized, from the teacher's dictation, and afterwards in the character, from a copy, which will make a useful break in the course of the oral teaching. In writing the Romanized from dictation the tones should be added to each word as it is written, and it will be found that very soon the students will be able to do this quite correctly, simply from hearing the sounds as the teacher enunciates them.

7. When the characters of the verbs in an exercise have been learned by the students, they should go along the column of verbs and reconstruct each sentence, step by step, as did the teacher at the beginning. After a few lessons the Romanized of each sentence so obtained (and, later on, the characters and tones) may then be written from memory, instead of from dictation or copy, as at the first.

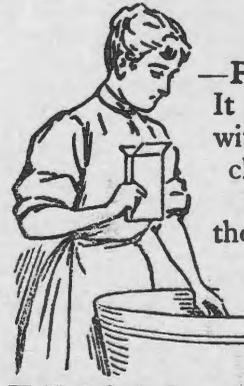

This is the method of teaching the "relative phrases:" The teacher is supposed to have already given the lesson as above, and the students to have elaborated it. Consequently, we are at a point where recitation by the students commences. This may, with advantage, take the form of a dialogue, the students repeating the lesson, sentence by sentence, and the teacher employing the relative phrases in reply; or, three or four students may be asked to make use of the relative phrases, as the teacher recites the lesson. Three or four of such phrases would probably be sufficient to attempt to teach in one lesson, and these are usually printed at the foot of the exercises. The teacher should have at hand the material for many such dialogues as indicated above, by making use of phrases arising naturally out of the subject or by introducing words and sentences expressing approval, encouragement, etc., as the lesson is being taught. The lesson has now been acquired in its four points—namely, the verb, the complete sentence, the relative or interlocutory phrase, and the written character. It only remains to add that the Scriptures, the Sacred Edict, and other books may be taught in the same way, particularly those portions of such books which are written.

To carry out the foregoing instructions, we must have similar advantages as the China Inland Mission has; but as we have not, especially the individual worker, we must do the next best—purchase from the above people their course of printed lessons, which they very generously allow us to do, and it is a noble, brotherly deed. Having done this, get the best Chinese teacher you can and keep as near the instructions given as possible. Just here lies our next difficulty, unless you, like the China Inland Mission, have a good foreign brother who can take the difficult part of the teaching and the Chinese teacher the balance. You certainly will realize again and again that the East has very few good teachers. Midst all this you must, like others, do the best you can, and in it be prepared to have to teach your teacher how to teach you.

Notwithstanding all, the new Christian laborer to China has many advantages above his predecessors in acquiring the languages; so let us thank God and take courage. Let no one who is determined to please the Lord and serve him be discouraged on account of the language, for I know of none worse than myself, always having been a poor linguist; yet help has been given to do some good, even if in an indirect manner. All ladies who contemplate spending a time in Paris will find this book very useful.

"About My Father's Business." By Austin Miles. The Mershon Company, New York. Price, $1.50.

Mr. Miles spent ten years in collecting data for this book, during which time he visited many denominations in his extensive travels and made personal observations as to their reasons for failing to reach the masses. He chooses living characters to represent the different conditions of church life and the evils existing through the desire on the part of professed Christians to bring it down to the arena of pleasure. All through the narrative there is carried on an animated controversy between the social and spiritual elements, describing the lack of force and power in spiritual life by the encroachment upon it of social pleasures.

"Under Orders; or, Not His Own Master." By Mrs. G. S. Reaney. A new book in the Sheldon Series. Cloth, gilt top, seventy-five cents; linen cloth, forty cents; paper, twenty-five cents. Advance Publishing Company, 215 Madison street, Chicago.

This is a story of adventure and heroism, drawn from modern missionary enterprise. It shows anew that truth is stronger and more exciting than the old-time fiction of adventure. The leading character is a hero in many senses, for he not only braves the dangers of Tierra del Fuego, but he gives up the girl he loves when she makes it a question of choice between her and his chosen work. In the end he gains more than he has lost, for he wins her back, a devoted woman, by his heroic example. The English surroundings of the home features of the story give it a quaint and pleasant setting which is attractive.

"Thoughts for the Quiet Hour." Edited by D. L. Moody. Pages, 128; price, cloth, thirty cents. Fleming H. Revell Company.

The contents of this book were first published in the monthly issues of the Record of Christian Work, and were found very helpful for devotional purposes. Being of so permanent value has made it necessary to put them in this permanent form. For each day in the year a passage of scripture and thoughts to light up and impress it upon the mind are given.

LITERARY NOTICES.

"The Authorized Life of Dwight L. Moody," which has been prepared in accordance with his expressed wish, by his son, William R. Moody, has been published from the press of Fleming H. Revell Company, advance orders alone requiring a first edition of one hundred and fifty thousand copies. The book is being printed in Chicago and New York, and not less than five large printing establishments and a half dozen binderies have been engaged in connection with this work.

Jacob Chamberlain, M.D., the time-honored missionary to India, who is one of the most prominent of the delegates to the Ecumenical Conference now being held in New York, has just completed a new volume of his inimitable sketches of life and work among the Telugus of India, entitled, "The Cobra's Den," which is to be published at once by Fleming H. Revell Company.

The same firm, ever foremost as publishers in America of missionary literature, also announces for early publication a complete and authoritative account of mission work along the Kongo River in Africa, entitled, "Pioneering on the Kongo," by W. Holman Bentley, who writes from a twenty-one years' experience in this country. This work will be in two large volumes, copiously illustrated from sketches, photographs, etc.

The same firm will also publish shortly a unique work by S. N. Zwemer, F.R.G.S., entitled, "Arabia, the Cradle of Islam," which gives a full and readable description of the "neglected peninsula." It is a work for which there has long been a demand.

The facts in that present-day tragedy, the political obliteration of Finland, are compactly but forcibly presented by Mr. J. Westlake, in an article which the Living Age of April 21 reprints from the National Review. "John England's Outgoing," the short serial now running in the Living Age, is a story of Georgian days, told with singular delicacy and quaintness.

The Record of Christian Work for May contains another article on "The Inspiration of the Bible" and a beautiful poem on "Jonathan at Gilboa." David M. Wynkoop contributes an interesting article on "The Pimas Indians." The magazine contains two other articles worthy of special mention: "Mecca," by S. M. Zwemer, and "The Outlook in China," by A. H. SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

The American Baptist Flag says:

"The Gospel Advocate's first-page scribe would be greatly delighted to provoke a fight between two Baptist preachers, but one of them refuses to accept his dictations or play into his hand. His ranting and raving is but an exhibition of his spite because he can't provoke the fray. We have seen snakes bite themselves in their rage before, and we little cared for their venom."

"The Gospel Advocate's first-page scribe" is not "ranting and raving," nor has he any idea he can "provoke a fight between two Baptist preachers"—that is, between the two Baptist preachers he is now dealing with. There is no probability of a fight between two men when one of them will allow the other to say that he suppressed a letter written by request for publication, made statements about it that are not true, represented him as taking positions he did not take and does not believe, and refused to publish an article correcting the misrepresentations. If Hall should say this about Malone, there would probably be a fight; but if Hall is conscious of his inability to meet these grave charges which Malone has repeatedly made, there will hardly be any fracas about it.

Brother G. A. Klingman, of Louisville, Ky., has sent me a private letter from Brother Snodgrass, of Japan, with permission to "cut out" and publish any part of it which in my judgment will do good. I extract as follows:

"I am sorry I have no encouraging news to write you on mission work; but, rather, discouraging. I am compelled to close my school for poor children. I find, in balancing my accounts, that I am getting into debt, and therefore feel that I must close up that work—as much, however, as I regret. Of course I shall open up again as soon as I am able. . . . It is more difficult to support oneself here now, and they who come out as independent evangelists will have to hustle about. Do you know that I am inclined to be real skeptical about most people? I have seen so much instability in professed Christians.

I do not say so because I find myself among this class; but a genuine independent worker is just about the best and most capable man in the field. A man who, once an independent worker, joins some sect demonstrates his incapacity and shows clearly that he needs a tutor. In the point of acquiring the ability to do things, the man free from sectarian and society alliances is the only man who is in a fair way to a true development of all his powers. The average society missionary is a slave, and can never develop fully."

I am not surprised that "they who come out as independent evangelists will have to hustle about" in Japan. They have to "hustle about" here in Tennessee. A still greater trouble is that the price of hustling about has gone down to starvation rates and seems to be going lower every year. An independent evangelist went into a county last year where there was but one congregation of scriptural worshipers, and he did not see them. They were not very scriptural, either. He hustled about nearly a month in that county, established congregations at three different places, and before he left the county he received letters from three different preachers requesting him to put them in to preach for the congregations he had established. He traveled five hundred miles from home to do that work. All three of the preachers who applied for a job as soon as the congregations were established had lived several years in an adjoining county, but had never hustled about any till they saw a chance for a job in the hustle. He went to another place and hustled about nearly two weeks in the woods, less than ten miles from a strong church in a prosperous town. The second Sunday of the meeting in the woods several of what Sam. Jones would call "the most principled members" of the strong church in the prosperous town drove out in carriages and enjoyed the preaching so much that they begged him to come and "hold a meeting for our church." No church or Christian, except where he labored, "communicated with him as concerning giving and receiving" in any of this work or in much more of the same kind. The man who goes out as an independent evangelist in this country has to hustle about for a living; and if he is a good preacher, he also has to hustle about to keep what Mr. Weller, in the "Pickwick Papers," calls "the power o' suction" in the churches from drawing him in. I am not at all skeptical about such preachers and churches. Most of them mean well, and many of them really want to be true to the teaching of the New Testament. The trouble is, "they err, not knowing the Scriptures." They will do better when they learn more of the word of God. Brother Klingman begs me to write a few of my "stirring editorials on the subject of sounding out the word of the Lord." The trouble is, my "stirring editorials" do not stir worth a cent on this subject. The preachers and churches all over this country are in an unscriptural rut in the matter of "holding meetings" every year in old, established congregations to the neglect of the rest of the world, and it will take a greater uplifting force than my "stirring editorials" to pull them out of the hole they are in. Nothing but the word of the Lord can do it, and the preachers, who are supposed to be the best informed in the holy Scriptures, will have to lead in the work. There are several good preachers who have spent nearly all their time in Middle Tennessee and adjacent counties for years, "holding meetings" in old, established churches. They have been fairly well supported in this work, but none too liberally sustained for the labor they have done and the hardships they have endured. They have the confidence of the Christians and churches all over the country; and if they would decline many invitations to "hold meetings" in good churches, frankly assigning as a reason a sense of duty to do more preaching in destitute places, they would give both the world and the churches a much-needed object lesson in consecration, earnestness, and self-denial, which characterize New Testament Christianity and make it essentially a missionary religion. I know this is hard to do, and I have no unkind feelings or bitter words for preachers who will not do it; but in such a work I believe Christians and churches would come to their support and extend their assistance even to laborers in distant lands. If, however, I am wrong in this opinion, and if preachers in such a work should receive insufficient support, or no help at all, they could still give the world and the churches a much-needed object lesson by laboring with their own hands for a living, while preaching to the extent of their ability and opportunity in destitute places. If any one who reads these lines indorses the principle they teach, the plain and easy way for him to show his faith by his works is, if he is a preacher, to go and do such work; if he is not a preacher, to send such contributions as he proposes to make for the support of the gospel direct to some godly man and self-denying preacher who is doing such work, and along with the contribution send a letter of good cheer, Godspeed, and brotherly love.

Brother Hall excludes from his paper all I have published from Malone against him; but I intend to publish every word he writes by way of defense or explanation, so that readers of the Gospel Advocate may have the whole case. In a recent issue of the American Baptist Flag, he says:

"Several times within the last six months Mr. F. D. Srygley has insinuated very broadly that the Flag editor had 'lied,' and that his rancidity was very much under par, and other such intimations. This 'toney' course was the last resort of the gentleman from the crushing defeat that came to him in our newspaper discussion last year; and, as an escape, he sought to provoke a personal wrangle that would involve the Flag editor and Brother Malone, with himself, in a contention over a question that had no merit whatever in the discussion, and was raised as a side issue to parry the effects of the discussion. But we refused persistently to be drawn into a personal wrangle with him, and do not now propose to do more than state that our quotation then made from Brother Malone's letter was in his exact words, was a full, numbered paragraph, and in no sense misrepresented him, and so completely knocked out friend Srygley that he has not yet recovered from the stroke. The intention of the gentleman in the above reference to his brother, F. B. Srygley, is also intended to provoke a personal quarrel. We gave our estimate of F. B. Srygley as a public debater in the editorial reporting his debate and it was deliberately expressed and will not be modified. Our statement as to his reflections on people in the audience is not met by throwing it all on Brother Grime. He had repeatedly referred to the Flag editor, and to Brother Grime and others, in some such sneering way as 'to reflect on us, or on his opponent through us, before he made his direct attack on Brother Grime; and Brother Grime never said one word to him, except in defense of himself when attacked. The moderator did not rebuke Grime, either, but he rebuked Srygley, and rebuked him for his reflections on others in the audience as well as his reflections on Grime, and ordered him to stop making such reflections on the auditors. As to the 'documentary proof,' it might be pertinent to remark that Mr. Srygley did not have the 'document' in hand when he jumped on to Brother Grime, and when he did find it the 'document' did not read like he said it did. The 'laughter in the audience' was not at Grime's expense, either, for it was the other fellow that was paying all the costs about that time. Now, as to a matter of 'veracity,' when that point is to be decided by F. D. Srygley, we care nothing. It is probable that his brother, F. B. Srygley, is a reasonably truthful man; at least, we hope so. But sometimes a man can strain his veracity mightily by just keeping back part of the truth, and he can almost unjoint it by pressing unduly on the little part he does tell. That is all that is the matter with the above ebullition from the doughty, commonplace champion of Campbellism. He probably does not aim to tell any falsehoods about it, but the reader must remember that in that debate he was being ground to death between the upper and nether millstones. Whitlock was whipping him in debate and Grime was defending himself gloriously against his insinuations upon him as an auditor. The little squib above is the best F. B. Srygley could reasonably be expected to do after that. It is not our desire to have any personal wrangles with either of the Srygleys; they are adepts in mud throwing and do not hesitate to write down any one as a scoundrel when it suits their convenience, whether it be the truth or not. On any fair discussion of doctrine we should not hesitate to tackle both of them at once, with one of our hands tied at that; but when it comes to dirt, filth, and corruptible littleness, we yield the palm to either one of them without a battle."

There is no "personal wrangle" between F. D. Srygley and Brother Hall, nor has F. D. Srygley decided any point of "veracity" against him or anybody else. All he has done was to publish what A. Malone and F. B. Srygley said and the proof they gave against Brother Hall, and leave the readers to settle the point of "veracity" for themselves. Nor has "Mr. F. D. Srygley insinuated very broadly that the Flag editor had 'lied.'" It is not an insinuation at all, but a plain statement repeatedly made and published in these columns by A. Malone, a Baptist preacher and debater of good standing and recognized ability, that "the Flag editor" suppressed a letter written by request for publication, made statements about it that are not true, represented Malone as taking positions which Malone says he did not take and does not believe, and refused to publish Malone's article correcting the misrepresentation. Brother Hall says now, as he has often said before, that the quotation he made from "Malone's letter" was in his exact words, was a full, numbered paragraph, and in no sense misrepresented him." Then why does he refuse to publish or to let me publish Malone's letter in full? Malone says Hall's quotation does misrepresent him. The way to settle this question of "veracity" between these two Baptist preachers is to publish Malone's letter in full. Malone insists that the letter be published; Hall refuses to publish it himself or let me publish it. Brother Hall says his quotation from Malone's letter "completely knocked out friend Srygley" in the discussion. Malone says "friend Srygley" is right and Brother Hall is wrong on the point at issue touching which he was quoted; he also says all "the recognized authorities in our church" are with "friend Srygley" and against Brother Hall on that point. How, then, could Brother Hall "knock out friend Srygley" with a quotation from Brother Malone which "in no sense misrepresented him?" The thing could not be done. I have thrown no mud and do not propose to throw any; the mud that has been thrown was made by Brother Hall and thrown by Brother Malone. Nor have I written down any man as "a scoundrel;" much less have I any intention of doing anything of the kind. That is not my style. All I have done is to publish Malone's charges and proof against Brother Hall and kindly request him to publish Malone's letter. Brother Hall is too old a debater not to know that an opponent has a right to see any letter, paper, or book that is introduced and quoted in an argument in discussion. I have done nothing but kindly and politely ask him to let me see a letter which he quoted in an argument against me in discussion; I have also published from the author of the letter he quoted communications which clearly establish my position. Why should Brother Hall lose his head, display an ugly temper, and abuse me for this? Under the rules of honorable discussion in an oral debate any fair-minded moderator would sustain me and compel him to let me see the letter. I have not departed from legitimate and dignified controversy to involve anybody "in a contention over a question that had no merit whatever in the discussion and was raised as a side issue," as Brother Hall says, nor do I propose to do anything of the kind. In discussion Brother Hall said repeatedly that the word "church" never means anything but a local congregation in the New Testament. I contended that it frequently means all who are Christians. In arguing this issue I quoted against Brother Hall, and in support of my position, a long list of eminent Baptist authorities and published F. B. Srygley's statement as to the position A. Malone took in debate. Hall quoted from a letter Malone wrote to prove that Srygley misrepresented Malone. Malone said Hall misrepresented him and Srygley represented him correctly. Hall refused to publish in full the Malone letter from which he quoted and declined to publish an article from Malone defining his position and correcting Hall's misrepresentation. I did nothing but publish Malone's statement of his own position and kindly request Brother Hall to publish the Malone letter from which he quoted. I did all this in courteous style and strictly in the line of legitimate argument on the issue between us in the debate. Why should he get mad at me and abuse me for publishing Malone's statement of his own position on an issue which we were discussing? If Malone and "all the recognized authorities" in the Baptist denomination agree with me against Brother Hall, as Malone says, it is not my fault and he ought not to get mad at me and abuse me for it. Nobody cares anything about Brother Hall's "estimate of F. B. Srygley as a public debater," nor has anybody asked him to modify it. The only issue F. B. Srygley made with him on that point was whether his statement of facts was true. That issue is still unsettled, and it will receive further attention "at a more convenient season." Brother Hall says he would "not hesitate to tackle" both the Srygleys at once, with one hand tied, "on any fair discussion of doctrine." Very well. When the Srygleys debate they never claim the right to select their opponent, but meet the man the church whose doctrine is in issue selects. If the Baptists should select Brother Hall to represent them in debate, one of the Srygleys will obligate himself to take no part in the discussion and the other one will not require Brother Hall to have one of his hands tied. If Brother Hall has given a fair sample of himself in written discussion with me, either one of the Srygleys will behave himself as well as "the Flag editor" in debate.

It is a beautiful thought that to each soul born into the world there is sent from the courts of light an angel to watch over it from its first wailing cry till the eyes are closed in death. Be the way long or short, smooth or rough, this unseen guardian never leaves us. Think of it! What companionship! Who can truly say: "I am alone?" Like Elisha's servant in the mount, when perplexities thicken around us, we cry out: "Alas! . . . how shall we do?" Like him, our eyes are often blinded to the angelic forms that surround us, ready to deliver in temptation and save in the hour of danger; but they are none the less real, and to the believer the thought of their presence must ever bring a sense of trust and repose.—Selected.

A man is made by the company he keeps in the world of books no less than in the world of men. Low, coarse associates will leave their impress on the mind, whether we meet them at school, on the street, in the shop, or attractively set forth in the pages of some book. Just so with those that are pure and ennobling. If we seek their society and enter into their aims, we shall become like them. Choose your friends with discretion and your books with good judgment, and you will grow toward the high standard of the perfect man.—Youth's Instructor.

The Order of Faith and Repentance.

Frank Faithful: "Well, Henry, did you become satisfied upon the subject of feet washing, after having read up on the subject as taught in the Bible?"

Henry Hardshell: "I am now fully satisfied on that subject. I believe you are correct in teaching that it is one of those good works which Christians ought to do wherever and whenever it is necessary and one has the opportunity. We are commanded: 'As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.' (Gal. 6: 10.) To kindly bathe the feet of a brother or friend is obedience to Christ in this commandment. I have a curiosity to know, friend Faithful, if you have ever washed the feet of any of your brethren, and in this way practiced what you preach."

Frank F.: "I am glad to say that I have, and have as often been ministered unto by my brethren in this Christlike kindness. However, it becomes none of us to boast of these things, yet I have the pleasure of knowing there are disciples of the Son of God, living and dead, who, in the Master's name, have done even this unto me. Among them I now call to mind W. H. Dixon, T. J. Shaw, and others whose names are in the book of life. As you are now content on that subject, I will ask you: Is your way now clear to go forward in obedience to Christ? It was at the feet washing that the Savior said: 'If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.' Are you now ready to enter into Christ?"

Henry H.: "Well, not exactly. There is another thing that bothers me of late. I attended a debate since I saw you, in which the disputants argued the order of faith and repentance. They got so highly wrought up on the dispute that I began to fear that neither of them possessed faith or repentance, as they called each other liars and other hard names. They got into a muddle over it, and the hearers were much excited and divided over it. I tried to be calm, but I find, in truth, I have taken the matter more to heart than I anticipated. I am bothered to know what to believe about it, and I thought it would be best to settle it before obeying the gospel by which, as I now understand, I become a Christian. I was like Squire Deussenberry when he held his first trial. He felt strongly the dignity and responsibility of his office to decide the case. He listened with close attention to the first lawyer who, in his pleading, pleased the Squire very much. He said to himself, 'Well, that one has gained the suit, but I must, of course, listen at the lawyer on the other side,' whose speech was fully equal to the first counsel, and pleased the Squire quite as well. So he turned to the sheriff and said: 'They have both gained it; Mr. Sheriff, you will have to pay the costs.' When I heard the argument that repentance came prior to faith, I thought surely it must be that way; and when I listened to the debater who argued that faith must come before repentance, it seemed quite as plausible. Hence, I am bothered and would like to hear your ideas on that. Somehow I think I would be ready to obey if I could understand which comes first in order, as required in the gospel."

Frank F.: "At first view it seems discouraging to one who is trying to learn the truth to see how sincerely and honestly good men seem to differ on this point; but, happily for us, there are some theoretical differences which cannot at all affect the practical performance of what God requires of an honest, obedient heart. Men can be saved by the gospel who may argue for different views on this subject. You can be saved by the gospel of Christ, whether you ever understand exactly the relation faith and repentance sustain to each other or whether you ever become metaphysician enough to know which is first in order."

Henry H.: "I fear I do not understand you. Why, these debaters argued that the salvation of a man's soul depended upon knowing exactly which came first. That is what gets me."

Frank F.: "I am aware that professional debaters and partisans would have their hearers think the issue here is a life-and-death case, but this is much exaggerated. For instance, two men might differ in their views of the priority of faith and repentance, one strenuously contending that repentance is before faith and the other contending that faith must precede repentance; but if each of these two men will humble their hearts to obey the commandments of God, given to the world through Jesus Christ, one will be saved as much as the other. Whichever may be correct or incorrect, a humble obedience to Christ will make them practically the same, however wide apart they may be in theory. Happily for all mankind, this is a theoretical difference which cannot affect the practice of either before God. A man may not be able to draw the line between these; he may not know a letter in the book; yet if he believes in and obeys Jesus Christ, he can and will be saved as easily and effectually as the shrewdest metaphysician in the world."

Henry H.: "Well, you have got your own view of the order of these commands; I would like to hear it."

Frank F.: "Yes, I have my own view, but for the reasons stated I will not condemn one who differs from me on this subject. Sometimes I think they who debate this question are both right and both wrong."

Henry H.: "Why, how could that possibly be?"

Frank F.: "Remember, you are asking my personal view, and I am not infallible, but at your request I will tell you why it seems to me they are both right and both wrong. He who contends for the priority of faith is right that faith is first, 'for without faith it is impossible to please God,' but he is wrong when he contends that the degree of faith a man exercises before repentance is a sufficient faith. He speaks of faith full and strong, as distinguished from repentance, when this is not true. Faith which is distinguished from repentance and other acts of obedience is of no profit, even though it be first in order. He who contends that repentance is first is right when he has reference to a complete faith which works by love and purifies the heart; he is wrong when he insists that repentance full and complete exists before faith. The idea that either is complete without the other is contrary to the truth, and, considering the human mind and heart, is impossible."

Henry H.: "Why, you are in a greater muddle on this than either of those debaters. Both right and both wrong. Well, I swan!"

Frank F.: "Please do not use that expression; it is contrary to the word of God."

Henry H.: "Why, what is wrong about that?"

Frank F.: "Well, to say 'I swan' means 'I swear.' The good Book says: 'Swear not at all.' That is the reason I believe it is wrong."

Henry H.: "Why, great goodness! what will I hear next?"

Frank F.: "I am sorry I must correct you again. That is as bad as, or worse than, to say 'I swan.'"

Henry H.: "Why, I never thought that was wrong; what is the trouble with that? I have heard nice ladies say that."

Frank F.: "It is written, 'Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain,' and that is one way of calling upon God. He will not hold him guiltless who taketh his name in vain."

Henry H.: "I will try not to use these expressions any more. I thank you for calling my attention to that blunder. A pure speech is the best; but, getting back to the subject, how do you believe faith and repentance are related to each other?"

Frank F.: "They are conjoined, interlinked, or interwoven so closely that no mind is shrewd enough to draw the exact line between them and say: 'On this side is faith, on that is repentance.' Arguments about them conceive the notion that one or the other is full and complete without respect to the other, which is not true. An illustration or two may help you understand my idea of their true relation to each other. There is no one so sharp sighted as to discern before day the first streaks of coming dawn. Still it grows, first imperceptibly, then by degrees, until the God of day spreads his beams, lighting the world with gladness and joy. Neither is there any one who can surely discern the first shadows at eventide which precede the oncoming night; yet again the shadows come imperceptibly at first, then come the deeper shades. In truth, there is no exact line to be drawn between a full day and dark night. So with the soul, as the light of the gospel dawns upon the darkened soul, bringing in the full tide of salvation, faith, repentance, and obedience jointly wield their influences. No man can exactly mark the places they join."

Henry H.: "You think full faith and full repentance are united, do you?"

Frank F.: "Yes, they are inseparable, though not one—as twins, counted the same age. When either is in its fullness the other is always present. That wonderful pair, the Siamese twins, wherein the unity was so great as to make the life of one dependent on the other, may serve again to illustrate these two important conditions of the gospel when in full exercise. There are passages of scripture in which either one of these is made to include all the conditions of the gospel. Paul, in Gal. 3, uses 'faith' to mean the whole gospel plan of salvation. Luke's record of the commission gives such prominence to 'repentance,' preached in the name of Christ, among all nations, as to include all the gospel. (Luke 24: 47.) Peter, in summing up his preaching to the Gentiles, who by his mouth heard the word of the gospel and believed, called it the 'repentance unto life.' (Acts 11: 18.) The gospel is adapted to the comprehension of the humblest accountable person. Whether my view of this subject be correct or any other man's theory be correct, one thing is very plain, and that is to fear God and keep his commandments. That is the whole duty of man, and will make you safe, whatever you think about the order of faith and repentance. The earnest, honest, sincere soul who submits in loving faith to the commands of the gospel is always safe. Years ago, in England, William Harvey discovered what is now regarded as the true theory of the circulation of the blood. A few believed it, some laughed at it, many controverted it bitterly, but all these disagreements on the subject did not stop the blood circulating. To this we may liken that earnest desire to be a Christian which is manifested by true faith and repentance. They will work in their right and proper order, in an honest and good heart, regardless of one's ideas of their order. The power of the Holy Ghost, through the word, works in its own proper way in the hearts of men, whether they understand that process or not. This is the true spiritual circulation."

The Bible and Japan.

Is it the Bible that has helped the people? Some do not want to give the credit to this source, but that this is the source of Japan's elevation there can be no question. Wherever you see reform you see footprints of the word of God. Social reform, caring for the destitute, education, charitable institutions, etc., are all clearly connected with missionary effort. The spirit of heathenism places no value on the poor and the common class. They are taught to care nothing for themselves; they are oppressed till life becomes bitter. Unable to support their children, and seeing not the value of a human soul, mothers give away their children, cast them off, or otherwise neglect them. "In one mission school in China there are fifty girls who had been thrown away, by their parents, to die in their infancy."

It is not quite so bad in Japan as in China, but the common and widespread neglect of the poor is apparent everywhere. It is one special work of the missionary to turn attention to this class. He gathers them together in schools, furnishes teachers, and begins to teach them the common branches, the Scriptures, and morality. They show rapid improvement in morals and learning. This wins the hearts of the parents and sets an object lesson before the people. Others take up the example and the work continues to spread. Even among the Buddhists there are charity schools and Young Men's Christian Associations—a thing unknown to them till the missionary went into their midst. This is a clear admission of the superiority of the gospel, even though not always presented in its purest form.

Why does the Bible advance education? For the reason already suggested. Idolatry thrives on superstition; and the more ignorant the people, the better; but the gospel demands that people be taught, hence schools are a necessity to the spread of the gospel. The missionaries are the greatest educators. With learning comes a knowledge of the various sciences and the application of a man's time and ability to some useful occupation. A man in that light that the Bible necessarily carries with it will not spend hours uselessly beating a temple drum; he will not repeat vain repetitions for days; he will not spend weeks making a pilgrimage to some sacred place, nor a lifetime in making useless and degrading images. With a mind freed from superstition, and properly educated, a man sees his relation to the world and the relation of things to each other as he could not otherwise; he discovers new causes, and works out new results; he learns the nature and power of the material elements, and makes them act as servants to carry out his purposes. The result of this is our modern civilization, materially speaking, and the progress Japan has made in the last fifty years.

Japan had a false view of herself. She was not a nation of men, but of gods, demons, sprites—anything but common men. When the emperor went upon the streets none would dare look upon him, lest they should be smitten with blindness. The lords were worshiped as gods, and the spirits of the dead were constant visitors among them. With such distorted views the conduct of man toward man was unnatural and detrimental to the common good.

The Bible came to the people and taught them that all were men, and all, even the emperor, sprang from a common source. Learning of their own nature and that of their fellows, their conduct changed, and there is not a man, woman, or child in all Japan to-day but what is in some way being blessed by the Bible. The Bible has never converted all of a nation, but wherever it has gone it has benefited all. It makes some Christians. In many ways where it is not recognized as the gospel it nevertheless is influencing the lives of men. To-day there are public schools, orphan asylums, charitable institutions, homes for the blind, prison reforms, and hospitals springing up in Japan, all of which easily find their origin in the principles taught in the Scriptures.

The translation of the Scriptures marks an epoch in Japanese history; it marks the beginning of a new style in literature that will be probably as marked in the Japanese language as that of the Authorized Version in our English.

The introduction of our civilization of necessity introduces the Bible, for the two are inseparably connected. If they read our authors, they are constantly coming across passages from the Bible; if our English textbooks be introduced into their schools, and this is done all over the empire, they are again brought in contact with the Bible, as there are quotations from it constantly appearing therein. Often I have, in explanation of a scripture quotation found in a textbook, given a talk to the class, which, if not discovered as preaching, was just as good. So, while still proud to call themselves "heathen," Christian thought and Christian sentiment are working like leaven in all the public schools of Japan.

Whatever may be said adversely, three things we can say for the missionaries in their daily walk: (1) They tell the truth; (2) they are pure and faithful with their wives; (3) they are honest. In teaching these three important lessons, the very foundation of society, they are living epistles known and read of all men. But the missionaries themselves were taught these things from the Bible.

Since the new treaty, beginning on July 17, 1899, Japan is open to the gospel as never before. She has forty-two millions of people. Of this number only one hundred thousand are even nominally Christian. The gospel has only made a beginning. Hundreds of laborers are needed. Who will go?

The Phonograph as Aid in Prayer.

I submit the following queries and suggestions for what they are worth:

Upon the hypothesis that the organ may be innocently introduced into the worship, not as a part of it, but an aid to it, may not the phonograph likewise be introduced to aid in the prayer service? Song service is one part, or branch, of the worship; prayer is another. The organ and phonograph are both instruments. The organ, it is claimed, is used in the song service only as an aid in giving pitch and time to the music. It cannot teach or admonish, since it can make only inarticulate sounds, or intonations; the phonograph can make audible, articulate sounds. With a prayer spoken into it, it can lead by saying, "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name," etc., to which the congregation could respond with a hearty "Amen," as though some brother had led in the same.

It is a well-known fact that even the congregations in rural districts are generally very well up in vocal music, or can be, and that they very readily and cheerfully engage in this part of the worship. It is also a well-known fact that in such congregations, where the brethren are unaccustomed to public speaking, it is quite a cross to any of them to lead in public prayer; therefore, the phonograph, on such occasions, with one or more appropriate prayers spoken into it would be an aid in the prayer service equally as great as, if not greater than, the organ in the song service. If not, why not?

These inquiries and suggestions are asked and made, not in the spirit of ridicule or sarcasm, but in the spirit of investigation. If the position is not well taken and the argument sound, I am not possessed of sufficient logical acumen to see it. If, on the contrary, they are, it shows the necessity of clinging closely to "what is written" in every item of worship.

WHAT MOTIVES ARE PLACED BEFORE PEOPLE TO LEAD THEM TO OBEY THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

"Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son: in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." (Col. 1: 13, 14.) This passage tells what these persons gained in becoming Christians, in obeying the gospel of Christ. Whatever we gain by obeying the gospel, as plainly revealed, that is of any benefit to us may be placed before sinners as motives to them to receive and obey the gospel. In these two verses three things are specified as occurring in behalf of those Colossians in becoming Christians. One is that they were delivered from the powers of darkness. Sinners, until they embrace the gospel, are under the dominion, the power of Satan, of darkness; but in obeying the gospel they are set free from this power. The dominion or rule of Satan is broken the very moment one becomes a Christian, for every one so doing throws off the dominion of the wicked one and instead of that takes upon him the dominion of Christ, making him his Lord and Master and putting himself under his rule and authority.

In Paul's commission we have the same idea: "For I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me." (Acts 26: 16-18.) The Revised Version puts it, "that they may turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." So it is true that men do turn from the power of Satan unto God in obeying the gospel. It ought, therefore, to be a very strong inducement to the sinner to obey the gospel to know that he can turn from Satan to God, and can be actually freed from the power of Satan in so doing; for if the sinner lives and dies under the power of Satan, there is no alternative for him but to be lost.

Another very powerful motive to become a Christian is that in so doing he is translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son; and this motive should be made very prominent before the sinner. It was done in the days of the apostles. Of the Samaritans it was said: "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Here Philip preached the things concerning the kingdom of God; and the passage in Colossians shows that one of the things concerning that kingdom is that in becoming Christians we enter into it. It ought to be considered a very strong motive to an alien sinner to realize that he may become a member of the kingdom of God, the kingdom of Christ. It is certainly very desirable to be in a kingdom in which God, through Christ, rules. All that is good and safe and pure and holy is found in this kingdom. To be in the kingdom of Christ is to "sit together in heavenly places in Christ." It is to be in a habitation of God through the Spirit; it is to be where God is our Father and Jesus Christ is our elder brother; it is at once to be where all the blessings of God to be enjoyed on this earth are to be found and where all the promises of God are concentrated. It is so wonderfully valuable that the sinner that refuses to enter it is without hope and without God in the world.

Another evidence that the blessings and privileges of the kingdom of God were placed before sinners in the days of the apostles is found in connection with Paul's preaching at Rome, in his own hired house: "Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him." (Acts 28: 31.) Other passages of similar importance might be given, but these passages establish the principle that everywhere the blessings and privileges of the kingdom were placed before alien sinners as a motive or inducement to obey the gospel of Christ.

A third item of great importance in all the passages we have quoted is the name of Christ and the assurance that in entering the kingdom we also at the same time enter into Christ. Christ says: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." This plainly means that every one that is born of water and of the Spirit does enter the kingdom of God. To be born of water is to be baptized in water; hence, in being born of water and of the Spirit we enter the kingdom of God. Paul also says: "So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death." So when we enter the kingdom of Christ we enter Christ, and both of these are completed in baptism. Hence, in Col. 1: 14, as quoted above, it is said: "In whom we have redemption through his blood." Out of Christ there is no salvation to any sinner.

Peter says: "There is none other name given under heaven among men, whereby we must be saved." The moment we enter the kingdom, that moment we enter Christ, enter his body, the church. It is when we enter him that we have redemption through his blood. Without the blood of Christ there is no remission, and outside of Christ there is no part in his blood, for it is when we are in him that we have redemption through his blood; therefore, the name and blood of Christ are placed before sinners as inducements for them to obey the gospel of Christ.

Jesus said in the commission, as recorded by Luke: "That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Remission of sins can only come through the name of Christ. Peter said, at the house of Cornelius: "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." It is worth everything, therefore, to an alien to be connected with the name of Christ. This connection is completed in baptism. Jesus said, as in Revised Version: "Baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost." So in these passages there are four things that are placed before the sinner—yes, five of them—as inducements or motives to move him to become a Christian: (1) Deliverance from the powers of darkness, of Satan; (2) that he enters the kingdom of God's dear Son; (3) that he enters into Christ, becomes a member of his body, and comes into full connection with his name, taking his name upon him; (4) that in coming into Christ by an obedience to the gospel we come into connection with his blood, have redemption through his blood; and (5) that this redemption in Christ also includes the remission of sins. All these blessings are equally the result of obeying the gospel of Christ, of becoming a Christian; but these are not all.

Paul says: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." (Rom. 8: 16, 17.) The Spirit of God is here represented as testifying three things with our spirit. First, that when we obey the gospel we are children of God; he becomes our Father, and we become his children, sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. This should be a strong motive to sinners to obey the gospel. In the second place, in becoming children of God we become heirs of God. In Paul's commission to preach to sinners to convert them, Jesus said: "That they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me." Inheritance, heirship, and not only heirs of God, but joint heirs with Christ, and Christ "appointed to be heir of all things"—these are wonderful blessings, and should be an exceedingly strong motive to an alien sinner to obey the gospel that he may at once step into the enjoyment of all these blessings and high relationships as specified.

Jesus Christ also placed eternal life as an inducement to sinners to believe in and obey him. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) So eternal life is placed before the sinner as a motive, not only to obey the gospel, become a Christian, but to live a Christian all along the journey of life. Eternal life is a wonderfully grand motive. A man that it would have no effect upon would certainly be hard to move. There is also another promise as an inducement to obey the gospel, and that is the gift of the Holy Spirit, whatever that may mean. When Peter commanded the people, on the day of Pentecost, to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, he added: "And ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." No matter what you may take this promise to mean, it is a positive promise to all that would repent and be baptized, and I understand that it extends to all, everywhere, and in all time, that will repent and be baptized. I understand it to refer to the Holy Spirit, not in miraculous form, but that by which the church becomes a habitation of God, and as such I believe the promise. Some claim it meant the miraculous gifts of the Spirit. I do not so understand it; but, anyway, it is a promise to all who repent and are baptized, and, as such, is a precious motive to lead people to obey the gospel of Christ. So there are many motives, including remission of sins, to lead to an obedience to the gospel of Christ.

There is one very grand purpose yet that every one should have in view who wishes to be saved, and that is the one that brought Christ "from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him." He certainly was not baptized for the remission of sins, for he was not a sinner. Jesus himself tells, when John would have excused himself, he said: "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." The word "righteousness" is the name of doing right, and to do right is to do the will of God, for that is the only standard of right in the service of God; hence, to fulfill righteousness is to do the will of God. Jesus, therefore, was baptized purely to do his Father's will. He says: "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." (John 6: 38.) This was pure obedience, without a particle of selfishness. He was not looking to what he was to receive, but to the doing of his Father's will. There cannot be a higher or purer motive for doing anything than Jesus had when he was baptized to do his Father's will.

All the motives enumerated are pure, good motives because placed before the sinner in the word of God. Some of them, and especially the promise of remission of sins, may be sought in a very selfish way. The expression "for the remission of sins" may be so emphasized as an inducement to be baptized that he who obeys the command may do it solely with reference to that one blessing to himself, without any reference to the matter of obeying God and of putting himself into harmony with God's will. This would be viewing the matter with reference to what it brings to us, and have no reference to obeying and honoring God. This, if obedience at all, would be very selfish obedience. The life of Christ stands as an example for us, with the command that we "should follow his steps." His whole life was upon this high principle of obedience. He did all that he did through his whole life to obey and honor his Father, to be in perfect harmony and accord with him. So we, in baptism and in all our service to God, while one motive is to reach the promised blessing for ourselves, should never forget that we must obey and honor God for his sake, because he is God and worthy of all honor.

Baptism, by many, is so emphasized as to make the impression that it is the only thing connected with pardon and that pardon is the only thing to be sought in being baptized. Faith, repentance, and baptism are all conditions upon the doing of which remission of sins is promised, and all to be done, not alone for what we are to obtain, but to obey and honor God as well as to obtain the blessing. It is entirely too common that this one blessing of remission of sins is emphasized to the neglect of all the other blessings we have enumerated, as though they had nothing to do in it. Preachers have a right to emphasize the promise of pardon to the obedient, but not to the neglect of so many other precious blessings, as though they were not worth naming. The expression "for the remission of sins" is simply a promise from God, and not something to be obeyed by the people. It is God's part of the work, and not ours, and we need not be overanxious about that. If we do what he has commanded us, he is certain to do what he has promised to do for us.

All the promises of God are precious and all of them should be obeyed from pure and proper motives; but if a sinner should be moved more by other motives in being baptized than for the remission of sins, no man would have the right to say his baptism is not valid because that particular promise did not move him. That would be an unreasonable extreme, would be rating one promise above others. E. G. S.

Services at 10 A.M. and 7:50 P.M. on week days, and at 11 A.M., 3:30 P.M., and 7:50 P.M. on Sundays. Everybody is cordially invited to attend every service.—Lincoln Democrat.

Please announce that arrangements have been made for John T. Oakley and L. S. White to hold a four-days' discussion at Liberty, DeKalb County, Tenn., beginning on Tuesday, June 5, 1900, at 10 A.M. First proposition: "The church of God, of which I, L. S. White, am a member, is apostolic in doctrine and practice;" John T. Oakley denies. Second proposition: "The Missionary Baptist Church, of which I, John T. Oakley, am a member, is apostolic in doctrine and practice;" L. S. White denies. Two days of four hours each will be devoted to each proposition.—L. S. White, Gallatin, Tenn.

There is no sign of abatement of interest in, nor of diminution in attendance on, the services being conducted at the Christian church. Elder Larimore, as we have before said, is a most entertaining speaker, and many who were at first attracted by the power of his oratory and elegance of diction have had their consciences quickened by the force of his logic and have begun to think seriously on spiritual matters. A goodly number have been led to obey the gospel and have renounced their sinful ways. These converts are the visible fruits of the meeting, but it has done good in a way the extent of which can be measured only by Omnipotence by causing people who had drifted away to reconsecrate themselves to the cause of the Most High. At the meetings on Sunday the house was practically full at every service, though there were interesting services in several churches in the neighborhood, which were also well attended. On Sunday night numbers of people went away because there was room for no more. There is an unusually large number of people from the country attending the services, while many from adjoining counties have also been in attendance. The minister has held the closest attention of his audiences from the first and is enlarging his circle of admirers at every meeting.—Fayetteville Observer.

Patience is not laziness; patience works.

There is a "best time" for doing everything.

Are you sowing the seed of the kingdom of Christ?

Who comes to Christ must come in humility and faith.

Christ is not the Friend of sin, but the sinner's Friend.

Christ's burden is light and grows lighter the longer borne.

We should be careful about how we hear as well as what we hear.

Freedom in Christ Jesus consists not in pleasing ourselves, but in pleasing him.

"To your tents, O Israel!" and let us be faithful and true as soldiers of the cross.

No one ever earnestly sought God's help but that he found sympathy and love and ready help.

No one has an interest in the salvation of the world who does nothing toward accomplishing that end.

"The heavens declare the glory of God," but the gift of his Son is the full declaration of the depth of his divine love.

The blessings of persecution do not lie in persecution itself, but in the experience arising out of it, which purifies and enriches the soul.

Sometimes people get into a physical state called "bad health." In a spiritual sense the same state largely obtains among professed Christians.

If we are not bringing forth much fruit unto the honor of our Lord, Christ abideth not in us. "He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing."

Satan is energetic and persistent. No opportunity to ensnare is wasted by him. There is only one equipment with which you are able to meet him—the Christian armor, with its shield of faith, and the sword of the Spirit, "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit."

In Benjamin Franklin's philosophic sentence, "None preaches better than the ant, and she says nothing," is couched a world of truth. However, it is not contemplated that one shall be silent, never declaring the truth so precious to him, but the emphasis of it is found not so much in the fact of its declaration as in its constant practice.

The question was once asked: "What are boys good for?" A boy replied: "They are good to make men of." As he requires exercise that he may develop into physical manhood, so must the moral and mental elements of his nature be developed that he may be a man, not only in stature, but also in the essential qualities that fit him for society and make him a factor in the elevation of the human family. God has committed this trust to fathers and mothers and holds them responsible when they neglect it.

The history of the settlement of Pitcairn's Island is one of murder and crime. Out of the nine desperate men who first landed on her shores only two died natural deaths. When only one white man was left, in his solitude he began to read the Bible, saved from the wreck of the Bounty. This old desperado, John Adams, became interested as he read, and, guided by the light of the blessed book, he became a good man and began to teach the Scriptures to the little community around him. In course of time vice disappeared; devotions were held morning, noon, and night; and the island became a model community. All of this was the result of the seed finding lodgment, first, in John Adams' heart, and then in the hearts of the others to whom he taught the word. They had had the word all the time, but had not read it. When the soil was reached they became fruitful for God.

We are frequently greeted by this sentence: "We are poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith." This is true of some churches—faithful little bands, possessing few of the comforts of life, yet zealous for the Master's cause and working eagerly for the spread of his gospel; and because they are thus earnest in their "work of faith and labor of love" the approval of God rests richly upon them. We do not believe, though, that some of the churches are as poor as they pretend to be, or even as rich in faith as they would have us think. We believe that many of the churches are asleep, and a call to awake is in order, though it seems hard to arouse them. Some of the churches do not realize the fearful consequences of their indifference and inactivity, and, as the eagle that drifted down the stream on the carcass of a sheep found too late that his feet had frozen to it, and so plunged over the falls, so do we fear that many will awake to their responsibilities when it is too late to correct the evil that their folly has wrought.

"Come unto me," said the Savior of the world. He does not send us to another. When the disciples of the Lord were turning back from following him, he said "unto the twelve, Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." To whom, indeed? No one else to love us; so, no one to bear "our griefs" and carry "our sorrows;" no one in whom is "the way, the truth, and the life;" and yet we so much disregard the invitation: "Come." That invitation bears upon it the facts of his sacrifice, his humility, his poverty, the shame of his sufferings, the ignominy of his death, his glorious resurrection, his triumphant ascension, the manifestations of his love, and the seal of his blood. What appeal could be made to man that is not made in the life and gospel of the Son of God? It would seem that the divine love and wisdom of God, though infinite, are exhausted in appealing to man to return to him. "Come!" "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time: casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you."

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

The Home and Farm as a premium with the Gospel Advocate is discontinued. Read our full-page offer in this issue.

Send us the names and addresses of any nonsubscribers whom you think sample copies might induce to become regular subscribers. We will send the paper one month free, and discontinue at close of the month unless they subscribe during that time.

The first order through the mail for our new book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," came from Brother A. Foster, Carmen, Manitoba, Canada. Agents have taken advance orders for many copies in Nashville and other places, and we feel hopeful that the first edition will be sold within a few weeks after it is ready for delivery.

"The Relations of God to the World," by Hiram Christopher, A.M., M.D., of St. Joseph, Mo., will soon be issued from our press. We quote the following from the author's preface: "It is the object of the author in the following pages to present some evidence, derived from certain facts and phenomena of the material universe and the life kingdom of the earth, in support of the thought that the forces operating in these departments of nature are but phases or different manifestations of one and the same force—namely, the power of the Creator which he has exerted in effecting special and general purposes which find their realization in the object for which the whole scheme of nature was devised and completed." This book will be neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and will contain 192 pages. It will be sent, postpaid, for $1.

We have decided to grant agencies for "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," edited by F. D. Srygley, to agents by counties. This book will be sure to sell and will do great good. It consists of twelve sermons preached in the long meeting which recently closed in Nashville, interspersed with quotations from his private and personal letters, and selections—both prose and poetry—made from books and papers in promiscuous reading during a long period of years. The editor says: "I know it will be ornamental, and I believe it will be both interesting and wholesome reading." In granting territory to agents we of course reserve the right to fill all orders sent direct to us, and orders sent now will be filled in their order as soon as books are ready for delivery, which will be about the middle of May. We want earnest, working agents all over the country. Apply at once for terms.

"Gospel Praise" is the name of a new hymn book edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell. We think this will prove to be the best and most popular hymn book we have ever published. It is copyrighted this year, will contain three hundred and twenty pages, and will, we think, be ready for delivery by the last of this month. The Armstrong Company, of Philadelphia, music typographers, write: "We think the book will be a success; as you have so many new compositions and by such good authors of note, we do not see how it can be otherwise." Brother Boyd, of Donelson, Tenn., says: "From even a hasty examination of the new song book, 'Gospel Praise,' I am very much pleased with it. I consider the arrangement of subjects a good feature, the music excellent, and feel quite confident it will be heartily received." Advance orders will be filled just as soon as books are ready for delivery.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain, in the Gospel Advocate, Heb. 6: 4.
W. J. DUGGERS.
Fayburg, Tex.

This letter, as its contents plainly show, was written to warn the Hebrews who had become Christians from giving up Christ and his holy religion and going back to Judaism. The blessings and privileges described in this verse are those of which they had partaken in Christ Jesus. If after partaking of all these they should give up Christ and fall away to Judaism, there could be no more hope for them, no more sacrifice for sin. Christ was the only sacrifice that could take away sin, and in rejecting him there is nothing else that can move to repentance.

The old man is the old habits, or conduct. (Eph. 4: 22.) The members of the old man are fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry, etc. (Col. 3: 5.) Now, then, to put off the old man (or to crucify the flesh) is to put off all these. Then what is the new man? It is the new habits, conduct, or mind. (Eph. 4: 23, 24; Col. 3: 10.) So, then, to put on the new man is to put on, or to be clothed with, humility, meekness, temperance, patience, and, in fact, all the Christian graces, which are as "an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast." (Heb. 6: 19.) Now, then, if this is not an explanation of the inner and outer man, why not? Please explain and oblige. G. W. WALKER.

These are the fruits or outworkings of the old and new man. From the evil heart come the evil works, and from the good heart come the good works. The man does these good things and they are as clothing to him.

Brother Lipscomb: Please give me the meaning of the Greek word "psalms" in Eph. 5: 19; Col. 3: 16; and James 5: 13 as soon as convenient.

A READER.

Professor Sophacles, teacher of Greek in Harvard University, published a "Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods, from B.C. 146 to A.D. 1100." This embraced the period of the New Testament. He defines psallo "to chant, to sing religious hymns." (Septuagint—Judges 5: 3; Paul, in 1 Cor. 1: 14, 15; James 5: 13.) He defines psalma, "a song, a chant." Words sometimes change their meanings and the way the meaning is determined for any period is to seek all the uses of it, by writers and speakers during that period, and from these determine the meaning. Sophacles has examined all the writers and speakers of this period and did not find an example in which it had any other meaning than to chant, to sing religious hymns. Had he found another use of it, he would have been compelled to give it; but he found no example of its being used in any other sense, so gave no other meaning than "to chant, to sing religious hymns."

Brother Lipscomb: There is a controversy here whether it is the duty of a Christian to forgive every man that trespasses against him whether the man repents or not. The majority of the people here claim that the Bible teaches that God will not forgive us till we have forgiven all those that have sinned against us. Some think this is contrary to its teaching. Please inform us on this subject through the Gospel Advocate.

I do not see there is much to be said on the subject. God does not forgive sins until they are repented of. He cannot do it because he cannot look with allowance on sin. He told Moses: He "will by no means clear the guilty." It is a moral and spiritual impossibility with God to forgive the guilty. The impossibilities with God are moral and spiritual, not physical. A man is guilty until he repents of his sin. God cannot clear so long as he is guilty. He must repent before God can clear him—that is, forgive him. If God cannot do it, man cannot. God does not require man to do what he will not and cannot do himself. It is a moral and spiritual impossibility for a man to forgive another until he has repented of his sin. To forgive him is to hold him guiltless, to hold him as though he had not sinned. It is impossible for a man to hold one who has sinned as guiltless, as though he had not sinned, while he is yet guilty of his sin. He is guilty until he purges himself of the guilt by repentance. Hence, neither God nor man can in his heart hold a man as though he had not sinned until he repents; yet God loves the sinner, does him much good and kindness that he may bring him to repentance, that he may forgive him. We ought to be like God in this. God will not forgive our trespasses unless we do like he does: be ready and anxious to forgive those that trespass against us. We must be so anxious that we will make sacrifices to bring him to repentance, just as God does good to sinners, even to the extent of giving his Son to die for us while we were yet sinners, that we might be brought to repentance, that he might forgive us and save us from eternal death. We are to cultivate the same spirit. But one cannot be forgiven either by God or man until he repents of his trespass. We may overlook a wrong as God did on account of the unfortunate condition of a people. "The times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." (Acts 17: 30.) "Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so." (Matt. 19: 8.) A Christian cannot cherish a vindictive or vengeful spirit. He cannot seek to injure the trespasser. He must be ready to do him a kindness to bring him to repentance, but he cannot regard him without sin or as though he had not sinned until he repents of his sin. It is just as important to make the trespasser feel that he cannot be forgiven without repentance as it is to make the one trespassed upon feel that he must forgive the trespasser.

Brother Lipscomb: More than a year ago I asked you, without quoting the verse, to explain 2 Chron 29: 25, which you endeavored to do, but apparently without regard to the latter clause of the verse, which you also failed to include in your quotation of the verse. The explanation was not entirely satisfactory to myself nor to some of the brethren who occupy different sides to this question and are anxious to know the truth. I am in line with the Gospel Advocate on this subject, but I am troubled over the latter clause of this verse, in connection with Ps. 98, both of which I hope you will explain. The clause reads thus, "For so was the commandment of the Lord by his prophets," which does seem conclusive that the instruments were used in the worship by divine approval, under the old dispensation, while you claimed they were not. Is Ps. 98 prophetic? If so, does it not refer to this dispensation, and, if so, is it good authority for using the instrument in our worship to-day?

M. G. GILBERT.

Vernon, Tex.

There is not the least doubt but that God tolerated instruments of music in the days of Judaism. He did not command them to make and use them; he permitted it, just as he permitted polygamy, slavery, and divorce for any cause. God told Samuel to let them have a king, notwithstanding he testified that in choosing him "they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." (1 Sam. 8: 7.) Notwithstanding this, he directed Samuel to anoint the king for them and aided them in the work of the kingdom. Jehoiada, the priest and servant of God, took two wives for King Joash. Yet Jesus says this was not God's order, but he tolerated it because of the hardness of their hearts, and directed in getting wives. Then if the Lord had commanded them how and when to use the instruments, after they were introduced by David, it would only prove God was tolerating it and its use as he tolerated polygamy. That would no more prove it should be used now than the toleration and regulation of polygamy or easy divorce then prove polygamy and divorce for any cause should be practiced now. Suppose God had commanded its use then, would it prove it should be used now? He ordained annual sacrifice and incense then, are they to be practiced now? Suppose God had ordained it in the Jewish dispensation and not have required it in the Christian dispensation, would that justify its use now? The Christian can practice nothing as service to God, required under the law of Moses, unless it is required in the New Testament. Instead of this instrumental music being required, the evidence is clear that it was dropped out by Christ and his apostles, and was not introduced into the church for six hundred years—then among the Catholics, who claim the right to change the appointments of God. I have written this to show that whether we explain this passage or not, there is not the shadow of ground in it for the use of instruments in the worship of God. It is not required in the New Testament and interferes with and hinders the ends to be accomplished by singing. They were to admonish and teach one another in songs and psalms and spiritual hymns, making melody in the heart to the Lord. Now the instrumental music hinders the result of the singing, as it prevents hearing what is sung. But let it be settled that if God had commanded it in the Jewish dispensation, that would not give the shadow of authority for its use under Christ. But did God ordain it? In this very context it says: "And he set the Levites in the house of the Lord with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, according to the commandment of David, and of Gad the king's seer, and Nathan the prophet: for so was the commandment of the Lord by his prophets. And the Levites stood with the instruments of David, and the priests with the trumpets [the trumpets were commanded by God]." (2 Chron 29: 25, 26.) Then in the next verse: "And when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began also with the trumpets, and with the instruments ordained by David king of Israel." Here it is repeated they were ordained and commanded by David; they are kept distinct from trumpets commanded by the Lord. (See also 2 Chron. 23: 18; 1 Chron. 23: 5; Neh. 12: 36; and Amos 6: 5.) In all these places, and more, they are attributed to David, in contrast with the things ordained by God, and in Amos 6: 5 David is especially condemned. The whole kingdom was a rebellion against God, which he permitted as an experiment to show what they would do in going their own way. This instrumental service was tolerated in connection with other things to add greatness to the kingdom. I never heard that any one thought Ps. 98 was prophetic. It is simply an exhortation to praise God for the prosperity he had bestowed on Israel. If prophetic, it was not fulfilled by Christ and his apostles, but only by the corrupted church. As David had invented the instruments, he urged they should praise God with them. It seems to me every candid man would say the conclusions set forth are correct, with that clause: "For so was the commandment of the Lord by his prophets." It will be noted that in the scripture the words "so was" are in Italics, which means they are not in the original and have been supplied by the translators. This is done because they could not make sense out of the original as they translated it. The Revised Version reads: "And he set the Levites in the house of the Lord with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, according to the commandment of David, and of Gad the king's seer, and Nathan the prophet: for the commandment was of the Lord by his prophets." Does this refer to a commandment to use the instruments? He had just said that was by David. He evidently refers to the command to keep this feast, described in verses 20-24. After saying this instrumental service was by the commandment of David, he does not contradict himself and say it was by the command of God. The keeping of the feast was commanded by God, but the instruments were by the command of David. But look at this as we may, it affords no ground for the use of instruments in the church of God.

BOYS WHO SUCCEED.

Thirty years ago Mr. H—, a nurseryman, in New York State, left home for a day or two. It was rainy weather, and not a season for sales; but a customer arrived from a distance, tied up his horse, and went into the kitchen of a farmhouse, where two lads were cracking nuts.

"Is Mr. H— at home?"

"No, sir," said the eldest, Joe, hammering at a nut.

"When will he be back?"

"Dunno, sir; mebbe not for a week."

The other boy, Jim, jumped up and followed the man out. "The men are not here, but I can show you the stock," he said with such a bright, courteous manner that the stranger, who was a little irritated, stopped and followed him through the nursery, examining the trees, and left his order.

"You have sold the largest bill that I have had this season, Jim," his father, greatly pleased, said to him on his return.

"I'm sure," said Joe, "I'm as willing to help as Jim, if I'd thought in time."

A few years afterwards these two boys were left by their father's failure and death with two or three hundred dollars each. Joe bought an acre or two near home. He has worked hard, but is still a poor, discontented man. Jim bought an emigrant's ticket to Colorado, hired as a cattle driver for a couple of years, and with his wages bought land at forty cents an acre, built himself a house, and married. His herds of cattle are numbered by the thousand, his land has been cut up for town lots, and he is ranked as one of the wealthiest men in the State.

"I might have done like Jim," his brother said lately, "if I'd thought in time. There's as good stuff in me as in him."

"There's as good stuff in that loaf of bread as in any I ever made," said his wife, "but nobody can eat it. There's not enough yeast in it."

The retort, though disagreeable, was true. The quick, wide-awake energy which acts as leaven in a character is partly natural, but it can be inculcated by parents and acquired by a boy if he chooses to keep his eyes open and act promptly and boldly in every emergency. It is usually the lazy, indifferent boy that makes the shiftless man.—Sunday School Evangelist.

ASHAMED OF FATHER.

With a weary face and tired manner, an old man entered a store on Broadway, and, looking around in a wistful way, said to the first person he met:

"I've stopped for my little girl. I thought she wouldn't want to walk home alone, and it's about time to close, ain't it?"

"Yes, it's time to close," replied the floorwalker; "but who is your little girl, and where is she?"

"My little girl is Sally—Sally Denham—and she's here somewhere; can't you please tell me where? I'm a little nearsighted, or I could find her easy enough."

"There's no such girl in our employ," said the floorwalker, decidedly; "you must be laboring under a mistake, sir."

"This is Rathbone's, ain't it?" the old man asked.

"Certainly."

"Then she's here."

"I am quite sure, as I told you before, sir, that there's no girl by that name in our employ."

"Is there another store kept by a man named Rathbone?" he asked, wearily.

"Yes, I believe there is," without much interest; "three blocks farther down, I think."

The old man went out, and a young girl, who had heard the conversation between him and the floorwalker, breathed a sigh of relief. She was a new clerk, and her name had been registered with other new ones, but not as Sally Denham (although it was Sally); it read "Maude Elliott." No one in the store knew her, she reasoned, so why should she not call herself "Maude," if she wanted to, instead of that plebeian "Sally?" And to think her father should come after her! Her face flushed hotly as she wondered what those proud girl clerks all around her would say if they should find out that the shabbily-dressed old man was her father. The girls were starting for their homes; she put on her cap and jacket and went out.

"I will give father a piece of my mind," she said to herself, undutifully. "I shall ask him never to stop for me again. I'm quite old enough to go home alone, I think."

She took a roundabout way home. It was a pleasure to walk along the streets now, for she was dressed in a very neat and becoming suit, the hard-earned gift of the dear, loving old father of whom she was ashamed.

But what was the matter at home? She was startled as she reached her door and heard the commotion within.

"Your father's killed, Sal!" was the abrupt explanation of a small boy outside. "He was a-lookin' of you up, an' couldn't find you."

The frightened girl darted past him into the house, where she found her mother nearly wild with grief.

"Mother," she sobbed, "it isn't true, is it, that father is dead?"

"Yes; he was killed—was knocked over by runaway horses while looking for you. He died just after reaching home. His last words were: 'Tell my little Sally father tried to find her; tell her to find her father in heaven. He'll watch over her to the end.' Where were you, Sally?"

But Sally did not answer; she simply could not. She was down on her knees beside her father's dead body, sobbing out her agony of grief and remorse.

"It's my fault—all mine," her tortured soul moaned. "He wouldn't be lying here cold and still if I hadn't been ashamed of him."

A year has passed since then, and Sally Denham is still a clerk at Rathbone's. But there has never been an evening since her father's sad death that, as the time for closing the store arrived, she has not heard a voice say: "I've stopped for my little girl. I thought she wouldn't want to walk home alone."—Selected.

A GRAIN OF SAND.

"Mother, mother, there's something in my eye! Please take it out, quick!" Flossy came hurrying to her mother's room. Her blue eyes were bloodshot, her eyelids swollen, and tears were running down her cheeks.

"Why, what is it?" asked her mother, as she put her arm around the child.

"I don't know; it's an awful big thing. The wind blew it into my eye a minute ago."

The mother examined the afflicted eye carefully, but could find nothing but tears.

"I don't see anything in it, dearie."

"But it is there, mother. Please do get it out; it makes me so uncomfortable."

The mother looked again, then she bathed the hurt eye with warm water and told Flossy to keep it closed for a time, but the poor eye did not get any better. Something was in it; something as big as a marble, Flossy thought.

"Well, Flossy, I think we had better go to Dr. Wright and see what he can do," said her mother, after trying everything that she could think of for the relief of her little daughter.

Dr. Wright was the good doctor Flossy loved, and she stood very quietly, with her face in the light, as he kept her eyelid open.

"Ah!" said the doctor, and in an instant he held his instrument toward her. "Here it is!"

"Where?" asked the mother, "I don't see anything."

"I don't, either," said Flossy, "but my eye does not hurt any longer."

"It's just a tiny speck of sand," replied the doctor, "too small to see, unless you know where to look for it."

Some days after this Flossy was fidgeting about the room where her mother was sewing. It was rainy weather out of doors, and Flossy was in a bad humor—nothing pleased her.

"Please don't, Flossy," said her mother, over and over again. "You make me very uncomfortable. If you do not stop worrying, you must go away by yourself."

Flossy sat down by the window, pouting. In a little while her face brightened and she came to her mother and put a little soft kiss on her cheek.

"I'm like that little grain of sand, mother; don't you think so?" she said.

"What do you mean?"

"I'm not very big, but I make people uncomfortable when my bad temper gets in the wrong place. I love you, mother; I love you truly, and I wouldn't hurt you as that sand did me for anything. The sand couldn't help itself, but I can and I will right away."—Our Boys and Girls.

WHAT A GIRL SHOULD KNOW.

In these days of higher education for girls some very simple and useful accomplishments are apt to be forgotten. They are accomplishments that one need not attend college to learn, and yet they are as valuable and as essential as anything taught in the most advanced seminary or college. Without them no girl's education is complete. Here is a list of things that every girl in the land should know, regardless of her occupation or position in life:

She should know that one hundred cents make a dollar; she should know how to arrange the parlor and every other room in the house.

She should know how to say "No" and mean it, or "Yes" and stick to it.

She should know how to sew on buttons, darn stockings, and mend gloves.

She should know how to cook and serve a good, wholesome dinner.

She should know how to dress for health and comfort as well as for appearance.

She should know that tight lacing is not only uncomely, but that it is injurious to health.

She should know that music, drawing, and painting are real accomplishments in the home, and are not to be neglected if there be time and money for their use.

She should know how to live up to the old rule: "A place for everything, and everything in its place."

She should know that it is best for her not to have anything to do with dissolute or intemperate young men.

She should know that the more she lives within her income, the more she will save and the farther she will get away from the poorhouse.

She should know that it is best to regard habits and morals, and not money, in choosing her associates.

She should know how to dress within her income and to wear a calico dress like a queen.

She should know how to embrace every opportunity for reading and how to select such books as will give her the most useful and practical information in order to make the best progress in earlier as well as later home and school life.

A girl who combines all this information with her regular school education will be well equipped for almost any position in life. Her spiritual development should keep pace with her mental development or life will be a failure under any condition.—Young People.

IN CHICAGO.

Every seat was full in the North State Street car and four or five persons were standing. One of the latter was a young woman, who stood near the middle of the car. A tall young man, rather too slim for his height, from an athletic point of view, arose from his seat, near the rear door, and stepped forward to inform the young woman, who was looking the other way, that there was a seat for her. As he did so a man dropped into it.

"I beg your pardon," said the young man, "I didn't get up to give you a seat."

"But I got it," said the man.

"I intended it for the young lady," said the young fellow.

"But I got it," retorted the other with a sneer.

He was the larger man, but the young fellow's hands descended on his shoulders and he was on his feet and on the platform before he knew it.

"Conductor, conductor!" he cried; but the conductor had a far-away look in his eye and was interested in something going on down the street. The man was in the street before he had time to call out again.

The hero—for he was a hero in the eyes of the passengers by this time—reëntering the car, and, lifting his hat politely, said: "Madam, there's a seat for you."

And the passengers were so tickled that they actually began to clap their hands.

The young man simply smiled and said: "Athletics are of some value now and then." Then he leaned up against the front door and became absorbed in a paper, while the women watched him admiringly.—Chicago Tribune.

And not sometimes lose heart.

KNOWLEDGE, FOREKNOWLEDGE, AND PREDESTINATION.

The expressions "the knowledge of God" and "the knowledge of the Lord," as used in the Bible, in every instance refer not to what God knows, but to what he reveals or makes known concerning himself and his will.

Take Prov. 2: 5: "Then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God." This means not that you will find what God knows, but what of his will he has made known to man. "There is no truth, . . . nor knowledge of God in the land." (Hos. 4: 1.) This means God's will was not known in the land; it does not mean God did not know what was in the land. "For some have not the knowledge of God." (1 Cor. 15: 34.) "Every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God." (2 Cor. 10: 5.) "Increasing in the knowledge of God." (Col. 1: 10.) "Peace be multiplied . . . through the knowledge of God." (2 Pet. 1: 2.) "That taught the good knowledge of the Lord." (2 Chron. 30: 22.) "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord." (Isa. 11: 9.) "For it after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 2: 20.) These are the chief examples in which the terms "the knowledge of God" and "the knowledge of the Lord" are used, and in these and every example of the use of the expression in the Bible "knowledge" refers not to what God knows, but to what he has made known of himself and his will to man. If the knowledge of God means what he has made known of his will to man, the foreknowledge of God must be the knowledge that he has before made known of his will to man. The word "foreknow" is used but one time in the Bible: "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren." (Rom. 8: 29.) The connection here shows clearly he means those to whom the knowledge of his will had heretofore been made known and had accepted it. Those who had accepted his will, as heretofore given, though they had not known Jesus, he predetermined should be conformed to the likeness of Jesus as brothers, "that he might be the firstborn among many brethren." He was the first to be raised from the dead, and many who had hitherto died also arose after his resurrection, and appeared to many in the city. (Matt. 27: 53.) Those who were thus predestinated to be conformed to the image of his Son, "them he also called [from the grave]: and whom he called [from the grave], them he also justified [they were judged and justified]; and whom he justified, them he also glorified." They were glorified with him when he was glorified at the right hand of God.

The word "foreknew" is used but one time in the Scriptures: "Hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew." (Rom. 11: 1, 2.) The context plainly shows he means the Jewish people, to whom heretofore had been made known the will of God. Many of these now rejected Christ, and the question was: Had God rejected them as a whole? He shows that they had not been so rejected, for he himself, the apostle of God to the Gentiles, was one of this family. He refers to the days of Elijah, too, who thought he alone was left to serve God, but God told him there were seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal. "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace." (Verse 5.) God did "foreknow" and God "foreknew" both mean God knew them through their acceptance of the word before given to them.

The word "foreknowledge" is also used twice, and only twice, in the Bible. Peter, on Pentecost, said: "Him [Jesus], being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." (Acts 2: 23.) "Foreknowledge" in this place means the knowledge heretofore revealed or made known by God to his people. He had before this made this truth known to men, and this is called "foreknowledge." The other use of "foreknowledge" is in 1 Pet. 1: 2. Peter says of the saints: "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit." This means they were chosen or elected by acceptance of the knowledge or will that God had heretofore made known to them. The knowledge of God in the Bible does not mean what God knows, but what he has made known of himself to the people. So the foreknowledge of God is the knowledge that he has before made known of his will to men. Those who will study this without a determined conclusion to be maintained will be compelled to see this is true.

The words "predestinate" and "predestination" mean the results wrought out by the will of God as he has made it known. The results wrought out in accordance with the will of God are the things he predestinates. The things predestinated may be good or evil, as the person elects. The end wrought out to the good by obedience to the will of God is blessing, so they elect by obedience their predestination to good. The will of God is given, and if some refuse to hear it, this will work out evil to them—that is, through the foreknowledge of God (the knowledge before made known of God's will) those who reject God are predestinated to evil. Those who comply with his will are by it predestinated and wrought out to glory. A study of the use of these terms will help to solve problems that are difficult without a true understanding of them.

These thoughts are suggested, not because we object to the idea that God knows all things. He declared the end from the beginning. But with God there is no before or after. He takes cognizance of neither time nor space. All space is present to him, or he is present to all space; and all time is present to him—rather, time and space are appendages of finite beings, not of the infinite one. God "inhabith eternity"—that is, he now dwells in an eternity past and in one yet to come. They are thus to men, but they are ever present to God. "I Am that I Am," "Before Abraham was, I am," are expressions that are without meaning, save on the hypothesis there is neither time nor space to God, the infinite and eternal Being. This is difficult for us to apprehend, but all the attributes of infinity are incomprehensible to finite faculties. We cannot reject the qualities of an infinite being because we cannot grasp them and their operation with our finite faculties. This would make them finite or ourselves infinite.

THE LOVE OF THE TRUTH.

Men will not be lost because they cannot understand the will of God. That God who spoke the worlds into being and who is so full of wisdom, compassion, and love would not reveal his will in a way in which it could not be understood by his creatures. The Savior has said: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." (Matt. 7: 7, 8.) Isaiah, writing of the way of salvation, says: "And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein." (Isa. 35: 8.)

No one can doubt that the Bible was given to reveal God to man and to make known to him the plan of salvation. In the language of Pollok it is well to inquire:

Hast thou ever heard of such a book?
The author, God himself; the subject, God and man.
Salvation, life, and death!
Eternal life, eternal death!
Dread words whose meaning has no end, no bounds.
Most wondrous book!
Bright candle of the Lord!
Star of eternity.
The only star by which the bark of man could navigate the sea of life,
And gain the coast of bliss securely;
The only star which rose on time
And on its dark and troubled billows still, as generation drifting swiftly by succeeded generation, threw a ray of heaven's own light,
And to the hills of God, the eternal hills, pointed the sinner's eye.

Surely no one can imagine that God has failed in his purpose. Certainly the God who threw up the lofty mountains and dug out the beautiful valleys, the God who created in the beginning the heavens and the earth and who created man himself, wondrous organism as he is, could not experience the least difficulty in making his will known to all his responsible subjects who desire to know it. To think that God would fail in this work is to doubt God.

Our failure to understand the way of life is not because we have not the ability to understand it, but because we love the world and the pleasures of the world more than we do the truth of God. The perversity of our hearts prevents us from receiving the truth. Like Balaam, we prefer our own ways to God's way. God revealed himself clearly to him, and he understood it, too; but it did not suit Balaam to obey God. He besought the Lord to change his will to suit his convenience. He belonged to the class of whom Paul writes in 2 Thess. 2: 8-12: "And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." Peter thus describes the terrible woes that shall come upon this class: "But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption; and shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the daytime. Spots they are and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings while they feast the eyes with you; having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: a heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children: which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness; but was rebuked for his iniquity; the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbade the madness of the prophet." (2 Pet. 2: 12-16.) Jude pronounces condemnation upon those who have no love for the truth: "Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." (Verses 11-13.) Language fails me to depict how terrible it is to have no love for the truth.

Judas evidently knew that Jesus was divine, but he loved a few shekels more than he did the Lord Jesus Christ. There are many Balaams in the pulpit and in the pew to-day; many who know the truth have not love enough for it to make sufficient sacrifice to do the truth. It is generally conceded by all Protestants, excepting Quakers, that baptism is commanded by the Lord Jesus Christ, yet multiplied thousands of these same people are endeavoring to be saved without it. They are arguing that baptism is not essential to salvation. If this command had been given only one time, the man who loves the truth with all his heart would be glad to obey it. The Savior said only one time: "He that believeth not shall be damned." God said only one time to our fore parents: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." They failed to obey God, and well do we know the fearful consequences. How sad, how terrible, and how awful to fail to keep any command of God! But we find where the apostles, acting under this commission, baptized many thousand people into the names of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. If we love the Lord's will as we should, will we refuse to be baptized?

It is generally known that we have no example where an inspired man ever used an organ in the worship of God. They did not find out that to sing meant to play on an instrument along with the singing. If we love God's way and appreciate the force of inspired example as we should, it is certainly true that we will never divide a church by bringing into the worship of God a practice for which there is no warrant in the word of God. While on this subject it is well to try the "modern pastor system" by the same rule. I have never found a preacher or any disciple well versed in the Scriptures that claimed any authority from God for the one-man pastor system. All to whom I have ever spoken on the subject say that the elders should do the teaching. The elder is to be apt to teach and able to exhort and convince gainsayers. The church should support the elder in the doing of this work. But how few of the churches are standing on scriptural ground! Most of them want the "hired pastor," and others want preaching every Sunday by some one else than the elder, even though the preacher be not hired. Is this because they do not like God's way? Why not walk in God's appointed way? Is it a lack of confidence in and love for the truth? Man's way is a failure. The "pastor system" does not draw. The pastor soon wears out, fails to attract and entertain the crowd. Then he must hunt a new field, and thus it goes on from year to year. God's way is best, and it does seem we should all know it and walk therein.

THE FIRST RESPONSES.

The first response to our appeal for help to build a new building for the Fanning Orphan School says:

"May 6, 1900.—You can put me down for one hundred dollars toward the new building for the Fanning Orphan School. This is a small amount, but I am a working-man. This will help some. If one hundred and fifty persons will do the same, it will build the house. I do not think a man could possibly give to a better cause. When you are ready to begin work, my hundred dollars will be ready."

This brother appreciates the school and the necessity of the building because his children have enjoyed the benefits of the school with its low rates. Another offer of the same kind was orally made. We are glad the first responses came from these laboring men, whose children have enjoyed the advantages of the school. It strikes us when receiving these it would be a graceful thing for the building to be erected by the laboring people, who are so greatly the beneficiaries of it. But we reflected those who have more means themselves have been and are daily laborers. Honest capital is the fruit of honest labor, and no distinction should be made. I trust others will be moved to a hearty and prompt response.

Brother Lipscomb: In the Gospel Advocate of April 19, 1900, your answer to Brother Daly's question as to pastors brings out some thoughts on a question about which I have been particularly interested and have been studying for several years—that is, you make a distinction between pastors and elders, while the general impression seems to be the terms "pastors" and "elders" indicate the same office and work. In your reply to Brother Daly you say "the word 'pastors,' in the plural, is used but one time in the New Testament, and then it is applied to the spiritually gifted persons who were miraculously endowed to do the work of teaching and feeding the flock until the revelation was completed and until the churches had time to develop characters suited for elders or bishops." Again, you state that the term "pastors" is never applied to the uninspired.

Now, do I understand you correctly to teach that the term "gifts" (Eph. 4: 8-11) means inspiration? If so, are all who are spoken of in the New Testament as receiving gifts inspired (such as healings, helps, governments, etc., in 1 Cor. 12)? Then again, I would like to ask why you conclude pastors were used to teach and feed the flock until characters were formed suitable for elders? Were there not elders at the same time and even mentioned as being in existence prior to the mention of pastors, and was not the work of pastors and elders the same?

Again, you say: "But the true character and qualifications are set forth in the definitions given in the foregoing article [Brother Daly's], and should be observed in the selection; whether they be called 'elders' or 'pastors.'" On this I would ask, can we now designate men by names bestowed upon inspired men, or, in other words, would it not be sinful to designate men as "pastors" when in the New Testament that term was applied to inspired men? Please answer through the Gospel Advocate for the benefit of others as well as myself.

J. H. HARDEN.

Memphis, Tenn.

Much work done by inspired men after inspiration passed has been done by uninspired men. Much the apostles did must now be done by uninspired men. What was done in their capacity as apostles cannot be done by others. If the name was conferred to indicate the official position and work pertaining to the office, it would be wrong, sinful, to call those doing other work by it. If the name was given to indicate a work that was common to others, I do not see why the same name might not be given to others who did or do the same work. Some were spiritually gifted to teach; they were called "teachers." Others taught without the gifts; they were called "teachers" too. They taught by virtue of their study of the word of God and fitness thus acquired. I do not think it is sinful to call those who now teach "teachers," yet this is the name by which gifted teachers were called. "Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers." These were gifted persons. Saul was one of the least, and I think had the teaching gift imparted when Ananias laid hands on him.

I certainly understand those enumerated in Eph. 4: 11 as endowed by supernatural gifts of the Spirit for doing the work indicated by the name. Apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers were endowed with gifts of the Spirit, graded in the order given. These gifts were to continue until the complete will of God was made known and they were brought to the fullness of the stature of grown men and women in Christ. Then they would be fitted to perform all the work of the church without supernatural endowments. "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." (1 Cor. 12: 4.) These gifts are then enumerated. "But all these worketh [inworketh] that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." (Verse 11.) One Spirit inworks these gifts into each separate person as he will. In verse 28 he gives the chief orders of these gifts: "First [and highest] apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles [inworking of gifts], then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." These are all gifts bestowed on the unperfected church until this perfect will is come; then these gifts in part, or bestowing partial knowledge are done away. (1 Cor. 13: 9, 10.) These partial gifts then would pass away and give place to the completed will of God. When the will was completed the characters of the disciples would be developed in harmony with the completion of the will, and under that will they would be qualified for all the work of God.

The first recognition of elders in the church we have is Acts 11: 30: "They . . . sent it [money contributed] to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul." This church at Jerusalem had now been in existence eleven or twelve years. Elders were introduced and trained before the spiritual gifts passed away. They were introduced in this oldest church earlier than at other places because they had time to develop before the church was planted at other places; but as the time for spiritual gifts to disappear approached and time was given for Christians to grow in age and character to fit them for elders, those gifted teachers were required to see elders were selected "in every church."

The gospel was first preached in Antioch by those scattered abroad on the persecution of Stephen in A.D. 34. About A.D. 42 Barnabas and Saul spent a year at Antioch. (Acts 11: 26.) In A.D. 46 Barnabas and Saul returned to Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch and on this journey, after time had been given for the development of elders, they "appointed for them elders in every church." (Acts 14: 23, R. V.) So soon as men were converted some were endowed with spiritual gifts that enabled them to perform the work of the church at once. These continued until some were trained for elders; then they were appointed, not before. Then Titus was left in Crete, still later, to appoint elders in every church. (Tit. 1: 5.) They were not appointed when the churches were first planted, but only after time had elapsed to develop characters fitted for the work. If elders were gifted persons, they would have been appointed in the beginning, when gifts were most needed. The evangelists and teachers of the early church were endowed with spiritual gifts to enable them to do their work before revelation was given. The same work must be done now. It is well and safe to keep the distinction between the endowed and the unendowed; but when the name was descriptive of the work, I do not see it would be sinful to apply the name that describes the work to all who do it. "Evangelist" and "teacher" are applied to the inspired and uninspired who do the same work; but "apostles," "prophets," and "pastors" are only applied to the gifted, and it is best to keep the distinction between the inspired and uninspired where the Bible makes it.

The Fanning Orphan School acknowledges the donation of a first-class Deering Ideal Self-binder from the Deering Harvester Company. I have for a number of years used the machines, mowers and binders, of this company, and have always found them doing satisfactory work. I would say they are as good as the best, and have found them a little lower in price than any others I have examined. This gift was bestowed through the kindness of the manager of the Nashville office, Mr. Linthecum, whom all will find a courteous and accommodating gentleman.

"Would You Dare Tell God That?"

Mary is a thoughtful little girl. She is very careful about what she says. Her brother is quite unlike her in this respect. She thinks before she speaks; while he speaks, and thinks afterwards, and very often, when too late, he is sorry for or ashamed of what he has said.

One day he came home very angry with a school-mate about something which had happened on the playground. He told Mary about it, and the more he thought and talked of it, the angrier he grew, and he began to say terribly harsh, bitter, and unreasonable things about his comrade. Some of the things he said Mary knew were not true; but he was too angry and excited to weigh his words. She listened for a moment, and then said, gently: "Would you dare tell God that, Ralph?"

Ralph paused as if some one had struck him. He felt the rebuke implied in her words, and he realized how wickedly and untruthfully he had spoken.

"No, I wouldn't tell God that," he said, with a red face.

"Then I wouldn't tell it to anybody," said Mary.

"O, that's all right for you to say," said Ralph; "but if you had such a temper as I've got—"

"I'd try to get control of it," said his sister, gently.

"When it's likely to get the upper hand of you, just stop long enough to think, 'Would I dare tell God that?' and it won't be long before you'll break yourself of saying such terrible things."—Young People's Paper.

A Talk Made to the Churches at Murfreesboro, Tenn.

On the second Lord's day in January last, Brother W. L. Logan, the "pastor" of the church of Christ, at Murfreesboro, Tenn., was called to Smyrna, Tenn., to preach a funeral, and consequently asked me to fill the pulpit in his absence. Murfreesboro is my home, and when I am not away from home preaching I work and worship with the church of Christ in our town. I always try to do that which is pleasing to God, so I made the talk, which is here written, to the church at the morning service. I believe it to be the word of God and a very important lesson to Christians generally; so I submit it to the Gospel Advocate readers.

"And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, . . . and continued his speech until midnight." (Acts 20: 7.) Instead of conforming to a general custom and preaching a set discourse, I prefer to make a short talk to the disciples of Christ who have assembled for worship, on this subject: "The Lord's Day Worship." Many churches have adopted the modern "pastor" system, and the chief feature of the Lord's day service is a set discourse by the "pastor." I do not believe this course best in the light of New Testament teaching. Whenever a church establishes the custom of securing the services of one man as "pastor," whose line of work is to officiate at the table, preach a set discourse, and lead the services generally, while the members sit and listen to the sermon and go through the form of worship led by the "pastor," said church has adopted a custom for which there is no authority in the New Testament Scriptures, and preachers who make it their business to do such work are not following the example of the apostle Paul.

Paul went where the gospel had not been preached, established churches, and taught them to worship God on the first day of the week and to sound out the word of the Lord in the regions beyond. Paul visited churches and remained a while with them (different lengths of time), taught them lessons they needed to know, and gave them words of exhortation and comfort. I do not oppose preaching the gospel to saint or sinner. I am heartily in favor of teaching the word of God to any and every one, publicly and privately, whenever an opportunity is offered. The more the word of God is taught, the better. The point I want to call our attention to is churches depending on one man to conduct the services and preachers monopolizing the energies and opportunities for self-development of the members. I insist and urge upon this congregation that it is not according to New Testament teaching for the Lord's day service to become mainly a preaching service in which all the public exercises are led by a preacher who is called to the church to act as "pastor." Churches should encourage to go, and preachers should cheerfully go, where the gospel has not been preached to convert sinners to Christ and teach those who are Christians to meet regularly on the first day of the week and carry on the worship of God, not depending on a preacher. Preachers should teach the churches of Christ, and this is my purpose in this talk, to not depend on one man to conduct the service, but, on the other hand, let every member be taught to take part in the service. One may read, another may lead a prayer, another may make a talk, and so on, ac-

Royal Baking Powder has not its counterpart at home or abroad. Its qualities, which make the bread more healthful and the cake of finer appearance and flavor, are peculiar to itself and are not constituent in other leavening agents.

Great efforts are made to sell alum baking powders under the plea that they are so many cents a pound cheaper than Royal. The admission that they are cheaper made is an admission that they are inferior. But alum powders contain a corrosive poison and should not be used in food, no matter how cheap.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

According to New Testament rule, and in this way the body of Christ is edified, the members are developed by taking a part in the service, and the Lord's system of growth in grace and in the knowledge of the truth is carried out. "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." (Rom. 14: 19.) This is my home congregation. I am more interested here than elsewhere, and my heart's desire and prayer is that we may all so work as to be most pleasing in the sight of God.

In the text before us (Acts 20: 7) we learn the custom of the church was to meet on the first day of the week to break bread. Paul did not purposely go to Troas to preach to the church on Sunday. The church was not depending on Paul. His preaching was merely an incidental part of the service. Paul tarried there seven days, and, being assembled with the church when the church met for worship, preached, just as a preacher of the gospel passing by Murfreesboro might remain over on Lord's day to worship with us, and, being present, might preach to us. The church of God is a body composed of members, every Christian is a member (Rom. 12: 4; 1 Cor. 12: 27), and every member should take an active interest in the work of the body. Every member should do all he can, use his talent, to edify the body and convert sinners to Christ as the word of God directs.

It ought to be when we meet for worship on Lord's day that all take part in the worship, and not depend on one man. There is hardly a male member in this church that cannot read the word of God, make a talk, lead a prayer, or wait at the table, if he will try. "Ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted." (1 Cor. 14: 31.) "When ye come together, each one hath a psalm, hath a teaching, hath a revelation, hath a tongue, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying." (1 Cor. 14: 26, R. V.) Thus we learn that different members of the church, in the apostolic age, were to exercise their respective gifts. It should be so to-day that each member exercises his gift (uses the talent God has given him) for the edification (building up) of the body of Christ. "According as each one hath received a gift, ministering it among yourselves, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." (1 Pet. 4: 10, R. V.) In this way we all grow and are developed according to the will of the Lord; whereas when one man does the work of the church, when assembled for worship, the service becomes a matter of cold formality and the members are not developed.

Another very important point to which I desire to call our attention is the indifference on the part of many of us to attend the service and worship of God in the absence of the preacher. This is the fruit the "pastor" system yields. The church at Jerusalem (which was the first church of Christ ever established) "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." (Acts 2: 42.) Add to this "singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord" (Eph. 5: 19; Col. 3: 16), and you have the items of worship for the Lord's day. When it comes to teaching we should teach and be taught the word of God, publicly and privately, at any time. The church should pray when assembled for worship, and individually we should pray without ceasing. In the New Testament churches are taught to sing, and we read of individuals singing. Paul and Silas sung at midnight in a jail. (Acts 16: 25.) For the Lord's day service God made the appointment and specified two items of worship for this day—viz., breaking of bread and laying by in store of our means as God has prospered us. (Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2.) If we fail to meet and worship God on the Lord's day, there is no hope for us. (Read Heb. 10: 24-29.)

It seems to me that an ideal church and Lord's day service is a church with all of the members present on Lord's day to teach and be taught the word of God, to admonish and exhort one another, to sing, pray, break bread, and give of our means as God has prospered us. In conclusion, let me ask you all to study over what I have said. If it is the word of God, I pray we may all obey it. I would not, for any consideration, have you receive anything I say because I say it; but if I teach you the way of the Lord and you do not obey it, God will condemn you. I also recognize the fact that a man is not always as choice in his use of words as he would like to be; so if I have said one word calculated to wound the feelings of any, I beg their pardon. God knows my heart. I do not want to wound any one. I only wish to please God and do us all good to the saving of our souls and to the honor and glory of God. May the Father above help us to be true to him.

JOHN E. DUNN.

P.S. The above is the talk I made, as near as I can reproduce it. I have made the same talk to a number of the churches where I have gone preaching the gospel during the last year. In but one instance of which I know (and that at home by some of the members, concurred in by the "pastor") has this teaching been disapproved, while by a number of others it has been gladly received. This talk touches a vital point, and I would be glad to see other brethren write along the same line, either criticising, approving, or enlarging on the theme as may seem best in the writer's judgment.

Wild With Eczema

Fire Could Not Have Been More Painful.

"After spending two years in taking all kinds of medicines that were suggested for eczema, but without avail, my mother was induced to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. The result was wonderfully gratifying. Her limbs had been terribly lacerated by the disease, and there were times when fire could not have been more painful. She was, in fact, almost wild. Two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla completely cured her, and not a trace of eczema was left." E. W. DECKER, Gardiner, N. Y.

Eat Well, Sleep Well.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has been a great blessing to me. I was weak, irritable, tired and nervous; had no appetite and was always sad and despondent. One day I got hold of a little book about Hood's Sarsaparilla. I looked it over and resolved to try a bottle. I was better before it was gone, so I kept on until I had taken five bottles. I can now sleep well, feel cheerful and can do all my work, including plain sewing, and I can walk two or three miles a day. I am 55 years old and now feel that life is worth living." Mrs. EMMA SMITH, 68 E. Mitchell St., Oswego, N. Y.

Critical Period of Life.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla during the critical period of my life, and now, at the age of 60 years, I am strong and healthy. It is a great medicine for the blood. I find Hood's to be the best." Mrs. H. POMROY, 22 Lansing Street, Auburn, N. Y.

You can buy Hood's Sarsaparilla of any druggist. Be sure to ask for Hood's and do not accept any substitute.

WILLIAMS.

Brother Andrew Williams was born in Chatham County, N. C. He obeyed the gospel while in his sixteenth year. He has been married twice, his last wife surviving him. He was the father of fourteen children, nine of whom are still living. After a long life of usefulness he died at his home (Elm Tree, Tenn.) on August 5, 1899, after an illness of about nine days. Brother Williams was an elder of Zion's Hill congregation, near his home. He seemed to take as much interest in the church as he did in his own household. He was always found at his post of duty. Brother Williams had but few equals in giving of his substance for the support of the gospel. He always had a word of encouragement for every one that tried to perform any work in honor of our Master. He was a lifelong reader of the Gospel Advocate. He would often have some special piece marked for me to read when I went to see him, in his declining old age. He would then make some brief comment as to the merit of the same. Brother Williams has been separated from us by death, but in the language of the apostle John (Rev. 14: 13) let me say that he rests from his labors, and his works do follow him. Eternity alone can reveal what this godly man has done for the saving of the world. A BROTHER.

EDNA.

With sadness we returned from the burial of our beloved brother, J. D. Edna, who, on February 26, 1900, promising his wife, Geneva, to return from his work, where he was employed as bridleman by the Nashville, Chattanooga, and St. Louis Railroad, by some misstep fell from the Johnsonville trestle and was killed almost instantly. He never spoke after he fell. The little band of worshipers at this place have lost one who will be missed very much. Brother Edna was always at his post on Lord's day to take an active part in the worship. It was sad to witness the scene of his Sunday school class (six little boys) coming into the room on March 4 to take the last look at their teacher. One little boy was heard to say: "I believe as good a man as Brother Edna was has gone to heaven." The deceased obeyed the gospel on October 21, 1895, under the preaching of W. L. Logan, and was a constant worshiper from his obedience until his death. He was married to Sister Geneva Gill. They both lived the Christian life. We would say to his bereaved wife to "weep not as those who have no hope." "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? . . . But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. 15: 55-57.) M. P. CARTER. White Bluff, Tenn.

FALK.

A few months ago, under the heading, "An Afflicted Family," was mentioned the illness and death of James W. Falk and his son, Emmett; also the severe illness of the wife and mother, Sister S. E. Falk. After these deaths her home was so desolate it was thought best to move Sister Falk. Brother James H. Coop took her to his own home, where, after the most careful nursing by his family and other members of the church, with the constant attention of two physicians, she died, leaving only one member of her family, Clarence, about nine years of age. This whole family was attacked so suddenly and severely with typhoid fever that many were afraid to visit them. The close neighbors and relatives gave them constant attention. In the Lord's day meeting where Sister Falk was a faithful and loved member we called for volunteers to relieve those who had so faithfully waited on them. In response a young sister said: "If we take the fever and die, we must not let Sister Falk lack for attention." She and another member of the same family did take the fever, after giving Sister Falk constant attention many days and nights, but recovered. Sister Falk's father and mother were Jacob and Hannah Teems. They were zealous Baptists. She was the oldest of a large family and shared with her parents many hardships in bringing up their children. Being of robust health, she often took part in the farm work, putting her own hands to the plow, the ax, and the hoe. She grew up a noble Christian woman, filling her heart and life with very precious lessons from the word of God that she impressed, but without avail, upon the attention of her husband and sons. She continued to the end of a life of forty-two years, a zealous member of the Cross Roads congregation, near Bellbuckle, Tenn., faithful to duty, often under the most discouraging trials. She was among the most beloved of all its members. R. A. HOOVER.

Some Thoughts on Death. No. 1.

"Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." (Heb. 2: 14, 15.)

The above passage shows that our Savior's mission was to not only destroy death, but to deliver his people from even the fear of death. Why, then, is it that we are still weighed down with an awful dread of that change that awaits us? Simply because we do not avail ourselves of the wondrous blessings brought within our reach by our Redeemer. The journey of the Israelites from the land of bondage to the land of promise is plainly a figure of the Christian life; and the number who started and fell by the way and failed to reach the happy destination is used by the apostle as a solemn warning to Christians (Rom. 11; Heb. 3, 4; 1 Cor. 10.)

After saying that these are written for our admonition, he adds: "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." (1 Cor. 10: 12.) Then the final crossing of the Jordan (read Josh. 3) prefigures death. No doubt they had many times thought of and dreaded that terrible, rushing torrent that interposed right at the termination of their journey, which nevertheless they must cross or never enjoy the bliss of that happy land. At that time it overflowed all its banks, and no doubt seemed ready to sweep into oblivion any living creature that ventured in its course; but, with the Almighty Father as their Leader and Guide, they encounter this mighty obstacle, and its terrors quickly vanish; for at once a way is opened up for them, and the timid and the weak, as well as the bold and the strong, walk safely forward through the valley of the shadow of death, and soon the bright shores of that beautiful land rise before them.

He leadeth me—O blessed thought!
O words with heavenly comfort fraught!
Whate'er I do, where'er I be,
Still 'tis God's hand that leadeth me.

And when my task on earth is done,
When by thy grace the victory's won,
E'en death's cold wave I will not flee,
Since God through Jordan leadeth me.
LUCAS NORTH.

Some Things and Doings.

I hope that the managers of the Gospel Advocate will not think it flattery in me to say that I regard it as one of the strongest advocates of primitive Christianity in our ranks to-day. It has a number of profound, earnest Bible men on its staff of contributors.

**

Christianity, as it stands in the average man to-day, does not mean so much as honesty. His Christianity will not guarantee the payment of any debt that he may contract. When he asks for credit at the store the merchant does not think to ask whether he be a Christian, and it would be useless if he did mention the fact. In the majority of preachers in this country—I hope it is not so much the case farther South—Christianity is sadly wanting.

**

I know the character of many who make appeals for help through the papers to be positively inconsistent with such appeals. People cannot always determine the character of men by their writing nor their plea for help. The more I see and learn of some men claiming to be preachers of the gospel, to use the uncouth phrase of another, "the better I like dogs."

**

I am still thinking of going South soon to live for some time. We are three in family and would like to buy property worth about seven hundred dollars in some good town with two or more railroads and a church of Christ. I am getting about well again and think I will spend the greater part of time in evangelizing. If some brethren who know of such a place as I have mentioned will write me in regard to the matter, I will appreciate the favor.

**

Religion doesn't even mean humanity to the average member of the church. You see a hog attacked by a dog and all the hogs in reach will run to its rescue. Thus we see that the hog has enough sense to fight for its kind in the interest of all. It loses sight of "individualism" in the interest of others. "Let every one look on the interests of others."

"Let the End Try the Man."

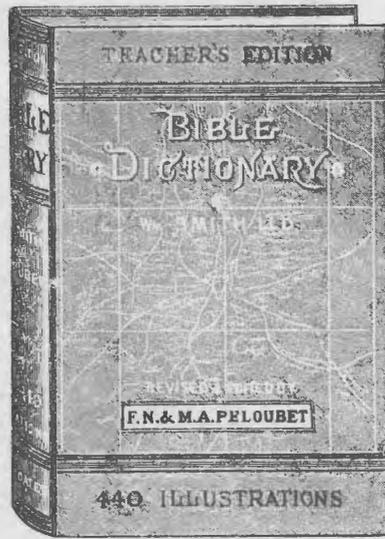

Many medicines have been advertised, and have sold for a time; but when the test of trial came, in actual and varied experience, they have utterly failed, and soon they disappeared from the market. Hood's Sarsaparilla never disappoints. Therefore, it has won the people's abiding confidence, and its sales have gone on, increasing as its cures have multiplied in number.

The standard medicine in the world to-day is Hood's Sarsaparilla. Druggists realize that the best recommendation any other preparation could have would be that it is "as good as Hood's." This, however, cannot be, because Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared by a combination, proportion, and process peculiar to itself and unknown to any other medicine.

If you are not feeling well, owing to bad blood, which causes rheumatism, catarrh, scrofula, salt rheum, dyspepsia, etc., or if you are tired, weak, and nervous, you should take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and only Hood's, because you may be sure that this great medicine will do you good.

Roundlap Bales Made Cotton Higher.

Wherever the American Cotton Company's Roundlap presses were operated last season higher prices prevailed for cotton, whether baled round or square. In order to get cotton, square-bale buyers were obliged to pay more than the market price and more than cotton was selling for in neighboring towns where there was not a Roundlap plant. the premium paid by square-box ginners in competition with Roundlap gins during the greater part of the season was as much as half a cent per pound above the price ruling at other old-style gins in the same county. The inevitable result followed. Cotton (and the owners' trade with it) was drawn for long distances to Roundlap points, to the profit of the entire community and at the expense of towns that did not enjoy the advantages of round-bale competition.

The effect of such object lessons has been a demand for Roundlap presses for next season which will tax the full capacity of the American Cotton Company's works, running day and night.

Field Gleanings.

Referring to Brother Lawson's letter in the Gospel Advocate of April 12, I believe I can see where his trouble is. He says: "If Brother Butler's idea is correct, when Paul came they had gathered the money, for it was in as many different places as there were disciples in Corinth." Let us see. "Let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is," etc. Both of these commandments obeyed would bring every one at the very feet of Paul. Both of these commandments are compulsory, since everlasting destruction is the penalty for a failure to observe the first and spiritual death is the result of a failure to obey the second. God's law is beautifully perfect. A failure to observe it to the letter forces man to a substitute, and a substitute encourages a disobedience of the part, the disobedience of which forced to the substitute. Satan is playing the same game on us he played on Eve—deception.

Since every man is subject to deception, we are at the mercy of Satan if we do not go to God with hearts burning for the truth and a determination to obey it, though it overthrow all the tradition and doctrine we have ever received from the lips of man.

J. G. ORSBURN.

Lawson's Criticisms.

On the position taken by me in these columns that 1 Cor. 16: 1-4 contains no authority for the church treasury, treasurer, contribution box, or regular collections for general purposes taken up at the meeting to break bread, Brother J. H. Lawson has seen fit to offer some kindly criticisms. I appreciate his interest in the subject and hope his effort to correct me will profit both him and me.

He thinks Paul's reason for ordering each to "lay by him in store," expressed in the phrase "that there be no gatherings when I come," requires the gathering of all the contributions into one treasury in anticipation of Paul's arrival. That is not what Paul said, nor can it be fairly inferred from what he said. He said: "Let each one of you lay by him in store, . . . that there be no gatherings [not gathering] when I come." The gatherings to be made before Paul's arrival consisted in each laying by him in store as God had prospered him. Thus each contributor would have his contribution ready to place in proper hands when Paul came. The text is silent about storing anywhere except by the giver himself, and the gatherings were into the store named in the text. If Brother Lawrence has the right to take down "by him" and put in "church treasury," I might just as well take down "by him" and put in "city treasury."

He says, by way of enforcement, that if my idea is correct, Paul should have said: "Let each of you lay by him in store, that there be a gathering when I come." I care little as to what Paul should have said, but take great interest in what he did say. Note that the brother takes out the "gatherings" whereby each laid by him in store, as Paul expresses it, and puts in "a gathering"—which fits the one-treasury idea better. Brother Lawrence's point is that "lay by him in store" means put into a common treasury, because otherwise a collection into one place will be necessary after Paul's arrival. But each laying by him in store does not mean all put into a common treasury. The order is for each to store by himself and have his contribution ready by the time Paul came. This would obviate the gatherings whereby each would have to prepare something after Paul's arrival. At Paul's coming they were to approve men, and all the previously prepared gifts were to be placed in their hands and carried to Jerusalem. If each had his gift laid by him, ready, and all had to meet and approve men to receive and bear all, it would be an easy matter for them to bring the gifts together into the hands of the men who were to bear them. If a treasurer had all these gifts in his hands, in one box, we might expect him to be responsible for placing the funds in proper hands to be borne to their destination, and not require all the givers to join in approving the men. The text reveals no hands between the givers and the approved men. There were to be "gatherings" laid in store by each giver before Paul's arrival, and "a gathering" into the hands of men approved by the givers after he came.

The questionable change of translation brought in from the Emphatic Diaglott fails to show that each laid "by him in store" while assembled together to break bread. They were to lay by on the first day and on that same day they met to break bread; but that each laid by him while in the assembly that broke bread is an inference which is totally unnecessary, and especially does this inference appear unwarrantable when we consider the fact that each laying by him in store is an individual act which requires no assembly.

Mosheim's post-apostolic "Oblation" is too far fetched to give any help on this question.

I advanced the suggestion that 1 Cor. 16: 1-4 has no reference to relieving the poor who are in reach of their benefactors. In that case each should give to the poor directly, not "lay by him in store." The laying by was a step in preparation to send to foreign poor that the givers could not reach. But with the poor in reach give to them, not lay by you in store. Brother Lawrence thinks my idea would interfere with deacons' work. If it can be made to appear that deacons are officers to collect money from the saints and give it to the poor for them, I must acknowledge the difficulty which is suggested by our good brother. But I do not find any such duties assigned to deacons; on the other hand, I do find that the saints are encouraged to give directly to the poor. The seven (Acts 6: 1-7) were not chosen to collect money and administer it to the poor. The saints in their ministration were charged with neglecting one class of poor in the interest of others, and the seven were chosen to remedy the wrong—that is, to direct the fellowship so there would be equality and thus remove the ground of murmuring that had arisen. This is as near as I can come to deacons' work. I regard Brother Lawrence an able and faithful teacher and I shall be glad for him to present the scriptures which define deacons' work. If he finds nothing to show that they are to collect money from the saints and give it to the poor for them, then there is nothing in deacons' work against my "idea." If he finds they are expressly required to administer the saints' money to the poor, the harmony will be difficult; for my proofs that saints should minister directly to the poor of their own means are insuperable. Dizziness is a very common consequence of indigestion and torpid liver. Sometimes there are spots before the eyes and hot flashes. At other times a sensation as of vertigo occurs, at once suffocating and blinding. It is a waste of time to attempt to cure this condition by ordinary means or medicines. The stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition must be restored to healthy activity, the blood must be purified, the liver cleansed and strengthened, before a cure can be hoped for. This is the work done by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a medicine specially beneficial in diseases of the stomach, blood and liver. It strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, cleanses the clogged liver, and promotes the health of every organ of the body.

"My wife was greatly troubled with indigestion, torpid liver, dizziness, and also irregular periods," writes Mr. W. A. Preston, of Shugart, Noxubee Co., Miss. "We tried many different remedies, but none of them gave perfect relief until we were induced by a lady to try your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' 'Favorite Prescription,' and 'Pleasant Pellets.' These medicines did more good than anything we ever tried for those complaints. We have used four bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' one of 'Favorite Prescription,' and two vials of your 'Pellets.' These medicines have done the work we desired, and I do heartily recommend them to all similar sufferers."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets assist the action of the "Discovery."

Double-Minded. No. 2.

"A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." (James 1: 8.)

In our contemplation of the life of a Christian we learn that the secret of its hidden power and glowing success lies in whole-hearted consecration. The early followers of Jesus allowed nothing to stand between them and a faithful discharge of their duties to him. His "Come, follow me," was answered by action rather than word, by life rather than profession. The mere command, "Come, follow me," was sufficient. Why? Because they "believed" and were "sure" that he was "that Christ, the Son of the living God." (John 6: 69.) "They left the nets, and followed him." Here we have the example of self-sacrificing, world-denying, cross-bearing followers of the Christ, worthy of our closest imitation. Later on we hear Peter saying to the Savior: "We have left all, and . . . followed thee." These noble ones were not double-minded; they had a single eye to the service of Christ Jesus their Lord and to God's glory through him. Little thought they of home, or, thinking, placed the service of the Master above it and its comforts, its blessings and its joys; little thought they of wealth, or, in thinking, they valued their service to others and God's approval as of greater importance than gold that cankers or houses and lands that perish; little thought they of food and raiment, or, in thinking, they considered the growing lily and him who feeds and clothes it. O that we might to-day have these manifestations of devotion to our blessed Master!

When on earth our Savior said: "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." (Matt. 6: 24.) The idea of dividing one's affections is altogether wrong, as is illustrated by its results in the marriage relation. How much evil is in the world through a division of affection will never be known. If this is true in the life of husbands and wives, how can it be otherwise with regard to our love for Christ? John, the beloved disciple, says: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." (1 John 2: 15.) The service of God under the Mosaic dispensation required that men should "love the Lord with all the heart, soul, and mind," and the Savior said to the lawyer: "This do, and thou shalt live." So that we are to render a heart service to Jesus to-day, and anything short of this is not acceptable unto him. Jesus said: "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me." (Matt. 15: 8.) "Among the chief rulers also many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." (John 12: 42, 43.) These did not believe with the whole heart; they were double-minded, trying to serve two masters—the Pharisees and the Christ; but they failed in both.

When the Ethiopian demanded baptism at the hands of Philip, the evangelist, he was told by the latter: "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." (Acts 8: 37.) In harmony with this the apostle Paul wrote to the Romans: "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 10.) Therefore, "let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having [having had] our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with [in] pure water. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised)." T. E. WINTER.

Isabell-Lawrence Debate.

Please allow me space in the Gospel Advocate to report a debate, held at Lone Elm Baptist Church, three miles north of Charleston, Tex., between a Baptist, J. M. Lawrence, and the writer, who represented the church of Christ. There were three propositions discussed, as follows: "(1) Baptism for the remission of sins;" "(2) the direct operation of the Spirit in conversion of alien sinners;" and "(3) close communion, as practiced by the Missionary Baptist Church."

On the baptism proposition Elder Lawrence put up the arguments usually used by Baptists. When I pressed him on the proposition and showed that the phrase "for the remission of sins," as recorded in Matt. 26: 28 and Acts 2: 38, was word for word and letter for letter identical in both passages, he (Lawrence) admitted that the sinner's sins were not declared remitted until after baptism, and cited Acts 22: 16 to prove Saul was recognized a sinner until after baptism. This plain declaration from him did not sound very Baptist.

On the proposition of the direct operation of the Spirit, Lawrence surrendered the proposition by saying the Spirit doesn't operate directly, but indirectly, and admitted that the Spirit gave a law (Rom. 8: 2) and that obedience to that law secures salvation. (Rom. 8: 2; 6: 17.) This sounds considerably like what is commonly called (by the sects) "Campbellism," and sounds to me like the teaching of the primitive Christians.

On the communion proposition he put up the poorest argument I ever heard by a Baptist, notwithstanding he is considered the ablest Baptist in Texas. He said all baptized believers were disciples, but he would not commune with them because they were not baptized by a Baptist preacher.

I have just returned from Bowie County, Tex., where I found some loyal disciples laboring for the Master. I will visit Bowie County again, and begin a series of meetings, five miles south of DeKalb, commencing on Saturday before the third Lord's day in July. I have been solicited to give my whole time to evangelizing in Bowie County next year, and those who want my services in meetings this summer should write me as early as possible. Brethren in Bowie County who desire to know as to my soundness and ability as a teacher can get the information desired by writing to the following brethren: T. S. Elliott, Charleston, Tex.; I. W. Lollar, DeKalb, Tex.; R. M. Stout, Pine Forest, Tex.; J. A. Bugkham, Weaver, Tex.; and Jacob Akard, Glory, Tex. If you desire to correspond with me, address me at Charleston, Delta County, Tex.

Hidden Helpers.

One of the best proofs of Christian humility is one's willingness to be a helper to others without publication to the world of such efforts; to render free and effective service to the needy, with the sincere desire that none but such shall know it, and not even such, is the essence of profound modesty. Unfortunately, there are comparatively few people of this kind. There is so much of self-assertive human nature in the most of people, even in Christian people, that there is a manifest desire to have others see or know what one does for the benefit of a needy fellow-man. So strong is this feeling in some people that unless they can appear conspicuously as the helpers of others, whether for physical relief or spiritual profit, they prefer to render no service at all. It need not be said that this is entirely contrary to the teachings and example of Christ. He insisted that his disciples should be willing to serve others in the most modest and unassuming manner. He wanted them to rejoice in the privilege of being even hidden helpers of all who needed their care, their support, and their sympathy. They were not to depend for encouragement in their work upon the applause of men, but rather upon the consciousness that their Father in heaven saw them and would duly bless and fully reward them.

Of course Christ had no objection to one's being commended by men for a faithful course of action, nor would he have us withhold words of encouragement from toilers for him; but he does object to any unwillingness to help others unless it can be seen and glorified by men.

Every material building has its hidden helpers in the work of its construction. Many a strong support is covered over by some other part of the building; yet such supports are very useful, their help is indispensable. So there are many Christians whose lives are necessarily hidden from the world around them, yet they are great helpers to the cause of their Lord by their prayers and their wholesome home influence. They are blessed supports in the great spiritual building of Christ, and really they cannot be spared from the self-denying position which they occupy. Let such ones rejoice in being counted worthy to serve God as hidden helpers of the cause which his Son died to make eternally permanent and glorious.

C. H. WETHERBE.

What is the Reason?

Why is it that you are not equal to the task nature sets for you to do? Why do you find weakness stealing over you and increasing day by day? Why that ashy, chalky complexion? Why that inability to hold your urine?

Why those distressing pains across your back?

Why do you suffer from catarrh of the bladder?

All these symptoms are unmistakable evidences of kidney trouble.

The kidneys, that make the human engine of life move as nature intended, are not working properly and should have prompt attention.

If you need a medicine for kidney, bladder, or uric acid trouble, you should begin using the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. It gives quick relief and cures the most distressing cases.

Hospitals use it with marked success, in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients, use it in their families, and take it themselves for kidney, bladder, and urinary troubles.

Tens of thousands of grateful patients have written to Dr. Kilmer & Co., and these letters have been fashioned into a handy volume of ready reference, which should be in every household. This volume and a sample bottle of Swamp-Root will be mailed to any readers of this paper who will send name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., and state that they read this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on arising about two ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If, on examination, it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is for sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes and two prices, fifty cents and one dollar. Remember the name, Swamp-Root; and the address, Birmingham, N. Y.

A brother in Alabama sends me the following report of a sermon, clipped from the Montgomery Advertiser, for publication, with a few words of comment, in these columns:

"Last night Rev. William H. Smith, of Columbus, Ga., who is assisting the pastor, Rev. Mr. Provence, in the Clayton Street Baptist revival, preached from Acts 16: 30, 31: 'What must I do to be saved?' Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' He said that the question asked in the text is the most important question that can be asked by a human being. Every man has a soul to be saved, for all have sinned and are under condemnation. It is a practical question that each one must ask or be eternally lost. It is important because there is only one way to be saved, as is expressly declared in the Scriptures, and every man must be saved in that way or not at all. The answer to this question is an inspired answer. It is God-given. God directed Paul to say just the right thing to this anxious inquirer. It is a definite answer, simple, yet all-sufficient. Paul did not tell the man to turn over a new leaf and try to live a better life. He knew he could not be saved in that way. Even if a man could turn over a new leaf and from that time forward live a perfect life without sin, what could he do with the sins of the past—the dark and sin-stained pages of his former years? Our righteousness is as filthy rags in the sight of God, Isaiah, the prophet, tells us, and how could we cleanse our lives by the use of such means? Paul did not tell this Philippiian jailer to join the church and be saved. The church can never save a soul. He did not tell him to be baptized that he might be saved. There is no salvation in baptism. He did not tell him to weep and agonize over his sins and to come and let him pray for him. But the inspired answer was: 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' To believe simply means to take God at his word. A trustful self-surrender to the Lord as Master, to Jesus as Savior, is all that is required."

The point is well taken that "Paul did not tell this Philippiian jailer to join the church and be saved." No inspired man ever told anybody to join the church, and if any one ever joined the church in apostolic times, no mention is made of it in the New Testament. The whole church-joining business is entirely outside of the word of God. It is also well said in the sermon that "the church can never save a soul." The exact New Testament idea is that every soul Jesus saves is a member of the church because Jesus saves him. Christ is "the Savior of the body" (Eph. 5: 22, 23), and the body is the church. (Eph. 1: 22, 23; Col. 1: 18-24.) To be saved is to be a member of the church, and to be a member of the church is to be saved. The church includes and consists of all who are saved. The idea that a man is saved by one thing and at some subsequent time joins the church is unscriptural and antiscritptural. Whatever is essential to salvation is necessary to membership in the church. Nothing is necessary to constitute one a member of the church, except that which is essential to his salvation. Still another point is well taken in the sermon that "there is no salvation in baptism." Salvation and all spiritual blessings are "in Christ." (2 Cor. 5: 17; Col. 1: 13, 14.) We are baptized into Christ. (Rom. 6: 3, 4; Gal. 3: 26, 27.) True, Paul did not tell the jailer "to be baptized that he might be saved;" he told him to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; and Christ said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) If a man who wants to be saved believes on the Lord Jesus Christ—"takes God at his word"—and makes "a trustful self-surrender to the Lord as Master, to Jesus as Savior"—he will be baptized because Jesus said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) The man who neglects or refuses to be baptized after his attention is called to what Jesus says by such neglect or refusal shows that he does not "take God at his word," nor does he make "a trustful self-surrender to the Lord as Master, to Jesus as Savior." The man who takes God at his word and makes a trustful self-surrender to the Lord will do what the Lord says. This probably explains why the jailer was baptized "the same hour of the night." (Acts 16: 33.) In New Testament times all who took God at his word, believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, and made a trustful self-surrender to the Lord were baptized. Those who were not baptized rejected the counsel of God against themselves. "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized." (Acts 2: 41.) "Rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him." (Luke 7: 30.)

Referring some weeks ago to what I understood and still understand to be a conflict between the agreement signed by Brother Grimes and other Baptists on July 8, 1885, that "the Spirit operates through the truth only," and the Whitlock proposition in the Alexandria debate in 1900, which Brother Grimes indorsed, that "the Spirit operates independently of the written or preached word," I gave it as my understanding that A. Malone and J. N. Hall indorse the agreement of 1885, but do not indorse the Whitlock proposition. Since then Brother Hall has said editorially in the American Baptist Flag that he does indorse Brother Whitlock's position as Whitlock defined it to him in private conversation, and Brother Malone has written in the American Baptist Flag as follows:

Now, I do not know how he defined this proposition nor how he maintained it, but I do know that last year he explained to me his understanding of the work of the Holy Spirit in conversion, when I saw but little difference between his belief and mine, and I told him at that time that I had but little, if any, objection to his doctrine as defined to me, for he expressly said that he believed the light of the gospel necessary to the conversion of the sinner, and furthermore said to me that for that reason he was a Missionary Baptist and believed in the gospel mission plan. This being true, I do not indorse Brother Whitlock's doctrine of spiritual conversion, but simply to the proposition which he maintains in discussion. When we talked over I told him I had but little, if any, objection to his doctrine as defined to me, but that I had the choice of language employed in the defining of his proposition, that I thought his doctrine and his proposition incompatible; and I say now have no special objection to Brother Whitlock's doctrine of spiritual influence in conversion as defined to me when we talked the matter over last July.

I publish this as a matter of justice to Brother Hall and Brother Malone, for I have no desire to represent their position on this or any other subject. Neither Malone nor Hall makes any effort to show that the Whitlock proposition is consistent with the agreement of 1885. Brother Grimes tried to harmonize the agreement and the Whitlock proposition so as to show he was consistent in indorsing them both. What he said on this subject has been published in these columns and the weakness of the case has been pointed out.

Brother L. S. White, of Gallatin, Tenn., sent me Malone's article, clipped from the American Baptist Flag, from which I have quoted Malone's statement that he agrees with Whitlock. Malone, Hall, and Grimes have now all indorsed Whitlock's position from which it may reasonably be inferred that this is the position the Baptists in this country now propose to defend, no matter what the agreement of 1885 means. What, then, is Brother Whitlock's position which all these Baptist preachers and debaters are indorsing? On this point Brother L. S. White, who has debated this question with Brother Whitlock, says:

"Brother Malone refers to a private conversation he had with Whitlock [so does Brother Hall] in which Whitlock defined his understanding of the Spirit's work, and from that explanation Malone says [so does Hall say]: 'I had but little, if any, objection to his doctrine as defined to me, for he expressly said that he believed the light of the gospel necessary to the conversion of the sinner.' I do not call that 'private conversation' or 'explanation' in question, but I insist that a preacher's 'explanation' in 'a private conversation' should be the same as in a public debate. It was my privilege last March to have a discussion with this same J. H. Whitlock, and two of the propositions in that debate were on the 'operation of the Holy Spirit in conversion.' My proposition came first and was worded thus: 'In conviction and conversion the Holy Spirit operates with the written or preached word.' I contended that 'the Spirit dwells in the body of Christ and operates through the members of that body and uses the word of God as the instrument by which he convicts people of sin.' Whitlock denied this and said very positively: 'The word of God has nothing whatever to do with either conviction or conversion.' The next day he affirmed the following: 'In conviction and conversion the Holy Spirit operates independently of the written or preached word.' Thus you see that one day he contended that the Spirit did not operate in connection with the word of God at all—either spoken or written—and the very next day contended that the Spirit operates independently of either the written or preached word; and if that does not make a square issue between Malone and Whitlock, I would like for some one to tell what it will take to make an issue, for time and again during that debate Whitlock would emphatically say, 'The word of God or the preaching of the gospel has nothing to do with either conviction or conversion,' while Malone says it is 'through the light of the gospel.' Whitlock defined 'to operate independently of the word' to mean 'apart from the word.' This is too plain to be misunderstood. Whitlock went so far as to say the heathen would be saved without the gospel, and that if he believed, as I do, that they must be taught the gospel before they could be saved, he would rest neither day nor night till he carried them the gospel. He even went so far as to say that

He even went so far as to say that

God has no more to do with either conversion than a last-year's almanac. All attention to the above to show that Whitlock was in public discussion and his reputation as a debater and preacher was at stake, he proposed very differently to what he said in conversation with A Malone last summer. His teaching on this question is very different from that of Malone.

Henry Hardshell in Trouble.

Henry Hardshell: "Good morning, friend Faithful. How does the world serve you?"

Frank Faithful: "Well, I try to so 'use this world, as not abusing it,' as Paul taught some at Corinth. (1 Cor. 7: 31.) We are in the world, and all our uses of earthly things should be made a help rather than a hindrance to practice the religion of Christ."

Henry H.: "Now, that reminds me of a certain scripture which has often bothered me, some way; I do not understand it."

Frank F.: "To what scripture do you refer?"

Henry H.: "To that scripture where Christ said to his disciples: 'I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.' It is found in Luke 16: 9. Christ, in the Sermon on the Mount, says: 'Ye cannot serve God and mammon.' How can a Christian make friends of mammon and of unrighteousness? This is a hard nut for me to crack. I confess I do not understand it."

Frank F.: "You are too impatient, I fear, Henry. By faithful, prayerful study of the word we can be wiser as we grow older. There is quite a difference in serving mammon and making mammon serve you. This command to make friends of mammon and unrighteousness is the lesson Christ drew for the benefit of his disciples from the parable of the unjust steward. A certain rich man's steward was reported to him as having wasted his goods. The steward was notified by his lord that he would be put out of his office of steward. While yet in office he settled at a very heavy discount with his lord's debtors. He who owed one hundred measures of oil paid only fifty per cent, and he who owed one hundred measures of wheat paid eighty per cent. This he wisely calculated would cause these debtors to receive him into their homes as a friend when he should be thrown out of the stewardship."

Henry H.: "But it says the lord 'commended' the unjust steward because he had done wisely, when it looks to me like a low-down, dishonest act. Yet it says that his lord 'commended' him."

Frank F.: "It says the 'lord' commended him. The 'lord' was not the Lord God nor our Lord Jesus Christ, as you suppose, but that rich lord whose steward he was. Here, if you notice, the word 'lord' is spelled with a small letter. The Revised Version has it 'his lord' meaning, of course, the master of that steward."

Henry H.: "Well, by jings, that thing has bothered me no little. Why, I've thought it was the Lord God commending a very dishonest, undermining rascal."

Frank F.: "Excuse me, Henry; I must call your attention to your evil habit of profanity and ask you not to indulge in it."

Henry H.: "Why, what have I said?"

Frank F.: "'By jings' is a kind of oath, and we are more than once commanded to avoid all kinds."

Henry H.: "You kindly reproved me once before of that bad habit. However, I am glad to note the fact there are no ladies about near enough to hear what I said."

Frank F.: "What is not fit for ladies to hear is not fit for gentlemen to hear, much less for them to say. I hope, Henry, there will always be gentlemen about when you and I are present."

Henry H.: "What lesson did Christ teach his disciples as drawn from this parable?"

Frank F.: "Christ commanded them to so use the mammon of unrighteousness, or money and worldly things, as to enhance their future or eternal welfare. It was the command to 'lay up treasures in heaven' in a new form; to use wisdom and prudence to the attainment of a better home, a heavenly one, and better friends—God and the Lord Jesus Christ. Henry H.: "I confess that the inducements offered are of the highest value and the plan of salvation seems plain, for Christ said, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;' but a man said to me the other day that all that was well enough, yet he doubted whether we were restricted simply to that plan and he supposed a case like this, for instance: A man believes on Christ with all his heart, and truly repents, which two commands, as you say, are so closely conjoined that they cannot be, in fact, separated. He has also confessed faith in Christ, and his intention is to obey the command of Christ to be baptized; but on the way to the water for that express purpose he happens to meet an enemy who shoots the life out of him, or his mule suddenly throws him violently to the ground and kills him, or perchance the limb of some tree falls upon him and crushes him to the earth, a lifeless mass, so that he never does obey the Lord in baptism. What will become of him? I studied much and long on this question, and dog my cats if I could answer it. What do you say?"

Frank F.: "I will say, first, please do not use such expressions; they are inelegant, coarse, in very bad taste, and in that form savor of the race course and betting style. Christians ought not to bet."

Henry H.: "Why, I heard a debater say in an argument he would bet one hundred dollars a certain definition could not be found in any lexicon on earth. His opponent bet his horse he could. The audience got much excited over it, as it seemed that one would be sure to lose one hundred dollars or the other would lose his horse."

Frank F.: "I know this form of expression is common among otherwise good men, but we should avoid it."

Henry H.: "But that supposed extreme case where a believer by some accidental means was cut off before he obeyed in baptism—I wish I knew how to reply to it. Now, what would you say?"

Frank F.: "Allow me to say to you, personally, Henry, the ease and willingness to be turned away from complying with the will of God which you show in halting at such a difficulty is much more alarming than the extreme case that has been supposed. In any event, whether the man in such an extreme case should at last be saved or lost, what advantage could either be to a man who holds back from obedience to God when no such enemy is in view, no overhanging branch threatens destruction of his life, and where he could easily walk if he is afraid of his mule or horse? Henry, you fail to see that your willingness to be hindered by these or any extreme cases in itself clearly argues a lack of earnest faith on your part. You need faith, or more faith, rather than baptism just now. I will tell you, kindly, the plain truth: The spirit of excuse making in itself is wrong. I might answer every excuse you have ever framed and all that have been or may be offered you by others, and then if you desired an excuse, one of some kind would be furnished you immediately."

Henry H.: "Why do you think so? Are they inexhaustible?"

Frank F.: "Yes, because there is an old excuse factory away down below here somewhere which runs day and night, Sunday and Monday, all the time, like one of these old iron furnaces that never stop. It was founded by that old inventor of excuses who, even in heaven, found excuse to sin and was thrust down to hell, where he located his plant; gave to our innocent father, Adam, and mother, Eve, their excuse which nearly ruined forever all hope of mankind; and has a supply which always more than equals the demand, and can make to order anything desired; who will submit plans or make suggestions how to construct so as to please the most fastidious taste in the selection of excuses. Your own course ought to almost convince you that this is about the truth. Again I tell you, Henry, you need faith rather than baptism just now."

Henry H.: "How much faith do you think I ought to have?"

Frank F.: "Faith enough to brook difficulties and excuses of all kinds, faith to obey God at all hazards, a faith the language of which is:

"Through floods and flames, if Jesus lead,
I'll follow where he goes,
'Hinder me not!' shall be my cry,
Though earth and hell oppose."

Henry H.: "Now, here is more of your poetry, friend Faithful. I have heard it said that you are too sentimental, anyway."

Frank F.: "That is not my composition, but a few lines from one of the old masters which contain the true sentiment as far as faith is concerned. I am sorry you do not appreciate it, as it is the very thing you need."

Henry H.: "Why do you think so?"

Frank F.: "Why, Henry, if you had faith enough, you would frame no excuse for disobedience to God; you would accept none from others. Excuses might be stacked one upon another and piled as high as these great stacks of lumber in the lumber yards of Nashville; yet you would not see them; you would pass right along in the sure path of loving obedience to God at all hazards. 'If any man come to me,' says Christ, 'and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple. And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple.'"

Henry H.: "But you have never answered what would become of him who by some means was killed on the way to be baptized."

Frank F.: "I am not the judge. God will do right with every man. We are too weak-minded to know exactly what the infinitely wise, just, and compassionate God will do in some cases we may suppose, but I may express my preference on one point."

Henry H.: "What is that? I like to hear your views."

Frank F.: "I would much rather be shot by that vengeful enemy, kicked to death by that vicious mule, and be crushed to atoms by that falling limb or tree, while walking in the path of obedience to God, than, like Henry Hardshell, having despised a thousand opportunities, waded a sea of timely warnings and entreaties, to die at last in disobedience, even though I expire on a bed of gold, surrounded by a host of earthly friends, ready to write splendid panegyrics of my life and worldly honor. Henry, your present state of mind and prospect deeply impresses me with the wonderful forbearance and long-suffering of God. Here is a couplet which in some way expresses my feeling when I think of your case:

"Amazing love that yet will call
And yet prolong our days.

I hope you will not think this too sentimental. When I have time I want to call your attention to a real case of extreme difficulty mentioned in the Bible—no supposed case, but one or more real cases; and the result was they obeyed God at last."

Henry H.: "I hope we will soon meet again."

How Shall We Coöperate in Preaching the Gospel?

[A discourse by O. A. Carr at the "Fifth Sunday Meeting," April 27, 1900.]

How to do anything that ought to be done in the discharge of our duties as Christians, I hold, is involved in the instruction to do it. This instruction we have in the word of God.

When instruction is given by the use of specific terms, as is the case with what are called the "ordinances," there is no trouble about the "how;" for, in that case, there is just one way to do what is taught. For example, we are to eat of the bread and drink of the wine in observing the Lord's Supper; and, if you will allow it, we are to immerse when we baptize, for that only is baptism.

When instruction as to duty is given in generic terms, we ought not to have any trouble concerning the manner of action. It looks like, if there were any excuse for being troubled over the "how" in such cases, the Lord in mercy would have given us specific terms, especially in such important work as preaching the gospel of Christ.

Is there cause for disagreement or for inability to understand the "how?" There is not, I presume, so far as the work of the preacher is concerned, since there are only two ways in which I, at least, as a preacher, can preach—namely, by addressing the eye and by addressing the ear.

What we have in contemplation is to address the ear with the message of peace. Strictly speaking, the apostles of our Lord were the only men on earth that ever did or ever could preach the gospel—that is, as eyewitnesses, declare the facts with certainty as the Holy Spirit gave them utterance. It is not in this sense we use the word when we talk about preaching the gospel; nor do we hold that the apostles are our models as to where to go, the manner of our going, how we are to be supported, or the manner of our support. In other words, we do not believe in "apostolic succession," either great or small. In the nature of the case the apostles could have no successors. They have never resigned; they are apostles yet, and they preach the gospel yet, wherever it is preached—that is, it is the same gospel now as then, and what the apostles said is to last until the end of time. What they preached with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven is to be repeated by human lips and impressed on human hearts by those who speak as the "oracles of God" speak. "The things that thou hast heard of me," said Paul to Timothy, "commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." To the fact that faithful men have taught others, and they others, and so on to the present day, are we indebted for our knowledge of Jesus and the great salvation. This, the richest of all legacies, parents are to transmit to their children through all generations. As the rain from the clouds comes to the earth, trickles through the earth to the rivers, and from the rivers to the ocean, so from God comes the truth, the light of life, and the salvation secured to us by our Savior—God manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, and received up into glory, from which glory he sent the Holy Spirit to guide his chosen into all truth and to be the world's teacher by directing the apostles what to say and how to say it in testifying of Jesus and the great salvation through him. What the Holy Spirit, by using the apostles' lips, said then he says now, and into the great ocean of surging, restless humanity conveys the same truth, the redemption through Christ, in the same way now as then and in the same words; for what the Holy Spirit has spoken is what he now speaks, and he speaks through human lips now when these lips speak what the Holy Spirit said through the inspired teachers. Hence, now, it is simply the case of the gospel's finding utterance by those who have learned it, who believe it, and who are able to tell it—"able to teach others also." Thus has the Lord ordained that by the mouths of men who will preach what Peter preached the nations are to hear and believe. It is a solemn fact that where human lips do not preach the gospel the gospel is not preached—no, not even in Grayson County—though some of us act as though we thought the gospel will be preached in some other way than by our effort. Instead of applying the balm directly to the wounded heart, the Lord has seen fit to extend to us the healing leaf and bids us apply it at the will of a human compassion; so that where human hearts do not send and human lips do not preach the gospel of Christ it is not preached, and such communities are without it and without the salvation through Christ, whether they be in Grayson County or in India. What will take the gospel to India will take it to every nook and corner of our own land—namely, men and money. Men are not wanting; there are many preachers. What about the other? What about the money? This is the tender point; just here is where the trouble is. The rule is that the preachers would do the work if the brethren would let them. Do you ask where the money is to come from? I answer: Who is to support the gospel, if not those who believe it? The honest, straightforward answer to this question would unveil a great deal of sophistry, and I suspect that it would obviate the necessity of showing by argument where the responsibility lies. I am sure that the preachers are not alone to be blamed, if they are to be blamed at all, for not doing their part. Is it necessary to remind you that since the apostles left our earth the responsibility to carry on their work has been resting on the church which Jesus through their labors established? It is a solemn fact. It is the glory and a good part of the very meaning of the church's existence and purpose of its establishment that it "hold forth the word of life;" but can a church "hold forth the word of life" and not preach the gospel? To claim that it can is tantamount to setting aside the gospel. Furthermore, if the expression "word of life" be not an exact equivalent for the "gospel of Christ," it certainly includes the gospel of Christ, else there is no "word of life." To "hold forth the word of life" is to preach the gospel of Christ, and that, too, with sufficient regularity and times appointed that those who need to hear it may know when to assemble. The preacher is to preach? Yes, but what about the rest of the church? They are to listen? Yes; and criticize the preacher? Well, if he needs it; but very ill, very bad, as a habit, as though the effort were made to find out whether he does need it. This last is an operation—the very opposite of coöperation—and, if continued, proves that there can be no coöperation. It is something akin to scalping, and there is no coöperation with the preacher in it, unless he be scalping somebody else, some heretic, and the audience enjoying it. It is almost as savagelike for the preacher to scalp the audience. This is usually attended by as sad result as when a person tries to kill a snake with the hilt of the scythe and cuts his own head off with the blade. This is distressing work. Taken either way it shows there is little coöperation between the preacher and the church. Still, the faithful preacher will reprove, rebuke, exhort, correct, with all long-suffering and doctrine; and the faithful Christians will coöperate in a work like this.

Do not lose sight of the wording of our subject: "How Shall We Coöperate in Preaching the Gospel?" "We," who? Are we to understand that the preacher is included in the "we," or shall we think of it as the members of the body coöperating with the mouth?

Of course, there is no coöperation that is right that is not in teaching what ought to be taught. The fullest sympathy and the love characteristic of the Christian ought to be shown to the preacher in such a plain way that he cannot mistake them, that he may know that he has the hearty coöperation of those with whom he labors. While we cannot exclude the preacher from the "we" in the question: "How Shall We Coöperate in Preaching?" I think that the intention was to raise the question as to the part the churches are to do.

If we admit that the responsibility to preach the gospel rests upon the church, preachers included—and I am sure that we must admit this, as it is the plain fact, and is "the Lord's plan," so to speak—then the "we" in the question is: How shall we, the members of the body, work together? Of course the obligation to preach the gospel rests on the individual Christian because it rests on the church, for what is true of the whole is true of the parts. Then, to do anything that requires more than one person to do we must coöperate. This is self-evident, and is presented in the plea for the need of the many and different members of the body and the necessity of their coöperation, as given in 1 Cor. 12: "Now are they many members, yet but one body. And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. . . . Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." Hence, in reference to what some call the "local congregation," the necessity for the division of labor, for the good, yea, for the very existence, of the body, has never been in doubt; for we all see that this is set forth in the figure of the human body, with the need of hands and feet and eyes. Moreover, we see clearly that these members are individuals—"members in particular"—and that the body, the church, consists of such men and women—of individuals who have their individual responsibilities. I solemnly think that there would be no more trouble over the "how" of the coöperation of churches than over the question, "How shall we, the members of the body, coöperate?" if we would only bear in mind that the churches are as individual as are the individual members, and if we would banish from our minds any and every idea of the organization of the churches into something vast—something called a "representative body"—that is to stand for the church, and yet is not the church, but which is appealed to in order to determine what shall be understood as the practices of the church. Why mention this? Well, because I do not want you to think about it. I want to tell you that "how" to get up such as that or "how" to coöperate with such as that is not in my view of the matter at all, nor is it the purpose of the meeting to consider that or anything like it.

I know that when the subject of coöperation is discussed—or, rather, taken for granted, as it ought to be, that the churches ought to coöperate—it has been the custom to assume that there is no coöperation unless you belong to some society organized for that purpose. While it is not my mind or my heart to speak against any good that may be done by any society, I wish to insist that there is the same duty resting on the individual church here and there as to coöperation that rests on the individual Christian, the individual member of the body; and that duty, as does every other duty known to man, grows out of relation, the relation the churches sustain to each other. The duty is comprehensively given thus: "Preach the gospel to every creature," and take care of the children of God, "teaching them to observe all things commanded." On every church does this duty rest, and thus did the Lord ordain.

In the discharge of this duty, if the church (the local congregation) should act through an organization, or if an individual Christian should choose so to contribute, and send the contribution to a missionary society, home or foreign, I cannot help it. I claim that the individual church or the individual member has and ought to be recognized as having that privilege. Your money is your own and your responsibility is your own. But if an organization should make it a law, written or unwritten, or have it as a sentiment, which amounts to about the same thing, that the church or the individual that does not work through such organization is to be undervalued as to appreciation of the gospel, stigmatized as "anti" or otherwise anathematized, then I say that shows the sin of that organization and is the very essence of creed making. On the other hand, if a church, as a body, or if an individual member should have a law, written or unwritten, or a sentiment that amounts to the same thing, which says to the local church or to the individual Christian, "You must not spend your money in that way or coöperate with those who do so," then I hold this is creed making most reprehensible. What I insist upon is that the local church is as much an individual in the discharge of its obligations to preach the gospel to the world and to care for other local churches as is the individual man or woman. Any organization or any ecclesiasticism that would or that does interfere with the individuality of the church, that in any way controls or seeks to control the individual church, that puts some things up and some things down, that molds sentiments for this and that, and fastens them on the churches, indorses the preachers who have such sentiments and condemns those who do not such is antichristian—such is contrary to the very nature of the kingdom of God. The very idea of a church of Christ forbids such.

The Scriptures teach no organization higher than that of the church itself, with its elders and deacons. This is church organization, and nothing else is, and nothing else should be so called. Each church is as independent as is the individual member of the body and each church is as dependent as is the individual member. Mark you, the very corner stone, the foundation, the superstructure of the church, under the figure of a building, as set forth in the Scriptures, show the individuality, oneness, sameness, common interest, and common purpose of the church.

The church of Christ is not a genus under which are species and varieties, with peculiarities to distinguish the one from the other, but the church of Christ is a unit; just as the religion of Christ is not a genus, under which are species and varieties, but it is a single, individual religion, and therefore can have no varieties.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

There is no disguising the fact that there is a senseless conflict between capital and labor. Strikes are occurring almost daily in different parts of our country. Generally riot, violence, and bloodshed accompany them. Labor is organizing against capital and capital is combining against labor. Monopolies and trusts which seek to strangle the life out of the smaller enterprises and thus control prices are multiplying to an alarming extent. Various labor unions and organizations are seeking to dictate the prices that shall be paid for labor. In some lines of business the unions exercise so much influence and control that the capitalist is hardly able to run his own business. The man to whom he is paying wages is more closely allied with the organization with which he stands identified and to which he pays a part of his hard earnings than he is with his employer. He has grown to look upon his employer as his oppressor and to regard him with suspicion. There is not that sympathy and confidence existing between the employer and employee that should be. This should be so great that nothing could interfere with it as long as both parties faithfully discharge their obligations. The tie between the two should be so strong that the laborer feels that he is interested in the capital stock and that as his employer prospers he will be with him a sharer in his prosperity. On the other hand, if his employer suffers loss, he should be willing to share that with him. The employer in his prosperity should not forget the faithful laborer and mechanic who has been an important factor in bringing about that prosperity.

The general unrest that is in the minds of the people certainly has contributed much to the existing state of affairs. But there is a cause for the restlessness and dissatisfaction that are now so prevalent. The world is living too fast. It takes too much to live. At the rapid gait we are going a man feels almost too poor to live and too poor to die. The world is mad after the almighty dollar because it is so essential to procure the necessities, to say nothing of the comforts and luxuries, of life.

So many of our boys and girls are taught to look upon honest labor as degrading. They are nothing but spendthrifts, having never earned a dollar in all their lives. The parents must toil day in and day out in order to bring up their children in respectable indolence. Many a fond mother and devoted father are not willing for their children to endure the hardships that they did in early life. They must be fed out of a silver spoon and brought up in the lap of luxury. Their education must be looked after. Only eleven years in the public schools are required to fit them for college. Add to this four years for college, making fifteen in all, and possibly a bright boy will pull through. Is he educated? No, no! He has not learned how to think. He has been robbed of the toil and self-dependence which are so necessary to fit one for life. While a literary education is not undervalued or held in light esteem, if one or the other must be neglected, better neglect training in books rather than in the practical, common, everyday affairs of life. The successful merchants, farmers, bankers, preachers, lawyers, and doctors are those who were taught to endure hardness in early life. Their manual labor gave them a relish and a thirst for knowledge as well as a strong physical manhood. With the strong body came a strong mind. In childhood they were taught self-reliance and learned what it is to support self. With such training they could hardly grow to anything else than a useful and noble manhood. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and he will not depart from it when he gets old."

Our present system is to dwarf both mind and body. Splitting rails, hoeing cotton, and following the plow will give physical force and power far quicker than dumb-bells. Then the boy at honest labor learns to respect himself as being of some service in the world. The boy who does nothing but spend his father's hard-earned money must think meanly of himself. The fault is not with the boy, but with our system.

It might be well to suggest here that our colleges and universities would do well to provide some means of educating their students in manual labor. Three hours per day devoted to useful employment of this character would enable the student to appreciate more literary pursuits and also to make more rapid advancement. Such employment would be far more useful and would give a better physical development in baseball, football,

tions and were educated to be self-supporting, it would not be so hard to support a family; the necessity for making money and considerable sums of it would not be so great; but so long as selfishness exists, the damning sin of the age, there will be a conflict and strife between the capitalist and the laborer. Greed cries, "Give, give!" without stopping to inquire: "Is it right, is it just?" Selfishness wrecked the world in the beginning, in the garden of Eden, and it will doubtless do it again.

The only cure that we have to offer for these ills is a strict adherence to the word of God. The language of Jesus, if followed, will obliterate this everlasting antagonism: "But seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 33, R. V.) Again, Paul's teaching will be found very wholesome: "But godliness with contentment is great gain: for we brought nothing into the world, for neither can we carry anything out; but having food and covering we shall be therewith content. But they that desire to be rich fall into a temptation and a snare and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil; which some reaching after have been led astray from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows." (1 Tim. 6: 6-10, R. V.) To hoard up treasures on earth is to lay up trouble and sorrow. When all are content with food and covering, the conflict between the employer and the employee will fade away as the darkness before the rising sun, and with the dawn will be ushered in an era of peace and joy. Not our real wants, but listening to and trying to be like somebody else have ever cursed the world. This language of Jesus is a perfect panacea for all our troubles: "All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them; for this is the law and the prophets." (Matt. 7: 12, R. V.)

PROVIDENCE.

"Providence" is providing. He trusts Providence most implicitly who most faithfully complies with God's laws for providing good to man and seeks through these laws to gain the help and blessing of God. God's laws define the channels through which his providence flows, that man by placing himself in these channels may receive his providential blessings. This is so in the spiritual world. We do not expect God to go out of his laws and appointments to save man. He has made these easy of approach that the humblest may come to them and live. God in the workings of his laws so arranged that all who desire that salvation shall have the opportunity to embrace it—that is, when men in one part of the world are of a frame of mind or condition of heart that they are willing to receive and obey his word, under the working of his laws, persons in another part of the world will be moved to send that word to those without it, but willing to receive it.

The providence of God is shown in the provisions God makes through and in accordance with his laws to meet all the demands for his providence in distant parts of the world. God's wisdom and power are shown in his making provisions to meet all just demands on his care through his laws. Insufficiency of the provisions to meet the demands on his care would indicate lack of providence rather than show providential care. The fullness and far-reaching care of God's provisions to meet the needs of humanity are the real evidences of his love and care, rather than the chance provisions and good that seem to come directly from him or outside of the provisions of law. He who seeks the blessing of God, both in the material world and spiritual world, through faithful and zealous compliance with the laws for receiving blessings, is the person who trusts most faithfully the providences of God, not he who relies on interference or help outside of the laws of God. The man who obeys God faithfully and trusts him for the blessing is the one whose faith is strongest. God does not go outside of his laws to bless one spiritually who neglects to comply with his laws. No amount of praying will cause God to go out of his regular channels to forgive one who refuses to come to these channels.

God has laws for the bestowment of material blessings as well as spiritual ones. Those laws are ample in their provisions and easy to be complied with. He shows greatest confidence in God who most faithfully complies with his provisions for bestowing material blessings. If a man neglects these, no amount of praying will cause God to step outside of these laws to give material blessings. "He that will not work shall not eat." It shows no confidence in God for a man to neglect his laws for bestowing blessing, then to pray for his blessings outside of his laws. It is folly for a man to idle his time or squander his means to-day and to-morrow pray God for his help. Faith in God leads to compliance with the laws of God and in that compliance look for God's protection and blessing. The laws of the spiritual and the material world are so regulated that they frequently aid each other. God places it in the heart of his children through the influence of his teaching in one part of the world to help those in need of material good in other portions, so the abundance of one section supplies the wants of other sections.
