Lord Roberts has been appointed commander in chief of the British army, superseding General Wolseley, who retires on account of age. The appointment is regarded as a pledge of the Union party that the needed reforms in British army organization will be carried out, and is expected to strengthen the party at the elections held this month for the new Parliament. The difficulty with the British army organization has been that, because of custom, most of the officers come from the wealthier classes, and, in many regiments, are expected to live beyond their pay, drawing on private incomes. Command in the army has been valued as conferring social position. There are noted exceptions, but the system has not tended to make strictly military men of the officers. They have always been brave, and in India most of them have learned the trade in the field; but the larger portion of the younger officers sent out from England to South Africa have been incompetent for their duties. They were brave men, and all of them were ready to expose their lives and to obey orders, but they lacked grasp of the situation, were not used to taking the initiative, and, at the beginning, were unable to adapt themselves to the circumstances. They have learned during the year, but trained men were needed from the start. Lord Roberts is expected to reorganize the army on a military basis. The officers will be taught the science of war under all possible conditions. This reform has always been opposed by the titled classes, who wished to hold the army positions for their sons; but Lord Roberts' prestige is expected to overcome this influence.—Journal and Messenger.

PREACHERS AND PREACHING.

Speaking of a debate in this city on this subject, the Sun editorially says:

"Ministers are not a segregated class any more than lawyers or doctors. They are brought by their duties into close and confidential social relations with the people, and know more about their sentiments than other professional men do."

It then asserts that the best of them are abreast of the times, and further says:

"At public meetings and public dinners ministers are among the best of the speakers. Relieved from the restrictions of the pulpit, they surprise their hearers by wit and wisdom and a naturalness of speech usually absent from their perfunctory sermons. Oftentimes they reveal themselves thus as strong and large men of sound thought and clear and intelligent observation. Who are the great mass of the readers of the serious literature of discussion which appeals to intellectual men? They are ministers."

In closing, the Sun offers in its best style something which every minister in America should "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest: "

"A reasonable criticism which might be made of the preaching of ministers is implied in what we have said concerning their more effective utterances on the secular platform than in the pulpit. When they speak naturally, they are engaging and powerful, but in sermons their manner may be so far artificial and restrained by pulpit conventions that the same men who had heard them with delight as orators of the platform may find it difficult even to keep awake while they are preaching."

The immature and unwise may be misled by this in endeavoring to be as natural in the pulpit as they are elsewhere they may become irreverent and rollicking. The "dignified colloquial" style in language and manner is as applicable to the expression in the pulpit of profound conceptions in philosophy and exalted thoughts upon religion as to an after-dinner speech. Were ministers to talk face to face on these themes, in private, with intelligent, devout, and outspoken laymen more than they do, the results would be of inestimable value to the style of the minister in the pulpit, to his intellectual and spiritual preparation, and to the laymen, who could no longer say, as one remarked: "How strange it is that my minister will talk with me on every subject except personal religion!"—New York Christian Advocate.

Mission of the Church.

In these days of "churchianity" it may be thought presumptuous, out of order, or behind the times to ask, "What is the mission of the church of God?" also, "What is the mission of that local assembly that meets from time to time in one place?"

Does the local congregation exist and has it a mission every day in the week, or does it cease to exist and become reabsorbed in the world after an hour or two spent in worship on the Lord's day?

I have heard it said of gospel preachers that they mark, brand, and turn loose their converts on the commons without any church or religious restraint whatever. This report is perhaps not true of the theory of any gospel preacher, but experience and observation teach that it is true of the practice of many. From the practice of others, it seems they have lost sight of the object or purpose of the local assembly in their zeal to organize something not the church to do the work of the church.

According to the divine record, Jesus used the term "church" on two occasions, and only two. On these two occasions he expresses the two meanings of the word "church" as found in the New Testament.

In Matt. 16: 18 he refers to the whole family of God resting upon the Christhood of Mary's Son. He is the foundation of all that is valuable to man in time or eternity; he is the head of the body which is the church of the firstborn, the pillar and ground of the truth.

There is almost perfect agreement among gospel preachers as to the mission of the church as a whole. All say that it is to honor God and glorify Christ by subjugating the kingdoms of this world to the will of the King of kings and Lord of lords—destroy rebellion and bring in that blissful state of "glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

How is the church as a whole to bring about that blissful state in which God's will shall be done on earth as it is done by angels in heaven?

The "how" is found in the mission of the local assembly. In Matt. 18: 15-20, Jesus speaks of the church as a local assembly, and not as the entire family of God.

The one seeking reconciliation with his offended brother is told to go alone first; if this fail, take one or two next time; if this fail also, tell it to the church—not to the whole family of God on earth, for this would be impossible; but tell it to that local assembly that meets in Corinth, Smyrna, or somewhere else. There may not be more than two or three in that assembly; but if they live seven days in the week as Christians, and meet from time to time in the name of the Lord, he is in their midst, and that assembly is the church of God in that community.

The local assembly is to the church—the whole family of God—very much what the synagogue was to the temple worship. This difference, however, is noticed: In the synagogue the presence of ten was required before it could be a worshiping assembly; while the church—the local assembly—may not have more than two or three. (Matt. 18: 20.) In this passage, when Jesus says, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name," etc., he means "by my authority," and more, too. The idea is: "When you come together in my stead to represent me, to carry on the work here begun by me."

Christian people may assemble for divers purposes, and these assemblies not be the church of God, because they are not meeting in his stead to carry on the work begun by him.

I see a number of Christians meet, sing, and pray. Is this not the church of Christ? No. Why not? Because their prime object is to advance local opinion, and thus destroy the whisky traffic. That assembly, though composed of Christians, is known as a "prohibition club." Other Christians, both men and women, meet from time to time for educational purposes; this assembly is not the church, but a board of education or a college faculty.

The purpose of that assembly that meets from time to time in Christ's stead and by his authority is threefold.

First, it is to build up every member of the assembly in the holy faith of the gospel, rear the babes in Christ to full-grown men and women in the Lord, and edify itself in love, and thus prepare every one to give an answer when asked for the reason of the Christian's hope. This is to be done by reading, exhortation, prayer, singing, admonition, etc.

Secondly, the mission of that assembly is one of beneficence—doing good first to the household of faith, and then to all as we have opportunity. If the assemblies of the saints could only realize this Heaven-ordained purpose of their existence, it would have a revolutionizing effect upon the world. The sick need attention, the church fails to respond; the hungry cry for bread, the church heeds not; the widow and the orphan cry in their distress, but the church heeds not their piteous wail. What is to be done? Some man of the world sees the neglect of the church. He must prepare for himself and family. He organizes a benevolent institution; he takes the oath, pays his money, and consoles himself with this thought: "If I get sick, I will have attention, church or no church; if I die, my wife and children will be taken care of, church or no church." Shall I condemn the man for doing that which the church ought to do, but neglects? Let us wake up the church to fulfill its mission on this very point. Who ever heard of the various orders of knights begging outsiders for money to run their affairs? Shame on the saints—members of the church of the firstborn—when they resort to questionable means to get money for the church! They ought to hang their heads in shame when they think of drumming the world, and even going to saloon keepers, for money to support their own members. But what is to be done? Teach all to honor Christ and glorify God by giving all their time, money, and influence to the building up of the church of God, and not to the building up of worldly institutions. Let all cease to destroy the church and its mission by building rival orders to do its work.

Thirdly, the local assembly is a divine institution for doing missionary work. The world needs evangelizing. The local assembly is as a city set on a hill, enlightening the surrounding country. The church that fails to preach the gospel, that fails to carry or send the message of life to a lost world, has forfeited its right to the name "church of Christ." It is no assembly in Christ's stead, doing the work he came to do. If in the assembly they edify one another in the holy faith of the gospel, and thus grow in grace and the knowledge of the word as it is in Jesus—I say if they would only do this, their love for the lost would force them to extend the borders of Zion. But some fail here, and, because of this failure, with unbounded zeal for the conversion of the world, they establish orders, organize societies, and build strong ecclesiastical denominations to evangelize the world. Is that which they organize the church? No, no more than that sobriety organization is the church. In organizing these societies they are sapping the foundation out of the divine assembly, thus destroying its right to exist. What is to be done? Why, wake up the sleeping church. Arouse it out of its indifference, and teach it to fulfill its mission by evangelizing the world to the extent of its individual and collective ability. Organizing the members of the assembly into something else never gives them any additional power to work for God. They may have more partisan zeal, but that is all. If the members would put the same amount of time, money, and zeal in the church that is put in the various societies and conventions of societies, the world would be evangelized, strife and division would nearly cease, and the church that Christ gave himself for would shine clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and be as terrible as an army with banners.—F. L. Young, in The Way, August, 1900.

It is often said that it is easier to forgive the man that has injured you than the man that you have injured, and the saying is probably true. There is a valid reason, moreover, why the case should be so. In the exercise of forgiveness there is a certain feeling of magnanimity. It is the glory of a man to pass by an offense. He experiences a sense of conscious exaltation in overlooking the wrong that has been done him. But when he himself is the author of the wrong, he must either have a contempt for himself, or else force the belief in his mind that the other man is entirely deserving of such treatment. The effort to force this belief clouds the understanding, darkens the conscience, and hardens the heart. Hence it is that evil persons seem actually to hate the victims of their injustice; they must do it in self-defense.—Christian Advocate.

Every real and searching effort at self-improvement is of itself a lesson of profound humility, for we cannot move a step without learning and feeling the waywardness, the weakness, the vacillation of our movements, or without desiring to be set upon the Rock that is higher than ourselves.—William E. Gladstone.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Please tell, through the Gospel Advocate, where the passage of scripture is found condemning David's introduction or use of musical instruments in the worship. I read some mention of this subject by you in the Gospel Advocate of September 13, 1900, but you did not give the passage I seek. It is in the Bible, however, and I read it quoted in the Gospel Advocate some six or eight years ago.

C. E. CAMPBELL.

Athens, Ga.

The passage you ask for, I presume, is Amos 6: 1-6.

Brother Lipscomb: Please tell, through the Gospel Advocate, whether one baptized in full faith is born of the Spirit. If not, when is he born of the Spirit?

M. S. K.

When a person truly believes in God through Christ Jesus and is baptized in obedience to that faith, he is born of water and of the Spirit. To be born of water and of the Spirit is to be born into Christ, into his spiritual body. The likeness is between the begetting and bringing forth of the child in his fleshly birth and the begetting of a child of God and its bringing forth into the spiritual kingdom of God. "The word of God is the seed of the kingdom." In it dwell the germs of spiritual life. The seed containing the germs of spiritual life is implanted in the heart of man, as the seed of the father in the natural world is planted in the womb of the mother. This seed in the heart produces faith; he is then begotten of God. Where our Authorized Version says, "Whosoever believeth . . . is born of God," the Revised Versions reads: "Whosoever believeth . . . is begotten of God." (1 John 5: 1.) One is begotten before he is born. When he is baptized, he is born, or brought forth, into the spiritual kingdom of God. As evidence of the truth of this, all who believed and were baptized are recognized in the Scriptures as in the kingdom of God. None were so recognized until they did believe and were baptized.

Brother Lipscomb: Is it wrong for a Christian to belong to a fraternal order and carry insurance on his life?

TOM H. WILSON.

It depends very much on the kind of a Christian a man proposes to be whether it is wrong for him to join the fraternal orders or not. If he intends to make an earnest, faithful, devoted Christian, he has no time, taste, or service for anything, save the church of Christ; if he intends to live the Christian life and make himself a follower of Christ and fit himself in character for heaven, he will give his talent, means, time, and love to the church of Christ, with none to bestow on any other association or brotherhood; but if he only intends to profess to be a Christian, not to make a strict member, and live a life of ease and pleasure and trust to church membership to save him, without a godly and holy life, he had as well join these brotherhoods and divide his time and means with these as to take any other course of life that will not develop the Christian character. So if a person intends to make a true and real Christian, the church is all he desires or seeks. If he intends to only profess Christianity, but not live the Christian life or develop the Christian character, there is as little harm in these fraternal bodies as in any other course he will follow. Life insurance is a business arrangement into which many enter and in which many will lose and some gain. The profits, as I understand it, arise chiefly from the failures of many. Many invest their money. Some lose all; others gain all. A fair and legitimate business brings good to all who engage in it. In life insurance the poorer, excitable, needy classes lose all; the cautious, prudent, wealthy gain all. Is a business that improverishes the poor and thriftless and gives to the thrifty and rich such a business as Christians should engage in? The business for a Christian to engage in is that which brings good to all parties, but especially one that protects and helps the thriftless and poor. A Christian in business should look to the good of others as well as self.

Brother Lipscomb: I would like to have your views from a scriptural standpoint on the following case: I have a friend—one who has proven herself a true friend—who has her faults, and is not a member of the one body. A sister claims that this friend is of questionable character, while I claim that she is not. As to proving this one way or the other, you very well know that an investigation would make bad matters worse. The sister referred to is offended at me because I visit this friend, and does not wish to associate with me on that account. Shall I continue to visit my friend, over whom I believe I have some influence and might lead into a nobler life, or shall I discard her entirely because my sister is offended? Please answer through the Gospel Advocate, and oblige.

A SISTER.

The meaning of the word "offend," as used in the Bible, differs widely from its meaning as we use it. In the Bible it means to tempt or lead into sin, or cause to stumble, and is so translated in the Revised Version. Luke (17: 1, 2, R. V.) says: "It is impossible but that occasions of stumbling [offenses] should come: but woe unto him through whom they come! It were well for him if a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were thrown into the sea, rather than that he should cause one of these little ones to stumble [offend]." "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth [is offended]." (Rom. 14: 21.) To offend in the scriptural use is to tempt or lead into sin. As we use it, it means to wound the pride or hurt the feelings. This latter is not a sin; the other is. It is no sin for our sister to wound the pride of her sister nor to hurt her feelings, if she does it doing right or trying to do her or others good; but it is always wrong to tempt another to sin, or to stumble. If the suspected one were known to have sinned and you can help her out of that sin into a better life, it is your duty to do it. The idea that we must cast off persons because they do wrong is contrary to the teachings of Jesus. He went to the sinners to save them; it is our duty to do the same. If you have a friend that is wrongfully suspected, it is your duty to stand by her and encourage her and vindicate her, let the world say what it will. In doing this, you are to be cautious to give no ground for others to think you are partaking in sin. There are none so lost in sin that it is not our duty to seek to help them and save them. If a woman has made a mistake, her friends ought to encourage her and shield her from greater temptation. It would be wrong for you, while trying to help or save one, to so associate with her as to lead other innocent ones into temptations and sins. But to turn your back on one that is wrongly suspected or that has even done wrong, so long as there is the least possible hope of saving her, is to fail in your duty as a Christian, no matter how severely your friends condemn you.

O, do not pray for easy lives! Pray to be stronger men. Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers; pray for powers equal to your tasks. Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle. But you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, at the richness of life which has come in you by the grace of God.—Phillips Brooks.

A man must not choose his neighbor; he must take his neighbor that God sends him. In him, whoever he be, lies hidden or revealed a beautiful brother. The neighbor is just the man who is next to you at the moment. This love of our neighbor is the only door out of the dungeons of self.—George MacDonald.

MEETING AT CASTALIAN SPRINGS.

The disciples have no meetinghouse at the above-named place, but there is a public shed, or pavilion, used for different purposes—public gatherings, picnics, dancing, and such like. The brethren got permission to use that place for their meeting. It is nicely floored, and they hung up canvas around the sides and at one end, and that made it comfortable when the weather was not too cool or too windy. They also arranged enough temporary seats to seat a good-sized audience. The brethren from Union, Antioch, and Hopewell assisted in the arrangement and in the meeting. Castalian Springs is a central location on the Hartsville pike, near the halfway ground between Gallatin and Hartsville, and in a community where there are a number of people that do not attend any of the meetinghouses above named.

The meeting began on the fifth Lord's day in September and closed on the following Lord's day night. The weather was very fine until Saturday after the meeting began, when rain set in. We had fine hearing and good attention. Even after the rain set in, the crowds were larger than we expected. Five persons were baptized and one other made the good confession, but was hindered from being baptized by her father, as we learned. We were satisfied, both by the attendance and the attention, that the brethren made a good selection in choosing that place to hold the meeting. They think they will try it again, and I hope they will. The meeting was a very pleasant one, the brethren and sisters cooperating very earnestly in conducting it. The seed of the kingdom was sown broadcast, and we hope reaping will be done from it hereafter. We would be truly glad to see the brethren of all the congregations that can do so having more meetings held on their borders around, where there are people that do not attend the meetinghouses. Great good can be done in this way.

E. G. S.

Brother Lipscomb: You can realize how hard it is for part of the congregation to have to walk out and leave the house and everything in it to those who have brought in the organ and other innovations contrary to the Scriptures. There are only a few of us and we are all very poor, so each member is to ask assistance of all the brethren he thinks will help us. I suppose you will remember me as a little girl when I tell you my name was Susan Wood. I am a daughter of W. J. Wood, of near Winchester, Tenn. This is my reason for taking the liberty of asking your help. I am almost sure you and other brethren in Nashville will take pleasure in sending us something to help us buy a church house, which we can get from the Methodists for three hundred dollars, and it will take about one hundred dollars more to have it moved and seats put in. We have about one hundred dollars or a little more on hand; so, of course, we will have to ask the brethren at other places to help us. We have been meeting at private houses for more than four years, and now is the best time for us to get the church house, if we can get the help we need so badly. Any help will be very thankfully received. You can send money to me and I will turn it over to the church and send you a receipt for same. Now, Brother Lipscomb, please do not disappoint us.

Franklin, Tex.

(Mrs.) S. C. LAMBERRY.

This was sent as a private appeal. We receive on an average one of these appeals a day, sometimes more. Of course we cannot respond to all. The churches in the city also receive constant appeals and give much more according to ability than the country churches. These brethren and sisters deserve help because they have continued to worship God under the adverse surroundings. Those who quit trying to do anything when some go wrong or go along with the wrong do not deserve help until they repent and go to work aright. Some going wrong ought to be the greater incentive to others to work more zealously for the right; and those who continue to work for the right should be encouraged and helped.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother E. G. Sewell is at Choice, Humphreys County, Tenn., in a meeting.

Brother F. W. Smith, of McMinnville, Tenn., was in the office last Friday. He had just closed a few-days' meeting at Huntsville, Ala.

Brother J. M. McCaleb had to cancel some of his appointments on account of sickness. We hope that he will soon be fully restored to health and strength.

Brother M. H. Northercross, of Franklin, Tenn., was in the office last Friday. He was on his way home from Lafayette, Tenn., where he had just closed a good meeting, resulting in three baptisms.

Brother James E. Scobey was in the office last Saturday. He has just published a tract, the title of which is "The Eldership." The price is five cents, and orders should be addressed to him at Andrews, Tenn.

Brother L. M. Jackson's meeting at Bethany, Ky., resulted in seven confessions and baptisms. This meeting closed on the 10th inst. Brother Jackson has been busy in meetings all summer. He is now at Woodbury, Tenn.

Brother J. W. Grant closed a meeting at the water's edge at Lyle's Station, Tenn., on the morning of the 8th inst. Three persons were baptized and one restored. There was a fine attendance throughout the entire meeting.

We would be glad for some good brother to hold us a meeting. We have a church house and a few members, but we are unable to get a preacher. There is great need of workers here.—(Mrs.) M. J. Barfield, Marietta, Ga.

We are in receipt of the following funeral notice: "The friends and acquaintances of the family are invited to attend the funeral services of Mrs. Ella Berger, wife of Mr. N. D. Berger, at the family residence, at 3 P.M. today. Services by Elder T. B. Larimore; burial at Winchester Cemetery. This October 10, 1900." We extend our sympathy to the sorrowing family and friends.

What does "fellowship" mean? It means partnership in one sense of the word. The first church at Jerusalem "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship," etc. "They parted unto all men as every man had need." This is what we should do. "Whoso . . . seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Now a word to all who are able and willing to help the worthy needy. Here you have a chance. Brother W. M. Oldfield, of Warner, Tenn., broke down in health last spring, since which time he has not been able to do any work at all, and will not be before next January. He has a stomach trouble that will require ten or twelve weeks to treat. He has spent his all, even his watch, to meet expenses. He and his faithful wife both have to live. The Overby brothers, of Lyles, Tenn., paid his board and treatment for one month. This was fellowship. Who wishes to share in such a work? He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again." Brother Oldfield has labored much during the past two years in Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Texas, and Missouri. All the congregations for whom he has labored would please the Lord, bless the needy, and be happier if they would each of them send him a nice contribution. This is written without his request or knowledge, but, knowing his needs and believing him worthy, I write from a sense of duty, believing that there are able brethren who would be glad to help the worthy, if they knew the circumstances. Send contributions to W. M. Oldfield, corner of Tenth street and Georgia avenue, West Nashville, Tenn., or to Mrs. W. M. Oldfield, Warner, Tenn.—R. W. Norwood.

EDITORIAL.

Our contributions are often a test of our consecration.

It is our need, and not God's, that calls for our gifts to him.

Some of us are poor because God cannot trust us with riches.

The man who is true to his duty will always be trusted more.

Though a man grow rich in sin, his life, after all, is a terrible failure.

When we do our duty in each to-day, we need have no fears of to-morrow.

The only way out of a difficulty that will bring rest to the soul is to do right.

The man of humility loses sight of self and toils to bless suffering humanity.

If other people turn from the truth, the greater the reason for our standing firm.

Parents who do not teach the Bible to their children at home rarely ever teach the Scriptures anywhere.

There is no person without sin. When you do wrong, turn away from it, and never be guilty of that sin again.

Let every Christian work faithfully for the spread of the gospel of Christ. God requires all his children to work for the salvation of souls.

Paul, the great hero of all the ages, was a man of God's word. He always "reasoned from the Scriptures." He did not hand out to men the learning of Gamaliel, but the wisdom of God. Writing to the Corinthians, he declares: "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." The truly great preacher loves the word and preaches it.

A preacher noted for his dry humor said: "Some people's Christianity is like an aching head: although it is very painful to them, they are not quite willing to dispense with it." Such Christianity is worthless, and yet it is all the kind some people have. They do not feel safe without it, yet it is a burden and a distress to them all the time. It does not allow them to do many things that they would like to do and calls on them to omit many things they would be glad to do.

As a matter of policy, they hold on to Christianity. Such ought to understand that they are really lost. Their profession is a delusion, a deception. God will give no credit for such half-hearted service. He will have a whole heart or none. We can never please him with a divided heart, a divided service. How wretched such people must be! Give God a whole heart, a willing, earnest service, or none.

Brother Lipscomb: Moved with gratitude of heart, I feel a desire to write you a few lines. My wife and I left Nashville on the same day of the marriage, and were in company with Brother A. B. Lipscomb as far as Louisville. We spent two days in Chicago and arrived at Stevens Point on Friday before the meeting on Sunday. I held a ten-days' meeting near Knowlton. I am now preaching nine miles from Stevens Point, near Mill Creek. I have made preparations to leave for Canada soon. You will rejoice to know that Wilson Mallory is doing a grand work in these parts. He preaches and works hard at anything that is honorable for a living. He has been with me in these meetings, but works hard by the day. He is reaching the laboring classes, for he poses not as a priest, but works as one of the people. I write you this that your heart may be glad, for such, I feel sure, gives you joy. I shall remember you as long as life lasts, and when we stand on the eternal shore, I shall clasp your hand with joy, for you have done more for me than any other human being, living or dead. The good that you have done to me shall not stop with me, but shall be transmitted to others until thousands shall be made glad, as I have been. I have learned to live only for God. That is worth more than all silver and gold. My wife remembers you with love and prayers.—A. Foster, Stevens Point, Wis.

We wish again to call the attention of our friends and readers to the offer to send the Gospel Advocate from now to the close of 1900 for twenty-five cents. Our friends should add several thousand new names to our list. We are counting on them to call the attention of their friends and neighbors to this liberal offer. We believe that the Gospel Advocate will do any one good who will read it. We would be glad to add ten thousand new readers in the next few months. Many of our friends and contributors have promised to labor to increase the list of the Gospel Advocate. The churches are getting tired of innovations. Those who were not satisfied to worship according as "it is written" promised great things when they began work in this State. Their work has been a failure, and the churches where they have had full sway are discouraged and dying. Even the church that took to itself the credit of starting the work is having hard work to hold its own. We earnestly insist that all who love the Bible way help us to circulate the Gospel Advocate. Help now will be doubly appreciated.

Miss Ella Parrish writes: "Confidently believing every one who reads 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore' must not only enjoy the reading, but be made better and happier thereby, I, like Misses Lovie and Dovie Freeman, would, if I could, send a copy to every home on earth.' I cannot do that; but we, the sisters in Christ, can, if we will, send this precious book to thousands and tens of thousands who need, in their lives, their hearts, and their homes, the light of the lessons it teaches. Duty clearly demands that I do all I can in this way, and I shall certainly do it. While I hope and pray a million copies of this wonderful, helpful, beautiful book may be sold, to purify, encourage, and save, I shall certainly do all I can to that end. I recognize and realize that it is my duty to help evangelize, brighten, and save the world; and I know no other way to do this so well as to devote time, money, and labor to the circulation of this priceless book that stands next to the Bible—the Book of books. Every family can afford to buy it, for no home can afford to be without it."

WE MUST LOOK TO THINGS REQUIRED, NOT TO THINGS NOT FORBIDDEN.

The field of action for some religious people is exceedingly broad. They deceive themselves by what they call "liberty." By this they seem to think they can do anything not expressly forbidden as a matter of service. They regard the service of God—the work and worship of the church—in about the same light as they do the matters pertaining to this life, such as the matter of eating meat or only vegetables. A man can eat meat and not violate the word of God, or he may refrain from meat, live on a vegetable diet, and violate no precept of scripture; and so they think they can do likewise in the work and worship of the church of God. If it suits their particular taste or preference to have an organ or other instrument of music in the worship, they put it in; if they prefer to have some human society as a means of doing the Lord's work, they organize it, and feel they have a perfect right to do so, because that society is not named and condemned in the Bible. They take the wrong side of this matter altogether. The side for man to follow in all things pertaining to the work and worship of the church is simply to observe and do that which is expressly required and let alone everything not required.

Moses said: "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law." (Deut. 29: 29.) This is certainly a very expressive passage. The secret things are things not revealed, not found on record in the word of God. These all belong to God, not to us, so far as the service of God is concerned. Man has no right to intrude upon the Lord's domain in these matters—has no right to introduce one single thing not expressed in his word. But whatever has been revealed, has been put to record in the word of God, is ours, belongs to us and to our children, and these things we must do. Everything required in the New Testament, the new institution, we must comply with. What is not found there we must let alone; it is not ours and we have no right to meddle with it. The reason, as given in the above, why we should not meddle with unrevealed, secret things and attend to the things revealed is: "That we may do all the words of this law." If we begin to add to and do things not revealed, not expressed, in the Book, then we are sure to leave out some things that are revealed. The Jewish people—unfortunately for them—did things not revealed, things they had no right to do, and left undone the things revealed and required, and it brought thorough and complete ruin upon them. Very much of the history of the Jewish people is a history of things they did which are not revealed; and those are the very things that destroyed those people. The New Testament teaches and enforces the very same principles.

Jesus said in the Sermon on the Mount: "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock. . . . And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand." The point that I wish to emphasize in these verses is that no matter what else a man does, if he does not do the sayings of Jesus, he builds upon the sand. He that hears and does the sayings of Jesus builds upon the Rock, builds upon the truth, and no sort of storms can cause such a man to fall; but the man that hears these sayings of Jesus, and does them not, builds upon the sand, even if he were to do everything human wisdom ever invented as a matter of service to God. It matters not a particle as to the earnestness and zeal with which he does these human inventions; he is still building his house upon the sand, and it will fall. There can be no question about the earnestness and zeal with which many people do things that are not revealed, are not among the sayings of Jesus. All such are building upon the sand. I have never seen more earnestness and zeal manifested in anything in all the days of my life than I have seen manifested in carrying on the prayer system of conversion. They sing, they pray, they shout, they express all sorts of praise and adoration to the Lord as their mourners claim conversion. Indeed, I have never seen greater enthusiasm manifested by any people in anything under the sun than I have seen manifested in these exercises. Yet this whole matter of getting religion in such way and by such means as they use is among the secret things that belong unto the Lord our God, not a word of it having been revealed to us. All such build on the sand. People meet and hold conventions to devise ways and means for the spread of the gospel, and in these conventions the enthusiasm runs so high as to almost threaten the safety of the house where they are assembled; yet not one word of such a thing as a modern religious convention is found in the New Testament. All such procedure is building upon the sand; and, unfortunately for many of those who claim to build upon the Rock, claim to do the very things the word of God requires, they have so little earnestness and zeal or spiritual life about it and do so little of the work as they go along that it amounts to but little, has but little influence upon the world around.

The prophets of Baal had an immense amount of enthusiasm, but they built upon the sand. Elijah had deep earnestness, but was quiet and deliberate and made no great noise or ado. He was doing just as God directed, and was abundantly blessed, prevailed over the infidelity of the people and brought them back to God, and destroyed the worshipers of Baal. He indeed built upon the solid Rock of truth. But the prophets of Baal and Ahab and Jezebel built upon the sand, and their house fell, and great was the fall of it. As to zeal and earnestness, it frequently occurs that those in error manifest more zeal and enthusiasm than those who are in the right. It takes more parade and noise to carry on error than it does to carry on the truth. If those who do hold the truth would manifest a little more quiet and solid earnestness in the extension and upbuilding of truth, they would certainly accomplish a much greater amount of good. The only work that will stand in the great day of accounts is the work done along the line of the plain truth. Work on lines of error will crumble and fall as certainly as the Bible is true. Men are trying to fortify against this by claiming that those who do what they think is right will be saved, whether they do just the thing the Book requires or not; and these same persons that make this claim are constantly deriding those who claim that only a strict compliance with the record will do as legalists, literalists, mossbacks, old fogies, and such like, and in this way hinder some weak ones from standing upon the word who otherwise might do so. We are certainly living in an age that requires courage to be faithful to the Lord and his word. Jehoshaphat, in the Old Testament, is a striking example of a lack of moral courage and an inclination to drift with the popular tide, while Caleb and Joshua are examples of men who dared to do the right, no matter what had to be encountered in going the right way and doing the right thing. These are good examples for any one to follow who desires to honor God at all hazards. It always requires moral courage to stand by the truth when the popular tide all runs on the line of error; but as many have done this in years gone by, the same can be done again. Let every soul be subject to the word of God, no matter what men may say. This idea that when men do what they think is right it will be right to them is encouraging thousands to build on the sand and be swept away by the floods of ruin.

Many very skillfully use the word "honest" in a very dangerous way along this line. They call all those "honest" that zealously do what they think is right, and claim that no honest man will be lost. Such a use of the word "honest" is very deceptive. This use of the word may be very acceptable in the sight of men, but not in the sight of God. Jesus tells who the honest man is in God's sight. In explaining the parable of the sower, he says: "But that on the good ground are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." (Luke 8: 15.) An honest and a good heart is the heart that will always accept and keep the word when it hears it. Thousands of people to-day who are in error, but claim to be honest, will turn away their ears from the truth when presented and stick to the error. Take a man who believes in getting religion, and thus obtaining pardon before baptism, and read to him, from Acts 2: 38, what Peter said to the three thousand, and he will turn away from it with disgust. Yet men will say these are honest. In the sight of God they are not. If they were, they would keep, would obey, the word when they hear it. It is a grand thing to be honest in the sight of the Lord, to hear and obey his word always and under all circumstances, no matter what men say to the contrary.

Paul was a man of this sort. When he heard the truth, he at once obeyed it, although it led him contrary to all the convictions of his former life. Nothing could ever drive him from it. They derided him, beat him, threw him into prison, and did everything possible to deter him and drive him away from it; but he only stuck the more firmly to it, and was always bold to speak it, till, finally, they put him to death. But he never yielded one iota of the truth, and he was most triumphant in the greatest earthly danger. He boldly said, in the very face of death: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (2 Tim. 4: 6-8.) This was a grand ending to a grand life, and a beautiful illustration of honesty and true courage, both in the sight of the Lord and of men. No earthly consideration could move Paul away from the truth, nor could any sort of affliction or danger deter him from standing by it. They could bind his person, throw him into prison, and put him to death; but they could never shake his convictions of truth, nor bind his tongue, nor blot out the words of his pen. His life work stands as a monument of honesty, firmness, and integrity to the truth. They might beat him, thrust him into the inner prison, and make his feet fast in the stocks; but they could not bind his courage nor his tongue. At midnight he prayed and sung praises to God; and just as soon as the opportunity afforded he preached the gospel to the very man that had treated him so rudely, and thereby brought him and his house into the church of God the same hour of the night. The Lord help us all to be firm to the truth as was Paul. E. G. S.

The world has a right to look worshipers, as they come out of church, in the face, and ask them: "What do you bring away from your altar, your psalm, your sermon, your benediction? What gifts have you to distribute in your neighborhood?"—Bishop Huntington.

There is a mighty "go" in the gospel, as well as "come." It is come, go. Go, preach and heal; go home to thy friend; go into the highways; go into all the world. Many Christians do not obey; many churches have no blessing, because they do not go.—B. F. Jacobs.

SCARS OF HONOR.

There are few things more ill bred, more unkind, and more cruel than to call attention to any personal defect or disfigurement. Such an affliction is hard enough to bear through life without the added hurt of thoughtless comment, or, worse still, of heartless ridicule. Besides, we do not, in many cases, know what the blemish stands for, how or why it was gained; often, if we did, it would call not only for our sympathy, but for our respect also.

Seldom has this been more forcibly proved than in the case of the late Benjamin H. Brewster, President Arthur's attorney-general, whose face was terribly disfigured by scars, and concerning whom this story has been told:

A distinguished lawyer, he was on one occasion engaged in court as attorney in an important case for the Pennsylvania Railroad, when the opposing counsel, in the course of his closing speech to the jury, made a most brutal allusion to Mr. Brewster's misfortune in the words: "The dealings of the railroad are as tortuous and twisted as the features of the man who represents it."

As he said this, a little stir of surprise and indignation ran through the court room, and all eyes were turned to Mr. Brewster, who, however, at the moment gave no outward sign that he had heard these cruel words or felt their sting. After he had finished his own argument, he said:

"For the first time in my life the personal defect from which I suffer has been the subject of public remark. I will tell you how I came by it." With this a hush fell on all in the room, and they leaned forward to listen. "When I was five years old," he continued, "I was one day playing with a younger sister, when she fell into an open grate, where a fire was burning. I sprang to her assistance, dragged her from danger, and in doing so I fell myself, with my face upon the burning coals. When I was picked up, my face was as black"—and his finger pointed with terrible directness to the man who had made the remark—"as that man's heart."

It was a terrible rebuke, but can we say that it was undeserved? Could any one, whose heart was white, deliberately inflict such cruelty?

Men lift their hats to the veteran who marches by with empty sleeve; we say of the soldier wounded in battle that his scars are scars of honor. So of others; their loss and disfigurement may stand for some self-sacrifice, some courageous act, some endurance of suffering, some brave endeavor, which, if we knew, would change our pity into admiration. If we could see, as God does, we might find that such scars are also in truth scars of honor.—Adele E. Thompson, in Forward.

THE SURRENDER OF THADDEUS.

A rugged, massive frame appeared in the doorway of the immense orphan asylum schoolroom. Immediately hundreds of eyes were fixed upon him, as he made his way to the superintendent's desk.

"Well, Mr. Hanna, have you come to any decision?" asked the superintendent, pleasantly.

"Yes, I have, Mr. Merea," said David Hanna, in a low tone. "I want that boy over by the east window, that one who is so large and—"

"Ungainly," supplied Mr. Merea. "Well, I should think that you'd have taken any other one, Mr. Hanna; but there's no accounting for tastes. Thaddeus McFadden is of good stock on both sides, Scotch-American; no stain on his name. But it is only fair to tell you that his disposition is not good; he is sullen and ungrateful. The man who brought him here told the same story. 'He is sulky and unresponsive, and has no feeling,' he said, and we have found it true. Still, you can try him for a year, you know."

Two hours later David Hanna was driving from the station of Dorset, several miles on the Eastburn pike. Beside him sat the large, overgrown boy whom he had adopted on trial; while back of them, in the wagon, was a small, shabby, black trunk belonging to Thaddeus.

The boy was silent all the way to the Hanna farm, with a repellant silence, it seemed to David Hanna; but any one who knew David knew that the very obstacles which would disgust others only stimulated him the more.

"Thaddeus, do you know what I would like to do?" David Hanna asked this question the day after the boy had been settled in his new home. Thaddeus' great, dark eyes looked at him suspiciously, and he waited.

"I'd like to give you boxing and fencing lessons. I used to be quite famous at such things; you know an old fellow must brag of his youth," said David.

A flash of surprise and pleasure came into the boy's eyes. "Do you really mean it?" he asked.

"Of course I do," David replied. "You've a fine frame, Thaddeus, only you don't know what to do with it; that was my case. With shoulders back and head erect, you'd be an athlete to be proud of; you must have outdoor sports this fine weather."

"I came here to work," said Thaddeus, stubbornly. "I mean to pay for my keep. I can do it, too."

"Of course you can, and I'll give you plenty of work." David gave his hearty, genial laugh. "But I want to make the most out of you. I want you to make the man I fancy you'll make."

Thaddeus' face fell. "I can't make much of anything, and I can't be driven; you'll be sick of your bargain," he said.

David said nothing, but the lessons began in a large room adjoining the kitchen. As they progressed, Thaddeus developed unusual skill and quick strokes. Even David Hanna was surprised at the boy's improvement, not only as a pupil, but in his carriage and general appearance.

David Hanna was a childless widower, a farmer of moderate means. He ruled the farm; his housekeeper, Annette Bangs, ruled him, so far as domestic affairs went. Life went on monotonously, yet very happily, at the farm. Thaddeus worked hard, read when he wasn't too tired, and every week David insisted on taking him with him to town. But even David's sanguine temperament felt the chill of disappointment as the weeks lengthened into months, without any progress toward real friendship or more intimate relationship between the two. Thaddeus was faithful, honest, and industrious; but, except now and then during the boxing lessons, his passive unresponsiveness remained.

"Was I mistaken? I was sure there was a fine nature underneath that exterior," David thought. They were just entering Dorset. While David was buying groceries, he missed Thaddeus, and later he could hardly believe his eyes. There was the shy, awkward lad helping a bright-faced woman with her numerous packages, his face all smiles, and he was actually engaged in conversation with her.

"I didn't know you knew Mrs. Ellis, Thaddeus," David said, later.

"I never before saw her; but she looks like mother." Thaddeus' face had not yet lost its rare glow.

"Your mother must have been very attractive, then."

"O, sir, she was the brightest, kindest woman you ever saw—just happy and singing all the time; not one bit like me. After she left me, and I was bound out, I nearly died. I couldn't talk about it, and old Caleb Harsh thought I was just sulky and mean—and he—well, he was pretty hard on me. I didn't mind his thrashing me so much, though I wasn't used to it; but he never believed me, and to be always mistrusted made me ugly. I couldn't do anything but just keep still; but I made up my mind, then, that I'd try never to care for anything or anybody, because it makes folks suffer so awfully."

"Did old Harsh get tired of you?" David asked, gently.

"Well, he traded me at the asylum for a quicker, pleasanter-spoken boy; he told Mr. Meara a lot of lies about me, but I knew it wasn't any use to do anything. Mr. Meara never could bear me, and—and—O, Mr. Hanna, you're good to me, but I've got into such ways that I am mean and ugly! You'd better take me back before I'm bound to you for good. I can't bear to see you so good and kind and know that it is all wasted. Why did you ever choose me?"

"Because I took a strong liking to you, Thaddeus. You're not mean; you don't lie."

"No, because I just can't; I feel too horrid after it," said Thaddeus.

"Well, I'm going to keep you, so you'll have to put up with it," David said, in his decided voice.

In the fall Thaddeus went into Dorset to school. He studied well, although he was not unusually quick. He shunned the other boys. "They shan't have a chance to snub me; like the boys in Alden did when they jeered at me and called me 'old Harsh's lamb.' I'll never go through all that again," said Thaddeus—"never!"

But one day, on the way home—he was to meet a neighboring farmer four miles farther on, who was to give him a lift—he came upon a sight that roused him. There, near the lonely country road, stood the bully of Miss Pritchard's room, Julius Beeber, thrashing a delicate little fellow from one of the lower rooms.

"I told you I'd kill you, if you ever told on me; how dare you interfere with my doing as I please?" Julius Beeber's face was purple with passion, and, by the way he was laying on the blows, it looked as if he would do as he threatened.

Thaddeus straightened his tall form and sprang into the open woods. "Stop that!" he cried, as he grasped Beeber from behind and threw him; but in a moment Beeber was up again, and dealt Thaddeus a powerful blow.

At first it appeared to little trembling Theodore that they were too unequally matched, and he felt sure that Beeber must win, as he always did; but Thaddeus' lessons told now, and he used his knowledge with a coolness which surprised himself. In the end he left Beeber out of breath and badly beaten, picked up Theodore and took him to his aunt's, not far away, and supposed that that was the end of it all. But the next day David came to him.

"Thaddeus, Mr. Beeber says you're a bully and nearly ruined his son for life. Did you fight? Tell me about it."

"You've heard what Mr. Beeber said," Thaddeus replied, doggedly. "Isn't that enough?"

"No; I'm waiting for your side. I know that it will be the truth."

Thaddeus' face lighted up. He told his story briefly.

"You did right," said David; and, to Thaddeus' surprise, that was all that he ever said about it.

In the spring Thaddeus had a fresh surprise. "I've had a fair offer for part of my farm, Thaddeus," David said. "I'm going to sell. I want money to send you to college. I propose to pay all your expenses the first year; and when you can decide whether you care enough to work your way in part the other years. I can't afford to pay everything, but I can give you a big lift."

It was Hanna's turn to be surprised. Thaddeus grasped his hand. "You don't mean to do this for me—you don't mean to give me such a chance? Why, you're like a father! I'll serve you always. I'll do my best at college. O, if you knew how I want to be a doctor!"

"Don't 'serve me,' Thaddeus. Love me a little, if you can. My boy died when he was a little chap, and I want a son more than anything else," said David.

"I'm not a stone, if I am so horrid," Thaddeus said, his voice shaking with rare emotion. "I can't talk much, but I'll try to deserve you—father!"

Years later, when Thaddeus was slowly earning his present fine practice in the large Western city of L—, I heard one man in a street car say to another: "That is Doctor Hanna; he cured my boy, you know. That's his father with him. You never saw such devotion as there is between those two. Aren't they fine-looking men?"

Glancing in the direction indicated, I saw my old friend, David Hanna, as erect as ever, while beside him strode a young giant, talking eagerly, his face half turned toward me, and I knew that it was Dr. Thaddeus McFadden Hanna.—Rhodes Campbell, in Forward.

Be noble, and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own;
Then wilt thou see it gleam in many eyes,
Then will light around thy path be shed,
And thou wilt nevermore be sad and lone.

THE WAY TO SPREAD THE GOSPEL.

A church ought to know the religious conditions of every person within its range. The religious difficulties and troubles of each person within the circumference of the influence of the church should be known and the proper influences brought to bear on them to remove and overcome these. The social, pecuniary, and health conditions ought all to be noted, and a readiness to extend sympathy, comfort, and help as needed and as opportunity and ability afford should be presented. The church or the elder that will do this can reach and save those that can be saved without much or eloquent public preaching. This is the divine way of working. Paul said to the Ephesians (Acts 20: 18-21, R. V.): "Ye yourselves know, from the first day that I set foot in Asia, after what manner I was with you all the time, serving the Lord with all lowliness of mind, and with tears, and with trials which befell me by the pots of the Jews: how that I shrank not from declaring unto you anything that was profitable, and teaching you publicly, and from house to house, testifying both to Jews and to Greeks repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." The work of Paul was a private and house-to-house work, among both Jews and Gentiles, both to those within and without the church. If this work were done by the teacher or preacher now, it would easily solve the preacher and elder question. Until this is done, it will never be solved, because this is the work needed to be done.

Paul stood as the preacher at Ephesus while he was doing this work for them and he gave it as an example for the elders to follow after he left them. The elders who gave their time to the work were to be supported by the brethren. Indeed, the broad principle is laid down that "the laborer is worthy of his hire." The apostle laid this down as a broad principle of right and justice, applying alike to the brutes and to all classes and conditions of men. So whenever a person spends time in doing work for the church of God, so as to need help, it is the duty of the church to help him, whether he sweeps the floor and keeps the house in order or preaches the gospel, looks after the weak and wayward or waits upon the sick and feeds the helpless.

Some of the elders were expected to give their time and service to teaching. "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and in teaching." (1 Tim. 5: 17, R. V.) Elders giving time and labor to teaching others were to be sustained. There is the same necessity for this that there was in apostolic times. These were to labor among those without as well as those within. They must do it from house to house as well as publicly. The evil is not in supporting teachers to teach the members and the world; it is in wrongly directing their talent and time. Two sermons on Sunday and a mid-week talk to a prayer meeting of the formal style demand the time and labors of most men to make preparation for these, and then nine out of ten will soon fail and tire the interest of the hearers. Very few men in any department of life can long get up two or three sermons a week that will interest an audience. He can read and comment on the Bible and talk with people, hear and meet their difficulties from year to year, and increase in interest and extend his influence through a lifetime; but to make one hundred and fifty new discourses in a year is a task that very few will meet. It is not necessary; it is not for the good of teacher or taught, for Jew or Gentile, or for the saint or the sinner. Let us direct our labors along the proper lines and to the true ends, and good will come to all. An elder working as Paul did would grow in influence from year to year down to old age. Nine preachers out of ten who sermonize three times a week lose their influence and power within a few months.

Elders or teachers should not confine their labors to one place. They should look around for fields that will accept labor. A man laboring in destitute fields always finds an ever-widening field of labor opening to him. One who does not go into these fields does not find the destitute fields. It is a new application of the rule: "He that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath." To a man that enters the destitute field new ones will continually open; to him that will not enter them, they will more and more close. I know this from experience. When I gave my time to work in these fields, there were always more open doors than I could enter. I have not been in this field of work for years. Frequently I am asked where there is an opening for one desiring this kind of work, and I am not able to point to it. I know a church that has the money and the preacher to do this kind of work that has been at a loss for places to do it. This is a bad report for both preacher and church as to their former work. I recently asked Brother Gus. Dunn, who has been doing this kind of work greatly, for places wanting preaching, and he promptly gave me a dozen places.

Now, churches ought not only to know the religious needs and wants of their neighbors, but they ought to look out places around them where work is needed and keep them before the church. This would be a very helpful incentive to Christian work among the members. If they could not go themselves, they could open the way for others to go. If the elders of each church will encourage the members to find out and report every community in which preaching is wanted and keep it before the congregation, it will help the church and the needy places greatly before the year is over. I have spoken of people wanting the gospel. Labor ought not to be confined to them. Those who do not want it need it all the more. The apostles never waited till people wanted the gospel to carry it to them; nor should we do it.

THE LORD'S DAY SERVICE.

Brother Lipscomb: I write you in regard to your reported indorsement of Brother A. Elmore's position on the order of worship and monthly preaching. He mentions, in the Gospel Echo of recent date, a visit to your home with a view of ascertaining your views of the matter in question; and the result of the interview seems, from the report, to have been very encouraging to him. Rice, in the Gospel Missionary, has a standing quotation from you on the "divine order of worship." These men represent you as being in favor of the "divine order of worship" supposed to be taught in Acts 2: 42 and as opposed to preaching at what they call the "hour of worship" on Lord's day.

Now I do not believe that you indorse their positions in regard to these questions; I think you have been construed in a false light. They teach, with the greatest degree of pertinacity, that Acts 2: 42 teaches the divine order of public worship for Lord's day, also that preaching has no place in this order of Lord's day worship—in fine, they are opposed to all preaching to churches, except by evangelists in times of protracted meetings—and that the elders are the only authorized teachers of the church. These theories have wrought havoc in the churches in this section of country. Many think you are in favor of these hobbies. Let us have your views through the Gospel Advocate when convenient.

Cloverdale, Ind.

W. J. BROWN.

Any one that represents me as believing God has a ritualistic order of worship misunderstands me. Brother Rice, as I remember, sent me a tract containing a ritual of worship, even telling where the deacons should sit, ready and convenient to hand around the bread and wine, and where the elders should sit to administer. I spoke of it and approved some things in it as good, but mentioned the fact that there was not the least intimation in the Bible that it was the business of the deacons to hand around the bread and wine. They were appointed to wait on the tables of the poor, not the Lord's table. While I believe it the duty of the elders to direct the affairs of the church in worship as in other things, it is not their special business to read, offer thanks, or do all the teaching and instruction needed at the Lord's service. It is their duty as overseers, or elders, of the congregation to see it is properly done. I do not believe in official service of any kind. Every member qualified by a godly life and scriptural knowledge should add what he can to the edification and encouragement of the church. I think for the elders to do all the talking or praying or giving thanks savors of the priestly order of Judaism, not of the brotherhood in Christ. I think all Christians should take such part in the work and worship of the church as they are capacitated to do under the teachings of the Scriptures. The work of the elders is to see they do the work in a scriptural and orderly way.

I do not believe there is anywhere a fixed order laid down to be followed. Singing is not mentioned in Acts 2: 42, yet I do not believe singing wrong. It is mentioned when the Supper was first instituted. They sung a hymn and went out. Those who contend for a ritualistic order have insisted sometimes from this that nothing must be done after the Supper but to sing a hymn, get up, and go out; objecting to a word of thanks or prayer by way of dismissal. Yet it is certain that the discourse contained in John 14, 15, and 16 was spoken after the Supper, before the separation. These errors grow out of the idea that a ritualistic order is laid down to be followed in exact order. I think it right to sing at the Lord's day meeting, yet I think it would not be sin to omit singing at this meeting or others under some circumstances. I do not believe there would be sin in beginning the services with a song or with a prayer, then reading and studying the Bible, then another prayer, another reading, or in reversing this order. There is nothing of a former ritualism presented to us in connection with the New Testament service, and to introduce it is to introduce formalism instead of a free spiritual service.

On the subject of preaching at the Lord's day meeting, I do not know why the teaching done by an elder, a deacon, or any member is not as much preaching as when done by an evangelist or regular preacher. The only thing that makes a man a preacher is, he preaches. While there is a general distinction between preaching, proclaiming the gospel, and teaching a congregation, the distinction is not always kept up in the Scriptures. When any member reads and explains a passage of scripture, he preaches just as much as when an evangelist gets up and does the same thing. To say no preaching shall be done on such an occasion is to say there shall be no reading of the Scriptures, no explaining Christian duty, no exhortation to earnestness and fidelity in the cause of God. When this is done by any member of the church, it is as much preaching as if done by any other. When one preaches constantly, he may be called a "preacher," because he makes that his regular business; but when another reads, explains, or exhorts to duty, he preaches. It is every Christian's duty to preach as he is able. Preaching in this sense is what is meant by continuing in the apostolic doctrine, or teaching. There is no more sin in the regular preacher reading, explaining, and exhorting when they meet to break bread than for any one else to do it; but it is no more his duty to do it than it is the duty of any other member, save as he is more competent. To have one set of rules for some one called a "preacher" and another for those not called "preachers" is not scriptural.

I believe, and have for thirty years believed and insisted, it is hurtful for one man, be he elder or preacher, to monopolize the time at the meeting for worship with a regular sermon, and have tried to get the churches out of it. But God has laid down no rule for this, because, I take it, no rule would suit all occasions. So he has given us examples and teachings and left us to follow these general principles as we can in the conditions in which we are placed. I sometimes doubt whether regular sermons at set times are best. The apostles did not do this. Nothing definite is laid down in these matters, and each is left to work according to his talent and the conditions that surround him. If Brother Rice or Brother Elmore understood me to hold that there is a specific order laid down to be rigidly followed, excluding a man from talking to his brethren because he preaches regularly, they entirely misunderstood me. Yet I do not believe it is best to have regular set discourses at the hour of worship, for they, sooner or later, choke out all other teaching and displace other parts of worship as the chief design and purpose of the meeting. D. L.

DOING THE WILL OF THE LORD.

The man who expects to enter through the pearly gates into the city of our God must serve the Lord with all humility of mind. Some are disposed to ridicule keeping the commands of God and call it a "do, do religion," but I have never been able to find any promise in the Bible to the man who refuses to obey God.

James assures us that "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Furthermore, he tells us: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." From Genesis to Revelation the Bible is full of doing the will of God. In no age of the world has man been blessed without obedience to God. When God placed Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden, he said to them: "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The command was clear, pointed, and explicit. They disobeyed and suffered the penalty. Noah obeyed God and was blessed, while the wicked antediluvians were destroyed. In obedience, the Jews were blessed, while in transgression they were cursed. While different things have constituted obedience in different ages of the world, yet in every age obedience has been and is required. "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" (Heb. 2: 1-3.)

The wise man obeys God, the unwise man keeps not his commandments. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity. Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell; and great was the fall of it." (Matt. 7: 21-27.)

When the rich young ruler came to Jesus and inquired what good thing he must do to inherit eternal life, Jesus did not say to him: "Salvation is of grace, therefore you can do nothing." The rather he said: "Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honor thy father and mother. And he answered and said unto him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth. Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast; and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, take up the cross, and follow me. And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved; for he had great possessions." (Mark 10: 19-22.) When the Jews on Pentecost were cut to the heart and cried out to know what to do, Peter did not tell them they could do nothing, but to "repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Take your Bible and mark the passages that bear upon doing God's will. You will be surprised to find so many. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." (Gal. 6: 7-9.) Again, Paul admonishes the Philippians: "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." (Phil. 2: 12.) To the Colossians he writes: "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." (Col. 3: 17.) "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." (2 Thess. 1: 7-9.) Peter writes: "And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 1: 5-11.)

With so much clear and unmistakable teaching on this subject, it is very strange that any one would seek to belittle doing the will of the Lord. It will be useless to knock for admission at the pearly gates, if we fail to keep his commandments. If we do the will of God, those pearly gates will swing wide upon their golden hinges when we seek entrance there, and onward and upward we shall go into life everlasting. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.) "Doing the will of the Lord" is not inconsistent with salvation by grace. The grace that brings salvation teaches us to live soberly, righteously, and godly. "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." (Tit. 2: 11-14.) Grace provides salvation on the condition that we obey the truth. Grace provides and gives salvation to godly characters, and not to the ungodly. We cannot be godly without obedience to Christ. God has ordained good works for those to walk in who are saved by grace. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." (Eph. 2: 8-10.) J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Here is a looking-glass, brethren. "For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you. Rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food. For every one that partaketh of milk is without experience of the word of righteousness; for he is a babe. But solid food is for full-grown men, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern good and evil." (Heb. 5: 12-14, R. V.) We exercise our senses by use. Do you use them? There is plenty of scope. In the first place, God intends for you to study his word. You are to learn from it and to understand it. Any one else cannot do it for you. Of course that means work; but work means exercise and exercise means development and growth to us. Look at the poor Hebrew children. They had attained to some growth, then they stopped and dwindled down to babes again. When Paul thought they ought to be teachers, behold, they were found in need of being taught themselves again, and fed on infants' milk! How came they in such a plight? Only one answer can be construed from the passage: They did not have their senses exercised, because they used them not. As the grain given us for bread must be ground and prepared, so must the word of God be studied to yield its nourishing food to the soul. The toil involved in this and the use of our senses exercises us unto clearer perception of truth and discerning of good and evil. Listening to a sermon is all right, but it is not exercising your senses. Running to the commentary for the explanation of every difficult passage is not exercising your senses. Think, work, study, for yourself. Train your eye and your ear to see truth and hear God's voice. The proper scope of sermons and written teachings of men is to lead us to the Bible, to study it more earnestly. If they become substitutes for the study of God's word itself, they become a curse.

There is no hope of a scriptural union among the professed followers of Christ until they arrive at a better knowledge of God's word. If we could see how few there are among the vast religious multitude who have even a tolerable knowledge of the Bible, we should be astonished. How many depend on their church and their preacher, and do not search and study the word? Look around you. Does the average man know anything of the Scriptures? Jesus said to the Sadducees: "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures." For the same reason do people err now. How easy it is for every theorist to lead the masses astray! How is it possible that men should ever arrive at unity of sentiment until they have learned that on which they are to be united? Let the call for union be preceded by a call for faith in and study of the word of God.

Are we followers of Christ? See, then, what is said of him: "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." Christ was a faithful representative of the Father. In his teaching he confined himself strictly to the Father's message. He left out his own wisdom, his own opinions. At all times he acted and spoke by God's commandment, and his own ideas of expediency he did not consult. "For I spake not from myself," he said; "but the Father which sent me, he hath given me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life eternal: the things therefore which I speak, even as the Father hath said unto me, so I speak." (John 12: 49, 50, R. V.) In regard to his deeds, he said: "For I am come down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." So perfect was his obedience in word and deed, so perfect his representation of God, that to believe on him was to believe on the Father and to see him was to see the Father. "And Jesus cried and said, He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that sent me. And he that beholdeth me beholdeth him that sent me." Remember, Christ is our leader. No man can follow in his steps and preach more than the word God gave us, for no one can find in Christ precedent or example of going beyond his word. Like Christ, so we also shall speak and do as we have commandment, and thus show forth in our word and deed that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. But when those who boast of being Christians teach and practice human traditions and theories and inventions, we may well ask: Where are the footprints of Christ along that road?

Remain not folded in thy pleasant joys,
Within the narrow circle of thy walls,
Content if thine are blessed. Cold is thy fire,
If on thy hearthstone only; and thy bread
Bitter, which feeds alone thy selfish blood;
Thy house a prison, if it hold thy world,
Thy heaven a fiction. —F. R. Abbe.

"The man whom the crowd will follow for the next twenty years," says Mr. Moody, "will be the man who keeps the Bible to the front;" and he added, "It is a singular fact that few men, otherwise well-educated, are acquainted with the English Bible. I can secure a hundred men who can teach Latin well where I can find one that can teach the Bible well."

PULLIN.

Brother John Pullin, whose native home was in Middle Tennessee and who had been living among us for about twelve or fifteen years, departed this life at Cottage Grove on August 31, 1900. Brother Pullin was a father in the highest and holiest sense, and seemed to do all he could for the comfort of his family. He was a husband unto his companion, taking her in as a full partner in all of the pleasures of home and the enjoyments of this life; and, most of all, he was a Christian, a child of God, and relied upon God for his promises. He leaves a family of six children—three boys and three girls—and a companion to mourn their loss. He had been suffering for about two years with a cancer, but he endured it patiently until the messenger of death came and bore him to the eternal shore where pain is unknown. May the memory of his life be an incentive to all who knew him to strive to meet him on the happy golden shore.

MORROW.

Sister Harriet Morrow, wife of Randle Morrow, was born on October 1, 1823, and died on July 7, 1900. She lived a widow thirty-seven years, and reared a family of nine children, all of whom were grown before her death and all members of the church of God. Several of them preceded her to the land of rest, but they died in the faith, and, with her, sleep in Jesus. Sister Morrow was in truth a "mother in Israel" all the time I knew her, which was the last fifteen years of her life. She began her religious life at eighteen years of age, attaching herself at that time to the Baptist Church; but later she "learned the way of the Lord more perfectly," gave up her connection with a human organization, and was content to be simply a Christian. During all her religious life she was noted for her zeal, fidelity, and devotion to the Master and his work. She fought the battles of life successfully and fell asleep in Jesus at a ripe old age. Her latter days were a continual blessing to her children, her grandchildren, and all with whom she associated, and the purity and strength of her character are a rich heritage of comfort, encouragement, and example to them. They sadly miss her presence here, but they may follow in her steps and join her in the everlasting city of God. So let them rejoice in her triumph and live in constant remembrance and imitation of her beautiful character.

MORROW.

Brother J. F. Morrow was born at Oakwood, Tenn., on November 22, 1849, and died at Big Rock, Tenn., on November 11, 1899. He was twice married, his wives being sisters, and daughters of Brother and Sister John Buck, deceased, of Oakwood, Tenn. Brother Morrow was baptized on November 14, 1881, and soon took an active part in the work of the congregation at Oakwood. I first met him in 1885, and he was then a leading elder in that work. He was from then till his death one of my truest and best friends, one of the purest and best men I ever knew, and one of the most constant in his devotion to the cause of Christ. He was one of the sweetest singers in Israel, and loved the worship devotedly. After moving to Big Rock, Tenn., where he spent the last years of his life, he called together the saints in that community, led them in the study of God's word and the worship of the Lord's day, and formed a nucleus for the congregation worshipping at that place. Through his efforts meetings were held there and others brought into the fold of Christ. His first wife died in the faith, and he only living child, a daughter, is a faithful Christian woman now. His last wife, a true saint in the Lord, survives him, and she is training his orphaned children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Our brother rests from his labors and his works follow him. He is in the enjoyment of the blessings that are in store for the faithful, for he died in the Lord.

WATSON.

Sister Jane Watson, wife of Brother Joe Watson, died at her home, near Center Ridge, Ark., on September 15, 1900, after a short illness. Sister Watson was born on October 20, 1846, being almost fifty-four years old at the time of her death. Her maiden name was Prince. She was married to Brother Joe Watson on November 12, 1865. During their union there were born to them nine children—four boys and five girls—all of whom are living. Sister Watson obeyed the gospel of Christ in 1868 and lived the life of a devoted Christian almost thirty-three years. Early in their married life Brother Watson, who had just begun to preach the gospel, lost his eyesight from the explosion of a blast in a well. Brother Joe had to have a guide, so Sister Watson went with him over the hills and across the valleys in order that he might meet his appointments to preach the gospel. Though poor in this world's goods, Sister Watson never murmured nor complained. She was always ready to make any sacrifice for the cause of her Master. I have preached at their home time and again, and she was always glad to prepare for the meeting, and enjoyed the promises of God. Her hospitality was without an equal in that respect. I was called upon to make a few remarks at her interment, which I did in the midst of a host of sorrowing brethren and sisters and friends. She had a good report among them without. The bereaved husband and motherless children have our prayers, that God may bless them in their affliction. Paul says we should not sorrow as those that have no hope. Sister Watson died in the full triumph of a living faith, "which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus." MORGAN.

George H. Morgan was born in Jackson County, Tenn., on September 5, 1841. His father, D. M. Morgan, was an able and noted minister of the gospel, who not only taught, but impressed by his own pious walk, the principles of a Christian life upon the heart of his son. Brother Morgan enlisted in the army in 1861, was made adjutant general in General Dibrell's brigade, and served as chief of staff throughout the war. He was a faithful and brave soldier. After the war ended, Brother Morgan entered school for a time, and then studied law with Hon. Thomas H. Butler, being admitted to the bar in 1867. He rose rapidly in his profession and was soon recognized as an able and promising young lawyer. He was elected attorney-general of the Fifth Judicial Circuit of Tennessee in 1870, and served eight years, giving general satisfaction; he also served at various times as special circuit judge and chancellor. He was elected to the State Senate in 1880, and was chosen Speaker of that body. At the time of his death, Brother Morgan occupied the position of census supervisor for the fourth district of Tennessee. He was very prominent in the order of Freemasonry, having filled its highest and most responsible offices; but, better than all the foregoing, he was an honored and beloved member of the church of Christ, and took more interest in the cause of Christ than any man I ever knew who was so prominent in worldly affairs. Brother Morgan was a pure, loving, and lovable Christian gentleman, noted for his charity and kindness and readiness to help in every good work. He will be greatly missed in the church of Christ at Cookeville, Tenn. Brother Morgan was twice married. He was first married to Miss Mary E. Butler, a cultured, Christian lady, who contributed much to his success. She died in 1883, leaving two sons and one daughter, who survive their father. In 1885 he was married to Miss Mary E. Trogden, who was a true helpmate in life's duties and an untiring, devoted, tender nurse in all his long illness. Brother Morgan was afflicted nine months with cancer of the throat. He bore his suffering with great patience and Christian resignation and died on July 28, 1900, in the triumph of a living faith. His funeral was largely attended by his friends and neighbors, who delighted to honor him in life and who deeply deplore and mourn his death. To the family we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

CLARK.

In sadness I chronicle the death of Brother Willie Clark, whose life deserves more than a passing notice; but I will give it only a brief mention for the present. Brother Clark was born in Coffee County, Tenn., on August 30, 1865. Early in life he manifested unusual talents, especially for mechanical and chemical sciences. After having spent several years in college, he went to California in May, 1888. In July following, when he had made up his mind to obey the gospel, he went about sixty miles, walking most, if not all, the way to obey the Lord in baptism, and was baptized by Brother Henry Shadle. Brother Clark taught school in California for some time. At the place where he was teaching school he found that some of his pupils had never even seen a Bible. He bought and gave to each pupil either a Bible or a New Testament, and did what he could to advance the religion of Christ. Later he went to Texas and taught school there. In both States he taught about ten years in all. Promptness and decision characterized him in the discharge of every duty and in pursuit of every purpose of his life. His career as a teacher was marked with success; his pupils loved him and his patrons prized him. He rose from humble positions to the head of large schools, which he managed with wisdom and energy. Brother Clark was married to Miss Millie Chapman, of Grapevine, Tex., on January 22, 1896, and made his home at Brandon, Tex., and his zeal and faithfulness did much to encourage and build up the congregation there. His love for chemistry led him into pharmacy. He had just established a promising drug business in Hill County, Tex., when failing health compelled him to retire from business and go in quest of health farther West. While in the West, his only child, a babe six months old, died. His health still failing, he returned to Tennessee and died of consumption at Winchester, on September 28, 1899. Brother Clark leaves a wife—and a more patient, loving, faithful, and devoted companion than she, I think, could not be found—an aged father, three sisters, three brothers, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. From his youth he was truthful, honest, sincere, and conscientious. He was a faithful friend, an obedient son, a good husband; a sincere, devout, and intelligent Christian; made the word of God alone his rule of faith and practice, and was indeed patient and submissive in all his afflictions. His life was a noble and successful one. Brother Clark has fallen asleep in Jesus, and those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. So let us not sorrow as those who have no hope, but be encouraged by his godly life to press onward in the Christian life until we shall be permitted to meet him in the "realms of the blest." J. K. Brother C. M. Johnson preached at Pleasant Hill on the fifth Lord's day in September and he preached at Home Valley on the first Lord's day in this month.

Brother J. E. Cain has not yet returned from Oklahoma Territory. He gives good reports of his work.

Brother B. F. Rhodes is now in a meeting near Gallatin, Mo. He will soon return to Kansas. He will go to Oklahoma Territory next for a meeting at Hoyle.

W. A. Burcher, of Scottsville, will soon pass through this part.

Brother O. M. Thomason is now in a meeting at Strong City. He writes encouragingly of the work there. He is having some correspondence with the lodge people, growing out of an article he wrote for the Quarterly Christian on "Lodgeism." Be careful, brethren of all sides; plant yourselves on the truth as revealed by the Holy Spirit and you will certainly be on the right side. I think that much good can be accomplished by a scriptural investigation of such things. People ought to desire a knowledge of the truth on all questions and then heed its admonition. Brother Thomason's next meeting will be at Hartford, and will last six weeks. He is now engaged till Christmas.

It has been said: "The loudest and best sermon is the one preached in action." That is in harmony with the thought in the adage that "actions speak louder than words." These things should be an admonition to all to be careful concerning our lives. Men sometimes act imprudently when they mean no harm; but our surroundings must be considered, that we be careful to do or say nothing to cause people to suspect us.

"The mystery remains unsolved why some congregations call a pastor. He is expected to do all the work; but they know better than he how to preach, how he ought to live and rear his children, make calls, and conduct the affairs of the church. They keep their devotions alive by exercising their critical faculty on their pastor, and nourish his spirituality by making him fast as well as pray." (Homiletic Review.) While I do not approve of the "unscriptural pastor" and many of his methods, yet there is a principle involved in the above extract that we might do well to heed. While I have no reason to complain as to many of these things, yet there is much truth in some of them. It appears, sometimes, that we all think we could manage the other man's work better than he can. Many people know more about preaching than the preacher; and of course if they had his children, they could rear them exactly right. They do not look so closely at their own. The people that know (?) most about rearing children are those who never had any. The finest articles on how to rear children are written by old maids. The preachers that give most instruction along that line are the unmarried preachers. Of course the preacher must be severely criticised in all his work or he would not develop properly. Some of them preach too loud, others preach too low; some preach too long, others preach too short; some have squeaky voices; some dress too fine, others do not dress fine enough; some wear their hair too long, others wear it too short; some write their sermons and read them and they are too dry; some write them, memorize and deliver them, and they are too stiff and precise; some use notes, and they should not; others have no notes nor outlines and have no system and scatter too much; some of them cannot preach, they "just lecture;" some of them cannot lecture ("we wish our preacher could"); some of them have wives that hinder their work, others have too much family, and yet others will not do because they have no family; some of them are too homely and plain, others are too dudsish, etc. Now say that a preacher is not subject to criticism. I have not space to mention all the criticisms that I have heard. When it comes to the matter of their sermons, some are too severe, others are too easy; some are too hard on the sects, others are too hard on the brethren; some do not preach enough doctrine, others preach too much; some preach against saloons, ballrooms, and card tables ("of course they should not do that"); some preach against secret societies, others exalt them almost above the church. So they go. Again, it may be true that some people make their preachers fast, but most of them have enough to eat. I think more preachers are injured by overfeeding than by underfeeding; their wives and children may have to do the fasting.

Mailing a Magazine.

Eighteen men, aided by the fastest mailing appliances, are kept on a rush every month getting the Ladies' Home Journal off to its subscribers. The first shipments are started about the middle of each month, and from that time until the twenty-fifth the magazines pour out of the Journal's publishing office by the two-horse-dray load. On the twenty-fifth of each month every Journal has reached its destination, and work in the mailing department slackens for a few days. Some idea of the tremendous size of the Journal's subscription list may be gained when it is known that forty tons of mailing type are required to set up the names of subscribers. There are three-quarters of a ton of each numeral, and it requires twenty thousand galleys to accommodate the subscribers' names in type. This stock would equip six or eight large daily newspapers. As many as sixty-five compositors are employed setting the names of the Journal's subscribers in type—printers enough to set the type for the biggest metropolitan daily newspaper. The expenses for postage paid by the Journal approximate $75,000 a year.—Ladies' Home Journal.

The treatment is free. You have only to write to obtain it.

Its efficacy is explained as simply as possible below.

By the system devised by DR. T. A. SLOCUM, the specialist in pulmonary and kindred diseases, all the requirements of the sick body can be supplied by the FOUR remedies constituting his Special Treatment known as The Slocum System.

Whatever your disease, one or more of these four medicines will be of benefit to you.

According to the exigencies of your case, fully explained in the treatise given free with the free medicine, you may take one, or any two, or three, or all four, in combination.

A cure is certain if the simple directions are carefully followed.

The medicines are especially adapted for those who suffer from weak lungs, coughs, sore throat, catarrh, grip, consumption, and other pulmonary troubles.

Female troubles and the many ailments of delicate children are speedily relieved.

The basis of the entire system is a flesh-building, nerve and tissue-renewing food.

Every invalid and sick person needs strength. This food gives it.

Many people get the complete system for the sake of the Food, which they themselves need, and give away the other three preparations to their friends.

The second article is a Tonic. It is good for weak, thin, dyspeptic, nervous people—for those who have no appetite, who need bracing up.

Thousands take only the Food and the Tonic.

The third preparation is a medicinal healing Jelly, in a patent collapsible tube.

It cures catarrh. It heals all irritation of the nose, throat, and mucous membrane. It gives immediate relief. It is also a dainty application for sore lips, sunburn, rough skin, etc.

Perhaps a million people need this jelly without any of the other articles.

The fourth article is an Expectorant and Cough Cure—the only one that can positively be relied upon. Contains no dangerous drugs, and is absolutely safe for children. Goes to the very root of the trouble, and not merely alleviates, but cures.

The four together form a panoply of strength against disease in whatever shape it may attack you.

THE FREE OFFER.

To obtain these four FREE invaluable preparations, illustrated above, all you have to do is to write, mentioning the Gospel Advocate, in which you read this article, to DR. T. A. The commission left for Bartlesville, I. T., to enroll the Cherokees there.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has just given the Pressed Steel Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., an order for six thousand steel cars, to cost about six million nine hundred thousand dollars. This is said to be the largest order ever given for steel cars. The Department of Agriculture of the State of Texas estimates that the loss of cotton by reason of the Galveston storm is less than was at first expected. It will aggregate about seventy-five thousand bales of growing cotton, in addition to the fifty thousand bales at Galveston and other places awaiting shipment. The damage of the rice crop is about 30 per cent. Sugar cane is badly blown down, but much of it will recover.

It has long been known that there were iron ore deposits east of Biwabik, in the Mesaba Range, in Minnesota, but owing to their apparent small size and the large deposits discovered to the west, they have been neglected, and little prospecting has been done in this region of late years. The Minnesota correspondent of the Engineering and Mining Journal now reports the discovery in this region of an ore body a mile long and a half mile wide under about fifty feet of surface.

According to the reports from St. Pierre, Newfoundland, seventeen fishing vessels that were operating on the Grand Banks during the gale of September 12, 1900, are still missing, with crews aggregating over two hundred men. A number of other vessels have reported a loss of from one to seven men each. The fatality list probably exceeds three hundred. Serious disaster has visited a number of Newfoundland fishing harbors, Burin, on the west side of Placentia Bay, alone losing thirty-five men.

A violent tornado in the vicinity of Biwabik, Minn., cut a pathway one hundred and fifty feet in width through the northwestern corner of the town, completely wrecking the buildings struck. The shaft houses and buildings of three mines which stood in the path of the storm were reduced to kindling wood. The property loss is estimated at from seventy-five thousand dollars to one hundred thousand dollars, and the known fatalities number nine, with a score or more of injured, some severely.

One Man Saved

From a wreck will attract the world's attention to the life-saver. Yet let the life-saving be continued every day, and very soon it attracts no public attention. If the scene of the saving one life by that life-saving remedy, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, could be made to stand out alone, like a picture on a screen, it would attract the notice of the whole nation. By a curious contradiction the very frequency with which the "Discovery" saves life, robs the fact of general interest. For obstinate coughs, bronchitis, weak lungs, and other diseases of the respiratory organs, "Golden Medical Discovery" is the one medicine which offers certain help, and almost certain cure. It contains neither alcohol nor narcotics.

"Only for Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I think I would be in my grave to-day," writes Mr. Moses Miles, of Hilliard, Uinta Co., Wyoming. "I had asthma so bad I could not sleep and was compelled to give up work. It affected my lungs so that I coughed all the time, both day and night. My friends all thought I had consumption. My wife insisted on my trying 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I have taken four bottles and am now a well man, weighing 185 pounds—thanks to Dr. Pierce."

lief that the price will advance to at least eighteen dollars per ton within the next few weeks. In South Carolina at the beginning of the season the market price of seed was twelve dollars per ton. Later the quotation went to seventeen dollars per ton. Since then the price has passed the twenty-dollar quotation.

A complete list of Protestant missionaries known to have been killed and those unaccounted for from the beginning of the Boxer movement to September 5, 1900, has been received by the American Bible Society from Dr. John R. Hykes, its agent in Shanghai. The list comprises one hundred and seventy-eight people. Of these there are sixty-six men, seventy-three women (forty-one married and thirty-two single), and thirty-nine children. In the above there are twenty-five American men, twenty-four women (sixteen married and eight single), and twenty children; total Americans, sixty-nine.

Seven thousand five hundred pounds of dynamite in the powder magazine at the Spruce Mine, in Minnesota blew up on October 7, 1900. A hole one hundred feet square and twenty-five feet deep marks the spot where the magazine stood. The force of the explosion was so great that every window and mirror in Eveleth was broken. The loss in the city is estimated at thirty thousand dollars. At least two hundred people were hurt more or less from being thrown down by the shock or hit by shattered glass. The explosion was plainly felt at Biwabik, twelve miles distant.

Miss Clara Barton, president of the National Red Cross Society, has issued a statement to the manufacturers and business men of the country, in which she appeals to them for aid in the way of material to be used in the building of homes for those who lost their all in the recent storm at Galveston, Tex. The number of this homeless class is estimated at eight thousand or more. Winter is less than two months away. The weather is always mild at Galveston, still snow and ice are known there. If tents would protect, which they would not, the sea sand and the quicksand would not hold them down; the first norther would leave their occupants as unsheltered as before, and hardships, colds, pneumonia, and consumption would finish what the storm has left.

The greatest quantity of iron ore mined in any country in one year up to 1899 was nineteen million four hundred thousand long tons, the output of the United States in 1898. This unprecedented figure, however, has been utterly eclipsed by the record for last year, recently made up and announced by the Geological Survey. In 1899, according to that trustworthy authority, our production of iron ore reached the stupendous total of 24,683,173 long tons—an increase of 27 per cent over the record mark of the previous year. About half the States of the Union helped to swell the total. Michigan naturally heads the list, with a production of nine million tons; while Minnesota makes a fine showing, with a little more than eight million tons. Alabama, with an output of slightly over one million tons, stands a greatly disproportionate third. Twenty-one other States contribute smaller quotas to the aggregate production. The total value at the mines of the ore thus produced was thirty-five million dollars, or $1.42 per long ton. The average value in 1898 was $1.14 per long ton.

The Dallas News calls attention to the part of the railroad corporations in the relief work of Galveston. That they have done nobly all citizens of Texas must gratefully acknowledge. The railroads entering Galveston were sufferers to the extent of more than a million dollars, yet each of them contributed liberally in cash for the relief of the destitute people. In addition to giving free transportation, train load after train load of supplies was hauled free of cost. Not only the railroads entering Galveston, but all the railroads of the State, joined in this generous policy of hauling destitute people from Galveston to any point on their lines and in tendering them the use of their facilities for hauling supplies to Galveston free of charge. Not only the Texas railways, but all the great railway systems of the country, were likewise generous and gave the tender of their facilities to all who desired to contribute to the relief of the storm sufferers. The express companies and telegraph and telephone companies were likewise quick to donate their facilities and services without stint to the cause of the distressed.

Church News.

ARKANSAS.

Seelig, October 8.—I will report two meetings. One of them was held at the Vineyard church of Christ, in Phillips County, resulting in fourteen additions, thirteen of whom were baptized and one took membership. The other meeting was held at Oak Forest, in Lee County, a place where the gospel had never before been preached. Six persons were baptized. Brother T. F. Patterson did the preaching at both of the above places, and it was well done.

A. J. ROBINSON.

INDIANA.

Cloverdale, October 8.—In June and July, last, I made a visit to Allensville and Guthrie, Ky., with a view of preaching the word. My visit was a very pleasant one among the brethren and sisters at those places. I found many at both places who are trying to be worthy Christians. I hope to make them another visit, and also other places in the South. I have visited many points since then, and found some churches doing well, others doing nothing. I am now in a good meeting in Boone County, this State, and expect to continue some two or three weeks. This is the only church of Christ in this county that has not adopted the use of the organ in public worship. It has some of the faithful who will protest against the use of things that disturb the peace of the church to the bitter end of the question. There are many good things in the Gospel Advocate; I prize it very highly. I found one subscriber in this neighborhood and two more have subscribed since I came here. I think such papers do some good. It is my decided conviction that papers which make hobbies of such theories as "the order of worship," rebaptism, the attitude of prayer, monthly preaching, etc., are doing more than all other things combined to disturb the equilibrium of the churches. Some of the papers and preachers in this country are doing much mischief at hobby riding. I see that it is migrating, like Abraham, toward the South. Let me exhort the brethren of the Gospel Advocate to "keep themselves from" these hobbies.

W. J. BROWN.

KENTUCKY.

Weir, October 8.—My second year's labor with the congregation at Cherry Grove, in Muhlenberg County, ended on the first Lord's day in this month. It rained almost continually through the day and we had no meeting at all. I do not feel that the body has been elevated during my labors as it should have been, and, being conscious of my own weakness, I am willing to accept my part of the blame. I have not heard of any arrangement for work at this place during the coming year. Brother Tinsley and I had arranged to begin a meeting at Bivinsville, in Todd County, on the night of the first Lord's day in this month, but, owing to the weather, neither of us got there till the following Monday evening. The meeting started off with good interest, but a light attendance. It is too soon to predict the results, but we are earnestly laboring and praying that it may be a success.

W. H. HOSKINSON.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Aquone, October 8.—I have been sounding out the old Jerusalem gospel as best I could in this part of the Lord's vineyard. The visible results were three confessions and baptisms. One young lady, who had been reared by Christian parents, came a distance of thirty miles to obey from the heart that form of doctrine delivered by the apostles, to be made free from sin and become a servant of righteousness. To the Lord be all the praise.

D. F. HOWARD.

TENNESSEE.

Hillsboro, October 7.—I desire to report a meeting held at Bean's Creek, near this place, by William Tracey, of Woodbury, which was a grand and glorious success, resulting in twenty-five additions to the one body. I have no language at my command to express the gratitude of my heart to God for giving us such a servant as Brother Tracey, who shuns not to declare the whole counsel of God. May he ever continue to be true and faithful to God's word.

T. B. GOOD.

Lasea, October 11.—Brother J. E. B. Ridley, of Wilkerson, began preaching at this place on the fifth Sunday in September and delivered fourteen discourses, closing on the first Lord's day in October. It was Brother Ridley's third meeting at this place and we enjoyed having him with us very much. It is enough to say that he "preaches the word." Eight persons were baptized "for the remission of sins" and eight wanderers confessed their wrongs and started anew in the Christian race. Taking it all in all, this was perhaps the best meeting Lasea has had for years.

W. DERRYBERRY.

Bellbuckle, October 11.—I will now give a report of my two last meetings. I began preaching at Deason on the second Lord's day in September and continued over the third Lord's day in September. The immediate results were eight additions to the one body. I removed my tent from Deason to Edgefield Junction, where I began preaching on the fourth Lord's day in September and continued over the following Lord's day, resulting in eighteen additions to the one body. My earnest desire and prayer to God for them is that they may be faithful unto death. I will begin a meeting at Beech Grove, near Bellbuckle, next Lord's day, if the Lord wills.

E. L. CAMBRON.

Bexar, October 9.—Our protracted meeting at Curve commenced on the first Lord's day in September and continued until the second Lord's day in September, with two services a day. Brother A. I. Johnson did the preaching. He preached nothing but the truth from start to finish, and it had its effect. The interest grew all through the meeting, the crowds increased, and the attention and order were fine. Brother Johnson's subjects were well selected and forcibly impressed. There were five additions to the one body, the church was greatly revived, the seed was sown, and I hope a rich harvest will soon be gathered to the Master. May the Lord bless and prosper such teaching, is my prayer.

R. W. SUTTON.

Calhoun, October 5.—Brother P. H. Hooten commenced a series of meetings for the church of Christ at this place on the fourth Lord's day in September and closed on Thursday night, October 4, 1900, with twenty-one additions to the family of the Lord—fourteen confessions and baptisms, two reclaimed, and five from the Baptists and Methodists that had been baptized. During the meeting there was a good deal of prejudice allayed and men and women made to see the gospel of Christ as they never saw it before. Bread was cast upon the waters that I trust will be gathered not many days hence. To God be all the praise. Brother Hooten is a good, live, gospel preacher. Brethren, pray for us, that God may be glorified and that his kingdom may grow and prosper until it shall reach to the ends of the earth.

J. D. LYLE.

Tom's Creek, October 9.—On Saturday night before the fifth Lord's day in September I began a short meeting at Lobelville, in Perry County, preaching only at night after Sunday, and continuing until the following Thursday night. All things considered, it being a very busy time and there being opposition from other sources, we had good audiences, good attendance, and fine order; and last, but not least, a good meeting, the results of which were: Five brave young ladies made the good confession and were baptized into Christ and two brethren that had wandered off came back to the fold. The brethren have no house of worship at Tom's Creek, but I have promised to return soon and start them to keeping house for the Lord in the schoolhouse at that place. I hope much good was done during the meeting by removing prejudice, seed sowing, and reviving the brethren. John said: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

J. H. HILL.

Milan, October 10.—I held a meeting with the church of Christ at Mars' Hill, in McNairy County, beginning on the third Sunday in September and continuing over the following Sunday. The weather was unfavorable—raining a great deal—yet we had good audiences and much interest was manifested in the preaching. There were five additions by confession and baptism and the church was greatly built up and strengthened. I established and set this church in order just ten years ago. They now number, perhaps, over one hundred members, and they are true and loyal to the gospel of Christ. They have been imposed on by some of the society brethren and have been led to give money to the State society work; but they will not do so any more unless they are deceived into it, as they were last year by J. J. Castleberry, who held a meeting for them and reported it as a "State Board" meeting over their protest. Brother Castleberry is a society preacher, but they did not know it when he held their meeting.

E. C. L. DENTON.

Walkerville, October 9.—Brother James K. Hill began a tent meeting at Noah on September 15, 1900, and closed on September 26, 1900, with two additions and others almost persuaded. Good audiences of attentive listeners greeted him at almost every service, and although the number of additions was small, I think the meeting was a success in every way, as it is a comparatively new field for sowing the seed of the kingdom. So long as the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation, just so long will such preaching as Brother Hill did do good in any community, and it is certainly a treat to all Bible-loving Christians to hear him "preach the word," without addition to or subtraction from God's eternal truth. I am sure Brother Hill's success as a preacher is attributable to his strict adherence to the word of God. How any man who claims to be a gospel preacher can leave that inexhaustible fountain of truth, life, light, knowledge, and wisdom to relate what he has seen, heard, read, and done is beyond my comprehension.

MITTIE GIBSON.

TEXAS.

Waco, October 7.—I am in a meeting at this place. Things look a little gloomy, but we hope for much good to be the result. This is the home of Brother A. D. Rogers; it was through him that I came here.

RHEUMATISM A BLOOD DISEASE.

How a Reader of the Gospel Advocate Was Cured.

Rheumatism is a deep-seated blood disease, and to cure to stay cured, Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. B.) should be used. B. B. B. drains from the blood the specific poison that causes the swellings, aches, and pains, and in this way a real cure is made, so that the symptoms will not return. George W. Leonard, of Atlanta, Ga., a reader of the Gospel Advocate, writes that he suffered untold agonies from rheumatism and scrofula up to ten years ago. He had the most excruciating pains in bones and limbs; his hands would puff up and swell, and his kneecaps would get so stiff he could hardly bend them. He had tried almost everything, but grew worse. Finally, he took B. B. B., and eight bottles entirely cured him, so that he has been perfectly well for the past ten years.

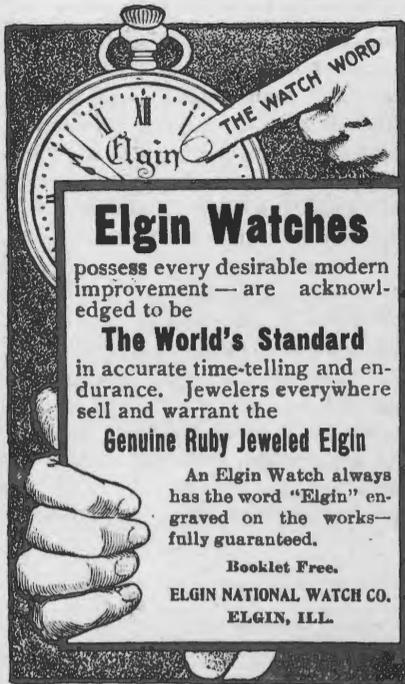

Jacob F. Sponcer, of Newnan, Ga., suffered two years with rheumatism, affecting both shoulders to such an extent that he could not get on his coat. He used six bottles of Blood Balm, which effected an entire cure.

John M. Taylor, of Tyler, Tex., had been subject to inflammatory attacks of rheumatism since he was ten years of age, yet he was permanently cured (with no trace of the disease left) by eight bottles of Botanic Blood Balm.

Blood Balm will cure the worst, deep-seated, obstinate case. Do not get discouraged, but try B. B. B. At drug stores, $1. Trial treatment sent free and prepaid by addressing BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Describe your trouble, and free, confidential, medical advice will be given. Do not hesitate to write us, as our object is to cure you.

Debate at Sidney, Texas.

This debate began on September 2, 1900, and continued four days—six hours each day. It was conducted by Joe S. Warlick, who represented the church of Christ, and F. L. Dupont, who represented the Missionary Baptists.

The first day was devoted to that impractical question of the church's establishment on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of Christ. Brother Warlick's arguments were conclusive that certain elements necessary to the complete establishment of the church were present on the day of Pentecost for the first time. Elder Dupont made as strong an effort as can be made to show that the church, or kingdom, was in existence prior to the day of Pentecost; and so it was in its germinal state. Why not let a man go back of Pentecost to any day he pleases for the establishment of the church of Christ, and, when he claims to have found it, show him that it is no akin to his modern denomination, be it Methodist, Baptist, or what not? John the Baptist preached baptism for the remission of sins as strongly as did the apostles of Christ under the last commission. This will not do for the Baptist Church. Every essential feature of the Baptist Church is lacking in anything that might be claimed as the church of Christ prior to the day of Pentecost.

The second day was devoted to the question of the direct or immediate operation of the Holy Spirit in conviction and conversion. The writer thinks he is capable of forming an unbiased judgment and of doing justice to both the parties to the discussion; therefore, it is in all candor that I say that Elder Dupont was as completely routed on this subject as a man ever was on any subject. Brother Warlick's first speech on the negative was as fine as any I ever heard fall from the lips of man.

On the third day the proposition of baptism for, or in order to, the remission of past or alien sins was discussed, Brother Warlick affirming. It seemed that Brother Warlick rather played at his work on this question. He stated in the outset that his brethren had preached so often on that subject at Sidney and that the arguments commonly used to substantiate his proposition had been gone over so often that he intended to take a new course and present such arguments as were not generally used to prove baptism in order to the remission of sins.

His opponent at once made a point on him which had much weight with his Baptist brethren. He accused him of being afraid to bring up the commonly-used arguments while there was an opponent to investigate those arguments with him. Finally, before the close of the day, Brother Warlick took two wrong positions—according to the writer's understanding—on some of Paul's statements in Rom. 6, and he allowed his opponent to pommel him considerably.

On the fourth day Dupont affirmed the impossibility of apostasy. Brother Warlick is a specialist on this subject. Every scripture that Dupont used was turned against him and he was completely foiled.

The debate was attended by a large concourse of people, though the disciples far outnumbered the Baptists, especially toward the close. The speakers behaved well toward each other. This was the fourth time they have met in debate. They are jolly good friends and engaged in many pleasantries, both during the debate and during the hours of intermission.

In appearance and manner, the two men are the antipodes of each other. Brother Warlick is small and wiry, and is a natural orator, having a regular Hepry Clay mouth. His memory is superior to that of any other man I ever met. During the whole twenty-four hours of discussion he took not a single note and opened his Bible to read his proof text but once. He has held something over seventy debates, and is certainly the leading debater in the great State of Texas. Elder Dupont is portly and dignified, is by no means an orator, but has a shrewd, analytical mind, and makes as good defense of the Baptist cause as is possible. The Baptists regard him as their strongest representative in the State. He seems to be the very impersonation of candor and honesty.

IT IS quite generally believed, particularly by large consumers and practical painters, that Pure White Lead is the best paint. It is because of this belief that manufacturers of the so-called White Leads, mixtures of Whiting, Barytes and Zinc, brand them "White Lead," "Pure White Lead," etc., etc. You can avoid these by making sure that the brand is right.

Christian Science Arraigned.

As a whole, "Science and Health" is a remarkable book in vigor of expression and exceptional originality of design, however doubtful its success in execution.

Especially can the train of mind which must have induced its conception be appreciated by one who has, with eyes long bent over the distresses of animate creation and ears attentive to their cries, yet endeavored to hold with trembling fingers of faith to the garment's hem of a Father loving, perfect, and omnipotent. The usual outcome of such mental conditions is either agnosticism or childlike—perhaps blind—faith, while Mrs. Eddy seems to have evolved a third, and certainly in some respects a most beautiful, result, if only for its play of imagination, and truly the one most desirable, if practicable and true.

It is among her very postulates that Mrs. Eddy lays the first stumbling-block over which the unwary must trip again and again throughout the pages. It is: "God is all; therefore evil either is of God or is not at all." This we must dispute, while gladly acceding that God is, in truth, all God; but we conceive of evil as the machination of creation, permitted for some wise—to us unknowable—cause.

Again, speaking under mortal limitations, our understanding only conceives of an infinite God, working through infinite, pure space, creating through God power that which henceforth becomes exterior to him, and thus individualizing creation. Thus without dreaming of any abridgment to creative power, we can imagine a divine pleasure in the arrangement and complication of primary objects, so as to produce, for instance, our physical, mental, and moral system.

Is there not, then, a distinction between the picture and its producer, the thought and its author? To us they seem at birth to become exterior to their maker; since, admitting the individualism of man as the reflection of God, we cannot think of light producing a reflection unless an exterior object serve as reflector.

Again, if God knows not what evil is and man has no other source of consciousness or autonomic power, how account for primeval man attaining to the idea of evil? Wherein was the mission with which the Father invested Jesus? Was not the triumph of Christ intended to be over sin and pain, or the flesh and the devil? A triumph over nonentities is inconceivable. The real entity of sin, pain, and matter once more finds demonstration in the very nouns themselves, based on a mental picture with either a concrete or abstract basis to symbolize as an object of thought.

A few other points, not satisfactorily provided for by Mrs. Eddy, suggest themselves here. If in this phase of existence man is not an inhabitant of the flesh, why do we not sometimes find him elsewhere individualized? If physical laws are the offspring of human belief, how shall we reconcile this with the accepted story of the creation which launches primal man into the cradle of the universe, sustained by physical laws at whose discovery the weight of human intelligence has worked for thousands of years, and, in many cases, unavailingly? Could it be that man, the author and draughtsman, has so irretrievably lost his plans for existing constructions that he has been hunting for some of them in vain throughout the ages? If human pain and sickness are the result of our own beliefs and expectations, how are regulated the whole series of the unexpected, humanly categorized as "accidents?" If drugs are efficacious only through mortal mind, whence their discovery and adaptation? If matter is capable of division by men into fragments separately invisible to mortal eye, yet the aggregated particles do not likewise disappear, but, the rather, remain visible as an eternal argument against the indestructibility of matter and another specific instance of that most beautiful of physical laws—the conservation of energy. Now, in all these we cannot see whence come primitive sensation, idea, and human belief any more than we can discover the origin of the father of lies nor why, in "Science and Health," man himself is affirmed as in a progression from mortal mind. Then shall we accept wholly any religious system, however ingenious and well meaning, which is in part so important, contradictory to our understanding of God's word and the natural and plain interpretation of its facts? Lastly, is there a justifiable reason for the treatment of so vital a subject in such erudite and mystical language that many parts of the book are to the average reader absolutely dark, appreciable only by a cultured, favored few?

We rejoice that the Bible stands as an example of democratic English, clear and easy of digestion still, as when from the first great translator, inspired with the broadest love for his race and ever mindful of the true importance of even a poor plowboy

Cleared His Name.

"Henry Peyton, who is in custody awaiting requisition papers to be taken to Sioux City, Ia., to stand trial for alleged murder, this afternoon confessed to Captain Reynolds, at the Four Courts, that it was he who robbed the safe in a mercantile establishment at Clydesdale, Miss. This confession will clear the name of George Simmons, a young man of Clydesdale, who has been accused of the crime and who was compelled to leave the home of his childhood because of the shame that had come to his family through his supposed felony." (St. Louis Dispatch, September 14, to Nashville American.)

And still Christians (?) will condemn, cast off, and cast down the innocent without even giving them a chance to explain. The vilest libertine in the land can blight the reputation, blast the hopes, and break the heart of as pure and sweet and true a woman as lives, because both saints (?) and sinners are always ready to take up a reproach against the innocent, as well as the guilty. Such spirit is simply satanic. No court condemns even a heartless murderer till he has been accorded an impartial trial, with the benefit of all doubt in the case. Only mobs, organized and unorganized, condemn without a hearing. Dost thou belong to such unorganized, but murderous, mob? If so, canst thou hope to be saved? "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor." (Ps. 15: 1-3.) All over this land are sad hearts and shadowed homes that would be happy and bright but for the blighting influence of the tongue of slander and the satanic spirit that is always ready to take up a reproach. These things ought not so to be.

The most humble man is the one who is the most unselfish and who does the most to bless others.

Men who are going to heaven have no time for dallying with temptation.

"But we ought all to understand that every church is responsible to Jesus Christ, and that if it fails to do anything at all for foreign missions, he will hold it responsible; if it acts with bad judgment in selecting its method of doing work, he will hold it responsible. To its own Master every church standeth or falleth." (Baptist News.)

True! And what is true of the individual church is true of the individual member of the same church. The church can do nothing except through its members, personally. It has no money except what is contributed by its members. It can give nothing for missions unless its members put the money into its treasury. Nobody can compel a church to give money for missions, and as truly no one can compel a member of a church to give money for missions; neither can a church compel a member to put his contribution for missions into its treasury, to be transmitted by its treasurer or a committee. If the church acts with bad judgment in the appropriation of funds, the Master will hold it responsible; and just so will he hold the individual member responsible. No Christian has a right to hide behind the action or nonaction of his church.—Selected.

A few years ago a house was built at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and the earth which was dug out of the foundations was thrown over a piece of ground in front intended for a garden. The following spring a number of caper plants came up. They were not common in that part of the country, and their appearance excited great surprise. Upon inquiry it was found that years before that ground had been a public garden; it therefore appeared certain that those seeds had remained dormant while buried deep in the earth, and had sprung to life as soon as they were brought within the influence of heat and light. How like our hearts! What seeds of evil may lie dormant in them!—Spurgeon.

Brother Walling's Reply.

Brother Walling, I agree with you that a man enters into the kingdom of Christ by a birth (John 3: 2), and that no unclean person can enter the church, and that the cleansing must take place before the birth, and there is a difference between the time of cleansing and the birth. The above is my contention, and has been all the while. I have never contended for anything else and I never will, so long as I accept the Bible as God's revealed will to man. But I endeavor to keep the clean man and the unclean man separate. I also teach, as you cannot help but see by reading carefully what I have said, that the Spirit will not take up his abode in an impure heart. You say, and I agree, that "no unclean, unsaved man can be built into God's building." Now, I ask you not to forget that a brick must be a brick before worked into a wall. Then you say: "Salvation from past sins, cleansing, pardoning, and remission of sins all take place before one can enter God's kingdom. What do you say to this, Brother Cawthon?" To this I demur and put Brother Walling and the Book on the witness stand. Brother Walling, please state to the Gospel Advocate readers the state of a man before baptism. "I understand that the sinner is separated from an unholy love or impure motives by faith." What do you say, Bible? "God . . . purifying their hearts by faith." (Acts 15: 8, 9.) What do you think repentance does for a man, Brother Walling? "It separates a man from unholy acts and thoughts." What does the Bible say? (Isa. 1: 16; 55: 7; James 4: 8-10.) Brother Walling, what does confession do for a man? "He is separated from the skeptical world by a confession," or renounces his allegiance to Satan and pledges allegiance to Christ. Bible, what do you say? (Matt. 10: 32; 16: 15-18; Acts 8: 37; Rom. 10: 9, 10.) I notice that the two witnesses are agreed thus far. Brother Walling, is the above man clean? "No, sir." Why? "Because he has not been relieved of his past sins." Brother Walling, can a man's heart be made more than pure? "No, sir." Can a man do more than cleanse his words, deeds, and thoughts? "No, sir." Can a man be more than separated from a skeptical world? "No, sir."

Now, Brother Walling, the foregoing man looks to me just like a clean individual, one exactly suited to be born of God. (John 1: 11-13.) Having received the authority from Christ by faith, repentance, and confession, he can go forth and be born of God. (John 3: 16; Mark 16: 15, 16; Luke 24: 46, 47; Acts 2: 38; Matt. 10: 32; Acts 8: 37; Rom. 10: 9, 10.) Now, this man must come in contact with the pardoning power, that elemency be extended. Where is the pardoning power? Paul says that it is in Christ, or the kingdom of Christ. (2 Cor. 5: 17-20; Eph. 1: 3; Rom. 3: 23, 24.) Paul says that redemption from the sins mentioned in Rom. 3: 23 is in Christ, not out of Christ. The authority of Christ is in his kingdom, not out of it. He redeems, saves, justifies, reconciles, and remits (the penalty due past sins) in, and not out of, his kingdom. (Rom. 3: 24, 25; 2 Cor. 5: 18; Eph. 1: 3; 2: 16.) Reconciled in Christ, not out of it (Col. 1: 19-22), all spiritual blessings are in Christ; hence, as the remission of sins past is a spiritual blessing, it is only reached in Christ, in the church, or kingdom of Christ, where reconciliation of every character is found; there is no reconciliation on the outside. Your trouble, my brother, is that you cleanse your man from a Bible standpoint and wallow him again in the mud from a traditional standpoint. Had we not better leave him where God leaves him and accept him as God does, with a pure heart, holy thoughts, words, and deeds, separated from an allegiance to Satan, with the promise that he will submit to Christ as his King, and then say with Paul that he is a servant of God (Rom. 6: 16; 1 Thess. 1: 9), and then as a servant of God baptize him into Christ, where he can be reconciled unto God—justified, redeemed, and saved from the penalty due his past sins? His past sins, my dear brother, are not held against him from the fact that in his repentance he has done all that he could to make reparation. So you see he comes before God in the kingdom of Christ with his faith, repentance, and confession. In order to do this he must go through the door by which admittance into the kingdom is had. (John 10: 1, 7; 1 Cor. 12: 13; Rom. 6: 3; Gal. 3: 27.) Now, in consequence of his faith, repentance, confession, and baptism, he is in the presence of God, who extends clemency and justifies him as a Father—all in Christ.

You say that I baptize a dead man. Certainly, my brother, I would not dare to claim him free from the cause of his death until he takes the medicine that God has prescribed to remove the cause of his death. The cause of his spiritual death is the trespass and sin previous to his turning to God (Eph. 2: 1, 5), and God's prescription is faith, repentance, confession, and baptism. It devolves upon you, my dear brother, to show how you make a dead man alive without first removing the cause of his death. I have shown, time and again, how the cause of his death is removed and how God restored him to spiritual life, and it is all Bible, which you can see by giving my previous articles a careful reading. God made the garden of Eden and arranged all of its grandeur and beauty, and he made it for Adam. Then he created Adam a perfect man as to model or anatomy, but he was lifeless and could not enter or enjoy the garden of Eden; but when God breathed the breath of life into his nostrils, the cause of his death was removed and he became a living man. So a man who is dead in trespass and sin is born of God into the kingdom of Christ. God removes the cause of his death by justifying, or remitting, his sin and trespass (Rom. 3: 22-25; Acts 2: 38) and gives him the Spirit that quickens—makes him alive (2 Cor. 3: 6; John 3: 5; 1 Pet. 3: 18; Rom. 8: 2, 9, 10; 6: 5-11; Gal. 4: 6)—all in Christ.

In conclusion, if at any time mis-stated you, I ask pardon and hope that you will forgive me, as I assure you I did not so intend. I pray that we can all turn loose preconceived notions and the traditions of the fathers and see the truth as it is in Christ and all speak the same things and do as God has directed—baptize servant into Christ, that he may be reconciled unto God in Christ and be reconciled unto God in Christ. There is no reconciliation, justification, redemption, or remission of sins out of Christ; hence, none of these promises are had in a burial. Lose sight of the man who has purified his heart—made his thoughts, words, and deeds holy; changed his allegiance from Satan to Christ—being a sinner; but see him as he is, a servant of God, seeking reconciliation in Christ (Eph. 2: 16; 2 Cor. 5: 18-20), and your trouble, like the fog of Babylon, will be dispersed by the brilliant light of the truth. There are but the three means by which an accused person can be justified—law, testimony, and clemency. In the case of our man, he has the law, testimony, and clemency all on his side. What will you do?

S. I. S. CAWTHON.

A Tragedy of the Civil War.

Recalling the historic incident clustering about South Carolina's Executive Mansion, Mrs. Thaddeus Horton writes, in the October Ladies' Home Journal, of the shocking tragedy that occurred there toward the close of the war. This was the death of the daughter of Governor Pickens immediately after her marriage to Lieutenant Le Rochelle.

On the afternoon preceding the marriage the Northern Army began shelling Columbia, but preparations for the wedding continued. Finally, the guests were all assembled, and the clergyman was proceeding with the solemn ceremony, and had just joined the right hands of the happy pair, when, suddenly, there was an awful crash, and a ball from the enemy's cannon penetrated the mansion and burst in the middle of the marriage chamber, scattering its death-dealing missiles in every direction. There were screams and a heartrending groan; mirrors crashed, the house shook, women fainted, and walls rocked to and fro.

When the first confusion was over, it was discovered that in all the crowd only one person was injured, and that was the bride herself. She lay partly on the floor and partly in her lover's arms, crushed and bleeding, pale, but very beautiful, her bridal gown drenched with warm blood, and a great cut in her breast. Laying her on a lounge, the frantic bridegroom besought her by every term of tenderness and endearment to allow the ceremony to proceed, to which she weakly gave consent, and, lying like a crushed flower, no less white than the camellias of her bridal bouquet, her breath coming in short gasps, and the blood flowing from this great, angry wound, she murmured 'Yes' to the clergyman, and received her husband's first kiss. A moment more and all was over.

"She was laid to rest under the magnolias, and the heartbroken bridegroom, reckless with despair, returned to his regiment."

God cannot use the idle man.

What Determination Did.

When young Sturtevant Jackson, one of the most awkward, ungainly, and, seemingly, unpromising youths that the South has produced, heard of a vacancy at West Point, he immediately went to Washington, determined to get the appointment, and he got it.

When he reached West Point, the other boys laughed at him, but one of them, with more penetration than his companions, said: "That fellow looks like he's come to stay." He did stay.

He worked hard, economized, and saved enough from his cadet's pay, after covering all expenses, to buy his sister a silk dress.

The world knows what battles he fought, what victories he won, in the last years of his life.

It was determination that gave to history this splendid name.—October Success.

W. L. Taylor, who makes the finest pictures that appear in the Ladies' Home Journal, leads the ideal life that every artist dreams of. He neither seeks nor accepts work from any one. He has an agreed income from the Philadelphia magazine, and as this is a generous amount, he has nothing in the way of finances to worry him. He lives in an artistic home at Wellesley, Mass., in the top story of which he has his studio. His work is carefully laid out for him by his editor for an entire year in advance, and he works at it only when he feels at his best. Otherwise, he paddles in his canoe or walks. He has no time imposed upon him when his work shall be turned in. He generally uses up the best of two months to paint a single picture. Few artists have really a more ideal life.—Ladies' Home Journal.

One day the master of Lukman, an Eastern fabulist, said to him: "Go into such a field and sow barley." Lukman sowed oats instead. At the time of harvest his master went to the place, and, seeing the oats, asked him: "Did I not tell you to sow barley here? Why, then, have you sown oats?" He answered: "I sowed oats in the hope that barley would grow up." His master said: "What foolish idea is this? Have you ever heard of the like?" Lukman replied: "You yourself are constantly sowing in the field of the world the seeds of evil, and yet expect to reap in the resurrection day the fruits of virtue; therefore I also thought I might get barley by sowing oats." The master was abashed at the reply and set Lukman free.—Selected.

ALL GOOD MACHINES HAVE POINTS OUR CLIPPER HAS THESE

A guarantee that is a guarantee, for FIVE YEARS. It is thoroughly practical and embodies in its make-up all of the necessary and practical features of a first-class, high-grade machine, but which at the same time is not finished so elaborately or furnished with such an expensive equipment; the latter items adding greatly to the cost, but not to the utility of the machine for practical purposes. In its manufacture, the sewing qualities have not been sacrificed in the least.

It makes what is known as the double lock stitch, by using two threads, which are locked together in the center of the goods forming a stitch, presenting the same appearance on both the upper and lower sides of the goods.

The operation of threading the machine is very simple, it not being necessary to thread through any hole until the eye of the needle is reached.

THE HEAD of the machine is very attractive in appearance and is tastefully decorated.

THE ARM is very large and well proportioned, with a clear space under it as great as in any family sewing machine made, so that the bulkiest work can be handled without any difficulty.

THE NEEDLE is straight, with an enlarged shank, flattened on one side, so that the operation of setting the needle is absolutely positive, and the needle when once set is securely fastened by a special clamping device, which enables the needle to be readily removed in an instant when required.

AN AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER is furnished with this machine, which spools the thread on the bobbins very evenly, thus enabling the operator to have properly wound bobbins, without exercising any other care than to place the bobbin in the winder and then operate the winder by the action of the stand treadle. There is a cut-off or release on the handwheel of the machine, so that the bobbins can be wound without running the working parts of the machine, thus enabling the operator to stop in the middle of a seam any time and wind the bobbin without the necessity of taking the goods out from under the presser foot or breaking the upper thread.

THE TAKE-UP is automatic in its action, and controls the slack thread perfectly at all times and on all classes of work.

THE NEEDLE BAR is round and of sufficient diameter to make it very stiff and strong. It is made of steel, carefully tempered and hardened, and is smoothly finished.

A TENSION LIBERATOR is also a convenient feature, as by a slight pressure of the finger on the liberator work can be drawn freely from the machine without the danger of breaking the threads, as the liberator releases the tension on the thread entirely.

ALL IMPORTANT BEARINGS are carefully ground and hardened, and with proper care will last as long as the corresponding bearings in any machine made.

THE FEED is double, extending on both sides of the needle, and is positive in its action—that is, it does not depend on a spring or some other yielding device to operate it, but it will lift to its full stroke every time a stitch is made, regardless of the class of work that is being done or the kind of goods handled.

THE STITCH REGULATOR is in plain view, being attached to the front of the upright portion of the arm of machine. By loosening a thumbscrew and sliding it up or down the length of the stitch is immediately regulated to the desired degree.

THE SHUTTLE is of the self-threading pattern, cylindrical in shape, made of steel, well hardened, and takes a very large bobbin.

THE WOOD-WORK is of pleasing design, and the frame is fitted with skeleton drawer cases. It is furnished in oak finish only. The center drawer is of the sliding pattern, of full length, and is lined with velvet to receive the various attachments.

THE STAND is made and finished in a good and substantial manner throughout. It is furnished with oil cups, to prevent soiling the floor on which it rests, and the treadle and fly wheel are both hung on adjustable steel centers.

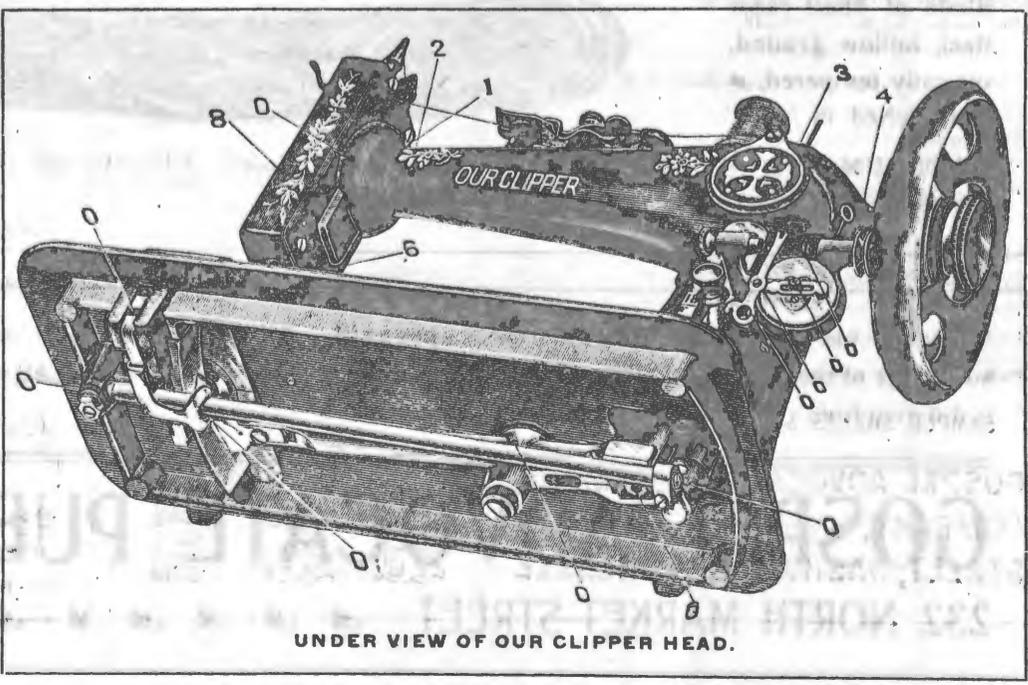

THE ATTACHMENTS, supplied without extra charge, are of the latest design and constructed throughout of the best steel, polished and nickel-plated, and include the following: Ruffler, tucker, binder, braider, four hemmers of assorted widths, quilter, thread cutter, foot hemmer, and feller.

THE ACCESSORIES include twelve needles, six bobbins, oil can filled with oil, large and small screwdrivers, sewing guide, guide screw, certificate of warranty good for five years, and an elaborately illustrated instruction book.

While I have never accepted the doctrines taught by the Salvation Army, yet there is much in their methods to be commended. They do not wait for the people to come to them, but they go to the people. This is in harmony with the command of Jesus, "Go ye into all the world;" but it seems to me they fail to preach the gospel to the people when they reach them. Their action in going is in harmony with the teaching: "Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind." God nowhere commands his people to build fine houses, with high steeples, stained windows, and cushioned seats, and then sit down and wait for the people to come to them. Such conduct keeps the poor away from the church of God. It is humiliating to them to go to the church where the pews are rented and where the members are dressed in broadcloths, silks, and satins. In such churches it cannot be said that the poor have the gospel preached unto them, unless we should judge from the contents of the contribution basket. Our duty is plain: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark 16: 15.) "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.)

The Salvation Army is doing a sensible thing in laboring to get the poor people away from the cities into the country. "God made the country, man made the city," is a truth that is worthy of our most thoughtful consideration. In the city there is far more poverty, suffering, and wickedness than in the country. The degradation is deeper. Religiously and morally it is a mistake to mass so many people together. The temptations are too great for many. Some people who make earnest Christians in the country put their light under a bushel so soon as they reach the city. The following, giving the work of the Salvation Army Colonies, is from the Congregationalist: "Two years ago the Salvation Army established three colonies, whose object is to get the worthy poor out of the crowded cities into the country. The first, Fort Romie, in Salinas Valley, not far from San Francisco, was started under the direction of Major Winchell. There were three thousand applications for membership, and from this large number thirty were chosen under the direction of a committee of prominent Californians, among whom was the mayor of San Francisco. There was no discrimination on account of religion, politics, or nationality. Among them were three motormen, who gave up their positions for the sake of getting their families out of the city. Of course few of the members had any practical knowledge of farming, though half of them had lived on farms at some time 'back East;' so men were sent down from the State Agricultural College to hold farmers' institutes, which were attended not only by the colonists, but by the farmers from miles about. This colony now numbers about seventy-five, and is a distinct success. In April, 1898, Fort Amity was started in Colorado, and Fort Herrick, near Cleveland, O., was started in July, 1898. Fort Amity is the largest of the three, having a population of about two hundred. The members came chiefly from Chicago, and the general policy is the same as that of Fort Romie. Each man was given twenty acres of land and five or six cows. A small, but steady, income was received from the sale of milk from the first, and now a creamery is being built. Cantaloupes are the crop raised, as the soil is particularly adapted to them. Last year, which was only the second, the colony more than paid its expenses. Fort Amity is so well situated, being nearer the large eastern cities than the Californian colony, and has such natural advantages, that it will probably be much enlarged. Commander Booth-Tucker is trying to raise one million dollars to carry on the work and he expects to get three hundred thousand dollars this year." It would certainly be well for more preachers to stay in the smaller towns and country instead of flocking to the larger cities. They could do more good and wield a greater influence for Christ.

The constitution of man and woman is different. In the very nature of things we can hardly expect woman to do man's work as well as he can do it himself, or vice versa. Man is made stronger for the rougher, outdoor work; woman is adapted for the work of the home and can preside there with a grace and loveliness unknown to man. Hence, Paul admonishes Titus: "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine: that the aged men be sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience. The aged women likewise, that they be in behavior as becometh holiness, not false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things; that they may teach the young women to be sober, to love their husbands, to love their children, to be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed." (Tit. 2: 1-5.) Whenever we set aside God's order, we must suffer the penalty; whenever we take woman out of the home—her God-given sphere—and place her in our shops, offices, and stores, our homes suffer, and when our homes suffer, the entire social fabric is demoralized. The family is God's oldest institution and is the hope of the church, the nation, and the entire social system. As the church is the light of the world, the salt of the earth, so the family is the salt of the church. When we destroy the sacredness of the family relation, we pull down our government, the church, and the nation. When women are compelled to work, it is noble in them to do so, but they should be paid reasonable wages for their services. When they work at such low prices, the tendency is to drive men out of employment and place them in such condition that they cannot support a family. G. Campbell Morgan, writing on the seventh commandment, in Record of Christian Work, says some very sensible things: "Then, again, is there not a growing danger of ministering to impurity in the multiplication on every hand of callings for women which throw them among men and give them wages which are insufficient? One of the greatest curses of England to-day, both for the sake of her sons and her daughters, is the employment of young women in the hotels and tobacconists' shops of our cities and towns. At this point I may be old-fashioned, but I confess to great regret that the conditions of life created in this feverish age of mammon worship have made it necessary for our daughters to go out of our homes at all to secure their living. If this be necessary, at any rate let them take the most religious care as to the character of the men with whom they are to be thrown in contact day by day. Unchastity has begun too often under conditions that seemed to be honest and pure enough."

It is strange that a man or a body of men cannot undertake to follow the teaching of Christ and his apostles without being exposed to bitter ridicule and persecution even from religious parties. Nevertheless, this has been the case from the first, and will continue to be so until the end. The "odium theologium" has become proverbial for its burning, merciless flame. In Christ's day the Pharisees, the strictest sect of the Jewish religion, hated Christ most bitterly, and hunted him even unto death. Those good, suave, dignified, holy-looking fellows that stood on the street corners and made long prayers were the children of them that stained their hands in the blood of the prophets, and themselves did not hesitate to bring the blood of the Son of God upon their souls. The most stupendous miracles of Christ did not convince them, for their eyes they had closed. To give vent to their hatred, they called him "the prince of the devils." Hence, Christ said: "Blessed are ye when men shall reproach you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." "A disciple is not above his master, nor a servant above his lord. . . . If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household!"

There is a religious people that is striving after truth. It is their aim to follow the teaching of God's word and to prefer the "Thus saith the Lord" to all the customs and creeds and usages of men. That in every respect they have attained to perfection in this line no one claims, but they are seeking for more light from the book of God. They believe in God and in Christ because this is God's will, he said so (Heb. 11: 6, et al.); they repent for the same reason, and turn to God (Acts 3: 19); they confess the name of Christ because he so ordained (Rom. 10: 9, 10); they are baptized, for the Lord commands it (Acts 2: 38, et al.); they assemble on the first day of the week, for there is an example and command from the word of God (see Acts 2: 42; 20: 7; Heb. 10: 25). They do not wish to bear a sectarian name, but in this respect also they desire to pattern after the will of God and be called "Christians," for it is written, "The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch" (Acts 11: 26); and, "If a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God in this name." (1 Pet. 4: 16, R. V.) In all things they want to be guided by God's word. Now, it appears that such a principle would at least be respected and honored among the other professed followers of Christ. But no. The very efforts and the very name of the Christians bring now, as they did in ages past, torrents of ridicule and insult upon their heads. Because they repudiate a sectarian name they must be given one. Let us call them "Campbellites." With what apparent delight and heartfelt satisfaction does the Baptist Flag roll the name "Campbellite" as a sweet morsel under its tongue!

Alexander Campbell was a great man, so was Paul, so was John the Baptist; yet we would not wear the name of either one of them. But you say: "Campbell originated your church." If this were so, it would truly be Campbell's church, or our church; but those who would wear the name "Christians" have striven to be members of God's church, and have concluded that they could become members of it just like the people of Jerusalem and Judea did under the teaching of the apostles. Paul went to Corinth and began a new religious movement there. He preached a new doctrine, and "many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized." But that did not make the church at Corinth Paul's church, nor did it make the Corinthian brethren Paulites. Paul simply preached the word, and the church at Corinth was a church of God, and its members were Christians. If Campbell preached the word, and many, hearing, believed and were baptized, are those who obeyed Christ's gospel under his teaching Campbellites?

But some carnally-minded dividers at Corinth succeeded in splitting up the church of God there into sectarian parties, and Paulites and Apollosites flourished. Some said they were "of Paul;" some, "of Apollos;" some, "of Cephas;" some, "of Christ." "Is Christ divided?" Paul asked them, indignantly. "Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptized into the name of Paul?" The two last questions point out plainly that it was wrong for them to name themselves after Paul, and they also show whose name they should wear. Paul was not crucified for them. Who was? Christ. They were not baptized into the name of Paul, but into the name of Christ. Whose name, then, should they bear? "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, as unto babes in Christ. . . . For whereas there is among you jealousy and strife, are ye not carnal, and walk after the manner of men? For when one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not men?" That is dangerous ground, for "to be carnally minded is death." Hence do we repudiate with our whole might any sectarian name, and we refuse to be of Campbell, of Paul, of John the Baptist, or of any other man, but are willing rather to suffer reproach and ridicule as Christians, and glorify God in this name.

"We are baptized into Christ," said the apostle; and when a man is in Christ, he is a Christian. To continue simply a Christian let him shun sectarianism in all its forms. To the Christian belongs all truth, and he must continually seek for it and grow on it. Not what Campbell taught nor what any other uninspired man, or set of men, taught, but the truth of God, is his creed. His brethren are they which hear the will of the Father and do it. The Bible alone is the bond that preserves their unity. A Baptist may teach a Christian some truths, yet the Christian does not become a Baptist thereby, but is still a Christian, and a better Christian, for the additional truth he has obtained. His eyes are open for truth, and he will accept it from any quarter, because it all rightfully belongs to him. The Christian's doctrine is well summarized by Paul in his talk to the Ephesian elders: "Wherefore I testify unto you this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I shrank not from declaring unto you the whole counsel of God." (Acts 20: 26, 27, R. V.) The Christian must be content with this. Let it make whatever impression it will, his business is to present what God has said and all that God has said on any subject, so far as he is able. Whether it pleases or displeases anybody he must not consider. Now, it would not be surprising if there were found among those who call themselves "Christians" some who are sectarians at heart, who will argue falsely to establish what they conceive to be truth, to whom certain parts of the Scriptures are painful; who dare not quote some verses without long, intricate explanations; who feel that they belong to a party, and that the party must be upheld at any cost; who as tenaciously cling to the teaching of Campbell as the denominationalist to his human creed. Such we discountenance. Sectarianism is to be condemned wherever it is found. The true Christian wants the whole truth of God, and nothing but it. This truth he believes and obeys. Let others call him what they please and persecute and ridicule to their heart's content, the follower of Christ will not waver from the true way.

"Pay Like a Sinner."

Hospitality has two sides. The other side is well put in a current anecdote. In the early days, in many parts of the country, a preacher was received and entertained heartily and cheerfully, and never expected to settle his bill at the inn when he left on the morrow.

Acting upon this knowledge, a young traveling preacher presented himself at a certain inn, gave himself some airs, and, when morning came, said, "Farewell," and was about to leave, taking no notice of his account.

"You have not settled," said the landlord.

"I am a minister, on my way to my station," explained the novice.

"Ah, indeed," said the landlord. "Well, you came in last night, and you never said a word of peace to any one of us; you had your supper, and it seemed to me you never asked God's blessing on it; you never said, 'Let us have a word of prayer,' before you went to bed; you called for your light, went upstairs, and it strikes me you spent very little time in prayer yourself, for I know your light was soon out and you were soon in bed; and when you came down, this morning, never a word you said of prayer, or of a chapter, before the beginning of the day; and you sat down to breakfast, and never a word of blessing again. No; you go on just like any other sinner, you come in like a sinner, you eat and drink like a sinner, you go to bed like a sinner, you get up like a sinner, you are going off like a sinner, and you must pay like a sinner."

"You say you were in five wars?" asked the judge of the colored prisoner. "Dat's what I said, jedge." "Name them." "Well, suh, I wuz cook fer de sojers in de war wid de Spaniards, en den I been married fo' times!"—Atlanta Constitution.

"Si," yelled the neighbor from the road, "your wife has jist run off with Bill Johnson." "She hez, hez she?" answered the farmer in the field. "Wall, Bill allays wuz a-borrerin' trouble. Git ap there!"—Indianapolis Press.

Uncertainties.

Indisputably true is the saying: "It is human to err." If you are a student, you cannot but be somewhat diffident as to your own powers. How many mistakes and blunders you make—big, obvious, egregious blunders! One little fault in the foundation trips the whole superstructure on it. Long chains of excellent reasoning are lost because an initial link is false. Sometimes when you feel most certain of the correctness of your work you are making the biggest mistakes. O, human fallibility! How shall we know truth?

The wisest and most learned men advance their thoughts and theories most cautiously; and this is such a universal mark that when you hear a bragging, blustering, dogmatic fellow make big assertions, you may safely calculate upon his mental limitations. "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." But he who has studied and perceived his own liability to error and the smallness of the human horizon will be modest in his teaching, showing deference to the opinions of others.

These things are in some measure discouraging to the seeker after truth; and it is to those who are bewildered by the labyrinth of human opinions and doctrines and feel unable to attain to the faultless and true and are despairing that I would offer a few thoughts that may throw a hopeful light on the way.

The fallibility of man is at the same time a weakness and a mark of his strength. "To err is human," and distinctively human. The animal's instinct does not err. Who has ever heard of a bird's sitting on a twig and lamenting because it did not know how to finish its nest? He does know how, without a teacher. The spider makes no mistake when it spreads out its net; the wild goose knows the way north; the bee understands how to make a regular hexagon out of wax; the hornet knows how to make a nest suited to all its purposes, such as human ingenuity and art would in vain endeavor to produce. In their way they are infallible. But there is one ominous truth in regard to them. While there is no error or failure with them, neither is there growth or improvement. The birds in our forefathers' day built as good nests as those now—neither better nor worse; the hornets that drove out the Canaanites before the face of Israel made just such nests as the present hornet; the spiders that fastened their webs to the walls of the Egyptian palaces wove no better than the spider of to-day. They have lost nothing, learned nothing. Would you purchase infallibility in some line at such a price? Truly, you would not. Better it is to be an insignificant grain of wheat than to be a glittering diamond. The diamond is beautiful, but it can never grow more so; the grain of wheat can. The diamond cannot die, the wheat can and will. Yet we perceive that the grain of wheat has vast advantage above the diamond. So is man. Though he be fallible now, he can grow to perfection.

The question, however, that would most interest us is this: Why did God make the way of truth narrow? Why not—if God's truth is his power unto salvation, if it is the necessary thing to cleanse and elevate and sanctify man—give him eyes that he could perceive it at once? Or why not make truth so prominent that we, despite our obtuseness, could not help seeing it? How, in times past, I have wished that I had stood with the Israelites at the foot of Mount Sinai or that I had been a contemporary of Christ and his apostles, that I might know the certainty of those things—when there were no conflicting creeds and doctrines, when inspired apostles spoke unmixed truth and gently corrected the erring! But upon reflection I saw that even then the way of truth was narrow. Those days had their doubts and truth was no more easily obtained.

There are reasons why God has never chosen to crush and overwhelm men with evidences; and though we cannot hope to understand them all, we can see some of them. First, God wanted to be sought earnestly and sincerely. To this end he created us. As Paul says: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord," etc. Never did man seek God with the proper spirit and diligence and fail to find him at last. The first thing he asks us to believe is: "God . . . is, and . . . is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Heb. 11: 6.) But this provision that men must seek him is a safeguard against all trash—men who do not want God nor care enough for him to seek him—to keep them out of God's sanctuary. They will primarily be left out. But this means nothing, brother, to you and to me, if we seek God above all things—him, his kingdom, and his righteousness.

There is another blessing in the uncertainty of our knowledge: it keeps us at work. This is necessary to develop our minds and hearts to the reception of more truth. So let us lift up the weary hands and strengthen the feeble knees. Continue your search after truth. It is good that we should be kept seeking. The pay for our exertions will be forthcoming. Every hour, every day we seek will be laid to our credit, and we receive truth as pay for every moment we have put in at honest seeking for it. This precious thing which God has given to us that we may live and grow by it! He hides it, but not beyond the possibility of our finding; covers it, but not inaccessibly. It is not out of the reach of him that is poor in spirit. Said the wise man: "My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee; so that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding; yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. For the Lord giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding. He layeth up sound wisdom for the righteous: he is a buckler to them that walk uprightly. He keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints. Then shalt thou understand righteousness, and judgment, and equity; yea, every good path."

It comes gradually, as we are able to bear it; and this is all for our good. Nuts that must be cracked, you enjoy more; game that you must pursue, you value more; treasure that you must dig is more precious; knowledge you toil for is more appreciated and beneficial to you. All that is worth having must be worked for. The finest apples hang high; the sweetest flowers must be sought and cultivated. It is a wise, benevolent provision of God, else we would not enjoy nor appreciate the best things.

Then do not fear you will get it all. Study, seek, learn; and when hoary hair adorns your temples and in your seeking you have grown to an old age, blessed of God and of men through the truth you have learned, and you lie down to breathe your last, even then you will realize that you have not fathomed it all. You have grown strong and mighty in spirit and knowledge, but there is yet more truth that you have not found. "Your knowledge is the variable, and perfection is the limit," as the mathematician would say. This, too, is a good thing.

What would happen if men and churches could learn all the truth here, so that in their perfect knowledge they would be safe beyond all uncertainties, beyond all possibility of mistake? Stagnation. An effort has been made by learned theologians to put what they conceived to be truth into handy shape—the teaching of the Bible, the results of the study of many sage minds—to give to the common people for their instruction. Some, as the Roman Catholic Church, have even managed to throw a halo of sanctity and infallibility around their creed. What was the result of it? The man who trusted in the creed, having there already all religious truth embodied, conveniently cut and dried—why should he search? There is no use. Here it is already—better, too, than he could have studied it out. So he is satisfied that it is there, and cares no more about it. Some one else has done the work for him, he need not do it again. In this manner he is cheated out of both exercise and food—God's means to growth—and loses by disuse his faculty for finding truth.

Better, far better, to learn truth in the sweat of your brow, little by little, seeking, toiling, growing. We have not all the truth, brethren. Let us patiently seek for more light, and God will give it. The biggest sectarian in the world is the "infallible" man.

There is a sweet promise that we shall see with clearer eyes some day. But even here we can and shall attain to truth, under one fundamental condition: "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Another: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." ROBERT H. BOLL.

Our Exchanges.

MOMENTUM.

The earnest men are so few in the world that their very earnestness becomes at once the badge of their nobility; and as men in a crowd instinctively make room for one who seems eager to force his way through it, so mankind everywhere open their ranks to one who rushes zealously toward some object lying beyond them.—Epworth Herald.

SPASMODIC SPIRITUALITY.

Periodical meetings, held by imported revivalists, constitute but one incident in the true church's life, as it were merely one good meal in a year's provisions; and the church . . . dependent for life upon the one-meal revival will at best live at a poor dying rate. Judge no church's spiritual condition the rest of the year by the number of conversions reported as the result of a single series of services, but by the prayerful activity of all concerned throughout the year. If every sheaf were cut when it is ripe, the total harvest would be much greater than if there were but one ingathering, albeit no single reaping might be so large.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

THE HOME MAKER.

Woman's mental, as surely as her physical, qualities call her to the home life as her special and peculiar work, says the author of "True Motherhood." It is not that she can do nothing else, but that she can do this as no other can. If she does not make home, home cannot be made. The world needs her there. Her own heart calls her to do it. Man's heart and life need just the influence in the home which woman alone can bring. In all else that she can add he will applaud and aid. But from home he may not lose her. The world's civilization, the molding of the ages to come, depend on the distinctively womanly qualities of mind acting in their highest beauty and perfection in human homes.—Baptist Outlook.

PRAY FOR THOSE IN AUTHORITY.

It would seem eminently proper at this time, when so much depends upon the decision of the powers relative to their policy concerning China, that prayer should be made for rulers, that they may be divinely guided in judgment. We Americans take the liberty of criticizing, and even abusing, our chief magistrate without hindrance or limit; but, as Christians, do we remember to pray for him in his difficult and perplexing duties as we should? Are not too many of our pulpit prayers rambling meditations or theological moralizings, with the sermon in mind, and without such direct and definite supplication for objects belonging to the general life of the people as public prayer should include?—Western Christian Advocate.

THE DIFFICULTIES IN CHINA.

The difficulties in China are most serious, and our State Department is entitled to the sympathy of all citizens in its efforts to guide our affairs amid the complications of a loose union of several nations, with the defiance of China itself. So far as can be seen, the real difficulty is the Dowager Empress herself, and her trusted advisers, who belong to the reactionary party. The appointment of Prince Tuan as Imperial Secretary was itself a refusal of our natural demands in advance; and though it is claimed that the Emperor has since ordered Tuan and other leaders of the attack on the legations degraded, the new appointments to the commission to negotiate peace with the powers are not all satisfactory. They include Yung Lu, who, as commander of the Chinese troops in the attacks on the legations, is almost as guilty as Tuan. Nothing but patience on our part, with firmness in meeting every twist and turn of the Dowager, will be successful. The Chinese policy is delay, with the hope of dissension among the powers.—Journal and Messenger.

END OF THE BOER WAR.

The power of the Boers seems at last to be utterly broken. President Kruger has fled into Portuguese territory, and will take ship for Europe. It is given out that he has resigned the presidency of the republic, and will probably remain abroad the rest of his days. His own private nest is well feathered, but the honest burghers, whom he drew into a war that could have but one end, will suffer greatly. We trust that their may be no further effusion of blood, that the Boer prisoners may all speedily be released, that universal amnesty may be granted, and that Briton and Boer alike may soon be in the enjoyment of the greatest amount of personal liberty throughout the whole of South Africa. With at least fifteen negroes to one white man throughout that whole section, the interests of civilization demand peace and amity.—Christian Advocate.

SOME THOUGHTS ABOUT DEBT.

If we could get the ears of our young friends, we should say to them with all possible emphasis: "Do not go in debt." There is nothing that more harasses and disturbs the spirit of an honest man than the fact that he has incurred obligations which it is impossible for him to meet on demand. Rather than be subjected to such an experience, let him learn to endure any form of self-denial, to eat plain food, wear his last year's coat, and sleep on a board. Youth is proverbially hopeful, and is always expecting to be in better condition to-morrow than today. But such expectations often fail. In most cases the increase in one's income is slow, and the expense of living gets larger rather than smaller as life goes on. To mortgage all the future for the means of present enjoyment is to lay up in store an untold amount of trouble.

One of the lessons which it is particularly difficult for a young man to learn is that the postponing or shifting of a debt is not the payment of it. Bishop Fitzgerald tells a particularly good story of an impetuous acquaintance whose disposition to borrow had made him a terror to all his friends, and who sometimes got into the depths of despair on account of his financial obligations, but quickly rebounded on obtaining any sort of relief. On a certain occasion he came into the Bishop's office, radiant with delight, and said: "I have fixed up the matter that was worrying me so yesterday." "That is good news," replied the Bishop. "How did you succeed in doing it?" "O, I got a loan from Brother Smith," was the cheerful answer. The probabilities are that sixty days later Brother Smith was calling himself a simpleton for having taken such a risk. No debt is paid until it is actually paid. As long as it remains uncanceled it is a thing to be reckoned with, and it will be just as disturbing a force at its next maturity as it is now.

It lies within the power of a young man to practice almost any measure of economy. As to how he shall live, nobody is concerned except himself. If he chooses, for the glorious privilege of being independent, to carry his self-denial to the last limit, it is his own business. But after he is married the case is different. Other wills besides his are entitled to be consulted. Wife and children have some right to an opinion, and are not usually backward in asserting it. A kind-hearted man, moreover, will often hesitate to impose upon them the same rigid rules to which he himself is perfectly willing to submit. These facts complicate the problem of expenditure, and make it supremely important that his earning power should not be taxed to meet the claims that have accrued upon him in former years.

There is still another thought that ought not to be thrust aside and forgotten: whoever systematically and regularly spends more money than he makes is in a fair way to become a thief. For a while he may suppose that some turn of the tide will enable him to meet his overdrafts and to square accounts with the world, but by and by he must come to know that this notion is a delusion and a snare. If in spite of such knowledge he fails to curtail his outlay, then he is simply and consciously appropriating and using what belongs to other people. The dishonesty of such a proceeding is increased rather than diminished by the fact that his creditors are not aware of his true standing. It is very pleasant to keep a handsome house, sit down to a well-supplied table, and enjoy the luxury of fine raiment; but to do it at the cost of confiding tradesmen or indulgent friends is mean and base.—Christian Advocate.

CALVINISM.

"The Central Presbyterian calls for a more vigorous pressing of Calvinism. It says: 'Arminians will not be allowed to stop short of Pelagianism, Socinianism, and Atheism.' The Christian Advocate avows itself an Arminian, and it refuses to become either Pelagian, Socinian, or Atheist." (Western Recorder.)

The discussion going on concerning the revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith arouses the Calvinistic spirit of some afresh; and, as in the days of the formation of the creed, they are disposed to magnify the Calvinistic idea. They declare those who hold the opposite extreme of Arminianism are Pelagians, Socinians, and Atheists; they hold Arminianism is infidelity. If Calvinism is Christianity, Arminianism is infidelity. Extreme begets extreme. I believe both are unscriptural, and neither extreme can be expressed in scriptural language. So far as they cannot be expressed in Bible language, they are erroneous, and all error tends to unbelief; unbelief is infidelity; so all error in its "last analysis," as Dr. Lofton calls it, is infidelity.

There are some truths in Calvinism and there are some truths in Arminianism; but neither of them, as a system, is Christianity. To believe in Christ and obey his commands is Christianity. A person can do these, can be a Christian, without being either a Calvinist or an Arminian.

Sometimes we think no one believes in the extremes of Calvinism now. In this we are mistaken. When the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Philadelphia Confession of Faith were adopted, they clearly believed some of the nonelect die in infancy and go to hell without sinning. From this public sentiment recalls as horrid. But why is it more horrid that one ordained to eternal damnation should die in infancy than that the same should live to old age, utterly helpless to do anything to modify the awful fate that awaits it by the unchangeable decree of God, who desires the death of none? Recently the discussion of the change of the Confession has brought out the declaration that the nonelect as well as the elect do die in infancy and souls that had no choice in coming into being, and never sinned, suffer eternal ruin in hell.

"Touching the second point, it is very clear that God is under no more obligation to save an infant than he is to save an adult. His word teaches that 'the covenant being made with Adam, not only for himself, but for his posterity, all mankind, descending from him by ordinary generation, sinned in him, and fell with him in his first transgression.' All are lost. It is of his free grace that any one, whether infant or adult, is saved. We know his purpose of salvation only so far as he has revealed it to us in his word. As I understand this revelation, his purpose is to save through faith in his Son, Jesus Christ. There is not one way of salvation for the adult and another way for the infant. If there is, let some brother point it out by clear and unmistakable scripture. We are under a representative system, and it is not necessary that the faith shall be in the dying infant, else they all would perish. But this faith must be in some one representing the child. How far back in the ancestral line this representation extends no one can tell. In the second commandment God says he shows mercy unto thousands of generations of them that love him and keep his commandments; but in that same word he tells us that he visits the iniquities of the fathers upon their children unto the third and fourth generations of them that hate him. Who can affirm positively that the children of such, dying in infancy, are exempted from this visitation?"

That is sensible and reasonable. There is no more cruelty in sending a helpless and sinless babe to hell than in sending a grown person, without choice and helpless as to his destiny, to hell. The unreasonable and horrid thing is that the spirit that saves one and damns the other, regardless of the character and life of the person, should be called "free grace" or "grace" at all. It is not free to the man that is sentenced to damnation before he is created; nor is it free to him whose salvation is fixed from eternity, regardless of what he may be or do. Only that is free to me which I am at liberty to accept or reject.

We have often said: The peace that seemingly exists between the sects is only a truce, an armed armistice, brought about by common dangers, and if these dangers be removed, they would fly at each other's throats as viciously as they ever did. The spirit of party does not change.

THE POWER OF FAITH.

"We are justified," says the Bible, 'by faith.' If a man believes, he is saved. Why so? Not as some people sometimes seem to fancy, not as if in faith itself there was any merit. There is a very strange and subtle resurrection of the whole doctrine of works in reference to this matter, and we often hear belief in the gospel of Christ spoken about as if it (the work of the man believing) was, in a certain way and to a certain extent, that which God rewarded by giving him salvation. What is that but the whole doctrine of works come up again in a new form? What difference is there between what a man does with his hands and what a man feels in his heart? If the one merits salvation or if the other merits salvation, equally we are shut up to this: men get to heaven by what they do; and it does not matter a bit what they do it with, whether it be body or soul. When we are saved by faith, we mean accurately through faith. It is God that saves; it is Christ's life, Christ's blood, Christ's sacrifice, Christ's intercession that saves. Faith is simply the channel through which there flows into my emptiness the divine fullness, or, to use the good old illustration, it is the hand which is held up to receive the benefit which Christ lays in it. A living trust in Jesus has power unto salvation only because it is the means by which the power of God unto salvation may come into my heart. On that side is the great ocean—Christ's love, Christ's abundance, Christ's merits, Christ's righteousness (or, rather, that which includes them all)—there is the great ocean, Christ himself; and on this is the empty vessel of my soul. The little, narrow pipe that has nothing to do but to bring across the refreshing water—that is the act of faith in him. There is no merit in the dead lead, no virtue in the mere emotion. It is not faith that saves us; it is Christ that saves us and saves us through faith." (Alexander Maclaren.)

The above contains some truths we ought all to learn: 1. The soul, the inner man, is as much the man as the body is. What the soul does, the man does, just as much as he does what the body does. 2. Faith is a work, a work of the heart, the soul, the man. It is as much the work of the man as any act or service of the body is. 3. It is true that faith merits and deserves no reward. It is the act of the heart that trusts God and opens the heart to influences that flow out from God. It is the narrow channel, the pipe, through which the blessedness of God flows to the heart fitted by faith to receive it. Faith has a reflex influence on the heart that believes. It fits the heart to receive and appropriate the blessings as well as furnishes the channel through which they must flow. Without this channel of faith there is no medium of communication between God and the heart of man. Every act of obedience is an act of faith that increases and invigorates the faith, and so opens wider the channels through which the divine influences flow and more thoroughly fits the heart to receive and use the greater blessings from God. Nothing man does or can do merits salvation or blessing from God. He cannot bring God under obligation to him. All of God's appointments must be observed in faith. Their observance enlarges the pipe and broadens the upturned hands that they may receive more fully of God's blessings, limited and restricted only by man's inability to receive and use. God bestows blessings that he who receives them may in turn use them to bless others. The heart not desirous of blessing others is unfitted to receive blessings.

Another truth to be observed is that while faith is the great channel through which blessedness to the soul of man must flow, all the acts of service are acts of faith, the outgrowth of faith. All service is the outworking, the fruit, of faith; and what does not grow out of and flow through faith is not acceptable service to God. Whatever is not from faith is sin.

He only is advancing in life whose heart is getting softer, whose blood is getting warmer, whose brain is getting quicker, whose spirit is entering into living peace; and the men who have this life in them are the true lords or kings of the earth—they, and they only.—John Ruskin.

Kind words prevent a good deal of that perverseness which rough and imperious usage often produces in generous minds.—Locke.

A Positive Religion.

In these days of luxury in life and liberalism in religion, it may be needful to insist on the importance of a positive note in the type of religion which the age requires for its real good. We are inclined to think that there is a tendency to set too little store by the definite and positive in our Christian heritage at the present time. This, if allowed to continue and prevail, will surely produce weakness and inefficiency in the religious life and activity of the age in which we live.

In the sphere of human action, as recorded on the pages of biography and history, we see again and again that it is the men who have had positive convictions, firmly held and persistently adhered to, that have moved the world. The man of one idea, the man of persistent purpose, the man of deep conviction, is always the man who becomes the leader of men and who leaves his impress on his age. This is the real meaning of force of character.

In business life and in professional activity the same is true. It is the man who has a definite plan in life and who bends every energy toward its realization that makes his way in the world. The man who has nothing positive about him will drift with the tide and be more likely to suffer shipwreck than to reach the port of success in life. So of men in every walk of life the same is true. The positive man, the man of purpose and conviction, is the man who has power and who is most likely to succeed in life's tasks.

We see this feature clearly illustrated in the apostolic age. Christ himself uttered a strong, positive note in all his teaching. Whether he speaks of his Father's love or of man's sin, whether he rebukes hypocrisy or exhorts to the noblest virtue, whether he tells of his own saving grace or of the terrors of the wrath to come, he has no uncertain sound in his teaching. So the prophets and John who went before him illustrate the same feature. Their trumpet call to repentance and obedience is exceedingly positive, and reveals intense conviction of divine things.

The apostle Paul was nothing, if not positive. His strong nature, when touched by divine grace, laid hold of the eternal verities of the gospel with a strength of conviction which was positive and unwavering. This made him the apostolic hero he was, and enabled him to brave dangers, suffer sore evils, and in the end to win the martyr's crown. He knew and was persuaded of the gospel.

So, through all the centuries since his day it has been the same. The reformers, the confessors, the missionaries, and the successful preachers have all been men of positive convictions, who had very clear ideas of God and man, of sin and salvation, of time and eternity. Even the Jesuit missionaries exhibited this same feature. They had, in their perverted way, strong convictions in regard to the salvation of men; and, moved by these, they went into all the lands and suffered many privations. Indeed, it is the positive element in Romanism to-day that gives it much of its power. Its ideas of the church and of the sacraments, of absolution and good works, are positive, and hence have great power.

On the other hand, in the Unitarian system, we see this fact illustrated in another way. This system is very largely negative in its nature. It denies the tripersonality of God, the true deity of Christ, the apostasy and depravity of man, the necessity and reality of the atonement, and the need of gracious regeneration of the heart of man, in order to life and felicity. After these radical negations, its positive assertions about the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men, about the divine in man and the nobility of virtue exhibited by him, have little meaning. The result is that Unitarianism has never been an aggressive force in the world. Its share in home and foreign mission work to-day is practically nothing, compared with what the churches that hold positive views of the gospel are doing. Neither in Britain nor in this country is it holding its own. This is just what might be expected, because it lacks a positive tone in its teaching. Negations are empty, and cannot nourish the soul.—Christian Observer.

There is only one stimulant that never fails and yet never intoxicates—duty. Duty puts a blue sky over every man—up in his heart, maybe, into which the skylark, happiness, always goes singing.—Ex.

PERSONAL.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy preached at Franklin, Tenn., last Lord's day.

Brother W. H. Carter, of Lafayette, Tenn., began a meeting at Corinth, near Smith's Grove, Ky., last Friday.

Brother J. D. Floyd, of Flat Creek, Tenn., preached last Sunday and Sunday night at the Tenth Street church of Christ, in this city.

Brother L. M. Jackson's meeting at Berea (not Woodbury, as we announced last week), in Cannon County, Tenn., resulted in four additions.

Brother T. F. Odum, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., is working in the interest of the Gospel Advocate and publications of the house. We will appreciate any favors shown him.

"A saddler and harness maker, who is a member of the church of God, is wanted to locate at Scottsboro, Ala. There is a fine opening, and no opposition." Address J. H. Gregory, Scottsboro, Ala.

Brother A. G. Freed, of Henderson, Tenn., has been in a splendid meeting at Martin, Tenn., with large audiences and good interest. Three persons had been baptized when we last heard from him, which was on the 15th inst. Brother Freed writes that the school at Henderson is increasing all the time and that they now have the best attendance in its history.

Brother J. M. McCaleb has been down several weeks with malarial fever. While he is convalescing, his expenses are great, as his entire family are boarding here. It will be some time before he will be able to get out to work. I feel confident that the brethren in general would be glad to aid him in a financial way if they only knew the situation; I ask the Gospel Advocate, therefore, to please make mention of his condition.—Brown Godwin, Columbia, Tenn.

Many people are lost in trying to save themselves in ways of their own devising, while salvation is in easy reach on the terms God has proposed.

Churches should not fail to support the preachers who earnestly preach the gospel without waiting for their salaries to be guaranteed. "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

Wholesome discipline should be exercised in the churches. The dead branches should be cut off; but it should be as the last resort. The church should withdraw from those who walk disorderly, but should first encourage them to turn away from their wrongdoing. The disorderly should be withdrawn from for their own salvation and for the good of the church.

The best way to lead people out of error is to prove your faith by your works. A godly example has a wonderful influence. People will listen to the man who leads a consecrated life. An active, consecrated church will soon demonstrate to the people that there is no necessity for the society. No such necessity arose in the days of the early Christians, because they were active and vigilant in the service of God. If you wish to see the church enthroned in the hearts of the people as it should be, then give of your means, of your time, and of your talents as you have been prospered. Societies cannot stand before a pure heart and consecrated life. It has little effect to criticise societies while we fail to prove the superiority of the church by working through it. The church is the light of the world, the pillar and support of the truth. For it Jesus gave his life. Any good work that a man can do as a Christian can be and should be done in the church of God. The church is a blood-bought institution and in importance towers as far above human institutions as the divine is above the human, as the heavens are above the earth.

Said a mother one day: "When my children were young I thought the very best thing I could do for them was to give them myself; so I spared no pains to talk with them, to read to them, to teach them, to pray with them, to be a loving companion and friend to my children. I had to neglect my house often; I had no time to indulge myself in many things which I should have liked to do; I was so busy adorning their minds and cultivating their hearts' best affections that I could not adorn their bodies in fine clothes, though I kept them neat and comfortable at all times. I have my reward now. My sons are ministers of the gospel; my grown-up daughter is a Christian woman. I have plenty of time now to sit down and rest, plenty of time to keep my house in order, plenty of time to indulge myself, besides going about my Master's business wherever he has need of me. I have a thousand beautiful memories of their childhood to comfort me. Now that they have gone out into the world, I have the sweet consciousness of having done all I could to make them ready for whatever work God calls them to do. I gave them the best I could—myself"

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Our orders are increasing for "Gospel Praise." We hear only cheering words in regard to the merits of the book. The music is the best, the sentiment is scriptural, and the songs are such as stir the soul. If you are contemplating buying new music books, you should by all means examine this book.

Of "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" Brother John E. Dunn writes: "I will simply say the book, to do good (make one want to live better), holds a place, in my estimation, next to the Bible. I think so much of the book I will not be without it. Every one who has seen it, so far as I can hear, is delighted with it."

We have for a limited time reduced the price of "Sweeney's Sermons;" "Sewell's Sermons;" "Gospel Sermons," by Brénts; "Civil Government" and "Commentary on Acts," by D. Lipscomb; "Live Religious Issues of the Day," by Carroll Kendrick; and "The Jerusalem Tragedy," by Stout. See advertisement on another page of this issue. These are all splendid books, and, while the price is reduced, you should place them in your library. Let us have your order for the whole list or any part of it.

Of "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," Mrs. Mollie L. Meeks says: "The book is so true to life." Mrs. Leila Bradley Nunnally says: "I have just finished reading, for the first time, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore.' It is certainly a dear, delightful book; it touches the deepest depths and tenderest chords of my heart, bringing sometimes smiles and sometimes tears. The artistic illustrations are delightful. Truly, the book is pure gold from lid to lid. But how could it be otherwise, with such a man to write and such a man to write about?"

Of "The Relations of God to the World," by Hiram Christopher, A.M., M.D., the Western Recorder says: "God's relations to the world are given under three heads—'Immanency,' 'Intervention,' and 'Incarnation.' Chief stress is laid on the first. Force is God, while matter is passive, and force becomes immanent in matter. This is our author's position. Intervention is seen in the miracles, while in the Incarnation we find the kenosis, or the emptying of Christ. Each topic is treated with vigor, and the reader will find much to quicken his thinking." This book is published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, and sells for seventy-five cents.

This is a special number. We present for the consideration of our readers the Gospel Advocate with some new premiums. What these premiums are and how to secure them is told on the third and fourth pages of the cover. Every housekeeper needs and knows the value of a good sewing machine, and the one we offer would cost you very much more money if bought through a traveling agent. Every housekeeper, too, likes nice tableware. The knives, forks, and spoons offered are of the celebrated Rogers make, triple-plated. Every man knows the value of a good razor, and we believe the one we are offering will give satisfaction. Read these advertisements carefully and secure one or more of the premiums.

If you have not yet bought "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," Brother Srygley's last book, you should by all means have a copy. "It is a precious treasure;" "A rich legacy to bequeath to your children;" "We especially commend it to the young;" "Every home in the land should possess one;" "The Bible excepted, I believe it is the best book I have ever seen;" "His private letters and intercourse always inculcate purity and fidelity to truth and right and a constant desire to benefit others;" "The letters are gems that reflect the light of the pure spirit of the incomparable preacher so tenderly loved by all who truly know him"—these are only a few of the many complimentary things said of "Letters and Sermons." Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1.50.

Brother Srygley gave us two notable books that have enjoyed a wide reading and popularity—namely, "Larimore and His Boys" and "Seventy Years in Dixie;" but in "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," the last book before his death, he surpassed himself. This volume will be a constant benediction wherever it goes. The book contains twelve of Brother Larimore's most practical and spiritual sermons, stenographically reported as they were delivered in his three-months' meeting in Nashville last winter. This feature alone would make a valuable work, but this is the least valuable part of the book. The most important and impressive, as well as unique, features are the chapters devoted to letters from Larimore to Srygley, with comments by Srygley. The two men were on the most intimate terms for years, and conducted a voluminous correspondence on almost every conceivable subject, especially on subjects bearing on all forms of Christian service and Christian life. Every other chapter is devoted to the letters, and the letters are so arranged as to bear on a given subject for that particular chapter. The volume is bound to make a profound impression wherever read. No one can come in contact with the beautiful spirit which breathes through these letters without being made better. These letters reveal Brother Larimore's innermost life. They show the spirit in which he met men and women of every sort, as well as how he met the various problems of life and duty. The unselfish and unworldly life of the man and his seemingly absolute freedom from earthly ambitions are beautiful and impressive in the extreme. This volume will go on doing good after its author as well as its editor are "lowly laid." It will be a monument more enduring than brass and more imperishable than marble.—George Gowen, in Christian Guide.

ILLUSTRATION BY THE TEN VIRGINS.

The figures and illustrations given by the Savior while in his personal ministry are most fitting and impressive. These illustrations are so comprehensive and full of meaning. The whole matter of our service to God on earth is often illustrated by one little incident, and made so forcible that none of us can contemplate it and not realize the importance of giving our whole lives to doing the will of God on earth. In this money-loving and money-making age, even among those claiming to be the servants of God, the work of Christianity is only of secondary or third-rate importance, and but little of it going on. Churches become so much taken up in the general rush for money that they do not work for Christ as in years gone by. The gospel is not sounded out as it once was in adjoining neighborhoods; the members are not as diligent in the Lord's work in daily life as in years gone by; the discipline of the members is not as closely guarded as it should be, and consequently there is greater laxity in the strict morality required in the Christian life than the word of God allows. Cold and lifeless formality in the work and worship of the churches is too much indulged in for the cause of Christ to advance much; hence, it becomes a very difficult matter to interest those outside or induce them to come into the church.

If all would study more these beautiful and strong illustrations presented by the Savior during his personal ministry, they would certainly increase their diligence in these matters. The parable of the ten virgins is one of the most beautiful and forcible along this line. A man was to be married and bring home his bride. Ten virgins had been invited to the feast, and were to go out to meet the bridegroom, escort him home, enter his house, and enjoy the feast with him and his bride. As the return was to be at night, these virgins were all expected to have burning lamps and with these light up and beautify the scene of escorting the bridegroom and bride into their home, where they could enjoy the feast with them. The lamps, therefore, and a good supply of oil were essential to the programme, as every one was expected to have a lamp and to have it in good burning order. This whole scene is intended to represent Christians and their readiness to meet the Savior at the last day, their entrance with him into heaven, and its enjoyment forever and ever. To accomplish all this they must become Christians, must take their lamps and go forth; they must also have a plentiful supply of oil, must continually live the Christian life, and thus form a character that will be ready to stand the test in the judgment and entitle them to an entrance through the gates into the eternal city. The lamps had to be taken by the virgins and the oil provided before the time came that they were to meet the bridegroom and escort him into the marriage feast. So also must people become Christians, and form the Christian character during life, and be ready when the last day comes. If not ready then, it will be forever too late to get ready.

This is where the foolish virgins failed. They took their lamps, but took no oil along to supply these lamps. This represents those that become Christians, but fail to go on and form the Christian character through life; and when the last trumpet shall sound to call them from the slumber of death to meet their Lord and Master at the judgment, their lamps will be out, and no oil to supply them. There was plenty of time for the foolish virgins to have got a supply of oil from the time they took their lamps and the coming of the bridegroom, but they neglected and lost that time, and when the time came to go into the marriage it was then too late to supply it, and they were rejected and lost all. So if people obey the gospel and then fail to live the Christian life, refuse to form the Christian character while living, and lie down to sleep the sleep of death without it, then when the Lord comes they will be rejected and cast into outer darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. This is fearful. Every child of God on earth, therefore, should strive to form the Christian character while living, so as to insure an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. All who fail to do this will fail at last to enter the eternal city, just as the foolish virgins failed to enter into the marriage feast. It is also certain that the formation of the Christian character is an individual, personal matter that each individual has to do for himself. No one else can do it for him. The love and prayers of wife, relatives, brethren, or friends will fail to furnish any one an entrance through the gates that has failed to personally live the Christian life. The foolish virgins besought the wise for oil, but it was unavailing; they then went to buy, but it was too late. When they came and knocked for entrance, they were refused and did not get in. The time when they could have been ready was wasted, and then all was over. The wait at last of those who come into the church, and then waste the time and neglect their precious opportunities to add the Christian graces to their faith, and go up to the judgment unprepared, will be awfully sad. All who do this will be without excuse, for God tells them plainly what they must do, and if they refuse or reject it, it will be at their own peril, and they will have to take the consequences.

The wise virgins utilized their time and opportunities, and were ready when the cry was made of the coming of the bridegroom, and went in with him to the marriage, and all was well with them. This is beautiful: this was exactly what manifested their wisdom. There is nothing to indicate that they were any smarter or more intelligent in common things than the others; but they did the right thing when they could, while the others did not. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." (Prov. 9: 10.) "Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people." (Deut. 4: 5, 6.) Hence, true wisdom is to serve God, to do his will while we live. Every one that does this is wise, while every one that rejects or neglects this is foolish, in the Bible sense of these words. The worldly-wise generally reject the gospel. It is too simple for them; it does not interest them; it is foolishness to them. They feel no interest in providing for the future; they spend all their time and energies in seeking present positions and accomplishing present ends; and they have no taste for the sacred and holy things that alone can prepare them for joy and happiness in the time to come. A wise man will think of future happiness and will provide for it. There is nothing uncertain about the matter of providing for future happiness; the whole matter is plainly and definitely revealed, and the outcome is as certain as that there is truth in the universe. The parable of the ten virgins shows this beyond all controversy. All that is needed is to take interest enough in the soul to attend to the matters of Christianity in this life, and all will be well hereafter. The foolish virgins wholly neglected the needed preparation while it was in their power to make it; so when the time came for the enjoyment they were not ready, and could not possibly get ready then. The wise virgins were ready, and there was nothing in the world that could prevent them from enjoying that for which they had prepared themselves. The foolish virgins prepared for darkness and disappointment, and it came, and no way was left for them to avoid it. So when Christians refuse or fail to live the Christian life, to form the Christian character, they prepare themselves for disappointment and darkness at the last day and throughout eternity.

The white robe has to be wrought out and prepared in this life.

Life is the time to serve the Lord,
The time to insure the great reward.

But life and its opportunities once wasted, there is no possibility to recover them again. Life can be lived but once, and the one life that we live here fixes the eternal destiny. The foolish virgins neglecting their oil represents a lifetime of neglecting the interests of the soul by neglecting the affairs of Christianity, neglecting our duty in the service of God. On the other hand, the taking of the oil by the wise virgins represents a life of service to God, a lifetime spent in doing God's will by laying up in store for the time to come, that they may be ready. The white robe to be worn by the bride, the Lamb's wife, at the final marriage supper of the Lamb, is said to be "the righteousness of saints." Therefore, those Christians that will not continually put on this robe by doing the Lord's will while living will not have it at the final marriage feast any more than the foolish virgins had oil when the bridegroom came, after having failed to provide it beforehand. Christians, then, should be up and doing the Lord's will all the time. They have no time to lose; they never know what day or hour may bring death, when all chance of preparation will be ended. "Many are called, but few are chosen." This language of the Savior indicates that among all that make a start for heaven only a few will reach it, that only a few will continue to serve God through life. Only a few of the grown-up Jews that left Egypt ever entered the promised land. They sinned against God during the time of their probation that they had to die outside. Only the few that remained faithful entered in.

All these things should make deep and lasting impressions upon the children of God and keep them in the right way, keep them always doing the will of the Father in heaven. Caleb and Joshua held out faithfully through their probationary state, and entered and enjoyed the promised land. Without the Christian character we can no more enter heaven than the foolish virgins could enter the marriage chamber without oil, and that means an utter and an awful failure at last. There is no need of such a failure; for the Lord has made the way plain and has promised innumerable blessings, even in this life, to the faithful. Hence, this sort of life, even here, is the happiest that can be lived on earth, and the only sort of life that can possibly pass us through the gates into the eternal city. E. G. S.

WHOEVER EXALTS HIMSELF SHALL BE ABASED.

One who uses religious service for personal promotion rather than the salvation of souls falls under this anathema. His duty is to present God and his cause and lose sight of self. If he does this, God will care for him. Whom God cares for will be blessed and exalted in the next world, if not in this. The blessing comes in this. The young preacher that forgets all else and works for the glory of God is the one that succeeds. In forgetfulness of self he goes where he can do greatest good in saving souls and honoring God, and he succeeds. His success in this work gives him character and opens the way for worldly success, and this is the point of danger. This becomes a temptation to him to seek self-advancement instead of God's honor. When a man looks around for a place where he can get the best support or make for himself the greatest name, he is seeking to exalt himself, and "whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased." This is a similar statement and teaches the same lesson as: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it." If he seeks that which will add to his temporal good, he will not only lose the eternal life, but, more often than otherwise, he will lose the good of this life. But he who gives up all, forgets his temporal good for the sake of Christ, will save his life, the real good of this life, and all the blessings of the life to come.

We have examples of the working of this principle all through the Scriptures. Abraham left home and kindred to follow God into a strange land. He became the friend of God, gained earthly good, greatness for his family, and his bosom is the type of the home of the blessed in the eternal world. Moses gave up the riches and glory of the throne of Egypt, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, and he gained the highest honors of both this present world and that which is to come. David, the shepherd lad, forgetful of personal danger and despite the ridicule of an army, with his shepherd's bag and the smooth stones of the brook, met the mightiest giant of earth to take away the reproach from Israel and that all the earth might know there is a God in Israel. He became the mightiest king of earth and the type and father of the Lord of glory. Forgetfulness of self in the earnest desire to save souls is the only pathway to true honor here and eternal glory in the world to come. If we all would cultivate this spirit and be moved by this purpose, the world would be lifted up and our present and eternal good made sure. D. L.

There has never been a great and beautiful character which has not become so by filling well the ordinary and smaller offices appointed of God.—Horace Bushnell.

A STILL DAY IN AUTUMN.

I love to wander through the woodlands hoary,
In the soft light of an autumnal day;
Then Nature gathers up her robes of glory,
And, like a dream of beauty, glides away.

How through each loved, familiar path she lingers,
Serenely smiling through the golden mist,
Tinting the wild grape with her dewy fingers,
Till the cold emerald turns to amethyst!

Warm lights are on the sleepy upland waning,
Beneath soft clouds along the horizon rolled,
Till the slant sunbeams, through the fringes raining,
Bathe all the hills in melancholy gold.

The moist winds breathe of crisped leaves and flowers
In the damp hollows of the woodland sown,
Mingling the freshness of autumnal showers
With spicy airs from cedar alleys blown.

Beside the brook and on the umber meadow,
Where yellow fern tufts fleck the faded ground,
With folded lids beneath their palmy shadows,
The gentian nods, in dewy slumbers bound.

Upon those soft, fringed lids the bee sits brooding,
Like a fond lover loath to say farewell;
Or, with shut wings and silken folds intruding,
Creeps near her heart, his drowsy tale to tell.

The little birds upon the hillside lonely
Flit noiselessly along from spray to spray,
Silent as a sweet wandering thought that only
Shows its bright wings, and softly glides away.

BOY PHILOSOPHY.

In a city schoolroom some boys and girls were practicing gymnastics, when the following conversation occurred between them and the writer:

"Which will jump better, the boys or the girls?" I asked.

The experiment proved skill on both sides.

"Which ought to jump better, the boys or the girls?" I questioned.

"The boys," was the prompt response.

"Because boys are always jumping. All their games are jumping games. Girls just sit in the house and read a book."

"Then tell me something that girls can do better than boys."

"They can cook," was the ready reply.

"They can sew," came next.

A third boy, with freckled face and merry eyes, added, demurely: "Two girls can stay mad at each other longer than two boys can."

The situation was interesting. The girls assented to the statement, and the boy, upon further questioning, explained in boy fashion: "Well, you see how 'tis. Boys like to go with a lot, and a girl likes to go with one. When one gets mad with another girl, she goes off with her girl friend and talks it over; and they keep talking it over, and that makes it worse still; and then they don't speak to the girl that they're mad at, and the girls take sides and talk it over and keep it up, and sometimes they stay mad for weeks."

Being in pursuit of the boy's theory, I made no comment on choice of terms. The word "mad" was evidently understood by all parties.

"How is it that the boys make up so quickly?" I pursued.

"Well, you see, boys like to play with a lot, and perhaps the two boys that are mad with each other are on the same side in a baseball game, and the captain says to 'em: 'You two fellows make up or you get out.' Then they make up. Or maybe," the speaker continued, earnestly, "the fellow you're mad at is on the base, and when you're running to the base, you call to him to get out of the way; and then you have spoken and made up. Even if you have been fighting, you have to shake hands when the fight is over."

"Is that the rule of the game?" I asked, gravely.

"Yes," the boys assented, "always."

"And do you learn at the same time not to show when you are vexed?"

"Well, boys learn pretty soon. They have to. Suppose you are walking down the street with some boys and one of them says to you, 'Is that your grandfather's collar you're wearing?' another one says, 'How many years have you worn that hat?' and another says, 'Where are you going to put that next batch of freckles? There isn't any room for them now.' If you just laugh, they will stop; but if you show that you're mad, they keep on; and so you learn to laugh, and not show when you are teased."

The replies were suggestive, to say the least. I warmly recommended the girls to adopt the policy of the boys, thinking of the various committees and clubs in which the power to work with a "lot" was demanded of women. How good it would be if the girl's training developed in her the power which the boy acquires! "You make up or you get out," says the boy captain, briefly. He recognizes that the success of the game depends upon cooperation and good fellowship. So it is in other games in which the players have not learned this vital lesson. Is not our failure sometimes traceable to this very lack? The question is worth discussing.

The boys had given me food for meditation. I was grateful to them. One question more I asked, with my thought upon the school curriculum. The question was addressed to the boys and girls: "If you had to select some one to live with, which would you choose, a person who was able to laugh when he was teased and to keep from showing when he was vexed or the one who never fails in arithmetic?"

The answer was unanimous, no contrary minds: "O, the one who laughs when he is teased and doesn't show that he is mad!"

Will it come to pass by and by that the development of this virtue shall find a place in the school curriculum; that the virtue which is always and everywhere virtue, in home and in civic life, shall be enough commended and developed in the schools?—Congregationalist.

THE BLIND CANARY.

While our hostess entertained us at the table, a beautiful little canary broke forth into such exquisite strains as arrested all conversation to listen. He seemed the very incarnation of song; his little throat swelled with the ardor of his strain, and interwoven all through the simple melody were intricate and involved passages of a delicacy and clearness that evoked the highest admiration. But while we watched him, the bird seemed singularly still—apart from his song—moving but slightly upon his perch, and then with evident caution. We inquired the reason of his peculiar carriage, and learned that the poor bird was blind. It seems some careless servant had left him in the hot sun one day, more than a year before, and he had suffered sudden and irremediable blindness.

So this bit of animated song who had charmed us with his vocal accomplishments was singing in a world unpierced by any ray of light. He was not only caged, but unable to see the bars of that cage or beyond them; yet our hostess assured us there had never been a period in his brief bird life unmarked by song. We inquired particularly upon this point, because, under similar circumstances, it would seem a human being would have fallen into silence and melancholy and despair. So sudden and causeless and cruel had been his fate that we should not have been surprised had it stilled, and that forever, the flow of song. On the contrary, his music had acquired a richness and variety and expression never known before.

But why should we say that man would have fallen into melancholy? It is true some might, many would, but not all. From his youth Milton had been a song bird, but from his blindness preëminently "a blind canary." It is not by his earlier poems, graceful and polished as they are, that the world knows him, but by those written after his trial came, and when he showed the whole world how, after three years of sightless life, he would

A HOSPITAL FOR DOLLS.

One of the most interesting hospitals in Philadelphia is conducted on Market street, right in a noisy center, where other patients than those cared for would be made almost wild. Yet these patients—and they are small ones, too—do not seem to care in the least; or if they do, they never say so, for they are all dolls.

The most important medicine in this novel institution consists of glue. Dolls of all conditions and descriptions are gathered there for repairs. One of the most delicate operations is giving a new complexion to the haughty French doll who has passed through a season in a fashionable seashore nursery and whose waxen features have suffered from the loving pranks of baby hands.

Then there are broken noses, smashed porcelain cheeks, belonging to some little girl's favorite. Dolls of this kind come to the hospital by dozens, in spite of the fact that new ones could be purchased for less money than the doll physician charges to make the repairs; but of course any little girl will tell you that the newest doll in the world isn't quite as good as her old, battered playmate. Dolls that have been snatched baldheaded are important patrons of the hospital, and in one of its little rooms there are hundreds of wigs of all colors and varieties, designed some day to grace the head of a doll of high or low degree.

You may be sure that the doll doctor and his wife are favorites with the little folks whose nursery darlings have found renewed health and beauty in the quaint hospital.—Presbyterian.

"FOOLSCAP."

Every one knows what foolscap paper is, but not every one knows why it was so called. An exchange ventures to remark that not one in a hundred that daily use it can answer the question. The following will tell you how the term originated:

When Oliver Cromwell became protector, after the execution of Charles I., he caused the stamp of the cap of liberty to be placed upon the paper used by the English Government. Soon after the restoration of Charles II., having occasion to use some paper for dispatches, some of this government paper was brought to him.

On looking at it and discovering the stamp, he inquired the meaning of it, and on being told, he said: "Take it away; I have nothing to do with a fool's cap!"

The term "foolscap" has since been applied to a certain size of glazed writing paper.—Morning Star.

HOW ONE FOX HELPED ANOTHER.

Joseph Maybaugh, a farmer, who lives near Dundee, O., trapped a large red fox, and, carrying it home, placed it in his corner crib until he could notify his neighbors and have a chase. The next morning the fox was gone. Investigation proved that its mate had assisted the prisoner in making its escape. The fox had worked away on the inside until it had bitten a board loose from its fastenings. This, however, was not sufficient to permit it to get out unless the board was lifted up. The board was held up from the outside, as the teeth marks on it show, until the prisoner crawled to liberty. Tracks of another fox were seen, and there is no doubt that the mate came after the fox inside the crib had loosened the board and held it up. This is one of the brightest fox tricks that old hunters in the neighborhood have yet encountered.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE COVENANTS.

Brother Lipscomb: Please write an article on "The Old Covenant and the New Covenant," bringing out as clearly as possible their relation, or identity, to the Jewish Church and the church of Christ. In Heb. 8, 9, does the writer refer to old and new churches, or what? In other words, what are the old covenant and the new covenant?

JOHN D. EVANS.

The covenants—their relation to each other—were much discussed fifty years ago, and then it was difficult to find a disciple of any scriptural knowledge that was not sure of the distinction between the covenants—the close of one and the introduction of the other. The denominations around us had failed to draw the distinction, had confounded the two, and as frequently went to the old covenant as to the new covenant to find the terms of acceptance with God at this day. As is natural to human nature, extremes beget extremes, and when the disciples saw the error into which they had fallen, they ran to the other extreme and spoke of their being opposite the one to the other, and they ceased to study the law of the old covenant. This is wrong. The law of Moses was added because of transgression, and was a schoolmaster to train the Jews to receive Christ. The things written in the law and God's dealings with those under the law happened for examples and are written for our admonition, lest we sin as they sinned and fall under condemnation of the Spirit.

The basis of the covenants was God's promise to Abraham that he would give to his seed the land of Canaan for an everlasting inheritance and that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed. The promise of this covenant was repeated several times to Abraham—once, when he was tried by the offer of his son, Isaac (Gen. 22: 15-18): "And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said, By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son: that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the seashore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice." But Abraham did not enter into the enjoyment of the blessings promised in this covenant in person. Stephen (Acts 7: 5) says: "And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him." "He became a sojourner in the land of promise, as in a land not his own, dwelling in tents, with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise." (Heb. 11: 9, R. V.)

As a step toward the fulfillment of the promise, God made the covenant of circumcision with him to separate the family of Abraham from the nations of the earth and to prepare them to enter into the enjoyment of all the blessings of the promise. "This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you and thy seed after thee; Every man child among you shall be circumcised. And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt me and you. And he that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man child in your generations, he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed." (Gen. 17: 10-12.)

The children of Abraham did not enter into the possession of this land until the return from Egyptian bondage. On their return God renewed the covenant in a different form, on the tables of stone at Horeb. This giving and accepting the law of God through Moses on Mount Sinai, or Horeb, is called the "covenant." "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine. . . . Moses came and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words which the Lord commanded him. And all the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do. And Moses returned the words of the people unto the Lord." (Ex. 19: 5-8.) This was the covenant with the children of Israel, intended to prepare and fit them for receiving the promised seed—the Messiah. These ten commands were written upon the two tables of stone, and then the laws and judgments growing out of them were written in the book of the law. "He [Moses] took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient." (Ex. 24: 7.) This covenant embraced the covenant of circumcision formerly given to Abraham, and secured the possession of the land of Canaan. It is henceforth spoken of as "the covenant with Israel" and "the everlasting covenant." This covenant bound both God and the children of Israel—the children of Israel to obey and God to give the land and bless, so long as they are faithful; but if they were unfaithful, he would withdraw his blessings and drive them out of the land he had given them. "But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all his commandments and his statutes which I command thee this day; that all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee." (Deut. 28: 15.)

After enumerating a multitude of afflictions that would come upon them in their own country, he said: "And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known."

The covenant of God with the children of Israel secured to them the land of Canaan and abundant blessings if they would be faithful to him, but it required their banishment from the land given their fathers if they refused to obey God.

They broke the covenant of God, rebelled against his laws, and, as a people, forfeited the blessings of his covenant and called down upon themselves the curses of that covenant. While the nation as a whole broke his covenant and rejected his rule, there were a few that were willing to serve him, and he took the broken covenant out of the way and made a new and better covenant with them. Jeremiah (31: 31-34) foretold of this covenant: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was a husband unto them, saith the Lord: but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."

The old covenant was one of law to be obeyed, without touching and changing the heart. So it was imperfect, and he introduced one that would affect and enlist the heart and make the service a heart service. The laws would be impressed on the heart, so all the feelings of the heart would enter into the service and make that service one of joy and gladness, instead of fear and toil. The old covenant was fulfilled for man in Christ. He completely complied with its laws and took it out of the way and introduced the new covenant. "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." (Heb. 8: 6-13.)

The covenant he made with them when they came out of Egypt is the law given by Moses. It was imperfect because the children of Israel, by their transgressions, were not able to appreciate or obey a better one. Both the covenants were made in pursuance of the promise made to Abraham. The one made through Moses was subsidiary and preparatory to the one made through Christ. Paul (Gal. 3: 17-25) says: "The covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. . . . Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator. . . . Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster." God promised to bless the world through the family of Abraham. They transgressed, so were not worthy to receive or bestow the blessing, so God gave the law of Moses as a schoolmaster to train them for Christ; but when Christ came, he took the law out of the way and offered them the privilege of becoming children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

The two covenants are presented also in 2 Cor. 3: 6, 11: "Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away: how shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious."

The covenant of Moses was fleshly, based on promise of temporal good, an earthly inheritance; the covenant through Christ is spiritual, based on promises of spiritual and eternal good, and of a heavenly inheritance that shall never fade away, of a spiritual and eternal companionship with God. Paul says (Col. 2: 13-15): "And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross; and having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it."

These ordinances of the fleshly covenant were contrary to the people of God. So he took them out of the way, nailed them to the cross, and introduced them into the higher and better covenant. We could quote many other scriptures showing the distinctness of the two covenants, the superiority of the one over the other, and that one served its end, was contrary to the people of God, and was taken out of the way, with all of its fleshly, material, "dead-wood" services, and was superseded by a living, spiritual covenant, in which all the services must be in spirit and in truth. TEMPORIZING WITH EVIL.

Brother Lipscomb: I fear there is trouble brooding in the church of Christ here in the nature of that spoken of in Gal. 2: 4. Some of the brethren have written to a man working in the employ of the missionary society, asking him to hold a meeting here. He has made a favorable reply. Some brethren oppose his coming. Those who favor his coming argue this way: "(1) He is a smart man. If the missionary society is wrong, why does he not forsake it? (2) If he comes, he will not press the society question (3) If we employ him, we will have nothing to do with the society." I have explained these things to the best of my ability. There are no brethren here in sympathy with the society or organ, and an article from your pen on this line, without letting it be known that you were requested to write it, might do good. A.

P.S. Be sure not to print this letter.

The above letter was received not for publication, so we drop out all names and dates and publish it, because it suggests points we desire to comment on. First, we have been writing articles all along, almost continually, showing the evil of bringing evil influences into the church. The Book says: "Evil communications corrupt good manners." A preacher coming in and holding a successful meeting always gains a great influence in a congregation, especially over the unthinking, who are carried away with success. If he does not speak a word of the society, the fact that he is a member of it and has been in its employ will commend the evil. We have examples of this all over the country. Indeed, this is the usual way of introducing the society. It is to invite preachers who favor societies to hold them meetings or to labor with them. They gain influence with some. These favor getting preachers to come who are favorable to the minority and oppose getting those not, until finally they work a majority in their favor, and those true to the truth are driven out, or, worse, violate their convictions. That has been the history in leading the two oldest churches of Christ in Nashville into the society and the use of the organ. The Woodland Street Church was started and built up chiefly by Brother Sewell and myself. The house was built of means raised chiefly by those opposed to these things. Others came in who favored them. No fuss was made over the matter, but no preacher satisfied them unless he was a society preacher. No public preaching was done on the subject until they felt they had a majority; then Brother Sewell and those who, with him, were faithful to the old landmarks, had to leave, and no preacher since has been invited to preach in the house that does not favor these departures.

The money we gave to forward one cause has been used by those to whom it was intrusted to build up a different one and to oppose and overthrow the cause it was given to advance.

Very much the same course has been pursued at the Vine Street Church. Many of the members were opposed to these changes. Those who favored them opposed any one preaching there unless he favored them. Nothing was said publicly, but the influence worked until the majority were on that side; then those who stood for the old landmarks had to leave, or, worse, do violence to their conscientious convictions. No preacher has since been invited to preach at Vine Street Church that is not known to favor these innovations; yet they talk of the exclusiveness of those who oppose these innovations. The same thing occurred at Memphis, Tenn.; Fort Worth and Dallas, Texas; and the same process is now going forward in a number of churches in Tennessee and elsewhere.

Those holding to the truth yield to the opposition so far as not to have a preacher actively working for the truth, and time will work the results. It is much easier to pull down and demoralize a church than it is to build it up. One called and recognized as a brother preaching an error can do tenfold the harm that one regarded as an opponent, holding the same error, can do. So it would be much better to get a Methodist to hold your meeting than one called a "brother," who holds to error.

The letter shows this. It says the brethren say this brother is a smart man, and if the society were wrong, he would drop it. This shows they are ready to be led by him into it; but they would not think of using such an argument in behalf of a Methodist preacher or a Baptist or a Roman Catholic. There are hundreds of men in all these churches smarter than this man, and just as honest and sincere, too. This very man once told me that he was doubtful of the lawfulness of the society, but it furnished a better guarantee to the preacher for a support than he had without it, and this attracted him. He said he intended to study it; but the money was on that side, and then he was young and was flattered and put forward by the society, and he went in that way.

When people adopt the rule of determining what is right by what smart men say, they follow men, not God. In Isa. 29: 13, 14, God says: "Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people: . . . for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." Jesus said: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." Paul quoted the above from Isaiah, and asked: "Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise." There is not much encouragement or promise in the Bible to those who follow the wisdom of men instead of their own understanding of God's teaching. All these innovations are the wisdom of men, and God says they shall be brought to naught. The only objection I make to any of these innovations is, they are of the wisdom of men, not from God. If none of these brethren are in sympathy with the society or organ, why do they desire to honor and support those who are? There are brethren faithful and true to the word of God; why should they be passed by and those honored and supported who are not? To do this is to encourage innovations and put a premium on adding to the appointments of God.

There is one more feature of this letter I wish to notice; it is the postscript. Why not print the letter with your name to it? The writer evidently believes these innovations are wrong; then why not print the letter that lets it be known? There may be other special reasons, but so often we find men willing to privately encourage others to stand for the truth and give facts to oppose, but are not willing to do this themselves. To look at it from grounds of policy, a man who shrinks from declaring his position publicly will never succeed as a preacher. Such a man can never command the respect of men. He may manage to get a living or money, but he will never command the respect of the world, because he does not respect himself or his own convictions of truth. Unless a man respects himself, he cannot command the respect of others. When he begins to shrink from a free declaration of his convictions, it will grow on him; when he begins to dodge, there is no stopping place for him. He will grow weaker and weaker as he grows older.

In connection with this, we ask: What is it to confess Christ in this age? Is it not to maintain his truth and openly to stand on the side of truth in every issue in which truth is involved? What is it to deny him? Is it not for fear of losing our popularity to refuse to stand for the truth, to be noncommittal when there is danger of losing popularity? We do not think of the important issue involved in our failing to stand firmly and openly for the truth, no matter what the opposition be. Indeed, the greater the opposition to the truth, the more important that every friend of truth stand openly for it. Indeed, this moral cowardice is one of the greatest aids to error. To fail to oppose it is but a slight remove from supporting error.

I think there is but little doubt that if those who regard these innovations as wrong had spoken plainly and firmly against them, determined not to become partakers in things not commanded by God, they would not have been introduced into a single church of God. They temporized with them, and then floated with the current, rather than stand firm with God for his truth; they are responsible for all the perversions of truth and divisions that have taken place in the churches of God through these innovations. Those favoring the innovations never permit preachers opposed to them to hold meetings for them. "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

IN MEMORY OF WILLIAM D. NELSON.

Whereas our estimable and beloved brother, William D. Nelson, was taken from us by death on September 11, 1900, aged forty-four years, eight months, and eleven days, which sad event caused the deepest sorrow to the members of the church of Christ and the Sunday school at Waverly, Tenn.; therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Nelson we realize a very helpful and good man has left us—one whose absence is deeply felt, and who is sadly missed by the entire congregation; one whose kindly face, brotherly hand shake, and cheering words of comfort and encouragement brightened the pathway of so many of us. For a number of years he has been a stay and support in the church, with the open-handed generosity so characteristic of his genial Christianity. We shall miss his guidance, his wise counsels, and his safe teachings.

Resolved, That it gives us deepest sorrow to think that we shall meet him no more in the walks of men or feel the warmth of his presence at our sacred Lord's day meetings.

Resolved, That our deepest sympathies go out to all those relatives that mourn him, especially to his bereaved widow and fatherless children.

Resolved, That a page of our church record be given to the memory of our dear, departed brother, and a copy of these resolutions be given to his family and a copy sent to the Waverly Sentinel and one to the Gospel Advocate for publication.

Brother Nelson confessed Christ under the preaching of Brother H. C. Fleming in 1890 and was baptized by him.

HOOPER.

Arthur G. Hooper, son of Brother and Sister W. C. Hooper, of Sycamore, Tenn., was born on September 27, 1881, and, after a brief illness of fever, died on August 17, 1900. His life was brief; his race was short, but well run; and now comes rest. He was an obedient son, a devoted brother, and a faithful Christian. His father writes me: "Arthur obeyed the gospel when about thirteen years old, and has never faltered once." When we think how bright the glories of the faithful are, how strong our hopes should be! Who that saw the parting hours of loved ones gone before could wish them back to suffer and die again? But few boys possessed brighter prospects than did Arthur and but few parents possessed brighter hopes of a child's brilliant future and of strong arms upon which to lean in declining days; but here our fondest hopes are vain. When we see dear ones pass away in the triumphs of a living faith, we should console ourselves with the exceeding great and precious promise: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." Our loss is their gain and God's glory.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Dear parents, brother, and sisters of the deceased, look up; cast your burden upon the Lord, "for he careth for you." May we all try to live faithfully here, so that when we, too, are called to go, we may be prepared for that home where hearts neither ache, bleed, nor break over withered hopes and blighted prospects, but where life is a treasure sublime. May God's richest grace abide with the bereaved.

DEMONTBREUN.

Dr. J. W. Demontbreun was born on December 24, 1865, and died at his home, at Joelton, Tenn., on June 24, 1900. Brother Demontbreun was married to Willie Carney on October 15, 1889. To them were born five children: three of whom, with their mother, survive him. He was a devoted husband, a kind and affectionate father, a good citizen, an able physician, and a man who will be greatly missed. He obeyed the gospel when quite young, and for a number of years was a zealous disciple; but last year, in a meeting which he got me to hold in a grove near him, he told me that living a long distance from the church house caused him to neglect the worship and grow careless, but that he was stronger in the faith than ever and expected to be more faithful in the future than in the past. He begged me to come back and hold them another meeting. On the night before Brother Demontbreun died he took his wife and little girl in his arms and told them not to doubt for him, that his "way was bright as the morning star." A promising future lay before him, and none seemed destined to live longer than he. "In the midst of life we are in death." Death is so sad to those left behind to mourn and weep, but to those who are ready to go, what a blessing is death! "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." May the peace of God, with his richest blessings, abide with his loved ones left behind, is the prayer of his true friend and brother.

PROCTOR.

Little Pauline, nine-year-old daughter of William H. and Sarah Proctor, died of diphtheria on October 5, 1900. While with us on earth, she was always talking of heaven and seemed to be longing to see God and to know him better than we mortals on earth know our Maker. She was always at her place when the Sunday school bell called the little ones to thoughts of devotion, and we will miss her clear, sweet voice which joined in every song we used to sing. Now, in the angelic choir, Pauline sings songs unlawful for us to hear. But some day we shall hear her sing again; some day we shall see the fruitage of what was on earth a pure, sweet bud, without one blemish. Pauline was the sunshine of her home, but she has gone as a messenger from her home to the angels to dwell forever in the sunshine of that world, the light of which is the risen Christ, who said, so tenderly and in such tones of love: "Suffer the little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me." She died at the quiet morning time, and the angels paused in their morning hymn to welcome their little sister home. Let us be faithful and we shall all see her again some day.

In Memoriam.

Maria A. Stout was born at Nashville, Tenn., on January 3, 1840, and died at the home of her brother-in-law, R. L. Stubblefield, in Viola, Tenn., on June 23, 1900. Thus once more has death taken from us a true, loving woman and left a void in heart and home that cannot be filled. Sister Stout being a faithful member of the church of Christ at Viola, Tenn., the congregation feels that in her death it has suffered great loss. In her life she beautifully exemplified the Christian graces—faith, hope, and charity. Large-hearted and full of loving sympathy, she was a friend to the distressed, and to those who sought her in tender trust she extended her gentle sympathy and gave, from the rich experiences of her life, the help and comfort best suited to each one's need. Often at the bedside of the sick she ministered to the suffering and smoothed the pillow of the dying with an innate gentleness peculiar to her. She was the light, the cheer, the ever-present help of her brother-in-law's family—a second mother to her sister's children, and to her they owe much of their well-being and prosperity in life. Hers was a life of such beautiful self-renunciation, such devotion to duty, such constant attention to the daily demands of life, that well she merits: "She hath done what she could." Unconscious during her last illness, yet she waked to whisper: "I thought the angels had come." Aye, and the angels came and bare her spirit aloft, where "beyond these voices there is peace." Into the Elysian fields of perfect rest her weary feet have gone, and the humble, trusting child of God is safe evermore. Not far from the tear-showered and grief-stricken home in Viola she sleeps peacefully, awaiting the coming of the King. "Aunt Addie" was my friend. I loved her and feel keenly my personal loss; yet her influence lives, and the advice she gave, freighted with wisdom garnered from the varied and rich experiences of her life, may serve as a warning voice amid threatening dangers to those friends who survive her. To the dear family whom she loved so devotedly, and who gave to her the strong, pure affection of their hearts, a tender whisper says: "She is not dead, but sleepeth." So, amid falling tears, may we look aloft, with "onward, upward," echoing through the recesses of our hearts. May we press toward the fair country of the blessed, which is bounded only by God's limitless love, and clasp her hand once more in the presence of our King.

A FRIEND.

The following from Forward on "Love's Cost" is so true: "We hear much of the sweetness of love, of the joy of loving; but it has another side also, and that is why it is forever the antithesis of selfishness—love costs. 'Every love that enters the heart opens the door to sorrow.' No pain can touch the one dear to us and we not suffer also; no danger can threaten and our heart not keep anxious watch. Every cloud that darkens that other sky throws its shadow across our sunlight; every sin that stains the beloved soul hurts and aches in ours as if it were our own—aye, worse; for our own sins we may cast aside and seek pardon for, but who can repent for his brother? Love's pain lies in its powerlessness. To long to bring relief and to be unable to suffer with because we cannot suffer for, to watch from without the battle we cannot help to fight, and to share every heart-ache, disappointment, and loss—this is the cost of loving. But only so does our human life grow deep and take on worth and dignity. Only so can we ever be akin to Him who bore our griefs, and carried our sorrows; who, 'having loved his own which were in the world, . . . loved them'—through all their blundering, their blindness, their sins—'unto the end.'"

IF you look at a dozen common lamp-chimneys, and then at Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," you will see the differences—all but one—they break from heat; Macbeth's don't; you can't see that.

Common glass is misty, milky, dusty; you can't see through it; Macbeth's is clear.

Tough, clear glass is worth fine work; and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you hear pop, clash on the least provocation.

God's Ways are Perfect.

"He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." (Deut. 32: 4.) Again: "As for God, his way is perfect; the word of the Lord is tried: he is a buckler to all them that trust in him." (2 Sam. 22: 31.)

From the foregoing passages we learn that God is perfect in all his ways; all he does, therefore, is perfect. The first man was perfect, so far as his formation or creation was concerned. Nothing additional was needed, nothing could be added, nothing taken away. The first tabernacle was perfect, for God warned Moses to "make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount." (Heb. 8: 5.) Any addition to or subtraction from the "pattern" would have been an open violation of God's law, for his law is perfect and all his ways are perfect.

When Christ built his church, did he build a perfect or an imperfect church? Did he give to the world an imperfect pattern and leave it for man's wisdom to supply the deficiency or imperfection? I think not. Christ is the head, foundation, and lawgiver of the church. In 2 Cor. 12 Paul makes an argument in favor of the perfectness of the "body" (church) of Christ by alluding to a physical body. However, let us not forget the fact that Paul had in mind a perfect body, not one maimed, halt, or going on crutches.

If a perfect physical body needs no aids, crutches, or supports, why, then, should we depart from the pattern and try to support the church with crutches, aids, etc., in the way of Endeavor societies, mission societies, etc.? The fact is, the church needs no such help, but needs consecrated men and women who are satisfied with the divine pattern, who are willing to do all they can in this world to promote the cause of Christ in the salvation of souls as directed by Christ, the head of the church.

The New Testament gives the pattern of conversion under the preaching of the apostles, and we should be very careful to work by it. In the congregations established by the apostles the pattern of worship is given as plainly as the pattern of conversion is given in Acts of the Apostles. If we can add to one, we can add to the other; if we can subtract from one, we can subtract from the other. If not, why not? These things being true, we conclude, therefore, that the silence of the Bible should be respected as much as its revelations,

We dare not disrespect the silence of the grand old Book; for if we do, we are set adrift on the boisterous sea of time, with neither chart nor compass to guide us. Let us, then, be satisfied with the "ancient landmarks which thy fathers have set," and in all things work by the divine pattern and leave the results in the hands of God.

Any man claiming to be a preacher of the gospel of Christ who will not go and preach without some board or human method behind him to secure his salary is not worthy to be called a "Christian." He is a professional preacher—so much preaching for so much money. The preachers (?) who have so much to say about missionary work and the need of organized effort to carry it on are the very ones not to go into the destitute places and preach, unless they are sent and paid by the board; at least, this is true in West Tennessee. I have some knowledge of the preachers who are doing the work and the way they are doing it. The very ones who are doing most and making the greatest sacrifice in destitute places in West Tennessee are, by the society folks, accused of doing absolutely nothing. Still, I know of no congregation or preacher that is doing all that it or he can do. So let us all do more and blow less, and souls will be brought to Christ, and all concerned will be blessed. JOHN R. WILLIAMS. Hornbeak, Tenn.

The Glenorminster butter factory in Australia is probably the biggest thing of its kind in the world. The supply of milk in the flush for several weeks reaches the enormous amount of one hundred and sixty-five thousand pounds per day. It is also stated that some of the patrons furnish as high as five thousand pounds per day, and the average is about two thousand pounds per day; and these amounts are produced on farms of from one to two hundred acres each. In the separating room are sixteen large separators of four hundred gallons per hour capacity each, that when necessary can handle six thousand gallons per hour.

Cotton seed is a very marked instance of a former by-product of the farm which has become of enormous value and of varied uses. The meats are made into oil cake and oil meal for feeding stuff and for fertilizers; into crude oil, cotton-seed stearin, salad oil, cottolene, miners' oil, and soap; and the oil is exported to Europe and brought back again as olive oil. The hulls may be used for making paper; they are made into bran for cattle food; they are used for fuel, and are an important contribution to the list of fertilizers. The estimated value of the cotton seed of a ten-million-bale crop of cotton (to the planters) is about thirty million dollars, and this value is now almost entirely appropriated by them.

How Far Can a Bell Be Heard?

When "bell metal" was exclusively made of copper and tin, a bell was hung in New York reputed to have been heard thirteen miles—a sort of world's record. But that bell weighed ten tons. There is a bell foundry in Hillsboro, O.—the C. S. Bell Company—that manufactures bells from crystal metal, alloyed by cast steel, having so great volume that the distance their mellow tones will cover is limited only by the size of the cast. This new bell metal is a wonderful discovery, because it can be used with equally striking effect in the small bells for farm and school. The C. S. Bell Company makes a very attractive offer to churches in the way of a liberal discount and a novel way to get the money together. This method of getting a fine bell could also be applied to supplying village schools and fire companies. An illustrated catalogue will be sent any one interested in the purchase of a bell. This catalogue gives the experience of hundreds of purchasers and makes many useful suggestions.

Church News.

ARKANSAS.

Griffithville, October 4.—Brother M. A. Smith, of Lone Oak, Tex., has just closed a meeting of eight days' duration at this place—a new town on the Desare and Northern Railroad—with four additions to the one body and the brotherhood much revived and encouraged. The brethren here hope to build a church house soon. There is plenty of work and cheap land here, and brethren will be welcomed in our midst.
W. A. DUGGER.

KENTUCKY.

Olive Hill, October 15.—This is a busy little mountain town, on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad. Its fire-clay deposits are practically inexhaustible and are said to be the finest in the world. I planted a congregation here last February and have visited it as often as I could. In spite of difficulties, there has been a steady growth of the young church. On last Saturday night Dr. C. L. Hudgens and wife made the good confession and were buried with Christ in baptism, in Tygart Creek, at the same hour of the night. The Doctor is a prominent physician in Eastern Kentucky and a very influential man; he will prove a tower of strength to the cause of Christ. On yesterday—Sunday—there were two additions, one of whom came from the Missionary Baptists, and one old man, nearly sixty years of age, confessed Christ.
R. B. NEAL.

TENNESSEE.

Manchester, October 12.—I have just closed an eleven-days' meeting with the church of Christ at Mud Creek, twelve miles from this place, which resulted in nine additions—one from the Baptists, one from the Methodists, and seven from the world. Our audiences were large and attentive throughout the entire meeting, and I trust the seed sown may bring forth other fruit in the near future. The members seem to have taken on new life and are now meeting regularly upon the first day of the week, a duty heretofore neglected at that place. I will begin a protracted meeting with the church of Christ at Pelham, in Grundy County, on the third Lord's day in this month. I have also promised to hold a meeting for the church of Christ at Morrison, in Warren County, beginning on the first Sunday in November.
JAMES K. HILL.

Smyrna, October 8.—The writer preached at the home of a Methodist friend on Friday night, October 5, 1900, and, by the power of the gospel, a Presbyterian lady and her brother were induced to fall into the loving arms of Jesus through obedience to his commands. As the candidates could not make arrangements for baptism to take place on the following morning, it was delayed until the following Monday morning at 7:30 o'clock. On Saturday night and Sunday I met with the brethren at the McMahan Schoolhouse, thirty-six miles from the aforesaid place. I had splendid hearing and succeeded in getting the brethren to agree to go to work and build a house in which to worship. I assisted these brethren in holding a ten-days' meeting last July, and nineteen persons were baptized, confessing that Jesus is "the Christ, the Son of the living God," and twelve prodigals were reclaimed to the fold. May God bless the faithful everywhere.

S. H. HALL.

Laguado, October 15.—My appointments at Flat Creek on the fourth Lord's day in September and at Laguado on the fifth Lord's day in September were called in, and, as the latter appointment was set for the second Lord's day in October, at that time I began preaching the gospel in the Colored Methodist Episcopal meeting-house, with a large crowd, and I think the meeting will be a good one in sowing the seed. I am very thankful to Brother Lipscomb and Brother Martin for their timely words of advice and encouragement, along the line of mission work, to the College Street congregation and the Line Street congregation. I thank them also for their fellowship. Brother Harris closed a meeting at St. John Meetinghouse, in Wilson County, on Tuesday night after the fourth Lord's day in September. The results were one addition by baptism, one person reclaimed, and splendid interest. The white brethren at this place have made some effort to do mission work among the colored people here, and they seem to be much interested in the work, with Dr. Arrington in the lead. The little band at Cowan street, in East Nashville, is moving on slowly, but the Gay street brethren, it seems to me, are wanting to do like other folks. Brother Smith, of Kansas City, Mo., is with them and is promoting all of the society fads. I love the old way and am trying to get nearer every day.
S. W. WOMACK.

TEXAS.

Gober, October 15.—I left this place (my home) on August 17, 1900, for a trip to Indian Territory, where I spent one month holding meetings and teaching from house to house. My first meeting was at Lone Star, at which place I preached ten days; having nine additions, six of whom obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which made them free from sin, one prodigal returned, and two took membership. My next work was at Silo, following the work of a holiness man, who had almost deceived the elect. At that place one lady, who had about decided that baptism was taken out of the way—having listened to the holiness man's preaching, without reading herself—heard the gospel, believed, and obeyed it. I told the congregation not to believe what any preacher said, but to hear him, and read and compare what he preaches with the Bible. That lady said she had read and learned it was not best to believe what every preacher has to say. On the second Sunday in September I went out on Twelve Mile Prairie to set a congregation in order, which was done with but little trouble, as quite a number had met, all seeming anxious to unite their efforts for the advancement of the cause in their midst. The brethren were anxious that my every want be supplied while in their midst, nor were they forgetful to contribute to my necessity on my departure. They are very anxious to have a sound gospel preacher labor among them next year; they insisted on my staying with them, but I could not. I promised to visit them, however, when opportunity afforded. I met with several preaching brethren while there. Brother Price, Brother Chisholm, and Brother Shippman came to the meeting at Lone Star. I also met Brother Ingram ("Buckhorn Bill"). He devotes all his time to the work, laboring from year to year building up the cause in his section of Indian Territory. He told me he had calls for work that would keep five men busy for quite a time. There is work, the right kind of work, to be done everywhere. Brethren, let us be up and about our Father's business.

"When a Man is Free from Sin."

Under the above caption in the Gospel Advocate of September 20, 1900, and also in a previous copy of the Advocate, Brother J. R. Hand writes and Brother D. Lipscomb replies by way of issue. After reading and reflecting on said articles and replies, I desire to offer a few of my own thoughts.

I think a proper and restricted meaning of the term "sinner" will aid some to a better understanding of the subject. A sinner is one who is practicing sin. Therefore, when a man ceases the practice of sin, he ceases to be a sinner; yet the guilt because of sin abideth upon him. Ceasing to sin is death to sin, but death to sin does not remove the guilt of sin.

A man may commit murder, yet if he turns from his course and quits murdering, though guilty before the law, he is not a murderer. An actual case of this character came under my observation since the close of the war between the States. A Mr. Dickerson, of Kaufman County, Tex., foully murdered a Norwegian in the village of Prairieville, in the same county. Dickerson left the country, professed religion, and became a preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church in North Arkansas. Nine years after the killing he was arrested, brought back, and tried in the circuit court of Kaufman County for the murder of this Norwegian. The court adjudged him guilty and assessed his punishment at fifteen years' servitude in the State penitentiary.

Can it be truly said of Dickerson that through those long years, much of which time was spent, as he believed, in the service of God, he was a sinner? No; though guilt still rested upon him, because the demands of a violated law had not been satisfied.

An application now is easy. Said God through Isaiah (1: 16, 17): "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings; . . . cease to do evil; learn to do well."

No, Brother Hand, Brother Lipscomb does not baptize a sinner, but a man who has died to sin by putting away the evil of his doings, which is dying to sin. Having died to sin, he is buried with Christ to arise therefrom to walk in newness of life. Faith in Christ leads man away from sin, which is death to sin; but death to sin is one thing and pardon from sin is quite another thing. Man of his own volition dies to sin, but God alone pardons, or forgives, sin. Christ said: "Lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." (Matt. 13: 15.) Mark (4: 12) adds: "And their sins should be forgiven them." God does the forgiving, while man does the turning.

Does God sit with pen in hand or with clerk instructed to write "pardon" at some precise point in man's conversion, or is guilt effaced by a compliance with the law made and provided in the case? This may be further elucidated by Andrew Johnson's amnesty proclamation in the year 1865, providing for the pardon of those who engaged in rebellion against the general government. He, as chief executive of the nation, set forth in his proclamation conditions upon which those held in rebellion might be pardoned and again become citizens of the United States. He then delegated authority to subordinate officers, and sent them to the people of the South, and by them the conditions of pardon were made known. We of the South heard and considered the conditions, accepted and complied with them, and thus we were granted pardon by the President of the United States. But to ask for the precise point at which we became citizens would be folly, seeing that a routine of acts, conditions, had been complied with to attain the end, and when complied with the law had been vindicated, its demands satisfied, and we released from guilt.

In like manner should our release from the guilt of sin be considered. Men turn "from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me [Christ]." (Acts 26: 18.) The precise point at which a man is pardoned in conversion I regard as unimportant. V. I. STIRMAN.

THE GOSPEL ADVOCATE TO NEW TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS FROM THE TIME THE SUBSCRIPTION IS RECEIVED TO THE CLOSE OF THE CENTURY FOR 25 CENTS.

The Christian Warrior. (Eph. 6: 12-18.)

Paul, in writing to the Ephesian brethren (Eph. 6: 12), says: "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." When we have such a terrible enemy as this to fight against, how we ought to heed Paul's admonition to take unto us the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand in the evil day!

Now, a soldier requires, first, to be sworn in as such to serve his country. Imagine a man coming to the proper officers and making application for acceptance as a soldier, and, when there are certain rules laid down for his acceptance, making objection and saying that something else would do just as well as the rules laid down, or saying to the proper officer: "Don't you think it would be all right, as long as my heart is in the work, to do away with the oath of allegiance, or a part of it?" Would that officer think the man's heart was right, when on the very threshold of entrance into service he wanted to equivocate? The officer would at once tell him he was no man for the service of his country. But after taking the proper steps for making the man a soldier and having perfect faith in the country he is about to serve, his next thought is: "What armor have I to use?" Paul here uses the Roman soldier, whom they were all acquainted with, as the pattern he wished them to accept, with his equipment, and likens each article to the same place in the Christian's armor:

1. The girdle was given to the Roman soldier for strengthening his loins when going into active service. So Paul says the first thing is to get the girdle of truth. What a grand thing is truth! What is truth? One man will say it is what a man speaks that is true. This may be true, but the higher idea of truth is obtained when we look at the Son of man as the highest example of truth, and, in fact, the standard of truth for the world. We see the perfection of truth and know that there is no action but that which comes from the highest motive. We then remember that there is nothing that acts or makes a lie that is allowed to enter the kingdom of heaven, and the man with truth copied from this high standard can come before the world with the strength of Christ.

2. "Breastplate of righteousness," or right doing. If we imitate our great Exemplar, all the enemy's attempts to damage the cause by an attack on our character will be frustrated by the life they will have to meet, and when they see us with our lamps trimmed and burning, they will be foiled, and Christ glorified.

3. Having "your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." The next thing necessary for the soldier was sandals. When we go to the world with the gospel of peace, we have what will smooth our path, because we place before the world the greatest act of love ever shown to the world.

4. "Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." The darts used were usually poisoned ones, and would poison the whole system. How true we find the same thing of the Christian to-day! What things people will say of the man trying to live a godly life, and what a comfort and consolation in the thought that our Lord was in the same position! What little faith is shown when man wants to bring his wisdom into the church! Look at the numerous man-made schemes for bringing a crowd to church, such as pastors, organs, choirs, and the numerous societies of man's organization, and ask them for a "Thus saith the Lord," and they answer you with all the assurance of Satan himself that the Lord's plan would never succeed without these things, that they are necessary to obtain a crowd. How little faith is shown in such action! Brethren, let us remember that even one man, with the Lord on his side and a "Thus saith the Lord," is worth a thousand without him.

5. "Helmet of salvation." A helmet is a covering for the head, and when a man is in a position of salvation, he can have the faith that will cover his whole life.

6. "The sword of the Spirit," the chief implement of aggression. This is the word of God, and we must remember it is a two-edged sword, and if we are not acting right, it will cut us deeper than the enemy. We meet all temptations with a "Thus saith the Lord" and we have no trouble, remembering the way our Lord met Satan in the great temptation with "It is written." This will silence when everything else fails.

7. The soldier must have the very choicest food to make strength. The Christian is supplied with this in prayer. Praying always—wherever we are, having our petitions ascending to God—strengthens us for our duties.

8. Watchfulness. This is one thing a good soldier must do: watch. So with the Christian. If he is to be successful, he must watch for all his faults and rectify them, so that Christ may be glorified; then he must always watch for his Lord; and, above all, he must practice with the soldier's outfit; that he may know how to use

Miss Maud Kenyon,

Of 1533 Orange Street, Los Angeles, Cal., writes: "I had been afflicted with my eyes for over a year with such a dreadful itching and inflammation that I could not use them for anything. Physicians had given me many different remedies which were like using so much water; they measured my eyes for glasses, which I got and wore for some time, but they did not benefit me in the least. My mother desired me to write to Dr. R. V. Pierce and explain the condition of my eyes. I did so, and after following your advice, and using eight bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' and eight of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' can say my trouble is entirely cured. I would advise any one so afflicted to try these wonderful medicines. My health was never so good as it is now, and I shall never tire of praising Dr. Pierce's medicines."

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter and secure a specialist's advice free of charge.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville, Tenn., to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville at 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

Southwest Texas—Report for September.

During September I received for this work through the mails as follows: C. W. Sewell, Corpus Christi, Tex., $1; D. F. Goss, Seymour, Tex., $1. Total for the month, $2. Space is valuable and I do not care to occupy much room in the Gospel Advocate with this matter. Every member of my family has just had a siege of fever, except myself. I am very busy taking care of my little crop. If no further misfortune overtakes us, it will about pay up the year's expenses to date. My family and I are almost alone in our efforts to serve and worship the Lord aright. We have about one dozen nominal members within seven miles of us, but recently we broke bread alone. Anything from Gospel Advocate readers to help us provide for winter will be thankfully received. G. W. BONHAM.

Theory is as Chaff.

I am quite sure that some of our good brethren spend too much time and space in the Gospel Advocate theorizing. The plain, practical, everyday Christian duties are so numerous and pressing that no one should be willing to waste time and talent on mere speculation. Such subjects as "When is a Man Freed from Sin?" are of no practical value whatever, but are calculated to confuse and weaken those who are not well-established in "the faith." If a person can serve God acceptably while in the kingdom of darkness, the denominations are correct in contending that any one may be a servant of God without entering the church, and that it is not necessary to become a member of that body at all in order to be saved eternally. But the trouble about this position is it has no foundation, except in the opinions and speculations of men. There is a promised blessing invariably connected with acceptable service, and of course where there is no promise there is no service. The "laborers" were required to "go . . . into the vineyard" (Matt. 20: 1, 7) in order to get to the work and the blessing (wages) promised for it; but they must go if they get into the vineyard. Yet the going is no part of service. The same is true of the prodigal son. (Luka 15.) His coming back was absolutely necessary, but could not be called "service" in any sense, as it only placed him in a position to do acceptable service for his father.

If I should hire a man to do some work, I would consider him very unreasonable if he should claim to be serving me, and, consequently, entitled to wages as soon as he starts from home; but, according to Brother Hand and Brother Walling, his claim would be just.

No one has any assurance of being in God's service until he has complied with all the conditions of salvation; nor has any one the least promise of even one blessing until he has been baptized, or enters the watery grave. In connection with this last act (baptism) we are promised at least three blessings—viz., "pardon of sins," "gift of the Holy Spirit," "adopted sons" and daughters. What does it matter as to when the pardon of sins takes place? That is God's business; and we will do well to look well after our part of the work and let his alone. Bowie, Tex. W. S. VICKREY.

Tent Meeting.

This meeting was held at Sanger, Tex., beginning on the fourth Lord's day in September and closing at the water on Monday after the first Lord's day in October. Sanger is a mission point and has heretofore been neglected by our brethren. The writer had a desire to preach the word in Sanger and went to see about a place to preach, but could not secure one. I was determined, however, to go and give them a chance to hear the old story of the cross, therefore I thought the next thing was to get a tent. The loyal brethren at Fort Worth, Tex., informed me I could use their tent. Many said it would do no good for me to spend my time at a place like Sanger, but all this did not in any wise discourage me; hence, I went, and had a good meeting. It rained so much at first that not many people could come, but when it quit raining and while it was yet muddy, the audiences began to increase. On the last night of the meeting more people came than could get under the tent. Of course this would be a little thing in a place where the cause of Christ is well represented, but in a bitter sectarian stronghold it is indeed encouraging to a loyal man of God to see the people so anxious to hear the word.

I went to Sanger of my own accord, trusting in God for help, but I do hope to see the day when the church of Christ—those who oppose mission boards, etc.—will preach the gospel of Christ in every nook and corner in every county in all the States. The meeting resulted in four baptisms and many others thinking and talking about the preaching. May God bless the faithful in Christ. Krum, Tex. D. S. LIGON.

"The Sexual Instinct—Its Use and Dangers as Affecting Heredity and Morals." By James Foster Scott. Pages, 436; price, $2. E. B. Treat & Co., New York.

This volume contains much plain speech for which the author makes no apology; neither does he need to make any. When warnings are given to people who give reins to their animal passions and subject themselves and others to so many dangers of which they are ignorant, no apologies are necessary. The design, therefore, is to furnish the non-professional man with a sufficiently thorough knowledge of matters pertaining to the sexual sphere which he cannot afford to be without. In regard to himself and the information given, the author says: "In fairness to myself, it must be stated that my knowledge of these subjects has been acquired through legitimate channels. Upon my very entrance into university life my attention was first directed to the subject by an address from the late President Porter, of Yale University; then came the experience as a medical student at Edinburgh, Vienna, and London; then a residence of two and one-half years in a hospital devoted exclusively to obstetrics and the diseases of women, followed by several years more of hospital and private practice. Thus I have learned to appreciate the rôle of women in nature, and to abhor the ignorance which will permit men to throw aside the elements of their manhood—veracity, cleanliness, health, and fitness for ancestorship. Such men I have seen by hundreds in the venereal wards of hospitals and at large. I have made it a point to discuss the subject-matter of this work with several widely different kinds of advisers—men of science, doctors, ministers, lawyers, and quite a number of men about town. Some of it has also been prudently discussed with women. It is noteworthy that these various classes of counselors, who surely afford the fairest test, agree with what has been said; and perhaps the most emphatic assent of all comes from men of loose morals." I have examined this book with much interest and satisfaction. The subject is one of the utmost personal and social importance, and hitherto has not been treated, so far as I am aware, in a way so worthy of a hearty commendation. The broad and pure spirit in which the author approached the subject, the thorough and systematic way in which he discussed it, and the high purpose which he has indicated as an essential part of every person's life make the book of great value and recommend it to all who are interested in the development of a high state of morality and the attainment of true manhood and womanhood.

"Around the World." By Robert Stuart MacArthur. Pages, 532; price, $1.50. The Griffith and Rowland Press, Philadelphia, 1900.

This is a fascinating account of a trip through Hawaii, Japan, China, Ceylon, India, Aden, Egypt, Turkey, and Greece. Mr. MacArthur gives much information in this volume, and his descriptions of cities and countries are such as can be produced only by a practiced hand and a skilled eye. The different peoples and their customs are introduced to us with a varied and general interest which holds the attention throughout. On this journey the author spent five months and traveled thirty-five thousand miles, and never missed a connection in carrying out a well-arranged programme, which was carefully prepared before making the start.

"Sunday Night Lectures on the Land and the Book." By Robert Stuart MacArthur. Pages, 433; price, $1.50. The Griffith and Rowland Press.

This is a companion volume of the preceding. The author deemed it wise to embody his trip through Palestine in this separate volume. While the whole tour covered only five months, we must remember that the facilities for travel at the present day are so perfect that one can do more in five months than fifty years ago could have been done in five years. Another thing: The value of such a tour depends far more upon the one who travels than the time expended. Some will take in more in a short time than others would in weeks. Mr. MacArthur thoroughly prepared himself to see and appreciate by a thorough study of Palestine, which makes this volume of far more than ordinary value. I, therefore, have no hesitancy in commending these volumes to our readers, believing that those who read them will be much entertained and benefited.

"While Sewing Sandals: Tales of a Telugu Pariah Tribe." By Emma Rauschenbusch-Crough. Pages, 321; price, $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Company.

The authoress of this volume had excellent opportunities for gathering information concerning the Madigas, who are the humblest and most despised of the Pariahs of Southern India. They are the leather workers in the Telugu country. For centuries they have tanned hides, sewed sandals, prepared leather buckets for the wells of the Sudras, and made trappings for their bullocks. The study of different peoples has always been interesting to me, and the contents of this book have been entertaining throughout. The following are the contents: "A History not Written in Books," "Ancient Mother Worship," "Christianity and the Gurus," "From Nasirah to Christ," "Battle Ground for Two Religions," and "The Power of Christianity." The book contains nine nice pictures and a good index.

"The Cobra's Den, and Other Stories of Missionary Work Among the Telugus of India." By Joseph Chamberlain. Pages, 270; price, $1. Fleming H. Revell Company.

This is another interesting book, dealing with personal experiences among the Telugus of India. Mr. Chamberlain has spent forty years among this interesting people, and gives a graphic description of them. The value of this book is enhanced by several illustrations.

Kansas Notes.

Brother J. E. Cain is in Republic County, in a meeting of a few days. I have been informed that the brethren there are good workers and know how to cooperate with a preacher in his work.

Brother W. A. Burcher, recently from Ohio, passed through our town not long since and stopped over one night. I was very favorably impressed with him, and would be glad to see more of him. It rejoices me to see so many young men that are true to the old paths. While many are caught by the fascinations of the "spirit of the age" and fall in with the popular tide, we have many others that are satisfied with the Book.

Brother B. F. Rhodes is still in Missouri sounding out the word, but he will soon return to his "first love"—Kansas.

Brother O. M. Thomason is soon to be with the brethren at Hartford for several weeks. He is making his headquarters at Wilmington at present.

Brother C. M. Johnson preached at Home Valley on the first Lord's day in October and was at Peck on the second Lord's day. He is now attending school at Belle Plaine during the week and preaching in the surrounding country on Lord's days. It will keep him busy to succeed with all of it, but he is determined.

The last report I had from Brother I. D. Moffitt he was at Bedford, Ia., proclaiming the good news of the kingdom. His field of labor crosses State lines and he is in demand for the work.

Brother Will. Elmore is assisting in a meeting at Seventy-six Schoolhouse. I have never had the pleasure of meeting him, but I am satisfied that he is an earnest preacher.

Brother Foster, of Texas, has recently visited the brethren at Minco, I. T., and reports come to me that he did some good preaching. I am sorry that I did not meet him there.

Brother Nathan Wright preaches for the Mulvane brethren two Lord's days in each month. Brother Wright is an old, tried, and faithful preacher. I always enjoy hearing him. There are some things in his manner of expressing himself that I very much admire, and the matter is always good, for it is true to the one Book. May he be spared for much more work.

The brethren at Palestine have decided to have the assistance of a preacher in their work this coming year; in fact, the work has already begun. They have suffered much as an individual congregation by removals, but what has been their loss has been somebody else's gain. They are left few in number, but that should not be any barrier to their serving the Lord. A few can meet upon the first day of the week just as well as many. Somehow some people have the idea that it requires a large number to serve the Lord acceptably. We overlook our individual duties, obligations, and responsibilities.

A meeting is now in progress at Starlight Schoolhouse, three miles north of Belle Plaine. People are hearing the gospel that never heard much of it before. It will certainly do somebody good.

The brethren at Duquoin, in Harper County, have arranged for a meeting to begin on October 25, 1900. May success attend the effort.

Brother Derry Harrison, of Oxford, has recently been called upon to pass under the darkest cloud of his life, in the loss of his wife. She departed this life on October 5, 1900. Sister Harrison was the daughter of Brother Melvin King. She had been a sufferer for several months, but it is all over now; she will no more be called upon to suffer the pangs of disease. Sister Harrison obeyed the gospel at the age of sixteen years, before the great inroads of sin had been made upon her life. She served the Lord sixteen years, and has gone to her reward. She was a devoted wife for eleven years and leaves a husband and four children to bear this incalculable loss. Sister Harrison had the satisfaction of performing a duty that many fail to perform—leading her husband to the Savior. He now rejoices in that, while he mourns his great loss. May the Lord bless and sustain Brother Harrison in his great bereavement. He has the sympathy of a host of friends. D. T. BROADUS.

Belle Plaine, Kan.

We wish again to call the attention of our friends and readers to the offer to send the Gospel Advocate from now to the close of 1900 for twenty-five cents. Our friends should add several thousand new names to our list. We are counting on them to call the attention of friends and neighbors to this liberal offer. We believe that the Gospel Advocate will do any one good who will read it. We would be glad to add ten thousand new readers in the next few months. Many of our friends and contributors have promised to labor to increase the list of the Gospel Advocate. The churches are getting tired of innovations. Those who were not satisfied to worship according as "it is written" promised great things when they began work in this State. Their work has been a failure, and the churches where they have had full sway are discouraged and dying. Even the church that took to itself the credit of starting the work is having hard work to hold its own. We earnestly insist that all who love the Bible way help us to circulate the Gospel Advocate. Help now will be doubly appreciated.

A SEWING MACHINE IS A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY
 YOU MUST HAVE ONE
 THE QUESTION THE ANSWER IS IS WHICH ONE? OUR CLIPPER

ALL GOOD MACHINES HAVE POINTS OUR CLIPPER HAS THESE

A guarantee that is a guarantee, for FIVE YEARS. It is thoroughly practical and embodies in its make-up all of the necessary and practical features of a first-class, high-grade machine, but which at the same time is not finished so elaborately or furnished with such an expensive equipment; the latter items adding greatly to the cost, but not to the utility of the machine for practical purposes. In its manufacture, the sewing qualities have not been sacrificed in the least.

It makes what is known as the double lock stitch, by using two threads, which are locked together in the center of the goods forming a stitch, presenting the same appearance on both the upper and lower sides of the goods.

The operation of threading the machine is very simple, it not being necessary to thread through any hole until the eye of the needle is reached.

THE HEAD of the machine is very attractive in appearance and is tastefully decorated.

THE ARM is very large and well proportioned, with a clear space under it as great as in any family sewing machine made, so that the bulkiest work can be handled without any difficulty.

THE NEEDLE is straight, with an enlarged shank, flattened on one side, so that the operation of setting the needle is absolutely positive, and the needle when once set is securely fastened by a special clamping device, which enables the needle to be readily removed in an instant when required.

AN AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER is furnished with this machine, which spools the thread on the bob-

bins very evenly, thus enabling the operator to have properly wound bobbins, without exercising any other care than to place the bobbin in the winder and then operate the winder by the action of the stand treadle. There is a cut-off or release on the handwheel of the machine, so that the bobbins can be wound without running the working parts of the machine, thus enabling the operator to stop in the middle of a seam any time and wind the bobbin without the necessity of taking the goods out from under the presser foot or breaking the upper thread.

THE TAKE-UP is automatic in its action, and controls the slack thread perfectly at all times and on all classes of work.

THE NEEDLE BAR is round and of sufficient diameter to make it very stiff and strong. It is made of steel, carefully tempered and hardened, and is smoothly finished.

A TENSION LIBERATOR is also a convenient feature, as by a slight pressure of the finger on the liberator work can be drawn freely from the machine without the danger of breaking the threads, as the liberator releases the tension on the thread entirely.

ALL IMPORTANT BEARINGS are carefully ground and hardened, and with proper care will last as long as the corresponding bearings in any machine made.

THE FEED is double, extending on both sides of the needle, and is positive in its action—that is, it does not depend on a spring or some other yielding device to operate it, but it will lift to its full stroke every time a stitch is made, regardless of the class of work that is being done or the kind of goods handled.

THE STITCH REGULATOR is in plain view, being attached to the front of the upright portion of the arm of machine. By loosening a thumbscrew and sliding it up or down the length of the stitch is immediately regulated to the desired degree.

THE SHUTTLE is of the self-threading pattern, cylindrical in shape, made of steel, well hardened, and takes a very large bobbin.

THE WOOD-WORK is of pleasing design, and the frame is fitted with skeleton drawer cases. It is furnished in oak finish only. The center drawer is of the sliding pattern, of full length, and is lined with velvet to receive the various attachments.

THE STAND is made and finished in a good and substantial manner throughout. It is furnished with oil cups, to prevent soiling the floor on which it rests, and the treadle and fly wheel are both hung on adjustable steel centers.

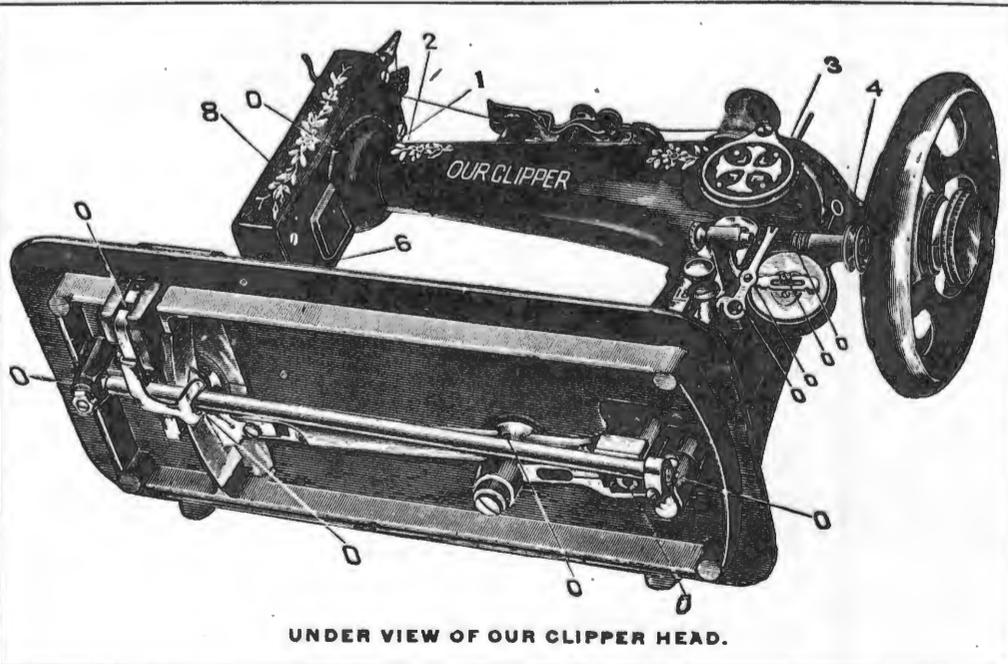

THE ATTACHMENTS, supplied without extra charge, are of the latest design and constructed throughout of the best steel, polished and nickel-plated, and include the following: Ruffler, tucker, binder, braider, four hemmers of assorted widths, quilter, thread cutter, foot hemmer, and feller.

THE ACCESSORIES include twelve needles, six bobbins, oil can filled with oil, large and small screwdrivers, sewing guide, guide screw, certificate of warranty good for five years, and an elaborately illustrated instruction book.

These are all fine points, but the BEST point is: It does not take the savings of several years to buy it. We have made an arrangement by which we are enabled to deliver it, prepaid, at your nearest freight office and also give you one year's subscription to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE for Do not MISS THIS $21.00 OPPORTUNITY to get a good paper and a good machine at SO CHEAP A PRICE :: :: :: :: ::

The Gospel Advocate from the time the subscription is received to January 1, 1902, for $1.50. Why wait till next January to begin reading this most excellent journal when you can read it, beginning now, at the same price? Now is the time to subscribe. Encourage the circulation of good literature by becoming a reader of the Gospel Advocate at once, if you are not already one, and also by getting as many of your friends to read it as possible. The editors of the paper will appreciate your patronage, will do all in their power to keep the paper up to its present high standard of excellence, and, if possible, make it better with each issue. The man who reads a first-class religious paper usually takes more interest in the cause of Christ than one who does not. We hope our readers will show this liberal offer to their friends and induce them to become regular subscribers to the Gospel Advocate. Who will be the first to send us a number of new subscribers on this proposition? We would like to have several thousand new readers before January 1, 1901. Address all orders to Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

It is no wonder that the youth of the land has a mighty ambition to become rich. Who stands high in the world? The rich. Who has everything he wants? The rich. Who is lauded up to the skies? The rich. What covers a multitude of faults, in the sight of the world? Money. It is not wrong to be rich, but neither is there any special virtue in it. The rich man can do much good, make many happy, alleviate much suffering; and if he so uses his money, he does well. But few, if any, of the rich, or those striving after riches, "seek . . . first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." Let them remember that the silver and gold belong to God.

In a religious paper we notice a loud article on the grand gift some rich man made to a theological seminary. It will no doubt be written with big letters in the chronicle of that institution and often rehearsed. At commencement exercises the college oratory will give vent to exuberant strains of praise to the great, good man who so richly endowed the beloved alma mater, and the professors and presidents will think their addresses incomplete without at least a passing notice of the great giver. What wonder that the young men of the college will come to regard wealth as the great desideratum? The rich man's benevolence stands in the sight of all like the loud-colored tulip; the poor man's, like the humble violet, unheeded, unknown, yet to God and the angels it sends up sweetest fragrance. Let us say to the humble worker that his labor is not forgotten. God takes account of it. Remember the widow's mite.

There is much said in papers of a political as well as religious nature on the "barbarity and shameful looting of so-called 'Christian nations'" at Tien-tsin and at other places. The word "so-called" as found in the above quotation (from the Baptist Outlook) is very well put in, and it ought to be emphasized in such a way that the mistreated heathens everywhere will understand that these armies and the governments behind them are by no means representatives of Christianity. To talk of "Christian nations" is twaddle. There is not a Christian nation on the face of the globe. There are individuals—very few of them—that are Christians; but as for the nations, although they have been flavored and benefited by the gospel, they can lay no just claim to the name "Christian," and too often they show in their dealings the cloven foot that testifies of their nature. It is as true now as it was in the days of John that only the few followers of Christ are of God, "and the whole world lieth in wickedness."

The distinctive features of Christianity are truth and love. Love is the greater. Where is the nation that truly loves any other besides itself? Where is that love that resists not evil, that suffers meekly without hatred? Did Christ ever authorize slaughter and bloodshed? If the Bible is true, Christ came to beat swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. He came not to destroy, but to save; and his followers will be found walking in his footsteps.

In saying these things nothing is predicated against the expediency or necessity of the present governments and warfares. We are rather of the opinion that they are very necessary and that they are destined to work good. All things, good or bad, work together for good to them that love God. It was necessary that some one should betray Christ and that some one should nail him to the cross. As the old high priest said: "It is expedient for you that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not." Yet God did not use his good children to do that work. There were many men in the world that were very capable of performing that task, and God used them. In like manner, while these offenses and wars may be necessary, it is not for the follower of the meek, loving Jesus to stain his hands in the blood of his fellow-man.

It is needful to speak a timely word here against the flagrant abuses of the name of Christ and his religion. Be it said to their burning shame, some religious papers and magazines, Sunday school papers, and secular papers, designed to entertain and educate the young, enhance and glorify as true and noble and Christian what Christ condemned. In their pages we see faces of young soldier boys, with brilliant, exuberant obituaries annexed, leaving the impression that in uninterrupted flight their spirits winged their way from the battlefield to the presence of God, there to be crowned for the valor and courage they displayed in slaughtering some poor mother's son. The youth who reads those beatifications comes to think that to shoot down an unfortunate soldier, and to be shot himself while killing others, is the climax of glory. Is it not damnable to thus lead the young astray? Glorify war and carnage as you will, but leave the name of God and Christ and religion and heaven out of it. Let the young man understand that there is worldly glory in war, but that the world, not Christ, approves of it, and that the world alone will reward him.

There is a peculiar antagonism between Christianity and the civil governments. Not that any open resistance against them would be tolerated by the Lord, for we are commanded to obey God first, but to obey the government when its laws do not conflict with the law of Christ. So every Christian will be a good, quiet citizen. Yet the Christian fights against and undermines the civil government. The only weapon he uses, however, against principalities and powers is the sword of the Spirit, the word of God. When the plain, simple teaching of Christ makes a convert, the government loses in him, in the first place, a soldier. The Christian would not use his sword even in as holy a cause as the protection of the person of his Master. (Matt. 26: 51, 52.) He overcomes evil with good, and does not resist, but rather suffers, evil, as his Lord did. Much less will he be found engaged in carnage on the battlefield. In the second place, the civil government loses in him a voter that will sustain any selfish measure, tariffs, etc. National selfishness is to him as wrong as individual selfishness, and he will have no hand in it. Lastly, the government loses a man to enforce its laws. The Christian is specially instructed not to take vengeance on evil doers, but to leave that to God, who will perform it through the agency of civil governments. (Read carefully from Rom. 12: 18 to Rom. 13: 16; see also 1 Pet. 2: 13, 14.) The agents of the civil government are servants of God to attend to that very thing (taking vengeance, executing wrath on evil doers) which Christians are admonished to let alone. It may be well to remark here that God uses all men for his servants. They are either instruments of righteousness or of unrighteousness. The wicked king of Babylon is called the servant of God, for God used him to punish the Jews and other nations. When that work was done, God said he would punish him. To resume, in the followers of Christ the civil government is robbed of soldiers, sustainers of selfish measures, executors of the law. A government is dependent upon these three things for existence; without them it must fall. This is exactly what shall occur when the whole earth turns to Christ and he becomes King supreme. Then every civil government shall have vanished and God's will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven; while Christ shall reign, King of kings, Lord of lords. Then, and not until then, there will be a Christian nation, and it will comprise the whole population, from the rivers unto the ends of the earth. Meanwhile the human governments protect us as God-ordained instruments, and to them we owe respect, honor, and tribute; "but be not ye partakers with them" of their sins.

Brother Simpson Ely, of Liberty, Mo., thinks the reference recently made in this paper to a sermon preached by the "pastor" of the Fifty-sixth Street Christian Church an unjust one. No injustice was intended, and, after reading Brother Ely's strictures on the criticism of the sermon, I am still unable to see that any injustice was done. But the Advocate is glad to have Brother Ely speak for himself:

"By the courtesy of Brother Lipscomb, I have been a constant reader of the Gospel Advocate a good many years, and I very much enjoy much of its contents. In the issue of October 11 is an article on the first page that abounds with unjust criticisms. It is a criticism upon a recent sermon preached by the pastor of the Fifty-Sixth Street Christian Church, in New York. The preacher is taken to task because he devoted the sermon to the results during the past year of our organized missionary efforts. The critic thinks the apostles would not preach like that. He is surely mistaken. Paul and other apostles at various times recounted their labors and the results of their work. The critic says he could not 'conceive of Paul and Peter and James and John . . . never telling sinners of the Lamb of God, who died to take away the sins of the world.' Does the critic mean to say that the preacher never tells sinners about the Lamb of God? I heard the same preacher the very next Sunday, and he devoted his whole sermon to the awful results if Jesus had not risen from the grave. I have never heard a sermon more full of Christ Jesus. The truth is simply this: The great meetings of our brethren were about to convene in Kansas City. It was eminently appropriate that the preacher should tell his flock about the work accomplished during the year, and thus 'provoke them to love and good works.' To speak of the disciples of Christ as constituting a denomination is very unkind, because so palpably untrue. We wear no denominational name, subscribe to no denominational creed, make no denominational confession, accept no denominational discipline, observe no denominational ordinances, and recognize no denominational ecclesiasticism. We do believe in coöperative as well as individual effort in spreading the gospel. This does not make us a denomination. The critic expresses his surprise that the disciples are so few in number in New York State. How much has he, and those who work according to his individual plan, done to increase the number? Why does he not tackle New York City, with its teeming millions, and lead them into the simplicity and power of the New Testament faith? A little more work and a little less adverse criticism from some quarters would comport more with the spirit of our dear Lord."

"The critic" has never been able, in reading the New Testament, to find where any of the apostles ever delivered a sermon recounting the labors and work of a missionary society; in fact, the New Testament is as silent as the grave on a missionary society. While we have accounts of some of the apostles recounting their labors as individuals, and while we read of the support some churches gave them when engaged in the work of preaching the gospel, we nowhere read of the work and labors of the General Missionary Board. In the days of the apostles there was no "General Board" to direct the labors of preachers and take charge of the funds raised by the churches. No "General Board" sent to the support of the preacher, but local churches aided them as they went forth preaching "the word." "Now ye Philippians know also, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only. For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity." (Phil. 4: 15, 16.) When support comes through the "Missionary Board," it is not possible to tell what church is sending to the support of the preacher; it is not possible to see the church through the board. In the New Testament we have been unable to find any organization larger than the local church. I simply meant that the preacher did not find time in that sermon to preach the gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation. His time was consumed in telling what "organized missionary effort" had done, the amount of money raised, the wonderful growth and development of the various societies. I have never found where one of the apostles delivered such a sermon. Any one who does not uphold "organized missionary effort" will soon find that his services are not in demand in the "Christian Church." The Christian Church has its societies, its membership as separate and distinct from other Christians. Why one part of the Christian world separate itself from another? The man who obeys the law of the Lord thereby becomes a Christian, and does not need to become a member of any other religious organization in order to be saved. When a man separates himself from other Christians, gives his influence to build up organizations unknown to the Scriptures, discourages the efforts of those who work simply through the church of God as did the early Christians, he thereby manifests a denominational spirit. The writer has too much work to do in Tennessee to spend his time in the city of New York, but he hopes to so work for the Master here that his influence for the Master may spread to the ends of the earth. Godly lives and consecrated living will do far more in spreading the gospel of Christ than money, with "organized effort" thrown in.

Our Exchanges.

In a sermon preached fourteen years before his death, in days like these, Mr. Spurgeon said: "There is always a war party in England. I fear the Jingo is no foreigner, but the genuine offspring of the British bulldog. An unconverted Britisher is all for blood, and fire, and glory; and as the unconverted are the majority among us, we remain a fighting nation. Fighting—how we delight in it! Down with the Afghans! Down with the Zulus! The Boers—destroy them. We cannot get our fill of glory and honor unless we get knee-deep in blood. The policy of peace is voted dishonorable, and so we go from land to land till there is hardly a nation which has not been stained with blood by British hands. How freely these English talk! But it is not Christian talk. May the Lord teach us the language of peace. 'Be you at peace, whereunto also ye were called.'"

THE DIFFERENCE.

I could not help noticing the tremendous difference which Christianity produces in mankind. Here, on the one side, rough, coarse, unkempt, uncouth, haggard, and wan-looking creatures, constantly falling on their faces at your feet, adjuring you to give them help, and paying all manner of flattering and fawning compliments, ready, apparently, to sell their very lives for a few coppers; and, on the other hand, the clean, bright, clear-eyed, neatly-dressed, and intelligent native family that seemed to rise head and shoulders above all that surrounded them. On the one hand, Mussulmans and Hindoos; on the other hand, children of the Lord.—Louis Klopsch, in Christian Herald.

LAUGH AND LIVE.

There is a piety that must be muffled up or there is a sneeze or neuralgia. A hearty laugh would give it the fidgets for a month. An uproar of jollity from Brother Hubbard Kavanaugh would shock into hysterics. We all know why Christians of a peculiar type "cannot touch a drop" of social pleasantries. They must be, as to all pleasures, strict prohibitionists; they cannot risk themselves. Their piety has a thin shell, fearing a jostle. The least amount of religion will do for a monk. The life Jesus led—at a prolonged marriage banquet, at frequent feasts—brought on him the charge of "glutton and winebibber." Such a life must have a heart overflowing with godliness, else it is wrecked.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

ANSWER TO PRAYER.

There were some Friends, or Quakers, from North Carolina in the battle of Gettysburg who were forced into the ranks, but who, from the beginning to the end, refused to fight. They were from Guilford County, which was mostly settled by their sect.

About a dozen of them were in Lee's army at Gettysburg, and were among the prisoners captured there. They had steadily borne practical testimony to the strength of their principles in opposing war. One of them who refused to fight was ordered to be shot. Twelve men were drawn up in line to shoot him. They loved him as a brother because of his goodness; and when ordered to fire, every man refused. The remainder of the company was called up and ordered to shoot the first twelve if they did not execute the order. The intended victim folded his hands, raised his eyes, and said: "'Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do.'" The entire company threw down their muskets and refused to obey the order. Their exasperated captain, with a horrid oath, tried to shoot him with a pistol. The cap would not explode. Then he dashed upon him with his horse, but the meek conscript was unharmed. Just then a charge of some of Meade's troops drove the Confederates from their position, and the Quaker became a prisoner. He and his co-religionists were sent to Fort Delaware, when the fact was made known to some of their sect in Philadelphia. It was laid before the President, and he ordered their release.—Lossing's "Pictorial Field Book of the Civil War."

THE TERRIBLE CANCER.

Cancers are terribly on the increase. W. Roger Williams says, in the Lancet: "Probably no single factor is more potent in determining the outbreak of cancer in the predisposed than high feeding. There are other factors, as deficient exercise and deficiency in fresh vegetable food. 'Meat' is an indefinite term; 'pork' would perhaps be more accurate. Jews do not have cancers, unless in rare cases where pork is eaten. Among all the diseases that the Savior cured there is no record of cancers. Cancers are caused by impurities or poisons or malignant germs in the blood, and then they are localized in the lips by the tobacco poison of a vile old pipe; in the throat, by the smoke of cigars; in the stomach, by the irritation caused by highly seasoned foods; and in the liver, by the pressure of women's corsets. Women never have cancer of the mouth unless they smoke. Three women have cancers in the liver to one man. Gross, foul feeding may load the system with a cancerous taint, and ~~then the pipe, the cigar, the bottle, the corset,~~ some little injury may do the rest. Clean-blooded people do not have cancers."

FREQUENTLY SOBER.

There was an employer that gave a certificate to an Irishman that was leaving his employment; but it did not please him, though it said many good things. This Irishman came to his late master, and said: "There's nothing there about my soberness." "O," said the master, "you know I could not say that you are a sober man." "Ah! but," replied the Irishman, "you might have said, sir, sure, that I am frequently sober." So Demas was frequently religious, that was all. He had it in fits and starts, come and go—frequently religious. And your profession sometimes is your ruin. I have more hope of the man who makes no profession than of the church-goer who has a lie on his lips and is filling his right hand with ungodly gains, yet is religious about it. Better have no profession; better be an honest man, and say, "I am in the devil's service. Why should I believe in Christ? Why should I go to church? Why should I go and sing or repeat one of your psalms?" There is more hope for you with a clear vessel than for those ten thousand skiffs that are sailing in Glasgow, laden to the bows with the timber of churchly profession, but without the grace of God in their hearts.—Christian Scotsman.

ONE TRUE STANDARD.

Find me fifty merchants, and you find that they have fifty standards of what is right and wrong. You say to some one about a merchant: "Is he honest?" "O, yes," the man says, "he is honest, but he grinds the faces of his clerks; he is honest, but he exaggerates the value of his goods; he is honest, but he loans money on bond and mortgage, with the understanding that the mortgage can lie quiet for ten years, but as soon as he gets the mortgage, he records it and begins a foreclosure suit, and the sheriff's writ comes down, and the day of sale arrives, and away goes the homestead, and the creditor buys it in at half price." Honest, but at the time he loaned the money he knew that he would get the homestead at half price; honest, but he goes to the insurance office to get a policy on his life, and tells the doctor he is well, when he knows that for ten years he has had but one lung; honest, though he sells property by the map, forgetting to tell the purchaser that the ground is all under water (but it is generous in him to do that, for he throws the water into the bargain). Ah, there is but one standard of the everlasting right and of the everlasting wrong, and that is the Bible.—Christian Herald.

PRAYER.

Pray and you will not be discouraged; pray and you will not grow weak and drop; pray and you will literally be "careful for nothing;" pray and God will hear and answer. A Minnesota farmer gave me his experience with reference to the terrible scourge of grasshoppers which visited his State some years ago. They came in a great mass; they covered every green thing, and left not a vestige behind. The farmer knelt in his garden and prayed the Lord to leave him something for his wife and children. He had acres of wheat and corn. Much of it was spared. In one field of corn he saw just half of it literally covered with grasshoppers, while upon the rest of it not a single one alighted. A neighbor of his, instead of praying, said, "I will get ahead of the Almighty;" and so he mowed all of his wheat, as the grasshoppers will not touch what has been cut down. But these alighted on his, and so spoiled it that not one of his cattle would touch it. Not a spear of any green thing was left upon his large farm. The governor of the State offered a good price for every bushel of grasshoppers, dead or alive; and men, women, and children gathered them. After spending $60,000 on this section of country alone, and the pests were not apparently diminished, he declared that the State would be bankrupt and the plague not removed. So he appointed one Wednesday as a day of fasting and prayer. The Lord heard. Slowly the grasshoppers flew up toward the sky, darkening the sun; not one remained; and a little afterwards "millions of bushels" of them, so the paper said, were seen in the ocean off the Pacific coast. "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint."—Word and Work.

THE MULE TURNED.

The mule is thought to be an exceedingly dull and unappreciative beast, but there is one on the West Side that is neither dull nor unappreciative. His driver belabored him unmercifully for not pulling a load that was heavy enough for two mules to haul. The man pounded and swore and pounded again, but, do his best, the mule could not budge the wagon, and after several earnest attempts he quit trying.

That exasperated the driver, and he fell to beating him harder than ever. Meanwhile the mule would turn his head toward the driver as if trying to see what the next form of punishment would be, but subsequent events showed that his mulish mind was figuring on revenge against the driver.

Doubtless the mule got the idea of what he would do from the careless way the driver fooled about his hind legs. But, anyway, his muleship seemed very much pleased when he found he was to be released from the wagon, even if it was to give the driver a freer hand with his club. In a few minutes the mule found himself tied to one of the wheels of the wagon and felt the heavy blows of the club, but he took things philosophically and kept one eye on the driver. Presently the driver got in the position the mule was waiting for, when, like a flash of lightning, two heels struck the driver; and when they picked him up, it was found an ambulance would be needed to take him home.

The mule seemed to glory in his work, for his eyes seemed to say that he was immensely pleased; but, be that as it may, when the bystander approached the mule, he was met with marked demonstrations of friendship, the mule going so far as to try to rub his nose against the bystander's face. When the ambulance came, the mule watched them put his driver into it, and as it drove away he raised his voice and pranced about as if too happy to enjoy even a good meal of oats, corn, and hay. The bystander went away firmly of the belief that mules know a whole lot.—Chicago Chronicle.

Overcoming Evil.

"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12: 21.)

There is a struggle for existence in every phase of life. It is noticeable in the vegetable, animal, and spiritual kingdoms. Every species of life has its enemy, and with this antagonist it must battle for an existence. The giant oak, as well as the tender blade of grass, has its opposition. From childhood to old age we struggle against germs of disease. From the moment one is born into the kingdom of God until death ends the earth period, there is one constant conflict for spiritual existence. There is, ever has been, and always will be a conflict between truth and error, right and wrong. It is God's will that truth and right prevail throughout the entire universe. Hence there is a lawful strife continually going on in the world between good and evil forces, and every rational soul is a party to this strife. It does not require argument to prove that there is in this world an influence called "evil," for its bitter fruits are seen and felt in every life. We know that something is wrong with the world of mankind. "Man's inhumanity to man" tells a sad story of the unfitness of things. The cause of all this inharmonious and strife in the world is told in these words: "I find then the law, that, to me who would do good, evil is present." (Rom. 7: 21, R. V.) It is this evil in the human heart, which finds expression in bitter words and unkind deeds, that mars the beauty of human life. Where and when evil originated we may never be able to tell. There are some passages which indicate its appearance in heaven. "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven." (Rev. 12: 7, 8.) We read also: "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." (Jude 6.) Here is a fine field for the speculator, but to one who is not willing to undertake the difficult task of telling people something he himself does not know and cannot know, these scriptures throw little light on the origin of evil.

The system of religion through Jesus Christ is not designed to acquaint us with the beginning of evil, nor to remove the evil and its sources from the pathway of men, but to reveal a way of escape from its awful results. The disciples were not taught to pray the Father to remove evil from the world, but to lead them not into temptation and to deliver them from the evil. (Matt. 6: 13.) The church is not commissioned by its Head to enact laws for the suppression of evil and its sources, but by godly and righteous living to diffuse into the hearts of men a divine influence, thus becoming the leaven transforming the world into righteousness. The gospel of Christ is intended to strengthen, develop, and help mankind to overcome evil, but this they will never do unless they are brought, body and soul, under its influence. The seed of the kingdom must be received into the heart and its life-giving properties assimilated by the inner man before evil can be overcome. Human laws, to some extent, restrain evil doers, but they do not make liars truthful nor thieves honest. Until the fear and love of God take root in the soul, evil will continue to grow in the life. To overcome evil is the work of life, and he who fails in this fails in all. Worldly honors may be achieved and riches accumulated, but empty and vain is the life thus spent. We are not only to overcome evil in our own hearts and lives, but we are to overcome evil in our enemies. This we can do by returning good for evil. "Render to no man evil for evil." (Rom. 12: 17, R. V.) "But if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him to drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head." (Rom. 12: 20, R. V.) There is a tree that baptizes in rich perfume the ax which cuts it down. So to him who would do you harm return good, and thus baptize him in the spirit of Christ. "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." (Matt. 5: 44.) How different is all this to man's ways! When Jesus would enter into a village of the Samaritans and they did not receive him, James and John wanted to call down fire from heaven and consume them; but the Master rebuked them, and said: "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." (Luke 9: 51-55.) Thus it is to-day with many who claim to be followers of the Christ. When their rights are trampled upon and their manhood insulted, they resort to carnal weapons for revenge, notwithstanding they are plainly told: "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal." (2 Cor. 10: 4.) Some one may say: "I know the Scriptures require this, but who ever did it?" David, upon two occasions when pursued for his life by the wicked king of Israel, had him at his mercy and could have easily taken his life, and yet he did not so much as pluck one hair from his head. (See 1 Sam. 24: 17, 18; 26: 10.) If ever a man was justifiable in taking the life of another who was a mortal enemy, David certainly would have been, and yet he refrains from so doing.

We live in a world of evil whose influence permeates the very atmosphere we breathe; and unless we strive against the current bearing us down, we will be overwhelmed in the gulf of eternal despair. But what others have done we can do. Many shall come from the east and the west and sit down in the kingdom of God with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. These were not more favorably surrounded than we; yet, their opportunities were nothing to compare with ours. Shall we not, then, aim to be numbered with those who will meet these patriarchs in the glory land? The end to be reached, which is a glorified state, should fill the soul with a conqueror's determination and attune the lips to a triumphant song. F. W. SMITH.

Mercy.

There are times when of all the words of human tongue there is none sweeter to our ears than "mercy." When I am bowed in guilt and contrition, it falls like a ray of heaven's light into my darkened soul. It is so grand and wonderful in its import that we cannot believe it of human origin; it must be one of the words God himself taught the children of men in the garden of Eden. Mercy glowed first in the bosom of the Almighty, and no man knows him that knows not mercy; for he is the Lord, the Lord God, full of compassion and gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and sin. The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are upon all his works. His all-seeing eye sees every struggle for existence; he takes account of suffering; he verily tempers the wind to the shorn lamb in more ways than one; he knows the ills, the sins, the follies of the sons of the earth, and as a father pitieth his children, so pitieth the Lord the children of men. That he may be just and yet give free flow to his mercy he gave his Son, that by the sacrifice of One who knew no sin he might heal the wretchedness of the sin-cursed, suffering world. God's justice does not permit that he should clear the guilty; the Son died "that he [God] might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." (Rom. 3: 26.) By his mercy he offers salvation to the world; by his mercy he saves us from death, the legitimate and just wages of sin; by his mercy we are purified and permitted to stand in his presence, heirs of God, joint heirs with Jesus Christ, living, happy, unto endless ages.

As God's children, it is but natural that our hearts also should shine with the reflection of divine light. If we are begotten of him whose name is Love, truly we also will love; if he who is called "merciful" is our Father, truly we shall bear his image. This is the means by which God raises us; he holds up before us his character that we may behold it, and, beholding, may be changed into his likeness. A good, true man is the grandest piece of work God has ever turned out on the earth. "The heavens show the power of God, but such a man shows his likeness." Look at him. Love, a spark from God's very nature, burns in his heart; tenderness and compassion speak from his eye; righteousness and truth mark his footsteps. He battles with the powers of darkness; he buffets his body and brings it under subjection; he abhors evil. Daily he is striving to loose his hold on the earth; daily he presses toward the eternal light that emanates from above, and he feels drawn toward it, for he is a child of light. Thus he grows, and, as he approaches his home, he reflects forth with brighter radiance the excellencies of Him that called him out of darkness into his marvelous light. Men see him and glorify the Father in heaven.

Such a man cannot but be merciful, for he is kin to God, and heredity, especially in the spiritual lineage, will prove itself. Yet there are babes who have not freed themselves from the fetters of the flesh. For them earnest teaching and admonition are given. Who has not heard of the Pharisees, who tithed their mint, anise, and cumin, and forgot the weightier matters of the law—justice and mercy and faith—and of the unmerciful servant whose master forgave him much and set him free? But he would not forgive his fellow-servant. "He laid hold on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay what thou owest. So his fellow-servant fell down and besought him, saying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee." Strange the wicked servant did not remember the words of that plea. It was the same he himself had made a little while before. He did not appreciate what his lord had done for him, neither was he thankful. So, instead of imitating the magnanimity of his master, he went and cast his fellow-servant into prison, till he should pay what was due. "So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were exceeding sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done. Then his lord called him unto him, and saith to him, Thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou besoughtest me: shouldst not thou also have had mercy on thy fellow-servant, even as I had mercy on thee? And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due. So shall also my Heavenly Father do unto you, if ye forgive not every one his brother from your hearts." "He shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shown no mercy."

Alas! human nature is prone to be merciless. It is so easy to pass hard sentence on another, so easy to judge harshly of others' deeds. There may be a man on the earth, brother, whom you would consign to the flames of hell with a great deal of satisfaction for some wrong he did to you or others. Put yourself in his place, and see if there is no mitigating circumstance and if no possibility of repentance. Some one has well said: "If we could see the life of those who are our enemies, we could there find enough of pain and bitter tears to make us forget what we hold against them." If we were only as willing to forgive another's wrong as we are to find mercy for our own!

David had a queer experience along that line. When he had taken Uriah's wife and caused him to be slain in battle, and the guilt of adultery and the stain of blood were on his soul, one day the prophet Nathan came to him. The king unsuspectingly listened to Nathan's story: "There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor. The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds; but the poor man had nothing, save one little ewe lamb, which he had bought and nourished up: and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter. And there came a traveler unto the rich man, and he spared to take of his own flock and of his own herd, to dress for the wayfarer man that was come unto him; but took the poor man's lamb, and dressed it for the man that was come to him." Then was David's anger greatly kindled against the man. "As the Lord liveth," he said to Nathan, "the man that hath done this thing shall surely die: and he shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he did this thing, and because he had no pity." Calmly replied Nathan: "Thou art the man." What a different light fell upon the matter! Anger changed to fear; indignation changed to contrition. Had he not pronounced his own sentence? Ah, but he was not willing to let it stand thus; and he lifted up his voice and cried: "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions." He would have shown no mercy; but now the tables are turned, and instead of his being judge, he lies prostrate, imploring mercy for himself at the throne of One that is higher. What a terror it would have been if God had held his own sentence against him!

In the spirit of Christ's saying, "Judge not, that ye be not judged," Burns wrote:

Then gently scau your brother man,
Still gentler sister woman,
Though they may gang a kennin' wrang,
To step aside is human.
One point must still be greatly dark:
The moving why they do it.
And just as lamely can ye mark
How far, perhaps, they rue it.

Who made all hearts—'tis He alone,
Decidedly can try us.

He knows each chord, its various tone;
Each spring, its various bias.
Then at the balance let's be mute,
We never can adjust it;
What's done we partly may compute,
But know not what's resisted.

Let us try to feel for each other. The prerogative of showing mercy to others is one of the greatest that God gave us. When you see another fall, do not send him to hell on short notice, but try to regain him in meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. God will do the necessary judging in the end; but we—while God's mercy is upon us, let us in mercy seek to save the fallen. Let us forgive them that wronged us; let us bury hatred and pray for tender hearts. "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy."

ROBERT H. BOLL.

The Lord's Day Service.

In its issue of October 18, the Gospel Advocate publishes a criticism from Brother W. J. Brown, which is followed by a good article from the pen of Brother Lipscomb, upon which I wish to offer a few kind suggestions.

In the conversation referred to, Brother Lipscomb and I talked of several things—the worship, evangelizing, and the necessity of assembling on the first day of the week to worship—and we agreed perfectly, so far as I know; and one thing in particular said by Brother Lipscomb which gave me much encouragement was in reference to the discontinuance of the sermon in the public worship. As to the order of the worship, it was not named in our conversation, as I now remember.

As to the "order of the worship hobby," which seems to trouble Brother Brown and others, a few words of explanation are needed; not for the benefit of Brother Brown, however, for he knows perfectly well our position on this subject, nor can he offer a single reasonable objection to it—no, not one.

Thirty-five years ago, surrounded with sad environments and in great weakness, I entered the ministry; but I had zeal, and I preached the gospel night and day, in cities, towns, groves, and schoolhouses, and in a few years my converts numbered thousands. But after preaching some twenty years and seeing that much of the fruit of my labors, as well as that of others of our brethren, had gone to waste; that perhaps not more than one-fourth of the converts made by us ever became regular, steadfast worshippers; and being continually goaded by sectarians, who repeated the oft-met epithet, "All you people want is to get a man into the water, and he is safe" (which, taking the course of a majority of our members as dictum, seemed to be too near the truth), I began to cast about to see if there was not something lacking in our practice in the worship.

In my investigations I went into the holy place in the tabernacle, which is a type of the church, and I found there that all the furniture was placed so, and it must never be changed—the altar of offerings in front of the door, the laver at the side of the door, the anointing with oil after entering the holy place; and within were the golden candlestick, the fellowship of all who entered, the table of the showbread, and the incense. The priest must be clothed in just such garments, and the worship must be always the same. And when I went up to Jerusalem and saw the model church, behold, here I found the exact anti-type—viz., the altar on which we offer ourselves, the laver of regeneration—baptism—at the side of the door, the anointing with the Holy Spirit to the newly made Christian; and here, as acts of worship, I found the teaching, the fellowship, the breaking of the loaf, and the prayers. The singing is not named, but is included, for the apostles "taught" this. And since this harmonized with the type in the holy place, and since I found no other order in the New Testament, I began asking the churches, for the sake of unity, to let us adopt this order, and almost universally, where I have delivered a series of discourses upon the worship, the churches have adopted it; and were it not for some preacher-pastors who cry, "Hobbyists!" the churches wherever taught would adopt this order, and we would soon see not only unity among us, but we would see a marked increase in the attendance at the house of God and much more activity in the worshippers.

Then, "the order of the worship" has not caused "havoc" in the churches, but, on the other hand, churches which have adopted this rule are growing in the grace of God and having favor with the people. I can show many such. Of course, in almost every congregation will be dissenters who object to almost anything; but where differences have come, they have been caused by a class of men who are determined to "preach" at the hour of the public worship.

For authority to "preach" at the hour of the public worship, many have quoted Acts 20: 7, but the Greek word for "preach" is not used here. Upon this the scholarly C. Kendrick says: "Paul did not preach to the church there nor elsewhere. There is no account of an apostle having preached to the church, not even once."

There is no need of hairsplitting upon the difference in preaching and teaching. All know that when a man preaches, in one sense he teaches, and he discourses, and he makes a speech; but if to the world, he should preach the gospel; if to the church, he should teach Christians to observe the "all things" commanded. Would we see the conspicuous absence of the word "preach" in Acts 20: 7, please see the "Living Oracles," the Revised Version, the commentaries on Acts by Brother Lipscomb and Brother McGarvey, and John Wesley's comments. They severally use the words "discourse," "conversed," "speech," and "talked," but the word "preach" is left out. Now, as there is a clear distinction between preaching and teaching, let us strive to learn the whole truth and observe it.

But, my dear brethren, this human system of hiring men to preach is directly and indirectly the cause of nearly all our internal eruptions. If churches had never hired men to preach, we should not have had the one-man pastor; he will not preach except he is paid for it. If we had allowed God's order to be observed, we should have had the bishops to rule and feed the flocks, and sent the preachers to the world, and we should have had few innovations in the churches, and the world would have heard the gospel. I have not found in the New Testament the shadow of authority to hire a man to preach, either weekly, monthly, or occasionally, neither to the world nor to the church. The New Testament idea is for the church to support the ministry, not hire it.

Now, since the preachers are nearly all bought up and tied down to the churches, there are few to go and preach to the lost; and should a toiling evangelist come to a rich congregation, he may be informed, "We have employed as much preaching as we are able to pay for," and the toiler is sent away empty into the hedges and highways. But it is easier for Brother Monthly to visit a rich church on Saturday night, deliver three discourses, receive his fifteen or twenty-five dollars, and return home on Monday to rest, or to run his farm or his store, than for him to deny himself the pleasures of home for three months, go into the wilderness, and preach seven days and nights in the week—preach in school-houses, halls, dwelling houses, and in groves, enduring hot sunshine, snow, rain, and sleet—and get probably $5 per week. See?

Nobody enforces this "order" upon the churches, nobody makes it a test of fellowship. After the church has been fully instructed, it is asked to adopt it; and if it does not, we worship with them in their own way.

Here is what we indorse:

1. Let each congregation which is able support an evangelist, using him at home when needed, and then send him into the highways to preach to the lost. If one congregation is not able to support the preacher for full time, let two congregations unite. Otherwise, if a second congregation will not assist, let the one do all it can, and let the preacher, when the means fail, "raise potatoes" for a part of his support and go again.

2. When an evangelist has called out a new congregation, if there be no material fit for bishops, let the evangelist take the oversight, visiting it as often as the case requires.

3. At the Lord's day worship, as the bishops are to rule and feed, let them direct the worship; but after the introductory prayer, which may be offered by any brother, let there be given a number of talks in general upon the lesson.

4. Take up the collection—the fellowship—the whole congregation uniting, each one giving as the Lord has prospered him.

5. Break the loaf.

6. Offer one or two prayers.

Now, if an evangelist be present, having taken part in the worship, let him deliver a short talk and extend an invitation to sinners, and dismiss.

Now I would kindly ask, What is wrong about this order? Does it not very nearly agree with the temple pattern? Is it not safe? Are we adding anything? Is there one item of the worship left out? Could any man change it for the better? Can any man show a more excellent way? Can any man with an open New Testament show any other way? And, finally, is this "hobbyism?"

We are striving to bring out all the members upon the first day of every week and have them worship precisely as the Book directs; and we are urging all available preachers to enter the field and put in seven days in the week, preaching the gospel publicly and from house to house; and we are pleading with the churches to support these men, but this is one of the most difficult things, for many give sparingly who are able to give bountifully, and many give nothing, and because of this failure many good preachers go on half rations and some quit the field. Brother Brown has not received one-half as much remuneration as his services and his needs demand. So with many others.

It will take a long time, especially if the truth is opposed, to get the whole army into full duty. For this we toil and for this we pray.

If swelling words and fluent speech

Might serve instead of faith and love.

Unless that grace has made him free.

PERSONAL.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy is in a meeting at Laguardo, Tenn.

Brother J. A. Harding has been having a good meeting at the Foster Street church of Christ.

Brother J. E. B. Ridley began a meeting at New Town (West Nashville) on last Lord's day.

The Nashville Bible School has been receiving pupils almost constantly since the opening, and the faculty feel very much encouraged over the outlook for the term.

Brother Alfred Elmore, of Covington, Ind., is in a splendid meeting at Fayetteville, Ark. There had been nine additions to the one body when we heard from the meeting on October 24, 1900.

Brother E. A. Elam closed a good meeting at Lynchburg, Tenn., on last Friday night. The meeting continued thirteen days, and thirteen persons were baptized and one restored. The audiences and attention were good throughout the meeting.

Mr. Minor M. Davis, of Clarksville, Tenn., and Miss Pattie Turner were united in marriage on October 17, 1900, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Net Turner, at Gallatin, Tenn., Brother L. S. White officiating. The groom is in the hardware business at Clarksville, and the bride is a member of one of the best families at Gallatin.

Brother H. C. Shoulders, of North Springs, Tenn., was in the city last week and made us a pleasant call. He preached at Union, Tenn., last Sunday and from there went to Kentucky to begin a meeting near Franklin. At Pleasant Shade, Smith County, Tenn., beginning on the first Sunday in October, he preached eight days, the meeting resulting in two additions to the one body.

Brother L. S. White began a meeting at Polkville, Warren County, Ky., on the fourth Lord's day in September and continued, with much interest, for fifteen days, closing with fifteen additions to the one body. He went from Polkville to Fountain Run, Monroe County, Ky., and preached eight days, with four additions. He is now in a good meeting at Gallatin, Tenn., with his home congregation. This meeting began on October 21. The crowds are very large, the interest is good, and when we heard from the meeting, on last Friday, there had been six additions to the one body.

Some people maintain that they should be free to express everything they think, but this is a mistake. There are some things they have not even the right to think.

The Savior proved his claim that he is the Son of God. We also must prove our claims as Christians. A man is known by what he does, rather than by what he possesses.

If Christ and his apostles were in the world to-day, they would most likely be called "extremists." Indeed, those who follow their teaching the most closely now are frequently called "extreme."

"I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day." "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." In work everything must be done at the best time. "God is love," and since he manifested himself to us in the person of his Son, the life of Christ must needs be one of tenderest compassion. That it was such a life is abundantly shown in the sick he cured, the lepers he cleansed, the dead he raised, the life he lived, the death he died, and the glorious scheme of redemption he gave to a lost and ruined world,

"I am the way," the Savior said. "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me." Peter said: "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Salvation is in Christ. Who, then, can be saved? "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." God's grace has provided a plan by which all may be saved who hear his Son and obey his voice.

There is a fable written by an American naturalist which runs as follows: "One beautiful spring morning there came a songster, perched himself on the branch of a tree, swung himself backward and forward, and poured out his heart in a glad song. There was a mole working under the sod just below, and he heard the song of the bird, and, pushing his nose up through the turf, he called out: 'O, bird, why are you making such a noise?' The bird made answer: 'O, Mr. Mole, the sunlight is so beautiful, and the air is so refreshing, and the world is so lovely that my heart is filled with gladness, and I cannot but sing.' 'The world full of beauty!' said the mole. 'There is no beauty in it at all. Everything in the earth is absolutely worthless. I have lived under its sod all my life; I have dug holes in it and tunneled it in every direction, and I know the earth thoroughly, and know there are only two things in the entire earth—grass roots and fish worms; nothing more.' Said the bird: 'Come up, Mr. Mole, out from under the sod into the light, into the presence of the sun, and you will find that you must sing; you cannot do otherwise.'" So with the man who follows a low and sordid ambition. To him the world is full of gloom and there is no brightness in it. But to that man who lives upon a high plane the world is full of beauty; he enjoys its opportunities, and the joy within his heart bursts forth in songs of praise.

Brother Srygley gave us two notable books that have enjoyed a wide reading and popularity—namely, "Larimore and His Boys" and "Seventy Years in Dixie;" but in "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," the last book before his death, he surpassed himself. This volume will be a constant benediction wherever it goes. The book contains twelve of Brother Larimore's most practical and spiritual sermons, stenographically reported as they were delivered in his three-months' meeting in Nashville last winter. This feature alone would make a valuable work, but this is the least valuable part of the book. The most important and impressive, as well as unique, features are the chapters devoted to letters from Larimore to Srygley, with comments by Srygley. The two men were on the most intimate terms for years, and conducted a voluminous correspondence on almost every conceivable subject, especially on subjects bearing on all forms of Christian service and Christian life. Every other chapter is devoted to the letters, and the letters are so arranged as to bear on a given subject for that particular chapter. The volume is bound to make a profound impression wherever read. No one can come in contact with the beautiful spirit which breathes through these letters without being made better. The letters reveal Brother Larimore's innermost life. They show the spirit in which he met men and women of every sort, as well as how he met the various problems of life and duty. The unselfish and unworldly life of the man and his seemingly absolute freedom from earthly ambitions are beautiful and impressive in the extreme. This volume will go on doing good after its author as well as its editor are "lowly laid." It will be a monument more enduring than brass and more imperishable than marble.—George Gowen, in Christian Guide.

PARABLE OF THE VINEYARD AND HUSBANDMEN.

"And he began to speak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and set a hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine fat, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country. And at the season he sent to the husbandmen a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard. And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty. And again he sent unto them another servant; and at him they cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully handled. And again he sent another; and him they killed, and many others; beating some, and killing some. Having yet therefore one son, his well beloved, he sent him also last unto them, saying, They will reverence my son. But those husbandmen said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours. And they took him, and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard. What shall therefore the lord of the vineyard do? he will come and destroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others."

This is one of those scathing parables which Jesus spoke against the Jewish people while engaged in his personal ministry. He was now at Jerusalem, only a few days before his death, and when the opposition of the Jewish people was almost to a crisis, the leaders of the Jewish people having already determined that he should die, and were only seeking an occasion or an opportunity to accomplish his death. In the preceding chapter we have an account of his triumphal entry into Jerusalem, his driving the stock traders out of the temple, and his causing a fig tree to wither. The Pharisees asked him by what authority he did these things, hoping to entangle him in his talk and get an occasion against him; but he answered by asking them a question, promising if they would answer him he would answer them. His question was concerning the baptism of John, whether it was from heaven or from men. They knew that if they said, "From heaven," he would say, "Why, then, did ye not believe him?" and they were afraid to say it was from men, for fear of the people, for they regarded John as a prophet. So they said: "We cannot tell." Then he said: "Neither do I tell you by what authority I do these things." Then immediately follows the parable as above.

By the householder planting a vineyard and preparing for the wine making, Jesus illustrates God as planting the Jewish nation in the land of Canaan, and hedging them in from other nations by the law and its appointments, arranging every facility for them to be a happy and prosperous people, and expecting them to so live as to glorify and honor him; but they had turned to be like the wicked husbandmen to whom the owner let the vineyard. They had defrauded God of all honor by disregarding his word and going their own way, just as the wicked husbandmen had treated the owner of the vineyard; and when God had sent his servants, the prophets, to them to tell them of their evil ways and to warn them of their danger, they had treated them shamefully, beating and wounding some of them and killing others, just as the husbandmen had treated the servants of their landlord. Any one that will read the history of the Jewish nation will readily see how well that part of the parable fits. Then he pictures out the owner of the vineyard as sending his own son to the husbandmen, thinking they would surely respect his son and give to him the proceeds of the vineyard; but those wicked husbandmen said: "This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours." So they killed him and cast him out of the vineyard. Thus he foretold to those wicked Pharisees what they were going to do with him.

Thus in few words he represented the course of those people toward God all along the line of their existence in the promised land and what they were going to do with him. They saw the parable was against them, and were angry, and would have laid hold of him at once, but were afraid of the people; for the common people believed on him when they saw his miracles and heard his teaching, but the leaders of the people closed their eyes and ears against him and determined to destroy him. But he told them just what they had done all along with the Lord's servants, and what they were going to do with him, and what the Lord would do with them on account of it; and they were very angry, for they knew the parable was spoken against them; but they could do nothing and went their way that time.

This parable of itself ought to have convinced those wicked people that Jesus was the Son of God; but their hearts were seared, and they were stubborn and would not see. They well knew that the Jewish nation had done just what Jesus had represented toward God's servants, the prophets, and that they intended to put him to death as soon as possible; so they went away from him in an angry and bitter mood. But afterwards they succeeded in doing just what the parable indicated; they put him to death, and still were not satisfied; they rejected the gospel when it was preached to them, and put his servants, the apostles, to death in large measure, and thus filled up their iniquity, and were destroyed as a nation, and have never recovered from that terrible blow. It seems strange that people could ever be wrought up to the point to do as they did after God had bestowed upon them so many blessings; but there is a still stranger phenomenon before the world to-day than that. When God had destroyed the Jews and had given the gospel into the hands of the Gentiles, and had blessed them with a full revelation of the whole new covenant, and had made them the keepers of the whole matter of human redemption, and they were blessed as none had ever been blessed before, they soon began also to waver and to depart, little by little, from the purity and requirements of God's word. The apostle Paul saw that trouble brewing long before his death and spoke of it. He said to the Thessalonians: "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth [hinders] will let [hinder], until he be taken out of the way." (2 Thess. 2: 7.) This he said concerning the man of sin, the son of perdition, that was to arise. To Timothy he said: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." (2 Tim. 4: 3, 4.) Thus in the very days of the apostles the people began to manifest their dissatisfaction with the word of the Lord and to manifest a desire for something else. Paul saw it with pain, and foretold the outcome in great plainness; and by the time six hundred years had passed the man of sin was full grown, doing the very things Paul foretold that he would do. He exalted himself above the word of God, and set such of it aside as did not suit him and added other things that suited him better. Thus he exalted himself above God, above all that is called God or that is worshiped. Then he began to sit in the temple of God, and to exalt himself as God and above God, claiming the right to change God's own appointments, although they are sealed by the blood of the Lamb; and for hundreds of years and at the present time the man of sin has been and is doing his ruinous work against the truth of God's holy word. Baptism has been set aside by many, and pouring and sprinkling put in its place; the word of the Lord, the gospel of Christ, has been set aside, and the "abstract operation of the Spirit," so-called, has been substituted for it; while thousands and millions have been led to accept these things instead of the plain word of the Lord, the pure gospel of Christ. The word of God in the government of the church has been set aside, and all sorts of creeds and confessions of faith have been substituted in its stead, and churches are governed by these in place of the word of God. Singing, which the word of God plainly requires at the hands of all, has been largely set aside, and the organ, the choir, and the soloists have been put in its place. The work of the church, as such, has been set aside; while all sorts of societies and human organizations have been put forward to do this work, instead of the church itself doing it as such; and in this way the church of God is lost sight of, is overshadowed by the innumerable human organizations that abound in the land. The word of God bringing in the fully developed and perfected state of the church—the state in which the church, guided by the word of God, is to develop its talent and "edify itself in love"—has been set aside, and the one-man pastor (and the young man, at that) has been substituted in its place. These things have gone on to such an extent in many localities that scarcely a trace of the original order of things as set forth in the New Testament is now to be seen. The principle of people choosing their own way has gone so far that churches feel like they have a perfect right to have things as they prefer; so that, to a very large extent, majorities rule instead of the word of God. In all these things the word of God is set aside, and human wisdom, human choice, and human authority prevail; and it is wonderful to what extent the things herein named prevail among the churches of this age. It is indeed astonishing to see how little the word of God has to do with the fashionable churches and religion of this age. The people everywhere are ready to criticise and abuse the Jews for the course they pursued, and then many of them turn round and do the same sort of things they did.

The Jews turned aside from the word of God that was given to them, and went off into all sorts of sins and rebellion against God, even running largely into idolatry; the people to-day are leaving the word of God as extensively as the Jews ever did, are going into just as many other things of their own devising as did the Jewish people. The Jews worshiped idols made with human hands; the people to-day worship their own inventions—the organ, their creeds and societies—as extensively as the Jews worshiped idols made of gold, silver, wood, or stone; and they as thoroughly dishonor God in so doing as did the Jews in worshiping literal idols. The Jews brought their ruin by their many departures from the word of God; and upon the same principle those who depart from the word of God under Christ will bring their ruin.

It would indeed be well for Christians everywhere to study these parables and the history of the Jews, and see how exactly such a parable as the above fits their case. This parable takes in the whole history of the Jews, from the time they first settled in the land of Canaan until they filled their cup of iniquity by rejecting Christ and putting him to death, and by rejecting the gospel and putting apostles and other Christians to death, which caused the destruction of Jerusalem and of the Jewish nation; and according to the New Testament, those who set aside the word of God by their own inventions and devices will be as certainly destroyed in the end as were the Jews. Christians are slow scholars if they learn no valuable lessons from such wonderful parables as this and from such statements as Paul makes concerning the destruction of the man of sin when he says of him: "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." UTTERLY INCORRIGIBLE.

"Utterly incorrigible!"

Yes, that was what the worried, worn-out teacher said as he sat alone in his room one night, watching the fire flickering, dying out in the pale glow, amid the gathering ashes of his fireplace.

"What can reach him? I will try him one more day, and if he does not behave himself, I am going to give him a thrashing that will count as long as he can remember. He's the toughest problem I've met yet."

Jack Ballard had tried his teacher in every conceivable manner in the schoolroom during the past week. Ordinary punishment seemed to have no effect upon him. Coarse, sullen, vicious, he defied the teacher.

"Just thrash him!" said the trustees. "He's given us more trouble than any boy in school. Flail him out!"

Professor Grey had entered the profession of teaching with steadfast, earnest purpose. He wished to cultivate the heart as well as the brain of his pupils, but Jack Ballard seemed utterly beyond his reach. Nothing, so far, had touched or bettered this uncouth and seemingly incorrigible boy.

"I'll give a fine knife," Professor Grey had said on the previous Monday, "to the boy who behaves best till Friday afternoon." It was a kind of forlorn hope. Most boys can be reached by a good pocket-knife. "Jack, will you not try for the knife?" the teacher asked.

"I ain't the kind that gits prizes," was the sullen reply. "Turner's the chap to git it. He's one of yer goody kind. I ain't." Never, seemingly, had Jack been more idle or wantonly disobedient than all that week.

The prize failed utterly to effect its intended purpose.

"If Jack would learn, would get his lessons, I could overlook some things," murmured the troubled teacher, as he worked on this human problem, far more difficult of solution than originals in geometry.

Of all the characters, gentle or tough, with which he had to deal, none so utterly upset all his theories and so completely discouraged him as did this one.

"Was a rousing thrashing what the boy needed?" The teacher sat with bowed head and puzzled over his living problem.

The fire died out and the ashes chilled in the fireplace.

Monday came. The demon of disobedience and sullen idleness seemed to possess Jack Ballard, and when at afternoon recess a fight came off, in which the boy was reported as aggressor, the teacher turned white with suppressed anger, and resolved that a sound whipping could no longer be deferred.

No one was surprised when, at the close of the afternoon recitations, the teacher said: "Jack Ballard, I wish to see you after school."

A look of sullen defiance and ugly resolve came over the boy's hard, sunburned face. When the pupils were all gone, and Professor Grey stood alone with Jack, a great pity, unbidden and unexpected, rose in the teacher's heart, for there was something so outcast and so wretched in the lad's appearance. The teacher's voice was troubled as he said: "Jack, I'm sorry to whip you."

"You needn't be, 'Fessor; I's used to it."

The boy's stubborn manner irritated the teacher.

"Take off your jacket and shirt; I'm going to whip you so you'll remember it."

The boy removed the patched garment hardly worthy the name "coat." He pulled somewhat more slowly at his dirty shirt. When he had removed it, he turned his bare shoulders and waited for the teacher's lash.

The teacher raised his whip to strike, then suddenly dropped in a seat near by. "O, my God!" he cried, half aloud.

The boy's back was marked from shoulder to waist line with dark streaks.

"What's the matter, 'Fessor? Why don't you fire away? You see I's used to it," came in hardened tones from the boy, still bent, waiting for the blow to come.

"Who whipped you in this brutal way, Jack?" asked the teacher.

The lad turned a stolid look on Professor Grey.

"That's nothin'! Pap licks me that way 'bout twice't a day."

Trembling with indignation, and with his heart full to overflowing, the teacher threw down the lash.

"Put on your coat, Jack; I cannot whip you."

Jack stood puzzled. He could not understand. "If 'Fessor Grey is goin' to flog me, why don't he do it and be done foolin' 'bout it?"

"Do you hear me, Jack? Put on your clothes; I cannot strike you."

"You ain't goin' to lick me?" Jack asked in a dazed sort of way.

"No, my boy;" and the teacher's eyes were full of tears. "I shall never whip you. I wouldn't after what I have just seen. You can go. Try to bear your life as best you can. I want to help you, but I can never strike you."

The boy's face flushed painfully; then a softened look, a look unknown and hitherto strange to his whole being, passed over it.

The teacher had won.

He had reached the boy's soul.—Kate Alma Organ, in The American Boy.

WON A PLACE BY A WHISTLE.

He was an odd-looking figure as he came merrily whistling down the street the morning after the big snow. His nose was red, his hands were bare, his feet were in shoes several sizes too large, and his hat was held in place by a roll of paper under the sweat band; but he piped away like a steam whistle, and carried the big snow shovel much as a marching soldier carries his rifle.

"How much?" came from an imposing-looking man who was asked if he wanted his walks cleaned.

"Ten cents."

"A nickel's enough."

"It would be if I couldn't do better; but I've got to do the best I can, and business is rushing. Good morning," he said; and that merry whistle filled the air as the boy started away.

"Go ahead and clean 'em!" shouted the man, whose admiration and better nature had been aroused. "Just see that little rascal make the snow fly," he laughed to his wife, who stood at the window with him. "Why, he's a regular snowplow! And he does it well, too."

"What a little mite, and how comical! I wonder if he's hungry."

She called him in as soon as he had finished, but he would not take time for more than a cup of coffee. "Too busy."

"What are you going to do with the money?" asked the man, as he insisted on settling at twenty-five cents.

"I'm going to get mother a shawl for Christmas. She's wearing one you can see through, and it ain't right."

On he went, with his glowing cheeks and his cheery whistle. But they had his name and address. It was the wife who took a shawl to the mother, and it was the husband who installed the sturdy little snow shoveler as office boy in a bright new uniform, and with permission to whistle when he feels like it.—Exchange.

A SPEAKING WORD.

The word "genteel" in our latter-day style seems to have been displaced, and we seldom hear it used with its fullest sense in modern society; yet there was a time when it seemed indispensable. There was no other word in the language that answered as a substitute in all the shades of meaning which it conveyed. It meant something more and something less than any of the various terms used to describe a person who possesses a combination of style, grace, good manners, and gentle breeding. Entering a room of attractive, well-mannered women, one selects from the number the person who owns a distinct individuality, a something that distinguishes her from the others present. She is superior to the petty tyrannies of conventionality; you see proof of the fact in her manner, her conversation, and her dress. Her clear, truthful, reposeful countenance is a mirror for the mind and heart that select their own nourishment and refuse to accept intellectual fads, floating fancies of the hour, or religious make-shifts. Her gown is her own by instinctive selection, and nothing is left that should be desired. It follows the line of the fashion of the times, with something besides that is indefinitely added. She is the genteel woman of our grandmother's day, who remains regal in her womanliness, superior to circumstance and condition. An uncultivated man, as related to choice of expression, in speaking in praise of his mother, remarked: "She was a lady when she washed her dishes." He probably did not imagine how forcibly he illustrated his truth; but one who listened to the worshipful words could not help wondering how many women with the best opportunities for acquiring desirable things for the enrichment of personality could stand the dish-washing test. It seems to me there is a crying need for the reinstatement of the old-school word in our social vocabulary; and the sooner it is brought back into general use, the better. It would be sad cynicism to infer that the passing of the word "genteel" was due to the passing of the particular type which it described.—Woman's Home Companion.

WHY FARMERS ARE SO OFTEN DISCONTENTED.

In spite of the advantages of their occupation, there is considerable discontent among farmers, many of them complaining bitterly of the drudgery and isolation of their lives and the small financial results obtained. It must be remembered that we do not hear complaints from the successful farmers, and possibly agriculture as a business is not to be blamed for the dissatisfaction that exists among others. Certainly the farmers have little cause for complaint this year. Unquestionably the percentage of failures among farmers is very small, compared with the percentage of failures among merchants. Moreover, farmers are apt to forget, in estimating the returns for their labors, to include the farm products which are consumed in their own households; yet this factor ought, of course, to be counted in estimating results.

The complaint that farm life is dull and isolated has, perhaps, more foundation than any other that farmers make; yet the removal of this drawback rests largely with the farmers themselves. Coöperation and association for a great variety of purposes now serve to bring country people together and afford opportunities for social intercourse of a very pleasant kind, and these opportunities will multiply as time goes on. The improvement of our public highways, now so widely agitated, will help immensely to lessen the loneliness of country life by making intercourse between neighborhoods easier and pleasanter. With better roads, the leisure time of winter may be better utilized than it now is, and associations of all kinds for agricultural and social ends will doubtless grow in numbers and influence. Taking the question "by and large," then, I think it is a safe conclusion that, while farming has its drawbacks, it is yet a reasonably safe, reasonably profitable, and highly interesting occupation for a man blessed with a real love of Nature, endowed with common sense, and equipped with some knowledge of, and a taste for, the sciences that underlie the business of agriculture.—Saturday Evening Post.

A WRONG WORD.

The plural of "one" was held by grammarians of a generation ago to be "two," "three," etc. If common usage is to be accepted, the plural of "one" is now "ones." Almost every day the reader may find in the public prints such phrases as "the guilty ones," "the inferior ones," "the best ones," and so on. The practice is not confined to the hurriedly prepared daily newspapers, but is observed in the magazines, and even in books. Theodore Roosevelt used the word "ones" in the plural sense in his Chicago Labor Day oration, and Candidate Bryan has been reported as employing it upon more than one occasion.

Despite this common use, a protest against the practice may be pardoned. It is bad form, a corruption of language. Moreover, it is surplusage. There is no excuse except untidiness for such an expression as, "The best were compared with the inferior ones in that case," because the thought would be better expressed by the omission of the objectionable word. There are many people who have no patience with finespun rules of grammar. Genius often tramples upon rules; but genius never disregards rules to secure an awkward expression. Even the dictum that the rule should be, "Language the wayfaring stranger, even though a diabolical idiot, may understand," does not justify the plural "ones."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS MUST PASS AWAY.

Brother Lipscomb: I desire a little information, through the Gospel Advocate, on 1 Cor. 13: 8. It is referred to very often by different writers as proof that diversity of tongues has ceased. I do not just now remember of ever having seen anything from you on this passage, and I will be frank to say that I am slow to believe that that was what the apostle was treating of or writing about. If so, he also says: "Whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." Now, does it mean that knowledge shall be done away just as much as tongues shall be done away? I do not believe any one can in these days speak anything he has not learned by study, yet I do not understand this passage, and would thank you for a little light on it when convenient.

JAMES ARNOLD.

Chickalah, Ark.

I do not see how any one can read 1 Cor. 12, 13, and doubt the meaning of the apostle. Chapter 12 is taken up with the account of spiritual gifts—what they are, how they are given, how they stand related one to the other and to the body of Christ, and their several uses. It also tells them that while each ought to desire the best gifts, yet he would show them a more excellent way than these gifts. Chapter 13 tells how useless spiritual gifts are to save, unless associated with and ending in charity. Speaking with tongues, without charity, is "assounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal"—all sound, without meaning to him who possesses them. Though he has the gift of prophecy that reveals all mysteries and all knowledge and has the miracle-working faith that would enable him to remove mountains (see Matt. 17: 20; Mark 11: 22; Luke 17: 6), and has not charity, they add nothing to his salvation. This shows power to work miracles or spiritual gifts were not given to save man; that what is here called "charity," or love, alone can save him.

The knowledge given through prophecy mentioned in verse 2 is the knowledge that shall vanish away when prophecies cease, mentioned in verse 8. In verse 3 he shows one may give all his goods to help the poor and his own body to be burned and yet be without the charity that saves. Verses 4-7 describe the qualities of charity, or love, that saves. These qualities are such as lead to humble obedience to the will of God. "Therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." (Rom. 13: 10.) The perfection of love, or charity, is to fulfill the law of God in all things toward God, toward our fellow-men, and toward ourselves. The passage means that to fulfill or come up to the law of God in all things is to love, is the highest possible good to every being in the universe and is eternal in its nature, while these temporary gifts that were to endure until the perfect or completed law of God was given would then pass away. Prophecies shall cease, speaking with tongues shall be done away, and the knowledge and mysteries coming through prophecy, as told in verse 2, shall vanish away.

In verse 11 he compares this time of partial gifts in the church to childhood; that when the perfect law is completed, to manhood. While the gifts last he would use and speak by them as he spoke when a child. When the perfect law is come, he will put away these partial gifts bestowed as helps for the childhood of the church and use the perfect law given to guide its manhood. While in the state of a child, with only these partial gifts, he sees, as through a glass, darkly; but when the perfect law is come, the glass will be taken away and they will all, face to face, look into the perfect law of liberty. While having only the gifts to guide them, they knew only in part, but when the perfect law should come they would know as they were known. While these miraculous gifts must pass away, faith, hope, and charity would remain as the perpetual heritage of the church. Without these no one can be a child of God; with them and the perfect law of liberty gifts are no longer needed. The greatest of these is charity; for it is the end, the aim, and the perfection of the others. The end and aim of faith and hope is to bring man into perfect harmony with the will of God. Complete harmony with the will of God is perfect charity, or love, to every being in the universe. This charity will only be perfected in the state of glory, when we shall see him as he is and be like him, and it will be eternal.

Chapter 14 continues the discussion of the relation of charity to spiritual gifts, the relative importance of the different gifts, their dependence one upon the other, how and when each may be used, and the rule by which all gifts are to be tested. The passage, in its scope and connection, cannot possibly mean anything else than that the spiritual gifts were bestowed on the infant church to guide it until the perfect will of God is known, and that they revealed only parts of the will of God and must pass away when the whole will of God was given.

ATTITUDE IN PRAYER.

The word "stand" in English in the majority of cases does not mean erect, on the feet. Webster gives fourteen different senses in which it is used: (1) "To remain at rest in an erect position;" (2) "to occupy as its place, to be situated—as, Paris stands on the Seine;" (3) "to cease from progress, not to go forward." I will not give the others. These illustrate the most common uses of it. When the word "stand" is used, we must look to the context to see in what sense it is used. When we compare its uses with prayer, it seems to me that we are compelled to see it is used in the second sense given above, because the bowed or kneeling position is universally connected with prayer when the position is defined. Read the article of President Loos, published in the Gospel Advocate a few weeks since.

"Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven." (1 Kings 8: 22.) This is an example of standing to pray. The prayer is worded, and verse 54 says: "And it was so, that when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication unto the Lord, he arose from before the altar of the Lord, from kneeling on his knees with his hands spread up to heaven." This shows clearly that to stand in prayer is to stand on the knees, and that the praying attitude is to stand on the knees, with the hands uplifted to God. Many who kneel stick their faces down on their seats and seem to be talking to some one beneath them instead of to God, who is above them. In this attitude the people do not hear and are not able to say the "Amen." They speak as in an unknown tongue.

Jesus speaks of some standing on the corners of the streets to pray to be seen of men. If they stood erect on their feet, they would attract no attention, and would not be seen of men to pray. To stand on the knees and spread the hands toward heaven would attract attention, and then they would pray to be seen of men. The kings and prophets and saints of the patriarchal and Jewish ages bowed and knelt in prayer; Jesus and the apostles knelt in prayer; the apostles and disciples, men and women, knelt upon the river bank to pray; and the angels in heaven will bow before the throne of God.

Why shall not mortals on earth bow before the Almighty?

It is the attitude of humility and adoration and, while expressing it, increases the feeling of humility and dependence. All the examples of both the Old Testament and the New Testament point to the kneeling posture as the attitude of prayer. The erect attitude is recognized as that of thanksgiving. The church in the early times believed that prayer should be said standing on Easter Sunday, in sign of joy at the resurrection of Christ. It was then extended to every Sunday; but at all other times they knelt. Christ and the apostles knelt. The church ordained the standing. Jesus prayed in the erect posture when nailed to the cross, but at other times he knelt and prayed. This subject of attitude may be regarded as a small matter, but it shows the bent of the mind. Humility bows in reverence before God and the attitude strengthens the feeling that leads to it. We need to bow ourselves, to cultivate humility and reverence for God, and it is an ill omen to see persons fixing themselves for prayer in other than the attitude of humility. The Christian will pray at all times, in all attitudes; but when we take posture for prayer, let us bow before the Lord.

CONVERSION OF THE EUNUCH.

God has ever been exceedingly gracious to his people. He not only gives us precept, but also example, showing us the way of life. It is an encouraging thought to note that he is interested in the salvation of one man. When a man honestly desires to know the way of life, he sets agencies in motion by which that man may be brought to a knowledge of the truth. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." God does not will the death of any man, but prefers that all be saved.

Philip was engaged in a great work in the city of Samaria, baptizing both men and women. God appears to him through his angel and sends him "unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert." While, according to appearances, Philip was doing a great work in Samaria, much greater than preaching simply to one man, yet God thought what appeared as a small work in the eyes of man was the greater work. We should not always judge from appearances. Many times when we think we are doing least, we may be accomplishing most in the service of the Master. We should be ready to preach the gospel to one man. Jesus announced some of his greatest truths to one man. The necessity of the new birth was announced to Nicodemus and he announced his Messiahship to the Samaritan woman. Aquila and Priscilla taught Apollos the way of the Lord more perfectly. We should never despise the day of small things.

It is well to note the work of each agency in this man's conversion. The angel appeared to the preacher of the gospel and directed him to the way where he would find this man. Philip was obedient and "arose and went." This is a beautiful example of obedience. He did not stop to ask the Lord why he would have him go, but went, leaving the results with the Lord. He might have said: "I am doing a great work here, and I can see no reason for stopping this great work and going to that desert way." There is no more striking example of obedience on record, not even Abraham or Gideon. So we should ever be ready to obey the Lord, without stopping to parley about it.

If God works independently of the truth in order to convert the sinner, this would have been a splendid time to send the angel to the unconverted man to tell him what to do to be saved.

The Spirit impressed Philip in audible words that he should go near and join himself to the chariot. God wanted him to preach the gospel to the eunuch. Again, note his prompt obedience; he did not hesitate, but ran thither to him and heard him read the Scriptures. It should be observed that the work of the angel and of the Spirit was to bring the unconverted man and the preacher face to face. The reason for this is evident. After the divine philanthropy had accomplished its work, God said to the chosen twelve: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) "For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1: 21.) "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom. 1: 16.) Here was a man in search of the truth. He was honestly seeking to know the way of life. God had ordained that men should preach the gospel. The New Testament was not written at that time. God sends his angel and his Spirit in order that the man may know the truth. He would have dispatched every angel out of heaven or turned this old world upside down, if necessary, in order to bring this man to a knowledge of the truth. The angel and the Spirit directed Philip to the eunuch in order that he might preach Jesus to him.

The "broken and contrite" spirit of the eunuch is worthy of serious consideration. He was ready to receive the truth from any source, even from the mouth of a babe. He did not contrast his position with that of Philip; he felt that he was the beggar and needed the truth, and he was anxious to cast himself upon God for mercy and pardon. The sinner must always feel his need of the Savior; he must rely on God to save him when in humility he obeys God.

Philip preached unto him Jesus. Doubtless he taught him of the character, life, and work of Jesus. Preaching Jesus is the grandest work in which mortal ever engaged. It is the only theme that will satisfy and feed the hungry soul. Preachers should be content to preach the gospel, to preach Jesus.

From the preaching of Jesus, the eunuch learned that it was his duty to be baptized. We are only told that he "preached unto him Jesus." Next we learn that "as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" I learn from this that when I preach Jesus, as did Philip, sinners will learn from my preaching that it is their duty to be baptized. It is not safe to fail to preach the duty of baptism.

Before any man is a fit subject of baptism, he must believe with all his heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. He is not required to relate a Christian experience when he has none. When any one believes with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, he is ready to obey the commands of God. He will obey and leave the results with the Lord.

The work of the angel and of the Spirit was to bring the two together; the work of the preacher was to preach Jesus; the work of the eunuch was to obey the law of the Lord, which is perfect, converting the soul. He believed and was baptized. Repentance intervenes between faith and baptism; hence, he repented.

As we have the New Testament, can read, believe, and obey for ourselves, we need expect no angel visit or miraculous work of the Holy Spirit in order to bring us to a knowledge of the truth. Preachers are here ready to preach the gospel to the people. The sinner should believe, repent, and be baptized for the remission of sins, and, like the eunuch, go on his way rejoicing. J. C. M'QUIDDY.

WHEN ARE SINS FORGIVEN?

Brother Lipscomb: I am glad to see that we are so close together, and I believe that when you think more you will see clearly that I have not made a mistake and am trying to make the Bible justify it; but, on the other hand, the Bible clearly teaches what I am endeavoring to set forth, and you tacitly admit it. You say that the blind man was referring to the Jews. This I will admit. Then so long as they were sinners God would not hear them; hence, they must cease to be sinners before God would hear them. This the language clearly implies, for the blind man draws the line, builds the wall, and shows on which side God will hear a man and on which side he will not hear a man. He says that God will not hear sinners. That is clear. Then he says that "if any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his [God's] will, him he heareth." Now for the point.

So long as a man is a sinner God will not hear him, but when a man is a worshiper, and is doing God's will, God will hear him. Then it is clear that when a man begins the worship of God, and does his will, he is not a sinner. If he is, then God will hear sinners. Now, what I teach is that when a sinner by faith accepts the Lord Jesus Christ as the Son of God, repents, and confesses the Christ, that man has ceased to be a sinner, but, instead, is a servant of God, doing the will of God. (Matt. 10: 32; John 6: 29; Acts 17: 30.) As a man doing God's will, he is entitled to call upon God, with the promise of being heard. (John 9: 31; Acts 2: 38.) God answered this multitude through Peter, the Holy Spirit guiding Peter, or furnishing the words of the answer. Why? Because they had ceased to be sinners when they accepted the Son of God as the Christ. If they did not cease to be sinners when they accepted Christ by faith, then it is clear that God will hear and answer the prayers of sinners; for that people prayed to know what to do, and God, by the Holy Spirit, speaking through Peter, gave the answer. So if the Bible be true that God will not hear sinners, these people must have ceased to be sinners when they did God's will in accepting God's Son as their Savior by faith. So when we baptize a man who believes, repents, and confesses Christ, we are baptizing a man doing God's will; and he is obliged to be a servant of God, for it is impossible for a man to be a sinner and obey God at the same time.

The wall, brother, has been erected by the Bible, and it is the wall of sin. So the man who stands on the side of sin cannot be heard; then, in order to be heard, he must change his position. Hence, he crossed over to the side of obedience by faith. You say, and I agree, that men desiring to know and do God's will will be heard by him, whether in the church or out of it, whether Jew or Gentile. A man, Brother Lipscomb, in this frame of mind cannot be a sinner, though he may have been ever so wicked previous to his change of faith, life, and purpose. If so, then God heard and answered sinners on the day of Pentecost. The Book says he will not hear sinners. So, then, you indirectly admit my claim that a man can be a servant of God out of Christ by faith, repentance, and confession, and a justified servant in Christ when he obeys baptism. So in Christ the blood of Christ washes away sins that are past. (Rom. 3: 21-25; 6: 16-18.) The only thing necessary is that you dismiss the idea that a man is a sinner and the servant of God at the same time and we are agreed, and it brings together those who have been contending along this line. Naught but obeying and teaching the truth will avail at the judgment. S. I. S. CAWTHON.

Brother Lipscomb: Please answer the following through the Gospel Advocate: (1) What do the words "death," "die," or "dead" mean in the Scriptures? (2) Do they mean separated or freed? (3) Do you understand that people who obey the gospel or are baptized are dead when baptized? (4) If they are dead when baptized and the words carried the idea "freedom," are they not Christians, or saved, when baptized? (5) If so, how can baptism be for the remission of sins? (6) In Rom. 6 was Paul discussing the attitude or position the sinner is in when baptized, or Christ's death, into which the sinner enters when baptized, where salvation is granted? (7) Is baptism a part of the gospel? (8) If so, is the sinner scripturally dead till baptized? A. B. GUNTER.

I publish the above questions and Brother Cawthon's article. To ask a series of questions—"If this is so," "Isn't this so?"—is a very uncertain way of arguing. It is what logicians call "the fallacy of probabilities." A series of arguments or questions, one based upon another, the foundation only probable, can never reach a certainty. If there is any distinction between being separated from sin and being free from sin, I am not able to see it. I do not think there is any. All these questions have been answered as fully as I know how to answer them in the responses to Brother Cawthon and others. The questions are steps in a process of reasoning to show we are not baptized into remission of sins, that we are pardoned, or freed, from sin before baptism. The Bible plainly teaches: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for [or into] the remission of sins." "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." These, with a number of other statements, are very plain and unmistakable, and any speculation or reasoning of men that sets these aside I set down at once as fallacious.

If Brother Cawthon agrees with me, he made a mistake in what he has written. He now confounds the sinner in Christ, who has put on Christ and then turns away and refuses to hear the law, with one who has never put him on. But the man in Christ who sins is a sinner until he is pardoned and freed from sin. When a man steals he is a rogue until he repents, confesses, restores, to his ability, that which is stolen, and obtains forgiveness. Ceasing to sin does not cleanse the soul from sins already committed.

I expect Mr. Folk, in his discussion, to ask the same questions and take the same positions; but this is no reason why these brethren should not maintain them, if they are true. But I wish them to see where they lead.

I expect to answer Mr. Folk, when he asks me if I bury living or dead folks, by asking which class he buries. He has the child alive, born again; then he takes the newly born child in Christ and buries it. He buries a live child of God. I bury one that in his heart is dead to sin, desires to put off the body of sin and be brought forth into the kingdom of God, where the new principle of life can find an atmosphere in which it can grow to a man in Christ Jesus.

The true idea is, the person is not a child out of Christ, nor is a sinner baptized into Christ. In his heart he is dead to sin, desires to be freed from the body of sin, and is buried into Christ. The very act by which he is born a child of God puts him into Christ. He is not freed from sin out of Christ, nor is a sinner baptized into Christ. These speculations and attempts at distinctions not made in the Scriptures create discord and contention, divert men's minds from Christ and his law, and tend to school men to set aside the law of God; and those engaged in them do not build up the cause of God. Brother Cawthon says in a private note that he is through. If others have anything new to offer on the subject, we will hear them, but it is needless to repeat what has already been said. To change the form of saying it does not make the idea new. D. L.

We heartily indorse the greater portion of Brother Elmore's article, in this number of the Gospel Advocate, on "The Lord's Day Service." The members of the churches must be stirred to greater activity and more personal interest, both in the work and worship of the congregations, or the congregations must die and the members go to destruction. It seems to me the churches are at the forks of the road, and they must either give themselves to more faithful service of God or they must die. The rule for this service is, what God has ordained, or appointed, must be observed, or where he has established an order it must be adhered to. There can be no letting up on this question, nor can there be any addition to the organizations God has given. Fidelity to God demands this. It equally demands that where God has given no order none can be given. Where God has left men free they must not be bound. God's order is the only and all-sufficient law of faith and practice. What God has told us to do in the Lord's day meeting must be done. The special order of the observance is not laid down as the place and order of the temple ordinances are laid down. The best evidence of this is that when men insist on a fixed order they have to add to or modify it. A ritual of order must embrace everything in time and place. All admit singing is right; but it is not mentioned in what they call "the order." It is mentioned when the Supper was instituted. It is true singing might come under the head of apostolic teaching or doctrine, as nothing ought to be sung, save what is embraced in the apostles' teaching. If singing can be brought in under this head, much more can preaching or teaching; for nothing must be preached or taught, save what the apostles taught. While, then, only what the apostles taught is to be taught, who shall do this or the method of doing it is not laid down, and freedom must be allowed where God allows it. I do not know who can decide these questions where the Scriptures give no directions, save the elders, and this should be done in harmony with the congregation. On untaught points we may yield our preferences, because these points do not involve obedience to God. D. L.

MONTGOMERY.

Death visited the home of Brother and Sister R. B. Montgomery on September 21, 1900, and claimed as its victim their only child, little Lona. It was hard to give her up, but Christ says: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." All that loving hands could do was done, but all to no avail. God, who gave her, called her home. A place is vacant in their home which cannot be filled, but if the parents prove faithful to the end, they will meet their baby in heaven, where there will be no more partings. HER AUNT.

NEWMAN.

Mrs. Rosie Lee Newman, of Celina, Collin County, Tex., departed this life on September 18, 1900. She was born in Jackson County, Tenn., and obeyed the gospel at the age of sixteen years, under the preaching of Brother J. R. Hoover, and lived a consistent Christian life to the day of her death. Sister Newman was first married to Brother James Turner, a young Christian preacher, who lived but a few years after their marriage. Later on she became the wife of Brother James Newman, with whom she lived happily about three years. She leaves her husband and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

GOODE.

Sister Amanda Goode was born on May 24, 1870, and was taken from us on September 5, 1900. For years she had been a member of the church of God, and I believe I have never known a more zealous and devoted Christian. She was true to meet with the disciples on the first day of the week to break bread. We sadly miss her at these meetings, but we confidently believe that she will meet with all the ransomed souls in that celestial city to sing the praises of Him whom she loved and served. Sister Goode leaves a husband and two little boys, besides other relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. Time is swiftly rolling on, so let us hasten to prepare for that happy meeting where we shall part no more. Shepp, Tenn. J. H. DUPUY.

DUNCAN.

By request I chronicle the death of Sister Cynthia M. Duncan, which occurred near Union Valley, Tenn., on November 12, 1899. Sister Duncan was born on October 1, 1828, being, therefore, a little over seventy-three years of age at the time of her death. Her maiden name was Bryant. While young, she married Samuel Owens, who died in the army during the Civil War. She afterwards married Hiram Duncan. Out of this union grew one daughter, with whom she lived after the death of Mr. Duncan until the time of her death. Sister Duncan obeyed the gospel at Little Rock, in Hickman County, about fifty years ago. While in health she loved to go to church and see the cause prosper. She leaves three children and a number of friends and relatives to mourn their loss; but they should not sorrow as those who have no hope, for she died in the faith of the gospel. May God bless the sorrow-stricken friends and relatives.

BOONE.

Mrs. Mattie Boone, wife of J. L. Boone, peacefully departed this life at their home, Orlando, Fla., on September 7, 1900, after a lingering illness. Mattie Wood was born and reared at Alexandria, Tenn. She was married to J. L. Boone on May 22, 1885. This union was blessed with two children—Lorene and J. L., Jr. Mattie was especially loved about Alexandria, Hartsville, and Cookeville, Tenn., where, in connection with the schools, she taught music. Mattie obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Brother J. M. Kidwill. While she was exceedingly cheerful, made friends everywhere and with everybody, was liberal in spirit and broad in her views, she believed in the "old Jerusalem gospel." During the last three years of her life, confined mostly to the house, she read the Bible through four times and the New Testament repeatedly. She loved the Savior, was obedient to His commandments, and trusted in his promises; she was a devoted wife and mother and a true Christian. "One by one we cross the river." J. T. BOONE.

BROOKS.

Sister Marlan Alice Brooks, wife of Brother W. A. Brooks, was born on March 22, 1863; was baptized into the church of Christ at Cathey's Creek, Maury County, Tenn., in the summer of 1876; was married on December 21, 1881; and departed this life on August 28, 1900. Brother R. A. Kennedy made very appropriate remarks, touching the resurrection of Christ, to the large concourse of friends and acquaintances that assembled at the Worley Graveyard on the occasion of her burial. Sister Brooks exhibited in her life the fruit of the Spirit, and she always brought sunshine into the hearts of the suffering as she, in pleasing manner and tender solicitude, ministered to their wants and necessities. In her home life she was diligent and labored assiduously for the comfort, welfare, and happiness of the family circle. She leaves a devoted husband and five children—two girls and three boys—who have the heartfelt sympathy of the whole community, and who have the consoling hope that their departed loved one will have part in the first resurrection and enjoy eternal life in the home promised by the Savior to his faithful followers. A. B. CATHEY.

MINOR.

Our dear father, Bennett Minor, died at his home, in Ellis County, Tex., on September 5, 1900. He was sixty-eight years, five months, and five days old at the time of his death. His health failed one year ago. During the last month of his life his sufferings were so intense that they were almost unbearable, yet he bore them without a murmur. He died of heart failure. Father frequently talked to our dear mother, telling her that he felt that he was prepared to go when the Lord called him. He became a member of the church of Christ thirty-two years ago. He was born in Jackson County, Tenn., in 1832; in 1864 he was married to Miss Sarah Jackson. To them were born twelve children—eight sons and four daughters. A wife, seven sons, and four daughters now survive him. It seems that our grief is more than we can bear, but again we think that he was so kind and so ready to do good here that God knew best; that he has work for him to do. During his sufferings here on earth, he was so patient that we are trying to be comforted, for we have a hope of meeting him in the sweet beyond. He leaves near relatives and friends in Tennessee and Kentucky and a host of friends here to mourn their loss. Britton, Tex. HIS CHILDREN.

STILES.

The death angel visited the home of Brother S. H. Stiles on September 28, 1900, and carried his mother, Mrs. Mabuldah Stiles, across the stream flowing between time and eternity, where she will ever rest on the evergreen shore. Sister Stiles was born on January 26, 1825, being seventy-four years, eight months, and two days old at the time of her death. She worshiped with the Baptists for forty odd years, but after she began to study for herself she learned the way of the Lord more perfectly and was baptized into the church of Christ by Brother H. L. Walling. She was a true soldier of the cross and certainly obeyed the command of God: "Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good." The Bible was her greatest companion; she loved it dearly and read it daily as long as she was able. I do not remember being with her at any time that she did not say something about Christ and his gospel. She insisted that her loved ones would not grieve after her, as she was prepared to die. She loved her Bible so dearly that her last request was that it might be placed in her hand and go with her to the grave. It is a grand thing to die with our heads resting upon the pillow of faith and our souls stayed by hope. May God grant all to die as Sister Stiles died. McMinnville, Tenn. S. H. HALL.

GREEN.

Brother Abe Green passed away from the scenes of this life on September 16, 1900. He was born on October 27, 1871, and confessed his faith in Christ and was baptized by Brother John R. Williams some time in July, 1896. Brother Abe was one of the most zealous, consecrated Christians I ever knew. He loved his Bible and was always ready to give a reason for the hope that was in him "with meekness and fear;" he loved the Gospel Advocate and has been one of its constant readers for several years. Brother Green was a good citizen, an obliging neighbor, an obedient son, and a kind and loving brother. Truly, he was an "unpolished jewel." He was unpretentious, and did not show up for his real worth; but the more he was rubbed, the brighter he shone. Those who were most intimately associated with him felt most the influence of his Christian character. He leaves a father, two brothers, and two sisters to mourn their loss. His father and his two sisters are loyal members of the one body, the church of Christ. To the sorrowing ones I would say: Let us try to imitate his Christian life, so that when we are called to quit the walks of life we may be prepared to meet him in that beautiful home that our Savior has gone to prepare. May God bless the loved ones, is the prayer of one who loved him.

WOOD.

Little Edna and Tommie Wood, aged thirteen years and ten years, respectively, died of typhoid pneumonia last April, as the flowers began to open in full life and beauty. Edna died on April 25, 1900, and little Tommie died on April 27, 1900. They were children of the same household, son and daughter of Brother J. I. Wood and Sister Cynthia Wood, both of whom are members of the church of Christ. To know these little friends was to love them. They were obedient, active, and energetic at home, ready to perform the part assigned them; at school they loved their teacher, were kind to their playmates, were bright and cheerful, and recited well their lessons. They were under my care as their teacher up to near the time of their sickness. In this we are reminded of the flower that comes in springtime, full of life, inoculating the world with its fragrance and beauty, but—alas!—under scorching rays of the noonday sun it withers away. The Savior says: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." I can but commend the bereaved to the promises of Jesus; he is our only hope in this present world of sorrows. Let us look upward and trust him by walking humbly in his commands till some sweet day we may, through his grace, rise with the radiant hosts of all the redeemed and enter in through the gates into the city. Blessed Lord, lead us by thy hand evermore.

BRIGANCE.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." The death of Sister Mintie Brigance, wife of L. L. Brigance and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Turner, occurred at the home of her parents on September 25, 1900. Mintie was born on April 18, 1881; obeyed the gospel at the age of thirteen years, and lived a faithful member of the church of Christ the remainder of her life. She enjoyed Lord's day services, especially the Bible study, and was generally present to do her part; she was apt as a Bible student, having distinguished herself in this when quite young. When but a child, she enjoyed the company and the associations of older people and talked with them upon the graver and more serious questions of life. Sister Brigance was married on July 2, 1899. She leaves a husband, father, mother, and two sisters, all of whom are members of the church of Christ; a little brother, Gordon, whom she loved so fondly and tenderly; and a host of friends and relatives, to mourn their loss. Two other little brothers preceded her, thus making three of the children that have crossed the river, while three are left behind. "Such is life." May the Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well, comfort and sustain the bereaved ones. That all of us may live humbly and submissively at the foot of the cross, so that "some sweet day" we can meet Mintie and other loved ones gone before, is the humble prayer of her uncle.

TATUM.

Mrs. Sallie Smith Tatum, who was born on September 18, 1824, departed this life on September 1, 1900, aged seventy-five years, eleven months, and thirteen days. Sister Tatum obeyed the gospel in 1839, at old Berea, near Chapel Hill, Tenn., under the preaching of Joshua K. Speer, and from youth to old age she was a faithful servant in the vineyard of her Master, it having been more than threescore years since she began walking in the path of righteousness. She was married to R. D. Tatum on October 18, 1849. To this union there were born seven children—five girls and two boys—all of whom survive her, except Maggie, the baby, who died in infancy. While it was gratifying to her to live to see her four girls and one of her boys obey the Savior she so much loved, it grieved her most of all to think of having one wayward boy out on the mountain of sin, without God and without hope in the world. The writer was summoned to attend the funeral, and, on arriving at the place, one of her daughters gave me Sister Tatum's New Testament, with certain chapters and verses marked with her own hand, and over the following scriptures, in her own handwriting, she says: "Read this when I am dead: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." Thus I would admonish her husband, children, and friends to imitate her worthy example in life and strive to enter into that rest where the sorrows of life are no more.

The estimated total population of Tennessee in 1900 is 1,958,000; pupils enrolled in elementary and secondary common schools, 499,845; per cent of population enrolled, 25.54; number of teachers, 9,214, being 5,019 male and 4,195 female; average daily attendance, 352,734; value of public school property, $3,935,671.

The Eighth Annual Industrial Congress, under the auspices of the Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Normal, Ala., for negroes, held a two-days' session last week in the pavilion of the college. It was attended by over eight hundred negroes from Alabama and Tennessee, representing the industrial negro and his progress.

The Census Bureau has made public the returns of the population of Alabama. The population of the State in 1900 is 1,828,697, as against 1,513,017 in 1890, representing an increase since 1890 of 315,680, or 20.8 per cent. This rate of increase is slightly greater than that for the decade from 1880 to 1890, when it was 19.8 per cent, but somewhat less than that for the decade from 1870 to 1880, when it was 26.6 per cent.

According to the report of the United States Commissioner of Education for the fiscal year ended on June 1, last, the grand total of pupils in all schools—elementary, secondary and higher, public and private—for the year ending on July 1, 1899, was 16,738,362, of which the number enrolled in the common schools, elementary and secondary, was 15,138,715. Twenty and one-half per cent from the entire population was enrolled in the public elementary schools and high schools.

land. Its performance is thus described: "It rose over Lake Constance to a height of nine hundred and eighty-four feet, moved about for eighty minutes in the air, first in one direction and then in another, according as it was steered; sailed against the wind, answering its rudders, for a considerable distance; and came down and alighted upon the surface of the lake as delicately and gracefully as a sea gull."

The Viceroy, Lord Curzon, in a speech before the Council not long since, said the famine had affected a quarter of the population of India, and that even now two million of people were receiving relief. He expressed the hope, however, that in a month they would return to their homes. He further said that five hundred thousand deaths were traceable to the famine, and that the loss of crops involved the loss of £50,000,000 sterling plus some millions for loss of cattle. It would never be known how many were affected by the calamity, while the alms distributed were unprecedented.

The great peach farms in the vicinity of St. Joseph, Mich., have ripened an unusually heavy crop of fruit. The number of packages of fruit handled from the twin cities in one day was over seventy thousand. Six steamboats, some of which make two trips daily; special refrigerator fruit trains on three different roads carrying over sixty car loads of peaches to all points in the East and West, besides what two express companies handle, make returns for one day alone of not less than seventy thousand dollars to the fruit growers of that vicinity. One day last week the output was one hundred thousand packages.

The census returns show there are in the United States twenty-eight cities having more than one hundred thousand inhabitants, seventy-eight cities having more than fifty thousand inhabitants, and fifty-nine cities having more than twenty-five thousand inhabitants. New York, with more than three million population, stands alone at the head of the list. Then come Chicago and Philadelphia, each of which has a population in excess of one million; three cities—St. Louis, Boston, and Baltimore—have a population of half a million each; five cities—Cleveland, Buffalo, San Francisco, Cincinnati, and Pittsburg—have a population of between three hundred thousand and four hundred thousand each; and eight cities—New Orleans, Detroit, Milwaukee, Washington, Newark, Jersey City, Louisville, and Minneapolis—have a population of between two hundred thousand and three hundred thousand each.

James W. Bradbury, the oldest statesman of the United States, recently celebrated his ninety-eighth birthday. Born in Maine in 1802, he was a lad of ten years when the United States went to war with Great Britain the second time, and has personal recollections of that struggle. He was eighteen years old when Maine was admitted into the Union; he helped welcome General Lafayette to Maine in 1824; he is the only survivor of the one hundred men who sat in the Senate during his senatorial term; he is the only living member of the Bowdoin College class of 1825, which included Longfellow, Hawthorne, and John S. C. Abbott; he has lived in Augusta, Me., for sixty-nine years and in the house now occupied by him more than half a century; he has been a teetotaler all of his life and has never used tobacco in any form. At the age of ninety-eight Mr. Bradbury is able to be about to attend to his correspondence.

A Missionary Work.

It is my purpose to solicit contributions from brethren and churches, invest the money in tracts, and then travel and distribute these tracts among the people. I should be pleased to receive sample copies, with prices per dozen lots, from authors or publishers who may wish to have their works put before the people. Nothing containing more than fifty, seventy-five, or, at most, one hundred pages will be purchased. I also have some two or three hundred copies of my little work, "A Debate on the Church Question." If you have a friend who is a member of or is in sympathy with any denomination, send me his name and address, with one cent to pay postage, and he will receive a copy of it. No more than six copies will be sent to any one post office, unless order is accompanied by the regular price, ten cents per copy.

To all young hearts standing upon life's threshold, whose feet will soon stand within the greatest century that will have ever passed over our earth, there comes the reflection that victory and happiness move swiftly toward sorrow and defeat for him in whom the inner light hath failed. MISSISSIPPI.

Abbott, October 17.—In January, last, I moved into this (Clay) county and located at this place, ten miles west of West Point. Since coming here I have been preaching regularly for three congregations—one at Abbott; one at Griffith, five miles southwest of this place; and one at Montpelier, ten miles west of here. At each of these places the brethren have good, comfortable houses in which to meet. The church at this place (formerly called the "Palo Alto Church") was established and built up many years ago by the labors of T. W. Caskey, B. F. Manire, and others whose names I cannot now recall. This is one of the oldest congregations in the State, and some of the ablest preachers in the church of Christ have held meetings here. The congregation now numbers something over one hundred members. I have been preaching for this congregation two Sundays in each month this year, but they contemplate doing more missionary work next year in having the gospel preached in the surrounding country. Our protracted meeting here resulted in four additions to the one body—three by baptism and one from the Baptists. On the second Lord's day in August I began a meeting at Griffith and continued one week, with one addition to the church by obedience. Last Lord's day I preached there again and buried two persons with their Lord in baptism. At Montpelier I held a meeting which lasted one week, with five additions—two baptized, two from the Baptists, and one restored. If all the brethren at these places will walk in God's ways, then success will crown their efforts.

A. H. SMITH.

TENNESSEE.

Lynnville, October 22.—On the fourth Lord's day in September I began a meeting at Oakland, near Ovilla, in Lawrence County, which continued eight days. As the results of this meeting, eight persons were baptized and one restored. I found a few faithful brethren at that place; however, they have some trouble among themselves, which I hope and pray will soon be a thing of the past.

JAMES T. HARRIS.

Riverside, October 22.—The meeting at Stayton closed at the water at 3 P.M.; on October 3, 1900, after continuing ten days. Seven persons obeyed the Lord. The attendance was good and the attention was perfect throughout the meeting. I began a meeting with the church of Christ at Curlees, in Cannon County, on the first Lord's day in October and continued ten days. Nine persons obeyed the gospel during this meeting.

JOHN E. DUNN.

Hillsboro, October 8.—Brother Will. Tracy held a meeting for us at Bean's Creek Church, which is situated two and one-half miles southeast of this place, beginning on the fourth Lord's day in September and closing on Friday morning, October 5, 1900, having lasted thirteen days and resulting in twenty-five persons being added to the one body. Out of said number nineteen confessed Christ and were buried with him in baptism. The ages of these were from eleven years to ninety years. Aunt Sally W. Wright, being the oldest among those who confessed Christ and was baptized, is ninety years of age. Uncle Peter Rankin, another one confessing Christ and going down into the watery grave, is seventy-three years of age. Sister Layne, from the Baptists, and Sister Winton, from the Methodists, are each sixty-seven years of age; also Brother Darnel and Sister Campbell are from the Baptists—all of whom, being tired of wearing human names, came forward to meet with us on the Bible and wear the name given to Christ's disciples first at Antioch. Two others who had wandered away from their Father's house came back to their first love. Bean's Creek congregation was organized, if I am not mistaken, in 1858. Having no church house in which to meet, they organized the congregation at the home of Brother P. J. Thomas and in 1859 built a house in which to meet and worship. At the organization Elder Ackbane, of Nashville, and Elder Thomas Witherspoon, of Cannon County, were present, both of whom have passed away. Many veterans of the cross have visited and held meetings with Bean's Creek congregation—namely, Brother Jesse Sewell, Brother Elisha Sewell, Brother Lipscomb, Brother Reece Jones, Brother James Kidwill, Brother Bowlin, Brother Fount Deering, Brother John Floyd, and others. Brother Tracy is a young man, now living at Woodbury, and has been preaching but a few years; but he is a forcible speaker and a valiant soldier, knowing well how to wield the sword of the Spirit in the camps of the enemy. May the Lord grant him a long life, giving him physical and spiritual strength and courage to continue his work in the Master's vineyard. Bean's Creek congregation is made to rejoice, seeing so many new soldiers enlisting under the banner of Christ. Our congregation feels strengthened, built up, and edified. Let all praise be given to the Lord of glory.

Waco, October 14.—Brother Thomas W. Phillips, of Grapevine, closed the very best meeting in the history of the Edgfield church of Christ last night. We recently made arrangements for the use of a church house located on Fifteenth street, between Mary street and Jackson street, in South Waco. Brother Phillips commenced the meeting on the first Sunday we met at this place. While there were only eight additions to the one body, eternity alone can tell the good that was accomplished. The meeting lasted eight days, and would have continued indefinitely but for the condition of Brother Phillips' little son,

I want to say in all candor and solely for the good of the cause of Christ that in my judgment Brother Phillips is one of the very best evangelists it has ever been my privilege to meet. The secret of his ability as an evangelist is his child-like faith in the old, old story of the cross. He seems to have the ability to look upon Jesus, the Christ of God, in as real a sense as others of this day look upon Washington, Jackson, and Lee.

The Church.

The word "church" is from the Greek word "kyriakon," which is the neuter form of "kyriakos," meaning "pertaining to the Lord." This latter term is from "kyrios," meaning "Lord," and in turn is from "kyros," meaning "might." This Greek word "kyriakon" is not in the New Testament, as it came into use later. The word "ekklesia," meaning "called out," is the term in the New Testament, which is translated "kyriakon" in later Greek literature, and this by the word "circe" in ancient Anglo-Saxon, and this passed into the form "kirk," and then "church." The word "church," as thus derived, is the correct translation of the Greek term "ekklesia." It occurs very frequently in the New Testament, and, with one or two exceptions, is always rendered in our English Version by the word "church."

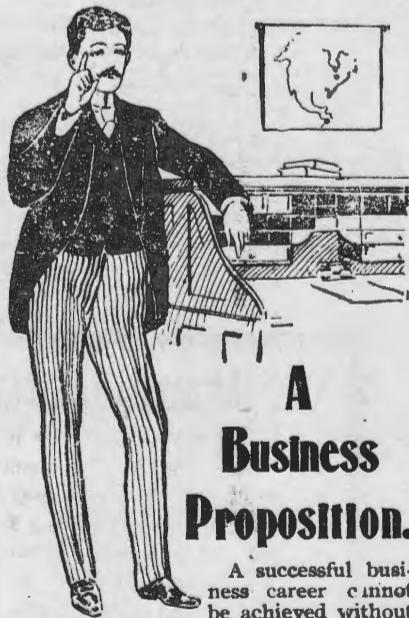

The Savior says: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell [the unseen] shall not prevail against it." (Matt. 16: 18.) Prof. J. H. Thayer, of Cambridge, Mass.; Prof. Shailer Mathews, of Chicago University; and Prof. Gross Alexander, of Vanderbilt University, all testify that "oikodomeso" (I will build) in this passage means what it says—viz.: "I will build." They say that it does not mean to "enlarge," "embellish," or "strengthen" a house already built. A good brother recently said to the writer that it would not be long until all the churches would be corrupted by the organ, missionary societies, Endeavor societies, etc. I quoted the above passage and assured him that there would be true churches of Christ and faithful Christians until the end of time. The "unseen" has reference to all the "powers of darkness," not alone those human institutions that are endeavoring to take the place of the church, but everything which is at enmity to the true church of God. When God Almighty created Adam and Eve, his work was a miracle, but since that time the human race has increased in the world by the law of procreation; when the church of God was established on the day of Pentecost, it was by miracle, but since that time it has been by this law of reproduction that the church of God has increased in the world.

The agents of the society go around telling people that it has power to reproduce churches of Christ, admitting at the same time that the church is a divine institution and the society purely human. Why do they not tell the people that monkeys can reproduce elephants? It would be as sensible to do so. The South Kentucky Society boasted in its convention report in 1896 that it had no constitution and by-laws. Now copies of its by-laws are being sent over the country and circulated freely, and, according to this society's own figures, it costs about two thousand eight hundred dollars to organize a church. In its report for 1897, the "general evangelist" says: "The best logic is the logic of facts; the best argument is work well and faithfully done." It is not contended that there is authority for the mourner's bench in the word of God, but "it has been tried and found to work well; therefore it may be used if we wish." Infant sprinkling was—in the first instance, by Irenæus, and, finally, by Beecher—put upon the same ground.

It is not so strange, after all, that a "general evangelist" should adopt this Utilitarian theory. Professor Haven says: "It follows from this theory that there is no such thing as intentional wrongdoing. Men always act, it is said, from the principle of self-love; they do what they think is for their own advantage. Finding, by experience, that certain actions tend to their advantage, they come to regard such actions as right, and the opposite, for the same reason, as wrong. What have we here for a syllogism? 1. Man acts always with reference to his own good. 2. To act with reference to one's own good is to act right. Therefore, man invariably acts right." ("Moral Philosophy," page 32.) The reader can put the words "general evangelist" instead of "man," and see how it reads. On page 50 Professor Haven defines the rule of right to be the will of God. The Utilitarian system is Epicurean philosophy, also the system of Hume and Shaftesbury, in England. This system represents happiness as the only true aim of human actions and pleasure as the only true happiness of human life. It is necessarily materialistic, and often atheistic, but suited to the agents of societies, although foreign to the Spirit of Jesus Christ and his holy religion.

The writer once heard of a preacher who had the society craze to such an extent that in speaking of Jonah, he said: "Brethren, you know that Jonah was in the whale's society three days and nights." If he was, he got into it by disobeying God. If the writer could use the pen of Grady, Prentice, and Greeley; if he possessed the learning of Bacon, the sublime pathos of John Milton, and the tongue which Tullius Cicero used in the Roman Senate, it would be his duty to employ them all in defense of the church of God and in opposition to these unscriptural societies. It would also be his duty to warn his friends of a "horror of darkness," blacker than that which brooded over the "Stygian pool," and of the black-dyed mantle of deepest sorrow that will come to all those who persist in dishonoring the church of the living God. If they reject these warnings, it will be history repeating itself. The Jews would not believe the prophetic warnings of Samuel, the Athenians scouted the philippics of Demosthenes, the Greeks discredited the truths uttered by Themistocles, and Rome rejected the report of her faithful envoys; but the prophesied misfortunes overtook the Jews, the Athenians soon beheld their ruin, the Greeks were humbled by the Persians, and Rome was crushed by Sulla.

A successful business career cannot be achieved without sound health. The business man should guard his health as he guards his capital; for health is part of his capital and the impairment of that capital affects every business interest. The use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure "liver trouble" as well as indigestion and other diseases of the organs of digestion and nutrition. The "Discovery" strengthens the body by supplying Nature with strength making materials. It contains no whisky, alcohol or other intoxicant. After three years of suffering with liver trouble and malaria," writes Mr. Edward Jacobs, of Marengo, Crawford Co., Indiana, "I gave up all hopes of ever getting stout again, and the last chance was to try your medicine. I had tried all the home doctors and received but little relief. After taking three bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and one vial of his 'Pleasant Pellets' I am stout and hearty. It is due entirely to your wonderful medicines."

"He, that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." (Prov. 29: 1.) Paul (1 Tim. 3: 15) says that the church is the pillar and support of the truth. A well-known axiom—expressio unus est exclusio alterius (the specification of one thing is the prohibition of every other)—absolutely forbids and excludes all other supports of the truth when we accept the church which the Savior purchased with his own blood. All through the New Testament we can find the church spoken of and exalted as the "Lamb's bride," "the light of the world," etc. The following language from Dr. Leonard Woods on infant baptism is also applicable to missionary societies. He says: "Whatever may have been the precepts of Christ or his apostles, to those who enjoyed their personal instructions it is a plain case that there is no express precept respecting infant baptism in our sacred writings. The proof, then, that infant baptism is a divine institution must be made out in another way." ("Lectures on Infant Baptism," page 11.)

Let those who are loyal to Christ stay in the church and tell the truth, remembering that Ernest Renan, infidel though he was, said: "I am not opposed to the church, but to 'ecclesiastical organizations,' despotic in character, and mere caricatures of religion." I believe it may be safely denied that Thomas Paine ever wrote a sentence against the Christianity of the New Testament, as such, for the simple reason that he knew nothing about it. He saw Christianity from the standpoint of absurdities to which the principle of departing from God's word in matters of faith necessarily led the age, and from that standpoint he hurled his anathemas at the Son of God.

A Friendly Suggestion.

During the past several months good and useful brethren have spent time and used talents in an effort to get more out of John 3: 5 than the divine author put in it. I cannot believe the Christ of God meant that Nicodemus, or any one else; should go into a scientific hairsplitting concerning the birth into the kingdom of God. When one enters into such metaphysical, untaught hairsplitting, where may he end?

A student sees, according to the disputants, "begotten of the Spirit" in John 3: 5. He sees a striking similarity between the birth of the flesh and the birth into the kingdom of God. He goes so far in his research and comparison as to inquire into and decide upon the time and point at which the new life is imparted. He is satisfied; he has settled one important (?) matter for all time and erases it from the list of subjects that deserve investigation.

In the student's further reading, he finds Paul claiming that he begat the Corinthians. (1 Cor. 4: 15.) He finds that Peter, in addressing the "elect," "scattered," etc., including himself, says: "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . hath begotten us." In verse 10 of Paul's beautiful little letter to Philemon, he notices that the apostle says he has begotten Onesimus. By this time our honest, inquiring student is all shaken up. He is bewildered; he really does not know where he is (at) on the new birth. He heaves a sigh of regret, not knowing whether the regret is because he has not sense enough to solve the deep mysteries of God or because the texts are so inexplicit and, seemingly, irreconcilable.

The student does not stop his reading, however. At unexpected and frequent intervals his perplexity is suggested; at each he heaves a regretful sigh and passes on. He reaches the end of Revelation and turns again for yet another reading of the exhaustless storehouse. In a short time he is reading Matt. 13, and in verse 24 he reads, "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man;" in verse 31 he reads: "The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed." In his former readings his attention had not been called to the fact that Jesus had likened the kingdom of heaven to things so dissimilar as are a man and a grain of mustard seed. He pondered; he recalled a mathematical postulate: "Things that equal the same thing equal each other." By a slight wresting of the words "equal" and "like," he has a man and a grain of mustard seed one and the same thing. He awakens to the absurdity and impossibility of his conclusion and knows there is a weak place in his course of reasoning; he also knows that Jesus meant nothing of the kind. A little farther on he finds that the kingdom of heaven is likened to other things, each of which is quite unlike all the others. By further reading and reflection, he finds that each thing likened to the kingdom of heaven is like it in some particular, but not necessarily like any of the others in any particular.

In his cogitations the student recalls his trouble concerning John 3: 5. He concludes that he tried to read more out of that declaration than the Lord put in it; he realizes that comparisons of likenesses may be too finely drawn or carried to too great a length; he sees how Paul may justly claim to have begotten the Corinthians by or through the word of truth given by inspiration of the Spirit; he sees how the Spirit, exercising his influence through the body of Christ, the church, by the exertions of its several members, may be said to beget new hearts, new desires, new purposes, new acts, and new lives in those over whom this influence is exerted; he sees, further, that God, who is above all and controls all, may be said to have done all that has been done by the agencies he has seen fit to employ. While he is satisfied, to a degree, he is not confirmed in his present position until he reaches 1 Cor. 4: 6, R. V., where he reads: "That in us ye might learn not to go beyond the things which are written."

It is apparent to quite a number of Texas brethren that the discussion herein criticised began, continued, and ended beyond what is written. What matters it concerning the point first raised by Brother Walling? Is there any good in it? Is there salvation in it to anyone? Such discussions tend to weaken the exercise of faith. Brethren, accept and teach the truth that the sinner is begotten of God by and through chosen instrumentalities—chosen by himself and revealed to us, so far as seemed good to him; that he is born into the kingdom by a visible, tangible act. If inspired men or those associated with them had time or inclination to engage in speculations concerning unrevealed matters, there is no record of it. There is enough "in the Book" to engage all our powers.

Why Cotton is King in Dixie.

Cotton may not be the king product of the earth. It has the influence of neither wheat nor coal in deciding the destinies of modern nations, but it employs more of man's energy and skill than either of these other products. The world now grows about fourteen million bales of cotton, in raising which some twenty million people are directly or indirectly engaged. This raw cotton is worth four hundred million dollars. Three million more persons are engaged in its commerce. Add to this five million more people engaged in its manufacture, and we have some twenty-eight million of the people of the earth who touch the garments of this white king at some point or other. The manufactured product is worth ten times the raw product, so that cotton from first to last means to the world in dollars and cents more than four billions of dollars annually—an incomprehensible sum, a sum more than a third as large again as the taxable value of New York City, a sum equal to one-twentieth of the wealth of the United States.—Success.

Why Loubet Won.

An article that must challenge attention, in Success for October, is the interview with President Loubet, of France, on "How to Attain Success." This lawyer-statesman is of most humble origin, and his eminent position is first-rate proof that in France, as well as in America, there is some sort of equality of opportunity. But it would be impossible to keep a man like Loubet down in any country. His success is the triumph of dogged, persistent, safe mediocrity, and it must appeal to the great majority of young men who are blessed with only mediocrity.

Indolence is the paralysis of the soul.—Lavater.

HERE IS HEALTH

FREE

These Four New Preparations comprise a complete treatment for nearly all the ills of life. The Food-omulsion is needed by some, the Tonic by others, the Expectorant by others, the Jelly by others still, and all four, or any three, or two, or any one, may be used singly or in combination, according to the exigencies of the case. Full instructions with each set of four free remedies, represented in this illustration.

SPECIAL.—The Slocum System is medicine reduced to an exact science by America's foremost specialist, and our readers are urged to take advantage of Dr. Slocum's generous offer. When writing the Doctor please mention the GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

THESE FOUR REMEDIES

Represent a New system of medicinal treatment for the weak, and those suffering from wasting diseases, or inflammatory conditions of nose, throat, and lungs.

The treatment is free. You have only to write to obtain it.

Its efficacy is explained as simply as possible below.

By the system devised by DR. T. A. SLOCUM, the specialist in pulmonary and kindred diseases, all the requirements of the sick body can be supplied by the FOUR remedies constituting his Special Treatment known as The Slocum System.

Whatever your disease, one or more of these four medicines will be of benefit to you.

According to the exigencies of your case, fully explained in the treatise given free with the free medicine, you may take one, or any two, or three, or all four, in combination.

A cure is certain if the simple directions are carefully followed.

The medicines are especially adapted for those who suffer from weak lungs, coughs, sore throat, catarrh, grip, consumption, and other pulmonary troubles.

But they are also of wonderful efficacy in the building of weak systems, in purifying the blood, making flesh, and restoring to weak, sallow people rich and healthy constitutions and complexions.

Female troubles and the many ailments of delicate children are speedily relieved.

The basis of the entire system is a flesh-building, nerve and tissue-renewing food.

Every invalid and sick person needs strength. This food gives it.

Many people get the complete system for the sake of the Food, which they themselves need, and give away the other three preparations to their friends.

The second article is a Tonic. It is good for weak, thin, dyspeptic, nervous people—for those who have no appetite, who need bracing up.

Thousands take only the Food and the Tonic.

The third preparation is a medicinal healing Jelly, in a patent collapsible tube. It cures catarrh. It heals all irritation of the nose, throat, and mucous membrane. It gives immediate relief. It is also a dainty application for sore lips, sunburn, rough skin, etc.

Perhaps a million people need this jelly without any of the other articles.

The fourth article is an Expectorant and Cough Cure—the only one that can positively be relied upon. Contains no dangerous drugs, and is absolutely safe for children. Goes to the very root of the trouble, and not merely alleviates, but cures.

The four together form a panoply of strength against disease in whatever shape it may attack you.

THE FREE OFFER.

To obtain these four FREE invaluable preparations, illustrated above, all you have to do is to write, mentioning the Gospel Advocate, in which you read this article, to DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 98 Pine Street, New York, giving your name and full address. The free medicine will then be sent you, in the hope that if it does you good you will recommend it to your friends.

The Gospel Advocate from the time the subscrip-tion is received to January 1, 1902, for $1.50. Why wait till next January to begin reading this most excellent journal when you can read it, beginning now, at the same price? Now is the time to sub-scribe. Encourage the circulation of good litera-ture by becoming a reader of the Gospel Advocate at once, if you are not already one, and also by getting as many of your friends to read it as pos-sible. The editors of the paper will appreciate your patronage, will do all in their power to keep the paper up to its present high standard of excellence, and, if possible, make it better with each issue. The man who reads a first-class religious paper usually takes more interest in the cause of Christ than one who does not. We hope our readers will show this liberal offer to their friends and induce them to be-come regular subscribers to the Gospel Advocate. Who will be the first to send us a number of new subscribers on this proposition? We would like to have several thousand new readers before January 1, 1901. Address all orders to Gospel Advocate Publish-ing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

Here are a few advertisements from the "Ex-change" column of the Christian Standard:

"S. A. R—, of —, Chicago; could be se-cured on reasonable terms to hold a meeting during January."

"Wanted.—Work as a singing evangelist. Am ex-perienced. Reference, —, —, Liberty, Mo. For particulars, write C. P. O—, —, Mo."

"I am at liberty to hold one or two meetings for some church in Ohio. Terms reasonable. Would also like to arrange with some pastor for an ex-change of meetings.—W. H. A—, —, O."

As we read these items, we cannot but think, by way of contrast, of the heroes of the New Testament—Christ, the greatest; Paul; and the other apostles and disciples—who, for the Name's sake, went out into the field ripe for the harvest, sent of God, trust-ing in God, and enduring hardness and shame and persecution for Christ's sake. How far away from the spirit of the New Testament the above adver-tisements are will be seen when we change the names, as follows:

"Wanted.—Work as a singing evangelist. Am experienced. Reference, Simon Peter, Jerusalem, Judea. For particulars, write to Philip, one of the seven."

"I am at liberty to hold one or two meetings for some church in Palestine. Terms reasonable. Would also like to arrange with some pastor for an exchange of meetings.—Paul of Tarsus, Cilicia."

"Jesus of Nazareth, Galilee, could be secured on reasonable terms to hold a meeting during January."

It sounds queer, does it not? Worse than that, it looks degraded, sickly, pitiful, beside the lofty self-denial of the New Testament. Instead of hunt-ing for a place where they could preach upon "rea-sonable terms," Christ and his apostles went out among the poor, the ignorant, the vile. "The peo-ple that sat in darkness saw a great light" and "The poor have the gospel preached unto them"—these were watchwords of Christ's work. If you want work, brother, you need not go very far. Lo, the fields are white with the harvest; and "the har-vest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." If it is simply work that you long for, your desire can be satisfied. Perhaps within ten miles of where you live it is sorely needed, and a great work can be done. Will you try it, or is there something else you want? O, yes, money—the "nervus rerum." If you can get it, you will work. You like the work well enough, but the money better. Is that it? So it would appear. If a man likes God's work above all things, he will go and work, pay or no pay. God has promised to support the faithful worker. If he likes the money more, he will work when he can get money and will stop work when he has no prospect of money, and advertise himself: "So much preaching for so much pay."

"At liberty to hold one or two meetings in the State of Ohio!" What became of your other lib-erty? Sold it? We know Paul did not write that. He did not confer with flesh and blood when he went to preach; neither did any man fix his terri-tory. "I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise." "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" That was Paul's platform.

Here is chance for great improvement. The mer-cenary spirit is flourishing. Many Christians forget that "the life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment." Before they can serve God they must be firmly grounded and settled financially, and know what they shall eat, and what they shall drink, and wherewithal they shall be clothed; and they cannot trust the Lord out of sight. But Christ said to his disciples: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Again: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Again, it is writ-ten: "Be ye free from the love of money; content with such things as ye have: for himself hath said, I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee." (Heb. 13: 5, R. V.) Are these "rea-sonable terms?" Do you like the security? Then go work in the vineyard where it is most needed, regardless of other "terms" and human life.

"The Congregationalist has inaugurated a novel journalistic policy. The first issue in each month it calls 'The Christian World.' It is an enlarged edition and is devoted largely to a record of the religious progress of the month in all denomi-nations. It has secured correspondents in various churches and it declares its purpose to promote, as far as pos-sible, the present movement toward Christian unity, declaring that 'the emphasis to-day should be laid not so much upon denominationalism as upon co-operation, federation, and unity.' We wish our con-temporary well, but it has entered upon rather a large engagement." This is from the Cumberland Presbyterian. The efforts of the religious world to bring about a union among the professed followers of Christ are laudable and highly to be commended. It was the will of the Savior that his followers should be one, and every man that names the name of Jesus should strive with might to bring about this unity. A Christian hates what Christ hates and desires what Christ desires. We must censure the indifferent, somewhat discouraging, remark append-ed by the Cumberland Presbyterian. Truly, it is a large undertaking to unite those who sincerely de-sire to follow the Lord; but with faith and zeal, by the help of God, it can be accomplished. If not in our age, some future generation, standing upon the pedestal erected by our work and sacrifice, shall at-tain to it.

But one point must not be overlooked. There is a right course and a wrong one to bring about unity. The wrong course must end in failure. In many efforts to unite denominations the principle has been to suppress part of the truth—the part upon which they seemed to disagree. So-called "union meetings" are run on the plan: "Do not step on my toes and I will not step on yours." The gospel is largely mutilated. Baptism, for instance, becomes a forbidden subject. As a religious gentleman said to me once, suggesting the course he wished me to pursue while preaching in his church house: "Sometimes we preach at the Methodist Episcopal Church and they preach up here. They believe in apostasy and we believe in foreordination. Now, when we preach in their house we say not a word about predestination, and they, when in our house, keep quiet on the subject of falling from grace." That meant, in my case, that I should not trans-gress in my teaching the limits of his creed; to smother my convictions on points where I differed from them, and cover up what I conceived to be truth in regard to those points. Is that the right way to obtain unity?

What do we desire? Simply unity? Unity of any sort, or unity pleasing to God? The Roman Church presents a fine example of unity, but of what sort? What boots it if people are united on error or transgression of God's word? Four hun-dred prophets were united on a falsehood before Ahab, and the messenger that was sent after the four hundredth and first implored him to let his voice be as one of theirs. (2 Chron. 18: 1-16.) What profit could there have been in such a union?

Micaiah, in his answer to the messenger, struck the keynote of union: "As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak." There is the only hope of union. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) "If any man speak, let him speak as the or-acles of God." (1 Pet. 4: 11.) "Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to de-clare unto you all the counsel of God." (Acts 20: 26, 27.) Yes, the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—this must be the principle of all acceptable union. It would be a blessing if the human books of theology, creeds, and curious arts of interpretation were piled up for a bonfire and men would speak as God speaks on every subject. As a brother has said: "I can get along with a Baptist if he will preach, 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.'" Certainly we can get along, if all preach the same word and the whole of the word. "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.)

There is the road. Who is willing to take it? Would it not be better to sacrifice party, creed, popularity—yea, even life itself—in bringing about a union to the glory of God than to try to effect a second-rate unity by retention of partisan hobbies and suppression of truth? "I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say."

It is one of the peculiarities of the works of God that they are nearly always imperceptible to the present. God works slowly. Silently, slowly, the germ unfolds itself in the dying grain; with imperceptible, yet steady, growth the blade unfolds—the stalk, the ear, the full corn in the ear—we know not how. Ere we are aware, the whole plant stands finished, and not until then can we see that God has done his intent. So does God work in greater things. See the history of the Jews in Neh. 9. At the very time God was fulfilling his promises and his threats they perceived not the working of his hands. The scoffers of to-day who say, "Where is the promise of his coming? for, from the day that the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation"—they also cannot see in the gleam of the passing moment that God is fulfilling all things that were spoken before by the mouth of his holy prophets. Like the people of Sodom, they eat, they drink, they buy, they sell, they build; and they shall not know until all things are done and sudden destruction falls upon them. But let us not walk so that the day of the Lord shall take us unawares.

"Dr. Adam Clarke says: 'We are to come to God for an instantaneous and complete purification from all sin, as for instantaneous pardon. In no part of the Scriptures are we directed to seek the remission of sins seriatim—one now and another then, and so on. Neither in any part are we directed to seek holiness by gradation. Neither a gradation pardon nor a gradation purification exists in the Bible.' This is very true, and, to our knowledge, has never been disputed by anybody. The Christian Standard, an international holiness journal, published at Philadelphia, Pa., inserts the above extract triumphantly in its title-page. It is hard for us to see what point can be gained from that quotation of Dr. Clarke that would favor the modern doctrine of sanctification. Peter told the Jerusalem sinners to "repent, and be baptized unto the remission of sins"—all sins, of course. When a man is baptized into Jesus Christ his past sins are forgiven. But then he is still a babe in Christ. He may yet be carnal in some regards. (See 1 Cor. 3: 1-3.) "For in many things we all stumble," as James (3: 2, R. V.) wrote. We can then come to the throne of grace and obtain forgiveness day by day, because we are children and have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." (1 John 1: 8, R. V.) This is addressed to Christians, John being one of them, and he uses the first person, plural—"we." Then he continues: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us." (Verses 9; 10.)

There is quite a difference between having one's sins forgiven and being perfect. A very weak, imperfect being can, on proper faith, be cleansed from the stain of his past sins; yet he is not perfect. Evil still allures him, and often he will make mistakes and do wrong. We all stumble. Not that this is any excuse for or inducement to sin; contrariwise, John says: "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not." Perfection can only be attained by patient effort to please God, leaning on him for strength, studying the word of his grace. Paul admits that he has not attained to perfection: "But I press on, if so be that I may apprehend that for which also I was apprehended by Christ Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself yet to have apprehended: but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 12-14, R. V.) Peter unequivocally exhorts the brethren to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. We may have our sins forgiven, but we are not perfect. Perfection comes by growth. There is a grain of truth at the bottom of nearly every false doctrine. One denomination gives prominence to one neglected point of truth and another to others. Unfortunately they make hobbies and partisan creeds and distort truth and mix it with so much error that it can hardly be recognized. Yet the man with a clear eye and an unprejudiced, truth-seeking heart may often learn a good lesson from the bitterest sectarian.

MEETING AT SHILOH, TENN.

This meetinghouse is about five or six miles from McEwen, in Humphreys County, Tenn. There has been a small congregation there for a few years, and they have built a comfortable church house and are meeting regularly to break bread and carry on the Lord's service. The meeting began on the second Lord's day in October and closed on the following Lord's day. The attendance was not large, but most of the time the attention was good, and afforded a good opportunity for the edification of the members and for sowing the seed of the kingdom in the hearts of those who attended. There were no additions, but we hope good will yet result from the seed sown. The general rule is that seed has to be sown, and a little time given to mature, before much reaping can be done, and sometimes it takes a long time to get things ready for reaping. If the brethren will be faithful, keep their lights burning, and have the gospel preached from time to time, there will be reaping done there. Denominationalism has quite a hold there, but the plain truth will doubtless reach some in process of time. E. G. S.

We have received from Brother J. E. Scobey a tract of twelve pages on "The Eldership," with the request to read and criticize it. We have read it carefully, and believe as far as it goes it is a scriptural statement of the eldership—who are elders, how they are fitted for the eldership, and what their work is, and what is the duty of the congregations to them. One point of interest to those studying this question is ignored—that is, how those fitted and qualified for the work are to be recognized or known as elders. If the members are to obey the elders, they should know who they are. If the elders are to rule as examples to the flock and to look after the well-being of the flock, they ought to know this is their work. How are they to be recognized as elders by themselves and others? is a question of interest. This is not touched in the articles. But it is a plain, straightforward statement of the questions aside from this. I presume the tract can be had of the author, at Andrews, Tenn., or of the Bible Student, Franklin, Tenn., though no direction is given as to this. D. L.

Instrumental Music in the Worship— Discussion between Brother Calhoun and Brother Kurfees.

Editors Gospel Advocate: When I received your request last winter to place in your hands for publication the discussion between Brother H. L. Calhoun and myself on the use of instrumental music in the worship, I declined, for the time being, thinking that Brother Calhoun might have something further to say in reply; but my last article has been in his hands now for more than a year, with no reply whatever from his pen, and I suppose it is useless at this date to expect anything further from him. He has read his production on "The Law of Worship" on different occasions to persons in private and has recently delivered it in public before the Tennessee State Convention of the Christian Church. I think I have met and answered his argument at every point, and it is but just that the public should see both sides of the question; hence, I now place the discussion in your hands, with the statement that, so far as I am concerned, you not only have full liberty to publish it, but also the concurrence of my own judgment, with yours, that it should be published. M. C. KURFEES.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Is the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church an act of worship? Before this question can be intelligently answered it is necessary to know what are the essential conditions of an act of worship. I lay down the following as the two essential conditions of an act of worship:

1. The act must be directed to some object regarded by the actor as a proper object of worship.
2. The act must be done with the intention on the part of the actor of doing homage to the object worshiped.

Any act which fulfills these two conditions is an act of worship, and any act which does not fulfill both these conditions is not worship. When an instrument is used in connection with the singing in the church and such use is directed to some object regarded as a proper object of worship by those using the instrument, and when it is used with the intention on the part of those using it of doing homage to that object, then this use of an instrument is worship, for it fulfills the two essential conditions of an act of worship. Examples of the use of an instrument in connection with the singing as an act of worship are the Jews in the temple service and some sectarian bodies to-day. Both the Jews and the sectarians use the instrument with reference to God as the object and with the intention of doing homage to him by its use. Therefore, their use of the instrument is unquestionably worship, since it fulfills the essential conditions of an act of worship.

But a large proportion of those who choose to call themselves "Disciples of Christ" to-day use an instrument in connection with the singing in the church, and they tell us that their use of it is not an act of worship. Are they correct or incorrect in this statement? Their act must be tried by the essential conditions of an act of worship. If it fulfills them, it is an act of worship; if it does not fulfill them, it is not an act of worship. The only person who knows the object toward which an act is directed and the intention of the act is the person performing the act, and he does know both. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" (1 Cor. 2: 11.)

Now, if we ask this large proportion of Disciples, "Do you use the instrument with reference to any object regarded by you as a proper object of worship?" they answer, emphatically: "No." Again: "Do you use the instrument with the intention of doing homage to any object?" Again they answer, emphatically: "No." Now, if these people tell the truth, their use of an instrument cannot possibly be worship, for it does not fulfill the conditions of an act of worship.

Any argument which says because the use of an instrument by the Jews and by certain sectarian bodies is worship, therefore its use by this large proportion of Disciples must be worship, is clearly invalid, because the cases are not similar. They differ in the only two points that have anything to do with the question of worship—viz., the object and the intention.

But some one may be ready to ask: "What does this large proportion of Disciples use an instrument for, if not as worship?" To this question those Disciples would answer: We use it as a mere matter of convenience to ourselves. Just as a notebook, when properly used, is a convenience to the eye—giving the correct time, keeping the correct time, indicating the correct pitch, and leading each part of the music—so the organ, when properly used, gives to the ear the correct time, keeps the correct time, indicates the correct pitch, and leads each part of the music. Hence, the organ is a convenience for the ear, just as the notebook is a convenience for the eye. They would respectfully suggest that those who say the notebook and organ are not properly classed together as conveniences would show the difference instead of saying that "those who class them together are guilty of the climax of logical stupidity." An ounce of sound reasoning is worth more than a ton of abuse in convincing intelligent people on any subject.

Can the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church be an act of acceptable worship? To answer this question intelligently we must know the essential conditions of an act of acceptable worship. Jesus, in John 4: 24, states these for us, and they are three in number:

1. God must be the object to which the act is directed.
2. "In spirit," which means from the heart or sincerely or with intention of doing homage, must be the spirit of the act.
3. "In truth," which means according to the truth, or as God directs in the New Testament, must be the manner of the act.

Any act which fulfills these three conditions is acceptable worship, and any act which does not fulfill all three of these conditions is not acceptable worship.

It will be admitted that the New Testament nowhere mentions the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church. This fact settles, beyond all dispute, that the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church cannot be an act of acceptable worship, for it fails to fulfill one of the essential conditions of an act of acceptable worship, and that condition which it fails to fulfill is the only condition which differentiates an act of acceptable worship from an act of worship which is not acceptable.

The use of instruments by the Jews was acceptable worship, for they lived under the Old Testament, which directed them to use instruments; but people to-day, living under the New Testament, have no direction given for their use as worship. Hence, the only possible ground upon which any one can seek to justify the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church is that of convenience, and not worship. H. L. CALHOUN.

REPLY TO "AN IMPORTANT QUESTION."

Brother Calhoun: Your article on the use of instrumental music in the worship of God under Christ came duly to hand, and has been carefully examined. In response to your request that I submit a criticism of the arguments therein presented, I proceed to offer such reflections as the logical character of your production seems to demand; and I the more cheerfully do so, because of your accompanying statement that you are unable to see any fallacy in the line of argument which you present. Allowing all due credit for ingenuity of arrangement, a merit which candor compels me to accord to your communication, I am, nevertheless, surprised that you are unable to see the fallacy that lurks in much that you have written. By the help of the Lord, I shall endeavor to place your production under conditions that will enable you to see wherein it is defective as an argument, and, hence, that it utterly breaks down at the very point where you seem to think it is strong and unanswerable.

That we may come at once to the main fortress behind which you seem willing to risk your cause, I begin with an examination of your canon on worship. The first of what you lay down as "the two essential conditions of an act of worship" is as follows: "The act must be directed to some object regarded by the actor as a proper object of worship." But in this you are mistaken. The fact is, this your first statement in the form of a proposition is simply not true. You gravely put it forth as a statement of fact, whereas the statement itself is a palpable contradiction of fact. I am surprised that numerous events in the Old Testament history plainly contradicting the statement did not occur to you. Turning now to the record in 1 Kings 13, we find that Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, established idolatrous worship in Israel, setting up calves of gold and altars at Bethel and Dan. He worshiped at these altars, bowing down to the gods of his own creation and teaching Israel to follow his presumptuous course. Without entering into the details of the history, not demanded by the present investigation, the fact stands out in plain view to every eye that is open to see it that these gods were not only not "a proper object of worship," but that Jeroboam himself knew they were not. Here is a case of worship, then, in which the act was not only "directed to some object" not "regarded by the actor as a proper object of worship," but which the actor himself positively knew was a very improper object of worship. But, nevertheless, he proceeded headlong and headstrong in his presumptuous determination to worship that object, because it suited his rebellious purpose to do so; and he has many imitators in principle to-day. But this is by no means an isolated case. Precisely the same point could be made with the facts connected with the reigns of Ahab, Baasha, Nadab, Omri, and others; and yet, as a part of your presentation of the organ issue, you send forth a direct contradiction of this fact, and say in a private note accompanying your argument: "I am frank to tell you that I do not see any way to answer it." If it were clearly and positively in evidence that you are absolutely free from any predilection in favor of the organ side of this controversy, I might not suspect that the inability, so frankly acknowledged by you, to see a fact thus plainly revealed is to be accounted for in the same way in which both you and I account for the inability of very able, pious, and learned men to see that a burial in water is the only baptism taught and practiced by inspired men or that is supported by the united voice of classic usage and scholarship. With a frankness not excelled by your own, they tell us they "do not see any way to answer" the arguments they are able to make in favor of sprinkling and pouring for baptism; but it would be difficult to convince either you or myself that the alleged inability would not be largely removed by a removal of all predilection in favor of sprinkling and pouring. I see no other ground on which to account for your inability to see that your statement is a plain contradiction of Bible facts.

I now come to the second part of your canon on worship, which is as follows: "The act must be done with the intention on the part of the actor of doing homage to the object worshiped." Commenting on the whole, you say: "Any act which fulfills these two conditions is an act of worship, and any act which does not fulfill both these conditions is not worship." But we have already seen that your first "essential condition of an act of worship" is no condition at all, but is a plain contradiction of Bible facts, and, hence, that some acts which "do not fulfill both these conditions" are, nevertheless, acts of worship; and we will now see that your reasoning on the second condition is as unsound as your statement of the first is untrue.

After conceding that the use of instrumental music by Jews and sectarians is worship you attempt to come to the rescue of "a large proportion of those who choose to call themselves 'Disciples of Christ,'" and who "tell us that their use of it is not an act of worship," by an application of your canon on worship; and you gravely tell us, referring to your second condition, that "the only person who knows . . . the intention of the act is the person performing the act," which, forsooth, you try to back up with scripture by quoting: "Who among men knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of the man which is in him?" (1 Cor. 2: 11.) You then complete this ingenious application of your canon in the form of a catechism, as follows: "If we ask this large proportion of Disciples, 'Do you use the instrument with reference to any object regarded by you as a proper object of worship?' they answer, emphatically: 'No.' Again: 'Do you use the instrument with the intention of doing homage to any object?' Again they answer, emphatically: 'No.'" Thus the case is so arranged that the man who wants instrumental music in the worship, in spite of its rejection therefrom by Christ and inspired apostles, is himself resolved into the entire court—judge, jury, counsel, and witness—and of course it is an easy matter to have a verdict rendered in favor of himself. You not only place in his hands the means of having the case always decided "unanimously" in his own favor, but the logical use which you make of this contrivance effectually debar all others, even God himself, from having a solitary word to say in the case. No other alternative is left to the universe of intelligences but to meekly bow and implicitly acquiesce in the ipse dixit decision of this remarkable monocratic court. If Nadab and Abihu (Lev. 10) had been in possession of this ingenious canon and had made the same logical use of it, notwithstanding they were performing an act in offering strange fire which the Lord himself and his people regarded as worship, they could, nevertheless, have promptly replied that they did not do it "with the intention of doing homage to any object," and this giant blow would have knocked out Moses, Aaron, Eleazar, Ithamar, and all the rest. If you contend that the fact that what they were doing was regarded by the Lord as worship would have precluded setting up such a claim in that case, then I reply that the same is true in the case before us, and with equal clearness it precludes setting up such a claim in this case. Instrumental music, when used in the manner in question, was not only regarded by the Lord as worship, but there is no instance on record in which he regarded it any other way. The idea that it is not worship was never thought of, so far as the public has been informed, until its advocates discovered their inability to meet the position of those who stand with the Son of God and inspired apostles in their rejection of its use from the worship of God under Christ. It is an ex post facto invention to meet an emergency.

But, since you are disposed to hinge the whole matter on the ex parte deliverance of this self-constituted, self-appointed, monocratic court, which rules out both God and man and leaves the worshiper himself as sole umpire in the case, with unlimited power to practice as he pleases, with the right to a safe retreat under the specious plea that he does not "intend" it as worship, I now propose to examine the logical merits of this method of argumentation and to show that, in the present instance, it is utterly untenable and misleading. This fact will appear from two considerations:

1. It proves too much, and hence, logically, proves nothing. By the very terms of your canon, the flood gates are opened for every abomination under heaven, not in itself morally wrong, which men may see fit to introduce into the service of God. I use the word "abomination" advisedly here; for while, strictly speaking, things not morally wrong are not in themselves abominable, yet many such things would be an abomination in the service of God; and there is no escape from the conclusion that your principle opens the way for the practice of every imaginable whim or fancy of man. Even the Son of God himself could have been silenced by the Jews in the matter of washing hands and other traditions which they had introduced, and which he so solemnly condemned as vain worship. (Matt. 15: 1-9; Mark 7: 1-13.) They could have routed him from the field of debate by informing him that they did not "intend" it as worship. It is true he could have replied: "You go through with this performance in precisely the same way that you do other acts which are worship, and how can it be that they are worship and this is not?" But such a statement of fact would have been to no purpose, for they could have promptly replied, "We do not 'intend' it as worship, and 'what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?'" and this would have placed an effectual quietus upon all opposition.

Nor is this all; for, by this principle of argumentation, the very same defense can be made of all the flummery of Rome, including the burning of incense, burning candles, or doing anything else men may see fit to do in the service of God. You would be utterly powerless to rule out such things on the plea that they would be of no use in the worship; for, according to the terms of your canon and the use you make of it, neither you nor anybody else can have anything to say in the case, so long as the worshiper himself says they are of use to him and that he does not "intend" them as worship. You make the point that certain "Disciples," whom you are defending, want instrumental music as "a convenience for the ear" while they are worshipping God; but if they may have instrumental music as a "convenience" to the auditory nerves while worshipping God, others may want to burn incense and candles as a "convenience" to the olfactory and visual nerves while worshipping God; and if convenience is a valid reason in the one case, why is it not in the other?

2. Your reasoning involves rebellion against God. Inasmuch as "the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the" Jewish service was worship, which you candidly admit, I now propose to show that its use by certain "Disciples," which you have undertaken to defend, is either worship, and hence is to be condemned because not divinely directed, or, if really not intended as worship, is, nevertheless, a case of rebellion against God. Be it observed, then, that the term "music" is generic, comprehending the only two kinds of music in existence—namely, vocal and instrumental. It follows, therefore, that if, at any time, God should command the praise of his name by means of music without specifying the kind, either kind used separately, or both kinds jointly and simultaneously, would come within the purview of the divine command; but if the praise of God should be ordered with specific directions that it be done with one of these kinds of music, then the use of the other kind would not be obedience to the divine command. In such a case the one kind of music is explicitly commanded, the other is implicitly forbidden. Now, it happens that both of these kinds of music were incorporated in the Jewish worship and were allowed to remain in it as long as the system of Judaism itself remained; but when Judaism was abolished and a new order of worship was established, the children of God were not commanded in general terms to make music or praise God, but they were commanded to make one specific kind of music—namely, vocal music—in the praise of God. (Matt. 26: 30; Acts 16: 25; Eph. 5: 19; Col. 3: 16; Heb. 13: 15.) Now, the Holy Spirit not only specifically incorporated vocal music in the worship of God under Christ, from which it follows that having the other kind is not obedience to the divine command, but it did so in the face of the existence and usage up to that time of both kinds of music in the worship, thus revealing the fact that it was not only the divine will to have the kind of music specified, but that it was not the divine will to have the other kind, from which it follows that having the other kind, "in connection with the singing in the" worship, even though not "intended" as worship, is, nevertheless, rebellion against God. If it is not rebellion, then we are confronted with the curious and anomalous fact that men may do the very thing which, by all the facts in the case, God has implicitly forbidden, and may do it at the same time and in the same place when and where it is so forbidden, and yet not be engaged in rebellion against God, because, forsooth, of some peculiar "intention" they may have in the performance. But no difference what may be the intention of worshipers, whenever and wherever they have the instrument, even though it may be, as you constantly express it, only "in connection with the singing in the church" without "intending" it as worship, it is, nevertheless, indefensible on this ground; for its use "in connection with the singing" when men are worshipping God is the very thing which is contrary to the will of God. Although, as we have seen, the two kinds of music were both in use in the worship under the Old Covenant, we have a clear and unmistakable expression of the divine choice of the one kind and the omission of the other kind in the worship under the New Covenant. It is, therefore, ruled out of the worship under the New Covenant on precisely the same principle on which you and others rule out infant membership in the church, which is nowhere explicitly commanded, but by all the facts in the case is everywhere implicitly forbidden. The conclusion is, therefore, unavoidable that its use in connection with vocal music in Christian worship is rebellion against God.

Finally, I beg to suggest that the attitude which you have chosen to assume toward the present issue, and the impression which you seem to be seeking to make, are worthy of your serious consideration. You seem to feel that it is necessary to be constantly explaining that it is not your purpose to advocate the use of the organ. But if it is not wrong to advocate its use, why fear that you will appear as so doing? And if it is wrong, or even possibly wrong, to do so, why assume an attitude toward the question that makes it necessary to keep explaining that you are not advocating it? I certainly do not question your statement that you "have never knowingly advocated the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church;" but no difference whether you "wish to be so understood in this article" or not, the article is, nevertheless, a very manifest, though illogical, defense of this very use of the instrument, and it is to be regretted that you have assumed an attitude toward the question which prevents you from seeing so plain a fact. Moreover, even granting, for the sake of argument, that the practice per se is not sinful, why do you think it necessary, my dear brother, to construct arguments in favor of it to see if they can be answered? If the organ should be kept out of the churches, even by fallacious argument in some instances, would sin lie at their doors? Would it not be better to point out the fallacy without defending the practice? Years ago you modestly refrained from speaking out against this innovation, stating as the reason for your course that you did not deem it wise, using your own vigorous and pointed language, to "butt out your brains arguing against the organ before the people found out whether you had any brains or not." I thought this was an exhibition of commendable modesty; but, with the inevitable impression which such words would make, it seems strange that all subsequent efforts calculated to impress the public concerning your cerebral capacity which you have been willing to risk on this issue have been in the interest of the other side. Doubtless, in the estimation of many, you will make a favorable impression for yourself, even on the wrong side of an issue like this; but, on the principle that

Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just,
I crave for the public an opportunity to witness an exhibition of your powers on the side of truth in the present controversy. Is it vain to hope they may yet see it? I trust not. On the contrary, I trust you may yet resurvey this whole question, weighing well the influence of your life and teaching on an issue whose history is marked by wrecked and ruined churches and by heartbreaking alienations, and on one side alone of which is universal union possible among the followers of Christ. May the Lord rule in and overrule us both for the advancement of his truth.

Most fraternally,

M. C. KURFEES.

INDIFFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS.

Brother Lipscomb: There seems to be a general inactivity—state of lethargy—among the churches which tends toward stagnation and spiritual death; at least it seems so to me, and I judge it appears so to others, from what I see and hear. The all-important question is: How shall we arouse activity and zeal and provoke to love and good works? The cause of this sleepy state wherever it appears is a lack of spiritual food—the word of God. We would all be glad to see the churches zealous for every good work. "They that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." "The hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord." Paul and Barnabas "a whole year assembled . . . themselves with the church, and taught much people." Churches and preachers need the zeal, earnestness, and consecration here pointed out in the New Testament.

I am now seriously thinking of giving a considerable part of my time, especially during the winter and early spring months, to going among the churches voluntarily on my part and teaching the members in Bible classes and by enthusiastically talking to them, with a specific view of increasing zeal and energy in and consecration to the work for Christ. It seems to me we must, if possible, stir up the churches to greater activity. Please let me hear from you, giving such suggestions, information, and encouragement as you deem best in the light of the word of God on the line of work here suggested.

JOHN E. DUNN.

I do not know a more needful work than this, of interesting Christians in the study of the Bible. We are certainly now in times of indifference to Bible study and Christian life. The only way to arouse this life is to interest Christians in the study of the word of God. The word of God is the seed of the kingdom. From it in the heart all life and activity must spring. The indifference of men, especially to the services of religion, ought to be alarming. So far as I am able to see, it is difficult to determine the causes of this indifference. I do not think it a growth of unbelief in God or the Bible; yet there is a disregard of the teachings of the Bible, a neglect of the Book. It seems to me one great trouble is, there is a growing dissatisfaction with the present development of religious service. It is too much partisan; it is too much machine work for the good of the brethren, and there is too little looking to the good of the ignorant and helpless. All the churches are now too much like the political parties—for the support of the machine and the leaders. As a rule, ten dollars are given to support the leaders and the organization where one dollar is given to lift up and save souls. What are called "the attacks on the Bible of higher criticism" are merely symptoms of the indifference; they are in a very small way a cause of it.

It seems to me the great want is that the common people should study and learn the Bible and become earnest, self-reliant worshipers. I mean by this that the common people should be able to conduct the worship of God within themselves and be able to study the Bible and edify and help one another. To this end they must have good teaching that they may learn how to study the Book of God and how to teach it to one another. The common and poor people drop away from the church, but in the days of Jesus they constituted the chief strength of it. It was adapted to their wants and commended itself to their consciences. I am sure it would now were it kept in its proper channels and its labors directed to its true ends. This falling away has been brought about by the utter failure of discipline in the churches, among other things. No discipline is exercised in the churches, and, as a result, church service, church privileges, and church membership are lightly esteemed. Church membership means nothing now. If it means nothing, why should it be sought after or esteemed? This failure of discipline has largely resulted from the influence of money in the church. It is as difficult to discipline a good church contributor as it is to punish one in the civil courts. I have heard churches on two different occasions say they could not afford to discipline certain offenders, because they are too rich. Our religious affairs have come to be too dependent upon the rich. If the rich are not disciplined, the sense of fairness revolts against disciplining the poor, and so discipline is lost sight of. In reaching this condition, we forget the person disciplined is the one especially benefited, but it works that way.

Our work is to get the common people to learn the Bible, study and practice it for themselves, and deliver churches from the hurtful influences. In many places and in many respects our religion that was ordained for and adapted to the poor has become too costly a luxury for them. A religion that costs less in money and more in time and personal service is what both the Bible and the interests of humanity demand. To get the people to study and practice the Bible is the great need, and if our brethren will direct their energies to that end, they will do great good. There are in places marked indications of improvement along these lines, and we should earnestly encourage and help all such. D. L.

A building was being torn down, and a laborer, who was noted among the workmen for his lack of intelligence, was sent to pull at a rope attached to the top of a wall. "Do you think," a passer-by asked, "that you are going to pull that thick wall down in that way?" The man continued his tugs, as he replied: "It doesn't seem so to me, but I guess the boss knows what he's about." After an hour's pulling the man felt a slight vibratory response to his tug, and at last the wall swayed and fell. It had been undermined, and the man who gave the order knew that, although the man who pulled the rope did not. He obeyed, as Peter obeyed Christ's command to let down the net. Perhaps if more faith were exercised in Christ's commands now, we should be as much astonished at the result as Peter was.—Reformed Church Record.

PERSONAL.

Brother E. A. Elam is in a meeting at Sparta, Tenn.

Brother Flavil Hall, of Trion, Ga., will visit Tennessee at an early date.

Brother John R. Williams began a meeting at Polk, Tenn., on last Lord's day.

Brother William Anderson closed a meeting at Dickson Station, Tenn., last week.

Brother J. W. Shepherd closed a good meeting at Pleasant View, Tenn., last Friday night. The interest was good throughout the meeting and five persons confessed their faith in Christ. He preached at Schochoh, Ky., on last Lord's day.

Brother John E. Dunn's meeting at Riverside, Tenn., closed last Friday morning at 9 o'clock; at the water, two persons being immersed at that time. Seventeen in all obeyed the gospel. He began a meeting at Dunn's Chapel, Woods Valley, Tenn., last Sunday morning.

Brother E. G. Sewell went to Wilson County, Tenn., last Saturday to begin a meeting at Berea. Although three-score years and ten, he is still actively engaged about his Father's business, clinging to the old landmarks and growing stronger in the faith as he nears the goal.

At the meetinghouse on the corner of Tenth and Russell streets, East Nashville, on the evening of October 30, 1900, Brother J. C. McQuiddy officiating, Miss Leith L. Baker was married to Mr. James Richard Rose. We join their host of friends in wishing them happiness, prosperity, and long life.

Brother A. W. Young, of Sunset, Tex., began a debate at Coesfield, Cooke County, Tex., with W. A. Mansfield. The debate will be continued ten days, "The Origin of the Church," "Total Depravity," "Operation of the Spirit," "Apostasy," and "Baptism for the Remission of Sins" being the subjects for discussion.

Mr. R. H. Dawson and Miss Zena Buie, both of Ferguson Station, Ky., were quietly married at the residence of Brother E. G. Sewell, Brother Sewell officiating, on the evening of October 30, 1900. The bride and groom are estimable young people and have our best wishes for a happy and prosperous career.

On November 1, 1900, Mr. J. W. Eaton and Miss Jane Neal were quietly married at the home of Brother L. S. White, at Gallatin, Tenn., Brother White officiating. Mr. Eaton is a successful business young man at Scottsville, Ky., and the bride is the daughter of very influential parents, of near the same place. The happy couple left on the afternoon train for their future home at Scottsville.

The meeting at Gallatin, Tenn., Brother L. S. White doing the preaching and Brother J. L. Hill leading the song service, was still in progress when we heard from there last Friday, and it was thought the meeting would continue for some time yet. There had been eighteen additions to the one body and large crowds were attending each service. All of this speaks well for the church of Christ at Gallatin and for Brother White, who lives in their midst.

Brother McQuiddy: I received the bundles of the dear old Gospel Advocate a few days ago, and I just sat down and feasted for hours. I could hardly quit long enough to eat; in fact, I did not, for I carried the paper to the table with me. I had got entirely behind the times, for the Gospel Advocate has reached me only at long intervals for many months. I cannot think of getting along without it; so you may bribe the mailing clerk, at my expense, to see that a copy starts to me each week, addressed simply to Tokyo, Japan, and not to the address now on my yellow slip. I now have so much good reading on hand that I am tempted to read when my work demands my time. You have been very good to me and I have been very unworthy. I hope to be more faithful in the future. You have shown me favors without number, almost, and seem to be as willing as ever to help me. I was pained much to learn of the death of your associate and our friend in Christ, Brother F. D. Srygley. He has done a wonderful work, and we cannot now estimate the results of his preaching and writing; he has influenced thousands, and they in turn will teach many more the principles he so constantly emphasized, and thus the stream of influence will flow on into eternity. So with all our lives: we each start as streams well as perpetuate the one whose current most influenced us. How careful we should be of our words and of our acts! Brother Srygley's few letters to me were like those of a father to a son. His love for Brother Larimore was such as should make us love each other more in this present life, that in the life to come there may ripen the love that will cast out all fear. I want a copy of Brother Srygley's last book. His "Larimore and His Boys" was a blessing and an inspiration to me, and I want my life made purer and gentler, more earnest and full of good works, by the "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." Please send me a copy of the book. Our school has opened with good attendance. The Sunday school is also well attended. There were forty-six children present last Sunday (October 7, 1900) and two young men were in my Bible class, which I reopened on that day. The attendance of this class will increase. My health is good.—William J. Bishop, Tokyo, Japan.

EDITORIAL.

The wealth of the world cannot buy the favor of God.

The "peace that passeth understanding" comes only to the pure in heart.

There is no shorter way to heaven than God's way; neither is there any longer or other way.

The fact that you are as good as the other fellow is no argument. The other fellow may be wrong.

If you make a mistake, acknowledge it, and do not try to explain. Such a course gives you favor with God and man.

Think and act for yourself; do not be a slave to follow in others' tracks. Be courageous enough to stand alone, if need be.

"As it is written" is a frequent expression of the Book, and doing "as it is written" is walking by faith and pleasing God.

Every one should be better to-day than he was yesterday, and better tomorrow than he is to-day. To stand still is to slide back.

"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?"

"Without me ye can do nothing," says the Savior. How important, then, it is to secure his help! "He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit."

The goodness of God leads men to repentance, but his goodness does not consist alone in providing for our physical wants, but in opening to us a way to him through the gospel of his Son.

When we walk in the dark, we stumble and get out of the path. We need the light. So in our spiritual lives the way is too dark to be traveled without a sure and certain light. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

"If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable;" but we have more than this. We have the blessed assurances of the gospel of Christ, vouchsafing to us triumph over death by a glorious resurrection and a place at his own right hand throughout eternity.

When we come to God with our trials, he either relieves us of them or gives us grace sufficient to bear them. He does not promise to lift away the burden, but to sustain us in bearing it. When we cast ourselves fully upon Christ, he comes nearest to us and proves himself a present help in every time of need. The closer we get to him, the more of his love and grace he reveals to us.

Diligence is a steady application of energy. Without such application no man has the right to expect success, nor will he succeed. Success is not thrust upon us, but it is won by patient, steady application. Not only does this principle obtain in secular life, but in spiritual life also. No one can serve God acceptably who does not walk in the path of duty. Wherefore "giving all diligence, add to your faith" those Christian graces which adorn and ennoble Christian character.

Few of us realize the importance of listening patiently and attentively to the word of the Lord. Peter said to the people: "Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you." Through Christ God speaks to us concerning salvation and the varied lessons of Christian conduct, giving us "the perfect law of liberty." Therefore, we must hear him. The expression, "Who hath ears to hear, let him hear," is of frequent occurrence in the Bible; but God requires discrimination in the things to be heard. Christ said: "Take heed what ye hear." James, after saying we are begotten "with the word of truth," adds: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear," evidently referring to "the word of truth." We are not to hear "the traditions of the fathers" or "the commandments of men," but hearing him of whom God said, "I am well pleased," we "may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."

We would be indignant if told that we would allow the Savior to suffer want. "No!" we exclaim. "If he were only here, my home should be his home. All I have should freely belong to him." But we do allow him to suffer. Some of his children are homeless, and we do not shelter them; some are naked, and we do not clothe them; some are hungry, and we do not feed them; and in our failure thus to provide for the necessities of those who are his, we fail to provide for him. "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." Moreover, we allow his faithful servants, who sacrifice homes and the ties of love to "preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things," to suffer when we ought to be sacrificing to help them. What a condemnation rests against the churches who fail to keep God's ordinance in this matter! "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" "But we do not believe in the pastor system." Of course not; nor from your actions would any one accuse you of believing in preaching the gospel, since you do so little of it. The so-called "pastor system" is wrong, the human societies for the spread of the gospel are wrong, and many who do nothing try to hide behind these truths; but I would rather be found doing the right thing the wrong way than not to be doing anything in any way. Let not the man who does nothing congratulate himself that he is not building up human societies; he is, and is equally guilty with those who openly work in them. Let me also add that because so many fail to do anything as members of the church gives no one the right to organize something else through which to honor and glorify God. "Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

WRONG METHODS CONDEMNED.

Reaching a righteous end by an unrighteous method is a hazardous affair, after all. Not the least of the results of such a course is the damage done one's own personal character. The man who has so conducted himself as to deny him the enjoyment of a conscience void of offense toward God makes himself a coward.—Word and Way.

GETTING AND GIVING.

Should it be a rule of life to get all you can or to give all you can? That question is just now under discussion. Well, how much can one give unless he first gets? The men who are laying thousands or millions of dollars on the altars of education, humanity, or religion have generally been successful as captains of industry, princes of commerce, or leaders of large business enterprises. Possibly also their chief benefaction has consisted in creating profitable employment—which is a kind of giving—especially if they have been just and considerate in their dealings and have paid fair wages. To get honestly is quite as legitimate as to give generously, and ought to take equal rank.—Youth's Companion.

JUDGE WHITE ON SALOONS.

All of the cases, with one exception, that came up in the Criminal Court on a certain day were attributed directly or indirectly to strong drink. This put Judge J. W. F. White, who was on the bench, on the war-path, and he made the day's session the liveliest one for some time. Toward the close of court, and after His Honor had lectured until he was tired, he almost feebly said: "O, this drink, this drink! Four-fifths of the crime and four-fifths of the wretchedness on this work can be attributed to it. Here's a man who goes and spends his money with a heartless saloon keeper. Look at him. It's no wonder that I am down on this liquor business." And any decent man is down upon it.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

TOOK HER RELIGION ALONG.

A beautiful instance of Christian integrity is given of a distinguished Christian lady who was spending a few weeks in a hotel at Long Branch.

An attempt was made to induce her to attend a dance, in order that the affair might have the prestige bestowed by her presence, as she stood high in society. She declined all the importunities of her friends.

Finally, an honorable Senator tried to persuade her to attend, saying: "Miss B., this is quite a harmless affair, and we want the exceptional honor of your presence."

"Senator," said the lady, "I cannot do it. I am a Christian; I never do anything in my summer vacation, or wherever I go, which will injure the influence I have over the girls of my Sunday school class."

The Senator bowed, and said: "I honor you; if there were more Christians like you, more men like myself would become Christians."—All Aboard.

THE HEART IS MOVED.

There lay in the coffin the body of one of God's saints. Eighty-nine years of toil and sacrifice had been endured. The weather-beaten and storm-tossed mariner had reached the port. Surrounding the coffin were quite a number of friends. The words of hope and consolation had been spoken by the man of God; prayer had just been offered; the invitation to take a last look at the departed had been given by the undertaker. Rising from her chair, supported by friends on either side, was a venerable form, a sister of the deceased. Ninety-five summers have passed. Soon she will reach the ninety-sixth milestone. She stands by the coffin, bends over the same, imprints the last kiss of affection in this world on the cheek of her dearest earthly friend, and exclaims, with a tenderness and pathos which melted all hearts: "My dear sister, farewell. You have been good to me, dear soul. I will meet you in heaven. Good-by!" Then she was led back to her chair again, while the coffin was closed and the body of the deceased was carried to the cemetery of the dead. How much these words meant God only can fathom. On such an occasion and witnessing such a scene, how the heart is moved, the sympathies aroused! The earth fades, heaven comes near, we almost hear the rustling of angel wings.—Baltimore Methodist.

WOMANLY MODESTY.

No warrior was ever so effectively protected by coat of mail as the purity of woman by a becoming modesty. It is not only woman's greatest adornment, but her best defense. Lord Shaftesbury once said that young women would be surprised to find with what respect they would be treated by the forlorn classes if they would go among them with a view to education.

In one of the worst parts of London there was an institution which he visited. In one room he found about thirty-five men listening to the teaching of the daughter of a small shopkeeper in the neighborhood, and she was one of the prettiest women he ever saw in his life. He noticed that there was no one present but the young woman with those rough men, and he said to the superintendent: "Are you not afraid to leave my dear little friend alone with all these men?"

He replied: "I am."

"Then why don't you go to her?"

"You mistake my fear. I am not afraid of their doing any harm; they love her so much that they would lick the ground on which she walks; but I am afraid some person may step in, and, not being under authority or knowing the manners of the place, may say something impertinent to her, and if he did, he would not leave this place alive."

It is indeed one of the most cheering facts to such as work for the education of the human race that womanly beauty, when united to maiden modesty, commands the homage of the most degraded.—Lutheran Observer.

SIMPLER LIVING.

Moralists and philosophers are constantly telling the world that the best elements of human happiness are the simplest and most frugal. There is a constant cry for simplicity of living, but some of those who make this cry are unable to adapt their own lives to their own beliefs. We believe in the beauty and good sense of simple living, just as we believe in the highest and best principles of religion, but the weakness of our human nature is so great that we do not live according to that which we know to be wisest and best. It is not strange that there should be a cry for simplicity in an age when it is manifest that a great deal of the unrest and the unhappiness of domestic life is due to too elaborate and expensive living.

Too many people have not the moral courage to set up a standard of their own based upon their own incomes and their own positions in life. Mrs. A. has not the moral courage to put a straw matting on her floor when she knows that Mrs. B. has a Wilton velvet on her floor; Mrs. D. has not the moral courage to serve simple refreshments at her entertainments when she knows that Mrs. C. serves ices and all sorts of expensive and unnecessary luxuries at her "at homes;" the Smiths, with an income of two thousand dollars a year and one servant, make a strenuous effort to ape the style of living of the Whites, who have eight thousand dollars a year and three servants; the wife of the clerk tries to imitate the wife of her husband's employer. It is an age of vulgar and unwise imitation. The writer overheard a significant bit of conversation between two women on the street car not long ago.

As the car moved along, one said to the other: "I am going to get some lace curtains for my parlor to-day. Have you noticed the Bartons' new lace draperies? Well, I told my husband that if the Bartons could have lace curtains in their parlor, there was no reason why we should not have them, for my husband has as good pay as Tom Barton."

"You are just right," said the other woman. "I told my husband to-day that if Tom Barton's wife could wear a silk-lined dress, I could not see why I should not have my next dress lined with silk, and I am going to have it so, you see if I do not."

It was but yesterday that we heard a woman say: "If I could entertain as my friends entertain, I would love to do so; but I cannot do it, and so I simply do not try to entertain at all."

Now, what connection is there between the spirit of true hospitality and elaborate entertaining? The fact is that the overelaborate method of entertaining in vogue at present is killing that beautiful spirit of true hospitality that prevailed at one time. Elaborate living, elaborate dressing, elaborate entertaining are destroying the happiness of many American homes. There are homes in which the whole end and aim of life would seem to be the accumulation of fine furniture and bric-a-brac, the care of which imposes a great burden on the mistress of the home and the expense of which makes a mighty inroad in the family income. There are other homes in which the elaborateness of the table is the family weakness. The money expended for unnecessary and positively injurious food in such homes would give a college education to the children, who are not thus educated because their parents "cannot afford" to send them to college. All forms of elaborate living impose an unnecessary burden on both fathers and mothers, and destroy the peace and harmony of true home life. Many homes have been wrecked by a constant striving for the unattainable in the style of living. We saw one day a red flag floating from the piazza of a home that had been thus wrecked. A young couple had started out in life under an utterly false standard. It was a standard based not on their own incomes, but on the incomes of others. They adopted a style of living that involved them in debt, and they had neither the courage nor the sense to retrench when they saw the inevitable result of their folly if it was continued.

The remedy for all this wrong living lies largely with the women of the home. There will not be simplicity in home life until the wives and mothers declare that such simplicity shall reign in their homes. Women, far more than men, set the pace for the social world; women, far more than men, fix the standard of home life. It is true that

The hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

It is true that if there is ever a revolution in the world of dress and fashion, a revolution in the laws governing the home life of the day, that revolution must be wrought by the women of the world.—Zion's Herald.

WHITE RAIMENT.

"And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." "The righteousness of saints"—what is it? Righteousness is the result of right doing. Doing right is doing the will of God. The will of God is recorded in his word. Hence, to do the will of God is to do what God requires of us. Therefore, doing the will of God makes up the white robes which the saints will wear in the home of the blessed. This being true, it also follows, as a matter of course, that those who do not do the will of God will not have the white robes to wear. Doing the will of God makes a man just what he must be, both in heart and in life, to enter the eternal city. It takes this to prepare him to enjoy that happy home, even if he were the only man that does not love God and does not love righteousness would only be miserable in heaven, if he were placed in the midst of righteousness and true holiness. The white robes that the saints will wear in the happy home mean the characters they are to form by doing the Lord's will; yet when they do God's will they can only count themselves unprofitable servants, having done only their duty, while it is the power of God through the truth that has elevated and purified them. Besides, these robes have to be washed in the blood of the Lamb to pass them into the eternal city of God. So that when the righteous are saved, all the glory and all the honor belong to the Lord.

Not only is it true that when sinners obey the requirements upon the doing of which pardon is promised they have pardon through the blood of the Lamb, but it is also true that all through the lifetime of the Christian, whenever he sins, he must truly repent of that sin, confess it to God, and pray for his forgiveness, thus making himself worthy of pardon; then this sin is also washed away in the blood of the Lamb. So if he continues to do, thus till the last sin has been washed away, his robe, his character, will be clean and white, as represented in the passage we have quoted. E. G. S.

SIGHTS AT THE CAPITAL.

There are eight executive departments of the national government. Each has a representative in the Cabinet. The Cabinet is not provided for, either in the Constitution or the laws. It lives, as a body meeting twice a week in the Cabinet room at the White House to confer with the President, simply at the will of the President, who invites the heads of the executive departments to assemble in these meetings as a Cabinet. Any President could abolish the Cabinet, as such, by simply suspending indefinitely the Cabinet meetings; but the custom of thus bringing together his natural advisers, all appointed by himself to share with him the responsibilities of government, as established by President Washington, has such obvious advantages that it has never been interrupted, except by President Jackson, when he quarreled with the members of his Cabinet. Besides, the President who should dispense with Cabinet meetings would be accused of imperialism, and this, of itself, will prevent the change from being made.

The titles of the executive departments, usually incorrectly published, are given officially as follows, in the order of their creation: "The Department of State," "The Treasury Department," "The War Department," "The Department of Justice," "The Post Office Department," "The Navy Department," "The Department of the Interior," "The Department of Agriculture." The heads of these departments who take rank at the Cabinet table, and on all other official occasions in the order of their departments, have the titles: "The Secretary of State," "The Secretary of the Treasury," "The Secretary of War," "The Attorney-general," "The Postmaster General," "The Secretary of the Navy," "The Secretary of the Interior," "The Secretary of Agriculture."

These executive departments occupy offices in buildings scattered through the central portion of the city of Washington, mostly built by the government for the purpose, although a number of buildings have been rented to provide for the overflow, as the departments have grown with the increase of government business, and without adequate provision of government buildings. At present, the Department of Justice is living entirely in rented buildings, its old home on Pennsylvania avenue, opposite the Treasury Department, having been condemned as unsafe and torn down to make room for a new one on the same site. It is hoped by the supervising architect and others that Congress may buy the whole of that square, which is on the right of Lafayette Park, and also the whole of the square on the left of Lafayette Park, as one faces it from the White House, so as to make Pennsylvania avenue, from Fifteenth street to Seventeenth street, an executive avenue in fact, for it has already had that name. Instead of the present inartistic collection of private buildings—good, bad, and indifferent—in these two squares, we should then have two noble public buildings, one for the Department of Justice and one for some other department, or for a much-needed fireproof hall of records and archives; a building which would accord with the park, on the other side of the avenue, inclosing the Executive Mansion, the Treasury Department, and the State, War, and Navy building.

All the departments, except the State Department—and it is crowded—have outgrown the buildings provided for them and have had to build, buy, or rent additional headquarters. The executive offices of the Post Office Department are being moved out of the old Post Office Department building into the new and large building of the Washington city post office on Pennsylvania avenue, midway between the Capitol and the White House. The Treasury Department, which is larger than any other—and, indeed, probably larger than all the others put together—still has its principal offices in its historic old building at Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, which is, next to the Capitol, the largest and finest of the public buildings of the old order.

Students of government could spend years in examining the executive departments—their organization, methods, duties, functions, records, and history. No one, even among the oldest and best informed of the men who work under them, knows all that is to be known about them, and a lifetime study would not exhaust the possibilities of such knowledge. Yet the ordinary visitor can see in two days—and, indeed, in one day—enough of them to get a very good general idea of their purpose and operations. They all are open to visitors from 9 A.M. till 2 P.M., and, as a rule, the watchmen at the entrances are instructed to give information to visitors; it is well, however, to have one of the good twenty-five-cent guidebooks.

In making a day's tour through the departments it would be well to begin at the beginning—that is to say, at the Department of State, which shares with the War Department and the Navy Department the largest modern public building in Washington, an enormous granite pile of composite architecture that towers above its neighborhood and covers four and one-half acres, has two miles of corridors, and cost nearly eleven million dollars. It is the farthest west of the large departmental buildings, and occupies the site just west of the White House, where stood the historic old buildings in which the War Department and the Navy Department had their offices for seventy years, including the period of the Civil War.

The State Department has the southern end of the building, with a fine view over the parks to the Potomac River and the Virginia shores. There are many interesting documents, portraits, and relics in the State Department, but most of them are not for public view. The engrossed copy of the Declaration of Independence and the engrossed copy of the Constitution, with the original signatures—or rather, in the case of the Declaration, with about one-third of them—are, for example, no longer shown because of the fading effect of the sunlight. But visitors can see in the library the original draft of the Declaration of Independence in the handwriting of Thomas Jefferson, with the interlineations by John Adams and Benjamin Franklin, and also Jefferson's desk on which it was written. There, too, can be seen the sword of Washington and the staff of Franklin, with other relics and curios. On the floor below is the diplomatic room, where formal conferences with foreign diplomats are held and where treaties have been negotiated. This is the finest public room in Washington. It can usually be seen by visitors, who will be interested in the portraits of some of the great Secretaries of State as well as in the fine furnishings.

If one has an introduction to the Secretary of State, he may see the handsome office which he occupies; and if he is not there, he may, perhaps, see it without an introduction.

There are no divisions in the building to mark where one department ends and another begins, so that one may walk right round the corridor to the right, if he wants to go to the office of the Secretary of the Navy, whose department has the eastern side of the building; or to the left, if he wants to go to the office of the Secretary of War, whose department has the western and northern wings. This department requires so much more space, not only because of the growth of the army, but because of the records of the Civil War which are in its keeping.

Leaving the office of the Secretary of State and walking to the right, one comes, after passing the invisible boundary of the Navy Department, to the interesting models of our war vessels. These, each perfect and costly, are gathered thick under their glass cases round the entrance to the Secretary's office. The Secretary of the Navy does not use the large, handsome room provided for his office except as a reception room on occasions, for he does his work in the inner of two smaller rooms opening out of it, and, therefore, anybody can see the large room, with its portraits of former Secretaries of the Navy and its elaborate furnishings.

There is a cross corridor that leads directly from the office of the Secretary of the Navy, across the building, to the office of the Secretary of War, where there is another large and handsome room used only as an anteroom, while the Secretary has his office in a small inner room. Any visitor can see the large room. It is made especially interesting by large and important flags, including that of the Secretary of War and the flag which was draped over Lincoln's coffin. On the floor below, and on the other side of the building, in the northeast corner, are the offices of the Commanding General of the Army. One enters under an artistic arrangement of flags, where he may see General Miles, if he has an introduction; and if he is not in, he may see his large and handsome room and the portraits of his predecessors.

Coming out on the north portico of the building, one sees, across the street, the old Corcoran Art Gallery, temporarily occupied by the United States Court of Claims and the library of the Department of Justice. The Attorney-general's office, which has nothing to interest the ordinary visitor, is in a rented building several blocks to the northeast.

Walking over in front of the White House, one comes to the Treasury Department, which is just to the east of it, and after seeing the secret service museum of counterfeits and counterfeiters, and the cash room, finished in fine marble, where the cash business of the Treasury is done, he may go to the office of the United States Treasurer between the hours of eleven and twelve, or between one and two, and be included in a party escorted by a well-informed messenger, who will show him the bond and silver and gold vaults, and other money divisions of the Treasurer's office, including the place where the canceled notes are destroyed. The visitor may see, in this round, where the treasury keeps between eight and nine hundred millions of dollars' worth of gold and silver, currency and bonds.

It is well to go directly from the Treasury Department to its Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which is in a large brick building in the park south of it, and near the Washington Monument. There one may see the process of printing the notes and stamps and bonds of the government.

It will be convenient to go from this bureau to the Department of Agriculture, which is just east of it, where there is an interesting museum of agricultural products, illustrating also their industrial and commercial uses.

The two remaining departments, the Post Office and the Interior, are in two classic buildings facing one another at Seventh and F streets, half a mile away from the nearest similar building, the Post Office building being just half the size of the other. It was long ago outgrown, and the Postmaster General and his four Assistant Postmasters General have long had to do business in absurdly small quarters, but are now about to have large and fine offices in the city post office building. There is little to see in the Post Office Department, except the "dead letter office," with its interesting processes of handling the eighteen thousand letters a day that come to it, and its pathetic and humorous museum of undelivered articles, including many soldiers' and sailors' photographs mailed in war days.

The building across F street, where the Secretary of the Interior has his offices, is popularly known as the "Patent Office," and quite appropriately, because it was built with money received by the Patent Office from fees of inventors, and the Patent Office occupies the larger portion of it. The Land Office is the only other part of the Interior Department, except the offices of the secretaries and the assistant secretaries, which now remains in this building. The museum of models of patented articles, which fills four halls on the second floor—eighty thousand more are displayed in a rented building near by—is a magnificent exhibition of what American inventors have done, and greatly interests most visitors. The Pension Office, the Indian Office, the Bureau of Education, the Geological Survey, and the Census Office, all under the Department of the Interior, are housed in buildings within a radius of half a mile from the Secretary's office.—Henry MacFarland, in Forward.

A SUNSHINY HUSBAND,

A sunshiny husband makes a merry, beautiful home, worth having, worth working in and for. If the man is breezy, cheery, considerate, and sympathetic, his wife sings in her heart over her puddings and her mending basket, and renews her youth in the security she feels of his approbation and admiration. You may think it weak or childish, if you please, but it is the admired wife, who hears words of praise and receives smiles of commendation, who is capable, discreet, and executive. I have seen a timid, meek, self-distrusting little body fairly bloom into strong, self-reliant womanhood under the tonic and cordial companionship of a husband who really went out of his way to find occasion for showing her how fully he trusted her judgment and how fully he deferred to her opinion.—Christian Work.

It is not by turning over libraries, but by repeatedly perusing and intently contemplating a few great models, that the mind is best disciplined.—Macaulay.

THE CALHOUN-KURFEES DISCUSSION.

Our first reason for desiring to publish this discussion is because we thought the publication of it would do good. We believe an unbiased reading of this discussion will do good and lead the people to desire to worship as "it is written."

Secondly, the truth never fears investigation, but rather seeks it. By honest investigation; such as these brethren are capable of conducting, truth is often elicited. We have always favored discussion for the sake of truth, and not for victory; for the advancement of the cause of Christ, and not for the upbuilding of a party.

Again, we had heard that Brother Calhoun was reading his article on "Worship" to a number of people and that he regarded his position as unassailable. In this we thought him mistaken, but have always been ready to consider the strongest arguments the advocates of instrumental music could make. It would be gratifying to us to see Brother Calhoun's articles, with Brother Kurfees' replies, published in some of the religious papers that favor instrumental music in the worship.

ORDER OF WORSHIP.

Brother Lipscomb: I have sent you by mail another copy of "The Worship" and also a copy of my new tract, "Building the Church." A late number of the Gospel Missionary contained Brother W. J. Brown's note of inquiry and your reply, and other matter along that line from me, including your former notice of "The Worship." For the sake of the cause of Christ, do all in your power to reconcile your first and last mention of the position held by the tract. It may be that I misunderstand you in your last; I do not see how I could have misunderstood you in your first. Whatever you do, let us try to get as close together as possible. I wish to call special attention to two features of my tract:

1. After I wrote the body of the tract, in which I endeavor to find an order for the worship, and depend on Acts 2: 42 as our only hope, I wrote a number of pages (six) under the general head, "Afterthoughts and Suggestions."

2. The objection you urged in your notice is merely a "suggestion," and was so intended. I have seen more or less confusion and disorder grow out of a lack of precaution on the part of the leader to have such understanding as my "suggestion" meets. The service must be rendered by some one. My suggestion was intended as an incentive to care in that particular. Still I can see that my language is open to the criticism you made. Had I said, "The deacons or others should be ready," etc., it would have been less dogmatic.

I wish also to say to you that the great reason why the worship, as conducted by many churches

(according to Acts 2: 42), is so bitterly opposed as "working havoc" is because of the tendency among our preachers toward the pastor system, or, what is worse, monthly preaching. These men, many of them, are hired by from two to four churches to visit them monthly. When the preacher goes, they all turn out to hear the preaching; on other days the few go and have "social meetings," and the many stay at home. Some time since one of our preachers missed connection of trains, and, failing to reach his place of appointment, stopped off at a place where a "Brother Monthly" has preached for years. They have a good-sized congregation, yet only eighteen persons were present. A sister said: "Why, Brother ———, why didn't you let us know you were coming? Last Lord's day was 'Brother Monthly's' time, and the house was packed and jammed."

The latter part was encouraging. He has the ear of the people; but, unfortunately, no preacher means no church. They need to be taught. I see a place for preaching and a place for teaching and clear distinction in God's word between the two. I am sorry you do not see thus; I am pretty sure it is a matter of oversight. I also know of men who are able teachers, but very poor preachers, and vice versa.

W. J. RICE.

Covington, Ind.

P.S. On page 2 of this letter I speak of my attempt at establishing an order, and refer to Acts 2: 42 as our only hope. In connection with this, I refer you to the closing page of my tract, "A Plea for Unity." I still insist that we can and should unite on Acts 2: 42, and that we cannot unite on anything else.

W. J. R.

I commend heartily much of Brother Rice's article. I feel so little concern whether I am consistent with what I wrote a few years ago that I cannot take time to look up what I said. I never write to be consistent with what I have heretofore written. My recollection is, as I first read the tract, finding many good things in it; I said so, and still say it. I then saw the aim was to establish a fixed routine of service for the churches. As I am sure God never did this, I must object to any one else doing it for the children of God. Whether I gave expression to this fully I do not now remember, nor do I think it of sufficient importance to reexamine. Later developments show this purpose, had I failed then to see it. If any one thinks a ritual or formal order is intended here, let him examine the directions for purifying the tabernacle and its service as laid down (Ex. 25-27), the consecrating of priests (chapters 28, 29), or of the various offerings (Lev. 1-9); then read this simple statement in general terms: "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." (Acts 2: 42.) This tells what was done, but gives no shadow of fixed order. Singing is not mentioned, but it was when the Supper was instituted. The account of the Supper (1 Cor. 11: 20-34) shows an entire absence of fixed order of service. Now, the things done on these occasions must be done now. On the doing of them all, Christians can and must agree; on a specific routine to be followed they will not agree, because God gave none.

As a rule, as we make things formal, we drive the spirit out of them. There is no wrong in the order laid down by these brethren in the worship, but there is a sin in trying to force that order on others or in teaching it is required by God when he has not required it. To illustrate: There is a class of religious people devoted and exemplary who, in their anxiety to avoid conforming to the world, opposed the use of buttons when they were invented, and to this day use hooks and eyes to fasten their clothes, and exclude members who fasten their clothes with buttons. They have made this a law. It is no sin in the sight of God to fasten clothes with hooks and eyes; the spirit that prompts them to do it is commendable; but when they make a law requiring all Christians to fasten their clothes with hooks and eyes, even if they were sure Christ and the apostles so fastened their clothes, they commit a grievous sin. They enact a law God has not enacted; they legislate for the church of God; they assume the prerogative that belongs to God. All attempts to force uniformity in things God has not required are sinful.

The order of observing the ordinances suggested by these brethren is as good as any order, but no better. But to force it on others is wrong and will produce division, because God did not ordain it. In the interest of union, I plead for freedom where God gives no law. Whether the prayers come first or last, whether the Supper is before or after the contribution, or whether we have praying and teaching and singing both before and after the breaking of bread or the contribution does not invalidate the services, because in these God has given no rule. The ground of union is to do what God commands and leave each church free where he has not commanded.

The churches I have regularly attended usually break bread toward the close of the services. I sometimes go where they do it near the beginning. They always, like Brother Elmore, introduce with singing, reading, praying, some words of admonition or exhortation, and then breaking bread; afterwards any extended teaching that may be done. I prefer the way to which I am accustomed (1) from force of habit that ought not, but does, weigh something in forming our judgment; (2) I have noted some are apt to be late coming in, and the bread has to be handed to them after the others are through. We are commanded to tarry one for another. I have never before mentioned, orally or in writing, these points, because each congregation ought to decide this for itself. Now, brethren, it is human nature to run from the extreme of laxness in adding to the appointments of God to the other extreme of seeking and insisting on an order where God has given none. The most conscientious man is most liable to this extreme. We honor the conscientious man even in error. God did in Paul. This extreme must be guarded against, as well as the other. Let us be strenuous for doing what God requires, but careful not to impose our preferences on brethren as laws of God. While I think sermonizing on Sunday at the hour of services has a tendency to choke out the other services, the truth faithfully taught once a month or once a week will do no harm.

For thirty years I have seen the evil that is liable to grow out of the regular preaching at the hour of worship and have tried to warn against it. I have never been able to find that preaching or teaching at that hour or any other is clearly condemned. All preaching or teaching ought to be apostolic teaching.

Brother Rice thinks because I have not examined the subject I do not observe the distinction between teaching and preaching that he does. He mistakes the reason. For twenty years I carefully observed the distinction; I then carefully examined it, and because I did this, I am not so careful to keep up the distinction. I find the Scriptures do not keep it up. There are three words used to designate preaching and teaching:

1. "Kerusso," to proclaim a message or declare a new truth.
2. "Evangelidzo," to proclaim, or tell, good news, often by repeating what has been proclaimed.
3. "Didasco," to teach and instruct and admonish in the principles and truths of a system.

These three terms originally had these distinct meanings, but these distinctions are not kept up always in the Scriptures. Proclaiming the original gospel where it has not been heard would come under the first term, and teaching the precepts of the Christian religion would come under the third term. Repeating the gospel, with its good news, after it had first been proclaimed would come under the second term. To preach and to evangelize are used almost interchangeably. The angel announcing news to Zacharias calls it "evangelizing." (Luke 1: 19.) So of the announcement to the angels. (Luke 2: 10.) John's message (Luke 3: 16-18) is on the same list. This list could be extended longer. It is also applied to teaching the precepts of the Christian religion and even to telling of the personal health of brethren. (1 Thess. 3: 6.) "Kerusso," to proclaim an original truth, is applied to repeating it long after it is proclaimed, and even to teaching the Ten Commandments. (Rom. 2: 22; Acts 15: 21; Gal. 5: 11.) This is giving it the meaning of teaching. "Didasco" means to teach, but it embraces all the teaching Jesus and his apostles did concerning his mission to earth.

The distinction is not kept up in the Scriptures, and when I saw it was not I ceased to keep it up; especially did I do this when I saw a disposition to press this distinction to uphold an order not ordained by God. The preaching and teaching must be often so combined in the same talk that it is impossible to separate them. So it is easily seen how they came to be used interchangeably.

No one is more anxious for union in Christ than I am. It cannot be accomplished by losing sight of the great services to be attended to and laying stress on the routine of reading or praying when this act or that one comes. God has laid no stress on this, and for us to do it is to divert minds from his services to forms and ceremonies. Remember, it was trying to force a union at Babel in things God had not required that caused the confounding of the language and wider dispersions of our fathers.

Brother Rice thinks he had better have added the deacons and others when suggesting the placing them to do the service. My conviction is, he had better not make the suggestion at all, as God made none; and I am not sure that uniformity in things not ordained by God is desirable. People are so apt to exalt their customs and traditions above the order of God that it is well they be frequently changed, that all may know they are human. At any rate, it is wrong to insist on uniformity, where God has not established it, to the disturbance of the peace of the church. D. L.

UNIVERSALISM.

At one point where we held a meeting this year the above ism was struggling to gain a footing among the people, but only a very few have as yet been ensnared by it. One man has been preaching it for some little time there, but has made very little progress, so far as I could learn. But they are still trying. The man that has been preaching it at that place and one or two young men are about all I have heard of that are trying to defend or propagate it. Why on earth any one should ever try to propagate this opinion is strange to me; for if true, it will do no one any good to know anything about it. He will be just as well off never to hear of it as to believe it for a lifetime. If it is not true, it will bring eternal ruin upon those who rely upon it. If Universalism be true—that all mankind are to be ultimately holy and happy—it makes no difference whether they obey the gospel or not; they will be safe in eternity, anyhow. If the Bible be true, then the ism is false; for just so certain as there is truth in the teaching of the Bible, the opinion that all men, no matter how corrupt, will be saved in eternity is false. In all that the Bible says of the hereafter, there are two places for man to dwell. One is heaven, the other is hell—the one a home of everlasting happiness; the other, the dwelling place of all the wicked and finally impenitent forever.

The word of God does not contradict itself. Whenever we find one positive and unequivocal statement on any subject in any dispensation, no man need ever look for any statement in that dispensation to contradict or contravene it. For example, at the close of Matt. 25 Jesus says of the wicked: "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." This passage was used in connection with the final judgment of man and the settlement of his final destiny. The language used is plain, definite, and unmistakable, and no other construction can be placed upon it. No man, therefore, can find any passage in the New Testament that contradicts or in any wise disannuls this one; and if he could, he would simply show up the Bible as a book of contradictions, and that would destroy all faith in it as a divine record. Universalists say that while the wicked may be punished for a time, their punishment will cease and they will all be ultimately saved in heaven. If this be true, the statement of Jesus is untrue, for he says the wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment." "Everlasting" means unending. If any man doubts it, let him look at the Greek of this passage, and he will find that the words "everlasting" and "eternal" in this passage are both from the same word. Thayer's Greek Lexicon of the New Testament defines the word: "Without end, never to cease, everlasting." Now, if he found one passage in the New Testament plainly expressing in any language that the punishment of the wicked will end, then he would destroy God's word; for the very moment he shows that the punishment of the wicked will end, he shows that the happiness of the righteous will end, for Jesus expressed the duration of both by the same word. Hence, the very day that any man proves that the punishment of the wicked will end he proves that the happiness of the righteous will end. If that part of the New Testament be knocked out, then it all goes.

Every man, therefore, that sets to work to prove an end to the punishment of the wicked begins a work that will of necessity end the happiness of the righteous, and will make it impossible to express endless duration. He cuts off the limb between himself and the tree, and a fall is inevitable. It is a vain dream to claim eternal life and deny eternal death, or punishment. Every time you find the expressions "everlasting fire" and "everlasting punishment" the word "everlasting" is from this same word that expresses eternal and everlasting life so many times. "Everlasting life" means life unending, while "everlasting punishment" means punishment without end, and there is not one expression that signifies either that the punishment of the wicked will cease or that the happiness of the righteous will end. Hence, the whole claim of eternal happiness for those that live and die in wickedness is a mere opinion, a mere inference, where there is not one word of plain testimony to that effect. Besides this opinion, this groundless inference contradicts the whole teaching of the New Testament on this subject, makes the word of God a fable, and leads all its followers to reject all that is plain and tangible for a mere dream, a mere whim of the brain. Never was greater folly engaged in. Every man that will can take hold of the word of God and secure eternal life and avoid all danger of eternal punishment; but in contending for Universalism he contradicts the word of God, imperils his own soul, and starts others on the road to ruin. Hence, a man has all to lose, and nothing to gain, by contending for this groundless ism. He turns away from what is definite and sure for a mere fad, a dream, a mere inference, without a single verse in all the divine record to express it.

While we were preaching at the place referred to one of the young men sent us this passage to preach on and explain: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." (John 12: 32.) This passage is used by Universalists to prove that all the world will be saved. They think that when he was lifted up from the earth he was taken to heaven and that he will draw all the world to him, into heaven. This passage in no wise expresses what these people claim for it. It just says "lifted up from the earth," but does not say where to, whether upon the cross or to heaven or where he meant. But the next verse indicates that the lifting up was to be upon the cross: "This he said, signifying what death he should die." This indicates that the lifting up only meant upon the cross; but the "drawing" means more, likely, than the crowd that his crucifixion drew to behold his death. Men were to be drawn to Christ in the sense of serving him.

In another place Jesus said: "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day." (John 6: 44.) This plainly teaches that men are to be drawn to Christ in the sense of serving him—not to heaven, but into his service. But if they continue faithful in his service, it will take them to heaven at the end. How does the Father draw men to Christ? The very next verse settles this: "It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." This shows how they are drawn. The first step is teaching; "they shall be all taught of God." This was done by preaching the gospel to the world, as through the apostles. Then the people were to hear, learn, and come to Christ; but the history of the teaching, both in New Testament times and ever since, is that only a few out of the many have heard, learned, and come to him. Hence, while the teaching and the extension of the privilege of coming to Christ have been extended to all, very few have accepted.

In the sense that all the world should be invited to Jesus and have the opportunity of coming to him, all are drawn; but in the sense of receiving the gospel and coming to Christ, only a few are drawn to him. He said in the Sermon on the Mount: "For wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." This passage shows that only a few of all the people of this world will be actually drawn to Christ and into heaven. So to make the passage quoted mean that Christ draws all men into heaven, and thus actually saves them, makes the Savior contradict himself most emphatically, and would forever destroy faith in the word of God; but to understand that all have a chance to be drawn and saved, and that only a few accept, makes all plain and harmonizes all that Jesus says upon the subject. In Rom. 10 Paul says all had heard, but all had not obeyed, the gospel; and Jesus says: "Many are called, but few are chosen." Paul, again, referring to the end of time and to the last judgment, says that "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." (2 Thess. 1: 7-9.) This passage shows, without any doubt, that some will refuse the gospel and will "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord."

The word "everlasting" means unending. Every man, therefore, that advocates everlasting happiness for all the wicked contradicts everything the Bible says on this subject, and virtually repudiates the whole of it, and sets up a plan for himself that is unheard of in all the oracles of God. This opinion has not one single good thing connected with it that the man has who takes the word of God and goes by it. The advocates of this delusion have much to say about the love and mercy of God, yet they know nothing of them, except what they learn from the word of God; while those that take the word of God, and obey the divine precepts of the same, have all the benefits that result from these and every other blessing that the word of God affords. These men that claim so much on the love and mercy of God will miss all that and everything that the word of God promises. I do not think I ever knew a man in all my life that advocated Universalism that ever obeyed the gospel and lived up faithfully to all its requirements through life. About the only reason I can see why men advocate it is, they do not want to submit to the demands and restraints of the Bible, and yet want some excuse for their course. They want to enjoy the world and then take a short cut on the Lord and get to heaven at last, without self-denial and without bearing the burden and heat of the day in the actual service of God. Every man that does serve God faithfully has the full promise of every possible blessing that Universalism claims, without ever believing or embracing a word of the ism as such; but the man that advocates and defends this opinion through life, and does not obey the gospel and practice faithfully through life its demands, will be certain to miss everything he claims through the ism, and at last "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." E. G. S.

Thomas Arnold used to say to his boys at Rugby: "The highest way is the best way." It is possible to put the matter still stronger and to affirm that for a Christian man the highest way is the only way. He may not dare to live and walk upon any lower level than the highest one which it is possible for him to reach. In the very moment in which he becomes content with a mere commonplace and ordinary goodness, all the springs of power are dried up in him, and the poor, shriveled remnants of his manhood are scarcely worth taking into account. The call which the gospel makes upon him is for heroic conduct. To this call he must respond with a joyous promptness or else repudiate the authority of Jesus Christ and set up his own independent standards of duty and righteousness.—Christian Advocate.

Brother Cawthon's Reply.

In answer to my question as to whether "salvation from past sins, cleansing, pardon, and remission of sins all take place before one can enter God's kingdom," Brother Cawthon says: "I demur and put Brother Walling and the Book on the witness stand." Brother Walling deposes and says that Brother Cawthon, in the Gospel Advocate of October 18, 1900, says: "I agree with you that a man enters into the kingdom of Christ by a birth (John 3: 3), and that no unclean person can enter the church, and that the cleansing must take place before the birth, and there is a difference between the time of cleansing and the birth." I see no reason to put Brother Walling on the witness stand, with the opposition testifying to all that he has stated. But Brother Cawthon further says: "I have never contended for anything else and I never will, so long as I accept the Bible as God's revealed will to man." I can see no ground here for a difference between Brother Cawthon and myself, unless he makes a difference between the birth and the time of entrance into the kingdom. If he does, there is an issue between us.

The issue between Brother Cawthon and me is the place where and the time when one ceases to be a sinner and begins to be a righteous man, ceases to be a servant of sin and becomes a servant of God. Brother Cawthon locates all this at faith; I deny it. I stated in the Gospel Advocate of September 20, 1900: "I understand that the sinner is separated from an unholy love, or impure motives, by faith." To this Brother Cawthon says: "Can a man's heart be made more than pure?" What is the heart? The affections of the mind. How do you change the heart? Change the affections of the mind from an unholy love to a love of holy things. How is this done? By telling of the wonderful love of Jesus. Example: The Pentecostians. Did they have a change of heart? "Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (Acts 2: 37.) They certainly had a change of heart. Were they saved? Brother Cawthon would have us believe they were; but hear Peter (verse 38): "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Then sinners are not cleansed at faith. I say "that he is separated from unholy acts by repentance."

Brother Cawthon asks: "Can a man do more than cleanse his words, deeds, and thoughts?" Example: Saul of Tarsus. "And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord," the Savior appeared unto him and he said: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Saul's words and deeds and thoughts were changed. Was his past life atoned for? Listen: "Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." Repentance does not bring one into the remission of sins. I say "that he is separated from the skeptical world by a confession of Christ." To this Brother Cawthon asks: "Can a man be more than separated from a skeptical world?" Yes; he can have his sins blotted from the Lamb's book of life, which cannot be done without the blood of Christ. (Heb. 9: 22.)

After Brother Cawthon has located the cleansing at faith, repentance, and the confession, he next says that "he [Christ] redeems, saves, justifies, reconciles, and remits (the penalty due past sins) in, and not out of, his kingdom." In the beginning he says: "The cleansing must take place before the birth, and there is a difference between the time of cleansing and the birth; I have never contended for anything else, and I never will, so long as I accept the Bible as God's revealed will to man." How can both of these positions be true? Let us examine his last statement: "Reconciled in the body, not out of it." First, the "body" does not invariably mean "his church." "And you, that were some time alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblamable and unrepensible in his sight." (Col. 1: 21, 22.) Paul presents in this all that we have contended for all the while: that in the death of Christ we come in contact with his blood, and are thereby cleansed from all sin and reconciled to God. Paul says "body" of his flesh, and not the church. Again, Brother Cawthon says Paul says that redemption from the sins mentioned in Rom. 3: 23 is in Christ, not out of Christ. Granted. But does Paul say that "being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus" has reference to the church? No, sir. "In Christ" does not invariably mean in his body. Example (2 Cor. 5: 17-20): "Therefore if any man be in Christ [the church], he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." Was God in the church when Christ was in the world? If so, God was in the church before it had its existence.

His next proof is: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." (Eph. 1: 3.) Does "in Christ" here have reference to the church? If so, how can the heart be changed by faith? Would not "through the authority of Christ" or "by the authority of Christ" be a better rendering? Now, we take his last proof: "And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body [not "by" one body] by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby." (Eph. 2: 16.) It is plain enough that the reconciliation does not take place here in the one body, but by the cross, upon which Christ died and in which death his blood was shed. Jesus said: "For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." (Matt. 26: 28.) Paul says that "without shedding of blood is no remission." (Heb. 9: 22.)

Since, then, sins are remitted by the blood of Christ, and there is no remission without Christ's blood, the very moment the sinner comes in contact with the blood he comes into the remission of all past sins; and since there is no remission without the blood, every one is a sinner, a servant in Satan's kingdom, until he comes in contact with the blood of Christ. When does the sinner come in contact with the blood of Christ? We have found (John 19: 34) that Jesus' blood was shed in his death. The sinner must, therefore, come into the death of Christ, where his blood was shed. In order to reach the efficacy of his blood. In Rom. 6: 3, 4, Paul says that the Romans were baptized into the death of Christ; therefore, in the baptismal tomb the sinner comes in contact with the blood of Christ, and the very moment he enters the blood of Christ he enters into the remission of his past sins, else the blood of Christ will not wash away sins. It also follows that since there is no remission without the blood of Christ, there is no blood of Christ without the baptismal tomb; therefore there is no remission without the baptismal tomb. This will harmonize every passage of scripture on this subject, and nothing else will.

O for the Honesty of the Old Days!

"Put that back!" exclaimed President John Quincy Adams, when his son took a sheet of paper from a pigeonhole to write a letter. "That belongs to the government. Here is my own stationery, at the other end of the desk. I always use it for letters on private business."

This conscientiousness in regard to what many would consider a mere trifle may appear excessive; but the dividing line between vice and virtue is so fine that the boundary is often unconsciously crossed, and it is just as dangerous for a young person to dally with conscience as it is for a child to toy with a dagger or to play with fire. He who is honest in small things can always be trusted in great.

There is truth not to be ignored in the old-fashioned rhyme:

It is a sin to steal a pin,
Much more to steal a greater thing.

No matter how little value the thing we appropriate from another may possess, the fact that it does not belong to us should make it sacred.—Success.

FINLEY.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Finley, our faithful brother and sister, of La Grange, Ark., have the sympathy of the entire community in their deep sorrow over the loss of their promising little son, Ernest Ashley Finley who was born on July 25, 1894, and died on October 12, 1900. A few weeks before his death he pointed out the spot where he wished to be buried, and there loving hands laid his mortal remains to rest. But the little darling is not in that sacred mound; he has gone to the One who loved and blessed little children and who is very near to the broken and contrite hearts of the Christian parents in their bereavement. "Blessed is the man that trusteth in him."

SHARP.

Anah Sharp, infant daughter of M. D. M. and C. E. Sharp, was born on January 12, 1897, and fell asleep in Jesus on October 20, 1900; being three years, nine months, and eight days old at the time of her death. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at the residence of the family, after which the sorrowful procession slowly moved away to the family burying ground, where the remains were placed by the side of Anah's sister, who preceded her to the spirit land some nine or ten months. The sweet babe, while suffering, said she wanted to die and be buried by her sister. Anah was sick only a few days, but suffered intensely; so God took the little one to himself, where she will never suffer more. While it is sad to give her up, it is sweet to think that one day, if we live faithful, we will meet her at God's right hand, where parting is no more. She leaves a father, mother, three brothers, and three sisters to mourn their loss; but their loss is her eternal gain. I extend my sympathy to the bereaved family. May we all be ready to meet her one day in the land of pure delight, where parting comes no more.

LOWE.

Brother Frank Lowe is dead. To him death came very suddenly. On Monday, June 11, 1900, he was taken suddenly ill and suffered much for two or three days; but on the following Friday and Saturday he had so far recovered as to be able to ride out and attend to business matters. On Sunday he was feeling very well, and after eating his dinner he was talking pleasantly with his beloved wife, when he was again stricken and died in a few minutes. Thomas Franklin Lowe was born on December 12, 1834, and died on June 17, 1900; being sixty-five years, six months, and five days old at the time of his death. Brother Lowe entered the Rock Hill church of Christ about twenty-five years ago, and soon afterwards became one of its elders. He was very zealous and faithful, always taking an active part in the work and worship of the church. Being a close Bible student, he was well posted on most Bible subjects. He loved controversy and was always ready to contend earnestly for what he believed the Bible taught. Brother Lowe was a good man, a kind and devoted husband, and a loving father. He has gone to his reward and leaves behind him a loving, sorrowing, Christian wife and four very dear Christian children to mourn his death.

A FRIEND.

POTTS.

Brother W. J. Potts, son of A. R. and Caroline Potts, was born on December 25, 1877, and fell asleep in Jesus on October 14, 1900. His mother preceded him to the spirit land about twenty-one years, dying when Brother Jeff. was quite small, and on her deathbed she prayed that he might live to be a man and make his mark in the world, which he certainly did; and it was an unstained character, a life fitted for the other and better world. Hence, God called him to come up higher at the age of twenty-two years, nine months, and twenty days. Brother Jeff. obeyed the gospel in the fall of 1896, was baptized by Brother Wardlow, and has been a loving and consistent Christian ever since. Those who knew him best loved him most. He was always kind, genial, and honest, selecting for his associates the best and purest of his country. His example is worth following, and I hope many young men will profit by it. He leaves a father, stepmother, one sister, one half-sister, and one stepsister, besides a host of friends and relatives, to mourn their loss; but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at the home of Brother Potts' father, after which his remains were borne to the resting place in the family graveyard to await the resurrection morn.

MULLINS.

Aunt Elizabeth Mullins was born in Rutherford County, Tenn., on September 27, 1831, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. T. Shelton, of near Sterrett, I. T., on October 17, 1900; being sixty-nine years and twenty days old at the time of her death. Her husband preceded her to the grave nine months and fifteen days. Early in life Aunt Elizabeth professed her faith in Christ and was baptized into the one body. She was a true disciple of Christ, always contending for the truth. All who knew her know she was a kind-hearted and devoted Christian, kind to all she met in the walks of life. She leaves five children, two brothers, and two sisters to mourn their loss; but their loss is her eternal gain. Though her place in the family circle will never be filled to them, yet if her family, relatives, and friends will follow her example and serve the Lord faithfully and earnestly, as she did, they will meet her where disappointment, sorrow, and sad farewells are no more. Three of her children and one brother were at her bedside at her dying hour. Her last words were: "Prepare to meet me in heaven; I am going home." I feel assured that Aunt Elizabeth was a soldier of the cross. How greatly she will be missed! She visited my home just one month before she died; she bade us good-by, and said: "This is the last time I ever expect to be here." Aunt Elizabeth had gained many friends in Indian Territory. She was buried at Silo. Many loved ones followed her remains to their last resting place. Her physician did his duty. He is a true, Christian-hearted man, and regrets her death. The Scriptures teach us that "the Lord doeth all things well." Let all prepare to meet her in heaven.

House Work

Seems easy to a man, but there is a great deal of lifting and reaching to do; a great many trips up and down stairs to make in the course of day's house work. It's hard where a woman is weak. For a woman suffering with some form of "female trouble" it is daily torment. There are thousands of such women struggling along, day by day, in increasing misery. There are other thousands who have found a complete cure of their disease in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It stops debilitating drains, cures irregularity, heals inflammation and ulceration, nourishes the nerves, and gives vitality and vigor. It makes weak women strong and sick women well. It contains no opium, cocaine nor other narcotic.

"For a number of months I suffered with female trouble," writes Miss Agnes McGowne, of 1212 Bank St., Washington, D. C. "I tried various remedies, but none seemed to do me any permanent good. The doctors said it was the worst case of internal trouble they ever had. I decided to write to you for help. I received a very encouraging reply, and commenced treatment at once. I had not used your 'Favorite Prescription' a week before I began to feel better, and, as I continued, my health gradually improved. It is improving every day."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay cost of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for a book in paper covers, or 31 stamps in cloth, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Electric typewriters are expected to make their appearance on the market soon. A number of them have been patented and there will be some rivalry. They will cost about two hundred dollars each. The electric typewriter is a power machine, all the work of the moving parts being done by an electric motor, while the operator simply indicates the characters. It looks like an ordinary typewriter and the keyboard is the same. The printing is accomplished by mere contact of the fingers. No pressure being required, there is no fatigue. Another advantage is that speed is practically unlimited. The work is done as fast as the keys can be touched.

In consideration of the fact that Central Tennessee College, of Nashville, is the only school of its kind in the South which has, in addition to its literary and industrial work, maintained departments of theology, law, medicine, dentistry, and pharmacy, and in view of the many years of untiring devotion to the education and elevation of the colored race and the interest in the success and welfare of Central Tennessee College shown by Bishop John M. Walden, of Cincinnati, a resolution has been adopted by the Board of Trust, changing the name of the institution to "Walden University." Each department is to remain intact as a distinct department of Walden University. The literary department will be known as "Central Tennessee College of Liberal Arts, of Walden University," and Meharry will be designated as "Meharry Medical College, of Walden University." As soon as it is practicable it is proposed to open a nurse-training school for preparing young men and women who propose to devote themselves to mission work in Africa.

The recent meeting of the New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association was closed with a trip of the manufacturers to some of the important centers of Southern industry. Five years ago the association gathered at Atlanta, Ga., for its first meeting outside of New England. The travelers through the South during the past week had an opportunity to observe many evidences of the wonderful progress made by this section since their last visit. In their own particular field they could note an increase in the number of mills from three hundred and fifty-two, with two million four hundred thousand spindles and fifty-five thousand looms, using eight hundred and sixty-two thousand bales of cotton, to six hundred and sixty-three mills, with four million eight hundred thousand active spindles and one hundred and twenty-two thousand looms, using more than one million five hundred thousand bales of cotton; while one million five hundred thousand additional spindles are being installed in new mills, the most notable increase in mill building and mill enlargement having taken place in the past eighteen months. Of special interest to them were the facts of the strong tendency on the part of the mills to advance to finer grades of goods and to do more in the way of bleaching and dyeing.

The official announcement of the total population of the United States for 1900 is 76,295,220, of which 74,627,907 are contained in the forty-five States, representing approximately the population to be used for apportionment purposes. There is a total of 134,158 Indians not taxed. The total population in 1890, with which the aggregate population of the present census should be compared, was 63,609,756. Taking the 1890 population as a basis, there has been a gain in population of 13,225,464 during the past ten years, representing an increase of nearly 21 per cent. ARKANSAS.

Fayetteville, October 30.—Brother A. Elmore, of Covington, Ind., closed a meeting at this place on October 25, 1900. He was here nearly three weeks. The meeting resulted in eight persons being baptized and two being restored to fellowship. Brother Elmore's preaching was strong, pointed, and scriptural, and I think much good was done. Some seem to oppose Brother Elmore, charging him with making a hobby of the "order of worship." In close attention to both preaching and private conversation, I failed to find him either an extremist or a dogmatist. He believes that Acts 2: 42 gives an order of worship safe to follow, and he wishes to follow it; but the main point, as I gathered from his preaching, is that all these items should come in and that the church should come together to worship, instead of to hear a sermon. Brother Elmore thinks the preacher should take his place along with other members of the church in the matter of teaching the apostles' doctrine, and he does not teach that just so many shall talk just so long—it may be one, three, or five for five, ten, or forty minutes; but he does teach that more practical good will come to the congregation if several brethren talk, thus developing the talents of all, than for one man to do it all, be he preacher or elder. If this is not scriptural and the best way, I would be glad for some one to give a reason why. JOHN T. HINDS.

KENTUCKY.

Weir, October 29.—Brother Barbee and Brother Fargy began a meeting at Mount Moriah, in Muhlenberg County, on the second Lord's day in October. After one week, Brother Fargy left, and the writer assisted during the remainder of the meeting, which closed on the fourth Lord's day in October. The congregation was much encouraged and strengthened. This leaves me at the beginning of a short meeting at Fargytown, in Butler County. W. H. HOSKINSON.

Ebenezer, October 24.—Brother J. K. P. South and the writer assisted the church of Christ at Salem, Harrison County, in a meeting of ten days' duration, resulting in eight confessions. This was the first time the writer had been permitted to see these good brethren in the flesh, but he hopes, by the grace of God, to see them again. Brother South is a grand man, full of faith, and he contends earnestly for the old paths. I never met a brother whom I esteem more than Brother South. S. H. JONES.

MISSOURI.

Kansas City, October 27.—Evangelist A. C. Jackson, of Jeffersonville, Ind., has just closed a series of meetings in this city. We had political excitement, shows, Christian Church Conventions, etc., to contend with; in short, everything was against us. Notwithstanding all of these things, the effort was successful far beyond our expectation, and a church of Christ was organized, with eighteen members; four persons were baptized; and a neat meetinghouse, located on the corner of Howard and McCoy avenues, was secured for the coming year. I humbly trust and fervently pray that the work thus so nobly begun may flow steadily and grandly on in sweet accord with our Father's will, and that many persons may be persuaded to bow in humble submission to Christ through our influence. To our beloved Brother Wood, of West York, Ill., and all others who were instrumental in having Brother Jackson come to our city, I extend my sincere thanks and say that Brother Jackson did his work, and did it well. May God bless him. The word will be presented boldly and the cause will prosper wherever he goes. Finally, permit me to ask all gospel preachers who may be passing through our city to stop over and help us contend for the "old paths where is the good way," and they will be accorded a hearty welcome in our midst. Pray for us. C. H. HYATT.

TENNESSEE.

Pelham, October 31.—I recently closed a nine-days' tent meeting four miles east of Hillsboro, in Coffee County, which resulted in sixteen additions. Nearly all of those added to the one body were heads of families, and fourteen of the number came from the Methodists. This was my second meeting at that place, and I am sure the seed sown will bring forth other fruit in the near future. This writing finds me engaged in an interesting meeting with the church of Christ at this place. Brother R. H. Young, of Wilson County, began this meeting for me and preached seven days before I reached him and took up the work. The audiences have been large and attentive, with one addition to date. JAMES K. HILL.

Sharon, October 27.—Brother G. D. Smith held a tent meeting for us four miles west of this place, in Weakley County, beginning on Wednesday night before the first Lord's day in October and continuing till the second Lord's day night in October. The weather was cool and it rained some, but we had good audiences at night. Six persons were baptized and much interest aroused. Some who had never heard the simple gospel before are searching the Scriptures daily to see if these things be so, while others are reading to prove that they are not so. We were refused a house in which to hold a meeting, and with difficulty secured land in a convenient place on which to erect a tent. Brother Smith is a young preacher, but is ready for the battle, and shuns not to declare the whole truth. There are several members living at Sharon and about as many in the neighborhood where the meeting was held—about forty in all—and we have agreed to meet and break bread on the first day of the week, which we are doing at a private house. Pray for us, that we may soon have a house in which to worship. (Mrs.) M. L. PRIESTLEY.

Winchester, November 2.—I filled my appointment at Theta on the first Lord's day in October, but on account of the rain the attendance was small. The meeting at Laguardo, in Wilson County, lasted eight days, being conducted only at night, and closed on the third Lord's day night in October, with splendid attendance and attention, but no additions. The meeting at Bridgeport, Ala., was carried on for eight nights, with good audiences and interest, and closed on the fourth Lord's day in October, with one addition by baptism and one reclaimed. Brother N. B. Newsom, of Manchester, was with me. He is spending much of his time preaching the gospel in destitute fields. I began preaching the gospel at Winchester on Tuesday night, October 30, 1900, and the attendance thus far has been good. I am very thankful to the Beach Grove and Laguardo congregations for their fellowship. Let us go out into the great gospel field and hold up Christ to the people, trust in God, live pure from the blood of all men, do our duty, and God, through somebody, will take care of us. If we cannot ride, let us walk; if we do not have a new suit of clothes, let us put on the old one, and be sure that we keep our suit of reputation from getting spotted and dirty. To the Lord be all the praise! S. W. WOMACK.

Hornbeak, October 30.—On Saturday night before the third Lord's day in July I began a meeting with the congregation at Keefe, in Lake County, and continued ten days. This is the only house of worship in the county owned by the church of Christ and the only congregation I know of where all the members are renters, and yet they have no trouble in raising money to pay their expenses. The brethren were not quite through working their crops, and so the interest was not as good as it might otherwise have been. Two ladies confessed their faith in the Savior and were baptized. From Keefe I went to Sharon, in Weakley County, and began a meeting on the fifth Lord's day in July, which continued ten days. Good interest prevailed throughout the meeting. Three persons were baptized. While there was no established congregation at Sharon, I was well supported financially. My next meeting was with the congregation at Mount Pelia, in Weakley County. That meeting began on the second Lord's day in August and closed on the following Lord's day night. I cannot say that we had very much interest at Mount Pelia. The brethren—some of them—attended the meeting when they had nothing else to do. There were no baptisms, and if the church was edified much, I could not tell it. There are a few brethren and sisters at that place who are faithful to the cause. May their efforts not be in vain. From Mount Pelia I went to Bethel, five miles west of Hornbeak, in Obion County, and began a meeting on the fourth Lord's day in August, which closed on the first Lord's day in September. At that place, my brother, Robert Smith, had been for two weeks training the congregation to sing, using "Gospel Praise." He also led the singing during the meeting. The music was grand and inspiring. Every preacher knows the value of good music in a meeting. So, under the inspiration of such songs as "Gospel Praise" contains, I suppose I did my best preaching. Fourteen persons were baptized and five reclaimed, and the preacher and the singer were liberally remunerated. My next meeting was under a brush arbor, near Ore Spring, in Weakley County. That meeting began on the second Lord's day in September and continued eight days, with splendid interest. There was one baptism. Ore Spring is a new field. There had not been a sermon preached there by our brethren in about ten years. The people at that place are a thrifty, wide-awake people, and seem to be as free from prejudice as any I ever met. I hope to go back next summer and hold another meeting in that neighborhood. On Wednesday night before the first Lord's day in October I began a meeting three miles west of Sharon, in Weakley County, and closed on the second Lord's day night in October. This is a mission point, and I had to use a tent to preach in, for the sects were bitter against us. Notwithstanding the weather was very unfavorable for a tent meeting, the audiences at night were large and attentive; but the audiences in the day consisted of the faithful few, with now and then a "stranger." Much interest was manifested in the way of asking questions. Six confessions and baptisms and the brethren encouraged to begin meeting from house to house mark the visible results. The faithful brethren contributed liberally to the support of the meeting. My seventh and last meeting for the season began on the third Lord's day in October, two miles east of Union City, in Obion County. That was also a missionary meeting. There are only a few brethren in that vicinity, and most of them are too busy with the things of this world to go to preaching only at night. This meeting began under very adverse circumstances. There were one good sister and one brother to encourage, and all the rest to discourage. Some said it was too late for a tent meeting, others said the people were too busy, and still others said the people might not go. We hardly had help to put up the tent. But despite all these things, the meeting was a success. I never saw better interest on the part of the world than was manifested at that place. On the last day of the meeting—the fourth Lord's day in October—three young girls confessed their Savior, and that evening, at the water, one other came forward and demanded baptism. Owing to other engagements, the meeting had to close just at the time the interest seemed greatest. Even the brethren got a little warm. The Lord willing, I shall try to hold another meeting at that place next summer. Early last spring I asked several congregations to fellowship me in some missionary work. They are all strong congregations and opposed to missionary societies, yet they have all absolutely failed to do anything, even to select a mission point and invite me to it. Four of the seven meetings I have held this season were at places where there are no congregations, yet I have always found enough faithful brethren to support the meeting, and I did not have to beg for it, either. As Brother Lipscomb says, when I began to do mission work more fields opened to me than I could fill. I am now glad that those congregations did not respond. I am stronger in the faith and more willing to go under the God-given commission, which says, "Go" (not, "Be sent") than ever before. May the Lord bless every faithful effort that is being put forth for the salvation of the world. G. D. SMITH.

The Worst Kind of Failures.

All over this country we see the baneful results of the passion for money getting. We see men on every side who are regarded as successful, simply because they have made money; but they are in reality the worst kind of failures, for they have failed to grasp the true meaning of life. When will the world learn that to pile up money or to learn to do one thing is not success?—October Success.

A MESSAGE OF HOPE TO SUFFERERS FROM CANCER.The Disease is Curable.

"Editor of the Gospel Advocate: I had a cancer or an ulcer—the most eminent physicians pronounced it a cancer. My father, a fine physician, did not relieve my sufferings. I had two brothers, both very fine physicians; neither could relieve me. After untold sufferings, with no relief, using eight or nine doctors, some kind friend sent me a bottle of B. B. B. After taking the first bottle I felt entirely easy, and it has been the only remedy that has given me permanent relief, so many times I have been exhausted and collapsed from weakening. I have got a great many people to take B. B. B. A lady living near me had an eating cancer, and the bones in her nose or upper part of her mouth were eaten entirely out. She could eat nothing but strained soup. She was entirely cured by using B. B. B., when she was given up to die by three doctors. B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) healed my whole body, gave me energy, cured my low spirits, and, I think, saved me to rear my children; or, at least, B. B. B. was the only earthly remedy, with God's help. B. B. B. is the best blood purifier in the whole world.

(Mrs.) M. L. ADAMS.

"Fredonia, Ala."

Deep-seated cases of blood and skin diseases, like ulcers, cancer, eating sores, obstinate rheumatism, painful swellings, and blood poison, are quickly cured by B. B. B., made especially for all obstinate blood and skin troubles. B. B. B. drains the poison and humors out of the blood and entire system, healing every sore and making the blood pure and rich. Give it a trial. It cures when all else fails. Thoroughly tested for thirty years. Sold at drug stores at $1 per large bottle, including complete directions for home treatment. Be sure the bottle reads "Botanic Blood Balm." So sufferers may test it, a trial treatment is given away absolutely free. Write for it. Address BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Write to-day. Describe your trouble and free medical advice will be given. Do not despair of a cure, as we have three thousand voluntary testimonials of cures by using B. B. B.

Responsibility. No. 1.

Responsibility begins with relationship and ends when duty has been done. There can be no responsibility where there is no relationship. No one can have the responsibility of a husband, unless he be married; nor of a father, unless he have children.

Our responsibilities are threefold, because our relationships are threefold. We are related (1) to time, (2) to all intelligences, and (3) to ourselves. Our relations to time are (1) to time past, because it has made us just what we are; (2) to the time present, because of the opportunities it affords us for making suitable preparation for the future; and (3) to the time to come, for in it we must still exist.

It is the lessons of the past that enable us to redeem the time, because the days are evil. They prepare us for present duties. (1) We are related to all the intelligences above the earth—to God and his Christ, to angel and archangel, cherubim, seraphim, and to an innumerable host, the spirits of just men perfected; (2) we are related to all intelligences on the earth, whether good or bad; (3) we are related to ourselves.

It may be inquired: What relationship can an individual have to himself? There could be none, if man were a simple power; but he is not that. He is three in one, or one in three, just as you may look at it. He is a trinity. Man is composed of soul, body, and spirit. There is an interdependence of powers, such that one cannot work without the others. A body without spirit or life would not be man, a soul without spirit and body would not be man; it would be a disembodied spirit.

That man has a body is patent to our senses; that he has a soul and spirit is not a scientific fact, nor need we go to science for the revelation. There never was a scalpel so sharp that it could divide soul and spirit, nor a glass so strong as to reveal to the vision the one or the other; yet Paul says: "The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow," etc. (Heb. 4: 12.)

We understand the soul to be that part of man which thinks, wills, remembers, reasons, hopes, and resolves. It is, indeed, the responsible power in the economy or constitution of man. It is responsible for the acts of the body. In consequence, then, of the relation of a man's soul to his body, the soul has responsibilities pertaining to it, and these responsibilities bring with them the gravest duties, which, being done, the soul stands justified before God and man. That the soul may be thoroughly able to discharge its duty to God, to man, and to itself, it is capable of understanding its relationships when revealed to it. God has, in all the history of man, made just the revelation to the soul that was necessary to the highest happiness of man.

God speaks to man's soul; he does not speak to the head nor to the foot. Man's body must be controlled by the soul. It must govern in the empire of man. If the hand does that which is wrong, the soul is responsible; and if the soul suffers, the body will suffer with it, for it follows the destiny of its master. "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." (Matt. 10: 28.)

Paul says, in his letter to Titus: "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world." This declaration of the apostle measures the entire responsibility of man. Man thus living would be perfect.

Now, we may inquire: What is it to live soberly? If we are right in our premises, this duty must depend on some relationship. If a man discharges the duty he owes to himself, he will be a sober man. Sobriety consists in not overindulgence. Paul exhorts young men to be sober-minded. Man should, indeed, be sober in thought, sober in word, and sober in deed. One has no right to commit suicide, either by slow degrees or by more rapid means. A sober man will be no sluggard, for he will not sleep too much; nor a glutton, nor a drunkard, nor anything else which comes of overindulgence or a lack of proper indulgence, from which any part of his constitution, or powers, receives injury or destruction. Then if man discharges the duty he owes to himself, he will be a sober man, and thus prepared for the duties he may be under to other men.

Further News from India.

Brother McCaleb: Your letter of July 23, 1900, containing thirty-nine dollars and ninety-nine cents ($39.99) for famine sufferers in India, has been received. This amounted to one hundred and twenty-two rupees and ten annas in Indian money, the rate of exchange now being about 3.5. The rate varies. You no doubt learn by the papers of the general need. We are in the midst of one of the neediest districts in India. At present we are giving work to about three hundred and twenty-five people. If this were not done, they would have no means of support. We have a grain store here and about fifteen hundred people buy grain daily (except Sunday). This grain is sold at a low rate, so that the poor people can buy it. Then we have grain stores at four out stations, where many people receive help. Clothing is also being given out to the very needy. A short time ago it was not an uncommon thing to see men and women with hardly enough clothes to cover their nakedness; they had no money to buy clothing with. Besides the above, the farmers are assisted in getting seed grain to sow their fields. Many families not only had no seed grain, but had no money to buy it with.

We are gathering up orphans now and sending them to our orphanages. Dr. Klopsch, of the Christian Herald, has offered to support five thousand orphans and our orphanage at Damoh is granted money enough to support five hundred and fifty, so we are trying to get as many as we can to supply this number.

The government has places where it is feeding the very poor—the lame, blind, and those unable to work. These places are soon to close up, when, I presume, many will come to us for aid. The distress will continue for some time yet.

We have had good rains and the outlook for a crop is very promising, yet the crop must grow before the people are benefited by it. We have two crop seasons—one during the rainy season, which is now (September), and the other during the cold season, from October to March. The rainy season crop is growing nicely now, but will not mature until October or November. Wheat is sown in October and harvested in March.

During the cold season the people will require help in the way of clothing, as many of them have little or nothing, and they suffer very much from the cold. In thinking of India, people do not think of its ever being cold, but in the central provinces, during the cold season, the weather is sometimes very chilly. Some houses have fireplaces, and sometimes during the cold season a good fire is very agreeable.

You asked in a former letter if I knew of any missionaries who were working here not connected with any society. I referred you to Miss Adam, of Deoghur. There is a brother, N. Madsen, here now who had been working with the Methodist Society; but he was not satisfied with being a Methodist; so he became a Christian. He expects to be married next January or February to Miss Bessie Franar, who had been working at Deoghur, but is now on her way to America on a furlough. Brother Madsen says they desire to work independently of any society. They are very consecrated people, and any help given them will be duly appreciated and will be rightly used. If you desire to write to Brother Madsen, a letter addressed to this place will reach him. They expect to begin work in a new station at Umaria, C. P.

I notice in signing your name you add "missionary to Japan." Do you expect to go to Japan soon? I will be very much pleased to hear from you occasionally, at least. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." C. C. DRUMMOND.

The Gospel in Missouri.

Brother E. B. Ketcherside, of Camp Verde, Ariz., who was visiting his sister, at Hickory Barren, Mo., whom he had not seen for forty-seven years, preached in a schoolhouse at that place three nights, and then left to visit relatives in Kentucky. Stopping on his way back, he preached again for ten nights, having a large attendance. Each night good attention was given to a very able sermon, and a good impression was made on many who came to hear him. His sister in the flesh and two other ladies obeyed the gospel. Brother Ketcherside met with an accident on the train only a few days before preaching the last time, having three ribs broken, which caused him considerable pain and inconvenience. I had the pleasant duty of immersing the candidates. Many were getting deeply interested in the meetings and were searching the Scriptures to see if these things were so. Brother Ketcherside gained the confidence of his hearers, and if his stay could have been prolonged, I think many would have made the good confession. One person who was baptized was nearly seventy years of age, and she said she had always wanted to obey the Savior, and this was the first opportunity she had ever had. Brother Ketcherside left with the good wishes of the brethren for a safe journey to his far-away home, and praying that his life may be spared for many years to preach the true faith as delivered by the apostles.

For many years my family and I have been meeting on every Lord's day in our own home to keep in memory the Lord's death and to read, sing, and pray. Occasionally some brother comes and meets with us. There are quite a number of brethren within a radius of seven miles. We are trying to organize a congregation and meet together at Hickory Barren. The only hindrance I fear is that many have been taught by the modern Christian Church preachers and that they will not endure sound doctrine, though I believe many would

I began a meeting at this place on last Sunday, at 11 A.M., and we have had crowded houses so far. Dr. Haley, a Methodist preacher, has challenged me for a debate. He came to see me to-day, and instead of a regular debate we agreed to each preach two nights on the subject, "What Must I Do to Be Saved?" On October 25, 26, I will preach one hour each night on the above subject, followed by a sermon from Dr. Haley lasting one hour each night, in which Dr. Haley proposes to show up my mistakes. On October 27, 28, Dr. Haley will lead with a one-hour sermon on the same subject each night and I will follow, showing to the people the error of Methodism. We are almost certain to have immense audiences. The people are considerably excited, and I regard it a golden opportunity to show them the beauty of the truth by the side of Methodism. These people will listen attentively, and I believe great good will be the result.

Ever since I began preaching I have tried to get sectarian preachers to preach alternately with me in meetings. Dr. Haley is the first to accept the proposition. I am very anxious that Dr. Haley fulfill his part of the agreement. JOHN E. DUNN.

A Good Book.

Having read several commendations of "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," by F. D. Srygley, I sent for the book and have just finished reading it. As evidence of how I like the book, I must have five more to send to my beloved friends and relatives. Brethren and sisters, send for the book and read it, and I am persuaded you will go and do likewise; for no one with an unprejudiced mind can read this book without being benefited. J. G. LYCAN.

News from Brother Yohannan.

The readers of the Gospel Advocate will doubtless remember that some months ago, by an appeal made through the Gospel Advocate, I secured a contribution for our Persian missionary, Brother Yohannan, of fifty-eight dollars and seventy-five cents ($58.75), and forwarded the same to him. Since then I have received two communications from him—one by the hand of Brother J. H. Harden, now of Anniston, Ala., and written before he received the remittance, and the other direct, coming to hand last week, and acknowledging the receipt of my draft. Accompanying the first of the two is a letter to be printed in the Gospel Advocate, as follows:

"Dizza, Urumiah, Persia, July 30, 1900.—I send my sincere greeting to all my dear Christian brethren and sisters who have taken an interest in my work. I trust that this my little letter will find you all safe and under the protection of the divine grace. I am thankful to say that I am also well and doing my best for the poverty-stricken people, to whom I preach and teach the truth of the gospel as much as I can. I am sorry to say that I have really very sad news to give you from my country this year. About a fortnight ago a vehement hail fell on a great portion of the plain, destroying all the crops, the fruit, the vineyards, etc., and thus reducing the populace to the extremity of want and poverty. I have lost all of my expected product, costing me some two hundred dollars. I get my living from my fields and vineyards, but this year I have nothing for my living. In addition to this, the Kurdish incursions often desolate and ravage the villages, killing and plundering. Some time ago a band of Kurds attacked the German Orphanage, at Dilgoosha, near Urumiah City. Had not assistance arrived, all the poor girls and the German lady teacher would have been put to the sword. The girls and the teacher went up to the top of the house and cried for help. About two thousand men from the city went to their assistance, and when the Kurds saw that assistance was coming to them from the city they mounted their horses and fled. On the next morning a brave young general, Madzd Usaltarah, pursued the outlaws and captured seventeen of them, who are still in prison. KH. B. YOHANNAN."

In Brother Yohannan's last letter, which is a private one to me, of the date of September 3, 1900, he says:

"Please present my best greeting to all the brethren and sisters in Christ. I hope that my letter will find all well and quite happy. God bless you all and give you joyful life in this world and in the world to come life eternal, for Jesus' sake. Amen. I am also well, thank my God, and doing my duty preaching and teaching the word of salvation to this poor people, who are in need of salvation. I have not neglected my duty to preach and teach the truth of the gospel as much as I can. I have also received your welcome and kindly letter and check for fifty-eight dollars and seventy-five cents ($58.75), and am very much thankful for your love and kindness to me in this time of need, because a hail fell on our country, destroying everything—crops, fruits, and vineyards—so that in our village we could find nothing to eat. I have rented a small vineyard in a village fifteen miles away, and shall be there about twenty-five days. About September 28, 1900, I shall come back to our own village."

Now, to the friends of Brother Yohannan who would like to help him in his faithful work—and I do not doubt that many will be glad to help him on account of his great loss by the hail—I will say that any funds intrusted to me for him will be promptly forwarded when enough has been received for a convenient remittance; and I propose that we, right away, raise fifty dollars more for him, to partly reimburse him for his great loss. His letters certainly breathe the spirit of a worthy Christian character. Send all remittances to me at West Nashville, Tenn. J. W. GRANT.

Do Not Do It.

Do not hurt the feelings of a brother or sister if you can avoid it; do not do a thing that would wound their consciences unless you are sure God has commanded you to do it. God cannot be pleased with anything we may do which offends our brethren, unless he has commanded us to do that thing. God looks at our treatment of our brother. He says: "If thou bring thy gift to the altar [if you kneel to pray], and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee [that you have injured him, or offended his conscience], leave there thy gift before the altar [get up from your knees], and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

God means by this—that when a man comes before him for prayer or worship, he must be at peace with his brethren. God claims the right to ask every man who appears in his presence: "Where is thy brother?" It will not do to say, "Am I my brother's keeper?" for God has made that very thing our duty. Yes; we are, in large measure, our brother's keeper. God makes us so.

How many prayers, then, are mere mockery in the sight of God! Men pierce and wound—sometimes unto spiritual death—the hearts and consciences of brethren, and yet, with great pomp, appear before God and put up long and eloquent prayers, which rise no higher than the top of the house in which they pray. No wonder they are not answered. Be unselfish, then; look out for a brother's good. Even Christ pleased not himself. His whole life was for the good of others and to do his Father's will. So let us learn to be Christlike. JOHN T. POE.

If you have not yet bought "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," Brother Srygley's last book, you should by all means have a copy. "It is a precious treasure; "A rich legacy to bequeath to your children; "We especially commend it to the young; "Every home in the land should possess one; "The Bible accepted, I believe it is the best book I have ever seen; "His private letters and intercourse always inculcate purity and fidelity to truth and right and a constant desire to benefit others; "The letters are gems that reflect the light of the pure spirit of the incomparable preacher so tenderly loved by all who truly know him"—these are only a few of the many complimentary things said of "Letters and Sermons." 1902.

The Gospel Advocate from the time the subscription is received to January 1, 1902, for $1.50. Why wait till next January to begin reading this most excellent journal when you can read it, beginning now, at the same price? Now is the time to subscribe. Encourage the circulation of good literature by becoming a reader of the Gospel Advocate at once, if you are not already one, and also by getting as many of your friends to read it as possible. The editors of the paper will appreciate your patronage, will do all in their power to keep the paper up to its present high standard of excellence, and, if possible, make it better with each issue. The man who reads a first-class religious paper usually takes more interest in the cause of Christ than one who does not. We hope our readers will show this liberal offer to their friends and induce them to become regular subscribers to the Gospel Advocate. Who will be the first to send us a number of new subscribers on this proposition? We would like to have several thousand new readers before January 1, 1901. Address all orders to Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

The latest "interpretation" of John 3: 5—"Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God"—is to be found in an article in the Cumberland Presbyterian. We give it for the benefit and amusement of the reader: "The teachings of the good are in harmony with their practice. 'Actions speak louder than words.' Nicodemus was saved; and if we read John 3: 3-21, we will see how. Christ's words were the water, and the Spirit was in all he did. Christ never baptized with water, therefore John 3: 5 was not water baptism."

That is queer logic, to put it mildly. The writer assumes that Nicodemus was saved there on the spot, and that, since Christ never baptized with water, Nicodemus was saved without water baptism. Therefore, the expression "born of water" cannot refer to water baptism. Truly, thou bringest strange things to our ears. But the brightest assertion is this: "Christ's words were the water, and the Spirit was in all he did." The gentleman is striving to justify the dry-land route into the kingdom of God. He does not treat the passage about the new birth, as would a man that is desiring to ascertain its pure, simple teaching, but as one that is obliged to get rid of that water. His position is not such as a man would naturally assume of his own accord. It is forced, cramped, as though he were driven to it in hard effort to justify his creed.

In reference to the usual interpretation of the said passage, the same writer observes: "Early in the history of the church this passage was made to teach water baptism, and out of said view has grown the human hand regeneration that has so dwarfed the spirituality and promoted the formality of the church. For more than a thousand years the joint action of water and the Spirit in baptism was thought to effect a regeneration. Dr. Pusey uniformly spoke of the passage as though baptism were in it. The idea has its adherents by the millions to-day. They assume the very point that is to be proven. There was not a serious effort made to harmonize it with other Scriptures. Such an effort will always paralyze the literal water regeneration view."

Why should we mention Pusey particularly when such names as Adam Clarke, Meyer, Wall, and John Wesley stand for the teaching that "born of water" refers to baptism? We do not believe it simply because they taught it, but because a candid, unbiased view of the passage itself must reveal the truth of that interpretation. Where is water used in the religion of Christ? In baptism only. Why should any man want to make the word "water" mean anything else than water, unless it interfered with his dogmas? John Boys, Dean of Canterbury, says: "Some few modern divines have conceived that these words are not to be construed of external baptism, 'because,' say they, 'Christ taketh water here by a borrowed speech for the Spirit of God, the effect whereof it shadoweth out; and so water and the Spirit are all one.' To this interpretation answer is made, first, that it is an old rule in expounding of holy scripture, that where a literal sense will stand, the farthest from the letter is commonly the worst; and there is nothing more dangerous in a Christian university than this licentious and deluding art, changing the meaning of words, as alchemy doth or would do the substance of metals; everting the truth is perverting the text." This man John Boys was ahead of many men of the present for sense and fairness, though he wrote over two hundred years ago.

Leaving the comments of men, we notice that, far from being at war with other scriptures, this doctrine was taught by Christ and his apostles. Before his death Jesus avowedly taught in parables, parables, and dark sayings. "These things have I spoken unto you in parables: the hour cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in parables [margin, "parables"], but shall tell you plainly of the Father." (John 16: 25, R. V.) That hour came, and he gave his apostles a plainer version of the doctrine of salvation: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16, R. V.) His apostles preached it faithfully, made thousands of converts and baptized them into Christ, without making long speeches on the mystery of John 3: 5.

While the race question comes up time after time, and various shrewd schemes are being proposed to elevate the black man or to cast him out, it may be well for us to ask, in the first place: What would the Lord Jesus Christ do with the negro? And question number two: Are we doing what he would do? He would teach them kindly, lovingly. Christ had confidence in God's word to raise humanity. By his love he would win their hearts and then instruct them by precept and example in the way of truth. The gospel is God's power unto salvation. Why not teach the colored race the gospel?

The writer of this once witnessed a negro meeting in Nashville. Three preachers were present.

Each of them had the general qualifications—viz., grossest ignorance of Bible teaching and most unspeakable vanity. It was plainly evident that they spoke but for applause and their own glory, and while no edifying truths gleamed in their speech, they showed some very unsophisticated envy. "Bredren, Brudder Cotton tole you so and so, but I can do better'n dat," said one of them, repeatedly. "Ah, you niggahs thinks I can preach; dis ain't nuthin' yit, you oughter hear me sometimes when I feels like preachin'"—a favorite sentence with one of them. This was not in the country, but in a city. The evening is thus passed away—the preachers talking nonsense and glorifying themselves. Finally, they begin a wild shouting spree—not very unlike the dances and orgies of their savage brethren in the heart of Africa—which is often kept up till after midnight. This would be funny if it were not something else. Wonder if God still thinks that we ought to be our brother's keeper? Here is a chance for missionary work. Who will do it? There is no money in it and no fame, and we would not be surprised if some empty-headed, would-be aristocrat should insult you for the very good you are doing. We have known such instances. Strange that it should be deemed more proper to preach to the negro in Africa than to the negro in our midst.

A prince was to pass through a small town in Europe, and the peasants, apprised of his coming, determined to present him with a barrel of wine. Accordingly, the mayor had a barrel hauled through the streets of the village and demanded, in a special edict, that every man should pour a jug of wine into it. One fellow thought: "Well, every one will put in a jug of wine, and I have no wine to spare; I will fill my jug with water. One jug of water in a barrel of wine cannot be detected." He did so. When the prince arrived, they presented him the barrel of wine with much ceremony. The mayor, with the headmen of the town, stood around and ordered that a glass of it should be drawn, by way of sample, for the prince. When the faucet was turned—lo! they could hardly believe their eyes—to their dismay pure water flowed into the glass. It happened that each man in the village hit on the same thought, and each poured a jug of water into the barrel. So will it be when the members of Christ's body put off the whole burden of good works, missionary efforts, etc., on the church, and do not work themselves. If you want to make the church better, begin with yourself; if you think that the church should teach the poor and ignorant—negroes, tramps, and outcasts—begin the work yourself, for you, too, are a member of the body. Think not to say within yourself, "It matters not whether my jug is wine or water;" for the Lord wants your personal effort, and the very best you are capable of.

A denominational paper says: "Our church would not have been born, and still it ought not to exist, except for its biblical and distinctive creed." Better say it ought not to have been born, and has no right whatever to exist now, without exception or modification. The church of God which was launched into existence by his word and power eighteen hundred years ago is the only body that worthily bears the name of the church. Every organization that needs a "distinctive creed" outside of the Bible is not the church, but a faction.

There are no "distinctive creeds" in the Bible. Any creed that does not comprise the whole New Testament is worse than worthless; and if it comprises the whole New Testament, it is the New Testament itself. It can never become distinctive. The New Testament is the common property of all that profess to follow Christ. If they would all take it for their guide, speak as it speaks, and do as it sets forth in command and example, there could be no distinction among them, for they would all walk by the same rule; they would all be Christians simply, and members of God's own church. It is the "dis-distinctive creed" that makes the faction. In it you will find the rules and articles that make some of the professed followers of Christ a separate party. Regulations about conferences and synods, officers, societies, forms of liturgy, etc., of which neither the Lord nor his disciples spoke a word—these form some of the substance of the "distinctive" creed that divides and brings new sects into existence.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10, R. V.) "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, as unto babes in Christ. . . . For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you jealousy and strife, are ye not carnal, and walk after the manner of men? For when one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not men?" (1 Cor. 3: 1-4, R. V.) "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of the which I forewarn you, even as I did forewarn you, that they which practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." (Gal. 5: 19-21, R. V.)

Read your Bible and obey the teachings of Christ and his apostles simply, and you will be simply a Christian. You will need no distinctive name, no distinctive creed; you will be released from the task and the responsibility of joining some faction, division, or party; for if you obey the gospel, the Lord will add you to the church, as he once did the believers of Pentecost.

"Alas, alas, for the prejudice that prevents an honest and earnest investigation of the great questions, political and religious, which confront us! Alas, too, for those who are convinced that they are wrong in politics and religion, but have not the moral courage to put their convictions into action! If the world would only do as well as it knows, what happy times would we have!" (Exchange.) True, sadly true. A vast majority of people are guided by blind prejudice and party spirit, and not by truth and love. How completely hidebound men may become in their bitter prejudice is almost incredible. They can become so blind that they cannot see the most prominent facts nor mountains of truth. This proceeds from the Lord and is their punishment for despising truth. He darkens their heart and understanding, "that seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand;" "because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God sendeth them a working of error, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be judged who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

A sad spectacle is presented by the Pharisees (John 9) who tried to contradict a fact—the miracle Jesus worked on the blind beggar—simply because it was calculated to establish the divinity of Christ's mission; and when Christ's power became too evident to be disputed they attributed the miracles to the agency of the devil. (Matt. 12: 24.) When the Sadducees convened on the occasion of the lame man's healing and considered the situation, they said, most pitifully, to one another: "What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been wrought through them, is manifest to all that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it." Poor fellows! They would deny it if they could, although it is a fact; but—alas!—they cannot. Now, it appears that a man of one grain of sincerity would simply have accepted the miracle when it was found to be true, and would have ceased to oppose the works of the apostles; but no. And these were highly respectable men among the Jews, generally conceded to be upright, honest, and moral, and were religious leaders, learned and supposedly zealous for the truth. Look around you, and you will find their counterparts a thousandfold in the present day. Be not deceived. If you are not poor in spirit and desirous of truth, you can never obtain it; and without truth there is no salvation.

Criticism of Brother Kurfees' "Reply to an Important Question."

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

The "important question" reads as follows: "Is the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church an act of worship?"

Please let the following things be considered as decided, so far as we are both concerned, for the present, at least: (1) That the use of instruments by the Jews in connection with their singing was worship; (2) that the use made of instruments by the sectarians to-day is worship; (3) that the use of instruments in connection with the singing in the church is not mentioned in the New Testament; (4) that worship by means of instruments to-day is not "in truth," and, therefore, not such as God seeks or accepts; (5) that even if it were shown clearly that the use of instruments in connection with the singing in the church is not worship, their use might still be wrong for other reasons; (6) that the real issue involved in the above question is over the use made of instruments by "a large proportion of those who choose to call themselves 'Disciples of Christ' to-day who say they do not use it as worship;" and (7) that the issue is that Brother Kurfees affirms that the use of instruments by this large proportion of those who choose to call themselves "Disciples of Christ" to-day is worship, while Brother Calhoun does not see the proof that it is worship, and hence, logically, must deny that it is worship until he sees the proof to the contrary.

Again, please let it be understood (1) that Brother Calhoun emphatically denies having made any argument which can be fairly construed as favoring the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church; (2) that Brother Calhoun thinks that any such construction as would make his arguments favor the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church grows out of a "predilection" similar to that which enables the advocate for sprinkling as baptism to see an argument for sprinkling where you and I see no argument for anything of the kind; (3) that Brother Calhoun thinks he has discovered not a "lurking" fallacy, but a very patent one, in the old argument which has been worn threadbare in our religious papers for the past ten years, saying that the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church is always a part of the worship, and, therefore, sinful, since it is, if this be true, an addition to the worship; (4) that Brother Calhoun, believing that "a candid mind will disdain to take the help of a falsehood, even in support of the truth" (Dr. George Campbell on "Immersion," by John T. Christian, page 230), has simply endeavored to point out the falsehood in this argument, so that the candid minds among his brethren might disdain to use it longer; (5) that Brother Calhoun tried to point out this fallacy by formulating a definition of "an act of worship" and then showing that the use of an instrument in connection with the singing by "a large proportion of those who choose to call themselves 'Disciples of Christ' to-day" did not fulfill the conditions of an act of worship, and hence is not worship, but that, according to their own statement, its use was simply a matter of convenience to themselves; (6) that Brother Calhoun made no argument on any other phase of the instrumental music question, such as its being rebellion against God, etc., and that he knows, and so stated in the letter accompanying his article, that there are other things to be considered besides the one mentioned in his article in the settlement of this question; (7) that Brother Calhoun does not feel that he needs any admonitions and exhortations to be sound in the faith any more than Brother Kurfees does, and while he appreciates the kind, though mistaken, intent of all such homilies, he respectfully suggests that solid argument be substituted for them in the future, and he believes more good will be done.

CRITICISM.

1. Occupying the logical affirmative of this question, when you denied the correctness of my definition of an act of worship it was your logical duty to give a definition which you considered correct. This course would have brought the main issue fairly and prominently before us. But you, for some reason, chose (notwithstanding two earnest requests to the contrary) to refuse me the benefit of your definition of the most important term in the proposition. Had you given this definition of an act of worship, it would have been a very short work to try the act of using an instrument in connection with the singing in the church by this definition, and if the act fulfilled the conditions as laid down in the definition, it would have been shown to be worship without another argument.

2. After denying the correctness of my definition of an act of worship, you next explained my inability to perceive its incorrectness by an insinuation which was certainly "ingenious," though one which, strangely enough, you did not see might as easily, if applied to you, explain your inability to see the correctness of my statements—viz., a "predilection" like that of the advocate of sprinkling. This predilection to see arguments for the use of instruments where no such arguments really exist you will doubtless disclaim, and I just as emphatically disclaim the predilection attributed to me, and I feel myself fully able to give as strong proof of my innocence in this regard as you can of yours.

3. Your criticism of my first condition of an act of worship, which reads as follows, "The act must be directed to some object regarded by the actor as a proper object of worship," appears to me to be directed against the word "proper." Now, you give to this word "proper" an entirely different meaning from what I intended it to express. It seems to me that you use it as synonymous with "worthy," while I meant it to express the idea of "fit" or "appropriate" to worship for any reason satisfactory to the worshiper. I am perfectly willing to drop out the word "proper," and let the condition read thus: "The act must be directed to some object of worship." The shorter form expresses all that I meant in the longer expression. I have frequently written the condition down this way: "The act must be directed to some god." Webster defines "god" as "an object of worship." You may, perhaps, contend that my words really mean what you said they did and that I ought not to have used those words unless I meant to convey that idea. I will not contend that my meaning was expressed in the best way possible, but all I ask is the privilege of saying that when you "shot" at the word "proper" with the idea you have of its meaning, you missed toto caelo my first condition, as I understand it. It seems to me that the plainness of the cases of Jeroboam and those others who followed in his same wicked course ought to have shown you that you had missed entirely the real meaning of the first condition. Concerning the case of Jeroboam, I think you and I will have no trouble in agreeing on the following points:

1. When he made the two calves as idol gods (1 Kings 12: 28), he sinned by violating God's command in Ex. 20: 4, 5.
2. When he changed the place of sacrifice from Jerusalem to Bethel and Dan, he sinned.
3. When he changed the priesthood from the family of Aaron, he sinned again.
4. When he changed the time of the feast, he sinned again.
5. That he certainly did direct his sacrifices to those calves is stated in 1 Kings 12: 32.
6. That Jeroboam deemed all this proper for him to do to keep the kingdom from going back to Rehoboam.
7. That "Jeroboam himself knew" that all these things were contrary to God's law.
8. That "nevertheless he proceeded headlong and headstrong in his presumptuous determination to worship that object because it suited his rebellious purpose to do so."
9. That "precisely the same point could be made with the facts connected with the reigns of Ahab, Baasha, Nadab, Omri, and others."

From a consideration of the above points, you will readily see, I think, that my first condition of an act of worship, as I understood it, is in perfect harmony with all the Bible facts cited by you and that your criticisms have all been directed against an idea not intended to be expressed by myself in the proposition and which I do not think is really in it when the words are taken in their exact sense.

I now come to your treatment of the second part of my definition of an act of worship, my reasoning on which you pronounce "unsound." Your first objection under this head appears to have reference to my statement that "the only person who knows the intention of the act is the person performing the act"—which statement you say I try to back up by quoting 1 Cor. 2: 11: "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" clearly implying by the form of your statement that I did not succeed in proving my proposition by this scripture. Now I have twice earnestly asked you for an exegesis of this scripture, that I might see wherein you deemed my application of it wrong, but you have twice refused (perhaps you would say "deferred") to give me our exegesis.

I will favor you with an exegesis of it which I believe is correct and which is entirely in harmony with my application of it, and which, logically, I defy you to show incorrect. So we have here a clear issue which I hope both of us will squarely face. "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" is an erotesis. Changing the figurative into literal language, we have: "No man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him." "No man" does not exclude God or Christ or the Holy Spirit; it does exclude every human being, save the man himself. "The things of a man" are his thoughts, feelings, and intentions. These three things embrace all of a man's mental operations. So in regard to these things he is judge, jury, counsel, witness, monocratic, etc., not by his appointment, but by the creative act of God, who made him that way, and until he in some way makes known his thoughts, feelings, and purposes, no other man can say what they are. It was certainly a remarkable statement on your part that my application of this scripture would exclude God, Christ, or any inspired man. I am sure I said no such thing and I do not believe anything of the kind. So all your talk about Nadab and Abihu does not touch the point under consideration at all. You say the idea that the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church is not worship was never heard of until the advocates of instruments discovered their inability to meet those who oppose them. Please allow me to say that I am not specially concerned to know the exact age of this argument, but I am anxious to know whether it is valid or not, and I know I have been hearing it from those who use them for the last ten years.

You next propose to show that my method of argumentation "proves too much, and hence proves nothing." You say it opens the flood gates for every abomination under heaven, even "all the flummery of Rome," "the burning of incense, burning candles," etc. Now, you know that all these things are done as worship and that we all condemn any addition to the appointed worship revealed in the New Testament. You burn some kind of lights in your meetinghouse, and I suppose they are used as matters of convenience; but you do not think it wrong, nor do I, to use them as conveniences. They are not necessities, for you can worship without them; blind people worship without them all the time, and the Christians in early times often met and worshiped without your modern conveniences in the way of lights. Will you kindly inform me just what conveniences are proper and what are not proper to use and how you found out about them? Sometimes I find a bouquet of flowers on the pulpit on Sundays. They are not even conveniences in the ordinary use of that term, but I have never thought it sinful to let them remain there; but if they were placed there as an act of worship, I should oppose it. Do you even have flowers on your pulpit? If so, how do you justify their use? The only difference between your burning of lights and that of the Catholics is that yours is an act of convenience, while theirs is an act of worship; and so of the other things mentioned by you. So all your great volume of wordy assertions about Jewish washing of hands and Roman rites and ceremonies fails to weigh even one grain when placed in the scale of logic, and I am truly surprised that you did not see the glaring fallacy staring you in the face.

Your next objection is the serious charge that my "reasoning involves rebellion against God." The premises from which you draw the conclusion involved in this charge may be briefly stated as follows: The term "music" is generic, comprehending all music under the two divisions—vocal and instrumental. Both these kinds of music were incorporated in the Jewish worship. When Judaism was abolished and Christianity was established, vocal music only was incorporated in the worship.

The logical conclusion following from these premises is that the use of instrumental music in the worship is rebellion against God. Hence, you can see that your conclusion, "Having the other kind [instrumental] in connection with the singing is rebellion against God," is simply not true, as the merest tyro in logic ought to know. The foregoing remarks appear to me to be sufficient to place your "Reply to 'An Important Question'" "under conditions that will enable you to see wherein it is defective and that it utterly breaks down at the very points where you seem to think it strong and unanswerable."

Finally, "I beg to suggest that the attitude which you have chosen to assume" in the present issue is worthy of your most serious consideration; for when you resolve yourself into the entire court—judge, jury, counsel, and witness—to pronounce the decision of "predilection" as the ground of your opponent's inability to see that his arguments are not sound, it will, of course, be easy to secure a decision in your own favor from this self-constituted, self-appointed, monocratic court; and under such circumstances you need not be surprised that your opponent should refuse to accept this "ex parte" deliverance and appeal to a judge who, if not possessed of more presumption, is at least possessed of more ability to look into men's hearts and read them. Is it too much to hope that in the future you will accord to your opponent that same freedom from prejudice which you claim for yourself? I trust not. May God add his blessing.

H. L. CALHOUN.

REVIEW OF BROTHER CALHOUN'S "CRITICISM OF BROTHER KURFEES' 'REPLY TO AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.'"

Brother Calhoun: Yours in reply to my review of your first article on the instrumental music question has been carefully examined, and I am glad to perceive that the line of argumentation submitted in said review remains intact. I shall proceed, therefore, to point out where your reasoning in the present case, as in the former, not only fails to establish your position, but opens wide the flood gates for all manner of unscriptural practices in the worship of God. This will abundantly appear as the investigation proceeds. Some erroneous statements, as well as questions, in your document demand attention; and I shall endeavor, first of all, to properly notice these, and then to point out the fallacy in your argument. For the sake of order and clearness of thought, I shall arrange my reply in accordance with this twofold classification of matter; and hence we may notice:

I. A CORRECTION OF ERRONEOUS STATEMENTS, WITH ANSWER TO QUESTIONS.

1. Of course "a candid mind will disdain to take the help of a falsehood, even in support of the truth," but it does not follow, as you assume, that "a candid mind" will rush to the defense of a practice which "truth" nowhere demands. It is this manifest readiness on your part to spring to the defense of instrumental music in a connection in which you yourself admit truth does not demand that it be used that makes the impression that you have a "predilection" in favor of the practice. You need not be surprised, my dear brother, if people continue to have this impression about you as long as you write, talk, and act about instrumental music as you do, and as long as nothing more harmful than keeping churches from using it is done by the arguments you assail. If you would properly practice the principle of the illustrious man you quote, it seems to me you would "disdain" to pursue a course not demanded by the Lord which constantly leads good and thoughtful men to regard you as favoring a practice which leads to strife and division among churches, and which practice you yourself admit God does not require; and I hesitate not to say that any one who can knowingly pursue such a course must have a very decided "predilection" in favor of such practice.

2. If "Brother Calhoun does not feel that he needs any admonitions and exhortations to be sound in the faith any more than Brother Kurfees" needs them, what then? "Brother Kurfees" frankly admits that he does need such "admonitions and exhortations" and feels grateful to the Lord and to his brethren for them, and he fails to see that the author of this bit of information makes any "solid argument" or gains anything at all by telling in this case what he "does not feel." The most conspicuous difference between these two brethren at this point is that Brother Calhoun disregards the "admonitions and exhortations" to stay within the word of the Lord and spends some of his time in running outside after instrumental music, while "Brother Kurfees" is trying to put in all his time in a laborious effort to stay within the word. Enough "solid argument" has already been "substituted" to make this distinction clear.

3. If I have any predilections at all on the instrumental music question, which doubtless I have, I am glad they are all in favor of remaining within the word of God, and never going after what is outside, and I take no offense at all at your insinuations about my prejudices along this line. It is difficult for frail human beings to keep from being prejudiced; and, knowing so well the danger common to all of us in this direction, I am engaged in a constant effort to so study, preach, and practice on this and on all other issues that whatever prejudices I may have will all be in favor of what is in the word of God, and opposed only to that which is outside.

4. Your emphatic denial of "having made any argument favoring the use of an instrument in connection with the singing" reminds me that you could just as emphatically and with as good reason deny "having made any argument favoring" anything at all. What do you expect your articles to "favor," if not "the use of an instrument in connection with the singing?" I do not charge that you so intend your articles; but I dismiss this point with the single remark that the proper way to meet your emphatic denial is with a mild reference to your articles, for they are a plain contradiction of your denial.

5. I have not "refused" to define "worship." I wrote you fully in a private letter, and in a way that should have saved you from making this kind of a statement.

6. Certainly you have the unquestioned right to explain your language, and I accept your explanation; but I have the right, also, to understand you to mean what you say. You said that before an act could be worship it "must be directed to some object regarded by the actor as a proper object of worship," and you repeated the statement several times; but it is not correct. Your language not only failed to express what you meant, but it expressed what you did not mean; and if I "missed" your "first condition" the breadth of "the whole heavens" when I "shot at the word 'proper,'" it is because you yourself "missed" saying what you meant. Of course "Jeroboam deemed all this proper for him to do to keep the kingdom from going back to Rehoboam," and doubtless the makers of instrumental music "deem all this" music "proper" for them to have to keep up what they want. I am aware, too, that it "is stated in 1 Kings 12: 32 that" Jeroboam "did direct his sacrifice to these calves;" but how easily he could have escaped the charge of being an idolater, if he had made the same application of your canon on worship that you make by replying to the Lord's prophets that he did not "intend" it as worship! This powerful weapon would have knocked them all out; "for what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" You dare not deny that he could have said this; and, moreover, you dare not deny that precisely the same thing could be said as an excuse for every abomination under heaven, not morally wrong, that men might wish to introduce into the worship of God.

7. You are entirely mistaken about my being a "monocratic court" sitting in judgment on your case and rendering an "ex parte" verdict. True, it has fallen to my lot, by your own appointment, to sit in judgment on the case, but others besides myself belong to the "court," and they are all, as far as I know, reluctant to render the verdict touching your attitude toward the instrumental music question which the testimony in the case forces upon them. Only last month the following inquiry and comment were sent from a point where you had held a meeting: "How does Brother Calhoun stand on the organ and society question? He held a meeting here, and told us who oppose these things that he opposed them, but he never mentioned the subject in the pulpit. I believe he is trying to carry both sides of the question." This was at a place where, according to the letter referred to, instrumental music had been forced upon the church and had caused division. Other letters and facts are before me from brethren who have heard you talk on this subject, and they are all to the same effect.

No, my brother, the "court" I am in on the present case is not "monocratic," but decidedly "poly-cratic," and its numbers seem to increase wherever you go and talk on the subject. If you are really opposed to the use of the organ "in connection with the singing," how does the opposite impression get out? There was a time when you made no such impression. Even as late as when you took the important step of resigning as teacher at Lexington, Ky., you were careful to inform me that you did so because the tendencies there were too much in favor of these innovations, and that you did not feel right in giving your influence in that direction. This, of course, could make but one impression; and when I suggested that you might help the cause of truth by making a public statement of the reasons for your course you repeated the same statement, first made to me at the time of your graduation, that you did not wish to "butt out your brains arguing against these things before the people found out whether you had any brains or not." Now, as you will say that you are against these things, when do you expect to begin your opposition to them?

8. Concerning "a bouquet of flowers on the pulpit," you say you "have never thought it sinful to let them remain there." Neither do I think the organ sinful at the place of worship, if you just "let it remain there" and do not make music on it when worshipping God. As to the use of "lights," I do not burn lights "in the meetinghouse" nor anywhere else, as you assume, when worshipping God, as instrumental music is made. If I did, somebody ought to deal with me on burning lights as I am trying to deal with you on making instrumental music. I deny that I burn lights or do anything else not commanded when worshipping God as instrumental music is made.

9. As to whether "in the future" I will "be willing to accord to" my opponent the "same freedom from prejudice which" I claim for myself, it depends altogether on whether or not my opponent gives evidence that he has the "same freedom from prejudice." It will be no trouble "to accord" it, if there is evidence that it exists. The fact is, if my opponent's prejudices in the present discussion, unfortunately, did not seem to be on the wrong side, I would, perhaps, have had nothing to say against them; but according to documentary evidence that he has placed in my hands, as well as other facts, his prejudices are so pronounced in favor of instrumental music that he is not only engaged in a struggle, the purpose of which seems to be to open the way for having it "in connection with the singing," but after preaching through a protracted meeting where a church is divided over the subject, he leaves the impression that "he is trying to carry both sides of the question." If this is not a bias in favor of it, what would it take to constitute such a bias? We may now notice:

II. THE FALLACY IN YOUR ARGUMENT, AND THE TRUE POSITION INVOLVED.

When you state the issue between us in the form of the question, "Is the use of an instrument in connection with the singing in the church an act of worship?" you fail to state it correctly. I have raised no issue as to whether an "instrument" simply may be used "in connection with the singing in the church," although you and other advocates of instrumental music seem inclined, for some reason, to state the issue in this indefinite form. The real issue is: Is instrumental music in connection with the singing in the church a part of the worship? It may be said, in general terms, that it depends on what the singing is for and who makes the instrumental music. If the singing is for the worship of God and the instrumental music is made by the church, then it will be seen, in the light of all the facts in the case, that it is either worship, and vain worship at that, or in any event is a case of rebellion against God. "To the law and to the testimony," I now appeal:

1. The Lord himself says instrumental music, when used in this identical connection, is worship. Neither does he limit it in this particular character to "the Jews in connection with their singing" nor to "the sectarians to-day," as you try to do, but simply says that such music in such connection is worship. Hear his word: "When the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began also, and the trumpets, together with the instruments of David king of Israel. And all the congregation worshipped." (2 Chron. 29: 27, 28, R. V.) This testimony is clear and specific. After giving the parts performed by all, including the making of instrumental music, the record says: "All the congregation worshipped." Now, "those who choose to call themselves 'Disciples of Christ,'" whose use of instrumental music you have undertaken to defend, use it at the same time, in the same place, and in the same connection. In their case, precisely as in that of the Jews, when "the song of the Lord begins," they begin also "with the instruments of David king of Israel," and the Lord says it is worship. He does not say it was worship because it was among "the Jews" or "some sectarians," as your logic assumes, but he says that such use of instrumental music in such connection is worship. When the Bible says that a certain act in a certain connection is worship, I conclude that whatever is essential to an act of worship is present with all who perform that act in that connection. If not, why not? If you remind me here that the "Disciples" in question "say they do not use it as worship," it is sufficient to reply that they also "say," in another way, that they do use it as worship, and if there is a lack of harmony between their "sayings" on the subject, I hesitate not to accept the one that agrees with the Lord. This leads me to say that I accept your exegesis of 1 Cor. 2: 11, because in all essential particulars it is correct; but after giving a correct exegesis of the passage, you make a remark, the significant bearing of which you seem to overlook. Concerning a man's intentions, you correctly observe that "he is judge, jury, counsel, witness, etc., not by his appointment, but by the creative act of God, who made him that way; and until he in some way makes known his thoughts, feelings, and purposes, no other man can say what they are." Exactly so; and your fallacy here is in overlooking the fact that these "Disciples" do "in some way make known" that the intention necessary to an act of worship is present with them. They do not make it known "by word of mouth," but by other "signs of ideas"—namely, by doing at the same time, in the same place, and in the same connection that which God calls "worship," and of course all the intention necessary to an act of worship must be present. If you say that what the Lord calls "worship" was confined to the Jews, I deny it, and I make good my denial by simply stating the fact that certain acts were performed at a certain time, in a certain connection, and the Lord calls these acts, as such and in such connection, "worship;" but "those who choose to call themselves 'Disciples'" perform the same acts, at the same time, and in the same connection, and it follows, with the irresistible force of logic, that these acts, when thus performed by them, are worship. If not, why not? If you still question this conclusion, then I call upon you to produce a solitary thing in the making of the instrumental music of 2 Chron. 29, where the Lord calls it "worship," that is not also present in the making of such music by these "Disciples."

2. I will now examine your claim that they use instrumental music simply "as a convenience to themselves." You make the charge that your opponents on this issue use such conveniences, and your implied conclusion is that "those who choose to call themselves 'Disciples of Christ'" do no more when they use instrumental music than we do in principle when we use other things. It is quite easy, of course, for you to call it a "convenience" and to assume the very thing to be proved—namely, that your opponents use conveniences involving the same principle that is involved in the use of instrumental music "in connection with the singing." Now, I respectfully deny this, and call for the proof. You simply assume, my dear brother, that your opponents on the present issue use conveniences involving this principle; but I deny it.

3. In response to your request for a definition of "worship," please observe, first of all, that it is not necessary to trouble ourselves about the meaning of the Anglo-Saxon word "worship," only in so far as we make it the exact equivalent of the Greek and Hebrew words of which it is the representative in the English Scriptures. The different Greek words rendered "worship" in the New Testament are "proskuneo," "sebomai," and "latreno," answering, respectively, to the Hebrew words "shachah," "yare," and "avadh," which are rendered by the same word in the Old Testament. I prefer to adopt the definition of those who speak with authority rather than to frame one of my own. Hence, without attempting to give, in this connection, the varying shades of meaning involved in these different words, which is not material to the truth we are seeking, it is sufficient to note the fact that by the very highest lexical authority on the roll of biblical Greek and Hebrew scholarship, Joseph Henry Thayer and William Gesenius, they are defined, substantially, to mean, "to revere," to prostrate oneself, make obeisance, or yield allegiance to one;" and, as pertaining to God and man, "to worship, or serve, God by observing the rites instituted for the purpose." Thus far we have worship in general and the divinely ordained worship of God in particular defined only in general terms. Turning now to the word of God, we find this worship, as prescribed under Christ, consists in reading the Scriptures, prayer, mutual exhortations, contributions, the Lord's Supper, and vocal music. Now, note carefully the fact that whenever and wherever men have God in view as the object of their devotions these things, and these things only, may be done. Of course if it be at a time when God is not the object of their devotions, they may perform other acts; but at all times and places, when men are paying devotions to God, he has prescribed, in clear and unmistakable terms, what shall be read, the kind of prayers to make, how to exhort one another, what to contribute into the treasury, what kind of supper to eat, and what kind of music to make. In regard to this last-named item, which is the one involved in the present controversy, if we propound the question to the Lord, "What kind of music may men make when paying devotions to thee?" the Lord's answer comes back through an inspired man: "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 19.) In plain words the Lord himself sends back the answer: "When worshipping me, make vocal music." He does not say "music," but "vocal music," the only kind he desires to hear at such times, thus naming not only the specific kind of music, but the particular time when it, and it alone, may be had. Now it is at this point where your fallacy is exposed and your argument completely breaks down. You admit that God is the object had in view by "those who choose to call themselves 'Disciples of Christ'" in the vocal music they are making, along with other divinely prescribed acts, and they themselves admit the same thing. This is sufficient, and from it there is no appeal. They themselves being the witnesses, God is the object of their devotions at the particular time and place in question, and the Lord himself has settled it that at any time and place whatsoever when he is the object of man's devotions, only vocal music may be made; and, unless it can be shown that some other kind of music is essential to vocal music, hence involved in the command to sing, whenever "those who choose to call themselves 'Disciples of Christ'" engage in making instrumental music at the time when they are paying devotions to God; they are engaged in vain worship, according to the passage: "In vain do they worship me, teaching as their doctrines the precepts of men." (Matt. 15: 9, R. V.) Thus, "according to their own statement, its use is simply a matter of" vain worship.

4. You are mistaken about "the premises from which" I "draw the conclusion" that your use of instrumental music "involves rebellion against God." Moreover, I am aware that you have not made any argument on any "phase of the instrumental music question, such as its being rebellion against God;" but I have entered the discussion with you to see to that "phase" of the subject myself. The premises, as "briefly stated" by you, appear to conceal the point of rebellion which, when correctly and fully stated, they clearly bring out, and I, therefore, prefer to state them myself. They "may be briefly stated as follows:" The term "music" is generic, and includes both vocal and instrumental music of every description. When men were worshipping God during the existence of Judaism, they were permitted to use both kinds of music—vocal and instrumental—but when Judaism was abolished, the Lord ordained that when men are worshipping him they may use only vocal music. Hence, "the logical conclusion following from these premises is that the use of instrumental music," when men are worshipping God, is rebellion against God; and this conclusion "is simply true," as both "tyros" and everybody else "in logic ought to know."

5. Finally, I invite your attention to the fact that, no difference what may be the motives actuating the use of instrumental music "in connection with the singing," it is the instrumental music itself that is forbidden at the particular time when men are worshipping God under Christ, and it is forbidden, as you were before reminded, "on precisely the same principle on which you and others rule out infant membership in the church, which is nowhere explicitly, but by all the facts in the case is everywhere implicitly, forbidden." Neither your lack of concern about "the exact age of this argument" nor the "argument" (?) itself has anything whatever to do with the one vital fact that, whether intended as worship or not, instrumental music is forbidden at the particular time when men are conducting the worship of God under Christ. The final conclusion, therefore, that is forced upon us from every point of view is that its use at such a time is rebellion against God. May the Lord guide us into the way of truth.

In employment there is rest.

The right way is the road that leads to success.

A thankful heart never makes a sad countenance.

We should do right, regardless of consequences.

The favor of the Lord is with a thankful soul.

Long prayers are neither pleasing to God nor man.

God's way, and not man's way, is the way to heaven.

Those who are afraid to labor need not expect to enjoy rest.

People sometimes say unkind things without meaning to be mean.

We should not complain of the ills that we bring upon ourselves.

Goodness in the soul, and not wealth in the purse, brings happiness.

The man who has the Lord on his side need not be afraid of the world.

The faithful man never puts off until to-morrow what he should do to-day.

The world is always ready to help the man downward who does not struggle to rise.

No one can always agree with the Lord, without sometimes differing from the people.

Self-confidence is usually the thing over which a man stumbles when he falls from grace.

It does not improve one's condition to grumble about everything and be thankful for nothing.

Men who are busy in the service of God do not stop to ask if their conduct is pleasing to the world.

We must forget our own preferences before we can think correctly about the commandments of the Lord.

Most people would pray more if they had less confidence in themselves and felt more need of God's help.

You cannot tell how a man will live every day by the way he talks and sings during the protracted meeting.

There is something wrong with the man's religion who would rather talk politics than about the glories of heaven.

We should be thankful for the blessings we receive daily, instead of grumbling continually about the things we cannot get.

When you hear people talking about your neighbors, you have a fair sample of the way they talk about you when behind your back.

One's chances for eternal salvation do not depend so much on his never falling from grace as upon his getting up again every time he falls.

The world would be filled with righteousness if every man tried as hard to improve his own practice as to correct the other fellow's deed.

The church would move on better if there were not so many people in it who try harder to gain the approval of men than the favor of God.

"Strait and narrow is the way" to all good. No man can acquire an education without much labor. Hard and unremitting toil is necessary in order to make a fortune. The greater the good, the greater the effort. In view of these things, no one can expect to gain heaven without agonizing to enter through the gates into the city.

It is a continual struggle to overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil. It is no easy task. "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." (Gal. 5: 17.) Again, Paul says: "For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do." The child of God would never do wrong, but how often he stumbles and falls! The victory comes only through Jesus Christ our Lord. The shadows may gather, but if we will look to him, he will help us drive away the darkest clouds.

The common craze is to get rich and to get rich quick. Every rascal who starts a "get-rich-quick" scheme usually finds plenty of dupes, because most people are mad after money. How few millionaires are satisfied with their lives because they have amassed great wealth! They have lost all the true joys of life in their pursuit of gold. The noblest character, the sweetest and purest joys, are wholly unknown to them. In gaining riches one is likely to lose life's better treasures. "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

No man can accomplish much in life without persistence. Many people begin splendidly, but soon tire. Monotony wearies them. They begin brilliantly, but, after a spurt, soon leave their work unfinished. Patience is needed. It is the plodder that wins. He perseveres; he carries through whatever he undertakes. Year after year finds him still tolling on. He may not seem to be accomplishing much, for he never rushes, never fusses, nor does he talk about his work; he simply goes on quietly with his hourly tasks through all the days of the year. But he is always faithful, and in the end has far greater results to show that he has lived than the man who has started scores of things and achieved nothing but a few beginnings. The man that holds out faithful to the end shall be saved.

The church is the light of the world, the salt of the earth. It has been said the family is the salt of the church. It is certain that the home training should not be neglected; nothing can take its place. The foundation of a good character must be laid in the home. With more good homes, we will have fewer jails and penitentiaries. The parent who depends on the school and church to do all the teaching of his children is certainly very remiss in his duty. He should not be surprised to find his children immoral and wicked. The school and church have a noble work to do, but they cannot give the training that should be given at home. Paul admonishes: "And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." (Eph. 6: 4.) Children should be taught the Scriptures in the home, in the school, and in the church. It is not possible to fill their tender and pure hearts with too many noble principles. Lessons learned in childhood will go with them to the graves. "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it."

In one of the most famous paintings of Alexander the Great, the painter has represented his subject as standing with arm upraised in such a way as to conceal a portion of the face. The pose is noble, the effect inspiring—so much so that one would never suspect that the upraised arm was intended by the artist to conceal a scar on the cheek of the great warrior. We sometimes hear the question asked, with a sort of despairing incredulity: "How can God obliterate sin—forgive it and then put it away so completely that it will be forgotten by angels and men?" The reply is that God does not annihilate sin or its effects, but, like the painter of Alexander the Great, he puts something between it and the eyes of all the universe which forever eclipses and neutralizes it—something so noble in character and influence and suggestion that no one will ever think of the scar that lies behind it. Let no Christian be depressed by the thought that past sins, repented of and forsaken, are going to rise against him some time and shame and condemn him in the eyes of the redeemed. God will never let those forgiven sins emerge from behind the nobler character which he has raised to blot them out. Nothing, to be sure, can annihilate sin in its effects. These must pass into the very constitution of the universe. Sin as a hideous fact cannot be negated or undone. There must be a scar which remains. But forever and ever that scar may be eclipsed, blotted out, by the grand impressiveness and beauty of a character which God has called out as the spiritual possibility and heritage of the redeemed soul.—Forward.

I am Puzzled.

Brother Lipscomb: While in Texas, last summer, I found some brethren I once knew and who had followed the new departure of instrumental music and societies in the church. They had become disgusted with these and were seeking to return to the church of God. They all agreed they had gone into these "willingly and with a forethought" and were satisfied it was a sin and without divine warrant. I discouraged them and refused to receive them, inasmuch as Heb. 6: 4-8; 10: 26-28 and 2 Pet. 2: 20-22 declared there was "no more sacrifice for sins;" that they were like the washed hog or the filthy dog. If these scriptures do not fit the case of innovators, I candidly confess I cannot conceive a case in point. If they do, we are wrong when we accept them, as Paul declares, "There remaineth no more sacrifice for sins;" and Peter says: "It was better for them not to have known the way of righteousness."

I have sent to four editors for an explanation, and not one has dared to reply. The answer to this is surely not popular; hence the failure to reply: I hope you will deign a reply soon, for I do not want my faith wrong. I am determined to refuse to encourage or receive such brethren until I am satisfied on these scriptures. My health remains very bad and life is uncertain with me. I cannot afford to invite those God has condemned. Success to all God's people.

JOHN W. HARRIS.

Russet, I. T.

I think these extremes arise more out of bitter feeling than from any scriptural teaching, and are sinful. The condition of a man's heart has almost as much to do with what he thinks as the things he believes. Why should doing wrong on this subject be any worse than Peter's refusing to eat with the Gentiles or doing any other sin they are conscious of? Let us remember that as we judge, we will be judged.

Human Machinery in Religion.

The Tennessee Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was in session at McMinnville during the last week in October. As a piece of human machinery, this organization is well-nigh perfect, and if I were going to adopt the methods of men in religion, I would much prefer this, the pure article, than merely an imitation. I have attended several sessions and noted, as best I could, the workings of this gigantic institution of men, and am profoundly impressed with the thought of how far from the simplicity of New Testament teaching religionists have drifted. Here sits a presiding officer called "the bishop," who is chief in directing the affairs over a large district of country, composed of many congregations. From whence came this dignity and his office? In vain may we search the word of God for him, for the men denominated "bishops" in the New Testament had no such jurisdiction as this man, but were servants of local congregations; their whole rule did not extend beyond their immediate surroundings.

In the beginning of Paul's Epistle to the church at Philippi, he says: "Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons." In New Testament times, instead of a bishop having control over a number of churches, there was a plurality in each church, with absolutely no authority outside of the congregation. Surrounding this modern "bishop" are a class of men called "presiding elders," who form what is termed his "cabinet." These, although subject to the "bishop," have the oversight of a smaller territory of churches and assist the "bishop" in locating in the different churches another class of men called "pastors," who have full charge of the churches where they labor. The same question arises—viz.: Whence came these "presiding elders" and "pastors"? Are they to be found in the Bible, and is their work specifically designated? "And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church." (Acts 20: 17.) We learn from this that there were elders, more than one, in the church—that is, the local congregation—and in verse 28 their work is specifically designated.

It takes much money to run this vast machinery, and this the members of the churches are required to furnish, which, seemingly, they willingly do. There is the "bishop's" salary, the "presiding elder's" salary, the "pastor's" salary, and salary for this and salary for that, until there is no end to the salary business. I wonder if the hard-working men and women ever stop to think of the useless and unscriptural dignitaries they are giving their sweat and blood to support in comparative ease. With such a vast ecclesiasticism, whose every manipulator must be supported by the church, it is not to be wondered at if the keynote to nearly every speech is "money." Under the sound of such speeches men who are not religious, as well as those who are, must necessarily conclude that "money" is the chief factor in the world's redemption. While I look upon this unscriptural body, which is purely parasitic, emanating not from the seed of God's kingdom, but from the brain of uninspired men, I am forcibly reminded of another equally unscriptural and parasitic religious body known as "the Christian Church," with its human machinery less perfect, but a striking imitation of this. Instead of the "bishop," there is the "president;" instead of the "presiding elders," there is the "board." There is nothing in lieu of the "pastor," but the genuine article itself, whose religious nomenclature is on a par with the stationed minister and circuit rider. This "president," with his "cabinet" (board), appoints missionaries, fixes their salaries, limits the field of their operation, and dismisses them at will. They also take a hand in the locating business, and any church under their influence will not support a preacher who is not in full sympathy with "all our enterprises." It is true that much of the machinery of this imitative body consists in unwritten law, but it is "law" nevertheless.

In the workings of these unscriptural bodies, there is much politics brought to bear. A few years ago I read an article in a Methodist paper published in the North in which the writer charged that the conferences were dominated by the worst sort of politics. There was a scramble for the "fat places," just as there is in political affairs, and the same sort of trickery and political wire-pulling to get them. The spirit of favoritism plays a large part in these institutions of men. George T. Smith claims that he was employed for life as a missionary to Japan by the Board of the "Foreign Missionary Society" of the "Christian Church," but after a service of seven years, they dismissed him. In consequence of this, he has brought suit against the Board for thirty-five thousand dollars. If Smith's statement be true, it not only shows the spirit of favoritism, but reveals another spirit characterizing these institutions of men. The burden of their cry is "money," and thus they infuse into the preachers the idea of laying so great a stress on money in the salvation of souls that they come to regard the matter of preaching the gospel as a business transaction, measured by dollars and cents.

But where are all these institutions of men tending? This is a most serious question to him who desires to see the church of the New Testament restored to the world, and even to a casual reader of ecclesiastical history there is but one answer—viz.: To Rome. The very principle underlying these human organizations is the seed from which the Roman Catholic Church grew. Mosheim, the great church historian, tells that even during the second century the Christian churches were independent with respect to each other. They were not joined together by association, confederacy, or any other bonds than charity; but in process of time all the churches of a province were formed into one large ecclesiastical body, which assembled at certain times to deliberate about the welfare of the whole. What a true picture of the religious world to-day! From those deliberative bodies sprang the pope, and the same spirit which dominated the Catholic Church is present with every religious organization of men to-day, which finds its expression to the fullest limit. The man-made establishments of this age and country would proscribe, excommunicate, and execute were it not for the limitations of civil law.

Lying before me is a copy of the Midland Methodist, from which I take the following: "Our system has stood and will stand. Those who rebel against it can but go down." The Methodist preacher or Methodist Church that dares to call in question "our system" and refuses to be governed by it will be led to the block, and off goes the head. "Our system" enacted a law at its General Conference in Baltimore forbidding any Methodist preacher to hold meetings where another was located without his consent. Sam. Jones stood on the floor holding a petition from Selma, Ala., with twenty-seven hundred names begging him to come, but the little Methodist preacher in that town said: "You cannot come." But the law was passed, and Sam. Jones, who has had so much to say about "backbone," meekly bowed to "our system." The only proof the editor submits for the right of "our system" to exist is found in these words: "Its merit is proven by its stability. If it were not strong, it could not stand the strain to which it is sometimes put." This editor would doubtless repudiate the Catholic Church, and yet the Catholic can give just as good reasons why his system should exist. "Its merit is proven by its stability," and its "strain" has been much greater. This is the best and only proof that the "Christian Church" can give for its unscriptural machinery, and they practically say with the Methodists: "Our system has stood and will stand. Those who rebel against it can but go down."

What great similarity there is between the Methodist Church and the "Christian Church!" The only material differences between the two denominations are the name and what they call the "mode" of baptism. Just how long this latter will obtain cannot be determined, but at the rapid gait "business in religion" is traveling the line will soon be crossed. I say again, if I had to choose between the machinery of the "Christian Church" and that of the Methodist Church, I would take the latter. It is better, and I see no reason in going around the field when I can cut across.

F. W. SMITH.

"The Best Society."

"Good society" is a phrase that may mean much or little, according to the way it is used. To limit it to persons of wealth and leisure is by no means justified. Harriet Prescott Spofford gives two glimpses of the "best society" as she has found it in varying circumstances:

"Among my acquaintances there was once a man and a woman, very poor, with a family of growing children. When work was to be had, the father worked all day; the mother worked as hard all day at home; they had nothing but the small daily wage. A neighbor died, leaving her young children to a shiftless and unworthy father—one a vigorous and precocious child of promise, one a lovely little creature whose beauty touched the heart, and one a dull and stupid child, of whom the neighbors said: 'She's not all there.' This hard-working mother proposed to her husband that they should adopt one of these children; and, with scarcely enough for their own, they did so. And they took, not the bright and active girl, who might have helped them out with the work and care; not the little beauty, over whom the heart yearned; but the dull and stupid one, who could only make work and increase care, but whom they felt to be so unattractive that no one would care to take her.

"One cannot call the Queen an 'acquaintance,' can one? But one of the dressers of the Queen possibly might. A lady who had been one of the dressers of Queen Victoria, but who had resigned her office on account of some infirmity, told a friend of mine this true story of the Queen. Some time after this lady had left the castle, she returned to Windsor on a visit, and, walking in a lane, she met the Queen taking the air in her pony carriage. The carriage was stopped at once, and, after a few words, the Queen invited the lady to dine that night at the castle. The lady pleaded that she had not come to Windsor expecting anything of the sort, and that she had nothing to wear but a high-necked, black silk gown. 'Come in that, then,' said the Queen; 'it shall make no difference.' And as a royal invitation is a command—none the less so for its friendliness—the lady went, and she found herself greatly embarrassed by the presence of the other guests, the ladies, as usual, with bare shoulders and with plumes and jewels and diaphanous draperies, the men with their gold lace and orders. But while her face was yet burning with her annoyance, the Queen was ushered in, and Victoria herself was wearing a plain, high-necked, black silk gown."

A society composed of such individuals as the generous, hard-working father and mother, as the good and gracious Queen, must needs be called what it really is, the "best society."

THE GIRLS THAT ARE WANTED.

The girls that are wanted are home girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand,
That father and brothers can trust in,
And the little ones understand;

Girls that are fair on the hearthstone,
And pleasant when nobody sees;
Kind and sweet to their own folk,
Ready and anxious to please.

The girls that are wanted are wise girls .
That know what to do and to say,
That drive with a smile or a soft word
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good girls from the heart to the lips;
Pure as the lily is white and pure,
From its heart to its sweet leaf tips.

EGYPT'S GREAT TOMB.

Egypt is the land of tombs. All up and down the west bank of the Nile we find them, especially at Thebes, which is, in fact, a city of the dead, and a very populous one. But Egypt is, nevertheless, the center of a very live interest, for its tombs are a witness and a record, which we can read, of the life and belief of their ancient builders.

The old Egyptian believed that his soul—and his idea of his soul was similar to our idea of a ghost—would live on after the death of his body and be happy so long as his body lasted, but that his spirit, or life spark, would go immediately to the great sun god, Ra, the giver of all life. For the happiness of his soul, therefore, all possible care was taken to preserve his body. It was carefully embalmed and laid in the innermost chamber of the great stone tomb which he began early, that he might finish it during his life. One room in the tomb was set apart for the abode of his soul. Paintings of food and drink, which were supposed to refresh the surviving ghost, as the real things had refreshed the physical man, covered the walls. The history of the man's life was also painted for the enjoyment of his ghost. The scenes began in a lower corner, with his youth; and went round and round in tiers until up somewhere near the top they came to an end, with the final judgment after death. These pictures showed the man with his family, in the fields with his oxen and slaves, as he hunted, and as he made his offerings to the gods, and gave a good idea of Egyptian life. The third, or outer, room of the tomb was used as a sort of chapel.

These were the principal features of the early tombs, and although those that were built later differ much in detail, the three rooms—the chapel; the room for the "double," as the soul is usually called; and the mummy chamber—have always been found. Sometimes, however, as in the tomb of Cheops, or Khufu, a temple without the tomb took the place of the chapel inside.

This tomb of Khufu, which is the Great Pyramid of Gizeh, is the most remarkable of all the tombs—if, indeed, it be a tomb at all. The ancients counted it one of the Seven Wonders of the World, and in modern times it has been the subject of profound study and speculation.

The cartouch, or royal seal of Khufu, the most powerful of that family of kings known as the fourth dynasty, which ruled about two thousand years before Abraham went down into Egypt, has been found on some of the stones. This would make it the oldest of the Egyptian pyramids. It is also the largest and the only one that is scientifically perfect in construction. The plan of its interior is unique, too. Its two chambers are bare of ornament, and when it was first broken open no body was found in the granite sarcophagus in the king's chamber, which is the name given to the supposed mummy chamber.

These and other facts have led men to doubt that it was ever used or intended as a tomb. They have said that it was merely a monument to Khufu's power; that it was an astronomical observatory; that it was built to help cast and preserve the king's horoscope, for at that time the stars were thought to govern the lives of men, and were studied chiefly to find out coming events; and some have thought that its scientifically perfect proportions and the perfect skill of its workmanship indicate that the builder was inspired, and that God meant the pyramid to reveal to men a perfect standard of weights and measures and the bases of the various sciences. Then, too, the architect must have been more intelligent than an Egyptian could have been. Tradition says that it was built under the direction of one Philetes, a shepherd king from a far country, who was sojourning in Egypt and stood high in the confidence of Khufu. People have wondered, too, if Philetes and Melchisedec, the priest to whom Abraham paid tithes, and Job, the patriarch of Uz, were not one and the same. But there is no proof of all this, and the latest and best supported theory is the oldest one—namely, that the pyramid was meant for a royal tomb.

A stupendous task the old Egyptian king had to build it, too. It was originally covered with smooth, polished granite, but this was taken off during the middle ages to build Mohammedan mosques and palaces, and the outside is now rough and broken. When perfect it was four hundred and eighty-one feet high, seven hundred and fifty-five feet along each side, and it covered thirteen acres. The stone of which it is built is unlike any found in Egypt, and must, therefore, have been taken from distant quarries up the Nile River, whence it was brought down in immense blocks on rafts. Then an inclined road had to be built from the shore to the cliff where the pyramid stands in order that the stones might be dragged up into place. "Just the building of this road," Herodotus says, "took ten years." Even with the one hundred thousand men who were constantly employed, it must have taken nearly the whole of the twenty-four years of Khufu's reign to build this immense pile. The burden of such an undertaking was heavy upon the people, and they hated the builder so bitterly that centuries after his death they spoke his name only rarely, and then with loathing and contempt.

Whatever was the purpose of this wonderful building, it was evidently not intended that it should be entered. The builders left the entrance to every passage closed up, and it remained closed until A.D. 825. Then Al-Mamun, the Mohammedan caliph, forced the horizontal passage in hope of finding the gold and jewels which he supposed were hidden there.

For many months the Arabs worked on the passage, and were about to give it up in disgust when they came upon a descending entrance passage. The way was blocked by a heavy stone portcullis which had fallen, and, as it was impossible to move it, a passage was blasted out round it to the ascending passage. This was filled with loose stones, which were removed one by one, and then the greedy Mussulmans began the ascent. It was not easy, for the way is up a steep incline of polished stone, and is only about four feet high by three and one-half feet wide. At the end of it, however, they came into the grand gallery, where they could stand upright, for the gallery is seven times as high as the passage, and wider by almost two and one-half feet. They hurried through the length of this—eighteen hundred and eighty-two inches. At the end they clambered over a three-foot step, bowed beneath a low doorway, and leaped into the king's chamber. It is a noble room—oblong and all of polished stone—but it held no treasure. Even the stone chest in the middle, perfectly fashioned from one block, was empty.

The Mohammedans were about to rebel in their anger and disappointment, when the wily caliph pretended to have had a dream. He told the men to dig at night in a certain place. This they did, and found gold, just to the amount of their wages. The caliph put it there, of course, but he pretended to be surprised that those who had buried the gold so many centuries before should have been able to tell just how much it would cost to pay his workmen.

After this forced entrance nothing more was discovered about the building for many years—until, in fact, modern scientists became interested. Then the entrance to the opening passage was found, high up on the north side and traced down to an unfinished subterranean chamber. The horizontal passage, leading off near the beginning of the grand gallery to the second and smaller, or queen's, chamber, was discovered. This chamber was empty, too, the only peculiar feature of it being a niche in the east wall. At the beginning of the passage to the queen's chamber and three feet from the beginning of the grand gallery is the gaping mouth of a strange well, which descends to the entrance passage just above the unfinished chamber. Then later discovery revealed the chambers of construction above the roof of the king's chamber, a device to prevent the great mass of stone above from crushing it in, and the two ventilating tubes.

The grand gallery, the passage, the chamber, and the direction of the entrance passage, first down and then up, are features peculiar to the Great Pyramid. They are peculiar in themselves, too, and wise men have puzzled long to find their meaning. It does not seem likely that that meaning will ever be found, but in these days it is not safe to prophesy that the seemingly impossible will never be done.—Polly Hendricks, in Sabbath School Visitor.

THE EXPRESSION OF GOOD MANNERS.

The accident of being a superintendent, manager, or overseer does not give us the right to abuse those who, being less fortunate than ourself, happen to be under us. Our position is no excuse whatever for being arbitrary and offensive to any one. The humblest man or woman in our employ may be infinitely our superior—as many a servant is far superior to his or her millionaire master—and much more successful than ourself. Gentleness and consideration for others, not arbitrary selfishness, are the touchstones of all true greatness.

One of the great barriers to real success is the fact that there are few people who can bear prosperity. Many youths are ruined by promotion. As soon as they begin to rise they become officious and unbearable in their conduct.

We help to develop in others, if we come much in contact with them, the qualities which are dominant in ourselves, as "like begets like." We often see a kind-hearted, loving wife, by her patience and gentleness, chisel off the rough corners of her uncouth, ignorant, or brutal husband, who becomes like a granite block in the hands of a sculptor who chisels it into symmetry.

Persons with suave and gentle manners, though not noted for goodness, are often preferred to those who pride themselves on being good at heart, but disregard smooth manners and gentleness.

It is, therefore, of the greatest importance to form early the habit of being gracious. Good manners are worth a fortune to the possessor; and it is, therefore, cruel to deprive a child of the opportunity of acquiring the expression of a kindly heart.

It is easy to distinguish a man or woman who has been trained in politeness from one who has grown to maturity before having the advantage of fine examples, of coming in contact with superior models. It is impossible to cover up, late in life, an early deficiency in manner training.

It takes years of hard work to learn the delicate principles of poetry, and how can one expect to become an artist of good manners without years of painstaking in the technique of this grand art?

It is as necessary to learn how to express kindly feelings in a gracious way as it is to possess them.—Success.

ONE AT A TIME.

When I was a little boy, helpin' mother to store away the apples, I put my arm around so many o' them and tried to bring them all. I managed all right for a step or two; then one fell out, an' another, an' another, an' two or three more, till all were rolling over the floor. Mother laughed.

"Now, Daniel," says she, "I'm goin' to teach you a lesson." So she put my little hand quite tight around one.

"There," she said, "bring that, an' then fetch another."

I've often thought about it when I've seen folks who might be doing ever so much good if they didn't try to do too much all at once. Don't try to put your arms around a year, and don't go troublin' about next week.

One day at a time, one hour, one minute—yes, one second—is all the time we get at once. So our best course is to "do the next thing next."—Dan'l Quorm.

LOVE YOUR NEIGHBOR AS YOURSELF.

"For the whole law is fulfilled in one word, . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Gal. 5: 14, R. V.) The fulfillment of the law of the Ten Commandments is meant here. There are two classes of commands in the law of Moses—one embracing the first four commands defining man's duty to God; the other, embracing the last six, defining his duty to his fellow-men. The performance of these latter enter into the relations to his fellow-men, yet Paul says to love the neighbor fulfills the whole law. This means man cannot discharge the duties he owes to his fellow-men unless he first fulfills those he owes to God; they stand first. Discharging the duties he owes to God fits him to perform those he owes to his fellow-men. A sense of obligation to God is necessary to enable man so to restrain his selfish lusts and passions that he can discharge the duties he owes to his fellow-men. Hence, he who performs the duties he owes to man must needs have discharged those he owes to God. The performance of these implies the performance of those. Hence, he who loves his neighbor as himself has fulfilled the whole law—those laws regulating his duties to God as well as those laws regulating his duties to man. If we examine the laws given to regulate man's duty to his fellow-men, we will see they cover the whole ground of man's relationship to his fellow-men. The first, highest relation between man and man is that of the child to his parents. The first item of the law regulating his relation to his fellow-men is: "Honor thy father and mother; that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth."

To honor father and mother is to perform all the duties and obligations due father and mother during their lives. These duties change according to the changed conditions of parent and child. In childhood and youth, it requires obedience; in old age, frequently help and support; always love and consideration.

The second command concerns the life of every person. That is the first and most important thing to him, to preserve and cherish his life. Hence, "Thou shalt not kill." Respect his life first and above all else.

The third of this class is: "Thou shalt not commit adultery." This involves the sanctity of the relation of wife and husband. This is placed in the Bible as more sacred than property or possessions of any kind. Fidelity in the marriage relation and regard for the sanctity of the relation of others in the marital privileges are placed by God before any rights in property or goods of any kind man may possess. Next to his life God has placed the sanctity of his marriage relation; hence the bitter condemnation of David for the violation of Uriah's marriage rights, that brought perpetual evil upon his family. "Thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon. Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house; because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife." (2 Sam. 12: 9, 10.) To set aside God's law is to despise God. This sin tramples under foot the most sacred rights of his very humble servant. The penalty was, the sword should never depart from his house. Solomon (Prov. 6: 32-35) says: "But whoso committeth adultery with a woman lacketh understanding: he that doeth it destroyeth his own soul. A wound and dishonor shall he get; and his reproach shall not be wiped away. For jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare in the day of vengeance. He will not regard any ransom; neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts." This is a recognition that man's jealous rage, when his marital rights have been violated, is unappeasable and cannot be condoned with money. Next to life itself God places fidelity between husband and wife, the most sacred treasure of life. God makes no difference between the fidelity of man and of woman in this relation.

The fourth command is: "Thou shalt not steal." You shall respect the rights of your fellow-man to his property. You shall not deprive him of what is his. To steal is to take what is another's against his wishes. To wrong him or wrongly deprive him of what is his is, in the language of God, stealing. One who does not steal does not interfere with the property rights of others, does not wrong nor injure them pecuniarily.

The fifth command is: "Thou shalt not bear false witness." You shall not misrepresent or wrong your fellow-man by false statements. You shall not injure his reputation or character, and shall not place him or his actions or character in a false light before others. Be strictly truthful and just in all your statements and the impressions you make.

The sixth command is: "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's." To covet is to desire to take it from him. To desire to purchase that of his that may be purchased for a just compensation is not to covet it. To purchase it is to change the ownership. There is nothing wrong to desire to change the ownership, if agreeable to the other party. Stinginess is not covetousness. Some years ago, a man speaking of a prominent wheat trader, said of him: "He is close; every one who knows him knows he would split a grain of wheat to get his half of it, but he does not want the other man's half." This was to illustrate he was close and exacting as to his own, but he did not want what was not his own. That is not covetousness. Stinginess and closeness and inordinate desire for gain may lead to covetousness; but covetousness is to so inordinately desire as to desire to obtain what is another's without compensation. This command goes behind the outward acts specified in the other commands, and demands man should not cherish in his heart the feeling that leads to adultery, the theft of our neighbor's house, or horse, or ass, or anything that belongs to him.

These laws cover the whole duty of man to his fellow-men, and, if obeyed, would prevent wronging another in any respect. To do these things is not very difficult. To do these things is to refrain from doing others wrong. To love our brother as ourself requires us to be just and fair to others in all things. This does not necessarily imply that to do all these things is to fully love our neighbor as ourself; but it does imply it is a long step toward it. It is not to do injury or wrong to any one.

Love under the Christian dispensation is more positive in its demands. It not only must avoid doing wrong, but it requires man to do good and to help others as he is able to do it. The obligations that love imposes are practical in their nature and consist, first, in refraining from doing what harms or injures others; then in doing good to all men as we are able. Jesus came to enable those who would trust him to fulfill the righteousness which the law required, but which, owing to man's fleshly lusts and passions, he was unable to fulfill till Christ enabled him to do it through faith. D. L.

The reward of one duty is the power to save.—Ex.

THE WORSHIP, AGAIN.

The vital point in all religious service is the earnest desire to do the will of God. The question to ask of any service is: Is it his will? To do service he has not commanded, to change his ways of doing things, or to set aside or supersede God's appointments with human inventions and services has always been regarded by God as savoring of the presumptuous sin. Fidelity to God in his appointments is the spirit we must bring to the service of God in all that we do. This is to accept him as lawgiver and Ruler—as God. To set aside or supersede his appointments is practically to reject him as God. When the elders of Israel besought Samuel to give them a king in lieu of the judges God had given, God said to Samuel: "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them."

To change God's appointments, no matter how small the change may appear, is practically to reject God. To change an appointment of God is the sin, no matter what that appointment may be. Sometimes there are facts or arrangements incidental to the service of God that are no part of the command or order of God. These incidental or accidental arrangements connected with the order of God may be changed, as they constitute expediences, but no part of the divine order. It is sometimes a little difficult to draw the distinction between what is incidental and what is part of the divine order in doing the work of God. In such cases, it is the part of wisdom to be on the safe side. A case that shows this difficulty is the one presented in the order of worship by Brother Elmore and Brother Rice. So long as there is doubt in the mind of persons in reference to the order, they ought to keep on the safe side. On this we certainly insist.

But when a number of services done are enumerated, with no reference to the specific order or sequence, we cannot infer that specific order is prescribed. When specific order is prescribed, every item of the order in its specific place must be laid down. Unless this is done on every occasion, the service is mentioned or it is specifically stated. Where this is the order in which it is to be done, a special routine cannot be inferred.

Paul says: "That is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." (Rom. 10: 8, 9.) The next verse reverses this order and gives the items as they must come. We know how they must come, because it is an impossibility for a man to confess Jesus as the Christ with the mouth before he believes God has raised him from the dead. There are some services in which one act so depends on another that they must come in a natural order. Of such are repentance and faith and all the acts of service that must spring from faith. Faith must precede and pervade all service, for "without faith it is impossible to please him [God]." Nothing we do as service to God can please him unless done through faith in him.

Then in the Lord's day service, or the observance of the Supper, we find when Jesus established it, at the end of the passover supper, after thanks were given, they partook of the loaf and the cup and sung a hymn and went out. This is all that is told here of being done; but we find from John that chapters 13, 14, 15, and 16 were spoken and the prayer of chapter 17 made. This shows a specific order was not here given. All that was done is not recorded in one place or in the order of observance. Acts 2: 42 says: "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." This does not tell how much of the apostolic teaching they engaged in at each meeting, or how many persons taught, or how many prayers were made, and nothing is said of the singing. All teaching and preaching to saint or sinner must be of the apostolic teaching, and so all that is done must be done in accord with this teaching. The teaching of Jesus that is recorded came last at the institution of the Supper; but the apostolic teaching observed at Jerusalem is mentioned first. This shows the order was not specific. Then the prayers are mentioned last; but does any one believe to pray at other points in the service would be offensive to God? Singing is left out.

Then in 1 Cor. 11 great disorder had grown up. They ate to satisfy their hunger. The rich had their bountiful suppers, the poor were left without any, and one did not wait for the others to arrive. Certainly there was no shadow of specific order here, and the apostle neither reproved them for the absence of it, nor did he urge any routine upon them. He told them to eat to satisfy their hunger at home, and to wait one for another, and in partaking of the loaf and the cup they were to do it discerning in them the body and blood of the Son of God. In discussing spiritual gifts Paul tells them (1 Cor. 14: 27-31): "If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three. . . . Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge. . . . For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted." This is the sum of the teaching we have on the subject. To get a routine out of this required by God certainly requires considerable addition to the word of God.

There is no doubt God requires his children to meet, to teach and learn the apostolic teaching, to break bread, and to engage in the fellowship and in prayers. He has given no ritual defining the order in which these services are to be observed. Let us be satisfied with things as God left them, and let each congregation observe these matters as their surroundings suggest is appropriate, and let us earnestly devote ourselves to urging people to obey God, not in devising orders and routines and rituals where he has given none. We can unite in doing his will; we will divide when one seeks to enforce his order or his ritual on others. The observance of the Lord's Supper and the mutual edification and fellowship of the brethren seem to have been the central facts, and we ought to be cautious to adopt no order or practice that militates against these truths or that tends to choke out any of the service appointed by God.

"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved."

It would certainly be hard to find a better description of a pure, good man than this. The tabernacle in the wilderness and then the temple built by Solomon in Jerusalem were the house of God in the Jewish age. The church of God—the Lord's people—is the house of God now. The above is simply a description of a good man, without any reference to how he became good, and is of such a character that it applies equally well to a servant of God under both the Jewish age and the Christian age, as it only specifies how a godly man will behave himself toward others, without naming the specific requirements of either covenant. There are two classes of obligations binding upon men under both covenants. One class includes our obligations directly to God, and the other includes those to ourselves and our fellow-man. The foregoing passage deals chiefly with our obligations to our fellow-man, and it requires a very earnest and faithful man to do as represented therein. The questions asked are very striking and important ones. "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" Then the rest of the psalm is taken up in answering these questions.

To walk uprightly would indicate almost a perfect life. It would also indicate a life regulated and directed by the word of God, for that is the only standard of perfection; and to do this involves a knowledge of God's word, as we can never know whether we are living right or not, unless we know we are living as his word requires us to live. This was true in the Jewish age, and it is true under the religion of Christ. One of the greatest difficulties with the masses, under both covenants, is the great negligence on the part of the masses as to reading and studying the word of God. If this were properly done, the masses would strive much harder to live out what is required of them. To neglect to know God's will when we have every facility to know it is about as bad as to neglect to do it when we do know it. People are taking a fearful responsibility upon themselves in neglecting to know the will of God, both in and out of the church. An upright life among the children of God is most lovely and beautiful. The life of Abraham was beautiful, because it was so nearly conformed to the will of God. Enoch and Elijah so thoroughly conformed themselves to the will of God that they were translated without seeing death. The life of Jesus was purely and perfectly upright, because it was in perfect conformity with the will of God. The most thoroughly upright lives among men in the church of God to-day are those that most effectively live out the will of God as contained in the New Testament. Zachariah and Elisabeth are said to have walked in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blamelessly. This is saying a great deal for humanity, for it shows that people can walk uprightly and be blameless, if they will. God requires no impossibility at the hands of the people, and they can do his will if they try.

Working righteousness is next mentioned. The word "righteousness," in its general use in such passages, is supposed to have reference to the duties of the Lord's people to each other, to themselves, and to their families. A righteous man is very careful to discharge his obligations to his fellow-man in all the relations he sustains. Where these obligations are filled by all the members of a family, it makes a lovely and happy family and a beautiful Christian home. In fact, this principle is the foundation of all the attractive and interesting Christian homes we have on this earth. In carrying out this principle, the husband must treat his wife and children as the word of God directs, and so the wife must treat the husband, the parents the children, and the children the parents. This sort of life by all will make a pleasant and interesting home anywhere; but without this there can be no such thing as a happy home. Not only must these things be done in the home, but in the neighborhood, in the community around. Christian neighbors must treat each other as the word of the Lord directs, and this involves doing unto others as we would have them do to us. Living thus always makes a pleasant and happy community and a lively and useful congregation of Christians. No child of God can be just to himself and not strive continually to keep himself in harmony with the will of God in his own life and be true and just toward all with whom he stands related in this life. It is wonderful how this feature of righteousness purifies and brightens society, brightens our homes, and beautifies the church of God; but, on the other hand, indifference to these duties and unkindness to those with whom we stand related in life will bring darkness and trouble upon all. It is a grand thing for people to be righteous in these things and discharge their duties faithfully toward others.

"And speaketh the truth in his heart." This means to study and cultivate the principle of truth in the heart continually, so that we will be always ready to speak the truth and act it in our lives. It is, perhaps, impossible to tell how much it detracts from the proper influence of a man claiming to be a servant of God for it to be known by his neighbors that he is not to be depended on in what he says; while, on the other hand, it is equally difficult to fix a limit to the good influence of a man who is known to speak the truth at all times and to live it, day by day, in his whole life. Truth is strong and beautiful, and he is doubly fortified who is always fortified with truth; but when a so-called "child of God" is known to be unreliable, he is, like Sampson, shorn of his strength and has no power for good in that community. If a Christian will read and study the word of God regularly, and govern his heart and life by it, he will have little trouble to speak the truth in his heart and with his tongue, and this adds immense strength and beauty to his life.

"He that backbiteth not with his tongue." The backbiter is one who calumniates, censures, or slanders another when he is not present, and knows nothing of what is going on, and has no opportunity of defending himself. Such a one is mean and cowardly, and cannot face a man and tell him to his face what he thinks of him, but does out his slander behind the curtain, where the slandered one has no chance to correct the miserable slanders perpetrated upon him. It makes a very beautiful showing in any man's character never to indulge in anything so low and mean as backbiting. To slip and stab a man in the back with a knife, when he is utterly unconscious of the presence of any one, is so cowardly and mean that it would meet the contempt and condemnation of every thinking man; yet to stab a man's character and destroy his good name is infinitely worse, because a man's character is the most sacred thing he possesses on earth. It is, indeed, a horrid thing to stab and mangle and ruin a man's character, and thus destroy his opportunity for doing good. A pure-hearted man will never do it.

"Nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor." A pure-hearted and upright man will never do this. Sooner would such a man suffer injury to himself than to inflict an injury upon another, and such a man will never take up and retail a reproachful report about his neighbor when he has not a word of real evidence that the report is true. We ought always to think and speak well of a neighbor till we have undoubted evidence that he is not a correct man; and even then it is not best to say much about him unless by telling some good man about him we can warn him from being injured by him. It is, indeed, a nice point to always use the tongue as the word of the Lord directs. Some people love to feast upon every tale of scandal that gets upon the wind, as the vulture loves to feast upon carrion, and love to retail it around as the vender loves to retail his wares. But a truly good man, such as Ps. 15 describes, never indulges in such things.

"In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord." The man that loves the ways of a vile, wicked man will soon partake with him in his evil deeds; but so long as a man despises the way of the evil doer, he cannot be induced to partake with him in such a course. A man with a pure heart and life will always honor, love, and respect a man that loves, fears, and serves the Lord. A faithful servant of God always loves to associate with those who are pure and good, and seeks such for companions as far as he can.

"He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not." An upright man is always true to his word and can always be relied upon. He will not say one thing and do another; he will be true to his word, if he suffers by it.

"He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent." The word "usury" at the present time means unlawful interest. In the Bible it means any sort of interest that will oppress any one, and especially any interest that will in any wise oppress the poor. God is very tender toward the poor and condemns any sort of oppression perpetrated upon them. No good man can be induced by any sort of reward to act against an innocent man. If he is a lawyer, he will not take a fee against a man that he is sure is innocent of the charges against him. A true servant of God will in no sense impose upon another unless through a mistake.

"He that doeth these things shall never be moved." A child of God that will live as this psalm indicates has no need to be uneasy. The Lord will bless and care for all such. "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry. The face of the Lord is against them that do evil." The prayerful study of this psalm will help any man to be a better man and to do greater good in this life.

Knowing ourselves, our world—our tasks so great,
Our time so brief—'tis clear, if we refuse
The means so limited, the tools so rude
To execute our purpose, life will fleet,
And we shall fade and leave our task undone.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

Responsibility. No. 2.

In the article preceding this we discovered what it is to live soberly. We next inquire: What is it to live godly? I prefer to treat the subjects "Soberly," "Righteously," and "Godly," in the order of "Soberly," "Godly," and "Righteously," because I believe righteousness to be a higher characteristic than godliness. The word "godliness" means to be like God. Now, we cannot be like God either in omnipotence, omnipresence, or omniscience; but we can be like him in our actions toward our fellow-men.

God has always loved man, though he has always hated his sin. God has never done anything for the purpose of injuring any human being. He has done all he possibly could do for the well-being of the race. Man can do as God has done; man can love and hate, as God has done and does do now. Man may never be able to love and do for man all that God has done; but his love and acts can be like God's love and acts. If so, he will then be like God; hence, a godly man—godlike in love and life.

We have already seen that to live soberly means that we are to live in the thorough discharge of every obligation devolving on us in consequence of our interself relationship. Now, to live godly man must live in the discharge of every duty and obligation devolving on him, in consequence of his relations to every other human being on the earth.

Paul wrote letters to the young evangelists, Timothy and Titus, instructing them how and what to teach. He set forth clearly the duties of the older and the younger of both sexes: the duty of servants and masters, parents and children, husbands and wives, etc. The husband who does not discharge his whole duty to his wife is an ungodly husband, and the wife who does not reverence her husband and fully discharge the duties she owes him is an ungodly wife; children who fail to honor their parents are ungodly children, and servants who fail to render due obedience to their masters are ungodly servants. Indeed, if any one fail in any way to render to all their dues, he is, to that extent, an ungodly man. Ungodliness is the sin of the nation; it is the abiding sin of the world.

That we are not mistaken as to the meaning of "godliness," we go to 1 Tim. 6: 1, where we find the apostle giving Timothy the doctrine in reference to the duty of servants to masters. He says, in conclusion: "These things teach and exhort. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome [sound] words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness." This doctrine, then, which teaches the duties of men and women to each other in life's varied relationships is called "the doctrine of godliness." The man who lives for himself and who is willing to deceive that he may get gain falls in the class of the ungodly. Indeed, he may be of those who for filthy lucre teach things they ought not, supposing gain is godliness.

David, in Ps. 12: 1-5, says: "Help, Lord; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. They speak vanity every one with his neighbor: with flattering lips and with a double heart do they speak. . . . For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord." The Lord condemns the ungodly man and stretches out his hand to the oppressed. To them he is a God of mercy and compassion. The mover of the landmarks, the oppressor in whatever relation, the double-hearted and deceptions, and the wicked and abominable of whatever rank or calling must all stand up for judgment and receive the condemnation pronounced against the ungodly.

A false impression made, either by word or deed, for the purposes of advantage is ungodliness. He who openly and boldly takes advantage of his fellow-man that he may get gain, because he may have the power and the opportunity, is an ungodly robber, and his species of ungodliness is the same as that of the one who appropriates to his own use and benefit the goods of another, without his knowledge and consent. What is it, then, to live godly? It is to do our duty in all things to others. Living soberly and godly prepares us to live righteously, which is the perfection man should seek.

Kansas Notes.

Brother W. F. Parmiter is in a meeting at Pleasant Hill. He is doing some of his characteristic preaching, which impresses people with the fact that Christianity means something. Brother Parmiter always gives his audiences something to think about, and they usually find out there is a life to live that means more than simply professing to be Christians.

Brother T. H. Foster did some plain preaching at Minco, I. T. His work is well spoken of. One estimable lady who had been a Baptist learned the "way of the Lord more perfectly," was baptized, and thereby entered into fellowship with Christ and his followers.

Brother C. M. Johnson is at Duquoin, as a substitute for a man who could not meet his engagement there, but will go in a few days. Brother Johnson is getting along nicely with the work. One person has obeyed the gospel.

Brother J. E. Cain has finished the meeting at Union Valley, and is now attending a debate in that part of the State. I have been informed that they had a good meeting.

The brethren at Gage, Kingman County, are erecting a house in which to worship. They have been using a schoolhouse for several years, and have done a good work.

The meeting at Starlight, near this place, is nearing a close. Four persons have become obedient to the faith. Quite an interest has been manifested. The Belle Plaine congregation is supporting the work. I think they will continue to do more work of this kind. Much good can be accomplished in this way. I know of no better way to do missionary work in a small territory, and it is also a good way to expand the territory, and such expansion is necessary. At schoolhouses and other places a people can be reached that can be reached in no other way. The gospel must be taken to the people. This is right and an effective way to do it. The sooner many congregations learn this lesson and put it into practice, the better it will be for the cause. The authority of Christ must be recognized everywhere and under all circumstances. Too many professed Christians fail in this respect. They may not intend to dishonor him, but they are forgetful of the demands of heaven's King, not realizing that these demands are for their special good here and hereafter. I wish men could once learn that whatever the Lord has done for them, as well as what he requires of them, is for their good.

Whatever we may do must be done for the glory of God and the good of man. Our energies must be used in that direction. Whatever our occupation, we must recognize the purpose for which we were created. O, how many forget the great purpose for which they were created! Man is too much disposed to have his own will exercised, even if it contradicts the will of the Lord. Such disposition makes much trouble in the world. When God's will is recognized it will bring peace and harmony in the world, unity will prevail among Christians, and the cause will prosper as it should, and not until then will there be perfect harmony in the work. God's will is the only proper standard of rectitude, and must be recognized thus if we expect to be safe and inherit eternal life. D. T. BROADUS.

"The Land of Israel." By Robert Laird Stewart. Pages, 352; price, $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago.

I gave a brief notice of this book some months ago, but, since giving it a more critical examination, I regard it as worthy of a more extended notice. The geography of the Holy Land, in the light of recent research, has become a subject of absorbing interest. It has furnished a clew to the explanation of many historic difficulties; filled old words with new meanings; revealed correspondence with the Bible hitherto unseen; corroborated minute circumstances of position, time, and distance incidentally given by sacred writers; and has thus restored the real historic setting of a series of real historic narrations. In view of the growing importance of this study, no doubt every student has felt the need of a tersely written volume, embodying the results of the latest scientific investigations, and the volume before me fills that place. The author has gathered the latest and most interesting information attainable from the costly memoirs of exploration parties, monographs on places or sections of the country, narrations of travel, quarterlies and other official publications of the Palestine Exploration Fund, and the invaluable works of Robinson, Ritter, Stanley, Thompson, Tristram, Henderson, and Smith. In addition to these sources of information, he has availed himself of the impressions which can come only from personal observation. He made a carefully planned journey from the borders of the South country to the heart of Lebanon, which gave him an opportunity to study the geography of the land on the spot. In utilizing these impressions, he has imparted something of the life and coloring impressed on his mind. Quotations from recognized authorities are freely introduced into the body of the work, which give additional value to descriptions or throw light upon the topography or antiquity of disputed sites. The book is divided into two parts. In the first part a general description of the land is given, including its position among the nations, its boundaries and physical features, its present condition, and the salient points in its history; in the second part the special features and noteworthy places are grouped together in separate sections for study at close range. These sectional divisions correspond to the natural divisions of the country, and, with scarcely an exception, have familiar Old Testament names descriptive of their aspects and relations. It also contains thirteen sectional maps, which illustrate the topographical features of each subdivision of the country; and to make the whole available, there is an excellent index.

These Four New Preparations comprise a complete treatment for nearly all the ills of life. The Food-emulsion is needed by some, the Tonic by others, the Expectorant by others, the Jelly by others still, and all four, or any three, or two, or any one, may be used singly or in combination, according to the exigencies of the case. Full instructions with each set of four free remedies, represented in this illustration.

SPECIAL.—The Slocum System is medicine reduced to an exact science by America's foremost specialist, and our readers are urged to take advantage of Dr. Slocum's generous offer. When writing the Doctor please mention the GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

THESE FOUR REMEDIES

Represent a New system of medicinal treatment for the weak, and those suffering from wasting diseases, or inflammatory conditions of nose, throat, and lungs.

The treatment is free. You have only to write to obtain it.

Its efficacy is explained as simply as possible below.

By the system devised by DR. T. A. SLOCUM, the specialist in pulmonary and kindred diseases, all the requirements of the sick body can be supplied by the FOUR remedies constituting his Special Treatment known as The Slocum System.

Whatever your disease, one or more of these four medicines will be of benefit to you.

According to the exigencies of your case, fully explained in the treatise given free with the free medicine, you may take one, or any two, or three, or all four, in combination.

A cure is certain if the simple directions are carefully followed.

The medicines are especially adapted for those who suffer from weak lungs, coughs, sore throat, catarrh, grip, consumption, and other pulmonary troubles.

But they are also of wonderful efficacy in the building of weak systems, in purifying the blood, making flesh, and restoring to weak, sallow people rich and healthy constitutions and complexions.

Female troubles and the many ailments of delicate children are speedily relieved.

The basis of the entire system is a flesh-building, nerve and tissue-renewing food.

Every invalid and sick person needs strength. This food gives it.

Many people get the complete system for the sake of the Food, which they themselves need, and give away the other three preparations to their friends.

The second article is a Tonic. It is good for weak, thin, dyspeptic, nervous people—for those who have no appetite, who need bracing up.

Thousands take only the Food and the Tonic.

The third preparation is a medicinal healing Jelly, in a patent collapsible tube. It cures catarrh. It heals all irritation of the nose, throat, and mucous membrane. It gives immediate relief. It is also a dainty application for sore lips, sunburn, rough skin, etc.

Perhaps a million people need this jelly without any of the other articles.

The fourth article is an Expectorant and Cough Cure—the only one that can positively be relied upon. Contains no dangerous drugs, and is absolutely safe for children. Goes to the very root of the trouble, and not merely alleviates, but cures.

The four together form a panoply of strength against disease in whatever shape it may attack you.

THE FREE OFFER.

To obtain these four FREE invaluable preparations, illustrated above, all you have to do is to write, mentioning the Gospel Advocate, in which you read this article, to DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 98 Pine Street, New York, giving your name and full address. The free medicine will then be sent you, in the hope that if it does you good you will recommend it to your friends.

The largest toy factory in the world is in New York, where playthings in tin are manufactured literally by the million. Two steamships, laden each with five thousand tons of sugar, left Java on September 1, 1900, bound for the Delaware breakwater, their course being via the Suez Canal, the Mediterranean Sea, and the North Atlantic Ocean. They arrived at the breakwater, finishing a race of fifteen thousand miles, within four hours of each other.

The metal mining companies of this country, as reported in the Mining Journal, paid in dividends during the last ten months amounting to forty-two million five hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars. During those ten months the highest dividend payers were the copper companies.

By order of the London School Board, the teachers in all the schools of that city have tested the sight of the children under their care. Over 23 per cent were found to have defective vision. These children were given notices in which the announcement was made to their parents that the pupils were suffering from serious defective vision, and that their eyes should be treated by oculists without delay.

A number of families of Lawrence County, Tenn., are making preparations to move to Texas and Indian Territory. The exodus to those points is caused by the short crops in that section. Many have gone from that vicinity during the past few years and quite a good number have returned, while others write advising their friends to remain where they are, and state that they would return if they had the means.

Reports from Mr. Conger record the progress of the efforts being made at Peking to bring the foreign ministers into agreement as to a basis of negotiations with China. The State Department declines to make public any details of the deliberations of the ministers. However, the statement is reiterated that progress is being made toward a satisfactory conclusion, and it is hoped that within a short time it will be possible to at least initiate the formal negotiations with Chinese plenipotentiaries.

The renewed activity in iron and steel in the Birmingham (Ala.) district has brought an advance of fifty cents per ton, restoring the price to what it was before the recent cut. Sales of something like thirty thousand tons of pig iron are reported as being made by the Tennessee Coal, Iron, and Railroad Company within a few days. In the steel market the demand for billets is heavy. State Mine Inspector J. Deb Hooper reports an unprecedented coal output last month.

The Supreme Court decided in the case of Coile vs. the city of Knoxville (Tenn.) that Coile, who was the city physician and who claimed extra compensation amounting to four thousand dollars for attending small-pox cases during an epidemic, could not recover in the absence of a specific contract. The court held that attendance in these cases was part of his business as city physician, and although extra hazardous, he was bound by his acceptance of the position to perform any professional duty demanded.

An interesting result of the census returns is that the "center of population" remains practically stationary. Ten years ago it was near Greensburg, a small town in the southern part of Indiana, or exactly in latitude 39 degrees, 11 minutes, and 56 seconds, and longitude 85 degrees, 32 minutes, and 53 seconds. In the past decade the country's population has increased thirteen million two hundred and twenty-five thousand, and, roundly speaking, half of this has been west of the point formerly fixed and half east of it.

The use of compressed air as a motor for street cars is meeting with favor in New York. They are said to move with much less noise than those run by electricity, especially as they pass the rail joints. When rounding a curve, you can scarcely hear them, and there is no jerk when the power is shut off. They stop in a much shorter length of track than the electric cars. When the trolley cars are getting under full headway, they are noisy; the air cars under full headway make little noise. They leave no electric current in the ground to moth-eat the water pipes.

Prof. H. V. Hilprecht, of the University of Pennsylvania, who has been exploring the mounds of ancient Nippur, in Asia Minor, for the past eleven years, reports the finding of the first Babylonian temple library that has ever been discovered, and the oldest and most important in the country. None of the documents found is younger than B. C. 2000, about the time of the sack of Nippur by the Elamites. Only one wing of the library has been excavated, but nearly eighteen thousand clay tablets have been recovered. The subjects of the texts include every period of literature known to the early Semitic peoples. The records will prove of great use in interpreting the life, religion, and arts of the Hebrews, and in differentiating the Babylonian from the Hebrew.

United States Indian Agent Shoenfelt, in charge of the Union Agency, whose jurisdiction comprises the five civilized tribes, protests in his annual report against unlawful occupation of the Indian lands and urges rigid congressional legislation to protect the Indian citizens against the encroachment of aggressive and grasping whites. Of two thousand complaints filed against noncitizens by Indians in the past fiscal year, a large majority were against white men who in the past had intruded themselves upon the Indians, and had gained their confidence to a sufficient degree to secure possession of their prospective allotments; and, after having secured possession, refused either to pay rent or to vacate, thus preventing the Indians from receiving any rents or profits therefrom.

The Cuban Constitutional Convention met in Havana on November 5, 1900. Governor General Wood, in opening the convention, said: "It will be your duty, first of all, to frame and adopt a Constitution for Cuba, and, when that has been done, to formulate what, in your opinion, ought to be the relations between Cuba and the United States. The Constitution must be adequate to secure stable, orderly, and free government. When you have formulated the relations which in your opinion ought to exist between Cuba and the United States, the Government of the United States will doubtless take such action as shall lead to a final and authoritative agreement between the people of the two countries to the promotion of their common interests. Under the order pursuant to which you have been elected and convened, you have no duty and no authority to take part in the present government of the island. Your powers are strictly limited by the terms of that order."

From a recent bulletin of the Agricultural Experiment Station of the University of Tennessee, at Knoxville, we quote the following result of an experiment with winter wheat: "The soil is a heavy red clay of good texture and slopes gently to the south. The land was sown in cow peas the year before, and is on dolomite or magnesian limestone, eleven hundred feet above the sea level and one hundred feet above the Tennessee River. The cow peas were cut and fed. The soil was fertilized with three hundred pounds of Tennessee acid phosphate and one hundred pounds of sulphate of potash per acre, harrowed in the day before planting the wheat. The land was broken with a disk plow, with a subsoiler attachment fifteen inches deep. It was well prepared and sown from September 15 to October 1. The dates of ripening of the different varieties were from June 9 to June 15. The stand was very uniform. Forty American sorts were grown and four Russian, but the yield of the latter was unsatisfactory. Some of them may do better when acclimated. Fulcaster made the highest yield, or 41.66 bushels per acre. In weight per measured bushel Velvet Chaff is first, sixty-one and one-half pounds."

For Sick Headache, Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. J. Wells, Nashville, Tenn., says: "It acts like a charm in all cases of sick headache and nervous debility."

A Bible and a newspaper in every house, a good school in every district—all studied and appreciated as they merit—are the principal support of virtue, morality, and civil liberty.—Franklin.

The Nashville Bible School thanks Brother Thomas Bingham, of the Leiper's Fork (Tenn.) neighborhood, for a copy of Lard's "Commentary on Romans" for the Bible School library.

It's Time Wasted

And strength wasted, to try to push back the rising tide with a broom. It's just as great a waste of time and a far more serious waste of strength to try to push back the rising tide of disease with the "nervines," "compounds" and "nerve foods" which simply drug the nerves into a drunken stupor. They make you feel good? So does whisky, while the feeling lasts, but the reaction is dangerous and deadly. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a temperance medicine. It contains no alcohol, opium, cocaine or other narcotic. It strengthens the body by purifying the blood and increasing the supply of that vital fluid. It heals diseases of the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition and thus removes the obstacles to a perfect nourishment of the whole body.

"Six years ago my stomach and heart troubled me so much I had to do something, as the doctors could not help me," writes Mrs. S. A. Knapp, of San Jose, California, Box 392. "I went to San Francisco and had treatment for catarrh of the stomach and was better for some time, then it came back. I then used Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets.' These medicines cured my stomach. I do not have the pain and indigestion as I did. It is very hard for me to tell you what I suffered before I commenced taking your valuable medicine. I recommend it to all the sufferers whom I meet."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets strengthen and stimulate the liver.

MISSISSIPPI.

Oak Ridge, October 30.—I have just closed a meeting at Renfro, one hundred miles east of this place. The meeting continued five days, with twelve additions to the one body and a prospect of many more to be added soon. I never saw people more anxious to hear the truth than those around Renfro. A good work is now opened up at that place, and I would be glad if a strong gospel preacher would locate in that part of the Lord's vineyard for a season, for one is needed badly. I was never treated better by any people than those about Renfro. E. SPENCER MARTIN.

TENNESSEE.

Dresden, November 3.—Our meeting of one week's duration closed yesterday at the water. Brother A. O. Colley did the preaching. We had a real interesting and profitable meeting. As the immediate results, four persons were added to the one body by primary obedience and two others took membership with the congregation. This was Brother Colley's fourth protracted meeting at Reavis' Schoolhouse, and each meeting has resulted well. Brother Colley is a good, faithful preacher of the gospel, and is satisfied to take the Bible, and it alone, and be governed by it. W. L. FOWLER.

Gainesboro, November 7.—On the third Sunday in October I began a meeting at Turkey Neck Bend, Monroe County, Ky., and continued over the following Sunday. I had large audiences, good attention, and good interest, but no additions. However, all seemed to enjoy the meeting very much. I had preached for this congregation several times before. Brother W. W. Hill and Brother V. F. Andrews are elderly men both in the congregation and in age. Their white locks and feeble voices bespeak much service done for their relatives and friends and for the Lord. The song service, conducted by one and another, was melodious and very comforting. The good deportment of all voices much refinement of both saint and sinner. It made me sad to find missing, by death, Sister Cally Hill, Sister Elizabeth Hill, Sister Virginia McMillin, Sister Emily Kerr, Sister Teka Biggerstaff, Sister Sally Kidwell, Sister Rhoda Lollar, Brother Douglas Andrews, Brother Alexander Williams, Brother Sherman Dodson, Brother I. G. Maxey, and Brother John K. McMillin. Most of the people in that community are well to do financially, and contribute liberally to the ministry. I enjoyed the hospitality of both the old and the young saints and sinners. I found some readers of the Gospel Advocate there, and I advised others to subscribe for it. I have preached at two other points since my last report—South Fork, Jackson County, where I baptized six persons, and Big Branch, in same county, where I baptized one person. HIRAM PHARRIS.

Comfort in God's Will.

A great secret of comfort lies in "Thy will, not mine." When we can say this, the struggle is over and the peace of God is keeping the heart in quietness and confidence. This was the secret of the comfort which came to our Lord himself in Gethsemane. He was face to face with the most terrible experience any soul ever met in this world. The record says he was "exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." "Being in agony, he prayed." The holy sufferer pleaded that the cup of bitter anguish now being held to his lips might pass. Never was more intense prayer offered to the Father. But amid the agonized pleading was heard the restraining word of submission: "Thy will, not mine, be done." There was something more important than the granting of the suppliant's request; it was that the purpose of God for him that hour should go on unhindered.

It is interesting to trace the course of the Gethsemane prayer and to see how the note of submission gains the ascendancy over the pleading for relief, until at length the struggle ends in perfect acquiescence and perfect peace. The first cry was: "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt." A little later Jesus returned again to his supplication, and we hear this prayer from his lips: "O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me except I drink it, thy will be done." The fierceness of the struggle in the sufferer's soul was being mastered by the spirit of submission. Soon the agony was over. The victory had been won. We have at least an echo of the comfort which filled the heart of Jesus in his word to Peter when that warm-hearted, but rash, disciple had drawn his sword to resist the betrayal and arrest of his Master: "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" There was no word now of supplication for the passing of the cup. Jesus had made way for his Father's will, and was comforted.

There is no other way by which true comfort can come to any heart in time of sorrow. So long as we cannot say, "Thy will, not mine, be done," we are still uncomfortable. Comfort is peace, and there is no peace until there is acquiescence in the will of God. Whatever the sorrow, therefore, if we would find divine comfort, we must seek to bring our will into quiet and complete harmony with our Father's will.

There are reasons why we should do this in every grief or sorrow. One is that God has a plan and a purpose for our life. There is something he would make of us, and something he would have us do. What this divine thought for our particular life is the divine life reveals. Every time we resist this will and refuse to accept it at any point we mar the beauty and completeness of our own life. God's purpose for us runs through whatever sorrows or sufferings there may be in our lot; in all our experiences God's will for us is the bringing out of his image in us. Only by acquiescence in the divine will can we have our life fashioned after this heavenly pattern.

Another reason why we should let God's will work without resistance, without complaining, in our life, is that God is our King and has a sovereign right to reign over us. In submission is rebellion. Not only should our submission be complete, without exception, in the smallest as well as in the greatest matters, but it should also be cheerful and songful. Chafing and murmuring grieve God. The moment we recognize the will of God in either a duty or a sorrow we should accept it with delight. In no other way can we please God and have his benediction of peace.

Another reason for submitting to the divine will in time of trouble is that God always seeks our good. He is our Father, and would never send into our life anything that would harm us, nor take from us anything that would leave us poorer or less blessed. We are sure, too, that his wisdom is perfect and that he knows what is really good for us. We do not know. The thing we are so eager to get, it may be, would do irreparable hurt to our truest life. The joy we so desire to keep, and which we think indispensable to our happiness, perhaps has done its full work for us and in us, and would better now be taken away. God knows what is best, and his will is not only perfect wisdom, but also perfect love. To resist it is to do harm to our own life; to reject it and insist upon having our own way would be to choose evil, not good, for ourself.

It does not seem to us that sorrow can be the bearer of blessing to us, yet there is no doubt that every grief or pain which comes brings a blessing wrapped in its dark folds. There is a marginal reading of one of the psalms which tells us that our burden is a gift—God's gift to us. Every burden that is laid upon us, however it may have become ours, carries, folded up in it, a gift of God. God's gifts are always good. To refuse to accept the burden would be to reject a gift of love from our Father and to thrust away a blessing sent for the enrichment of our life.

It is said that the first discovery of diamonds in South Africa was made by a gentleman who came upon some boys playing marbles. They were using large, rough pebbles for marbles, and one of these rolled to the tourist's feet. Something in the stone attracted his attention, and, picking it up, he tested it, finding in the rough crust a diamond of great value. The stern and severe experiences which we call "sorrows" conceal within their forbidding exterior diamonds of God's love and grace. We do not know how we are robbing ourselves when we refuse to accept the trials. Acquiescence in God's will is taking into our life the good which our Father is offering to us.

Or it may be that the will of God would take from us something which we would keep. We should always remember that God's love is the same, whether he is putting new gifts into our hands or taking away those we have learned to cherish. The good things which are so dear to us are his, not ours. They have only been lent to us for a time, and for a specific purpose. When their mission is finished God recalls them, and we may be sure that there is blessing in the recalling.

A beautiful story is told of a devout Jewish home in which were twin boys who were greatly beloved. In the absence of the father, both boys suddenly died. When the father returned, not knowing of the sorrow in his home, the mother met him at the door, and said: "I have had a strange visitor since you went away." "Who was it?" asked the father, not suspecting her meaning. "Five years ago," she answered, "a friend lent me two precious jewels. Yesterday he came and asked me to return them to him. What shall I do?" "Are they his," asked the father, not dreaming of her meaning. "Yes; they belong to him, and were only lent to me." "If they are his, he must have them again if he desires." Leading her husband to the boys' room, the wife drew down the sheet, uncovering the lovely forms, white as marble. "These are my jewels," said the mother. "God lent them to me, and now claims them again. What shall we do?" With a great sob, the father said, bowing his head: "The will of the Lord be done." That is the way to find God's comfort. He has a right to take from us what he will, for all our joys and treasures belong to him and are only given to us for a time. It was in love he gave them to us; it is in love that he takes them away. When we cease our struggle and in faith and love submit our will to his, peace flows into our hearts and we are comforted.

Thus it is that the secret of divine comfort is found in complete, quiet, and joyful yielding to the will of God. It does not make the pain of the sorrow less; it does not give back the loved one who has been called away; but it brings the heart into full accord with God, and thus gives sweet peace. "Thy will, not mine," ends all strife and struggle, and the soul rests in undisturbed calm on the bosom of God. We do not try to understand, we ask no more questions; we simply trust and leave all in our Father's hands, and are strangely, sweetly comforted.

We see not, know not. All our way is night; with thee alone is day. From out the torrent's troubled drift, Above the storm our prayer we lift: Thy will be done.

We take with solemn thankfulness Our burden up, nor ask it less, And count it joy that even we May suffer, serve, or wait for thee. Thy will be done.

—J. R. Miller, in Exchange.

How to be Beautiful.

"To look beautiful is a duty which the fair sex owe both to themselves and their friends," said one of the wise men of modern times, "and with the discoveries of modern scientists there is no good reason why they should not perform that duty. Every one should do all in his or her power to supplement Nature in adorning the person; and while it is true that a fine complexion is not given to all, yet the work of Nature, not always beautiful, may be improved upon in many ways." The many thousands who have been benefited by Dr. T. F. Gouraud's Oriental Cream, or Magical Beautifier, appreciate this, and know its value as a cosmetic. They know that a skin that is freckled, tanned, pimpled, or moth patched can be made like the newborn babe's. It has been recommended by physicians for those who will use toilet preparations, and the Board of Health has declared it free from all injurious properties. All druggists and fancy goods stores appreciate its value and keep it for sale. —Mail and Express, New York, September 8, 1898.

"No Difference."

"Put no difference between us and them." (Acts 15: 9.)
 God has included all in unbelief. He that breaks the law in one point is a lawbreaker, and is as much in need of a Savior as he who has broken the whole or every point in the law. That man who is out of Christ is as much a lost sinner as any other man who is out of Christ, no matter what his crimes may be. "But," says one, "I am not so bad as some I know." Perhaps not; but you are a lost sinner, and out of Christ you can never be anything else but a lost sinner. There is no difference. When the flood came, it took the big sinners and the little ones all together. There was no difference. All who were in the ark were saved. There was no difference. While the door of the ark stood open, it was as easy for one to go in as another. There was no difference. After the door was closed one could no more go in than another. There was no difference. So now the man out of Christ is lost, just as much as any other man or woman out of Christ. There is no difference. "What!" you say. "Will women be lost?" Yes; a woman who is a sinner—a woman out of Christ—will be lost, just the same as a man out of Christ. There is no difference.

Then do you inquire how you may get into Christ and be saved? Do what God has told you to do—not what some man says do, but what the Lord says do. He instructed his apostles to "preach the gospel to every creature" and to say: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) There is no difference. After Jesus had been in heaven for about forty years, he came to John, on the Isle of Patmos, and told him to write down this and send it out to the world: "Whosoever will may come." There is no difference—just any that will come. But we must come as Jesus directs. The man who does not want to come as Christ directs is not loyal and cannot be saved. All who do not obey shall be destroyed. There is no difference. (Read 2 Thess. 1; 7-9.)

To those who believed the gospel and who inquired what to do, Peter said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you . . . for the remission of sins." (Acts 2: 38.) Paul says: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.) Then to believe in Christ, repent of our sins, and be baptized puts us into Christ, and we are saved. Now, all who sincerely believe in Christ and who earnestly turn away from sin and are immersed in the name of the Lord come to salvation, as surely as the Bible is God's word. There is no difference. Big sinners and little sinners must all come in the same way. If a man is a great sinner, he is invited to come as readily as a little sinner. Saul of Tarsus, the murderer, was saved as readily and by the same process as Cornelius, the centurion, the best man that ever lived out of Christ. There was no difference.

"Prepare to meet thy God." All must meet him soon, and there is no way of escape; all must stand before the great white throne. All who stand there clothed in the righteousness of Christ will escape the consequences of sin; all who are not in Christ will be forever lost. There is no difference.

"The Word of Reconciliation."

"And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation." (2 Cor. 5: 18, 19.) In this language Paul seems to be reasoning in a circle, and with his strong, energetic mind under the inspiration of God he girdles the globe of Christian thought. In a strong way he strikes the very keynote of human redemption. Through Jesus Christ we have the marvels of mercy, the surprises of grace; we herein have a "quartet of wonders: "

1. The divine descent. "God was in Christ." One of the world's greatest wonders is the incarnation of Jesus Christ—the form of the form of man, clothed in the form of mortality, having to do with life's grave problems; yea, there is mystery and marvel that God was manifest in the flesh. Men have labored in vain to satisfy themselves why the great Jehovah should so prove his relation to man as to take his abode with him, learn his nature by contact, and respect his needs. This is a surprise of our Christian faith.

2. The divine intent. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." It was not enough for God to acquaint himself with man, but he seeks reconciliation with him. Here we have a picture of the divine using influence to restore that which is human to its normal condition—to wit, in communion with himself, whereon ease of conscience and a life of peace and satisfaction can be enjoyed. No one could think it strange for man to seek reconciliation with God, for the child that has had no respect for, but disregarded, parental law may well desire again to be closed in the fond embrace of parental love; the restoration would mean peace, hope, and life again to the erring, sinful, and rebellious child; but for God to seek reconciliation with man appears entirely out of order. The very suggestion becomes a wonder enshrined with unusual occurrences. The aggrieved Father asks favors of the aggravating son. O, thou impenitent heart, full of gall and bitterness, break forth under the spell of his love, cry aloud unto him, that he may hearken to thy cry! Be ye reconciled to-day.

The Father is waiting to-day;
There's room and to spare,
There is raiment to wear;
O, prodigal, don't stay away!

3. The divine remission. "Not imputing their trespasses unto them." Our sense of justice demands that law-breakers should pay the penalty of a broken law. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall not hear shall be cut off from among his brethren. For Christ's sake God no longer reckons the sinner guilty. No one has fully explored the wonders of human redemption. God's act of forgiveness cannot be otherwise than wonderful, while the terms upon which the forgiveness is based are unmistakably plain and positive. Then may I, with David, say: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?" Sinful and far from being upright he is; why should thou love and visit him? The interposition of divine power in human redemption and sin forgiveness is astonishing and wonderful. It can be measured only by God's infinite love.

4. The divine commission. "Hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation." The rich legacies of men are at times surprising, but it is more abundantly surprising that God should give unto us the word of reconciliation. This solves the mystery that has so long hung heavily as a pressure on the hearts of inquiring, sectarians. "Is my salvation dependent on mortal man?" "If I knew I was at all dependent on man for my salvation, I would not believe in God," etc.—these are very commonly used expressions by a few of our modern theologians. They do not at all seem to understand the divine commission of God to man, that God has ordained man to be instrumental in saving man. This, then, enables us to see and understand why Cornelius should send for Peter to tell him words whereby he and all his house should be saved and why Christ said unto Saul: "Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." Could he not tell him what to do as well as Ananias could? Why send a blind man a long distance, when it could be so easily accomplished without the going? Verily, Christ virtually taught the lesson that Paul has so deeply and plainly taught in all his writings—that God has "committed unto us the word of reconciliation." Between God and man his redeemed children stand. Christ's work was to reconcile God to man; our work is to persuade man to become reconciled to God. A wondrous mission, indeed! How transcendently important! Let us stand steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; for whatsoever we do in his name is not in vain, but helps to the crown. J. B. ASKEW.

Hero Worship.

The world worships its heroes. If a man has proved himself great as a military chieftain, the world showers upon him gifts while he lives and reveres his memory when dead.

AN great military men are supposed by the masses to go to heaven at death. It would almost amount to blasphemy to them to declare that their great generals are lost; yet, as men, they are no more in the sight of God than the poorest private who ever stood in line and answered to roll call. Military genius counts for nothing in heaven.

How came the hero to be so great in this world? You say he is a great general; he commanded armies and conquered nations. But did you ever stop to count the cost of his renown? Think of the good men slain, the widows' tears, and the orphans' cries; think of the homes devastated and of the ruin that has followed in his wake. Think you that the number of scalps of his fellow-beings worn at his belt would be a passport into eternal glory? What else has he to recommend him to heaven? Blood, tears, poverty, and distress created by him—this is all. There is no spirit of Christ in it at all.

When the world comes to look at things as God looks at them, the world will no longer idolize a legalized murderer; but it will love and reverence that character which is most Christlike, gentle, meek, quiet, and unselfish. J. T. POE.

Some Things About Society Advocates.

The Central Christian Register estimated that about ten thousand persons were in attendance at "our National Convention in Kansas City;" but it failed to "estimate" the total expense in the way of railroad fare, hotel bills, hall rent, and incidentals that it required to have this convention. It failed also to show how much valuable time was used by preachers in attending this convention that could have been used in doing some missionary preaching. The Register reported, a few days before the convention, a meeting which was closed in order that the preacher might attend this convention, and intimated that more persons would have been baptized if he had stayed. Many preachers are in favor of missionary work, if some other preacher will do it and some one else pay him for doing it.

It is very probable that if all the preachers who attended the convention had spent the time in preaching the pure gospel at some missionary point, free of charge (I do not suppose they got any pay to attend the convention), and all the money expended for the convention had been used to send other faithful preachers into such places, more people would have been saved as a direct result than have been reached by the societies in the whole year. But I have noticed that these convention preachers are not noted for going to mission points free of charge; they "pastorate," while the so-called "anti" preacher does that kind of work; and then they call him "antimissionary!" Let us compare results. The same paper reports that $144,368.53 was raised and expended for home missions. As a result of this expenditure, two hundred and two congregations were organized and sixteen thousand and nine persons were added to the church. Each addition cost the church a fraction over nine dollars. It is safe to say that those converted by preachers who do not work under boards do not cost one-third of nine dollars each. Many preachers would soon become wealthy at nine dollars for each baptism.

I submit a case in point. The statistical secretary reported that we are a religious body, comprising one million one hundred and forty-nine thousand nine hundred and eighty-two people. We who? Whom do they include in this number? Do they include all those who are opposed to societies, conventions, etc.? In truth, are these people of the Christian, or Disciple, Church one people with those who reject these human additions as expedients? Let us see.

In this town (Fayetteville, Ark.) the Christian church—once apostolic but now having all the modern inventions; consisting of "pastor," instrumental music, societies, etc.—decided to enlarge their house. This threw them out of a place to meet for a few months. What could they do? There is also in this town a congregation of the church of Christ. It has no "pastor" (it has pastors, elders), nor organ, nor societies, and does not believe in wasting time and money in sending delegates to a national convention. If these two congregations had been the same religious body, they could have met and worshiped with us. Did they do it? Nay, verily. They met for some time with the Cumberland Presbyterians. The members of each church (so I am informed by a member) taught in the Sunday school and deacons from each church passed the emblems. Did they consider us members of the same body? Hardly, or they would have met with us. I will ask a few questions:

1. Is baptism for the remission of sins?
2. Is immersion the only baptism?
3. If so, can people who have not been immersed be Christians?
4. Did they recognize the Cumberland Presbyterians as Christians in so mingling with them? They certainly did.
5. If they recognized the Cumberland Presbyterians as Christians, are they not hypocritical in posing before the world as a people who practice only immersion and teach that it is for remission of sins?
6. If they believe these doctrines, are they not hypocritical in recognizing as Christians the Cumberland Presbyterians, who neither believe nor practice them?
7. Have creeds, the mourner's bench, infant baptism, sprinkling and pouring, and salvation by prayer and faith only suddenly got to be right?

It may be, however, in the language of a certain "pastor" of this town, that the "pastor" of this Christian Church "doesn't know what he does believe." This would be charitable, if not complimentary. At any rate, his doctrine (if he has any) and his practice do not agree. Members of the body of Christ have the "same care one for another." They care more for the Presbyterians than they do for us; therefore, they are not of us, and should cease to count us in their statistical reports, and their societies should cease to beg us for money and quit abusing us for not giving it.

L. C. Wilson, a contributor to the Register, writes as follows: "Anything that opposes the spread of the gospel is of the devil; all antimissionary work opposes the spread of the gospel; therefore, all antimissionary work is of the devil. From this logical sequence there is no escape. But the saddest of all is the fact that some good persons are being led astray and are blinded by the miserable deception of this antimissionary spirit. . . . I have been in several communities that are cursed by this anti-ism. It is not only antimissionary, but antiorgan, anti-Sunday school literature, and in some places anti-Sunday schools. They spend more money for snuff and tobacco than they do for the spread of the gospel, and some of the dear sisters hang on the 'snuff stick' with more tenacity than they do the cross, because they knew much more about it, and it is more congenial to their carnal minds."

sion" ought also to be true enough to the Bible not to misrepresent people. I am pretty certain that is as great a sin as chewing tobacco or dipping snuff. Mr. Wilson's syllogism is logical, but his minor premise, as he must know, is a statement manufactured for the purpose. Who is opposed to missionary work? Simply nobody in the kingdom of Christ, and Mr. Wilson is not ignorant of the fact. What he should have said is that many are "antimissionary society" for the spread of the gospel. He no doubt would have said this but for the fact that it would have spoiled his syllogism and ruined his conclusion. Those people he styles "antimissionary," whom the statistical secretary counts in the number of "our people," are opposed to forming societies to spread the gospel, but believe that the church is the only society needed and that it should do this work. Is Mr. Wilson ready to affirm that the apostolic church had such societies for the spread of the gospel, or that they used an organ in worship, or had a modern Sunday school? I guess not. I presume the apostles were "antis," then. Was their work of the devil? It appears that the communities of Jerusalem, Corinth, Antioch, Ephesus, Rome, and others were "cursed by this anti-ism." By the way, this same L. C. Wilson once wrote, in Christian Work, that it was unscriptural to call the preacher the "pastor." The Register spoke of the preachers in Kansas City, where the convention was held, as "pastor" of this, that, and the other church. It would be well for Mr. Wilson to turn his antipastorism on these people. Let us see. Anything not authorized of God is of the devil; the pastor is not authorized of God (L. C. Wilson); therefore, the pastor is of the devil. Again, anything not authorized of God is of the devil; sectarianism is not authorized of God (Mr. Wilson teaches this); therefore, sectarianism is of the devil. Mr. Wilson should send word to the Christian pastor in this town.

It is very true that many who are opposed to the society chew tobacco, and do not give as much as they ought for the spread of the gospel. I think all Christians who use tobacco should quit, and nearly all of us should do more for the spread of the gospel. . . . society people the only tobacco? Well, hardly. . . . the only bad habit or useless expenditure people practice? How about a one-hundred-dollar dress, a ten-thousand-dollar mansion, and a fifty-thousand-dollar church house? How would it do to say some of these are of the devil? Well, they often are. "Anti-ism" is a good thing for the "pulling down of strongholds" and the "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

The Gospel Advocate from the time the subscription is received to January 1, 1902, for $1.50. Why wait till next January to begin reading this most excellent journal when you can read it, beginning now, at the same price? Now is the time to subscribe. Encourage the circulation of good literature by becoming a reader of the Gospel Advocate at once, if you are not already one, and also by getting as many of your friends to read it as possible. The editors of the paper will appreciate your patronage, will do all in their power to keep the paper up to its present high standard of excellence, and, if possible, make it better with each issue. The man who reads a first-class religious paper usually takes more interest in the cause of Christ than one who does not. We hope our readers will show this liberal offer to their friends and induce them to become regular subscribers to the Gospel Advocate. Who will be the first to send us a number of new subscribers on this proposition? We would like to have several thousand new readers before January 1, 1902. Address all orders to Gospel Advocate, Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

It cannot be emphasized too often that the kingdom of heaven belongs to the poor in spirit. If the word of God be preached and taught, what boots it if it fall not on good ground? It will benefit only the right sort of people, and the poor in spirit are that sort.

God sent the gospel to those that were in bondage—to Satan, thieves, murderers, adulterers, sinners of every type—and the gospel becomes God's power unto salvation to them. But one preliminary requirement is made of men—not righteousness, not good moral character, not wisdom, or depth of intellect, but poverty of spirit. In the Old Testament it is written: "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." (Isa. 66: 2.) Jesus says: "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." The class of people whom the gospel does not reach are those who feel no need of it and who cannot be brought to see that they are poor and miserable and blind and naked. Hence, it happens "that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called."

And you, brother—are you poor? Or have you a capital of private wisdom, fine theories, and speculations? Do you boast of your opinions? Do you belong to that class of egotists that around the fire-side and at public places tell, with self-satisfied smile, that they have "ideas and convictions of their own," and perhaps pride themselves of a little infidelity? Stop and consider. Your course may shut you out effectually from all perception of truth. Woe is to the man whose windows are so darkened by earthly conceit that the light of heaven cannot break through.

How long does one have to remain poor in spirit? Until he has learned some passages of scripture and is able to preach a few sermons? Until he is so well posted that he can outargue everybody? Until when? Simply always. We must always seek after truth; therefore we must remain poor in spirit unto the end. Alas for the pride and presumption that tinge so often the utterances of press and pulpit! How many preach and write to exhibit their own shrewdness! How many use the word of God only to justify their own theories and creeds, and pervert it, abuse it, most scandalously where it disagrees with their own theology!

Says the Octographic Review: "Perhaps Mr. Campbell never met a more reckless, insolent opponent than Dolphus Skinner, with whom he discussed the doctrine of 'Universal Salvation.' Mr. Skinner's gross ignorance and consummate impudence made him difficult to be refuted effectively before a popular audience. His chief weapon was personal abuse, and his main defense against Mr Campbell's relentless logic was a set of contemptuous phrases that betokened a lack of training in both language and good manners." Skinner is not the only one of that kind. Their name is "Legion." Only the sincerest love of the truth can save the common people from being deceived by their cunning insolence.

What a pile of trouble the Adventist commentators on the story of the rich man and Lazarus are having! It is very unfortunate to have a doctrine that is flatly contradicted by the teaching of Christ. To explain away the Scriptures cannot be a very pleasant task, and although they seem to go at it smilingly, we fear it is the smile of the circus contortionist that hides the terrible exertion.

"It would be a great blessing to the world, especially to the uneducated, if all of the learned men of the various denominations would preach what the Bible says and what they know its plain teaching is, instead of exalting their creeds." (Ian Maclaren.) That is the need of to-day. When Paul besought the Corinthian brethren to speak the same thing and to be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment, it was but another way of saying: "Confine yourselves to the word of God." Paul knew and we know that no people can agree on opinions and fine deductions and speculations of men; neither can they agree on their personal tastes and preferences, for they are all differently constituted. But why should they not be agreed on the word? There is but one faith; why are religious people divided?

In these times of discord and confusion devout people often wish themselves back to the days of the apostles, whose preaching was to a certainty true and unadulterated. They hear one preacher prove a doctrine and another contradict it, and sigh: "O, that we were among that fortunate throng that heard Peter and the other apostles preach with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven! Then we could know what truth is." All that while it does not occur to them that Peter is still preaching and that his words are faithfully given in the New Testament. You can be just as fortunate as the people of Jerusalem; only read, believe, and obey what the apostles taught then, and let the creeds and theories of men alone.

Some papers think that the cause of Christianity in China has been greatly injured by the conflicting faiths and teaching of the Christian missionaries. Some even go so far as to propose that only one denomination should take the work in China in hand. But then comes the perplexing question: Which one? And if but one doctrine shall be preached there, which shall it be?

It is certain that the cause of Christ is hindered by the discord of religious teachers, both in China and right in our midst as well. Jesus said: "Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us: that the world may believe that thou didst send me." (John 17: 20, 21, R. V.) The heathens will not be converted by conflicting doctrines. What shall we do therefore? Elect one "orthodox denomination" to take charge of them? That would never do. The other denominations could not conscientiously agree to that, even if they were so inclined for expediency's sake or other reasons. What, then? Shall we unite on a particular doctrine? Exactly; that is the only way. Now, what shall it be? Let it be "the apostles' doctrine." If they are willing to preach what the apostles preached, they will be able to present the heathen with a true doctrine, in which they all "speak the same thing." I will tell them, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," as Paul did (Acts 16: 31); "Repent ye therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord" (Acts 3: 19, R. V.); "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2: 38, R. V.); and, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy [your] sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22: 16, R. V.) So were sinners taught in apostolic days. Is it satisfactory? Then if any dispute should arise as to who should have the new converts made by the apostles' doctrine and to whose church they should belong, perhaps we could agree again on letting them belong to none of the denominations, but simply let them stand on the same basis, creed, and name with the church of God at Jerusalem and at Corinth and at Ephesus; instruct them to continue steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in breaking of bread, and in prayers. They need no join no denominational body, for the Lord adds them to the church—his church—"as it is written." (Acts 2: 41-47.) This is the only true solution of the Christian union question, and it is practicable, if men will lay aside the sectarian spirit.

The Western Recorder writes: "There is no conflict between Christian unity and denominational faithfulness. When the Savior prayed that his people might be one, he did not ask that they might be untrue to their convictions as to truth and duty, but that, in spite of differences, conscientiously maintained, they might love each other and cooperate in efforts for the advancement of his kingdom. The sentimental unity which consists chiefly in abuse of denominations, and pours contempt upon even the most sacred convictions of Christian people, finds no warrant in God's word."

We see here the sentiments of the Western Recorder. The next question is: Are they correct? "Denominational faithfulness" seems to us but another term for partyism. Certainly, all religious people ought to be true to their convictions; but what right has a professed follower of Christ to religious convictions outside of the Bible? "Whosoever goeth onward, and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God." Surely, if we all speak as the oracles of God, we need no "denominational faithfulness," for we have the faith of the gospel. No man will smother any true convictions in teaching the word of Christ and his apostles; and as for the false convictions, they ought to be smothered. This brings us again to the one remedy against divisions and denominations—the truth. "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." The subtle arts of interpretations, the quibblings, the distinctive partisan doctrines—they are doing the mischief. Preach the whole counsel of God, and nothing else, and denominations must disappear.

What about the conscientious convictions of the Jewish brethren, who taught a man must be circumcised to be saved? (Acts 15.) Were they not contrary to the spirit of unity? Did the apostles pass them over in silence and love, because they were "conscientiously maintained?" What of the doctrine that the resurrection was past already? (2 Tim. 2: 16-18.) Is not all adding to or taking from the word of God, whether conscientious or otherwise, condemned? Let us take heed to teach God's word, and unity will come. Then will no denominational faithfulness be needed, but union will exist among all that walk by the word. As for denominations, parties, factions, and divisions, Paul severely condemns them. (See Gal. 5: 19-21, R. V.)

Abusing others and pouring contempt on their most sacred convictions is rightly discountenanced by the Western Recorder. The servant of the Lord must be meek and gentle, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves. But some have become so sore that a mere statement of fact strikes them as abuse, and a rebuke as utter contempt. No one loved more and was meeker than Jesus; yet he uttered the bitterest invectives against the Pharisees. Paul instructs Titus to rebuke the Cretan brethren sharply, that they may be sound in the faith. When men obstinately continued in a false course, the apostles told them where they stood and what they were, without euphemism. Let us not get so good that we shall be above following these examples; only let us see to it that love, and not hatred or malice, be behind all our utterances.

"Grit" and "grip" are small, but significant, words. They mean much when embodied in action. He in whom they find illustration is no weakling or failure; he is animated by an invincible spirit and by a steady grasp of the situation; he holds on under difficulty and masters opposition; he endures and triumphs. Grit and grip are needed in all life's relations, but especially in the pulpit. The modern preacher must stand by God's truth loyally and firmly and present it fully and faithfully, come what may. He is to show special tenacity and adherence to the gospel at a time when many are calling for something else and when his mettle as a loving, zealous, and fearless ambassador of Jesus Christ is being tested.—Presbyterian.

Christian Character.

An able and well-known writer says: "The noblest contribution which any man can make for the benefit of posterity is that of a good character; the richest bequest which any man can leave to the youth of his native land is that of a shining, spotless example." This is in strict keeping with the admonition of our blessed Master: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

The most effective way of teaching is by example. Example alone is better than precept alone. The most successful way is to combine the two. The object of every true teacher, or preacher, is to do good and glorify God. The royal road to success is to heed Paul's admonition to Timothy, "Keep thyself pure," in the first place; then to faithfully and prayerfully study God's holy word and earnestly present it to the people. What we need is more consecrated preachers who live pure and chaste lives before the people. Some talented preachers fail because the people have little or no confidence in them. What a shame! Paul says: "Let no corrupt [filthy] communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers." (Eph. 4: 29.) Again: "But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth." (Col. 3: 8.) The man that is truly spiritually minded heeds these and all other admonitions of the sacred word of God. I am slow to believe that the preacher who indulges in filthy communications is really a safe leader.

True life is active and consists in being "about our Father's business." To eat and sleep and go on from day to day in pursuit of worldly treasures is not life in its truest and best sense, but mere existence. Paul says: "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." (Rom. 14: 7, 8.) Here is, beautifully expressed, my idea of real, true life. The Christian should consecrate himself—body, soul, and mind—to his Master's work. Listen to the grand old apostle again: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." (Rom. 12: 1, 2.) This precludes all selfishness and self-will. The selfish and self-conceited man can never be a true benefactor to mankind, nor find favor with God. The true Christian seeks to uplift his fellow-man and honor God. This requires great self-sacrifice and self-abnegation, but it brings a rich reward.

Circumstances, while they do not entirely control our lives, may and do greatly shape our characters and fix our destinies; hence the necessity of God's calling Abraham out from among his idolatrous surroundings. It is the duty of all Christians to make their surroundings as favorable as possible, for "evil communications corrupt good manners." (1 Cor. 15: 33.) The fact that circumstances change our characters and fix our destinies is strikingly illustrated in the life of King Saul. Saul, as the son of Kish, was modest, humble, submissive, and obedient; Saul, as king, was stubborn, rebellious, and self-willed. His reign opened up brightly, and everything without promised a glorious career; but it ended in shame and disgrace. Nothing was in the way, except Saul's own selfishness and self-will. True success lies along the line of humbly and submissively bowing to God's ways. This leads to true exaltation. Jesus said: "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." (Luke 14: 11.)

Jesus Christ said: "The field is the world." What a vast field! Very few people, I fear, have any adequate conception of the extent of the meaning of this expression of our blessed Master. Can you grasp it, dear reader? The world's population is estimated at something over one billion four hundred million. How long would it take you to count them, one by one, allowing ten hours a day and counting one per minute? How many die every year, if it be true that at every heart beat, a soul takes its flight from time to eternity? "Every time the pendulum swings," it is said, "some freed spirit goes to its final reward." Allowing four feet for the width of a grave, enough people die in a year and a half to encircle the earth with graves. Think of one billion four hundred million souls. Yet those that tread the face of the earth are but a handful compared to the myriads who sleep beneath its bosom. Still some Christians can find nothing to do in this great field. Those claiming to be followers of Jesus are thought to be about four hundred million. This leaves one billion living in rebellion and sin, "without God and without hope in the world." Terrible thought! One billion people on the road to hell! It is enough to make one shudder. But this is a conservative estimate when we consider that a great number of those counted as Christians are doomed to the same destiny. The sin lies at your door and mine. Are you willing to do your part, in God's appointed way, in sending the "staff of life" to those hungering souls?

A noted Southern writer, it seems, is greatly concerned about the "race problem," referring, of course, to what is to be done with the colored race. The race that should most interest us, it seems to me, is not confined to our dark-skinned neighbors alone, but the whole human race. The world at large is running wild over carnal things to the exclusion of spiritual things. Paul teaches that to be carnally minded results in death—eternal, spiritual death. Why? "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." (Rom. 8: 7.) On the other hand, to be spiritually minded is "life and peace." Hear the inspired writer again: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." (Rom. 8: 1.) What a precious promise is this! How it thrills the heart of every true child of God! My dear brother, be not deceived. If you are walking after the flesh, hell, with all its horrors, will be your final home. A terrible thought it would be to me to think that my weary spirit must writhe in unceasing torment while the unending years of eternity roll—no cessation of anguish and pain, no sympathy, no hope. Here Hope, that "sly enchantress," ever whispers, "It is better farther on;" but after the judgment the star of Hope to the wicked shall go down forever in irrevocable darkness and gloom. THEO. H. HUMPHREYS.

Vessels unto Honor and Dishonor.

The whole earth is the Lord's workshop, and every man and woman serves him as vessel and instrument. There are instruments of righteousness and instruments of unrighteousness, vessels unto honor and dishonor. "Now in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some unto honor, and some unto dishonor. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, meet for the master's use, prepared unto every good work."

God has a great work to accomplish. All that the holy prophets have spoken beforehand must come to pass. The world must be raised and purified; good must triumph over evil; the kingdom of Christ must fill the earth and the lands become replete with the glory and wisdom of God, as waters cover the sea; sin and darkness must be driven out; and ultimately God's will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven. God sits upon the circle of the heavens and overlooks the field of action. Every man, according to his various capacity and bent, is used, and must figure, good or bad, in the drama. If they are fit to do good, God leads them to do it willingly in service to him. They shall have a reward. If they are evil, God uses their evil turn and even hardens them to do things which eventually will work glory to his name and good to all good men; but the evil man that was used as a vessel unto dishonor shall perish in his wickedness.

We understand, indeed, that God is able to stop the present course of the world by miracle and do all his will by force. While he has in times past miraculously interfered and will probably do so again in the future at critical periods, this method of directing the current of human history has been rather exceptional. But we are assured in the Scriptures that God's eyes are going to and fro upon the earth, and that he avails himself of every element of human nature to do his purpose. Faith, love; righteousness, are turned to account in his plans; envy, hatred, rebellion, are utilized to further his cause. He separated and cleansed to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works—his church, in which he designed to be glorified. They are his friends and avowedly work with him and for him. Yet in his enemies also he will find glory; in their willful ignorance and hardness of heart they accomplish such works as they are fit for. Their very wrath shall be to his praise, and the remainder he restrains. (See Ps. 76: 10.)

There is no thought so vain as that of the wicked who thinks to bring to naught God's plans or to hinder God's work by his wickedness and rebellion. There is no escape from being instruments in God's hand. Though a man follow his own will, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, a child of disobedience, God, by his unfathomable wisdom, infinitely outwits him, overrules him, and turns the wicked designs to his (God's) own advantage. In Goethe's "Faust," Mephistopheles, a member of the hellish clan itself, describes himself as "a part of that power that always planneth evil and always worketh good." This is true. The Scriptures show that even the devil himself is an unwilling minister for good to them that love God and a necessary factor in the benevolent plans of the Almighty.

It is almost amusing to behold how God uses the proud, haughty kings, who think to follow their own course, despising authority, as we would use the men in a chess game. When they become inflated with a sense of their own importance and boastfully would lift themselves up against the God of heaven, he that sitteth in the heavens laughs them to scorn. With another of his instruments he overthrows them suddenly. Of this a fair example is exhibited in the book of Isaiah: "Ho Assyrian," cries the prophet, as God's spokesman, "the rod of mine anger, the staff in whose hand is mine indignation! I will send him against a profane nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets." But the Assyrian never dreamed that God was doing all that and he was but a tool. He did it even against God, for he thought to overthrow Jehovah, as he did the idols of other nations. "Howbeit he meaneth not so [he does not mean to carry out God's plan of vengeance]; . . . but it is in his heart to destroy, and to cut off nations not a few. For he saith, Are not my princes all of them kings? is not Calno as Carchemish? is not Hamath as Arpad? is not Samaria as Damascus?" Calno, Carchemish, Hamath, Arpad, Samaria, and Damascus—all these cities had alike fallen under the power of the king of Assyria. He has become so fat now that he is entirely independent, and will, at his leisure, wipe the other cities, with their gods, including the God of Jerusalem, from the face of the earth. He says: "As my hand hath found the kingdoms of the idols, whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem and of Samaria; shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and her idols?"

Drive away, Assyrian! The Lord is using you now as a rod to chastise his people; but your hour, too, is coming. "Wherefore it shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks. For he hath said, By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I am prudent; and I have removed the bounds of the peoples, and have robbed their treasures, and I have brought down as a valiant man them that sit on thrones: and my hand hath found as a nest the riches of the peoples; and as one gathereth eggs that are forsaken, have I gathered all the earth: and there was none that moved the wing, or that opened the mouth, or chirped." This is the Assyrian's version of it.

Now God speaks to the braggart: "Shall the ax boast itself against him that heweth therewith? shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it? as if a rod should shake them that lift it up, or as if a staff should lift up him that is not wood." The staff does not lift the man, but the man lifts the staff; the rod does not shake him that uses it, but he shakes the rod. As the ax and the saw and the rod are in the hand of a man, so is the Assyrian in God's hand—a tool, a cudgel, to chastise his people; and with all his rage and all his boasting, not one sparrow could he kill more than the Lord had designed.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord, the Lord of hosts, O my people that dwellest in Zion, be not afraid of the Assyrian: though he smite thee with the rod, and lift up his staff against thee, after the manner of Egypt. For yet a very little while, and the indignation shall be accomplished, and mine anger, in their destruction. And the Lord of hosts shall stir up against him a scourge, as in the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb: and his rod shall be over the sea, and he shall lift it up after the manner of Egypt. And it shall come to pass in that day, that his burden shall depart from off thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing." (Isa. 10: 24-27, R. V.)

In similar manner spoke God concerning Babylon: "Thou art my battle-ax and weapons of war: and with thee will I break in pieces the nations; and with thee will I destroy kingdoms; and with thee will I break in pieces the horse and his rider; and with thee will I break in pieces the chariot and him that rideth therein; . . . and with thee will I break in pieces governors and deputies. And I will render unto Babylon [when that is accomplished] and to all the inhabitants of Chaldea all their evil that they have done in Zion in your sight, saith the Lord. Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth: and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain. And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be desolate forever, saith the Lord." (Jer. 51: 20-26, R. V.)

Wonderful dealings of God! His very enemies contribute to his exaltation, unknowingly, by the deeds of their own free will. We all must suffer and toil while we are here. Shall we do so for him, with purpose of heart, or against him, as rebels, to be vessels unto dishonor? There is no medium ground. "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad," said the Son of God. They that are with him are his children, whose is the hope of eternal life; they that are against him fall into condemnation. But whether with him or against him, their works go to further God's purposes.

When the cedars of Lebanon were felled by Hiram's workmen, the long, straight timber was hewed and dressed to go into the temple of God. Much of the tree was not fit for that honorable use, but was no doubt utilized by somebody, according to the fitness of the various pieces, for cabinetwork, for furniture, for shingles, for posts, for stakes, and for firewood. So does God use the material of the human family, according to their various capacity, some for vessels unto honor, some for vessels unto dishonor. But man has one tremendous privilege: he can purge himself, by God's grace, and become purified, meet for the Master's use, a vessel unto honor. We can accept his offer of mercy and peace, though in times past we were rebels, and work with him and for him to his glory and to our eternal happiness.

Our Exchanges.

BE CHEERFUL.

We should train ourselves to see the good things, the bright things of life. There are few habits commoner, even among Christians, than this of seeing and remembering unpleasant things and being blind to and forgetting the pleasant things, and there is no habit which is more inimical to cheerfulness.

The truth is, there are in the ordinary life a thousand pleasant things to one that is unpleasant. It is a shame, therefore, to let the one roughness of pain spoil for us all the gladness of a thousand good things, the one discordant note mar for us all the music of the grand symphony.—Forward.

UNIVERSALISM.

Universalism is based upon perversions of plain passages of scripture, and is in direct conflict with the general course of nature. It concedes, indeed, that the righteous shall enjoy eternal happiness, but contends that the wicked shall enjoy it likewise. The advocates of universal salvation are not logical, but merely declamatory. They can depict the miseries of the damned and contrast them with the power and love of God; but God is just as well as loving, and destructive as well as good. He has promised to save those who obey the gospel and continue faithful unto the end, but all the wicked will he destroy.—Octographic Review.

ALL CAN GIVE A SMILE.

In this world of care and sorrow, how cheering is the knowledge that we have at least one friend who will not fail us in his friendship or worth, whether or not the form of adversity or the smile of fortune accompanies us through life! Life teems with unnecessary pain, and for every living soul there is work to do, effort to make, sorrow to alleviate.

No day in the comparatively short time allotted to us here on earth should pass without some attempt, however feeble, to lessen the load of suffering pressing so unequally on the lives of those around us.

All can do some little, and if each soul that has suffered would take a share in the removing or lessening the burden of another, life would be other than it is.

An old writer beautifully says: "All can give a smile." Who does not know the brightness which some faces bring whenever they appear! The smile of kindly recognition, the acknowledgment of existing suffering—all are conveyed by a glance, and none can tell how often the effort to be cheerful has helped a weaker brother to endure.—Christian Life.

INFLUENCE.

A characteristic story is told of Spurgeon that when an independent young woman objected to assenting to those questions in the marriage service which implied the superiority and authority of the man over the woman, he said to her, in a fatherly way: "Come, now, let him be the head and do you be the neck and turn him which way you please."

This is a good illustration of the supreme potency of influence. Merely nominal precedence or authority does not amount to much. Almost every head has a neck that can turn it. How often the wife proves to be the ruling, directing spirit of a household, instead of the husband and father! Who has not known organizations in which the real controlling power was wielded by some member or members not officially recognized? The essential thing to seek is the power of influence—not so much the headship as the neckship of affairs. Anybody can be a figurehead, provided he gets a chance in that capacity; but it takes genuine merit and faculty to be what is called "a controlling spirit." Let no mean, petty spirit of envy actuate us in our dealings with others. Position, outward honor, need not, and very often does not, mean real power, real supremacy. That belongs to influence—the quiet, subtle force which moves so-called "authority" as the neck of a man moves his head.—Forward.

BEWARE.

We know of preachers who proclaim, publicly and privately, that "we stand where the Campbells, Stone, Smith, and all those worthies stood." And said preachers boldly advocate the use of instruments of music in the worship, Endeavor Societies, and numerous other societies to do the work of the church. I seriously doubt their standing with Campbell, Smith, Stone, etc. But suppose they do, or ever did, stand with those noble pioneers of the restoration; I esteem it a greater privilege to stand with Christ and his apostles.

The great motto, "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; and where it is silent, we remain silent," is much lauded by the class of preachers above mentioned. To see how near they put it in practice, let us listen to one of them that preached recently for the digressive faction at Boonesboro, Mo. Speaking of the Jews, he said they were so narrow-minded they would not intermarry with the nations around them. Reader, turn to Lev. 18; Deut. 7: 1-3; Josh. 23: 12, and learn if that preacher told the truth. This same preacher, in reorganizing this faction, received into his fellowship individuals who were for years profane, lewd, and indiscreet in their lives, without any acknowledgment of their sins. If this is "speaking where it [the Bible] speaks," I do not know where to find it. The cause is a falling one that, in order to be maintained, has to be bolstered up by falsehood and deception, and spurred on by spite and envy and jealousy. Beware!—Octographic Review.

LYDIA'S HEART OPENED.

Beginning with Acts 6: 16, it would appear that Paul did not give much attention to Galatia; but the veil is lifted in the letter to the Galatians, and it is very evident that the great apostle to the Gentiles gave considerable time and attention to this district. In Gal. 4:—13, 14, R. V., we read: "Ye did me no wrong: but ye know that because of an infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you the first time: and that which was a temptation to you in my flesh ye despised not, nor rejected; but ye received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus." From this it appears that some affliction of Paul was the cause that led him to preach the gospel to the Galatians. It is more than probable that this affliction was the thorn in the flesh, given to him that he should not be exalted overmuch. This affliction had troubled him no little, for he says: "Concerning this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he hath said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my power is made perfect in weakness." (2 Cor. 12: 8, 9, R. V.) While Paul doubtless feared that his affliction would unfit him for work among the Galatians, yet his weakness caused him to be more efficient in preaching the gospel; for while he told the story of the cross with power, he did it with a tenderness and pathos that touched the hearts and won the confidence of his hearers. Men must feel their own weakness before they can give God the praise and the glory so richly due him. Hence Paul says: "Wherefore I take pleasure in weaknesses, in injuries, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong." (2 Cor. 12: 10, R. V.) How beautifully does Paul's work among the Galatians exemplify this truth! They received him as though he had been an angel or the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul further says of the reception they gave him: "For I bear you witness, that, if possible, ye would have plucked out your eyes and given them to me." (Gal. 4: 15, R. V.) How often is it true that when the faithful minister thinks he is the weakest, he is the strongest in winning sinners to Christ!

It appears here that Paul's own judgment was much at fault during this period. He purposed to preach the word in Asia, but was forbidden to do so by the Holy Spirit; then Paul and his company attempted to go into Bithynia, but "the Spirit of Jesus suffered them not; and passing by Mysia, they came down to Troas." Thus it will be seen that the Spirit of God overruled the purpose of inspired men when their judgment was at fault. When their judgment prompted them to do the right thing, the Holy Spirit did not interfere with their conduct. Oftentimes they did not understand the condition of the country that they proposed to visit or the readiness with which the people would accept the gospel of Christ. The Spirit was ever present with them to see that they made no mistake. It now appears evident why the Spirit turned Paul aside from the fields in which he proposed to labor: "And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There was a man of Macedonia standing, beseeching him, and saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us. And when he had seen the vision, straightway we sought to go forth into Macedonia, concluding that God had called us for to preach the gospel unto them."

Paul, inspired as he was, always abandoned his own purposes and obeyed promptly the commands of the Spirit. What folly for uninspired men now to refuse to do so!

The same Providence that was leading Paul and his companions gave them a propitious time to sail from Troas, a pleasant voyage, and a safe arrival at Philippi, which is a city of Macedonia, the first of the district. This was not the chief city of Macedonia, as rendered in the Common Version, for Thessalonica was and is the chief city of Macedonia. The meaning probably is that it was the most famous city of Macedonia, as it was the scene of the great battle in which Mark Antony defeated Brutus and Cassius.

This was a strange city to Paul, Silas, Timothy, and Luke, the first to be visited on the continent of Europe. There was no Jewish synagogue into which they might enter to preach Jesus to the people. A familiar face was not to be seen. The prospects were forbidding and not inviting from a human standpoint. As they were tarrying in the city certain days, and souls are precious and time is fleeting, they could not afford to be idle. So Luke tells us: "On the Sabbath day we went forth without the gate by a riverside, where we supposed there was a place of prayer; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which were come together."

In the midst of uninviting prospects, they did not become despondent and sit down and wait for the people to come to them. They did not wait for something to turn up, but sought an opportunity to teach the people. The consecrated soul, in love with Christ, never misses an opportunity to tell the lost and hungering of the Christ.

God had been leading Paul all this time in order to bring him face to face with this band of devout women. The eunuch was searching for the light; so God sent his angel and Spirit to Philip in order that he might preach Jesus to him. Cornelius was a devout man; so an angel came in answer to his prayer to direct him to send for Peter, who should tell him words whereby he and his house should be saved. Doubtless in answer to the prayers of these women God has led Paul all the way from Phrygia and Galatia that he may preach the gospel to them, which is the power of God to salvation. If it had been necessary, God would have sent every angel out of heaven rather than fail to bring an inspired teacher to these individuals. The Lord Jesus Christ had commissioned men to preach the gospel to every creature. God will see that the man who is honestly seeking for the truth does not fail to find it. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it be of God, or whether I speak from myself." (John 7: 17, R. V.)

The Lord has led Paul to this riverside and brought him face to face with this company of women. He is preaching the gospel to them. "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) "Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, one that worshiped God, heard us; whose heart the Lord opened, to give heed unto the things which were spoken by Paul."

Now the order is clearly this: (1) Paul preached; (2) Lydia heard; (3) the Lord opened her heart; (4) she obeyed the commands as given by Paul. To "give heed" unto the things spoken by Paul might mean to listen to, to concentrate the mind upon, the things taught by him. Again, to "take heed to" means to practically observe the things that are taught, to obey the commands that are given. In this latter sense it must be used here, for she had already listened to Paul; she had so concentrated her mind on the gospel theme that as a result the Lord opened her heart. As Paul unfolded the beauties of the gospel, as she listened to the gospel story in its beauty and completeness, her heart and mind are enlarged, expanded to a more just conception of the subject. After hearing Paul her mind is enlightened so that her heart is filled with love for the Lord Jesus Christ. "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple." (Ps. 119: 130.) To give heed to the things spoken by Paul was to do them. Immersion was one of those things spoken by Paul, as is evident from the manner in which Luke introduces the phrase, "and when she was baptized," as if her baptism was already implied in the preceding remark. If this had not been his meaning, he would have simply stated, as an additional fact, that she was baptized.

The facts being now before us, it is very evident that no immediate influence of the Spirit was exerted in order to open her heart. If this had been necessary, we can see no reason for leading Paul all the way from Galatia in order to preach the gospel to her. As it appears, the Spirit led Paul there for this very work. He preached the word; Lydia heard, believed, repented, and was baptized. Her heart was contracted some by the narrowness of Jewish prejudices, which were obstacles in some measure to the reception of the gospel; but being a worshiper of God, she was disposed to do whatever she learned to be the will of God. Paul's teaching would naturally lead her to the truth that all who would obey God would be accepted of him. Learning this truth, she committed herself wholly to the service of God through Jesus Christ our Lord. J. C. M'QUIDDY.

That was a thinking lad who said to his teacher the other day: "I used to believe that the saloons gave a fellow a good time, but I've noticed that the men who go oftenest to the saloons look pretty wretched; so I guess I was mistaken." He was right. It is best to distrust a "good time" that ends by making men miserable in this life, not to speak of destroying their hope for all eternity.—Selected.

GOOD SEED PRODUCES A NOBLE VINE.

The Jewish law and God's dealings with the Jews under that law are given as types of the church of God and of God's dealings with his children under the Christian era. They often turned from God and rebelled against him under Moses. This typified they would do the same under Christ. The punishments he visited on them under the law of Moses typified the destruction that would be visited on his sinful people under Christ. Men went wrong, the whole people turned from God to the ways of man often. The people from the beginning have been prone to run into sin, to rebel against God and to run in their own ways. The trouble was not so much that they were not religious, but they did not follow God in their religious zeal, but went in their own ways. As a consequence, they often had to undo their religious work, turn from the paths into which they had traveled, to overturn and uproot the institutions they had built, and to start anew in the path God had marked out for them.

Jeremiah came to warn the Jews of their sins and rebellion against God, and admonished them to turn from their rebellious way, undo their wrongdoings, and start anew in the ways of God. Jeremiah warns the children of Israel: "My people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." Under another figure, God, through Jeremiah, declares: "I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed: how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?" In view of the changes they underwent in turning from God, he said to Jeremiah: "I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant." (Jer. 1: 10.) Institutions, kingdoms, and services had grown up not ordained by God, and the mission of the servant of God was to overthrow, root out, pull down, destroy, and throw down all these, and build up and plant anew the seed of divine truth, to build anew the kingdom of God and renew the laws of God which they had turned from.

This sinful course of the Jews and the evil that came upon them find their antitype in the churches under Christ. The servants of Christ have committed two evils: they have forsaken God, "the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." God planted the churches "a noble vine, wholly a right seed," and he asks: "How then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?" Thus they have become before God. And now he requires his servants to root up, pull down, destroy the evil work those who have claimed to be his followers have done, to retrace their steps and renew their faith in God and take again the word of God into their hearts.

God said of the Jewish people: "I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed." The noble vine sprang from a seed wholly right. In it there was no intermixture of other seed. That pure seed, the word of God, produced only a noble vine. Intermixture of other seed with it changed the noble vine before God into a strange vine, and the degenerate plant of a strange vine at that. These were the fleshly Jewish types. The spiritual antitypes are in our midst to-day. Let us look at them and return to God, who will gladly receive and bless all who will take his word, which is wholly a right seed, or a perfect and right seed within itself. Kept unmixed with other seeds, it will produce a noble vine in the sight of God; but mixed with the teachings of men, it produces only the degenerate plants of strange vines unto God, which must be rooted up and destroyed as cumberers of the soil and polluters of the spiritual atmosphere of the land that God created for his own home, in which he will dwell with men and be their God, and they may walk with him and be his children. But God can never dwell in a land in which mixed and polluted seeds are sown, and in which degenerate plants of strange vines to him grow. D. L.

Do not let us start in life with a load of dislikes and prejudices on our backs. They will only hurt us and weigh us down. A single hatred has often embittered and weighed down a young soul and spoiled a life. "Good will to men" is the gospel rule, and it makes a strong and happy life.—Selected.

Paul was a man with a purpose, and no manner of persecution could drive him from it. "This one thing I do," he declared; and, in spite of prisons, stripes, hunger, shipwreck, stoning, perils of waters, perils of robbers, weariness, and painfulness, he did it. Hardships had no power over him, for he was willing to endure anything that he might preach Christ.

It is encouraging to know that God is able to overrule all our mistakes so as to bring good out of them. When we do the best we can, we may be assured that God will take care of the results. We should endeavor to make as few mistakes as possible, but when we have been faithful we should lose no sleep over our seeming failures. Joseph Parker speaks of mistakes as follows: "How wondrously opportunities are created by human mistakes! If we knew it, we are always creating opportunities for the revelation of the larger providence. When we 'think we are blocking up gates, we are really opening them.' Paul went to Jerusalem, and the elders thought that in order to do away with a suspicion it might be well for him to purify himself in the temple. So all this trouble came upon Paul through the weak-minded advice to compromise matters. Was it, then, a mistake? Clearly so. Did the Lord leave it as a human mistake? No; he turned it into a divine opportunity. That mistake gave Paul his highest audiences. He was talking to rabbles before—just an open-air preacher, a man taking opportunities as they occurred—but now he was a preacher to procurators, rulers, kings, mighty men."

God keeps close watch over his faithful children. He knows how to protect them from the bitterest persecution. All the hellish darts hurled at them by the combined powers of the underworld cannot pierce them. C. H. Spurgeon says: "The Lord stood by Paul despite doors and locks. He asked no warder's leave to enter, nor did he stir bolt or bar; but there he was, the companion of his humble servant. If we come into such a peculiar position that no friend knows our experience, yet the Lord Jesus can enter into our special trial and sympathize in our peculiar grief, for he has been afflicted in all our afflictions. What is more, that part of our circumstances which we do not know ourselves Jesus knows, and in these he stands by us. Paul was not aware of the danger to which he was exposed; he did not know that certain Jews, to the number of forty, had banded together to kill him; but he who was his shield and his exceeding great reward had heard the cruel oath, and arranged to disappoint the blood-thirsty ones. Before Satan can draw the bow the Preserver of men will put his beloved beyond the reach of the arrow; before the weapon is forged in the furnace and fashioned on the anvil, he knows how to provide us with armor of proof which shall turn the edge of the sword and break the point of the spear."

During the journey of Paul to Rome, under Julius, a great storm arose. "And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away." Paul was full of faith, courage, and hope. While they had failed to take his advice when he warned them not to sail from Crete, now he assures them that no one shall be lost. Faith in God will make all serene, calm, and peaceful in the midst of the tempests of life. Of this journey, W. H. Burton says some helpful things: "Think of the contrast on board that ship! There were old sailors there, veterans who had fought in the foremost ranks of Rome, merchants who had traveled through many lands; but of all the 'two hundred threescore and sixteen souls there were none who, with composure, could look this danger in the face, save the prisoner and the one or two Christians who were companions with him in his bonds. He stood alone, amid all that hopeless company, and declared his confidence; and he, who knew the ground of his own composure best, said it was because he believed in God. As it was on board that ship, so it is in the voyage of life. Amid the surging waters, faith alone can keep us steady. With the sailors, we may have much life experience; with the soldiers, we may possess a large share of natural courage; with the merchants, we may enjoy much wealth and influence; but unless with Paul we can say, 'I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me,' we shall be the victims of every tempest and the sport of every wave."

God's foreknowledge does not interfere with man's action. The kingdom had been promised to David. The Lord delivered King Saul into his hands to see what he would do with him. David did not assume that the Lord needed his help, and therefore decided to slay Saul, but refused to lay his hand upon the Lord's anointed. God found no difficulty in disposing of Saul and in giving David the kingdom when the hour had struck for making David king. We are to faithfully obey the Lord and patiently wait the fulfillment of his promises. Touching this subject, William Arnot says some sensible things: "The details of Paul's acting exhibit a decisive example of the actual union and harmony between the prescient purpose of God and the responsibility of men for duty in their own sphere. Paul knew for certain that these schemers could not take his life; he knew for certain that the power of God was pledged effectually to frustrate their designs; yet with this knowledge Paul framed and conducted a counterplot to defeat the conspiracy of the Jewish priesthood with as much zeal and care as if he had not obtained previous assurance of his safety. This simple history is most precious as an inspired commentary on some difficult doctrines. It does not, indeed, make the doctrines easy of comprehension; it does not relieve them of mystery to our minds; but it is fitted to show us that no view of the divine purposes can be right that in any measure tends to slacken human zeal and energy. To be assured that it is God that worketh in them is the best of all motives to induce intelligent Christians to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling."

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Is it right to break the loaf with a sick brother or sister in the middle of the week, if called on for that special purpose, or any other day except the Lord's day? JAMES TRIGG.

Prospect, Ky.

The Lord's Supper was observed on the first day of the week, and I do not think it safe or right to observe it on any other day.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain, through the Gospel Advocate, Luke 9: 59, 60, where Jesus said unto the man: "Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead." Did Jesus mean the dead in sin? BEN. FORRESTER.

Rives, Tenn.

I think he meant let the dead remain unburied, if burying him hinders your following Christ. Let nothing, not even the burying your dead father, hinder your following Christ.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain, through the Gospel Advocate, 2 Cor. 12: 2, 7. Of whom was Paul speaking? What was that "thorn in the flesh?" We could not all agree on these verses in our lesson on a recent Lord's day. J. H. PARKER.

Tillery, Ala.

Paul was speaking of himself. He had been caught up to heaven, and he could not tell whether he went in the body or whether it was in the spirit. He heard words unspeakable, and unlawful to tell if he could speak them. Verses 5-7 show that it was Paul. I do not know what the "thorn in the flesh" was. Some say it was affliction of the eyes, but I do not think this would produce the trials of which he speaks.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain, through the Gospel Advocate, for the benefit of myself and others in our Sunday school who do not agree on them, the following passages of scripture: 1 John 3: 9; 5: 18. Do these passages have reference to all of the children of God on earth or to Christ alone?

Cope, Tenn.

W. H. BEDINGFIELD.

I think these scriptures refer to the disciples of Christ. They are all said to be begotten and born of God, and 1 John 5: 18 says: "Whosoever is born of God sinneth not." This means every one born of God sinneth not. I think it means he cannot live a life or course of sin, cannot intentionally live a sinful life. A careful reading of the whole Epistle in connection with the idea that some denied they sinned, and so needed a redeemer or propitiation for sin, will give a clearer idea than can be gained from the disconnected passage. Both passages are difficult. I have explained it—one or both of them—two or three times a year for thirty-five years now, but the explanation neither satisfies me nor others; but it is the best I know.

Brother Lipscomb: We often hear men say they know by their feelings they were pardoned. Now, in regard to the above, I have met it with this argument from 1 Cor. 15. Paul says, in verse 17: "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." If God made known to them by their feelings, it seems to me Christ being raised or not raised could make no difference to them. It is also said the faith that saves comes direct from God. In this letter of Paul's he says: "Whether it were I or they, so we preach and so ye believed." This meant to show their faith comes through the evidence Paul gave. If faith is a direct gift of God to man by the Spirit and he knows when he receives it by his feelings, their preaching being vain could never make the man's faith vain. That comes direct and he knows by his feelings when he gets it. Now, if this is not a reasonable deduction, please say so through the Gospel Advocate; say something about it, anyway. W. R. WHALEY.

The reasoning is good and the conclusion just. Paul (Rom. 10: 8) says: "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith, which we preach." The words he preached produced the faith and defined what was to be believed. In verse 14, he asks: "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?" "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Verse 17.) This all, beyond doubt, fixes faith as coming through hearing the word of God, and Paul recognizes the intervention of the preacher as needful for this hearing. This preacher refers to the original proclaimer of the word of God. Man's feelings can testify as to what he feels, is, and does; but they cannot possibly testify as to what God does, and he alone forgives sin.

Brother Lipscomb: In Luke 16: 12, Jesus says: "If ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?" To what do "another man's" and "your own" apply in this verse? S.

It is the conclusion of the parable of the unjust steward, who, when he found he was about to lose his place, so used present opportunities as to make friends who would favor him in the future. Jesus taught that it is the part of wisdom in man to use his present opportunities and possessions so as to make friends who will receive him into their eternal habitations when he leaves his present home—that is, so use present means and opportunities that God will receive you to dwell with him in his eternal home. He adds, as showing the principles on which God deals with men and the necessity of the faithful use of present opportunities, that we may enjoy higher privileges in the future: "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?" The "least" and the "much" here refer to the temporal good and opportunities and the spiritual and eternal. The same is true of "the unrighteous mammon" and "the true riches." Then the idea is presented that what we here have is not our own. The means and opportunities that we now have are not our own; they are loaned or intrusted to us by God to see whether he can bestow upon us eternal riches. Here we are using God's blessing as a loan intrusted to us, in the use of which our worthiness to use blessings will be proved. The future blessings or curses will be eternal and our own. If we fail to rightly use that loaned to us for a time, how can we expect God to give us higher and greater ones as our own for eternity?

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain, through the Gospel Advocate, John 3: 8, which reads thus: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Now, does this teach that the Holy Spirit acts mysteriously and abstractly on the heart of the sinner in his conversion or not? Any information from you will be thankfully received.

E. A. HURT.

This verse is given to illustrate the truth taught in the preceding verses and cannot be understood, save in connection with them. Jesus told Nicodemus: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?" He thought Jesus referred to a second fleshly birth. "Jesus answered, . . . Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." In this he explains it is the spirit, not the fleshly part of man, that is born again of this Spirit. Then he illustrates that it is the part of man that is unseen, like the wind, and not the fleshly, material part of man, that is affected in the new birth. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Or, what is born of the Spirit is the spiritual, unseen part of man that is, like the wind, unseen. He was removing the difficulty of Nicodemus about entering into his mother's womb and being again born with a fleshly birth when he was old. Jesus explains it is the spirit—unseen, like the wind—that is the subject of the new birth. The body is baptized, but this is done because the spirit abides in it, and the spirit is acted upon by God's Spirit.

Brother Lipscomb: Please give, through the Gospel Advocate, your exegesis of Eph. 6: 1, 2. Dwell on the words "children" and "honor." Is a child a child when he is fifty years old and has a family? Is Deut. 27: 16 in force? W. J. SMITH.

Dallas, Tex.

The relation of child and parents exists so long as the child and the parents live. It is the duty of the children to honor the parents so long as he and they live. What constitutes honor changes somewhat as the conditions of the parties to the relation change. While the child is young and immature, to honor the parents is to obey them, do their will, and be obedient in all things; to dishonor them is to disobey them. An example of dishonoring the parents is given in Deut. 21: 18-21: "If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that, when they have chastened him, will not hearken unto them: then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and bring him out unto the elders of his city, and unto the gate of his place; and they shall say unto the elders of his city, This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; he is a glutton, and a drunkard. And all the men of his city shall stone him with stones, that he die: so shalt thou put evil away from among you; and all Israel shall hear, and fear." This was a son in his minority. This disobedience is elsewhere called "cursing father or mother." "He that curseth ["speaketh evil of," R. V.] father or mother, let him die the death." (Matt. 15: 4.) These words were spoken primarily of the child in his minority; but when the parent grows old and infirm in body and mind and the child has reached the strength and wisdom of manhood, honor then demands support and help, but always deference, kindness, and respect. The principles that regulated the relation in the Old Testament have been transferred to the New Testament. The only change would be, the manner of punishing the child that dishonors, or curses, the parent would not be the same now as was then prescribed. To curse means to violate the relations and obligations due; to curse God means to set aside and reject the relations and obligations due him. To treat the parents with discourtesy and neglect is to curse them.

Any one who knows anything about the growth of a tree would not attempt to kill it by just lopping off the ends of the branches. It is necessary to strike at the root. Yet many boys and girls try to be good by cutting off outside sins, instead of changing the self-will of the heart. They think that morality will destroy sin. But it cannot; only when the love of Jesus strikes at the root of evil in our natures can sin truly be overcome and good take its place.—Exchange.

VEGETATION IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

An adage declares that "too much of a good thing spoils it all." Thus, though in our cold Northern States I used carefully to nourish delicate lantana plants indoors, yet when on the South Sea Islands I found dense, rank growth of lantana overrunning the land, I ceased to prize the species.

Canas, another northern house plant, is a common weed in these tropic regions, and wandering Jew forms a thick mat on large tracts of land, as does also Madeira vine. Gorgeous cactuses are regarded by the natives as mere pests, and the oleander, brought here from other countries, now grows wild, but is shunned by the islanders because of its tendency to cause headache. The flambeau, or torch, a large tree, with flaming blossoms, has readily become acclimated, as have numerous showy plants from other tropic regions. Scarlet hibiscus is native to the soil, and lemon hibiscus is a common forest tree. Other conspicuous flowers are indigenous; but a mere description could give little idea of their appearance. One of these, a large, white-petaled blossom, borne by a hardy, common tree, has several hundred beautiful pink stamens. The favorite flower of the people is white, fragrant, and trumpet shaped.

India lllac is here a forest giant, and the castor oil bean, a mere annual in cold climates, becomes a large tree in these warm regions. American and European garden plants, such as four-o'clocks, coleus, and others, which have been introduced into the islands, are now rampant. Tobacco, likewise, which for a time was cultivated on some of the island for transportation, clings as persistently to the soil as the habit of using the leaf clings to the people. Cotton, coffee, mint, and other imported plants also claim settler's rights, and are as determined in their occupancy as is an American squatter.

The "sensitive plant" of northern greenhouses is a roadside weed in portions of Polynesia, and in walking along a narrow path I have been startled by a movement, suggestive of snakes, among the foliage at the side; it was the leaves quickly closing at the touch of my skirts. Ferns grow to immense size and in great quantities here. Many of the mountains are thickly covered with them, and single fronds measure more than twenty feet in length. Tree ferns, also, are seen in some localities. In truth, this damp, warm climate is favorable to prolific vegetable growth, though the soil of some of the islands is too barren to produce any but the most tenacious species. Barbantine vines are so profuse with their foliage as to utterly smother trees over which they climb; and a native bean vine attains a length which would cover the greater part of a mile, and the beans, which are not edible, are as large as a silver dollar.

Not all vegetation, however, finds the soil and climate of Polynesia salutary. No grain, except Indian corn and rice, thrives there; and most of the vegetables and fruits of cold climates either will not grow at all in these tropic lands or they maintain a puny existence merely, without producing crops. To many of the flowers, likewise, of the homeland—pansies, violets, sweet peas, etc.—conditions here are uncongenial, while roses, geraniums, and divers other flowers flourish.

It is a notable fact that the finest hardwoods are secured in hot climates, and the South Sea Islands produce their full proportion. The native rosewood is so abundant in some sections that it is used as fuel.

Among the food-bearing trees is the coconut palm, some single trees containing about one hundred and fifty nuts; but the simple islanders, in a spirit of overthriftiness, sometimes plant trees so close together as to hinder their bearing. Owing to the great height of the trees—the oldest are about seventy-five feet tall—a nut falling from the top would have fatal effect, should it strike a person on the head. The leaves, also, any one of which is more than I can lift, are a menace to human safety, especially in time of high winds. The nuts are not much eaten by the natives, but they are the staple in their trade with the white traders; and the cool, spicy water inside the unripe nuts is a favorite beverage.

The mango is a stately tree, with glossy foliage, ranging from the red and light green of young shoots to a remarkably rich, dark hue. It bears a peachlike fruit, which is made very palatable by cultivation, though the wild mango is extremely sour. The native pineapple, likewise, would out-rival wild crab apples in sourness; but fine cultivated varieties are grown by white planters for shipment to New Zealand and Australia.

The benign breadfruit, with its generous shade, and, in some latitudes, its three bountiful crops each year, is a boon to the inhabitants; but foreigners are usually nauseated at the mere odor of the ripe fruit, and do not readily acquire a relish for the green fruit, which, by the way, tastes more like a sunburned potato than like bread or fruit.

Luscious oranges abound here; yet often I would gladly exchange them, twelve to one, for Irish potatoes, which I greatly miss. The vegetables most used on these islands are yam, a coarse, starchy root which grows to a length of several feet; and taro, a solid purplish root, with leaves resembling those of the calla.

Of bananas, there are more than a score of varieties, some of which are not edible unless cooked. This fruit is one of our staple articles of food, and, by way of variety, we boil it, bake it both peeled and unpeeled, fry it in fritters; use it in pies, puddings, and cakes; eat it raw; and become thoroughly tired of it. The plantain, near akin to the banana, is much used by the natives. Both fruits are frequently cooked when green; but green pumpkin would be as palatable to us. Ripe plantain, when baked, I have learned barely to tolerate, but on first sampling it I thought it very like soap.

Limes and citrons are plentiful, and grapefruit is found in some of the islands. Among fruits less known in our country are the rose apple—its odor earns its name for it—an unsubstantial shell, with one large seed rattling loosely inside; custard apple, a mass of small, soft, single-seeded fruits; guava, a fast-spreading pest, difficult to destroy, the fruit of which contains seeds so hard that they are dangerous to one's teeth; jack fruit, or papaw, somewhat resembling muskmelon, though shaped more like immense pears, and growing in a cluster beneath an umbrella of large leaves at the top of a small, branchless tree; finally, and perhaps most prized of all, there is the alligator pear, with a delicate, butterlike pulp, surrounding one large seed, as large as a walnut.

Banyan trees grow on these islands, and I have seen one which, with its myriad roots growing downward from high branches and forming new trunks, had made a thicket that would cover several city lots.—Adelaide D. Wellman, in Forward.

A NONPLUSED INFIDEL.

A simple question by an innocent child thus wrought the confusion of an infidel:

"Do you ever pray?" asked a tiny bit of a girl of an avowed infidel one day, as she had strayed into his office from an adjacent room on the same floor.

She was a bright, pretty child, and the young lawyer had been pleased with her fair face and winning ways, and had often, by means of candies and other small gifts, encouraged her to come; and at this time, although the office was crowded with clients, he had called her to his side and given her a seat upon his knee, where she had remained unusually quiet, until a pause in the conversation had given her an opportunity for the question which seemed uppermost in her mind.

"Say, do you?" she persisted, as he hesitated, visibly embarrassed. Although he was now an open follower of infidel doctrine, he had in his boyhood a Christian home, and, somehow, he could scarcely have explained why, he was ashamed to meet the honest blue eyes of that five-year-old child and frankly acknowledge that he did not pray.

"Do you?" he inquired at last, deperately hoping thus to change the, to him, very obnoxious subject; for there was an unmistakable smile showing upon the faces of his visitors at his evident unwillingness to answer.

"O, yes, of course!" she answered, promptly, not in the least disturbed by the question. "Once every night and morning, besides lots of other times. But say, do you? You know you did not tell me."

"Didn't I?"—the color actually crimsoning his forehead. "Well, I might say: 'God bless my little child.' Do you think that would do?"

"Yes, sir," said she, "but I think you would much better pray for yourself."

"I could have stood up and faced and answered the most scathing rebuke ever leveled at infidelity in public," he said, in repeating the story afterwards to a company of friends in my hearing; "I could have laughed in the face of the most eminent divine who dared to urge upon me the duty of prayer; but that child's question completely nonplused me. I believe, in all the defeats I ever experienced, I never felt so unspeakably little as I did that day."—Christian Standard.

CARE OF THE HAIR.

For poor, brittle, falling hair, a professional hair treader gives these directions, which, implicitly followed, she says, will, before many weeks have passed, check the tendency to fall out, and act in restoring the strength and tone of the hair. The head should be washed once a fortnight with water in which a little powdered borax has been dissolved and a teaspoonful of household ammonia added, with the beaten yolk of an egg, and as much subcarbonate of potash as will lie on a ten-cent piece. It must then be thoroughly rinsed in three different waters, when one will require an assistant, who may hold the hair up in one hand, while with the other she pours the water gently over the head from a pitcher or sprays thoroughly with a shower-bath spray. When the water shows no discoloration, it will indicate that all the foreign matter applied has been removed properly. It is best to do this at night, if the after operation is faithfully followed out, but warm towels should be rubbed over the head until it is perfectly dry. The next morning a very little vaseline should be rubbed into the scalp with the tips of the fingers, and the hair then brushed for ten minutes at least. The hair should be singed every month for a time, at any rate, and must be often and well brushed, using a brush in which the bristles are not too hard nor too short. The scalp should be gently rubbed before bringing the brush down the hair, and care must be taken not to drag the locks. If a tonic is used, it should be applied with a soft sponge, and the material should afterwards be well rubbed in with the tips of the fingers. This gentle friction will promote the growth of the new hair as well as strengthen that already on the head.—Presbyterian.

THE TRACES OF LOCAL LIFE.

A very noticeable point of difference between the conversation of a gathering of what is known as fashionable society and a social gathering of unsophisticated people is that the former do not talk over their troubles or their health. They have schooled themselves to suppress their feelings, to talk of impersonal subjects, to be gracious and attractive to those about them, and to avoid whatever may be unpleasant in conversation.

There should be no need to enter this society in order to imitate their example in this respect. Even if one's life is narrow, self may be, in a measure, forgotten when we are with others; and it is a doubtful sort of pleasure that one can get from the rehearsal of private woes or ill health. Even the most inquisitive and prying soon tire of hearing this, and it is often said by one person of another that she is a bore, constantly talking of her aches and pains.

It is a pity that the person herself cannot hear such remarks. It would be a shock, doubtless, but in the end a kindness. A good plan is for a person to forget herself and what others may be thinking of her. One must be broad, open, generous, and kindly tempered, in order to wear the small courtesies easily and naturally.

In the desire for sympathy from friends, one is apt to be selfish and to forget that each has his or her own share of troubles in this world. No one is exempt, and what we are all instinctively craving is happiness and freedom from care, which we cannot get through the tale of another's sufferings. It is the old story so well told in the lines:

Laugh, and the world laughs with you;
Weep, and you weep alone.

A PLAIN STATEMENT.

We have recently sent a statement to each one of our subscribers who is owing for the paper. The year 1900 will soon be gone, and yet a number of our subscribers have not paid their subscriptions. The full amount due is considerable, and if all will now pay promptly, we will be able to meet the obligations of the paper. We must depend on those who are indebted to us, and those who have not paid for the year 1900 ought to make an effort to pay now. Those who are in arrears for 1899 should by all means pay up and renew for another year.

It is a matter of importance to us that those who receive statements attend to sending a remittance at once. If you cannot possibly settle now, please write us a card stating when you will. It is expensive to us to send so many statements, besides annoying to have subscribers pay no attention to a request couched in the most courteous language.

It is true that one subscription does not amount to very much, but multiply one by several thousand and the aggregate is large. We earnestly solicit every subscriber to make an effort to send us a number of new subscribers. We appreciate the efforts of our friends, and hope with their aid to add several thousand new names to our list.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT, AND TO WHOM IT WAS SPOKEN.

Brother Sewell's reply to my criticism on the failure of himself and Brother Harding to rightly apply certain scripture is not kind. I did not say things are a certain way, but that I thought so. I still think so, and will give my reasons as to the Sermon on the Mount, etc.

"And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him: and he opened his mouth, and taught them." Then follows what we generally term "the Sermon on the Mount." Now, to whom did Jesus preach this sermon? Brother Sewell says it is easy for me to assert that none but apostles were present, but that it cannot be proven. Well, I will undertake to prove it, and if I do, then my "think so" was right. Luke, to whom I now refer, has given us much light on the subject. In chapter 6: 13-16, he gives an account of the calling of the twelve apostles, and in verse 17 he says: "He came down with them, and stood in the plain, and the company of his disciples." "Came down, . . . and stood in the plain" with whom? With the twelve apostles. Note this well, Brother Sewell. "And a great multitude of people out of all Judea and Jerusalem, and from the seacoast of Tyre and Sidon," etc. "And he lifted up his eyes on his disciples, and said." Then follows the Sermon on the Mount, and so far as this witness goes, we might suppose he spoke it in the hearing of the whole multitude; but referring back to Matthew, another witness, he says: "Seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him: and he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying." Then follows the sermon.

Now, permit me to give a few reasons why this sermon could not apply to any others than apostles—the ambassadors of Christ. The apostles were only men, and to them it was necessary to say much that might apply to all disciples of Christ. But they were his inspired ambassadors, and hence some things must be said to and of them which could not apply to any others. Note these: "Ye are the light of the world" and "Ye are the salt of the earth." Where do we go now for light on the plan of salvation? Is it not to the apostles? There is none to be found anywhere else. Brother Sewell can never light the sinner's way into the kingdom of God, only as he uses the light of the apostles' teaching. For centuries the people of this sin-cursed and sin-darkened world have had to look back to the apostles for all the light they received on the subject of salvation, and it will be so to the end of the world. If men want knowledge as to how they must be saved, there is no light but that which emanates from the apostles. No others can be said to be "the light of the world," nor can others be called "the salt of the earth," for reasons given above. These scriptures, then, could apply to none but apostles, and were, therefore, spoken to no others. Again: "Ask, and it shall be given you." Does this apply to all Christians? Again: "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on." Does this apply to Christians now? If so, how does it compare with "diligent in business," and, "If any will not work, neither let him eat?"

I remark that it is my firm conviction that God does not promise his people temporal riches; he promised these things as reward to Jews; but that was a fleshly institution, while ours is spiritual. We must look on beyond the present for our reward, a spiritual reward. Of course God promises comfort and spiritual blessings now in our trials and tribulations, but it is not houses and lands and gold and silver. He offers, rather, the comforting hope of reward hereafter, with persecution and jails and whippings and the loss of earthly friends and earthly prestige and honor; for "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." It is as sure to come as is the pardon of past sins to him that believeth and is baptized, but "our reward is in heaven."

Now, Brother Sewell, for the above reasons, which I think are both reasonable and scriptural, I am still constrained to think the Sermon on the Mount was delivered to the apostles, and I am sure much of it can apply to none others. If Brother Sewell can show me that I can have all I desire by asking for it, while I work with all my might for the same, it will greatly enhance the power of prayer in my mind.

JOHN T. POE.

In the first place, I want to assure Brother Poe that if there is anything in what I said in reply to him that is unkind, it was not so intended. I know I did not entertain any unkind feeling toward Brother Poe; but I wrote hurriedly, under pressure of protracted-meeting work, and had not the time to review as carefully as I usually do such articles, and there may be some things in it that to Brother Poe seem unkind; but on reading the article again, I still fail to see anything that looks unkind to me, and I assure Brother Poe that what seems unkind to him was not so intended by me.

In the next place, the above from Brother Poe makes no reply to what I wrote, which was mainly to show that even if the apostles were the ones addressed, the same principles applied to them are in the letters of the apostles applied to all Christians. But this he fails to notice. I am not at all pledged to the work of proving that apostles were not addressed in the Sermon on the Mount, for I made my main argument upon the claim that so far as the matter of food and raiment is concerned, there was no difference between the apostles and other disciples, or Christians; yet among the learned who have written harmonies of the Gospels there are decided differences as to whether the discourse recorded in Luke 6 and the one in Matt. 5-7 are the same. Some as good authority as I know anything about claim very definitely that they are not the same. Matthew does not give an account of Christ calling him in any sense till you get to chapter 9: 9, and he does not give an account of the choosing of the twelve disciples till you reach chapter 10. Hence, according to that order, Matthew had not even become a disciple when the Sermon on the Mount was spoken. Luke gives an account of the selecting of the twelve before he records what some claim as the same Sermon on the Mount. Besides, Matthew locates the sermon as delivered on a mountain and Luke locates it as delivered in the plain; and the former represents Jesus as sitting and speaking on the mountain, while Luke represents him as standing in the plain. The records differ widely also as to forms of expression, just as would naturally occur in teaching the same things at different places and on different occasions. Other reasons might be given, but we do not care to occupy more space on this subject now.

Brother Poe also puts upon me to prove things I never said anything about, such as that I prove he can have all that he asks for and works for and that God will give riches to those who ask and work for them. Here is what started the matter between Brother Harding and myself. I stated that "the child of God that is faithfully honest and industrious in seeking food and raiment, and trusts earnestly in God's promises, and prays earnestly to him for these blessings, will find them." I would have to go contrary to my own convictions of truth if I were to try to establish or defend what Brother Poe puts down for me to defend. But I do believe that the principles laid down in the Sermon on the Mount and about which these discussions are had apply to all disciples alike, whether apostles or not. Some of the apostles were doubtless present when that sermon was delivered, but the evidence is not at all conclusive to me that all were present or that the twelve had then been chosen; but it is pretty clear that they had been chosen when the sermon recorded by Luke was delivered, and that they were present on that occasion. If they were chosen and present when the Sermon on the Mount was delivered, that does not by any means prove that the teaching of that sermon does not belong to other disciples the same as to the apostles. It is quite evident that others were present besides them. The language especially under discussion is that disciples are to take no thought—that is, be not anxious—about food and raiment, what they are to eat and what they are to wear. These very same principles are enjoined by the apostles upon the churches, upon Christians in general.

Paul says: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.) This promise includes everything that is included in the promise which Jesus gave on the mount: "And all these things shall be added unto you." When all things work together for good to people, they generally have something to eat and something to wear. Jesus taught precisely the same things regarding others that he did in the Sermon on the Mount. He said, in Matt. 19: 29, after having promised the apostles that they should sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel: "And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life." This passage includes all Christians, as well as apostles. It says every one that does these things shall receive a hundredfold, meaning houses, lands, brethren and sisters, and such like things needed here on earth. It was not promised that all should sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel; but the things mentioned in the above verse are promised to all the followers of Christ.

Again: "Then Peter began to say unto him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee. And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive a hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." (Mark 10: 28-30.) That the apostles are included in this passage I do not doubt; but that all others that will do the things mentioned are included admits not of a doubt, for he says, "There is no man" that will do these things that will not receive as stated, and every one can see that it means as much as is promised in the last of Matt. 6. There is no difference, therefore, between apostles and others that will be faithful regarding the blessings of this life or that which is to come, and in this Peter was assured that in these matters the apostles and all others that would be faithful to the Lord would fare alike. No Christian is to spend his time in anxious care and worrying about food and raiment and have no heart or time left to serve and honor the Lord. So far as the temporal blessings of life are concerned, there are just as many promises to all other faithful Christians as to the apostles. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Neither the apostles nor any other Christians can do this.

Brother Poe says that Christians now cannot be the salt of the earth nor the light of the world. I can see no reason why faithful Christians are not just as much the salt of the earth and the light of the world now as the apostles were. If Christians to-day live Christian lives as did the apostles, their godly lives will have just as much saving power and give as much light as to the purity and beauty of the religion of Jesus as did the lives of the apostles. Then, again, Christians are commanded to take the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; they are also required to teach the word, to sound it out to the world. They are under the same obligations to do this that the apostles were. Jesus commanded the apostles to disciple the nations, teaching them to observe all things he had commanded them—the apostles—and in this come the command and authority from Christ himself to all Christians to do all that he commanded the apostles to do. When the apostles went out and preached to the world, it was not by their own power or wisdom they did this. They were not allowed to study or make up what they were to say by their wisdom; but the Holy Spirit was to give them what to say at the time.

Jesus said, further: "For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you." The Holy Spirit spoke through them, and put the whole matter to record, and we have it now in the New Testament just as it was given to the apostles. When Christians now go and preach, or present these same truths to the world as recorded, it is the Spirit of God doing it now, as much as then, and we have the same authority they had and are under the same obligation to do the work. So when Christians to-day live out the will of God before the world and teach the same word the apostles did, they are as much the salt of the earth and the light of the world as were the apostles. If the apostles had been the authors of what they preached and wrote, then they would be the salt of the earth and the light of the world in a sense that we are not; but they were no more the authors of it than we are and had no more right to add to or take from, or in any wise change it, than we have. As to the lives of inspired men, they had to act upon their responsibility just as Christians do now, and had to seek and obtain the temporal blessings of life as we do. Paul suffered far more than any Christians in this country ever suffered. After speaking of the terrible beatings and shipwrecks and such like, he continues: "In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness." (2 Cor. 11: 27; read also the verses preceding.) These were terrible trials, and yet he was an apostle and an ambassador. In his efforts to prevent destitution, he labored at tent making, and said to the elders of the church at Ephesus: "I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20: 33-35.) From these considerations and many more that might be presented, I am quite sure that the expressions, "Ye are the salt of the earth" and "Ye are the light of the world," are as applicable to Christians now as to the apostles, and that in the Sermon on the Mount these things were addressed to all the disciples as such, and not to the apostles alone.

GOD'S WISDOM IN CONVERTING THE WORLD.

We have frequently called attention to the truth that when God sent his Son into the world to overturn the kingdoms of the world and build himself a kingdom that shall stand forever, he began at the bottom to undermine these kingdoms and overturn the wicked governments of earth. Jesus, the Son of God, was born among the lowly laborers of earth. God's Son was incarnated in Mary, the carpenter's espoused wife. God provided that he might start from this as a favorable standpoint to convert the world. Jesus called his apostles and fellow-workers chiefly from the same class. When one of a different class was called, as Paul seems to have been, he became as one of them and was more abundant in self-denial, labors, and sufferings than were any of them, and became servant of all, and debtor to all classes, that he might save some. The work of Jesus and his apostles was done chiefly among the working classes. In Paul's day the household servants of Cæsar had become active members of the churches of God. The men in all departments of life that succeed best are those who are reared among the common people, understand and know them, and sympathize with them. The common people constitute the great masses of humanity; so when they are moved, the whole mass is moved. Then, too, the habits and necessities of common people develop in many of them force of character and energy above others, and they become learned, acquire riches, and many of them rise to the top and commingle with all classes and soon leaven them with whatever of feelings and thoughts prevail among the masses. The poor of one generation are frequently the rich and learned of the next. The common people heard Jesus gladly and his religion spread rapidly among them. This certainly of itself ought to indicate to us the course we should pursue in converting the world to Christ. We should see the wisdom of God in this matter. The way to overturn and pull down the evil of the world is to undermine it. Sap the foundation, take one by one the sills and the foundation stones on which it rests, and it will fall. The experience of all workers among the people ought to satisfy all religious workers what is the wise course for them to pursue.

One of the worst signs of the present time is, the common people are drifting away from the churches. The church is not sought and upheld by them as it should be. This no doubt arises from the fact that the churches are now seeking the money, courting the favor, and adapting themselves to the desires of the rich. It is an evidence of their apostasy from the true spirit of the Christian religion. The worst and most fatal apostasy is in departing from the true spirit of Christ, an apostasy in spirit. This apostasy in spirit is the prolific mother of other apostasies. We lose the spirit of Christ, the spirit of fidelity to God, of self-sacrifice and devotion to the salvation of the world, and, as the result of this apostasy and to supplement the failure arising from this apostasy, all the changes of God's order come in that curse and divide Christendom. The first and essential change is to come back in spirit to Christ. The rich and fashionable and those who are unwilling to sacrifice to Christ, substitute money for personal service and sacrifice. Under this spirit money has displaced self-sacrificing devotion as the chief factor in spreading the gospel. Those who rely on money seek those who have money, and the poor are neglected. This spirit must be set aside, or the churches overloaded with money will die. Indeed, the money helps to kill them. It is utterly impossible for one who depends on money for social standing and respectability and enjoyment to be a true Christian. It is equally impossible for one seeking earthly honor and greatness, whether he seeks it in the pulpit or in the political field or the legal forum, to be an earnest and true child of God and an effective worker in saving souls. Jesus asks: "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" (John 5: 44.) The spirit of seeking and looking to wealth and worldly honor is so antagonistic to the spirit of Jesus, he asks: "How can ye, that seek this honor of the world, believe in me?"

The workers in the gospel fields must come from among the common people. The work must be done chiefly among them. The fact that the church fails to reach the common people is evidence that she has lost her true spirit and works in the wrong direction. When the church reforms her spirit and works in the right direction, keeps within the proper lines, the common people will constitute its bone and sinew, and God's word will run and be glorified among men. Effective work can be done only among them. The successful preachers are those who go and work among the common people. Converts among the common people, in turn, become much more effective workers than those from any other class. They are by association fitted to do more effective work at the very foundations of society. Divine example and human experience alike direct that the common people make the effective workers, and that they do the best work when working at the very foundations of society, among the common people. If a man is desirous of doing effective work in undermining the foundations of the society built on opposition to God and in spreading the kingdom of God, he must work among the common people, both in cities and the country. Not only his own work is effective, but he can inspire those whom he converts with zeal and enthusiasm, and the work is greatly increased and multiplied. A man divests himself of his effectiveness when he ceases to work among the common people and takes position among the rich or for the congregations seeking respectability and worldly influence and position. He cannot make many converts, nor can he inspire those converted with personal zeal, earnestness, and enthusiasm. Those classes cannot be inspired with personal zeal and activity, nor with self-denying zeal for the salvation of souls. They work by proxy, and proxy work is never effective. Nor is it possible for proxy workers to be filled with zeal and enthusiasm. There are personal exceptions to these rules, but they are true as a whole. The lesson is, those who would do real effective work for the Lord must work among the common people. When one leaves these to work among and for the rich and the higher classes, he may secure a better living and more worldly respectability for himself, but he divests himself of his power to serve God and save men. If you wish to save souls and extend the kingdom of God among men, follow the example of Jesus and work among the common people. If he works among them, he must live among them and be one of them. Good, earnest, faithful work among the common people is now greatly needed to place the churches of God in their true light before the world. The houses, the dress, and the services should be such as will invite, and not repel, them. It is much easier to get the common people to do active service in the church of God than it is to get the rich, the educated, those who pride themselves on their worldly respectability.

WHAT IS THE TROUBLE?

The census shows an increase of the population of the United States for the past decade of over twenty per cent. Each of the leading churches claims a much larger per cent of increase. Some of them make calculations to see how soon, if thus they continue the same rate of increase, before their denomination will embrace all, if not outnumber, the whole population. The singular thing is that so many different ones should show an increase and prospect of swallowing up all the others. Another singular thing is that while this increase of so many different churches is claimed there should be a popular impression that there is a falling away of the people from the churches. How can this be explained? Only a partial explanation may be found in the fact that a great many persons cease to attend church, yet claim to be church members. It is singular how many men, seemingly moral and religious, neglect the public services of religion. When they neglect the public services, it may be regarded as pretty sure that they are not attentive to the private devotions and pieties of religion. This failure of the old members to attend cannot otherwise than have a hurtful influence on the religious life. Still, having been trained to reverence religion in youth, they may retain their religious feelings and character, while failing to attend church services. But their example is contagious; the young men follow it, and, following it from youth, grow up to manhood without the religious training that the older men received, and hence pass through life without religious training. Then their children follow after them. What must the end be? Among the disciples, no one who refuses to attend the Lord's day services ought to be regarded a Christian. Notwithstanding the number claiming to be Christians who fail to attend services, we believe there must be something wrong in the numbering of the churches.

"The Sky Pilot: A Tale of the Foot-hills." By Ralph Connor. Illustrated by Louis Read. Pages, 300; price, $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Company. 1900.

This book deals with the same class of people as "Black Rock." The matter which the author gives us in this volume is real life. His style is fresh, crisp, and terse, and accords with Western life, which he well understands.

"Sketches by the Wayside." Illustrated. Being the poetic and prose works of W. C. Hafley. Pages, 127; price, flexible cloth, 50 cents; boards, $1. The W. C. Hafley Company, Atlanta, Ga., and Chattanooga, Tenn.

"Pressed Flowers from the Holy Land." Gathered and pressed by Harvey B. Greene, B.D. Introduction by Smith Baker.

The author of this little book has spent three springs in Palestine, and, with the aid of natives, has made a large collection of field flowers. The book before me has twelve of these pressed flowers, each of which is accompanied by a brief historic and descriptive sketch. Mr. Greene has many other specimens, and would be pleased to correspond with any one who would take an agency. Address Harvey B. Greene, 175 Stevens street, Lowell, Mass.

"A Short History of the Long Family." Written and compiled by J. L. Long. Press of the Shelbyville Sentinel, Shelbyville, Ky.

This little book was written in compliance with the very earnest solicitations of the author's friends. In it he has embodied many items of interest to the Long family and friends, and, in addition, states many items which are of historic value. Brother Long obeyed the gospel in 1838, and from that time has always contended for a "Thus saith the Lord" in the work and worship of the church. For years he worshiped with the church of Christ at Shelbyville, Ky., but in 1889 the organ was brought into the worship. He protested against it, but this was all for naught. They were determined to have it, even if it drove from their midst the most pious and godly members of the congregation. Being a man of deep convictions, Brother Long could no longer worship where the organ was used, so he and his faithful wife worshiped with the Simpsonville congregation, eight miles away, for several years; "but—behold!—they foisted one at that place, just a little one." After this, Brother Long and a few other faithful, God-fearing disciples built a plain house in which to worship, four miles away from Shelbyville, where they now meet on every Lord's day. The book can be obtained of J. L. Long, Shelbyville, Ky.

"The Prophet of Hope: Studies in Zechariah." By F. B. Meyer, B.A. Pages, 157; price, $1. Fleming H. Revell Company.

Matters of a critical nature do not come within the scope of this book; but the author's aim is to give the salient features and lessons of each chapter, with the object of alluring the student to a more searching and careful acquaintance with this prophet. It is suggestive, and those who read it will be strengthened and be pointed to a better and holier life.

"So; or, The Gospel in a Monosyllable." By George Augustus Lofton. Pages, 230; price, $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Company.

This volume contains an elaborate sermon by Dr. Lofton, on John 3: 16. After its delivery, at Waco, Tex., in May, 1883, a number who were present proposed to contribute to its publication in book form. Hence it first appeared in a series of articles in the Tennessee Baptist, and was subsequently set up in type and plates, in 1884, for publication; but it was never printed. "After fifteen years of more careful study, the author presents the work in somewhat enlarged form, but with greater precision and less floridity of style."

"The Situation in China: A Record of Cause and Effect." By Robert E. Speer. Pages, 60; price, 10 cents. Fleming H. Revell Company.

This is republished from a larger work by Mr. Speer on "Missions and Politics in Asia," because it was deemed expedient to put this chapter in concise form for popular reading. It is certainly timely, if not new. Mr. Speer sums up the good there is in the Chinese character, not less than the evil, and makes plain that the fault lies largely with the European Governments, which treat the Chinese Government, now as civilized and now as barbarian, with neither consistency nor justice. Europe, by placing missions and merchants on equal terms in their diplomatic dealings with Chinese officials, does incalculable harm to the Christian cause. Yet he states that much of the spirit of Western peoples, "as displayed in dealings with Oriental nations from Turkey to China, is as a foul stench in our nostrils."

"Physical Culture." By B. F. Johnson. Primary book. Pages, 123; price, 25 cents. B. F. Johnson Publishing Company, Richmond, Va. 1900.

This is a book of simple, practical directions, which come readily to one's hand. Herein is its peculiar merit; it was made to be used, and one can use it—every page of it. It is not the work of a theorist; it is the work of a man who has put physical culture where it belongs—in his own home—and has personally reaped its benefits. He writes out of a rich experience and with that simplicity which comes from perfect familiarity with one's subject. It is a primary book, intended to be used by teachers and

"Edward Blake, College Student." By Charles M. Sheldon. Pages, 281; price, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents; paper, 25 cents. Advance Publishing Company, Chicago, Ill. 1900.

It is a well-known fact that many of the greatest and most efficient presidents, judges, legislators, editors, preachers, and men of affairs have risen from obscurity and worked their own way through college and into usefulness. In this book, Mr. Sheldon draws a true and striking picture of this splendid type.

LITERARY NOTES.

The story of the siege of Peking is to be told by W. A. P. Martin, author of "A Cycle of Cathay" and famous as a missionary, jurist, and teacher. He has just arrived in New York from China. Dr. Martin was within the walls of the British Legation all during the terrible siege, and he kept a careful record of it as events proceeded. He had been in the employ of the Chinese Government, as president of the Imperial University, for a great many years, but says that in spite of that fact the Chinese would have been delighted to cut his throat at any time they could have got hold of him during the recent trouble. Dr. Martin's new book will appear about December 1, 1900, from the press of the Fleming H. Revell Company.

So much has been written about China and the Chinese, as he is and has been in his far-away East, that it is a wonder not more has been told of him as he is right here in America, for in San Francisco and New York, particularly, he is a factor that must be reckoned with. A volume entitled, "The Chinaman as We See Him," by Ira M. Condit, which the Fleming H. Revell Company will soon publish, will essay just such a story of the local Chinese as we have not had, but wanted for so long. Mr. Condit's book will be illustrated by numerous half-tone pictures of Chinese scenes in the United States. The book will give an authentic basis upon which to study the "yellow danger" that is liable to disturb our very own country at any time.

STONE.

Jesse Bryant Stone was born on August 21, 1851, and died at his home in Burgin, Mercer County, Ky., on August 2, 1900. He was commonly known as "Dick" Stone. He was baptized in the fall of 1871, by my father, Strother Cook. On March 18, 1875, he was married to Julia Anne Cook, the fifth one of my seven sisters. She is also the ninth one in our family of twelve—five sons and seven daughters. About thirty-six hours before his death, our brother called his six children, one by one, and gave each a parting blessing, with the blessed assurance and hope of meeting them and their mother again in the bright beyond. It was a sad, yet happy, deathbed scene, one that will never be forgotten. The widow and children have a brother's love and an uncle's affection.

BROYLES.

On October 17, 1900, Sister Nancy Broyles, wife of G. R. Broyles, departed this life to join the family of God on the other side. Sister Broyles had been a sufferer from lung trouble for several years, which disease developed into consumption. She was forty-nine years old and had been a member of the church of Christ more than twenty-five years. She was true to her family, faithful to the church, and endured her affliction with a Christian fortitude worthy of praise. She left a husband and three married daughters to mourn their loss. The consolation of God's word comes to the distressed with the assurance: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord" and "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Sister Broyles obeyed God's commandments in life, and she died in the Lord.

BROWN.

On October 6, 1900, Brother Sprague Brown, son of Elder Brown, of the Foster Street church of Christ, this city, died, in consequence of an injury he received at a lumber mill in West Nashville, where he was employed at the time. He was thirty-one years old. During Brother J. A. Harding's tent meeting on Foster street, in 1889, Brother Brown obeyed the gospel, and has since been a good brother in the church. He bore his share of the troubles of life. The wife of his youth, Miss Ella Warden, whom he married in July, 1896, died in the following January. His health was not always good, yet he was always kind and affectionate, and with him some of the sunshine of his home has departed; and those who knew him best and loved him—his good old father and mother, his brothers and sisters—believe he has gone to the home where we all hope to end our journey, beyond darkness and cloud, in the city of God.

ROBERT H. BOLL.

HATLEY.

Our dear father, Hardy Hatley, died at his home in Benton County, Tenn., on April 15, 1900; aged fifty years, five months, and four days. During the last days of his life his sufferings were so intense as to be almost unbearable, yet he bore them without a murmur. He died of typhoid fever. Father frequently talked to his children, telling us that he felt that he was prepared to go when the Lord should call him. He became a member of the church of Christ about fifteen years ago. He was born in Benton County, Tenn., in 1849. In 1873 he was married to Miss Dillie Tatom, and to them were born five children—two sons and three daughters—all of whom, together with his devoted wife, survive him. It seems that our grief is more than we can bear; but we are consoled by the thought of his kindness and goodness here, and that he is now enjoying his heavenly reward. His sufferings were borne with patience and Christian fortitude, and we have a hope of meeting him in the sweet beyond. Let us try to imitate his Christian life, so that when we are called to quit the walks of life we may be prepared to meet him in that beautiful home that our Savior has gone to prepare, where there are no more sad partings and no more heartaches, but all is peace and love for evermore.

DAY.

On Tuesday evening, September 25, 1900, the prosperous, happy little city of Earlington, Ky., was deeply moved by the sad news that Brother J. W. Day, one of the mine superintendents of the St. Bernard Coal Company, had lost his life by falling under the cars used in the mines for transporting coal to the surface. Brother Day was a very hard-working man, always discharging his duties to his employers and coworkers conscientiously. This caused him to be loved by both. He obeyed the gospel of Christ when thirteen years of age, and worked conscientiously and zealously in the Master's vineyard. When an individual was born of water and the Spirit, Brother Day was among the first to grasp his or her hand and speak words of cheer to the newborn soul. It seemed to me there was less formality and more heart in his greeting than in that of any one I have ever met. During my acquaintance with him I have frequently heard him express his desire to be loyal to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. If he could not engage in anything in all good conscience, he would tell you why, and then simply let it alone, while others might do as they would. A short time before his death, while considering the expediency of submitting to a dangerous surgical operation, he said: "If I go under the knife, I may never become conscious again; but God knows my heart and life, and I would not fear to meet him."

There is a future, O thank God! Of life this is so small a part; It is dust to dust beneath the sod, But then up there it's heart to heart. Paducah, Ky. I. H. TEEL.

THOMPSON.

Death has again visited the home of Brother and Sister John J. Thompson, near Murray, Ky., and has taken away their only daughter, Nina W.; aged eighteen years, nine months, and eight days. Last year they had to give up their younger daughter, Annie; now dear Nina is gone. Sister Nina confessed faith in Christ and was baptized in August, 1895, and lived a devoted and faithful Christian till her death, on October 28, 1900. Hers was a beautiful and consecrated Christian life. Everybody who knew her loved her; one could not help loving her.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Don't Know it.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What to Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in 50c. and $1. sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful discovery and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail.

Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

She is gone, but the influence of her beautiful life and example will be felt by the girls and boys with whom she was reared and associated for many years. I have never before witnessed such universal grief over the death of any one as was manifested at her funeral by both old and young. Nina was teaching school up to the time of her illness. The deepest grief was in her school. The writer of this conducted a funeral service to her memory, at the grave, assisted by Brother Hill and Brother Ray, in the presence of a large concourse of people. It is sad to give her up; but Brother and Sister Thompson and Nina's brother, David, have the consolation, amid their sad bereavement, of knowing Nina was a good, Christian daughter and sister and that she was ready to go and live with the redeemed in the paradise of God. They have the sympathy of many friends and the prayers of Christians in their sad affliction. May we all so live as to be ready, when our summons comes, to join our loved ones in heaven, where partings and death will be no more.

Catarrh, a Deep-seated Blood Disease, Cured when Treated with B. B. B.

Trial Treatment Free.

If you have tried snuff, vapor, smoking, or internal remedies and still have a return of the catarrh symptoms, it is because these remedies were not strong enough to reach the catarrhal poison in the blood and expel it. It matters not how obstinate the case nor what other treatments or remedies have failed to do, B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) always promptly reaches the real trouble and fairly roots out and drains from the system the bad catarrhal poison in the blood which causes catarrh. Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. B.) alone can do this. B. B. B. is different from any other remedy, as it goes to the very seat of blood diseases. Hence the cures made by Blood Balm are permanent for the simple reason that the poison being entirely driven from the system, no return of the disease is possible; besides, B. B. B. also makes the blood pure and rich. Here is one cure of over one thousand on file: Mrs. Elizabeth Knott, of Butler street, Atlanta, had for years a very troublesome nasal catarrh. So entirely has its nature been that she frequently blew small pieces of bone from her mouth and nose. The discharge was copious and very offensive. Her general health became greatly impaired, with poor appetite and weak, thin blood. Three bottles of Botanic Blood Balm worked on her like magic. Not a symptom has returned in over three years, and she is completely restored to health. If you have any symptoms of catarrh, headache, noises in the head, dropping in the throat, bad hearing, mucous discharges, or any blood taint, a treatment with B. B. B. will cure to say cured. Try it. At drug stores, $1. To convince you, a trial treatment of B. B. B. will be sent free and prepaid by writing to BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 25 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Describe your trouble and free medical advice will be given.

M. G. Brumbaugh, Commissioner of Education for Puerto Rico, says the school system now in operation there includes 800 teachers and 38,000 pupils. This is only a beginning, as there are 300,000 children of school age without school facilities, most of whom would enroll if they could. Thousands of children in this island, says the report, are half clothed, half fed, and half housed. At least 80 per cent of all the people are illiterate, and the crying need is schools to reduce the appalling illiteracy. There are no public school buildings and no public colleges or universities.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Atoka, October 28.—A healthy disposition is manifest on the part of the disciples in Indian Territory, full of life, zeal, and hope, looking toward extending our borders among the waste places and setting in order the weak congregations. I have reasons to believe, from letters received from the elders and brethren over this field, that with the cooperation of the saints scattered abroad much good can be done. I, therefore, ask to be remembered in the prayers and fellowship of the saints. Five dollars from a true and tried friend last week and one dollar about a month ago are all that has been contributed for about three months; so far as I know, from my many friends and supporters from abroad. I am full of hope that interest will revive. R. W. OFFICER.

KANSAS.

Oakley, November 9.—I will begin a meeting for the brethren at Perry, Ill., on Saturday evening, November 24, 1900. This leaves me in a good meeting, with good attention and interest. M. J. WALTERS.

TENNESSEE.

Columbia, November 22.—Brother Brown Godwin has just closed a good meeting, held under a tent, in South Columbia. Five persons confessed the Lord and one returned to the fold. The meeting lasted seventeen nights. This is a mission point of the Columbia church of Christ. J. M. M'CALEB.

Devenport, November 20.—I began a meeting at Ivy Bluff, twelve miles from McMinnville, on the fourth Lord's day in October and continued two weeks. Four persons made the good confession and were baptized into Christ. This was once a strong church, but the brethren allowed bitter strife and contentions to creep in, and I found the church divided and the brethren failing to meet on the first day of the week to break bread. Three elders were chosen by the congregation to take oversight and set in order the things wanting, and the brethren agreed to meet on every Lord's day to do his will. May the Lord bless them. S. F. HARRIS.

Whiteside, November 5.—I am now in a meeting at Aetna Mountain, near Whiteside. I have recently closed three meetings in North Alabama, which I will now report. The first of these meetings was with the congregation at Bell Factory, where I remained over two Lord's days, resulting in six persons being baptized. I next went to Stevenson, where I preached six discourses to very good audiences in the college building, preaching at night only, except on Lord's day. There are a few good brethren and sisters at that place, and if they will go to work earnestly, they can soon build up the cause of Christ, for the people heard me gladly. The third and last meeting was at Paint Rock, at which place I remained over two Lord's days and baptized twenty persons, five of whom were baptized on the last night of the meeting. The interest was good to the last. Brother Charles L. Talley, of Bidwell, was with me part of the time in this meeting and assisted by leading the song service and in exhortation. May the Lord bless the good work in the hands of the faithful. E. H. BOYD.

TEXAS.

Dallas, November 15.—I closed a meeting at Bedford, Tarrant County, on November 13, 1900, with twenty additions—sixteen by baptism and four restored. On September 12, 1900, I closed a meeting at Birdville, in the same county, with fifteen additions—fourteen by baptism and one restored. My health has not been good, and I have not labored as much this summer and fall as usual. To Christ be all the glory for the triumphs of the gospel. R. M. GANO.

Della, November 8.—Brother J. S. Dunn and I began a protracted meeting at Hubbard City on the fourth Lord's day in October and continued until the first Lord's day in November. Brother Dunn did most of the preaching. His discourses were all good, instructive, logical, and brief. The digressives were in the majority and boycotted us in different ways, while a good many of them attended the meeting. Brother Dunn preached one of the best discourses I ever heard on Matt. 16: 18: "Upon this rock I will build my church." He showed that nothing but the church was built upon the Rock, and all other things were shed-room additions. The meeting was very well attended to the close. Brother Dunn promised to hold them a two-weeks' tent meeting next summer. One person was baptized and one restored. We will go to Luna on next Lord's day for another meeting. I want to thank the brethren and sisters of Dawson for their assistance in the meeting. Brother G. W. Farmer, of Dawson, a noble preacher and teacher, is preaching quite often for the congregation at Hubbard. He is an old Tennessean and a good, consecrated preacher. He has a fine school at Dawson. J. B. NELSON.

A Blessing.

Sancho Panza blessed the man who invented sleep. So do our leading society belles bless the memory of the late Dr. T. F. Gouraud, who taught them how to be beautiful. Every one should do all in his power to supplement Nature in adorning the person, and a fine complexion is not given to all; and just here Art aids Nature, and all who use Dr. T. F. Gouraud's Oriental Cream, or Magical Beautifier, know its value, and how the skin that is freckled, tanned, pimpled, or moth patched can be made like the newborn babe's. To those who will use toilet preparations it is recommended by physicians; as the Board of Health has declared it free from all injurious properties, and as it is on sale at all druggists' and fancy goods stores, it is an easy matter to give it a trial, and thus win the approbation of men, as well as the envy of ladies.—New York Evening Express, January 7, 1881.

During the recent severe storm in Nova Scotia a large steamer, the Monticello, foundered off Yarmouth. Of the thirty-six people on board, only four escaped. The place where the Monticello struck is at the mouth of the Bay of Fundy, where the waters of the bay join those of the Atlantic Ocean. There are many reefs and shoals at this point, and the currents are many and changeable, it being one of the most dangerous places on the coast.

It is said that Thomas A. Edison is perfecting a device for utilizing all, or nearly all, of the energy stored in coal. It is a matter of common knowledge that all but about 10 per cent of this energy is now lost—goes up the chimney in smoke and gases. The device consists of two chambers, one inclosing the other. An outer chamber, 36 inches high and 24 inches in diameter, has been used for experiments. The diameter of the inner chamber, in which coal is burned, is two inches less. The heat is applied to the air in the outer chamber from the combustion of coal in the inner chamber; and when heated to a temperature of about 450 degrees, its expansive power is more than doubled.

Responsibility. No. 3.

After having disposed of the responsibilities of two relationships involving sobriety and godliness, we come now to the disposition of the question of righteousness. What is it to live righteously? I am aware that this term can be applied to all the duties of life. We can do right in reference to ourselves, in reference to others, and in reference to God; but when the apostle summed up the whole duty of man in three words—"soberly," "righteously," and "godly"—he did not so use it.

While it is good for a man to live soberly and godly, still he could not be justified unless he should also become righteous. In Rom. 10: 1-3, Paul says: "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." It is clearly seen from this quotation that God's righteousness consists in his plan, or system, of salvation. It can be seen also that any one submitting himself to the direction which God has given would very certainly be called "righteous;" and, further, any one thus following the Lord would be said to live righteously.

To do the will of God is to fulfill all righteousness. When Jesus came to the fords of the river Jordan to be baptized, John forbade him, saying: "I have need to be baptized of thee." John understood that he was baptizing for the remission of sins, and, knowing Jesus as he did, concluded he did not, for that reason, need to be baptized of him; he thought that more properly he should, at the hands of Jesus, receive baptism. John's conclusion was altogether logical, and, from a human standpoint, perfectly reasonable; still, it was not God's way.

It was the will of God that Jesus should be manifested to Israel by the baptism of himself by John in the river Jordan. To obey the will of God is supremely right. Jesus himself says: "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." (John 6: 38.) Therefore Jesus, when John forbade him, said: "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." Jesus teaches, further, what class shall be finally saved: "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." (Matt. 25: 46.)

To live righteously, then, means especially that we live in obedience to the will of God and that we do not neglect to obey his commandments, because we may not perceive some good human reason for their observance. The righteous man is the one who does as Caleb and Joshua did, who fully followed God; as Abraham did, who believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness, and he was called "the friend of God."

"My little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous." Now, in conclusion, we may be able to draw some profitable inferences, if not some sterner conclusions. No man can lead a godly life who does not, in the first place, lead a life of sobriety. To be intemperate in any particular will unfit one to do his duty in full to all others. If a man does not discharge the duties he owes to others, and thus live godly, he cannot live righteously. Logically, righteousness covers all the ground. One may do right toward himself in living soberly, but that is not all; he must do right toward others. So we see that living soberly is a species of righteousness, as well as living godly.

The ethics of the world require a man to live soberly and godly, but as to his living entirely righteously, it cares nothing. If a man is sober, upright, and energetic in his business relations; charitable and kind to all who may have claims on him; is a good husband; a kind, loving father; a faithful friend; and, finally, an honorable citizen, he will receive the commendation of the world; and when he dies the preacher who ministers at his funeral will almost certainly land him safe in the gold-paved city, because he has been so good (godly) a man. We should remember that the Book teaches that the righteous shall go into life eternal; it nowhere says the good shall enter there. It is not by works of righteousness which we have done, but by the favor of God, that we are saved, according to his mercy. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." Such a man as the one I have described may never have exercised any faith in God at all.

"For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, That the man which doeth those things shall live by them. But the righteousness which is of faith [the gospel]. . . . But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 4-10.) God's righteousness is his will concerning the actions of man, and that will is found in the gospel.

Now, the world does not care whether a man believes in God or Christ; nor does it care whether he confesses the Lord Jesus Christ, or repents of his sins, or fulfills righteousness by being baptized into the name of Jesus, or whether he be a faithful follower of the meek and lowly Nazarene. No, none of these works of righteousness does the world require; indeed, some, if not all of them, it would prefer one to neglect. But "the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world." Doing this, we can look forward "for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." JAMES E. SCOBAY. Andrews, Tenn.

Brother A. C. Crenshaw is in a meeting with the brethren at Geneseo.

Brother I. D. Moffit is holding forth the word of life at Cleardale.

Brother A. Elmore, of Indiana, is in a meeting at Rosedale, O. T.

Brother Will. Elmore is assisting the brethren near Wakita, O. T., in proclaiming the gospel.

Brother B. F. Rhodes is due at Hoyle, O. T., and I presume is now there at work.

The brethren near Duquoin are in a meeting. Twenty persons had been added to the one body when I last heard from there. Brother A. C. Crenshaw and Brother Will. Elmore, two efficient preachers, living at Harper, visited the meeting. Brother George Kinwamon, of Sylvia, who will soon be a preacher, attended the meeting one night; brethren from Attica, Harper, and Trenton also attended the meeting. Brother Moffit, Brother D. W. Way, Brother A. C. Crenshaw, Brother C. A. Loney, Brother J. H. D. Thomson, Brother Kinney, and probably others have sown the seed there that is now being harvested. Brother C. M. Johnson did valuable work in the meeting.

The brethren at Sheridan, O. T., will begin a meeting soon.

Every day's experience in the work of the Master impresses me more and more with the importance of standing fast in the faith. Paul said to the Corinthians: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." Jesus is the example before us, in perfection and steadfastness. He is the truth, and, when accepted by us, we have accepted the embodiment of truth, and must stand fast in the faith—that faith in Christ based upon the testimony concerning him. Where Jesus has spoken, let that be the end of controversy. If we waver or depart from that, we will become infirm in character. We must, then, be true to Christ, true to the truth of Christ. He is the truth; look to his example and precepts. The Lord has thrown around us every necessary safeguard; he has ordained the necessary means for our strength. If we are weak, it is because we have failed to use the means placed within our reach. Then why need we be weak? We must be "strong in the Lord;" that is the admonition. We may mistake the matter by trying to be strong in self, instead of being strong in the Lord. It requires much courage to fight the battles of life, but the Saviour's example and his precepts are beto some men talk that they had a surplus of courage, and that they thought they had monopolized it to such an extent that many others do not possess much. I realize that it requires much courage, but I do not think that a few have a monopoly on it. I once knew two preachers that had equal opportunities to enter a certain field of labor, and neither of them went. It was not the lack of courage upon the part of either that I am aware of, but in this certain case one of them accused the other of lack of courage in the matter. We may accuse men wrongfully in such matters; so we ought, at least, to fully understand the matter before we make a charge on a brother, first asking ourselves what motive prompts us to make such charges. It is possible for us to possess selfish motives that cause us to make accusations, rather than our love for and interest in the one that is accused by us. Self-examination as to motives and results would be well upon the part of each of us before we make any attack. What motive prompts us to accuse our brethren of lack of courage? What is the incentive to induce us to cast reflections upon the loyalty of a brother? Let us be careful about such reflections; be certain that we know what we are talking about, and even then be certain that it is not a selfish motive that prompts us to bring such to the notice of others. I do not mean that any wrongs should be concealed—that we should harbor a criminal, so to speak—but that we should clear ourselves of any guilt and be certain to examine our motives, even when a thing needs to be done. If a thing needs to be exposed, the good results growing out of it often depend largely upon the character of the man who does the exposing. For a man to turn "State's evidence" may be valuable from a legal standpoint, but probably not so profitable from a moral standpoint. There are many things to consider in bringing things to light especially bearing upon a man's character, influence, and usefulness.

The wholesale drug firm of Tarrant & Co., one of the largest and best known in New York City, suffered a very serious loss on October 29, 1900, in the total destruction by fire and explosion of their fine building on the corner of Greenwich and Warren streets. This firm has been engaged for more than half a century in the manufacture of a number of valuable proprietary articles, among them Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient, which is sold and used all over the world. With true American pluck and enterprise, the company opened new offices for the transaction of business on the day after the fire, and arrangements were made to resume, at once, the manufacture of the Seltzer Aperient and other specialties. However, as druggists everywhere carry a full stock of Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient, our readers can procure it from their local druggists as usual.

The Gospel Advocate from the time the subscription is received to January 1, 1902, for $1.50. Why wait till next January to begin reading this most excellent journal when you can read it, beginning now, at the same price? Now is the time to subscribe. Encourage the circulation of good literature by becoming a reader of the Gospel Advocate at once, if you are not already one, and also by getting as many of your friends to read it as possible. The editors of the paper will appreciate your patronage, will do all in their power to keep the paper up to its present high standard of excellence, and, if possible, make it better with each issue. The man who reads a first-class religious paper usually takes more interest in the cause of Christ than one who does not. We hope our readers will show this liberal offer to their friends and induce them to become regular subscribers to the Gospel Advocate. Who will be the first to send us a number of new subscribers on this proposition? We would like to have several thousand new readers before January 1, 1901. Address all orders to Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

The Christian Standard, in an editorial article, says: "Nearly all our friends who have written to protest against war have failed to make the distinction between church and State. Their constant question is, 'What would Christ do?' as though the settlement of everything depended upon the answer to this question."

This clears up an old delusion. Peter and Paul and the rest of the apostles and thousands of faithful disciples of their time and since were laboring under the impression that they ought to follow Christ and make his character and teaching the touchstone of their lives. "What would Jesus do in my case?" was the one great question with the poor Christians; and the answer decided their course. Now, we are happy to record that at the dawn of the twentieth century this fog of ignorance is scattered with a few dexterous strokes of the pen. But, strangely enough, a great number of us are unwilling to take the new way, and with true Christians of early days we still regard Christ as the criterion of the truest, noblest character, and strive to attain to his spiritual stature. "For hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example, that ye should follow his steps: who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously."

It was never expected that outsiders as such would subject themselves to the teaching of Christ.

Sinners do not profess to pattern after Christ. It is very true that there is a wide difference between church and State—as wide, indeed, as between church and world. The church seeks after the glory of God; the State seeks after its own glory. The church is ruled by the word and example of Christ, while the civil government, of necessity, is guided by selfishness and the spirit of retaliation. Christ came to beat swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks, that the nations should learn war no more. His wisdom is from above, and is peaceable, gentle, easily intreated, and full of mercy and good fruits; the wisdom of the civil government is of the earth earthy. It is not worth while to try to justify its wars and other dealings by the teaching of Christ.

The writer quoted in the first paragraph is of the opinion that a Christian can participate in war, and gives his grounds for so thinking: "Nearly all our friends who have written to protest against war failed to make the distinction between church and State. Their constant question is, 'What would Christ do?' as though the settlement of everything depended upon the answer to this question. But there are innumerable things that Christ would not do which are perfectly legitimate transactions. Our Lord would not make laws for the government of men who are not his disciples; he would not build penitentiaries or jails, appoint policemen, levy taxes, or exercise authority over men according to the principles of civil government."

Be it admitted that there are innumerable things which Christ did not do, how shall we know how many of those things a Christian may consistently carry on? Christ did not cultivate a farm; he would not have farmed for any consideration when his time was occupied with preaching, teaching, and healing. In like manner Christ did not sell goods; he was not a musician; he was not a sailor; it is equally true that he was not a gambler or a publican. Now, which of the things he did not do may we follow? The answer is plain: We may do anything that is in harmony with his teaching. Jesus and his apostles indorsed, by word and deed, honorable labor. A farmer, a merchant, an artist, a sailor, a miner, may follow Christ without giving up his business; in fact, they follow Christ in doing their work faithfully in his name. But can the same be said of a gambler, for instance? Why not? Because gambling is evidently contrary to the spirit of his teaching. What about war?

"Whence come wars and whence come fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your pleasures that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not: ye kill, and covet, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war: ye have not, because ye ask not." (James 4: 1, 2, R. V.) "But in the latter days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge between many peoples, and shall reprove strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Mic. 4: 1-3, R. V.) "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, even upon a colt the foal of an ass. And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle bow shall be cut off: and he shall speak peace unto the nations: and his dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the River to the ends of the earth." (Zech. 9: 9, 10, R. V.) "He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariots in the fire." (Ps. 46: 9, R. V.)

These passages show: (1) That the origin of war is in the lust of the flesh; its germ lies in the carnal mind. (2) That the result of Christ's work and doctrine will be the total cessation of all war. Christ is Prince of peace; his teaching is directly antagonistic to the spirit of war, and when his reign becomes supreme, "nation shall not lift up sword against nation." His reign is not universal yet, he governs only among his true followers; and shall they, "the salt of the earth," "the light of the world," endeavor to frustrate the purpose of their King by participation in war? I speak not of the world; I speak of Christians. Shall they engage in the very thing Jesus came to abolish?

It may be argued that this would exclude a Christian from all participation in civil government. Precisely. A Christian cannot afford to go to war; he cannot vote for any selfish measure; he cannot take hand in the punishment of evil doers. So the apostles teach. After charging the Christian not to avenge himself, he says that the rulers of the civil government are God's ministers to execute vengeance. "For this cause pay we tribute also." As long as there are evil doers to be punished, God will make provision to have that attended to, for all men are his instruments and servants. But to the Christian it is said: "Avenge not thyself." We owe to the civil governments custom, tribute, and honor; but we may not partake with them in their work. We are a peculiar, separate people, and our citizenship is in heaven.

"Ye have heard that it was said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you. Resist not him that is evil: but whosoever smiteth thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man would go to law with thee, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go one mile, go with him twain. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away. Ye have heard that it was said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy: but I say unto you, Love your enemies, and pray for them that persecute you; that ye may be sons of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust." (Matt. 5: 38-45, R. V.) "If it be possible, as much as in you lieth, be at peace with all men." (Rom. 12: 18, R. V.) "Avenge not yourselves, beloved, but give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance belongeth unto me; I will recompense, saith the Lord. But if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him to drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12: 19-21, R. V.)

Though I speak with the eloquence of Patrick Henry or Henry Clay, and have not charity, I am but an empty drum and a talking machine; though I know the Bible from lid to lid, and reason like Plato, and though in debate I could drive every sectarian to the wall, and the world be astonished at my brilliancy and power, but have not charity, I am nothing; though sisters and brethren say I am the best man in the world, and the newspapers boast my benevolence, and though I sacrifice my life rather than to give up a point, but have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

Charity bears long with insult and folly; charity is not malicious and harsh; it is not jealous at the honor of a brother and fellow-laborer. Charity does not brag—no, not even of its superior orthodoxy; charity does not walk into a house with muddy shoes; it does not spit on the floor; it does not put its feet on the mantel; it wears its coat at the dinner table, where custom demands it. Charity does not inflict a filthy person on human society, but takes a bath occasionally; charity is not greedy, and is willing to lose at times for the benefit of others; charity is not loaded with a temper that fires off at a touch; it does not keep in mind a category of wrongs it suffered, nor a list of the brethren's sins. When a brother falls, it does not smile and say, "I told you so;" but it is glad when a poor soul struggles up out of darkness and filth into the light of God. Charity can bear wonderful loads, and do untold, superhuman amounts of work, for it is strong; it is not suspiciously disposed, does not easily lose confidence in a brother, but hopes, even against hope, for his final victory over the hosts of sin. Charity is not spasmodic, gushing one day and dry the next; its fountain never fails, and it flows on, steadily growing larger, toward the all-embracing ocean of infinite love.

On the first page of the last issue of this paper, we notice this sentence: "God sent the gospel to all that were in bondage—to Satan, thieves, murderers," etc. This is the printer's mistake. It was intended to read: "God sent the gospel to all that were in bondage to Satan—thieves, murderers," etc. God never sent any gospel to Satan, so far as we are able to learn.

The following rules laid down by Commodore Vanderbilt for his guidance in the business affairs of life are worthy the consideration of the young people. It is not desirable that many should succeed in amassing such fortunes as he did. Indeed, we doubt whether it is good that any should. Such immense fortunes collected in one family are good neither for the owners nor the public. But the rules laid down by Mr. Vanderbilt will lead to fair success in life of every one who will follow them; and without an adherence to these rules of action to a greater or lesser degree, there can be no true success in life. More and more it is becoming necessary that strict rules of industry and integrity are needed for success.

"At the outset he adopted for himself certain rules of conduct, few and simple, to which he closely adhered, among which were these: Never to go back upon his word; never to fail in fulfilling an engagement; to be chary of promises, so he might do more than he promised; to spend less than he earned, or to live within his income, whatever that might be; be courteous, and you will hardly be insulted; owe no man anything, and you may face the world; be chaste and honest, and then defy blackmail and defamation. Thus did he build up character and fortune and walk erect among men. There were, in his opinion, two good reasons for keeping your own counsel, and not proclaiming purposes beforehand: Others cannot take advantage of the information, and you may, in following the latest and best light, change your methods and plans up to the last moment without the appearance of instability.

"He abhorred liars and lying. I have heard him remark, with warmth, on the value of truthfulness in men working under you or working for you; it was, in his estimation, the one quality that never stood alone. 'If,' said he, 'you find a man that will tell the truth and stick to it, unless he is mighty heavy, you had better take him along.'

Sterling integrity and reliability and clean and pure habits are more and more becoming the essentials to success, as they should be, in business life. While the monopolies and trusts bring evils in many directions, they bring good in others. One is, they put employees more upon their merit, less upon personal and family influences.

The mechanical inventions and the operation of machinery demand clear mind, watchful care, and steady nerves. As a result, the railroads and factories are demanding that their employees shall be free from the use of spirituous liquors and tobacco. This demand will grow more and more, so that youths and young men applying for positions will be met with the question, "Do you use spirits or tobacco?"

Integrity and trustworthiness will be more and more demanded in every department of life; so that business and pecuniary interest will combine with moral and religious principle to promote integrity and purity of life. With the average specimen of humanity it will take both these influences to make of man what God intended he should be. It is God bringing about these results when they are produced through indirect influences as much as when they are produced by direct teaching. God directs all the affairs of the universe to bring good to those who desire to honor him. He often forces them into good when they fail to see and seek it. Good that we would refuse is often forced upon us. D. L.

Vessels unto Honor and Dishonor. No. 2.

For some works God may use his children exclusively, other things he will accomplish by the sole instrumentality of the sinner; but oftener he employs both agencies at once—the good for the clean work, the wicked for the dirty work. The vessel unto honor plays the honorable part; the vessel unto dishonor becomes the natural receptacle of the refuse and necessary filth. God uses the evil man as he does the scavenger in the economy of nature. But though the Lord avails himself of the wicked propensity, he is not the author or fosterer of evil. The evil disposition of man rushes on, like a river, into sin and destruction. God guides the river into a particular channel and makes it turn a wheel.

Here the brethren of Joseph, filled with envy and malice against their righteous brother, sell him to the Midianite merchants. We begin to fear for him; but there is no need. Is not God's hand in it? A long time before this God made a prediction. "And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge: and afterwards shall they come out with great substance. But thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age. And in the fourth generation they shall come hither again: for the iniquity of the Amorite is not yet full." (Gen. 15: 13-16, R. V.) The time has come to bring it to pass, and both vessel unto honor and vessel unto dishonor must help in the work. Joseph is carried into Egypt as a slave. As far as he can see, only the incalculable waves of fate have swept him hither; but if we dare to believe the Scriptures, no planet pursued more unerringly its course than did the purpose of God and the destiny of Joseph and his people which was involved in it. Now, Joseph figures in the household of Potiphar, and becomes head steward there; now he falls, apparently, by his own integrity, and is buried in the hopeless depth of the prison one year, two years; yet events are tending directly toward the fulfillment of the plan of the Almighty. Only the eye of faith and childlike trust can perceive that this imprisonment is aught else than a failure. Now, Joseph happens to what unbelieving humanity would call "good luck." He suddenly rises into favor with Pharaoh and becomes governor in chief of the whole country of Egypt. But it is neither chance nor luck, any more than it is luck that a stone thrown into the air returns to the earth again.

This is one act of the drama; but the aim of the whole is not yet reached. During the abundance of the fat years, Joseph gathers up grain in stupendous quantities—fills every storehouse in the land to overflowing, until it becomes impossible to measure and number. Then the seven years of famine. Joseph sells out the stores of grain at immense profits for Pharaoh. Meanwhile he meets his brethren, who humble themselves before Joseph and receive sustenance from him. The story ends with the arrival and settlement of Jacob's family in the land of Egypt. What has God done now? Fulfilled his word to Abraham? Yes. He gave the Amorite a chance before he cast him out of the land promised to Israel, for the Amorite's measure of iniquity was not yet full; he led Israel into Egypt, as he had predicted; he saved Israel from perishing in the seven years of famine; he rewarded Joseph for his integrity and loyalty to God, and humiliated his brethren. All this we may say in one stroke. Jacob and Joseph, Joseph's brothers, the Ishmaelitic merchants, Potiphar, Potiphar's wife, the jailer, the king's butler, and Pharaoh—these were the vessels God employed in this transaction, some unto honor, some unto dishonor.

The greatest event in the history of the world was brought about, under God's guidance, by the joint agency of the wicked and good. I speak of the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. What a predominant part there was to be performed by the instruments of unrighteousness! His own people, unbelieving, hard-hearted, were to reject him and condemn him; one of his followers must betray him; some one must nail him to the cross. The details of his death and burial were prophesied a thousand years before. And now God makes good his word and declares his marvelous wisdom in overruling the wickedness and also the integrity of that people to his own ends. Not that all were to be made guilty of Christ's blood, but those only who were capable of murdering; neither was any man to contribute a single misdeed toward the great end who was not already fitted and willing to do evil. A just-minded Nicodemus; an honorable Joseph of Arimathea; the simple-hearted, devoted disciples; the sympathetic women—these were not among God's vessels unto dishonor. But God combined the prejudice and hypocrisy of the Pharisees; the thieving, covetous disposition of Judas; the vileness of Herod; the ambition of Pilate; and the ignorance of the whole crowd to bring to pass the prophecies of old. They persecuted him, betrayed him, condemned him, crucified him, mocked him on the cross, threw lots upon his vesture, and parted his garments among them. Just as it had been written by their own prophets. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far from helping me, and from the word of my roaring? . . . All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying, He trusted on the Lord that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him. . . . I am poured out like water, and all my bones are out of joint: my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels. My strength is dried up like a potsherd; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. For dogs have compassed me: the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet. I may tell all my bones: they look and stare upon me. They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture. But be not thou far from me, O Lord: O my strength, haste thee to help me." (Ps. 22: 1-19.)

It would be difficult to imagine the astonishment and dismay of the Jews who afterwards came to see that while carrying out their own purposes they had been but tools in God's hand and had fulfilled the scriptures that had portrayed their action hundreds of years ago in the language of prophecy. To what use was all their rage and clamoring? They only advanced God's purposes and contributed to the glory of him who turned their wicked counsels to his advantage. So David wrote in Ps. 2, and it was quoted by the persecuted disciples in a memorable prayer: "O Lord, thou that didst make the heaven and the earth and the sea, and all that in them is: who by the Holy Ghost, by the mouth of our father David thy servant, didst say, Why did the Gentiles rage, and the peoples imagine vain things? The kings of the earth set themselves in array, and the rulers were gathered together, against the Lord, and against his Anointed: for of a truth in this city against thy holy Servant Jesus, whom thou didst anoint, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the peoples of Israel, were gathered together, to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel foreordained to come to pass." (Acts 4: 24-28, R. V.) They were gathered against the Lord and against his Anointed, and said: "Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us." They despised the authority of God, and thought to rebel against him; but "he that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision," for all their efforts were only to do whatsoever God's hand and God's counsel "foreordained to come to pass." The greatest good came to the human family through the wickedness of those men, which circumstance, to be sure, did not excuse them or even mitigate their guilt, but commended the wisdom and benevolence of the Almighty.

God's work on earth is not yet done. God still works and guides the course of the human family. Still in his inscrutable wisdom he uses men—some as vessels unto honor, others as vessels unto dishonor. Whether we are rebels or subjects of his kingdom, we must work for him. The one question that is of infinite importance to us is: Are we earnest, true coworkers of God? Do we of principle belong to his army and fight against darkness and sin, to his name's glory? Remember the wide dividing line which Jesus established: "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."

There is to the humble Christian a sweet consolation in the thought that God is personally directing the affairs of men to bring about the day of peace, else would the world be swallowed up and perish in the putridity of its own wickedness. But the great Father knows how to direct evil and bring good out of it. Yes; and all the evil, wars, and bloodshed; the devil himself, with his angels; all powers and principalities on the earth and under the earth must work together for good to them that love God. (Rom. 8: 28.) Well may we exclaim at the sight of God's wonderful works, as Paul did: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past tracing out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counselor? or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and unto him, are all things. To him be the glory forever. Amen." R. H. BOLL.

To the Public.

This communication is presented for your consideration, that you may know some things connected with the so-called "discussion" between Brother Kurfees and myself which has been published in the Gospel Advocate recently.

1. Those articles were private letters between Brother Kurfees and myself.

2. They were published without my knowledge or consent.

3. My private letters are my personal property, and when any man in whose hands I have trusted them uses them without my consent he becomes morally and civilly guilty of a breach of trust, and any man or set of men knowingly consenting to such act are equally guilty in the sight of God and all right-thinking people.

4. When I showed Brother Kurfees my first article on this subject, at the Gospel Advocate office, in Nashville, he asked me to have it published, and I refused, giving him as my reason that I feared it might be misconstrued by some brethren as an advocacy of or an apology for the organ; and I then and there assured him that such was not my intention in writing it.

5. Certainly a man may examine the validity of an argument against a thing without thereby becoming an advocate of that thing.

6. I told him, as I now tell you, that I have never knowingly said or done anything which I think can be fairly construed as advocating the use of an organ.

7. I have never tried to carry both sides of this or any other question; but I have tried always to use only valid arguments in support of what I believed to be the truth, and I have sought to keep from running to such extremes as some of my brethren on both sides of this question seem to me to have done.

8. I love all my brethren on both sides of this question, and I believe as much brain, honesty, and religion can be found on one side as on the other; and I certainly am as willing to fellowship those who use the organ as I am those who publish private letters contrary to the will of the writer.

9. Seven years ago, when I left Lexington, Ky., I told Brother Kurfees that my aged father and mother needed my presence and companionship and that I would feel more at home among my own brethren in Tennessee, who thought as I did on this question, than I did there. Hence, you can see that he did not state all the reason I gave for leaving. Perhaps he forgot the other part. I am glad to say, however, that since then I have grown some in knowledge and love, and I now feel at home among all my brethren anywhere.

10. My reasons for discontinuing the private letters were: Firstly, I saw that Brother Kurfees had entirely turned aside from the argument which I presented to him for criticism. He has absolutely not even touched the definition which I presented to him in the beginning. His first article is based upon a misconception of my definition. My second article simply corrects this misconception and points out his fallacies based on this misconception. His second article, after admitting my right to explain my meaning, then ignores the meaning which I gave to him, and is all taken up in fallacious reasoning upon other phases of the question which he illogically introduces. From these facts I lost all hope of getting any help from him on the question proposed to him, and hence did not reply to his second article. Secondly, I did not appreciate his oft-repeated insinuations that I was prejudiced in favor of the organ and was really arguing in defense of it, when I knew in my own heart how unjust these insinuations were, and yet he continued to make them in the face of my oft-repeated denials.

11. Finally, seeing he seems anxious to have my arguments on this question made public, I now propose to him that we discuss the original question, either orally or in print or both ways, if he so desire, my only suggestion being that all personalities and homilies be left out of the discussion; and I am willing, if he thinks I need these things, that he shall present them in separate articles or speeches, as the case may be. But I insist that they have no place in the discussion, for the correctness of a man's logic is not dependent in any way upon his honesty or freedom from prejudice. I disdain to call the publication of private letters a "discussion." May God bless Brother Kurfees and the editors of the Gospel Advocate and all of us, is my sincere prayer. Submitted in love. A LITTLE SERMON.

Never a day is lost, dear,
If at night you can truly say
You've done one kindly deed, dear,
Or smoothed some rugged way.

Never a day is dark, dear,
Where the sunshine of home may fall,
And where the sweet home voices
May answer you when you call.

Never a day is sad, dear,
If it brings at set of sun
A kiss from mother's lips, dear,
And a thought of work well done.

A SERMON FROM A SECULAR TEXT.

United, we stand; divided, we fall.

I am not able, my readers, to tell you who is the author of this fine saying; it is hard to trace the parentage of a maxim. When we think we have found its origin, we must not be too sure, for—behold!—the first we know, it springs up somewhere else, away back in the generations of thought and feeling.

This proverb may have started in the times of the Greek States, which, invincible so long as they worked and fought together, were easily, when divided, conquered in detail; it may have been the battle cry of a Roman phalanx when it flung itself together in an invincible mass of human and inhuman bravery; it may have been the despairing cry of civilization when the Dark Ages were dispersing and overwhelming it; it may have first sought the air when our forefathers of the American Revolution emphasized the fact that "if they did not hang together, they would hang separately;" but, at all events, the great truth which it embodies has always existed, and will always do so.

Behold its magic effect as the motto and the watchword of a family! Listen and notice, they are consoling each other carefully in all their troubles, counseling each other wisely in all their perplexities; they are helping each other through difficulties, and defending each other through dangers. Do not attack one of them, unless you wish to be attacked by the others. A battle with one of the members of a united family means almost a war with a small nation. How such a family thrives and conquers! What a power for good it becomes!

But let that family "fall out;" "get at swords' points;" come to nagging, cheating, and traducing each other; how quickly ruin leaps upon them! They are like a person who can commit suicide all the more quickly and easily because he knows himself well and can readily get at all the vital parts. They can tell things about each other that no one else knows; they can hurt each other in ways that any one outside the clan would not detect; they can gradually murder each other.

In how many other enterprises and relationships do we see this same principle work—in business firms, in neighborhood affairs, in political parties, in everything where combination of human skill and force is needed. So long as men and women are united, they are almost invincible; as soon as they do not work together, they are doubly, trebly weakened.

The destruction of many of the great "trusts" that now worry the country will finally come, not from legislation, but their own inherent weakness; in that the many furnish the funds with which the enterprise is to be conducted, and the very few are supposed to supply the brain and management.

Here is a combination of money and mind and soul; here are the seeds of division, planted and sown right at the very outset; here are the causes which are already turning many of the largest trusts into gigantic banks.

And when it comes to relief, my dear readers, how true is the saying, "United we stand; divided we fall!" Christ meant that when he said: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name." That is what the scripture means when it counsels "the assembling of yourselves together." That is what the church is for—so that, united, it can stand. So long as Christians counsel together, pray together, act together, feel together, and, it need be, suffer together, they are an invincible power; when dissensions come, the devil gets his opportunity.—Everywhere.

"UNHASTING, YET UNRESTING."

We ought to learn to work swiftly. Many people are very slow. Many lose in aimless loitering whole golden hours which they ought to fill with energetic activity. It is quite safe to say that the majority of people do not get into their life half the achievement that was possible to them when they began to live, simply because they have never learned to work swiftly.

Longfellow once said to his pupils: "Live up to the best that is in you." To do this we must seek the development of all our powers to their fullest possibilities, and then the using of them in the most intense service. Dreaming through days and years, however brilliant one's dreams, will never accomplish anything worth while. Plenty of young men, with the artist's power, dream out enough splendid pictures to make them famous, if only they were wrought out, and yet they lack the energy ever to put even one of their dreams on canvas. It is pathetic to think what glorious possibilities of human attainment and achievement perish in people's brains and hearts, simply for lack of energy to realize them.

Naturally, most of us are indolent. We need something in us which, by its moral force, will carry us out of and beyond ourself. The only motive that is strong enough to do this is love. Love for God fills our soul with desire to obey him, to do his will; love for men inspires us to all service of sympathy and beneficence, regardless of cost. Such motives constraining us will overcome the inertia of nature.

Habit is also important. As one begins, one continues; as one is trained in early life, one is quite sure to live in mature years. A loitering child will become a loitering man or woman. The loitering habit soon plays havoc with earnestness and efficiency.

Lose this day loitering, 'twill be the same story
To-morrow, and the next more dilatory;
The indecision brings its own delays,
And days are lost, lamenting o'er lost days.

Another way of losing time is by the lack of system. Many people have no plan for their days. They let duties come and go as they will; they fly from task to task, having a score of undertakings in hand at once and finishing nothing. A little method would keep things in their place and obviate that feverish haste which is such a waster of time and strength. You find some people who are always talking of being overwhelmed with work, of having so much to do that they can scarcely get through their work. They are always in a hurry. But, really, if only they would learn the lesson, they could do far more work than they are now accomplishing, with one-half the expenditure of strength and energy. Hurry always hinders. It does not do its work well, and it does not achieve what quietness would do. An eminent French surgeon used to say to his students, when they were engaging in any difficult and delicate operation: "Gentlemen, do not be in a hurry, for there is no time to lose." Haste unfits us for our best work in any line. Then it costs ten times more in outlay of vitality than work without hurry. Goethe's motto is a good one: "Unhasting, yet unresting."

"Without haste, without rest!"
Bind the motto on thy breast;
Bear it with thee as a spell;
Storm or sunshine, guard it well;
Heed not flowers that round thee bloom.
Bear it onward to the tomb.

Rest not, life is sweeping by,
Do and dare before you die;
Something mighty and sublime
Leave behind to conquer time;
Glorious 'tis to live for aye
When these forms have passed away.

Haste not, rest not, calmly wait;
Meekly bear the storm of fate;
Duty be thy polar guide;
Do the right, whate'er betide,
Haste not, rest not! Conflicts past,
God shall crown thy work at last.

Queries.

Brother Sewell: (1) Please explain fully, through the Gospel Advocate, Acts 16: 30. The question is this: Does the jailer want to know what to do to be saved from his past sins or from the punishment he will receive if the prisoners have fled? (2) Also explain Isa. 35: 8.

H. E. MASON.

The above query was mislaid, or it would have been answered sooner. (1) From the answer of Paul to the jailer, he certainly understood him to mean salvation from sin, for he proceeded at once to tell him what to do to be saved from sin; and he did those things that very night, and was saved, and his household. Paul, being an inspired man, knew what he meant, and he answered according to the purport of his question. (2) Isa. 35: 8 is generally understood to refer to the gospel plan of salvation, that was to be so plain that all could understand it; and such was really the case with the gospel when proclaimed by the apostles. One hearing of it was sufficient for all to understand it. Hence, about three thousand heard it for the first time, understood it, embraced it, and were saved by it on the day of Pentecost; and it is just as plain now as it was then, if men would preach it just as recorded.

Brother Lipscomb: Is it in harmony with the teachings of the New Testament when the church makes its contribution on the first day of the week to pass the contribution basket to the alien world for means for church purposes, contrary to the desire of some of the members? Please answer through the Gospel Advocate.

Corsicana, Tex.

W. B. WORTHINGTON.

I do not think the basket ought to be passed to any as begging for help. All offerings should be freewill offerings, and the passing of the basket should merely afford the opportunity of making the freewill offering without confusion. The question, then, is: Should an outsider be permitted to make offerings to the church if he desires to do so? While there are some scriptures that seem to oppose this, there are examples in both the Old Testament and the New Testament of outsiders contributing to help the servants of God in their work. Cyrus and Darius very greatly helped the Jews with means to return to Jerusalem and to rebuild the city and temple. (Ez. 1, 6, 7.) In the New Testament we find similar examples. The elders of Israel pleaded that the centurion whose servant was sick "was worthy for whom he should do this: for he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue." (Luke 7: 4, 5.) And Jesus healed his servant. Jesus seems in this to look with favor on those who help his children. Nor do we find Jesus or the apostles repelling any kindness offered by those not members. In the case of the return of the Jews to Judea, Sanballat and his associates claimed to be of the Jewish family and the right to have a voice in the building of the temple, when they were enemies seeking to control them. To these the servant of God said: "Ye have no part nor lot in this work." From a study of the Bible on this subject, I have reached the conclusion that it is wrong to beg outsiders for help—or any one, for that matter; but if one of his own good will desires to help in a good work, do not refuse him the privilege. I think this is the rule that Jesus and the apostles followed, and we have no right to object to following their rule.

Missionary Work.

After some delay, because of my absence from home, the Gospel Advocate has been received, and the article from the editor of the first page in reply to mine has been read with interest. So far as the spirit of the article is concerned, it is all that can be desired.

It is true, as the editor says, that we read of no general missionary boards in New Testament times. We can just as truly say that we read of no church houses, Gospel Advocates, Sunday school literature, and such like; and yet who will claim that these agencies are wrong or unscriptural?

We are commanded to "preach the gospel to all the nations." Now, the agency that does this most effectively is the best agency. If organized mission effort accomplishes the end better than can be done by individuals or single congregations, I think it must be pleasing to the Lord.

The editor says: "When support comes through the 'missionary board,' it is not possible to tell what church is sending to the support of the preacher. It is not possible to see the church through the board." Now, the very opposite is true. Every month the board publishes the list of churches and individuals contributing to its work, so that the preachers and workers know just who are supporting them.

While Paul praised the Philippian brethren for giving to his support, there is a clearly implied censure for those churches that did not contribute to his support. In his Epistle to the Corinthians the censure is clearly expressed.

Our brother asks: "Why does one part of the Christian world separate itself from another?" That is precisely what we do not do. We may differ as to plans of work, and yet be brethren. There is no constraint or force employed to induce men to support our mission enterprises; it is a voluntary work. We do not ostracize our brethren who do not work through our general boards. What we all want is for God's work to be done.

In my opinion, the Gospel Advocate in some respects has no superior among our papers.

Liberty, Mo.

SIMPSON ELY.

In answer to this kind, respectful communication from Brother Ely, it is but necessary to determine whether, indeed, the missionary society is merely a way of obeying Christ's command and stands on par with "church houses, Gospel Advocates, Sunday school literature, and such like." Meeting-houses, or their equivalents, were necessarily implied in the command to assemble ourselves. (See Acts 20: 8.) Hence, meetinghouses are scriptural. The Gospel Advocate had its equivalent in the epistles that were circulated among the Christians of the apostolic age. It is printed, the epistles were written—equivalents again. Instead of Paul and Silas and Timotheus, we have other brethren sending forth the same sentiments. Hence, it is scriptural. Sunday school literature comes under the same head with the letters of the apostolic day; it is merely written teaching. In using meeting-houses, religious papers, Sunday school literature, and printed sermons, we do the very things the apostles commanded and did themselves. When we ride on the train to a destitute field, we follow the example of Paul. These things are equivalents. The old-time stage was the equivalent of our railroad as far as concerns its agency. We do nothing with a printed paper that the apostles did not do with the written paper. Hence, as Brother Ely well remarks: "Who will claim that these agencies are wrong or unscriptural?"

But now comes the second part: Is the missionary society an equivalent to the apostles' way? Is it implicitly commanded in the Scriptures as is the meetinghouse? Is it merely a method of doing what the apostles did?

In the first place, we beg to suggest that the apostles and early Christians had the same facilities for organizing a missionary society that we have. They could not have ridden on a train or printed a paper; but they found the same opportunities to make a society; the same—yea, a greater—need of carrying the gospel to the heathen in the quickest, most effective way; and they, guided by the Holy Spirit, accomplished the work. But they organized no missionary society. Being sent by their congregations, they went forth, having been commended by the church to the grace of God. They were supported by different churches, sometimes by the people among whom they labored, sometimes by the work of their own hands. They returned and gave account to the church of their work and success. No strange organization, no offices, no red tape! The church was God's missionary society, and he wants to be glorified in the church throughout all ages, world without end. In those days mission work was brilliantly successful.

So if the missionary society were even nothing more than an expedient, it would at best be a doubtful and unnecessary one. Should we for the sake of an expedient drive brethren away from us and bring division into the church?

But the missionary society is not simply an expedient. It is a distinct organization, with an unscriptural constitution. Brother Kurfees quotes from the by-laws of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and comments on it, as follows:

"Article III. This society shall be composed of life directors, life members, annual members, and representatives of Sunday schools, Sunday school classes, and missionary associations.

"Article IV. Its officers shall be a president, five vice presidents, a recording secretary, a corresponding secretary, and a treasurer, who shall be elected annually.

"Article VI. Any member of the church of Christ may become a life director by the payment of $500, which may be paid in five annual installments; or a life member by the payment of $100, in five annual installments; or an annual member by the payment of $10; or any church of Christ, or Sunday school, or Sunday school class, or missionary association, may be represented in the directorship or the membership for fifteen years by paying, respectively, $500, or $100 in five annual installments, provided the representative is a member of the church of Christ.

"Article VIII. The board of managers shall have power to appoint its own meetings; elect its own chairman and secretary; enact its own by-laws and rules of order, provided always that they be not inconsistent with the constitution of this society; fill all vacancies which may occur in its own body during the year; and, if deemed necessary by two thirds of the members present at a regular meeting, convene special meetings of the society. It shall establish such agencies as the interests of the society may require, appoint missionaries, fix their compensation, direct their labors, make all appropriations to be paid out of the treasury, and present to the society at each annual meeting a report of its proceedings during the past year. The action of the board of managers is subject to revision by the society."

"The idea that a religious body which puts forth such rules and restrictions for carrying on the Lord's work is not a denomination is preposterous in the extreme. According to this constitution, a child of God, however pious, zealous, and worthy, can have no voice in the work of preaching the gospel to the heathen, except by the payment of a stipulated amount of cash. This puts a money value upon the privilege of preaching the gospel to the heathen—throws it upon the religious market, so to speak, and barters it away for so much cash. Of course, in all such denominational restriction, the poor can stand no show with the rich. The latter can furnish the money to buy the directorships and memberships; and since the holders of these control the concern, the only alternative left to poor people is to either turn away from such denominational restriction or not preach the gospel to the heathen at all. The same reasoning applies to the American Christian Missionary Society, the difference being that the price of directorships and memberships is put at a lower figure. Not even the Son of God himself, nor his inspired apostles, could have had any voice in the control of such work, simply because they did not have the money to buy the privilege; and I hesitate not to say that, when the terms of coöperation in an ecclesiastical organization are such as to exclude the Lord himself and all his apostles, it is time for the friends of the Lord to exclude the organization and to turn away from any ecclesiastical body itself that cannot exist without such things. The fact is, whenever a denomination, as such, adopts a given practice or starts in a given direction, it is only a question of time when any man or any local church that belongs to the denomination will virtually adopt the same practice or go in the same direction. The only way for an individual or a church to prevent this result is to pull out of the denomination, and thus cease to be a part of it. It is a practical impossibility to remain in a denomination and not go with it in its practices."

These things speak for themselves. But even aside from the money feature, the whole organization is foreign to the word of God, an addition to God's work which not only he did not authorize, but in place of which he established another society—the church. It remains only to be asked why men of zeal and knowledge will presume to do what Christ and his apostles in their day had opportunity to do, but, for grave reasons, did not do—endeavor to improve on God's wisdom, and build where God did not build, producing another missionary society over and above the one God instituted. As long as brethren will act in this way, divisions are unavoidable.

PERSONAL.

Brother Hall Calhoun, of Henderson, Tenn., was with us one day last week.

The address of Brother G. W. Bonham is changed from Berclair to Marcelena, Tex.

Brother Larimore's meeting with the church of Christ at Smithville, Tenn., closed on the 25th inst.

Brother W. H. Carter, of the Highland Preacher, has been in a meeting with the church of Christ at Horse Cave, Ky.

On November 21, 1900, at the Foster Street meetinghouse, Brother J. C. McQuiddy officiating, Miss Kate Burt Benedict was married to Mr. W. H. Johnson.

Brother F. W. Smith has been in a good meeting at McMinnville, Tenn. He has been preaching to large audiences, and when we heard from there last Saturday there had been four additions to the one body.

I reached Louisville yesterday (November 15, 1900), and am at home again. I feel a little worn down today from the trip, but think nothing serious will result from it. My address, till I return to Japan, will be, as formerly, 2601 Montgomery street, Louisville, Ky. I hope to have fully regained my strength before many weeks at most. I desire your prayers.—J. M. McCaleb, Louisville, Ky.

A four-days' discussion will be held at Henning, Tenn., beginning on Tuesday, November 27, 1900, between W. F. Barrier (Methodist) and David A. Parrish (Christian). The following subjects will be discussed: "The direct operation of the Spirit, independent of the word, in conversion;" "Baptism to a believing penitent is a condition of pardon;" "The scriptural way to baptize with water is pouring or sprinkling;" "Scriptural baptism is a burial in water."—David A. Parrish.

Beginning on Thursday, December 6, 1900, Brother L. S. White will engage in a six-days' debate with A. Malone (Baptist), of Franklin, Ky. The debate will be held at Hebron, Tenn., which is about eight miles from this city, on the Murfreesboro pike. Brother White will for three days affirm: "The church of God, of which I, L. S. White, am a member, is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." Brother Malone will then for three days affirm: "The church of which I, A. Malone, am a member is evangelical in origin, doctrine, and practice."

W. T. Boaz (Christian) and W. M. Rudolph (Baptist) will hold a religious debate at Cuba, Graves County, Ky., ten miles south of Mayfield, beginning on December 4, 1900, and continuing four days. The subjects, "Justification by faith before baptism" and "Baptism for the remission of sins," will be discussed. Rudolph will open the debate. We will be glad to have as many present as possible. Any one coming from a distance will please write me at Cuba, Ky.; also get off of train at Mayfield or Wingo, Ky. All are welcome.—W. T. Boaz, Cuba, Ky.

I have received many letters asking about me and my work. To all I will say that Mrs. Lawson has been ill since last August, and I have been confined at home all the time, except twelve days that I spent in Mississippi; but while there, I was tel-graphed to come home at once, as my wife had become worse. I have called in all appointments for protracted meeting work until January 1, 1901, when I hope to be able to get out in the great gospel field again. Mrs. Lawson is now able to sit up about one hour each day, and by careful nursing I think she will recover all right. We have certainly had a hard time of it. Pray for us.—J. H. Lawson, Denton, Tex.

EDITORIAL.

A church letter is not a passport to heaven.

Whitewashing the tree does not improve the fruit.

Religion, to keep sweet, must be used every day.

It is not possible to be happy without being good.

The boy that will deceive his mother is not to be trusted.

The man with little principle charges a heavy interest.

We must leave off our vices before we can acquire new virtues.

Some people love their business more than they do the Lord.

It is easier to find fault with other people than it is to control ourselves.

The church is not as pure as it should be when it suits worldly people.

"So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

A man is not in any danger of going to an extreme as long as he faces heavenward.

Those who are assured that they walk with the Lord are never afraid of their influence.

Good people may not be great in the eyes of the world, but they are in the eyes of the Lord.

It is hard to be at peace with the man who is more concerned about his rights than the rights of other people.

The rich man would rather pray for the poor than to supply their needs, but such prayers are usually worthless.

The religion that imagines it loves God, and yet does nothing to help its brother, and evinces no love for its brother, is worthless. It may be a dogma with a worm in the heart. If you love God, you will love your neighbor also, and will seek to advance the kingdom of God in the world.

Five minutes spent in the companionship of Christ every morning—even two minutes, if it be face to face and heart to heart—will change the whole day, will make every thought and feeling different, will enable you to do things for his sake that you would not have done for your own or for any one's sake.

The Bible teaches Christians to pray always, to pray everywhere, to pray without ceasing. We should pray more than we do. Prayer brings us nearer God. It is remarkable that God's people do not pray more. When the hour was dark, Paul resorted to prayer, of which Spurgeon says: "In this emergency the apostle Paul resorted to prayer. We may avail ourselves of this privilege at the worst pinch. When things are so black that they cannot be any darker, we may still pray; when we can do nothing to help ourselves, let us pray, and we can get help from God in everything.

Or, after we have done the little we can do, let us leave all with God and resort to him in prayer. Do not think, then, that your prayers in time of extremity will prove fruitless. Recollect there never was a prayer of faith that failed yet; heaven and earth shall pass away, but this truth shall never cease to be true, that God is the hearer of prayer if we will but believe in him. He that is confident in his God shall never be confounded."

Paul rejoiced in persecutions for Christ's sake. Jesus said to his disciples: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." Spurgeon says on this subject: "If God's servants will hold the truth outright and dare to avow it, they will soon meet with some contemptuous title or other. Hold the doctrines of grace, bring forth the atonement, speak out plainly, have your convictions and state them, and soon the hounds will be after you full cry. Say that the Bible, and the Bible alone, is the religion of true Christians, and that we are not bound by anything but the word of God, and you shall see that you will have a hard time of it, and be pointed at by some opprobrious name or other, something like Paul was when they said he was a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes. But shall we not be willing to be Nazarenes for the Nazarene? Shall we not glory to be despised and rejected of men for his sake, if by any means we may bring honor to him?" A greater than Spurgeon has said: "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." (2 Tim. 3: 12.)

If the Lord were to force a man to become a Christian, he would be no longer man, but no more than a machine operated upon. God places good and evil before man and gives him the power to choose between the two; he tells him of the glories and beauties of heaven and of the horrors of hell to induce him to do the right and let alone the wrong. William M. Taylor says some good things concerning Saul's conversion, bearing on the volition of man: "When the Lord appeared unto the apostle in the way to Damascus, he showed to him his glory and gave to him a commission, but it was still possible for Paul to resist and disobey. He was 'apprehended of God.' But that was not all that he needed; he had also to apprehend that for which he was apprehended, and how he did that he describes in this address when he says: 'Whereupon I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision.' But now look at Agrippa. In Paul's appeal a heavenly vision has been given to him also. He is exhorted to repent and be converted, he is urged to accept Jesus and his salvation; but he is disobedient, and resists the appeal. This, then, is the strait gate through which each must pass into the narrow way: the rendering of obedience to the heavenly vision. No man becomes a Christian against his will; it is by willing to be so that he becomes a Christian, and it is over this willing that the whole battle of conversion has to be fought. The will is the rudder of the soul and turneth it whithersoever it listeth, and when that will chooses to give in and give up to Christ, the man becomes a Christian. Thus, in a very solemn sense, God has placed our everlasting destiny in our own choice."

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Our Bible lesson helps are the best, and we believe you will find them to be very helpful. Send for samples.

We solicit your orders for engraved cards or invitations; we will give your orders prompt attention, and please you as to prices and quality of work.

Of course you want the Home and Farm again next year. Renew now and ask us to send it with the Gospel Advocate. The price of both is $1.50.

I have just read the book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," and enjoyed it very much. It will do a vast amount of good.—William Thurman, McMinnville, Tenn.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," bound in full morocco, is a handsome book, and would be a most acceptable present at Christmas or any other time. We will send it, post-paid, for $2.50.

The sewing machine we offer with the Gospel Advocate is thoroughly practical and embodies in its make-up all of the necessary and practical features of a first-class, high-grade machine; but at the same time it is not finished so elaborately or furnished with such an expensive equipment, the latter items adding greatly to the cost, but not to the utility of the machine for practical purposes. In its manufacture, the sewing qualities have not been sacrificed in the least. With the Gospel Advocate one year, $21. Do not miss this opportunity to get a good paper and a good machine at so cheap a price.

Of course I am not authority on music, but I sometimes associate with people who are. Dr. Leon Harding has conducted the song service in most of my meetings this year. He can get music out of anything that has music in it, I think. The saints and faithful at Guthrie, Ky., where our singing was excellent, as also at Smithville, Tenn., where we now are, use "Gospel Praise." I have, since the beginning of the Guthrie meeting—October 20, 1900—heard, "That is the sweetest song I have ever heard," till I have been forced to conclude there must be something supremely sweet in "Gospel Praise." Faithful souls who sweetly sing at Guthrie and Smithville think so, I am sure.—T. B. Larimore.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." Edited by F. D. Srygley. Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn. Cloth; pages, 413. The chief excellence of the present volume is the faithful presentation of the characterizations and the teaching of one who is widely known among the churches in the South. These letters and sermons present Brother Larimore as a man of warm heart and affectionate bearing toward his brethren and humanity. As an earnest and industrious minister of the gospel, his life has been a fruitful one, for through his efforts many have been won to Christ. The volume is likely to have an extensive sale among the personal friends of Brother Larimore and of his biographer. A mournful interest is attached to the volume in the fact that, soon after its publication, the author was suddenly called to his eternal reward. There are twenty-two illustrations, including excellent pictures of the subject of the book, his home, and members of his family.—"Book Reviews," Christian Standard.

The Tunkers, or Dunkards.

Brother Lipscomb: Is it possible to find a person among the Dunkards who has been scripturally baptized? Please answer, as fully as possible, through the Gospel Advocate. I ask this question because we are surrounded by Dunkards in this country, and we have had some trouble on this question. A few years ago one of them was received into fellowship with the church of God because some thought that he had been scripturally baptized, but there has been some trouble about it since. You will greatly oblige me by giving attention to this.

S. WHITFIELD.

Walnut Bottom, Pa.

I have never been associated or familiar with the German Baptists, or "Tunkers," as they usually are called; "Brethren," I believe they call themselves. I have occasionally met with individuals traveling and a few times have known one or two to settle in our country. But take the account given in history and, save in the fact of trine immersion, they are as unobjectionable as any class of Baptists known to me. Outside of trine immersion, their distinctive feature is: "They will not go to law, nor engage in war, and seldom take interest for the money which they lend to their poorer brethren." This is not objectionable. They cultivate simplicity of dress and style of living, and keep themselves aloof from the frivolities and fashions of society. This would not in the least be objectionable. Then, so far as I know, the objection to them compared with other Baptists would be they practice trine immersion for baptism; they do what the Lord commands to be done, if they act from the proper spirit, but they add to this two additional dippings of the head in water. It is only the head they give the two additional dippings that are not commanded. Now, if the first was in obedience to the Lord, do the two additional ones destroy the acceptability of the first? If all is done to obey God, does the mistake they make as to God's requiring what is added nullify what was done in accordance with his will? Children are taught from earliest infancy to believe God's law is to be dipped thrice. With the desire of obeying God, they are dipped once. This is his will. Then the head is dipped twice more. It seems to me that to drop off what is wrongly added would be what the Lord requires. During the personal ministry of Jesus, his disciples often grossly misconceived his teaching. He often taught he would be crucified, but they did not believe it until after he was crucified. He taught them his kingdom was not of this world; they persisted in believing he would establish an earthly political government in which his servants must fight, until he was crucified. These errors of faith, as gross as they were, did not invalidate what of truth they believed and obeyed, and they were required to correct their faith when they were more fully taught. This, I am sure, is what God requires under a misapprehension of his will in any case. "Prove all things; hold fast to that which is good." As far as our obedience conforms to the will of God, clinging to it and correct what proves to be wrong. As I said, I know these German Baptists only as they are known in history. I do not think I ever had a word of conversation with one on religious topics. There may be things in their teaching and practice I know not of that would be further objectionable; but when one has obeyed God in some things and erred in others while seeking to do his will, God requires him to test and prove what has been done, hold fast as far as he has gone according to the will of God, and add to or lay aside wherein he is not according to it. I am sure this is the correct rule.

There are divisions among them, as among most other religious people. Some believe in feet washing as a church ordinance. Many of all classes of Baptists believe in this, and we very frequently find disciples who do also. They believe in laying on of hands to impart the Holy Spirit after baptism; the Philadelphia Confession of Faith teaches the same thing. Baptists all believed in it from fifty to a hundred years ago; and our learned and highly esteemed Brother P. S. Fall, I think, never wholly gave up the idea.

A class of the "Brethren," represented by their paper published at Berlin, Pa., in the Independent of May 8, 1879, gave this statement of their faith: "We are in full accord with the church on all gospel doctrines and practices, but do not believe in any tradition as being worthy of comparison with a divine injunction; in fact, we do not regard a custom one hundred or five hundred years old whether it originated in the church or in the world, as possessing any claims upon the attention of Bible Christians. We believe in 'nonconformity to the world,' as to all its sinful practices; but we hold that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and that the inventions and discoveries of men are simply the products of the wisdom of God, and should be applied by the Christian to the glorifying of his name. We believe that the time now is when we shall neither in the garb of a hundred years ago nor in the style of the present age worship the Father, but when the true worshiper shall worship him in spirit and in truth. We believe in self-denial, but not in stoicism; we advocate close communion, but not exclusiveness. In short, we hold that the word of God is our perfect law, which if we obey, we do well." "The inventions and discoveries of men" here used refers to the mechanical inventions. If they live according to this statement, they should be encouraged and helped toward a better understanding of truth. Men trying to live according to this rule will come to the truth; they are followers of Christ. People ought to be dealt with as individuals, not as members of parties; and if one is found who is trying to learn and follow the truth, he ought to be encouraged, not discouraged. He ought to be encouraged to cling to all the truth he holds and to give up his error.

WHAT DID HE MEAN?

Bishop Hargrove, in his address at the recent twenty-fifth anniversary of Vanderbilt University, said:

"Landon C. Garland, LL.D., the first chancellor of the university, had been an educator from early life, and brought into his office the experience and attainments of long years of patient and skilled labor as a college officer. As others had provided for, and projected, its external features, the touch of his master hand gave shape to its internal structure, molded its methods, and baptized both faculty and students with the blessing of his saintly life and the wisdom of his patriotic and pious teachings."

In reading that the query occurred to us, What did Bishop Hargrove mean when he said Dr. Garland "baptized both faculty and students with the blessing of his saintly life and the wisdom of his patriotic and pious teachings?" Did he mean he very sparsely sprinkled them with the beneficent influences, or did he mean the Doctor shed abroad such a wonderful and effective influence for good that the whole moral and intellectual atmosphere was permeated by the good influence and it overwhelmed the faculty and students? The true idea of baptism will enforce itself on people despite sectarian tenets.

Prevailing Prayer.

There are several other good women named in Bible biographies to whom we owe our gratitude besides Hannah, the model mother; Ruth, the model daughter; and Dorcas, who sanctified the needle. One of these was that Syrophenician woman who came to Jesus and besought him to cast the evil spirit out of her afflicted daughter. For a time the Master seemed to hold her, as it were, at arm's length, in order to try the mettle of her faith. Like Bartimeus, she only cries the more importunately for mercy; and, like him, she carries the day. "Go thy way," saith the compassionate Jesus. "O woman, great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt." And so he granted to a great faith what he might have denied to a little faith.

Prayer is not a teasing and a coaxing of an unwilling God; it is the fervent plea of weakness and of want into the open ear of One who knows just what is best for us. One of the things that it is best for us to have is a complete trust in God. He does not cheapen his mercies, nor does he toss them to us as a foolish father flings money at a spendthrift son. We must come into the right attitude and stay there. An honest, trustful faith—a faith that works while it prays, a faith that is not balked by discouragements—does not plead without securing some real and precious blessings. Such faith creates such a condition of things that it is wise for God to grant what would otherwise be denied.

There are many things in the loving providence of our Heavenly Father to which we ought to submit. We ought to submit unconditionally and without murmurings to certain chastisements and bereavements. "I opened not my mouth; because thou didst it." A childlike faith has often written that line with eyes swimming with tears, and has often carved those words on the monument that covered a darling of the heart. But there are many things in our pathway that we must not submit to; we must wrestle with them and overcome them. If Apollyon strides across our road, we must fight him out of the road. If a difficulty blocks our path of duty, then is the time for a stout faith to "remove the mountain." A parent whose children are yet unconverted has no business to sit down in silent submission to such a state of things. Neither has a pastor or a church any right to sit down submissively to the terrible fact that the gospel is powerless and no souls are converted. The reason why there are no revivals in some churches is that they actually vote not to have them.

The Syrophenician mother would have done egregiously wrong if she had gone home submissively under a first seeming discouragement. "There's nae gude done, John, till ye get into the close groups." So said Jeems, the doorkeeper, to Dr. John Brown, who gave us the immortal "Rab." There lies one secret of prevailing prayer. The woman of Canaan carried her point and got the demon expelled from her daughter because she came into a "close grip" on the divine Healer. God is a wise and supreme Sovereign up yonder, and we are responsible free agents down here. As a sovereign, he has commanded us to pray, and to pray without ceasing. The ceasing would be a sin. God reserves to himself the right to grant our requests when he chooses and just as he chooses. It is our duty to pray, and it is God's right to bestow the answers that seem best to him—that is, such answers as are for our good and for his glory. The right kind of faith is that temper of the soul which submits to what God orders, but never submits to what God can make better. If we yield to temptations and yield to discouragements when we ought to struggle against them; if we are tamely content to be without spiritual blessings, and neither labor nor pray persistently for such blessings, we deserve to suffer.

Prevailing prayer must always be accompanied by prevailing effort on our part. God never puts a premium on cowardice, or laziness, or palpable neglect of duty. There is no haphazard in prayer. All of God's promises have their conditions; we must comply with those conditions, or we cannot expect the blessings coupled with the promises. No farmer is such an idiot as to look for a crop unless he has plowed his field and sown his seed. Be sure, my Christian friend, that you are honestly and perseveringly doing your part, if you expect God to do his part. He promises his Holy Spirit to his ministers and his churches when they are willing to cooperate with the Spirit; if they quench the Holy Spirit, they pay the terrible penalty.

What a magnificent epic are the triumphs of prevailing faith! The Bible history shines with the glorious record. The early church was "continuing with one accord in supplication" when the Pentecostal baptism of power descended upon them; prayer opened Peter's prison doors; and I have seen awakened sinners come into meetings and inquiry rooms who were just as truly delivered from Satan's prisons as the apostle was, by fervent intercessory prayer. That Syrophenician mother's message to the churches to-day is, "Prayer is power." Everything with Jesus; less than nothing without him! Two things our churches must do if their barrenness is to be exchanged for harvests. The one is to quit the companionship of a self-indulgent corrupting "world;" for, as long as the world has influence on Christians, they will gain none on the world. The other is to come into closer companionship with Christ Jesus—closer in clean, godly living, closer in self-sacrifice, closer in love labors for the salvation of souls. Then the "close groups" in prayer will bring down the sought-for blessings.—T. L. Cuyler.

No man can walk a crowded street without getting to some degree "inside the minds" of those who share the sidewalk with him. He must comprehend what is moving them on this side or on that, if he is to escape unpleasant collisions and jostlings. He will experience many unpleasant things if he goes ahead in a self-absorbed and self-centered fashion, heeding only the goal to which he is bound. And on the great highway of life we need to cultivate the sympathy which gets us inside other people's minds. We need to feel the motives which impel them, if we are to avoid needless collision with them, or do them any good. Without that power to get to another's point of view, life is full of collisions and needless bitterness.—Sunday School Times.

SOME HABITS OF ALLIGATORS.

The general food of an alligator is fish, turtles, and frogs, with an occasional heedless dog or fowl. There is also a curious belief in the South that the creature has an especial liking for a "darky steak," and for this reason he is feared by the negroes. That he becomes carnivorous to a dangerous extent when pressed by hunger there is no doubt; for, the supply of fish exhausted, he must look for larger game.

Partially concealed by rubbish or floating idly close to the bank—always only a short distance from his retreat—he so closely resembles an old and weather-worn log that no suspicion is aroused. Presently a razor-backed hog comes down the narrow trail that meanders through the scrub and passes close to the reptile. Let it pass between the alligator and the water—that is, between the creature and his cave—and the end has come. An alligator seldom misses, and one spring, leap, or plunge—or whatever the swift, clumsy movement may be called—and the wretched animal is seized and held fast, either by the nose or leg, as a rule. Then the struggle begins, for the razor-back loves its life, despised pig of the Florida flatwoods though it is.

Alligators drown their prey. Their own nostrils and throats are so arranged that they themselves can sink to the bottom without danger of suffocation, although their mouths, or rather their jaws, may be widely stretched with the body of their victim. Indeed, they can reascend to the surface to breathe without releasing the prize; and, as this power is so closely connected with their method of killing the larger animals, a description of the latter, repulsive though it is, may not be out of place.

The teeth of an alligator are better adapted for crushing and crunching than for biting. Therefore, for him to eat a struggling animal would be difficult. Instinct teaches him that it must first be killed.

To dispose of a dog or chicken is a small matter, for when the alligator meets it upon the bank one strong, far-reaching sweep of the tail tosses it far out upon the lake. The alligator simply follows, grasps the half-stunned creature in his jaws, and disappears beneath the surface, where he remains until all is quiet. With a larger animal, however, he proceeds differently, for the reason that a yearling, a colt, or a razor-back is not so easily handled. First, therefore, a description of an alligator's cave must be given, since it is to this grewsome retreat that the hideous brute takes his booty.

Selecting some spot where the water is deep—usually beneath some overhanging bank—an alligator excavates what is called a "cave." He makes it sufficiently large to accommodate one or more of his kind by fragging out the mud and roots with the strong claws or nails that arm his fore paws, or legs. These caves serve in winter for hibernation, and at other times for the purpose that will be explained.

Once in the water, then—to return to the unhappy razor-back—the alligator does not rely wholly upon his teeth and jaws to hold the desperate animal. He cannot yet sink, for the victim is too strong. It must first be drowned, and a furious struggle for the mastery then begins.

By degrees the brute finally succeeds in dragging the animal out into water sufficiently deep to suit his purpose, and then he clasps it firmly with his paws, precisely like the hugging of a bear. He then begins to roll over and over. Now beneath the surface, now out, he turns and turns, first the alligator uppermost, then his prey, alternately, until the poor animal is drowned literally by inches. Before long the razor-back weakens, his struggles lessen, and then the alligator sinks to the bottom, and when all motion has ceased he deposits the body in his cave, well pleased with the prospect of a full larder for some time to come.—Popular Science Monthly.

A SECRET OF SUCCESS.

The other day I heard an employer, who has himself risen from the ranks and knows the rules of success at first hand, speaking of two lads who had lately become apprentices at his works. "Jim will make a success of it," he said, decidedly, "and John will be a failure right along."

"Why?" I asked; for Jim and John seemed very much on a par to me. They were both bright-looking boys, and had stood well at school, as I knew.

"Well," said my business man, "perhaps you do not know it, but an apprentice is always set to do small things, tedious, ordinary jobs—the A B C of work that inevitably spells 'd-r-u-d-g-e-r-y' before an hour is over. Now, John feels that, and shows it. He wants to get past that place in the work, and consequently he is forgetful and unobservant. When he goes on farther, he will not have gained anything of value from his first experience at all. Indeed, he will have gained something that is distinctly detrimental—the habit of working without taking any interest in his work."

"I see," I said; "and Jim is interested."

"Not exactly that, perhaps," said his employer, with a shrewd twinkle in his eye; "it is next to impossible, you know, to be really interested in an apprentice's jobs. But he is bound to get out of his work all the experience and instruction that there is in it. I have been there myself, and I know just what Jim is doing. He isn't missing anything that he will need to remember later on. If I ask him questions about it, he answers intelligently; and one day he actually prevented a possible accident by noticing that a certain machine was running a trifle out of gear and calling a skilled workman's attention to it. John had been at the machine not half an hour before, but John would not have noticed it in a year, because he had a mind above it."

"Which is your average apprentice," I asked, "John's kind or Jim's?"

"John's, I am truly sorry to say," replied my business friend. "A Jim is rare. Where I find him, I always advance him. My foreman was Jim's kind of apprentice, and so were my principal buyer and my head shipper. They have worked up, leaving nothing of importance unlearned, as they go from grade to grade. You see, John will be useless for higher grades, because he will never fully understand even the lowest one. I cannot have that kind of worker in a responsible position, for he would make mistakes all the while."

Poor John! I have been thinking about him since. He will be sure to think that his employer shows favoritism to Jim, that the bosses are unjust, and that the whole apprentice system is wrong. He will never see that the wrong is in his own way of looking at things. If he reads this, will he recognize himself? I do not know; but if he should, let us hope he will try Jim's plan for a month, anyhow, and see how it works.—Mary Whiting Adams, in Exchange.

THE GROCER'S EPITAPH.

"I'm not much of a hand to remember epitaphs," said Uncle Zeph, "and I don't 'spose I miss much by it, fer I guess there's no great amount of truth put on tombstones, year in 'nd year out. 'Tain't easy to sum up a man or a woman in four lines, doin' it fair 'nd just, 'nd yit not hurtin' the feelin's of relatives. That's why I 'spose most folks takes to po'try, follerin' the plain dates of birth 'nd death; 'nd I don't blame 'em, though it does seem, sometimes, ez if they might find better verses than what they do, with less of a sameness about 'em. Still, most folks is alike, by 'nd large, when you come to that, 'nd so most epitaphs hed oughter be alike, p'r'aps, too."

"There's one I read the other day, though, in a paper, that's been a-runnin' in my head, fer it certainly wuz true ter life, ef you kin say that of an epitaph," and Uncle Zeph's eye twinkled a little. "It wuz jest nine words, but 'twas packed full o' meanin'—jest nine words under the man's name: 'He was born a man and died a grocer.' That's all, but—my!—it's enough. You kin see the whole life 'nd the birthright of bein' a man, with a soul 'nd a heart, 'nd a chance to serve God 'nd man, 'nd then how it wuz throwed away fer the sake of keepin' a successful store. He might have been interested in great things, but all he thought of wuz canned goods 'nd crackers, 'nd how to advertise 'nd when he come to die, his mind wuz still on his business, though he couldn't take so much ez a walnut shell with him. It kinder makes one shiver to think of how he must hev clung to life 'nd to groceries, 'nd yet he hed to go."

"I've known more'n one man that epitaph would hev fitted, ef you put 'farmer,' or 'engineer,' or 'banker,' or 'storekeeper,' or 'manufacturer,' instead of 'grocer.' It's mighty easy to fergit what God meant us fer, 'nd put our hull minds on bein' successes in our pertiklar trade. Not that there's any harm in bein' a good grocer ef it doesn't interfere with bein' a good man—that's not what the epitaph meant. But the trouble is that the grocer in the man gits ahead of the man in the grocer, 'nd truth 'nd nobility 'nd unselfishness 'nd the love of God are fergotten 'nd die out, 'nd there's left only the grocer, who drives sharp bargains 'nd keeps on enlargin' his store.

"It's a mighty easy road to travel. I've been a ways on it myself, fer I remember well when business wuz more to me than religion, 'nd when I used to sit in church figerin' on what I wuz goin' to do with my profits, 'nd never listened to a word of the sermon, or put more'n a nickel on the plate. I ain't as much of a man ez I oughter be now, but when I think of how near I came to not bein' a man at all, but a business machine, it makes me ashamed of myself, an' thankful to the Lord, I kin tell you;" and Uncle Zeph drew a long breath, and shook his gray head impressively.—Barbara Griffiths, in Exchange.

"SETTING THE RIVER ON FIRE."

Sometimes when a person wants to make an unpleasant remark in a pleasant sort of way about a dull boy, he will say: "That boy will never set the river on fire." In England, says the writer from whom we quote, many, many years ago, before the millers had machinery for sifting flour, each family was obliged to sift its own flour. For doing this it was necessary to use a sieve, called a "temse," which was so fixed that it could be turned round and round in the top of a barrel. If it was turned too fast, the friction would sometimes cause it to catch fire; and as it was only the smart, hard-working boys who could make it go so fast as that, people got into the way of pointing out a lazy boy by saying that he would never set the temse on fire.

After a while these sieves went out of use, but as there were still plenty of stupid boys in the world, people kept on saying that they would never set the temse on fire. Now, the name of the river Thames is pronounced exactly like the word "temse;" and so, after many years, those persons who had never seen or heard of the old-fashioned sieve thought that "setting the temse on fire" meant setting the river Thames on fire. This expression became very popular and traveled far and wide, and people soon came to say simply "the river," instead of the Thames, thus robbing the saying of its point.—Sabbath School Visitor.

HOW ICEBERGS BREAK FROM GLACIERS.

The number of bergs given off varies somewhat with the weather and the tides, the average being about one every five or six minutes, counting only those large enough to thunder loudly, making themselves heard at a distance of two or three miles. The very largest, however, may, under favorable conditions, be heard ten miles, or even farther. When a large mass sinks from the upper fissured portion of the wall, there is first a keen, piercing crash; then a deep, deliberate, prolonged, thundering roar, which slowly subsides into a low, muttering growl, followed by numerous smaller, grating, clashing sounds from the agitated bergs that dance in the waves about the newcomer, as if in welcome; and these again are followed by the swash and roar of the waves that are raised and hurled against the moraines. But the largest and most beautiful of the bergs, instead of thus falling from the upper weathered portion of the wall, rise from the submerged portion with a still grander commotion, springing with tremendous voice and gestures nearly to the top of the wall, tons of water streaming like hair down their sides, plunging and rising again and again before they finally settle in perfect poise, free at last, after having formed part of a slow-crawling glacier for centuries.—John Muir.

A man sat by a field where nothing but weeds were growing. "What are you looking for?" asked a passer-by. "My crop of wheat," answered the man. "When did you sow it?" "I never sowed it," said the man, looking surprised, "but I expect it to come up soon. Other people have crops, and why not I?" So he sat there patiently, for he was one who believed in luck. But the passer-by shook his head and went on; for one cannot argue with the boy or man who expects to reap without sowing.—Exchange.

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

A PLAIN STATEMENT.

We have recently sent a statement to each one of our subscribers who is owing for the paper. The year 1900 will soon be gone, and yet a number of our subscribers have not paid their subscriptions. The full amount due is considerable, and if all will now pay promptly, we will be able to meet the obligations of the paper. We must depend on those who are indebted to us, and those who have not paid for the year 1900 ought to make an effort to pay now. Those who are in arrears for 1899 should by all means pay up and renew for another year.

It is a matter of importance to us that those who receive statements attend to sending a remittance at once. If you cannot possibly settle now, please write us a card stating when you will. It is expensive to us to send so many statements, besides annoying to have subscribers pay no attention to a request couched in the most courteous language.

It is true that one subscription does not amount to very much, but multiply one by several thousand and the aggregate is large. We earnestly solicit every subscriber to make an effort to send us a number of new subscribers. We appreciate the efforts of our friends, and hope with their aid to add several thousand new names to our list.

WORSHIP.

Brother Calhoun's article seems to call for a statement from me. He seems unduly sensitive over the publication of his correspondence. I did not read it until I saw it in print. Some months ago I was asked if I advised its publication. I replied I had not seen it, and could give no advice about it; that those who had it should decide that question for themselves.

A year ago last April Brother Calhoun read the paper to me, as we rode along in the buggy, and asked if I objected to it and would criticise it. I told him I would, but was then busy, and it would be four or five weeks before I could do it. He said all right, he would retain the paper till the time. I expected him to send it to me by the time designated, and I waited eight or ten weeks. I heard of one of the prominent advocates of instrumental music in the services, telling: "Brother Calhoun has written an unanswerable defense of the use of instruments in the service, and he has read it to a number of the opponents, and all of them, except Brother Lipscomb, own they cannot answer it, and he cannot find time." I thought there was unkind reporting somewhere, but I took no umbrage, and wrote at once to Brother Calhoun that I had been expecting the article for some weeks and was ready to review it. He answered he did not wish me to publish or review it, but desired I should write an article on "Worship." This surprised me. I lost interest in the much-read article, but published an article on "Worship." Afterwards he said to me he was a public man, and recognized the right of others to criticise his positions as they desired. Under this declaration of a correct rule, I felt at liberty to publish and criticise any teaching of his that came in my way. When he read the article at the State Convention, at Clarksville, certainly it was stripped of all privacy, and it was a public challenge to criticise it.

Whatever Brother Calhoun intended, I am sure the article and his course while claiming to oppose it have done more to strengthen those using instruments in the service than anything that has occurred lately in Tennessee. He recognized this influence, and asked me if I could tell why they claimed him as on that side. I told him that it was because of his affiliation with them, and he did not talk to them on the subject as he did to me. He told me he had never seen a sentence from my pen on the subject that he did not indorse and that he preached among them because he thought many had gone into these things without studying them, and he wished to teach them better. I agreed this was right, but urged he could not bring them out of the evils while making the impression on them that he favored them.

While I am on this subject, I will add some suggestions that he and Brother Kurfees may think out of place, but I am sure they both desire truth, not triumph, no matter whence it may come.

If the positions of the article be true, they do not justify instruments in the service; if it is not part of the worship, it has no place in the worship. We dare not commingle the human and the divine, the sacred and the profane, the holy and the unholy in the service of God. This is too well settled, both in the Old Testament and the New Testament, to admit of doubt. This is the way the traditions of the fathers that made void the commandments of God came into his service. I am inclined to believe they would be personally greater sinners who bring it in believing it is no part of the worship than those who bring it in believing it is a part of the worship. The former would savour of presumption. No one could think it would be acceptable to partake of the bread and wine in memory of the body and blood of Jesus during a feast to satisfy the appetite.

Providing material helps to the spiritual worship has been the source of idolatry. When Aaron made the golden calf, "they said, These be thy gods, . . . which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt;" and he built an altar and proclaimed to-morrow a feast of the Lord, showing their idea was to worship God through these symbols. (Ex. 32: 4, 5.) So did Jeroboam in making the calves. It was to worship God through them, which they continued to do to the days of Jesus. They had no idea in making the calves to cease to worship God; but God refused to accept it as worship to him. The people provide material symbols to aid their spiritual perception and memory, and the proneness of man to worship matter rather than Spirit, the creature rather than the Creator, does the evil work. It was on this ground that God forbade any material image to be made or bowed down to.

The definitions of the Bible are much safer than those of even the lexicons. Worship acceptable to God must always embody love and reverence for him; but purpose is not necessary to worship. "Covetousness is idolatry"—is idol worship. In loving money there is no thought or purpose of worshipping an idol; but it is idolatry. Often man worships the evil one when he purposes to worship God. King Saul, in order to worship God, brought the fatlings from Amalek and, with the desire to worship God, committed the unpardonable sin. Jesus said: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." We often worship God without purpose on our part. They will say: Lord, when saw we thee in need and ministered unto thee? He will say: Inasmuch as ye did it to the least of my brethren, ye did it to me. In this purest service there was no purpose or consciousness of worshipping God. All true service includes an element of worship.

All disobedience to God is worship of the god of this world; yet there is no purpose of worship on the part of the worshiper. Brother Calhoun's premises are untrue; the conclusion is misleading. As we worship both God and the evil one often unconsciously, so we are often moved by influences of which we are unconscious. Others often see them when we do not; we ought not to object when they tell us of them. But we ought to be slow to attribute motives or influences unless they are very apparent.

There can be no songs without the concord of sounds. Songs are composed of two elements—the concord of sounds and the sentiment. They both must exist in all songs; they may be memorized and taught orally or they may be written and read. Both of these methods of teaching are approved by God. The sounds as much as the words must exist in the mind or be written. Words represent the sentiment; notes represent the sound. It is all a mistake to say they had no hymn books and notebooks; they had both in their minds or written. Either has the sanction of God.

Since the above was written we have had a visit from Brother Calhoun, and he says he did not deliver the article at the State meeting at Clarksville. It was published that he delivered a discourse on "Worship," and we supposed it the same.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

Brother Sewell: Will you please give an explanation of Dan. 2: 44; 7: 14? G. C. MEREDITH.

Dan. 2 gives an account of the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, in which a great image appeared to him, and then he forgot the dream, and was greatly troubled over it, and was about to destroy all the wise men of Babylon because they could not tell him the dream and the interpretation. Among these wise men, Daniel and his companions were included. Daniel asked for time, promising to make known the dream and the interpretation; and so he did. The Lord made known to him the whole matter and he unfolded it to the king. The image represented the four leading kingdoms of the world, extending down to the Roman Empire. The head of the image represented the then existing kingdom of Nebuchadnezzar—the Babylonian; the next part of the image represented the Medo-Persian Empire; the third part of the image represented the Grecian Empire, under Alexander the Great; and the fourth part of the image, the iron, represented the Roman Empire.

Then comes verse 44, which says: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." This kingdom, so far as I know, is universally understood by students of the Bible to represent the kingdom of Christ. But there are differences as to what this kingdom is and as to when it was to be established. Second Adventists claim that the expression, "in the days of these kings," had reference to the feet-and-toe state of the Roman Empire, and not to the Roman Empire as such, and that the feet-and-toe state of the kingdom still exists, and that, therefore, the kingdom of heaven has not yet been set up, but will be soon. In making such claims, they overlook all the leading facts of the case. The prophet Daniel called the fourth part of the image, the iron, "the fourth kingdom;" and it was during the days of these kings of this fourth kingdom that the God of heaven was to set up a kingdom that was to stand forever. The Romans were a republic for hundreds of years, when it began to be ruled over by emperors. This state of the empire, or kingdom, of Rome began with Augustus, about twenty-nine years before Christ was born, and lasted till about the close of the second century, including the twelve Cæsars. Hence, Christ was born in the very prime of the Roman Empire, called "the fourth kingdom" by Daniel. Augustus was succeeded by Tiberius, who reigned till the year thirty-seven of the Christian era; and somewhere near the time of his death Jesus was crucified, fifty days after which came the noted Pentecost, mentioned in Acts 2, while the empire proper lasted more than one hundred and fifty years longer.

The New Testament history of the preaching of John the Baptist and of Christ was therefore included in the reign of Tiberius, the second emperor of Rome. John began his proclamation, "saying, . . . The kingdom of heaven is at hand," and Jesus and his apostles followed with the same proclamation, which continued till the death of Christ; and by this proclamation they soon created the impression among the disciples that the kingdom was just about to be set up. Christ himself explained the expression, "is at hand," as meaning "is come nigh unto you." (Luke 10: 9.) The people were regularly told these things until the death of Christ; but after the death of Christ we never have the expression, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand," again. Jesus also said during his personal ministry: "There be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." (Mark 9: 1.) At the death of Jesus, Joseph of Arimathea was waiting for the kingdom of God. (See Luke 23: 51.) In fact, the impression was universal among those who believed the preaching of John and Jesus that the kingdom of heaven was at the very door. They tried to take Jesus by force and make him a King at one time, thinking he was too slow about entering upon his reign.

After he rose from the dead, the disciples said to him: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Never after this is the kingdom of God spoken of as being in the future, except when the everlasting kingdom is spoken of. Everything indicated that the time for the full establishment of this kingdom was in readiness on the day of Pentecost. Jesus had died, had been buried and raised from the dead, had ascended, and was seated on the right hand of God, where he is to reign till all enemies are put under him. The Holy Spirit had come to guide the apostles into all the truth and thus show people the way into the kingdom. Jesus had said: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) Peter, on the day of Pentecost, guided by the Holy Spirit, taught sinners to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. These are the very things that, according to Jesus, passed one into the kingdom of God. Hence, the three thousand baptized on the day of Pentecost were born of water and of the Spirit, and, therefore, according to Jesus, were in the kingdom; for he taught plainly that all who would do these things should thereby enter into the kingdom. Hence, the kingdom of God was present on that day, and about three thousand entered into it.

In Acts 8: 12, Philip preached "the things concerning the kingdom of God," and the people were baptized, both men and women; hence, they thereby entered into the kingdom of God. In Paul's letter to the Colossians (1: 13), the kingdom was present, and the people were being translated into it: "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." "The kingdom of God" and "the kingdom of his dear Son" are one and the same kingdom; for in Eph. 5: 5 we have the same institution called "the kingdom of Christ and of God." Again: "That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory." (1 Thess. 2: 12.) In all these passages the kingdom of God was actually present and the people entering into it. All that were delivered from the powers of darkness were also at the same time translated into the kingdom of Christ and of God. Jesus, while living, said: "Upon this rock I will build my church." At the close of Acts 2 the church was actually present and people being added to it. In Heb. 12 we have the words "church" and "kingdom" both applied to the same institution and both actually present. In Rev. 1 the kingdom of Christ was also present, and John and the seven churches of Asia were companions in it. (See verse 9.) These various passages cannot be harmonized, except upon the principle that the words "church" and "kingdom" both mean the same body, the same people, the same institution, and were actually present from the day of Pentecost to the close of the New Testament. Paul and the Corinthians were all in the church of God and in the kingdom of God when he wrote the letters to them, and Christ then reigning over it, and at the end he was to deliver it up to his Father. All these passages containing the expressions, "the kingdom of heaven," "the church" (that Christ was to build), called "the church of God," "the kingdom of God," "the kingdom of Christ," refer evidently to the same kingdom spoken of by Dan. 2: 44; 7: 14; for the church, the kingdom, was set up in the time Daniel said it should be set up—in the days of the fourth kingdom, the Roman Empire, and on the day of Pentecost, in the city of Jerusalem.

Brother Meredith's question was asked with reference to the claim of Second Adventists—that there is no kingdom of Christ on earth now at all, that the words "church" and "kingdom" do not mean the same institution, and that the church exists now, but not the kingdom. Hence, we have not had reference to denominational theories as to when the kingdom was set up, but have endeavored to show that it was set up as early as the day of Pentecost, and was actually present throughout the days of the apostles, even to the end of the New Testament. Since it was present then, and as no change has taken place since the apostles died, therefore the kingdom of God is still in force on earth, and will be to the end of time. Even if the claim that the kingdom has not yet been set up were granted, yet it is certain that believing that claim would not save any one, for the Bible conditions no man's salvation on believing such a proposition. It is equally certain that failing to believe it will condemn no man that comes into the church, the body of Christ, and serves God faithfully to the end of life. Hence, the idea that the kingdom of Christ has never yet been established on earth is a mere opinion, a mere fancy of the imagination, without one single statement in the word of God to sustain it. It is preposterous to say, if no such kingdom existed on earth, that John the Baptist, Christ, and the apostles would have so taught as to make all the disciples fully believe, up to the death of Christ, that the kingdom of God was at the very door, that men were then living that would remain alive till they should see the kingdom of God come with power, and then drop them with that belief, and never make a word of explanation of the matter, and thus leave the matter in the dark for nearly two thousand years, and still no explanation; and, moreover, the apostles taught to the end of their lives that the kingdom of God was actually present and that all who obeyed the gospel were delivered from the power of darkness, from the dominion of sin, actually entered, were thus translated into the kingdom of God. Yet Second Adventists would have us believe that it was all a fake, a delusion, a dream. How absurd! The facts in the case are that these Adventists discard and set aside the teaching of the whole New Testament on this subject. Their teaching contradicts, sets aside, and neutralizes all the plain teaching of the word of God on the subject; in fact, the whole plan of salvation has long since been made void by the theories, the doctrines, and the commandments of men. If men would quit theorizing and accept the plain word of the Lord as it stands, and teach it as it stands, the religious world would soon be one. It is not the word of God that divides people, but the opinions, the theories, the speculations of men. It is truly sad that while the word of God is so plain and while it is living and powerful and able to save the souls of men, and given to men for that purpose, it should be so mutilated, so paralyzed, so changed and perverted as to make it void, make it of none effect, and still leave the world in darkness, when God in his mercy is holding out light, life, and salvation—yea, all the light and joy of human redemption—to them. Let all labor and pray for the time to come when all this smoke and fog and mist of human opinions and speculations that so obscure and neutralize the word of God may be lifted, so that the saving power, the beauty, the purity, and the plainness of God's word may be seen and realized by the lost, that they may realize at last the joys of the everlasting kingdom. E. G. S.

The darkest fate that can fall to man's share is not death. It is better to be dead than to be a devil. The deepest curse is a hardened, blinded heart. When a man's heart is callous to the influences of the gospel of Christ, woe be unto him! He will die in his sins. When he is past feeling, when his eyes are closed and his ears are dull of hearing and his heart is waxed gross, how shall he be saved? The gospel cannot save him, for it is only for poor spirits, for those who have eyes to see and ears to hear. And the gospel is God's power unto salvation. (Rom. 1: 16.) So the very power of God unto salvation is lost on that man. * * *

This hardness of heart is God's peculiar way of avenging the disregard and dishonor shown to his word. "Thou wilt render unto them a recompense, O Lord, according to the work of their hand. Thou wilt give them hardness of heart, thy curse unto them. Thou wilt pursue them in anger, and destroy them from under the heavens of the Lord." (Lam. 3: 64-66, R. V.) God has promised the kingdom of heaven to the poor in spirit and to them that tremble at his word. But if a man has no desire for truth and righteousness, nor listens when God speaks, he is hastening onward to a hopeless abyss. Paul writes: "Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God sendeth them a working of error, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be judged who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." (2 Thess. 2: 10-12, R. V.) Imagination hardly can paint the horror of that man's state. He lives and breathes, but his doom is sealed. He riots in the pleasures of life and is applauded of his fellow-men; but slowly, yet with terrible certainty, the avenger follows him, and in the last moment God's wrath will burst over his head.

Let us not suppose that this fate is exceptional and happened only to a few people in far distant ages and climes. Look and see if you cannot find it at home. Perhaps you yourself are unconsciously staggering along under the load of that curse. Do you seek for truth? Are your ears open to it? Sectarian prejudice is one species of blinded heart. There are people, and not a few, who care nothing for truth. They pretend to seek for it, and may have persuaded even themselves into the belief that they are honestly, anxiously trying to find it; and all that time they are guilty of the most flagrant disregard of God's truth, simply because it does not harmonize with "my doctrine." They have a doctrine, and without compunction they mutilate, bend, twist, and garble the word of God to make it harmonize with their doctrine. Give them a New Testament and they will use it simply to find excuse for their doctrine and their way of doing. To them, too, comes hardness of heart, for they have not received the love of the truth, that they may be saved, and invariably they will be led to believe some pernicious lie. It is true for all times that they who have turned away from the truth shall be turned unto fables.

* * *

It is worth the while that we should examine ourselves very carefully, lest by any means we drift away from truth and righteousness. It is such an easy thing for man to deceive himself—much easier than deceiving another. Possibly many of the Pharisees never dreamed that they were hypocrites. Man's capability at self-deception is astounding. It is a noted fact that some have even come to believe their own lies and fancy them true. Only with the utmost watchfulness and sincerity of motive can we keep ourselves true to God, to our fellow-man, and to ourselves. But to those who indeed seek for truth, and are in all reality willing to do God's will, the richest promises have been made. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled."

* * *

As true men, we will sanctify the word of God in our hearts, accept it, obey it, even though it should run squarely contrary to our prejudices and private preferences. If, then, we live up to what we daily learn from God's book, our stock of truth will increase and become as a living well. So shall we grow in grace and knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mother.

Every thoughtful man who writes or speaks at some time or other pays his tribute to motherhood. An unlimited assortment of beautiful sayings concerning mothers might be gathered from the literature of all lands and tongues. At a mother's congress in this country many such were quoted. We append a few, taken from Child's Garden:

A mother is a mother still, the holiest thing alive.—Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

A child must ask its mother whether it may be a wise man or a fool.—W. L. Weems.

A mother's prayers, silent and gentle, can never miss the road to the throne of all bounty.—Henry Ward Beecher.

A simple kiss from my mother made me a painter.—Benjamin West.

A wife, a mother: two magical words comprising the sweetest source of man's felicity.—L. Aimee Martin.

All I am my mother made me.—John Quincy Adams.

All I am or can be I owe to my angel mother.—Abraham Lincoln.

"Fredonia, Ala., October 15, 1898.

"About twenty years ago I was cured of a bad eating ulcer by taking B. B. B. Three large ulcers broke out on my collar bone. I cured these with B. B. B. Lately a cancer broke out in my head and ears and ate all the small bones out of my mouth, and I could scarcely eat and talk. I could eat a little strained soup; that was all. I tried nine doctors, but none could cure me, my case was pronounced hopeless; so I tried B. B. B. again, and was cured once more. I am now sixty-three years old and am able to walk a mile any time, am strong and healthy. I use a bottle of B. B. B. sometimes, not often—don't need it. The disease made me almost deaf. B. B. B. helped my hearing. Respectfully,

"My six-year-old son has had a terrible sloughing scrofula ulcer of the neck for three years, attended with blindness, loss of hair, great emaciation, and general prostration. Physicians and various blood remedies were resorted to, without benefit. I was urged to try the efficacy of Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. The ulcers of the neck were entirely healed, the eyesight was restored, and the hair commenced growing on his head again. FRANK JOSEPH.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville, Tenn., to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville at 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. "Information Wanted."

"Rev. R. W. Officer, pastor of the Christian Church of this city, will preach next Sunday, morning and evening. The pastor and members of the congregation will welcome the public to these services. The time for services at the Christian Church will hereafter be on the third Sabbath of each month, morning and evening."

This clipping came to me recently in a letter, signed "Information wanted by the churches of Christ." I am held responsible for the word "Rev.," for being "pastor of the Christian Church," and for "calling the first day of the week 'Sabbath.'" Replying, I will say I am not the "pastor" of any church. As regards the above announcement, I am like the crippled woman when the cursing crowd came into the meeting. I had no more to do with that announcement than did the brethren who want information, unless it was I was in the "city," whatever city it was.

In this same letter I am requested to "state, through the Gospel Advocate, whether or not" I "have ever preached in a church house where the organ was used." Yes; I preached at Washington, where the pipe organ was used; often where young or small organs were used; and one time where the organ, piano, fiddle, and horn were used. I do not remember whether any other instruments were there or not; but if the devil had been there, thundering away on the big drum, and would have been quiet long enough, I would have preached the gospel to the people.

But perhaps the information wanted on this subject is: Do I encourage instrumental music in the churches? To this I answer: No. The Spirit has told us how to make music in the congregations. "Sing with the spirit, and . . . with the understanding also." To my mind this excludes all instruments. I am truly sorry instrumental music was ever introduced in the churches, but it seems it has come to stay. This fact does not argue that it is right, however; but I confess I am more anxious to preach to those whom I regard wrong than those who are right. The spirit of the parable of the lost sheep is not to be overlooked. There are, in my judgment, two extremes. I am not so much concerned about pleasing folks, but I declare I am not mad at anybody. Above all, I want to please God. This is an age of suspicion—I know it—and not without cause. Those who cannot trust me wherever I go and to whomsoever I preach need not contribute to my support; but there is no use going out of the way to create doubt on the part of others.

When Brother John Stephens, of Mississippi, found he had wronged me, he corrected it, and insisted I take work under the "Board," and said he felt sure I could realize one hundred dollars a month. At that time I was not getting one fourth of that amount, and was working in the field for enough more to make out the living for my family. I cannot go across my honest convictions for money or any other consideration, but I can afford to preach to the people wherever I find them gathered together, if they will be quiet long enough, and leave the result with God.

Atoka, I. T. R. W. OFFICER.

P.S. I overlooked one question. I am requested to "state whether or not" I "have any connection with any missionary board or society, or if" I "have ever received any support from either." To both these questions I can truthfully say: No. The brethren must be very much interested in me. If I have wronged or deceived any one, let him dictate the terms, and I will give satisfaction, if in my power to do so.

R. W. O.

One of Paul's Soliloquies.

How happy I was that day! I had appealed to Cæsar, and the governor had said to me: "Unto Cæsar shalt thou go." Weary, foot-sore, chained by the hand to a soldier, and almost broken in heart that it was my own nation that had repudiated me, cast me off, we came to Appii Forum and the Three Taverns. We halted to rest, and while resting I heard my name called and the question asked: "Is Paul, the prisoner, with you?" I heard my name called, and with it the sweet word "brother," which had so long been a stranger to my ears; and my hand was clasped in a warm pressure by a dozen others. Who were these? They were brethren who had come all the way from Rome, fifty miles away, to meet me. One brought me change of raiment; one brought me fruit and food to refresh me on my journey; one told me he had heard me preach and was converted under my ministry at Corinth; one told me I would have opportunities to preach Christ, even in Rome, and no man would set on me to do me hurt. O, it was worth years of persecution and affliction to be thus received! No wonder that I thanked God and took courage.

Years afterwards they sent for me to give me a hearing before Nero. I had escaped the sword and the ax thus far, and now as they gave me a hearing, as I was led forth, I heard a rude Roman soldier ask the question: "Who is the prisoner?" "Paul, the Jew who appealed to Cæsar; he has been charged with preaching one Christ, who was put to death on the cross and arose from the dead, and it is said that he has made many converts, even in Cæsar's household, and now he is to be tried for preaching heresy, and Nero will probably command him to be put to death."

I looked around to see if I could recognize some loving face, hear some familiar voice. The friends who came to meet me at Appii Forum and the Three Taverns—will they forget me and forsake me now? Onesiphorus, who sought me, who oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain—will he forsake me? I saw not one—not one familiar face, heard not a word of sympathy—not one.

But, somehow, a marvelous peace and strength and confidence came over my spirit; he who witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate, he who met me in the way as I drew nigh to Damascus, he who spoke words of cheer and encouragement to me in the midnight storm, stood with me and strengthened me, and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.

"Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. . . . Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God."—Herbert T. Bacon, in Christian Observer.

Be not anxious as to when you shall die; God will care for that. Do your work, and leave the future to Christ. Be not sorrowful or fearful at the thought of death. There are many Christians troubling themselves, and saying: "Am I ready to die?" That is not the question. Are you ready to live? Have you Christ in you, the hope of glory? If Christ be in you, he will take care of you. Live for him and all will be well in the dying hour. Whether you die at home or abroad is a very little matter; whether you die in the midst of friends or of enemies is of small account. Live for Jesus, and he will never forget you. If you live for the world, it may quit you; if you live for wealth, it may take to itself wings, and you may die in poverty; if you live for fame, men may turn against you; if you live for any joy of earth, you may be forsaken; but live for Jesus, and he will never forsake you.—Matthew Simpson.

I Have Not "Gone to the Progressives."

I recently received by mail, by the kindness of Brother R. H. McLaurine, a marked sheet of Christian Preacher, with the following: "We are reliably informed that Brother R. W. Officer, of Atoka, I. T., has gone to the progressives, and that he led off a large part of the East Gainesville church of Christ, where he was holding a meeting. We have known for some time that he was not loyal to the truth."

I know no better way to settle the matter than to get a statement from the elders of East Gainesville church of Christ and Brother E. H. Rogers. No one, perhaps, will question their soundness. The writer of the above statement says: "We have known for some time that he [I] was not loyal to the truth." It is not an easy matter to know anything on hearsay statements. If I am not loyal to the truth, I am ready to sit at the feet of the humblest of the brethren and learn and become loyal.

I was called to East Gainesville church of Christ by the elders to hold a meeting. I gave up a meeting in Arkansas to answer the call. While the meeting was in progress, I was invited to preach to the Dickson Street Church. I replied: "Invite the members of East Gainesville church of Christ, through the elders, and I will come, if they will." The matter was presented to Brother E. H. Rogers, and he advised them to accept. They accepted; we went. My advice to both congregations was: If there were any persons in the Dickson Street Church who did not indorse their methods, for them to go to the East Gainesville church of Christ, and if there were any persons in the East Gainesville church of Christ who did not indorse their methods, for them to go to the Dickson Street Church, and, as far as in their power, live peaceably. No; I have not "gone to the progressives." Nor do I expect to be driven beyond that which is written in word, work, or worship by the statements of those whom I have regarded as my brethren and my friends.

Before me are letters from brethren, contributors to my support, who take it for granted that the statement of Brother Young is true, and say: "Do not expect any more support from me." One brother says he has "lost confidence in man," and subscribes himself: "Your former brother and friend." Another says: "I have no more confidence in you; this needs no reply." I am now in South Arkansas, where there is much destitution. I came here under promise to remain two months; I have one month more to stay, and my promise will be fulfilled. Then I am almost persuaded to return to Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi, where I know and am known. It does seem that, were it in the power of false statements to do so, I would have been driven from the old landmarks; but so long as they are of God, and not of man, I will remain, no matter what others may say.

When a brother becomes weak in the faith, he needs teaching. My sole object, brethren, is to cooperate with the apostles, God, and Christ Jesus, and in this meet the brethren at work. It is not well to be under human influence in the work of the Lord, but all should be under divine influence. "We are passing," it is true, "through an uncertain age," but truth will never deceive. If any brother is not satisfied as regards my soundness in the faith and loyalty to the truth, write to the elders of the churches where I preach, and do not act upon the judgment of the man whom I have never met, and who can "know" on hearsay evidence. No, brethren, I have not "gone to the progressives," but I am "plugging" away in the light of the unmolested teaching of the Holy Spirit, as best I can, on about half rations. A fearful sand storm in Colorado swept the railway tracks from Pueblo to Colorado Springs. The storm stands without a parallel in many respects. Former severe windstorms have been accompanied, with either rain or snow, but in this case it was neither; the wind carried sand, gravel, and small stones similar to the awful sand storms of the desert.

Monday, November 19, 1900, was the one hundredth anniversary of the meeting of the first Congress, which assembled in Washington after the Capitol of the republic was transferred to that city from Philadelphia. Exercises of an appropriate character will be held at the Capitol and the White House.

The convention of the Interstate Good Roads Association was held in Chicago last week, with delegates from over thirty States in attendance. The purpose of the meeting was to effect a national organization and bring influence to bear upon Congress to secure an appropriation for the improvement of highways commensurate with the needs of the country. Committees were appointed to work with the thirty-eight State Legislatures, and also to carry the matter direct to Congress.

A tornado swept over Middle Tennessee and Northern Mississippi on November 20, 1900. We quote the following from the Nashville American of November 22, 1900: "Advises from the storm-swept sections of Mississippi, Arkansas, and Tennessee indicate that the loss of life and damage to property is far greater than at first reported. In West Tennessee and North Mississippi the death list will probably exceed twenty-five; in Middle Tennessee the loss of life is placed at about forty; two persons are known to have perished in Arkansas. The property damage is enormous, and cannot be intelligently estimated at present. Lumber valued at five hundred thousand dollars was lost by the sudden rise of Wolf River, on the northern boundary of Memphis. The damage at Columbia, Tenn., is enormous. The death list, so far as reported, is twenty-three; At Nolensville, Tenn., three persons were killed, five fatally injured, and twelve badly hurt. Seven deaths in Williamson County and a general wreckage of property is reported. In Mississippi the worst sufferers were Tunica, Lula, and Hernando. The storm swept through a remote section, and information is very meager. The Cumberland River at this point rose nineteen and one-half feet in twenty-four hours. The town of Arkabutla, Miss., suffered terribly; ten persons were killed outright, twenty injured, and the place nearly demolished."

"The Relations of God to the World."

"The Relations of God to the World," By Hiram Christopher, A.M., M.D. Published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

This is a book of only about 200 pages, but it is packed full of solid thought. The author has a strictly philosophic turn of mind, and he has made a profound study of the physical sciences. He is at the same time thoroughly acquainted with the Scriptures. Though not a preacher, but a practicing physician, there are very few preachers who are at all comparable to him in the knowledge of the Bible. A graduate of Bethany College, and afterwards the successor of Dr. Robert Richardson as its professor of Chemistry, until the Civil War necessitated a reduction of its faculty, and in recent years the dean of the medical college at St. Joseph, Mo., his opportunities for the study of the subjects mentioned have been the very best, and he has improved them through a long lifetime with the greatest diligence. The work which he published some years ago, entitled, "The Remedial System; or, Man and His Redeemer," was one of the most thoughtful among all the books that have been written by any of our brethren—so much so that its readers have been comparatively few.

The subject of the present volume is treated under three heads: (1) "Immanency;" (2) "Intervention;" (3) "Incarnation."

Under the first head the author seeks to show, by a course of scientific reasoning, that force, by which all changes in matter are effected, is but "the exertion of a self-determining will," and that that will is the will of God. A short extract may serve as a specimen of his mode of reasoning on this topic:

"I take up a stone and throw it a distance. It moves in a curved line, determined by a propulsive and an attractive force. The latter we call 'gravitation;' but what is the propulsive? We ask the same question about the propulsive force that moves cosmic bodies. These bodies are as inert as the stone at my feet. As respects the stone, the force exerted and applied is in the muscles of the arm. In the dead body muscles have no power. For the force that exists in the muscle we must look to the force of the body, the vital or living force. But this force exerts no power, except by means of the matter with which it is connected; so that we are led to the conclusion that the power which a living body exerts must be regarded as residing in and belonging to the vital force, the source of all animal power. . . . But what put cosmic bodies in motion? They do not move themselves, and no force is visible that was able to put them in motion or that can keep them in motion. How, then, do they move? To say that we do not know is not satisfactory, since there is but one possible cause. The cosmic bodies are in motion; matter is inert, and only force can set it in motion; and there is but one known source of force capable of the work, and we close our eyes to it."

On the subject of "Intervention" the author meets most successfully the scientific arguments against the occurrence of miracles. A single extract to show how he demolishes the theory of natural evolution is all that I can give under this head:

"Evolution attributes the existence of living beings on the earth to the regular operation of physical force, a theory evolved to avoid the logic of a special intervention on the part of an intelligent being; but it cannot serve the purpose. If the chemist, with all the instrumental aids which have been devised, cannot so manipulate force as to form one of the tissues or secretions of living organism, it is idle and unreasonable to believe that physical force, unaided or undirected by the intelligence of man, could have given being to a living organism."

The "Incarnation" is treated more briefly, but not less profoundly, than the other two topics. On the subject of the nature of the "incarnation," the author states that the three following views have been held:

"1. That the human, or the man, of Jesus was the human animal organism, and that the Logos sustained the same relation to this that the spirit of man sustains to the body in which it dwells for a time.

"2. That Jesus was in all respects, and to the same extent, a complete man, having 'a body, a soul, and a spirit,' the Logos occupying the body jointly with the human spirit.

"3. That the Logos was united to the spirit of the man, and so intimately that the two constituted one being; and that by this union the attributes of the Logos were in some way laid aside or lessened; and that it is this twofold being 'who is the coronated King of heaven and earth, in whom humanity is so glorified as to be, in a sense, divine."

The author urges some serious objections to the second and third of these views, and decides in favor of the first as most agreeable to what we know of man's personal being, and to what is said of Jesus in the Scriptures.

I heartily commend this book to the careful study of all thoughtful men.—J. W. McGarvey, in Christian Standard.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Weak or Diseased Kidneys Poison the Blood, Break Down the Entire System and Bring on Bright's Disease.

To Prove what the Great Kidney Remedy, Swamp-Root, Will do for YOU, all our Readers May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

You know what happens to a sewer when it becomes clogged, don't you?

Do you know what happens to the human system when the kidneys become clogged? They are unable to throw out the impurities from the blood, and become infected with poisons; they decay, fall apart, and pass out in the urine; the blood, unfiltered, carries the poison all over the system, and, if not checked, death follows. The kidneys are the sewers of the human system.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, excess of uric acid, gravel, rheumatic pains, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night to empty the bladder, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness; sallow, unhealthy complexion; puffy or dark circles under the eyes; sometimes the feet, limbs or body blot; loss of ambition, general weakness, and debility.

When you are sick, then, no matter what you think the name of your disease is, the first thing you should do is to afford aid to your kidneys by using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Perhaps you are in doubt about your kidneys and want to find out. Here is a simple test. Take from your urine passed when you arise in the morning about two ounces; place it in a glass or bottle, and let it stand for twenty-four hours. If upon examination you find any settlements or sediment, if it is milky or cloudy, or if particles float about in it, disease has got a foothold in your kidneys, and Nature is calling for help.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, you would profit by taking Swamp-Root every now and then as a preventative, and thus absolutely forestall kidney and bladder troubles.

The famous new discovery, Swamp-Root, has been tested in so many ways—in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief—and has proved so successful in every case that every reader of the Gospel Advocate who has not already tried it may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail; also a book telling all about kidney and bladder diseases, and containing some of the thousands of testimonial letters from men and women reclaimed to lives of happiness and usefulness by the means of Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to be sure to state that they read this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Remember the name, Swamp-Root; and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

Righteousness.

"And he spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others." (Luke 18: 9.)

There are two kinds of righteousness: (1) Man's and (2) God's. Man's righteousness is based on his own wisdom; God's righteousness is based on the wisdom which comes down from above. Man doing his own will—following what he may of his own power perceive is right—is pursuing his own righteousness. When man rejects his own fleshly desires and counsel and seeks to do not his own will, but the will of God, he is submitting himself to the righteousness of God. "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about [seeking] to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." (Rom. 10: 3.)

There is nothing in religion a man may do which will purchase for him the blessings promised the righteous. It is not by works of righteousness which a man may do. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast." (Eph. 2: 8, 9.) If man, outside the direction which God gives, could do anything to secure God's favor, then he might, indeed, boast. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained [prepared] that we should walk in them." (Eph. 2: 10.) God, in his wisdom, has prepared the way, and lovingly invites man to walk therein, assuring him that it will lead him to the abode of the blessed.

Indeed, God proposes to lead man along the highway of life, and proposes, also, to thoroughly prepare him for every good work. This he has done by making known his ways to man in the Scriptures, both in the Old Testament and the New Testament. Therefore the apostle Paul could very truly say: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." There cannot, then, be any work of righteousness which a man may do, except it be taught by scripture inspired of God; or Paul must have been mistaken.

Man's faith is vain when he believes that which is untrue; man's work is vain when he does that the Lord does not require; man's righteousness is vain when he does the commandments of men; and his worship is vain and presumptuous when he sets aside God's way and adopts his own. "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." "But chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government. Presumptuous are they, self-willed: . . . which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray." (2 Pet. 2: 10-15.) Whenever man sets aside God's way of doing a thing pertaining to righteousness and adopts his own way, it becomes a matter of presumption; he sins against heaven, and it is presumptuous sin.

Well might the psalmist David pray: "Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression." (Ps. 19: 13.) If there is any sin more heinous and deserving of punishment than another, it certainly is the sin which a man commits when he would cast down the Lord and exalt himself. This is practically the case when man substitutes his own righteousness for the righteousness of God.

JAMES E. SCOBEX.

In Time or Out of Time.

There is all the difference in the world between being in time and being out of time. If you are in time, you find the surroundings in your favor. There are friends to help you; there are opportunities which open to you. The way is prepared for you, even though you may find it not an easy way. You attain good results. But if you are out of time, everything seems to be against you. Unexpected hostility is met; unlooked-for obstacles rise up to impede your way; expected cooperation fails, and the result is disappointment. Therein lies the secret of patience. Zeal is impatient; it seizes the present, whether it be opportune or not, with the result of unexpected hindrances and disappointment. There is a God's time, and we should study to know it and be prompt to use it. "There are twelve hours in the day," the hours of light, the hours for work, the time for activity. "If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world. But if a man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him."—United Presbyterian.

In the basement of the chapel of Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, Va., the office of Robert E. Lee, formerly president of that institution, is preserved exactly as he left it on the morning he occupied it for the last time. Not a book, a letter, or a paper has ever been disturbed. Once or twice a year the room is dusted, but is kept shuttered all the time, and into its sacred precincts very few visitors are admitted.

Everybody's proud of this sort of Grandpa, and he's proud of himself; proud of his clear brain and active body. There are other kinds of grandparents that we can't be proud of. Weak of body and feeble of mind, we can only pity them. They no more live; they only exist. What makes the difference between these two classes of old men? A sound stomach and a plentiful supply of pure, rich blood. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, and increases the activity of the blood-making glands. It won't make old men young, but it will enable old men to assimilate the food they eat, and so strengthen them for a life of reasonable exertion.

"I suffered for six years with constipation and indigestion, during which time I employed several physicians, but they could not reach my case," writes Mr. G. Popplewell, of Eureka Springs, Carroll Co., Ark. "I felt that there was no help for me; could not retain food on my stomach; had vertigo and would fall helpless to the floor. Two years ago I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and little 'Pellets,' and improved from the start. After taking twelve bottles of the 'Discovery' I was able to do light work, and have been improving ever since. I am now in good health for one of my age—60 years. I owe it all to Dr. Pierce's medicines."

Old people often need a laxative medicine. The best for them is Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

Virginia Jottings.

In the Gospel Advocate of November 8, 1900, appears a short article under the heading, "Order of Worship," from Brother W. J. Rice, of Covington, Ind., to which Brother D. Lipscomb replies at some length. The point to which I wish to call attention is this: Does Acts 2: 42 refer to worship on the first day of the week? I most emphatically and unequivocally deny that it does, except the one item—viz., the "breaking of bread," which elsewhere is shown to be on the first day of the week. There is nothing in the Authorized Version, the original manuscript, or any other version, as far as I have seen, that justifies any such construction. I have great respect for the matured convictions of Brother Lipscomb; for while I do not regard him as always right, or infallible, yet since the death of the lamented Benjamin Franklin I have looked upon "D. L." as more generally right than any one that controls a religious journal, and the Gospel Advocate as the soundest and best paper published by the disciples (since the departure of the great commoner), when taken as a whole, from that time down to the present. Brother Lipscomb's reply to W. J. Rice is good, with the exception that he seems tacitly to admit that the four items mentioned in Acts 2: 42 refer to worship upon the first day of the week. He admits he has changed on the "distinction" made by some in regard to "preaching or teaching," of which he says: "For twenty years I carefully observed the distinction; I then carefully examined it, and because I did this I am not so careful to keep up the distinction. I find the Scriptures do not keep it up." He certainly changed from the wrong to the right side of the question, and his remarks which follow are good and to the point. Now, why not "carefully examine" Acts 2: 42, and see whether there be found any order for the worship on Lord's day outside of "the breaking of bread?" W. J. Rice admits that Acts 2: 42 is "our only hope" for "establishing an order" of worship on the first day of the week. Now, I submit that if it is "our only hope," then there is no "order of worship" established by divine authority. As construed by those brethren advocating "a divine order of worship," it ought to read: "And upon the first day of the week they continued steadfastly in teaching the apostles' doctrine, the contribution, the breaking of bread, and prayers." There is a world-wide difference between such language and that which reads: "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." The latter is a brief general statement as to how the first church lived, and applies to all other days of the week as much as it does to "the first day of the week." "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine" is quite a different idea from that which would be contained in: "They continued teaching the apostles' doctrine." Besides, if it could be made to read as it would be compelled to do to sustain the "divine-order" idea, even then it is a well-established fact that the "order" in which things are stated in history, whether sacred or profane, is not always the "order" in which those things took place. Again. "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship." It was the "fellowship" of the apostles in which they continued. To make "fellowship" mean the weekly contribution established by Paul in 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2, long years afterwards, would be as unwarranted as to establish "a mourner's bench" from "Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted." (Matt. 5: 4.) There was simply no first-day-of-the-week collection at that time. Acts 2: 44, 45 says: "And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need." The Greek word "koinonia" does not mean weekly, or first-day-of-the-week, contribution. In Acts 2: 42 it means "community, fellowship, society, participation, communion." As the less is included in the greater, so any giving would be included in it, whether on the first day of the week or any other day of the week. The third item, "breaking of bread," is conceded on all hands to refer to the first day of the week. Now, how about the prayers? Is any one so reckless as to confine that to one day of the week, either the first day or any other day? To ask this question seems to be sufficient to bring out the correct answer. They certainly continued steadfastly in the prayers every day—on the first day of the week and on all other days. Brother Lipscomb's articles in the Gospel Advocate of November 8, 1900, and November 15, 1900, are both good, so far as scripture and logic are concerned, even admitting that Acts 2: 42 has reference to the first day of the week. This view, however, is denied, and until some one can show that to be true there need be no argument upon the subject. That is the vital point for discussion. It is the only scripture adduced to support "the divine order of worship" theory. The theory is vulnerable all over and throughout, without precept or precedent for or hint or allusion to it in the New Testament. They also continued in the teaching of the apostles.

A brother, of Youngstown, O., after expressing his delight in reading "Virginia Jottings," in the Gospel Advocate, requested my tract on "The Relation of Christians to Civil Governments and War." As he forwarded me ten cents, the price of two by mail, they were sent to him. That is right; scatter the tracts. "Uncle Sam" is still in war, and Christians should study well their duty in the light of the Scriptures. I fully believe the tract will help in the good work.

PUBLISHERS.

"We wonder how the Lord would feel if he should happen to step into some of our modern church entertainments. In some country towns the hotel keepers want some law passed to keep the church dinner people from getting all their trade, and in the cities it is an everyday occurrence to see some church member ringing a bell for a church dinner. The theater no longer has full sway; the church has entered the theatrical arena. The gambling den is put to shame by the fashionable church euchre party given for the benefit of the church. There is only one question about all these things: Do they tend to elevate the church and build up saints? If not, something is wrong. Where will all these things lead? "God loveth a cheerful giver." Brethren, we ought to go a little slow, lest we bring reproach upon the great work we have undertaken." (Christian Guide.)

"The dream god introduced a little mouse to Hjalmar, the little boy who lay asleep. 'It has come to invite you to a mouse wedding, which is to take place under the floor of your mother's storeroom, and that must be a fine place.' 'But how can I get through the little mouse hole in the floor?'

asked Hjalmar. 'Leave me to manage that,' said the dream god. Then he touched Hjalmar with his magic wand, whereupon he became less and less until at last he was not longer than a little finger. 'Now you can borrow the dress of a tin soldier. I think it will just fit you. It looks well to wear a uniform when you go into company.' . . . Then he seated himself in his mother's thimble and rode to the mouse wedding. When Hjalmar returned home, he felt assured that he had certainly been in grand society; but he had been obliged to creep under a room, and to make himself small enough to wear the uniform of a tin soldier." (Book of Fairy Tales.)

Place the last two paragraphs side by side—the two quotations, one from the Christian Guide, describing the state of the so-called "church of God;" the other from a book of fairy stories. Truth is stranger than fiction. If you have seen in the word of God the image of God's own church, bought with Christ's own blood, the exponent of all grandeur and truth, the representative of God's will; if you have seen the infathomable wisdom of its plan, its divine simplicity; the lofty character of Paul and its other heroes; the all-conquering, sublime greatness of its Head; and compared it with the sickly, degenerated thing that so often goes under its name to-day, you might well have wondered and asked: How did it get into that mouse hole? You were amazed at the divine stature of truth and beauty, and then at the dwarfed cripple beside it, and say: How could it get so small?

"Leave me to manage that," said the god of this world. Then he breathed into it, and blinded their eyes, and money-loving preachers and lukewarm members sprang up, and the spiritual standard shriveled down till it was small enough to enter the present mouse hole. Then it donned the tin soldier's uniform, and, brandishing its weelittle sword, deemed itself thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

Who is on the Lord's side? There was a time when it meant something to be a Christian. It was like Abraham's departure from among his kindred and from his home to be a stranger and a pilgrim, seeking for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. It meant to forsake, in effect, one's all, to deny oneself, to take up the cross, and to follow Christ. Now any respectable fellow can conveniently become a church member, almost as easily as he can become a member of John Wanamaker's book club. He attends the meetings, is amused, pays his dues, and is regarded as a member in good standing. When he dies, "the beloved pastor" carries him on the wings of a little touching eloquence up among the angels and into the paradise of God. Alas, poor York! If he could, he would send Lazarus to warn his brethren. But they have Christ and the apostles; let them hear them.

Have you denied yourself any great thing for Christ's sake? Perhaps you have assembled with the brethren when it suited you, listened to the preacher that pleased you, sung the song you liked best, introduced into the house of God whatever thing pleased you, and have been thinking all the while that you were pleasing God. But you have made some sacrifice. For instance, you paid the preacher. Was it a man that was spreading the gospel among the poor and ignorant if fields whom you supported? Ah, no! The most of your money went to a nondescript church officer of modern times, sometimes called "the pastor," who did the work you and your brethren should have done yourselves, individually—namely, the edifying of your own congregation. Really, brother, you who bear the name of Christ, have you ever forsaken anything for Jesus' sake? Have you ever made a sacrifice at all comparable to what Abraham did when he left home, or Moses did when he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter? Brethren, let us get on our knees and pray God to teach us what this means, "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it," and to give us grace to follow him who sacrificed himself for us.

The Buddhists of India are sending missionaries among the nations of Europe, so we are informed through the papers. The Literary Digest gives the substance of one of their religious pamphlets. A fear is expressed that the effort of the Buddhists may not end in altogether such a ridiculous failure as might be anticipated.

It would not be surprising if some of the wise, learned, skeptically inclined people of highly civilized Europe would fall into the arms of Buddhism. There is but little regard for the word of God manifested on the whole by the priest-ridden nations of the Eastern Continent. Germany, for example, is deeply imbued with skepticism. Many of its half-fledged philosophers, students, and common citizens seem to think that some infidelity is necessary to establish a reputation for learning and acuteness of intellect. In such ground, falsehood and error will as readily grow and propagate as disease germs in a filthy back yard. It is still true that those who have turned away their ears from the truth shall be turned unto fables. Is it not written of the ancient heathen that "knowing God, they glorified him not as God, neither gave thanks; but became vain in their reasonings, and their senseless heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools?" This may happen again. So it is just possible that Buddhism may yet become strongly represented in Europe.

"Most of our troubles are imaginary," it is said. We worry when there is no need of it; we anticipate troubles which never come to pass. If we could learn to look at things from an absolute point of view, we should find the world better. To illustrate: Mr. A, a man in fair circumstances, meets with Mr. Worldlywise, a gloomy companion, who talks to him about failures and hard times and scarcity of money, etc., until Mr. A thinks he is lucky to get fresh air and water and something to eat occasionally. He becomes melancholy and frightened at his prospects; he is afraid to give to the poor, or to the Lord; he grasps at every cent and hoards it up. Such anxiety, such misery! Why? Absolutely he is as well off as before meeting Mr. Worldlywise; he has as much money and as good prospects. But then he was contented, while now he is unhappy. His troubles are imaginary. A young man, on looking over his accounts, found he was one dollar short, and concluded at once that he had lost it. He felt in his pockets, looked and searched and inquired, but the dollar could not be found. He fretted and worried. Afterwards he looked over his account again, and saw that he had made a mistake; no dollar was missing. Instantly he felt comfortable. Why? He was not one cent better off than before. He had lost an imaginary dollar and found it again; that is all—imaginary trouble. Even if he had really lost a dollar, it might never have made the least change in his affairs.

The teaching of God's word tends directly to the removal of all imaginary troubles and takes the sting out of the real. While God would have us to work with our might, as unto him, he would free us from care. "Cast all your care upon him," says the apostle, "for he careth for you." "Therefore I say unto you, Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than the food, and the body than the raiment? Behold the birds of the heaven, that they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; and your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are not ye of much more value than they? And which of you by being anxious can add one cubit unto his stature? And why are ye anxious concerning raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. But if God doth so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Be not therefore anxious, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? For after all these things do the Gentiles seek; for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Be not therefore anxious for the morrow: for the morrow will be anxious for itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

What man is happier than he who has his treasures safely laid up beyond the reach of thieves, and financial changes, and moth and rust; that always does his best, and leaves his future in the hands of a benevolent Father; that has no aspirations to honor from men? We receive rest from Jesus when we come to him and learn the lowliness and meekness of his heart. Faith and uprightness reward the soul with an inward wealth, which gives what money cannot buy—peace and rest.

It is a queer fact that whenever you admonish people to leave the anxieties of the world and walk by faith the very first thought is that you mean they need not work. The first objection brought is: "You just try it; sit down and trust in the Lord and do nothing, and see how you will come out. You will starve." But who on earth has said, "Do nothing?" God did not. He wants us to work. Only let it be a work of faith.

Here are two farmers—one, a Christian; the other, an unbeliever. One walks by faith; the other makes his way by works, for he has no God to trust in. Both work, work equally hard. But the Christian does not work for himself, nor does he look to his work to support him. In the very first place, his every stroke is for the Lord, and of the Lord he meekly expects sustenance. His prayer is: "Give us this day our daily bread." The harvest has come and brought abundance. One man looks at his fields in self-satisfied glee and says: "I did it; it is the result of my skill and labor." The other beholds his increase with grateful heart and thanks his Lord for the gift of his love. He does not regard his increase as the legitimate wages of his work, but as a gift from God, and uses it to God's glory. So far they both are even. But next year the Christian toils again to the best of his ability, for thus it pleaseth God. Seasons are bad, crops fail entirely; but no trouble or anxieties shade the Christian's face. Did he look to the ground for support? No, indeed; he looked higher. Now is the time faith tells. Surely, surely, as the everlasting mountains stands the promise of God. His little ones shall be fed and clothed and himself shall not suffer, because he trusted in God. That is what so many irreverently call "that faith theory." Let us trust in God and look to him, without anxiety, for support. If we are farmers, merchants, teachers, preachers, whether the source of support is apparent or not, let us do daily our work heartily unto the Lord, and he will care for us.

THE GOSPEL AX.

One day a missionary was preaching in the city of Benares. The large crowd was civil and attentive. At length a Brahmin said: "Look at those men, and see what they are doing."

"They are preaching to us," replied the people.

"True. What has the sahib in his hand?"

"The New Testament."

"Yes, the New Testament. But what is that? I will tell you. It is the gospel ax, into which an European handle has been put. If you come to-day, you will find them cutting; if you come to-morrow, you will find them doing the same. And at what are they cutting? At our noble tree of Hindooism—at our religion. It has taken thousands of years for the tree to take root in the soil of Hindustan; its branches spread all over India; it is a noble, glorious tree. The gospel ax is applied daily, and although the tree is large and strong, it must give way."

"True," replied the missionary, "but many a poor handle gets worn out, and many a one breaks, and it takes a long time until a new one is obtained from Europe."

"Ah," he answered, "if that were all, it would be well enough, and the tree would have respite; but what is the real case? No sooner does a handle find it can no longer swing the ax than it says: 'What am I to do? I am getting worn out; I can no longer swing the ax; am I to give up cutting?' No, indeed! He walks up to the tree, looks at it, and says: 'Here is a branch out of which a handle might be made.' Up goes the ax, down comes the branch. It is soon shaped into a handle; the European handle is taken out, and the native handle put in, and the swinging commences afresh. At last the tree will be cut down by handles made of its own branches."—Free Church Monthly.

DR. DUNCAN'S SALARY.

In Chattanooga, Tenn., on Sunday, Dr. Duncan sprang a big surprise on his flock at Centenary Church. It appears that Dr. Duncan's predecessor, Dr. Monk, received a salary of thirty-five hundred dollars a year, and it also appears that many of the sheep believed the shepherd's stipend was too large. Dr. Duncan proceeded to chase the wanderers in pretty lively fashion, taking as his text: "The laborer is worthy of his hire." Here are some of his remarks: "The minister is as good as any man, but you seem to think that he is a sort of half man and half woman, and altogether a pauper. When his salary is not paid, the congregation all get together and give him a pound party. 'O, it's the preacher, and it's all right!' you say. Now, how many of you would give a merchant who had failed a pound party? Not one; yet, because the minister is only the pastor, you deny him the right to assert his manhood, and virtually designate him as a pauper. Now, I do not own a thing in the world, but I am not a pauper, and I want you to distinctly understand it. There are some of you who think it a sin for a preacher to make ten thousand dollars a year. A business man can make it, and it is all right. Now, I want to know what the difference is. Some of this congregation refused to contribute to the pastor's support last year because you thought he was getting too much. Now, I want to know why your pastor isn't as much entitled to make ten thousand dollars as anybody else in any other line. He gives you his whole time, his whole heart, and his all. Yet you think he is not justly entitled to receive money as men in other business. Do you refuse to buy oil simply because John D. Rockefeller makes twenty million dollars per year? Then you will not buy any oil. Do you refuse to buy clothing because the merchant is making over what you think he ought to make? Is your pastor less of a man than these? Does he not devote his life to your use? And what do some of you pay? What is your contribution as compared with the money you spend for tobacco, cigars, chewing gum, etc.? Let me tell you one thing. The man who paid the largest portion of your pastor's salary last year paid three times as much to his cook. His cook was three times more valuable to him than his pastor's labor. Am I worth one cent a day to you? That is more than I am costing you. Now, I want to make a proposition. All who think I am not worth one cent a day stand up. Is there one who will say—it?

If you think so, I hope you will stand. Is there one? [Pause.] Now, I want to make another proposition. All who think I am worth one cent per day to the church stand up. [The congregation arose to its feet en masse.] That is all. Now, I want to say in closing that I do not want an increase in salary—not that by any means—but neither do I want it decreased. And further, I want our missionary collections to go on increasing, and the entire work of the church to continually progress." Dr. Duncan called a meeting of the stewards immediately after services, saying he would detain them only a few minutes. The general impression was that the stewards were contemplating reducing the pastor's salary, but agreed to leave it to the vote of the congregation, which resulted as detailed above. There are over twelve hundred members in Centenary, and each contributing one cent per day to the pastor's salary would aggregate in the neighborhood of forty-five hundred dollars per year. It is not probable that the salary will be reduced from what it was last year, thirty-seven hundred and fifty dollars.—Nashville American, Nov. 14, 1900.

[Eh! Is it any worse to advertise a preacher and his wife and children as paupers, who have not sense enough to know what they need or pennies enough to procure the needful by getting up a "pound party" to supply their necessities, than to advertise the Lord of glory as a friendless vagabond, bankrupt, and beggar by getting up a shin show, supper, "tacky" party, fair, feast, or festival to build him a house, buy him a carpet, or send to saints or sinners the gospel of him who gave his very life to save a lost and ruined world? It is hardly probable that a business man who spends his time in the service of the Lord will make ten thousand dollars per year. It is very evident that the preacher who spends his time in preaching the gospel as did Paul will make no such amount. The one perfect being was so poor that he had not where to lay his head. "The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord." (Matt. 10: 24.) Eh!]

PREDESTINATION DOCTRINE TRUE.

With a majority of one, and that the vote of the moderator, the New York Presbytery decided that the Westminster Confession, with its doctrine of predestination, was good enough to remain as the creed of the Presbyterian Church. The number of votes cast was one hundred and forty-two, of which one hundred and nine were recorded as votes of clergymen and thirty-three as votes of elders of the church. The action taken at the meeting was founded on an "overture" which had been sent up to all the presbyteries of this country by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church for the purpose of ascertaining the opinion of the various bodies of the church on the question of revising the creed. When the vote had been counted it was found that seventy-one favored revision and seventy-one opposed it. The announcement that the vote was a tie created a stir among those present. The stated clerk, Dr. Birch, drew the attention of the Assembly to the rule governing the Presbytery, which provides that in the case of a tie the moderator shall cast the deciding vote. Dr. Wiley had already voted his individual capacity, and his vote had been recorded as against revision. The moderator then cast his vote with the ayes, the antirevisionists carrying the day.—Nashville American, Nov. 14, 1900.

[So, then, the Presbyterian Church is to retain in its creed the doctrine of "infant damnation" and unconditional election and reprobation. Such doctrine may be good enough for a church founded on a human creed, but it is not good enough for the church of God, for Jesus says of "little children," "Of such is the kingdom of heaven;" and of responsible souls: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." It is not the revision of human creeds that is needed, but the rejection of them in toto. Human creeds only divide men into parties and make them sectarians. "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work."—2 Tim. 3: 16, 17, R. V.]

Our Contributors.

Needs of the Hour. No. 3.

Is it a side issue? I mean this matter of carrying the light to others. I do not believe it is. It is as much the duty of the church to send the gospel forth as it is to break bread on the first day of the week. A certain church decided to dismiss their preacher. Talking with one of the elders, he said he wanted to remind the brother that he had not been filling his appointments. Of course the brother had been off at the schoolhouses and in destitute places round about breaking the bread of life to those who had not yet heard, and had even given an entire month at his own charges in trying to awaken the churches to their duty in regard to others; but this all went for naught, because the offense had been committed of not filling his appointment. Instead of following him in his labors of love with letters of good cheer and imparting unto him such temporal blessings as were necessary, his efforts must be discouraged and criticised, while the church sits still and waits for somebody to come and take up all their burdens and bear them along. Brethren, I say this to your shame. Do not be surprised if "elements" arise in the church that are not satisfied with the Book, as you think; it is your book they have been reading.

Preachers have always been leading spirits in the church. Upon them rests a great responsibility to lead aright. We are not, however, without our faults. We could do much in helping the churches to a larger growth. I fear we are not doing it. I give it as my judgment that if those who oppose societies would put in the time for the next twelve months that they are accustomed to spend in showing up the wrongs of such things in showing how it can be done, they would be better pleased at the end of the year with the result.

Many of us oppose salaries and societies from the pulpit, but in our conduct really lend weight to them. If I calculate on meetings with "strong" churches and know from their custom in the past I will get so much, that is a salary; if I limit my labors to such churches, I am on a salary just as much as if paid a thousand dollars a year by some board. A brother seeing this evil decided to quit it; but on looking about him to see how to get out of the difficulty he found no way of escape, so gave up preaching and went into business. This brother's influence all goes for the boards. To them it is apparent that the thing he contends for is not practicable, hence not scriptural. His case is used to good effect to show there must be some "plan," some "system," some "understanding."

I have expressed my willingness, privately and publicly, to travel among the churches in the interest of missionary work with any preaching brother who would map out a trip for us among the churches of his acquaintance, but, with two or three exceptions, there has been no response. If the preachers would take up the matter in this way, I believe the missionary cause could be greatly set forward. My experience with Brother Smith, of West Tennessee, has abundantly proven this. If I am correct, it is not because of direct opposition to mission effort. With many it is like this: They have their arrangements made ahead. It will not do to interfere with them. Regular appointments must be filled. And then my business, as they look at it, is to go about and seek collections, anyway, and it is useless for an extra brother to waste his time by joining me to go around and drum up the churches. Many seem to have the idea that to do mission work is to get up some collections. I should not be surprised, either, if sometimes a brother occasionally thinks that it is about all he can do to get enough to live on, anyway, and if he joins in with another and gets knocked out of a few protracted meetings, that unmentioned, but tacitly understood, salary will be deficient.

There are but few churches where I have been that are not more or less divided on the mission question. It is not difficult to see how this has come about; it is a chastisement for idleness. It works this way: A church sends for a preacher, and they have a big meeting or debate. The "sects" were ousted completely. They did not have a single prop left. The church becomes more grounded in the faith than ever before. The brethren make some more marks in their Bibles where a "good un" was made against "um." They close their books again and lay them upon the shelf, not to be taken down till a target comes along to use them on. Each person goes on chewing his tobacco and neglecting Christian duty, as before; the church drops right back where it was—not having far to drop—before the meeting; daily prayer is still neglected in the home, the poor are overlooked, the Bible is not read, and no effort is made to edify the church nor bring souls to Christ; the children of the church are neglected and the work of sending the gospel to regions beyond is never mentioned. The State evangelist comes around and finds the church like a weak running spring, morally too weak to throw off anything that may be dropped into it. He says: "You are doing nothing here." They know it. He says: "I want to put you to work." Some of them want to work. He explains his plans. Some do not see much wrong in it. At any rate, it is better than doing nothing. Some are determined to try it, others plead loyalty, but still do nothing; and there is division. If a church is awake to duty, there is nothing a State evangelist can offer. All that he may suggest they will be already doing. They will be so full of good works already that there will be no place found for him. J. M. M'CALEB.

The Church. No. 2.

Shakespeare came to sound the depths of the human mind and educate the ear of the Saxon race to the music of his rhythm; William the Silent came to preserve the nationality of Holland; Raphael came to gild refined gold and paint the lily, to throw a perfume on the violet, and to "weave a garland for the rose;" Homer, the "blind old man of Scio's Rocky Isle," came to sing the direful wrath of Achilles and celebrate in song the deeds of the Trojan War, to lay the foundation of Greek literature, and to give form and fascination to the Grecian theogony; Hildebrand came to reform the abuses of his time and rescue Europe from the rapacities of feudal nobles; Columbus came to discover a new world and open it up to commerce and civilization; but Jesus Christ came in the fullness of time to seek and to save that which was lost and establish the kingdom of heaven in the lives of men. Not for intellectual greatness, not for military conquest or martial glory did he come, but to save the souls of lost and fallen men. In order to accomplish this great purpose of the ages he established his church on the day of Pentecost in the city of Jerusalem. This was the model church; the divine pattern was here given. This church did not have either junior or senior endeavor societies. No such hierarchy or ecclesiasticism as the "American Christian Missionary Society" had control over this church. The worship was plain and simple devotion to God, without ostentation. Church historians, like Neander, Mosheim, Schaff, and others, agree in regard to the simplicity of the primitive worship. For this reason no organ was used, and the use of the organ now is a positive violation of divine law. When God gives a law that is specific, it is also limiting. When he commanded Noah to build the ark of gopher wood, he was limited to that kind of wood, as much as if God had said, "You shall use no other kind;" when he commanded the serpent to be made of brass, Moses, as a man of faith, could not understand that he had the privilege to add any other composition; when he commanded the priests to blow on ram's horns, he did not mean ram's horns and brass trumpets. So when he commands us to sing in the worship, he does not mean sing and play on the organ. "But," says one, "this is only to assist the singing; it is no part of the worship." So might the blowing of brass trumpets have assisted the ram's horns being louder and more melodious, but it would have been none the less a violation of divine law.

Dr. Maclaine, the translator of Mosheim's "Church History," in speaking of the purpose of Aerius, says: "The desire of reducing religious worship to the greatest possible simplicity, however rational it may appear in itself, and abstractly considered, will be considerably moderated in such as bestow a moment's attention upon the imperfection and infirmities of human nature in its present state. Mankind, generally speaking, have too little elevation of mind to be much affected by those forms and methods of worship in which there is nothing striking to the outward senses. The great difficulty here lies in determining the lengths which it is prudent to go in the accommodation of religious ceremonies to human infirmity; and the grand point is to fix a medium, in which a due regard may be shown to the senses and imagination, without violating the dictates of right reason or tarnishing the purity of true religion. It has been said that the church of Rome has gone too far in its condescension to the infirmities of mankind; and this is what the ablest defenders of its motley worship have alleged in its behalf. But this observation is not just. The Church of Rome has not so much accommodated itself to human weakness as it has abused that weakness by taking occasion from it to establish an endless variety of ridiculous ceremonies, destructive of true religion, and only adapted to promote the riches and despotism of the clergy and to keep the multitude still hoodwinked in their ignorance and superstition." Dr. Maclaine's plea for human inventions finds no sanction in the New Testament. But it is claimed that the Jerusalem church was only the childhood of the church, and the worship then is no precedent to govern us now. When a man makes this plea, it shows that he does not respect the authority of Christ, and that he is out on the great sea of human expediency, with no landing place in sight.

"Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God," is the grand fundamental proposition of New Testament Christianity. Upon it the Savior said he would build his church, and upon it the glorious temple of the living God was reared. In the days of primitive Christianity, all who stood upon or accepted this truth were gathered into fellowship and communion one with another. Those thus gathered out of the world and brought into communion with each other constituted the church. The church, then, was built upon this foundation, in the sense that those who constituted it stood upon or accepted this truth; and this was the only foundation, because it was all that the primitive Christians were required to accept in order to admission into the church. An acceptance of this great truth means that we are to believe what the Savior says, do what he commands us to do, and trust him for what he promises. It is idle for a man who does not believe that baptism is essential to salvation to talk about having accepted Jesus as the Christ. That man lacks faith, and without faith it is impossible to please God. (See Heb. 11: 6.) Not one of the denominations around us is built upon the truth confessed by Peter as its only foundation. In this lies their departure from the church established in the beginning. Each one of them has added something of its own devising and stands upon a basis half human, half divine. Take from any one of them everything except what is included in the fundamental truth of Christianity and you take from it all its distinctive characteristics and rob it of everything that gives to it a party existence.

In this age of highly developed humanism it takes true men to adhere strictly to the unalloyed word of God, to say and do as did Micaiah in the midst of the Ahab prophets: "What the Lord says, that will I speak." There are some men among the "Disciples" who are able to see far beyond the horizon of revelation, and to recognize that the New Testament contains but the germ of truth, which they conceive to be susceptible of great theoretical growth; also that its development is to be shaped and controlled by circumstances peculiar to the respective ages through which it is to pass. With this conception of the divine arrangement, it is not at all difficult to advocate the adoption of new methods and systems of organization which lead to all manner of departures from the primitive faith. They seek to find "the place of Christ in modern theology," instead of trying to ascertain the place he occupies in the New Testament scheme of redemption.

I wish the following language from President Milligan could be read in every convention among the "Disciples." Even though he is dead, this advice is as good as if he were still living: "But let the church be made pure; let her be forever separated from all her unholy alliances; let none but regenerated men and women be received into her communion and fellowship; let those be united as they should be in the bonds of love and peace; let them live worthy of their high and holy calling; let them make the church, as far as practicable, the medium of all their active benevolence; let her be their alms society, their temperance society, their Bible society, and their missionary society." ("Scheme of Redemption," pages 520, 521.) This is wise counsel from a great and good man.

In April, 1899, Dr. J. H. Garrison and other "leaders" among the "Disciples" held a meeting in St. Louis called "Our First Congress." Dr. J. J. Haley used the following language at the "congress: "

"The cry, 'Back to Jerusalem!' has tended from the first to shunt the Christ position onto the side track of Jewish literalism that neutralizes more than half the force of the original plea. Jerusalem, in poetry and song, is the city of the great King and the prototype of the capital of the new empire of God in the millennium, but in the stern reality of history it is the symbol of the fiercest type of intolerance and dogmatism. It stoned the prophets, crucified the Redeemer, persecuted the church, and stood, till removed by the providence of God, an impassable barrier to the manifestation of the kingdom." Dr. Briney reminded him that the reason it gave him the "shivers" to contemplate Jerusalem he did not discriminate between the "Jewish Jerusalem" and the "Christian Jerusalem." May the Lord help us all to keep out of "congress," stay in the church, and get better.

JUDAS ISCARIOT.

There is a disposition on the part of some, and even on the part of some preachers, to make it appear that Judas was a good man. A minister said to me that Judas was a better man than Peter, adding that Judas never cursed and denied his Lord.

It is contended that he did not think the Lord would suffer himself to be tried as a criminal and to be crucified when he was found guilty. Jesus had mysteriously slipped away from his enemies; he had fed the thousands from a few loaves and fishes; the tempestuous sea had been submissive to his "Peace, be still;" he had given sight to the blind and hearing to the deaf; devils had obeyed him, and his obedience to his authority the dead had come forth.

As Judas doubtless knew all this, and even more, it is argued that he thought he would only hasten the glorification of Christ.

This may appear very plausible to some, but such reasoning cannot set aside the plain statements of the Bible with those who give full credit to the word of God. For the benefit of such we quote a few passages: "And supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him." (John 13: 2.) "Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve." (Luke 22: 3.) "And Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor." (Luke 6: 16.) "Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests, and said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver. And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him." (Matt. 26: 14-16.) This last quotation certainly shows that his agreement was to deliver Jesus unto them, so that if he expected Jesus to slip away as contended, he was seeking to practice an imposition upon those rulers with whom he made the trade. "And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people. Now he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he: hold him fast. And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed him." (Matt. 26: 47-49.) "Jesus answered them, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? He spake of Judas Iscariot the son of Simon: for he it was that should betray him, being one of the twelve." (John 6: 70, 71.)

We might admit from the fact that Judas being filled with remorse went out and hanged himself that, therefore, he did not expect Christ to be crucified. Still, it would by no means follow that he was not a devil, as declared by Jesus.

Judas belonged to that class who knew the truth, but had no love for righteousness; he loved a few paltry shekels better than he loved the Lord Jesus Christ. What a fearful thing for a man to know the truth, and yet have no love for it! Inevitably the blackness of eternal darkness must settle down over his life. There is not one bright syllable in all the oracles of God for the man who knows the way of life and yet has no love for it. Of this character Paul writes: "Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." (2 Thess. 2: 9-12.)

We know that God cannot save the man who loves money better than the Lord Jesus Christ. With such an ungodly love for money as Judas possessed it was easy for Judas to persuade himself that there was no crime in the deed he perpetrated. John (12: 4-6) gives us a true insight into his character: "Then saith one of his disciples, Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray him, Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor? This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein." He had made for himself a character that fitted him for the deed. Day by day, in the conflicts and duties of life, we build characters for ourselves. A character for good or evil is not formed in a day.

We paint ourselves the joy, the fear,
Of which the coming life is made,
And fill our future's atmosphere
With sunshine or with shade.

The tissues of the life to be,
We weave with colors all our own,
And in the field of destiny
We'll reap as we have sown.

Still shall the soul around it call
The shadows which it gathered here,
And, painted on the eternal wall,
The past shall reappear.

Many to-day for the love of money are betraying again the blessed Son of God. Some sell out all right, true, and noble principles for fewer shekels than did Judas. Some will disgrace the cause of Christ, which they profess to love, for even one little nickel. How sad that Christ is betrayed in the house of his friends!

Thousands upon thousands will be lost not because they know not the truth, but because they have no love for it. Many disciples know that God's children should meet to break bread on the first day of the week and that Jesus has promised to meet with them; yet they deliberately neglect the worship. The cause is a failure to love the Lord more! We must love him with all the heart and render him an undivided service. "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." (Mark 12: 30.) With us the Lord must stand first.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Shall we thank thee for these, and not thank thee for those?

Shall we love thee for blessing, and chide thee for ill;

And chafe at thy thorn while we seize on thy rose,
And praise while our hearts are unsatisfied still?

No; we bless thee for all, for in all we have thee,
And all is from thee, who can never do wrong;
And feeble and faint though our utterance be,
No murmur discordant shall sadden our song.

For life then, for death then, for good and for ill,
For storm as for sunshine, for harvest and blight,
In glad days, in sad days, we worship thee still,
The Lord of the darkness, the Lord of the light.

An Alien's Prayer, and Raffling.

Brother Lipscomb: (1) Will you please explain as to whether Cornelius was an alien sinner or not? If not, why not? Now, if he was an alien sinner and God heard his prayer, why will he not hear an alien sinner's prayer to-day? (2) Is it right or not, and would it be recognized as gambling, for a brother to raffle off his property, or sell tickets and have it shot for? Does it not amount to this: Each man who buys a ticket or tickets bets the price of the ticket or tickets against the other number of tickets that he will win the property, whatever it may be? FRANK BAKER.

(1) We have, time and time again, said God is just as unwilling to hear an inside sinner as he is to hear an outside sinner, or he is just as willing to hear the outside, or alien, sinner as he is to hear the sinner in the church. When the man born blind said (John 9: 31), "God heareth not sinners," he was speaking of Jewish sinners, who were not aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, but members of the family of Abraham. The same is true of Job 27: 9; 35: 12; Ps. 66: 18; Prov. 1: 28; 15: 29; 28: 9; Isa. 1: 15; Jer. 11: 11; 14: 12; Ezek. 8: 18; Mic. 3: 4; and Zech. 7: 13. All these passages, with quite a number of others, declare God will not hear the prayers of persons on account of their sins. In all these passages he refers to sinners in covenant relation with God. They are the class most frequently addressed. God's laws are generally given to those who claim to obey him. To those who do not own him as God, he gives one leading command: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Until he complies with this, he gives him no other command; until the man comes to recognize him as the only true and living God, he does not care to call on him.

There are many seeming contradictions in God's dealings with man. One is, God will not hear a sinner or one that "turneth away his ear from hearing the law." Yet we pray because we are sinners. One that willfully sins, and turns his ear from hearing the law, God will not hear. Yet because we realize we are sinners, helpless, and needy we come to God in prayer. The more we realize we are lost and helpless, the more we will pray, and the better God is pleased with the prayer. God does not hear the prayer of the self-righteous. When a man turns his ear from God, and refuses to hear and obey him, his prayer is an abomination to the Lord. God will not hear that kind of a sinner, whether he be an alien or a citizen. But when a man realizes he is a sinner, that he needs divine mercy and divine help, and comes to God seeking his help to turn from sin, God is pleased with the prayers of that kind of a sinner, whether he be alien or citizen. When a man believes in God and realizes he is lost, he cannot help praying. God hears such prayers. There is no sin in such prayers. The danger is in the man relying on such prayers and failing to obey God's commands in other things. This is the point to be guarded against. Cornelius was an alien, anxious to know and do the will of God. God hears all such and reveals and leads them into the fuller knowledge of his will, that they may do it.

(2) All this raffling is gambling of the most flagrant kind. It amounts to a bet between those who buy the tickets as to who will win, and the man who sells the tickets does it to get more than the property is worth or would bring without the chances that are taken to win it. It is not honest to try to get more for the property than it is worth; especially it is not honest to get it through exciting the gambling spirit in others. To take chances in which some pay out something and get nothing and the other gets something for nothing is gambling, and all gambling is dishonesty. Making the gain or loss depend on skill in shooting differs nothing in principle to his making it depend on skill in playing cards.

EDITORIAL.

Life is too short to waste in dreaming.

He who will not listen ought not to speak.

The life should echo the truth that is in the heart.

What we often hear depends upon how we listen.

God has a special message for every soul who will hear it.

The listening ear shuts out all sounds only those sought.

Hurry not only spoils work, but spoils life also.—Lubbock.

It is not always the man who prays the loudest that lives the best.

The heart grows harder every time we hear the truth and heed it not.

We must learn to be unselfish before we can be of benefit to the world.

Truth never comes to the man who is not willing to hear all she has to say.

It is not the truth we hear that blesses us, but that which we put into practice.

The spirit of obedience is given revelations that are denied to those who doubt and obey not.

The man who is laboring to please God is not concerned about the world knowing what he is doing.

Anything worth hearing is worth thinking about. If we heard less and thought more, we would be wiser.

No man has learned the art of listening until he can listen discouragingly to things unlovely and encouragingly to all words of truth and beauty.

The art of not hearing the evil is one to be cultivated along with the art of hearing the good. There is a time to be deaf as well as a time to hear.

The church needs to deal with gambling in high places. It is a shame to tolerate gambling in futures, stocks, bonds, etc. Gambling is destroying thousands daily.

Fellowship of the highest degree is possible only to persons who are one as to the possession of life. Two cannot walk together unless they be agreed as to the fundamentals. The fellowship of the saints is above all other fellowships, because the chief interests of Christian souls are kindred. It is because "the blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin" that we have fellowship one with the other. The strength of our love for the brethren is a proof of our love for Christ.

People need to learn how to listen to the truth. Often the sermon is complained of as being dull and stupid, when the fault is with the hearer, and not with the preacher. Almost every sermon preached has something good in it. The way we hear affects what we hear. Because of our critical attitude toward the man who declares God's truth, our hearts are in no fit condition to receive the truth that is presented. If we listened aright, we would soon discover that there is more truth in every sermon than we will likely put into practice before we hear another. We dishonor God and his truth by the way we hear. We should take heed how we hear as well as what we hear.

We should never put off till to-morrow what should be done to-day. Opportunities neglected never return. We should never worry over the future, but do our duty in the present. Robert Murray McChesney speaks along this line: "On a winter evening, when the frost is setting in with growing intensity and the sun is gradually sinking in the western sky, there is a double reason why the ground grows every moment harder and more impenetrable to the plow. On the one hand, the frost of evening, with ever-increasing intensity, is indurating the stiffening clods; on the other hand, the genial rays which alone can soften them are every moment withdrawing and losing their enlivening power. Take heed that it be not so with you. As long as you are unconverted you are under a double process of hardening. The frosts of an eternal night are settling down upon your souls, and the Sun of Righteousness, with westerling wheel, is hastening to set upon you for evermore. If, then, the plow of grace cannot force its way into your ice-bound heart to-day, what likelihood is there that it will enter to-morrow?"

Almost every plan or enterprise has its discouragements and its discouragements, and the last are usually more formidable than the first. In this world nothing is certain of success until it has succeeded, and from the days when the ten spies brought back their adverse report from the promised land until the present day there has been no lack of those who cry: "It is useless to try; it cannot be done!" Going forward was the only hope for Israel, and the objectors had no other plan to suggest. They only repeated drearily, "We cannot do it," and so disheartened the people. Courage means so much in any difficult path, in any hard undertaking, that it is strange how any one can see the wisdom of merely weakening the hands of those who are doing all that can be done. Yet the chronic discourager is everywhere. He sees no hope and will allow others to see none. He paralyzes effort, but he has no alternative to suggest, no promising plan to offer. He may even acknowledge that the course proposed is the only one that remains, but he cannot resist the temptation to show his superior foresight by predicting failure. "Many a patient, with just a bare chance for life," said a physician, "has died because of the hopelessness of those about him."—Forward.

The character of Paul is to be much admired. When he was not a Christian, he was zealous in persecuting God's people, verily believing that he was doing God's service. He was ever true to his convictions of right. When he became a Christian, he gave himself completely to the service of God; he lost no opportunity to preach the gospel of Christ. Whether before kings or peasants, he ever gloried in the cross of Christ. Joseph Parker says of him: "The opportunity given to Paul is to speak for himself; how does he do it? By unfolding the gospel. Paul is all the while speaking about himself, and yet all the while he is preaching such a sermon as even he never preached before. He keeps to the point, and yet takes a long tether; he never leaves the first personal attitude and relation, and yet all the while he is rebuilding all the Christian argument and reuttering in new tones and with new stretches of allusion and meaning the whole gospel of salvation. Paul never glories, except in the cross of Christ. Standing before kings he never changes his theme. Happy in his opportunities, he is only happy because he can draw a fuller portraiture of the one Savior of the world. This should be a lesson to all men. We may speak about ourselves, and yet hide ourselves in the glory of Another." So when Paul came to die, he could look backward over a life of usefulness and look forward to the throne of God and say: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (2 Tim. 4: 6-8.)

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." Edited by F. D. Strygley. Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn. Cloth; pages, 413. The chief excellence of the present volume is the faithful presentation of the characterizations and the teaching of one who is widely known among the churches in the South. These letters and sermons present

Brother Larimore as a man of warm heart and affectionate bearing toward his brethren and humanity. As an earnest and industrious minister of the gospel, his life has been a fruitful one, for through his efforts many have been won to Christ. The volume is likely to have an extensive sale among the personal friends of Brother Larimore and of his biographer. A mournful interest is attached to the volume in the fact that, soon after its publication, the author was suddenly called to his eternal reward. There are twenty-two illustrations, including excellent pictures of the subject of the book, his home, and members of his family.—Book Reviews, Christian Standard.

There has just been issued from the press of the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company "At the Feet of Jesus," by Brother R. P. Meeks. The author says: "It has been a conviction of the writer for several years that the Bible idea of much of the preaching to-day should be shifted, at least somewhat. The Christ idea is not as prominent in the pulpit as it should be. . . . In this book my aim has been to call the attention of the young, especially young preachers, to the life, sayings, and influence of 'the wonderful One,' at least in a humble way. I desire to give them a faint idea of Jesus as he is revealed in the Bible, there being no pretension toward an exhaustive treatise upon the 'Man divine.'" This book may, then, be appropriately called—as, indeed, it is also called—"Sermons Concerning the Savior," of which there are twenty-five, under the following subjects:

- "The Christ Idea—In Prophecy and History."
- "The Genealogy and Birth of Christ."
- "The Babe of Bethlehem."
- "The Incarnation of Christ."
- "Influence of the Incarnation upon the Life and Prosperity of the Nations."
- "The Boyhood of Jesus."
- "The Baptism of Jesus."
- "The Temptation of Christ."
- "Parables of Christ."
- "Christ's Miracles."
- "Christ the Great Teacher."
- "The Transfiguration."
- "The Sonship of Christ."
- "The Spirit of Christ."
- "The Great Leader."
- "Footprints of Jesus."
- "The Trial and Crucifixion of Jesus."
- "The Resurrection of Christ."
- "Christ the Great Physician."
- "Jesus the Great Prophet and Priest."
- "Jesus the King of Glory."
- "Christ's Call."
- "Christ the Great Judge."
- "Four Questions Concerning Christ."
- "What Think Ye of Christ?"
- "What Will You Do with Him?"

The book contains a life sketch of the author by his wife, Mrs. Meeks, and of the author's father, Gen. John H. Meeks, by T. B. Larimore. "At the Feet of Jesus" has been revised by the author, and the edition now published is the second. The writer of this notice has not read Brother Meeks' book, but agrees with him that "the Christ idea is not as prominent in the pulpit as it should be," and believes "Jesus Christ, and him crucified," should be the grand, central thought of every sermon; for "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." The book is for sale by the publishing house, and the price is $1.50. Agents are wanted.

Divine Authenticity of the "Book of Mormon" Investigated.

In the investigation of the claims made by the Latter-day Saints for the divine origin of the "Book of Mormon," I shall proceed strictly along the lines of scripture, reason, and science. No testimony will be admitted except from those who should be of universally good repute among the Saints themselves. Chief among these witnesses will be Joseph Smith, David Whitmer, Orson Pratt, and Ben. E. Rich, president of the Chattanooga Southern Mission.

Regarding this line of investigation which I propose to follow, Orson Pratt, on page 69 of his works, says: "If, after a rigid examination, it be found an imposition, it should be extensively published to the world as such. The evidence and arguments upon which the imposture was detected should be clearly and logically stated, that those who have been since, yet unfortunately, deceived may perceive the nature of the deception and be reclaimed, and that those who continue to publish the delusion may be exposed and silenced, not by physical force, neither by persecutions, bare assertions, nor ridicule, but by strong and powerful arguments—by evidences adduced from scripture and reason."

Fully agreeing with these statements, the first point which I shall investigate is the claim for divine authority derived from the Scriptures. Orson Pratt, page 95, says: "The church of Christ cannot exist on the earth without an authorized ministry. This ministry cannot be called and authorized without new revelation. 'No man taketh this honor unto himself [that is, the honor of the ministry], but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.'" Ben. E. Rich, in "Durant of Salt Lake," says: "No man has a right to take this ministry upon himself, but he that is called by revelation and duly qualified to act in his calling by the Holy Ghost; no man has a right to administer in the ordinances of religion, except he be sent of God, as was Aaron." On page 126, he also says: "By marriage as ordained of God, I mean marriage performed in the way he has appointed, by a man whom he has authorized to act in his stead. The authority to marry in the way God has ordained must come by revelation from him, for no man can take these honors to himself."

In these quotations we see the claim made that no man can preach, or administer any religious ordinance, or even perform the marriage ceremony, except he be called by a direct revelation from God, as was Aaron.

Now, let us examine the Scripture testimony upon this point. In Heb. 3: 1, R. V., we read: "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of a heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our confession, even Jesus; who was faithful to him that appointed him." In Heb. 5: 1-4, R. V., we read: "For every high priest, being taken from among men, is appointed for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins; who can bear guiltily with the ignorant and erring, for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity; and by reason thereof is bound, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins. And no man taketh the honor unto himself, but when he is called of God, even as was Aaron. So Christ also glorified not himself to be made a high priest, but he that spake unto him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee: as he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." Again, in Heb. 9: 6-12, R. V., we read: "The priests go in continually into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the services; but into the second the high priest alone, once in the year, not without blood, which he offereth for himself, and for the errors of the people: . . . but Christ having come a high priest of the good things to come, through the greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, . . . through his own blood, entered in once for all into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption."

The statements in these passages very clearly show that to the risen Christ alone can be applied the words of Paul when he says: "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."

We learn from the Mosaic law that the high priest was called of God to make atonement for the people once a year, with the blood of a sin offering carried within the most holy place. So Christ was called of God to make an atonement for the sins of the world by the sacrifice of himself and the offering of his own blood within the holy place not made with hands.

Jesus, as the risen Christ, was not called to preach or to baptize or to administer any ordinance whatever in the church on earth. I shall show presently by whom all this work was to be done; but before I proceed any farther, I wish to present more statements concerning the priesthood, from the authors already quoted.

Orson Pratt, on page 157, says: "As there has been no apostolic succession which has continued on the earth for the want of a new revelation, it may be asked: How was the authority of the priesthood restored to the earth? We answer that it was restored by the ministry of angels. On this subject we make an extract from the history of Joseph Smith, which reads as follows: 'On a certain day we went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and, having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us: 'Upon you, my fellow-servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.' He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and that afterwards he should baptize me. Immediately we went and were baptized; I baptized him first, and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and then he laid his hands upon me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for thus were we commanded. The messenger who visited us on this occasion said that his name was John, the same that is called 'John the Baptist,' and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should be conferred on us, and that I should be called 'the first elder' and he 'the second elder.'"

So much for the testimony of Joseph Smith. Then Pratt continues to say: "We consider the restoration of the Aaronic priesthood to be among some of the most important events of the last dispensation; but as this priesthood has no authority to administer the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, it may be further asked: How was the authority still further restored—namely, the apostleship which holds the authority of the Melchisedec priesthood? We answer that Peter, James, and John appeared as ministering angels, and conferred the apostleship upon Joseph Smith and others." Again, on page 161, he says: "This messenger, John the Baptist, has already been sent; he descended in a cloud of light and glory; he conferred the priesthood by his own hands upon the heads of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery; and thus after many generations have passed away in darkness, the sons of men are once more blessed with the privilege of being baptized by men holding authority."

In reply to these quotations, we notice, in the first place, that the Aaronic priesthood and the Melchisedec priesthood were both conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, and the two were both holding these two priesthoods at the same time. In this fact of two or more men holding the two priesthoods at the same time, we find some fatal discrepancies when compared with the teachings of the Bible. In the first place, by the appointment of Jehovah in the Mosaic law, it was not possible that there should be two high priests at the same time. In Chron. 6: 3-15, we have the genealogical line of the high priests from Aaron down to the captivity, and we see that there was never more than one at a time. In the second place, we find that the Aaronic and the Melchisedec priesthoods could not both be in existence and exercise their functions at the same time. Listen to this testimony of the Scriptures. In Heb. 7: 11-19, R. V., we read: "Now if there was perfection through the Levitical priesthood, . . . what further need was there that another priest should arise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be reckoned after the order of Aaron? For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. For he of whom these things are said belongeth to another tribe, from which no man hath given attendance at the altar. For it is evident that our Lord hath sprung out of Judah; as to which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priests. And what we say is yet more abundantly evident, if after the likeness of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest, who hath been made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life: for it is witnessed of him, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. For there is a disannulling of a foregoing commandment because of its weakness and unprofitableness (for the law made nothing perfect), and a bringing in thereupon of a better hope." Again, in Heb. 8: 4-7, R. V., we read: "Now if he were on earth, he would not be a priest at all, seeing there are those who offer the gifts according to the law; who serve that which is a copy and shadow of the heavenly things. . . . But now hath he obtained a ministry the more excellent, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which hath been enacted upon better promises. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then would no place have been sought for a second."

Now, in these testimonies of the Scriptures it is made undeniably evident that at a certain point of time there was made a change from the Aaronic priesthood to the Melchisedec priesthood, the latter taking the place of the former, as the substance takes the place of the shadow, as the antitype takes the place of the type. By the inexorable law of shadow and substance, when the substance is reached, the shadow ceases forever. Hence, there is no possibility that the Aaronic priesthood should continue after Christ, the substance, has taken its place. If a thousand angels were to come flying in mid-heaven in the sight of all men, claiming to restore the Aaronic priesthood, this law of shadow and substance would give the lie to every one of them. This divine law of shadow and substance is based upon the order of the creation as portrayed in Genesis: "There was evening and there was morning, one day." "There was evening and there was morning, a second day." In the law of Moses, Jehovah commanded to count the day from sunset to sunset. When the evening, with its darkness, brings us to the rising sun, that evening is ended, and its shadows are forever dissolved in the light of the morning. The evening and the morning, the darkness and the light, cannot both go on together. The one ceases; the other begins. Paul said: "The law having a shadow of the good things to come; not the very image of the things." The chief thing in that law, which rose in importance above all others, was to offer sacrifice and make atonement for the sins of the people. It was to make this atoning sacrifice that God called Aaron and his sons to the priesthood; but because these sacrifices of beastly blood could not take away sin, God, in the fullness of time, called his own Son, who could be both priest and sacrifice, to make the real and final atonement once for all, he having the power to lay down his life and to take it again. This being done, there is no call whatever that the Aaronic priesthood should continue any longer.

In the third place, we discover from the scripture testimony that Christ, as a high priest after the order of Melchisedec, cannot have any successor. In Heb. 7: 23-25, R. V., we read: "And they indeed have been made priests many in number, because that by death they are hindered from continuing; but he, because he abideth forever, hath his priesthood unchangeable [or, as it reads in the margin, "hath an inviolable priesthood that doth not pass to another"]. Wherefore also he is able to save to the uttermost them that draw near unto God through him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." Then in Heb. 10: 10, R. V., we read: "By which will we have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." In these testimonies we see that in the human priesthood of the law there was a continual succession from one generation to another, for two reasons: First, by reason of death the first appointed could not continue; second, because the sacrifices offered could not take away sin. So they must be repeated year by year till the one should come who, by the sacrifice of himself, could wholly take away the sin. C. S. TOWNE.

Sin never shows its ugliness to the beginner. If we could see the end of any sin, we would draw back in disgust. No sin can be really beautiful or pleasant, because in its very nature it is ugly and diseased.—Selected.

ADVENTURES AT NIAGARA.

These two stories of daring and danger at Niagara are chronicled by the Youth's Companion. The first deed was performed by Thomas Conroy, the life saver, on St. Valentine's day, 1883. He and two other men, named William Walker and Thomas Hines, being out hunting in the rapids above the falls, had rowed out to a sand bar, about one hundred and fifty yards from shore. On this bar, which was sheeted with ice, they landed, taking their guns with them, and leaving their boat, as they believed, securely fastened at the edge. After a few minutes, on looking round, they saw the boat drifting down the river.

Conroy, more experienced in Niagara navigation than his companions, saw that they must be in a desperate situation if they lost the boat, as they might all perish from hunger and exposure before they could attract attention. Without a moment's hesitation, therefore, he dived in order to clear the ice floating in the rushing surface currents, and swam along under the water until he thought he was near the boat. Then he rose to the surface, broke his way through the small ice that covered the water, reached the boat, got into it by tremendous exertions, and succeeded in getting it back to his anxious companions and saving them and himself from further trouble.

Considering the time of year, the swiftness and coldness of the Niagara water, and the instant decision and physical endurance displayed by Conroy, this deed is regarded as not less remarkable than Dr. Nansen's great swim to his drifting kayak from the arctic ice.

The other story is of Dr. Ramsay, a clerical delegate from his synod in the north of Ireland to the Pan-Presbyterian Conference in Toronto. One pleasant morning in September, 1892, he was crossing the bridge that spans Niagara below the falls, together with Mrs. Grimason, his Toronto hostess, and her two daughters. They were walking on the carriage way, which is four or five inches lower than the footway beside it. The distance to the roaring river below is one hundred and eighty feet.

At the edge of the footway runs the railing of the bridge, a stout iron fence with interstices apparently not large enough to let human beings through—except, perhaps, small children, who would not be allowed on the bridge alone.

The party were merrily chatting when they heard the wheels of a carriage behind them, and almost unconsciously moved out of its way by stepping up to the footway. As Mrs. Grimason did so, her foot caught, she stumbled, and in the next moment she was inexplicably and almost incredibly shot forward, headfirst, between the bars of the railing down toward the river below.

Her daughters shrieked as they saw her disappear, with a scream. It seemed clear that she had fallen to death; but, by a wonderful chance, she struck against one of the girders which stand under the bridge about thirty feet apart, and her body was curiously stopped on a bar connected with the girder.

Mrs. Grimason was brave and quick-witted; she had not lost her presence of mind. On striking this bar she grasped it firmly with both hands, and getting her feet at the same moment in the point of the angle formed by the bar and the girder, she clung there for dear life, but in extreme peril.

She was an aged woman, of little strength, and seemingly beyond quite instant aid. Should she lose her presence of mind but for a moment and relax her hold on the bar, nothing could save her. Her daughters, watching her from above, prayed that she might be able to hold on till help came. Help, happily, was close at hand.

Dr. Ramsay, dazed for a moment only by the astonishing fall of his hostess, went to work without wasting time in words. He saw that Mrs. Grimason should be held somehow in the place where she was clinging; further aid could come later. Telling the daughters to run for help, he himself climbed out over the railing of the bridge and slid down the upright to the girder just in time to save the unfortunate lady from falling to her death.

Athletic and strong, the Doctor was able to hold on to the girder with one arm, while with the other he supported Mrs. Grimason, now almost lifeless from terror and exhaustion. He could not hope, however, long to endure so severe a strain, physical and nervous.

But fortunately the accident had been seen by many. A dozen men arrived with ropes in a few minutes, and these were lowered to Dr. Ramsay, who passed them deftly under the arms of the woman, and she was hauled safely back to the bridge. Then the minister, with a little help, was drawn back again from his perilous position, none the worse for having performed a deed evincing extraordinary physical powers and still more extraordinary courage.

A HINT FROM THE QUEEN.

A story is told of the early days of Queen Victoria's reign which affords a lesson to all who needlessly deprive others of the rest day. Late one Saturday night one of the ministers arrived at Windsor.

"I have brought down for your Majesty's inspection," said he, "some documents of great importance; but as I shall be obliged to trouble you to examine them in detail, I will not encroach on the time of your Majesty to-night, but will request your attention to-morrow morning."

"To-morrow morning!" repeated the Queen. "To-morrow is Sunday, my lord."

"True, your Majesty, but the business of the State will not admit of delay."

"I am aware of that," replied the Queen; "and as your lordship could not have arrived earlier at the palace to-night, I will, if the papers are of such pressing importance, attend to their contents to-morrow morning after divine service."

Next morning the Queen and the court went to church, and so did that noble lord, and the subject was: "The Rest Day; Its Duties and Obligations."

After the service, the Queen inquired: "How did your lordship like the sermon?"

"Very much, indeed, your Majesty," was the answer of the nobleman.

"Well, then," said the Queen, "I will not conceal from you that last night I sent the clergyman the text from which he preached. I hope shall all be improved by the sermon."

Not a word was said during the whole of the day about the papers; but when the Queen wished her minister good night, she said: "To-morrow morning, my lord, at any hour you please—as early as seven, if you like—we will look into those papers."

"I could not think of intruding upon your Majesty at so early an hour," was the reply. "Nine o'clock will be quite soon enough."

And at nine o'clock the next morning he found the Queen ready to receive him.

SOME STORIES OF THE PUMA.

The North American cougar, otherwise known as the catamount, the wild cat, the panther, and the California or mountain lion, does not take kindly to captivity and taming; but the South American representative of the species, the puma, enjoys the title among the Spanish-speaking people of "el amigo del Cristiano," or friend of civilized man, and many cases are on record of its being made as tame as a domestic cat or dog. The people believe that not only will it, in its wild state, never attack man, but that it will defend him against other animals, and especially against jaguars.

Don Felix d'Azara, a Spaniard, who wrote a work on the natural history of Paraguay, and who spent nineteen years in accumulating material for this work, cites many cases known to him of the taming of pumas. A village priest had one which was raised from a cub, and which ran loose everywhere. The priest gave it to Azara, who had it a long time.

"It played with every one," says Azara, "and took great delight in licking the skin of the negroes. On receiving an orange or any other thing, it handled it with its fore paws, playing with it as a cat plays with a mouse. It caught fowls—its one form of mischief—with the stratagem and cunning of a cat, not omitting the movement of the extremity of its tail.

"I never saw it irritated. When rubbed or tickled, it lay down and purred like a cat. My negroes one day loosed it, and it followed them to the river, traversing the city without even meddling with the dogs in the street."

The belief of the natives of South America that the puma will defend a human being against other wild animals is founded on the fact that in any region where two species of one genus inhabit the same country they are usually at enmity; and this being the case with the puma and the jaguar, the puma's well-known indisposition to attack man, joined with its ferocity toward the jaguar, easily creates the impression that it is defending the human being against the jaguar.

A Spanish governor, of Buenos Ayres, once had a Spanish girl tied to a tree in a place infested by jaguars, as a punishment for visiting the Indians. It was supposed that she would be torn to pieces by the jaguars before morning. The next day, however, she was found unharmed, and she averred that a puma had sat by her all night and kept the other beasts away. This was regarded by the people at the time as a miraculous interposition in the girl's behalf. It would not be so regarded now. The puma, having no disposition to eat the girl himself, was simply playing the part of the dog in the manger.

In the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, there is preserved the skeleton of a puma, which was the property of Edmund Kean, the tragedian. This animal used to follow Kean loose in his garden and his house, and "was introduced to company" in his drawing-room.

The translator of Azara's "Natural History" quotes this case, and also that of a tame puma kept in Edinburgh, "which rejoices greatly in the company of those to whom it is accustomed, lies down on its back between their feet, and plays with the skirts of their garments entirely after the manner of a kitten."

This last animal once got loose in the streets of London, but allowed itself to be captured peaceably by a policeman.

Mr. Hudson, in his book, "A Naturalist in La Plata," tells a remarkable story of the puma. A Gaucho, or native, was once forced by the breaking of his horse's leg to lie out on the pampas all night. An hour after it became dark a puma came and sat down by him. By and by it left him for a long time, and the Gaucho, at about midnight, heard the roar of a jaguar. He gave himself up for lost, but presently he heard snarls and growls and the sharp cry of a puma and knew that the two beasts were fighting.

The jaguar returned several times, but the puma renewed the contest every time, until morning, when both beasts disappeared.

This incident, instead of convincing the Gaucho of the bravery of the puma, seems to have led him to regard it as a creature which would allow itself to be killed by a man without resistance. Some time afterwards he tried to kill a puma with a knife, as if it were a sheep. The puma struck him a fierce blow on the head with its paw, which he had occasion to remember all his life, and then made off. One might almost wish that it had given him a severer lesson for his ingratitude to its kind.—Youth's Companion.

THE TEETH OF ELEPHANTS.

Whoever has looked inside an elephant's mouth has seen a strange sight. Elephants have no front teeth, and they never eat flesh or any food that requires tearing apart. Eight teeth are all they have, two above and two below on each side, huge yellow molars as wide as a man's hand, and about two inches thick. Over these hay or fodder is shifted by the queerest, ugliest tongue in the whole animal kingdom—a tongue that is literally hung at both ends, having no power, or movement, except in the middle, where it shifts back and forth from side to side, arching up against the roof of the big mouth like an immense wrinkled pink serpent.

There is nothing stranger than the working of an elephant's tongue, unless it be the working of his breathing apparatus when he sleeps. Elephants, like human beings, have two sets of teeth. The milk teeth, which are smaller than the permanent molars, fall out when the animals are about fourteen years old. These baby teeth, which are, nevertheless, enormous, are occasionally picked up by circus men among the fodder, and preserved as curiosities.—Philadelphia Times.

As a spring lock closes of itself, but cannot be unlocked without a key, so we of ourselves may run into sin, but cannot return without the key of God's grace.—Cawdray.

THANKSGIVING.

Thanksgiving Day is appointed by the President of the United States and the Governor of Tennessee, as well as by the Governors of all the States of the Union. Thanksgiving Day started with the Puritans of New England, soon after the settlement of the country. After much sickness, much suffering for lack of food, and many deaths, after the first harvest, Governor Bradford appointed a day of thanksgiving, although the amount raised was not sufficient to support them until another harvest. Thanksgiving was continued in the New England States. In 1863 President Lincoln proclaimed a day of thanksgiving for victories gained. Since that time the President has made an annual proclamation of a day of thanksgiving, and all the States have adopted the practice. The fourth Thursday in November has been adopted as the day. We have doubted how far Christians should go in observing the day with religious services. Two reasons cause us to doubt. First, there is a tendency among civil rulers to assume direction of religious, or church, matters. This tendency ought to be guarded against. During the Civil War, President Davis appointed a day of fasting and prayer for the success of the Southern arms. In Franklin, Tenn., some of the brethren were friends of the Confederacy, others were intense Union men. The former observed the day and had preaching and special prayers for the success of the Southern arms. The Union brethren refused to join in these services, which engendered much feeling among the brethren. I undertook to reconcile these brethren, and finally did it by all agreeing to pay no more attention to political feast and fast days. When Mr. Lincoln made proclamation for a day of thanksgiving, the Federal authorities held possession of Franklin. There were no religious services held in the house. On next Sunday morning, when we assembled, we found posted on the door a notice that read about this way: "The people meeting in this house, having seen fit to ignore President Lincoln's proclamation to meet and hold thanksgiving services, are forbidden to hold further religious services within the lines of this military post during its occupancy of this place." The notice was signed by the commandant. Some of us went to see him and explained to him the Southern people had never paid much attention to thanksgiving days as appointed by the civil rulers. We told him of the trouble in the church over the observance of Davis' proclamation and the settlement by agreeing to observe no more days appointed by any set of civil rulers. With many profane expletives over the rebellious spirit of the people and the strangeness of religious people who could not meet to give thanks to God, after our protesting that we met weekly to give him praise and thanks on his own appointed day, and the assurance that the failure to observe the day had no political significance, he rescinded the order. The point with me since has been: Is there not danger of yielding to the politics in thus observing these days at the behest or request of the civil rulers? It is difficult to observe these appointments at the command or request of the civil rulers without imbibing the spirit of the political government, and this is fatal to pure Christianity.

The other side of it is, while we are not to be of the civil power or to cultivate the spirit of worldly government, we are to cultivate kindly feelings for the government, pray for the rulers and peace of the government to the extent that Christians may lead quiet and peaceable lives, exercising themselves in all that is godly and honest. We are to submit to them in all things that do not require departure from the word of God. When they request us to meet and give thanks for the blessings bestowed on the land and people and pray for continued favor, ought we not to do it? It is a case in which we recognize it may be possible to comply with the request, but it is beset with so many dangers it is safer to fail to comply.

While this is true of the political days and orders for thanksgiving and praise, it is true that Christians of our time and country are sadly deficient in the spirit of gratitude and love that leads to praise and thanksgiving to God that is his due. We are ready to pray and receive the blessings, but we are so ungrateful in our hearts that we neglect to praise and thank the Giver for the good. This indicates ingratitude. Ingratitude is the fruit of a selfish, sordid, and debased heart. Ingratitude to our fellow-men for favors bestowed is a mark of debasement of heart and feeling.

A grateful, thankful spirit, like a meek and quiet one, is of great price with God. The words of his approved servants, those in whom he delighted, were redolent with praise and thanksgiving to God for his constant support and manifold blessings in life. All those imbued with his spirit delighted in praising and magnifying his great and holy name, in exalting his character and recounting his manifold blessings to his children and to the world. The songs of David were greatly songs of praise and gratitude to God. Our songs should abound in praises and thanksgiving to God more than they do. "Praise is comely for the upright;" "His praise shall continually be in my mouth;" "My tongue shall speak . . . thy praise all the day long;" "I will praise thee forever;" "I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart;" "I will praise thee forever, because thou hast done it;" "I will praise thee with uprightness of heart;" "I will praise thee: for I am fearfully and wonderfully made;" "I will praise thy name forever and ever"—these are samples of David's words of praise to God. David did this, though he was called to pass under the rod of Jehovah. Isaiah said: "I will praise thee, though thou wast angry with me." Jeremiah said: "Praise the Lord of hosts: for the Lord is good."

In Jesus greater love was manifested to men, and greater praise is due him. Jesus said of the ten lepers: "Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine? There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger. And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole." Praise and thanks and gratitude are due God for all his mercies to man. Paul, speaking to the Romans, applies the language of the psalmist to the Christians: "And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name. And again he saith, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people. And again, Praise the Lord, all ye Gentiles; and laud him, all ye people."

We need to speak the praises of God, to give thanks unto his name, not only that we may please God and benefit the people, but we need most of all the influence of it upon our own hearts. Speaking his praise, remembering and giving thanks for his mercies, soften and open our own hearts to a fuller appreciation of his blessings, fill them with fuller sense of gratitude to God, and fit us more and more to dwell with and enjoy him in the fullness of his blessings forever and ever. We ought to continually praise the Lord, for praise is comely to the upright. Every day should be a day of thanksgiving and praise to our God.

SOME CLAIMS OF SOCIETY BRETHREN.

Brother Sewell: The progressive preachers in Missouri justify the societies on this wise: "Christians are all brethren, therefore they have a right to work together. To deny them the right to organize would be to deny them a right that belongs to all mankind. The whole human race is one society, called 'human society.' The church of Christ means all Christians in the aggregate; hence, whatever Christians are doing, the church is doing, for they are the church. Christians cannot work through the church; that would be working through themselves, for they are the church. The society being composed wholly of Christians is a part of the church; hence, what the societies are doing, the church is doing, as they are a part of the church. Surely churches have a right to consult each other about the work, but they cannot all come together in mass meeting; but they can come together by their principal men, like Israel did, and consult and agree to work. Then if the work continues, it would be wise to adopt some business principles on which to cooperate. The Murphy movement in temperance once flourished, but died for want of organization," etc.

It looks like Satan is ever ready to take away the word out of our hearts; for such reasoning as the above perverts many a mind "from the simplicity that is in Christ." Yet I am still striving to be faithful to his word and to the extent of my limited ability let my light shine. If you feel so disposed, please write something about these society arguments which I have submitted.

St. Louis, Mo.

J. W. ATKISSON.

The first proposition, that Christians are all brethren and that they have a right to work together, as expressed in the foregoing, may be admitted and the truth lose nothing; but when it is claimed, next, that they have the right to organize in order to work together, they spoil the whole thing. The word of God says not one word about organizing in order to work together. Hence, when this is added to the first proposition, as an explanation of how they are to work together, it opens the flood gates for every error that the ingenuity of man can invent. Error in religion is always organizing, and that, too, by human wisdom. There is not a denomination on earth that is not organized by the wisdom of men. The church of God, as revealed in the New Testament, is the only establishment on this earth that is not organized by human inventions and devices of some kind. Even those that start out to be churches of God only sometimes organize themselves into denominations. This has indeed been done by many of late years. But it is claimed that the right to organize is one that belongs to all mankind. This is a very shrewd, but very unscriptural, way of putting the argument. In the light of God's truth, there is nothing right as a matter of service to God that he has not ordained; and here is where the fallacy of the argument comes in. God has not required in his word that his people shall organize in order to work together, and for that very reason they have no right to do any such thing.

Jesus said: "Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 13.) The word of God nowhere requires Christians to organize in order to work together, nor for any other purpose. Therefore, such organization is a plant which the Heavenly Father has not planted, and for that very reason it will be rooted up. Whenever men fail to build on the Rock, on the word of God, they build on the sand, and their work will certainly fall, for Jesus has said so. Such will be the doom of every human organization and device connected with either the work or worship of the church of God. The organization of a humanly-devised society for the spread of the gospel is one of the plants the Heavenly Father has not planted, and that is the very thing that is sought to be established by the foregoing argument. Never did any man get up a greater fallacy in argument than that. Brethren can all work together, as the word of God directs, without any sort of organization further than the word of God directs. Christians work together when they are doing the things God requires to be done, and as he requires them to be done, without being together in a body.

God requires all Christians to do just the same sort of work, whether in Europe or America; they are all required to live godly lives and to sound out the word around them. If they all do these things, they are working together, whether they ever saw or heard of each other or not. The same Lord will reward them alike for all such work, no matter if they are the poles apart. But when they undertake to get together in a body, as in the case of conventions, then mischief and trouble begin. They then begin to build on the sand; they squander the Lord's money in traveling expenses, hotel bills, extra suits of clothing to wear to such places, and such like; they cause the brethren to pay much money that is consumed in paying men to look after the work that never reaches the destination for which it was started. Thus in the effort to work through human organizations very much of the Lord's money is consumed on officers of the organization, instead of doing the work it was intended to do. Besides, in working in organizations and through conventions and boards, so that the people that pay the money do not know where it goes, it cuts off and stifles their liberality, and they do not give half as much as they would if they had part in selecting the field where their money should go and knowledge of the work being done. Hence, the amount of work done is greatly hindered by organized effort. While, on the other hand, if Christians as individuals and congregations will do the work that lies nearest to them and where they know the necessities of the case, the work to be done, and those that do the work, and every section looks after its own work, and all do the same kind of work and as the word of the Lord directs them, they will be working together in the same grand work of the Lord, whether one part knows what others are doing or not. In this way, they will do vastly more work and in ten times as many places, and yet all be working for the same Lord, and to the same end, and doing the same sort of work, and be doing it just as the Lord directs, and hence be working together far more effectively than they can possibly do through conventions and boards. Hence, it is a deceptive and false claim that in order for Christians to work together they have to be organized and work through conventions and boards.

Then, again, the claim that the society being composed of Christians is a part of the church is another delusion. The fact that some of the members of the church run these organizations does not by any means make the organizations a part of the church; the fact that some of the members of the church participate in dancing does not prove that dancing is part of the church; and the fact that some church members run saloons, sell whisky, drink whisky, and encourage in every way the whisky traffic does not make the whisky business a part of the church. It only shows that some of the members are fearfully out of the way, and are doing the devil's work, and not the Lord's. No matter how many engage in it, that never can make it part of the church. It is equally true that no matter how many Christians engage in societies and human organizations, it never can make human societies and organizations a part of the church of God. It only shows that Christians have gone astray, are working where God never ordained them to work, putting out plants that are doomed to be rooted up, and are building their houses on the sand, that are doomed to fall and bring ruin upon the builders.

In the next place, churches do not often need to consult each other about the work to be done; but if some of them should need to do so, they can do it without holding any conventions. All such claim or argument as this tends only to delude and deceive the unthinking and lead them into things forbidden. The idea also of bringing leading men together to consult and agree about work to be done and to devise ways and means of doing the work, as conventions do, is the very stepping-stone to apostasy. Indeed, it is the very principle, the life and soul principle, of the man of sin.

Nothing, it seems to me, could be more delusive and more thoroughly set aside the word and authority of the Lord than such arguments, if, indeed, they are worthy of the name. Human organizations, such as the Murphy movement, may go to pieces from lack of organization; but the church of God, never. The church may die because the people that compose it cease to do their duty, but it will never die from lack of organization. It may very easily be killed by human organization, as in many cases it has been; but no one need fear the church will die for lack of organization. God has given the church all the organization he intended it to have, and every effort on the part of men to organize it further than he has done will only bring ruin upon it and their own downfall. Just think of a convention meeting together to devise ways and means by which the sun can be made to shine brighter, or to get up organizations by which its light can be more regularly distributed! Yet that would be just as sensible as the efforts that are being made by men to devise ways and means and get up organizations by which the church can do more work, or better work, than to do just what God has given in the New Testament. If men could only realize that all such wisdom as would change what God has established is foolishness with God, it would certainly be a very grand thing for them; for they can as easily improve upon the moon and stars as they can improve upon the church of God, or its work or worship. If Christians would only be satisfied to work and serve God just as he has ordained, the cause of truth would prosper throughout the world, and so many more souls would be saved. But when Christians get up new organizations through which to do the Lord's work, the fact that Christians get them up will never make them right. The church at Ephesus did many wrong things, but the fact that the Lord's people did them did not make them right. On the other hand, the Lord told them that if they did not repent and do the first works, he would remove the candlestick out of his place; and that meant he would cease to recognize them as a church, as his people. Let no man, therefore, conclude that when Christians do a wrong their being Christians makes it right. E. G. S.

THE CHURCH OR SECRET SOCIETY—WHICH?

Brother Lipscomb: I clip the following, written by A. P. Collins, from the Baptist Standard, and I want you to comment on it if you will and can; if you cannot, get Brother Sewell to comment on it. I want all of the followers of Christ to read it, and I want some of you brethren to comment on it:

"Every Baptist has good reason to rejoice in the fact that as a member of the church of Christ he belongs to the most important organization on the earth, in that (1) it is the only one that Jesus Christ instituted; (2) it is the only organization that has Jesus Christ for its Head; (3) it is the only one against which it is said 'the gates of hell shall not prevail;' (4) it is the only one that will finally and forever triumph over the world through Christ, the Head; and (5) it is the only one having absolutely holy and perfect principles for its government, and hence the only one having divine approval. The church is the divinely ordained channel for benevolent work, and we glorify God in so using it. Not a word would I say against the benevolent secret organizations, only as they try to supplant the church. The world has a perfect right to belong to and engage in the work of these societies, but for church members to give their time and talent to the promotion of secret societies is to say the church is not adequate to the work for which God designed it. The secret order appeals to the worldly-minded and the selfish spirit, and most people join them for the insurance. The payment of the policy is not always an act of charity, for in many instances the holder was in good circumstances, while a majority of the poorest and the very ones who most need the help are unable to keep their premiums and assessments paid up. Let us all say: 'Unto him be glory in the church by Jesus Christ.'"

Luverne, Ala.

M. N. RUSHTON.

The above is all correct and true, and is worthy of consideration, but there is nothing in it that has not, in one form or another, been presented frequently in the Gospel Advocate. It is a point that cannot be too earnestly urged upon all disciples of Christ. The church of God is worthy of the undivided fealty and loyalty of the children of God.

Consolation and Resignation.

We have met persons who, passing through the shadow of a great sorrow, ever after refused to come into the sunlight again. They seemed to think it a species of disrespect to the dead ever to let any more brightness flood their own lives; they had gone to the tomb, and henceforth its somber associations should be their daily meditation; their only pilgrimage for the balance of their lives should be to the grave, that they might weep there.

Such suffering needs the tenderest Christian consolation and helpfulness. But after the first paroxysms of grief have subsided they need to be roused. It serves no useful purpose to sit down by their side and weep with those who weep. The tear of sympathy that mingles with the tear of grief may be a ministry of the truest comfort and consolation. But if there is a time to weep, there is also a time to cease weeping. We need not forget the precious dead, but we cannot justify a grief that refuses to be comforted.

The true cure for suffering is action. The man who sheds tears at the grave of his only child and will not be consoled may find true comfort in caring for another's child. When God takes away our own, he lays upon us new duties which, in our changed situation, we may not shirk. To weep as those who have no hope is not Christian. To accept the will of God with Christian resignation, and to seek new duties to engage the chastened heart, is the only true way to real comfort and peace of heart and mind.

If you cannot get away from your grief, try Christian work. Fix your heart upon an object that is worthy of your endeavor. If you cannot hope to rejoice in your own offspring, determine to speak through other lips, live in other lives, and make yourself a blessing to others' homes, and you will be surprised how soon God will take away all that now makes it hard to say: "Thy will be done."—Exchange.

At Home with a Sick Boy.

Some of the Texas readers of the Gospel Advocate may desire to know why I am not filling my engagements and reporting meetings, etc.; so I take this method of saying to all concerned that I am at home, nursing my baby boy, nine years of age, who is sick, nigh unto death, and has been now for more than eighty days. My last meeting was at Waco, Tex., which was reported by that grand and good man, A. D. Rogers. Brother Rogers has promised me that he will devote the latter half of each month to protracted meeting work, and I wish to say that any congregation wanting a meeting cannot do any better than get A. D. Rogers to do the preaching. During my long stay at home, I have unavoidably disappointed the brethren at Sherman, Van Alstyne, Highland, and Murphy, Tex., and also Whitefield, I. T., all of which I very much regret, yet duty has demanded my presence at home.

As soon as I can, I will enter the field again and wield the glittering sword of the Spirit of truth before the souls of men who are perishing for the want of the bread of life, and I trust that all with whom I have engagements will bear with me patiently while I administer to the wants of my dear little son. My first engagement for the new year is at McGregor, Tex. That is the place where the digressives took away from the loyal brethren their house of worship some time ago; but through the earnest efforts of that godly man, J. D. Tant, the brethren now have a new house, and I am to hold their first meeting. The brethren at McGregor are not able to support the meeting financially, but they are worthy of help in this time of need, and I am going to help them, trusting that some brethren of sympathy will also help me in bearing this burden.

I also have a call to hold a mission meeting at Prairie Grove, Ark., and would go to all such places if I could. Truly, the field is white for harvest, but the laborers are few. I will, if the Lord wills, return to Waco, Tex., next April for another effort in a meeting. Pray for me, brethren, that I may be able to hold forth the word of truth while it is called To-day, for the night is coming, when no man can work; yet we must all stand before the judgment bar of God and be judged in the last day.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I have read "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," by Brother Srygley, and pronounce it not only good, but grand, and I would be glad to find it in every home in Texas; it will do anybody good to read it. I pray God's blessings upon all the faithful.

Trip to Tennessee.

I have thought for some time of saying something about my trip to my old field of labor, in Tennessee and Kentucky. I left home about the last of August for Andrews, Tenn. I was with the brethren at that place for ten days. Andrews is the present abode of Brother James E. Scobey. From there I went, by way of Nashville, Tenn., to Flippin, Ky. At Flippin I began the work in the midst of much opposition and great prejudice. This work was begun there twenty-six years ago, and resulted in establishing a church of Christ and building a house of worship. There is a great deal of prejudice against the truth there yet. From Flippin I went to Gamaliel, Ky., my old home for a time. Many of the older brethren have crossed over the river of death to the better land, while some remain on the shore of time. Brother A. Comer, one of the elders, still remains. He is eighty-three years old, and lives in the house where he was born; he is feeble, yet zealous for the cause of Christ.

At these places I met a warm and cordial welcome. I held my first meeting at Gamaliel in July, twenty-eight years ago. There were many additions at that time. While there on this trip, I baptized people in almost the same spot I did on my first visit. How these scenes and associations revive the memories of the past! I often wonder: Will earth's trials, toils, sacrifices, and joys be remembered in heaven? Will faces be remembered there? In going from place to place on this trip and meeting many old friends and brethren, I was made to ask: Will there be as warm a greeting in heaven by those who are waiting for us? A thousand things brought back the past and made it live again in bright and cheering colors.

It was there in the midst of those scenes and among those people I lived and labored in the long ago. What a kindly welcome and brotherly greeting I received! How my heart welled up with gratitude to God, the Giver of all good and perfect blessings! Those two churches gave me as much support as I expected, for which I am always thankful. They need more zeal, more earnest work by the members. I am sorry that my limited time did not permit me to visit other churches; but I will say that some time in the future I will make another trip and visit those parts of that field in Tennessee and Kentucky that so desire it. Let all who wish such a visit write me, so I can arrange time, and not be cramped. I visited Sister Wright and Sister Smith, of Dry Fork, Ky. These sisters years ago showed me and my family many kindnesses. They both wait by the side of the river. Their children have grown to manhood and womanhood, and some of them have families growing up around them. J. D. Smith, son of I. H. Smith, is a faithful minister of the word in these parts. I met Brother F. B. Srygley at Glasgow on his way to Dry Fork to hold a meeting. He looked fresh and vigorous and able to do much good preaching. I met Brother Baker, the preacher at Glasgow; he seems to be an earnest man. I also had the pleasure of seeing Brother Lipscomb, Brother Sewell, and Brother McQuiddy, of the Gospel Advocate force; Brother H. F. Williams; and many others. Tennessee has a noble band of workers.

I had additions at all the places where I held meetings and tried to arouse more interest and zeal. There is not as much zeal through the section where I labored as there was a quarter of a century ago.

I reached home on October 26, 1900, and found all well and waiting for me. I rested one night, then left home for Grayson County, Tex.; I am now at Farmington trying to encourage a more faithful study of the word of God. I have, so far, done well on a start. The brethren seem to be anxious to devote more time to a thorough investigation of the truth than they have ever done before. We are taking the Bible as our only text-book, with such help as a good Bible geography and maps will give. I trust good results will be reached soon. If there is any other church within my reach that desires to try a school of that kind, I should be glad to help them. Address me at Denton, Tex., Box 261. A. ALSUP.

Indian Territory.

A recent mail brought five dollars from a brother of Corder, Mo., to help spread the gospel, and more letters asking if Brother Young's statement of my "unsoundness in the faith is true." I have made no change, brethren. Brother Young is mistaken again; forgive him and let us continue in the unobscured light of the Holy Spirit's teaching to the glory of God and the good of mankind, turning neither to the right nor to the left. When reviled, we should bless; when persecuted, we should suffer it. (1 Cor. 4: 12.) True, pain is not pleasant, but it may do us good. Were it not for pain, we would not enjoy pleasure. It is a means of discipline. If there were no pain, we should have no idea of sin. It exhibits with great force the turpitude of transgression; it is a schoolmaster to guide us from "the world's vanity"; it also teaches us our dependence on God, and exercises us to prayer; it increases our sympathy for others in their afflictions and helps us to cultivate patience, for it is only under suffering that we can be patient. We may learn from pain the folly of sin and the wisdom of virtue. So it helps us to become wiser and better.

Jesus said: "It must needs be that offenses come." So we must get the good out of them, but the woe is pronounced upon the offender. (See Matt. 18: 7; Luke 17: 1.) Paul says: "Mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." (Rom. 16: 17.) No Christian has any right to "learn" to teach any other doctrine than that which the Holy Spirit teaches. The disciples of Jesus Christ are to observe the commands of the Holy Spirit's teaching (Matt. 18: 20), continuing steadfastly in the apostles' teaching. (Acts 2: 42.) The command is: "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness." (Gal. 6: 1.) Those who observe the teaching of the Spirit guided do as the apostles taught. "A man that is a heretic after the first and second admonition reject." (Tit. 3: 10.) It is not right to publish a brother as unsound in the faith on what some other fellow has said. The admonishing business should not be ignored. The Spirit of Christ is the Spirit of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, and forgiveness. Is this not true? And more; He is the Spirit of truth. The Scriptures say: "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." (Rom. 8: 9.) We read of the "spirit of error" (1 John 4: 6), "foul spirit" (Mark 9: 25), "spirit of jealousy" (Num. 5: 14, 20), and "perverse spirit" (Isa. 10: 14); but Christians should be led by "the Spirit of God." (Rom. 8: 9, 14.) The Spirit of God never leads a man to state an untruth, for the Spirit of God is the Spirit of truth. (John 14: 17.)

All who are willing to contribute to the sowing of the good seed of the kingdom among the poor and the destitute as each one purposes in his own heart, disconnected with "churchanity" or men-made institutions, come over and help us. R. W. OFFICER.

Distribution of Tracts.

I am much encouraged to find that my work is meeting the approval of the brethren. Brother John T. Hinds, of Fayetteville, Ark., writes: "I think you have struck the keynote." I am taking up contributions and investing the money in gospel tracts, which I shall distribute in my travels. As I buy these tracts in considerable lots, I get them cheap. Any one desiring fellowship in this work may remit stamps. One cent from each Christian in this country would enable me to do a great work on this line. I give what time I can spare from home to this work, without any remuneration. Brethren having small tracts for sale should write me. It is a waste of postage to send me anything that favors a theory or practice which I cannot read in the New Testament.

As over $250,000,000 worth of linseed oil is consumed in this country, the discovery is of great commercial importance.

Governor General Wood thinks that Cuba offers excellent opportunities to enterprising young Americans who have some capital and a knowledge of farming. Besides the raising of coconuts, coffee, and tobacco, market gardening offers good chances. The soil is very productive, and the climate is no more uncomfortable than that of the Southern States in summer.

The Russian Minister of Agriculture, Yermaloff, has been experimenting with American cotton, apple, corn, apricot, peach, and other seeds and plants. He says that his experiments have resulted far better than had been anticipated. The peaches and apples are flourishing in the Caucasus; the corn, in the Caucasus and Central Asia; and the cotton, in Turkestan.

An immense new sugar refinery, costing, with appurtenances and reservoirs, $1,000,000, was started last week at Sugar City, Col., and the occasion was celebrated by a harvest festival. Sugar City is only seven months old with over 1,800 people. The surrounding beet lands are irrigated by water stored at Twin Lakes, 200 miles distant. Twelve thousand acres are being leased for the beet crop.

Advices have been received from Manila that the Island of Guam was visited by a terrific typhoon on November 13, which wrecked thousands of houses, among them being the headquarters of Governor Schroeder. The towns of Indrajin and Terra Foro were swept away, and it is estimated that hundreds of the native population in various parts of the island met their death. The coconut crops were rendered absolutely worthless, and the vegetation of the island killed by salt water. The storm came up in the forenoon and swept across the island with amazing rapidity.

China contains some of the richest coal deposits in the world. Last fall Professor Drake, of Tien-tsin, visited the coal fields in the province of Shan-si, which were examined by Baron von Richthofen in 1870, and found that they are of immense extent. The coal area is said to be greater than that of Pennsylvania, and the anthracite coal alone contained in these fields has been estimated at 630,000,000 tons. The Shan-si coal beds are so thick and lie so uniformly in a horizontal position that the practicability has been suggested of running long lines of railroad tunnels through the beds so that the gas

How to Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water, and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen, it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder, and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine, or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine, you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing, mention that you read this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate.

Thirteen people were killed and fully fifty badly injured by the collapse of the roof of the Pacific Glass Works, in San Francisco, Cal., while it was crowded with men and boys watching a football game on the field adjoining. About seventy-five people fell through the roof upon the red-hot furnaces and glass rats below. All were horribly burned, and it is feared that, in addition to the deaths already reported, there will be several more. Eighty-two persons, more or less injured, have been taken to the various hospitals or removed to their homes. Most of those killed or injured were young boys.

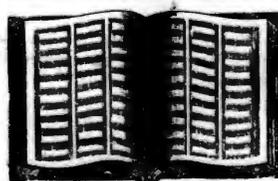

Kansas this year again takes the lead for America as a wheat-producing State, with a yield estimated at 78,000,000 bushels. The Nation says: "This year's crop is a record breaker, and the railroads are having great difficulty in moving it. Thousands of bushels of wheat are now piled up in the open waiting for some means of transportation. It is estimated that 130,125 standard cars would be required to hold this year's crop of wheat in Kansas, and that these cars would make more than 4,000 trains of 25 cars each, and would extend in a solid block nearly from Kansas City to Buffalo, a distance of about 1,000 miles. . . . The annual moving of these great crops is perhaps the most remarkable achievement of American railroading. The task becomes each year more difficult and apparently impossible, yet it is each year performed."

Capt. C. S. Riche, of the United States Army, has left Galveston for New York with the complete plans and estimates of work which, if favorably acted upon by Congress, will mean the expenditure of nearly four million dollars at Galveston by the Federal Government. Since the meeting of the Board of Government Engineers at Galveston, shortly after the storm of September 8, 1900, to ascertain just how much money would be necessary to restore all government works pertaining to the engineering equipment and including jetty work at the mouth of the Brazos River, the force of engineers has been working night and day preparing maps and drawings which, with the estimates of the cost of the work and numerous photographs showing the fortifications, etc., as they appeared after the storm, will be submitted at the next meeting of the Board of Engineers. The public estimates of the cost of these repairs are a round million dollars for the forts and two million five hundred thousand dollars for the jetties. The plans and estimates have been elaborated with great care and lack little of completion. The work of the Board of Engineers will officially concur in the estimates and sign and forward the report to the Chief of Engineers at Washington, where it will rest until brought before Congress officially at the coming session.

Church News.

KENTUCKY.

Schochoh, November 22.—On Monday night, October 8, 1900, I began a meeting with the church of Christ at Schochoh, and continued till Sunday night, October 21, 1900. A good interest was awakened during the meeting and there were fourteen additions to the church—twelve by baptism, one reclaimed, and one from the Baptists who had been baptized in harmony with the Scriptures. Brother D. H. Jackson, a young man from Canada, who is a student in the Nashville Bible School, led the singing, and he did it well. There are some good voices and good singers at Schochoh, and the singing was one of the most enjoyable parts of the meeting. Besides leading the singing, Brother Jackson materially assisted me otherwise in the meeting, and I was truly glad to have him with me. Our very agreeable and pleasant home was with Brother W. F. Andrews, who, with his excellent wife and little son, did everything within his power to make us feel at home. I shall long remember our pleasant sojourn beneath their hospitable roof. There is a good membership at Schochoh, and they have a fine opportunity for doing much in the Master's vineyard. Brother J. A. Harding preaches there once a month—that is, he makes one visit a month and preaches two or three times each visit—and that is a guarantee that they hear the solid preaching of the word of God. Quite a number of persons came from other congregations within reach, and so, altogether, we had an enjoyable meeting. I am now in a meeting at Woodsfield, O.

M. C. KURFEES.

Weir, November 22.—Brother J. E. Barbee has just closed a one-week's meeting at Cherry Grove, this (Muhlenberg) county, resulting in four additions and the body much strengthened. Brother Barbee has done much good work at this point in the past, and has the confidence and respect of all. The writer has just returned from a short visit to Christian County. I found Brother T. D. Moore in a meeting at Dogwood, and I attended two services. I have since heard that the meeting closed with no visible results, but the congregation was much encouraged. Brother Henry Moore is the regular preacher. I preached two sermons in Hill's Chapel, Hopkinsville, to small, but appreciative, audiences. While in the city I was kindly entertained by Brother Levi McPherson, and Brother John S. Bryan, one of the elders, showed me about the city. They have no regular preacher at Hill's Chapel, but a good deal of preaching is done there by visiting brethren. The Sunday before I was there Brother Martin, of Nashville, preached for them. This was my first visit to Hopkinsville, and I was delighted with it. From there I went to Kelly, where I preached four sermons. The congregation at first was small, but it increased rapidly, and the brethren received me with much courtesy. They have regular preaching at this place, but I have forgotten the name of the preacher. I found some little friction here between some of the members, but I think I was instrumental, under my Master, in laying the foundation for future harmony. The brethren here did not forget that a preacher can often use "the mammon of unrighteousness" to considerable advantage in his labors for good, so they kindly placed some of it at my disposal. I was very favorably impressed with the brethren at Kelly.

W. H. HOSKINSON.

TENNESSEE.

Clifton, November 23.—Brother A. P. Johnson, of Huntingdon, Tenn., came, as was expected when he closed his meeting in July, and began preaching for us again on Wednesday night, October 24, and closed on Monday night, October 29. Five young ladies made the good confession, and were baptized into the one body. Brother Johnson is a sound, able, and fearless gospel preacher. His manner of preaching is such that nearly everybody who hears him likes him. We are making an effort to procure his services monthly during the first six months of 1901.

J. W. BEASLEY.

Sparta, November 12.—Brother Elam has just closed one of the best meetings with the church of Christ at this place we have ever had. With the old Jerusalem blade he cleansed the stones of the building of moss and mildew and made them shine as living stones in the temple of the Lord. Making war upon all innovations in the worship of God and upon Satan and his kingdom, he cried aloud and spared not. We feel renewed in spirit, being built up in our most holy faith, with new zeal, brotherly love, and brighter hopes; and although we had but five additions, it was a glorious time of refreshing to the church. We had a large hearing all the time. Brother Elam is a workman that needs not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth, and shuns not to declare the whole counsel of God. I pray he may be spared long for his good works' sake. He is greatly beloved by the church at Sparta, having held many good meetings for us.

O. F. YOUNG.

Nashville, November 26.—The meeting which commenced in Winchester on Tuesday night after the fourth Lord's day night in October closed on the third Lord's day night in November, with five baptized into the one body. The attendance was good, with a growing interest until the close. On the fourth Lord's day I preached in Brother George Harlin's house, near Hendersonville, in Sumner County. Brother Harlin and wife, with their six children, keep up a regular Lord's day service, and invite the people of that part of the country to meet and read the word of God with them. A good sister writes me and sends a contribution, and says: "I am very glad to see and hear of your labors among your people. I think that it is a good work, and that you will not lose your reward for your faithfulness in doing it. I wish I could contribute more liberally, but just now I find it impossible to do so." I think this a splendid example for others who wish to engage in a good work. I am very thankful to that good sister and all others who are aiding in this work. May the Lord help us to be faithful, and unto him be all the praise.

Dallas, November 24.—Brother J. S. Dunn and I have just closed a good meeting near Lancaster, Texas, with eight added to the saved. Brother Dunn held one meeting there last November and one in August, during

A REMARKABLE INVENTION

BY AN OHIOAN.

A prominent business man of Cincinnati has invented a new Vapor Bath Cabinet that has proven a blessing to every man, woman, and child who has used it; and as many of our readers may not know of its real comfort and blessings, we illustrate it in this issue.

This Cabinet is an air-tight rubber-walled room, in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and, with only the head outside, enjoys all the cleaned 10 years, was promptly cured of nervous prostration, stomach and female troubles, after medicines and doctors failed. She recommends it to every woman as a God-sent blessing. O. C. Smith, of Mount Healthy, O., was cured of bad case of catarrh and asthma, and says, "It was worth $1,000 to me. Have sold several hundred Cabinets; every one delighted." O. P. Freeman, an aged railroad man, afflicted 17 years, unable at times to walk, was cured of kidney troubles, piles, and rheumatism. Thousands of others write praising this Cabinet, so there is absolutely no doubt of its being a device that every reader of our paper should have in their homes.

This invention is known as the new 1903 style, Quaker Folding Vapor Bath Cabinet, and after investigation we can say that it is well, durably, and handsomely made of best material throughout; has all the latest improvements, will last a lifetime, and is so simple to operate that even a child could do it safely. It folds flat in one inch space when not in use; can be easily carried, weighs but 10 pounds.

IT IS IMPORTANT TO KNOW that the makers guarantee results and act positively (as do thousands of users) that this Cabinet will clear the skin, purify and enrich the blood, cure nervousness, weakness, the "tired feeling," and the worst forms of rheumatism. (They offer $50.00 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures Women's Troubles, Neuralgia, Malaria, Sleeplessness, Gout, Sciatica, Headaches, Piles, Dropsy; Liver, Kidney, and Nervous Troubles; and Blood Diseases.

It cures the worst Cold in one night and breaks up all symptoms of La Grippe, Fevers, Pneumonia, Bronchitis, Tonsillitis, and is really a household necessity, a blessing to every family. To please the ladies, a Head and Face Steaming Attachment is furnished if desired, which clears the skin, beautifies the complexion; removes pimples, blackheads, eruptions; and is a sure cure for skin diseases, Catarrh, and Asthma.

ALL OUR READERS SHOULD have one of these remarkable Cabinets in their homes.

Don't fail to write to-day to the World Mfg. Co., 2525 World Building, Cincinnati, O., who are the only makers, for full information, valuable booklet and testimonials sent free; or, better still, order a Cabinet. The price is wonderfully low, only $5.00 for Cabinet complete, with stove for heating, formulas, and plain directions. Head Steamer, $1.00 extra. You won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money, after 30 days' use if not just as represented. We know them to be perfectly reliable, capital $100,000.00—and to ship properly upon your remittance.

Don't fail to send for booklet anyway

$100 MONTHLY AND EXPENSES.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offer excellent inducements to both men and women upon request.

Millions of homes have no bathing facilities, so this is an excellent chance for our readers. To our knowledge many are making $100 to $200 per month and expenses. Write them to-day.

OPEN—READY FOR USE.

ing, curative, beautifying, and invigorating effects of the famous Turkish Bath, Hot Vapor, or Medicated Bath at home, for 3 cents each, with no possibility of taking cold or in any way weakening the system.

These baths have truly marvelous powers, far superior to soap and water; celebrated for producing glowing faces, fair skin, bright eyes, elastic figures, and perfect health to all men and women who make them a weekly habit, and this invention brings them within the reach of the poorest person in the country.

Clouds of hot vapor or medicated vapor surround the entire body, opening the millions of sweat pores, causing profuse perspiration, drawing out of the system all the impure salts, acids, and poisonous matter of the blood, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs, and skin, causing colds, fevers, disease, debility, and sluggishness.

Astonishing is the improvement in health, feeling, and complexion by the use of this Cabinet, and it seems to us that the long-sought-for method of securing a clean skin, a good complexion, of retaining good health, curing and preventing disease without drugs, has certainly been found. The makers inform the writer that more than 600,000 of these Cabinets have been sold, and showed letters from thousands of users who speak of this Cabinet as giving perfect satisfaction.

A. B. Stockham, M.D., of Chicago, editor of "Tokology," recommends it highly, as also do Congressmen John J. Lentz, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew; Rev. C. M. Keith, editor "Holiness Advocate;" Mrs. Senator Douglas; Rev. James Thoms, Ph.D., pastor First Baptist Church, Centerville, Mich.; Rev. J. C. Richardson, Roxbury, Mass.; Rev. H. C. Roernae, Everett, Kansas; John T. Brown, editor of "Christian Guide;" and thousands of others.

Ira L. Glason, prominent citizen of Hutchinson, cured himself of rheumatism and his friends of colds, pneumonia, fevers, grippe, blood, skin, and kidney diseases; and made $2,500 selling this Cabinet in a little more than 12 months. Mrs. Anna Woodrum, of Thurman, Ia., afflicted which time a church has been established by his efforts. I began the meeting and preached until Brother Dunn came, and then I led the singing and he did the preaching. The brethren were well pleased with the meeting, and think Brother Dunn and I make a "full team." We will go to Alma for a meeting to-morrow, and from there we will go to Hutchens. Winter does not stop us. Brother Dunn is no "pastor" in Dallas; he spends much of his time out in destitute places.

Help Brother Lawson by Buying His Books.

Sister Lawson has been sick since last August, and, with the exception of two weeks, I have been constantly at her bedside. She is now a little improved, but still confined to her bed.

All this has left me in bad shape financially; but I have books enough on hand to meet my expenses, if I could only dispose of them. I make the following liberal offer, and sincerely hope that those who read this will assist by ordering at once the books I mention: For fifty cents I will send to any address one copy of "Thompson-Lawson Debate," a book of over two hundred pages on the church question; one copy of "Heartfelt Religion," a tract of forty pages on the modern system of getting religion; one copy of "Which Church Should I Join?" a small, four-page tract; also two leaflets especially suited to those seeking the truth. If you want these books, please order at once, for I need the relief the sale of them will give. I recently sent out statements of my needs and an unprecedented offer of books and paper to five hundred brethren and sisters in Texas and have received reply to only eighteen. Does this mean that Texas brethren do not buy or read books?

Brethren, please help in this matter, for you will help both yourselves and me. Do not send stamps, but send money order, if possible.

Denton, Tex. J. H. LAWSON.

We have for a limited time reduced the price of "Sweeney's Sermons;" "Sewell's Sermons;" "Gospel Sermons," by Brents; "Civil Government" and "Commentary on Acts," by D. Lipscomb; "Live Religious Issues of the Day," by Carroll Kendrick; and "The Jerusalem Tragedy," by Stout. See advertisement on another page of this issue. These are all splendid books, and, while the price is reduced, you should place them in your library. Let us have your order for the whole list or any part of it.

DR. H. E. GREEN'S SONS, Box N, Atlanta, Ga.

Not Dead Yet.

In the Baptist and Reflector of June 21, 1900, the editor, in commenting upon the result of the Tant-Oakley debate, which had just occurred, informed his readers of the glorious victory that had been won by John T. Oakley over those whom Mr. Folk unjustly calls "Campbellites."

Among other things, Editor Folk says: "Brother Oakley was champion not only of the Baptists, but of Methodists, Presbyterians, and all who believe in the simple, old-fashioned gospel of salvation by grace through faith. This he preached with remarkable plainness and earnestness, and he had the sympathy of every one in the community, with the exception of the Campbellites. Of one thing we feel sure: Campbellism is dead in that community for years to come."

In reply to the above, I desire to simply show that the editor of the Baptist and Reflector is either a false prophet or else John T. Oakley made a "complete failure" in demolishing what the editor calls "Campbellism." Since the Tant-Oakley debate in West Nashville, the people whom Mr. Folk unjustly calls "Campbellites" have had larger audiences at their regular services than at any time prior to the debate. Not only this; they have successfully established a mission on what is known as Davis' Hill, where services are held every Lord's day evening, with a good attendance. Nor is this all. Brother J. E. B. Ridley has just closed a series of meetings with the West Nashville congregation which resulted in three additions to the church by primary obedience and three reclaimed. Three of these came from the Methodists, notwithstanding Brother Oakley "was the champion of the Methodists in West Nashville, as well as Baptists and others."

No, Editor Folk, the thing that you call "Campbellism" is not dead in West Nashville yet. You must have Brother Oakley come back and do the job over. Elder Tant will be back with us again next spring to hold more meetings in Nashville. Will you bring Brother Oakley out and kill "Campbellism" again?

Our success in spreading the gospel is aided greatly by just such a killing as was given us in the Tant-Oakley debate. By all means come and kill us again. Will you do it?

JO. M'PHERSON.

Just a Word to You.

I mean just a word to you preaching brethren. Do you really know how many people there are in the world without the gospel? Did you ever try to find out? Do you believe people outside of the United States can really be converted and saved? How many sermons have you preached this year on the duty of the churches to send the gospel to the heathen? How often have you asked the churches where you have been preaching to make collections to this end? Have you ever encouraged those fitted for such work to go as missionaries to foreign countries? Did you ever feel it was possibly your duty to go? Why have you never written an article for any of the papers in your life in favor of foreign missionary work? When the church has paid you for your monthly visits and has paid some other preacher to hold a protracted meeting, do you really think it has come up to its full measure of duty, and ought not to be "burdened" any more in regard to giving? Is it not next door to downright selfishness that is withholding the truth in unrighteousness that keeps you from leading the church out into foreign mission work, lest it be not able to keep up its monthly preaching at home? Do you believe the heathen are so good they will be saved without the gospel? Do you believe they are so bad they cannot be saved, even if they had the gospel? Do you believe we ought to convert all the "heathen" at home before we attempt to convert the heathen abroad? Why this long and continued silence from you all, so deep that it is really painful, anyway? Do you believe you are right and I am wrong, and that I ought to stay in the United States, and not go to a foreign country?

Please speak out, brethren, and let us reason together about this matter, for I believe I am certainly right and that you are wrong. I want to be frank with you, for I love you. I have met many of you and know you to be good men. But let me tell you: In my judgment, there is not one in one hundred of you brethren who are opposed to societies that is halfway doing his duty in regard to missionary work in foreign lands. You think you are, of course; I do not. And it is just because you do think so that I want to call you out. Let us compare views in a brotherly spirit on this subject. If I am wrong, I should like to get right; if you are wrong, then you want to get right. That there are millions upon millions of our fellow-beings in the world no one can deny. What is our duty toward them? I have probably touched on your difficulty in some of these questions. Let us talk together some about your trouble. It certainly will do no harm; it might do good.

In The Summer

Of life a woman may find herself fading and failing. She doesn't understand it. She goes to doctors, who treat her for this or for that, but she gets no better. She grows frail and pale. She can just "drag about the house," but has no pleasure in life. Many such women have taken advantage of Dr. Pierce's offer of free consultation by letter, and have been restored by Dr. Pierce's treatment to perfect health. There is no more wonderful medicine for women than Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Its action upon the womanly organs is at once apparent in the decrease of pain and the increase of strength. It cures female weakness and such diseases as take away the strength and beauty of women.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Before I commenced to use your medicine I was in a bad condition (for eight years) and four doctors treated me," writes Mrs. Bettie Askew, of Garysburg, Northampton Co., N. C. "They, of course, gave me at the time some relief, but it did not last long. I was some days in my bed and some days I dragged about the house. I have used five bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and five of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and four vials of the 'Pellets.' Now I feel like a new woman, and I want the world to know it."

The action of the "Favorite Prescription" is assisted by the use of "Pleasant Pellets" when the irregular.

A Rich Man's Chances.

When we think of the humble life of our dear Savior and the low walks from which he chose his personal followers while yet upon earth, we cannot but wonder if he would sanction many of the customs of this "progressive age;" when we remember that, with all the resources of earth and heaven at his command, he chose poverty and suffering, thus "leaving us an example that ye should follow his steps," we cannot but wonder if the luxury and ease so earnestly coveted and so persistently held to by so many of his professed followers are in keeping with his divine will. Again, when we reflect that he after whose steps we should follow devoted his time and energies to going about doing good, is it unreasonable if we suspect the sincerity of many of his professed followers who give their entire time and energies to the gaining of wealth and the enjoyment of luxury, while many of the household of faith are actually suffering for want of the very commonest necessities of life?

These thoughts suggest another question: When we carefully examine the true spirit of Christianity, with its utter unselfishness, its high elevation above worldliness, and its total disregard for everything, except doing the will of the Father and striving to gain a home with him in heaven, are we to be blamed if we have fears that this true spirit does not dwell in those who possess wealth and hold on to it in spite of the many demands made by that spirit? I presume no one doubts that the door of Christianity is open alike to the rich and the poor; but the question is: Can a man with the Spirit of Christ dwelling in him remain rich? One of our Lord's great commands was that the gospel should be preached to every creature. Does the true spirit of Christianity allow many of God's people to fairly wallow in luxury, while only a few, in their poverty, are striving to bring the heathen to a knowledge of God? "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Can a man be a Christian and not do this? Again: "But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" This need is to be found all around us, and is sufficient to draw upon the wealth of all God's people who have this world's good. What are the chances for the man who does not minister to it?

This article is not written for the purpose of springing a controversy, but in the hope that some of our abler and more fluent writers will take the subject in hand and deal with it as it justly deserves. In these last days, we are growing very particular in trying to find the exact instant at which sins are remitted, formulating a set order of worship, etc. Now will not some one kindly tell us just what our Savior meant when he said: "A rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven?"

Attorneys on behalf of certain members of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations filed a joint suit in the United States Court involving twenty million dollars. The suit is against a large number of claimants who were admitted to citizenship in the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations by the Federal Court in the Indian Territory. Plaintiffs allege that these claims to citizenship are fraudulent and without lawful effect. Plaintiffs ask judgment annulling and setting aside all decrees of citizenship heretofore rendered and pray for an injunction to restrain defendants from exercising rights of Indian citizenship and using lands of the tribes.

Governments.

Brother Lipscomb: I am not much with pen, but I will offer you some thoughts on governments. Writing to you, I will not give chapter and verse, but simply my conclusion, and, if there is anything in it, leave it for you to develop. The laws (rules of action) that God gave to his people by Moses were, are, and ever will be (in the mind of God) for the social and national regulation of all mankind. Think of the peaceful condition of the family of Abraham before they forsook God for a king. That people are now all broken up nationally, and their condition is a reproof to the kingdoms of this world, all of them. All the good in all the laws of all kingdoms came from the principles of God's law to rule Israel. Paul said: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers." Then he added: "The powers that be are ordained of God." What powers did God ordain? Not the Roman powers, yet all in Rome that was good had been ordained of God; but Rome had added thereto, therefore they were defective. Heaven's approval never rested fully on any government, save the Jew before their king was chosen. The law of carnal commandments was nailed to the cross, but God never intended to leave the saints without protection. The law was made for bad men. What law? God's. Man cannot improve on it.

There is one objection to Judaism, I note. It was selfish, confined to the Jews. Jesus turned it loose in the world Christianized; but when Rome got in the lead, she spoiled the beauty, and there were no more converts among the Jews, therefore, after that. The shadows lost their meaning in Christ, and by the resurrection Christ is the end of the law that condemned for murder; for there is no law to execute for the murder of one who lives, though he was dead; but he is only the end of the law that condemns to all who comply with conditions made known by the Holy Spirit. Now, then, the law of God that he made for bad men ends not for those who believe not; so the life, etc., is protected of the just in Christ. Judaism nationally from God by Moses, Christianity by Christ, are, to my mind, the pillars of "strength and beauty" in the eternal temple. The Jews have a right to circumcision in the church of Christ; we have a right to Christianity among the Jews. It is our right to hear them on the Sabbath expound the law. So we learn nationalism, pure and simple; hence the eternal Fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man nationally. They have a right to meet us on Lord's day and enjoy Christianity; so Jew and Gentile meet in Christ. The Jews were first in the nation under God, first in heaven glorified. They were first in the church. It was about nine years before the Gentiles came in. The Jews in Christ were made strong, and began to spread out. There is a wrong somewhere. Rome took the lead. It was not so in the beginning.

I am pressed for time. I only offer these thoughts that you may see the logical conclusion. I have been studying this question for years. I have only time to suggest a few thoughts. I brought up a family of thirty-six children under the rule of action that governed the Jews, so far as I could make the application. It has worked well, and all are Christians. There is a power in the application of these principles. Jews do not beg; they are a busy people; they do not murder or steal; they are not in the courts of the country. Nationally, they are broken up, and yet they are one and prosperous. It works well in the family, in the nation; why not in all the world?

It is time for preaching. God bless you. R. W. OFFICER.

A large ranch equipped throughout with electricity will soon be established in Lower California, just across the State line, by two Pontiac (Mich.) men, one of whom is a nephew of the late Roswell Flower. The ranch will be 16,000 acres in extent. A novel feature of the electric equipment will be several search lights placed upon the hills overlooking the ranch. These are to supplant the old system of night riding to prevent stealing. The tender of each light will be armed with a long-range rifle, and will also be provided with a signal code by which he can flash information to the other light tenders and any one who may be among the cattle. Each light tender will also have at hand a telephone connected with the main ranch, the pushing of the button ringing an alarm bell. All parts of the ranch will be provided with telephone stations. An electric light plant will supply all of the buildings with lights. Electricity applied in this way should serve a very useful purpose. The wonder is that it has not been so used before.

A Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen consists of a gold pen, the best that can be made; a hard rubber holder of elegant style and finish, containing an ink reservoir; and a feed that conducts the ink from the reservoir to the pen point with absolute uniformity. It is always ready for use, and is clean in the pocket as well as in use. One who has once used a first-class fountain pen is not likely to use the old-style pen again. There are cheaper fountain pens, and we have them, if you want them, but you will save money and worry by buying a good one. Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pens are guaranteed. Price by mail, postpaid: No. 12, $2.50; No. 13, $3.50; No. 14, $4.

Of course I am not authority on music, but I sometimes associate with people who are. Dr. Leon Harding has conducted the song service in most of my meetings this year. He can get music out of anything that has music in it, I think. The saints and faithful at Guthrie, Ky., where our singing was excellent, as also at Smithville, Tenn., where we now are, use "Gospel Praise." I have, since the beginning of the Guthrie meeting—October 20, 1900—heard, "That is the sweetest song I have ever heard," till I have been forced to conclude there must be something supremely sweet in "Gospel Praise." Faithful souls who sweetly sing at Guthrie and Smithville think so, I am sure.—T. B. Larimore.

HAVE YOU TRIED?

Many of our subscribers are renewing their subscriptions for another year. We wish to again call the attention of our old subscribers to our offer to renew their subscriptions for one year. The proposition is this: Send us three new yearly subscribers, accompanied by $4.50, and we will renew your subscription for one year. For six new subscribers, accompanied by $9, we will renew your subscription for two years.

We have often been urged to make some such proposition, and now, as we have made it, we feel confident that many of our subscribers will avail themselves of it. Now is the time to get new subscribers. In a very short time, you can easily secure a number of new subscribers.

We are receiving many complimentary expressions as to the merits of the Gospel Advocate, and a number of good brethren have assured us that they would make an effort to add many new names to our list. We should add many thousand new names by January 15, 1901. We hope to have an expression from any subscriber who will work to help us secure ten thousand new subscribers. We would be glad to have every subscriber write us, stating that he will be one of the number who will help to add ten thousand new readers. A strong pull and a pull all together will accomplish great things. Do not delay, but begin the work at once. Who will be the first to send us a long list of names?

PUBLISHERS.

"Mr. Charles M. Sheldon, whose vain dream as to how Christ would run a daily paper served to disgust so many sensible people, has been exciting additional disgust by canvassing Boston to see how many of the merchants would be willing to do business with Christ as a partner. Such commercial comparison for Christ is close akin to what is blasphemous." (Baptist Flag.)

This is not the first lat at Mr. Sheldon. The name of his enemies and bitter critics is Legion. Down with him! Out with him! Choke him! The crank! The fool! And why? What has Mr. Sheldon done? He has had the courage to openly contend for a principle as true as the everlasting rocks. We do not agree with Mr. Sheldon in all his conclusions. He makes some obvious mistakes in his application. But every true Christian has not only adopted, but will defend with his life, the great principle Sheldon sets forth.

Any man that does not take the cross and follow Christ is not worthy of him. Can a man be said to follow Christ if he does not strive daily to do as Jesus would? Let him be what he may—farmer, merchant, mechanic—if he is a true Christian, his heart and compass is: What would Jesus do in my place? If he is a journalist, or a teacher, or a preacher, he will edit his paper, teach his pupils, preach the word, just like he thinks Jesus would do. The people may demand a different sort of journalism and preaching. The world likes humbug, deception, vanity. But the Christian will not furnish just anything the people clamor for; his standard, like that of Christ, is the will of the Father.

Now, it may be that a journalist or a preacher will lose some of his success and popularity by doing his work as Christ would do it. You may ask: How would the editor make his living if his paper did not meet the popular demand? How will the preacher support himself and his family when he preaches in highways and byways? But a similar question could have been asked of any of God's heroes. "Abraham, how will you get along in the unknown country, away from the comforts and protection of your home settlement? Will not robbers and wild beasts devour you in the wilderness?" Abraham could have lived more comfortably and safely at home; but by faith he obeyed God and went out, not knowing whither he went. He counted himself a stranger and a pilgrim here; he looked for God's city, and by faith he made a sacrifice of his life and his earthly prospects. Christ taught us the same lesson. If a man seeks to save his life, he will lose it; if he loses his life for Christ's sake, he will find it. No man can follow in his steps without making sacrifice, enduring loss and persecution. The Christian has pledged himself to follow his Master, and with his Lord he shares cross and crown.

✠ ✠ ✠

Why this plan and principle should not receive universal commendation, at least among the professed followers of Christ, is hard to understand. There is nothing more plainly taught in the Scriptures than that Christ is the example, and in his footsteps the Christian is to walk. A Christianity without imitation of Christ is an absurdity. "Let this mind be in you," says Paul, "which was also in Christ Jesus." Dr. Sheldon is most certainly to be commended for his fearless maintaining of a position so evidently right. There are many so-called "Christians" who are not in earnest, are not even making any effort to imitate Christ. Their lives cannot stand the true test of Christianity. There is no mark of likeness to Christ, no conformation to his image. That they should hiss and furiously condemn the doctrine of taking Christ for a pattern to be followed implicitly is natural enough; but why should others be offended at this teaching of God's word?

✠ ✠ ✠

Mr. Sheldon may have blundered in his decision as to what Jesus really would do in a given case. So do we all blunder. But there is one square promise to all who really mean to follow Christ: "Again therefore Jesus spake unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in the darkness, but shall have the light of life." (John 8: 12, R. V.)

✠ ✠ ✠

But such a small part only of the human family are honest toward themselves. They shun to look into their own hearts; they deceive themselves as to their motives; they delude themselves into absurd opinions concerning their own state. How many men fancy themselves to be heroes and martyrs, who in reality have never suffered or sacrificed, but have lived for self alone! How many think they follow Christ, when in reality, in the depths of their hearts, where they never examined, lie the ruling motives of their life—the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life!

There is a fine point in the saying of Jesus: "Even so let your light shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." A world of difference may be seen in the way people let their light shine. You can let your light so shine that men may see your good works and glorify you, or so that they may see your good works and glorify your Father in heaven. It depends on you. When men went from Punahon's preaching, they said: "What an orator he is!"

When they went from Spurgeon's preaching, they said: "What a Savior we have!" I am afraid of the "grand" sermon. When people realize that the sermon and the preacher are so fine, they have not been impressed with the greatness of God. They do not see the town for the houses.

"Fair, honest, open-hearted discussion is to be commended, but acrimonious disputes, in which personal invective and vile epithets are the most prominent features, are obnoxious to good taste and violate the fundamental principles of the Christian religion. No Christian can afford to engage in disputes of that character." (Exchange.) We are sorry to testify that many religious debates of the present time are of that objectionable character. To say nothing of Christian meekness, gentleness, and love, it is revolting to a mind that possesses even a tolerable degree of refinement to listen to the bragging, sophistical, overbearing speeches. To exalt himself and put his opponent to shame and confusion seems to be the object of each debater; and the end justifies the means. Meanwhile the partisans of the crowd watch the game as eagerly as they would a cockfight. Every silly yarn, every ingenious thrust at the other side, every dark insinuation is applauded. Truth is no longer the object. The watchword is: My party or your party; victory or defeat. The disagreeing performances ends with a boast of both sides, each claiming a brilliant victory for itself.

✠ ✠ ✠

It is not wrong to debate. A fair, high-toned discussion of God's teaching is one of the best means to test the truth of our positions on it. Jesus debated; Stephen debated; Paul debated, and commended it as a means of stopping the mouths of false teachers. But when we debate, let us do so in the candor, simplicity, frankness, and love that should characterize the children of God. Let the other man fling mud if he is so disposed; but if you are defending the truth of God, do it uprightly and nobly, without boasting, without guile, as is becoming to a soldier of Christ.

"People get muddled with the sound and jingle of words lugged into controversies that only darken counsel, and enlighten no one. This was never done more effectually than in the controversies about evangelizing. Mystery Babylon invariably muddles the clear waters when she undertakes to maintain her schemes. She never talks straightforward of evangelizing, gospelizing, or Christianizing the world, or of turning the people of the world to the Lord, or, as the Lord expresses it in Paul's commission, of turning the people 'from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God;' but she talks of 'missionary work,' 'missions,' 'foreign missions,' and 'home missions.' Then follow nice distinctions between the foreign and home missions, and then what is missionary work and what is not. Here is room for learned orators in conventions to deliver fine addresses on the 'church work,' 'home missions,' and 'foreign missions;' the duties of missionaries, pastors, etc. The people listen and try to understand, and the more they try, the more they are satisfied that they do not understand. Then they listen to the beautiful phrases used to smooth it up and commend it to the people, such as 'united efforts,' 'harmonious efforts,' 'associated efforts' in the missionary cause, or 'cooperation,' etc. Then they talk of 'plans,' 'expedients,' etc., left to the 'wisdom of man,' to 'wise policy,' 'safe counsel,' 'prudence,' 'discretion,' etc." (Ben. Franklin.)

Sometimes the simplest way to settle a controversy, or to clear up a confusion, is to return to the language of the Bible. There is an importance in Paul's admonition to hold fast the pattern of sound words which is not duly recognized. Errors and fallacies of all kinds may be covered up and made attractive by a high-sounding phrase of a strange name. It is certain that every Bible idea can be expressed in Bible words; and, as has been truly said, if there is no Bible word to express a certain idea, it is good proof that the idea is not in the Bible.

Our Exchanges.

NO ARISTOCRACY.

All men are necessary to one another and to God. In a great machine the minutest cog, pulley, or screw is as important as the great fly wheel, axlet, or belt. The philosopher cannot get along without his cook. All are dependent and interdependent. God needs prophets, evangelists, apostles, martyrs, confessors, preachers; he needs poets, historians, scientists, discoverers, inventors, teachers, authors, physicians, lawyers; but he needs as much carpenters, masons, blacksmiths, agriculturists, tailors, seamstresses, molders, printers, firemen, and sewer diggers. Why should such extraordinary honor come to "the professions?" The statesman, the editor, the schoolmaster are of prime importance to humanity; but so is he who builds a wall, or lays a track, or digs a canal, or paves a street.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE SELFISH USE OF WEALTH.

He was sleek and well fed. Everything had gone to suit him. His business was increasing in volume and bringing him in large returns. The house in which he lived looked fit for a king. His wife and children were clad in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. It was quite impossible for him to see the existence of much evil in the world. True, he could not entirely ignore the fact that the wretched Lazarus lay festering and rotting at his gate, and begging to be fed with the crumbs that fell from his table. Things would, to be sure, be somewhat better if Lazarus could be got quite out of the way. The sight of want and pain and wretchedness is never altogether pleasant to even careless eyes; but, then, no sane man expects perfection. On the whole, there is nothing to complain of. If Lazarus and his folks were any account, they would have no trouble in making a comfortable support. Every man reaches his level. Those who rise deserve to rise, and those who fall deserve to fall. The survival of the fittest is the law of the universe, and it would be unwise to seek to interfere with its operation. So reasoned our sleek and well-fed friend. We have the authority of Jesus, however, for the statement that another such man "lifted up his eyes, being in torment." Wealth is not a sin. The industry and thrift which lead to the accumulation of money are commendable virtues; but the selfish use and enjoyment of wealth is wrong. Our Lord denounces it in language that fairly blisters. Men have sought in every age and by all sorts of tortuous explanations to get rid of the full force of his withering words in respect to the sins of covetousness and self-indulgence; but there they stand. Nothing can alter them; nothing can modify their meaning. Let every man to whom they apply give them due heed.—Exchange.

TRUST GOD IN AFFLICTION.

"Why am I so afflicted?" said an old Christian, worn as she tossed and worried on her bed racked with pain and scorched with fever. "Have I not tried to live right all my life? God knows I have. Why am I so tortured in my old age?"

The above exclamations bring to my mind the following thoughts: Our human nature is weak, and Satan, taking advantage of the weakness of the human nature, so presses the Christian under the condition of severe trial that he may sometimes forget from whence his strength cometh.

There are three things the Christian should never forget in striving to discern the hand of divine Providence.

The first is to remember that our Father in heaven has one abiding, unchangeable purpose concerning us, which is to fit us for heavenly peace and light and joy while we are in the flesh, and afterwards to receive us to himself in everlasting bliss. All the discipline of this life has this ulterior purpose.

That is a mercy and blessing which is best suited to the state of the soul at that particular time at which it is given. God is eternal, and he ever has eternal ends in view. All his dealings with us are to be judged of in relation to these eternal ends.

The second thing for us to remember is that the Lord has made man free—free to think for himself, free to decide for himself—and he continually preserves this freedom to man; hence, if men in the exercise of this freedom transgress the laws of divine order, they may bring much sorrow and misery upon themselves, they may also be the cause of misery and misfortune to be entailed upon their children in diseased and enfeebled bodies, in neglected minds, and in necessitous circumstances. For our Father in heaven to prevent this would be to interfere with man's freedom, which the Lord never does. God powerfully inclines man to do right, but never compels him.

The third thing to be remembered is that all pain, sorrow, and misery are not arbitrarily inflicted, but are the results of the transgressing of natural or divine laws, on our obedience to which our well-being and happiness depend.

These afflictions, however severe they may be, are permitted in order to prevent worse evils. If sin did not bring punishment, to what depths of wickedness would man sink? If folly did not entail distress and suffering, how would men ever be urged to grow wiser? If forgetfulness of God did not cause the Christian to fall, how should we ever learn to live in humble dependence on him?—J. D. Cathell, in Methodist Protestant.

A GLORIOUS LIFE.

What is meant by "glorious?" It seems to me that "glorious" always means the same thing. When Nature awakes from her sleep, and the birds return, the grass begins to carpet the fields, the flowers appear, the trees are putting on their emerald garments, the fruit trees are bursting into snowy clouds, tinged here and there with pink; in a word, when Spring has been ushered in with all her splendor and we see the dazzling spectacle before us, our heart leaps within us and we involuntarily exclaim: "It is glorious!"

When we stand in view of Niagara Falls, and look out upon that mighty avalanche of water, pouring over the high precipice, forming a boiling caudron beneath; the great power, the flying spray, the mist floating up toward the heavens, the bright sunlight illuminating it all, form a grand picture. We gaze upon the scene before us with a rapturous feeling. We are at a loss for sufficient language to express our admiration, so we simply exclaim: "It is glorious!"

When we turn to human life, the same thought forces itself upon us. We look at some splendid character; we see him environed with difficulties; we contemplate him as he marches through these difficulties with a firm step, a fixed determination, with earnest exertion and well-sustained effort when belong to every noble nature; we look in imagination across wide chasms of ages, down long vistas of history—perhaps next door to us in some ordinary friend, in our home; and yet we see such splendid characteristics adorning that life that we are constrained to say: "It is glorious!"

Contemplate the Christian. He has left the world, with all its folly and glare. From his heart he has renounced sin; with a perception of its fullness and glory, he has embraced the gospel and yielded his heart to its control. In his heart the love of God is shed abroad by the Holy Ghost. To his mental vision the future home of the church triumphant, in the brightness of its glory, has been opened. Confiding in the energy of atoning blood, he feels a living divine hope; he rejoices in the hope of the glory of God. Prompted by these influences, he is striving to live soberly and righteously and godly in this present evil world. As he has opportunity, he is striving to do good unto all men. He is pressing toward the "mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Thus living in the presence of God, he bears "fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." As such approach the end of mortal life, they have peace and joy within. They do not leave their dearest joys behind, their brightest joys—joys of which they have an earnest here and an inheritance in the future. Their treasure is above. And how fully has many a soul been swallowed up in the prospects which open upon his spiritual vision as mortal life recedes! Swallowed up in the love of God! Glorious life! Peaceful death!

It does not stop here. A glorious Christian life goes on. Its effects are felt in the world. It has a great power—a drawing power—exalting the cause of God and benefiting our fellow-men; it never dies, but lives on and on in the world. But God tells us that we may give our imaginations free rein; and yet are unable to approach the true idea of the future soon to be opened up before the faithful believers.

It has not entered into the heart of man to conceive of the glories of the life to come. Is it worth striving for?—Evangelical Messenger.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Is capital punishment in harmony with divine law? JAMES A. SHIRES, Deaver, Col.

God laid down the law for man in the beginning: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." (Gen. 9: 6.) This was the general law God gave for the government of the world; and it is in harmony with the will of God that the man should be executed who is guilty of murder. But God has not made it the duty of Christians to execute judgment upon them. "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." Return good for evil. While this is true of the Christian, he has ordained the powers that be as his ministers to execute wrath on those who do evil. The children of God can take no part or lot in the work. Yet human governments will do it.

Brother Lipscomb: Since reading the articles in the Gospel Advocate of recent date by you and Brother C. L. Loos, setting forth the teaching of the Old Testament and the New Testament scriptures, on "Scriptural Attitude in Prayer," I thought to write and tell you to go slow and be a little careful, lest you meet with a Texas preacher of the progressive order, to whom I listened recently, who knocked your arguments into smithereens by one little scripture. This preacher told us he would read, as introductory to the evening services, John 17. Before reading he said: "I desire to note one thing. You are aware that a difference exists on the scriptural posture in prayer. To my mind this case teaches that our Lord stood while praying. Now," said he, "the last expression we have from the Savior before praying is in these words: 'Arise, and let us go hence.'" Although this, his proof text, is found in John 14, it is a stunner; yes, a clincher. Would it be called "a far-fetched inference?" I once heard it said of an old, miserly kind of fellow that he could "see a quarter of a dollar through three elbows of a stovepipe." This far-seeing, lynx-eyed preacher brought that quaint saying to my mind. A very true saying is: "Drowning men will catch at straws." V. I. STIRMAN.

I take it this attitude in prayer, like the instruments in the song service or the act in baptism, is of moment, because they show the spirit of humility and submission to God, or the disposition to follow after and conform to the world.

Brother Lipscomb: Does the father of the prodigal son represent God, and does the house represent heaven? If so, will you please give us some light on Luke 15: 25? Does this teach that there will be music and dancing in heaven? JAMES TURK.

There is such a thing as making a parable go on "all fours," as I used to hear it called in my younger days—that is, making it apply in points not intended. When God said the kingdom of God is like a grain of mustard seed, he did not mean there would be mustard seed in heaven; it meant the kingdom of heaven from a small beginning, like the mustard seed, would grow into a large body. When he compared the using present opportunities to secure future good to the unjust steward defrauding his employer to make favor with his creditors, he did not mean there would be employers with unjust creditors in heaven; he only meant to commend the wisdom of employing present opportunities to secure future good. In this parable there is not the most distant allusion to music and dancing in heaven. It says that is the way they rejoiced on earth, and that so there will be joy in heaven over every sinner that repents. That joy will be expressed as angels express their joy. I do not know how they do that. It may be by music and dancing, if spirits make music and dance; but it will not be by the fleshly, lascivious music and dancing that so frequently lead people to sin and ruin now. In parables spiritual and unknown things are illustrated by material and known things, but this does not mean the material and known things shall be in the spiritual and eternal kingdom.

Brother Lipscomb: (1) Were the Jews ever commanded by God to make or use instruments in the worship? My impression has always been that this was the work of David. (2) Where can I find that Christ was a carpenter or ever worked at that trade any? I saw in the Gospel Advocate, some time back, that Christ was a carpenter. I would be glad to hear from you on these two questions.

Garland, Tex.

JOHN T. WILKINS.

(1) It has been repeatedly presented in the Gospel Advocate that David introduced the use of instruments in the worship of God. It was an appendage of the earthly kingdom that was introduced against the command of God, on which God said, "They have rejected me, that I should not reign over them," and which, he warned them, would bring ruin upon them as a people. (Read 1 Sam. 8.) It is always spoken of as ordained or commanded by David, and he is condemned for having done it. (See Amos 6: 1-6.) Then Jesus and the apostles dropped it out when he came to purge his floor and burn the chaff with fire that is unquenchable. This was burned as chaff; the wheat was brought over into the spiritual garner of God. (2) When Christ had come into his own country, those who had known him from childhood said: "Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us?" (Mark 6: 3.) The fact that he was reared by Joseph, a carpenter, as his son, taken in connection with the customs of the people, would have rendered it certain he worked at the trade; but here the people who had known him all his life call him "the carpenter," and speak of it as a well-known fact in their midst.

Our Priest.

The impertinence of a mediating priesthood under the Christian dispensation must be apparent to all thoughtful men. Jesus Christ has opened the way to God. Every believer may come for himself to the mercy seat, and there offer spiritual sacrifices on his own account. He may need a preacher to instruct him, but he does not need a priest to mediate for him. Does not God know how to speak directly to the souls that he has made? Is he tied down to the necessity of using one man as the channel of his approach to another? We do not believe a word of it. "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." There is no other requirement.—Christian Advocate.

That is true, so far as it relates to a priest through which men approach God. The Jewish priesthood was a type, a schoolmaster, to teach and train the people to accept Jesus as the Priest for all men. When he, the perfect High Priest for all men, came, he took out of the way all the lower order of priests and made every child of God a priest to approach the Father, or the Holy of holies, through our ascended High Priest.

But God approaches men while in the body through the organs of the body, and he uses one man to teach and instruct another, as set forth in the above article. Men are to teach each other in meekness, each considering himself, lest he be mistaken.

D. L.

One of the great demands of every age, and of this age above all that have gone before, is an instructed piety. Mere untrained and undisciplined religious impulses are not enough. Noble and beautiful in themselves, they need to be brought under the effective control of the moral law. This result cannot be accomplished without teaching, much teaching, incessant teaching. Pure ignorance of the requirements of the gospel is the fruitful source of many improprieties and many sins.—Christian Advocate.

Circumstances are beyond the control of man, but his conduct is in his own power.—Disraeli.

Age without cheerfulness is a Lapland winter without a sun.—Colton.

Suggestions to Brother D. Lipscomb.

Brother Lipscomb: While I have not had the pleasure of meeting you in person, I have been edified much by reading from your pen. What I now write is not to criticise your answer to Brother E. A. Hurt, in the Gospel Advocate of November 22, 1900, on John 3: 8, but that you may criticise my suggestions, if need be, in relation to your answer to the brother—viz.: (1) "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." To my mind this means both body and spirit, as man is composed of body and spirit. (2) The Savior, to inform Nicodemus that he did not mean a second fleshly birth, said: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Then to explain both the natural and the spiritual babies, he said: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." To my mind the thought is this: One is a natural baby born into the world; the other is a spiritual baby born into the kingdom of God. If I say the spiritual part of man only can be born of the Spirit and the fleshly part of flesh, then I deny the human spirit in the fleshly birth. (3) "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." To my mind in this the Savior's illustration illustrates the invisible birth, or deliverance, into the kingdom of God; for the birth was his subject, not the invisible part of man. This birth, or deliverance, is invisible. You see the baby to be born (believer), the element of birth (water), the dip (action), the administrator (preacher), the going in and coming out of the water; but you cannot see the deliverance into the kingdom of God, for the baptized seem to be in the world as ever. Yet they are in the kingdom. Or, as the wind current from one point to another is invisible, so the deliverance from the world into the kingdom is invisible. Now, to my mind, what the Spirit does it does through the body; or material corporealism; and as the spirit is regenerated and born, so is the body; while "flesh" and "spirit" are two terms used here by the Savior to designate the natural baby and the spiritual baby. I believe that both body and spirit are baptized in water into Christ (See Rom. 6: 3), as the spirit is in the body; but the body is as surely baptized into Christ as the spirit, for the pronoun "us" embraces both body and spirit.

Paul says: "Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." (Heb. 10: 22.) Certainly, Paul here alludes to water baptism. If so, "washed" signified cleansing—certainly not from material filth, but sinful. Then as we transgress God's law or obey it through the body, the body is cleansed as we obey or defile as we disobey. Again, Paul says: "Brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God." (Rom. 12: 1.) From this it seems that we are to offer to God our bodies, not a dead sacrifice, but a living one, and that we must present them holy, which implies that they have once been unholy. Again, Paul says: "Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? . . . Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body." (1 Cor. 6: 15-18.) According to these passages, the body is a member of Christ, and one can sin against his body. Again: "For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." (Verse 20.) From this it is plain to me that both body and spirit are engaged in the worship of God. Again: "Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body. . . . Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you?" (Verses 13-19.) Again: "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body." (2 Cor. 4: 10.) From these passages we see that the body is for the Lord, the temple of the Holy Spirit, and to manifest the life of Christ. Again: "And I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." (1 Thess. 5: 23.) From this passage, we see that the spirit, soul, and body can be blamed or blameless. Now, I confess that I cannot see how an unborn or unregenerated body can be in all of this; but to say the body is born or regenerated as the spirit is, all is plain.

I heard a preaching brother say: "The body is no more born in baptism than the clothes upon the body." He next said: "To show you that the body is not regenerated, you have the same material organism that you had before baptism." Then I asked him if he had the same human spirit that he had before baptism, and he said: "Yes." Then I said: "According to your argument, your spirit is not regenerated." Then the brother quoted Rom. 7: 18: "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not." I asked him if the flesh had a will independent of the human spirit, and he said: "No." Then I said: "The word 'flesh' here means the whole man, as Paul modifies it by the clause: 'For to will is present with me.'" The brother next said, "The one is contrary to the other," and quoted: "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." (Gal. 5: 17.) Then I asked: "Do you mean that the human spirit is contrary to its human body?" He answered: "Yes." I then said: "Brother, you are mistaken; the body is as passive as a stone without the human spirit, for without the spirit the body is dead. The contrariness, the warfare, in this verse is between the Spirit of Christ and the human spirit through its material corporealism; and the way the human spirit is naturally inclined to live Paul calls 'flesh,' and the way of righteousness by Jesus Christ Paul calls 'spirit;' and they are contrary to one another."

The brother next quoted this: "The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." (Rom. 8: 7.) I then asked him if the flesh had a mind independent of the human spirit, and he said: "No." Then I said: "This is the carnal mind of the human spirit, not subject to the law of God; this mind apart from carnality can be subjected, but the carnal mind cannot." He then quoted: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." (1 Cor. 15: 50.) I told him that this refers to the resurrection into the everlasting kingdom, and not to the church here, and he said: "If flesh and blood, or the natural body, cannot enter into heaven above, there is no necessity of its being born or converted." To this I said: "The converted spirit needs a converted, holy body to live in while here, and one can neither teach, persuade, nor convert the inner man, save through the outer man, so far as we know; and the inner man hears, believes, and obeys through the outer man. Then how can the inner man be born, or converted, without the outer man being born, too, as long as the inner man is in the outer man?" Then the brother gave up that I was right.

If I am wrong, perhaps Brother Lipscomb is able to criticise these suggestions; and I know of no one to whom I would more freely submit in the light of the Bible. I await Brother Lipscomb's approval or criticism, believing such will do good.

HIRAM PHARRIS.

Nicodemus understood that Jesus taught that the body of flesh must enter the mother's womb and be born again. Jesus explained it is the spirit, not the flesh, that is the subject of this birth. The first birth was flesh of flesh. This must be spirit of Spirit. This spirit, which is affected by Spirit, is unseen, as the wind. The fleshly body is baptized, because in it the spirit of man dwells and through it acts. Its subjection to God's Spirit is manifested by leading the body to be baptized. The spirit in man in this act shows it controls the body, and in this declares and pledges both soul and body to obedience to the Spirit of God. One spirit influences another spirit through the organs of the bodies in which they dwell. But the service of the body is not acceptable to God unless it is directed by the spirit dwelling in the body. This means service must be from the heart to please God.

We feel sorry for the big boy that is coddled as if he were a baby. He may have the stuff of genuine manhood in him, but it is pretty sure to be spoiled by overmuch petting and humoring. Nothing is truer than that effort and self-denial are essential to the growth of character. It is a great service to a boy to put him on his mettle by giving him a taste of hardship in early life. The love that would save him from all difficulties and trials, and makes his path too easy, is inconsiderate and foolish.—Christian Advocate.

Brother Calhoun's Complaint.

Permit me, first of all, to assure Brother Calhoun that I am sincerely sorry that he feels aggrieved at the publication of our discussion on the instrumental music question, and to assure him still further that there was not even the thought of any intention on my part to grieve him; but candor compels me to say that my surprise and astonishment are fully equal to my sorrow. Our brother is decidedly mistaken as to any sort of violation of the laws of propriety or "a breach of trust" in the publication of the discussion, and the strange matter is that he would even dare to set up such a claim.

Before stating the facts, I desire to say, once for all, that I have now, and have had all along, none but the kindest feelings for Brother Calhoun; and, although not agreeing with him on the music question, I have never ceased to love him as a brother, and I deeply regret, for his own sake, that he has made the complaint which appears in the Gospel Advocate of November 29, 1900. He attempts to make the impression that I have wantonly rushed before the public with matters of a private nature couched in "private letters" between him and myself; but I respectfully deny that there is a solitary thing in connection with the entire transaction of the nature of a private letter that would involve the shadow of impropriety in the publication. I grant him all sincerity in making his complaint, and I take no offense at it whatever, but I distinctly disclaim having done so unbrotherly a thing. True, the discussion was conducted in private, but its matter was public and of widespread public interest, and the facts not only abundantly justified, but imperatively demanded, the publication. Let us see:

1. The matter of our discussion being entirely public and being over an issue involving an evil practice among the churches, even if influences were being exerted over the country by others exclusively, and not by himself as well, in support of said evil practice, this fact alone, there being nothing of a private nature about the articles, would justify their publication. The Bible solemnly commands us to warn against and to do what we can to counteract evil when it is in the land. I never make arguments in private, either for or against such matters, that I am unwilling for the public to see, and I did not know before that Brother Calhoun did such a thing.

2. If our brother considered the matter of his articles as a private matter, why did he persist in carrying it around and repeatedly reading it to different persons on different occasions, with the boast that no man could answer the argument he had produced? Was he keeping it within the sacred precincts of privacy while pursuing such a course? His article had not only become a matter of general talk, but was serving to strengthen the hands of those who use instrumental music in the worship. This fact alone not only justified, but demanded, the publication; and our brother must either admit this or take the position that it was proper to carry such a "private" matter around and read it over the country, where no reply to it could be seen, but improper to let it appear where a reply to it could be seen.

3. A published report of the proceedings of the Tennessee Christian Missionary Convention was sent to me in which it was published that he had delivered his lecture on "The Law of Worship" before that body; and, while I could not know, of course, that his speech there was verbatim the same with the article he had submitted to me, which was not a material circumstance, I, nevertheless, had neither right nor reason to presume that he had taught a doctrine before that body different from the doctrine he had taught with me on the same subject. This fact alone would render entirely proper the publication of a reply to his argument; and if he taught a different doctrine there on the same subject, it would have been unreasonable for me to suppose that he did such a thing, but if he taught the same doctrine, even in principle, then no harm is done.

4. Brother Calhoun says: "Seven years ago, when I left Lexington, Ky., I told Brother Kurfees that my aged father and mother needed my presence and companionship and that I would feel more at home among my own brethren in Tennessee, who thought as I did on this question, than I did there. Hence, you can see that he did not give all the reason I gave for leaving. Perhaps he forgot the other part." The brother is mistaken. I "forgot" nothing on the point to which I made reference, and I omitted none of the reason which he gave for his course on that point. What I did, and all I attempted to do, was to give his reason for "resigning as teacher at Lexington," and I gave it wholly and precisely as he gave it to me. I did not attempt to give his reason for leaving Lexington nor for going to Tennessee. He says he did both because of his aged parents, and I certainly accept his statement of the case, but I was giving his reason for "resigning as teacher" in the college at Lexington. He now says he has "grown" since then and feels "at home among all" his "brethren anywhere." Exactly so; but when I tell him that his method of dealing with the music question makes the impression on myself and others that he is "at home" with worship with the organ, as well as with worship without it, he takes offense and talks of dealing in "personalities." I wish to assure the brother that his candid admission does not make me feel any more certain of the fact now than his course on the question made me feel before.

5. As to the repetition of his challenge to "discuss the original question," I gladly repeat, if he deems it necessary, my acceptance of it; but I respectfully remind the brother that "the original question" is already before us, and it is before us in precisely the same shape in which he himself brought it before us and on which he put forth his challenge. I did not seek a discussion with him, nor with any one else. I am not engaged in the business of seeking debates, though I do not run from one when it comes in the way. But my beloved brother is the man who produced an argument which he thought was unanswerable; and, after reading it around over the country for a time, he sent a challenge to me to meet and criticize it, and the argument which is now on his hands, and is yet unanswered, is there in response to his own challenge. As to my being "anxious to have" his "arguments on this question made public," that anxiety, if there be any such, is already gratified to the full extent of seeing his "argument on this question," which he claimed would not be met, "made public." At his own solicitation, I entered the fight with him on his own chosen ground; and I respectfully inform him that he cannot now adroitly and deftly dismiss the obligation thus brought upon himself by a mere assertion of his that his argument was not met. Neither his ipse dixit nor mine is the criterion of judgment in the present case. There is no change whatever in the situation nor in "the original question," as he himself brought it before us, except that the argument, instead of being conducted in private, is transferred to the columns of the Gospel Advocate. I am entirely satisfied with the arguments which I have made and submitted to him on "the original question," but as they are unsatisfactory to him, he will please proceed to point out wherein they are defective; and I promise, the Lord willing, to be on hand with proper attention to anything he may say. But I am notified by the Gospel Advocate that, if the discussion continues, he must secure its publication in some of the other papers, and I suggest the Christian Standard or some other representative paper of its class. If he shall fail in this, I feel confident, if he should desire, that the Gospel Advocate would permit him to reply to the arguments already before him and published in its columns.

He says that my reply was "taken up with fallacious reasoning upon other phases of the question which" I "illogically introduced." The brother is mistaken again. I merely introduced facts and arguments on matters which he himself introduced into the discussion; and, so far as anything he has shown to the contrary is concerned, he was fully met, and his position shown to be untenable.

Let the discussion proceed, by all means, until Brother Calhoun is fully satisfied. When the written discussion shall have been finished, if there is some place where it is deemed proper to discuss the music question orally, I will gladly accept the brother's challenge to meet him in that way also. May the Lord rule in and overrule us all for the good of his cause.

Another Witness.

Julian Hawthorne, who went to India to report on the famine for the Cosmopolitan Magazine a couple of years ago, has been lately delivering lectures on India, in which he pays the highest tribute to the character and influence of the missionaries, declaring that they are the only hope of India, and that the native Christians there are the loveliest Christians he has seen.—Methodist Review.

However rare true love is, true friendship is rarer.—La Rochefoucauld.

Missions in Christendom.

We hear something about foreign missions, and considerable about home missions on the frontiers, but there is a kind of missionary work which seems to be very much neglected. Some years ago Archdeacon Jefferies stated that in India "for one really converted Christian as a fruit of missionary labor, the drinking practices of the English had made fully a thousand drunkards."

The Missionary Review of the World says: "Christendom has introduced seventy thousand gallons of rum to every missionary. In the great Kongo Free State there are one hundred drunkards to one convert. Under the maddening influence of intoxicating drink sent from New England, two hundred Kongoans slaughtered each other. One gallon of rum caused a fight in which fifty persons were slain."

This being the case, there seems to be a special need of missionary work in Christendom, and in New England—not merely in the slums and among the poor, but among the rich and influential, the distillers, the politicians, and the dealers in strong drink. These men need to be shown the error of their ways, taught the lessons of God's word, and warned to flee from the wrath to come.

There was a time when the great powers of the earth considered the expediency of excluding strong drink from Africa, and it is stated that all the powers agreed to it but the President of the United States, the government of which is in close alliance with the traffic in strong drink, the manufacturers of which are required by law to pay a heavy tax into the United States Treasury on every gallon which they produce.

If British opium ruins and damns the Chinese by millions; if expeditions sent to the Philippines result in lining the chief streets with rum shops; if the army "canteen," in spite of law or gospel, makes its way to camp and to front on every occasion; if ship loads of beer follow the American flag, we can imagine what kind of civilization may be expected at the hands of the people of a so-called "Christian country."

And if along with these forces of evil which mass themselves to work destruction wherever they go, we see the people of God divided and scattered by their selfish sectarianism, so that the heathen themselves are stumbled and confounded, till they know not what to believe nor which way to turn; and if Christians, not content with hindering and ruining the work of God at home by their unscriptural, senseless, and costly divisions, insist on transplanting and fostering them upon heathen soil, in defiance of the word and will of God, and the prayer of Christ that his people all may be one; is there not a call for weeping and mourning and fasting and humiliation and prayer? Is there not a call for missionary work at home to heal the divisions that rend the church of Christ, and to stop the deadly traffic which damns millions of the heathen for the sake of fattening a few rich brewers or distillers or rum sellers? And unless people do cry to God in penitence and humility, and break off their sins by righteousness, is there not reason to fear that the sword of wrath shall be unsheathed, and that the nation which forgets God and his righteous laws will be again smitten with anguish and drenched in blood, as it has been in days gone by?—Exchange.

Crab from Indian Ocean.

An enormous phosphorescent crab, the like of which has never heretofore been found, was recently captured in the Indian Ocean, and is now in the aquarium of the Zoological Society of Calcutta, says the New York Herald. This huge crustacean, which was caught a mile away from shore, is sixty-two centimeters in diameter and its claws are more than a yard long. Its voracity is incredible, and its great eyes protrude in such a manner as to give it a peculiarly ferocious appearance.

After it was caught, it was placed in a large vessel, which was filled with sea water and which also contained about fifty crustaceans and other fishes. Two hours later the crab had devoured all these, and when evening arrived, the zoologists, who were watching the strange creature, saw, to their surprise, that it emitted curious phosphorescent rays of a milky whiteness, which illumined the entire vessel. This inexplicable phenomenon is repeated every evening, and naturalists have traveled from many parts to witness it.

PERSONAL.

Brother James E. Scobey preached at Foster Street church of Christ, this city, on last Lord's day.

Brother J. W. Shepherd left on last Thursday night for Pensacola, Fla. He is on a preaching trip, and will be gone indefinitely.

The meeting at the church of Christ on Line street, this city, Brother Larimore preaching, is announced to continue until the 16th inst.

We made announcement some weeks ago of a debate between the editor of the Arkansas Baptist and Brother John Giddens, of Missouri. The debate did not come off as announced. The Baptist debater was ready, but the Baptist Church concluded they could not support the debate.

About the 20th of this month I will return to Indian Territory. The congregations at Center Point, Blue Bayou, and Nashville, Ark., have remembered me in a way not soon forgotten. The churches at Corinth and other points will not come out behind. This leaves me at Center Point.—R. W. Officer.

Brother F. B. Srygley writes from Tompkinsville, Ky., under date of December 3, 1900: "I am here in a meeting. The meeting has been in progress one week. We have had fine audiences and there has been one confession to date. I will go from this place to Dry Fork, Ky., on next Sunday. There were two persons baptized and five reclaimed at Celina, Tenn.

I have just closed a week's meeting at Masters, Mo., with nine additions. Masters is a new place. I began the meeting at the Baptist meetinghouse, with their consent; but after I had preached two discourses they thought it best for their cause that the meeting should close. We then went to a large blacksmith shop, where we had large and attentive audiences till the close of the meeting. I expect to visit that place again and assist in planting the cause of the Master in that section.—J. W. Smith, Cane Hill, Mo.

EDITORIAL.

Live right and you will be persecuted.

We can cling to nothing safer than the "Rock of Ages."

God's way of doing anything is always the best way.

"All to him I owe" we sing, and then then do not halfway serve him.

God calls us to work in his vineyard, and he always pays good wages.

"Buy the truth, and sell it not; also wisdom, and instruction, and understanding."

God's word is worth infinitely more than the opinions of all the greatest intellects of the whole world.

People frequently resort to ways and means of raising money for the Lord that they would be ashamed to use in raising it to meet their individual wants and necessities.

Bacon held all nature to be crammed with truth which it concerns man to discover. He believed the intellect to be constructed for this purpose, and that it needs but to be purged of errors of every kind and directed in the most efficient employment of its faculties to attain this end,

"Will it pay?"—that is, financially—is a question too frequently asked when duty demands that a certain course should be pursued. If right demands it, the thing should be done, even if it costs something.

We undervalue the small opportunities of life; we desire to accomplish something great in the estimation of the world, and in our eagerness neglect the seemingly small things that present themselves every day. The poor apprentice saved the rejected pieces of glass and constructed a cathedral window so beautiful and so artistic in design it was chosen above all others.

What a blessing we would be if we would seek the sad and lonely hearts and into their lives bring some joy and gladness! Not only would they be blessed, but ourselves also. Our own hearts would be softened, and would beat in tender sympathy with those that sorrow. Such was the life of the Savior, a life of sacrifice for others; and in such a life is found the highest joy and sweetest peace. Serving humanity thus, we serve God; for this is what he would have us to do, and is well pleasing to him.

You and I know that when this earthly tabernacle is dissolved there will be a new body for us, because our Lord Jesus Christ has risen from the dead. In my mind the ultimate answer to my deepest unbelief is the fact of the rising of Jesus from the dead. No matter of history is anything like so well attested as the fact that our Lord was crucified, dead, and buried, and that he did upon the third day rise again from the dead. This I unhesitatingly accept as a fact, and this becomes my anchorage.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Christ did not simply assert that he had power over death and the grave, but gave demonstrations of that power. He touched the bier of the widow's son and said: "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise. And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak." By his power, the daughter of Jairus was called from the sleep of death. When Lazarus was called to come forth from the grave, after having been dead four days, he immediately responded. But this was not sufficient. He also must grapple with the monster. He triumphed over death, and came forth from the grave the mightiest conqueror of all the ages, that our hope in him might extend beyond this life. God be thanked, "which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Heaven will be full of the ceaseless praises of Jesus. Eternity! thine unnumbered years shall speed their everlasting course, but forever and forever "to him be glory." Never shall his praises cease. That which was bought with blood deserves to last while immortality endures. The glory of the cross must never be eclipsed; the luster of the grave and of the resurrection must never be dimmed. O Jesus, thou shalt be praised forever! Long as immortal spirits live, long as the Father's throne endures—forever, forever, unto thee shall be glory. Believer, you are anticipating the time when you shall join the saints above in ascribing all glory to Jesus; but are you glorifying him now? The apostle's words are: "To him be glory both now and forever."—Spurgeon.

We are frequently greeted by this sentence: "We are poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith." This is true of some churches—faithful little bands, possessing few of the comforts of life, yet zealous for the Master's cause, and working eagerly for the spread of his gospel; and because they are thus earnest in their "work of faith and labor of love," the approval of God rests richly upon them. We do not believe, though, that some of the churches are as poor as they pretend to be, or even as rich in faith as they would have us think. We believe that many of the brethren are asleep, and a call to awake would be in order if we could call loud enough to get a response. Some of the churches do not realize the fearful consequences of their indifference and inactivity, and, as the eagle that drifted down the stream on the carcass of a sheep found too late that his feet had frozen to it, and so plunged over the falls, so do we fear that many will awake to their responsibilities when it will be too late to correct the evil that their folly has wrought.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." Edited by F. D. Srygley. Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn. Cloth; pages, 413. The chief excellence of the present volume is the faithful presentation of the characterizations and the teaching of one who is widely known among the churches in the South. These letters and sermons present Brother Larimore as a man of warm heart and affectionate bearing toward his brethren and humanity. As an earnest and industrious minister of the gospel, his life has been a fruitful one, for through his efforts many have been won to Christ. The volume is likely to have an extensive sale among the personal friends of Brother Larimore and of his biographer. A mournful interest is attached to the volume in the fact that, soon after its publication, the author was suddenly called to his eternal reward. There are twenty-two illustrations, including excellent pictures of the subject of the book, his home, and members of his family.—"Book Reviews," Christian Standard.

EARNEST DEVOTION TO THE CAUSE OF CHRIST.

"Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord." (Rom. 12: 11.) Instead of "not slothful in business," the Revised Version has "in diligence not slothful." The idea is that the Lord's people must not be indolent about the work, the service, the Lord has appointed for them. One part of the Lord's service is that we shall, in some way, by some sort of business, secure an honest living for ourselves and those dependent upon us; and in this labor we must not be indolent, must not be slothful. If we follow any sort of business, we must so follow it as to honor the Lord; and the Lord does not allow any sort of idleness anywhere along the line of his service. All that we do, in word or deed, must be done in the name of Christ, must be done by his authority, by his word. No lazy, indolent man is faithful to the Lord; for he demands industry in business, as well as in every other department of his service. It is just as important that the Lord's people be diligent in all the services of the church as it is that they be "not slothful in business."

There are many who are exceedingly diligent in the affairs of this life, and yet who are very indolent in other departments of the Lord's service. Some who never neglect their finances or their worldly business for anything are exceedingly indolent in visiting the fatherless and widows in their afflictions and in keeping themselves unspotted from the world. Then there are others who never neglect their business for a moment, yet they are very indolent about the Lord's service on the first day of the week. They either stay at home, or, if they go at all, they sit around and talk about worldly matters until those who are more diligent in the Lord's service actually begin it. Then they go in and sit down, and are almost as idle spectators while the service is going on, feeling no actual interest in it. If such as these were to become as indolent in their business matters as they are in the service of the Lord's house, they would be bankrupt in a very short time. Others there are who attend the meetings pretty well on the first day of the week (for on that day they have nothing else to do), but they will take no interest in any other department of the Lord's work. When the protracted meeting comes on, they will work industriously and hard every day in the week, and be too tired to go to the meeting at night; and, so far as they are concerned, the meeting has to drag along without them. In fact, protracted meetings, and especially in daytime through the week, have to be run mainly by the preacher and the sisters. A stranger dropping in at an average protracted meeting in daytime through the week would think the women were all widows, so few men would be in evidence. While the main and leading purpose in protracted meetings is, if possible, to convert sinners and thus enlarge the number of the saved, they are intended also to edify the church. But these industrious and very businesslike brethren have no time for any share in so grand a work. With them their temporal interests are far more important than the salvation of souls. They seek first their business interests and let the spiritual interests take care of themselves; and this, too, in the face of the fact that the meeting has been arranged for months before it comes off, and they have had all that time in which to get ready for the meeting. But they fail to do this, and find themselves in the midst of the hardest push of the season. There is no apology for this. They could easily do otherwise.

All such people are exceedingly indolent as to the Lord's work and the salvation of souls. Protracted meetings might be doubly interesting and profitable if all would seek first, as of first importance, the kingdom of God and his righteousness, making all temporal things of secondary interest. Men have six days in the week to look after temporal things and one day to look after spiritual interests, the welfare of the soul. They have, by the usual customs of the country, fifty weeks in the year to attend to the temporal affairs of life, and only about two weeks, at most, to attend to the protracted meeting. Yet, after all this, when the protracted meetings have been appointed for months beforehand, very many of the brethren have no time to attend them. This keeps the cause of Christ in a drag, and is very discouraging to those who are trying to carry on the work of the Lord. It will be impossible for brethren that do this way to prove that they love the Lord and lost sinners as much as they do their own temporal interests. Any man can look ahead and arrange his business so as to give a week or two in the year to a protracted meeting, if he would think of it beforehand and make his arrangements that way; and all who really love the Lord more than they love the world will do this. The love of the world freezes out love for the Lord and love for the souls of the unsaved. The carelessness that is manifested on the part of many church members in regard to the salvation of souls is fearful; and if the estimate were truly made of the number of disciples who neglect the Lord's work to attend to their own business affairs, it would be alarming. Yet the word of God says: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." (1 Cor. 15: 58.) Since the kingdom of God and his righteousness are first, both in matters of time and importance, whenever there is a conflict between worldly business and the Lord's spiritual work, it is better by far to let business wait, and attend to the spiritual demands first. The above passage, to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord," requires this; and no man is filling its demands when he neglects the Lord's work to carry on his own ordinary business.

"Fervent in spirit" expresses much. To be fervent in spirit in the Lord's service indicates that one is always alive to the interest of the Master's cause and always watching his chances to do the Master's work; and such a one will not allow his worldly business to interfere with the service the Lord requires. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." When important work of the Lord is to be done, the man that is "fervent in spirit" and "always abounding in the work of the Lord" will be ever ready to do that first; and still, when that is done, he will find plenty of time to carry on business matters. There is certainly a very large amount of selfishness among those who claim to be the Lord's people; for they consider their own interests, utterly disregarding the interests of others. Paul says: "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." (Phil. 2: 4.) So many of those claiming to be in the narrow way are looking to their own personal interests in everything; their own business gets all their time and money, and they have no time nor money to look after the destitute. When it comes to the matter of saving souls, they feel no concern about the matter beyond their own souls, and let others look out for themselves. Very many such give neither money nor time in trying to save others, and such will likely find in the end that they are entirely too selfish to save their own souls. It is exceedingly doubtful if men too selfish and too indifferent to take any interest in the salvation of others have interest enough in the subject to save their own souls. A man so selfish as this is too selfish to love Christ. Paul says: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha." (1 Cor. 16: 22.) The plain English of the last part of this passage is: Let him be accursed when the Lord comes. This expresses a fearful ending for those who do not love the Lord. Those who do not love the Lord do not his will, except what they think pertains to their own individual salvation. The requirement of Christ at the hands of his disciples is that they sound out the word to others—that they do as he commanded his apostles to do in the matter of proclaiming, or sounding out, the word, so far as in them lies. When they fail to do this, they disregard the words of Jesus; they disregard him, for he says: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me. . . . He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings." (John 14: 21-24.) So a man that will not do what Jesus says do does not love him. He says again: "If a man love me, he will keep my words." Hence, a man that is too selfish to take any interest in the salvation of others, and will make no effort to save them, does not love Jesus, and will be accursed when he comes, if he does not speedily repent and reform his life.

Very many persons are depending upon going to heaven on much less than the conditions upon which God has promised to save men, on much less than his word requires. Such are never his approved servants, and will be told so at the last day, when he shall say to them: "I never knew you [I never approved you as my servants]; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." No doubt many will be wonderfully disappointed when they hear this sentence at the last day; but many will be certain to hear it, for Jesus says so. Men that are fervent in spirit and are serving the Lord are doing his bidding in all things to the best of their ability. All such are striving to enter in at the strait gate. They are not willing to take any chances on their salvation; they want to do all of the Lord's will, for it is only to such that the promise of heaven is given. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Jesus himself has given us an example of obedience to the Father's will; for he "became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." (Phil. 2: 8.) "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 8, 9.) He was made perfect through suffering, because in suffering he learned obedience. Shall we, poor mortals of earth, expect to be saved without obedience, without doing his will? Those who are selfish, and who love the world and self more than they love the Lord, never learn obedience; and, besides, they never learn self-denial! Jesus says: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Only those who do this are worthy to be called his "disciples."

What we need, therefore, is such earnestness, such fervency of spirit, as will lead all the members of the churches to be diligent in doing the work of the Lord—diligent in every department of the Lord's work. All need to be diligent in reading and studying the word of God, that they may find out what the Lord will have them do, and then be earnest and faithful in doing it. They should not fail to meet on the first day of the week to break bread; they should visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and keep themselves unspotted from the world; and they should exert themselves in the matter of sounding out the word of God to the unsaved. If all would do these things faithfully, churches would grow, the number of the saved would multiply, and thus in the churches the will of God would be done on earth, as in heaven. There would then be no longer such coldness and indifference on the part of any of the members, no dragging in the Lord's work anywhere along the line; all would then be alive to the work, and the cause of truth would prosper, the Lord would be honored, and all would rejoice. E. G. S.

These two things, prayer and thanksgiving, are associated together in one form or another in the Bible, and they reasonably stand related to each other; but, as a matter of fact, are they properly and vitally related to each other in the experience of the most of Christians? Is one's thanksgiving equal to the fervor of his praying? Is one as thankful for what he receives in answer to his prayers as he is earnest in praying for what he desires? I fear that such is not the case with a large number of Christians. Of course it is something of which no human being has a definite and extensive knowledge. One's judgment of the question may be partly based on his observation of his own inclinations and habits. From this point of view, I apprehend that in many instances the thanksgiving is not nearly equal to the praying. We are very anxious to receive a certain blessing from God, and then, having received it in answer to our prayer, we forget to express fervent thanks to God for the blessing. It is not always so, but it is often so, as I have observed in my own history. And have you not noticed how frequently David thanked God for having heard the voice of his supplications? You also recall the fact that many a time when you have asked a favor of a certain one, and he has granted it, you have politely thanked him for it. This is prayer and thanksgiving. Would we not receive a good deal more from God than we do if we were a great deal more thankful for what he has given us?—C. H. Wetherbe.

"Julius . . . gave [Paul] liberty to go unto his friends." Here is Paul still inspiring confidence. His look was his certificate; his tone was his letter of recommendation. There are some men who might have a whole library of testimonials, and you would not believe a word they said, notwithstanding the huge burden of stationery. There are other men who need no card, or letter, or indorsement; honesty lives in their eyes, breathes from their lips, warms in their hearty grasp. Paul inspiring confidence is Paul preaching in silence. For the moment he is deposed from the platform, which he made a throne; but his moral qualities, his spiritual elements, his inborn and sanctified forces of mind and heart, are continuing and completing the ministry of speech.—Joseph Parker.

MY SUMMER AMID ROYAL PALACES.

No sooner had I stepped ashore from the Oceanic than the question was asked me for publication: "You have had abundant opportunity this summer of studying royalty in Europe. What do you think of it in comparison with republican simplicity?" As this question has come to me the third time, I proceed to answer it, though somewhat reluctantly.

Yes, I have had an opportunity of seeing the inside of palaces, and communing with princes and imperial households, such as has seldom been granted to persons unofficial. The publication of my husband's sermons in all the languages of Europe for many years seemed to open every door I might wish to enter. And the first remark I desire to make, in reply to the question as to the contrast between republican simplicity and royal manners, is that there is no contrast at all. The higher in station, the more unpretending the personage. It is the people who are afraid of losing their place, or who are struggling for something higher, that take on airs. The higher the prince or princess, the emperor or empress, the more unconventional. Republican simplicity is no more marked than royal simplicity.

While the "showrooms" of palaces may be jeweled, and richly upholstered, and embanked with lustrous statuary, and aglow with masterpieces of painting, the "living rooms" of European potentates are for the most part as plain as the rooms of people ordinarily prosperous. While the tourist, catalogue in hand, is permitted to pass through sleeping apartments which were once occupied by some Marie Antoinette, or Napoleon, or Maria Teresa, and the pillows of the couch and the canopy are ablaze with splendor, for the most part the sleeping apartments are as unpretending as a hundred homes in the same city of Berlin, or Vienna, or St. Petersburg, or Copenhagen. While the banquet of a king or queen might easily swamp what we would call "many thousands of dollars," and the gleam of the chalice and the flash of the plate are something to be remembered for a lifetime, the ordinary breakfast or luncheon or dinner of a palace is as plain as ordinary cutlery and tablecloth and ice pitcher can make it. The breakfast room at Stockholm, where King Oscar and his Queen sit, morning after morning, is probably as simple as the breakfast room of many of those who read this sketch. When Emperor Francis Joseph invites any one to dine with him at Vienna, he sometimes apologizes for the plainness of the meal. Mr. Gladstone, who was in some respects a king, called the repast to which he invited my husband at Hawarden "a few snacks."

The pomp of royalty is seen on great occasions, but no persons, however highly born, can always walk on stilts. The vast expense of princely and imperial households is in the support of official attendants, who must be ready to respond at the first call, though that call may not come more than once a year, or once in five years. Hundreds of horses must be ready, though some of them may never be harnessed for service, except at a royal marriage, a coronation, or an imperial obsequy, and those occasions are very far apart.

The conversation of these people is surprisingly familiar. The Empress of Russia, without any hesitation, expressed to me the preference she had for the Chinese above the Japanese. She said: "The Japanese may pretend to be friendly, but they stab you in the dark." She cannot forget that when Nicholas, now her husband, was traveling in Japan, he received a ruffian stroke that felled him senseless, and that now, when the Emperor is excited or overworked, the Japanese wound of many years ago still disturbs him.

The Crown Prince of Denmark, in style and language that we are familiar with in our own homes, said to us, "Come, let me show you into my den;" and then he took us through his study. And the Crown Princess said to me: "Come, let me show you my garden. You will find it as quiet as though it were many miles from human habitation, though only five miles from Copenhagen." With what simplicity the Dowager Empress of Russia showed us her pictures, and asked us about where we had been, and invited us to come again on the morrow! Simplicity reigns in all the high places we were permitted to visit.

But one must go abroad in order to fully appreciate home life in America. There are more happy people in our country than in any other land. Great palaces and royal families, however kind and benevolent and exemplary, imply a multitude of people with not enough to eat or wear or shelter them. I had rather live ten years in America than thirty years in any other country. While there is no contrast between republican simplicity and royal manners, there is a contrast, wide and awful, between our country—where every healthy and industrious man can make a comfortable living—and monarchic lands, where poverty is the common inheritance of the people. Thus much have I learned from my journeyings this summer in the capitals of Europe.—Eleanor M. Talmage, in Christian Herald.

THE INDIANS' THANKSGIVING.

The first Thanksgiving was appointed by Governor Bradford, at Plymouth, Mass., in 1621, the year following the landing of the Pilgrims, in order that the colonists, in a more special way, could rejoice together at having all things in good and plenty. In preparation for the feast, gunners were sent into the woods for wild turkeys, which abounded there in great numbers; kitchens were made ready for preparing the feast—especially the large one in Dame Brewster's house, which was under the immediate direction and charge of Priscilla Molines, she who afterwards became the wife of John Alden—while a messenger was dispatched to invite Massasoit, the chief of the friendly tribe, to attend the celebration.

Early on the morning of the appointed Thursday—about the first of November—Massasoit and ninety of his warriors arrived on the outskirts of the village, and, with wild yells, announced their readiness to enjoy the hospitality of their white brethren. The little settlement, which then consisted of seven dwellings and four public buildings, was soon astir with men, women, and children, who gave the Indians a hearty welcome, as they filed into the large square in front of the Governor's house. Soon the roll of a drum announced the hour of prayer, for no day was begun without this religious service. Then followed a holiday of feasting and recreation, which continued not only that day, but during the two succeeding days. The usual routine of duties was suspended; the children romped about in merry play; the young men indulged in athletic sports and games in friendly rivalry with the Indians; the little Pilgrim army of twenty men, under the leadership of Miles Standish, went through its drill and manual of arms, to the great delight and astonishment of the natives, while the women busied themselves in the careful preparation of the excellent meals, which were eaten in the open air.—Clifford Howard, in Ladies' Home Journal.

PROTECTING HIS RIGHTS.

The people who are too anxious about their own "rights" are often as mistaken and as amusing as the rooster which "Uncle Silas" watched, and tells about in an exchange.

"What was I laughing at?" said Uncle Silas, repeating the boys' question, as they gathered around the chair where he was resting under the shadow of the maples.

"Well, I was just watching what went on in the next yard there, and laughing at a picture of human nature.

"You see, the women folks are cleaning the house, and they have moved a lot of things out on the porch—chairs, pictures, and such like—and they put one big looking-glass where it leaned against the porch railing, glass side this way.

"I don't know how their chickens came to be out, for they don't generally have the freedom of the yard; but anyway, they were out, and that old red rooster was marching along as lofty as you please, when, just as he got opposite the porch, he stretched up his neck to crow, and saw another red rooster crowing back at him from the looking-glass. That was too much to bear. He would not allow any trespassing on his ground, and he flew up and struck his head such a blow against the glass that it knocked him flat.

"He seemed to think, at first, that the other fellow had had the best of it, and he picked himself up and looked around rather cautiously. But there was another rooster in sight, none on the ground nor under the porch, and, after perking his head this way and that, he seemed to think he had really driven off the enemy. So he ruffled his feathers, stretched his neck again, and began to crow over his victory, till all at once he spied the other rooster. And it was crowing, too.

"It was funny to watch him, and I can't tell you how many times he tried it. I believe he'd have been at it yet if some of the folks in the house hadn't seen him, and moved the glass for fear he'd break it.

"It was only a rooster's foolishness, of course," said the old man, "but it made me think of human beings that are always watching out for what they call their 'rights.'"

A PERTINENT QUESTION.

A boy of sixteen years was an applicant for a very desirable position in the office of a man noted for his kindness and generosity to his employees. After asking a number of questions, the gentleman said to the boy: "Where do you spend your evenings?"

The boy resented this question, and said, smartly: "My evenings are my own, and I spend them where I please."

"I make no claim on your time in the evening, my boy," said the gentleman, kindly, "but I think that I can tell a great deal about a boy's character if I know where and how he spends his evenings."

This gentleman must have had in mind the saying of the wise man: "I care not how a young man spends his days; let wisdom but direct his evenings, and his future is assured."

I have often thought of this saying when I have seen boys on the street late at night. One sees hundreds of them in the cities dawdling and idling away their time, when they might have the advantages of the reading rooms and free libraries provided for those who will use them. It is certain that many a boy takes his first lesson in crime when he is wandering around the streets in the evening. There are hundreds of men in prison and reformatories who would not be there if they had made wise use of their evenings when they were boys.

The old curfew law, requiring boys under a certain age to be in their homes by 8 o'clock in the evening, is being introduced in some towns, and there are many who think it a wise law.—H. H. H., in American Boy.

GENTLE COURTESY.

"A few months ago," says one who witnessed the incident, "I was passing through a pretty, shady street, where some boys were playing at baseball. Among their number was a little lame fellow, seemingly about twelve years old—a pale, sickly-looking child, supported on two crutches, and who evidently found much difficulty in walking, even with such assistance.

"The lame boy wished to join the game, for he did not seem to see how much his infirmity would be in his own way, and how much it would hinder the progress of such an active sport as baseball.

"His companions, very good-naturedly, tried to persuade him to stand at one side, and let another take his place, and I was glad to note that none of them hinted that he would be in the way, but that they all objected for fear he would hurt himself."

"Why, Jimmy," said one, 'you cannot run, you know.'

"O, hush!" said another, the tallest in the party. 'Never mind, I will run for him;' and he took his place by Jimmy's side, preparing to act. 'If you were like him,' he said aside to the other boys, 'you would not want to be told of it all the time.'

"As I passed on, I thought to myself: There is a true gentleman."—Exchange.

THE MONKEYS' CHRISTMAS.

A Christmas tree was planned last year for the monkeys in the Lincoln Park Zoo, Chicago. Head Animal Keeper McCursan arranged the affair. He selected a tree strong enough to bear the weight of the little animals when they should begin to swarm over it after the eatables, and placed it in the center of the cage on Christmas morning. It bore plenty of good things for all the monkeys.

There were twenty-six monkeys in the animal house, and they each got a present. Santa Claus was not there, unless the workmen who set the tree in place can come in for the title. But Santa Claus would have been a superfluity with monkeys, anyway, and they got along quite as well without him.

There was a Christmas tree for the monkeys the year before last, and it gave them the greatest day's fun they had known since they left the African forests. For hours they kept up a mad chase through the green branches, eating apples and pop corn and candy, and quarreling with one another over the choicest bits.—Philadelphia North American.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It seems, from the report of the Arkansas Baptist State Convention, by Prof. John R. Sampey, in the Baptist Argus, that Brother Hall's mission board movement got a black eye. The Baptist Argus calls the convention an "Arkansas victory of organized effort over the mission board leaders." Editorially the Baptist Argus, commenting on the report of the Arkansas Baptist State Convention, says: "We call it a 'victory;' it is nothing else than a victory for progress in the Master's work in Arkansas. We have had the sad spectacle of the State paper and the representative of the American Baptist Publication Society joining hands with the gospel mission leaders, J. N. Hall and B. M. Boyard, in the effort to destroy the work of the State Board in Arkansas. We confess it has been a humiliating spectacle. Brother Clark, of the Arkansas Baptist, begged the forgiveness of the brethren, and promised not to do so any more. . . . We trust this is the beginning of the end of gospel mission notions in Arkansas." It seems, from the above, that Brother Hall, as a leader of the Baptists in Arkansas, is about knocked out. Brother Hall will find it quite hard to control the party, especially when they have such men as A. J. Barton to raise the money. The report says that one of the men who went to the convention to oppose it, when he listened to the report of A. J. Barton, who showed that all expenses had been met and a balance of $666.68 left on hand, said to his neighbor: "We must have that man at whatever cost." The fact that the machine was so successful in raising money disarmed the opposition. It will do it every time, Brother Hall. Any machine will be indorsed by the average denominational worker that will raise the funds. About the only thing for Brother Hall to do is to oppose the whole denominational business and belong only to the church which includes all Christians.

There has been a disposition on the part of those who are opposed to Christian missions to blame the Christian missionaries with the recent disturbances in China. President McKinley's recent message to Congress should forever bury this idea: "The telegraph and the railway spreading over their land, the steamers plying on their way, the merchant and the missionary penetrating, year by year, farther into the interior, became to the Chinese mind types of an alien invasion, changing the course of their national life and fraught with vague forebodings of disaster to their beliefs and their self-control." All of which goes to show conclusively that the Chinese are opposed to all progress and civilization. They prefer to live in ignorance and superstition. They saw that as foreigners mixed and mingled with them their old-time customs and habits must fade away before the dawning light of civilization. Hence, the antiforeign sentiment grew until it was fanned into a flame that broke out to destroy all foreigners. If now the powers will be guided by the principles of the meek and lowly Nazarene, and will labor for the betterment of humanity, instead of selfish aggrandizement, God will overrule this whole disturbance for the good of all people.

It appears that the reflection of President McKinley is having a fine effect on the Filipinos. A special from Manila to the Nashville American of December 3, 1900, says: "Sunday in Vigan was a great day for the American cause. Twenty-two hundred natives of the region, nearly all fighting rebels, crowded the church, and took the oath of allegiance to the United States. The oath was administered by the priest. All but five hundred of those sworn were bolomen. The number included the twelve hundred bolomen who had previously surrendered. The proceedings in the church occupied the entire day, and included an address by General Young and an exhortation by the priest. Scarcely any rebels remain in the vicinity of Santa Maria. General Young attributes this fact to three causes—the reflection of President McKinley, the arrival of a stronger body of troops, and the especially rigid enforcement of war measures and the deportation of prisoners to Manila. He reports that it is necessary to occupy all the barracks in order to protect the natives from the vengeance of Tegalog raiders."

As Christians, we should seriously reflect on the fact that the so-called "Christian nations" are increasing their navies and standing armies. The President, in his last message to Congress, recommends that the standing army of the United States be increased. In addition to this, large sums of money are being appropriated for the improvement of our navy. We should ask ourselves: What does all this mean? It cannot be possible that it indicates the growth of the Christian sentiment and spirit; it does not foreshadow that perfection which should be attained under the reign of the Messiah, of which Isaiah prophesied: "And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Will you listen to even a greater than Isaiah? "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." As armies for the destruction of life are increasing, what about the army enlisted under the blood-stained banner of Christ? Is that army increasing in numbers, zeal, consecration, and holiness? Is it true that some who have enlisted under Christ take more interest in the army of the nation than they do in that cause which is defended with "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God?" These are things that demand our very serious reflection.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate makes a center shot at some of the fashionable churches: "In some churches the organist and the organ take up so much time and space that the preacher stands on but 'a narrow neck of land between two boundless seas' of voluntaries and offertories before the sermon, and doxologies and glorias after the sermon. A peninsula of preaching piercing the Sunday service does not connect with a continent of salvation behind it, nor foreshadow a new world emerging out of the musical waves which wash and waste it on three sides." The preacher that will preach to such churches, and fail to fearlessly condemn such practices, is not worthy of sympathy. The preacher should endeavor to teach such churches the way of the Lord more perfectly. When they refuse to hear the truth, he should turn to those who will hear it. When he does this, he will hardly be troubled with "organs, voluntaries, offertories, doxologies, and glorias." Let them go, preach the gospel to the poor; let them go into the highways and hedges; then they will not be troubled with these worldly displays, but will be gladly received by those who are hungering and thirsting after the truth. It is sad that so much of the worship is with a pleasing spirit. There is too much "eyeservice, as men-pleasers," and not enough of that service which is in spirit and truth. Some churches have grown so worldly that they remind one of a theater. The church should discard the worldly garments in which she has robed herself, and, day by day, do "the will of God from the heart."

PRONENESS TO EVIL.

The dealings of God with the people under the law of Moses are types of his dealings with us under the law of Christ, and they are written for our admonition, lest we sin as they sinned. Their disposition to sin and turn from God was a type of the same disposition in us. They are written to admonish and warn us against the tendencies to forsake God and turn to idols of our own invention. Idol worshipers were much more steadfast in their fidelity to their idols than the servants of God were to him. Isaiah (1: 2-7), referring to this proneness to rebel against and wander from God, says: "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: for the Lord hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider. Ah sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters: they have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward. Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more: the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment. Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire: your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as overthrown by strangers."

This was typical of what would take place under Jesus Christ. God had taken Abraham from his father's house, brought him into the land of Canaan, given it to him and his seed for a possession, had watched over and shielded and blessed them and made a strong and mighty nation of them, and they had turned from him, rebelled against him, and worshiped and served idols rather than the true and living God, the Creator of the heavens and the earth, and their Preserver and Benefactor. Isaiah (1: 9-15) tells them, except for a very small remnant that remained faithful as saving leaven, they would have been destroyed as Sodom and Gomorrah had been: "Except the Lord of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah. Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats. When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting. Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth, they are a trouble unto me: I am weary to bear them. And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood." They had become so wicked that all their service was abominable to God.

The order of God's dealings with them was, when they turned from him, to punish them. He would inflict light punishment first, give them opportunity to repent under it; if they failed to turn to him, he would punish more severely, and continue this order until they repented or were destroyed. See Levit. 26: 3-12, 14-17, 21, 27-33, as to how he punishes, yet gives opportunity to repent, and if they fail to do so, he increases the punishment. This tendency to evil, to turn from the true and living God, the Creator and Ruler of the universe, to the worship of idols made by their own hands, was marked and almost universal among the Jews. When they worshiped God, they prospered and were at peace with the world; when they turned to idolatry, poverty, want, and disaster befell them; but it did not cause them to cease to worship idols. It was not because the service of the idols was lighter or less exacting than the service of God. Among other idol worship, the heathen offered their own children to Molech by fire. "Even their sons and their daughters they have burnt in the fire to their gods." (Deut. 12: 31.) This was the worship of the nations that were driven out of Canaan; but Israel fell into the same worship. "They have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt offerings unto Baal." (Jer. 19: 5.) There was that in idol worship that aroused the lusts and passions which, when clothed with the sanction of religion, led into all shames and crimes and depravity. For this worship they would make sacrifices which they would not make to serve the Lord. The history of the Jews (they were then the best people on earth) shows their continual proneness to follow after evil and to make sacrifices in idol worship they could not be induced to make in the worship of the true God.

Jeremiah (2: 9-22) presents the greater proneness of the servants of God to turn from him than were the worshipers of idols to turn from their gods: "Wherefore I will yet plead with you, saith the Lord, and with your children's children will I plead. For pass over the isles of Chittim, and see; and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing. Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit. Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water. . . . For of old time I have broken thy yoke, and burst thy bands; and thou saidst, I will not transgress; when upon every high hill and under every green tree thou wanderest, playing the harlot. Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed: how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me? For though thou wash thee with niter, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord God."

Worshipers of idols were never known to give up the worship of the idol; it was impossible to keep worshipers of God true to him. It was seldom a family or nation would continue faithful for over two generations in succession, often not over one.

These are lessons for us on whom the last dispensation of God to man is come. Jesus recognizes the same proneness to turn from him by his followers. They would follow him in days of prosperity and plenty, but when dark days came and evils threatened, they walked with him no more.

In the first epistles written to the churches, they were warned that the man of sin, the mystery of iniquity, that would sit in the seat of God and lead many away from God, was already at work among the disciples. Paul marveled, wondered, at the readiness with which the Galatians gave up the gospel that saved them to turn to another gospel that was no gospel, and asked them who had bewitched them, that they had so soon turned from the truth that had saved them. In all ages down to the present, it has been, and is, much easier to turn men from truth to error than to turn them from error to truth; it is easier to pull them down than to lift them up. The proneness of the heart is toward evil and sin. Men cling to the traditions of the fathers and the teachings of men more tenaciously than they did to the laws and ordinances of God. They do so yet. Brother McCaleb finds it difficult to convert the heathens from their idolatry; he finds it almost as difficult to hold Christians up to the first living truths and principles of the gospel—to wit, as Jesus denied himself to save us, we must deny ourselves to save the lost. Professed Christians today cling to and work more vigorously in and for the inventions and ordinances of men than they can be induced to do for the law and appointments of God. Men with human creeds cling more tenaciously to them than those do which have the divine creed. Quite a band of disciples has been gathered during the century now ending, pledged to take the Scriptures as their only and all-sufficient rule of faith and practice. They turn from it and give it up with ten times the readiness that the Presbyterians will give up the Westminster Confession of Faith, with its horrid dogma of infant damnation for sins they never committed. Methodists cling to their human creed and Baptists cling to their unscriptural usages so much more tenaciously than do disciples to the one God-given creed and divine order of work and worship. This giving up the divine for the human, this preference for the human over the divine, has pertained to all ages and all races of the human family. It is the besetting sin of humanity; it is a manifestation of the inherent disposition in men to change "the truth of God into a lie," and to worship and serve "the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen." (Rom. 1: 25.) The reason of this is, the appetites, desires, and lusts of the flesh are strong in man, and they more readily adopt and affiliate with the human will than the divine will. The human creeds, the human institutions, and the human methods all more readily harmonize with the fleshly, human nature than the divine appointments. The human spirit dwells in the human creeds, the human institutions, the human usages and methods, and finds human nature is more at home with and cherishes fellowship with the human rather than the divine. But the human institutions and spirit cannot lift up, refine, purify, and fit man for fellowship with God. Only the divine Spirit, dwelling in the divine creed, the divine institutions, and the divine ways, can lift up, refine, and fit man for the fellowship and home of God forever.

Being warned of these dangers and this proneness to the evil, what manner of persons ought we to be in avoiding the least tendency to depart from God and his appointments and to follow after the ways of man? God has warned us of the evil, that we may avoid it. D. L.

AS TO WHEN THE PASSOVER WAS EATEN.

Brother Lipscomb: How could Christ eat the passover on the day preceding the one given in the law, and yet render obedience to the Father? I cannot find any place where the Jews were to have a cup at the passover; but Christ had one. (See Luke 22: 17.) The most of the scriptures used by the writers of the clippings I send you never appear in the Gospel Advocate; neither do the scriptures, as taught by the disciples of Christ, appear in their papers. So of each denomination. If you or some one to whom you may hand the clippings will write an article along the line of argument used in them, it will be appreciated by me and others that I know of. I am at a place where there are no loyal disciples to meet with. I have been instrumental in bringing some of my neighbors into the kingdom by immersion, but it would not be long until they were in the Christian Church. Their "pastor" brings me tracts, and has been trying his best to get me to meet with them; but I cannot do it.

JOHN F. BERKEY.

It was likely because you failed to meet and worship with these brethren you were instrumental in bringing into Christ that they went with others. People cannot be kept true to Christ without doing his will.

The regular passover lamb was killed on the fourteenth day of Nisan, and was eaten on the "evening" of that day, as we would call it, but after the fifteenth day had begun, according to the Jewish division of time. On the fifteenth day there was a feast, or festival; especially was there a holy convocation. No servile work was performed, and it was regarded as a Sabbath. It is nowhere said that Jesus was to be slain on the fourteenth day of this first month, on which day the passover lamb was slain, but it is generally supposed he was. It is thought this must be so in fulfillment of the prophecy supposed to be embraced in the type. Thursday, when he ate the supper, was the thirteenth of Nisan. The passover lamb was killed in the afternoon, to prepare the passover supper; and on Friday, the fifteenth of Nisan, Jesus was crucified. This was the preparation day, and on Saturday they rested. The Sabbath was observed. On Sunday morning the women came to anoint him, and found the sepulcher empty.

While wine was not appointed in the original passover supper, in Num. 15: 2-5 we read: "When ye be come into the land of your habitations, which I give unto you, and will make an offering by fire unto the Lord, a burnt offering, or a sacrifice in performing a vow, or in a freewill offering, or in your solemn feasts, to make a sweet savor unto the Lord, of the herd, or of the flock: then shall he that offereth his offering unto the Lord bring a meat offering of a tenth deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of a hin of oil. And the fourth part of a hin of wine for a drink offering shalt thou prepare with the burnt offering or sacrifice, for one lamb." This wine was to be added to these offerings, or sacrifices, and the "solemn feasts" embraces the passover feast, the feast of weeks, or Pentecost, and the feast of ingatherings. The wine by this order was added to the lamb or bullock sacrificed in any of these feasts. We find after this the wine was used in the passover supper, and Jesus used it in his observance of it. Jewish writers say four cups of wine were drunk by those eating the supper, at various stages of it.

The articles of which our brother speaks are from the Gospel Messenger, the paper of the German Baptists, or "Tunkers," or "Brethren," as they call themselves. The articles sent in the main are excellent, and I may at some time publish them. They are clearly in error on some points. They teach that there was a general and full feast and after it the loaf and cup for the Lord's Supper. So they, in observing the Lord's Supper, have a general feast, at which they eat and drink to satisfy their appetites and at the close partake of the bread and wine. It is true Jesus established the Supper at the close of the passover supper, in which they all ate to satisfy their hunger. The church at Corinth thought, like these Brethren, that the Lord's Supper was to be accompanied by this feast, and they engaged in it; but Paul very plainly pointed out the mistake. This eating the meal to satisfy the hunger was not the Lord's Supper, so he told them to eat at their homes to satisfy the hunger, and when they came together to observe only that which he had received of the Lord and taught to them—that is, to partake of the loaf in it, discerning the body, and of the cup in it, discerning the blood, of Jesus Christ. Paul plainly teaches these were the only observances perpetuated in the church. There are other points of error in these articles, and I would gladly publish the articles, approve what is good, and point out the errors and give reason for them, if the Gospel Messenger would publish our articles. I believe a free and kindly interchange of convictions and reasons for them will bring union among Christians. D. L.

Brother Lipscomb: Again I ask you for space in the Gospel Advocate, that I may appeal to the brethren and sisters for their help. Just think of it! I ask you for the small sum of ten cents each to help me buy a lot and build a neat little house on it, in Plant City, Fla. Ministers, this house will be yours; elders, it will be yours; deacons, it will be yours; brethren, it will be yours; sisters, it will be yours. This house is greatly needed, and I am here and will push the work ahead just as soon as I get your help. I want all the preachers, elders, deacons, brethren, and sisters to send me ten cents each, and let me go ahead with the work. You all will never miss the dime you put in this work. I have made a start and I am going forward.

H. M. MOBLEY.

To respond to the above would cost about two and one-half cents each letter, or twenty-five per cent of the money given, to get it to him. Twenty-five dollars out of one hundred dollars or one hundred dollars out of five hundred dollars to get the contributions to the place would be rather costly. We ought to do better than that.

How few of us recognize and receive into our hearts all the lesser daily blessings which God pours down upon us! How many of us are like Haman, to whom the Persian king's favor and the real sovereignty over his empire and everything that gratified ambition could expect all turned to ashes in his mouth because one poor Jew sat there, and would not get up when he passed! "All this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate." Ah, we all have our Mordecais, and we say to ourselves: "God has given me this mercv, that blessing, and the other one; but it all turns to bitterness because I cannot get that other thing that I want. It is a little one, but I want it, for without it everything else is nothing." There are some of us who, if there is the faintest suspicion of a cloud away down on the horizon, shiver and complain as if there were no sunshine. One sorrow can blot out a thousand joys; one disappointment can more than cancel a whole series of fulfilled expectations. Alas, that it should be so! Brother, be sure that you take all the blessings of your daily life that God bestows upon you, and do not be one of God's fractious children, who care for none of his gifts because they are whimpering for the moon, and nothing else will satisfy them. Take what is given, and you will find that it is far more than you expected, and your hands and heart will be full.—Alexander MacLaren.

ARMSTRONG.

The death angel has visited the sweet, happy home of Brother and Sister W. N. Armstrong, of Horner, Tenn., and claimed for its victim their sweet little son, Grady. Grady was only seven months and ten days old, but had been here long enough to be very precious to his parents. From their loving embrace he has gone to be with the angels that behold the face of God. Father and mother, you have more interest in heaven now than you had before Grady went there. Press on, then, in the good way in which you are traveling, and you will meet little Grady in that "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." C. E. HOLT.

MIDYETT.

Little Charlie is gone. Another link in the family chain of Brother and Sister James H. Midyett has been removed. This is the third visit the death messenger has made to this little family, each time carrying away the youngest child, leaving deep gloom and sad disappointment for the heart-broken parents, brothers, and sisters. Little Charlie (aged five years) was so very full of life and affection it is hard indeed for them to give him up. But they know the link is not lost; it has only been removed to be inserted in another chain, the golden chain connecting earth with the glory land. May these three golden links only draw the rest of this good, pious, Christian family still more firmly heavenward, where their treasures are being carried one by one.

LAWRENCE.

Sister Lawrence, the wife of Brother Church Lawrence, died on September 26, 1900, near Fulton, Ky.; aged fifty-two years, two months, and seventeen days. She was a member of the church of Christ twenty-six years last August. She was loved by all who knew her; was a zealous member of the church, a good mother and companion. We regret very much to have to give her up, but our loss is her eternal gain. To Brother Lawrence and the children we would say: Weep not as those who have no hope, but live so as to meet her in the sweet by and by, where there are no parting hands to be taken or briny tears to be shed—in that home of eternal rest, where all is love, joy, and peace.

HOOTEN.

Brother William J. Hooten departed this life on March 3, 1900, in his thirty-first year. He had been a member of the Lewisburg congregation since his boyhood; and while of a retiring disposition, he was firm in the faith, and left evidence that he was prepared to enter upon life eternal. He left a devoted wife and three little boys, the youngest, Julius Johnson, surviving him only a few months, having been afflicted almost from his birth. He was laid to rest on October 9, being a little more than two years old. Thus we see every day that we have no permanency

CLEIBRON.

Brother Ed. Cleibron died at his home at Brush Creek, Smith County, Tenn., on the evening of November 8, 1900. He was forty-eight years old at the time of his death. He obeyed the gospel on September 27, 1900, and since then he had lived a new life. He was an earnest worker in the vineyard of the Lord, and is greatly missed in that community as a citizen and also as a Christian. He held a warm place in the hearts of many people of that county and the adjoining counties. He leaves a wife, three sons, and two daughters, besides a host of friends and relatives, to mourn their loss. His wife, one son, and one daughter are members of the church, and should enjoy the hope of meeting him again. It would be much better for those who are not Christians to become such and live in the prospect of an endless life. Brother Cleibron was well up in the Scriptures, and contended earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints.

SALMON.

By request, I write of the death of Brother Archie Salmon. Brother Salmon was a son of R. H. Salmon, of Calloway County, Ky. He was twenty-three years of age; was baptized into Christ by Brother Utley at Blood River in June; and departed this life on November 4, 1900. He died of scrofula, and was buried beside his mother. He leaves a father, one sister, two brothers, and many friends to mourn their loss. His remains lie in the Salmon graveyard. He had been a cripple for four years. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." Our loss is their gain and God's glory. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Dear father, brothers, and sister, look up: cast your burden upon the Lord, for he careth for you. May we all try to live faithfully here, so that when we, too, are called to go we may be prepared for that home where hearts neither ache, bleed, nor break over withered hopes and blighted prospects, but where life is a treasure sublime. May God's richest grace abide with the bereaved. GERTRUDE FREELAND.

TAYLOR.

Death has entered the home of Brother and Sister John Taylor and snatched from them their youngest child, Wesley Moore. He was born on December 19, 1895, and died on October 24, 1900, of that dread disease, membranous croup. He was the pet of the household, and his cute, bright sayings made him a general favorite among his relatives. Especially will his mother miss his sweet, innocent prattle; for while his little brother (the only remaining child) was at school, he was her constant companion, and would often say to her: "Mamma, you could not do without me, could you?" But now that voice is stilled, and life has lost much of its brightness to those who loved him best. How consoling to them it should be to know their precious child is safe in the loving Shepherd's fold, forever free from all of earth's sorrows and temptations! We pray that they may put their trust implicitly in our Heavenly Father, "who doeth all things well," and so live that they will meet their loved one in that beautiful city where there is "joy and gladness for evermore." COVEY.

Brother T. W. Covey died at his home on Saturday, October 27, 1900, about 8 o'clock P.M., after an illness of four weeks, from typhoid fever. He was about forty-four years old, and was a deacon in the church at New Salem, Va. He leaves a wife and six children, with others, to mourn his demise. One of the six children, "a man child," was born two weeks and a few days after the death of the father. Brother Covey was buried in the new burying ground at his home, where seven graves have been dug in the past twelve months. Only a short time ago a father of twelve children, a man who worked for Brother Covey, was buried there, and not long since the infant of that fatherless family of children was buried in the same graveyard. So it is that Death, with his sickle keen,

Thus it is now. When least expected, Death calls, and one by one all are dropping down the "troubled river." "Be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." J. T. SHOWALTER.

WILSON.

It has become my painful duty to record the death of Brother Walter Wilson, who died at the home of his grandfather, Mr. Berry Wilson, near Freeland, Henry County, Tenn., on November 10, 1900, after lingering for three weeks, of typhoid fever. He was in his nineteenth year. He obeyed the gospel in 1895, at the age of fourteen years, under the preaching of Brother Hall Calhoun. He leaves a devoted, Christian father, one brother, and one sister to mourn their loss. I have known him since he was a child, and must say the more I was with him, the more I loved him as a brother in Christ. The many Christian deeds of this brother will be missed by the poor of that community, but their loss is his gain. He met all with a smile, and was liked by all. He always filled his seat in his church, and lived a true and devoted Christian life. He was ready to help those that needed help. His body lies beside that of his mother, in a space in the cemetery at New Providence, Ky., which had been vacant twelve years awaiting his coming. Let all

DAVIS.

On October 6, 1900, the home of Brother and Sister C. H. Davis, at Little Lot, Tenn., was shrouded in gloom by the death of their oldest son, Cullie E. Davis, who was born on August 23, 1883. He obeyed the gospel on October 5, 1897, under the preaching of Brother Spivey. His life was brief; his race was short, but well run; and now comes rest. He was an obedient son, a devoted brother, and a faithful Christian. He will be greatly missed, not only at home, but at the Lord's house, for he was always there; but now his seat is vacant, and we will miss his clear, sweet voice, which joined in every song we used to sing. Now in the angelic choir Cullie sings songs unlawful for us to hear, but some day we shall hear him sing again, some day we shall see the fruitage of what was on earth a pure, noble, Christian boy. In his dying hour he prayed sweet prayers, quoting: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." He called his parents, brother, and sister to his bedside and told them to meet him in heaven. He said he could see a bright crown for him. When we think how bright the glories of the faithful are, how strong our hopes should be! Who that saw the parting hours of loved ones gone before could wish them back to suffer and die again? Few boys possessed brighter prospects than did Cullie, and few parents possessed brighter hopes of a child's brilliant future and of strong arms on which to lean in declining years; but here our fondest hopes are vain. When we see dear ones pass away in the triumphs of a living faith, we should console ourselves with the exceeding great and precious promise: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

EVANS.

On Sunday morning, November 4, 1900, at 8 o'clock, our dearly beloved Brother William Evans, of Hubbard, Texas, breathed his last. Brother Evans was born in Tennessee on March 8, 1820. He was approaching his eighty-first birthday when the disease (flux) caused his death. Brother Evans came to Texas from Tennessee several years ago, and has been a member of the church of Christ for about fifty years, and a faithful one, too. He has been a subscriber to the Gospel Advocate for several years, and loved the paper very much for its work's sake. When the seed of discord was sown at Hubbard, Brother Evans and a few other loyal disciples were driven out of the house on account of innovations. About three weeks before his death he made the remark that he wanted to fall in the work. So he did. At the time he was taken sick he was walking the streets, working for a protracted meeting which Brother J. S. Dunn and I were to soon begin. I saw him in town on Saturday before the meeting began on Sunday. He was hardly able to get about, but was still working for the meeting. He took his bed on the day the meeting began and died on the day it closed. The meeting lasted only eight days. The little band of disciples at Hubbard will miss him, for he was always regular in meeting at the appointed time. What is their loss is his gain. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." He showed by his walk and works that he lived a Christian and died in the Lord. He was buried at old Spring Hill Cemetery. I preached a short discourse at the grave. To the family and loved ones of Brother Evans let me say: Weep not as those that have no hope, but live true to all of God's commandments, that when you shall give up this life you may be prepared to meet Brother Evans in the glad city above. Brother Evans' family is very much scattered over Tennessee and Texas. O, let us all be prepared for the last great day!

1. Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.
2. Never trouble another for what you can do yourself.
3. Never spend your money before you have it.
4. Never buy what you do not want because it is cheap; it will be dear to you.

Cured by Swamp-Root.

To Prove what this Great Kidney Remedy Will Do for You, Every Reader of Gospel Advocate May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root, the one which we publish this week for the benefit of our readers speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy:

"Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 30, 1899.

"Dear Sirs: During three years I was frequently attacked with severe spells of sickness. Many of these sick spells kept me in bed, dangerously ill, from three weeks to three months, under the constant care of the best physicians in Kansas City. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, but I felt sure they were the cause of my trouble. Some doctors pronounced my case 'gall stones,' and said I could not live without a surgical operation, to which I would never consent. In May, 1898, I had the most severe attack. Then the doctors said I could not live. It was during this illness that a friend suggested that I try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. I began to take Swamp-Root regularly, and when I had used only three 50-cent bottles, I felt fine, and was able to do more work than I had done in four years. It has made a new woman of me. I have had only one slight attack since I began to take Swamp-Root, and that was caused by being drenched with rain and catching cold. This stomach trouble had bothered me for about twenty years, and had become chronic. I am now forty-four years of age, and feel much younger than I did ten years ago. My friends say I am looking younger every day. Five years ago I weighed only 104 pounds; I now weigh 185 pounds. I freely give this testimonial for the benefit of those who have suffered as I have.

"MRS. M. E. DALLAM,

"Proprietress of Criswell House, 211 West Fifth street, Kansas City, Mo."

Swamp-Root will do just as much for any housewife whose back is too weak to perform her necessary work, who is always tired and overwrought, who feels that the cares of life are more than she can stand. It is a boon to the weak and ailing.

How to Find Out If You Need Swamp-Root

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorders of these most important organs. The kidneys filter and purify the blood; that is their work. So when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty. If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince any one; you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

Many women suffer untold misery because the nature of their disease is not correctly understood. They are led to believe that womb trouble or female weakness of some sort is responsible for the many ills that beset womankind.

Neuralgia, nervousness, headache, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, rheumatism, a dragging pain or dull ache in the back, catarrh of the bladder, weakness, or hearing down sensation; profuse or scanty supply of urine, with strong odor; frequent desire to pass it night or day, with scalding or burning sensation; sediment in it after standing in bottle or glass for twenty-four hours—these all are unmistakable signs of kidney and bladder trouble.

Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are sleeplessness, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow, unhealthy complexion; plenty of ambition, but no strength.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, and is taken by doctors themselves, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

To prove its wonderful curative properties, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, also a pamphlet of valuable information pertaining to kidney and bladder troubles, by mail prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health—in fact, their very lives—to the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the Nashville Gospel Advocate.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

The number of phosphate mines in Tennessee has been doubled within the past twelve months, according to statistics just gathered at the State Bureau of Labor for the annual report of that department. The public lands disposed of during the year amount to 13,453,887.96 acres, including 62,423.09 acres of Indian lands, an increase of 4,271,474.80 over the preceding year. The total receipts from the sale of public lands during the fiscal year were $4,379,758.10, an increase of $1,309,620.76 over the preceding year.

The report of the Isthmian Canal Commission submitted by the President to Congress gives as the unanimous conclusion of that body that "the most practicable and feasible route for an isthmian canal under the control, management, and ownership of the United States is that known as the Nicaragua route." The commission estimates the cost of this route at two hundred million five hundred and forty thousand dollars. This estimate is much in excess of any heretofore made, and is due to increased dimensions and other features not heretofore considered.

The Monadnock Building, in Chicago, Ill., is a good-sized town of itself, having a daily population of close to, if not quite, five thousand. So vast is the postal business of this human hive that it has been found necessary to establish on the main floor a branch post office, with four mail carriers. The Monadnock block is four hundred feet long, seventy feet wide, sixteen stories high at one end and seventeen stories high at the other, and has in all twelve hundred offices. In one day over twenty thousand persons passed through one of its entrances; it has three means of ingress and egress.

The Division of Customs and Insular Affairs of the War Department has made public a summary of the first report of the Philippine Bureau of Forestry, organized in its present form under an order of the Military Governor, dated April 14, 1900. The director, Captain Ahearn, estimates the total number of tree species in the archipelago at nearly five hundred. Captain Ahearn states that from different sources of information he is led to believe the public forest lands comprise from one-fourth to possibly one-half the area of the Philippine Islands, or from twenty million to forty million acres. There are fully five million acres of virgin forest owned by the State in the Islands of Mindoro and Paragua. The island of Mindanao, of some twenty million acres, is almost entirely covered with timber, and even in the Province of Cagayan, on Luzon, there are more than two million acres of forest. He mentions tracts of virgin forests to be seen on the Southern Islands, where from ten thousand to twenty thousand cubic feet of magnificent timber per acre are standing, with trees more than one hundred and fifty feet in height, the trunks clear of branches for sixty feet, and more than four feet in diameter.

In Memoriam.

Mrs. Lucinda Allen died at the home of her son-in-law, Enoch Brown, on November 22, 1900. If she had lived until the following Sunday, November 25, she would have been seventy-six years old. Her maiden name was Newsom. In 1843 she and my father, James C. Anderson, were married. They lived happily together until September 12, 1857, when he died, leaving mother with four children to rear—two girls and two boys—the oldest being a daughter twelve years of age. In July, 1862, she and John H. Allen were married. He died on July 5, 1888. To this union two children—a daughter and a son—were born. In 1840 she was baptized into Christ. Her health had not been good for some time before her death, and we felt she could not be with us much longer; still we were not expecting the summons to come so soon. Her death was sudden and unexpected, no one being in the room with her, at the time, except her daughter, Sister Lulie Brown, and a colored woman. We are thankful that, though our hearts and homes are filled with sorrow and sadness, we sorrow not as those who have no hope. Mother's chief concern and greatest delight was to wait upon the Lord. She rests from her labors, and, truly, her works do follow her. She, indeed, leaves to her children and kindred the heritage of a good name. The verdict of all who knew her is: She was a good woman.
W. ANDERSON.

In publishing the above from Brother Anderson, I want to add a few things, having personally known Sister Allen, his mother, for nearly forty years, and knowing that she was a true, good woman. When a Christian has lived in the same community as long as she had in her neighborhood, and at the close of a long life stands as high with her own immediate neighbors as she did, it speaks more than words can express in behalf of the integrity of her Christian life. She was a sincere, good woman in all the relations she sustained—as wife, mother, neighbor, and as a member of the church of God. Sister Allen was quick to decide all questions regarding Christian duty, was firm and faithful in doing what she understood the word of God to require, and was well posted in Bible teaching. She was conscientiously opposed to all sorts of innovations upon the plain teaching of the word of the Lord, and was always in favor of doing just what the word of God requires. While the rearing of her children fell so largely upon her hands, it is a fact that they all became members of the church of God; and her grandchildren, so far as I remember, are all—that is, all that are old enough—members of the church of God. She was generous, kind, and unselfish in her actions toward others; she lived largely for the happiness and well-being of others. As long as she lived, there was nothing in her power that she would not do for her family, all of whom were tenderly devoted to her, and ready to do everything. Faithful children could do for a loving mother. She was always ready to do whatever she could for the relief of the poor and suffering. She has been known, when away from home, to take articles of clothing from her own person and give them to the destitute, and she never turned the poor from her door empty, when it was in her power to give relief. Sister Allen will be greatly missed by the family, by the church, and by the community. A large and appreciative gathering of people were present at the funeral, which occurred at her old home place, and, amid tears of sympathy, saw her last remains laid to rest in the old family graveyard on the hill, only a few steps from the old home, where the main part of her life was spent. Thus she has gone to swell the number of her family already gone. Her first husband, Brother J. C. Anderson, was for many years an exceedingly sound and useful proclaimer of the word of the Lord; her second husband, Brother Allen, was a very earnest and zealous member of the church of Christ. Thus both her husbands were godly and useful men, both of whom felt and were helped by the influence of her godly life. Now her son, Brother William Anderson, is still perpetuating the good work by preaching and living the religion of Him whom she tenderly loved. All of her family and friends that will be faithful to the end may meet her "in the sweet by and by," where no more sad farewells will be said.

For Nervous Headache, Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. F. A. Roberts, Waterville, Me., says: "It is of great benefit in nervous headache, nervous dyspepsia, and neuralgia."

The foreign ministers at Peking have reached an agreement, which they have submitted to their respective governments. It is difficult to gather details of the understanding at this time. However, it is known that in the two important issues that were still open—namely, those relating to punishment and indemnity—the views of the United States Government have prevailed. As to punishments, they are to be the severest that can be inflicted by the Chinese Government; as to indemnity, the Chinese Government is to formally admit its liability, and then the matter is to be left for future negotiation. It is understood that on the other points the French proposition has formed the basis of the agreement.

An Open Letter.

Brethren: Many years ago at Ennis, while, in convention, the brethren of Texas, assisted by good and great men from other States, were trying to get together on methods, I thought I saw the beginning of the drifting apart. As I could see it, the trouble was not about the doctrine. My object in being there was to get the saints interested in the support of Elder M. Askew as evangelist among the Indians. I made no request of any one to help in this work until I had advanced $533 toward it. I had assisted Brother Askew and family in moving from Alabama to the Indian Territory, and at the time of the State meeting at Ennis, B. F. Overton (then chief of the Chickasaw tribe of Indians) and I were paying $100 each per year. Besides this, I do not know that Brother Askew was getting anything. I made a flat failure in securing any help to this end. I returned to my home in Paris, Texas, and resigned unconditionally and went to the Indian Territory. Soon Brother Askew was called home. Six weeks later Chief Overton followed him. I did the best I could to get the work before the elders and brethren through the papers. The work went grandly on, sustained by voluntary contributions by churches and brethren. In a short time we had seventy-two congregations in good working order, nineteen neighborhood schools, and means enough on hand to give hope of sustaining two more evangelists. I made a call through the papers. Brother M. Gorman, of Missouri, and Brother M. L. Wilson, of Texas, responded. Brother Wilson was located at Prairie View. The brethren built him a house near the schoolhouse where they worshiped, and gave him the use of twenty acres of land, so he could teach, preach, and make use of the land as he pleased. He did not stay long. Elder Charles Word and other elders and brethren can tell why he left; I do not know. I believe them, however. Brother Gorman located in Atoka. I know why he left: because he misrepresented the facts in both talking and writing. The brethren waited on Brother Gorman before he left and required of him a statement. He made the following:

"Atoka, I. T., May 5, 1890.—To those on whom I might have made an impression of anything bad or wrong against Brother R. W. Officer I do candidly say I was misinformed and mistaken. I am sorry I have wronged him in any way. I now understand him in a clearer light, and hope that none will think hard of him through anything I might have said concerning him.
M. GORMAN."

Then I requested Brother Gorman to remain and outgrow and remove the shadow he had brought upon himself and family. This he agreed to do, but only on condition that I stand by him, which thing I agreed to do, and did. In all, I paid him in money $105 before I found that he was misrepresenting the facts in stating that I had confessed my faults, etc. I then withdrew from him my help and published his statement. He then got $31.15 worth of goods on my credit at the store of John M. Hodges, at Atoka, and left at night. Soon anonymous letters were written abroad, some to brethren in the Territory, concerning me. This was kept up for nearly a year. Many of the letters were sent to me. Then the following was published:

"Atoka, I. T., April 8, 1891.—As there are anonymous letters still being circulated through the country that are calculated to bring the good name of Elder R. W. Officer into disrepute, we, the elders of the church of Christ at Atoka, I. T., feel that it would be doing Brother Officer an injustice to keep silent as regards his moral standing in our midst. We have known him for several years, and have failed to sustain any charges against him as a Christian gentleman, and take pleasure in vindicating his character against all false accusations, and believe him to be a true and zealous gospel preacher.
B. S. SMISER,
"JOHN H. JONES,
"J. L. C. PATE,
"J. S. STANDLEY,
"Elders."

About this time, for some reason unknown to me to this day, Brother Maude, a Cherokee Indian, who had been working under the Cincinnati missionary board in the Cherokee Nation, resigned. The Christian Standard published that the $400 per year that had been paid to Brother Maude would be paid to me. I knew not one thing about this until I saw it in the Standard. I received letters from the Cherokee Nation the week after the Standard came out accusing me of "being the cause of Brother Maude's losing his place." I wrote to the brethren, thanked them kindly, but declined to accept their offer of the $400. I came here to give church co-operation a chance. I have never enjoyed a penny from any board to help sustain the gospel or for any other work; I have never joined anything; and this is true at this writing. Reports were then circulated that I had grown rich off of the contributions, and drew forth the following statement:

"AN OPEN LETTER.

"The reports in circulation in the States to the effect that Elder R. W. Officer has 'grown immensely wealthy from the contributions of the brethren and churches' give the truth a black eye. The object of these reports seems to be to discourage the individual co-operation of the brethren in mission work and enlist sympathy with the State Board work. The evangelist of the State of Mississippi, in his remarks at Hickory Flat a short time ago, could not deny this to be his object, from the report of his discourse along this line, by one of his hearers. To say the least, this is unfair. Those who wish to, so far as we are concerned, have a right to cooperate with the 'organized State work' in sounding out the word; but why overlook the moral in the case of Ananias and Sapphira in order to discourage those who prefer to send their contributions independent of the State Board?

"Brother Officer's home has been with us for more than ten years. The means contributed go through the hands of the elders of the church here, and we are sure that there is no chance from that source for wealth. The wonder is that he manages to keep the wolf from his door, when we consider the small amount he receives. True, he has made a crop on a rented farm the past two years, but he has hardly been missed out of the field as evangelist. Contributions to his support have fallen off until it requires pluck and push, with economy, to live. We say without hesitation that he deserves more, much more, than he gets, and yet he declines to accept calls where there is a good living offered him, and remains here in a destitute field.

"We, the elders of the church of Christ at Atoka, deem it our duty to make the above statements.

"B. L. LUNSER,

"G. A. COBB,

"J. L. O. PATE,

"Elders."

I regretted very much that I was not rich, but I could not deny the facts of the statement made by these brethren. Two weeks after the publication of the above I was due to be among the wild Indians. I received three anonymous letters threatening my life if I went; but I went, and if I was killed, I never knew it. While it is true that I was reported "killed by the Indians" by some one through the St. Louis Republic, I never believed one word of it.

It was soon after this that the country now known as Oklahoma Territory was declared open for settlement, and our congregations were largely broken up by the change. I found in Brother C. C. Parker a grand, true man. He was broken up. At my request he took my wagon and team, went after his family, and brought them to our home, where they all remained until we provided for them a home near where Allen now is. I have never regretted his coming. He is still in the Territory—a grand, good, and true man. J. Harry Barber came over from Texas and located at South McAlester. He gladdened our hearts for a short time, then joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Failing to get an appointment by the bishop, he pretended to return, but soon left with a patent medicine company for parts unknown. Dr. Toney came over from the Baptists. The brethren helped him through school. He then took up with the Mormons, and later returned to the Baptists. A Brother Bush and wife came down from Illinois and made their home with us during a winter, then returned to their home in Illinois. We remember their stay with us with pleasure. They were much help. Other good and great men have helped along very much in our work here, and still others have more or less stood in the way; but, in spite of all, we have reared and educated thirty-six orphan children, all of whom, so far as we know, are true to the faith, and I have made no change.

The report in connection with the East Gainesville church is false through and through. I hope this will not go hard with those who "have known for some time that he [I] was unsound in the faith." I appeal from their morbid imagination to the evangelists, elders, and brethren with whom I have been at work and who know whereof they speak. It is so strange how a fellow can "know" a thing that is not true; but sometimes, from the statements of some men, this is the case, for now every mail fills my hands with letters from sad hearts regretting my "mistake." I have reasons to believe the brethren are getting in line to expose some of those who know so much more than is true. No; "restore such a one in the spirit of meekness," if possible.

At the request of the brethren I have said so much, but not as much as some would have me say. The way is open. Those who wish to may say more; I will not.

Now, in conclusion, I will say we are doing business at the same old stand and in the same old way. Pray for us. R. W. OFFICER.

Kansas Notes.

The meeting at Duquoin has closed, with nineteen persons added to the one body and the brethren much encouraged.

B. F. Rhodes was yet in the meeting at Hoyle at the last information. His next meeting will be at Langdon. About the first of February, next, he will be in the Nashville Bible School. He will be much missed from the field in Kansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma Territory, but will be in the field again, with renewed vigor, after a time in school. Brother Rhodes is a model young man and a good preacher now; he is judicious in his work and will always be a safe counselor, if he continues in the way he has begun, of which I have not the least doubt. The good wishes of his numerous friends go with him to the school.

Brother J. C. Glover is now in a meeting at Onyx, O. T. I had the pleasure of meeting him a few days ago for the first time. I was impressed with his modest, quiet, unassuming manner. His ability as a preacher and debater is acknowledged in Oklahoma Territory, where he is known.

Brother R. W. Turner is again in the field, after a vacation caused by the sickness and death of his wife. Such a bereavement is indeed hard to bear, and he has the sympathy of his many friends.

At last account, Brother Cain was in a meeting at one of his regular points in Butler County, and will be in that county, at different points, for some time.

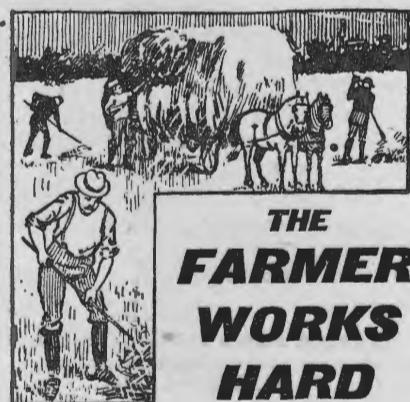

The brethren at Sheridan, O. T., are now in a meeting.

There is much good we can do, While the days are going by.

Are we doing our part of it? One of the greatest hindrances to the progress of the gospel in some localities is the indifference of professed Christians. Many of them become so indifferent that they rarely appear at the "assembly of the saints" on the first day of the week. A protracted meeting of several weeks' duration will not get all of them out. They are ready to make the most trivial excuses for their negligence. Others catch the same spirit, the cause languishes, and only a few are left as the faithful ones. The world is largely influenced by the indifferent ones, and a general apathy pervades such community.

Occasionally you will find such a one, and it makes hard work for those who try to do their duty and arduous and apparently unfruitful labor for the evangelist who goes into such fields; but those fields certainly need laborers, and somebody must do the work and leave the results to be estimated in the great day. While we have such conditions in some places, there are other places where the brethren are alive to the work, and it is an inspiration to work with them. The results always appear in such cases. Such conditions as these two cases are not new; they have been in existence for many years.

How can we afford to take risks on our souls? How many realize the value of the immortal part of man? Jesus weighed a soul against the whole world and found that the value of the world was nothing compared with the value of the spirit of man. Cannot man be induced to properly estimate the value of his eternal interests and be awakened to a sense of his obligations and responsibilities? We have no abiding city here. We must soon take our departure. Have we decided where we are going when we leave here? Is it not a careless way to do—be called upon suddenly to change residences, with no preparation of a place to go, notwithstanding the fact that we have been warned continually that such notice would be given us to change? Does it denote wisdom on our part to treat such things in such a negligent way? Are we ready for the change? Are our arrangements all made and nothing to do but heed the call? Where do you think you would go if you were notified at this moment suddenly, without any more warning? How pure was that last thought you entertained? Would it commend you to God? What kind of plan was that you last worked upon? Was it to swindle some man out of his property? Was it to exceed him in praise

THE FARMER WORKS HARD

For a living. He has to. He must "make hay while the sun shines," no matter how he feels. The result is overwork. The stomach usually gives the first sign of strain. The organs of digestion and nutrition are deranged. Food does not nourish. Indigestion appears. In such a case Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery re-establishes the health by a complete cure of the diseased organs of digestion and nutrition. It cleanses the stomach, purifies the blood and removes the causes of disease. It is a temperance medicine, and contains no whisky nor alcohol.

"I was troubled with indigestion for about two years," writes Wm. Bowker, Esq., of Juliette, Latah Co., Idaho. "I tried different doctors and remedies but to no avail, until I wrote to Dr. Pierce and he told me what to do. I suffered with a pain in my stomach and left side and thought it would kill me. I am glad to write and let you know that I am all right. I can do my work now without pain and I don't have that tired feeling that I used to have. Five bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and two vials of his 'Pleasant Pellets' cured me."

Sick people can consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

from the people? Was it to succeed him in his place—secure his office, position, or field of labor for yourself or some of your pets? What would you do if called into the presence of God to answer now? How long since you planned to lead somebody astray to gratify your own selfishness or wicked desires? Would you be ready to go under such circumstances? Suppose the summons should come while you were making false accusations against some brother, while you were slandering him, while you were in what you thought a shrewd way trying to leave a false impression upon some mind concerning one of your fellow-creatures. Somebody may ask how we know people do such things. Jesus says: "By their fruits ye shall know them." Our associations with men teach us that such things are practiced. Many do and many do not. Which class do you represent? Where will you be when the Lord calls? Where will he find you when he comes? What will you be thinking, saying, or doing? D. T. BROADUS.

"Arnold's Sunday School Commentary on the International Lessons, 1901." Edited by Mrs. T. B. Arnold. Price, 50 cents. Fleming H. Revell Company.

This book contains class records, hints to teachers, illustrations, blackboard exercises, questions, maps, dictionary of names, commentary on each lesson, and a practical survey and practical application which makes it quite valuable and helpful to the thoughtful student.

MAGAZINES.

In the December Review of Reviews, the editor comments on several important questions of the hour, including the new army bill, the problem of reapportionment in the South, the Isthmian Canal, and other matters that will engage the attention of Congress at the approaching session; the results of the census of 1900, with reference to the proposed admission of new States and representation in Congress; the meaning of the national election; the Cuban Constitutional Convention; the elections in Puerto Rico and Hawaii; the Liberal victories in Canada and Newfoundland; the Chinese negotiations, and European politics, both internal and international. Among the contributed features are articles on "The Cuban Republic—Limited," by Walter Wellman; "Governor-elect Odell, of New York," by Dr. Lyman Abbott; and "Marcus Daly, Empire Builder," by Samuel E. Moffett. There is also an interesting chronology of the career of William McKinley, the eighth President to be reelected for a second consecutive term.

The purpose of the World's Work is to interpret American activity in its widest ranges. This purpose is illustrated in the number for December by such diverse articles as "A Triumph of American Sculptors" (profusely and beautifully illustrated) in securing the greatest distinctions at the Paris Exposition, and "The Betterment of Working Life," an article (also fully illustrated) explaining what employers are doing for the comfort and improvement of employees in a number of factories of various sorts. Between these are articles explaining the results of exploration, pointing out definitely the chances for young men under the present conditions of industrial organization (an interview with bankers, managers, railroad men, and professionals of distinction); an explanation of the manner and methods of the Secretary of War, giving a clear in-into Mr. Root's character; an article on the "Navy in the Philippines," by Rear Admiral Watson, who recently returned from the command of the fleet there; an explanation (with examples in colors) of the recent progress that has been made in color photography; an article by Professor Reinsch, of the University of Wisconsin, on the great political changes of the century, and the record of American achievements. Annual subscription, $3. Doubleday, Page & Co., 34 Union Square, East New York.

The Living Age is a weekly magazine of contemporary literature and thought, and is a necessity to every reader of intelligence and literary taste. Each weekly number contains sixty-four pages, in which are given, without abridgment, the most interesting and important contributions to the periodicals of Great Britain and the Continent, from the weighty articles in the quarterlies to the light literary and social essays of the weekly literary and political journals. Science, politics, biography, art, travel, public affairs, literary criticism, and all other departments of knowledge and discussion which interest intelligent readers are represented in its pages. It began in its issue for November 17, 1900, and will continue for several successive numbers, a thrilling account of "The Siege of the Legations," written by Dr. Morrison, the well-known correspondent of the London Times at Peking. This narrative is of absorbing interest in its descriptions of the daily life of the besieged legation, and it is noteworthy also as containing some disclosures relating to the inside history of what went on at Peking in those stirring days, which are altogether new and of the utmost importance. The unusual length of Dr. Morrison's narrative has precluded and probably will preclude any other publication of it on this side of the Atlantic. In England it has attracted wide notice. Until the edition is exhausted, there will be sent to each new subscriber for 1901, on request, the numbers of the Living Age from October 1 to December 31, 1900. Published weekly, at $6 per year. The Living Age Company, Post Office Box 5206, Boston, Mass.

The December issue of Modern Culture is interesting and entertaining. Among other valuable papers, there are some which are worthy of special mention: "The Centennial Anniversary of Washington City, Illustrated;" "Drifting on the Mediterranean;" "The Century's Contribution to the World's Great Literature;" "The Chinese Empire and the Powers;" and "The Cedars of Lebanon." Price, $1 a year.

The Book World is an illustrated monthly magazine and review of literature, religion, science, music, and art. Its literary character is first-class, the mechanical finish is of a superior character, and it is the cheapest magazine published. Price, 50 cents a year. Seigel-Cooper Company, New York City.

The Christmas Scribner's is unusually rich both in text and illustrations. The beautiful cover, by Maxfield Parrish, is printed in nine colors, and there is a colored frontispiece and an eight-page scheme in colors. It contains eight short stories, attractively illustrated, and other notable features.

Home and Farm and Gospel Advocate one year for $1.50.

Of Interest to You.

Dear Brethren: We have arranged with the Gospel Advocate to publish a four-page, illustrated supplement the size of that paper, and to be sent out with it once a month. These four pages will be devoted exclusively to missionary work, such as (1) ringing editorials on "Missions;" (2) "Reports of the Laborers in the Various Mission Fields;" (3) "How Churches May Have Fellowship with the Missionaries;" (4) "Information Concerning the Various Mission Fields of the World, and Their Needs." We also hope to give an object lesson now and then by way of a good picture taken from missionary labors.

The Gospel Advocate agrees to publish the supplement for fifty dollars an issue, and at this rate we are able to send to every reader of the paper four pages of extra reading matter every month for a little over one-half a cent per month. This is several times cheaper than a paper of like size could be printed separately. The supplement will be wrapped and mailed with the Gospel Advocate, all as one paper, thus saving much expense and labor that would necessarily be attached to a separate paper, but accomplishing the same purpose.

We send you this letter, believing the churches will be glad to make us certain contributions to enable us to meet this monthly expense. Will not the church in your community send us such sum as you feel able and willing to give? Every cent you give will go for the one purpose mentioned. We who furnish the four pages of extra reading matter are glad to do it without price. If fifty churches will send us, say, one dollar per month, this will enable us to bring out the supplement regularly. This is much to be desired. However, all the offerings the Lord sends us for this purpose will be carefully put aside, and, whether much or little, the four extra pages will be issued as often as the means will allow. In view of the much good you may do, will you not have fellowship with us in this work also?

Send all contributions to G. A. Klingman, 2512 Montgomery street, Louisville, Ky.

EDITED BY HIS LIFELONG AND FAITHFUL FRIEND, F. D. SRYGLEY, AUTHOR OF "SEVENTY YEARS IN DIXIE," "LARIMORE AND HIS BOYS," AND "BIOGRAPHIES AND SERMONS."

HAVE YOU A COPY?

THE editing of "Letters and Sermons" was Brother Srygley's last literary work. It consists of twelve sermons preached by Brother Larimore during a protracted meeting in Nashville, Tenn., the first weeks of the year 1900, extracts from other sermons, extracts from his private correspondence during a long period of years, and numerous illustrations, including splendid half-tone cuts of Brother Srygley and Brother Larimore. "It is a precious treasure;" "A rich legacy to bequeath to your children;" "We especially commend it to the young;" "Every home in the land should possess one;" "The Bible excepted, I believe it the best book I have ever seen;" "His private letters and intercourse always inculcate purity and fidelity to truth and right and a constant desire to benefit others;" "The letters are gems that reflect the light of the pure spirit of the incomparable preacher so tenderly loved by all who truly know him." :: :: :: :: :: :: :: :: :: :: :: :: :: :: ::

The above expressions are only a few of the many complimentary ones said of "Letters and Sermons." Now in the second edition. BY MAIL, POSTPAID, $1.50. AGENTS WANTED.

LET US HEAR FROM YOU.

We have recently been very much encouraged by the way our friends have been working for the Gospel Advocate. Some are anxious to continue to read the paper who have not the money to pay for it. Here is an easy way to renew: Send us three new subscribers, accompanied by $4.50, and we will set up the date of your paper for one year. Many of your friends would be benefited by reading the Gospel Advocate, and, with a little encouragement, would subscribe for it. We would be glad if every reader of the Advocate would make a vigorous effort to send at least three new subscribers. If you mean to join the list of our workers, will you not write us a card to that effect? In a few hours work you should be able to secure several subscribers. Often have we been rejoiced to know that people have been led to Christ by reading the Gospel Advocate. In circulating the paper, you are doing a good work. Who will help us? PUBLISHERS.

Christ was a hero. He distinguished himself from the religious classes of his day by a vastly superior faith and courage and purity. He was not content to be with the crowd; he was entirely independent in regard to man. He sought not the multitude's support; he cared neither for their praise nor their blame. Armored with truth and righteousness, he faced the world. Alone he fought the battle, when nothing but adversity surrounded him, when nothing but failure promised to result. His brethren thought him crazy; his disciples misunderstood him; his followers left him—some in anger, some in fear and despair. But he pursued his course; he never stopped, wavered, or hesitated. He died alone between two thieves; but he regretted nothing he had done or said. His body was broken; his spirit was not. Christians, behold your Master! "If any man will come after me," he says, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

It is not in every man to be a hero. Not many naturally great, noble souls adorn the world's record. But Christ will make heroes of all that will take hold of his hand. How could they follow him without being heroes? At the end there will not be a soul in Christ's great army of the redeemed that will not be deserving of the name "hero."

There is a remarkable disposition in sheep and people to go in herds. It is a great convenience.

It means a saving of personal responsibility, personal effort, personal courage; in short, it lightens the individual's burden. What is easier than being "a church member in good standing" nowadays? The "pastor," or some one else, takes the leadership, which relieves one of all trouble, save to jump when the leader and the rest jump. You may stay in your ranks, enjoy your religion quietly, and be considered a good sheep. When the herd becomes demoralized, you get demoralized also, and no one will blame you. The church will be to blame. This may be "church-member religion," but it is not Christianity, for the reason that it lacks every element of heroism.

Heroism is the very opposite of blind running with the crowd. True Christians follow Christ, work for him, live for him, individually. He who treads in the path of the great Hero will boldly and avowedly stand up for righteousness and truth, church or no church, crowd or no crowd. If the whole world go to hell, he for one, at least, will stem the current.

Brother, when you find iniquity and rottenness where you hoped to find righteousness, when the very church seems to be given over to the devil, do you grow discouraged and quit? Or when you and another brother or two find yourselves alone in a neighborhood, do you neglect the Lord's work because you cannot get up a crowd? What would Jesus do in your place? Are you doing anything extraordinary for the glory of God? Whenever you have learned to break forth from the ranks of the common, the tolerable, second-rate, passive church membership, and begin to fight for Christ—not against the church, but in harmony with it, as one of the members of the body, yet fight as though there were not another man on earth to help you, as though the whole work depended on yourself—when you have learned this, you will be a step nearer the Model, the greatest Hero and Martyr, Jesus Christ our Lord.

All in whom the word of God is sown in shallow ground will be scorched and withered, and shall not escape. If they are not determined deep in their souls to follow Christ, they will let go his hand when darkness and clouds threaten around. When the moral support of the crowd fails, they succumb; when others run, and surrender to the devil, the weakling cannot stay on the battlefield alone. He is no hero. Of such men Christ has prophesied: "And because iniquity shall be multiplied, the love of the many shall wax cold." There is so much evil on every side, they give up in despair. Ah, had they but the eye to see the hosts of heaven that camp about the righteous; had they the faith to say, with Christ: I know "the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always the things that are pleasing to him!"

"In going from a Christian Endeavor Society to an Epworth League, a step backward is taken. They go from an organization which has in its pledge a promise 'to do whatever Jesus would like to have me do,' to a society that has a pledge, if we mistake not, in which neither the name of God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, nor the Bible is found. The members of it simply promise to obey the rules of their church, abstain from questionable amusements, and seek a higher New Testament experience. So it is a great step backward. We sympathize with the young people of the Meridian Street Church. Sectarianism is not near dead yet. But as the truth dawns, it will recede more and more." (Christian Guide.) That makes two steps backward—the first from the church of the Lord, bought and sanctified by his own blood, to a poor, earthborn device called the "Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor;" the other, as the Christian Guide says, from that to the Epworth League. Extremes touch. Too much progression may be retrogression.

If the Christian Endeavor Society would stick to its pledge, it would tear itself up in a day. "To do whatever Jesus would like to have me do!" If Jesus wanted me to organize or join the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, he failed to tell me. On the other hand, he said: "In vain do they worship me, teaching as their doctrines the precepts of men." Again: "Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." The apostles knew what Jesus liked for them to do, and they did not raise the "Endeavor Society" or any other kind of society, save the church of God, in which God intended to be glorified throughout all ages, world without end.

Jesus likes for me to follow him. He says: "For I spake not from myself; but the Father which sent me, he hath given me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life eternal: the things therefore which I speak, even as the Father hath said unto me, so I speak." So he did not teach or countenance any measure for which he had no orders from the Father. To the believers he said: "If ye abide in my word, then are ye truly my disciples; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." And John asserts: "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God." If these scriptures express the wishes of Jesus, the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor is on a self-destroying basis.

"The praying Pharisees were covetous and prosperous, so that the homeless teacher who dared to expose their hypocrisy had to pay the penalty of his 'discourteous accusations.'" (Leader.) So is it to-day. The denominations in power are strong on points of etiquette and courtesy and a namby-pamby mixture of weakness and toadyism they dare to call "charity." A man may spit on the face of the Bible, but woe to him that dares to say a good, strong word against errors and abuses and hypocrisy! At once he is marked as discourteous and uncharitable. That settles the question of his popularity. It is a grave breach of good manners to say a word against the great and influential.

We copy, in full, an article, headed "Bishop Candler on 'Organ Gangs,'" from Zion's Outlook:

"For rare and racy reading, the Bishop's arraignment of choirs, 'organ gangs,' 'choir masters,' 'tune tinkers,' and 'singing smiths,' in the Wesleyan Advocate of recent date, is interesting. The war is on between the 'organ gang' and the Bishop. Hear him: 'What, then, does it mean when the boss of the "organ gang" comes poking a programme at a Methodist preacher on Sunday morning? For one, I have grown weary of such impertinence and tired of disrespect to my church. I would rather raise my own tunes and have no choir than to submit to have the contempt of a musical amateur poured on Methodism.' I applaud the Bishop's independence of thought and expression. If he does not like to be dominated by the 'organ gang,' he has the liberty to say so; if he is averse to 'tune tinkers' and 'singing smiths' (whatever the latter may stand for), why not say so? As a leader of thought and public opinion, his position places authority on his declarations to his own church. The craze for skilled choir performances has reached a crisis in modern churches: It must become and remain the drawing card for crowded houses on Sundays; or the 'tune tinkers' and 'choir masters' must yield precedence to the sermon and congregational singing in public worship. The Bishop says: 'Hence the first signs of a backslidden Methodist appear in a disposition to substitute for our plain, simple, and majestic Methodist form of service a lot of tawdry parade, responsive reading, cheap chanting, and choir-loft trumpery. Presently, from feeding on that sort of stuff, a taste for operas and theatricals is acquired. Then follow balls and all sorts of social pomps and vanities; finally, Methodism is by such backsliders accounted to be wanting in culture and refinement, altogether too narrow for these broad-minded liberals.' The Bishop's views will, of course, attract great attention wherever they are read. They indicate aggressive resistance to choirs especially, and since fine Methodist city churches have fine choirs in almost every instance, the issue will be interesting, now that these mighty forces are joined in combat. There is no doubt but a return to primitive manners and methods is anxiously awaited by thousands of Methodist people all over this country. The power of Methodism was always lodged in Holy Ghost preaching, not in 'tawdry parade and choir-loft trumpetry.' Its revival services, since the days of John Wesley and Charles Wesley, are intimately associated with congregational singing, and a paid choir has little or no opportunity with an altar crowded with weeping penitents."

If this is a sign of the times, it is hopeful. Good, thinking men can see the superior excellency of God's plan, and it may be that before very many years the people at large may learn that no light is so sweet as that which comes from heaven, no way so successful as God's way, no work or worship so effectual as that ordered by the Lord. Let us work and pray, not only for a restoration of the divine simplicity in worship, but a discarding of all denominationalism itself, and a full return to "the faith that was once for all delivered to the saints."

Brother Calhoun's View of the Organ.

Brother Kurfees is amply able to take care of himself in the discussion between himself and Brother Calhoun. What I shall say will be to help Brother Calhoun and others to see the incorrectness of his view. As I understand him, he disclaims any intention on his part of advocating the use of an organ in church singing. He has submitted his view as tentative, and invites criticism. He seems, however, to be persuaded that, so far, it has withstood the crucible test, and must, therefore, be correct. I sympathize with Brother Calhoun. I have traveled over the same road he is passing. I sought diligently to harmonize myself with the practice of instrumental music in connection with the song service. I am so fond of music that I must confess my tastes and feelings have all leaned toward instrumental music; but I have to call a halt, and remember that I am not to worship self, but God, and the important question is not what will please me, but God. I would hail with gladness any contribution to the organ controversy that would solve the problem and set the churches at rest and peace. If we could induce every one to accept Brother Calhoun's view, the organ might be peaceably introduced in all the churches and the whole controversy ended; but such is impossible, and hence the question is still on our hands. A portion of a congregation may sincerely believe that organ music is no part of the worship, but another portion may sincerely believe that it is necessarily a part of the worship, and that it per consequence perverts the worship. Under such circumstances, alienations and discords must be the result wherever the organ is introduced, and Brother Calhoun doubtless would oppose its introduction.

But let us look at the inherent merits of Brother Calhoun's position. Stated in propositional form, it is as follows: The music made by an organ in connection with the voice, as it worships God in song, is not a part of the worship. His reasoning in defense of the proposition in syllogistic form may be stated thus: Whatever is not intentionally addressed toward God as worship is not worship. The music of an organ in connection with the voice is not intentionally addressed toward God. Therefore, the music of an organ in connection with the voice is not worship. The minor premise in this syllogism is all that we shall notice:

1. Brother Calhoun admits that the music of the voice is a part of the worship. It is not the mere utterance of words, but such utterance in connection with musical tones which constitutes the worship. Music, then, is an essential part of the worship.

2. An essential element of music is harmony. Harmony includes the idea of unity of sound. So true is this that good organ playing consists in making all and the very same sounds, or tones, of all the voices singing. Thus blended together—the tones of the organ and the tones of the voices—the music becomes one and the same. This mixed music is exactly what is offered to God as worship. Whoever intentionally contributes his voice to make this mixed music intentionally offers this mixed music as worship. A person may sincerely intend some impossible things. Brother Calhoun and others may sincerely intend to separate the tones of an organ from the tones of the voice; but when once they are blended together, the music becomes one and inseparable, and all the honest intentions of the singer cannot break the unity or harmony of the tones. This is exactly why I will not sing with an organ when I worship God in song. I cannot afford to contribute my voice to make music which he has not authorized to be offered to him.

But Brother Calhoun claims that the organ is a mere convenience. If so, it is a convenience to make an important part of that which is offered to God as worship—namely, music. Electric lights in a meetinghouse are conveniences, it is true; but we do not offer light—material light—to God as worship, and hence electric lights do not contribute to make something which we offer as worship. The organ is a convenience, then, to make music. What, now, is the purpose of this convenient instrument of music? There can be but one answer: the purpose of its use is to make the music better. But what is the purpose in making better music? One of two things must be intended. It must be intended either to please God or to please men. If Brother Calhoun says the better music is intended to please God, then what becomes of his contention that the music of an organ is not intentionally offered to God? It must be offered to him if it is intended to please him. If he says (which I am persuaded he will not) that the better music which the organ contributes to make is intended to please and attract men, he would introduce a very improper motive, one which would pervert the music into mere entertainment and rob it of the very essential element of worship, which is that it must be offered to God. To make better music to be heard of men would be to do like some of whom we read, who prayed on street corners to be seen of men.

I trust Brother Calhoun will consider this article in the spirit in which it is written. I am satisfied his view is erroneous, and I contribute the article to help him see that his tentative position cannot stand.

Tullahoma, Tenn. H. G. FLEMING.

P.S. Since writing the foregoing, a question suggests itself, which I propound to Brother Calhoun: If it were now a command of God to offer a certain kind of fire to God, and some one, while offering the very fire commanded, should attempt to make the fire better by adding a little coal oil to it, would the fire be acceptable? Remember, the party does not intend to offer the oil as a part of the worship, but simply to make better that which is offered. The fire is what is offered, and the oil is only a convenience to help make the fire. The music is what is offered, and the organ is a mere convenience to help make the music. If this mixed music, made in a way not commanded by the Lord, is acceptable, why would not the mixed fire, above described, be equally acceptable?

How are Elders to be Recognized?

Brother D. Lipscomb has noticed, as requested, my recent tract on the "Eldership." He comments what I have said on the subject, and very correctly says I have failed to tell how those fitted and qualified for the work of bishops (overseers) are to know themselves as such; or how others are to know them. He says: "If the elders are to rule as examples to the flock and to look after the well-being of the flock, they ought to know this is their work. How are they to be recognized as elders by themselves and others? is a question of interest. This is not touched in the articles. But it is a plain, straightforward statement of the question aside from this."

In preparing the articles on the "Eldership" for the paper, my mind was only engaged with the questions presented, because I wrote in answer to a query. It had not struck me but that those who were elders, and had the qualifications and characteristics for overseers, or bishops, must recognize that fact themselves; and, further, be impressed with the responsibility devolving on them in consequence of their fitness to do all in the family of God—the church of Christ—which they could do to enhance the welfare of their younger brethren, as well as the general good of the cause.

Elders are exhorted to take the oversight—not wait to be constrained—to be patterns to the flock. "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder," says Peter, "and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither, as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock." (1 Pet. 5: 1-3.)

The duties of all classes of Christians are clearly set forth in the Scriptures; and it is also clearly taught that each one must do what he can for the extension and glory of the kingdom. In this way, the peace and happiness of every one can and will be secured. "Speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." (Eph. 4: 15, 16.)

The elders are directed by the teaching of the apostles to take oversight, as a duty; to be, in walk and conversation, such as the flock should be; and to teach both by precept and example. While all elders are worthy of honor, those who labor in word and doctrine have double honor. "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine." (1 Tim. 5: 17.)

While the elders, upon the one hand, are exhorted and directed as to their duties and responsibilities, the flock, upon the other hand, are also directed with reference to their relations to the elders and their duties toward them. When a relationship clearly exists, I know of no other way to recognize it than to recognize it—that is, know it. The apostle Paul, in his letter to the Thessalonian church, says: "And we beseech you, brethren, to know [recognize] them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. And be at peace among yourselves." (1 Thess. 5: 12, 13.)

Properly taught children of the Heavenly King will recognize the one who gently leads them by direction of the Holy Spirit in the paths of peace and righteousness as an honored overseer.

It seems to be quite an easy matter for one to recognize himself as a preacher or an evangelist, and, generally, he will strive very hard to have others know him as such. Generally, when he does his work well, others are not slow to recognize him, too.

As long as people are taught to look upon the church as a kind of an ecclesiasticism, in which preferment, place, and authoritative position are to be obtained and recognized by appointment, election, or allotment, the simple doctrine of personal responsibility and individual consecration to the service of the Master will be ignored; and what is recognized as modern, up-to-date, organized religion will supplant all efforts to employ only the simple means of pure and unadulterated Christianity.

A man's work makes him what he is, and, generally, he is known, or recognized, to be what he does. If he devotes himself to healing the sick, he is a doctor; if he goes preaching the word, saving sinners, and spreading the kingdom, he is both a preacher and an evangelist; if he belongs to a congregation and has the age—not simply natural, but spiritual—and desires and pursues the work of overseeing in the congregation, devoting himself to the ministry of the saints, then we truly may call him "bishop," as well as honor him as such; and this we are under obligation to do, whether we will or not.

The older ones of the family always, or should always, labor for the welfare, not only of themselves, but for the others, or younger ones. Sometimes these older ones fail, for want of ability or indifference, to do this work. Then, as a matter of course, the burden and responsibility will fall on the younger ones; and they, then, in humility, go on with the work, growing continually in all the elements of successful leadership. This is true not only in secular and social affairs, but eminently so in spiritual matters.

If I am a Christian, it is a fact, and I must recognize the fact. Others will recognize that I am a Christian when I act the Christian. If I have age and experience in spiritual life, I am an elder, a fact which I recognize and which must be recognized by all who know me. Being thus an elder, and devoting myself to the ministry of the saints, I ought to be recognized as a bishop, though I may not be thus recognized by everybody. Jesus himself, the Son of God, took upon himself the recovery of the race, and thus became the Shepherd and Bishop of the souls of men. He ought so to be honored by all men, but he is not. Because men do not indorse his bishopric does not alter the fact of his labor of love in the interest of man and the rights and honors of his work.

I feel sure, from the foregoing, it will be perceived that the way to recognize a fact is to acknowledge it and to act promptly upon it in accordance with all the demands such fact may impose on us. The Scriptures certainly teach us thus; and it, therefore, becomes our duty, as Christians, to be led by the Spirit in the paths of peace and righteousness. But it may be argued that those who ought to rule or lead in the church will not do so, and sometimes, when they would, they are not wanted by the congregation; therefore, others ought to be designated and recognized as rulers. I am aware of these facts, but they are no arguments against the truth.

God in his wisdom has set the members in the church as it has pleased him, and it is the duty of all to study to understand this order and then to faithfully go forward in the discharge of every duty imposed on them by the divine arrangement. Of course sometimes we find in congregations confusion and disorder, because there are some who wish the preëminence, wish to lord it over others, who are even well qualified to teach and lead. Read 3 John, 9 for such an example.

It seems difficult for us to free ourselves from the idea that we ought to organize for work in the spiritual vineyard. It is the business of every spiritual babe in Christ to desire the sincere milk of the word, that he may grow; it is the duty of the older ones to continually grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. But it is a misfortune now, as it was in the days of the apostles, that we seem so ignorant of the very rudiments of the work and worship in the kingdom of God. "For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food." (Heb. 5: 12, R. V.)

In a great many congregations the recognized elders have as little power to teach and lead as they did years ago. The young have not been taught and have not been exercised so that they may be able to take the oversight and lead others younger still into the development of the divine life. Indeed, there is no growth, and the congregation is little more than an antiquated fossil. All this comes from a disregard of the divine arrangement or from a misapprehension of the divine plan.

Every member should be a lively stone; every one should be an active factor in the manifestation of spiritual life and growth, and the elders should be livest of the live. "Who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern good and evil." (Verse 14, R. V.) So we remark, again, that a church having an eldership taught in the word and devoted to duty should want for no good thing; and, further, a flock recognizing these elders, and walking in the line of duty, will be at peace among themselves.

JAMES E. SCOBAY.

"Our Father."

We call him "Father" in every prayer. Whence the warrant to approach him thus? Is not he the great Ruler to whose will the universe is in obedience, for whose command legions of mighty spirit stand in waiting? And we call him "Father." Do we know what it means? Kings, princes, presidents, the nobles, and rich men would spurn you if you should claim kinship to them. And you are a respectable person. If a ragged, dirty tramp should call you "brother" or "cousin," you would be offended. But when the poorest, most refuse of all forlorn humanity cries to him, King of kings, Lord of lords, and calls him "Father," he bends to listen; yea, he sent his Son to teach the poor wretch to say: "My Father."

It was through Christ that we learned to know him as Father. Christ was the revelation, the representative, of the Father. To hear him was to behold his Father—Christ's Father; to behold him was to behold the Father; to know him was to know the Father's love; and now to belong to Christ is to be his brother, a child with him of the same Father. Had he not told us, we should tremble to imagine it, it would seem a wicked presumption. But now it is said: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called children of God; and such we are. For this cause the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we children of God, and it is not yet made manifest what we shall be. We know that, if he shall be manifested, we shall be like him; for we shall see him even as he is. And every one that hath this hope set on him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

Yet we may know this and not feel the weight of it. Our earthly fathers are not as good as the Father in heaven; they can give us no adequate idea of him. Hence, the term "Father" does not appeal in its fullness to every mind. My father was a strict, hard man, and I was afraid of him; my mother acted as mediator when I wanted a favor. Jesus is our Mediator; but he says: "In that day ye shall ask in my name: and I say unto you, that I will pray the Father for you; for the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came forth from the Father." No earthly father ever loved his child as God loves us. He takes personal interest in you and in your little affairs; he would have you to tell him your plans, your aspirations, and ask his help; he will listen—yea, he desires you to bring your troubles before him; he sent word to his children to cast all their care upon him. Your joys appeal to him; he delights in the outburst of a happy soul in song and praise. None sympathize with your sorrow and woes as does he. Graciously he looks upon your penitent grief when you have erred. He sees the lost son return, and meets him with outspread arms and a kiss that dispels the shadow of misery from the poor heart and fills it with the joy of salvation.

We speak about the happy days of childhood, and forget that childhood has troubles relatively as great as maturity. Our sympathy is not always adequate to the sorrow that fills the child's heart. We do not understand. A thing very trifling in the sight of a grown person may be of deep consequence to a child. In true human fashion, we think God feels toward us as we do toward children, and does not regard half the petty troubles that vex us. What cares the great, incomprehensible Creator, the infinite One, for my little gain and loss? Our ways are small and foolish. But the Father in heaven is no cynic. Has he not numbered the hairs of our heads?

There is a story that tells of a pug that died, and was buried in the yard with high honors. The children adorned the grave with bits of crockery round about and strewed sand upon it. The children decided to put the grave on exhibition, because it was so beautiful, and the price of admission was fixed at one trousers button. All the children from the street and from the narrow alley came flocking in, and paid the button to see Puggie's grave. But at the gate of the yard stood a very pretty little girl, clothed in rags, with curly hair and eyes so blue and clear that it was a pleasure to look into them. She said not a word; but each time the little gate opened she gave a long, wistful look into the yard. She had no button, and so she stood outside till all the other children had seen the grave and were gone away. Then she sat down, covered her eyes with her little brown hands, and burst into tears. She was the only one who had not seen Puggie's grave. It was as great a grief to her as any grown person could experience. And our Father in heaven—wonder what he thinks of some of the sorrows of his children here? How little, how foolish, some of them must seem to him who looks on us from above!

And yet, why does he want us to tell him of them and seek his consolation? Why does he speak to us in such sweet, earnest compassion? Is it not because he loves us more than human heart can understand? Puggie's grave may be a small item; but what of that poor little quivering heart? What was the death of Lazarus to Jesus? With a word he could call him from the grave again. But Jesus wept. Why?

A good, rough, old, farming preacher, who had obtained permission to talk to Queen Victoria, told the Queen of a new plow he had constructed by God's help. "Why, Mr. Smith," interrupted the Queen, "do you pray about your plows?" "Why, there now, your Majesty, mum, why shouldn't I? My Father in heaven—he knew I was in trouble about it, and why shouldn't I go and tell him? I mind o' one of my boys; when he was a teeny little mite, I bowt him a whip, and rarely pleased he was with it. Well, he comes to me one day cryin', as if his little heart would break. He'd broken the whip, an' he browt it to me. Well, now, your Majesty, mum, that whip worn't nothin' to me—it cost only eighteen pence when 'twas new—but it was somethin' to see the tears a-runnin' down my boy's cheeks. So I took him on my knee, and I wiped his tears with my handkercher, and I kissed him, I did, and I comforted him. 'Now, don't you cry, my boy,' says I; 'I'll mend the whip, I will, so that it'll crack as loud as ever, and I'll buy a new one next market day.' Well, now, don't you think our Father in heaven cares as much for me as I care for my boy? My plow worn't of much consequence to him, but I know right well my trouble was."

How little they knew of God who in ancient times bowed before the altar of idols! How little even his people Israel knew of him that trembled before him at Mount Sinai! How little the sinner, to whom God is nothing but Judge and Avenger, knows of him! But Christ has thrown open the gates of heaven and shown us the light of infinite love that flooded through from the throne of the Almighty. Great and incomprehensible in power and wisdom and glory, he has yet filled our little hearts with a word that describes him: "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father."

ROBERT H. BOLL.

Twentieth Century's Dawn.

The first people to live in the twentieth century will be the Friendly Islanders, for the "date line," as it may be called, lies in the Pacific Ocean, just to the east of their group.

At that time, although it will be already Tuesday to them, all the rest of the world will be enjoying some phase of Monday, the last day of the nineteenth century, December 31, 1900. At Melbourne the people will be going to bed, for it will be nearly ten o'clock; at Manila it will be two hours earlier in the evening; at Calcutta the English residents will be sitting at their Monday afternoon dinner, for it will be about six o'clock; and in London, "Big Ben," in the tower of the House of Commons, will be striking the hour of noon. In Boston, New York, and Washington half the people will be eating breakfast on Monday morning, while Chicago will be barely conscious of the dawn. At the same moment San Francisco will be in the deepest sleep of what is popularly called "Sunday night," though really the early, dark hours of Monday morning, and half the Pacific will be wrapped in the darkness of the same morning hours, which become earlier as one travels to the west, until at Midway, or Brooks Island, it will be but a few minutes past midnight of Sunday night.—John Ritchie, Jr., in Ladies' Home Journal.

There are many wonders in the world which we should not have believed by mere report if we had not come across them by experience and observation. The electric telegraph, though it be but an invention of man, would have been as hard to believe in a thousand years ago as the resurrection of the dead is now. Everything is wonderful until we are used to it, and resurrection owes the incredible portion of its marvel to the fact of our never having come across it in our observation; that is all. After the resurrection, we shall regard it as a divine display of power as familiar to us as our creation and providence are now. I have no doubt we shall adore and bless God and wonder at resurrection forever, but it will be in the same sense in which every devout mind wonders at creation now. God's works require far more than our earthly years of observation, and when we have entered into eternity, are out of our minority, and have come of age, that which astounds us now will have become a familiar theme for praise.—C. H. Spurgeon.

There is a romantic story connected with the introduction of coffee into the West Indies. The Dutch had long controlled its cultivation, and had taken every care, lest it should be carried to islands not in their possession. But in 1714 an Amsterdam magistrate presented Louis XIV., of France, with a single plant for his botanical collection. It was tenderly nursed by the shrewd Frenchman, and in time plants from this parent tree were sent to Martinique. On the way the ship's supply of water was very low, but the botanist in charge deprived himself of half his daily allowance, and shared it with his precious plants. They were soon growing and producing richly in their new home, and from there were carried to Cuba and Puerto Rico. The coffee that clothes in beautiful green the slopes of mountain and hillside in Puerto Rico and Cuba today came from that one delicate plant. Now Puerto Rico alone exports about nine million dollars' worth of the fragrant bean annually.—Exchange.

WHOM SHALL WE HEAR?

It is a matter of decided interest as to whom we shall hear in the matter of our soul's salvation. The answer may, in a general sense, be given: We must hear God. This is correct, if we understand through what channels we are to hear him. But when we come to this, the general ideas of the religious world are thoroughly unscriptural. With the masses, almost anything any one may do as a matter of service to God would be regarded as hearing God. If a man prays, and asks others to pray for him, that God may send converting power—may send the Holy Spirit into his heart to convert him—this is considered as hearing God and doing his will in the matter of conversion. Hundreds of thousands of people to-day think they have become children of God in that way. Thousands of preachers are preaching and teaching these very things to-day in order to the conversion of sinners. At the same time many who claim to have been converted are praying for another power of the Holy Spirit upon them in order to their sanctification. In both of these they think they are hearing God, are doing his will, and that God has done for them what they asked him to do. But it may be asked: Have they been hearing God? Have they been doing his will at all in doing these things? Again: Have such prayers ever been heard at all, or in any wise answered? All we know about the will of God is what we find recorded in his word; and where in all the oracles of God are these things recorded? The only answer is: They are not recorded at all. God is heard now only through Christ and his inspired apostles.

In Heb. 1: 1, 2, we read: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." When he says he "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son," he refers to the new covenant, the plan of salvation which Jesus has provided for lost sinners.

In Heb. 2: 3, 4, we read: "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?" The points in this passage are that it is impossible for those to escape who neglect the salvation that Christ and the apostles spoke, as confirmed by miraculous power, and which have also been written, and which stand on record in the New Testament. We are responsible for only what has been written in the word of God under the new covenant; and nothing except what is found written there can do us any good. As the above-named practices of modern times are not written there, those who do them are not hearing God, because no such things are written. When people do things not written there, and rely upon them, they are building upon the sand, and not on the Rock, for Jesus says: "Every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it." Hence, anything done as a matter of service to God not expressed in his word is building on the sand, and those, therefore, who do such things are not hearing God, are not doing his will, and will certainly fall short of any blessing; for all such houses are certain to fall at last.

No alien sinner in all the New Testament is required to pray and be prayed for in order to be pardoned, and, consequently, there is not a word of promise that such a course will bring pardon. God is not in such procedure, and will not regard it. God hears and answers all prayers that are offered according to his will. "And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." (1 John 3: 22.) This passage shows very clearly that God hears only those who keep his commandments, and hears them because they do keep them. Hence, those who do not keep them have no promise whatever of being heard when they pray. Those who do not obey, but stop and pray for God to forgive them, while they are failing or refusing to "repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," would have to be pardoned contrary to the word of God, if pardoned at all. This will not and cannot be done, because Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Those who will not go right along and do the will of God by being baptized in addition to their faith and repentance have no promise whatever of remission of sins, no matter how much they pray. Such are not hearing God at all, are not doing his commandments.

When on the mount of transfiguration, Peter was disposed to put Christ upon a level with Moses and Elijah, evidently thinking they were all of equal authority, and said to Jesus, "Let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias;" and this, too, just as God was about to take away the old covenant through Moses and established the new one through Jesus Christ. Hence, God at once appeared in an overshadowing cloud, and said to Peter and those with him: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." (Matt. 17: 5.) The time was at the very door when not Moses, not Elijah, but Jesus, was to be heard. Hence, this idea of Peter, that Moses was to be heard equally with Jesus, was promptly set aside by the voice from God. Until Jesus died Moses was in authority with the Jewish nation; but when Jesus was nailed to the cross, so was the law of Moses. And from that day to the end of time Jesus, not Moses, is to be heard. No man can be saved to-day by hearing Moses; even Christians who turned back to hear Moses and to keep the law "fell from grace," as Paul puts it; and if people cannot now be saved by the law of Moses, which once was the law of God, and by which those who obeyed it were then justified, how can it be expected that people to-day can be heard, when they hear and go by the wisdom of uninspired men and do things God never authorized in any age or dispensation? The whole thing is absurd, as viewed in the light of the Scriptures. That which uninspired men ordained was never accepted as the service of God in any age from the days of Cain and Abel to the end of the New Testament. As Peter's proposition to make others equal with Christ was promptly rejected, so every effort to serve God to-day, otherwise than as Jesus has required, will be just as promptly and just as certainly rejected; for ever since Jesus died and rose again all authority in matters of salvation is centered in him, and the language of God out of the cloud, "This is my beloved Son; . . . hear ye him," is still in force.

None of those who rely upon anything for salvation not written in the New Testament are hearing God. When Christ gave his last commission to his apostles, he had already prepared the plan of salvation, and all authority in heaven and on earth was given to him; and when these apostles were inspired by the Holy Spirit, what they said was from God. Even when the apostles were sent out under their first commission, in the preparatory state of the kingdom, Jesus said to them: "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." (Matt. 10: 40.) When he sent out the seventy, he said: "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me." (Luke 10: 16.) This is the way God speaks to men. In the first covenant, God spoke through Moses, and those who refused to hear Moses refused to hear God and were destroyed. When Christ came, God spoke through him; and it was foretold by Moses that every soul that would not hear him should be cut off from his people. When Jesus came, he said: "The Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." (John 12: 49, 50.) All, therefore, who heard Christ heard God, and all who rejected Christ rejected his teaching, rejected God.

Equally true it is to-day that all who reject the teaching of the apostles reject Christ, reject God, and reject the Holy Spirit. Hence, to reject what the apostles have said is a wholesale rejection of all the authority and power of Heaven. The apostles, by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, preached the gospel, required the people to believe it, to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins; and no remission is promised till these things are done. When men refuse to hear and do these things, and rely upon something else to save them, they turn away from Christ, turn away from God, and refuse to hear him; for only those who hear the apostles in these things hear either Christ or God, and no one that refuses to hear them has any promise of salvation. It is just as dangerous to turn away from the teaching of Christ and the apostles in the work and worship of the church as it is to turn away from them in matters pertaining to conversion. When people are unwilling to work and worship just as the word of the Lord directs, and get up human inventions, such as Christian Endeavor Societies, missionary societies, etc., they reject, refuse to hear, God and Christ and the Holy Spirit, and set up for themselves as thoroughly as those who get up human inventions for the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of saints. We must do precisely what the word of God says or we build on the sand. There is no middle ground in this matter. We must build on the Rock, on the one hand, by hearing, by learning, and by doing the will of God; or, otherwise, we build on the sand, no matter what we do. Hence, it is very easy to determine who it is that hears God. All those hear him who hear Christ and the apostles, while all refuse to hear him who refuse to hear them. The scribes and Pharisees were a very religious people, full of zeal in regard to the external performances of the law of Moses; yet Jesus told them they were blind guides, that they would strain at a gnat and swallow a camel, that they would compass sea and land to make one disciple, and that when made he was twofold more the child of hell than themselves. These proud-hearted Jews verified all that Jesus said of them by rejecting Christ and his teaching; they crucified him, and then rejected the gospel and put the apostles to death, and were in turn rejected themselves and destroyed. A Plea for Men.

When, Dr. Judson needed laborers in India, he sent home the following earnest plea:

"Send us men who are humble, quiet, persevering; of sound talents and decent accomplishments; men of an amiable, yielding temper, willing to be the servant of all; men who enjoy much closet religion—who live near to God and are willing to suffer all things for Christ's sake."

Men of this stamp have been rare in all ages, but there have been those who have embodied this beautiful Christian ideal. In the presence of such we realize the transcendent beauty of unconscious goodness.

Discontent is the want of self-reliance; it is infirmity of will.—Emerson.

PERSONAL.

Brother James E. Scobey was in the office last Saturday.

Please give my address as Box 61, Denton, Tex. You have it wrong in my article and I would be glad to correct it.—A. Alsop.

We are in receipt of the following invitation: "Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Holland request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter, Clara Claudia, to Mr. James Sterling Dunn, on Tuesday, December 25, 1900, at 8:30 o'clock, A.M., 221 West Oak street, Denton, Tex. At home, Murfreesboro, Tenn." Brother Dunn is well known among the churches, especially in Tennessee and Texas. We extend our congratulations and wish them much happiness and many years of usefulness in the Master's service.

"Brother J. K. Hill, of Tucker's Cross Roads, Tenn., has agreed to begin a meeting with the church of Christ at Lafayette, Tenn., on Saturday night before the fourth Lord's day in this month and continue through Christmas week. We invite all brethren and sisters who can to come and join us in this meeting. How much better it will be to spend the holidays in worshiping God and in trying to do good than in idleness and, possibly, in sin! Come, and let us have a good meeting." (Highland Preacher.) We indorse the proposition to hold as many meetings during Christmas as possible. This is so much better than to spend the week in idleness or revelry.

The White-Malone debate lasted six days. Brother Pullias was moderator for Brother White and Elder Rice moderated for Brother Malone. The church question was the point at issue. Brother White was very calm and cool from beginning to end, but spoke very forcibly and, at times, rapidly. He is not easily confused, and follows closely every argument presented by his opponent. Malone seemed very fair and candid at first, but toward the last became very much irritated, so much so that he lost his temper, and at one time was in the act of striking Brother White with a walking stick that happened to be near him. This, to the audience, was evidence of his defeat. The last three days of the debate Malone was confused, showed no order in his speeches, and made as poor arguments in defense of his proposition as I ever heard. He spent quite a bit of his time belittling and making fun of Brother White; he strove to lessen the force of Brother White's speeches by arraying Harding, Lipscomb, and Sewell against each other on the Spirit question, and Brents and others against each other on regeneration. It seemed never to have occurred to him that he might have made a similar argument against the early disciples. Paul withstood Peter to the face. (See Gal. 2: 11.) Malone said Hall was wrong in contending that the church does not include all the saved. Malone says it does. He denounced Whitlock for contending for the abstract operation of the Spirit in conversion, and had Lofton cut into infinitesimal pieces by Christian for saying that the Baptist Church started with the disciples of John Smith, in England, and that the churches had no plurality of elders. Malone had a heavy load to carry—Hall, Whitlock, Lofton, White, and the Bible. He felt their weight very forcibly. He indulged in some very reckless statements, such as: "No two of them [disciples] agree on anything;" "I have met numbers of them in discussion, but not one of them ever had the moral courage to meet me on the case of Abraham." Others might be given. I am sure much good has been and will be done by the discussion. The attendance was good during the last three days.—S. M. Jones.

Goodness and happiness go hand in hand.

The more we bless others, the more we are blessed.

The road to everything that is best in life leads uphill.

Service to God must be personal; he takes no substitutes.

The more people hunt soft places, the harder time they have.

God is willing to trust the man who puts his confidence in him.

Some people seem to enjoy telling bad news more than good news.

The greatest man in the church is the one who lives nearest to God.

No life is empty; it is filled with service either for God or for Satan.

The man will never amount to anything who lets others do his thinking.

You can deceive your neighbor, perhaps, but you cannot deceive God.

A man should believe all he says, but he need not always say what he believes.

No one ought to try to correct another man's faults until he can govern himself.

We are never ready to please God so long as we are afraid we will not please men.

Your faith should be childlike, but you should hold on to it with the strength of a giant.

All that appears to be evil is not evil. Richest blessings arise out of supposed calamities.

People careful in their dealings with their fellow-men are often careless about duties to God.

The man who makes his own happiness the foremost object of his life will be sure to be unhappy.

We should be careful of our words. The old rule, to think twice before we speak once, is a good one.

If you find the majority of the people on your side, you would better carefully examine your position.

The ones raising the most fuss in the churches are not usually the ones who are doing most to get to heaven.

Could we ever appreciate the sweet did we never taste the bitter? Could we appreciate joy did we never know sorrow?

Parents are to train up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. They cannot do this without the Lord's help.

Satan is always willing to give you a seeming advantage when you play with him, but somehow he always manages to get the game.

The blessings of persecution do not lie in persecution itself, but in the experience arising out of it, which purifies and enriches the soul.

Jonah tried to run away from God, and ran into trouble. This has been and will be the history of every one who tries to run away from duty.

The preacher who makes money the object of his preaching will soon be, if not already doing so, preaching something else besides the gospel of Christ.

If every member of the church would be faithful and true, the church would go on much better and more people would be brought to Christ.

"Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." They are still seeking them out.

It is truly a wonderful principle that impels men to love their enemies, to bless those who curse them, to do good to all who hate them, and to pray and labor for the salvation of their persecutors.

The Bereans searched the Scriptures daily, and, as a result, "many of them believed." A lack of Bible study, joined with the desire to know the truth, that it may be practiced, is the cause of so much unbelief today.

We should ever "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints," and in doing so we should be careful to ever manifest the spirit of love and gentleness, which is an essential element of the Christian religion.

There is that in the soil which causes weeds and briars to grow profusely and luxuriantly without the aid of cultivation. In order that the weeds and briars may be kept down, the care and energy of the farmer are necessary. Weeds may grow in the human heart, unless it is closely watched and cultivated for better things. With proper care, however, it will yield the fruit of "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance."

In the days of the apostles, when one by obedience to the gospel became a member of the body of Christ, he was not asked to join some society modeled after the wisdom of men in order that he might be enabled to accomplish more for Christ and his church. They were taught that God should be glorified in the church. "Unto him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever. Amen." (Eph. 3: 21, R. V.) Christ is the Head of the church (see Col. 1: 18; Eph. 1: 22), and he so loved it that he "gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." (Eph. 5: 25-27.) It cost the blood of God's Son (Acts 20: 28), and do we not count the blood of the covenant wherewith we are sanctified an unholy thing (Heb. 10: 29) when we dishonor the divine by exalting the human? "Unto all generations forever and ever," said the Holy Spirit through the apostle Paul. The world will never become so wise or an age so progressive but God can be glorified in his own institution and in his own way.

Again, we read: "But he, when he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God. . . . For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." In this quotation the words translated "forever" are "eis to dienekes," and may be translated by the single word "continuously," which indicates that the validity and force of the atoning sacrifice continue on uninterruptedly, because Christ, who has made the atoning sacrifice, is ever living to make intercession for us. It must be borne in mind that death is the only thing that will give validity to a succession of one person after another in any priesthood; as long as the high priest is living no man can succeed to his office. Hence, Christ, as a high priest after the order of Melchisedec, cannot have a successor, either on earth or in heaven. He cannot have a successor on earth, for Paul says that if Jesus were on the earth, he would not be a priest at all. To exercise the office of the Melchisedec priesthood he must be in the holy place not made with hands, in the presence of his Father; and as he ever liveth, will never die, there can be no lawful successor even on the earth, much less in heaven.

Let us in a few words recapitulate the points thus far made. First, to be called of God as was Aaron belongs to Christ alone. Aaron was called to be a high priest, to offer once a year in the most holy place the atoning blood of the sin offering; and this calling was a shadow which could not possibly continue when the substance should be reached. Then as Christ, the substance, was called to make an offering that no human being could possibly make, therefore the calling of Jesus gives no shadow of any authority for the calling of any man to the work of any office whatever. To claim that a man must be called of God as was Aaron in order to qualify him and endow him with authority to preach the gospel and administer the ordinances of religion is as unreasonable as to claim that all who teach the rising generation in the elemental principles of language and science must be called by a continuous system of revelation from heaven in order that their work may be valid and effective. The manifest absurdity of the claim should be its complete refutation. Secondly, by the law of shadow and substance, Christ, as the enduring substance, takes the place of the evanescent shadow to offer his own blood as the final and continuously prevailing atonement, and therefore the Aaronic priesthood cannot be continued after we reach the substance. But the discontinuance of the Aaronic priesthood is made doubly sure by changing the priesthood to another tribe, and also by a complete change of the law. Thus it is made evident beyond all successful dispute that these two priesthoods cannot be restored to the earth.

THE TRUE CHRISTIAN PRIESTHOOD, AND JO. SMITH'S MINISTERING ANGELS.

In the previous article, speaking of the call of Christ to the peculiar functions of the Melchisedec priesthood, I made this statement: "Jesus, as the risen Christ, was not called to preach or to baptize or to administer any ordinance whatever in the church on earth." I now propose to show by whom all this work was to be done.

In 1 Chron. 23: 13, we read: "Aaron was separated, that he should sanctify the most holy things, he and his sons forever, to burn incense before the Lord, to minister unto him, and to bless in his name forever." In chapter 24: 2, we read that the sons of the high priest acted as priests under their father, subject to his authority. At the time of the building of Solomon's temple, these sons had so multiplied that David divided them into twenty-four courses, each course to act in turn for two weeks in the temple service. Under the law of shadow and substance, as given by Paul, the high priest was a type of Christ. But what did his sons as priests shadow forth? What was the corresponding substance? We learn from the words of Paul in several places that Christ and the church are considered as one man—Christ as the Head, the church as his body. It then follows that the types of the law fulfilled in Christ must also embrace his body, the church. Then in the Aaronic priesthood, if the high priest as a single individual refers to the individual Christ, his sons, multiplying from one generation to another, must refer to the body of Christ, the church multiplying its numbers from one generation to another. This is shown by Peter, in 1 Pet. 2: 3-9, R. V.: "If ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious: unto whom coming, a living stone, rejected indeed of men, but with God elect, precious, ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. . . . But ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation." Also the twenty-four courses of priests, offering daily incense in the temple, have their antitype in Rev. 5: 8-10, R. V., where the twenty-four elders have "golden bowls full of incense, which are the prayers of the saints. And they sing a new song, saying, . . . Thou wast slain, and didst purchase unto God with thy blood men of every tribe, and tongue, and people, and nation, and madest them to be unto our God a kingdom and priests; and they reign upon the earth."

These passages show in the clearest possible manner that by the law of shadow and substance every member of the body of Christ is made a royal priest, with the full privilege and authority to minister in all the services of the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth. It is also shown that Christ and his church are reckoned as one, when he is called "a living stone," and the members are also called "living stones;" and he and they are all built into one house for the habitation of God through the Spirit. Thus when all the members of the body, the church, are shown to be priests, there is no room for a special order of priests distinct from the general membership of the church.

This brings me to notice what Mr. Rich says, on page 120 of "Durant:" "The offices of the Melchisedec priesthood include apostles, seventies, patriarchs, or evangelists, and elders. The Aaronic priesthood includes bishops, priests, teachers, and deacons. Next to the quorum of the first presidency are the twelve apostles, then the high council, the seventies, the high priests, the elders, and the quorums of the lesser priesthood."

Here are seven ranks of officers separate and distinct from the general membership of the church, exercising descending grades of authority. In regard to this matter, Jesus says: "Ye know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great ones exercise authority over them [that is, over the rulers first named]." (Matt. 20: 25, R. V.) But Jesus goes on to say: "Not so shall it be among you: but whosoever would become great among you shall be your minister; and whosoever would be first among you shall be your servant." (Verses 26, 27, R. V.) Jesus said this ranking of authority and lordship should not exist in his church; and his express declaration cuts off all rightful claim to have these various grades of office in the church to-day. The priesthoods of the Bible did not have these grades. The Aaronic priesthood had only the high priest and his sons; the Melchisedec priesthood has only Christ and his church, in which Christ is the High Priest, and all the members of the church are priests.

I come now to test the credentials and authority of the angels who professed to restore the priesthoods of Aaron and Melchisedec to the earth. I will notice first the angel who represented himself as John the Baptist. On pages 159, 160, of his works, Orson Pratt says: "John the Baptist, it seems, was the last person who held the keys of the Aaronic priesthood, and therefore he would be a suitable person to restore the priesthood once more to the earth. In order that John might be qualified to fulfill all the duties of his mission as the Lord's messenger, God raised him, with many others, from the dead after the resurrection of Christ. John, therefore, having received an immortal body of flesh and bones, and holding the Aaronic priesthood with the keys and power thereof, has come forth from heaven, as the Lord's messenger, to restore the priesthood to the sons of men. For this purpose he was sent from heaven in these latter times, clothed with glory and power, holding the keys of a preparatory priesthood for the revelation of Jesus Christ. But before that day the priesthood of Levi, or of Aaron, must be restored to the earth. John the Baptist, who holds that priesthood, is the legal and proper messenger to restore it."

Replying to these statements, it will be necessary, first, to have some understanding of what is meant by the "keys of the priesthood." As the Bible says nothing about any keys of priesthood, we can only refer to what is said about keys in other connections. We know that a key is to unlock any place that is shut up and fastened with a lock. Jesus said to Peter: "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

From that which afterwards occurred on the day of Pentecost, and at the house of Cornelius, we understand that Peter simply had the authority to open the doors of the kingdom by proclaiming the conditions upon which persons could be admitted into the kingdom. From this example of the use of keys, we may gather that the one who at any time held the keys of a priesthood had the power to exercise the authority of the priestly office. This power and authority, by the command of Jehovah, was vested alone in the high priest. It was his prerogative alone to command the obedience of sons in all the services of the temple worship. It was he alone who could go into the holy of holies to make atonement for the sins of the people. Did John the Baptist or his father, Zacharias, either of them, ever hold these prerogatives of the high priest? Let us examine the record and see.

In Luke 1: 5-9, R. V., we read: "There was in the days of Herod, king of Judea, a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of Abijah. . . . Now it came to pass, while he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course, according to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to enter into the temple of the Lord and burn incense." Then we turn to 1 Chron. 24, and learn that the sons of the high priest had so increased in numbers in the days of David that he divided them into twenty-four courses to serve by turn in the temple service to burn incense, and the eighth course was the course of Abijah. This order of the twenty-four courses still obtained in the days of Herod and during the ministry of Jesus, and this man Zacharias belonged to the eighth course. Then we read further concerning him that "when the days of his ministry were fulfilled, he departed unto his house." His term of service lasted only two weeks, this being the only time during the year that his presence was required at the temple. Thus it is made certain by the testimonies of the record that Zacharias was simply one of the sons of a high priest, and was never a high priest himself, and consequently never held the power and authority to exercise any of the functions of the high priesthood.

Hence, it becomes absolutely certain that John the Baptist, the son of this Zacharias, never held the prerogatives of the high priest, and therefore was never in possession of the keys of the Aaronic priesthood.

The truth of this assertion concerning John the Baptist is made doubly certain by the following testimony: "Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, . . . in the high priesthood of Annas and Caiaphas, the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness." (Luke 3: 1, 2, R. V.)

In this testimony, it is made clear that John the Baptist not only never was a high priest, but also that when he was called to preach the gospel of the coming kingdom there were two men claiming the office of high priest; and it was but a short time till he was put to death by Herod, and thus forever shut out from all possibility of obtaining it. But there is still further testimony shutting him out from the claim of the angel said to have been seen by Jo. Smith and Oliver Cowdery. In John 11: 49-52, R. V., we read: "But a certain one of them, Caiaphas, being high priest that year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all, nor do ye take account that it is expedient for you that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not. Now this he said not of himself: but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for the nation; and not for the nation only, but that he might also gather together into one the children of God that are scattered abroad." Again, in chapter 18: 12, 13, R. V., we read: "The officers of the Jews seized Jesus and bound him, and led him to Annas first; for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas, which was high priest that year."

Here we see it clearly shown that Caiaphas was high priest at the time that Jesus laid down his life upon the cross, thereby fulfilling the type and shadow of the Aaronic priesthood by the sacrifice of himself and the shedding of his own blood to make the final atonement for the sins of the world. We also see that Caiaphas was the last high priest of the Jewish dispensation who had a legal claim to all the prerogatives of the high priesthood, and that he really did hold the keys of the Aaronic priesthood is also shown by the fact that through him was given the prophecy that Jesus should die for the nation, and also gather together into one the children of God that were scattered abroad. Hence, it follows that if the Aaronic priesthood must be restored to the earth, Caiaphas is the one who should have been kept, as he is certainly the last one who could lawfully claim the power and authority of a high priest under the Jewish law. But we have already seen from the testimony of Paul that at this point the priesthood was changed—the old Jewish covenant taken away and a new covenant established in its place—and so by the law of shadow and substance, of type and antitype, the Aaronic priesthood forever ceases, and all the keys of its authority pass into the hands of him who is made a High Priest after the order of Melchisedec, an unchangeable priesthood that cannot pass to another. Thus we have an abundance of the most positive evidence to prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that John the Baptist never held the keys of the Aaronic priesthood; and, therefore, it is also evident, beyond all contradiction, that the angel who appeared to Jo. Smith and Oliver Cowdery, pretending to be John the Baptist, is stamped before all the world as an impostor and a liar, and all the claims of the Latter-day Saints for authority based upon his revelations vanish into nothing.

In the second place, I bring to the test of the divine record the three angels representing themselves as Peter, James, and John, and claiming to hold the keys of the Melchisedec priesthood, which were also to be given to Jo. Smith and Oliver Cowdery and others. It is not necessary to quote again the many scriptures bearing upon this subject. It has already been shown that Christ is the only one who can be called of God as was Aaron, and that he was thus called to be a high priest to offer a sacrifice for sin that no other being in the universe could offer.

The keys of the Melchisedec priesthood involve the prerogatives of a divine function that cannot be delegated to any human being; for it must be remembered that it is the offering of this divine sacrifice that makes Jesus a Priest after the order of Melchisedec, and, therefore, it can never be possible that any angel or any man should ever hold the keys of this priesthood which, by the very nature of the case, can never pass from him who ever lives to make continually valid and efficacious the sacrifice made once for all. Can any man give his life for the sins of the world? But every man's life is already forfeited for his own sins. That being who can acceptably give his life for the world must be one who is without the possibility of sin. But could not an angel who has not sinned give his life for the world? If an angel should give his life, his own would be forever lost; and, not having within himself the power to lay down his life and then take it again, a great wrong would be done in thus inflicting unending death upon one not deserving of death. Hence, the being who would successfully die for the sins of the world must be able not only to lay down his life, but also to take it again. Christ is the only Being in the universe fully competent to meet these two requisitions. Remember that it is not preaching or teaching or prophesying that makes one a high priest after the order of Melchisedec, but the offering of that sacrifice in which one lays down his life, suffering the penalty for sin, and then in triumphant victory takes it again, to live for evermore as the eternal Savior of all those who trust in him. Therefore, these three angels pretending to be the apostles Peter, James, and John are forever stamped as impostors and liars, because they have put forth claims which, in the very nature of the case, are wholly impossible.

What are we to think of a system of religion which incorporates such fatal and easily detected errors at the most vital point of its construction? But there are still others.

C. S. TOWNE.

A few moments before President Lincoln left Springfield, he stood on the platform of a car, looking down upon a multitude of sad, friendly, upturned faces. For a moment strong emotion shook him; then, removing his hat and lifting his hand to command silence, he spoke: "My friends, no one not in my situation can appreciate my feeling of sadness at this parting. Here I have lived a quarter of a century, and have passed from a young to an old man; here my children have been born, and one is buried. I now leave, not knowing when or whether ever I may return, with a task before me greater than that which rested upon Washington. Without the assistance of that divine Being, who ever attended him, I cannot succeed; with that assistance, I cannot fail. Trusting in Him who can go with me, and remain with you, and be everywhere for good, let us confidently hope that all will yet be well. To His care commending you, as I hope in your prayers you will commend me, I bid you an affectionate farewell."—Selected.

SHOES OF VARIOUS NATIONS.

In the Cluny Museum, in Paris, there is a very odd and interesting collection. It belongs to M. Jules Jacquemant, and shows the numerous varieties of foot coverings used by the different races, and has over three hundred different kinds of ancient, mediæval, and modern shoes. Almost all of the nations are represented in this curious collection, and it is interesting to note that while nearly every one presents a new and distinctly different kind of foot wear, still each one is characteristic of its country's climate and customs.

Thus we find the most ingenious work of the Indians in their soft, pliant, buckskin moccasins, which, being very light and durable, make them the very best covering for a hunter's foot that human skill has ever contrived. The Indian's snowshoe was also a work of art, especially if we remember that they were made by untaught savages. It was a light wooden frame, covered with a network of strings of hide, and had such a broad surface that the wearer could walk with ease on top of the snow when in pursuit of game. If it had not been for these shoes, the red men would have starved during a severe winter, since only by their use could the deer be run down at that season.

Many of the national shoes are elaborately designed and decorated, while some are extremely simple. Among the more elaborate ones are those worn by the people of Siam. Their shoe has the shape of an ancient canoe, with a gondola bow and an open top. The wooden sole is attached to an upper of wool and cloth, the interior being elaborately ornamented with silk thread of various colors, and sometimes even with silver and gold.

The simplest foot protector is the sandal, which is a sole usually made of wood and attached to the foot by leather thongs. The sandal can be traced back to the earliest periods, when plaited grass was used in making them. Because of its coolness and simplicity, it continues to be the most common foot covering among the Orientals, and, indeed, all races who live in tropic countries. The ancient Greeks wore sandals, though they now wear shoes, which are made almost entirely of leather, with thickly padded soles, and sharply turned-up toes, surmounted by a large ball of colored wool or hair. Among the Orientals who still wear the sandal, we find the Egyptians. Their sandals are composed of a sole made by sticking together three thicknesses of leather, and are held to the foot by a band passing across the instep. Their sandal is beautifully stitched with threads of different colors.

In ancient times, when climate demanded a greater protection for the foot, the primitive races shaped a rude shoe out of a single piece of untanned hide, and, lacing it with a thong, found that it made a complete and warm covering; and thus out of an upper without a lower (this shoe of untanned leather) and a lower without an upper (the sandal), there gradually grew the perfect shoe of the present day, which is a happy combination of both.

Another very simple foot covering is the clog, or patten, which is roughly cut to fit the foot from a piece of wood. Seventeen thousand people in France find employment in making these clogs. The clog is also worn by the Japanese, and, as viewed from the side, is the shape of a boy's sled. A string passing between the great toe and across the instep fastens it to the foot.

The Mussulman's shoe, although rather simple, shows great ingenuity in ornamentation. It is made of heavy leather, and adjusted to the foot by a wide leather strap which runs from the heel and buckles over the instep. The only ornamentation is the fastening of two leather plumes on the right side of the toe.

Among the many other peculiar kinds of shoes worn by people of foreign lands are the Russian's boot and the Hungarian's moccasin. The former is composed of many pieces of morocco, in several colors, and is embossed with vari-colored silk thread; the latter is made of rawhide, prepared by the sun-curing process, and is bound together by many pieces of rawhide.

History tells us that great attention used to be paid to the foot gear, each person striving to outdo the other in the gorgeousness and curiousness of his shoes.

During the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, the lords and gallants of the English court wore shoes with points that curled up like ram's horns, and so long they had to be fastened to the knee with gold and silver chains. Attempts were made by the government to abolish this ridiculous fashion, but in spite of Parliament and law the points continued for a long time to grow longer, and the chains more expensive. During the time of William the Second, of England, the shoes are described as "very high in the heel, with buckles and flaps in front that extend up three or four inches."

In ancient times a Roman's foot covering told his station in life. Thus the senators wore shoes of red leather, ornamented with knobs of ivory or brass; the patricians wore black leather, ornamented with ivory crescents; while the common people wore plain sandals.

Perhaps at the present time more interesting to us are the shoes worn by our new countrymen—the Filipinos. They are sandals made of plaited palmetto grass, as are their great flat hats and curious raincoats. This sole is held on the foot by a cord that passes across the instep, and from the way I saw a little Filipino boy, who has come to this country to live, going down the street the other day, they seem to be able to walk about as well in their sandals as we do in our shoes.—Libby Dougherty, in Kind Words.

A YOUNG EXPLORER.

Joseph Thomson, who died before he was forty years old, was one of the pluckiest and most successful of all the great explorers who have followed Livingstone in South Africa. Before he was of age he was appointed naturalist to an important expedition sent out to find a route from the east coast to the great lakes. The sudden death of the commander left this boy at the head of the caravan, and, though himself so ill and weak that he could not stand alone, he accomplished the desired result.

Thomson, by the way, was practically a nonsmoker and abstainer; and he rather surprised people who fancied that stimulants were indispensable in trying work like his by bringing back his brandy bottle unopened from one of his long expeditions. He showed by this, at all events, that he was quite consistent in his earnest protests against the harm that the drink traffic was doing to the native races.

Like Nelson, Thomson does not seem to have known the meaning of the word "fear;" and this carried him scathless through many dangers that would have proved fatal to a more timid man. During his first expedition, when he was only twenty-one years old, a war party of the dreaded Mahenge appeared.

The mere sound of that name was enough to put Thomson's men to flight; but he rallied them, and, leaving behind him all his weapons, strode calmly into the midst of the savages, and proclaimed that he and his party were friends. His perfect coolness disarmed the warriors, and it stood him in good stead on other occasions. "More than once the ax was uplifted to dash out his brains, and the arrow drawn to the head to pierce his heart. It was only his perfect coolness that saved him. It inspired even the most furious with a kind of superstitious awe; they dared not hurt him." Once he had to pose as a great medicine man in order to escape in safety, and had his nose nearly wrenched off by one warrior, who imagined, from a trick he played with false teeth, that he "took to pieces." But his dauntless courage proved his best friend in time of danger.

"My fondest boast," said Thomson once, "is, not that I have traveled over hundreds of miles hitherto untrodden by the foot of white man, but that I have been able to do so as a Christian and a Scotsman, carrying everywhere good will and friendship, finding that a good word was more potent than gunpowder, and that it was not necessary, even in Central Africa, to sacrifice the lives of men in order to throw light upon its dark corners." And that boast was worthy of the man who uttered it—a brave man physically and morally; a man the keynote of whose life was a "spirit of true chivalry;" a man who, according to J. M. Barrie, "would have gone to the stake rather than tell a lie."

We close a book like the life of Joseph Thomson, with its story of dauntless courage and endurance, nerved to meet our own little troubles and difficulties more bravely.—Classmate.

"How," ventured the editor, who had been appealed to by an unappreciated vocalist, "do you manage to keep the wolf from your door?" "Well," in the first place," he replied, "I do all my practicing at home." Then he started violently, and hastily explained how in this way he saved the rental of a studio.—Exchange.

BREAKING BREAD IN PRIVATE HOUSES.

Breaking bread from house to house was practiced in the church in New Testament times. It did not destroy the church then, and cannot destroy a New Testament church now. Everything that a New Testament practice destroys ought to be destroyed. The New Testament speaks of "the church in thy house;" also of the church in a city, as "the church at Antioch," "the church at Corinth," etc. Meeting from house to house to break bread can neither destroy nor injure the church in thy house nor the church in thy city. Any church which is larger than the church in some one's house and smaller than all Christians in the city or territory where it is located is not a New Testament church, and ought to go. The meetinghouse church, with its church-book membership enrolled to meet in it, is not in the New Testament, and ought to go. It will not do for men of faith to throw down breaking bread from house to house, which is in the New Testament, because it will not harmonize with a church which is not in the New Testament. The true course is to follow the practice of the New Testament, and turn loose what is outside of it.

For each one to eat the Lord's Supper at his home, separate and apart from others, was not the practice of New Testament Christians. They formed assemblies with one another to eat the Supper. The Jews ate the passover from house to house—always ate it in a private house—yet they always formed eating assemblies large enough, to consume a whole yearling lamb. Hence, in the event one family was not large enough to eat the lamb, neighboring families joined in to make an assembly suitable in size to consume the appointed roast. Thus while always eating it in a home, some of them were separated from their own homes to enlarge the assembly in a neighbor's home.

Two or three persons gathered together in Christ's name would form an assembly competent to keep the Lord's Supper; but the number might be enlarged to any extent that would admit of their judging the assembly and purging it of "fornicators, covetous, idolaters, revilers, drunkards, and extortioners." With such they must not assemble and eat. Hence, the assembly must not be such as to forestall their knowing who is there. It is the duty of each Christian to make the effort to form an assembly to break bread; but he must respect the rights of others, and hence not try to have the meeting at his house every meeting day. It may be at his house one Lord's day and at his neighbor's house the next Lord's day. Thus they "broke bread from house to house." Some were at home; others had left home to meet in a brother's home.

In regard to what Brother F. G. Allen taught, I will state that supper is and always has been the last meal of the day; and it seems to me out of the question that anybody would seriously argue that supper might be eaten any time of day. We might, of course, argue that the time of eating a memorial feast would not affect its commemorative character or vitiate its validity as worship; but in so doing, we should bear in mind that such argument would justify another day as well as another time of day. If we may take the Lord's Supper at dinner time, because there is nothing in time, we may take the first-day feast on the second day or any other day of the week, because there is nothing in time. Supper is the evening meal, the last meal of the day. The meeting at which Christ instituted the Supper was in the evening; the meeting to break bread at Troas was in the evening. When people met to take the Lord's Supper they met at supper time, of course. The mid-day meeting was established for other exercises among modern religionists. It became established as best for a full gathering of the enrolled membership of a meetinghouse church, and the Lord's Supper was accorded a place among the various services of the hour to be eaten about dinner time. It may be too much to say that the worship is unacceptable at any time and place; but our inferential reasoning in support of such minor changes as time and place is spiritually inferior to a faithful following of the meaning of words illustrated by the inspired examples of the New Testament.

1 Cor. 14 certainly has no more reference to "the Lord's day worship" than to the worship of any other day. It is not an account of a bread-breaking assembly, but of an edification meeting in which all the prophets might speak in order. Such a meeting might have been on any day of the week. 1 Cor. 16: 1-4 has no reference to a meeting of any kind. It gives direction to each person in the church to lay by him in store on the first day of the week as God has prospered him, that he may have his contribution ready when Paul comes. A meeting is not necessary for each to lay by him in store, nor is any meeting hinted at in the text. What each laid by him was, at Paul's arrival, to be put into the hands of men approved by the givers for safe delivery in Jerusalem. It was for the poor saints across the waters—not for "church work" at home, nor for "the pastor" or protracted meeting preacher; still less for the building fund, for fuel and lights, or for the sexton's salary. It was for the poor saints "over the sea," out of the reach of the givers, that each was to lay by him in store. No one is instructed to lay by him in store for poor saints among whom he lives. He should visit those who live near him and minister directly to their necessities. Why should a Christian "lay by himself in store" what is for his poor neighbor in easy reach of him? He is not told to do it, and should not do it. What he is to "lay by himself in store" is for a foreign sufferer out of his reach, and the order is for him to have something ready when the time comes to send men with relief.

It is of vital importance to do what God commands. Excuses for not doing the Father's will will not pass in the judgment. Every one should diligently keep the word in all good conscience before God and men.

W. L. BUTLER.

Shelbyville, Tenn.

We have published a number of articles from Brother Butler that a number of brethren think hurtful in their tendency and should be noticed. If we understand him in this article, he is trying to prove Christians ought to meet at their private houses to observe the Lord's Supper. None doubt they ought to observe the Lord's Supper in their private houses when they meet there and when they are the most convenient places for doing it; but I doubt if any one can find a single statement concerning the place at which the Lord's Supper was observed in the New Testament. It is presumable the churches mentioned as existing in these houses partook of the Lord's Supper in them, but it is equally presumable that when they met in the temple they did it there. They seem to have met in the temple for prayer, worship, and teaching from Pentecost to the stoning of Stephen, which was after they had numbered five thousand; then they multiplied the number greatly. (See Acts 2: 46; 3: 1; 5: 25, 42.) The eating from house to house, mentioned in Acts 2: 46, was eating meat or food, and was done daily. The Revised Version gives it: "And day by day, continuing steadfastly with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread at home, they did take their food with gladness and singleness of heart." That has no reference to the Lord's Supper, but is the only place in which breaking bread from "house to house" or at home is mentioned. They met, when permitted to do so, in the synagogues to teach. The presumption is, they observed the Lord's Supper there when they met there. (See Acts 18: 8-11; 19: 8.) They were turned out of the synagogue, and Paul daily taught in the schoolhouse of one Tyrannus for two whole years. The presumption is, they observed the Lord's Supper in the homes, the temple, the synagogue, and the schoolhouse when they met there. It is not once told where the Supper was observed. The fact that this is never told, it seems to me, is an indication that God gave no law, and we should make none. But it does say they came together in the church to observe the Supper: "I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse. For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions among you; and I partly believe it. For there must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you. When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's Supper. For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and another is drunken. What? have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God, and shame them that have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not." (1 Cor. 11: 17-22.) Again: "Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another. And if any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto condemnation." (Verses 33, 34.) And remember, this was when they came together in the church. (See verse 18.) This shows plainly the meetings were not at their homes, but were at some place where the church met. They adopted the plan of some eating to themselves, and it resulted in the rich eating by themselves and the poor eating by themselves. I am sure this would be the result of some selecting who should meet with them at their homes.

The chapters beginning with 1 Cor. 11, through 1 Cor. 14, are taken up with direction for the conduct of the meetings for worship, beginning with the Lord's Supper; and all the church are spoken of as coming together. (See chapter 14: 23, 26.)

Brother Butler argues the only collection from the Christians was when it went over the sea, and then it was not collected in the church. Christ and the apostles did keep a common bag in which they put things and out of which money was paid to help the poor and buy the things needed for the feast. (See John 13: 29.) This, too, while Christ and the apostles were present. Then at the church at Jerusalem the believers sold their possessions and laid the price at the apostles' feet for distribution, and seven men of honest report and full of the Holy Spirit were chosen to distribute this fund among the poor at home, while the donors were there.

In 1 Cor. 16: 1-12, a literal translation is: "Place something by itself, putting it into the treasury." Two things were to be done: (1) Separate it from what you have, place it by itself; (2) place it in the treasury. What treasury? It was in the man's treasury before he placed it by itself. This was to take it out of his treasury and put it in another. This direction had been given to the churches in Galatia, now it is given to the church at Corinth, that there should be no gatherings when Paul came to Corinth. It can have but one meaning.

When the passover was first instituted in Egypt, it was observed in their private houses. But the law is very specific and oft repeated that after they came into the land of Canaan all the offerings must be made at the tabernacle, or where God recorded his name. They were forbidden to make sacrifices, save at the place where God had recorded his name. (See Deut. 16: 2-7; Lev. 23: 7.) They were to have a holy convocation when they observed the pass-over.

The word "deipnon" is translated "supper." Liddell and Scott's "The Standard Greek-English Lexicon" defines it "a meal, mealtime, the principal meal. In Attic certainly the chief meal, corresponding to our dinner." It defines the verb "deipneo" "to make a meal, to dine." It gives over a dozen words into which this word enters; the same meaning follows in all of them. In the New Testament it is used about a dozen times. In three of these it is translated "feast;" in the others, "supper," referring chiefly to the Lord's Supper. The word means a meal, the chief meal of the day, and refers to the evening only, as the chief meal was observed in the evening. If the breaking bread (Acts 20: 11) was the Lord's Supper, it was attended to in the early morning, before break of day. The Scriptures speak of their meeting on the first day of the week to break bread, without reference to the time of day. If there be indication as to the hour, I would say it was to be done when the chief meal of the day is held. But I believe there is no reference to the hour of the day.

We are in full sympathy with all efforts to maintain simplicity and plainness in our meetinghouses and private houses, and in our dress and all of our surroundings; but extremes not warranted by the Bible are hurtful and defeat the very end they seek to accomplish. Then there is as much sin in making a law where God has made none as there is in setting aside one he has made. Let us avoid both extremes.

NICE DISTINCTIONS.

Brother Lipscomb: In the Gospel Advocate of November 29, 1900, you wrote, favoring the acceptance of Dunkard baptism, or trine immersion. You said: "They do what the Lord commands, if they act from the proper spirit; but they add to this two additional dippings of the head in water." Again: "Now, if the first was in obedience to the Lord, do the two additional ones destroy the acceptability of the first?"

Now, Brother Lipscomb, if I understand Dunkard teaching and practice relative to baptism, they immerse in, instead of into, the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Their first immersion is in the name of the Father only; the second, that of the Son only; and the third, that of the Holy Spirit only. Which one of these immersions is the "one baptism" (Eph. 4: 5) commanded by Jesus? (See Matt. 28: 19, 20.) Do they obey Jesus' command in their first immersion? If so, why do we add the name of the Son and that of the Holy Spirit when we baptize? Can two things that differ both be right?

What about persons who are baptized "in the name of the Lord Jesus," without the names of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit?

You need not publish this in the Gospel Advocate unless you choose to do so; I do not desire to fill your columns with controversy, and shall be as well satisfied with a reply by private letter.

Fayette City, Pa.

T. E. WINTER.

As I said, I know nothing personally of the practices of the German Baptists, or "Brethren," save as they are represented in history. As there represented, their leading aim is to cling to the Bible in its literal teaching. They miss it in some things. Trine immersion is not scriptural; the law requiring them to baptize face foremost is not scriptural. I do not believe it to be wrong to baptize face foremost. I met a man once who desired to be baptized face foremost, and I readily consented to do it. But the Bible gives no rule as to how it is to be done in this respect. It says they are to be buried, without giving direction as to whether the face be downward or upward. Either way will fill the divine requirements. To refuse to recognize one because baptized with his face upward would be sin. That is making a law where God has made none. To do this is sin. Baptizing is called a "burial." I never heard of persons who buried face downward. So if either method is preferable, it would be one most like the burial. But a burial is all God required. There are other things of a similar character, and some things they practice are positively prohibited by the Scriptures. All additions to his appointments, all general organizations of the churches, are without divine warrant, and are sinful additions to the order of God. They may have some theory connected with their baptism that would vitiate the service; I do not know.

The gospel was preached to plain and unlearned people. It is addressed to the understanding of such, that they may receive and obey it and be saved by it. I know of no greater perversion of the gospel than to make its efficacy depend upon the understanding of nice critical distinctions between the meaning of Greek words or English words. I do not believe a soul was ever lost, who did what is commanded, because he failed to understand the difference between "eis" and "en," or "into" and "in." When persons hear the gospel and obey it, do the things God commands because he commands them, he will bless and save them, whether they have heard of those nice differences between "baptized in the name of Christ" or "baptized into the name of Christ." The men who make the greatest ado over these distinctions, as a rule, do not understand the difference between them. Ask the average critic on these terms what he means by "in the name of Christ," and he will say: "By the authority of Christ." It means by the authority of Christ, but it means more than this. A sinner is damned by the authority of Jesus Christ; but he is not damned in the name of Jesus Christ. "In the name of Christ" means as his servant, or representative, and in his place. A man is saved in the name of Christ, as his servant, his representative, acting for and in his place. Men are damned by the same authority they are saved by; but no one is damned in the name of Jesus, as his servant, or representative, or acting for and in the place of Jesus. "Into the name of Christ" is to enter Christ, or his name, that he will accept us as his servants, or representatives, and permit us to work for him and in his place. It is helpful to understand these nice and critical distinctions, as it gives us clearer conceptions of the system of salvation as a connected whole; but one will not be lost for not seeing the difference, if he trusts God and does what he commands. It is good to understand how food is appropriated and assimilated to the upbuilding of the body, but it is not necessary in order to eat and live. I think there is no grosser misconception of the salvation provided by God than to think it turns on the nice critical distinctions that scholars make in the use of such terms.

It has been only a few years that the translators of the Scriptures themselves understood these distinctions in the use of the prepositions. In the Authorized Version the distinction between "in" and "into" is not observed. The commission says: "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38: "Be baptized . . . in the name of Jesus Christ." It is unsettled yet among scholars whether this should be "in," "upon," or "into" the name of Christ. The last and best text gives it "into." The Samaritans had been baptized in the name of Christ. (See Acts 8: 16.) In almost every case the expression, "baptized in the name of Christ," is now changed to "baptized into the name of Christ," or "baptized into Christ." (See Acts 19: 3, 5; Rom. 6: 3; 1 Cor. 1: 13, 15; 10: 2; 12: 13; Gal. 3: 27.) "Baptized in the name of Jesus Christ" remains only in Acts 10: 48.

These changes are rightly made to preserve harmony of teaching and to express clearly the idea that persons are baptized into Christ; put him on, and henceforth will act as his disciples and servants. All these passages have been heretofore considered as teaching persons are to be baptized by the authority of Jesus. On this understanding the disples adopted the formula, "By the authority of Jesus Christ I baptize you," etc., because they thought "in the name of Christ" was the proper translation; and "in the name of Christ" means by the authority. Are these baptisms invalid on account of this mistake? By no means. Persons are baptized by the authority of Christ, if they believe in Christ; but these scriptures do not teach it. More than this, they are baptized by Christ when baptized in his name or by those baptizing in his name. Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John; however, "Jesus . . . baptized not, but his disciples." What is done by one acting in the name of Christ is done by Christ though that one. When one says, "In the name of Christ I baptize you," he ought to mean: As Christ's servant, acting for him, I baptize you. Christ baptizes through him.

There is to-day doubt in the minds of skilled textuaries whether in Acts 2: 38 it should read "in," "into," or "upon" the name of Christ for the remission of sins. I am at a loss to know which is correct. Further investigations and discoveries in old translations and texts may determine it fully. What then? Is any one's salvation endangered on account of this uncertainty? He who thinks so greatly misconceives the grounds of salvation. It is right to baptize a man in the name of Christ, into Christ, and acting upon the name of Christ, whether this passage teaches it or not. Other passages teach all these truths. Generally a truth of the Christian religion or a duty is not dependent upon the understanding of one word or the interpretation of one sentence. But precept upon precept, line upon line, example upon example, is usually given to make plain the truth of God. I do not pretend to decide whether the baptism performed by German Baptists is acceptable to God or not. Obedience is an individual, not a denominational, matter. Each case ought to be considered by itself. That is true of all baptisms, whether performed among disciples, American or German Baptists, or any one else. If the person baptized did it in obedience to God, the party will not invalidate it. The opposite is true.

Christianity and Campaigning.

"Folks is cur'us in their logic," said Uncle Zeph, thoughtfully. "Now, there's Jim Wilkins—fust-rate business man Jim is (or thinks he is, anyway)—'nd whenever you ask him for a cent fer missions, Jim allers begins the same old way, 'I'm a business man, 'nd what I want to know is how these mission boards are run, 'nd how much gets to the heathen, 'nd how much is wasted in salaries,' 'nd so on, 'nd so on; 'nd the end of it is, Jim never gives a cent, 'nd the man that hez asked him oncet never tries askin' him again.

"Now, when it comes to campaignin', Jim is teetotally different. 'I'm bound that my side shall win if I can help it along,' he says, 'nd to win they've got to hev money, 'nd I'm goin' to do my share.' And then he draws his check, 'nd hands it over. The fellows on the campaign committee say Jim is a 'typical business man,' the way he supports his party. 'Nd he doesn't ask questions, either. Politics is a sight more wasteful than any mission board I ever heerd tell of; but Jim's business principles don't seem to give him any trouble in drawin' his campaign check. 'Millions fer campaignin', but not one cent fer Christianity,' might be Jim's motto, I guess; 'nd there's plenty of others like him. But what I want to know is where is the business logic of it, seein' that that's what Jim prides himself on so, in refusin' to give to the church;'" and Uncle Zeph's eyes twinkled, as he folded up his newspaper.—Forward.

"What Think Ye of Christ?" (Matt. 22: 42.)

Wonderful character he is! Could we investigate a more wonderful one? Jesus, the Babe of Bethlehem; a boy, twelve years of age, conversing with the learned doctors; a young man at the marriage feast at Cana; he who restored the blind to seeing, the deaf to hearing, the lame to walking, and the dead to living; and he who, at the age of thirty-three years, permitted himself to be led by his enemies to Golgotha's heights, one-eighth of a mile west of the city of Jerusalem, there to die as a felon, that you and I might live! Yes, I say, he was a most wonderful being—God and man, human and divine.

God made man in his own image, breathed into him the breath of life; placed him, a perfect being, in a perfect Eden; and gave him a perfect code of laws. Adam and Eve sinned, fell from their perfect state, and through their fall humanity is in bondage to sin to-day. But God, being just and knowing the condition into which man had fallen, began, six thousand years ago, a scheme of redemption in order to rebind man to his primitive state—perfection.

In Gen. 3: 15, we have the first intimation of Christ, while in the promise to Abram (Gen. 12: 1-4) and the renewal to Isaac (Gen. 26: 1-5) and Jacob (Gen. 13: 1-3; 28: 10-15), also in Gen. 49: 10, we have strong intimations of the coming Redeemer, with many other prophecies pointing directly to the Redeemer of Israel.

Looking back nineteen hundred years, to a central point in the history of all time, when Cicero, Sallust, Virgil, and Horace were fresh in the minds of their many living friends; with Seneca in his childhood, and Livy in his prime, and Rome radiant in her growing transformation from brick into marble; during the reign of the great Augustus Cæsar, when the Jews thought themselves pets of Almighty God; when the Greeks housed themselves amid their institutions of art and literature, and called the world "barbarian;" when the inhabitants of the "seven-hilled city" thought to be a Roman was the greatest honor to be had—then it was, I say, in an obscure Roman province, in the land of Judea, in the city of Bethlehem, in the narrow limits of a manger, that the child Jesus was born. Consider him in his human nature, earth was the habitation of his abode; but see him in his divine nature, heaven is the seat of his throne and the earth his footstool. But let us be more specific.

"What think ye of Christ?" This question is asked and answered four times in Matthew. One answer is (26: 66, R. V.): "He is worthy of death [that is, he is an impostor; we spit upon him, buffet him, and despise him]." Another answer is (22: 42, R. V.): He is "the son of David [a man, a great man, a man with royal blood in his veins; but still only a man]." The third answer is (16: 14, R. V.): "One of the prophets [a teacher sent from God—a man inspired with a message, and commissioned with a work]." The last answer is (16: 16, R. V.): "The Son of the living God." These four answers represent the world's view of Jesus of Nazareth. Each man's creed belongs to one of these classes, which are all represented throughout the world to-day. To which class do you belong? Do you say: "He is worthy of death?" Do you consider him, "the son of David," a great man? Do you believe him to have been a prophet? Or do you, with Peter, say: "The Son of the living God?" Friends, if Jesus himself so regarded the confession of Peter as to build his church upon it, should we not surely consider it worthy of being made? O that we were all as strong in faith as was Peter!

What think ye of his life? Men may ridicule the rib story of Genesis or the record of Noah, the preacher of righteousness, the ark builder; they may make sport of the account of Israel's deliverance from Egyptian bondage, or even deny the story of Jonah and the whale; but never has man found a spot in the character or life of Jesus, and men have made it the occasion of severe study for two thousand years; and many of them would have been glad to have pointed the finger and said: "Behold the stain on his robe, or sin in his life!" What does it mean that for six thousand years man has lived, and Jesus has been the only perfect one? His life is marvelous because of this one fact. Renan, the great skeptic, tells us that even the evangelists who wrote of Christ constantly disfigured him because of their inability to attain his height.

If we shut our eyes to his divine nature, he was only a poor, penniless, traveling preacher, whose ministry lasted but little more than three years and whose field of labor was no larger than Davidson County and two adjoining counties. What is the secret of such power as would cause his few poverty-stricken followers to rally around the standard of a dead Leader, and even give their time, labor, and tears, and at last their lives as martyrs in the Roman arena or public highway, for the cause of Christ? Wonderful man was he!

What think ye of his law? We have our lawmakers, who assemble at our State and national legislatures and, with their combined brain, give us laws, and we call them "good;" we soon find fault with them, criticize and change them, and soon they pass away to give place to a new code, which goes likewise. This is all because of man's finite state. But Jesus—one man, not a body of men—gave a code of laws two thousand years ago that has never been revised, and never will be. Unlike man's laws, they are not partial; they condemn the wise and unwise, great and small, rich and poor, bond and free, just and unjust, saint and sinner, and shall endure forever. What think ye of them? Will you be judged by them? Surely, it is even true.

What think ye of Christ's death? See him as he is brought before the council and condemned to the most cruel death; see him as he bears the cross up the steep mountain's side; see the howling mob of Jews and Romans as they spit upon him, curse him, and pull at his robe; see him as they drive the spikes through his tender flesh, and watch him writhe in pain and agony, while the blood-thirsty murderers push the sponge saturated with vinegar and gall between his sinless lips; see him as they place the crown of thorns upon his wrinkled brow, and hear him say: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Watch, the "king of day" fails to behold the awful scene, and mother earth rocks to and fro upon her axis! Hear him say: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Again hear him say: "Thy will be done." Again: "It is finished." Jesus died for you and for me. Judas, who carried the bag, sold our Lord and Master for thirty pieces of silver—sixteen dollars and ninety-six cents—which was the legal value of a slave if he were torn or killed by a beast. This was the price of millions of souls redeemed. What has Christianity cost? It cost the throne of heaven the presence of the blessed Jesus for thirty-three years; it cost his life and labor on earth for the same length of time; it cost him the sufferings and death on Calvary.

What think ye of his history as a man? Let us honor Noah for his faithfulness in building an ark, and Abraham for offering his son on Moriah's top; let us respect Moses, the meek man, for his genius in delivering Israel. Mohammed made his name immortal by converting his wife, city, and country; with his sword and the Koran he made European civilization tremble. Alexander the Great made his name to live forever by conquering his Macedonia, leading his phalanx army across the Bosphorus into Asia Minor, down the Phœnician coast into Egypt, back through Central Asia, and even made far-away India quake; but he died at Babylon, amid sweet perfumes and revelry, a drunkard, having conquered the then known world. Hannibal, the Carthaginian, was great because of his one purpose to destroy the city on the Tiber. At nine years of age he vowed vengeance against Rome; at twenty-five years of age he left New Carthage, in Spain, led his army over the snow-topped Alps down into the plains of sunny Italy, and for fifteen years barred the gates of the "seven-hilled city;" but he carried his ring of poison. Napoleon's name lives to-day because he revolutionized France, and made all Europe stare in amazement; but he had his Corsica, Austerlitz, Waterloo, and St. Helena. John Milton, blind as he was, lived, as it were, where angels fear to tread; wrote "Paradise Lost" and "Paradise Regained;" and shall live in sweet memory of his people for ages yet to come. Carnegie and Rockefeller, with their millions and endowed institutions, have endeared themselves to their countrymen; but they and their wealth shall vanish. These were all mortal men, who stepped upon the stage of action, played their parts, and passed away. Jesus, without an ark to build, a son to offer, a tribe to deliver from Egyptian bondage, a Mecca or Koran; without the palanx of Alexander the Great, the vow of Hannibal, the genius of Napoleon, the talents of Milton and Shakespeare; and without the wealth of Carnegie and Rockefeller—with none of these, I say, Jesus rules to-day the hearts of his people, and shall, until he comes the second time, without a sin offering unto salvation. "Every knee shall bow to him" and "every tongue shall confess that he is Christ, to the glory of God the Father."

Experience—A Sermon to Young Men.

"Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other."

I do not know who coined the above sentence, boys; but I know it is true. I did not learn it from the Bible. The Bible is a grand book—the grandest old book ever written—full of truth and wisdom from lid to lid; but this does not mean that all true sentences are found in it alone. No, boys; the language is nowhere found in the Bible, but the idea expressed by the language is found there frequently. If the idea were in conflict with the Bible, the idea would be false, absolutely false; for I want to impress upon you the fact that the Bible is the word of God, and God's word is truth itself. So bear in mind that no idea can be true that does not exactly fit the Bible. I learned that sentence from Webster's old blue-back spelling book—the book your grandfathers used to pore over in the little log schoolhouse. It may have been as old as Methuselah before Noah Webster was born, for all I know; but that does not change its value. I am not caring for its origin; it is the lesson it teaches that I am after, and that is what I want you to learn.

Yes, boys, experience keeps a dear school; but there is one great advantage it has, and that is, if we will try, we may derive great benefit from it without actually attending and paying the exorbitant tuition. We may profit by what others have learned, if we will; and if we are wise, we will do so. Do you want me to explain this to you more fully—so fully that you cannot help but understand it? Well, I will try, and I think I can succeed; for I have seen much of life myself, and most of the little I have learned during the forty years of my pilgrimage has come either directly or indirectly from this great school of experience. I learned it either from what I experienced myself or from what I saw others experience. You do not have to stand out in the rain to learn that it will make you wet; you are willing to accept the experience of others as to that fact. Neither do you have to put your hand into the fire to learn that it will burn you. Yet there are many other things far more important that we do not learn with so much readiness. Experience, that rigid instructor, teaches many other things with the same precision; but we often fail to grasp the lesson. If we only used the same common sense in many other things that we use in the two examples given, what a world of difference it would often make in our lives! No doubt you know of several men whose lives are what they call "failures." Those men, my boys, have been high-grade pupils in the school of experience, and have paid about the dearest rate of tuition. They were not willing to be benefited by the experience of others, but were determined to enter the school for themselves. Now just look at the result! If their lives are failures, yours will be a failure also, if you follow the same course they did. There is no getting around it: the same course will invariably produce the same effect under similar circumstances.

Did you ever know a boy or young man to continually associate with profane, rowdy, and vicious companions without, to some extent, partaking of their nature? No, boys; and you never will know such a case. Wickedness is as contagious as small-pox, and a thousand times more dangerous. If others have thus become infected, do not you risk it. Have you not seen a young man staggering along the street? Just a short while ago he began with a social drink, and a short time hence he will be either in the gutter or the lockup. Now, do you know where that young man's course is leading him? It is leading him to the shameful grave of a drunkard. Just as surely as the train that passed down the railroad a while ago will reach its destination, just so surely, my boys, that young man will reach his destination—a drunkard's grave. Some obstruction possibly may throw both the train and the young man off the track; but that is only a possibility, not a probability. The experience of countless thousands proves it.

There is not a lesson necessary to successful and honorable life which we may not learn for a certainty by observing the experience of others, not a lurking foe along the path of virtue and happiness that we may not locate by the skeletons of his victims. Experience is like a rock at sea, upon which one stranded vessel should serve as a warning beacon for all others. This is worth remembering, and if it had only been uttered by Spurgeon, Beecher, or some other noted divine, it would have been printed in every religious paper and magazine in the land, and preserved among the pithy sayings of wise men to be read by the next generation. As it is, I only hope you will use judgment enough to steer clear of every rock that has wrecked a human vessel upon the sea of life.

The remnant of the once great Penobscot tribe of Indians now living on an island near Oldtown, Me., have their own form of government. At their recent election they chose a prohibitionist chief, named Mitchell Attean, by a vote of twenty-five to twenty-three.

An enormous bed of coal, which can be utilized by the Russian Navy, has been discovered at a small place called "Ochnesk," in the Caucasus, about twenty miles distant from the sea. The coal extends over an area of about thirty miles, and the quantity of fuel in one of the districts investigated is reckoned at about seventy-three million tons.

In answer to a protest of the survivors of the Sixth Army Corps in Washington, D. C., against placing the name of Gen. R. E. Lee in the Hall of Fame, the University Senate announces that it is too late to make any change in the list, and, moreover, that the Senate agrees with the decision to give General Lee a place among the American immortals.

Andrew Carnegie will give to Chattanooga, Tenn., fifty thousand dollars for a free library, provided the city authorities appropriate five thousand dollars annually to maintain it. The City Board of Mayor and Aldermen has already passed an ordinance making the appropriation required for the maintenance of the library, which assures Mr. Carnegie's gift.

The transport Hancock arrived at San Francisco from Manila, via Nagasaki, with the bodies of about fifteen hundred sailors and soldiers, who either died in battle or succumbed to the ravages of disease in the Philippines, China, or Guam. This is the largest number of bodies brought home since the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. There were eleven deaths on the voyage.

Oscar L. Booz, formerly a cadet at West Point, died recently at his home, in Bristol, Pa., of injuries said to have been the result of hazing while at the military academy. The case was taken up in the House of Representatives at Washington, and a resolution offered by Mr. Wanger, of Pennsylvania, who appointed Cadet Booz, to have a committee appointed to investigate the matter, was adopted without division.

A census of the men crippled by football playing has been taken at the University of Chicago and at the Northwestern University. During the brief football season twelve men were seriously or painfully injured at the University of Chicago, while at the Northwestern University ten athletes received hurts which put them temporarily out of the game. The injuries range from ruptured blood vessels to broken bones and torn ligaments.

The Taft Commission has passed an Act authorizing General MacArthur to establish police in the cities and town of the Philippine Islands and appropriating fifteen thousand dollars for their maintenance. Commissioner Wright, who is assigned to supervise the establishment of a constabulary, among other duties, said the establishment of a local police force was a necessary feature of civil government, and was approved by the military government.

Church News.

TENNESSEE.

Nashville, December 13.—On my last visit to Rock Hill Schoolhouse, in Putnam County, on the first Lord's day in this month, I baptized one person and one was reclaimed. On the following Lord's day and night I preached for the little band at Lebanon. They meet regularly and keep house for the Lord, and they have Brother N. C. Winston, Jr., to meet with them, who seems to be very much in earnest about the work. I am glad to acknowledge the fellowship of the Maple Hill congregation, by Brother Bradshaw, and Mount Juliet congregation, by Brother Cawthon. The year is almost gone, and as I write these words my hand trembles when I reflect that possibly I have not been as faithful as I ought to have been. May the Lord help us to be more faithful.

S. W. WOMACK.

Nashville, December 9.—On Sunday, November 18, 1900, Brother A. C. Jackson, of Jeffersonville, Ind., began a meeting for us at the church of Christ on Green street, this city, and closed on December 9, 1900, with seventeen additions to the congregation—twelve by baptism and five reclaimed. We had a good meeting and closed with a crowded house; taken altogether, this was one of our best meetings. This was the second meeting Brother Jackson has held for us, and we commend him very highly, for his work's sake, to the faithful ones in Christ Jesus for protracted meeting work, and feel sure, from our experience with him, that he will do a good work wherever he holds a meeting. Not only does he preach the truth from the pulpit, but he practices it in private. What a blessed thing this is! How often—O, how often!—have congregations realized their mistake in the choice of preachers to hold their meetings when too late to stop them! A brother preaches the truth from the pulpit, and you engage him to hold a meeting, and the first thing you know there is a world of trouble. "What is the matter?" may be asked. Well, there is but one answer: The preacher loves in words only; privately, he has done that which is an abomination in God's sight; he has sown discord among brethren, and while he has had a number of additions, he leaves the church in a worse condition than he found it. May God help us to remember that our mission is to heal, and not to break or cause division. Brother Jackson's address is 808 Olympic street, Nashville, Tenn. J. G. ALLEN.

The Cape Colony.

The attention of the reading portion of the whole world has been so pointedly directed to South Africa for the past year that a few points as to the history of the Cape Colony will prove of value and interest to the readers of this paper. More than four hundred years ago the Cape of Good Hope was discovered by the Portuguese navigator, Bartholomeu Dias, who proclaimed that territory as part of the possessions of Portugal. However, the Portuguese never settled at the Cape of Good Hope, but did form a colony at Delagoa Bay, on the east coast of Africa, and of which Lourenço Marques is the seaport.

In 1652, the Dutch Admiral, Van Riebeeck, colonized the Cape and founded the present important city of Cape Town, under the auspices of the Dutch East India Company. The Dutch occupation endured for one hundred and forty-three years, without opposition, except from the native aborigines, who were at intervals exceedingly troublesome. In 1795, the British attacked and captured the Colony, after a stubborn resistance on the part of the original founders. In 1802, the Cape Colony was ceded back to the Dutch; but in 1805, the British again took the Cape, after serious fighting. Since then the Cape Colony has been a colonial possession of Great Britain.

During the British-Boer War, the Colony has been the base of supplies of the English armies, and much fighting has taken place both within the boundaries of the Colony and on the frontier, as the Dutch Colonists naturally sympathize with their kinsmen of the Orange Free State and Transvaal, and have rendered them much assistance in the way of supplying recruits for the Boer commanders. The Dutch of the two republics, of course, owe no allegiance to Great Britain, and have the right to fight till death for the prolongation of their independence and for the preservation of their national life. The Dutch Cape Colonists, however, are technically rebels, as they are British subjects, and the fate of many of those captured in arms is a hard one, as they have been condemned to from five to twenty years' imprisonment for treason. Whether at the end of the war the Transvaal and Orange Free State will form a part of the Cape Colony is not known. Indeed, as the Boers are still fighting, it is possible that either through foreign intervention or through a revulsion of feeling in their favor in England, their independence may yet be maintained.

EDWARD R. NORTON.

The latest reports say that all the European ministers in Peking have received final instructions from their governments, so that a beginning of peace negotiations can be made at once. The success of the American policy, on which the new agreement between the powers is based, is even more complete than was expected. As an interesting proof of this, it is learned from the very best source that the powers constituting the triple alliance, which at the beginning were strongly opposed to the American policy, have now requested their ministers to limit, as far as possible, all matters of formality in the peace negotiations, so that peace may be speedily concluded.

No man flatters the woman he truly loves.—Tuckerman.

The Secretary of the Interior, in his annual report, says of the general condition of the Indians: "No disturbances or serious troubles have occurred, and a reasonable degree of progress toward civilization has been made. The population of Indians, exclusive of those in the State of New York and those in the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory, may be stated approximately to be 181,939, an increase of 353 over the previous year. Five thousand six hundred and eighteen allotments of land in severalty were made during the year, embracing approximately 890,982.25 acres. The total number of allotments of land made to the Indians since the passage of the Act of February 8, 1887, is approximately 63,368, and they have an aggregate acreage of 7,873,570.25. The five nations or tribes of the Indian Territory comprise the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, Cherokee, and Seminole. The approximate area of lands embraced in the Indian Territory and controlled by these five tribes is 19,776,286 acres, with an estimated aggregate population of 84,750 Indians, including freedmen." The total amount of money expended by the United States Government for the Indian service from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1900, is shown to be $368,358,217.17. The number of Indians who regularly receive rations, usually twice a month, is about 45,270. The maximum ration is one hundred and fifty pounds of beef (or bacon in lieu), three pounds of beans, four pounds of coffee, fifty pounds of flour, and seven pounds of sugar to one hundred rations, and would cost at current prices about fifty-one dollars per annum; but a full ration is seldom given.

Can the Sinner Exercise Free Will in Accepting the Gospel?

Daniel Webster was once asked what was the greatest thought he had ever known. The giant intellect said: "The thought of responsibility to my God."

John W. Campbell, Chief of Police of St. Louis, says: "I do not dispute the claim that crime, as well as drunkenness, is, to a certain extent, hereditary; I do not see why it should not be; but I believe that along with the tendency to commit crime and to use strong drink, a man is born with a will which, if he wishes to so exercise it, will enable him to keep away from the commission of crime, just as I believe it will keep him from drinking. That some men are 'natural-born thieves' is something that no policeman or detective will dispute. They see too many of them; they are eternally being met with. But I do not believe that the man who steals does so for any other reason than that he does not want to keep from it. The tendency to steal may be stronger in some men than in others; but if a man really wants to be honest, he can be so. No one is forced to become a thief."

Jesus says: "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock." (Matt. 7: 24.) He said to sinners: "Except ye believe that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." (John 8: 24, R. V.)

But can we do the sayings of Jesus? Can men, just as they are found when they hear the gospel, believe it? I answer, boldly: Yes. Just as easily as I can believe the well-attested facts concerning the person and achievements of Admiral George Dewey. I must hear the facts clearly stated and well authenticated before I am able to believe them. The man who can believe one fact well authenticated can believe any other fact equally well attested. If not, why not?

The Spurgeon of America, Dr. J. R. Graves, says: "All that Christ required of the people to believe for salvation and all that he has enjoined upon them to observe for obedience he has taught so plainly in his word that the common people, without the assistance of priest or rabbi, can understand without a hesitation." ("Graves-Ditzler Debate," page 12.)

God has made man's salvation to depend upon believing in Christ. (See John 3: 14-19.) Jesus says: "He that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.) God has ever treated man as if he were capable of believing, and, therefore, his condemnation would be just if he should fail. (See Luke 8: 12; John 1: 8; 10: 28; 11: 15, 48; 13: 19; 14: 11, 29; 17: 20; 20: 30, 31; Acts 14: 1; 15: 7; 16: 10-12; 18: 8; 26: 17, 18; Rom. 10: 13, 14.)

"But," says one, "if man is free to accept or reject the gospel—free to be saved or be lost, as he may freely choose; if he can exercise free volition of will in believing or not believing, why is it that you cannot believe Baptist doctrine?" I answer: Just for the same reason that I cannot believe Methodist doctrine nor Mormon doctrine, and that reason is, I have no evidence that it is true. A man does not believe a thing to make it true, but because it is true. Hence, when the evidence is given that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and our Savior, we believe it upon the evidence; therefore, faith is the product of evidence. It is purely an act of the mind, and is brought about by hearing testimony, not by a direct impact power of the Holy Spirit, as some affirm. We believe that there is such a man as George Dewey, and why? Because we have the evidence which clearly establishes the fact. We believe in Dewey as a sailor and a brave, courageous fellow; and in Christ as the Son of God, a man of sorrows, and the Savior of sinners. The difference is, one is human; the other, divine. Our knowledge of the Savior and his great love for us gives rise to a degree of faith in Christ above that in Admiral Dewey. Still, the action of the mind is the same. We base our faith in Dewey on testimony. If we had never heard of him, we could not believe him. Neither can one believe on Jesus Christ unless he first hears of him. (See Rom. 10: 14.) Hence, in the regeneration of the alien sinner the Holy Spirit operates by or with its motives and arguments, as displayed in the preaching of the apostles, as recorded in the New Testament.

Philip preached Jesus to the Ethiopian nobleman; Paul spoke the word of the Lord to the Philippian jailer and his household. The gospel story will flood the eyes with tears and melt the stony heart as nothing else can do. The love of God and the wondrous sacrifices of a bleeding, dying Savior will fully satisfy the wants of the sin-sick soul. To love and obey the word of God is to fill our souls with unspeakable joy. In obedience to the word of God, we are begotten, instructed, quickened, purified, made free from sin, kept free, sanctified, guided, and saved.

The Holy Spirit has given us a Bible brimful of evidence concerning Jesus of Nazareth, and salvation through him, and when we believe it our faith is a "fruit [production] of the Spirit." In believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, men are actuated by evidence, not by a direct operation of the Spirit. And the reason that Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was never converted to God is that he persistently refused to accept the testimony of the apostles and prophets. He shut his eyes against the truth; he put the word from him, and judged himself "unworthy of everlasting life." (See Acts 13: 46; 28: 27-31.)

Jesus says: "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the words that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." (John 12: 48.)

But if Ingersoll could not have been converted except by a direct impact power of the Holy Spirit, and he never received it, then who is to blame? Are men who are not Christians in that deplorable condition because they cannot become Christians or because they will not? My position is that they can, but will not. (See John 5: 40.) Men are condemned for their own perversity, not because of the unwillingness of God to send the Holy Spirit to provide a way. Ingersoll died without hope and without God in the world. Whose fault was it? Who is to blame? If you say that God is to blame for it, then why blame a man for anything? May he not as well curse as to pray, as well go to the saloon as to the Sunday school, as well steal as to be honest? Why blame him? Why should anybody blame him or punish him for anything he does? Upon that hypothesis, I do not see how you could consent to punish any alien sinner for anything, unless it should be for doing right. You might, with some show of consistency, blame a sinner for doing right, if you think he is naturally opposed to all that is right; and for him to do right would be sinning against nature.

But listen. Jesus says: "For this people's heart is waxed [become] gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and I should heal them." (Matt. 13: 15.) To be healed one must be converted; to be converted one must see and hear (heed). This is the Lord's order. But the people of whom he was speaking were not healed (neither was Ingersoll healed). Why? Because they were not converted. Why were they not converted? Because they had not seen with their eyes and heard with their ears. But why had they not seen with their eyes and heard with their ears? Let the Lord answer: "Their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and I should heal them." This justly throws the responsibility upon them. To me this seems as clear as a sunbeam. Being free moral agents, men have the power of choice; they can hear or they can those who comply with the conditions agents; they can hear or they can refuse to hear; they can see or they can refuse to see. God does not conscript men and women into his service. All the soldiers of the cross are volunteers.

Does the fact that some of the old negroes continued to serve their old masters after the war prove that President Lincoln made no provision for their freedom? No. Neither does the fact that some Christians continue to serve Satan, and are lost at last, prove that Jesus made no provision in the atonement for them. God does not force salvation upon any, whether they want it or not. He purchased salvation for all; but the appropriation and enjoyment of that salvation is conditional. Hence, only those who comply with the conditions can enjoy the blessings of salvation. If we build on the Rock, we must hear and do the sayings of Jesus; if we do not hear and do these sayings, we shall build on the sand. Dear reader, on what are you building? (See Matt. 7: 24-27.)

Some build their hopes on the ever-drifting sand;
Some, on their fame or their treasure or their land;
Mine, on the Rock that forever shall stand—
Jesus, the Rock of Ages.
St. Louis, Mo. J. W. ATKISSON.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shows a total revenue from all sources for the fiscal year ending on June 30, 1900, of $669,595,431.18, against which there are expenditures of $590,068,371, leaving a surplus of $79,527,060.18. The imports of the year were $849,941,184, against $697,148,489 in 1899, an increase of $152,792,695. This large increase, however, is chiefly in manufacturers' materials. The total exports of the year were valued at $1,394,483,082, of which $1,370,763,571 were of domestic production. Of this vast sum, manufactures formed 31.65 per cent, against 28.21 per cent in 1892, 23.14 per cent in 1895, and 17.87 per cent in 1890. The total exportation of manufactures during the year 1900 was $433,851,756, against $339,592,146 in 1899, an increase of nearly one hundred million dollars, or about 28 per cent. Agricultural products also show a gratifying gain over 1899, the total for the year 1900 being $835,858,123, against $784,776,142 in 1899, while every other class—mining, forestry, fisheries, and miscellaneous—also shows an increase in 1900, as compared with the preceding year. The receipts and deposits of bullion at mints and assay offices, including re-deposits, aggregated $238,755,736.24, of which $203,553,813.88 was gold and $35,201,922.36 was silver.

The weight of a bushel of various kinds of products is a very variable quantity. The lightest bushel we have, perhaps, among the products usually sold is blue grass seed, which weighs but fourteen pounds. Next

How Will She End?

Just budding into womanhood, so fresh, so fair and fine that we turn to watch her as she passes, she trips along the street a picture of health and beauty. Among the passing crowd of worn and wrinkled women, she looks a being from another world. Will she ever be like them? Could they once have been as fair as she? No beauty can last under the strain and drain of female weakness, from which the majority of women suffer in a greater or less degree. They might preserve their fairness of face and form if they would cure the disastrous diseases which affect the womanly organs. Women are cured of such diseases by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It stops the enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, cures bearing-down pains, strengthens the nervous system, and restores the general health. It contains no opium, cocaine or other narcotic.

"I had been a great sufferer from female weakness," writes Mrs. M. B. Wallace, of Muenster, Cook Co., Texas. "I tried four doctors and none did me any good. I suffered six years, but at last I found relief. I followed your advice, and took eight bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and four of his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I now feel like a new woman. I have gained eighteen pounds."

Oats weigh thirty-two pounds and so do blackberries, raspberries, strawberries, and osage orange seed. Dried peaches weigh thirty-three pounds per bushel, and coke weighs thirty-eight pounds. Cherries, currants, gooseberries, grapes, and plums weigh forty pounds. Hemp seed weighs forty-four pounds, timothy seed weighs forty-five pounds, and castor beans and sweet potatoes weigh forty-six pounds to the bushel. Green apples, barley, Hungarian grass seed, millet seed, green peaches, and quinces weigh forty-eight pounds; salt, fifty pounds; buckwheat, fifty-two pounds; shelled corn, flax seed, and rye, fifty-six pounds; onions, fifty-seven pounds; and wheat, potatoes, clover seed, and beans, sixty pounds. Corn on the cob weighs seventy pounds, and coal and lime weigh eighty pounds. Sand weighs one hundred and thirty pounds to the bushel.

President Dabney, of the University of Tennessee, at Knoxville, has begun a crusade against cigarette smoking among students. In a speech recently in the chapel, he announced that an investigation had been made and that it had been found that the boys who were addicted to tobacco smoking, especially cigarettes, were those who were most deficient in their studies. He also announced that eight of these young men had accumulated so many demerits that it was altogether probable they would be asked Brother Glover was yet at Onyx, O. T., at last report. He goes from there to a point near Shawnee, O. T.

Brother Joseph E. Cain has closed the meeting at Bethel, and goes next to Richland to assist in a meeting.

Brother C. M. Johnson preached at Home Valley on a recent Lord's day.

Brother Q. T. Houston was with the brethren at Palestine recently on Lord's day. He will be with them again soon.

Brother C. C. Houston was with the brethren at Peck on the first Lord's day in this month. I have been informed that Brother Gall will assist the Peck congregation in a meeting this winter.

The brethren at Rago began a meeting on December 20, 1900. They have just completed a new house in which to worship, and feel now that they can accomplish more, as they will be better located.

As man's days are few on earth, can he afford to waste any of them? As there is much trouble in this world, can we afford to miss an opportunity of assistance to the needy? As the Lord has placed means within our reach by which we may be happy, can we afford to fail to use every means within our bounds? As the Lord has said, "Vengeance is mine," can we afford to undertake the work ourselves? May we not fail to do it right? Had we not best leave it with the Lord?

Is your best friend the one that makes the most pretensions? Beware of the man who continues to flatter you, especially if his self-interest leads him to do something else. He is not a safe man and well poised who gives the largest indulgence to his passions. He that plays "fast and loose" with the truth is not a safe teacher; he that cries out for much liberty and self-freedom is not a wise leader. The conservative, cool man is the safest counselor. What will become of the man who uses much liberty to the disregarding of authority? What did Jesus emphasize in his example and precept, authority and submission or individual human liberty? When we lose sight of authority in any law, we are on the road to wreck. Authority is first; liberty, secondary.

Seeds that Surely Grow.

The cost of seeds compared with the value of the crop is so small that a few cents saved by buying second-rate seeds will amount to many dollars lost when the harvest is gathered. Farmers have found out by many costly failures what a risky thing it is to buy seeds without being pretty sure that they are reliable and true to name. The latest catalogue of the seed house of D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, Mich., is a reminder that thousands of farmers in the United States and Canada have pinned their faith to the reputation of this great firm. During a business career approaching half a century in time, Ferry's seeds have won an annual increase in popularity, which is perhaps the best evidence that they grow and give satisfaction. Ferry's Seed Annual for 1901 is a useful guide in selecting seeds for the farm, the truck garden, and the flower garden. It is sent free on application.

LET US HEAR FROM YOU.

We have recently been very much encouraged by the way our friends have been working for the Gospel Advocate. Some are anxious to continue to read the paper who have not the money to pay for it. Here is an easy way to renew: Send us three new subscribers, accompanied by $4.50, and we will set up the date of your paper for one year. Many of your friends would be benefited by reading the Gospel Advocate, and, with a little encouragement, would subscribe for it. We would be glad if every reader of the Advocate would make a vigorous effort to send at least three new subscribers. If you mean to join the list of our workers, will you not write us a card to that effect? In a few hours' work you should be able to secure several subscribers. Often have we been rejoiced to know that people have been led to Christ by reading the Gospel Advocate. In circulating the paper, you are doing a good work. Who will help us? PUBLISHERS.

"Ye are the salt of the earth." The world measures men by their influence; God measures men by the influence they exert in proportion to their talents. To say we are "the light of the world" and "the salt of the earth" is to say we are a center of good, saving influence. If we exert it, we are in our God-appointed place and work. But if the salt have lost its savor? Why, it is then good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot. Remember it.

In like manner is the kingdom of heaven likened unto leaven which a woman hid in three measures of meal till it was all leavened. This means influence again: The Christian's life and work are summed up in the term. A church or an individual Christian that is not exerting influence for God is utterly worthless, bound to die and rot and be damned.

What means that unspeakable selfishness that brands such numbers of congregations? They try to save themselves and edify themselves; they dig treasures from God's word to bury them in their own bosoms. Is it selfishness any less because salvation is the object? But in vain do you endeavor to save yourselves thus. Like the gold and silver canker in the miser's chests and moths eat his garments, so will your good things perish on your hands. Your sermons, meetings, and readings will become dry and comfortless; your religious service will become a treadmill and empty formality; dullness and monotony will kill you. And this is good. God has so ordained it that the seed of selfishness shall reap corruption.

If you want to save yourself, you can do it by following Christ; and that means work, suffering, self-sacrifice for others. "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Do you expect to learn and profit by the word of God if you read and study only for your own benefit? You are very foolish. Says Christ to his disciples: "Is the lamp brought to be put under the bushel, or under the bed, and not to be put on the stand? For there is nothing hid, save that it should be manifested; neither was anything made secret, but that it should come to light. If any man hath ears to hear, let him hear. And he said unto them, Take heed what ye hear: with what measure ye mete it shall be measured unto you: and more shall be given unto you. For he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken away even that which he hath." You will not be permitted to keep it, only as you measure it out and use it in saving others.

O such an anomaly as a church of Christ which is just self-supporting, where the gospel sounds in, instead of out! All the "big" preachers are hired to come and preach for them, for their own sweet edification. And it becomes a curse to them. Spiritual indigestion sets in, and afterwards that state which is very appropriately called "preached to death." That is a hard death to die, and a hopeless one. Thus the gospel becomes "a savor of death unto death."

The remedy is: Quit selfishness and sacrifice yourself for others—for the poor, the ignorant, the benighted. In so doing, you will save yourself along with them. To save others is the Christian's passion. Paul exclaims: "I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh: who are Israelites." Whether this exclamation is hyperbolic, as some may claim, or not, it signifies a complete forgetting of self in the desire and effort to save others. But when a church, salt of the earth, has lost its saving savor, it is doomed. Let the church become a force of missionaries; let it edify itself and use its means to save sinners, instead of paying for a "pastor" or putting in windows of stained glass; let ninety-nine per cent of its energy go to be light, salt, and leaven to the world; and we shall be astonished at the results—marvelous growth in numbers and power, in grace and knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

There are so many of us that are satisfied to be good average people—about as good as the common run. The "average man" and the "common run of people" are going to be. The Christian Leader quotes, in an editorial: "He who would uplift the age must stand above the age." This is very true; and the Christians are ordained to uplift and save the world. Hence, it is not enough that they should be as good as the common run, but it is God's desire "that ye may be blameless and harmless, children of God without blemish in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye are seen as lights in the world."

The Voice, a paper published at Tokyo, Japan, E. Snodgrass, editor, has in the November number a serial article, entitled "Mr. Dharmapala's Mistakes," from which we quote: "Supposing he knows all about the 'domain of truth and righteousness,' we say: That's so; those peoples are no authorized teachers in that matter, because only Jesus the Christ is the proper teacher in the domain of truth and righteousness, his own domain in a supremely exclusive sense. The Lord never did say: 'Go to the peoples of America, England, Italy, etc., and learn of them.' He said: 'Come unto me, learn of me.' We hope and pray that Mr. Dharmapala will see the mistake he made when putting learners in the first place and the teacher in none at all. It was a great and really deplorable mistake Mr. Dharmapala made when wasting twelve years of his life in studying 'different religions,' instead of going to Jesus and learning of him."

Mr. Dharmapala is not the only man that has made this mistake. Many in this blessed country have frittered away their time and enthusiasm in examining the various systems of theology and the isms that infest the land. To find the standard, let us go at once to the Source. We cannot decide on who or what is right until we have the standard well fixed in our minds. There is no sectarian party that cannot make a plausible argument for itself, and men that have no standard are easily misled. We advise every inquirer to go to God's word to find truth, accept it and obey it as it is there written, without reference to human creed or human churches. "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good," was spoken to Christians, who already knew the standard, and not to the man who seeks for salvation.

"If it be true, as charged, that the church is becoming secularized, that she is concentrating on finances, that she is bending her energy to the putting up of new machinery, why, then, she must lose efficiency and public confidence. Her mission is, first and foremost, to save souls; her marching orders are to go with the gospel. Full salaries, full benevolences, full parsonage larders; new churches, etc., cannot take the place of full salvation for the unsaved. If we are not leading the lost to light, we are failing in our task. 'To your tents, O Israel!'"

The above is a good paragraph from the Midland Methodist. But—alas!—the very next paragraph spoils it:

"We do not believe that the church, as a church, is worshipping a golden calf. She has had such sorry plans for material support and expansion, has pottered along in such a slipshod fashion, that a little energy and agitation in the direction of a better order of business by very contrast greatly disturbs some timorous souls who would be content to live on forever at a poor dying rate. We have no confidence in the affected piety that shouts over heaven, but shivers over common-sense efforts to organize ecclesiastical forces into practical work."

Surely the work of the church in New Testament times was a bright success, although it must have run upon the plan which the Midland Methodist styles "sorry" and "slipshod;" for then they had not the financial schemes and plans which are now advocated, no "common-sense efforts to organize ecclesiastical forces into practical work." The work was ordered by God's wisdom for a pattern to future generations. Missionaries went forth, without salary or society to back them; members gave cheerfully, not because they were assessed, but of a ready mind as God had prospered them; individual effort flourished; every one hastened to do some work in person for the glory of God. We are glad to know that there are souls so timorous as to be afraid of departing from God's plan. Not so much are new financial schemes needed as new love and zeal and spirit of self-sacrifice in the heart of every individual member.

"The famous New York physician, Dr. Cyrus Edson, on being asked to specify some of the ways for the maintenance of the highest physical health and vigor, is reported to have given the following sensible answer: 'We find in religious teachings the highest hygienic rules that have ever been devised. He who really lives up to the teachings of Christianity will keep his body in a perfectly healthy condition. It has been truly said that "the wages of sin is death;" and death is caused by the effect of vice. A vicious person contains in his body the seed of his own destruction. The Christian is the best fitted of all persons to withstand disease and live healthy.' Let infidelity take this also into account in its insane fight against the truth." (Exchange.)

All the worry, the corroding cares, anxieties; the anger, pride, envies, and jealousies that gnaw on vitality; the evil passions and the vices that shorten man's days; the cynicism and selfishness that embitter his life—Christ removes them all. His religion gives rest and serenity to the soul. Faith, hope, and love fill the heart with a healthful sunshine which increases happiness and adds to our days.

Divine Authenticity of the "Book of Mormon" Investigated. No. 3.

THE ANGEL MORONI VS. THE PROPHET MORONI.

There is yet another angel whose credentials must be tested and his claims verified, or else disproved; and that is the angel Moroni, who gave the plates into the hands of Jo. Smith to be translated. Orson Pratt, on page 264, says: "In what manner does Joseph Smith declare that a dispensation of the gospel was committed unto him? He testifies that an angel of God, whose name was Moroni, appeared unto him; that this angel was formerly an ancient prophet among a remnant of the tribe of Joseph, on the continent of America. He testifies that Moroni revealed unto him where he deposited the sacred records of his nation some fourteen hundred years ago; that these records contained the 'everlasting gospel' as it was anciently taught and recorded by this branch of Israel. He gave Mr. Smith the power to reveal the contents of those records to the nations of the earth. Now, how does this testimony of Jo. Smith agree with the book of John's prophecy? John testifies that when the everlasting gospel is restored to the earth it shall be by an angel; Mr. Smith testifies that it was restored by an angel, and in no other way."

Now, as this angel Moroni is not spoken of in the Bible, we cannot turn to it for testimony. We, therefore, turn to the "Book of Mormon," which does testify in regard to him. I quote from page 654 of the Nephite records, "Book of Mormon," verses 12-16: "Behold, I am Moroni; I am the son of Mormon, and my father was a descendant of Nephi. And I am the same which hideth up this record unto the Lord; the plates thereof are of no worth, because of the commandment of the Lord. For he truly saith that no one shall have them to get gain; but the record thereof is of great worth; and blessed be him that shall bring this thing to light, for it shall be brought out of darkness into light; yea, it shall be brought out of the earth and come unto the knowledge of the people, and it shall be done by the power of God." On page 670, Moroni further testifies concerning the plates: "And, behold, ye shall write them and shall seal them up, that no one can interpret them; for ye shall write them in a language that cannot be read. And, behold, these two stones will I give unto thee, and ye shall seal them up also with the things that ye shall write. For the language which ye shall write I have confounded: wherefore I will cause in my own due time that these stones shall magnify to the eyes of men these things which ye shall write." On page 673, he also says: "And now I, Moroni, have written the words which were commanded me, which I have sealed up; therefore, touch them not, in order that ye may translate, for that thing is forbidden you, except by and by it shall be wisdom in God. And, behold, ye may be privileged, that ye may show the plates unto those who shall assist to bring forth this work; and unto three shall they be shown by the power of God, and in the mouth of three witnesses shall these things be established." On page 264, "Book of Mosiah," verses 13-15, the two stones spoken of by Moroni are thus described: "He translated them by means of those two stones which were fastened into the two rims of a bow. Now, these things were prepared from the beginning, and were handed down from generation to generation, for the purpose of interpreting languages, and they have been kept and preserved by the hand of the Lord."

We next inquire: Who are the three witnesses spoken of by Moroni? On page 144, Orson Pratt says: "That the world might have no excuse for rejecting the 'Book of Mormon,' the Lord did, before he sent it to them, raise up three other witnesses besides Jo. Smith—namely, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris. These three in company with Mr. Smith testify that, in answer to their prayers, in the year 1829, they saw an angel of God descend from heaven, clothed with glory, and that he took the plates from which the 'Book of Mormon' was translated and exhibited them before their eyes, so that they saw them distinctly, and also the engravings upon them; and they further testify that they heard the voice of the Lord out of heaven, declaring that they had been translated correctly; and they further declare that the voice of the Lord commanded them to send forth their testimony of what they had seen and heard unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and peoples. In obedience to this heavenly command, they have sent forth their written testimony, connected with the 'Book of Mormon,' for the benefit of all the world."

I will also quote from the book of "Doctrines and Covenants," section 17, page 111, a revelation given through Jo. Smith to Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, in June, 1829, previous to their viewing the plates, as follows: "You shall have a view of the plates and also of the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim. And after you have seen them with your eyes, you shall testify of them by the power of God, that you have seen them, even as my servant Jo. Smith hath seen them."

Take notice in what follows whether or not this command was obeyed. Now, then, one of these divinely ordained witnesses, David Whitmer, has written a pamphlet of seventy-five pages, entitled "An Address to All Believers in Christ." This pamphlet is written to defend the divine authenticity of the "Book of Mormon." He says he knows the "Book of Mormon" is the word of God. Now, what is his testimony in regard to the means by which the plates were to be translated according to the words of Moroni in the "Book of Mormon?" Remember that Moroni, the ancient prophet, says there were two stones set in the rims of a bow. Did the angel who called himself "Moroni" give two such stones to Jo. Smith? What is Whitmer's testimony? Speaking of the story of the Spaulding manuscript, he says: "I will say that all who desire to investigate the Spaulding manuscript story will not be obliged to go very far before they will see the entire falsity of that claim. I testify to the world that I am an eyewitness to the translation of the greater part of the 'Book of Mormon.' Part of it was translated in my father's house." On page 6, he says: "God gave to an unlearned boy, Joseph Smith, the gift to translate it by means of a stone." In the course of his pamphlet he speaks of this stone twenty-five times, and every time he speaks of it as "the stone." He never once speaks of the two stones set in the rims of a bow. In the combined testimony of the three witnesses published with the "Book of Mormon" not a word is said regarding the two stones, notwithstanding, as we have seen, they were commanded by a special revelation to testify concerning them; the command was wholly disregarded.

The same is true of the testimony of the eight other witnesses, who say that they also saw and handled the plates. What is wrong here to cause this irreconcilable clashing of testimony? If the "Book of Mormon" be true, as Whitmer stoutly affirms, those spectacle stones were certainly there with the plates when the time came for the revelation of the record, for by the statement of the record itself there was no other way by which the record could be translated. Why are all the witnesses, eleven in number, wholly silent as to seeing any stones? If the "Book of Mormon" be true, they were certainly there, and testimony should have been given to that fact; it is just as important as the plates themselves. Jo. Smith should have been seen wearing those stones set in the rims of a bow for that very purpose all the time that David Whitmer was a witness to the act of translating.

Orson Pratt, in speaking of the improbability that four men would conspire together to palm an imposture upon the nations of the earth, says, on page 145: "We have read of individual impostors, like Mohammed, who have testified to the ministering of angels, and have deceived many; but where have we ever heard of four impostors all agreed in combining together to originate an imposition, and afterwards to send forth their united testimony to deceive all the nations of the earth? In the history of the various false Christs and false prophets who have appeared among men, we find, as a general thing, that each one originated his own system of imposition, and then offered it to the world on his own testimony alone; but not so with the 'Book of Mormon.' It was confirmed by angels and the voice of the Lord to four witnesses before it was suffered to be printed and offered to the world with authority. It is often the case that impostors advocate a particular system, pretending that they know it to be true; but, then, if such a system be traced back to its origin, it will be found that it not only originated with one man, but it was first offered to the world on his testimony alone."

In reply to this, let us trace this system back to its origin, as we have an account of it in Jo. Smith's own words. In his fifteenth year, at the time of a camp meeting revival, while in the woods praying, he saw a pillar of light descending from heaven, and in the light two beings, represented as the divine Father and the Son; and the Father commands him to hear the Son. They tell him not to join any of the existing churches, as they are all wrong. Then on September 21, 1823, while praying in his room at night, an angel appeared to him who said his name was Moroni, and who told him that God had a work for him to do, telling him also of the plates and the seer stones. On that same night the angel came to him three times, repeating the same message. On the next day the same angel again appeared and sent him to the place where the plates were hid, and showed them to him, but forbade his taking them till four years should pass by; but at the end of each year the angel came to him, giving him various messages, till on September 22, 1827, he received the plates for the purpose of translating them.

Thus through a period of seven years Jo. Smith was having these revelations from God and the angels, and we are dependent wholly upon his word alone that he had any such visions. Then it was not till some time in the year 1829 that the plates were shown to the three other witnesses; but in the meantime we have the decisive testimony of David Whitmer to the fact that Jo. Smith, in translating the plates, had only a stone, instead of the two stones set in the rims of a bow, as described in the "Book of Mormon," which he certainly would have had if the "Book of Mormon" be true and the angel calling himself "Moroni" were not an impostor. When the persistent and unvarying testimony of David Whitmer is compared with the "Book of Mormon," it is shown conclusively that the angel calling himself "Moroni" was a fraudulent impostor, because Jo. Smith never got the double seer stones which Whitmer should have seen him have, if the angel Moroni had really been the ancient prophet who hid the stones along with the plates.

Then as Jo. Smith had only a single stone as a fraudulent imposition, there is no possible way of proving that Jo. Smith ever had the genuine Nephite plates, if any such there ever were. Hence, it follows that if a thousand witnesses, instead of four, had seen this angel showing the plates, their testimony would be worthless as it regarded the "Book of Mormon," because the angel himself is shown to be an impostor, in that Jo. Smith was not furnished with the magic spectacles which the "Book of Mormon" described and promised; hence, the book itself is shown to be a fraud, got up by one man, or four men, or twelve men, who did not have enough foresight and cleverness of contrivance to frame a scheme which should be harmonious throughout its whole extent. How easy it would have been for Jo. Smith to have provided himself with the two stones, instead of one! Poor fellow! he never saw his mistake. The voice of the Lord comes next.

C. S. TOWNE.

Evolution of the Spiritual Man.

An old Indian asked a planter for some tobacco. The planter took a handful from his pocket and gave it to him. Early on the next day the Indian brought him a silver dollar. "Take it," he said; "it belongs to you. O, I had a bad night last night," he continued to the astonished planter—"a bad night! There were two men here in this breast—a good man and a bad man. The good man said: 'Carry the dollar back; it is not yours.' The bad man said: 'Keep it, keep it, didn't he give it to you in that tobacco? When one gives you anything you ought to keep it.' The good man replied: 'If you do not return it, you will be a thief. The planter was kind to you and gave you some tobacco; are you going to keep his dollar?' Thus did the two quarrel and struggle in my bosom all night, and I could not sleep for the noise they made. I have come to give you back your dollar."

There is a charming childlikeness in the old Indian's story of his conflict, and so true it is to nature that it appeals to us at once. Who has not had such conflict in the soul? What heart has not been almost torn in two by the contending forces—the good and the bad—each pulling and tugging, and claiming the whole? It is evident that it takes more than one to fight. Were there but one mind in man, there could be no conflict in his bosom. The Bible—yea, even our own observation—teaches us that there are two minds in man: the mind of the flesh and the mind of the spirit. The mind of the flesh draws him to gratify the animal impulses; the mind of the spirit would lead him a nobler course. So the two contend, and "are contrary the one to the other." Paul testifies (Rom. 7: 18-23, R. V.) as follows: "For I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, but to do that which is good is not. For the good which I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I practice. But if what I would not, that I do, it is no more I that do it, but sin which dwelleth in me. I find then the law, that, to me who would do good, evil is present. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: but I see a different law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity under the law of sin which is in my members."

This duality of man has been provided by God himself. We often hear the contrariness of the flesh spoken of as a result of "the fall" in Eden by which humanity became depraved. But not so. The record reveals that Adam and Eve had very much the same fleshly tendencies with us, even before the transgression. There was the same curiosity, the same tendency to play with temptation, the same hankering to break the law, which is manifest in man to-day. Their flesh was no better than ours. The animal impulses were there, and a conflict between at least reason and the flesh. This disagreement between the inner man and the outer man is the basis of free will. If we had never any motive to do wrong, we could never do wrong; if everything in the world were red, and we had never seen anything but red, we could have no conception of color at all. It is by the difference and contrast of colors that we become aware of their existence and learn to distinguish them. Even so there could no man be good or bad if he had but one impulse to follow. But when flesh and spirit conflict, and we are at liberty to let either rule us, then we become responsible for our actions. Only one thing more would be necessary to lay man liable to sin—a standard and knowledge of good and evil.

Adam was furnished with a perfect physical body. He did as he pleased, no doubt often, if not always, following the impulses of the flesh. The idea that Adam's conduct, before he ate the forbidden fruit, was perfect is without warrant and contrary to reason. It is a fair inference that his flesh led him to do many things which would be counted evil according to God's moral standard, as we have it. But to Adam there was no sin, for he knew nothing of evil and good. That knowledge lay in the forbidden fruit; and hence all possibility of sin lay in that fruit. God's eternal verdict upon sin is that it must bring death as inevitable consequence. Hence, God says to Adam: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." That not so much because of the eating as because of the consequences of the knowledge of good and evil. While Adam had no knowledge of good and evil, no action of his could be sin to him. He did not know that to disobey God was evil, for he had not the knowledge of good and evil; therefore, it was not sin to him when he took the fruit. The commandment of God was a warning, as if a nurse would say to the child: "Do not touch the stove; it will burn you." Adam did not heed the warning and ate. Immediately his eyes were opened; he saw himself in the light of the knowledge of good and evil. His conscience, awakened, condemned his action; condemned, perhaps, his very next step; and so he sinned and became subject to death. God knew the nature of man well enough to predict that he would sin, and hence die, as certainly as he attained to the knowledge of good and evil. It did not enter Adam's mind that it was not befitting for him and his wife to go naked, until he knew good and evil, for he was ignorant and irresponsible as a child. In like manner he practiced many things at that time which now became sin to him. Right and Wrong began to battle in his bosom. He and every man since him that endeavored to please God could relate his experience in the above-quoted words of Paul.

Moreover, Adam opened the flood gates of sin; for in him the whole human family received the knowledge of good and evil, and thus became subject to sin and death. It was this knowledge, and not sin, that became hereditary; and in this manner Adam's disobedience wrought death to the human race. Paul says: "Therefore, as through one man sin entered into the world, and death through sin; and so death passed unto all men, for that all sinned." (Rom. 5: 12, R. V.) Again, speaking of the law, he says: "Did then that which is good become death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might be shown to be sin, by working death to me through that which is good [viz., the law];—that through

Thus humanity began the long, toilsome ascent to spiritual perfection. The development was slow—at first with a low moral standard suited to their weakness; afterwards, a more perfect one, which was given that more offenses should be made manifest. It is a vast system of evolution. The fittest were selected for fathers and leaders; on the other hand, those who became utterly corrupt were destroyed in masses. The law of Moses brought a moral standard, just and right. After the people had vainly striven to attain to its height of righteousness and had seen their inability, in due season Christ came, the Model of perfection, fulfilling the righteousness of the law, atoning by his death for the sins of those that would accept him, and giving them a new, living religion, that by his example, his death, and his life it might become possible for them to fulfill the righteousness of the law through faith. He was the type of the perfect spiritual man, as Adam was the type of the perfect physical man. As it is written: "The first man Adam became a living soul. The last Adam became a life-giving spirit." The spiritual evolution of the human race is announced in the next following verses: "Howbeit that is not first which is spiritual; but that which is natural; then that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is of heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

With the exception of Israel, all nations were suffered to go their own ways. But to Abraham and his seed God gave his oracles. Israel became his peculiar people. Then he trained and chastened and pruned and prepared for the coming of the Savior. As the breeder of fine stock selects the best and casts aside the inferior, so God selected and elected from among Israel a people who should become a center of saving influence to bless the whole world. He pruned off Ishmael and the sons of Keturah; he rejected Esau; he cut off the obstinate and rebellious. Those who despised Moses' law died without mercy; those who were obedient lived long and perpetuated themselves. To prevent admixture of inferior stock God separated Israel from among the nations—forbade affiliation and intimate connection with other nations.

While thus the Jewish stock was being purified, the Gentile nations were learning, through bitter experience, the vanity of life without the true God. Their failure and folly became apparent to themselves. When this point was reached, when Jew and Gentile were all concluded under sin, God sent his Son, that through him he might have mercy upon all.

Heretofore their development had been natural; the original man had unfolded himself; but at this point came an intervention from above. Among the millions of the earth Christ selected the fittest—viz., the poor in spirit—and gave them a distinctly new life force, by which they should be able to overcome the flesh and finally attain to perfection. They are born from above; Christ lives in them; they have become the temple of the Holy Spirit. The old man is put off, the flesh is mortified. Like Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so they also walk in newness of life.

But even here the process of selection does not stop. Some of them wither away when the sun scorches; they are not fit for the kingdom of God. Some will be caught away by false doctrines; they also are not elect. Others go away into sectarian divisions. Paul says: "For there must be also factions among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." Still some dross remains among the rest to be cleansed out in the furnace of tribulation, "that the proof of your faith, being more precious than gold that perisheth though it is proved by fire, might be found unto praise and glory and honor at the revelation of Jesus Christ." So continually is the old, evil leaven purged out. Every branch that beareth not fruit is taken away, and every branch that beareth fruit is cleansed, that it may bear more fruit. The Christian becomes more and more conformed to the image of his Lord. Growth continues, and trial and election; but he that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved. And when Jesus appears, we shall be like him. Then shall he present the church, holy, without spot or wrinkle, in pure garment, made white in the blood of the Lamb. For all the purging and selecting there will be an innumerable multitude out of all nations and peoples and tongues. Not the apex only, but the base also, and the whole pyramid shall be there—every one that faithfully filled his place. Noah and Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and Moses and David and Daniel and untold thousands of whom we have not heard shall stand, through the grace of God, among the redeemed of Jesus Christ, perfect spiritual beings; crowned with victory over the world and the flesh; clothed in white robes, and palms in their hands.

ROBERT H. BOLL.

Ludwig Von Beethoven.

The subject of our sketch was born in Bonn, Germany, on December 17, 1770. His father, Johann Beethoven, was a tenor singer in the chapel of the Elector, but lost his position because he was such an excessive drinker. It was often the painful duty of Ludwig and two younger brothers to carry their intoxicated father home. This, however, was always done very tenderly. The father was very much distressed from lack of money after he lost his position as singer. He tried to mend his fortunes by teaching and playing in the theater. He was driven by poverty to pawn practically all of his household goods, and, instead of being sobered by this, he drank the more heavily.

But there was one hope left. That was Ludwig's talent for music, which displayed itself when he was a mere child. Johann Beethoven determined to develop this talent, so he kept the boy rigidly at his lessons on the piano and violin. He would call Ludwig from play with other children and force him to practice. Many a time the little fellow stood upon the stool and cried while he practiced his lessons. He was frequently whipped in order to make him more zealous in his work.

This severe discipline proved to be eminently successful, for when Ludwig was only seven years of age we find his father announcing in Cologne that "his son, aged six years, would have the honor to wait upon the public with several concertos for the piano, when, he flattered himself, he would be able to afford a distinguished audience a rich treat, and this all the more since he had been favored with a hearing by the whole court, who listened to him with the greatest pleasure."

While the boy is claimed by the notice to be one year younger than he really was, yet his performance was a remarkable one for a boy of even seven years.

At eight years of age Ludwig was given a Mr. Pfeiffer for a teacher. This teacher lived with the family, and it is said that frequently, after coming home with the father from the tavern late at night, he would take young Ludwig out of his bed and make him practice until morning. When he was ten years old, he traveled with his mother through Holland, and played with surprising skill before many distinguished audiences. The trip, however, paid very little in a financial way.

Meantime, he began to study the organ. His chief teacher was the court organist, Christian Gottlob Neefe. Neefe was a man of broad culture, and had a profound influence upon his young pupil. In 1782, he was so well pleased with the progress of his pupil that he appointed Ludwig "substitute" organist, a rare compliment, indeed. At twelve years of age, in the absence of Neefe, Beethoven presided at a rehearsal in the Borgen theater, where the best music of the age was produced. At thirteen years of age, he was appointed court organist.

Strange as it may seem, after knowing the career of this precocious boy, it is true that Mozart, the great master musician of his day, was not very well impressed with Beethoven when he heard him play for the first time; but when he gave the young man a subject, and heard him improvise so powerfully, Mozart enthusiastically exclaimed: "Mark that young man! The world will hear from him some day!"

We close with the remark that, hard as his early experiences were, it is easy to see that his adversities and trials in early life gave his character that iron texture which supported him so heroically in the afflictions and burdens that came with his riper age; and, furthermore, while Beethoven was unquestionably endowed with a remarkable genius, he could never have reached the eminent success he did attain if he had not added to his gifts the genius of hard work.—T. B. Ray, in Kind Words.

Every man is a volume, if you know how to read him.—Channing.

THEATERS, BALLS, AND SUCH LIKE.

I am a member of the church of Christ, and am in a position of some doubt as to what is right and what is wrong in the attitude of a professed follower of Jesus Christ. In the church of which I am a member the preacher and probably a majority of the congregation attended the last circus that exhibited in our town, a prominent county seat in Kentucky. One of the deacons of the church is building a handsome theater, named after himself, which will doubtless be patronized largely by our church members. Now what I wish to ask is whether or not circuses and theatrical exhibitions are admissible as Christian enjoyments. Where should the line be drawn between the church and the world? What influence will our apparent amalgamation have on those who have not yet professed their faith in Christ?

Every one of good taste and education is apt to admire a good play and enjoy and appreciate fine music, and to some it seems hard to give up these enjoyments, which are apparently of the world worldly. Many good people patronize theaters and give balls and parties, among the number Queen Victoria or her daughter-in-law, the Princess of Wales, for her; and Her Majesty herself is the recognized head of the established Church of England, an organization that has done incalculable good and has produced many good and great men.

It seems that it is daily becoming more and more difficult to tell the difference between a professed Christian and a man of the world from their everyday conduct and life. The worldling is apparently, in many cases, as good as, or better than, the Christian. If this is true, is it not time to call a halt and reform our lives if reform is demanded? Let us live such consistent Christian lives as will make us a light unto the world.

The name of the writer of the above communication is withheld by request.

"Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain." (Phil. 2: 14-16.)

Now whenever a congregation of Christians are all trained to live as the above passage indicates, no deacon or member of that congregation will ever build a theater and none of the members will attend theaters; and as to the circus, if some of them should decide to "go to see the animals," they would walk around and look at the animals and then go out. They would not sit there and gaze at all the indecent circus performances, and thus indulge "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." The Christian religion is a divine training, by means of which people are to be lifted above the flesh and its impulses and live as the word of the Lord directs to live. If people will not cultivate and train their hearts, the inner man, to love the Lord, to love his word and his ways more than they love the world and its pleasures, there is little hope that they will live as the word of God directs. "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." (1 John 2: 16, 17.) No man can live for the gratification of worldly, fleshly desires and at the same time be in harmony with the will of God. James says: "Whosoever . . . will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." No man can be blameless and harmless in the sight of the Lord and be a friend of the world at the same time. Some religious people persuade themselves that there is nothing wrong in visiting theaters, in dancing, going to balls, and such like; but in so doing they deceive themselves and become lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. Christians do not realize that they are placing themselves among the enemies of God when they live after the flesh and its demands, but they most certainly are. They always cease to be blameless and harmless when they run after such things as are usually met with in theaters, circuses, dancing parties, balls, and such like. A man that truly loves the Lord, loves his ways, loves his teaching, loves to live just the sort of life that he requires him to live. But, on the other hand, if it is a good thing for a deacon to build a theater, it would be equally good for the elders and the preacher to build one and for all the members to attend it. Then they could use the theater to hold their services in on the first day of the week, and then that would save them the extra expense of a meetinghouse. They would then have a convenient and suitable place for all their entertainments, their festivals, bazaars, strawberry suppers, teas, conventions, and such like, and thus the expenses of these things would be greatly reduced. In such a case the church might advertise, furnish the troupe to act, and then turn over all the proceeds to defray the expenses of the church and the like. This would only be carrying out these tendencies to their legitimate end, and every one would then see the end to which all these fleshly things are tending. A church that would do such a thing would no longer be recognized as a church of God, and would cease to deceive others by its influence; but when people claim to be a church of God, and yet deacons build theaters and the members patronize them and the preacher and all attend circuses and the like, and all these things are permitted to go on without any sort of rebuke, such a course is well calculated to deceive and lead people to think such a course will take them to heaven, when, in reality, such a course will no more take people to heaven than it would put a camel through the eye of a needle.

"Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." (Gal. 5: 19-21.) Several of the fleshly passions, impulses, or desires given in these passages enter very largely into the influences that lead people to balls, theaters, and such like places, concerning which the apostle says they that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God; and when the word of God says "shall not," it means it, and there is no appeal from it, except through repentance that will ultimately result in a thorough reformation of life. People ought to be careful against deceiving themselves or being deceived by others in these matters. People may deceive themselves and other people in such matters, but they cannot deceive the Lord or change his will. How different it would be, on the other hand, if all Christians would follow the teaching of the Holy Spirit instead of the impulses of the flesh! Then they would bear the fruit of the Spirit, which "is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." When people live this way, bear this sort of fruit, there is no mistake about their being on the road to heaven. They are then following in the footsteps of Jesus and are manifesting the spirit of Christ, and all that know them will testify that God is among them.

The people of the world are by no means slow to see whether churches are following the Master or not; and when the world sees the church going wrong, they are slow to come into it. The present is certainly an age of great worldliness among the churches, and from that fact or for some other reason the churches are not prospering and growing as they once did. It is certainly high time that people that want to serve God and be approved of him were opening their eyes to the state of worldliness that now exists among the churches and trying to bring about a better state of things. Christians that will not deny "ungodliness, and worldly lusts, and live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world," have no sort of assurance that they will ever reach heaven; but members of these worldly churches frequently ask what they ought to do in such cases, whether they ought to withdraw from, pull out of, such congregations or still live on among them. It would be difficult to give an answer in such a case that would cover all the ground. There are some congregations that are very worldly, the masses of them following the world, the flesh, and the devil very largely in their daily lives, that introduce nothing into the worship or work of the church on the first day of the week which God has not ordained. In such a case as this I think it is the duty of those who see such wrongs as are mentioned above to remain among them, meet with them, and try in the spirit of Christ and by the word of God to get them out of such wrongs; but if they go so far in such things as to clearly cease to be a church of Christ, or, on the other hand, force things into the work and worship of the church that God never ordained and utterly refuse to drop them, then a man conscientiously opposed to human innovations upon the word of God could not afford to remain and be a party to such wrongs; but while the members are only fleshly-minded and in their daily lives do things out of harmony with the will of God, and yet hold the worship as God gave it, I think in such cases a member should remain in the church and try a long time to bring about a better state of things, rather than to pull out and leave them. There are nearly always some things done by some of the members that are not in harmony with the will of God, and those who see and realize that such is the case ought to remain and try to get them right; but when nearly all the members go wrong and get so far away that they cease to be a church of Christ, then those who do love the truth should withdraw from such corruption and serve the Lord and be satisfied with his word.

Sometimes people are disposed to magnify some things as unpardonable and at the same time go on recognizing things that are as great wrongs, or even greater, and pay no attention to them. These differences ought not to be made regarding sin. All unrighteousness is sin, and all wrongs ought to be righted if possible; but we should not condone some sins and raise a rumpus about others no worse and perhaps not as bad. It is certainly something very beautiful for all the members of the church to live right and work and worship as the word of the Lord directs. Brotherly love is a grand item in the character of the children of God, and should always be exercised to the full, while great forbearance and long-suffering should be exercised toward the weak and erring ones. The religion of Christ is intended to save men, not to repudiate and separate from them for every wrong step they may take. It is a nice point to always do as we ought toward those that sometimes go wrong. But let us try.

There is, perhaps, no time or place in which there is such urgent need of quickness of wit and kindly tact as at the public receptions given by the President of the United States and his wife, observes a contemporary. When a queen receives her subjects, the etiquette is fixed and inexorable; no one speaks unless addressed by royalty; but Americans of all classes crowd into the Blue Room, many with a question or a joke which they have prepared to fire at their unprepared ruler, and they judge by the fitness of his reply whether he is competent to hold his office or not. Many of them, too, through sheer embarrassment, make foolish remarks, the memory of which probably causes them misery afterwards. One frightened lady assured Mrs. Cleveland, "It is a mutual pleasure to meet you," correcting her mistake by calling out, as she was passing down the line: "I meant to say the pleasure is all on your side."

PERSONAL.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy preached at Carthage, Tenn., last Lord's day.

Brother Flavil Hall, of Lockett, Ga., preached at County Line, Tenn., on the second Lord's day in this month. The sermon will be published in sections in the Gospel Advocate.

Brother I. B. Bradley and wife, of Russellville, Ala., were in the office last Saturday. They were en route to Smith County, Tenn., to spend Christmas with Brother Bradley's mother.

I closed my Nashville work for the nineteenth century at the South College Street church of Christ to-night. I will go home for Christmas to-morrow, and will leave home for Sherman, Tex., on December 26, or 27, 1900. I will begin my seventh Sherman siege on December 30, 1900, to continue indefinitely.—T. B. Larimore, December 19, 1900.

Sister S. J. Bibb, of Guthrie, Ky., died on last Thanksgiving Day. She was the oldest member of the church of Christ at Guthrie, and was always interested in the affairs of the church. It was largely through her efforts, coupled with the efforts of several other faithful sisters, that the truth gained a foothold at that place, and in her death the truth as it is in Christ Jesus loses a staunch advocate and the church loses a faithful ally.

"Mrs. Annie E. Owsley requests your presence at the marriage of her daughter, Deering, to Mr. R. Neel Gardner, on Thursday evening, December 27, 1900, at 8 o'clock, at Foster Street church of Christ, Nashville, Tenn. At home after December 30, 1900, Paragould, Ark." So reads an invitation coming to our desk this week. Brother Gardner was formerly a pupil and teacher in the Nashville Bible School, and made for himself many friends while here. We can congratulate him that he receives such a prize, and our best wishes follow them through life.

I wish to express my thanks to Brother J. A. Lancaster, Brother B. F. Billingsley, Brother J. M. McCaleb, and a host of others for their words of encouragement and expressions of comfort. I have not time to answer all the kind letters received—some calling me to Tennessee, some calling me to Mississippi and Alabama, and others calling me to Kentucky; others urging me to remain at the same old stand, and continue to do business in the same old way. This I will do. The brethren at work here assure me that they need me. Pray for me, brethren, and forgive those who would hinder. Perhaps their motives were good.—R. W. Officer, Atoka, I. T.

All of earth's heroes have not their names inscribed on tablets of stone or written on the pages of history. We have repeatedly announced that we would not publish anonymous communications, yet we frequently receive them. Some articles, for good reason, may bear a fictitious signature, but we must know the real author. Obituaries frequently come signed "A Friend," etc., without anything to indicate who the writer is, and they invariably go into the wastebasket. We also desire to call attention again to the notice at the head of the obituary column. We have limited obituaries to two hundred and fifty words and signature and have excluded poetry. Please read this notice again and be governed accordingly.

We are saved by grace. No life of service, no amount of earthly treasure, is sufficient to compensate for the love of God. Eternal life cannot be purchased; salvation is the gift of God. When a purchase is made, we give value for value; but when a gift is offered, no value is required for it, else it would not be a gift. A condition, however, may be required, but the performance of the condition would not be a purchase unless it possessed a value equal to the gift offered. The love of God prompts him to offer us salvation through his Son upon condition of obedience to the gospel, but such obedience does not buy salvation, because when we "have done all those things which are commanded," we can still say: "We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do," and have done nothing worthy of the great gift of salvation so richly bestowed upon us.

Referring to "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," Brother Clyde Potter writes: "I do not think I have ever read but one better book—the Bible. I cannot see how any man, after reading it, can fail to appreciate more and more the religion of Christ in its simplicity and purity. The man or the woman whom it would fail to ennoble or raise toward God must be either perfect or 'totally depraved.'"

The sewing machine we offer with the Gospel Advocate is thoroughly practical and embodies in its make-up all of the necessary and practical features of a first-class, high-grade machine; but at the same time it is not finished so elaborately or furnished with such an expensive equipment, the latter items adding greatly to the cost, but not to the utility of the machine for practical purposes. In its manufacture, the sewing qualities have not been sacrificed in the least. With the Gospel Advocate one year, $21. Do not miss this opportunity to get a good paper and a good machine at so cheap a price.

We have received and carefully examined the last book by F. D. Srygley, entitled "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." This is certainly a grand production, and a book that should be in every family. The sermons are most excellent on account of their plainness and adherence to scripture truth. The letters are well calculated to influence and encourage the rising generation in the way of righteousness, true holiness, humility, and purity. The book should have reached us sooner, but was mislaid and forgotten by mistake on the part of our postmaster. It is published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn., and sells for $1.50. You will not regret investing your money in this book.—Highland Preacher.

Our Exchanges.

THE CHURCH SCHOOL SHOULD BE DENOMINATIONAL.

Little is gained and much is lost when a church school, in its effort to be nonsectarian, becomes too broad to be denominationally loyal. Primarily the church school should be devoted to Christian education in the most generous sense; and secondarily, and none the less really, it should stand for all that is best in devotion to the denomination whose it is. To be more specific, the sons and daughters of Cumberland Presbyterians who attend Cumberland Presbyterian schools should come therefrom more intensely Cumberland Presbyterian. Our colleges should be centers of denominational training and fountains of denominational love and loyalty. To that end our college churches ought to be the best manned and the best organized churches in the country. As far as practicable, all the influences in the college and college town should promote confidence and proper pride in our own church.

All this does not mean offensive sectarianism which would close the doors of our schools to all but Cumberland Presbyterians. The fact that a man loves supremely his own home is no evidence that he is not given to hospitality, nor that strangers would be uncomfortable or unhappy if invited to his family circle. Sensible people expect the churchman or the church enterprise of whatever kind nowadays to stand fraternally, but firmly, for denominationalism, and the college should be no exception to the rule. The Nashville Christian Advocate puts all this in an admirable way—thus: "Our schools must also come into constantly closer relations with the church. If they expect a more loyal support than they have heretofore had, they must be prepared to give a more loyal service. We confess to a feeling of disgust when we hear of any college making a loud outcry for church patronage, and yet scouting the idea of church control. Other denominations are never guilty of the false liberality of proclaiming that they do not look for discrimination in their own favor in the schools which they have established. Why should they be? What do they establish schools for? It has been left for the Methodists to show the extreme folly of spending time and money and influence to rear colleges that make a boast of their indifference between the different churches. We have had enough of this. Denominational colleges are set up for the same reason as denominational newspapers and publishing houses—to advance the interests of denominations. Is this sectarianism? Is it bigotry? It is nothing of the kind. It is only common sense applied to the sphere of ecclesiastical life. We say to all concerned, with the utmost frankness, that they will find it to their advantage to adjust their plans to the views which we have thus expressed. The man who occupies a place in a Methodist school brings himself under some particular obligations to the Methodist Church, unless, indeed, he can show, as some seem to think, that occupancy and ownership mean the same thing. This latter proposition is one that it will be difficult to maintain. Those who are employed to conduct a business do not thereby become its proprietors. They are simply agents, selected to execute a trust, and nothing more."—Cumberland Presbyterian.

[If denominationalism is right, then denominational schools are right; but, on the other hand, if denominationalism is wrong, then denominational schools should not be encouraged. With the principle clearly established that denominationalism is unscriptural, and therefore sinful, the conclusion irresistibly follows that denominational newspapers, publishing houses, and churches are all unauthorized. If God did not plant the denominational tree, it cannot yield the fruits of righteousness. "Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 13.) "Denominationalism" means division into sects or parties. Such action is very forcefully condemned in the New Testament. The blessed Master prayed that his followers should be one, as he and his Father were one: "Neither pray I for thee alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." (John 17: 20, 21.) In the light of this scripture, it is hard to see how any one can desire the conversion of the world and at the same time labor to build up a sect. The tendency of the union of God's people is the conversion of the world. In perfect harmony with this teaching is Paul: "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?" (1 Cor. 3: 1-4.) He shows them that it was sinful to wear any human name or even the name of an inspired apostle: "For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul." (1 Cor. 1: 11-13.) "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." (Eph. 4: 4-6.) "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence." (Col. 1: 18.) Thus we see the church is the body and the body is the church; so church and body of Christ mean one and the same thing. If we find, therefore, from the Scriptures there is but one body, we learn at the same time there is but one church. It is absurd to talk about many bodies having one and the same head. The Catholic monstrosity of many heads for one body is no worse. "But now are they many members, yet but one body." (1 Cor. 12: 20.) The church of God stands for all that is good and pure. It is the only institution that a man need to enter in order to be saved. All our energies, our talents, and our means should be given to strengthen her hold upon the hearts and lives of men. A man need not belong to any religious party in order to go to heaven; but there is no promise to the man outside of the church of God. It is a little strange that our esteemed contemporaries will labor to build up parties when divisions are so plainly condemned in the New Testament. They must have been reading the wrong book. We would like for them to help us in opposing all partyism and in seeking to get men to be simply Christians. The Christian is a success in this life and gains heaven at last. Why should we be anything else?]

A SLANDER REFUTED.

Thoughtless, not evil-minded, persons have said that it has come to pass that the zeal of the ministry to-day is for money, and not for souls. The occasion of this perverse and injurious opinion is found in the fact that the preachers are charged with so many collections for the various general and benevolent objects of the church. If this duty could be transferred to men specially selected for it, who might be called "conference stewards," the occasion of this unjust suspicion or criticism would pass, and the preachers, relieved of an unpleasant task and one that to a more or less degree unfits them for the peculiar mission of the ministry, would be able to give themselves more entirely to the spiritual work of their office.

The financial and statistical reports of the last conference will show that not only did our preachers have wonderful success in dealing with the manifold financial duties devolved upon them in our system of service, but that they also had glorious success in the supreme work of the ministry of Christ—the salvation of the lost. They were not secularized by their monetary duties. These matters were looked after and an immense sum of about three hundred thousand dollars was raised by them. But the "burden of souls" was also on them, and they were instrumental in turning thousands to the Savior. Notwithstanding the losses to our membership by deaths, removals, and revision of church registers, there were nearly two thousand additions to the membership of the church last year. This is a complete refutation of the thoughtless criticism referred to in the beginning of this article.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

[It is suggested sometimes that we are living so fast that it takes too much money to live. Everything that we consume must be bought. Some churches are also living too fast; it takes too much money to run them. They labor too much to make a show and display; it takes too much money to supply their wants. Their needless display and extravagance are hurtful rather than helpful. The poor are driven away. With devout and consecrated hearts we should worship God in simplicity. High steeples, stained windows, and paid choirs are not essential to the worship.]

MONEY RAISING VS. SOUL SAVING.

"Gilderoy" writes to the New Orleans Christian Advocate: "I do not know a single Methodist preacher, from our bishops down to the humblest circuit rider, whose time and energy are not expended more in raising money than in saving souls." W. S. Lagrone replies thus: "My brethren, it is not because we are burdened with raising money in the work of the Lord, but we have partially lost the spirit of the call. Too many of us seem to be preaching for a living, and not to save souls. We have too many place seekers, time servers, too many who are afraid of men. We need our credentials direct from God every day; we need faith in his word, from Genesis to Revelation, backed by a conscious, constant realization of his power, his presence, and his authority."—Zion's Outlook.

[While those who preach the gospel should live of the gospel, yet no preacher should feel that he cannot live unless his support comes from his preaching. The temptation is too great for our humanity when a man feels that he is dependent on his preaching for a living. It is so easy to persuade oneself that it is no sin not to speak out against popular evils. The preacher desires to please, so he endeavors to make his discourses palatable to the congregation. He should preach the gospel boldly and fearlessly, support or no support. He had better labor with his own hands, like Paul, for a support. It can hardly be doubted that the preachers who have done most for the cause of Christ are those who have in the main supported themselves, preaching the gospel of Christ whenever an opportunity presented itself. They are not tempted to adulterate the gospel; they are in earnest, as it is the love of souls that leads them into the highways and hedges to preach Jesus. When a preacher's living depends on what he preaches, his preaching should be subjected to the closest scrutiny.]

AMERICAN DAUGHTERS AND FOREIGN HUSBANDS.

The Advance suggests that "when wealthy American girls marry a title, they do not, as a long list of sad cases of domestic infelicity clearly shows, read their titles clear to an assured life of wedded bliss. We have before us a list of some twenty names of wealthy and noted American women who married foreign noblemen, who were anything but noble men, for in nearly every case their vices have led to the sundering of the marriage bond by divorce or separation. They married wealthy American girls to get money to pay their debts or to waste in extravagant or riotous living, and a union of that sort could not last long with satisfaction to the woman who put up the money, or to her relatives who furnished it."—Exchange.

[People who marry from such considerations can hardly expect to be happy. People should not marry for position or money. The person who is not moved by an affection that by far transcends every other earthly love in making an alliance will certainly find no happiness in the wedded state.]

AN UNEXPECTED OPENING.

"Well, young man?"

Old Simon Whickley, the veteran lawyer of Trumbull County, looked up from a mass of papers with which his table was littered and fixed his small, keen, blue eyes on the face of a sturdy-looking young fellow who had just entered his office and stood waiting for recognition.

"I understood, sir," said the young man, "that you were thinking of retiring from active practice and wished to sell your law library."

The old lawyer nodded sadly. It was plain that the infirmities of age, not weariness of his life task, had compelled the decision which he had reluctantly formed, but was still delaying to act upon. The words of this bright-faced young man, with all of life before him, recalled to the older man his determination, and he sighed involuntarily.

"I am just out of the law school," continued the young man, "and was admitted to the State bar at the last meeting of the association. Possibly you may recall the name: Staniford—Edward Staniford."

Again Lawyer Whickley nodded. "Passed the best examination of all the candidates before the association, I believe," he added, slowly. "It seems to me I ought to be credited with remembering that much of the son of a fellow-townsmen."

The young man colored, and continued: "I expect to locate in Cadysville—there seems to be a fair opening there—and would particularly like to own a full set of 'State Reports' to begin practice with. I was told that you had a complete set and would sell them separately from the rest of your library, if desired. May I ask your price for the set?"

"Three hundred dollars," replied Lawyer Whickley, promptly.

The young man hesitated. "That is equivalent to the full price of the volumes when new, is it not?" he asked.

"It is," replied Mr. Whickley, without the slightest wavering of the keen, blue eyes. "I ought to ask more. Some books increase in value with age—'State Reports' especially. Do you know of another complete set in Trumbull County?"

"I haven't heard of any," replied Edward Staniford.

"There is none," declared Mr. Whickley. "Law books without duplicates in an entire county are certainly entitled to be quoted at a premium. But I will sell the set for what it cost me, three hundred dollars. Do you want it?"

"If you will let me have the refusal of the books until to-morrow at noon," replied Staniford, "I will give you my decision then. I can pay cash for them, but I had hoped to get them at a reduction from the original price. It is not necessary for me to tell you, I suppose, that I shall have all I can do for a while to get along financially."

Mr. Whickley bent once more over the deep litter of papers on his desk. "You may have the refusal of the books until to-morrow at noon," he said. "Good day."

"Regular old skinflint!" muttered Edward Staniford, as he descended the stairs from Mr. Whickley's office. "And yet they say he is worth fully eight hundred thousand dollars. I wonder if he had to start in on next to nothing."

The young man strolled along the main street of the pretty town which enjoyed the distinction of being the county seat of Trumbull County. Devoutly he wished that there were some opening for a young lawyer there. It was his native place, and, in spite of the fact that he had been away for about eight years at college and in the law school, he knew almost every person he saw, not only personally, but as to his antecedents. It would be pleasant to live among one's old friends and neighbors. But the county seat already harbored too many lawyers for him to think of making an independent venture there.

"Halloo!" he exclaimed, suddenly, as his glance traveled down the street. "There comes poor Billy Watson in his old box cart; and the twins have got big enough to draw him round, I declare!"

It was indeed a strange little group that was approaching young Staniford along the sidewalk under the elms. Two girls, about twelve years old, were drawing a pale young man in a cart made out of a dry goods box, with wheels sawed from the trunk of a tree. The girls were very plainly dressed, exactly alike, and resembled each other so closely in size and features that no one could have questioned the fact that they were twins. The young man in the cart was sightless and crippled, but a bright smile shone on his face as the twins trundled him along under the elms.

"Get up, horses!" he would cry, every few minutes, and then the twins would prance on the sidewalk and the invalid would laugh cheerily.

"Halloo, Billy Watson!" cried the curly-haired young lawyer, as he approached the group. "Halloo, Emma and Minnie! You remember me, don't you, Billy?"

"Eddie Staniford!" cried the sightless young man, stretching out his thin hand. "I'd never forget your voice, Eddie. Isn't it a beautiful day?"

Something very like a sob welled up in Edward Staniford's throat, but he choked it down. "Yes, it's a nice day," he said, "and I haven't got anything in particular to do before dinner, so I'm going to walk along with you and the girls, Billy, and talk over old times. Where were you going?"

"We were going to the cemetery," replied one of the twins. "Billy always wants to go there whenever we take him out to ride."

"Yes, to mother's grave," added Billy, earnestly. "You know where mother's grave is, Eddie—near the big willow."

"I remember, Billy," replied the young lawyer. "You and I used to go there with flowers before you—when you could see, you know."

The cart trundled on again. Edward Staniford was drawing it now; he had taken the rude tongue from the twins, and they were walking shyly behind. In through the gate of the quiet cemetery they turned, and Staniford drew the cart down a shaded bypath until they came to the sloping lot just beyond the great willow tree.

There was only one grave in that lot. It had been there for many, many years, and the grass-grown mound had sunk almost level with the turf about it. There was no stone at the head of the grave. John Watson had married again, and the memory of his first wife had grown dim. Besides, he was a poor man, and the family had hard work to make both ends meet.

Billy Watson sat in the cart with a wistful look on his pinched face. At length he said, hesitatingly: "I wonder if you could lift me out, Eddie. It has been a long time since I felt of mother's grave. The twins cannot lift me, you know."

Without a word the strong young man bent over his old playmate and raised him out of the cart as gently as a mother lifts a baby. Then he carried him a few steps and set him down by the mound in the soft grass. Billy Watson stretched out his thin, transparent hands and passed them to and fro over the mound, with the most tenderly caressing movement. Then he leaned forward and felt for the head of the grave, and buried his face and his lips in the grass. So he lay for several minutes, kissing the sod, while the twins looked soberly on and young Staniford turned away to wipe the tears from his eyes.

"Thank you, Eddie," said the cripple, at length raising himself from the mound. "I did not think to thank you when you first set me down, I guess. Here is where I am going to lie—close beside mother." He drew back, feeling up and down the grass with his hands. "There will be room for me, will there not, Eddie?"

"Plenty of room, Billy," replied his comrade, chokingly. "But you aren't going to die for a long time yet. You are going to get well, I believe, and be a help to your sisters and father."

"And see again?" cried the cripple, eagerly. "See and walk, so that I can bring flowers again for mother?"

"Yes, see the walk!" cried Staniford, heartily. "Somehow, I believe it, Billy. Wait and see."

That evening Staniford went to call on Doctor Whitcomb.

"Is there any hope or any chance for Billy Watson, Doctor?" he asked.

"Just a glimmer of a chance," replied Doctor Whitcomb. "All his trouble comes from brain pressure of some kind, causing partial paralysis, loss of sight, and some weakening of the mind. If the cause of pressure could be discovered and removed, I believe he would be all right again. But it's an obscure case. Only the most expert surgeon could do anything for him. Even then the operation might not be successful."

"But you think there is a chance for him?"

"Yes, I do."

"What would the operation cost?"

"O, perhaps three hundred dollars."

"Will you take the matter in hand if I will furnish the money?"

"Of course I will. But, Edward, you ought not to think of such a thing—a poor boy like you, just starting out in life."

"Now, look here, Doctor," cried Staniford, "I'm a sound, whole man, and Billy's nothing but a wreck. I've saved enough money to give him a chance, and I'm going to do it. I do not care if I do not get so good a start in life. I've got health, strength, and sound faculties, and I'll pull through some way. You just go ahead and see if you can make arrangements to give Billy his only chance."

The next morning Edward Staniford went to Mr. Whickley and told him he had decided not to buy the law books. The old lawyer looked surprised and a little disappointed. He opened his lips as if to speak, then simply nodded and bent over his papers again, while Staniford slipped out, feeling somehow as if the imperturbable Mr. Whickley were grieved on his account.

In the meantime arrangements were being made for Billy to go to a hospital in Philadelphia, where he was to be examined and perhaps operated upon by a famous specialist in brain surgery. Old Doctor Whitcomb went with him, and as Staniford bade them good-by at the station, the Doctor whispered: "I'll telegraph you, my boy, as soon as we know."

A week passed, and then came the day when, as Doctor Whitcomb wrote, the great surgeon was going to operate on Billy Watson. Edward Staniford was as restless as a fish out of water that day. He spent most of the time haunting the railroad station, where his old schoolboy friend, Walter Englesby, held the position of telegraph operator. At 5 o'clock the instrument, after a long silence, began clicking. Englesby bent over it for a few minutes; then he sprang up and ran out on the platform, where Staniford was pacing up and down.

"Eddie," he shouted, "Watson—operated—on—and surgeon—says—complete—cure—assured—Whitcomb!" holding the yellow blank before him. Then the two young men put their hands on each other's shoulders and looked into each other's swimming eyes and cheered. Both had been schoolmates and chums of Billy Watson in the old days.

Before the invalid was able to return from Philadelphia, Edward Staniford received a message from Lawyer Whickley. "Come in and see me," it said. Staniford went, and the first thing the imperturbable old man did was to grasp the young man's hand in both of his and shake it warmly.

"I saw Whitcomb last night," he said, "and you needn't think you can conceal anything from me. What I wanted to say to you is this: There happens to be a better opening for a young lawyer here in this crowded county seat than there is in Cadysville—right in this very office, in fact. I've changed my mind. I'm not going to retire; I'm going to take a young partner, and the shingle is going to be expanded so as to read: 'Whickley & Staniford, Attorneys at Law.' Do not make any objections, sir; I haven't time to listen to them. And, if you please, your first duty as my associate shall be to make out a discharge of mortgage in favor of John Watson—just a little matter of a loan I let him have on his farm and stock about a year ago."—Forward.

JUST BE GLAD.

O, heart of mine, we shouldn't Worry so;
What we've missed of calm we couldn't
Have, you know!
What we've met of stormy pain,
And of sorrow's driving rain,
We can better meet again,
If it blow.

We have erred in that dark hour
We have known;
When the stars fell with the shower—
All alone—
Were not shine and shower blent
As the gracious Master meant?
Let us temper our content
With his own.

For we know, not every morrow
Can be sad;
So, forgetting all the sorrow
We have had,
Let us fold away our fears,
And put by our foolish tears,
And through all the coming years
Just be glad.

Editorial.

THE CLOSING YEAR AND CENTURY.

This number of the Gospel Advocate is the last one for the century, and closes thirty-five years of work I have given to the Advocate. This is considered an average lifetime, and usually spans the period of one man's active labors. I had earnestly desired by this time to have closed up my business relations with the Advocate and the publishing company, that the business might rest on younger shoulders and that I might write only as I had something to say. I have not been able to do so. The difficulty has been to find a suitable person willing to do the work and bear the responsibilities for the pay there is in it. This, too, in the face of the impression made by many that it has been a source of profit to those who manage it.

There are not many names on our list now that were there thirty-five years ago. The generation then living has passed away, and a new one has arisen. A few that then were with us still linger on the shores of mortality, while the great number are gone. The rest must soon follow.

While my general health is now much better than it was when I began this work, I feel very sensibly the infirmities of age creeping over me, and the incurable disease, old age, will soon finish its work. I do not now believe I will dread or shrink from the change when it comes. I have tried through three-score years and ten to keep a conscience void of offense toward God and man. I remember when yet a youth my desire was to go through the world without any one's being able to say he was the worse off by my having lived in it. I have tried to keep that before me through life. This falls far short of the ideal placed before man by God. This, if it were successfully lived up to, is only a negative life. The ideal God puts before man is, while injuring and harming none, to help all whom we can help. To do no evil is well; to do all the good in our power is the work to which God invites every human soul. I have tried to do that which would help my fellow-men. I have not always succeeded. I have not tried to do what would please them. I have tried to please them for their good to edification. I have tried to get them to be pleased with that which would build them up, do them good, and fit them for the service of God forever. Only in seeking the good of others can man find his own true good; only in seeking to lift up and save others can he save himself. If all men could realize this, how it would change this world of woe into a heaven of bliss!

During the thirty-five years of our work on and through the Gospel Advocate many changes have taken place in the condition of the world around us. Changes have taken place in the material, the political, the social, and the religious conditions of the world. It is common for old persons to think things grow worse, and that in the times of our childhood people were more honest and better in every way than in the present. I am glad to say I am not of this number. In some particulars things have grown worse. The facilities for adulteration and deception have greatly multiplied, and with the facilities the temptations are increased; but a higher sense of honor and morality prevails among business men than did fifty years ago. This is probably because, in the closer competition of business, men have learned honesty is the best policy. God taught the Jews to do right by showing them from experience that doing right brought temporal good and doing wrong brought evil. It is yet a part of his educational system for humanity to teach them by experience that wrongdoing is out of harmony with the principles that govern the universe, and must bring evil, both in this world and in that which is to come. Man is of such a nature that he requires to have the beauty of truth and justice before his mind, and with it the rewards of temporal good, to hold him up to his best. I look to the material conditions, which in their growth and development more and more demand integrity, purity, and truthfulness in the affairs of life, as one of the efficient forces to work out the redemption of men. They are parts of the providences of God to work the elevation and redemption of humanity. The Bible is more studied to-day than it was fifty or seventy years ago—more than it has ever been. It is especially studied more as a rule of life than at any past period of the world. It is entering as a controlling influence more into the business and political affairs of life than in any former age of the world.

The Bible is sometimes studied as a means of defending dogmas and of building up parties. While study from any motive is preferable to no study, this study is not the most beneficial. The most helpful study is done to learn the will of God, that it may control our lives and mold our characters. Much more of this study is now done than was done fifty years ago. This is true of the people claiming to be only Christians. Those of fifty years ago were posted in the scriptures bearing upon the polemics of religious parties. This class of scriptures was studied to the neglect of those regulating personal life and character. There has been a decline in religious knowledge among the disciples along this line of polemics and a consequent recession of many from the truth on these points. Those who were only partisans in religion have lost interest in the plea to return to the primitive order given by God and have drifted into a party among other parties. While there has been apparent loss along this line, there has been improvement among this class along other lines, and there has been a great advance in the knowledge of the truth among the denominations of Christendom. I think it possible the greatest results of the effort made during the present century to restore primitive Christianity have been upon the denominations that have not formally accepted the plea. They have studied the Bible as never before. They cannot learn the truths of the Bible without being benefited by them. Learning Bible truth sometimes cools the ardor of religion running in improper channels and for a time produces seeming indifference and skepticism. The final results can only be good. The growing interest in the Bible has invited and stimulated criticism. All true criticism, whether higher or lower, must result in good to the Bible and to men. False criticism may carry the light-minded away and give occasion for those who are instable to drift away from all pretense of faith in God, but it can end but one way, and that is in the firmer hold of the Bible on the faith and life of men.

Our thirty-five years' work has not produced the results we had hoped it would, yet no man can tell what the results of his labor will be. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good" (Eccles. 11: 6), is true of spiritual as of material seed. While results have not been what I hoped they might be, I do not regret my work nor my course. I have tried to be true to God and to the word of his truth. Had I my life to go over again, I would not choose a different one or pursue a different path. I would desire to make what I said more in accordance with the will of God, more in harmony with the spirit of the Master; and I would desire to throw more earnestness and self-sacrifice into the work and pray more earnestly and fervently to be more like the Master in spirit and character, and that I might be more effective in drawing souls to Christ. The work, such as it is, is in the hands of the Master, as is the future of the world, and with him I can confidently intrust the future. It gives me no trouble.

The Gospel Advocate was started forty-five years ago last July by Tolbert Fanning and William Lipscomb. They both loved the truth and were true to it. We who now edit it have tried to be. Many who once were its friends have turned their backs upon it because it tried to be firm to the old landmarks pointed out by the Spirit of God. We have been very sorry to part with them, but our preference is to stand with God though all men turn against us. We trust this will be the spirit of those who succeed us in the management of the Advocate. I trust we may all work together to be faithful to God and his word through the coming year and through all time.

THINK SOBERLY OF OURSELVES.

"For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith." (Rom. 12: 3.) "For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself." (Gal. 6: 3.)

Thinking more highly of ourselves than we ought to think is a prolific source of many errors and failures in life. This is true in the business world. Men estimate their abilities too highly, and so seek positions they are unable to fill or undertake enterprises they are not able to carry through. If every one could form a proper estimate of his ability and only undertake what he is fitted to do, there would seldom be failures in the business world. There is a place in which every one may work successfully if he could find and fill it. Some underestimate their abilities, and in this sense fail to do what they ought to do; they fall short of accomplishing what they should; but the masses of men fail by thinking more highly of their abilities than they ought to think. Some choose callings and follow courses of life for which they are not suited, that are above their capacity. We often see men who succeed as clerks and managers under the direction of others, but completely fail when they undertake for themselves. Many undertake business for which they have no capacity or fitness; many others undertake to do more than they are able to do. Men often manage small businesses successfully. From this they launch out upon a larger scale. The trouble with such men is, they overestimate their ability; they think more highly of themselves than they ought; they fail to think soberly, discreetly, moderately of themselves. Many men of discreet minds learn from experience their true ability. These profit by experience, and to such failures are often helps, because they teach them their true ability and place. An adage says: "Experience is a hard school, but fools will learn in no other." This is wrong. The man who learns from experience is not a fool. The fool is he who never learns from experience. Many men fail, and fail through a lifetime, and never learn the cause of the failure is lack of capacity or fitness for the work in which they engage. Men of good ability for certain lines of work are wholly incapacitated for other works, but some never learn this. Often every one else knows a man's utter incapacity for the work in which he persists in following, but he thinks, despite repeated failures, he is just fitted for the work. He always lays his failure upon some other persons or circumstances. These other persons and circumstances will always meet him to cause him to fail. He alone has capacity for business who guards against these other men and circumstances. They will always be present to cause those not able to guard against them to fail. Adverse surroundings, men and conditions to bring about failure, are always present to cause failure. The ability to conduct business is largely ability to meet and circumvent these. Men who fail with their own business think they can manage successfully similar business for others, and seek public business or that of others to manage. One who fails to manage his own business may, under the direction of others, be useful to other business managers in carrying out their work; but one who fails to manage his own business ought to beware of assuming to manage business for others. The failure to learn our abilities and to avoid that for which we are not fitted causes most of the failures and peculations and defalcations in business, public and private.

To rightly estimate our abilities is as important in the field of religious work as in any other. Men fail often religiously because they think of themselves more highly than they ought to think. They aspire to positions and to work for which they are not fitted. They do this in the services of the church. So few are willing to take the lowest seat, to be faithful and true in it until they are invited up higher. This is the admonition of the Master to guard against failure. He tells them he is greatest who most faithfully performs the humblest services. He, the Lord and Master, came as the servant of all, and this he showed by washing the feet of all. Many men are not willing to serve in the church unless they can be leaders. Whenever a man feels that he is not properly esteemed and finds a feeling growing up that he should not work in a field unless he can be more prominent in the service, he may know by this that he is not following the Master's rule, and, judged by this rule, is unfitted to lead in the service of God. The willingness to serve in the lowliest station is God's test of fitness to fill the highest. Men who are sensitive and jealous of positions of place and preference are wrong in spirit. To be wrong in spirit leads to wrong in all practice. It is not meant they ought to be excluded, but they are unworthy to be put forward until they can learn that he who humbles himself shall be exalted and he who exalts himself shall be abased.

Among preachers, who ought to be examples to the flock in temper and spirit as well as precept, this temper is so often exhibited. So many preachers are unwilling to preach to the humble and poor; so many are unwilling to preach unless they can preach to the rich, to the fashionable, to the learned; so many are sensitive and jealous of some one else who seems to be preferred before them; so many are anxious to be considered great preachers, the equals of the foremost men of the church. It is not strange this feeling should exist in preachers as in other men. They are human. It existed in the apostles. Jesus reprobated the spirit in them and taught them lesson after lesson to purge it from them, and they were unfit for service in his kingdom until they were freed from it. Neither are we fit for service in his kingdom while cherishing this spirit. Then it is true that men who are anxious and jealous for position and place in the church seldom gain it and never hold it.

This same sensitive, jealous spirit often shows itself in an unwillingness to hear the least suggestion as to, or criticism of, the matter or method of their teaching. Some have quit preaching at places and some altogether because they were criticised in some manner by some one that either was or was not a judge of what he criticised. Men quit preaching the gospel and let souls go to hell because some one thinks he can make suggestions that would improve them in their work. Is this spirit Christian? Suppose the man is not competent to criticise, what of that? Christ did not quit preaching because the religious teachers criticised, objected to, and persecuted him. His followers must cultivate his spirit. Paul's brethren at Corinth turned against him, rejected him, and abused him. His offended dignity did not cause him to leave them to go to ruin because of this.

This sensitiveness arises usually from an inordinate degree of self-esteem and self-importance. We think more highly of ourselves than we ought to think. A preacher, above all others, ought to be free from sensitiveness, jealousy, envy. One grows into the other.

Then writing is a method of preaching and teaching. Periodicals are the methods of this age. Some one must say what shall go in one and what not. Editors, of course, are all "popes." Perhaps the work cultivates the spirit. It is singular that out of the thousands that know exactly how to manage a paper the poor fellow that knows nothing about it, providentially or otherwise, gets in the position every time. If a brother can do good through writing, it is as much his duty to do it as it is for him to preach orally. So many writers that do write well about the Christian graces become offended and trample these same graces under foot if the editor suggests that their work might be improved in some point, or that it is best not to publish this or that, or to make a change here or there, and quit writing and bury the talent. It will be a singular excuse for burying the talent that some poor mortal dared to suggest my work was not perfect, and that he dared think he could make suggestions that would improve it. The editor, of course, is wrong. All whose manuscript is rejected or to whom suggestions are made know he is wrong. I am sure they make mistakes frequently. I sometimes write to get what I think are important truths before the readers of other papers. They are frequently returned. I sometimes publish them, after their return, in the Advocate, and they are frequently complimented as the best articles I publish. But I do not fall out with the editor who thinks they do not suit his columns. I know an editor never wishes to offend any one. He can have no possible interest in so doing. He may have other ends and purposes before him that he thinks of so great importance he had better risk the offense than to fail to please some one; but you may rest assured an editor is the one man that does not wish to offend any one. His self-interest prohibits it. He frequently, like other men, makes mistakes. Are you going to quit working with every man who makes mistakes? If so, you must retire as a hermit or you must needs go out of the world. It is the spirit of Christ to bear with the mistakes of others, and, despite them, work together as Christians. A meek and quiet spirit is of highest price. To bear the mistakes and wrongs of others without resentfulness is the spirit of meekness. Let us not think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think. The true spirit of Christ is the foundation of all acceptable service to him. Without this all else is vain. D. L.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: In our lesson for December 9 some contend that in restoring sight to blind Bartimeus his sins were also forgiven. Please give your opinion and an explanation on the lesson. Is there any evidence that the man was a sinner?

Dyer, Tenn.

W. A. JETTON.

Nothing is said of his sins, whether he was a sinner or not. He was a Jew. He believed in Christ, and acted on his faith. His faith was the means of giving him sight and leading him to seek Jesus Christ and his help. I do not doubt if he was guilty of sins and shortcomings he repented and was forgiven, but he would have to comply with the law of repentance and forgiveness, just as any other person who sinned had to do. The healing Jesus bestowed would not save a sinner in his sins.

Brother Lipscomb: In the Sunday school lesson for December 2 you said, in speaking of Matt. 19: 24, that the eye of a needle means a sewing needle, and not a small gate of a city. Will you please give the history, sacred or profane, which will bear you out in this assertion? You may answer through the columns of the Gospel Advocate. J. W. BUZBEE.

Bowman, Miss.

I do not get out the Sunday school series now; Brother Elam does it; none the less, I believe his statement true. I do not know what historic proof is needed to prove a needle is a needle. If I were to say it does not mean what it says, there might be some ground to demand the proof. Jesus intended to say it was impossible for a rich man—one who trusts in and loves riches—to enter into the kingdom of heaven. He uses the impossible thing to illustrate it. Why should we break the force of his illustration?

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain through the Gospel Advocate Matt. 12: 36. J. A. M.

"Idle" means useless, unprofitable, pernicious, and hurtful; it means what is idle, useless, and hurtful in the sight of God. The same kind of words or speech is referred to in Eph. 4: 29, R. V.: "Let no corrupt speech proceed out of your mouth, but such as is good for edifying as the need may be, that it may give grace to them that hear." Here the corrupting speech that excites sinful lusts and desires is contrasted with that which is good, and administers good to the hearers, and edifies them, and fits them for receiving the blessing or favor of God. The idleness or hurtfulness is such in the sight of God, not in the sight of men. Many things that God would consider idle and hurtful man would not, and what man calls "idle" is not always such in the sight of God. God considers all conversation that would lead away from God to an undue devotion to the things of the world as idle, pernicious, hurtful. Man does not so consider. Light, pleasant words that bring joy and happiness to ourselves or others and lead none into evil man is apt to consider idle and profitless, but God does not so consider them. All words of a hurtful, vicious tendency that excite evil thoughts and sinful desires are what God would call idle, useless, pernicious; and for the use of such words men will be held to account by God. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." Again: "Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man." Evil, vicious conversation that excites the lusts, passions, evil desires often does more harm than many sinful deeds, and God forewarns that for all this men will be held to a strict account.

The committee appointed to receive and tabulate the votes of the presbyteries on changing the Westminster Confession of Faith report:

"The committee find, on examination of the returns from the presbyteries, the following facts: That the returns plainly indicate that the church desires some changes in its credal statement. The returns indicate plainly that no change is desired which would in any way impair the integrity of the system of doctrine contained in the Confession of Faith. The returns also indicate that a large plurality desire that changes should be made by some new statement of the present doctrines. The returns also indicate a desire upon the part of many presbyteries for some revision of the present Confession. It was, therefore, unanimously agreed by the committee to recommend to the General Assembly that some revision or change be made in our confessional statement."

They as yet have made no report as to what changes should be made nor as to the manner of proceeding in making them. D. L.

"Wisdom is knowing what to do next; virtue is doing it." (David Star Jordan.)

The Independent maintains that vice produces low wages for working women rather than low wages produce vice. It insists the majority of prostitutes become such by the time they are seventeen years old, and before they are greatly affected by low or high wages. After they become vicious, they work for low wages, expecting to supplement it by the wages of vice, and thus depress the wages of chaste women. There is doubtless some truth in the contention of the Independent, and this throws the cause back to the family influences and training. Better training is needed in the family. The family influence and training molds the future life for good or evil. It fixes the destiny for both time and eternity. Looseness in family training is the foundation of much of the evil in society. D. L.

A Chinaman's Opinion.

We wonder at the queer customs of men of the East, but it does not occur to us that our American ways must seem equally strange to them. That they do, however, is shown by the following extract from a Chinese essayist. He says:

"They live months without eating a mouthful of rice; they eat bullocks and sheep in enormous quantities; they have to bathe frequently. The men dress all alike, and, to judge from their appearance, they all are coolies; neither are they ever to be seen carrying a fan or an umbrella, for they manifest their ignorant contempt of these insignia of gentlemen by leaving them entirely to women. None of them have finger nails more than an eighth of an inch long; they eat meat with knives and prongs; they never enjoy themselves by sitting quietly on their ancestors' graves, but jump round and kick balls as if paid to do it; they have no dignity, for they may be found walking with women."

God Interferes for His Own Honor.

The debasement of man and the dishonoring of God by man's sin rendered it necessary for God to interfere for his own honor, as well as for the welfare of the race. "It is time for thee, Lord, to work: for they have made void thy law." (Ps. 119: 126.) God has worked and always will work when he can subserve the interest of man and maintain his own honor.

Man was created that he might honor his God and glorify him in his soul and body. In the garden of Eden, man found the most favorable circumstances possible on earth for maintaining his integrity and filial obedience to God his Father, by which he might have forever enjoyed the bliss of his primeval home; but he lost his estate by his failure to be led by divine wisdom. He ate the forbidden fruit—he sinned—and in so doing brought death upon himself and all his posterity. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." (Rom. 5: 12.)

Man, most perfectly made and under the most favorable circumstances, did not stand temptation. God was just in condemning his posterity to the grave. Not only was the condemnation reasonable, but it was necessary, because God had said if man sinned he should die.

Man possibly might have maintained his integrity if it had not been that he fell under the influence of false teaching. Since the archangel, lifted up by pride, came into the condemnation of God, and thus became a fallen angel, losing his heavenly estate, and thus became the progenitor of sin—the devil—a liar, and the father of lies; having failed in his attempt to forestall the purposes of God, and having been cast over the battlements of heaven, lighting upon the earth, he, at the creation of man, loses no time in renewing his efforts to oppose God and, if possible, to contravene his purposes.

The purpose of God in the creation of man was clearly that God should be glorified by man in his soul and body, and that in God's glorification man should be blessed. "If man's body die and go to the dust from whence it came, certainly God could not, in that case, be glorified by man's body." Thus reasoned Satan, the archenemy of both God and man. "God has already said if man sins, he shall surely die." Satan now has a splendid opportunity to gain a long-wished-for victory over God. If he can by any means cause man to sin, it looks reasonable to suppose God's plans would be frustrated. It seems entirely reasonable to suppose that if man's body go to dust, there would then be no glorification of God in the body of man. So, it seems to me, Satan might have reasoned. But the sequel will show how vain are the reasonings of the devil, to say nothing of those of men when they run counter to the purposes of God.

Under the persuasive reasoning and dogmatic, lying statements of the deceiver, the woman believed a lie the truth, and, acting honestly and conscientiously upon this belief, became a dupe of the devil and dishonored her God. What can be said of the man in this the greatest of all tragic dramas? Without being deceived, coolly and deliberately he did that which brought death and disaster to the race. If Satan rejoiced in this success, he is doomed at last to bitter disappointment. God's purposes cannot be contravened, either by men or devils.

Man dies and his body returns to the dust, but it shall come forth from the grave. God lays help upon one who is mighty—Jesus—who interferes for the sake of the glory and honor of his Father. The Son comes to the battle ground of earth; he goes down to death, and in the darkness and gloom of the grave by one supreme effort overcomes death, hell, and the grave, and comes forth, bringing life and immortality to light. He makes it known that "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." (John 5: 28, 29.) Thus we see that the bodies of men will follow the fortunes of their souls. "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." (Matt. 10: 28.)

God interfered in man's debasement, and will cause the wrath of man to praise him. God's honor is secure, and whether man eventually be saved or lost, still "it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God." (Rom. 14: 11.)

For the part Jesus took in turning the seeming victory for Satan into a glorious victory for his Father, it is said: "And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." (Phil. 2: 8-11.)

Thus in the final consummation the bodies of all men will glorify God with homage, and with their tongues confess Jesus Christ as Lord. This is not all. Satan will find his long and hopeful warfare brought to an ignominious end, when he himself will finally bow the knee and acknowledge Jesus to be both Lord and Christ, King immortal, whom in heaven he sought to dishonor.

It will be a grand, a glorious day when the justice of the great God shall be thus vindicated before an assembled universe. The warfare will have ended, and Jesus will then have the honor and glory he had before the worlds were formed and man created. Man redeemed will be a new factor in the celestial court, whose company will be the delight of the angels and whose songs shall be burdened by the praises of God and his Christ in the song of Moses and the Lamb.

The financial operations of the Post Office Department for the last fiscal year are shown briefly in the following statement from the Postmaster General's report: "Ordinary postal revenue, $100,899,433.44; receipts from money order business, $1,455,145.85. Total receipts from all sources, $102,354,579.29. Total expenditures for the year, $107,740,267.99. Excess of expenditures over receipts, $5,385,688.70. For the fiscal year of 1899 the receipts were $95,021,384.17, and the deficit $6,610,776.75." The report dwells on the extension of rural free delivery and its vast benefits, and continues: "We are now carrying the post office to the door of thirty-one million people massed in towns and cities. The task before us is the more complicated work of carrying the post office to the door of about twenty-one million scattered over one million square miles of territory."

Prospects in Japan.

The third General Conference of Protestant Missions in Japan has recently been held in Tokyo. It was a meeting of much interest, and the papers read covered nearly all the phases of mission work. All the denominations were represented, except the Greek, Roman, German, and Universalist. The question, however, of excluding the nonsociety missionary was sprung in private, but not brought before the conference—much to the good common sense and liberality which overwhelmingly possessed the conference. The special case in point was that of your humble servant. The climax of the conference ended in the discussion of the union question; and if any have doubts as to a growing tendency for union, they should have been at this meeting. The very strongest, outspoken words, and from unusual sources, were heard on this subject. A committee was appointed to draft a plan of union and cooperation. While the immediate removal of the present denominational organizations may not be in the programme of this committee, yet as soon as a common working basis can be had the question of the entire removal of the denomination will come to the front.

I am sorry to report that Brother Wagner is not well. He writes me that he is quite sick. Brother Wagner's work has not been helped as it ought to be. But where is the work that is aided as it ought to be? Brother Wagner has probably used more of his own means in founding his Christian colony than he has received from all other sources. Is it right that he should be forced to live and toil so hard?

My own work in my printing house is going on in the even tenor of its way, but cramped on all sides. I must say, however, that a faithful brother would immediately respond to any call I might make upon him, but I do not feel like asking him to bear more burdens than I myself bear in this work. The school for poor children, which had to close for a while, has been reopened, and some brethren in Kentucky are taking up its support. Some of the larger children are beginning to do some work in the printing house. At the present time I publish the Voice, the Child's Paper for Sunday school, and a monthly paper for the Baptists. Much more work is promised; but we are not now well enough equipped, either in printing material or practical knowledge of the business, I have had to depend entirely upon myself. I should be glad if some brother understanding the business could come out and undertake half the burden of this most important work. We need more equipment, and I feel sure that in no other way can more good Christian literature be circulated. If the various denominations can have their publishing houses here, from which tons of sectarian literature are issued, why can there not be a press with no party badge upon it, issuing nondenominational literature? There can be, and we are foolish enough to undertake to build such a publishing house.

A few weeks ago we buried a young sister of the Koishikawa Church. This is the second member we have lost by death this year.

Brother Bishop is tackling the Japanese language now with a good teacher. I do not see him very often, as we live far apart and I am kept close to my work.

I am hoping to have Brother McCaleb back next spring. I trust some new workers may come with him.

I should like to exhort the brethren to remember the work in Japan. It seems to me more ought to be done for the foreign work.

I am very sorry to hear of the death of Brother Srygley. The Gospel Advocate has lost one of its three strong writers. We in the far distant lands feel the loss of these leading brethren in a peculiar way. May the lives of those remaining be spared for a long time. The Lord strengthen us all for the work in his vineyard.
E. SNODGRASS.

Tokyo, Japan.

P.S. My wife reminds me that I might put in a word to the churches in behalf of Brother McCaleb, who is touring in the interest of the work in Japan. Brother McCaleb, I notice, was careful to announce that he was not making calls upon the churches for collections. That is true. But woe be to the church which lets him pass by without giving him a generous material token of its fellowship! Brethren, help him on his way. Is not his work your work? What shall we do? Certainly we do not want your money, but we want you to take part with us in your work and our work. Let us wake up, and do more than we have ever done.

One Hundred for Fifty Cents.

The article given below, in leaflet form, will be sent, prepaid, for fifty cents per hundred. Having lost my house and nearly all its contents by fire, on December 14, 1900, and having no insurance (loss, about eight hundred dollars), I ask any of the Gospel Advocate readers who may be interested in spreading the gospel to send for at least one hundred of these leaflets and distribute them among your friends. You can do good with them, while I can use the profits toward rebuilding a house for my family. I am unable to rebuild, but do not wish to beg; I simply want to sell my leaflets, and thus honorably help myself. All who want them will please send at once, so I can have some idea of how many to print, as the first edition is exhausted. They will be ready in about four weeks. The leaflet is as follows:

"WHICH CHURCH DID CHRIST ESTABLISH?"

"That there are several hundred religious bodies, each claiming to be the church of Christ or a denomination of the church of Christ, is a fact too plain to be denied. That these religious bodies disagree with each other in doctrine and practice is also plain to any one that wants to see. Did Christ establish all these bodies? If so, why do they disagree, seeing they all have the same Bible? Did he establish any of them? If so, which one? If more than one, how many? 'It makes no difference which church you join,' say many. If this be true, does it make any difference how many churches you join? Men join many lodges—Masons, Odd Fellows, etc.—to get the benefit of all of them. If it makes no difference which church you join, what valid reason can you give for not joining several churches, so as to get the benefits of several? 'It would not be right,' says some one. How do you make this, when it makes no difference which you join? Is it right for A to join a certain church? You think so. Is it right for B to join another church? You guess so. Then why would it not be right for A to join both of them? It would, and no logical reason can be urged against it, provided we have the right to join different churches. In this way the Savior's prayer for union (John 17: 21) could easily be answered, and Paul's instruction to all to 'speak the same thing' (1 Cor. 1: 10) could easily be followed. It would consist in the Methodists joining the Baptists, the Baptists joining the Methodists, the Presbyterians joining both, the Lutherans joining all three, and each joining the other all the way round. Then they could all 'speak the same thing' by each speaking 'everything,' even if he did have to contradict himself at every point. 'But this would be absurd and ridiculous,' says one. Certainly; and that is the very reason it makes a difference which church you join.

"If it makes no difference which church you join, then it will be all right to join the Catholics, Mormons, or Universalists. What do Protestants say on this? Then it would make no difference if a man did not join any church. If one man can stay out of one church and be saved, all men can stay out of that church and be saved. Then that church is a useless playhouse. If it makes no difference which church you join, then all churches are useless, for humanity can be saved out of all of them.

"Can any one show that it is right

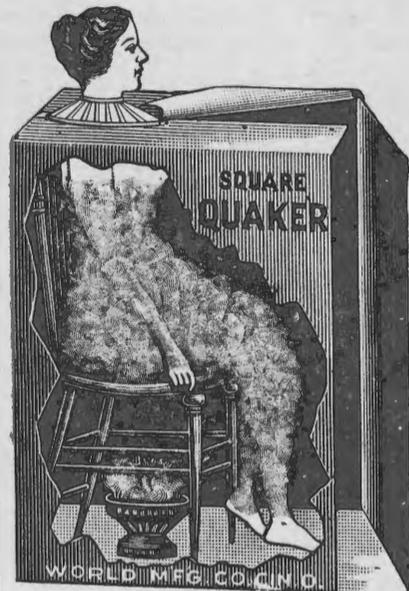

A GOD-SEND TO ALL HUMANITY.

Remarkable Invention of an Ohioan that Guarantees Perfect Health, Strength, and Beauty to Every User, and Cures Without Drugs All Nervous Diseases, Rheumatism, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Blood and Kidney Troubles, Weakness, and the Most Obstinate Diseases, by Nature's Method of Steaming the Poisons Out of the System.

Ministers and Those Who Have Used It Declare It to Be the Most Remarkable Invigorant Ever Produced, Better than Any Treatment at Hot Springs, Sanitariums, or Health Resorts.

A prominent business man of Cincinnati has invented a Vapor Bath Cabinet that has proven a blessing to every man, woman, and child who has used it; and as many of our readers may not know of its real comfort and blessings, we illustrate it in this issue.

It is an air-tight inclosure, a rubber-walled room, in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and, with only the head outside, enjoys at home, for 3 cents each, all the marvelous cleansing, curative, and invigorating effects of the famous Turkish, Hot Vapor, Hot Air, or Medicated Vapor Bath, with no possibility of taking cold afterwards, or in any way weakening the system.

Hundreds of well-known physicians have given up their practice to sell this Cabinet—such eminent men as Emerson McKay, Detroit, who has already sold over 700; and John C. Wright, Chicago, who sold 125 last month.

Thousands of remarkable letters have been written the makers from users, some of which, referring to Rheumatism, La Grippe, Kidney Troubles, will be interesting to those who suffer from these dread maladies. W. L. Brown, Oxford, O., writes: "My father was down in bed for months with rheumatism; this Cabinet did him more good than $50 worth of drugs. It cured my brother of neuralgia and sleeplessness, with which he had long suffered, and his wife of la grippe in one night." G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., writes: "Was compelled to quit business a year ago, being prostrated with rheumatism and kidney troubles, when your Cabinet came. Two weeks' use cured me; I have never had a twinge since." Rev. George H. Hudson, Okemos, Mich., says: "I gave up my pastorate on account of nervous prostration and lung troubles. My editor so highly recommended your Cabinet, I tried it; from that day I have steadily grown better; am now well; nervousness gone, lungs strong; am a new man." Mr. Simon Tompkins, a retired capitalist, of Columbus, O., 1031 Broad street, says: "I am satisfied it saved my life. I was taken down with a hard cold, which developed into a dangerous case of pneumonia. The first bath relieved me, and I quickly recovered. It is far superior to drugs for curing la grippe, colds, inflammation, and rheumatism." Hon. A. B. Strickland, of Bloomington, writes that the Cabinet did him more good than two years' doctoring; entirely cured him of catarrh, gravel, kidney trouble, and dropsy, with which he had long been afflicted.

for four different men to teach and practice different things religiously, and that at the same time it is wrong for one man to teach and practice all of them? To illustrate: Suppose it be right and pleasing to God for A to preach 'once in grace, always in grace;' B to preach 'you can fall from grace;' C to preach that 'immersion only is baptism;' and D to preach that 'sprinkling or pouring will do as well.' Would it not also be right for A to preach all of these doctrines? If not, why not? If four men preach four different doctrines, the people say God is pleased; if one man should preach it all, they would say the preacher was insane. Consistency, did you say? If four men preach these doctrines, people say they are preaching the Bible; if one man should preach it all, they would call him a 'prevaricator.' It is no wonder we have infidels.

"Can two or more be right when

Hundreds of Ministers write, praising this Cabinet. Rev. H. C. Roerhaes, Eyre, Kan.: "It is a blessing; made me full of life and vigor; should be in use in every family." Rev. J. C. Richardson, N. Fifth street, Roxbury, Mass., was greatly benefited by its use, and recommends it highly, as also does Prof. E. E. P. Kline, of Ottawa University, who says: "I find it a great benefit. No Christian should be without it." Hon. V. C. Hay, St. Joseph, Mo., writes: "Physicians gave me up to die; was persuaded by friends to try this Cabinet, and it cured me. I cannot praise it enough." Rev. Baker Smith, D.D., Fairmont, N. J., says: "Your Cabinet rids the body of aches and pain, and as cleanliness is next to godliness, it merits high recommendation."

Congressman John J. Lentz; Hon. Chauncey M. Depew; John T. Brown, editor "Christian Guide"; Rev. C. M. Keith, editor "Holiness Advocate," as well as hundreds of clergymen, bankers, governors, physicians, and influential people, recommend it highly.

Physicians are unanimous in claiming that colds, la grippe, fevers, smallpox, consumption, kidney trouble, Bright's disease, cancer—in fact, such has this Cabinet that no disease can gain a foothold in your body if you take these hot Thermal Baths weekly. Scientific reasons are brought out in a very instructive little book issued by the makers. To this Cabinet has marvelous power. Dr. Shepard, of Brooklyn, states that he has never failed to draw out the deadly poison of snake bites, hydrophobia, blood poison, etc., by this Vapor Bath, proving that it is the most wonderful blood purifier known. If people, instead of filling their systems with more poisons by taking drugs and nostrums, would get into a Vapor Bath Cabinet and steam out these poisons and assist nature to act, they would have pure blood and a skin as clear and smooth as the most fastidious could desire.

The Important Feature of this Cabinet is that it gives a hot vapor bath that opens the millions of pores all over the body, stimulating the sweat glands, drawing out all the impure salts, acids, and effete matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs, and cause disease, debility, and sluggishness. Astonishing is the improvement in health, feeling, and complexion. The first bath makes you feel like a new being, 10 years younger.

With the Cabinet, if desired, is a

in which the face, head, and neck are given the same vapor treatment as the body, producing the most wonderful results; removes pimples, blackheads, skin eruptions; cures Catarrh, Asthma, and Bronchitis.

O. C. Smith, Mount Healthy, O., writes: "Since using this Cabinet my Catarrh, Asthma, and Hay Fever, with which I have been afflicted since childhood, have never returned. Worth $1,000 to me. I have sold hundreds of these Cabinets. Every one was delighted. My wife finds it excellent for her ills."

Whatever

Will Hasten Perspiration

every one knows is beneficial; but other methods are crude and insignificant when compared to the convenient and marvelous curative power of this Cabinet, known as the new 1903 style

Quaker Folding Thermal

Bath Cabinet. We find it to be a genuine Cabinet, with a real door, opening wide, as shown in cut. When closed it is air-tight; handsomely made of best, most durable, waterproof goods, rubber lined. A heavy steel frame supports it, making it a strong and substantial bath room within itself. It has top curtains—in fact, all the latest improvements.

(ADVERTISEMENT.)

The makers furnish an excellent stove with each Cabinet, also valuable recipes and formulas for medicated baths and ailments, as well as plain directions. It folds flat in 1-inch space, when not in use; easily carried; weighs but 10 pounds.

People don't need bath rooms, as this Cabinet may be used in any room; and bath tubs have been discarded since this invention, as it gives a far better bath, for all cleansing purposes, than soap and water. For the sick room its advantages are at once apparent. There have been on the market, but they were unsatisfactory, inconvenient, simply cheap, flimsy affairs.

After investigation, we can say the Quaker Cabinet made by the Cincinnati firm is the only practical article of its kind, and will last for years. It seems to satisfy and delight every user, and the Makers Guarantee Results.

They assert positively, and their statements are backed by a vast amount of testimony from persons of influence, that this Cabinet will cure nervous troubles, Debility; purify the blood, Beautify the Skin, and cure rheumatism. (They offer $50.00 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures the most obstinate cases of Women's Troubles, La Grippe, Sleeplessness, Neuralgia, Malaria, Headaches, Obesity, Gout, Sciatica, Eczema, Scrofula, Piles, Dropsy, Blood and Skin Diseases, Liver and Kidney Troubles. It will

with one bath; breaks up all symptoms of La Grippe, Fevers, Pneumonia, Consumption, Asthma, and is really a household necessity. Gives the most known, and all those enjoying health should use it at least once or twice a week, for its great value is its marvelous power to draw out of the system all impurities that cause disease, and for this reason it is truly a Godsend to all humanity.

How to Get One.

All our readers who want to enjoy perfect health, prevent disease, or are afflicted, should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. Space prevents a detailed description, but it will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and curative properties.

Write the only makers, the World Manufacturing Company, 243C World Building, Cincinnati, O., and ask them to send you their valuable illustrated Book FREE, describing this invention and these remarkable Baths. The price of the Cabinet is wonderfully low, only $5.00, complete, with heater, directions, and formulas. Head attachment, if desired, $1.00 extra; and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much health, strength, and vigor.

Don't Fail to Write To-day for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet; you won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and agree to refund your money after 30 days' use, if not just as represented.

We know them to do as they agree. They are reliable and responsible; capital, $100,000.00.

The Cabinet is just as represented, and will be shipped promptly. You can remit safely by express, post office money order, bank draft, or certified check.

$150 a Month and Expenses.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller. More than 20,000 were sold last month by agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and to our knowledge many are making from $100 to $150 every month and expenses. Don't fail to write them.

they disagree? If one school-teacher says two and two are four; another, two and two are five; another, two and two are six; another, two and two are seven; would you say all are right? How long would it take the school directors to dismiss about three of them? One says New York is in America, another says it is in Africa, another says it is in China, another says it is in Europe. Are all of them correct? One church says do one thing, another says do something else. Are they both right? Not unless two and two are four, five, six, and seven; and New York is in four different countries. If God accepts all denominations, and they disagree on what to do to be saved, then God is as well pleased with falsehood as with the truth; for when one man positively denies the statement of another, both do not tell the truth. The Bible says God cannot lie; Christ says the truth makes free. (See John 8: 32.)

"1. How many churches did Christ establish? What does the Bible say? Did Christ and his apostles mean what they said, or were they simply joking? Christ said that whatsoever the apostles bound on earth should be bound in heaven. (See Matt. 16: 19; John 20: 23.) Paul says: 'There is one body' (Eph. 4: 4); 'But now are they many members, yet but one body.' (1 Cor. 12: 20.) What is this body? It is the church. 'And gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body.' (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) 'For his [Christ's] body's sake, which is the church.' (Col. 1: 24.) The body is the church. Paul says 'but one body,' hence but one church. 'For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church. . . . Therefore . . . the church is subject unto Christ.' (Eph. 5: 23, 24; see also verses 25, 27, 29, 32.) Paul does not say 'churches,' but 'the church.' As Christ established but one church, it makes a difference which one you become a member of, if you wish to be united with Christ, for he is Head of the one church.

"2. Are denominations branches of the church? Paul says God has set the members in the body and tempered the body together 'that there should be no schism in the body.' (See 1 Cor. 12: 18, 24, 25.) Is there schism or division among denominations? Certainly. Then they are not pleasing to God. 'God set the members every one of them in the body.' Did God set the Catholic Church in the body? If so, he failed to tell us about it. Did he set the Episcopal Church in the body? There is no hint of it in the Bible. Did he set the Methodist Church in the body? There is nothing to that effect in his Book. Did he set the Presbyterian Church in the body? He does not mention it. Did he set the Baptist Church in the body? The Bible does not once name it. If God set such churches in the body, it is strange that he said nothing about them. If he did mention them, will some one tell where? Can a man be saved and go to heaven out of the church? If so, what is the church good for? Can a man be saved and go to heaven out of the various denominations? They say he can. Can he be saved and go to heaven without believing and obeying the gospel? No; for it is God's power unto salvation. (See Rom. 1: 16.) Then denominationalism is not the gospel or any part of it, for God's power gives us all things that pertain to 'life and godliness.' Then denominations do not pertain to life or godliness; in fact, they were never heard of for hundreds of years after the church was established and the gospel revealed.

"But some one inquires if Christ did not speak of the vine and its branches. Certainly he did; but who is the Vine, and who are the branches? Christ says: 'I am the true vine.' (John 15: 1.) As Christ is the Vine, who then can be the branches? Denominations? Let Christ answer: 'I am the vine, ye are the branches.' (Verse 5.) Ye who? 'He that abideth in me, and I in him.' Do we speak of denominations as 'he?' No. 'If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch.' (Verse 6.) This is the key: Men, individuals, are the branches; denominations are not hinted at in the passage.

"Can there be branches without a vine, or branch rivers without a main river to branch from? If denominations be branch churches, where is the church from which they branched? In truth, the absurdity of this branch church idea is brought out by the Savior's saying he is the true Vine, and that men are the branches. The unchangeable law of nature is that all natural branches of the same vine produce the same kind of fruit. Who ever saw a grape vine bearing grapes on one branch, apples on another, peaches on another, plums on another, melons on another, and pumpkins on another? Such a sight would be no more unreasonable than to suppose all the denominations to be authorized by Christ, the spiritual Vine. As denominations came into existence hundreds of years after the days of Christ and the apostles, they must be of human origin, and no one has a right to belong to any of them.

"3. Which is the church Christ established, and who compose it? It is called the 'church of God.' (Acts 20: 28.) Christ says: 'My church.' (Matt. 16: 18.) Paul calls congregations 'churches of Christ.' (Rom. 16: 16.) What about 'Christian Church'?

The Bible knows nothing about it; the Bible speaks of God's church, Christ's church, but none other. The church is composed of Christians, but does not belong to them; they belong to it. Can a man be a Christian outside of this church? No more than a man can be a Mason outside of the Masonic lodge.

"What are the characteristics of the true church? (a) It accepts the Bible as furnishing all instruction needed or allowed. (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17; Rev. 22: 18, 19.) Hence, it rejects human creeds and names. (b) It accepts the apostolic teaching that people should believe, repent, confess, and be baptized to become Christians. (Acts 16: 31; 2: 38; 8: 37; 16: 22.) (c) It teaches that the Scriptures thoroughly furnish the man of God 'unto all good works.' (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) Hence, it rejects all human aids to the work and worship—such as the organ, the pastor, and societies. Will the clergy please show where the apostolic church ever wore a human name, made a human creed, called a pastor to take charge of the church, used instrumental music in worship, formed societies, taught sprinkling or pouring to be baptism, or that people were saved without baptism? Do not ask them to do impossible things. They cannot do it, and very few will even try. Are you a member of the church Christ established? If not, it is time you were looking into this matter. 'Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven,' says Christ. (Matt. 7: 21.)"

A Combination of Herbs, When Smoked in a Pipe, Cures Catarrh of the Head, Nose, and Throat.

SAMPLES MAILED FREE.

Contains No Tobacco and is Pleasant and Easy to Use.

Some of our readers may object to anything that has the appearance of tobacco smoking, but when it is a matter of good health or ill health, or possibly of life or death, then it is not a question of how it looks, but "Will it cure?" No other method of treatment can reach or cure catarrh.

Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure contains no tobacco and is a combination of specific herbs, roots, and leaves scientifically prepared, which are smoked in a common clean pipe. The smoke is inhaled into the throat and lungs, or forced into the head and breathed out through the nostrils. It will cure the worst forms of Catarrh, Deafness, Bronchitis, and Asthma. It is so simple and pleasant that even a child can use it, and is not an untried remedy, for it has cured thousands of cases, many of ten, fifteen, and twenty years standing.

In order to demonstrate its virtues, a three-days' trial treatment will be mailed absolutely free to any interested sufferer. Missed the Point.

I notice in the Christian Guide of October 10, 1900, a paragraph from an article of the writer that appeared in the Gospel Advocate some time ago, followed by some comments that indicate the editor failed to catch the point I had in mind.

I would not be understood as at all favoring those "who are known as the progressive element in the church;" neither "those who are called 'nonprogressives'" where they are lacking in spiritual activity. I am really not a member of either one of these parties, nor am I in the habit of making such party distinctions. That there are many churches throughout the land that are dying from lack of spiritual growth I am aware; but this does not seem to me to be an apology for preachers—or any one else, as to that matter—becoming "converted" to something they think to be wrong. I have never felt the necessity of adding another evil because of one that may already exist: My idea has ever been and shall ever be to try to lead the churches to larger fields of usefulness; but this by building up and developing the churches themselves, and not by becoming converted to something else.

But if I remember correctly, I did not have those "who are known as the progressive element in the church" particularly before my mind at all when I wrote the paragraph under consideration. There are many ways in which a church may be at work by some methods that are questionable without being affiliated with a mission board. When a church unwittingly falls into an error it is better, in my judgment, to refrain from pointing out the error till we have hope of correcting it by something better. Jesus seems to teach (Matt. 12: 43-45) that a man's heart, though cleansed, will become sevenfold worse than at the first, if left empty. In going up a hill it is better to let a team wobble out of the road a little, if they keep pulling, in the hope of getting them in again, than to jerk them back and get them to seesawing against each other on a dead standstill.

I think it was probably the appearance of the word "hope" that misled the editor—not hope in reference to eternal salvation (that point was not under consideration), but hope of their finally getting right. Supplying the ellipsis necessary to the thought I had in mind, my language would read thus: "There is more hope for a people [to reform] that are acting even in the wrong way than for those who are not acting at all." A church, though opposed to subscriptions, pledges, the pastor, the salary, the Christian Endeavor Society, missionary societies, instrumental music, and so on, is no more "sound," if idle and if lacking in personal consecration and purity, than the church that has adopted one or all of these things. In opposing any evil, we should be careful not to fall into others as bad. A church that has been so unfortunate as to fall into a state of idleness and cold indifference is not at all encouraging.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Do You Have Rheumatism? Have You Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

To Prove what Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney and Bladder Remedy, will do for YOU, all our Readers May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakable evidence of kidney trouble. It is Nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow; Bright's disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble, may steal upon you.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of the world-famous kidney remedy, Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. A trial will convince any one, and you may have a sample bottle for the asking.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are: obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night, smarting or irritation in passing, brick dust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, worn-out feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, or sallow complexion.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp-Root is the triumphant discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with marked success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp-Root testimonials. Be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take, and if you are already convinced that this great remedy is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at drug stores. Do not make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

CAWTHORN.

It becomes my painful duty to record the death of little Estelle Cawthorn, who died of scarlet fever, in Huntsville, Ala., on November 2, 1900. Estelle was a sweet little bud of six summers when plucked by the hand of death to be transplanted among the flowers of paradise. She had entwined her sweet life about the heart-strings of mother and father, and I do not wonder at their inconsolable grief. Now that she has gone, none except those who have passed through like afflictions can know of the gloom and sadness in the home she once brightened with gleeful mirth. May God's blessings rest upon those left behind.

F. W. SMITH.

ALLEN.

Little Ethel May, daughter of Brother and Sister Allen, of Carpenter's, Tenn., was born on May 19, 1899, and died on November 10, 1900; leaving many with sad and aching hearts, though we have a sweet hope for her in a brighter and purer world than this. God, with his hand of love, plucked this lovely little rosebud from this home of thorns and thistles and transplanted it in his own garden to bloom forever. Such a fair flower! To the bereaved father and mother I would say: Be encouraged by the words of the blessed Master: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Little Ethel has only gone on before. While there is one less on earth to love, there is one more to meet in heaven. Knowing that "all things work together for good to them that love God," look up through your tears, and say: "Father, we are thankful you loaned us this bright, sweet spirit for a short season." In its angelic loveliness, it will be waiting and watching for you. A short service was conducted at the grave by the writer. J. M. JONES. Carpenter's, Tenn.

WITHERS.

On October 27, 1900, the death angel visited the home of Brother Sid. Withers, Muldraugh, Ky., and took from him Dottie, his beloved wife. Sister Withers was born on July 16, 1859, and was born again—born into the family of God—on October 21, 1900. For many years she lived a member of the Presbyterian Church; but on October 3, 1899, she was married to Brother Sid. Withers, and she soon learned the way of the Lord more perfectly. In marrying Brother Withers, she took upon herself the duties of stepmother for three lovely little girls, and she performed those duties well. She was fond of the children, and they were devoted and obedient to her; but now they are again left without a mother. Sister Withers was, by nature, of a cheerful disposition; she saw the bright side of everything, and carried sunshine wherever she went. Her husband, in speaking of her, said she always manifested that same bright, cheerful disposition at home that she did abroad. On October 21, 1900, she made the good confession and was buried in the watery grave with her Lord and Master. Just one week from that day, and about the same hour of the day, her body was buried in the cold, silent grave, while her sweet spirit had taken its flight to the God who gave it. To the bereaved husband, children, and friends I would say: Weep not as those who have no hope. Dottie lived in all good conscience, and as she learned the truth she obeyed it. The Scriptures teach us that "the Lord doeth all things well." Let us all live each day as if it were our last, and so prepare to meet our sister in the sweet by and by.

CARRIE V. SHAW.

PARRISH.

Brother C. P. Parrish died at his home, in Denison, Tex., on November 26, 1900. Brother Parrish was one of the early settlers of Grayson County, Tex. Having come to that part of the State before Grayson County was detached from Fannin County, he spent his childhood amid scenes of a frontier life. Having reached his manhood, he was married to Miss Sophronia A. Pope in May, 1857, forty-three years ago. To this union four children were born, two of whom are living—Mrs. Mary P. Harnest and Mrs. Lee Maul. The first years of his married life were spent on the farm, during which time it was his good fortune to hear the gospel proclaimed in its apostolic simplicity by Brother Collapse.

Caused by over-work? No, caused by undernourishment. Work rarely causes collapse. It is worry—the outcome of a low condition of the nervous system and inadequate nutrition which generally causes collapse. The collapse seems sudden, but in reality it is a slow process. The stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition are diseased, the nourishment in the food eaten is only partially extracted and imperfectly assimilated. The blood becomes impure; the very fount of life is poisoned, and some day all the faculties and functions go on a strike. That's collapse. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the organs of digestion and nutrition, purifies the blood and builds up the weak body with sound healthy flesh.

"I was cured of a very bad case of indigestion, associated with torpid liver, by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery," writes Mr. G. B. Bird, of Byrusside, Putnam Co., W. Va. "Before I began the use of 'Golden Medical Discovery' I had no appetite; could not sleep, nor work but very little, bowels constipated, and life was a misery to me. After taking four bottles I felt so well that I went to work, but soon got worse, so I used it about eight weeks longer, when I was permanently cured."

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay cost of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for paper covered book, or 31 stamps for cloth, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

C. S. Burnes, one of the pioneers that had then come to the new country. He listened with an ear to understand, and was soon convinced of what his duty was. Then came the trial that has stood in the way of many. To stem the tide of prejudice of friends was indeed a trial of formidable proportions to Brother Parrish, for he was a man that loved his friends; but the love of the truth was greater, hence the victory. During all the years of his Christian life those who knew him knew just where to find him, earnestly and kindly contending for what is written, without any additions or subtractions. Such, in brief, is the history of a grand life, the details of which would require more space than could reasonably be granted; hence the effort to condense as much as possible. Suffice it to say, in conclusion: Brother Parrish lived to see all of his family, with himself, members of the one body—the church of Christ. His youngest daughter, Sister Maul, was baptized during the time that I labored with the brethren at Denison, Tex.—from 1883 to 1885. Rest in peace, brother, for thy warfare of suffering is over. W. B. STINSON.

TRAVIS.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Tired and weary, after years of patient suffering, the spirit of Sister Mary J. Travis departed this life on October 16, 1900, to be with Christ, which is far better. Our sister was born into the family of Brother Warren, at Readyville, Tenn., on November 24, 1840; was born into the kingdom of God at the early age of fifteen years; and was married to Brother W. A. Travis in August, 1863. Sister Travis came from one of the best families of Middle Tennessee.

Her husband, who died six years ago, was a faithful Christian. The influence of their Christian lives over their children and other associates will be for eternal good. My mother, who was a lifelong, intimate friend of Sister Travis, believes she never knew a more obedient daughter, a more devoted wife and mother, or a more consecrated Christian woman. Her adorning was that "of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." Sister Travis was a quiet, modest, retired woman, whose life consisted more of deeds than words. The Bible was her guide in all the relations of life. With her the word of God settled every question and pointed out every duty. She trained her children by the word of God, and in her family she succeeded, for her children are all loyal servants of God. Her children loved her devotedly and ministered cheerfully to her wants. During her long illness she was patient and resigned to the will of God. Her topic of conversation was Christian duty and the joys of heaven. When able, all her life, she was with the church on Lord's day, and when too feeble to be out of her room she desired her brethren to meet and worship with her. A few hours before she died she called her loved ones to her bedside and talked to them of the way they should live and kissed them good-by. On the morning before she died she repeated the following words: "I am waiting for the morning of that blessed day to dawn." I commend her beautiful life to her children, and point them to the word of God for comfort and consolation. After the joys and sorrows of this world are all over we shall meet in the home of the redeemed, nevermore to be separated if true to our Heavenly Father. Our sister died at her home, in Murfreesboro, Tenn., surrounded by her children and friends, and her body was gently laid to rest in Evergreen Cemetery. JOHN E. DUNN.

Brother McCaleb's Report for November.

Since my last report I have received the following amounts: Brother H., Tioga, Tex., $1; church of Christ at Gallatin, Tenn., by Brother H., $5; church of Christ at Hartsville, Tenn., $5.55; church of Christ at Beech Grove, Tenn., $10; Brother B., 50 cents; Campbell Street church of Christ, Louisville, Ky., $20; "A Sister," Nashville, Tenn., $5; Charles Richmond and Bessie J. Richmond, Washington, $1; church of Christ at Columbia, Tenn., $20.85; church of Christ at the corner of Twenty-fifth street and Portland avenue, Louisville, Ky., $29.34; church of Christ at Alensville, Ky., $10; "A Sister," 50 cents. Total amount for the month, $114.74.

To this must be added the thoughtful care and fellowship of many Christian hearts, especially those at Columbia, Tenn., and Louisville, Ky., where our lot happened to be cast during my illness. For example, when we reached Louisville, and, tired and worn, walked upstairs into our little home, everything was swept and garnished and prepared for us, even to the making of a fire and filling the coal oil can. Seeing these things prepared by loving hands, I could but say in my heart: Surely the Lord is good.

My daily amount in hand during November, 1900, runs as follows: November 5, $24.42; November 6, $35.32; November 7, $29.37; November 8, $39.37; November 9, $28.93; November 10, $28.07; November 11, $13.97; November 12, $18.97; November 13, $20.60; November 14, $18.08; November 15, $23.89; November 16, $8.45; November 17, $7.49; November 19, $6.52; November 20, $32.87; November 21, $30.67; November 22, $30.30; November 23, $25.50; November 24, $25; November 25, $24.25; November 26, $23.05; November 27, $22.06; November 28, $20.68; November 29, $18.95; November 30, $18.45.

On the part of this liberality of the Lord's people, I may say that none of it has been asked for by me; it has all been voluntarily given. May the Lord continue his blessings upon all who put their trust in him.

J. M. M'CALEB.

The case of Mary Hillman, of Leavenworth, Kan., begun twenty-one years ago against the Connecticut Life Insurance Company to recover about twenty thousand dollars due on policies on the life of her husband, John J. Hillman, was submitted recently to the United States Court of Appeals for final decision. The transcript in the case contains upward of three million words. This case has been reversed and remanded a score of times, and in resisting the suits the defendant corporation is said to have expended not less than one hundred thousand dollars.

There were disposed of during the fiscal year ending on June 30, 1900, public lands aggregating 13,453,887.96 acres, classified as follows: Cash sales, 1,178,982.47 acres; miscellaneous entries, embracing homesteads, timber culture, land warrants, scrip locations, State selections, swamp lands, railroad and wagon road selections, Indian allotments, etc., 12,212,482.40 acres; and Indian lands, 62,423.09 acres; showing an increase of 4,271,474.80 acres as compared with the aggregate disposals for the preceding fiscal year.

A dispatch to the Daily Express from Vienna reports recent Moslem excesses against the Christian population in the central provinces of Turkey, where two hundred Christians have been killed.

In consequence of the revolution now going on in Venezuela, Americans engaged in business in that country appeal to President McKinley for protection. A general attack, it is feared, will be made on all American interests.

More than one thousand sick soldiers are on their way home from the Philippine Islands. The transports Grant and Sherman are en route, with six hundred and fifty men, and the Sheridan was scheduled to leave on December 22, 1900, with five hundred more.

The Secretary of War has cabled instructions to Major General MacArthur, at Manila, to begin the work of returning the volunteer troops from the Philippine Islands, in order to permit of their discharge in this country by June 30, 1901. This action has been taken in anticipation of the authorization by Congress for the enlistment of regular regiments to replace the recalled troops.

The building occupied by the construction department at the Norfolk Navy Yard was completely destroyed by fire. The building destroyed contained all the important papers, models, and plans of the construction department. Over seven thousand drawings and one hundred thousand dollars' worth of live oak timber were destroyed. The loss to building and contents is over two hundred thousand dollars.

The German training frigate Gneisenau foundered off Malaga, sixty-five miles northeast of Gibraltar. The Gneisenau foundered at the entrance to the port of Malaga, where she was about to take refuge from the terrible storm prevailing. The captain and many of the cadets were drowned. The total loss is now thought to be no less than one hundred persons; some dispatches say one hundred and forty. Forty of those saved are badly hurt.

The limit of the subsidy to be paid American vessels in the shipping bill now before Congress is nine million dollars, and all vessels are to carry mails free. The present cost of carrying mails is one million five hundred thousand dollars, and with the increase of shipping the mail facilities would be greatly increased. It is claimed it will be some years before the total of nine million dollars subsidy can be reached. After that the subsidy to each ship or line of steamers is to be decreased proportionately, so that the total subsidy shall never be over nine million dollars.

Thomas M. Costello, a member of the New York General Assembly, has prepared and will introduce a bill which he hopes will do away with labor strikes should it pass. Briefly, it provides for a permanent court of arbitration, consisting of three members, and awards are to be compulsory. One member is to be chosen by the labor organizations and one member by the employers, the two to select a third, who must be a justice of the Supreme Court. This method has worked with marked success in New Zealand, no strike having occurred there in five years.

The big plant of the Brown Hoisting and Conveying Machine Company, at Cleveland, O., was almost completely destroyed by fire. Property estimated to be worth over five hundred thousand dollars was entirely consumed. Eleven hundred workmen were thrown out of employment as a result of the fire. The company was considered to be one of the largest concerns of the kind in the world, and has many contracts with the United States Government for hoisting apparatus to be erected at coaling stations that are being established in various parts of the world.

Telephoning without wires was successfully accomplished recently by transmitting the voice across the Mississippi River, near the Franklin avenue bridge, Minneapolis, a distance of over one thousand feet. A cold day and a cutting wind made the experimental work anything but pleasant, and toward the close of the experiments seriously interfered with the transmitters, as the moisture from the breath froze in them and stiffened them to such an extent that a fire had to be built to thaw them out. The lack of delicate instruments to take figures that would form a working basis for future experiments was keenly felt. The experiments will be continued. Professor Shepard, of the State University, with his best apparatus and a class of students in physics, will make the readings, and these are expected to furnish the base to figure on for a test of eight miles in the spring.
