Estill Springs, August 10.—Until further notice Estill Springs will be my address. We are well pleased with our new location. There are some fine people here. The town has some three or four hundred inhabitants. On account of the excellent water and hotel service, this is quite a summer resort. It is close to Elk River, and hence there is pretty good fishing here. The most noted spring here seems to be the sulphur spring, which gives forth some very fine sulphur water. It is the strongest water it has been my opportunity to drink. This water has proven to be beneficial for some ailments. The church here is not very strong in numbers, but the quality is fine. It was my pleasure the last two Lord's days to meet and worship with the church here. While I have not reported for some time, I have not been out of the work. On the first Lord's day in May I spoke at Winchester in the morning and Little Mountain Church in the afternoon. On the second, third, and fourth Lord's days I filled the regular appointments—Salem, Caney Hollow, Lexie, and Huntland. On the first Lord's day in June I spoke at Salem again. Beginning on June 5, I spent six weeks in school at the Middle Tennessee State Normal, at Murfreesboro. This was preparatory to teaching this fall and winter. I shall have charge of the public school here the next term. On the third Lord's day in June I had the pleasure of visiting at Flat Creek, in Bedford County, and of being in the home of our aged and beloved brother, J. D. Floyd. I preached twice while there. On the fourth Lord's day in June I preached twice at Murfreesboro. On the first Lord's day in July I preached twice at Laverne, midway between Nashville and Murfreesboro. On the second Lord's day I preached once at Dillon, five miles from Murfreesboro. During the fall and winter I plan to have each Lord's day taken up with the church here and near-by churches.

HUSBAND SAVED HIS WIFE

Stopped Most Terrible Suffering by Getting Her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Denison, Texas.—"After my little girl was born two years ago I began suffering with female trouble and could hardly do my work. I was very nervous but just kept dragging on until last summer when I got where I could not do my work. I would have a chill every day and hot flashes and dizzy spells and my head would almost burst. I got where I was almost a walking skeleton and life was a burden to me until one day my husband's step-sister told my husband if he did not do something for me I would not last long and told him to get your medicine. So he got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and after taking the first three doses I began to improve. I continued its use, and I have never had any female trouble since. I feel that I owe my life to you and your remedies. They did for me what doctors could not do and I will always praise it wherever I go."—Mrs. G. O. LOWERY, 419 W. Monterey Street, Denison, Texas.

If you are suffering from any form of female ills, get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and commence the treatment without delay.

Calcium's Value in Tuberculosis

As a tonic and remedial agent in the treatment of tuberculosis, this element is being studied by scientists and physicians everywhere.

For more than two decades users of Eckman's Alterative have tested its efficacy in such cases, for calcium chlorid is one of the chief constituents of this preparation, which has produced beneficial results in thousands of instances. And in this form it is so combined as to be easily assimilated.

If you are thus afflicted, a trial may prove this to be just what is needed to assist Nature in bringing about a return to normal health.

It is safe to take, because it contains no poisonous or habit-forming drugs of any sort. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct. Booklet containing information of value and references sent upon request.

FROM THE FIELD

Arkansas.

Beedeville, August 8.—A few days ago I closed a meeting at Des Cane without any additions, but with good interest aroused. I am now at Cow Lake, with good prospects. I go next to Searcy. I will be in Conway County the first of September, and have some time I could give some point near by.
THOMAS J. BONNER.

Palatka, August 7.—My meeting at Sallisaw, Okla., closed without visible results. I have just closed a two-weeks' meeting and singing school out on Route 3, Havana, Ark., without visible results, so far as the meeting was concerned. Large crowds attended, but there were no confessions. The community was badly disturbed on account of the "Apostolles" (better known as the "Holy Rollers") having been in there and almost ruining the Baptist and Methodist churches. We had Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Adventists, "Holy Rollers," and "Russellites" in attendance. There are only a few members of the church there. I used the Methodist church house to preach in. The people were all anxious to hear me "skin" the "Holy Rollers," but I fed them all out of the same spoon. One old Methodist brother got considerably wrought up over the matter and made a little speech the last night of the meeting, which was rather entertaining. He announced a meeting to begin the night following the close of ours, and said in part: "We will have a mourner's bench, too, and will invite you to come and be prayed for. I am on a four-horse wagon and going straight through. I feel it right here [patting on his breast]; and a man who says that it can't be felt don't know what he is talking about." I told him that we would be satisfied if he would just preach the gospel, as Paul said that it was God's power to save. I am now in a seventeen-days' singing school at Palatka. It is my fourth term here. I will preach some while I am here. May God bless the faithful.

Charlie, August 4.—I closed at Granger on July 31, with ten baptized, six restored, and one recovered from the "digestives." The meeting here is three days old. Two confessions and one restored. Brother L. C. Utley is teaching a singing school and leading songs in the meeting.

Your Greatest Problem— That Boy of Yours

What kind of a man will he be ten, twenty, or thirty years from now? You know, every parent knows, that it depends entirely upon the training he is getting right now, his associations, his ideals, his inspirations.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, principal of the Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tenn., has been training boys for twenty-five years. He wants your boy. He recognizes in him one of the men who may some day manage big affairs, and he wants to train him for that end. His school has been built and equipped and his instructors chosen with the first and only consideration of giving the boy the mental and physical training, the associations with clean, high-minded men, the ideals of character, the inspirations to ambition, which the world expects in the men to whom it intrusts its greatest affairs, be they business, professional, religious, or social.

Robert K. Morgan is a Christian gentleman of strong, wholesome, inspiring personality, and his school is the material projection of that character. He is a graduate of Webb School, Bell Buckle, Tenn., and the Vanderbilt University.

The boy deserves your most careful thought. Write Mr. L. I. Mills, secretary Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tenn., to-day, and let him send you a catalogue and tell you what this school can do for your boy.

JOHN E. DUNN.

San Antonio, August 7.—I have been preaching here at the Denver Heights Church the past three Sundays. Brother Bills is away in meetings. These are good brethren and seem to be moving along nicely. I begin to-night with the South Flores Church, to continue ten days. Following this I go to Trickham for a meeting. My meeting for the first of August at Louise was postponed.

GEORGE M. RANCE.

Thorp Spring, August 7.—I held a meeting at Mansfield, embracing the third and fourth Lord's days in July. This was the third meeting I have held for them. There is a splendid congregation there. Brother John Straiton, of South Side Church, Fort Worth, has preached monthly for them for seven or eight years. They have grown from a very few to a strong church. We had a good meeting. One who had been living with the Presbyterian Church came home; one Baptist was baptized; and others who had never manifested their interest as Christians there were given fellowship. I am now in a good meeting at Thorp Spring. One of our best Christian schools is located here. They are preparing for a great opening on September 18. A. O. COLLEY.

Tyler, August 3.—I held a meeting near Rockdale, embracing the second and third Lord's days in July, and baptized three, all married people, and organized a congregation with some twenty members. The churches in that section were all progressive. Great work can be done in that part. I closed a meeting at Tojar last Lord's day. We had large crowds and fine interest, but no additions. The church there has been divided for ten years until recently, and things are not right yet, all of which hinders the cause. Here I met brethren who have known me all my natural and spiritual life. It was a great reunion for us. I go to Hope, Ark., Route 1, to begin a meeting next Saturday night. Three of my meetings (from the middle of August to October) in Mississippi, have fallen through on account of the nine-weeks' rain. If any congregation can use me, let me know at once. Address me at Tyler, Texas, after August 15.

W. F. LEMMONS.

Childress, August 2.—The meeting at Munday closed last Lord's-day night, with fifteen baptized before I left; and two others made the confession at the last service, to be baptized by Brother Harrison next evening. Two took membership and one was restored. All in all, it was the best meeting I have ever held in Texas, with the largest attendance and the greatest interest manifested in every sermon. I will begin another meeting there next year on the first Sunday in July, to continue three weeks, and will hold another at Gillespie, seven miles from Munday. In fact, all my time for 1917 is taken now from the first Sunday in May to the fourth Sunday in August. I would be glad to hear from any one wanting a meeting in November of this year, or the last half of October. I have baptized forty-seven persons since the third Sunday in May, and now I am home for a three-days' rest. I shall leave to-morrow night for Hamilton County for two meetings, then to Wheeler County, and then home for a two-weeks' meeting with Brother I. E. Tackett with my home congregation. God bless all the faithful workers everywhere.

Among the Colored People

Brother S. W. Womack, of Nashville, Tenn., writes:

Brother A. M. Burton is doing a good work in the Jackson Street church of Christ, in Nashville, through Brother Acuff, in the Bible-drill work. Many of those who have attended are highly pleased. The Kayne Avenue meeting was supported by Brother Burton and by Brother Morrow, and the preaching was done by Brother James A. Allen. The word was presented in a plain, powerful manner. Interest and attendance most of the time were good. I think much good was done in sowing the seed. There were no additions. As a young man and a preacher, Brother Allen is a splendid example for both races. Thanks to the good Lord for the deep interest that Brethren Burton and Morrow have in the work among us.

Most of the time since the second Lord's day in June I have been in the city. There have been two confessions and one received by membership at the Jackson Street Church recently. The work there is moving on nicely. Also the work at Cowan Street Church, East Nashville, is moving up. Two confessions there recently. A regular Lord's-day evening service is being held at the South Hill Street Mission, and the interest is fairly good.

I am very thankful to the following brethren and sisters who still remember me in the work: Sisters of the College Street Church; Joe Hasty, Jo Johnston Avenue Church; W. T. Selley, Twelfth Avenue Church; S. P. Pittman, Bible School; Jackson Street Church; James A. Allen, A. M. Burton, Brother White; B. F. Hart, Petersburg, Tenn. May the good Lord bless them all. I trust that others may fall into line.

On my last visit to the Sugar Grove Mission, in Kentucky, a strong man was so much stirred by the word preached that he stopped his plow while plowing in the field and came where I was staying and asked me to baptize him. I asked him if he would not wait until the next service. He said he would not, and told me to just get a few of the brethren that lived near and we would go to the water. And so we did. Then he made the good confession, and I baptized him and left him rejoicing in the salvation of his soul. The work at this point is doing well. I have made four visits to this point and taken twenty-seven confessions and baptized twenty-six. Attendance, interest, and attention good at each visit, and I am teaching them to be contented with the old Book.

The fifth Lord's day in July closed the second quarter of my work with some encouragement. It was a busy day with us in Nashville. We were in three services—at the Jackson Street Church in the forenoon and at night, and at the South Hill Street Mission in the afternoon. At both of these points Brother P. H. Black presented the school work at Silver Point, and subscriptions were taken amounting to more than fifty dollars, with a little over thirty-six dollars in cash. We are encouraged to go on in the work by the deep interest the white brethren and sisters are manifesting in the work.

May the Lord bless old Brother David Lipscomb and others in their last days. Some years ago I called on him for aid in this work, and he said that at that time they were deeply in debt with their school work, but that as soon as he could see his way out financially he and others would respond to our financial needs. Notwithstanding he is now burdened with affliction, we trust that he may yet be spared to remain with us a few more years. His influence is a great power in the land. Let us trust the Lord and do the word found in the old Book and the Lord will help us.

I am now seeing and enjoying some of the fruit of my labor, thanks to the Lord and the brethren.

Brother J. Hannon writes from Corinth, Miss.:

On the first Lord's day in August and on Saturday night preceding, at the request of the white brethren, I preached at Mount Olivet, nine miles from Bolivar, Tenn. We have no disciples at that place. The Baptists opened their meetinghouse for us to go in with the gospel, and on Lord's-day night I gave them as much of the truth as they could stand. They said I was telling the truth, but they did not want any more of it. The white brethren of Mount Olivet neighborhood are supporting this work for the colored people at this place. We thank them for their kindness and their presence and their words of encouragement that they brought to help in the work. God will bless them.

Your Funny Little Nerves.

When they are well and happy, you would hardly know you have them; but when something goes wrong, they let you hear from them in no uncertain way.

Sometimes it is digestive trouble, when the nerves of the digestive apparatus telegraph their troubles to the brain and you have a headache.

Sometimes the breathing apparatus is interfered with by colds or catarrh, when the nerves in control tell their story to the brain in the form of a headache, or the whole nervous system is overwrought with the same result.

But whether the headache is digestive, catarrhal, or nervous, one of the best ways to quiet the fussy little nerves is to use Mentholatum. Its cooling, pungent, volatile oils tend to quiet the nerves and reduce the headache. No harm can come by its use. It is also good on nearly all forms of inflammation, for, in addition to its antiseptic qualities, it is a delicate counter-irritant, serving to reduce inflammation. Use Mentholatum for sunburn, insect bites and stings, scalds, burns, and sores. The cooling sensation is very grateful with these superficial troubles as well as with headaches.

Jesus Christ, the Dutiful Son.

For the benefit of our younger readers I wish in this article and in the one next week to portray, as best I can, Jesus Christ as a boy and as a young man in preparation for the duties of that life that Dean Farrar calls the "Life of lives." We have often considered him in the light of the incomparable Teacher, the Righteous Judge, the Loving Savior, and the Faithful Mediator. May I not invite you to consider him with me in the capacity of a dutiful and devoted Son? The references to his boyhood days in the New Testament are very meager. This period of our Savior's life has been called "the unrecorded years." We find one brief anecdote concerning the trip to the pass-over feast at Jerusalem and his astounding experience with the teachers of the law. Covering the next period of his life, which ends at his baptism, Luke says: "And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth; and he was subject unto them." Again, he adds; "And Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and men."

I am especially glad that this statement follows the relation of the significant experience in the temple, and after he had propounded the portentous question: "Know ye not that I must be in my Father's house?" Whatever Jesus may have known intuitively at this early age about his divine sonship, he did not allow that knowledge to make him uppish or disobedient toward his parents. The word "subject" implies much. It means he was obedient to their wishes, deferential to their position, considerate of their needs.

Show Respect for Your Parents.

Jesus was "subject unto them." That is one reason why he not only "advanced in wisdom and stature," but also "in favor with God and men." Any child to-day who shows respect for his parents wins the approval of God, as well as the esteem of all right-thinking people. It is positively disheartening to find a sentiment among so many young people that obedience to parents is Puritanical and old-fashioned, and therefore out of date. It is really alarming to see so many of them grown up, increasing in stature, and oftentimes in worldly wisdom, but never heeding the voice of divine wisdom which says, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right," or the first commandment with promise, "Honor thy father and thy mother." There is a disposition to chafe at the restraints of thoughtful parents and teachers and to break away from home at the first opportunity to "explore the world" or to "make a name" for themselves. This may seem to be the romantic thing to do, but it is not the heroic thing. Any foolish boy or girl can run away from home, but it often requires courage and resolution and patience to stay with one's work and to be subject to one's parents. This is one shining lesson that comes from the boyhood period of Jesus' life.

Jesus Put Nazareth on the Map.

The hill town of Nazareth, on the southwest of the old tribal district of Zebulun, was remote, insignificant, and poor. It was traversed by one of the roads from Ptolemais to Damascus, and was never large and populous. It is not mentioned once in the Old Testament nor in the Talmud. The recent attempts to prove that it was the center of a busy commerce are entirely unsuccessful. It is not alluded to by any Gentile writer, nor even by Josephus, although he writes so much about Galilee. The Jews despised it to such an extent that they had a proverb among them: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" The scenery around it is by no means grand or overwhelming. It is not, as some have said, a land calculated to excite the fancy of poets and painters, but it is withal a place of peaceful loveliness. Wordsworth speaks of "The silence that is in the starry sky,

The peace that is on the eternal hills."

It is not our purpose to show that such a man as Jesus came out of Nazareth, but to emphasize the fact that such a boy as Jesus stayed there the greater part of his life. Let us remember that it is not the place that makes the man. It is the man that makes the place.

Jesus Christ, the dutiful Son, put Nazareth, "the little white village on the hill," on the map of human events. When Plutarch was asked why he did not leave the little hamlet of his nativity and go to a great city, he replied: "Because by my going my birthplace would become lesser." Are any of you thinking now of where you shall begin and where you shall settle to engage in your life work? Settle where you are. Make your own home a bigger and brighter place than it has ever been before because you are there.

Jesus Was a Poor Boy.

Another passage from Mark throws light upon Jesus' filial relationship. "Is not this the carpenter?" Here we find a single, casual word, not meant for any part of the biography, but occurring in the most incidental manner in the discontented murmurs of the people of Nazareth, that comes like a revealing flash. That word is "carpenter." Jesus Christ had been teaching in the synagogues, and his disciples were with him. As he taught, the Nazarenes were amazed at his wisdom and his mighty works, but the humility of his origin was a stumblingblock. Was not this man a peasant, like themselves? In what respect could he claim any authority over them? Did they not know Mary, his mother, and his brothers and sisters? Had he not labored among them? Was he not, in the eyes of the scribes, a mere ignoramus? How could they accept an authoritative teaching from him? A prophet could expect but little honor in his own country and among his own people.

The very criticisms that men have aimed at Jesus have only served to bring out his most admirable qualities. Here is a splendid illustration of the fact. What does the language of this criticism mean? It means that Jesus was poor. It teaches us the blessed lesson that the Son of God himself, while hid in the veil of mortal flesh, voluntarily spent the long, silent years from childhood to manhood, not only in obscurity, but in poverty as well. "Though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor."

How Poverty Helps.

Poverty is the normal lot of the vast majority of mankind. It was the lot of Jesus. There was nothing squalid, nothing torturing, nothing degrading in his poverty. It was that modest competence earned by manly toil, which suffices to provide all that men truly need. It is the poverty which, "having food and raiment," is "therewith content." The lesson of Christ's poverty has helped thousands of the humble to say, with Martin Luther: "My God, I thank thee that thou hast made me poor." A wise king once prayed: "Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for thee."

There are likely some poor boys among our readers. Don't be ashamed of it. You are on the same level with Jesus. He knew the paths of daily economy: of work, not only to do, but to find; and of taxes to pay. Don't feel that you are handicapped. Hear the words of a truly successful man: "I was born in poverty, and would not exchange its sacred memories with the richest millionaire's son who ever breathed. What does he know about father or mother? These are mere names to him. Give me the life of the boy whose mother is nurse, seamstress, washerwoman, cook, teacher, angel, and saint all in one, and whose father is guide, exemplar, and friend, with no servants to come between." These are the boys who are born to the best fortune.

L. E. Huntsman's Reply.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother Huntsman's criticism of my article on "The End of Christ's Reign" was replied to; and while I did not hope to please him in every respect, I did hope to do better than he seems to think. His second effort is as follows:

In his reply to my criticism Brother Smith undertakes to show from the contexts of Mark 8: 25 and John 20: 27 "that not only is 'order' expressed, but immediate occurrence of events as well." "Eita," in these passages does not express order, but time. But does he argue that, if the context shows immediateness, "eita" expresses immediateness? Surely not! The context in 1 Cor. 15: 23 shows a period of at least nineteen hundred years between the events mentioned. But that cannot mean that "eita" therefore expresses remoteness. Or is he endeavoring to show that when "eita" is used immediateness may exist? If this be so, his reply is labor lost; for this is included in my statement, "The idea of immediateness or remoteness of one event with either of the other two is entirely absent." He does not seem to distinguish between what is expressed by the adverb and what is expressed by the context.

After having quoted from the fifth paragraph of my criticism, he says: "He then gives the same passages given by Thayer in which 'eita' occurs!" As these passages occur in the third paragraph, are we to infer that Brother Smith is so anxious to get the idea of immediateness in "then" that he goes even beyond and uses "then" in the sense of "previously?" No doubt this was just a slip, but it indicates a lack of care, though of no consequence of itself. But he says that I see "one thousand literal years between 'at his coming' and 'the end;'" and also, "he just knows this must be a thousand literal years." These statements concerning me indicate a far more serious lack of care, for they are not true, neither did I say anything to warrant making them. I am sorry Brother Smith made them.

The question of the nearness or remoteness of "the end" to "his coming" is a matter of comparative indifference to me, and I should have offered no criticism had not Brother Smith placed a construction upon 1 Cor. 15: 24 which I am confident is unsound. It may be well, though, to say a few words on the rest of Brother Smith's reply before closing. He seems to intimate that I should not have gone to the Revelation of John. Did he not make two quotations from it? I quoted the explanation given by John of what he saw in the vision, and what certainly refers to the resurrection. The twentieth chapter of Revelation must be taken into account to reach even a probably just conclusion. But Brother Smith quotes from the same writer (John 5: 28, 29), arguing that in "the hour cometh" the word "hour" is used literally to mean the same or one hour for both resurrections mentioned. Just before this quotation Jesus is recorded as saying (John 5: 25): "The hour cometh, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." If I understand what Jesus meant, that hour has already covered more than nineteen hundred years. Might not the other hour as easily cover a thousand years, literal or otherwise? It is easier to reconcile the hour with the thousand years than to reconcile the thousand years with one hour.

To avoid any possible misapprehension of my position, let me state it briefly.

1. In 1 Cor. 15: 24, "then" is an adverb expressing order of events and conveys no idea of nearness or remoteness between "the end" and "his coming." So far as "then" is concerned, "the end" may be immediately after "his coming" or any number of years.

2. The context in the passage places the resurrection of those that are Christ's at "his coming," and "the end" at the delivery of the kingdom to God, but gives no idea of their nearness or remoteness. We must look elsewhere for that.

3. In looking elsewhere, I find nothing definite enough to be positive about—that is, as to a conclusion. The best I can do is to say that Rev. 20 appears to furnish the information. But when any one presses the matter to a conclusion, the weight of evidence forces the conclusion already given. But it is wiser, in my opinion, to leave it in doubt and not press for any conclusion.

Our brother claims that I misrepresented him and expresses sorrow that I did so. Well, I, too, am sorry, if that be a fact, and I stand ready to correct the "misrepresentation" when clearly pointed out. I lay no special claims to analysis and logic, and, in my lack of knowledge of these things, may have done what my good Brother Huntsman charges. But before I make a confession of such wrong—unintentional wrong, if wrong there be—let us see if Brother Huntsman did not have at least some ground for what I said. In his "criticism" he said:

In Rev. 20 it is said that there is a "first resurrection," and that "the rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years should be finished." And again: "And the sea gave up the dead that were in it; and death and Hades gave up the dead that were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and Hades were cast into the lake of fire." Since we are told in 1 Cor. 15 that the last enemy to be destroyed is death, we are forced to conclude that the end of Christ's reign will be after the thousand years and the giving up of the dead by death. Further, if we place the resurrection of those that are Christ's, and his coming, after the thousand years, we have only one resurrection besides Christ, which contradicts Rev. 20. Though this may seem to support a theory that carnalizes the reign of Christ, it does not teach such a carnalizing. The real support (if such it may be called) of such a theory is to be found in assumptions and speculations.

Here it will be noted that Brother Huntsman is very emphatic in contending for "a thousand years" reign between what he terms the first and second resurrections. He even says: "We are forced to conclude that the end of Christ's reign will be after the thousand years and the giving up of the dead by death." Surely our brother is not ignorant of the fact that the millennialists contend for literal years, and in view of this fact it seems to indicate "a serious lack of care" on his part in not qualifying his language at this point. He is the first one contending for the "millennium," known to me, who does not hold to the "literal" year theory. I dare say that every thoughtful reader of his criticism got the same impression as I. But since he disavows such a position, I take pleasure in begging his pardon for assigning it to him. If he had manifested as much "care" in his criticism as he has in his defense, matters would have been materially shortened.

In his first position he unqualifiedly says: "We are forced to conclude that the end of Christ's reign will be after the thousand years." Now he says: "I find nothing definite enough to be positive about—that is, as to a conclusion. The best I can do is to say that Rev. 20 appears to furnish the information." The casual reader cannot fail to discover a radical difference between the two statements.

He further says: "But when any one presses the matter to a conclusion, the weight of evidence forces the conclusion already given. But it is wiser, in my opinion, to leave it in doubt and not press for any conclusion." This last sentence contains the principle for which the Gospel Advocate has contended all along; and if Brother Huntsman had acted on this principle, his criticism need not have appeared. But when men refuse to "leave such questions in doubt and press for conclusions," it becomes necessary to show that their conclusions are doubtful, if not absolutely false.

He says I seem to intimate that he should not have gone to the Revelation of John. He is mistaken. I had no such thought, but often quote from Revelation myself. I recognize it as a part of God's word, and use that part of it that is plain and not in "doubt."

Our brother says that "eita" in Mark 8: 25 and John 20: 27 "does not express order, but time," and then says: "But does he argue that, if the context shows immediateness, 'eita' expresses immediateness?" Why not, since "eita" here means time, and one of its meanings is "next, after that?" But he thinks because there has been at least nineteen hundred years between the resurrection of Christ and his coming, or the resurrection of "they that are Christ's," that "eita" in 1 Cor. 15: 24 cannot mean immediateness. It is not the context of 1 Cor. 15: 24 that shows this period of time intervening the events, but the facts of history. We have no historical facts showing a lapse of time between his coming and the end of his reign, but, on the contrary, the general trend of Scripture points to the winding up at his coming.

Our brother wishes to know if I am "endeavoring to show that when 'eita' is used immediateness may exist?" No. I am endeavoring to show that when "eita" is used as an adverb of time, with nothing in the context to show otherwise, that it does express immediateness. He says I do not "seem to distinguish between what is expressed by the adverb and what is expressed by the context." Wrong again. When it is an adverb of time, I consult the context to ascertain if it contains anything that limits or prolongs the fulfillment of the event prophesied.

I am perfectly aware of the fact that words have a "figurative" as well as a "literal" meaning, and that we must rely upon the context in which a word is used in order to determine its meaning. It is generally understood that the law of interpretation of all literature, whether sacred or profane, is to let words have their literal meaning unless the context forbids. Like our brother, if I understand the meaning of John 5: 25, the word "hour" has covered more than eighteen centuries and the end is not yet, for "hour" here stands related to the whole Christian dispensation in which the dead in trespasses and in sin will continue to "hear his voice" through the gospel and live. But a literal resurrection can hardly be considered a continual process stretching through an indefinite period of time. It is confined to a limited period definitely fixed by the word "hour" in which all the dead will be raised. Brother Huntsman tells us that it is easier to harmonize the hour with the thousand years than the thousand years with the hour. Well, now, since he disclaims the position that they are "literal" years, how can he say this? His thousand years, if not literal, may cover no longer period than a literal hour. Much of late has been said of Dr. Brents' position on the thousand years, or millennium. He himself said: "When I have nothing to say, I preach on the millennium." And again: "I am going to preach on the millennium, and you know as much about it as I do, which is nothing at all." I believe our brother will agree with me when I say that he who claims to understand all contained in the book of Revelation, or in any other book in the Bible, as to that matter, is a monumental egotist.

As stated heretofore, this matter, abstractly considered, is of no practical value, as our salvation in no way depends upon it. If Christ should wait a thousand literal years after he comes before delivering up the kingdom to God the Father, or should do so immediately upon his coming, how would either affect our destiny? But when men have another theory or theories destructive of the spiritual reign of Christ by the reestablishment of Judaism and a temporal kingdom or world power, denying Christ his seat now on David's throne, having him yet to set up a kingdom, all of which a thousand literal years' temporal reign is made to support, the matter assumes a vital aspect.

Who Are God's Children?

BY W. L. REEVES.

The above question has an answer, and that answer must be given by two witnesses. The Holy Spirit is one of these witnesses and man's spirit is the other. "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." (1 John 3: 10.) This passage draws the line in a very clear statement between those who are God's children and those who are not. Those who fail to do God's commandments are not God's servants. God's commandments are righteousness. (Ps. 119: 172.) Doing righteousness is the evidence on man's part that he is a child of God, that his spirit is alive. "The Spirit is life because of righteousness." (Rom. 8: 10.) "It is the spirit that quickeneth" (John 6: 63); and God gives the Spirit to those who obey him (Acts 5: 32). The Spirit is given to quicken man at the time his sins are forgiven. "And you hath he quickened, . . . having forgiven you all trespasses." (Col. 2: 13.) This last scriptural statement was made relative to those whom Paul in the preceding verse had told that they had been buried with Christ in baptism; so it is very clear that when a person has believed, repented, and been baptized, he receives the Spirit of God, and is then born of God, a child of God. Now let us read Acts 2: 37, 38: "When they heard this, they . . . said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." From this it is absolutely certain that the promise of the Holy Spirit is promised to people when they are baptized for the remission of sins—when they are baptized into Christ. Now read this: "And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him." (Acts 5: 32.) This, you see, most certainly is in harmony with Acts 2: 38, which promises the gift of the Holy Spirit to them who obey Christ's commandment to repent and be baptized. Certainly, from all of this it is clear that God gives his Spirit to the baptized believer.

Now we are ready to examine John 3: 5, which says: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." When a man is born again, born of water and the Spirit, he certainly is a child of God. Now note the following passage closely: "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." (Gal. 4: 6.) Inasmuch as God gives the Spirit to them that obey him, and gives it because such are the sons of God, and gives it to those who have believed, repented, and been baptized into Christ, it most certainly follows that those who have done these specific acts have obeyed the requirements necessary to become the children of God; therefore, when one believes in Christ, repents of his sins, and upon a confession of this faith is baptized into Christ, he is born of water and of the Spirit, so is a child of God. This settles the matter as to how and at what time one becomes a child of God, so far as the testimony of the Holy Spirit is concerned. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." (Rom. 8: 16.)

I now ask the reader to compare the above testimony which man must be able to give before he can claim to be a child of God. I put this in questions and answers, and then give Bible quotations between the questions.

1. Have you been taught of God? I have. "And they shall be all taught of God." (John 8: 45.) Christ's commandment is: "Go, . . . teach all nations, baptizing them [the taught] in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 28: 19.)

2. Have you believed and been baptized? I certainly have. I have believed in Christ, and that God hath raised him from the dead (Rom. 10: 9, 10), and have gone down into the water, and have been buried with Christ in baptism (Acts 8: 38; Col. 2: 12).

3. Are you now walking in newness of life? Have you quit your old evil practices? In other words, have you repented of your sinful ways? I most certainly have. My life is entirely different. "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." (2 Cor. 5: 17.) I am now following the plain teachings of the New Testament Scriptures. I meet with the brethren on the first day of the week to break bread (Acts 20: 7); to pray and have fellowship with both the saints and with the Lord (Acts 2: 42); to sing spiritual songs (Col. 3: 16); and to exhort and read the Holy Scriptures in the church (Col. 4: 16). These are the points of worship I find written; so these I do, but do no more, as worship in the church, because Christ said: "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." (Matt. 15: 9.) Having obeyed from the heart that mold or form of doctrine which was delivered me, I became a servant of righteousness at the time I was made free from sin. (Rom. 6: 18.) So I now strive to walk a godly, upright life each day, knowing that "every one that doeth righteousness is born of him [of God]." (1 John 2: 29.)

"For ye are the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 26, 27.) "For we walk by faith, not by sight." (2 Cor. 5: 7.)

With all of the above evidence, it is clear to all candid minds that such a character as is represented by both witnesses is a child of God and a joint heir with Christ.

Marriage and Divorce.

BY JOHN E. DUNN.

A number of excellent articles have recently appeared in the Gospel Advocate on the divorce evil and what constitutes marriage. All who love the word of God and appreciate the sanctity of the home and the good of society appreciate the timely articles by Brethren Elam and Kurfess. I wish everybody could read those articles.

The great mass of our people are not under the influence of Christianity. Only a small per cent of the people study the Bible and are governed by its teaching. However, if all preachers and teachers of the Christian religion would teach, and urge upon the people that they be governed by what the New Testament teaches, a great reformation could be brought about.

In eradicating an evil, it is necessary to go to the source of the evil. I do not believe the courts of the country and the legislative bodies can correct the divorce evil. You cannot legislate righteousness into people. As long as there are reckless marriages, there will reckless actions follow. Let parents teach their children whom they should marry, what marriage is, and that husbands and wives should live together. Preachers of the gospel, elders of the churches, and all other teachers of the Bible should teach the whole counsel of God on this subject. The New Testament allows divorce for only one cause—fornication or adultery. Some preachers will baptize people who are living in open adultery without repentance of the sin. I know of a number of instances where promising preachers knowingly baptized persons who were living in adultery and it was known they were going to continue the sinful life, and not a word from the preacher against the sin. Adulterers and adulteresses are common in the churches, and nothing said or done to cleanse the churches. Whenever there is such flagrant disregard by elders and preachers for the plain teaching of the New Testament, there is little hope of improvement. I know of instances where preachers, who claim to be loyal to the Book, have performed marriage ceremonies where one of the contracting parties was an unscripturally divorced person.

If these were rare and exceptional cases, it would not be so bad. But such instances are very common. Preachers are too much given to performing marriage ceremonies for anybody who asks for their services. Preachers and elders are leaders and examples for the people. We must be true to the word of God. Preachers are not commanded to perform marriage ceremonies. They are at liberty to exercise their choice. There are many marriages we ought not to sanction. Whenever a preacher performs a ceremony, it is at least understood that he regards the marriage as being scriptural. We must be careful of our influence. There is a vast amount of New Testament teaching that is almost wholly overlooked by many of us in our preaching. To teach the whole counsel of God is to cover the whole realm of life from the cradle to the grave. Obedience to the gospel is more than faith, repentance, and baptism; more than "there is but one church;" and more than meeting on the first day of the week. These things we ought to do, but not to leave other things undone. Obedience to the gospel includes what marriage is, who should marry, and how to live after marriage. Paul, in speaking to the elders of the church at Ephesus, said: "I shrank not from declaring unto you anything that was profitable.

I am pure from the blood of all men. For I shrank not from declaring unto you the whole counsel of God." (Acts 20: 20, 26, 27.) Paul never gave a word of instruction or taught a lesson that was not an essential part of the gospel. During protracted meetings is the very best time to impress upon the people these much-needed and so sadly neglected lessons. Let us declare the whole counsel of God to both saint and sinner.

How the Joy Fund Works.

We wish the contributors to the Gospel Advocate Joy Fund to know the good they are doing. Omitting post office and name, we print herewith a sample letter from one of the beneficiaries:

Dear Editor: It is with a very sad heart I write these lines to you. Have just received my last Advocate. I understand my time expired some time ago. The reason I did not write you sooner, I tried so hard to get the money to renew my subscription, but every effort has failed yet. Not one who is taking the Advocate enjoys searching every page more than I. It has been a light in my home. But my husband has been a victim of rheumatism for more than twenty years. He is drawn down until his head is nearer the floor than his shoulders. He cannot walk a step without a cane in each hand. He was confined to his bed for eight years. Also my little sweet-faced girl fell when she was four years of age and injured her spine, making her a helpless invalid for twelve years, which resulted in dropsy; then the dear Heavenly Father called her home. She was so bright and cheerful and bore her sufferings with the most patience I ever saw. I have three left for which to labor, and it is a struggle for me to meet needs of life for them, but I still live in hopes that I some day get able to renew my subscription for the old Advocate, which I will miss so much. I also feel indebted to you for the paper since my time was out up to the present time. I will try to raise the money as soon as possible.

Wishing you and the Advocate much success, I remain,
Your friend, X.

It gave us great pleasure to write this faithful sister that she was mistaken about having received her "last Advocate," because the thoughtful action of a fellow-Christian, who believed in sharing each other's sorrows as well as joys, had made it possible for her to read her Gospel Advocate another year. We have many others who are waiting to be encouraged by the Joy Fund. Who will help to make it grow? Just mark your contribution, "For the Joy Fund." We will do the rest. Or, if you prefer, send us the name of the one you wish to receive the paper.

PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

The Promptness of Subscribers Appreciated.

Much can be accomplished by cooperation. Last week we stamped the papers of those who were in arrears, calling attention to the fact that it is necessary to make prompt collections, as the cost of paper has recently doubled. Many have cheerfully responded by paying up their dues and renewing for another year. For August our receipts on subscriptions have been unparalleled. This is gratifying and helpful in taking care of our increased paper bills. While many have responded, many have failed to make remittance, doubtless simply having overlooked the request or intending to remit at an early date.

Most of the readers of the Gospel Advocate think they should pay their subscriptions to a religious paper with the same promptness that they meet any other just obligation. They do not think it right to read a paper and decline to pay for it. Most of the readers of this journal are debt-paying and God-fearing people. The Gospel Advocate has the best paid-up subscription list in its history. The writer of this was recently in an inland town of this State. In the office of a prominent business man of that town he noticed two Baptist papers. He took occasion to notice the date on the label of each paper and was sorry to observe that the subscription of each was unpaid since 1914. I thought this especially hard on the publishers of those papers. Publishers of papers should educate their subscribers to pay promptly. That Baptist gentleman no doubt intends to pay for his papers, but the publishers need the money now to take care of their obligations. If you have overlooked the payment of your subscription to the Gospel Advocate, you should not longer do so. Your delay works an unnecessary hardship on the publishers.

We are very much pleased to announce to our readers that the Gospel Advocate is on rising ground and is making many new friends. By the grace and help of the Lord, the paper shall continue to greater usefulness.

Our readers can help us by sending us new subscribers. If you do not have time to send us a number of new subscribers, send us a list of names, to whom we will mail sample copy with request for subscription. With the hearty cooperation of our readers, a new era of usefulness will dawn for the Gospel Advocate. May God bless us all in every good work.

Wants to Preach Christ.

I did not see Brother P. W. Harsh's note to Christians in Tennessee until I read it in the Gospel Advocate of last week. We welcome Brother Harsh back to Tennessee, and would be glad to see him engaged in preaching the gospel of Christ in its purity. "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few." The demand is for preachers who love the truth and are willing to make sacrifices to teach it. There are thousands in Tennessee and elsewhere hungering and thirsting for the gospel in its simplicity. Brother Harsh has the ability to do much good in "looking up the stray sheep of the wilderness." There are many ready to uphold his hands in such a noble endeavor.

From Our Flower Garden.

From Annie Smith, Route 2, Lawrenceburg, Tenn.: "The Gospel Advocate is my favorite paper. It is no respecter of persons. It stands for the truth regardless of men."

From J. O. Blaine, Portland, Tenn.: "I have been a reader of the dear old paper ever since the publication of the first number in 1855, and am as much in love with it now as I was in 'the sweet long ago,' when dear Brethren Lipscomb and Sewell were in their prime and every number was richly worth the subscription price of the paper."

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

Some Good Reports.

Brother Rogers, of Albany, Ga., writes (August 4) as follows: "We are progressing nicely here. Last Lord's day was a great day with us. We had two to come forward and take a stand with us, and had the largest crowd since the protracted meeting. We are now in a meeting in East Albany. We started last Tuesday night. About thirty-five were present the first night, and the crowd was almost double the next night, and still more last night. We are expecting a great meeting, if the interest continues. All the members are alive and working hard. Brother Bales is leading the song service, and is doing it well. Pray for us." Later news reports the Albany work as moving gloriously onward. This congregation is but little more than two months old, but a better prospect for a wide-awake New Testament church we have not had in this State.

The good news has just come that a congregation has been gotten together at Dalton. A lot has been bought and the brethren have a tent which is being used to sound out the gospel. How good the news! This seems to be the banner year for this neglected State.

Brother Flavil Hall has perseveringly stuck to the Chickamauga meeting through mud and rain and is winning out in establishing a new congregation there. There will be twenty-odd members with which to begin.

Two members from the Ingleside congregation moved to South Georgia and located where we have had no congregation. Brother and Sister Lynch are the ones referred to. They did not fold up their arms and say, "We can do nothing here all alone." They began to break bread. Brother Graves has just recently visited them and baptized one and strengthened the work. He was locked out of the schoolhouse, but will return with a tent, if it is the Lord's will.

At this writing the writer is at Menlo in a series of meetings. We have some most faithful members here. But there was a sore need of some work being done here in which the sinfulness of modern innovations be shown. We are delighted with the way the people are taking the plain, simple teaching of our Lord and Savior. It is a most hurtful error to think that you must "dilute" the teaching to get the people to take it. We must love God with all our heart and our neighbors as ourselves. The first will not let us compromise Jehovah's blessed word; the latter will not let us be unkind when we are exposing the errors of our neighbors. We have about thirty-five members here and a lot paid for and some money raised toward the building fund. Brethren, pray for this work.

Friendly Discussions.

Nothing has contributed more to our work than the friendly discussions that we had with two Holiness friends and a Roman Catholic during the East Point tent meeting last month. Mr. Myers, the first Holiness minister, had agreed to have a four-nights' discussion, the first two devoted to sanctification and the last two to the baptism of the Holy Spirit. But he quit the second night. The second speaker came to the rescue of the theory, but would not stand with Mr. Myers and his backers in all things they taught. His idea was that, as we sometimes express it, Myers and his crowd were running speaking with tongues, etc., "in the ground." The sessions were very pleasant, indeed, and great good was accomplished.

The night that Mr. Oberst, our Catholic friend, came forward in defense of his faith the largest crowd of the meeting was out. The crowd was estimated to be at least one thousand. His effort was, indeed, a strong one in behalf of Roman Catholicism. But it went to pieces under the fire of God's eternal truth. I wish I could give the arguments, but time and space forbid this now. However, this I may do later, as his speech was given in written form. This discussion was followed with a discourse the next night on "The Relics of Rome." The fruit of the effort was manifest. Two who had been sprinkled for baptism confessed their faith in Christ and three came from the Baptists. During the revival there were nineteen conversions, all told. Among this number were a father and mother who were offended because their son was withdrawn from and who pursued a course that forced the church to withdraw from them. We have great hopes now of the son's being saved. I am quite sure that such a mistake these members will never again make. Some of our best workers are members from whom we had to withdraw ourselves. The withdrawal had the effect that God intended; they were brought to repentance and are valiant soldiers of the cross. I have just received a letter from one of such members. He has charge of one of our missions, and is telling me, with gladness, the good news of a confession he had the first Lord's day in this month.

When this is in the hands of our readers, I will be in the midst of a discussion with W. S. Joiner at Calhoun, Ga. The discussion begins on August 21 and continues till the following Saturday night.

Brother Flavil Hall's Report.

While writing the above, the following report came from Brother Flavil Hall; so I close and make room for it. I wish to commend to the brethren "Pearls of Truth" that he speaks of. No one is doing more work at a sacrifice than he is. Brethren, let me beg you to come to his assistance. Here is the report:

Beginning on July 12 and continuing to August 6, I did the best I could in a tent meeting at Chickamauga, Ga. The irreligious disposition of the people, moving-picture shows, lodges, and continued rains made the effort a hard struggle. However, a good many who had never before heard a disciple preacher listened with interest to the preaching. Two were baptized and one from the Methodists, who said she had been baptized to obey the Lord, turned away from denominationalism to be a Christian only. The meeting was purely missionary. No disciple had ever before held a meeting there, excepting three services held by myself and one by Brother R. P. Ramsey. Arrangements were made for the disciples (about twenty in number) to worship regularly in their homes on the Lord's day.

My support was small. It might have been better had there been a large number of additions. But the lack of additions did not make the work any the less hard on me, nor did it subtract anything from the needs of my dependent ones. The disciples at Chickamauga were very kind to me, but I knew they were not prepared to adequately support the meeting. This was stated in an appeal of two sisters through the Gospel Advocate just before the meeting was held, and hence the editor referred the matter to the churches in proximity to Chickamauga.

There is another meeting soon to be held about four miles from Chickamauga, where there are only two sisters. The readers of this announcement can help me much by ordering my book, "Pearls of Truth," which has one hundred and sixty pages and is nicely bound in cloth. It makes a nice present and costs only sixty cents. Won't at least one hundred readers order the book at once and thus help me in mission work? It presents about fifty lessons on wholesome subjects for all ages. David Lipscomb writes: "It will be helpful to those who will read the articles and strive to walk by their teaching." L. H. Reavis writes: "It will make any one wiser, purer, stronger, and better to read it. Every Christian home should have a copy of this most excellent book." Address Flavil Hall, Trion, Ga.

An Insight to the Situation.

The following extracts from a letter written by Brother Jelley to a contributor to the work in India is informing to others than the brother to whom it was definitely addressed:

Dear Brother: I am just in receipt of . . . your fellowship for an Indian worker. I am grateful for the fellowship. . . . Brother — says that in some way you have never heard from me. If that is so, it is the fault of the censor or the submarines. . . . We send receipts to every one who fellowships my work or the work of the Indian helpers. . . . We try to keep workers proportionate with the amount of money sent. If we get sixty dollars a month, we try to keep twelve workers; but it often happens that we keep a worker for months after the one supporting him has died or been compelled to cease sending fellowship. It is not a matter of our putting a first-class man to work any day and then dropping him as soon as fellowship from America ceases, for the reason that we have no first-class men to hand; we have to make them for you, and it takes time and money. . . . We have only been at work about four years, and our preacher material was either born and bred heathen or else of semiheathen sectarians. This does not reflect against their Christianity, but it means that they have had no Bible-school training and no Bible training in their homes. We have educated material, but we generally hesitate to use it, . . . because we have found these brethren unreliable. . . . Sometimes we find a man of ability who can scarcely write and with difficulty reads.

Whenever Brother Janes writes me that there is support secured for three or four workers, I go and see Brother Chavan and ask him to select three or four of us God-fearing men as he can. . . . After charging them as to their work, he sends them out generally on a circuit of about ten villages. . . . As soon as possible, I put another man in the place of a new man and call the new man to Satara in order to train him. We have a small Bible school here in Satara for that purpose, and even Brother Chavan has taken time to come and attend.

You wish to know who your man is and what his success is. . . . About December 21 we put a man to work at Rahuri with instructions to work in the adjoining villages. He is educated up to the sixth standard. (There are seven standards in Marathi) so he is considered well educated.) His name is Sakharam bin Sukagi Wairagar. His father was a sacred teacher of the Mangs, but is now a Christian worker. Sakharam was removed from Rahuri on account of the ungodly conduct of the Christians there and has been for five or six months at Susre, strengthening and teaching the brethren there and teaching their children to read (our brethren and their children are ninety-nine per cent illiterate), so they can read the Scriptures. He and others went with Brother McHenry to Varkhede, and Brother McHenry said he was about the only one with a voice stentorian enough to preach audibly to the crowds. Some sixty-eight were baptized. He needs training, and when we can do so we will send for him and his wife.

You may consider him your man.

"Rome was not built in a day," you know; neither was Nashville Christianized and trained in the Scriptures all in the space of four years and five days. Those who fellowship this work now are the pioneers to whom will come the credit for the harvest in after years. Personally, I can say I have met discouragements enough in the field to be classed as "he that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing previous seed." My own health is in such a condition that I am not able to attend to American correspondence, of which Brother McHenry has kindly relieved me; but he has his own correspondence, his study of the language, his tract printing and other duties, and it is his first year out here. He has to get acclimated. Consequently he is unable to write letters for me—only postal cards. I am writing this letter when I ought to be at my translation work, preparing Matthew for publication. . . . because a brother at home thinks I ought to write. I hope, however, that not every brother will require statements of me over and above what appears in the paper and in Brother McHenry's postal cards. During the three and one-half years I was obliged to bear the burden alone before Brother McHenry came out, "I burned the candle at both ends," till now I am so exhausted that I have to brace up on coffee any day that I decide to do translation work. Just as Schiller had to brace up on champagne to do his writing. I do not like to do it, but my body, brain, and nerves demand rest, while the work must be done. I have very little vitality left. If the brethren only realized India's needs, they would send additional missionaries.

With love in Christ to both of you brethren and gratitude for your interest and fellowship, I am,

Very sincerely your brother in Christ,

E. S. JELLEY.

NOTE.—Funds for eight more native helpers for Brother McHenry and an American laborer to cooperate with Brethren Jelley and McHenry in India are needed.

They Did Not Forget.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

The writer met two young American teachers in Tokyo last winter. They were en route to the Philippine Islands. They were walking the streets looking for a Japanese inn. They approached me for information. Rather than let them lodge in a native inn, which is not very safe morally for strangers, I invited them to our home. They spent a night and a day with us. I showed them some of the places of interest and saw them off at the station. We had just about concluded that they had forgotten the kindness, when a letter came which corrected our conclusion. A part of it is as follows:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Vincent: I suppose that you have concluded by this time that those two fellows from the States whom you treated so royally in the winter have entirely forgotten their benefactor. Mr. G— and I have often talked about our stay in Tokyo, which was made so pleasant by your hospitality. We can never forget the kindness.

The Bureau of Education assigned us to entirely different parts of the Islands and we do not see each other often. Mr. G— is a teacher in a high school, and I am a supervising teacher for a certain district. We enjoy our work, which keeps us on the go almost all the time.

The Directory of Congregations.

BY T. B. CLARK.

The directory of congregations of the church of Christ I am compiling will be ready for publication in January, 1917. I have a list of congregations on file from all the counties in Tennessee, except the following: Anderson, Benton, Bledsoe, Blount, Campbell, Carter, Claiborne, Cocke, Cumberland, Decatur, Dickson, Fayette, Grainger, Greene, Grundy, Hamblen, Hancock, Hardin, Hawkins, Haywood, Houston, Humphreys, James, Jefferson, Johnson, Landerdale, Loudon, Marlon, Meigs, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Perry, Pickett, Polk, Rhea, Roane, Scott, Sevier, Stewart, Sullivan, Tipton, Unicoi, Union, Van Buren, and Washington. If there are brethren in these counties who know of congregations in said counties, I would be glad if they would write me where they are and how to reach the congregations. Send name of the congregation, name of post office, and names and addresses of the leaders of the congregations; also the nearest railroad station. I want the directory to be as accurate and complete as possible, and therefore call on you that know about the congregations to give me your assistance. Send all information of congregations to Box 458, Knoxville, Tenn.

Remittances will be at our risk when sent by express, post-office money order, in registered letter, or by draft payable to our order.

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. When changing your post-office address, tell us your old as well as your new address; otherwise two papers might be charged to you.

This paper is mailed regularly to all subscribers until definite orders in writing are received and all arrearages paid in full. If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that effect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrears, if there are any. Do not ask your postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

Some Commands Emphasized.

BY E. A. E.

A MISCONCEPTION OF HARMONY AND PEACE.

Letters I have received and some conversation had with me, show the misconception some good people have of the only scriptural basis of "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" and the way to get on this basis. An elder and good man in a private letter writes as follows:

Now, so far as the questions under consideration are concerned, I wish to state, my intention in writing you at first was to get you to try to bring about harmony and not division.

I appreciate this good man's confidence in my ability to bring about harmony; at least, to attempt it. Jesus pronounces an inestimable blessing on "peacemakers," and as great condemnation on peacebreakers. Of course, all should seek the blessing of peacemakers. We are commanded to seek peace, to follow peace with all men, to study the things which make for peace, to let the peace of God rule in our hearts, and to make peace between others. Ten thousand times over had I had rather be a peacemaker than a peacebreaker. I have made many different efforts at making peace in the last thirty-five years, but have never broken the peace or disturbed the harmony of one single congregation over any theory or notion or rule of my own. I have succeeded in making peace many times —have always succeeded whenever I could persuade all parties concerned to respect and be ruled by the word of God; while I have always failed whenever both parties or either one refused to make the word of God the full and complete guide. When all have a contrite spirit and tremble at God's word (Isa. 66: 2, 5), peace flows as a river. I failed after strenuous and continued effort on the last divided congregation I tried to unite. I stated publicly and privately to both parties that which I consider the reason—namely, there was within them as sad and woeful a lack of reverence and awe for the word of God, as dominant a partisan spirit, and as much playing of politics as I had ever seen among people who make the claim to be governed by the word of God alone in all things. Let it be repeated: there can be no harmony and peace without deep reverence and profound respect for that which God teaches on all subjects and all duties.

But this good brother says his intention was to get me "to try to bring about harmony and not division." I think he hardly means what this implies. He certainly cannot mean to imply that instead of harmony I have brought about division, or have in any way encouraged it.

I ask, what division have I at any time ever caused? To urge sinners to come out of darkness into light and the church to separate itself from the world and error and vain worship is not the division God condemns. I have done all in my power, concerning the questions referred to, to check all strife and division. If it becomes necessary, I shall be pleased to enumerate the different efforts at different times I have put forth to this end.

TWO WAYS OF HARMONY.

There are two ways of harmony, but only one way in which there can be "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Cain and Abel differed over matters of religion, and Cain killed Abel. If Abel had accepted Cain's way of worship, there would have been harmony, but it would have been harmony in rebellion. They would have been at peace with each other, but not with God. If Cain by faith had offered the blood which God required and which is necessary to save from sin, he and Abel would have been in peace with God and each other. Just now, if all preachers, teachers, and congregations will accept these theories of unfulfilled prophecy and other theories and join a few in propagating them, there will be harmony. If all were to accept sprinkling for baptism, infant baptism, instrumental music in worship, or human organizations to do the work God has committed to the church, there would be harmony. If numerous good brethren are expected to accept, and to urge churches to accept, human theories on unfulfilled prophecy, the millennium, etc., etc., for the sake of harmony, or for any other reason, there can never be harmony. Brethren—good and true brethren—can hold all these speculations as their opinions to themselves and in obedience to God and there will be "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

For the sake of "the boys" Brother Armstrong mentions, I desire to say I have both the faith and courage to teach this by pen and to preach it without "gall" or bitterness. The only and all-sufficient scriptural ground of unity and peace is as clearly set forth in the Bible as the fact that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of God, and the Savior, therefore, of the world. Is it not a pity and shame and sin to darken counsel by speculations, theories, and fallacious reasoning?

To use a Bible statement, some of these theories, on the surface, are "foolish and ignorant questions." (2 Tim. 2: 23.) Charles Neal writes a very foolish thing in the July number of Word and Work, on page 318. He says:

To look for the uptaker and to go to heaven by the open-air route is certainly more thrilling and blessed than to look for the undertaker and the underground route to that blessed land; to be clothed upon with immortality in translation is far better than being unclothed by the hand of death.

He then cites 2 Cor. 5: 2-4, as if that had anything in the world to do with his silly utterance. This is more foolish than the expression "water route" or "dry-land route," which some once used in reference to baptism and sprinkling, because, while there is no such thing as either "route," a man can decide whether he will be baptized or sprinkled, or whether he will do either; but he cannot decide whether he might die or be translated. What can be the meaning of such an utterance? It can have no meaning in the light of the truth. It can mean nothing except that a man can choose and decide for himself whether he will "go to heaven by the open-air route"—be translated—or go "the underground route"—die and be buried. Let us see when Brother Neal comes to die if he will call for "the uptaker" or "undertaker"—if he will refuse to die, defy death, and proceed to go up to heaven through the open air. Or, can he mean that God will translate one out of a thousand or out of a hundred, according to that one's fitness, as he translated Enoch, Elijah, or Jesus, and leave the rest of us to struggle on amid the trials of earth until death, and then have to take "the underground route?" In the very scriptures Brother Neal cites, Paul declares the dissolution and decay of the body and speaks of being absent from the body and present with the Lord; this is death. Paul expected to die and did die. He declared that for him to die was gain. (Phil. 1: 21.) All who die in the Lord are blessed. (Rev. 14: 13.) The Bible makes no difference between the blessedness of being changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, when Christ comes, and being raised from the dead incorruptible and immortal. (See 1 Cor. 15: 50-53.) The "one thing" Paul did was to so live as to attain "by any means" "unto the resurrection from the dead." All Christians from the ascension of Jesus until this generation have died—apostles, martyrs, and all; why did not some, at least, take "the open-air route?"

What is this new doctrine, anyway? A dream, a figment, a hallucination of a misguided and feverish brain. A man might read the Bible through a thousand times, and from it he would never get this idea of "the uptaker," "the open-air route," "the underground route," and that he can choose his own route, or that one route is better than the other. Or, if it be insisted that the Bible teaches such things, they can be read from the Bible in the very language—the "sound speech"—of the Bible. God commands all to "speak the same thing." How can this be done? Only by holding "the pattern of sound words," "even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ (study 1 Tim. 6: 3-5), "by handling aright the word of truth" (now study 2 Tim. 2: 15-17), by preaching "the word." In this way—God's way—Aylett Rains was led out of his doctrine of Universalism. Teach in the very language of the Bible all there is in it about "the uptaker," "the undertaker," "the open-air route," "the underground route." How many words would a man read or utter doing this? Not one.

Let it be said here that all the Bible says on the second coming of Christ and everything else—absolutely all—must be taught clearly and fully, and to it must be given just the emphasis the Bible gives to it. That which the Bible does not teach must not be taught. The trouble is, when some men preach on the second coming of Christ, they leave out much the Bible says and put in so much it does not say.

I quoted what Brother Neal says from Word and Work to show what foolish questions theories and speculations will lead people to take up. He can think, if he chooses, that he will be translated, or that Christ will come during his lifetime, and still enjoy the full and free fellowship of the church, and all faithful servants of God will work in harmony with him; but he must not press his think-so's upon others. When he teaches these "peculiar views" through pen and pulpit, he causes trouble.

Again, I ask, must numerous good men accept and urge churches to accept this foolishness of the "uptaker" and "undertaker," etc., in order to work in harmony with the ones who teach it? This would be disobedience to God. I shall still endeavor to "hold the pattern of sound words," "sound speech, that cannot be condemned," "even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ;" to use "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God;" to proclaim "the gospel;" to "preach the word;" to know nothing, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified;" to avoid all the various questions which God commands to be avoided; to "be urgent in season, out of season;" to "reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching;" with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering," to "forbear" others "in love;" to give "diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" to be not "overmuch righteous," and not to do righteousness before men to be seen of them; to be not wise in my own conceit, or to think of myself more highly than I should, but to think soberly so as to have no overestimate of what I can do or of my importance; to control my temper and tongue; to "buffet my body, and bring it into bondage," "lest by any means, after that I have preached to others, I myself should be rejected;" to cultivate the mind and to have the Spirit of Christ; and to fight "the good fight," to finish "the course," to keep "the faith," and to receive "the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to me at that day; and not to me only, but also to all them that have loved his appearing."

SOME DIVISION ALREADY.

Brother D. F. Barry told me some time since at two different times what the following letter contains. Lately I wrote him, asking if he had any objection to stating in writing for publication the conversation between him and Brother Olmstead, and he wrote as follows:

Gallatin, Tenn., July 21, 1916.—Dear Brother Elam: Yours of the 20th received. A few days after Brother Boll preached in the Watkins Hall, in Nashville, Brother Head, myself, and others were in Mr. Holmes' store in Gallatin, and Brother Olmstead said that he had been to Nashville to hear Brother Boll preach one of the best sermons he had ever heard; that he preached on "love," and he gave it to them straight from the shoulders for preaching so much about sin, and he looked at me, as I thought, for me to indorse what he said. I told him that it was right to preach about "love," but Christ and the apostles condemned sin in any form; that Christ condemned the Pharisees as hypocrites and for other sins, and the apostles condemned lying and all sins; that they ought to preach the word of God. Brother Olmstead said there was objection to Brother Boll's preaching about the prophecies of Revelation, but the first chapter of Revelation says, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein," and some did not want Brother Boll to preach that Christ would come and reign on David's literal throne on earth for a thousand years, when it says so in Revelation. I told him we could not interpret that unfulfilled prophecy and that it was not necessary for our salvation; and he said there were forty preachers of that faith. I have not seen Brother Head if he remembers this, but I know Brother Olmstead said it. A short time after this I was telling Sister Nannie Cecil about it, and she said: "He has it up to sixty now. I heard him say from the pulpit that there were sixty of that faith."

You know that I dislike to be brought before the public in this way; but when duty and justice call, I will try to follow. All are well. Remember us to Sister Elam and family. Your brother in Christ, D. F. BARRY.

This is the first any of us knew of this numbering or of how many there are who hold to these theories. This numbering of themselves ought to be known; hence I publish it. All the rest of us were wholly ignorant of the fact that the count had been made. Now, I ask, why make the count, and what is that which has distinguished forty or sixty preachers, scholars, or whoever they are, from all the rest of the faithful and true servants of God? It is not the word of God. This forty or sixty have some "peculiar views" in common which hold them together and which separate them from others so that they can be counted. This is division.

Another significant thing is, they are all comparatively young men, without the time to study the effects of speculations and theories upon the churches, without the experience and wisdom of older men. These theories are not new to the older men of the church.

Can any godly man think there is no wrong in dividing preachers over these things so that they can be counted or in preaching them to the churches? Can any one think there is no wrong in accusing the rest of us, Ahablike, of troubling Israel?

Why "An Unknown Quantity?"—The Gospel Advocate's Emphatic Denial.

BY M. C. K.

[Responding to a request, Brother Kurfess wrote the following editorial review of Brother Armstrong's article before seeing Brother Elam's comments on it and without knowing that Brother Elam would write on it at all.—PUBLISHERS.]

In our issue of July 20, 1916, the article by J. N. Armstrong, entitled "The Answer to 'Who is Sound?' Is an Unknown Quantity," was published and some of its statements reviewed in these columns by a member of our editorial staff. In addition to the timely things so well said in that issue by our colleague, there are still other matters in that remarkable article demanding attention; and we therefore submit the following observations in reply:

1. The very heading of his article completely gives its author away, and we shall be surprised if he does not see the day when he will heartily regret with shame and mortification that he ever wrote it or attempted to write an article in harmony with it. The fact is, under all the circumstances, a few moments of sober reflection ought to lead him to hang his head in shame and repent in sackcloth and ashes that he ever wrote such an article; for, in the name of both reason and common sense, we respectfully ask, first of all, what is the word of God for, if not to be the rule and guide of our faith and practice and the standard by which to determine sound and unsound teaching? And why did Paul, under the direction of the Spirit of God, impose upon the elders of the churches the solemn duty of guarding them against unsound teaching, if "the answer to 'who is sound?' is an unknown quantity?" Shame that such an article was ever spread before the public, except as it affords an opportunity to expose its own and kindred fallacies!

2. "Who can answer the question in this caption?" We reply, anybody can answer it with an open New Testament and a willingness to abide by what it says. We are astonished that the author of the article under review, who knows the New Testament so well, should have permitted even his misguided sympathies to lead him to propound and give circulation to any such questions. And he actually says that this question, "Who is sound?" is "unanswerable to-day." Then, Paul has stultified himself in admonishing us to "reprove" certain persons "sharply, that they may be sound in the faith" (Tit. 1: 13); and again he stultified himself in his immortal plea for "sound speech that cannot be condemned" (Tit. 2: 8). That "chosen vessel" of the Lord Jesus Christ and inspired hero of many battles for soundness did not know that the dazzling theological genius of the twentieth century would discover that there is no such thing as determining whether a man is sound or unsound! Never did an advocate of instrumental music in the worship or of man-made missionary societies in the service of God offer a more inexcusable apology for the factious course of the advocates of these things than Brother Armstrong here puts up for the inexcusable course of those of his contemporaries who are disturbing the churches with their opinions and speculations. And why, with those who believe the word of God, should "truth" be regarded as "a varying quantity" which "depends on the paper you read, the country you live in, and the 'party' you belong to?" Why does not Brother Armstrong say this same ridiculous thing when Baptists and Dunkards, on the one hand, and Methodists and Presbyterians and Moravians, on the other hand, are in a wilderness of debate and confusion over sprinkling and pouring and infant baptism? Why save this unbrotherly gibe and partisan thrust at the opponents of error until what he would call his own brethren or "party" are called upon to stand up and oppose among themselves the speculations of men which are creating confusion and dividing the body of Christ? Is it a crime to oppose men of "our own party" who are needlessly and ruthlessly dividing the churches over their opinions and speculations, but a virtue to do so when they are not of "our party?" And why—yes, echo answers, why—should it take "a carload of courage for a preacher of the gospel to preach unity among Christians before an intelligent audience of the world" any more when that unity is disturbed by the speculations of one man than when it is disturbed by the speculations of another? Is it a virtue to thus disturb the unity of the body of Christ in one case so that we may condone the disturbance and say nothing about it, but a vice to do so in another case so that we must speak out and oppose it?

3. But this pessimistic apology for the current disturbance of peace in the churches does not stop here, but says, "There has been a time when a gospel preacher could in all confidence stand before an audience and urge the importance of all Christians being one and with telling effect refer to the great brotherhood of Christ and its beautiful oneness;" and he then strangely adds: "But these are days of yore." Why so? Why may not "a gospel preacher" do this same thing to-day, and at any and all other times? Why not "urge the importance of all Christians being one and with telling effect refer to the great brotherhood of Christ and its beautiful oneness" now as well as in "days of yore?" Is not "the importance of all Christians being one" precisely the same now that it has always been? And are not "the great brotherhood of Christ and its beautiful oneness" just as precious and important now as in "days of yore?" Then, why this lugubrious and pessimistic wail? What makes the difference that we could do it in "days of yore," but cannot do it now? Our brother dare not say it is because there was a time in "days of yore" when "the great brotherhood of Christ and its beautiful oneness" were not disturbed and marred by the speculations of men; for no such blessed condition can be found this side of the first century. There has never been a time since that halcyon period when there was not such disturbance from some quarter; and why could "a gospel preacher in all confidence stand before an audience and urge the importance of" these things in "days of yore," but cannot do it now? And what if it is true that "in those days the disciples of Christ were no more one in minor details than they are to-day?" What has that to do with our plain duty to "stand before an audience and urge the importance of all Christians being one?" And what has it to do with our equally plain duty to urge the blighting sin of pressing human opinions and speculations to the disturbance of that oneness?

4. In characteristic apologetic style, our author continues in this strain: "If Christians are allowed to keep their individualities and are permitted to make individual effort and progress in Christian growth, there must be, there will always be, differences among growing, developing children of God." Of course there will always be such differences, and we know of nobody that ever denied it. The mere existence of "differences among growing, developing children of God," or the mere fact that they have such differences, never did, does not now, and never will do any harm; but what has that to do with our plain and God-imposed duty to tell men to keep such "differences" to themselves and not to press them upon others, when it is found that pressing them is disturbing the peace and harmony of the churches? Never mind now whether it be a case in which the opponents to such measures are or are not correct in theory in their opposition, for that is not the question just here. Our duty in the premises is not to be determined in such cases by a theory, but by a situation; and if the peace of the church is being disturbed by the advocacy of what God does not compel us at the time to advocate and press upon the people, such advocacy should cease always and everywhere in the interest of peace and harmony. If not, why not? And our duty in all such cases is more and more solemnly emphasized in proportion as the opposition is based on conscientious grounds.

5. Again, referring to those "days of yore," and the "differences" then existing, our brother says: "'Parties' or 'divisions' among us over such things were foreign to all of us. Such an idea would not have been tolerated for a second." Exactly so; and what a blessed fact that such grand and godly men as "Lipscomb and Harding and Taylor" and even lesser lights in those "days of yore," if they found that some nonessential opinion or view of theirs was creating strife and division in the churches, or was even likely to do so, all had the good sense and the grace to obey the Pauline precept to withhold the advocacy of it and to keep it as private property! "Such an idea" as pressing it to the disturbance of peace in the churches "would not have been tolerated for a second." Thanks to Brother Armstrong for pointing out this fact; and we regret that something prevented him from making the proper application of it to those of his contemporaries who are disturbing the churches with their speculations to-day.

6. Let us take a look at Brother Armstrong's logic. He "never saw the time after" he "studied the question that" he "didn't disagree with Brother E. G. Sewell on the Spirit question, the eldership question, and somewhat on the question of God's care for his children, and yet," since both he and Brother Sewell had the good sense and the grace not to press their differences to the point of trouble in the churches, he "never saw the day that" he "didn't love Brother Sewell and would have fought for him;" and therefore (!) when men not only evolve a purely speculative theory of prophesy which diametrically contradicts both Jesus and Paul and completely upsets the New Testament, but are sufficiently lacking in respect for God's word on the awful sin of division to undertake to propagate and press that theory to the disruption of fellowship and the destruction of peace in the churches, we should sit supinely down and mildly pass it all by as a matter of "minor details" and "minor differences," and "recommend" and "support" such men "as readily as" we would "any other gospel preacher!" With all due respect for our brother of misguided sympathies, we look upon this namby-pamby course, where a great and vital principle is involved, as unworthy of any faithful child of God, and we respectfully inform him that we subscribe to no such lax and latitudinarian principles. And the attempt to foster and hide the current ill-starred movement to swoop the churches into a large section of Russellism behind the innocent fact that "the New Testament disciples had differences" and the equally innocent fact "that Brother Sewell and Doctor Brents differed on the appointment of elders, on the millennium, and other questions like them," is a miserable subterfuge whether the author of the article under review knows it or not, and it is unworthy of either him or anybody else who wants to maintain New Testament doctrine and practice intact. Both Doctor Brents always had while he lived, and Brother Sewell has always had to this good day, that grace and reverence for the word of God that never permitted either of them to press their differences or any nonessential view to the disturbance of peace in the churches; and there are no two editors on the present Gospel Advocate staff that do not differ on different questions. The issue now before us is not, as our brother fallaciously assumes, over the innocent fact of differences among brethren, which have always existed and always will exist, nor over the mere holding of what are regarded as erroneous views; but it is over the inexcusable and factious, schismatic attempt to propagate and press such views when the attempt is creating strife and alienation and division in the churches. Nothing in all the record of the organ and society advocates known to us was ever more inexcusable than the stubborn and determined course of the leaders in the current agitation over prophesy.

7. Finally, our brother makes a pointed and somewhat excited appeal to the brethren to cease their wickedness or "not to be wicked," and this is all well and good, but it is germane to ask here, Whom does he mean? He even says that they, whoever he means, are doing the "work" of "the devil." Now, we respectfully call upon him to tell us who it is that is carrying on this satanic business. Vague generalities are out of place in the face of such grave charges. The Gospel Advocate has substantially made the same charge, but it specified whom it meant, and it does not hesitate to say now, as it has said all along, that it means those who "make a determined effort," either by pressing their opinions and speculations or by doing any other unnecessary thing, "to divide an otherwise united brotherhood, and that has succeeded," or is trying to succeed, "in shattering into a dozen parties, sects, the only people on earth that stand for God and his church and his Book." We do not hesitate to pronounce such men as "unsound" and the pursuit of such a course as "wicked." And why not "think of one of your faithful brethren's being 'unsound' because of his position on any of the differences now among us," provided he so far ceases to be "faithful" as to press those differences to the disturbance of peace and unity in the church of God? Of course we should not regard one man as "sound" and another as "unsound" merely "because of their position respectively on these matters," and the Gospel Advocate heartily joins our brother in making this point; but when men not only hold certain "positions" on matters not essential to salvation or Christian character, but push and press those positions to the point of strife and division in the churches, they are both "unsound" and "wicked" in the pursuit of such a course whether we "regard" them as such or not. To use our brother's own significant language, such a man "is a sower of discord and a bulder of faction among the faithful of God." Certainly, "let each conscience be free and settle the matter for himself and believe on all these questions what he believes the Bible teaches about them;" but if it be a matter not essential to salvation and creates strife and division among brethren, let him have both the good sense and the "goodness of soul" to obey Paul's admonition to keep such "belief" to himself.

Experience has shown that it is of little use to talk about his soul to a man with an empty stomach. First, he must be fed and cleansed and given some other habitation than the street. Except in cases of pure misfortune, the causes of the fall must be removed or that fall will be repeated.—Selected.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

Open-Air Church Service.

Now is the season when church authorities are much perplexed because of the poor attendance upon the services, particularly Sunday night. This is due largely to weather conditions, but there is an effective remedy at hand for almost every church thus afflicted. It is the outdoor service. Particularly is this true in Texas, where we have plenty of lawn space and when the welcome breezes in the early evening fans the waiting worshiper.

Indeed, the lack of formality in an open-air service is in itself a great help, for an all-too-prevalent hindrance in the church services is formality. Our churches need to break away from so much ritualism and cold formality, and to conduct services much as Jesus did on the mountain side, at the seashore, or upon the street. It would be well for us to remember that Jesus left the temple and went to the street to teach. There is so much false modesty and imaginary dignity among many church people to-day that they are unwilling to adopt the methods so successfully used by Jesus and his apostles in conducting religious services in the open air. Why not learn a lesson from the modern politician in his open-air meeting, if we cannot from the Bible examples?

Doubtless some of the modern prejudice against outdoor services has been created by such sects as the "Holy Rollers," etc., but no sane person ought to permit any such consideration to influence him in a matter of such practical importance and vital interest to the church.—Christian Courier.

Church attendance is not the only thing influenced by the hot weather. At this season of the year business is dull. Many of the business men and citizens of the cities are spending the hot months of the summer at resorts taking a much-needed rest and recuperating their forces. It would be surprising if the attendance at church did not fall off.

As the heart is involved in the worship of God, people whose hearts are right will worship God away from home as well as at home. It is not best for people to worship in ruts. There should be no particular formality in worship, as the Bible demands no particular form to the exclusion of other forms. Churches may worship in halls, in houses built especially for the purpose, or in the open air. If churches move out of their houses for worship, it would be well to inform the membership so that all may worship God who so desire. It is not difficult to worship God if we are really in the right frame of mind. The trouble is usually within and not without. If we are in the mind to worship, the place of worship will not give us so much concern. We may be concerned as to whether the worship is false or true, but not about the place. With our hearts right, we may truly worship God anywhere and receive a blessing. It is not necessary to have a fine house with stained windows and cushioned seats, but we can worship in tents, in halls, or in the open air. "The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth: for such doth the Father seek to be his worshippers." (John 4: 23.)

Mormon Methods.

A correspondent of the Mormon Deseret Evening News, writing from an Iowa City, says:

One of our elders attended the Baptist Sabbath school one morning. He took an active part in the Bible class. They immediately put him in as class teacher, and our truths are being taught in the Baptist Church every Sabbath morning.

This is worth noting, not only as Mormon methods, but also as the methods of others. Teachers and preachers should teach the truth regardless of results, but they should not practice an imposition upon the taught by making it appear that they have espoused a doctrine which they have not. All must be sincere and true or they will finally be lost. Practicing deception brings us nothing good.

The Crooked Preacher.

Of course nearly all of the ministers among the Texas Disciples are worthy of the highest consideration because they are clean and consecrated; but there are a very few—in one sense the number seems so small in comparison with the great body of the good that we hesitate to speak of them—who ought not to be permitted to preach until they give evidence of their repentance and reformation. No reference is here made to any one who may have made a mistake in the past, but who is living the Christ life now and making amends for the past in every way possible. The Courier stands ready to help all such. Nor do we mean to intimate that this paper will undertake to wash the dirty linen of those who are unfit for the ministry; but such need not expect it to assist them to foist their crooked lives upon the church, nor even to permit their names to appear in its columns. The preacher who won't pay his debts, or whose reputation is shady for any reason, does the cause of Christ more harm than good.

Not long since charges of a serious nature were made to the Courier against one of our preachers. We notified him of the charges, and he failed to make a satisfactory reply. Then we took steps to put the two churches for which he ministers in possession of the charges which were made to us; and now the offended preacher is writing threatening letters to the editor. However, these will not deter us from doing what duty seems to demand.

Churches ought to be very careful in selecting ministers unknown to them personally.—Christian Courier.

We all know that preachers as a class are making many sacrifices and are doing much good. While this is true, there are men in the ministry who are dishonest, immoral, and who make debts with no prospects of paying them. They are not only a disgrace and a curse to the ministry, but by their crookedness they make it harder for the faithful minister. They will say hard things about a brother who has been patient with them in their shortcomings and has done all he could to save them from their shortcomings and fallings. The preacher who is brave and faithful enough to tell them of their wrongs, who seeks to lead them to a purer and nobler life, is sure to become a special target for their words of censure and ridicule. That is not all. Such preachers have no scruples about bearing false witness against those who have sought to benefit them by reproving them in a spirit of meekness. The cause of Christ is suffering and churches are bleeding and dying, all because such preachers are fleecing, not only the flock, but also the people. The elders of the churches and the churches themselves should seek to know the life and character of their preachers.

Inconsistent.

A sinner said he would not obey the gospel because some members of the church had mistreated him. The preacher said: "My friend, you are wrong. Do you want to go to hell because that man has mistreated you?" Later the preacher who had given the advice got mad and used curse words and other violent language. He would not confess, so he was withdrawn from. He refused to confess because he did not like one of the elders of the congregation. He could not see where his own advice would apply to himself.—E. M. Borden, in Firm Foundation.

"The faith which thou hast, have thou to thyself before God. Happy is he that judgeth not himself in that which he approveth." (Rom. 14: 22.) How much better would it have been for the preacher to have confessed his sin! This is really the only and easy way out of his sin. When the Holy Spirit assures us that no one is perfect, why should we be so proud as to refuse to confess our sins? Our mouths, and not our hearts, were given us with which to make confession. "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 10.)

Five were baptized and four were restored to fellowship. I promised to be with them again next August. That will be my seventh annual meeting with them. I am now in Birmingham. The Lord willing, I will begin a meeting near Camden, Tenn., on August 20."

From E. M. Borden, Little Rock, Ark., August 16: "I am now holding a meeting at Mercury, Texas. The meeting is one week old; two have been baptized and two more are to be baptized to-day. Interest is fine and the attendance is large. If the Lord permits, I will begin at San Augustine on August 23. Brethren, I need one dollar and twenty-five cents, and you need 'Jacob's Ladder' for your children and your neighbors to read. Suppose we exchange."

A. G. Freed writes from Henderson, Tenn., August 18: "The meeting at Macon closed on last Sunday evening after eight days. Audiences were large and the interest good until the close. There were four baptisms. Two came from the Baptists. We are now leaving to begin with the church at Thyatira, Miss. The interest in the coming session of school is fine. Everything promises to be great. We still have a number of catalogues for distribution. If you are interested in any way, write for one."

W. K. Azbill, 6616 Dunham, Cleveland, Ohio, writes to Brother Kurfees as follows: "You may say in the Gospel Advocate that I am taking the preliminary steps toward the establishment of a Christian mission in the Danish West India Islands. If certain understandings and agreements can be reached with certain leading parties concerned, I will about the close of the current year make a voyage to the islands to consider on the spot the advisability of the undertaking and to ascertain just what would be required to insure successful work."

For over 20 years Jas. Anderson of 161 Pearl Ave., Hillburn, N. Y., was a confirmed drunkard. His case was about as bad as it could be, but a little over twelve years ago his devoted wife, after years of trying, finally succeeded in stopping his drinking entirely.

Joint Heirs With Christ.

BY JOHN T. POB.

What say you, friends? That I am poor? That I am destitute? That I am weak and friendless in a cold and cheerless world? All things are mine in Christ Jesus. He was rich, but became poor that through his poverty I might be made rich. I was poor, destitute of all good, and doomed to eternal ruin of soul, body, and spirit, till he came and called me; till he put upon me his own royal robe, and called me "friend" and "brother," and gave me the key to the storehouse of God, and said, "Knock, and I will open;" "Ask what you will (use my name as the key), and you shall receive." Weak? With the everlasting arms of God around and beneath me, how can I be weak? While the Almighty Father is my Father, who shall call me weak? He says, "I am thy strength;" and, "In weakness is my strength made perfect." God does not choose the great, the worldly-rich and worldly-wise, in which to show forth his power and his strength, but he has chosen the weak things of this world to confound the wise of this world. Before his wisdom all worldly wisdom must hide its face; all human strength must fall in his presence; for "in him we live, and move, and have our being." "There is no God like unto our God." He is the strength of the weak, the riches of the poor, and the joy of all who trust and obey him. Do we grow old and feeble and weak? He says: "I am thy stay in old age." "I will be with you in six troubles, and will not desert you in the seventh." Old am I? Yes, the body is almost worn out, but the Heavenly Father is getting ready to move me over into the new—into the immortal and eternal. The house here is decaying, but Jesus has gone to prepare one which shall never decay. All this is mine by virtue of my birthright in Jesus. In his name I possess, not only this world, if I need it, but the unnumbered hosts of heaven are mine. Blazing suns and revolving worlds which no man can number are mine in Christ. And yet without him I am nothing. But because he lives I shall live also. Am I not rich?

The Master's Vineyard

Alabama.

Athens, August 14.—I am in an interesting meeting at Pleasant Valley Church. We hope to have a good report for the "Master's Vineyard" in a few days. JOHN HAYES.

Haleyville, August 12.—Our meeting with the White House brethren was a glorious success. Sixteen were added—nine by confession and baptism and seven by restoration. This was my fourth meeting at this place. The Lord willing, I will assist them in their meeting next year. I go next to Clover Hill. A. D. DIES.

Arkansas.

Wynne, August 12.—We closed our meeting at this place last night. Much interest was manifested from start to finish. We had many more on the last night than the house would hold. Six were baptized into the one body. Five of these came out from the Methodists. There were others who were almost persuaded to accept the truth. We are going to try to have as much as a three-weeks' meeting here next summer. I believe a great field here is almost ripe. I am going to Gray's this morning, and will begin a meeting at Old Union to-night. H. F. PENDERGRASS.

Kentucky.

Mayfield, August 14.—I closed a ten-days' meeting at Pottsville last Wednesday night with fine interest and nine baptized. I began here in the courthouse last night with a big crowd. I will be here until the first of September. G. DALLAS SMITH.

Hickory, August 15.—On the second Lord's day in July I closed at Elk-mont, Ala., with one baptism. From there I went to Philippi, in Davidson County, Tenn., where we had six baptisms; thence to Una, where we closed with three baptisms and one restoration. I go next to Friendship, near McKenzie, Tenn. CHARLIE TAYLOR.

Bardwell, August 15.—I have just closed a good meeting at Locust Grove, near Bradford, Tenn. We had large crowds, good interest, and eight baptisms. I promised to hold their meeting in 1917. I go next to Reedyville, Ky., for a mission meeting without promise of remuneration. JOE RATCLIFFE.

Louisiana.

Amite, August 11.—Our meeting at Amite began on the third night in July and continued three weeks. It was a time of rejoicing. Hearts were filled with a greater desire to work for our Lord during the time given to them to sojourn on earth as they listened to the plain and instructive lessons presented by Brethren Chambers and Ramsey. We appreciate the fellowship of the church of Christ at the corner of Seventh and Camp Streets, New Orleans, and give God thanks that they have a part in the work here. A congregation was started and has been meeting in a hall over Dr. Stewart's drug store. He has granted us the use of it free until we can build us a home. We are planning to conduct another series of meetings this fall and are praying for greater results than those obtained in our first meeting. Brother Maston Sitman and I took our tent to Epney and held a two-weeks' meeting, and ten declared themselves with us. Six of them were baptized into the one body and four came out from the Baptists. The number there was increased to about fifteen souls, who promised to meet regularly on the first day of the week to break bread in memory of our Lord. May God bless and strengthen them. W. J. JOHNSON.

Mississippi.

Baldwyn, August 11.—I closed a meeting at Belmont on August 8 with fifteen additions—thirteen baptized. This is the largest number ever baptized there in any one meeting. Four religious debates have been held there and the field is contested strongly. The Belmont congregation is a good one. I began here last night, and the prospects seem good. G. A. DUNN.

Missouri.

Battlefield, August 12.—I am just out of a mission meeting five miles north of Greenfield. Sectarianism wholly prevails in the entire community; yet three noble souls accepted the truth. I am now ten miles north of Springfield in a tent meeting. Prospects fair. O. L. HARDIN.

Rogersville, August 14.—I have just closed a good meeting at Dell, Ark., with a fair interest and ten additions. I am at home now for a few days, and then, if the Lord will, I go to Crisp, in Dade County, for a meeting. I would be glad to make arrangements for winter meetings, beginning December 1. Write me if interested. M. S. MASON.

Bernie, August 14.—My meeting at Stephens' Chapel closed this morning at the water, with fourteen baptisms and six restored. Brother Horace Taylor, of Pratt, led the song service. He is only sixteen years old, but is a power in song and a great helper. The interest was fine. I go to-day to Jerusalem Church, near Dexter, to begin a meeting to-night. J. H. CURRY.

Gatewood, August 12.—Our meeting here is still in progress, with one confession and baptism to date. This congregation was once a strong one, but some have died and some have moved away, and now it is weak; yet, if every member will go to work in his respective sphere for the general good of the body, it will grow and increase in moral power as it grows. I shall remain in the evangelistic field till November, when, perhaps, I will enter the schoolroom. Our school will be a private one and will contain a literary and Bible course. I have some time not yet filled; and if any need my assistance in a meeting, they should write me at Paragould, Ark.

Granite, August 12.—On the fourth Lord's day in July I began a series of meetings at New Lasea, Maury County, Tenn., which continued day and night until the following Sunday night, with seven baptized and three restored. Three came forward the last night. This meeting should have gone on longer. This is a fine congregation in every respect. No troubles, good singing, and everything moving along nicely. This is the home church of A. S. Derryberry, Wilburn Derryberry, and N. C. Derryberry. It is made up principally with Derryberrys and Hardisons.

W. T. BRASLEY.

Maury City, August 14.—I began here yesterday. Fine service. One restored and one confessed faith in Christ at the first service. Bright prospects for a good meeting. This is an earnest, faithful little band of Christians here. JOHN T. SMITH.

Etna, August 15.—I began a meeting at Luna on the fourth Sunday in July. Interest was fairly good. Two baptisms. We have just closed a meeting at Tottys. The audiences were large and attention was fine, but no additions. J. A. SISCO.

Woodbury, August 11.—I recently closed a good meeting at Gassaway, in Cannon County, with twelve baptisms and six reclaimed. I am now at the Stone River Church, in Cannon County, with four confessions and three restored to date.

C. M. GLEAVES.

Christiana, August 15.—I wish to report a six-weeks' meeting held by Brother A. Campbell (colored). We had a glorious time in the meeting. Brother Campbell certainly does preach the word of God. He makes the plan of salvation plain to all. Twenty-one were added to the church. LOCKIE REID.

Middleton, August 14.—The meeting at Rogers Springs closed yesterday. There were nine baptisms, two reclaimed, and one who confessed Christ never came to be baptized. There were good crowds at each service. The church there has decided to clean itself up. The congregation there is good, when you consider its struggle. Several will help out in the work. I am now at New Hope, near Rogers Springs. H. M. PHILLIPS.

OUTLINES OF BIBLE STUDY

REVISED AND ENLARGED

BY G. DALLAS SMITH

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION

Outlines of Bible Study (Revised and Enlarged) is a book of one hundred and twenty pages, besides five full-page maps covering all Bible lands. It is printed in large, clear type, on good, heavy paper, and is substantially bound in stiff cloth.

The book contains seventeen drill lessons for use in Bible drills, Bible readings, or any other Bible class where it is desired to cover the entire scope of the Sacred Record in a short time.

Outlines of Bible Study is not a commentary in any sense of the word. It contains but few comments. It is not "literature" in the same sense that some object to literature. It rather guides one in his study that it may be intelligent and systematic.

Smithville, August 14.—The meeting at Oak Grove, in Warren County, closed on Saturday morning at the water, with nine baptisms. I am now in a tent meeting near Smithville. Opened with a large crowd and interest good. Pray for this meeting and the few members here. Brother T. D. Rose held some meetings here last year and thus paved the way for this meeting. We are using the Warren County tent. JOHN T. SMITHSON.

Nashville, August 15.—I have just closed a very interesting meeting at Mars' Hill Church, one and one-half miles from Rucker. The members began working at the beginning and continued that way throughout the meeting. The crowds were very large every day and night, and the attention and interest were as good as the crowds. Four were added to the church. I may preach for them once a month. CLAUD H. WOODROOF.

Fosterville, August 15.—Brother E. A. Elam began a meeting here on the first Sunday in this month and closed it on Monday night after the second Sunday. During those days and nights he preached the gospel to large and attentive audiences. This is Brother Elam's boyhood home, and he was welcomed with a glad hand by all, and especially by those of the household of faith. We are proud of him, and we rejoice that the congregation at this place has sent out so great a preacher as he. The people flocked to hear him from all parts of the surrounding country—from Shelbyville, Murfreesboro, Bellbuckle, Deason, Midland, and Christiana—and all were delighted with his simple, plain, and earnest delivery of the whole counsel of God. May God bless him for the good he has done for us. Seven were baptized and we are in good working order. J. W. THOMAS.

Knoxville, August 12.—Brother C. E. Holt was with the church on the first Sunday in August at both services. The brethren were well pleased with his visit. Brother Holt will take up the work in Knoxville the last of September. The prospects are very bright for the cause in this city for next year. My work has been very pleasant with the church here all along. We have made some progress in many lines. We have all worked together in harmony. I have appreciated the assistance which Brethren L. D. Smith and Dr. Oliver W. Hill have given me under all kinds of conditions. They have stood firmly by me all the time. I do not think I ever saw better men and workers than these men are. Brother Holt can depend on what these brethren tell him at any time. I regret to leave this place, but I feel that Brother Holt will be able to stay here longer than I could think about staying, and they need a man to stay indefinitely. I feel it due the cause to turn the work over to a man who can be here indefinitely.

T. B. CLARK.

Portland, August 10.—We have just closed the best meeting we have ever had at Portland. Brother G. C. Brewer, of Columbia, was with us two weeks and three days and preached the gospel to more people than we have hitherto been able to reach in one meeting. He knows the old, old story well, and tells it with all the power of a soul aglow with love for God and man. Hence the people hear him with gladness. Our large, new tent was full and running over with the best of our people almost every night of the meeting. Some nights the attendance was estimated at a thousand or more, and, notwithstanding the excessively hot weather, the very best of order and attention prevailed at every service. Twenty-two noble citizens were added to the one body, which is the church, and the brethren were encouraged beyond measure. Too much cannot be said in praise of Brother Brewer's uncompromising contention for the ancient order of things and his condemnation of denominationalism; yet he was courteous and kind and persuasive in every sermon. He already knows that he has a warm place in the hearts of the brethren here.

J. O. BLAINE.

Manchester, August 14.—Brother Joseph R. Ridley, of Nashville, and the writer have been engaged in holding mission meetings in Coffee County. On June 24 we went to Summitville, where we held a three-weeks' meeting, which resulted in six baptisms into the one body. This congregation is a little more than a year old and has seventy good members. Our next meeting was in a tent at Hickerson and resulted in twelve additions. Here a congregation was established with twenty-two members who meet in a schoolhouse. Our next meeting was in a tent at New Union and resulted in a new congregation of forty members. There were seventeen additions there last September and twelve in the meeting which has just closed. These added to the scattered members around gave us a membership of forty good people full of zeal and good works. Brethren Northcut, McBroom,

Wright, and others have held some good meetings in the western end of the county this summer. The writer will continue mission work in the county with the fellowship of the Manchester church of Christ. Brother Larimore will be with us in a meeting in Manchester, beginning on September 1. Brother W. C. Brewer will also help us in the county during September and October. Brother, get hold of the Gospel Advocate every week and keep your heart aflame with the good work that is going on. It will encourage you.

Hillsboro, August 11.—I am in a splendid meeting at Prairie Point Chapel, ten miles from Hillsboro.

The attendance is all that could be desired. Five have obeyed the Lord in baptism. There were three confessions last night. Dr. W. W. STONE.

Cleburne, August 11.—I closed at Campbell after eleven days. Six were baptized. On Sunday or Monday I leave for Westbrook, Maine, where I shall be for several months, at first in a protracted meeting and later going to school and preaching.

PAUL C. YOYNG.

San Angelo, August 10.—By invitation I preached for the brethren in San Angelo last Lord's day. In the morning I gave a general missionary address and at night made an appeal for Brother and Sister Vincent. The brethren responded with an offering of twelve dollars and fifty-five cents, which I am sending to Brother Vincent. The San Angelo congregation continues to grow in grace, usefulness, and numbers.

JOHN STRATTON.

Longview, August 10.—I closed a good meeting at Olathe on Sunday night, August 6. Baptized fourteen and reclaimed six. The old Jerusalem gospel is still the power of God to save sinners. I go next week, if the Lord will, to Geary, Okla., for a meeting near there. What's the matter with Daniel Sommer? He seems as much afraid to have the Bible taught to the people as a Roman Catholic priest is. What a pity!

JOHN T. POE.

Thorp Spring, August 11.—Thorp Spring is now very much alive to good works. Brother A. O. Colley is in an excellent meeting. To date there have been six confessions and one restoration. The carpenters are at work on all the buildings of Thorp Spring Christian College. The buildings are to be renovated and refurnished. The girls' dormitory is being refurnished with new and up-to-date furniture. The college is installing new laboratories, maps, charts, library and general fixtures. New houses are being erected and many people are expecting to move here. The school is certain to have a great enrollment when school opens on September 18. Every hour of work our college students do is fully credited in all leading universities and colleges.

Astonishing Power of Iron to Give Strength to Broken Down Nervous People

Physician Says Ordinary Nuxated Iron Will Increase Strength of Delicate Folk 200 Per Cent. in Two Weeks' Time in Many Instances.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—In a recent discourse Dr. E. Sauer, a well known Specialist who has studied widely both in this country and Europe, said: "If you were to make an actual blood test on all people who are ill you would probably be greatly astonished at the exceedingly large number who lack iron and who are ill for no other reason than the lack of iron. The moment iron is supplied all their multitude of dangerous symptoms disappear. Without iron the blood at once loses the power to change food into living tissue, and therefore nothing you eat does you any good; you don't get the strength out of it. Your food merely passes through your system like corn through a mill with the rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind. As a result of this continuous blood and nerve starvation, people become generally weakened, nervous and all run down, and frequently develop all sorts of conditions. One is too thin; another is burdened with unhealthy fat; some are so weak they can hardly walk; some think they have dyspepsia, kidney or liver trouble; some can't sleep at night; others are sleepy and tired all day; some fussy and irritable; some skinny and bloodless, but all lack physical power and endurance. In such cases it is worse than foolishness to take stimulating medicines or narcotic drugs, which only whip up your lagging vital powers for the moment, maybe at the expense of your life later on. No matter what one tells you, if you are not strong and well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous, run-down people who were ailing all the time double, and even triple their strength and endurance and entirely get rid of their symptoms of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles. In from ten to fourteen days' time simply by taking iron in the proper form, and this, after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. You can talk as you please about all the wonders wrought by new remedies, but when you come down to hard facts there is nothing like good old iron to put color in your cheeks and good, sound healthy flesh on your bones. It is also a great nerve and stomach strengthener and the best blood builder in the world. The only trouble was that the old forms of iron, like tincture of iron, iron acetate, etc., often ruined people's teeth, upset their stomachs and were not assimilated, and for these reasons they frequently did more harm than good. But with the discovery of the newer forms of organic iron all this has been overcome. Nuxated Iron, for example, is pleasant to take, does not injure the teeth and is almost immediately beneficial.

NOTE—The manufacturers of Nuxated Iron have such unbounded confidence in its potency that they authorize the announcement that they will forfeit $100.00 to any Charitable Institution if they cannot take any man or woman under sixty who lacks iron and increase their strength 200 per cent. or over in four weeks' time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. Also they will refund your money in any case in which Nuxated Iron does not at least double your strength in ten days' time. It is dispensed in this city by all drug

A Good Sister's Letter.

BY MRS. G. H. BYARS.

So many more experienced and able students of the Bible praise the Gospel Advocate that I hardly feel the necessity of saying anything of its merits; nevertheless, I will say that the price of the paper will never stop our subscription, if you see fit to raise it to twice its present subscription price. We certainly do feel thankful that we have such learned and scholarly men as the Advocate staff is to edit a paper so instructive on the Scriptures. I cannot see how any Christian home can be complete without it.

I trust that your patience will not be too sorely tried by another appeal for this place. We will not cease to write in behalf of such destitute fields even though our efforts seem to be fruitless at present. Sometime back we took pleasure in reading a piece by Brother A. B. Lipscomb on the "Macedonian Call." One thing that impressed me was that Paul was not exhorting Christians to build meeting-houses, but to preach the gospel. And perhaps I may be unjust, but it seems to me that the calls, many of them, are not as urgent as they should be. The gospel is a universal need; but many places are neglected for the less urgent things. For example, many preachers waste too much time pleading, coaxing, and exhorting men and women to accept Christ, when all the time these men and women know their duty plainly and have known it for years, but for every reason under the sun (except a good one) they will not accept the gospel. Yet preachers still sacrifice time, money, ability, etc., to still haggle with this class. Many have known their duty from childhood until late in life. It is right to always pray for them that they will yet accept it ere death claims them, but it certainly is not right to neglect others who have not heard nor ever been taught. There is a time to quit coaxing. Many teachers miss the truth that there comes a time when entreaty should end. Many a lover would win the woman of his choice if he would quit pleading so abjectly. Many a son would be brought to righteousness if he were made to see that his folly is upon his own head.

Paul's way with the Corinthian Jews is sound. When they proved obdurate to reason and invitation, Paul shook his raiment and said unto them: "Your blood be upon your own heads; . . . from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles." One of the terrible mysteries of God's way is that he does not deny a person the right to go to hell if he chooses.

There are still modern Corinthians.

MONEY IN PIGEONS

Make Your Back Yard Profitable

THE demand for squabs in the Northern, Eastern and Southern markets has never been supplied, because pigeon raising as a business is comparatively new. Buy a half dozen pair of select birds, fence in a small portion of your back yard and watch them go to work. Success is easy. They raise from eight to fifteen pairs of squabs a year. Your squabs and fancy birds will bring handsome returns. You will actually make money in a hitherto useless part of your back yard. Pigeon raising is not a fad or fancy. It is a profitable business. Let us start you right. Our breeders are the best, and raised from prize winning parents. We will furnish you with the birds and teach you how to raise them, and you will reap a handsome profit with a very little outlay. Thousands are taking advantage of this same opportunity. Write to-day for our literature on pigeon raising as a money making proposition, or better still, write us to send you a few pair of Belgian Carneau at $3.00 per pair, White Swiss Mondaines at $5.00 per pair, White Kings at $5.50 per pair, or White Maltese at $4.00 per pair. Our birds are all guaranteed. Your money back if after two months you are not satisfied with their work. Better prices on larger orders. Write to-day and get the pick of the flock.

But the salt should go where corruption threatens. Christianity is for sinners, not for saints. If the church has any mission at all, its mission is to places such as are found here.

At the very basis of this Corinthian lesson lies the assumption that the gospel preacher may not shrink from any task however hard; and the greater the need, the greater the call. The church is not true to type if it does not go confidently against all the Corinthians of modern times and win them for Christ. The common report two thousand years ago was that Corinth stood for the very limit of lewdness and all wickedness. To-day Corinth is associated in the common mind with Christianity. Such is the transformation wrought by one faithful missionary. The cross is mightier than any Corinth. The church has come off victorious whenever and wherever it valiantly attacked the citadels of evil.

And now what valiant soldier of the cross is willing to become a missionary here and (as Paul spent one and one-half years at Corinth) attack the skepticism and prevailing ignorance of the Bible? Remember, this country has had settlers for forty-five or fifty years, and not once, to our knowledge, have they had opportunity to hear the gospel. The old pioneers are crossing the Great Divide; there are but few left here now. Other souls are dying. I see statements of deaths of young and old in every weekly paper from Halley. Not one obituary has ever mentioned that the deceased was a Christian. How much longer must this state prevail here? God forbid that it should still be another fifty years!

Although any Christian will be a Godsend here, yet we need a strong, earnest, and logical reasoner of the Scriptures; a man who is willing to stay with these people and preach even for one and one-half years—aye, for three years—day and night. You need not fear starvation in Southern Idaho, even in Wood River Valley. We could scarcely keep our heads above water (financially) in Tennessee, were always in debt and going deeper until we came West. Although still very poor, our prospects are brighter for future livelihood than they have ever been for us.

We have to date ten dollars to be used for mission purposes here—seven dollars from Mount Zion Church, Tenn., and three dollars from Lula Conger, McMinnville, Tenn. We will add to it from time to time as we can, and would certainly rejoice to secure the services of some able preacher.

We have been here two years, but are not discouraged because we have as yet almost been fruitless in our appeals. We feel that our Father in his own appointed way will reward any efforts made here in behalf of Christianity; that when the time is ripe for action, some earnest soul will be led to take up the labor here and the seed of the kingdom be sown.

A Word to Gospel Preachers.

BY C. H. NICHOL.

Thorp Spring Christian College is certain to reach and bless many more young people in the future than it has in the past. The outlook was never so bright for a great school at Thorp Spring. But it requires much to properly maintain an A-grade college. I am appealing to the faithful preachers to lend their moral support to this great work.

I am sure every preacher who is interested in the Bible-school work would regard it as ridiculous to be offered a financial remuneration for what moral support he might give Thorp Spring Christian College. The school has no such inducements to hold out to any one. I am certain that every faithful preacher who knows that we have at Thorp Spring an A-grade college (according to the best universities) will greatly appreciate this great Christian educational achievement and advancement, and regard this as sufficient inducement to command the best moral support; for, indeed, such an advancement is requiring a proportionate amount of sacrifice on the part of the teachers and those who are carrying the financial burdens.

We feel greatly encouraged. The outlook grows brighter. Many of our fellow-laborers in the gospel have volunteered to do all they can to assist in the great work at Thorp Spring. Many are sending in long lists of names of prospective students. Some write that they are talking school. Others are active in distributing school literature. Almost all who write us declare that Thorp Spring is a most favorable place for maintaining a great school in which the Bible is faithfully taught each day. Some of the preachers say they will send us their children, while others declare they will be in school themselves.

All of this is greatly appreciated. The school will continue to merit such support and unselfish assistance. Eternity alone can reveal the great good the gospel preachers are now doing for the school. We are glad that they are seeing the real merits of the work at Thorp Spring, and merit is the only real inducement a deserving school can afford to offer the preachers, as well as all others, in its efforts to gain favor and support.

Just here it is not amiss for me to state that it will be of interest to the faithful preachers to know that Thorp Spring Christian College is the only Christian college in Texas, of junior rank, whose students, after spending two years in the same, can graduate from the leading universities in two more years. We mention these matters believing that such will be of interest and help to the readers of this paper. We certainly believe that every reader will appreciate the increased interest which the gospel preachers are showing in Christian education.

Send us $2 for the "Gospel Plan of Salvation." This is a splendid book and has enjoyed a wide reading.

If you want a good book of sermons, send us one dollar for "Sweeney's Sermons."

Come to Thorp Spring.

BY JEWELL MATTHEWS.

All old students are earnestly requested to be present for the organization of a permanent alumni association at Thorp Spring, Texas, on September 18. A. R. Holton, of Brownwood, Texas, is preparing a suitable program for the occasion. Excellent entertainment will be furnished by the faculty, student body, and the citizens of Thorp Spring. If you love your Alma Mater, be present for the organization of this association. It means much for you and something for Thorp Spring Christian College. Now understand, this is for all old students. We shall be disappointed if you do not come to participate in this very important event. Remember the date—September 18 next.

Burritt College.

BY H. C. DENSON.

At the close of last session I reluctantly consented to take charge of Burritt College. I accepted the place only for the reason that I thought it the best thing for the school under the existing circumstances. There was a mutual understanding with the board of trustees that I would surrender my place to a more competent man just as soon as such man could be found. The secretary wrote to Prof. W. S. Graves, urging him to return and take charge of the school. I wrote him a letter also, offering him my place if he would return. Professor Graves wrote a nice letter in reply, expressing his interest in the school, but stating that he could not return soon, and that it was not certain that he could so arrange his affairs as to be able to return at all. However, a few members of the board of trustees have entertained the hope that he will yet return and direct the affairs of Burritt College as he has so successfully done in the years past.

I traveled for the school this summer with the hope that some good man could be found to take charge of the work here. I then asked the board of trustees to relieve me of the heavy responsibilities. The secretary wrote to Professor Graves again. He consented to act as president, with the understanding that he will not be required to be here. He is here now, however, and will help organize the school, and then leave it in the hands of competent teachers.

It is my candid belief that Burritt College now has the strongest faculty it has had since I have known the school. I have the utmost confidence in the school and its success, hence I do not hesitate to ask boys and girls to come here.

I wish to further say that it was no difference between the board of trustees and myself that caused me to resign. I have tried to explain the matter just as it is. I appreciate the honor the board conferred upon me and the confidence that people in general have placed in me. In making this change I have endeavored to treat all parties concerned with all possible justice.

Many men in this great commonwealth will stand up and testify in behalf of this school. I shall remain its friend and say a good word whenever possible. I trust that all former friends and patrons will continue to stand behind the school and hold up the hands of the present band of teachers.

Some Characteristics of Paul.

BY SAMUEL C. BOYCE.

Saul was born in Tarsus in the year 3 A.D. Tarsus was the chief city of Cilicia, and one of the most important cities of Asia Minor. It was a great emporium for traffic carried on between Syria, Egypt, and the central regions of Asia Minor. Paul himself referred to his being a citizen of "no mean city."

Reared, as he was, in the midst of paganism and educated in the famous school of Gamaliel, it is not wonderful that he imbibed a spirit of fanatical hatred toward the gospel. Gamaliel approved of toleration, but Saul was hurried on, by what he afterwards described as a spirit of frenzied rage, into the attitude of a persecutor. The persecution culminated in the martyrdom of Stephen. Completing his work as an inquisitor at Jerusalem and obtaining letters of authorization from the Sanhedrin, the highest Jewish tribunal, Saul started to Damascus, but was arrested by the presence of Christ. Thenceforth he became a suffering and despised preacher of the Christian faith.

At the time of Christ there existed two Jewish sects—Sadducees and Pharisees. The doctrines of both had their inception in the Greek philosophy. Epicurus denied the immortality of the soul. The Jewish converts to this belief were known as Sadducees. The principles of the Stoics—that a person should be indifferent to both pain and pleasure and be governed entirely by reason—were still more widely disseminated among the Jews, and they who professed these principles were called "Pharisees." Saul was a Pharisee of Pharisees.

Saul's conversion is particularly significant. It was Christ's last appearance on earth. Although the preceding apostles were personally associated with Christ during his ministry on earth, Saul was chosen to carry the gospel message to the Gentiles. Obviously his early education and environments had especially fitted him for this great work. And, too, Paul was able at all times and under all conditions to rise above the Jewish prejudice for the Gentile. Probably at the most momentous period of the early Christian church, when the elders and apostles had assembled at Jerusalem for the purpose of deciding whether circumcision was essential for the Gentile convert, Paul contended that the law of Moses should not be forced on those Gentiles who had accepted Christ. Though severely criticized by the Hebrew converts, Paul took his part decisively, faced the obloquy heaped upon him with unusual equanimity, and carried to the end the fight that made Christianity the religion of spiritual freedom. Furthermore, the atheist, in his intense zeal to disprove the Bible by impugning its motives, might argue that the apostles chosen during Christ's personal ministry on earth were unlearned; that they expected a Messiah, and that naturally they would be under a delusion that Jesus was the Christ. Certainly such was not the case. But turn to Saul's conversion. He was educated, and, moreover, was not seeking Christ. It is utterly inconceivable that this hard and self-sufficient ambassador of the chief priests could have been under a delusion that Christ actually appeared to him.

As to logic, he is without a mortal peer. In his defense before King Agrippa, so convincing was his argument that he was accused of being beside himself, and Agrippa was almost persuaded to become a Christian.

His wonderful perception enabled him to transform an unfavorable situation into a propitious one, when he was tried before a Jewish tribunal composed of Pharisees and Sadducees, by calling attention to their own discordant views of the resurrection.

By recognizing and elucidating whatever truths an argument of an opponent contained, and combining such with the great truths of Christ, he was able to overcome his adversary's prejudice. Thus, in that memorable defense of the Christian faith on Mars' Hill, where the most august court of Athens held its sittings to protect and guard the ancient law and tradition, especially such as pertained to their religion, Paul was able by such a coalition to convert even the Areopagite himself and others. Evidently he recognized that to win an argument might be easy, but to win over prejudice was the greater battle.

The apostle sought at all times to place Christianity above foolish and unlearned questions that gender strifes. Despite this exhortation of Paul, it seems that there are some today who never tire of wrangling over untaught and unlearned questions.

Though he was the greatest of all the apostles, he counted himself the least. Though instructed in the excellency of speech, he determined to know nothing, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." A Hebrew of Hebrews; in labor more abundant than they all.

When at last the great apostle to the Gentiles was about to be offered up, he could, indeed, truthfully say: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

In his sufferings the Christian is often tempted to think himself forgotten. But his afflictions are the clearest proofs that he is an object of God's fatherly discipline. Satan would give the man the thing his heart is set on. But God hath better things in reserve for his children, and they must be brought to desire them and seek them, and this will be through the wreck and sacrifice of all that the heart holds dear.—R. Cecil.

O ye that mourn the excellent departed, look not into the tomb, for they are not there. In their late home they have left behind their vestments. They have but laid aside their last garment. Gaze not at their vestments! Look with the clear eyes of faith where they are, and let your cry be one of exultation for them. Blessed are ye, dear ones departed! And ye shall hear from above the voice of the Spirit saying: "Even, even so!"—F. C. Ewer.

FROM THE FIELD

Arkansas.

Dell, August 14.—Brother M. S. Mason closed his meeting here yesterday with ten additions—five adults and five ranging from fourteen to sixteen years. Taking it all in all, we think the meeting one of the best in the history of this congregation. Pentecostians organized against us as usual, but did us no harm. People expressed themselves as wanting to go where they could hear something. People are getting away from the idea of a religion that has nothing definite about it. Brother Mason preached along lines that were new to most of the people here, and handled each subject in a masterly way; yet his preaching was mild and inoffensive. Some of the most ardent supporters of Methodism attended regularly and said that this was the best preaching they ever heard. If you want Jerusalem doctrine preached, call Mason CHARLES J. BANKS.

New Orleans, August 15.—I closed the meeting at Cypress Creek on Sunday night. Seven precious souls were won to the Lord, one restored, and all warmed up. A. K. RAMSEY.

Duck Hill, August 12.—I have just closed an interesting meeting with the Red Hill congregation, about ten miles east of here. I feel that this congregation is worthy of special mention on account of the faithful and businesslike way in which they work. Of the fourteen male members, two are able song leaders, and all can be depended upon to help in the singing, lead a prayer, or preside at the Lord's table whenever called upon. It is an understood thing in this congregation that no male member is allowed to be a drone. Although comparatively poor in this world's goods, they are rich in faith and lay by in store on the first day of every week as the Lord has prospered them, thus avoiding the necessity of hurriedly taken up a collection on the last night of the meeting. The congregation was established under rather peculiar circumstances, and I wish to give a brief history of the work. Brother G. S. Ratliff, then Primitive Baptist in opinion, but of no religious affiliation, sent one of his sons to the National Teachers' Normal and Business College, and while there Theo learned and obeyed the gospel. Being anxious to spread the good tidings, he invited a school friend, Brother J. H. Etheridge, to return home with him and preach. Brother Etheridge held two meetings, and the result was a little congregation established and started to work. In little more than five years since the gospel was first preached in its purity a congregation of about thirty has been brought together and a neat little house in a good location has been built, besides having one week's meeting each year. Besides this meeting, I have held three others since July 3: Grenada, two weeks; Shady Grove,

What They All Say.

A few extracts from letters of club members will give you some idea of the many attractive features of the Gospel Advocate Piano Club and will explain why it is so popular. Here are a few samples taken from the correspondence at random:

I certainly am enjoying my piano. I couldn't have gotten any better piano in Decatur than the one I got from you if I had paid one hundred and fifty dollars more than this one cost me.—Mrs. F. B.

It is a beauty, and we are delighted with it. The tone is perfect. Your club is a grand thing.—Mrs. E. P. M.

I am perfectly delighted with it; and every one that has heard it, or has played on it, says they have never heard a finer-toned one. I can observe such a vast difference between this one and others that are in this community that have been placed by agents. Every one, even those who know nothing about music, can tell the superiority of this piano over others.—Mrs. J. R.

We like it mighty well. The tone is full and clear, and the smooth and glossy finish is certainly superb. We think it much better than we could have done here for the money.—Mr. G. F. P.

The piano has come, and it is everything I could wish it to be. The tone is so soft and mellow it sounds more like a harp. The bass notes are remarkably full and round; the case is specially beautiful. I am entirely delighted with it. I never saw a more perfect instrument.—Mrs. W. J. B.

Almost every letter received from club members contains similar expressions of appreciation. The advertising manager of the Gospel Advocate cordially invites you to write for your copy of the club booklet and catalogue, which explain the big saving in price, the convenient terms, the superior quality and durability of the instruments, the protective guarantees and other attractive features of the club. Hundreds of dollars are wasted by individuals on meritless rheumatism remedies. Such a one was Joseph L. Boehmer, of Nashville, Tenn. In fact, Mr. Boehmer wrote: "Renwar Rheumatic Salts" is priceless. Had I known about "Renwar" several years ago, I would have saved hundreds of dollars. One fifty-cent bottle did more good than all sanitarium treatment. I am certain it cured me." We have many original letters like Mr. Boehmer wrote on file in our office. THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

One of the brightest and most entertaining of all our Sunday-school publications is THE YOUNG PEOPLE, a four-page weekly, devoted especially to the interests and welfare of young people of both sexes, but which will prove a channel of cheer and blessing to older ones as well. This periodical has just been consolidated with THE BIBLE STUDY HELPER, and presents the strongest and most essential features of both in an improved form. Three pages are given to stories of an entertaining and elevating character and articles of an educational nature, by gifted and well-informed writers, strikingly illustrated by photo-engravings and line drawings; and one page is devoted to a clear and concise presentation of the Sunday-school lesson, historically and exegetically, by A. B. Lipscomb, one of the editors of the Gospel Advocate, in which are presented the thoughts of many of the world's best thinkers. The size of the page is 10 3/4 x 14 inches. Choctaw County, one week; Silver Knoll, Yalobusha County, one week. I have yet five more weeks of protracted meetings before I close my work with the Charleston Church and leave to take up work with Brother Price Billingsley, in Warren County, Tenn. I regret that my wife's health makes it necessary for me to remove to a higher and more healthy climate. Brethren, the Mississippi field is a much-neglected one. Our forces are weak here, and I cannot help but feel sad over leaving a field so needy and a large number of brethren I have learned to love dearly. It would make me more hopeful if I could get into correspondence with some consecrated young man who would be willing to take up the work I am forced to lay down. If this reaches the eye of any one that could take up this work at the end of September or even next spring, please write me at Charleston, Miss., any time before September 18, or at McMinnville, Tenn., after that date.

Germanton, August 14.—We have had in progress for ten days a meeting at Corinth, near this place, conducted by Brother Frank Dunn, of Nashville, Tenn., who is a son of Brother John E. Dunn, well known to many of the Gospel Advocate readers. Large crowds and fine interest from the beginning. Eight additions so far and the good work going on. It is gratifying indeed to know that one so young in years as Brother Dunn can handle the Scriptures with such telling effect. He is a young man of dignified bearing and pleasing address; and while he is plain and positive for a "thus saith the Lord" on all matters in religion, yet he is so kind and gentle of speech that no one has a right to be offended. Let us hope and pray that he may continue in the old paths and be spared many years in which to sound out the word.

Castalian Springs, August 9.—We closed a two-weeks' meeting at Crandall, Texas, on July 30. This meeting was held under the most unfavorable conditions of any meeting I have ever tried to hold. Hot weather, politics, elections, road building, and general indifference made things drag heavily. There were no additions by baptism, but we were all made to rejoice greatly to see four noble, good, responsible brethren come back to the fellowship of the church. There are some most excellent brethren and sisters at Crandall. We began here last Lord's day. One addition to date. I go from here to Mulberry.

Let us live as though we had to live forever; let us not live as though we had to die in order to confine all our cares to this life. Think of that life which is eternally reserved for us before God, and for God. Therefore, let us henceforth begin to live for him, since it is for him that we must live in eternity. Let us live for him and love him with all our hearts.

Worshipping With the "Digressives."

BY J. PERRY HODGE.

In the Apostolic Review of May 16, Mrs. Lenore Johnston asks the question: "What would you do, brethren—meet with the "digressive" people, the Catholics, or stay at home?"

The circumstances of this sister seem to be that in her community there are none with whom she can meet for worship unless it be with those mentioned. She requests that this matter be discussed in the paper; and since it is one of those matters that come up in the lives of disciples of Christ almost every day and in many places, it might be of interest to many to read what I have to say along this line.

Almost a quarter of a century ago I became identified with the disciples of Christ and continued to worship with them for many years. In the course of time, however, it was my lot to move to a city in which was none of the kind of disciples I had been meeting with, but there was a very strong church of the kind spoken of as "digressives." I became acquainted with their minister, who was a most lovable man. After talking the matter over with my wife, we decided it would be better for us to meet and break bread with them than remain at home, since we had children that we thought needed the influence of the congregational work.

It was not long after this that I was elected to fill the vacancy of one of their elders who had resigned to do some other work in building up a church elsewhere. I found that my heart was not in the work nor in the worship; the duties that fell upon me, I would rather not have performed. I soon realized that I was among them, but that, try as I would, I could not be of them. I wanted to be worthy of the confidence, love, and respect that these people had reposed in me, but I was a failure. My heart was elsewhere.

Later I moved to Tampa, Fla., and after a time I learned that there was a congregation of people of the kind I had been longing for, and the very next Lord's day I went there, and have never been happier in my life. It was like getting home again.

I soon found that I was looked upon with suspicion on account of the fact that I had come from the "digressives," as they are called, and I reckon the brethren cannot help feeling that way about me. But the point is this: by my trying to worship with brethren with whom I could not agree I became weakened. While they treated me with all respect and confidence and brotherly love, it must have been evident to them that I was not at heart one of them. I can clearly see that for one to do, or try to do, anything in religion when his heart is not in it is to act the hypocrite so long as he or she attempts it. So my advice to the sister and to all others similarly situated is: Do not meet with any one religiously unless your heart is in it.

I do not know how long the feeling of suspicion may last in my own case; but whether it be long or short, I feel that God chastens those whom he loves, and I would rather feel that I have done the right thing in coming back where my heart is at home, even if I am never trusted again, than try to worship again in any other place than with those I started out with almost a quarter of a century ago.

Home worship is a most excellent thing, and by inviting in the neighbors it is possible to teach them "the way of the Lord more perfectly;" and it is certain that you will fail to do so if you commence meeting with these others, for they will think you are coming to see it their way.

These thoughts are from my own experience, and I know them to be true. It weakens any one to try to worship where his heart is not. Besides, it is not fair to those with whom you try to worship; it is not fair to those who might misjudge you on account of it; it is not fair to your family; and it is not fair to the Lord. It is unfair all round, and I hope all who read this will avoid it as they would the plague.

Haston-Herriage Debate.

BY E. M. MING.

A debate was held at Roady Schoolhouse, eleven miles southwest of Wynnewood, between Brother J. F. Haston (Christian) and J. W. Herriage (Primitive Baptist). The propositions were as follows: (1) "The church of which I, J. W. Herriage, am a member is the church of Jesus Christ, and is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." Herriage affirmed; Haston denied. (2) "The church of which I, J. F. Haston, am a member is the church of Jesus Christ, and is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." Haston affirmed; Herriage denied. Both disputants conducted themselves nicely in this debate and did not give the moderators any trouble. The writer moderated for Brother Haston and Mr. Cain moderated for Herriage.

Mr. Herriage tried to set his church up on the banks of Jordan. I will give some references which he used in trying to prove it. He began with Matt. 3: 13, where Christ came to John to be baptized of him; then he went over to John 1: 29, where John said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world;" and from here he went to Matt. 28: 6, where the midnight cry was made; and he connected these all together and said it all happened on the banks of Jordan; and he said this was where Christ set up his church. Brother Haston refuted every argument his opponent made by plain statements in the Bible. Brother Haston showed him that it was one year from the time Mr. Herriage said the church was set up until Christ said, "Upon this rock I will build my church," talking to Peter, and he showed that it was still a year from this statement until he established his church.

At the close of the debate one old Primitive Baptist went to Brother Haston and bade him Godspeed and did not go to his Baptist preacher at all.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

Volume LVIII. No. 35.

NASHVILLE, TENN., AUGUST 31, 1916.

$1.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.

WHY STAMPED.

1. Your paper is stamped with a large red hand because the date shows your subscription unpaid. We cannot publish a paper without money. The body of the Christian is the temple of the Holy Spirit, still it must have clothing. While engaged in spiritual work, we are in a material world and must have money in order to meet the expense for publishing the paper.

2. The cost of paper is so much greater than a few months ago that it is absolutely necessary to collect subscriptions that are due in order to pay our paper bills. You doubtless have observed what others are saying about the increased burdens which are now borne by newspaper publishers.

3. We are calling your attention to the fact that your subscription is unpaid because we believe that you have overlooked this matter and that you will cheerfully remit when the fact is brought to your attention. You should make remittance at the rate of $1.50 per year. If your paper expired January 1, 1916, $1.50 will pay your subscription to January 1, 1917.

4. The date on the yellow label on your paper is your receipt. If your paper should be paid to October 1, 1916, and yet have a large hand stamped on it, you may know that the mistake was made by the one stamping the paper. We would take it as a favor if you would call our attention to any mistake that you may find in the date on your paper. We are anxious to correct all mistakes.

5. Make your remittance by bank check, post-office money order, or express money order. Do not send money loose in an envelope unless you are willing to send it at your own risk.

6. We are encouraged that so many responded to our last call, and think that the reason you have not responded is because you have simply overlooked the matter. If you are not able to pay now and want a little more time on your subscription, we would take it as a favor if you would write us a letter setting out that fact. We are anxious to secure the hearty cooperation of all our readers. All can greatly encourage and help us by sending us new subscribers to the Advocate. The Advocate is making many new friends, but its field of usefulness could be very greatly enlarged by trebling its present circulation. Send us a new subscriber at $1.50 per year. We take this occasion to extend our appreciation to all who have cooperated so heartily with us, who have paid their subscription promptly, and who are making an effort to increase the subscription list of the Gospel Advocate.

Jesus Worked with His Hands.

We learn from a passage in Mark that Jesus worked. His was a life of manual labor. There has been a haughty tendency in all ages to despise manual labor and to look down upon those who live by it. All trade and mechanic work was to the ancient world despicable. The very word they used for trade also means baseness, a thing to be left to slaves, or to those but little above them. This prejudice has been softened, but has not been eradicated. We find it cherished in many quarters to-day. There are some people who praise Booker Washington's school at Tuskegee by saying: "It is a fine thing to teach manual labor to negroes." Why not feel just as proud of those schools that are teaching manual labor to whites? There are some young ladies who will smile at the young man who works in a bank—they count it an honor to be seen in his company—but snub the young man who works with his hands, when it is usually the case that he makes twice as much money as the young baron in the bank. These same young ladies would have turned up their noses at the Lord Jesus Christ. What sublimer lesson could the Great Teacher have taught than by spending those unrecorded years in doing the work of an honest laborer? He might have come to this earth as a prince, like Buddha; he might have come as a philosopher, like Confucius; he might have come as a priest, like Zoroaster; he might have come as a prophet, like Mahomet; but he elected to come as a humble carpenter. How fundamentally does he rectify the judgments of man's feeble wisdom! He breaks down the inch-high standards of snobbery and raises aloft the banner that teaches that "all honest labor is an honor to the laborer." Don't forget this, boys, when you go to look for a job, and, as Elbert Hubbard remarked: "There isn't any difference between applying for a situation and looking for a job." The same is true of the girls. Why should a young woman, when her school days are ended, be content in seeking to have a good time and to catch a husband? And if she gets married, why should a young woman feel that the end of her ambition is attained? The two questions resolve into one. Why should not every young woman, married or single, have a plan of work for the future, and be diligent and earnest in that plan—just as diligent as husband or brother?

The Years of Preparation.

The unrecorded years were the years of preparation. Whatever Jesus might have known of his relationship to God, and of the fact that he was born to do the work of heaven, be it said to his credit that he bided his Father's good time. He awaited the pointing of his finger, he listened for the whisper of his voice. Thus the prophecies were fulfilled concerning him. "He shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of dry ground." Again: "He shall not strive nor cry, neither shall his voice be heard in the streets." Men might look for manifestations of God in the earthquake or the thunder or the mighty strong wind; but to Jesus, hidden in the cleft of that mountain valley, the manifestations came, as to Elijah, in the "still small voice." We must not believe, then, that the years spent in preparation for the after duties of life are lost, or that they are unimportant years as compared with others. Bible history and our own observation show us that such years are necessary. Witness David among the sheepfolds of Bethlehem; Elijah in the tents of Bedouin; Amos gathering sycamore leaves at Tekoah; Jeremiah in quiet Anathoth; and John the Baptist in the wilderness. The faithfulness of Jesus during the years of obscurity equipped him for faithfulness during the three and a half years of his active ministry. Being subject to his earthly parents made it easier for him to do the will of his Heavenly Father.

Jesus Kept His Eyes Open.

Jesus was an observant youth. He kept his eyes open. He knew all about the simple farmer's life. For instance, he noticed the hen, with the instinct of maternal love, clucking to gather the little chickens under the shelter of wide-spread wings. He noticed the lambs following their shepherd, and some of them going astray. And all that he learned in the days of childhood is later on woven into figure and parable, and these simple lessons became the most fruitful vehicles of his holy teaching. Jesus Christ was at home in the poor, windowless, Syrian hovel, where the housewife must light a candle to perform her duties. He was acquainted with the secrets of the bakehouse, the garden, and the builder. He saw some things which the higher classes did not see, as, for example, the "good measure pressed down and running over," and the rotten, leaking wine skin of the wine dealer, and the clumsy patchwork of the peasant woman. His acquaintance with these things made him deeply sympathetic for the needs of the poor. One reason why this class of people received him so gladly is because the Great Teacher made himself so perfectly at home among them. "Is your father at home?" asked a stranger of a little boy sitting on a doorstep. The little boy shook his head. "Where do you think I could find him?" the stranger inquired. "Well," the little boy said, "you've got to look some place where people are sick or hurt or something like that." Such a man was Jesus.

"Fruit is seed," a great philosopher said. What the soil and the grain have been, that will the harvest be. When we see the perfect rose, we know at once that there was no blight, no imperfection in the bud. So when we find in the New Testament the perfect Man, without guilt, we know at once that his youth must have been marked by years of sinless humility. He was true to his earthly parents, as he was true to his Heavenly Father. His sinless life shed a glorious luster upon Joseph and Mary, and especially upon the mother, who pondered the things that he said in her heart.

Be Like Jesus.

How could I write a better thing in closing than to say in simple language: "Be like Jesus. Be obedient to your parents; use well the years of preparation; do not despise the quiet, but salient, influence of your own home; give to your kinspeople and to your neighbors the best that you have in you; do not frown at poverty, for, when used rightly, it is not a stumblingblock, but a stepping-stone; do not be afraid of honest work, neither belittle manual labor; keep your eyes open for the commonplace beauties; become more observant, that you may become more and more useful; do not forget the words of your teachers; cherish the example of your father, and always remember that you are your mother's son and that you owe a great deal to her from whose frail body you drew life at the beginning and from whose strong spirit you will draw life unto the close."

"The Gospel Plan of Salvation," by Dr. T. W. Brents, is a book that never wears out. The people buy and read it with interest. Price, $2.

Have you examined our newest and latest hymn book, "Praise Him?" This book is edited by William J. Kirkpatrick and A. B. Lipscomb.

"Handbook on Baptism," by J. W. Shepherd, is a splendid book of reference. It is the best and most complete book published on the subject. Price, $1.50.

W. W. Freeman, of Louisville, Ky., writes: "'Christian Treasures' may well be laid up by the parents for the children.' It is a very appropriate gift book. 'Babes' in Christ will get much strength from it, but it is strong enough for those able to bear 'meat.' A number of single articles in it are worth the price of the book many times. The English of the articles is by no means perfect, but the message is clear and wholesome. The first two chapters should have general reading among our brethren, especially some who zealously oppose themselves and the progress of the truth in binding methods and in not allowing recourse to helps to Bible knowledge. James' 'How We Got Our Bible' is instructive, as are many others. Weir's article regarding unity and union is thought-provoking and seems very timely. The book has outlines for several good sermons, and the practical side of evangelistic and missionary work is well included. My father, a preacher with over twenty years of experience, writes me: 'The book, "Christian Treasures," you sent me is just fine. I can read so many things in it that I want to know. I prize it very highly.' Reader, if you want to 'lay up treasures in heaven,' invest in 'Christian Treasures.' I should quote Volume I, much above par."

My Savior Walks With Me.

BY CLARA COX EPPERSON.

(To Brother T. Q. Martin.)

Mother of my life and wife of my bosom,
 Queens supreme of my heart! Alas, both are gone,
 And I am left desolate, bereft and sorrowing,
 To walk through this dark world sadly alone!

Nay—not alone! for my Savior walks with me,
 He who gave up his life on the cross for me;
 He will go with me through sorrow's dark valley
 Till the light on faith's blessed hilltops I see.

Through life's rugged way his love will sustain me,
 He'll lead me to dear ones who've gone out from here;
 And there'll be no tears when I find heaven gains me
 My loved ones forever in that sweet Over There.

I know that my Savior will walk ever with me;
 His dear, loving hands will uphold all the time;
 And in that last journey he'll stay close beside me,
 And lead me in joy to that heaven sublime.

"A Brief for the Women."

BY F. W. SMITH.

Under the heading here given, the Presbyterian Advance for June 22 publishes a plea for women to speak in public, by James I. Vance, of Nashville, Tenn. The Advance says:

One of the four reports on the subject of the place of women in the work of the church, submitted to the Southern Presbyterian Assembly at Orlando, Fla., was by Dr. James I. Vance, a member of the special committee. In his report Dr. Vance reviewed previous deliverances of the Assembly on this subject and then presented a study of the scripture references to the activities of women and to the part that women have taken in public assemblies. After presenting one group of passages which go to show that woman was always active in Christian work, laboring in the gospel as "helpers of the apostles" and as "fellow-workers in Christ Jesus," he presented a second and third group of scripture references which had to do with women speaking in public assemblies. This part of Dr. Vance's report, together with its conclusions, is as follows:

"The second group of scripture references have to do with women speaking in public assemblies. Such passages are the following:

"It shall be in the last days, saith God, I will pour forth of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." (Acts 2: 17.)

"This prophesying implies an audience. Nothing is said about its being an audience composed only of women. To such audiences these prophetesses spoke. Granted that their message was inspired, would the Holy Spirit have inspired them to violate scripture in order to deliver their message? Does not the mere fact that these daughters prophesied involve their right to speak in public assemblies?

"Again: 'Entering into the house of Philip the evangelist, who was one of the seven, we abode with him. Now this man had four virgin daughters, who prophesied.' (Acts 21: 8, 9.)

"There is no intimation that Paul took these four women to task for their unscriptural practice of speaking in public.

"Again: 'But every woman praying or prophesying with her head unveiled dishonoreth her head.' (1 Cor. 11: 5.)

"The praying and prophesying were evidently public in the assembly, and the matter of which the apostle complains is not that they prayed and prophesied in public, but that they were in some cases unveiled. It was simply a matter of decorous attire. His instructions assume the propriety of women praying and prophesying, provided their heads are veiled. The passage must be interpreted, like others bearing on this subject, in the light of Oriental customs.

"Again: 'They were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles. They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word.' (Acts 8: 1, 4.)

"It is not conceivable that these dispersed disciples were all males. There must have been women among them, but there is no sex line drawn in the 'preaching' that was done. It was the same kind of preaching referred to in Acts 5: 42, where we read that Peter and John 'every day, in the temple and at home, . . . ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus as the Christ.'

"Again: 'I desire therefore that the men pray in every place, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and disputing. In like manner, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel.' (1 Tim. 2: 8, 9.)

"The reference is to public prayer, and to the way people should conduct themselves while engaged in it. The point is not that men should pray in public and that women should keep silent; but that men, when they pray, should observe certain things, and that women, when they pray, should observe certain things.

"From these passages there is, therefore, scriptural authority for women 'prophesying,' 'praying,' and 'preaching.' They did these things in the apostolic church; and if so, we may assume that they should be permitted as much liberty in the church to-day.

"The third group of scripture references are those passages which enjoin quietness, subjection, and silence on the part of women in the church. Such passages are the following:

"Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over the man, but to be in quietness.' (1 Tim. 2: 11, 12.)

"The reference here is evidently to authority and demeanor, and has no particular bearing on woman's ministry in the church. Certainly there is nothing in the passage to forbid her speaking in public.

"Again: 'Let the women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law.' (1 Cor. 14: 34.)

"This is the locus classicus for previous deliverances of the Assembly closing the lips of the women. Does a fair interpretation of it warrant any such action?

"Before examining the passage, let us remind ourselves of what such a literal interpretation involves. It would forbid women joining in congregational singing in the church. It would forbid women reading scripture aloud in the responsive readings in public worship.

"Again, such an interpretation arrays this passage against the passages already quoted, in which women are allowed to speak in the church.

"Again, such an interpretation would forbid much of the work which our women missionaries are now doing on the foreign field. Can we believe that in preaching and proclaiming the gospel to groups of heathen they are committing a sin by violating scripture? It would also forbid a returned woman missionary from appearing before the congregations at home and giving them an account of her work. Can we believe that in doing so she is violating scripture and committing a sin?

"It would also forbid a woman superintendent in charge of an orphanage appearing before a church court and telling the story of her work. Can we believe that in doing so she is violating scripture and committing a sin? If these women can be trusted to do the work, can they not be trusted to tell about it?

"Besides, is it not an exceedingly hazardous thing to build up such a radical theory of conduct on a single passage of scripture? Does not all this raise the question as to whether this passage has not been wrongly interpreted in the action of previous Assemblies?

"Turning now to the passage itself, we find that the Greek word for 'silence' occurs three times in succeeding paragraphs of this fourteenth chapter of First Corinthians, and that each time it is conditioned.

"In verses 27 and 28 a man speaking in an unknown tongue is to keep silence when he has no interpreter. Of course this does not mean that he is to keep silence when he has an interpreter.

"In verse 30, if anything is revealed to another that sitteth by, the first is to keep silence. Of course this does not mean that he is to keep silence where there is no such revelation.

"With women, the silence is also conditioned. The question is one of decorum. And the speaking from which they are to refrain is not preaching, but asking questions, for in verse 25 Paul adds that 'if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home.'

"But because they are not to disturb the public worship by asking questions, does it follow that they must never speak in the church? Such a conclusion is not borne out by this passage, is in conflict with the plain teaching of other passages, and is at variance with the practice of some of the most devout and intelligent bodies of Christians.

"Therefore, the following recommendations are submitted:

"1. Women are recognized as ministering and laboring with the apostles in the New Testament church. The Assembly would encourage our women to prepare themselves by special training for such service, and would instruct sessions to set aside devout and capable women in their congregations to the ministry of deaconesses.

"2. While the Scriptures do not authorize official teaching and preaching by women, they do not forbid her speaking in the churches.

"Respectfully submitted,

JAMES L. VANCE."

I am glad that the author of the foregoing, in signing his name, omitted the ecclesiastical title of "Dr.," as it will permit me to omit the same without appearing lacking in "ministerial courtesy."

There would be no reference to what Mr. Vance has said on the subject before us, were it not for the far-reaching principle involved. That principle, as the writer understands it, involves simple obedience to the Lord Jesus Christ—loyalty to the supreme Head of the church.

Mr. Vance's conclusion that women should become public speakers or teachers in the assembly of the saints is, it seems to me, based upon unwarranted assumptions and misapplication of scripture. For instance, he quotes: "It shall be in the last days, saith God, I will pour forth of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." (Acts 2: 17.) From this he assumes that the prophesying was done in the "public assembly;" but the passage simply states the fact that "your daughters shall prophesy," without intimating in any way where it should be done or how it should be done. An inspired message written would be prophesying as much so as if spoken. But he says: "This prophesying implies an audience. Nothing is said about its being an audience composed only of women." All this might be granted and still contain no proof that it was done in a public assembly convened to worship God. To make out his case, he must find some account of women speaking publicly and teaching an assembly of worshipers. For such evidence his article is woefully lacking, and, in my judgment, he never can find such evidence in the holy oracles. He seems to think such proof may be found in the fact that Phillip had four daughters who prophesied (Acts 21: 8, 9); but where is the evidence that they did this in the public assembly? Mr. Vance says regarding these: "There is no intimation that Paul took these four women to task for their unscriptural practice of speaking in public." There is the same evidence of that as there is that they spoke in public, which is none at all.

But he thinks his position receives support from the following: "But every woman praying or prophesying with her head unveiled dishonoreth her head." (1 Cor 11: 5.) Where is the proof that this praying or prophesying was done in the public assembly? It is not in the passage itself, nor any other passage in the New Testament. If praying and prophesying could be done nowhere else but in the assembly of the saints, the case would be different; but such is not true. There is no evidence that these instructions were given concerning woman's conduct in the church assembly; but, in the face of the apostle's plain, pointed, and unmistakable prohibition on woman's speaking in the church given in the same letter (chapter 14, verse 34), we are forced to the conclusion that the praying and prophesying were to be done elsewhere.

Again, Mr. Vance assumes that in the dispersion (Acts

8: 1-4) there were "women," and that these publicly proclaimed the word. This assumption, we must suppose, is based upon the statement that "they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles." (Acts 8: 1.) He should know that the word "all" is frequently used in a limited sense, simply meaning a large number. That it is so used in this connection may be clearly seen from the immediate context.

"But Saul laid waste the church, entering into every house, and dragging men and women committed them to prison." (Verse 3.) If "all," in the sense of "every one," except the apostles, had left Jerusalem, how could Saul have dragged men and women to prison? The statement evidently means that a large number of the leading men in the church left Jerusalem and went everywhere preaching the word. In all of the accounts of this preaching, not once is a single woman mentioned. (See Acts 8: 5; 11: 19, 20.) There was still a church in Jerusalem. (Acts 11: 22.) The Holy Spirit, in recording the facts, mentions "men," but not once a woman. Is this not significant?

Another passage is cited as proof that women may lead the public service—viz.: "I desire therefore that the men pray in every place, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and disputing. In like manner, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel." (1 Tim. 2: 8, 9.) Mr. Vance seems to think that the expression, "in like manner," applied to the women, refers to audible prayer in public, but we have in the immediate context the following prohibition: "Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness. For Adam was first formed, then Eve." (Verses 11-13.) Is not this divine legislation against women becoming leaders of men in the public assembly as well as in the home? Mr. Vance says: "The reference here is evidently to authority and demeanor, and has no particular bearing on woman's ministry in the church. Certainly there is nothing in the passage to forbid her speaking in the church." In this he is very much in error, for there is something in the passage to forbid women speaking in the church—viz.: "But I permit not a woman to teach." Her speaking would be ostensibly for the purpose of "teaching"—the very thing Paul forbids. It is a well-accepted rule, and generally acted upon where no bias or predilections otherwise influence men, that all obscure or doubtful passages are to be interpreted in the light of clear, distinct, and unmistakable ones bearing on the same subject. According to this rule the following is submitted: "Let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law." (1 Cor. 14: 34.) There is nothing obscure or hard to understand about this passage. If it does not mean what it says, who can tell what it does mean? Mr. Vance quotes this passage and contends that a literal interpretation would forbid women joining in congregational singing. Once more I must say his view is erroneous. Had he quoted the two following verses, he would have seen that the speaking here had reference to preaching, and not singing: "And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church. What? was it from you [you women] that the word of God went forth? or came it unto you alone?" Here, to further emphasize the prohibition against woman becoming a public teacher of the word, Paul asks if it was through women that God chose to send forth his word. It did not go out from women, but came to them through men. Women are commanded to sing in the church. (See Eph. 5: 19; Col 3: 16—letters written to churches, in which, of course, there were women.)

The fact that women were said to have helped in the gospel is no evidence that they publicly proclaimed it. Many women to-day help in the gospel by giving a preacher a home and something to eat. If God had sent even one woman out with the twelve disciples or the seventy under the limited commission to preach, it would have convinced everybody that he indorsed women preachers, and Mr. Vance would not have been put to the necessity of relying upon obscure and doubtful passages to prove his contention. Or just one clear, plain, and unmistakable example of a woman speaking publicly in the church would put to silence all objectors. But—alas for those who contend for women speaking in the church!—that one example is not to be found.

Explaining the Scriptures.

BY W. H. CARTER.

The time has not been, and will not be while time lasts, that some one will not want some one to explain some parts of the Scriptures to him. Circumstances may, and no doubt do, sometimes make this necessary. Questions are often asked along the line of controverted points, and the answer may be used to influence some one, not so much because of the scriptural soundness of the answer, but because of the position and standing of the one making the answer. This makes it all the more important that the one answering avoid speculation and opinion and give a plain "thus saith the Lord." If no "thus saith the Lord" is known, then the question should be classed with the untaught and avoided. It is no disgrace for one, in the absence of teaching from the Lord on a given point, to say, "I do not know." To fail to do this is to go beyond that which is written, which is not wise.

Wherever we find division among brethren, we find that some one is going by opinion, speculation, and false interpretation. Men may differ and both be wrong, but they cannot differ and both be right. No man ever becomes so wise that he will not at some time do some unwise thing. It is not safe to be followers of men. Man can be a help and a blessing to his fellow-man only as he opens up, unfolds, and teaches him what the Lord says. To venture opinions where the Lord has not spoken, or instead of what he has spoken, is to commit sin and become guilty of that which we condemn in others. "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth." (Rom. 14: 22.) I am reading several papers in which questions are answered and scriptures explained, and in which, from my viewpoint, opinion is often resorted to and answers given that come directly in conflict with plain declarations of the word of the Lord. Unfortunately for the cause of the Christ, men adopt theories and papers are started to advocate and promulgate them, or certain theories, from some cause, get into and become a part of the policy of the paper. Every paper has its influence and goes into many homes whose occupants have confidence in the editor and are willing, without questioning his knowledge and wisdom, to accept what he says without investigation. How careful editors and contributors should be!

When many years younger than now, I resolved that I would not accept anything that man said, no matter how learned, just because he said it, but would investigate for myself. When I began to preach, I was confronted by a difficult problem. I realized that I would have to do the work of an evangelist, and a part of this work was to ordain (appoint) elders. I was anxious to know how to do this. I wanted to do right. If it was the Lord's will, I wanted to do it as he directed, if he had given any directions. I went to an old, learned, able, and well-known preacher and asked him how ordaining was done. He said: "It is done by fasting, prayer, and the laying on of hands, or it is not done at all." I then went to another old preacher, learned and able, and he told me the Bible did not teach any way, but was sure it was never done by the laying on of hands. With the understanding that where the Bible speaks I could speak, and where the Bible was silent I should be silent, and having obligated myself to give a "thus saith the Lord" for what I taught and practiced, I determined to go to the Book and let the Lord be my teacher, and learn from him my duty. I was not long in deciding as to the way to proceed and what to do; so much so that I can give chapter and verse for every step I take and every act I perform. The two good old brethren referred to above were both honest and sincere, but one of them was in error; and how could I tell which was right, if either was, until I had studied the Scriptures for myself?

Now there are many young men to-day going out from "Bible schools," and otherwise, to preach the gospel and do the work of evangelists. Of course, the name "Bible school" would indicate that young men who are preparing themselves to preach and do evangelistic work are taught their special duties along this line; and as the appointing of elders, where they are needed, is a part of the evangelistic work, then, if not taught this, the school is short in its work, it would seem to me. So I wish to ask the young preachers to write me a letter and tell me how they would appoint an elder, and give me the chapter and verse that teaches them to do so—that is, that teaches by precept or example what they do that they call "appointing." It will not take you long to write me and will be good and helpful exercise for you. Will you do this? Now, do you ask: "What has this to do with the subject, 'Explaining the Scriptures?'" It might have a good deal to do with it. No one is better able to explain the meaning of words used than he who uses them. It has been said that the Bible should be allowed to be its own interpreter. If we can thus arouse a spirit of study and investigation and the Bible explain itself to us all, will we not all be benefited? Questions are often asked along this line, and the answers differ. Where this is the case, some one is in error and fails to explain the Scriptures correctly. In this there should be unity of teaching and practice. I am not attempting an explanation nor a discussion, but to cause investigation. I feel warranted in concluding that some, not a few, are handling this question entirely too carelessly.

Departure from apostolic teaching and practice in anything is hurtful to the church, and there is no one thing upon which the life, influence, and success of a congregation depend more largely than a scripturally qualified and appointed eldership. The lack of this is, no doubt, the cause of so much carelessness and indifference which is found to abound in almost every place. Therefore the necessity of earnest, faithful, careful, and prayerful study. If I can be of any help, use me to the glory of the Christ and to the building up of his cause. Let us not dispute, but investigate.

Forthcoming Debates.

There will be a four-days' discussion at Warren's Mill Church (Gilstrap, Ky., post office) between Elder J. W. Wade (Missionary Baptist), of Morgantown, Ky., and J. L. Hines (Christian), beginning on September 12. General church propositions will be discussed. This is three or four miles from Cromwell, Ky., where I met Elder J. H. Tow (Missionary Baptist), July 11, 1914, on the same propositions. I also met Elder E. W. Lindsey (General Baptist), of Neafus, Ky., in a four-days' debate, at McHenry, Ky., on October 3. Four propositions—two church propositions, one on the work of the Holy Spirit, and one on baptism. Directions: For the first debate, come over the Illinois Central Railroad to Beaver Dam, Ky.; for the second debate, come over the Illinois Central Railroad to McHenry, Ky. For further instructions, write me at Central City, Ky.

Can We Change These Conditions?

In a letter received just recently I find the following paragraph: "But there seems to be little inducement to young men of ability to prepare themselves to preach, and little inducement to schools to help such young men. The idea seems to be that young men should become preachers by accident—and not to be too much of a preacher, at that; to be farmer-preachers, drummer-preachers, teacher-preachers, or merchant-preachers. Hence, most young men are preparing themselves to follow some profitable business, while the King's business goes begging. Can we do anything to change these conditions?"

In reference to the above, I would say: "Yes, there is something that we can do to change these conditions—viz., preach the whole counsel of God on the preacher question." I submit the following for the consideration of our readers, praying the Lord to bless it to his name's honor and glory and to the good of his cause:

1. The Bible clearly teaches that we all should be preachers of the gospel. The first congregation was certainly started right, for it was started under the supervision of the Spirit-guided apostles. This church, after growing until she numbered her thousands, was scattered abroad. But these scattered disciples "went everywhere preaching the word." (Acts 8: 4.) Our Father wants us all to become teachers. (See Heb. 5: 12.) It matters not what our calling in life may be, so far as an earthly pursuit is concerned, we must seek to save the lost.

2. But the Bible teaches two kind of preachers—viz., (1) those who give themselves "wholly" to preaching the word, and (2) those who follow some calling in life, such as farming, school-teaching, drumming, merchandising, practicing medicine, and who do all they can, along with their respective callings, to preach Christ, and him crucified, by word of mouth and by their godly living.

Now the only way to remedy any wrong on any question is to preach the whole counsel of God on that question. Teach the disciples—all of them—that they must seek to save the lost. The farmer who does not try to save souls is not the farmer he should be; the school-teacher who does not try to save souls is not the teacher God wants him to be; and just so with all other children of God, regardless of their honorable callings in life. But along with this teaching, also teach exactly what the Bible teaches about men giving themselves wholly to the work of preaching the gospel. It is a sin to teach the farmer-preacher, merchant-preacher idea to that extent that you actually discourage the idea of men giving themselves wholly unto the preaching of the word. We dare not take from God's revelation to his people. One way to take from the truth is to emphasize some part of a subject to the neglect and destruction of some other part. "Be diligent in these things; give thyself wholly unto them," is Paul's command to Timothy. (1 Tim. 4: 15.) He has direct reference to his work as a minister of the word. "If thou put the brethren in mind of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Christ Jesus, nourished in the words of the faith, and of the good doctrine which thou hast followed until now. . . . These things command and teach.

Take heed to thyself, and to thy teaching. Continue in these things. . . . Give heed to reading, to exhortation, to teaching." (Verses 6-16.) He was commanded to give himself wholly unto these things. Not only do we find Paul thus teaching Timothy; but all of the apostles, except Paul, gave themselves wholly to the preaching of the word, and not even would they neglect it for such work as caring for the poor. They declared that "it is not fit that we should forsake the word of God, and serve tables," (Acts 6: 2.) Hence other men were appointed to do such work. Too, turn to the ninth chapter of First Corinthians and read carefully the first fourteen verses. It seems that some thought Paul was not an apostle because he "made tents," at times, for a living, and the other apostles did not. But he shows them that he is an apostle, even if he does make tents. But he does not teach that the others are not apostles because they gave themselves only to the preaching of the word, were supported by the church, exercised their right "to forbear working." Had Paul taught on this subject as some do to-day, the other apostles would have been dishonored and abused and dubbed "hirelings."

Let us now read what he says: "Am I not free? am I not an apostle? have I not seen Jesus our Lord? are not ye my work in the Lord? If to others I am not an apostle, yet at least I am to you; for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord. My defense to them that examine me is this. Have we no right to eat and to drink [without making tents]? Have we no right to lead about a wife that is a believer, even as the rest of the apostles, and the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas? Or I only and Barnabas, have we not a right to forbear working? [The other apostles did, and he blames them not for it.] What soldier ever serveth at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? Do I speak these things after the manner of men? or saith not the law also the same? For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. Is it for the oxen that God careth, or saith he it assuredly for our sake? Yea, for our sake it was written: because he that ploweth ought to plow in hope, and he that thresheth, to thresh in hope of partaking." Now please to note his application of the illustrations: "If we sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we shall reap your carnal things? If others partake of this right over you, do not we yet more? [That is, yet more have the right to do so.] Nevertheless we did not use this right; but we bear all things, that we may cause no hindrance to the gospel of Christ. Know ye not that they that minister about sacred things eat of the things of the temple, and they that wait upon the altar have their portion with the altar? Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel."

Now, one question in connection with the above: The man who supports himself as a farmer, merchant, doctor, school-teacher, etc., and preaches the gospel every opportunity he has—is he "living of the gospel?" Is this what Paul means above? I trow not. Well, then, if we are to encourage the idea of only the farmer-preacher, etc., to the destruction of the preacher that gives himself wholly to the word, then we have destroyed and set at naught one of the ordinances of God; for he has "ordained that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel."

In conclusion, then, let me insist that we always so teach and preach on this subject as to encourage every honest hearted farmer-preacher, drummer-preacher, etc. Too, let every congregation that we have earnestly seek to find in its membership those young men who are pure and godly in their deportment, who love God, who are not ashamed to work with their own hands if it should become necessary, and who have the talent and the desire to become proclaimers of the unsearchable riches of Christ; and not only find them, but encourage them to give themselves wholly to such work, and teach them as far as they can, and, too, send them to some good school where God's word is taught, and let them prepare themselves for such work. Why not? I pray that God may give us more laborers.

Men Ought to Pray and Not to Faint.

Ten years ago, in the town of Kofu, near the foot of Mount Fuji, there was a Japanese woman who was a worker in the Methodist Church. In her sister's home were two young men boarding and going to school. She spoke to the young men about Christ, teaching the Bible to one of them for a time. Another young man, Mr. Yajima, came there to board. The lady went away, but kept up her interest in this young man and wrote to him, urging him to keep on studying the Bible. He began to talk to Yajima about Christ and to urge him to read the Bible. Yajima was a strong Buddhist, and at first he disliked very much to hear anything about Christianity. A meeting for the young men of Kofu was formed, both Christians and unbelievers, where he heard many religious discussions. This friend had given him several books to read, among them "The Gospel for Common People," and this helped him very much. When Mr. Fred E. Hagin, of the Christian Church, started work there and the Japanese evangelist began preaching, young Yajima was baptized. Mr. and Mrs. Whitney came from Yokohama selling Bibles and living there for a time. They were a great help to Yajima in his Christian life.

When Mr. Yajima returned home and his father learned that he had become a Christian, he sent him away to do the best he could alone. He went into the mountains where the charcoal burners were at work and remained with them six months. After that a farmer gave him employment. During all this time he was letting his light shine by teaching any one who would listen. After a year his father heard such good reports of his faithful work that he sent for him to come home. He returned and continued his work of teaching others of God, besides doing his farm work, so that even his father changed his mind about Christianity. Though he had gone only as far as the common school, he formed a Bible class. Now they have a preacher from Fukushima who comes out every two weeks and holds meetings. He taught a Sunday school for a whole year on his own responsibility. He afterwards moved to Tokyo and is studying to be a dentist, and at the same time is a faithful attendant at the Sendagaya Church. He is an active worker, always takes part in the public service when called upon, and has been absent from the Lord's-day meetings only once in several months. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that."

A Modern Case of Philip and the Eunuch.

Brother Hosogal, who labors with us at Sendagaya, was preaching in company with several other evangelists in the town of Fukushima a few years ago, when a young man from the country, some two miles away, came to his preaching and requested him to come to his village and preach. A time was set. When it came, a cold rain was falling which was almost turned into sleet. The young man and two others were the only ones present. One of the preachers suggested that they have a prayer meeting, and he determined to do some of the best preaching he ever did, and he hoped soon that some of the few hearers might be converted. He spoke more than an hour, and at its close one young man confessed his faith in Christ and asked to be baptized. They suggested that he wait and study more, as he might not understand well enough; but the young man was so insistent that, though the night was cold and disagreeable, they went to a stream, and he was baptized at eleven o'clock at night, then walked back two miles to Fukushima in his wet clothes.

In March, 1916, Brother Hosogal went back. The young man met him at the station with the glad news that fourteen more had become Christians.

Brother Hosogal was baptized about twenty-five years ago by our lamented brother, E. Snodgrass. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Some Moving Pictures.

No questionable films are allowed in these pictures.

I gave fifteen hundred tracts to Mr. Hotta to-day (June 26) for his brother's street preaching in Osaka.

I spoke three times as usual yesterday—at the first meeting on "The Beatitudes;" at the second, on "Paul, the Foreign Missionary, and His Support;" and at night, on "A Man Without a Country—Abraham."

"Making it my aim so to preach the gospel, not where Christ was already named, that I might not build upon another man's foundation; but, as it is written, They shall see, to whom no tidings of him came, and they who have not heard shall understand." (Paul.)

A man of a nice sense of honor is one who is punctilious in doing things which he could not be punished for neglecting, and whose neglect would arouse but little disapprobation.—C. Mercier.

The Greek Participle and False Theories.

BY M. C. K.

Brother R. D. Smith, of Sherman, Texas, calls upon us to discuss in these columns the following question:

Dear Brethren: For the information of others and myself, will you please answer a question occasioned by an article which appeared in May issue of Word and Work? In the article, "How Jesus Is Coming," the last argument is made upon 2 John 7, and particularly upon the word "cometh," which is from the Greek word "erchomenon." Is it a fact, as seems to be the contention of the writer, that the present participle of "erchomai" is not used in the New Testament in a past sense?

In response to this inquiry, we feel inclined to ask, first of all, to what device, scheme, maneuver, or turn will not theorizing men resort when they set out in the search for scripture to support their visionary opinions and speculations in religion? Here now somebody has a theory about "how Jesus is coming," a subject which, though often referred to in the New Testament, yet is nowhere clearly and fully revealed as to its time and manner; and this fact alone is enough to convince any truly pious and right-thinking child of God that we should not be wasting precious time in discussing it and attempting to build up some theory about it at all, but should be content to leave it precisely where God himself has left it—locked up among "the secret things" of his own exclusive knowledge. But it seems there will always be those who lack either the sense or the grace to give heed to the following scriptures: "The secret things belong unto Jehovah our God; but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever." (Deut. 29: 29.) "But of that day and hour knoweth no one, not even the angels in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only." (Matt. 24: 36.) "But of that day or that hour knoweth no one, not even the angels in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." (Mark 13: 32.) Thus it is clearly seen that Jehovah God has exclusive knowledge of the coming of Jesus, that it is one of "the secret things" which "belong unto" him, and that he will see that the time and manner of it are properly attended to, so that we need not be concerned about it at all, except to be careful to be ready for it at all times.

But the visionary theorists of our time, Swedenborglike, must, in their own estimation, advocate and press their theories about it even if the heavens fall, or if confusion and strife result, and if the spiritual body of Christ is torn asunder and left bleeding at every pore! Far be it from them to obey the Pauline precept to "follow after things which make for peace" (Rom. 14: 19), or to obey any other precept which stands in the way of advocating and pressing their darling theories! And so, as our querist informs us, in "the contention of the writer" in this case, whoever he is, since he fails to find support for his theory in the English translation of 2 John 7, he makes an excursion into the realm of Greek participles, claiming that the participial form of the original Greek word for "cometh," as used in this passage, though it is in the present tense, has, nevertheless, a future meaning; and that, therefore, it supports the theory that Christ is coming again in a body of flesh and bones without blood to sit on a literal throne on earth over in Jerusalem. The contention is that the expression, "cometh in the flesh," means, not that Christ had already come in the flesh when John wrote, but that he would yet, at some future time, come in the flesh; but of course, to make this theory stand, it must be shown that the participle as used in this passage has a future meaning; and to show that it here has such a meaning, it is further assumed that this form of the same word is never used in the New Testament in a past sense. Will the reader please notice this interesting string of assumptions? First, it is assumed that Christ is coming again in a body of flesh and bones without blood; secondly, it is assumed that the expression, "cometh in the flesh," has a future meaning; thirdly, it is assumed that the participial form of the Greek word for "cometh" (erchomenon), is never used anywhere else in the New Testament with a past sense; and then finally, to cap the climax, it is assumed as a conclusion that it does not have a past sense in this passage! Now, if such far-fetched and strained assumptions with such would-be learned talk about Greek participles is not an instance of learned twaddle, we know not where such an instance could be found. But it sounds learned and wise to talk about Greek whether it is or not, and how can the average hearer or reader know but that it contains a powerful argument?!

But it does not require much learning to meet such talk, and we shall now present the New Testament facts with which any Greek fledgling can easily show that the resort to the Greek participle in 2 John 7, so far as supporting the groundless and visionary theory in question is concerned, is clearly a resort to a sandy foundation. Remembering that the contention is that this particular form of the Greek word is never used in the New Testament in a past sense, let us now look at the facts.

1. Matthew says: "And lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending as a dove, and coming [erchomenon] upon him." (Matt. 3: 16.) Was not that in the past when Matthew wrote? A child can answer?

2. Mark says: "For there were many coming [erchomenoi] and going." (Mark 6: 31.) And was not that in the past when Mark wrote?

3. Again, Mark says: "And they compel one passing by, Simon of Cyrene, coming [erchomenon] from the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to go with them." (Mark 15: 21.) Was not that a past event when Mark wrote?

4. Luke says: "They laid hold upon one Simon of Cyrene, coming [erchomenon] from the country, and laid on him the cross." (Luke 23: 26.) Here again the past sense is so manifest that a child can see it.

5. John says: "On the morrow he seeth Jesus coming [erchomenon] unto him, and saith, Behold, the Lamb of God." (John 1: 29.) Was not that a past occurrence when John wrote?

6. Again, John says: "Jesus saw Nathanael coming [erchomenon] to him." (John 1: 47.) Does not the term "saw" plainly show that the event referred to was past?

7. Still again, John says: "For I rejoiced greatly, when brethren came [erchomenon] and bare witness unto thy truth, even as thou walkest in truth." (3 John 3.) Here again the past tense of "rejoiced" fixes the event as past beyond all question.

8. Finally, Paul says: "For the land which hath drunk the rain that cometh [erchomenon] oft upon it." (Heb. 6: 7.)

Now, here is the plain and positive testimony of Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, and Paul furnishing eight instances of this word, six of which are in the identical grammatical form in the original that it has in 2 John 7, and the other two instances are precisely of the same form except that the number is plural instead of singular, and in all of them, with one possible exception, and it has a present sense, the past sense is not only distinctly signified by the participle, but in the case of some of them it is so interwoven with other verbs in the past tense that it is impossible to escape the conclusion that it is used in a past sense.

Finally, Prof. William Goodwin, the renowned Greek grammarian of Harvard University, a man whose talk about Greek does amount to something and is thoroughly reliable, states the general truth about the tenses of the Greek participle in the following words: "The tenses of the participle generally express the same time as those of the indicative; but they are present, past, or future relatively to the time of the verb with which they are connected." ("Greek Grammar," page 275.) He then illustrates the point with three examples of the participial form of the Greek word for "do" as follows: "He errs in doing [poioon] this; 'He erred in doing [poioon] this; 'He will err in doing [poioon] this'"—precisely the same participial form being used in all three examples.

And James Hope Moulton, that brilliant light on New Testament Greek Grammar which shines from the other side of the Atlantic, says of the participle in the New Testament: "Like the rest of the verb, outside the indicative, it has properly no sense of time attaching to it; the linear action in a participle, connected with a finite verb in past or present time, partakes in the time of its principal." ("Grammar of New Testament Greek," page 126.)

And thus it is shown beyond all doubt and all cavil that the present participle in Greek signifies either past, present, or future time according to the tense of the verb with which it is connected; that instead of "the present participle of 'erchomai'" not being "used in the New Testament in a past sense," as contended for by these present-day visionary theorists, there are at least seven other instances besides 2 John 7 where the identical form there used is found and where it unquestionably has a past sense; and so, like "the baseless fabric of this vision" in Shakespeare, away goes this visionary foundation with the visionary theory built upon it.

The Way to Settle Personal Difficulties.

BY E. A. E.

In a letter recently a good man complained of the course another good man and good preacher pursued on a certain occasion. I replied that the action of an individual, whether right or wrong, on the one hand, and the treatment accorded a preacher by a congregation, whether right or wrong, on the other hand, cannot affect the truth or error embraced in any given teaching. The evil course pursued by not a few nominal church members cannot change the truth and salvation of Christianity. The course of preachers and of congregations shows how the truth affects or fails to affect them; but the truth remains the same and unalterable regardless of the course any one pursues.

Also, I wrote that all Christians—preachers, elders, teachers, editors, however pious or lacking in piety, learned or ignorant, humble or arrogant—must settle their personal differences and difficulties according to the will of God, which is stated in Matt. 5: 23, 24; Matt. 18; and other passages of the Bible; and the truth or falsity of any teaching must be determined by the divine standard.

Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and railing, be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you. (Eph. 4: 31.)

Put on therefore, as God's elect, holy and beloved, a heart of compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving each other, if any man have a complaint against any; even as the Lord forgave you, so also do ye; and above all these things put on love, which is the bond of perfectness. And let the peace of Christ rule in your hearts, to the which also ye were called in one body; and be ye thankful. (Col. 3: 12-15.)

All Christians—preachers, elders, teachers, editors—have been called into "the peace of Christ," "in one body," and must put out of their hearts all bitterness, wrath, anger, clamor, railing, and malice; must be kind, forbearing, tender-hearted, forgiving, compassionate, lowly, meek, and humble; and, above all things, must put on love. "The peace of Christ"—the peace "in one body" (the church) among brethren and toward all men, which obedience to Christ produces and maintains—must rule in the heart. It is the arbitrator, and must control, not only the feelings, but the speech and actions of all. If the heart is right—if the heart and thoughts are guarded by "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding" (Phil. 4: 7); if it seeks peace and pursues it (1 Pet. 3: 10-13); if it follows "after things which make for peace, and things whereby we may edify [not untaught questions and all questions which God commands to be avoided, which produce strife and eat as a gangrenous sore] one another" (Rom. 14: 19); if it follows "after peace with all men" (Heb. 12: 14); "if it be possible," or, in other words, if, so far as one's own feelings, actions, and responsibility are concerned, it is "at peace with all men" (Rom. 12: 18); if it not only keeps the peace and does not break peace between others, but endeavors to make peace between others and is a peacemaker (Matt. 5: 9)—then all will come right, and gracious words, "seasoned with salt" (Col. 4: 6) and without bitterness and railing, will fall from the lips as dew upon the flower, and kindness and tenderness will flow from the pen as sweet water from the pure fountain.

It is as sinful and as shameful, therefore, in preachers, elders, teachers, editors, and others to indulge in harsh and bitter language, to falsely accuse one another, and to abuse one another in letters and papers as for two brethren to do the same on the streets or in private. If such things are wrong in one case, why not in the other? Some men seem not to know how to investigate and to discuss questions without impugning the motives of their opponents, abusing and denouncing them. This is a sign of weakness both in heart and argument. On the other hand, there are some who, not knowing, seemingly, what hatred or love is, think that stating facts and telling the truth are misrepresentation, abuse, persecution, and hatred. The truth may be told in bitterness and envy, jealousy and hatred, as Christ may be preached "of envy and strife" and faction and in a partisan and sectarian spirit (Phil. 1: 15-17); but love never winks at or encourages error and wrongdoing in any one, never shrinks from or shirks the truth, and never fails in any duty and obligation. The faithful and courageous, kind and generous, tender and loving, meek and humble Paul, the most admirable and beloved Paul, asked the Galatians this: "So then am I become your enemy, by telling you the truth?" (Gal. 4: 16.) To deal truly and sincerely with people is the only way to love them. "Speaking truth in love" (Eph. 4: 15) is God's way, and the only right way.

I have quoted several times Phil. 2: 1-11. Preachers, elders, teachers, editors, and brethren in private letters, as well as all others, must heed these things. If we do not know what anger, wrath, malice, bitterness, clamor, railing, faction, vainglory, self-esteem, forbearance, kindness, humility, meekness, forgiveness, love, lowliness of mind, being of one accord and having the mind and Spirit of Christ are, we must learn, as we have learned what baptism is, and endeavor to practice the good and to overcome the evil.

Let us study Matt. 18. We have not the space in one article to record all we may learn; but we will learn this:

1. That even the apostles, who "disputed one with another" (Mark 9: 34) who was "the greatest in the kingdom of heaven," must turn away from self-seeking and place hunting and "become as little children" or they could not enter the kingdom at all when Jesus established it; but that whosoever shall humble himself as a little child—become trustful, docile, submissive, and in malice a babe—is the greatest.

2. Whoever receives one as humble in every way as a little child—the weakest and poorest disciples of Christ—receives him; but whosoever causes these weakest and poorest and humblest disciples of Jesus to do wrong would better be drowned. It is better for such a person to be killed than for him to cause another to sin. A woe is pronounced against all who cause others to do wrong.

3. One must not do wrong oneself. It is better to part with the hand, the foot, the eye, or things so dear, or with anything and a person, than to do wrong.

4. Not only must one not do wrong and must not cause others to do wrong, but must seek to save the ones who do do wrong. As a shepherd seeks the lost sheep, so God does not desire the least disciple to perish, and hence all disciples should seek to save the ones who sin.

5. "And"—for this reason—any one who has been sinned against or wronged must seek to save the wrongdoer. The one who wrongs another is the lost sheep, or a lost sheep, because one cannot sin against another and be saved without repentance. No preacher, elder, teacher, or editor, however wise and brilliant, or otherwise, can sin against any person and be saved without repentance. I wish I had the power to cause every one in the world to see and to deeply and keenly feel this. This is why I say I had rather be wronged a hundred times, in a hundred different ways, and by a hundred different persons, than to wrong one person one time. I know that if I wrong a person by misrepresentation, slander, abuse, fraud, theft, or in any way, I will be lost, unless I repent, repair the wrong in so far as I am able, and obtain pardon. Because I am a preacher and editor and trying to teach others, I am not free from sin when I wrong in any way another, and that sin will sink my soul into perdition unless I repent. If I could cause all preachers, elders, teachers, editors, and all others to see this, I could save many from wrong, many souls from destruction, and maintain the peace of numerous churches.

6. The way to settle personal difficulties and to save the wrongdoer. To fail here is disobedience to God.

7. The importance of forgiving the wrongdoer when he repents. Matt. 5: 23, 24 teaches the wrongdoer, whether preacher, elder, teacher, editor, or any one else, how to be saved. So long as he refuses to do this he is in a lost condition, and no other service to God is acceptable until he seeks reconciliation.

Let us never forget that the one who wrongs another is the lost one.

This may be continued, but I have tried thus far to show that, as Paul says, the man who teaches others ought to first teach himself—that is, practice first what he preaches; that preachers, elders, teachers, and editors, as well as all other ordinary mortals, must repent of wrongs done others, repair the injury so far as possible, and ask forgiveness in order to be saved, and must, therefore, settle all their personal differences according to the word of God and as they very gravely and wisely teach others to do; and that the personal mistakes and wrongs committed by any preacher, elder, teacher, editor, or congregation do not change the truth or falsity of any teaching. Since almost all preachers, elders, teachers, and editors can tell others how to settle their differences, difficulties, and other troubles as the word of God directs, why do they not settle their own in the same way and set the church and the world a good example, as the Lord commands them to do?

We hope to learn next why the one wronged should go to the wrongdoer.

Some Scriptures Explained.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain 1 Tim. 5: 21-25 and Heb. 4: 14-16, which are as follows: "I charge thee in the sight of God, and Christ Jesus, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without prejudice, doing nothing by partiality. Lay hands hastily on no man, neither be partakers of other men's sins; keep thyself pure. Be no longer a drinker of water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities. Some men's sins are evident, going before unto judgment; and some men also they follow after. In like manner also there are good works that are evident; and such as are otherwise cannot be hid." "Having then a great high priest, who hath passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our confession. For we have not a high priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but one that hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore draw near with boldness unto the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy, and may find grace to help us in time of need.

Not knowing the specific points on which the querist desires information, I will notice the general teaching of the passages.

Paul's charge to Timothy is a very solemn one, as it was made before God, Christ, and the elect angels. It is probable that the word "elect" here distinguishes those angels who stood from those who fell. Even now we would all do well to do nothing by preference or by partiality. No one religiously should promote any man's cause on account of his standing, rank, or position. No one should uphold error in a man because of personal attachment for him. One should condemn the mistakes of a brother in the flesh as readily as he does the errors of one whom he has never met. Justice should be done to all without any respect of persons. The Spirit condemns glorying in men or hero worship. Factionalism and partyism are strongly condemned. Dividing into schools or any kind of parties and showing a partisan spirit is wrong. It matters not what school a man attended, what paper he reads, if he is a faithful Christian and is doing the will of God, we must deal with him as he will be dealt with at the judgment seat of Christ.

There is not perfect agreement as to the meaning of "lay hands suddenly on no man." Most commentators and critics hold that it means that hands should not hastily be laid on a man to appoint him to the ministry. A person should be proved before he receives the imposition of hands. Others understand this of laying hands on the sick. Still others understand the passage to mean that a Christian should not lose his temper and hastily lay hands on any man. If a man is not fit for any work, we should not become partakers of his mistakes by encouraging him to a work for which he is not fitted. Neither should we become partakers of any man's sin by upholding him in wrong-doing.

As there was a great work for Timothy to do in Ephesus and as he was the only one there fitted to do the work, Paul admonishes him to keep himself pure by abstaining from partiality, from laying hands hastily on any man, and from any other evil.

As Timothy's health was in a precarious state and as the water in Ephesus was not good, Paul admonishes Timothy to take a little wine for his stomach's sake. Timothy, no doubt, knew the law as well as Paul. The priests under the Mosaic law, while performing sacred rites, were forbidden to drink wine. (Lev. 10: 9.) Paul would have Timothy understand that this prohibition did not apply to him when his health was jeopardized. Thus the verse approves the use of "a little wine" as a medicine, but forbids its use as a beverage.

Some men are open in their sins; they do not seek to hide them; while others cover or conceal their sins so that they will be fully manifest only at the judgment. The same rule applies to good works. Some get credit for more by far than they deserve, while the good deeds of others will be revealed only at the judgment. Men err in judgment, but God never errs.

Christ is our High Priest who has gone to heaven to make intercession for us. Having been tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin, he is able and ready to support and succor those who are tempted. We who have confessed his name should therefore be encouraged to "draw near with boldness unto the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy, and may find grace to help us in time of need."

QUERY DEPARTMENT

Brother McQuiddy: I have a few questions I would be glad to see answered in the Query Department. Let me say in advance that I do not have a theory in asking these questions. I am working in public schools, and I consider the questions of great importance to me in my position. (1) Is it right and safe to sing religious songs with the instrument at chapel exercises, which are intended to be devotional, in the public schools? (2) If it is safe for me to do so in the public schools, would it not be all right in the Nashville Bible School chapel exercise? (3) On what scriptural authority could I ask a Methodist to lead the prayer in public-school chapel exercises? These are live issues with the Christians who are working in such institutions, and I hope they will be duly considered.

J. G. MALPATES.

It is difficult to satisfactorily answer the above query in every particular. It is easy to say that we should not encourage in any way persons who set aside the word of God; but when we come to apply this principle to the practical questions as they present themselves, we find difficulties. In our dealings with people, we should do nothing to excite the bitterness and prejudice of those who are striving to know and do the will of God, even though they fall far short of knowing the truth. It is very difficult to draw the line so that we may always be assured that we are as "wise as serpents and harmless as doves." But we do know that we should "be ready unto every good work, to speak evil of no man, not to be contentious, to be gentle, showing all meekness toward all men." (Tit. 3: 1, 2.) In striving to uphold the Bible teaching, we should not do it in a partisan or vindictive spirit, or in the spirit that "I am holier than thou." (1) As in the New Testament church there is no example of singing with the organ in the worship, we, therefore, should not expect to find scriptural warrant to sing religious songs in the devotional exercises of public schools. It is clear that the Scriptures do not authorize such procedure. Those who are guided by "it is written" in the worship of God will, therefore, not sing devotional songs with a musical instrument in the worship of God anywhere. Again, if a man regards the use of an instrument as an innovation upon the worship, he cannot in any way uphold its improper use without being false to himself. We may honestly err, but we can never be insincerely right. "To him who accounteth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." (2) In answering the first query, I have also answered the second. (3) Where the Bible gives no specific instructions, some liberty of judgment must be granted; and where this is allowed, some difference in action must be tolerated. I cannot know whether a Methodist is a less Christian than a Baptist or even a disciple who lets his love for his party, or for one practice or another not required by God, cause him to depart from Bible teaching. It is true that baptism is the act in which faith expresses itself and is the initial act of entrance into Christ, and, as such, stands as the dividing line between the church and the world; but it is better not to have known the truth than, after having known it, to turn from it. I would cheerfully give a clear and definite answer to this question could I find such answer in the Bible, but in the absence of it I can only say that we should be careful to do nothing that will encourage those in error to think that they are on safe ground; and, under this, each will have to use his judgment in applying the rule. These invitations to lead the prayers are often given as a matter of courtesy, regardless of the fitness of the one asked or the desire of the other that he should lead the prayers. This asking to take part in God's worship as a courtesy to men, without regard to one's fitness, is wrong, no matter who is invited, whether baptized or unbaptized. To ask any one to lead the prayers of a congregation when he is not in perfect sympathy with the work and purposes of the congregation is to make mockery of prayer. The person who is in fullest accord with the objects of the assembly is the one to lead the prayer of the congregation. Before calling on any one to pray, we should study the end and purpose of the meeting and look to the object of prayer. If we will do this, then lay aside all thought of favor and courtesy to men, we will not go very far wrong.

In the government mint you see them place a bit of metal on the die, and then, with a touch as silent as a caress, but with the power of a mighty force, the stamp moves against it; and, when that touch is over, there is an impression upon the coin which will abide when a thousand years have passed away. So one life moves up against another, filled with the power of the Holy Ghost and stamped with the image of Christ's likeness; and, when that touch of friend upon friend is over, there are impressions that will remain when the sun is cold and the stars have ceased to shine. It is a wonderful thought to grasp. We may live when we are dead—not only, as we trust, in heaven, but also by the impress we made in Christ's name upon others. It is a life against a life that is worth while.—Selected.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

Paper Famine and High Prices.

The price of paper, which has advanced from one hundred to two hundred per cent or more over prices prevailing a year ago, seriously threatens the life of a large number of publications throughout the country and greatly lessens the profit of others.

It is doubtful if any other large industry in the United States has had to face so serious a situation, because, when prices of raw materials have advanced, the manufacturers of the finished products have advanced their prices, and thus thrown the burden on the ultimate consumer. In the newspaper business this has not yet been done. The newspapers, from the largest dailies to the smallest weeklies, have been bearing the burden which to many publications will mean complete destruction and to many others the wiping out of all profit.

Had the newspapers of the country been as prompt to defend their own interests as they have the interests of others, they, too, would, before this, have undertaken to save themselves by an advance in subscription price and in advertising rates. Under existing conditions they will be forced to do this sooner or later, and they cannot postpone it much longer without serious financial embarrassment to many of them. Hundreds of the smaller weeklies, including the religious papers, which have had but a very narrow margin between loss and profit, will, we fear, suffer most seriously, and many of them disastrously, unless the public promptly recognizes the situation and accepts an advance in subscription and in advertising rates, and thus saves the situation.

The day laborer, the mechanic, the farmer, and nearly all business interests, manufacturing and mercantile, under the activity of the times, are showing larger earnings than for years. But the newspapers, as a whole, are meeting a more perplexing problem in the doubling, and in some cases the trebling, of the price of paper, and in the absolute inability to contract in advance for supplies, than they have ever had to face before. The statements which have recently appeared in the daily papers on the subject do not at all exaggerate the seriousness of the problem.—Manufacturers' Record (Baltimore).

The publishers have made a valiant and unselfish fight in their efforts to maintain the present low prices of their publications. It is true that some have already been forced to advance their subscription prices. No matter how liberal and well-disposed publishers may be, they cannot do the impossible, and their readers are not unreasonable enough to expect them to do it.

Paying Up to the Church.

The eternal pathos of raising money to keep churches going goes on apace. The poor pastor, himself generally underpaid, and his faithful vestry go on beating up the highways and byways to get people to do something which they ought to do, anyway. Scarcely any member of a church who belongs to a private club would dare to omit paying his club dues without the certainty of being expelled. Yet the same man goes on shirking his church obligation with blissful serenity, year in and year out. And yet, if there is any obligation for a man as a matter of common honor and decency to pay his club dues, his responsibility with regard to his church is certainly greater. A large number of sincere people look upon the church as being a purely spiritual affair, a house not built by hands. So it is. But a spiritual affair, in this world at least, has to be maintained. One might as well say that because the body is the temple of the Holy Ghost it should not wear clothes!

It takes money to run a church. The pastor has to work hard. He is entitled to three good meals a day, a good bed to sleep in, and the privilege of raising a family. He is entitled to more than this: to the sources of intellectual stimulus and inspiration. There is, besides, the necessary machinery to every church. It should have beauty, for beauty is a gift of God. It should conform in its physical aspects to modern requirements. The church should not be constantly harassed for the want of necessities common to any well-conducted business. It ought to be recognized that the running of a church is a matter of business—the most important business we have, indeed, since it is the only one that extends beyond this world into the next. This being so, why should not our churches be put on a business basis? Why cannot every church member accustom himself to think that he must pay his church dues just as regular as he pays the dues of his club? Our gas bills come once a month; why not our church dues? The churches are entitled to a little business consideration at the hands of business men.—Ladies' Home Journal.

The above editorial from the Ladies' Home Journal is worthy of very careful consideration. It goes almost without saying that a preacher is not a good business man. He is not expected to know the value of a dollar. Churches are expected to be hard-pressed for money and not to be able to meet their obligations promptly. Sound business methods should be used in the church as well as anywhere else. The management of churches should be thoughtful, systematic, and economical. Christian business men, who succeed by righteous methods, should apply the same principles to the church and not allow it to appear as a beggar. The money that we give to the church in the name of the Lord brings in greater returns in happiness and usefulness than money spent in any other way. How little happiness does a man get out of money spent for tobacco and unnecessary extravagances! Money spent for feeding and clothing orphans, for preaching the gospel, and for advancing every good work is never lost. It pays a dividend in a hundredfold ratio. As we value our souls, so do we value our churches. While the church is a spiritual body and working for spiritual ends, so long as we are in the flesh our bodies must be fed and clothed.

Every business man who is a Christian should give thought, consideration, and money for the advancement of the church of Christ. Neglecting our greatest interest is inexcusable. The church is the light of the world, the salt of the earth, the pillar and support of the truth. If the neglect and penuriousness of the church members keeps the church on the lift all the time, it cannot possibly support the truth as God has ordained that it should. We should devote ourselves, soul, body, and spirit, to the support of the church. We should give it the best we have.

Honest Effort Never a Failure.

The man who sincerely advocates the truth is sure to accomplish some good. The man who upholds and defends error accomplishes evil. God may overrule and destroy some of the effects of the evil, but he delights in blessing the consecrated service. The true friend to a man is the one who opposes him in error and seeks to convert him from the error of his way. To compromise with or condone error is to become responsible for it. An error in judgment is a small difficulty as compared with a malicious purpose to do wrong.

Duty of the Saved to Preach the Gospel.

The greatest thing in the world is love. The spirit of the gospel is love. If we have been saved by the gospel, we should know the way of salvation. If we have imbibed the spirit of the gospel, we will love the lost and cheerfully labor and sacrifice in order to preach the gospel to those who know it not. Yes, this we should do, even if there were no command to evangelize the world. If we have any part in salvation, we will divide with our brothers and sisters who are hungering and thirsting for the bread and water of life. The man who does not tell the lost of Jesus and his love is not genuinely converted.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

W. M. Oakley reports fine interest in a meeting in Marshall County, Tenn.

All should rejoice at the number of good meetings reported in this issue.

The editor of this page will begin a meeting at Lewisburg, Tenn., next Sunday.

Morgan H. Carter will begin a meeting with the Eighth Avenue congregation, this city, next Lord's day.

Look out for another special number soon, which should be appreciated in view of the scarcity and high cost of paper.

G. W. Riggs preached ten days at Riggs' Cross Roads, closing on August 23. Seven were baptized and three restored.

There had been thirteen additions in the meeting at Viola, Tenn., at last report. J. C. Estes is conducting the meeting.

O. E. Billingsley closed his fourth meeting at Reyno, Ark., with eight additions. He is now working with success in the same State.

Don't overlook the opening of the Nashville Bible School on Tuesday, September 5, at 10 A.M. F. W. Smith and other brethren will make brief addresses.

T. J. Bonner, of Neosho, Mo., will locate at St. Louis and work with the disciples in that city. The church at Murfreesboro, Tenn., will give financial support to this cause.

H. H. Montgomery writes from Shreveport, La.: "We received from a brother at Hallville, Texas, on our church building fund, $2.70; R. T. Dallas, Ardmore, Okla., $10."

The many friends of Mrs. J. M. Brady, of Spencer, Tenn., will rejoice to learn that she is recovering rapidly from a successful operation performed at Shofner Hospital, in this city.

From S. F. Howard, of Union City, Tenn.: "I do not wish the Gospel Advocate ever to stop coming, as it is one of the best religious papers I ever saw and I could not well get along without it."

From C. E. Holt, Gordonsburg, Tenn., August 25: "Our meeting here starts off well. On account of serious obstacles our meeting at Iron City was short. We expect to finish it in the fall. I am to begin at Petersburg (Chestnut Ridge) on the first Lord's day in September."

From J. Paul Hanlin, Cordova, Ala., August 26: "On last Lord's day our meeting with the church at Highland Home came to an end. There were eight additions. Here J. M. Barnes and Samuel Jordan established their school in 1831. The influence of these men and their work has been, and still is, boundless."

In J. D. Walling's letter to Brother Elam, published in a recent issue of the Gospel Advocate, the statement is made that the Christian Church at Monticello, Ky., built a house last year at a cost of sixteen hundred dollars. This should have read sixteen thousand dollars. The mistake was unintentional on Brother Walling's part.

At seven o'clock on Tuesday morning, August 22, 1916, in the auditorium of the Belmont church of Christ, in the presence of numerous friends and relatives, Mr. Cecil Kingston Noel and Miss Katherine Sevier Pope were united in the holy bonds of wedlock, Elder James E. Scobey being the officiating minister. May they have a prosperous and happy wedded life.

I. C. Hoskins, of Florence, Ala., reports an unusually large interest and attendance in the meeting at Jackson-burg. He also informs us that Dr. J. J. Horton, the physician-preacher, is conducting a mission tent meeting in Florence, near the Louisville and Nashville station. The tent was purchased by the Florence and East Florence churches for mission work.

A crowd estimated at eight hundred people shared the hospitality of Brother and Sister George Johnson and their neighbors at the Johnson home, near Franklin, Tenn., on Thursday, August 24. This annual event is now looked forward to as one of the brightest spots in the calendar. Informal speeches were made by F. B. Srygley, James E. Scobey, and the writer in an effort to explain the heartfelt appreciation of all present.

From David Thompson, Murray, Ky., August 24: "I have just closed an eleven-days' meeting with the Maple Grove congregation, in Henry County, Tenn. The attendance was very good throughout and the attention was the best. There were fourteen baptisms, and we think much good was done. The congregation promised to meet on Lord's day to worship God 'as it is written.' I go next to Cold Springs, Okla., for a meeting; then to Poplar Bluff, Mo."

From R. D. Smith, Sherman, Texas, August 25: "The meeting near Stroud, Okla., closed last Sunday night. Attendance and interest good, but no additions. T. H. Mathe-son lives at this place and labors with the congregation. He has done a great work there and the people justly love him. I will preach here next Sunday, which will close my work with the church, and go next to Tennessee for some meetings. I expect to be in Tennessee probably two months. Letters sent to Sherman, Texas, will be sent to me."

R. N. Moody writes from East Lake, Tenn.: "I left home on July 15 and have held meetings at the following places: At Red Hill, Bledsoe County, Tenn., one week, with rain, mud, small crowds, the house wrecked, and no additions; at Smyrna, beginning on the fourth Sunday in July and continuing ten days, with six baptisms; at Christian Chapel, near Amory, Miss., beginning on the second Sunday in August and continuing eight days, with nine baptisms. This leaves me in a meeting at Caldwell's School house, six miles from Amory. The meeting is four days old. No additions to date."

From C. R. Nichol, Thorp Spring, Texas: "Thorp Spring Christian College has just made another advance move. We have just received a letter from the University of Texas assuring the school of the advantages of the 'A-plus' grade junior college. This means that students who enter our college work may receive full credit in all leading universities for every hour of work they do in Thorp Spring. The outlook for the school was never so bright. When school opens, September 18, we are expecting a record-breaking enrollment. We rejoice to learn of the bright prospects of other schools in which the Bible is faithfully taught."

From D. N. Barnett, Lynnville, Ky., August 21: "There is a good opportunity to locate in your midst a brilliant, studious, God-loving minister of the gospel. The doctors have advised taking his wife to a higher altitude for her health. So West Kentucky, the first of the year, will lose an able man of God. He has had considerable experience in teaching school; has labored half time for Paducah brethren in a city of about thirty thousand people for three years; and is editor of the Gospel Message, a clean, sweet-spirited paper. We love him and hate to see him leave, but pray that health will be restored to Sister Stubblefield. Address C. M. Stubblefield, 915 South Fourth Street, Paducah, Ky. I write this unsolicited and unknowingly to Brother Stubblefield."

We should like to add our line of approval to what Brother Barnett writes.

THE MASTER'S VINEYARD

Alabama.

Mooreville, August 21.—I closed a meeting at Pleasant Valley, in Limestone County, last night, with thirteen baptized. My next meeting will be at Rome, Ga. JOHN HAYES.

Tuscumbia, August 18.—The meeting closed at the Christian Church on August 6. Thirteen were added to the church. The old and young have been greatly revived. X.

Landersville, August 21.—Last Friday night I closed a meeting of six days' duration at Oakland, which resulted in ten baptisms and one reclaimed. I am now in a splendid meeting at this place. Brethren, pray for the work in this field. C. H. BAKER.

Guin, August 21.—I closed a meeting of nine days' duration near this place with no visible results. I am now at Guin to assist in a meeting, after which I will return home, near Mount Pleasant, Tenn., to be in some meetings in my home field. J. CLIFFORD MURPHY.

Tuscumbia, August 22.—One of the most uplifting meetings ever held in the Christian Church, and one in which the gospel has been preached in the best manner, is nearing a close. Brother Daugherty is from Louisville, Ky. He has endeared himself to all with whom he has come in contact. He handles the truth in kindness and respect toward all. There have been eight additions to the church. MRS. W. H. GAMBILL.

Covin, August 18.—Our meeting at Mount Olivet was conducted by Brother C. H. Cannon, of Rocky, Okla. Also, Brother J. A. Hudson came yesterday and preached two discourses and made an enthusiastic talk at the water at the last baptizing. Brother Cannon is an able man and presents the truth in its purity. Seven were baptized into the one body. Much good was done. Brother John Kelly led the song service. Good crowds attended most of the time. FLORENCE HYDER.

New Decatur, August 22.—The church of Christ at New Decatur is now in its second tent meeting of this season. The first resulted in nine additions to the congregation; in the latter, to date, we have had one from the Baptists and one confession. We shall continue throughout the week. On the third Lord's day in September, Brother R. N. Moody, whose labors are regarded as a potent factor in the establishing of the work here, will begin a meeting with the church here. This will be the seventh meeting and one debate for the church here during 1916. Verily the people have "a mind to work," and we are all happily and unanimously engaged therein. Pray for us. J. PERRY EZELL.

Elkmont, August 18.—Brother J. T. Clark, of Pulaski, Tenn., who has been preaching the gospel in a tent at Hay's Mill, about four miles southeast of here, left for his home to-day, leaving me to close out the meeting, which I will do on Lord's-day night. Up to the present there have been three baptisms and four restorations, and I am satisfied that the seed sown by Brother Clark will bear other fruit to the honor and glory of God. All Christians, preachers not excepted, should live their lives before the worldlings, and, recognizing the great responsibilities of the Christian life, be as lights in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, holding forth the word of life, not only by means of their lips, but by their lives. I go from Hay's Mill on Monday to begin a meeting at a mission point seven miles east of Elkmont, which will run, should the Lord so will, about fourteen days. W. T. GOALEN.

Arkansas.

Grays, August 18.—At this writing I am trying to preach the word at Old Union. Much interest is being manifested in the meeting. Crowds are increasing every night. No confessions to date. I will go from here to Staves. H. F. PENDERGRASS.

Vintonia, August 17.—Our meeting at Woodrow, conducted by Brother R. W. Arrington, of Stephen, resulted in one addition—a young man of prominence in the Methodist Church and a school-teacher of Lonoke County. He did some good preaching and the brethren are well pleased with him. He will go to Lonoke on September 8 for a several-weeks' meeting. JOHN A. JONES.

California.

San Francisco, August 13.—To-day Brother W. H. Trice, of Memphis, Tenn., preached an excellent sermon. One baptism. MRS. T. J. MCRAE.

Ontario, August 14.—The congregation here is in peace, walking in the old paths, and growing, there having been twenty-eight additions in little more than a year—three yesterday. I preach in Los Angeles next Lord's day. Protracted meeting begins here on October 1. SAMUEL E. WITTY.

Colorado.

Olathe, August 15.—On last Saturday I returned home from the tent meeting at Dolores. We drove through the country both going and returning. On our return home the nearest way lay through Utah, which made it about three hundred miles, which we made in three days. The roads were washed to pieces and most of the bridges were gone, and fierce mudholes and sand dunes, especially in Utah, made the remainder of the road difficult to traverse; but we returned without a serious accident or unpleasant incident and are now well into the Olathe work again. The meeting at Dolores, while practically rained out every night, save the first and last, was not a failure, for much good was done and the way further paved for the permanent effort there later on. A small crowd braved the rain and mud every night, and a strong impression was made upon those in attendance, which will result in an early enlargement of the little congregation. On the last Sunday we were there twelve broke bread with us. This nucleus will hold the work together until greater things can be accomplished. We need a man to locate at Dolores. Several towns lie near by, where congregations could be established, if a man were located there; but at this distance it is impossible for me to stay with the work, and this fact known by the people makes them backward about entering a church "which has no preacher." I express thanks for eight dollars sent especially to aid this Dolores work, part of which was sent through Brother A. W. Arnold and the remainder sent direct to me. Our labor there was not in vain. If we did nothing more, we routed the Seventh-Day Adventists, who were getting hold there. E. C. FUGA.

Indiana.

Coal City, August 17.—The meeting at Borden closed on August 13, having been in progress through three Lord's days. The interest was splendid throughout. I have never assisted in a meeting where the church stood more nobly by the work. Brother Zahn conducted the song service and gave much assistance in many ways. During the meeting nine were baptized, three were restored, and three who had been immersed came from the Methodist Church and two from the Christian ("progressive") Church. J. E. THORNBERY.

Kentucky.

Lynnville, August 17.—Our meeting is three days old. No additions to date. Crowds large and attentive. I will continue until the fourth Sunday. D. N. BARNETT.

Poplar Hill, August 22.—At the solicitation of brethren in my old field of labor where I spent five years, beginning in 1898, I am now visiting and preaching. I have been delighted to meet and greet old friends again after an absence of twelve years. Happy indeed is the preacher who, when he returns to his old field of labor, finds a hearty welcome. I have visited Norwood and Eubanks, in Pulaski County, and am now in a meeting at Poplar Hill. Brother R. E. Todd is with me, helping in prayer and exhortation. To date there have been six additions—three baptized and three restored. We go next to Watson's Chapel, and from there to Athens. I am glad to report that my health is much improved. I have preached fifteen sermons to date in Poplar Hill, and my throat has troubled me but little. I hope to be able to visit and preach at many more places before I return to my home in Maury County, Tenn. I have reached my seventy-fourth milestone. While in this State my post-office address will be Eubank, Ky.

JAMES H. MORTON.

Oklahoma.

Coweta, August 21.—I closed a week's meeting at the Haga Schoolhouse, near Jenks, this morning, at the water. Six were baptized. I shall begin a meeting in Jenks next Friday night.

T. A. PHILLIPS.

Tennessee.

Nolensville, August 19.—Brother E. L. Cambron, of Winchester, closed a good meeting at Arrington, near Nolensville, on last Sunday night, with three baptized and one restored. The song service was conducted by Will Bradley.

MRS. P. T. SANFORD.

Ashland City, Route 4, August 21.—Our meeting at New Hope closed on August 18. Eight were baptized and three restored. We are now at Liberty Hill in a good meeting. The brethren here have just built a good house and seem to be doing well.

THOMAS C. KING.

Cookeville, August 21.—I held a week's meeting at Buffalo Valley, with four additions. We have no house at this place, but some prospects of having one soon. I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Mount Juliet with eight baptisms. Brother R. V. Cawthon was with me a few days. The meeting was good.

W. L. KARNES.

Columbia, August 21.—There were nine additions—four baptisms and five restorations—during our seven-days' meeting at Sharp's Corner, in Maury County. One of those baptized was from the Episcopal Church. Brother Ross Derryberry led the song service. I am now at Berea, in this county.

WILLIAM F. WALKER.

Shelbyville, August 21.—Our tent meeting at Green Hill for the Deason congregation closed last Friday night, with four baptisms. I am now with the Deason brethren for two weeks. I began yesterday, with the house full at both services. The church at this place seems to be in good working order, and, with the members doing their duty, we expect a good meeting.

THOMAS H. BURTON.

Centerville, August 21.—Brother L. L. Brizance began a series of meetings with the church at this place on Sunday morning, August 6, and continued it, with two sermons each day, till Wednesday night, August 16. Five were added by obedience to the gospel and one united from the Missionary Baptists. This is the third meeting Brother Brizance has conducted for us, and, notwithstanding the extreme heat, we had larger crowds this year than at any time before.

T. J. DEERYBERRY.

Cookeville, August 16.—My meeting at Zion, in Jackson County, continued ten days and resulted in seven baptisms. Our meeting at New Bethel, near Lyles, continued eight days, and three young ladies made the good confession and were baptized. At present I am engaged in a meeting with the Smyrna brethren, near Cookeville. In all these meetings much interest has been manifested, and I trust much good has been done in the name of the Master. Success to the Gospel Advocate.

GEORGE W. GRAVES.

Gassaway, August 23.—On July 23 Brother C. M. Gleaves began a meeting here, which closed on August 3 at the water. We had good crowds and good attention. Brother Gleaves is a good, plain, gospel preacher, so good that they all wanted him to come back the third Sunday in July, 1917, to hold another meeting. There was a little trouble in the church that was settled and all are satisfied and well pleased. All love Brother Gleaves as a gospel preacher. Twelve were baptized, six reclaimed, and the church was built up in faith. It was a good meeting.

L. L. MELTON.

Livingston, Route 1, August 17.—Marion Harris and I have been laboring together in protracted-meeting work this year. We have held meetings in Overton and Clay Counties as follows: An eight-days' meeting at Clemensville, with one baptism; a seven-days' meeting at Holly Springs, with one baptized and one reclaimed; an eight-days' meeting at Arcot, with twenty-one additions. We will hold a ten-days' tent meeting near Cookeville, beginning on the fourth Sunday in August.

WILLIE HUNTER.

Gainesboro, August 21.—Brother S. P. Pittman, of the Nashville Bible School, closed a series of very interesting meetings at this place on Tuesday night, August 15. Large and appreciative audiences greeted him at each evening service. There were no visible results from the meeting; but Brother Pittman presented the gospel story in its purity and simplicity, and we think the church has been strengthened and encouraged to do a greater work in the future. Brother J. M. Patterson, a very able and efficient song leader, led the singing during the meeting. Several meetings are now in progress at different points in the county.

J. C. TINSLEY.

Yuma, August 20.—I began a meeting at Mangrum, Ark., on June 3, which resulted in thirteen additions—five by baptism and eight restored. While there I successfully met D. N. Jackson, a Missionary Baptist, of Jacksonville, Texas, in a four-days' debate. I next went to Denver, Tenn., for a meeting, which was very interesting, but no visible results. I was next at Mount Moriah, in Benton County. Five were baptized into the one body. The brethren are busy erecting a house of worship. I next held a meeting at Poplar Springs, near my home, which resulted in twelve baptisms. I am now in a fine meeting at Rona's Creek, in Carroll County.

JOE L. NETHERLAND.

Obion, August 18.—On the last Lord's day in July I began a meeting at Finley, in Dyer County, and continued it until Friday night of the same week. Two were baptized during my stay. Brother Herbert Sudberry then preached from Saturday night until the following Tuesday night. Brother Jewell Cox, of Paducah, led the singing, and did his part well. I began at Fremont, in Obion County, on the first Lord's day in this month and continued eleven days. Three were reclaimed, one came from the Baptists claiming scriptural baptism, and six were baptized. This was my third meeting with the Fremont congregation. I will hold their meeting next year, the Lord willing.

T. M. CARNEY.

Troy, August 18.—The meeting at this place began on the first Lord's day in July and continued eleven days. Brother E. P. Smith, of Martin, did the preaching, and he did it well. Large and attentive audiences attended all the services. Two were baptized and the church was greatly edified. On Wednesday night after the third Sunday in July I began a tent meeting one mile north of Gibbs and about three and one-half miles east of Union City. This was a mission meeting. I held a meeting in this neighborhood last fall and had six additions. This time I continued eleven days and baptized five. This is one of the best-developed communities in Obion County, but the people know as little about God's word and the religion of the New Testament as any people I ever met. They know nothing but Methodism. On the first Sunday in August I began a tent meeting near Walnut Log, in the famous night-rider district. We had good crowds and good behavior. We had four additions and should have stayed longer; but the people on whose lot we had the tent got enough, so we were compelled to close. I expect to go back next year. For the two meetings I have received twenty-three dollars. I bought a tent to do mission work in this county, and expected the churches and brethren in Obion County to help me to pay for it, at least. I have asked them for help, but I have received only thirty-five dollars so far. It will take some time for me to pay the remaining fifty dollars at the same rate for my work that I have been getting. I am not complaining. The work needs to be done, and I love to do it. I go to a mission meeting at "Limbs" next Sunday. The church at Berea is to support this meeting. From this place I go to Refuge; then to Cayce, Ky. I hear that Brother R. C. White had good meetings at both Inglewood and Oak Ridge. May the Lord bless all who labor in his vineyard.

L. E. JONES.

Gulf, August 25.—Our meeting at Clover Hill resulted in eight baptisms and two restorations. I am now here preaching the word. Brother Murphy, of Mount Pleasant, Tenn., is leading the songs. I will meet W. D. Killingsworth, a Holiness preacher, in a four-days' discussion at Brilliant, beginning on October 23. Four propositions will be discussed. Pray for me.
A. D. DIES.

Florence, August 22.—On the last night in July I closed a nine-days' meeting at Tishomingo, Miss. Nine were baptized and one Methodist decided to be a Christian only. On August 9 I closed an eight-days' meeting at Christian Chapel, in Colbert County, with no additions. Last night I closed a meeting at New Hope, ten miles west of Florence, where I preached nine days, with three baptisms, two from the Methodists, and one restoration. I am now in a meeting at Beech Grove, near Killeen. J. T. HARRIS.

Arkansas.

Tupelo, August 24.—Brethren Z. D. Barber and T. C. Read held a two-weeks' tent meeting here. Eleven obeyed the gospel. We have set a congregation to work here.
W. S. MORGAN.

Illinois.

Vienna, August 22.—I am now in a meeting at Berea, near Vienna. I held a meeting at Calvert City, Ky., with one addition; also, a good meeting at Zaima, Mo., with five baptisms. I begin my work with the church of Christ at Waxahachie, Texas, on September 1. J. W. BRENTS.

Kentucky.

Packard, August 23.—Brother Bailey Brooks, of Tracy City, Tenn., began a meeting here on August 13 and preached eight sermons. There were eight additions to the church—five by baptism. The Baptists gave us the use of their house for the meeting. We had fine attendance and the very best of attention. Brother Brooks and Brother W. W. Bates are now in a meeting at Tracy City. DAN KING.

Oklahoma.

Granite, August 22.—I began a meeting in Granite on the first Lord's day in this month and continued it day and night over three Lord's days. The attendance was large and the interest was good from start to finish. I baptized ten persons, all adults, and two took membership. Most of them were heads of families. I baptized five Missionary Baptists and two Methodists. Brother L. F. Martin, of Elk City, led the song service. I am now in a meeting at Pleasant Valley.
W. T. BEASLEY.

Okemah, August 23.—I began a meeting at Manchester, Texas, on August 5 and continued it over the second Lord's-day night, with four confessions and baptisms and one reclaimed. This was my seventh meeting at that place in the last four years, besides an eight-days' discussion in that community with the Baptists. I have promised to hold them another meeting during the Christmas holidays if it be the Lord's will. One young lady made the good confession and was baptized here at home last Lord's-day night. H. L. Trenton, August 23.—We began a meeting here last Sunday. One restoration and increasing audiences to the present. Trenton is a nice town in a good country. Brother W. R. Hassell is the only preacher of the pure gospel in this county, so far as I have learned. J. A. SISCO.

Dyersburg, August 23.—I closed a meeting at Cedar Springs, near Louisville, Ky., on Sunday night. The attendance was the best for several years. Ten were baptized. I am here at Miller's Chapel for a week. Brother L. K. Harding preaches here monthly. W. W. FREEMAN.

OUTLINES OF BIBLE STUDY

REVISED AND ENLARGED

BY G. DALLAS SMITH

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION

Outlines of Bible Study (Revised and Enlarged) is a book of one hundred and twenty pages, besides five full-page maps covering all Bible lands. It is printed in large, clear type, on good, heavy paper, and is substantially bound in stiff cloth.

The book contains seventeen drill lessons for use in Bible drills, Bible readings, or any other Bible class where it is desired to cover the entire scope of the Sacred Record in a short time.

Outlines of Bible Study is not a commentary in any sense of the word. It contains but few comments. It is not "literature" in the same sense that some object to literature. It rather guides one in his study that it may be intelligent and systematic.

PRICES

McQUIDDY PRINTING COMPANY NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

Pocahontas, August 23.—I have recently held meetings at the following places in Tennessee: Reeves' Chapel, one added; Gooch's Chapel, two added; Gibson's Chapel, ten added—four Methodists and one Baptist. I am now in a meeting at Pocahontas, with a growing interest and two added to date. I go from here to Otterville.
R. A. CRAIG.

Lyles, August 24.—Our meeting, conducted by Brother Will Morton, of Columbia, began on Sunday, August 6, and continued till the following Friday night. The attendance was better than ever before, especially at the day services. The house would not hold the crowds at night. We had the best of attention at each service. This was Brother Morton's fourth meeting for us. We engaged him for our meeting next year. Twenty were baptized and the church was strengthened and encouraged.
GEORGE LOVELL.

Estill Springs, August 23.—Brother Aruna Clark, of East Lake, closed a nine-days' meeting at the Brick Church, nine miles northeast of Estill Springs, on August 21, with two baptisms. The attendance was excellent all through the meeting and the interest good. A large element attended from the denominations, and Brother Clark's simple and impressive way of explaining the gospel has put a number of them to thinking and reading the Bible. We think some good will result from this meeting in the future.
F. PAUL RALSTON.

Petersburg, August 24.—The meeting closed at Catalpa, at the water, last Tuesday. There were fourteen baptisms and another sister took up work at this place with us. One came from the Methodists. Brother Largen certainly did a great work while here. He will begin a meeting at Friendship to-morrow night. He will be with us in another protracted meeting next year, beginning on the second Sunday in August. We all learned to love him, and we wish him Godspeed in all his work in the vineyard of the Master. MR. AND MRS. J. E. SOWELL.

Lebanon, August 25.—Brother F. B. Srygley recently held a meeting at Bethlehem and Brother King was engaged in one at Bethel. Brother John E. Dunn is now in a meeting at Bellwood, Brother Elam's home; Brother Charles Pullas is at Berea; Brethren R. V. Cawthon and William G. Klingman are at Laguardo. Thus far there have been three additions at Bellwood, one at Berea, and two at Laguardo. Brother B. C. Goodpasture will begin a meeting at Flat Rock on the first Lord's day in September, and Brother Cayce will begin the same day at Maple Hill. Brother George A. Klingman will begin a meeting here on the second Lord's day in September. We are looking forward to having a feast of good things. JOHN A. KLINGMAN.

Oakley, August 22.—Our meeting at Independence Schoolhouse, near Oakley, began on Sunday night, and closed on the following Sunday night with two additions. We then moved to Ozone, about two miles from Independence, where we continued for a week. This meeting closed last night with twelve more added to the saved. There were a few of the faithful meeting on the first day of the week at Independence to study God's word and attend to the Supper. Last Lord's day they all agreed to meet in the future at Ozone. With those already meeting and the added ones, they will have a goodly number to meet and attend on the Lord's ordinances. I now go home to look after matters that require my personal attention for some time, so I will not be in another protracted meeting till the second Lord's day in September, when I go to Bud's Chapel Schoolhouse, in Clay County. The Lord willing it, I will go to Ozone again this fall.
JOHN H. ARMS.

Discount Your Troubles.

Most of us have a habit of neglecting the minor ills of life and just suffering until nature takes them away.

But for those who really prefer to be comfortable there is a way of discounting many of these minor troubles which costs but little time or expense.

When you happen to an accident, such as an abrasion of the skin, a scald, or burn, insect stings or bites, sunburn, or cuts, just apply Mentholatum.

The cooling sensation resulting is very grateful and helps to counteract the pain; and besides, as Mentholatum is a disinfectant and a rubefacient or counter-irritant, it protects from infection, reduces the local congestion, and expedites recovery.

Mentholatum, for these reasons, is much used after shaving. It tends to stop the smarting, and it protects the damaged skin surface from infection as well as drives away the inflammation where tiny injuries have occurred.

MONEY IN PIGEONS

Make Your Back Yard Profitable

THE demand for squabs in the Northern, Eastern and Southern markets has never been supplied, because pigeon raising as a business is comparatively new. Buy a half dozen pair of select birds, fence in a small portion of your back yard and watch them go to work. Success is easy. They raise from eight to fifteen pairs of squabs a year. Your squabs and fancy birds will bring handsome returns. You will actually make money in a hitherto useless part of your back yard. Pigeon raising is not a fad or fancy. It is a profitable business. Let us start you right. Our breeders are the best, and raised from prize winning parents. We will furnish you with the birds and teach you how to raise them, and you will reap a handsome profit with a very little outlay. Thousands are taking advantage of this same opportunity. Write to-day for our literature on pigeon raising as a money making proposition, or better still, write us to send you a few pair of Belgian Carneaux at $3.00 per pair, White Swiss Mondaines at $5.00 per pair, White Kings at $3.50 per pair, or White Maltese at $4.00 per pair. Our birds are all guaranteed. Your money back if after two months you are not satisfied with their work. Better prices on larger orders. Write to-day and get the pick of the flock.

Gadsden, August 18.—I came here to-day to begin a meeting on Sunday morning. I came from Konawa, Okla., where I baptized five. The meeting was very well attended, and many preaching brethren visited me during the meeting. These were a source of encouragement, besides assisting in the work.

T. H. ETHERIDGE.

Centerville, August 22.—In July I preached as I had opportunity at Sulphur, Byers' Chapel, Etina, Brushy, and closed a five-days' meeting at Taylor's Creek, with no visible results. During this month I spent one week in Wayne County, at Ashland and Morrow's Valley, with no additions. In the absence of Brother Tidwell, I preached a few days at Sulphur (my home) last week, with splendid interest and one from the Methodists. The southern part of Wayne County is inclined toward digression. Brother H. N. Mann, at Riverside, Lewis County, is doing a great work in his vicinity and in Lawrence County. Brother John Lancaster is bravely battling around Coble, while Brother Andrew Lancaster is pitted against odds at Ashland. JAMES E. CHESSOR.

Ballinger, August 18.—The Lometa meeting continued nine days, with the largest attendance ever witnessed in Lometa, resulting in four being baptized and one restored. Brother Ben West came in the third day of the meeting. He had speaker's paralysis. I regretted very much that he could not speak while there. He has accomplished a great work there, and every one in and out of the church loves him. He is now being treated in Temple. I will go to Brady on August 19 and continue over four Sundays. All the meetings that I have conducted since last fall continued from eighteen to thirty-six days, except the one at Lometa. We hope for a great meeting in Brady. I will begin the work in Ballinger with at least an eight-days' meeting. Everything looks very bright for the cause in Ballinger. Let all who may desire to arrange meetings for another season address me at Ballinger. E. A. BEDIČEK.

Nolanville, August 18.—The annual camp meeting at this place closed last Lord's-day night, having continued ten days. This was one of the most successful meetings we have had in several years. Nine were born into the one body and one restored. We had big audiences and excellent behavior and attention. There was a large attendance of visiting brethren from various parts of the State. Hence the good effects of this meeting are State-wide. Brother A. B. Barret, of Cleburne, did the preaching. He is one of the strong men of his day at using the "sword of the Spirit." He declared the whole teaching of the Bible on points under discussion in a bold, forceful manner, at all times manifesting the love of Christ. Brother Austin Taylor was our leader of songs. He is a master in this work. He greatly endeared himself to us all because of the noble, Christian spirit that was so evident in his life. These two men make a strong gospel team, and I am glad to say that they are coming to help us in our next meeting, the Lord willing. J. E. LUCAS.

It becomes a man more than his furnishings or his house. It speaks for him in the heart of every one. His friendships are serene and secure. His strength is like a young tree by a river.—Selected.

CHURCH NEWS

Tennessee.

Dickson, August 24.—I began my protracted-meeting work on the third Sunday in June at White's Chapel, in Warren County, where I preached for two weeks, with reasonably good interest, and baptized two persons. From there I went to St. Mary, in the same county, and held a week's meeting. Three were baptized. I began a meeting at Craigfield, in Williamson County, on the third Sunday in July and continued it till the following Saturday night. There were no additions, but the brethren seemed to be strengthened. I began at Parham's Chapel, in Hickman County, on the fourth Sunday in July and continued till Friday night, with no additions. I began a meeting at Berry's Chapel, near Franklin, on the fifth Sunday in July and continued it about ten days. Five were baptized. My next meeting was in West Tennessee, at the hardest place I ever tried to hold a meeting. Two little girls who had been in a Catholic school and under their influence generally were baptized.

A. B. GUNTER.

San Antonio, August 18.—I closed a ten-days' meeting here with the South Flores Church to-day. One was baptized. I had to close too soon, but hope to come back later.

GEORGE M. RANCE.

San Augustine, August 25.—I have just closed a meeting at Mercury, which resulted in twenty-three baptized and two restored. I am now at San Augustine. My next meeting will be at Durham, Okla. E. M. BORDEN.

Mesa, August 14.—I closed a good meeting of ten days' duration with the Antioch congregation last night. Good interest; meeting well attended. Five were baptized. There were some hindrances. My time is not all taken. I can be reached at Cross, Texas.

G. B. LAMBRIGHT.

Indian Gap, August 18.—I closed a meeting at Pottsville on Wednesday night. Fourteen were baptized, four were reclaimed, and one took membership. We had a fine hearing. There is a good church there. We had two services a day—5 P.M. and 8:30 P.M. A great awakening of church and the people.

TICE ELKINS.

Buffalo, August 23.—Last Lord's day we had one more addition here by relation. This brother is husband to the sister whom I baptized recently. He is a man of some talent, and we expect to use him in the Lord's work as he increases in strength. While we are on the road to final success in this section, yet our lack of means is a very great hindrance. Some, perhaps, have not as yet sent anything for our relief because they do not have much Prospects for Alabama Christian College.

The Alabama Christian College, at Berry, Ala., will open its next session on Tuesday, September 19. Our faculty is complete. The school is fortunate in being able to assemble the teachers it has upon such short notice.

Brother R. B. Clements, a graduate with an A.B. degree from Potter Bible College, will be dean of the collegiate department. He is a man of deep, conscientious, and devout reverence and regard for God's will, an educator of nine years' experience and some normal training.

Brother A. M. Scott is dean of our new commercial college. He is master of several systems of bookkeeping, two systems of shorthand, and every line of special work that is connected with the best business colleges. Brother Scott has not only taught in some of the best colleges, but has owned and operated a commercial college of his own up until a few days ago. He comes to enter upon his duties in a broader field. We are able to offer as strong a course in this line as can be had in the South. Besides, our moral surroundings and opportunities in other ways are unsurpassed. Professor Scott's wife is also a teacher of literary work and shorthand.

Miss Ruth Hawk, of Pennsylvania, a graduate of King's School of Oratory, will have charge of the music and expression departments of the college. We know Miss Hawk personally, and we can commend her as of a kind, energetic, and pleasing disposition. She is a real artist in her lines and will make her work felt for good. She has been elected, as have all of our teachers, because of her special and practical fitness for the work we aim to do.

Dr. Byron W. King, Ph.D., will spend one week with us during the session in giving a lecture course. Other work along this line will be had during the session.

Mrs. Hal P. McDonald will have charge of the primary and intermediate departments of this school. This will insure the best possible work and oversight of the pupils.

I have charge of the college for five years, and I propose to give the public the best work possible and to merit a large portion of their patronage.

Brethren should make it a point to investigate our work and favor us right now with their unstinted support, as we are late and have many obstacles to overcome; but with only the encouragement we may normally expect, we will rise to the point and place that our efforts and work so well deserve. Brethren and friends of Christian education should write to the school for full information. It is free. HAL P. McDONALD, President.

Whenever You Need a General Tonic Take Grove's

The Old Standard Grove's Tasteless chill Tonic is equally valuable as a General Tonic because it contains the well known tonic properties of QUININE and IRON. It acts on the Liver, Drives out Malaria, Enriches the Blood and Builds up the Whole System. 50 cents.

We have in stock a number of "Studies in Recent Adventism," by Henry C. Sheldon. "An especially timely review and analysis of the assumptions, claims, and teachings of Adventism." The name of the author guarantees the character of the book—its lucidity, its scholarly style, and its weight of authority. It will be an invaluable antidote to the materialism, Russellism, and premillennialism of to-day, and a strong weapon for students and teachers who must meet and answer this false teaching. Price, 50 cents.

Commendations of "Christian Treasures" continue to come in. Volumes I and II are now ready for delivery. The price is $1 per volume. Brother Larimore says "It is easy to find single chapters" that are "well worth the price of the volume." Read his statement and others from appreciative brethren.

This Wife and Mother Wishes To Tell You FREE How She Stopped Her Husband's Drinking

By all Means Write to Her and Learn how She did it.

For over 20 years Jas. Anderson of 161 Pearl Ave., Hillburn, N. Y., was a confirmed drunkard. His case was about as bad as it could be, but a little over twelve years ago his devoted wife, after years of trying, finally succeeded in stopping his drinking entirely.

Write to this woman if you have a relative or friend who drinks

Not only did she save Mr. Anderson but she stopped the drinking of her brother and several of her neighbors as well. All this she accomplished by simple home treatment which she now desires every man and woman who has a relative or friend who drinks, to know all about, for she feels that others can do just as she did.

The treatment can be given secretly if desired, and without cost she will gladly and willingly tell what it is. Therefore every reader of this notice who is interested in curing a dear one of drinking should write to Mrs. Anderson at once. Her reply will come by return mail in a sealed envelope. She does this gladly in hopes that others will be benefited as she was. One thing she asks however, and that is that you do not send money for she has nothing to sell. Simply address your letter with all confidence, to Mrs. Margaret Anderson at the address given above and she will reply by return mail in a sealed envelope.

Report from North Carolina.

BY W. L. BEEVES.

The work in and adjacent to the city of Winston-Salem is progressing very nicely. Since my last report, or during the last month, ending to-day (August 21), we have had thirty-eight baptisms. These were in four meetings which were conducted by Brother M. C. Kurfees, of Louisville, Ky.; Brother Frank Dunn, of Nashville, Tenn.; and the writer. Besides these baptisms, much good otherwise was accomplished.

Under my urgent solicitation Brother M. C. Kurfees came and preached twenty days in Winston-Salem, beginning on July 9. The meeting was held in a tent which we placed near the square, right in the heart of the city. It rained in torrents often throughout the time of the meeting. Seven nights while the people were assembled in the tent it poured down rain. This, with band concerts on the square near the tent, theaters, and religious opposition, kept many away from the meetings; but, in spite of it all, the strong plea Brother Kurfees made for the one Way accomplished much good, and the few brethren in the city are well pleased, indeed, with the results. Only four were baptized, but some strong members who were meeting with the "progressives" were induced to quit them and unite their efforts with our little congregation in the southern part of the city.

Our work in the city could be at once placed in a situation to accomplish far more good if we could raise two hundred dollars more than we are able to raise among us. This amount is greatly needed to help finish our house inside so it will be more comfortable for the winter and help pay for our church property. Fifty men who read this are able to send four dollars each and never miss it. Who will be one of these fifty to do so? I am sure that if the brethren who can easily give at least one dollar could realize the vast amount of good that has been done in two years' work in this city, and if they could see the great possibilities for greater good to be done here as Brother Kurfees and the writer sees it, this small amount of two hundred dollars could and would be raised at once. My motive is now, and has been for two years, to soon build up this city work so it can sustain a man all the time while he evangelizes the whole city. In September, two years ago, I came here to hold a tent meeting, and found three members—a man, his wife, and daughter—breaking bread in their home. We now have fifty members, most of whom meet regularly; but we have to get our church property paid for be-

THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

One of the brightest and most entertaining of all our Sunday-school publications is THE YOUNG PEOPLE, a four-page weekly, devoted especially to the interests and welfare of young people of both sexes, but which will prove a channel of cheer and blessing to older ones as well. This periodical has just been consolidated with THE BLUE STRIPPER, and presents the strongest and most essential features of both in an improved form. Three pages are given to stories of an entertaining and elevating character and articles of an educational nature, by gifted and well-informed writers, strikingly illustrated by photo-engravings and line drawings; and one page is devoted to a clear and concise presentation of the Sunday-school lesson, historically and exegetically, by A. B. Lipscomb, one of the editors of the Gospel Advocate, in which are presented the thoughts of many of the world's best thinkers. The size of the page is 10 3/4 x 14 inches. Printed from clear type on good paper.

WHY WOMEN WRITE LETTERS

To Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co.

Women who are well often ask "Are the letters which the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. are continually publishing, genuine?" "Are they truthful?" "Why do women write such letters?"

In answer we say that never have we published a fictitious letter or name. Never, knowingly, have we published an untruthful letter, or one without the full and written consent of the woman who wrote it.

The reason that thousands of women from all parts of the country write such grateful letters to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. is that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and happiness into their lives, once burdened with pain and suffering.

It has relieved women from some of the worst forms of female ills, from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, nervousness, weakness, stomach troubles and from the blues.

It is impossible for any woman who is well and who has never suffered to realize how these poor, suffering women feel when restored to health; their keen desire to help other women who are suffering as they did.

fore we can sustain a preacher all the time while he evangelizes the city. All donations should be sent to W. L. Reeves, Clemmons, N. C., who will receipt for same.

Brother Frank Dunn, son of Brother John E. Dunn, has been with me to help build up the work at the different objective points, but he will go back to Nashville on August 28 to resume his studies in the Bible School when it opens. He spent seventy-eight days with me. I sent him to hold several meetings, and he did his work well. In one meeting in Rowan County he baptized eighteen; in another, seven. He closed a meeting last night out of the city, but I have not had his report yet. Brother Dunn is nineteen years old this month; but when it comes to holding a successful meeting, he can do an excellent work for one so young.

I need another helper. Where can I find a sacrificing young man upon whom I can depend without doubt, who will come and join me in this work? I do not want a man unless I can absolutely trust him as one who can do good work, and who will heartily cooperate with the brethren all over this field of labor. May God help us all.

Notes from West Tennessee.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

The meeting at Jones' Chapel began on July 30 and closed on August 13, with twenty-six discourses, five baptized, eight restored to fellowship, and we hope some good done otherwise. Some propositions were written, signed, and handed to the Baptists at New Liberty, in Lake County, which perhaps will be heard from later. The congregation at Jones' Chapel is getting along fairly well. It seems the persecution is getting worse all the time, which is evidence of the fact that the influence of the congregation is being felt.

We are now at Burris' Chapel, in Lake County. Began Thursday night. Very good audiences so far, considering the intensely warm weather and dust. Here, as at all other points, the faithful few are bravely standing by the work with no thought of giving up, but to fight faithfully to the end. Brother R. C. White has just closed a meeting at Oak Ridge, with twelve baptized and several restored. The brethren in Lake County had better call Brother White into this field, as it seems that I can baptize but few this year. So come over, Brother White, into Lake County and baptize the people after teaching them the "way of life."

On the first Lord's day in September I shall, the Lord willing, begin a

Where Drugs Fail.

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from Shivar Mineral Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, gallstones, kidney or liver disease, uric-acid poisoning, or other conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer as printed below. His records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported no beneficial results. This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful spring. Simply sign the following letter:

What is the Club?

The Gospel Advocate Piano Club is both a theory and a fact. The theory is that a piano factory can afford to sell one hundred pianos and player-pianos at a much lower price than it would be willing to make on an order for only one instrument. The fact is that the club has saved each of its members forty per cent.

The theory of the club is "cooperation." The fact is "perfect satisfaction." The theory is: "A square deal to every member." The fact is: "Every member is delighted."

If you are interested in securing a piano or player-piano of the finest quality at the lowest possible factory price, write for your copy of the club's catalogue, discount sheet, and terms. Address: Associated Piano Clubs, Gospel Advocate Department, Atlanta, Ga.

The Question of Destiny.

If there is coupled with the thought of man's existence any bigger word than "destiny," I do not know its meaning. Take it any way you please—refer it to the nation, to the State, to the city, to the family, or to the individual—there is no more awe-inspiring question than this: "What am I coming to? What shall be my destiny?"

The idea is prevalent that the destiny of a people or of an individual is an unknown quantity; that no man can tell for a certainty whether a nation will rise or fall or whether a person will be saved or lost. The current belief is that only time can tell. Let us not jump hastily at such a conclusion; for the Bible teaches us plainly that destiny may be a known quantity, if we will take pains to follow the guideposts that God himself has erected along the highway of time. When the children of Israel were in Egyptian bondage, God sent them, through his servant Moses, this message: "I am Jehovah, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will redeem you with an outstretched arm, and, with great judgments: and I will take you to me for a people, and I will be to you a God; and ye shall know that I am Jehovah your God, who bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians.

And I will bring you in unto the land which I swear to give to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it you for a heritage: I am Jehovah." (Ex. 6: 6-8.) Thus we see that the children of Israel were not left to guess at what their destiny would be. They had God's assurance as to what they might expect. Of course the details of the divine plan were not revealed. They were not told just how and when they would be delivered, but they were assured that it would come to pass.

God Delivers if Man Makes Good.

We follow the history of this nation and we find that God's promise is redeemed. Every word comes true. Israel was redeemed from Egyptian bondage "with an outstretched arm" and "with great judgments." Before they came into the land of Canaan as had been sworn to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, God spake again: "If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them; then I will give your rains in their season, and the land shall yield its increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit. And your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time; and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely." (Lev. 26: 3-5.) Here we see written again in large letters a nation's destiny. Here we find the additional truth that the good things promised are not only dependent upon God, but they are dependent upon Israel. The good destiny is conditioned by the words: "If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them."

Upon investigation we find that God has spoken to the individual as to the nation in outlining his destiny. The message to Abraham is a prominent example. "Now Jehovah said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto the land that I will show thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." (Gen. 12: 1-3.) Joshua's commission is none the less inspiring: "There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life: as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. Be strong and of good courage; for thou shalt cause this people to inherit the land which I swear unto their fathers to give them. Only be strong and very courageous, to observe to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest have good success whithersoever thou goest. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate thereon day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success." (Josh. 1: 5-8.) Let us observe, as in the case of nations, that Abraham's good destiny is dependent, not only upon God, but upon Abraham. He must obey the command. He must leave his country, his kindred, and his father's house. Joshua's "fixed star" of hope is not fixed unless he makes good. To become successful, he must be strong and of good courage and the book of the law must not depart out of his mouth.

Shall we admit that God dealt so frankly with the men of olden times and doubt that he is able and willing to help us of the twentieth century? Have we not the right to expect the same divine favor upon our compliance with the same divine conditions? Shall the fact that we are not of Abraham's seed disbar us from a helpful knowledge of what our destiny shall be? Hear Peter's answer to these questions and believe: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him."

Destiny and Duty Are Correlated.

Destiny and duty are words closely correlated. The one should always suggest the other. Man's starting point in relation to destiny is a matter of decision. He is brought face to face with the word of God. He must either accept it or reject it. There is no middle ground, no room for a neutral position. Elijah said to the wavering Israelites: "How long go ye limping between the two sides?" And Jesus said with emphasis: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." The riches of the Bible are so great that they can only be expressed in figurative language. Hence, Isaiah cried: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." (Isa. 55: 1.)

In a great many cases a man's success or failure in life can be traced to his treatment of God's word. Aaron Burr in his autobiography tells us that when he was about nineteen years of age he saw that a decision must be made between the world and God. He went into the country for a week to consider the matter. He then made a resolution never to trouble himself about the soul's salvation. That disastrous decision was the beginning of an evil destiny. From that time on he threw himself recklessly into sin, sinking lower and lower in depravity until he fell into a traitor's grave. We are told that when James A. Garfield was a boy at Williams College he climbed up Mount Greylock one day with a number of companions and passed the night on the mountain top. Seated around the camp fire, they sang college songs and told stories all the evening. As they were about to lie down for the night, young Garfield took a Testament out of his pocket and said: "Boys, it's my custom to read a chapter and have prayer before going to bed. Shall we have it together?" And they did. And it was, doubtless, young Garfield's resolution to honor the Bible that won for him a nation's admiration. "My son, forget not my law; but let thy heart keep my commandments: for length of days, and years of life, and peace, will they add to thee." (Prov. 3: 1, 2.)

"Because I've Got It to Do."

We cannot think seriously of destiny without thinking of determination. There must not only be a decision, but there must be the resolution to carry it out. Like Joshua, we must be strong and of good courage, else the good destiny we have elected will slip away from us. Julian Ralph, in his brilliant book, "The Making of a Journalist," tells this:

"A friend of mine met a cowboy once, fifty miles from any town or camp, dragging a steer by a rope. He had lost his horse, and was walking. The sun was tropical, water was nowhere to be found, Indians might appear and kill him; still he tugged at his burden. My friend inquired where he was dragging the steer and was told the cowboy's destination was a place two days distant on horseback.

"Why," exclaimed my friend, "what makes you try to pull a steer all that distance?"

"Because I've got it to do," was the cowboy's laconic answer."

We are not told any more, but we can be sure that the "cow" and the cowboy got there. That kind of a worker always gets there, no matter how hard the "cow" is to drag or how long the distance. "Because I've got it to do" is the true worker's battle cry. And in the Christian's race, above all endurance is the price of victory. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."

Destiny and Death.

We cannot disassociate destiny and death. The two are inseparable. Death is not destiny, but it is a factor in every man's destiny. Paul writes: "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this cometh judgment." Death marks the time when man's part in destiny's plan is finished. After a man dies, whether he dies abruptly or calmly, the matter of destiny is no longer dependent upon him. The days of probation are over. Destiny is now irrevocably, eternally, and entirely in God's hands. When Jesus was a man, he recognized this unchangeable law. "We must work the works of him that sent me," he exclaimed in a spirit of unflinching zeal, "while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." Just before he was stoned to death, Stephen "looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God." When this man looked into heaven, he looked into his own destiny. He saw just what death would mean to him. When Dives was in torment, he asked that Lazarus be sent to dip the tip of his finger in water and cool his tongue. But Abraham, after reminding him of what he had received during his earthly lifetime, said: "Between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, that they that would pass from hence to you may not be able, and that none may cross over from thence to us." Thus we see that Dives' destiny was sealed at his death. To prepare for death means to prepare for destiny. The man who teaches that there may be another period besides this life in which to work out destiny is a deceiver and the truth of God is not in him.

Determined by Choice.

Our destiny is determined by our choice, and our choice must be made in this world. Joshua's battle cry fits the gospel of Jesus Christ: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." When you face the gospel invitation with power to accept or reject, you may little realize it, but you stand at the parting of the ways, which means destiny for you. It is interesting in our study of Paul's life to note the different ways in which the rulers who heard him speak treated his message. Felix said: "Go thy way." Festus said: "Paul, thou art mad." Agrippa said: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." When each man spoke, he expressed not merely his opinion of Paul, but he spoke his own destiny. Two young men sat in the same pew in Iowa and heard the gospel invitation. In response to the request to give their hearts to Christ, one said: "I will;" the other said, "I will not." To-day one is a successful evangelist; the other is in a State penitentiary. I leave you to decide, dear reader, which is which.

The Next Ten Years.

I heard a man say the other day that he would give a large sum of money to know just what the next ten years will bring forth in this country's history, just what changes will be wrought, just what disasters will overtake us. But I shall not cherish nor cultivate this impatient spirit. I should like to get ready for the future without prying into its secrets. So far as the mighty upheaval of worldly governments is concerned, I should like to trust God implicitly and lean upon the Everlasting Arms. I should like to believe that all the changes that are to come are safe in the Almighty's hands; that there are many things coming in the nature of a glad surprise, and that there are many things that God mercifully veils from our eyes. Give me the faith that is ready to say: "I know him whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to guard that which I have committed unto him against that day" (2 Tim. 1: 12), and to say again: "I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 8: 38, 39).

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

"The Black Shadow."

BY F. W. SMITH.

With the above text as a basis, the Christian Standard of June 3 in a short editorial comments very pointedly on the "General Convention of the Churches of Christ."

This criticism was called forth by the following report from E. L. Allen, of Indianapolis, Ind., under the heading of "Parading the Corpse:"

The Indiana State Convention met at Danville on May 15-18. The attendance was very large, over eight hundred being registered. The Danville church and people took care of the convention admirably. Their fine and well-appointed building seemed to be the admiration of all. It is not my purpose to mention the program and speakers in detail, but only to offer a few observations.

In the first place, it should not have been called, as it was on the front page of the printed program, the convention of the churches of Christ of Indiana. It was not that, but a convention of individual Christians. The churches, as such, never authorized it or sent any representatives to it, with possibly a very few exceptions. We have always been a great people to call things by their right names. It should have been done in this instance.

But it is of the address of W. F. Richardson of which I wish to speak in particular. He spoke Tuesday evening, May 15, and his subject was "The Glory of the Church." Much of his speech was good, although he referred to the church as established before it was established. Toward the last of his address he rather went out of his way to lug in the so-called "General Convention of the Churches of Christ." He made this out a part of the glory of the church, apparently. He tried to maintain the position that the churches had demanded something of this kind. But when I asked him to furnish me a list of the churches that demanded it, he could not, or, at least, did not, furnish the list. I still demand of Brother Richardson the list of churches which of their own free will and accord demanded the so-called "General Convention of the Churches of Christ;" and since he has made the statement so public that they did demand it, he is in duty bound to furnish it. I am sure the many churches of this Restoration movement that did not demand such a thing would like to see the list of the churches that did demand it, and they have a right to see such.

He also said, in substance, that the "General Convention" would be a good thing to cut off so many movements started by individuals and others having no authority to do so, or words to that effect, and also referred to such enterprises as wrecks, etc. Who is the authority among us to say what missionary agencies shall be started and what shall not? If the "General Convention" is going to do this, it will be an ecclesiasticism pure and simple. I thought the teeth of the animal had been extracted and that resolutions had been passed avowing that it had no intention of usurping ecclesiastical authority, and now—lo and behold!—its president tells the people of Indiana in convention assembled that it will do that very thing. Whom are we to believe, its president or its former resolutions and avowals? From Brother Richardson's speech, one might get the idea that all individual enterprises and things started among us, not especially authorized by some "recognized" missionary society, have been failures. Is this true? The fact is, at least eighty per cent and maybe ninety per cent of our congregations in Indiana have been started by individuals going out "on their own hook." I recently wrote a sketch of the Indianapolis churches, and found that nearly all of them have been started by individuals. I guess they are all wrecks, according to Brother Richardson's way of thinking. I notice that last year the five evangelists in Indiana organized four churches, with all the machinery and money of the State Society back of them. I organized three myself, and it did not cost our State Society one penny, nor anybody else very many pennies. But I guess what I have done is a wreck, and the General Convention ought to stop it, according to Brother Richardson's way of putting it. What more successful foreign mission work has ever been done than that that has been done, and is being done, by W. D. Cunningham in Tokyo, Japan? What better or more successful, benevolent work than that that is being done by the Christian Woman's Benevolent Association of St. Louis? Or what better educational work than that that is being done, and has been done, by Johnson Bible College, Phillips Bible Institute, or the International Christian Bible College at Minneapolis, Minn.? As I understand it, none of these institutions has been recognized by the General Convention, and, according to Brother Richardson's reasoning, should be suppressed.

I notice, in the report of the Indiana Society, that all five of their evangelists baptized five hundred and twenty-one last year. I know of many single evangelists who have had this many in one meeting. Should they be suppressed? Judging by what I heard one of the speakers at the convention say, when he referred to evangelistic meetings as "drunks," maybe they should, as some people look at it. But it is a fact that most of our membership, as it is at present constituted, came into the church during an evangelistic effort. I guess, according to the speaker referred to, they came in during the time when the church was on a spree, and they ought to come again after the church is sobered up. This is not the first time such enterprises were referred to as "drunks." Peter and his companions were called "drunk" on the day of Pentecost, and Agrippa thought Paul was "mad." These complacent fellows who could not hold an evangelistic meeting if they wanted to are wont to decry evangelism. Then, there is the National Evangelistic Association, which has never yet been recognized by the General Convention. Is it to be suppressed? I understand Brother Fife, who was at the Indiana Convention, tried to get a little time to present his work, but was refused; and also Sister Ayars, of St. Louis, I understand, was refused a little time to present her work. The program was "too full."

If the Indiana Christian Missionary Association is going to recognize and countenance the so-called "General Convention," after other societies are trying to get from under it, seeing where it has taken them, it is time our people were knowing it; and if they are not going to recognize it, it is time also for this to be known. After according it a place on their State Convention program for a speech in its favor, without any chance for any reply to be made, it now looks as if they are recognizing it and in favor of it. If so, it is time for the churches and individuals that have been contributing to the State work to know this, so they can act accordingly. It was thought by many that the "General Convention" was dead, and that we were going to have a little peace in our Zion, but now it has been reopened and stirred up again in Indiana. Ahab accused Elijah of troubling Israel, when Ahab was the fellow that was doing it. The Federationists and General Conventionists accuse us of troubling our Israel, when they are the guilty parties themselves. Let them quit all these questions that cause strife, turn their attention to preaching and living the pure gospel of Jesus Christ, then there will be no trouble. But all such questions as these gender strife.

The following is the editorial:

THE BLACK SHADOW.

At the close of May, as at the close of February, say war-news headliners, "the shadow of Verdun hangs over Paris." The interest of Standard readers in war topics may be scant or serious, and their sympathies varying, but the "shadow of Verdun" suggests a situation in which they have deeper interest. The essay by B. L. Allen in this issue (page 8) points at the "General Convention of Churches of Christ" looming on the horizon again.

This dark shadow that began to be seen at Pittsburgh in 1909 has been hanging over our national missionary gatherings ever since. It began to assume proportions at Topeka; it fell back perceptibly at Portland; it arose, black and threatening, at Louisville; it receded again at Toronto; it hung low at Atlanta; it lifted somewhat at Los Angeles, and since then has shown signs of being dissipated entirely; at least, it had come to be classed with the "Congress of Disciples" and other things that have been, but that continue to exist in name only.

But—lo!—now, in a State convention, under the theme, "The Glory of the Church," the shadow falls again. So those who contemplate going to Des Moines must go wondering what is to come of this anomalous, ecclesiastical creation.

We had hoped that those responsible for the unwelcome scheme might cease their advocacy and relieve our missionary boards of further embarrassment. It would be better that some gentle medicine "to make it die easy" be administered now than that the feeble thing be nursed along to a less graceful demise.

We regret to see the black shadow rising again. The "General Convention" cannot do much injury to the churches, for they will have none of it, but it acts as a parasite, sucking up the life current of every enterprise associated with it. For the general good of all agencies, and in the interest of the peace that promotes progress, the whole propaganda should be abandoned, and that without delay.

The editor says: "The General Convention cannot do much injury to the churches, for they will have none of it." The churches have had very much of it. In fact, the churches gave the "General Convention" birth—made it possible to become "the black shadow" which is so much dreaded by the Standard and others. Furthermore, if some churches are not having some of it, how does the thing live? The "General Convention" is but the legitimate fruit of "our missionary boards" and "our different enterprises." Had the churches been content to work as did New Testament churches, there would be no "black shadow" to haunt the dreams and disturb the slumbers of the Standard's editor. The efforts of the Standard to get from under and away from that "black shadow" are comparable to the man trying to cure a dog's bite while all the time letting the dog bite him. Brother, why keep the root of a poisonous weed in the ground and waste time in trying to destroy the species? Pull up the root, if you would destroy the growth. Your "boards" and "agencies" constitute the root from which "the black shadow" sprang; and if you would have no shadow, then have no root. But Brother Allen informs us that at least eighty or ninety per cent of the congregations in Indiana were planted without the society or board. Exactly so, and the same is true of other States. Why, then, turn away from the New Testament plan, which has proven such a success, to one that produces "black shadows" which give editors and others such nightmares?

Brother J. O. Blaine and the Church at Portland.

BY G. C. BREWER.

In the providence of our Father above, it has been my good fortune to assist the church at Portland, Tenn., in three meetings, and I shall never cease to be thankful that these brethren found me and I found them during the lifetime of our aged and beloved brother, J. O. Blaine. This brother is already known to most of the readers of the Gospel Advocate; and his picture, as well as an excellent speech from him, will be found in the book, "Franklin College and Its Influences." That speech, however, was delivered many years ago, and that picture represents a strong and stalwart man in the vigor of a robust manhood. Time has wrought its changes and our brother is now bending beneath the weight of many years. He is far down on the shady side of life, but his hope is sure and steadfast and his faith falters not. His interest in earthly things is necessarily waning, but his soul is still "afire with the love of Jesus' name" and he ardently and enthusiastically supports the truth and labors to advance the cause of the Master. Like Paul of old, he is standing on the boundary line between two worlds and joyously anticipating the "home over there;" but while waiting for the sweetly solemn summons, he determines that for him "to abide in the flesh" shall result in good to the living. His whole life and all that he has possessed has been used to the glory of God. He has literally spent his life for others, and I feel that the readers of the Advocate would be cheated out of an inspiring life story if I were not to acquaint them with at least a few brief facts of his history.

Brother Blaine had two blind sisters and an afflicted brother, and for these and other dependent persons he has spent his life. He has never been married. A strong believer in marriage and a lover of children, he has sacrificed the privilege of marrying and rearing a family in order that he might give his time to the helpless.

The church at Portland stands as a monument to Brother Blaine's work for the Lord. The brethren there freely give him the credit for the establishing and the overseeing of the work there. The church is now strong and active. Brother Blaine has committed the word to "faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also;" and his work will continue long after he is called to rest from his labors.

Not only the church, but all the people of the town and surrounding country hold our brother in high esteem and veneration. He is one prophet that is not without honor in his own country.

Brother Blaine is one of a company of veterans for the Lord that is now about to be mustered out of service. His Alma Mater is the same kind mother that nurtured Lipscomb and Larimore, Sewell and Scobey, and a number of others of "whom the world is not worthy." Let us all breathe a prayer for the Father's richest blessings upon these faithful soldiers in their last days.

The Restrictive Clause.

BY J. D. WALLING.

"Since the church at Monticello, Ky., is asking for the fellowship of the brotherhood, it might be well to make a statement of their faith, that all may know for what purpose their money will be used. I state, therefore, that the restrictive clause is in the deed to the lot upon which the house will be built." (J. D. Walling, in Gospel Advocate.)

Well, that is rich. A Campbellite preacher honest enough to admit that he has a creed, for a statement of faith is a creed. Worse still. A Campbellite preacher using his creedal statement of faith as a plea for help to build a house of worship. Worst of all. A Campbellite preacher with a creed in print, published in a Campbellite paper, making his appeal for help upon the plea that the congregation can never go back on that creed, because it is in the deed to the lot upon which the house is to be built.

That is richness, indeed!—H. B. Taylor, in News and Truth.

The above effort to be funny appeared in the "News and Truth" (?), a Baptist periodical which has its periphrase from Murray, Ky., and is the persiflage of one H. B. Taylor. In the gentleman's perk effusion of news and truth (?), he thinks he has found the perimeter. He seems to think it something rich and rare to find an honest preacher. Are all Baptist preachers perfidious in their pertinacity? The gentleman says that I admit that I have a creed, "for a statement of faith is a creed." Has the scribe not perspicacity enough to perceive that, while a creed is a statement of religious faith, a statement of faith is not always a creed? In his further pedantic effort he seems to think it something just awful that any one should make any effort to protect church property. But we are not surprised at all at this. The Baptists in this county are now holding and occupying two houses, paid mostly for, and by those people he delights to call "Campbellites." I wonder, if the gentleman should buy a piece of ground on which he purposed to build a home, would he allow the deed to be made in an uncertain manner? To be sure not. And why would he want to protect his home? For the same reason we put the restrictive clause in our deed. Honest people have no objection, neither are they alarmed, when other honest people safeguard their rights. For the reason that some untaught questions have been promulgated by those who have no creed but the Bible, the church at Monticello thought it good "that all may know for what purpose their money will be used." However, we are not at all surprised at the phosphorescence of the erudite gentleman from Murray. He who has no better manners than to call his fellow-man by names he refuses to wear has a poor idea of ethics. Especially so when he himself repudiates the name of the King for that which he proclaims to be a nonessential ordinance. We do not repudiate the name of Campbell because we are in any sense ashamed of him. Why should we be? As a debater he met all comers, and was the first Christian to meet an infidel in open discussion, and that after the denominational world had selected him as the one man to defend the truth. Of him the New York Independent said: "There is not a religious body in Christendom that, whether it will confess it or not, has not been profoundly affected by his life and work." Robert E. Lee applied to him the words of Milton: "He was a man in whom were illustriously combined all the qualities that could adorn or elevate the nature to which he belonged; knowledge the most varied and extended, virtue that never loitered in her career nor deviated from her course. A man who, if he had been delegated as a representative of his species to the many superior worlds, would have suggested a grand idea of the human race." And this is the man that you stigmatize.

Taylor, if I were you, I think I would go out and back up against the south end of a north-bound mule. But before you go up against a Joab, tell us, is it not a fact that one can be a Christian, and go to heaven when he dies, without ever being a member of the Baptist Church? If so, why should he strain himself trying to carry all that load of "Adamic nature," close communion, "once in grace, always in grace," repentance before faith, and other junk too numerous to mention? It is a known fact that you never saw a Baptist that did not boast of how Baptist he is. Will you please, sir, tell us where in the New Testament we can read about a Baptist since John was beheaded? Don't tell of the Christians at Ephesus or other places; we want one that some one called a "Baptist." If they were Baptists, they would have been sure to have said so. Then please, sir, tell us in what history we can read of a Baptist Church prior to 1607. Benedict says: "John Smyth established the first Baptist Church of which we have any account." John Smith was a minister of the Church of England. Was Benedict true to history? If not, please produce the proof. Did the apostles ever call themselves "Baptists?" If you say the apostles were Baptists because they baptized folks, why do you call women "Baptists," who do not baptize any one? Do you not think it sinful to call Christ's disciples after a man? Or are Baptists Christ's disciples? Don't you think the name of your paper a misnomer?

From far-away Siam comes a remarkable testimony to the value of the word of God, given by a native preacher, Nai Soot, in that country. He mentions seven ways in which the Scriptures are of the greatest value to him and then adds that the Scriptures might be likened to a mirror of the heart: "The manner of its use is nearly the same as that of a face mirror. When any one doubts if his face is clean, he takes the mirror and looks to see how his face is dirty and then takes soap and water to wash it clean. In the same way, when any one doubts that he has sinned and his heart is defiled, he should take this glass and consider in order that he may behold his sinfulness."

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

Christianity Grows.

John Nelson Mills says: "I found that in India there were about four million Christians. Not many, you say, compared with three hundred million heathen. No, not many. But I also found that these three hundred million Hindus and Mohammedans were chiefly concerned, not how they might maintain themselves against each other—not that; nor how they might maintain themselves each within his own ranks—not even that; but how they might maintain themselves at all against the growing power and influence of these four million Christians. And I found them changing their creeds, modifying their practices, and even conforming their lives to meet with the teachings and practices of these four million Christians. And Dr. R. F. Horton, one of the most distinguished clergymen in Great Britain, who was in India at the same time I was, said on his return home that he is convinced that India will be Christian within a generation."

It is encouraging to note that the heathen are conforming their lives to the teachings of the Bible. An inconsistent practice of the Christian religion is a great impediment to the growth of Christianity in our own country. It is not enough to accept Christianity in theory only, but it must also be accepted in practice. A man may be baptized and contend for taking the Bible as our only guide in religion, but so long as he is dominated by the flesh his influence will go for naught in advancing the religion of Christ. A man may boast of his orthodoxy; but if his practice is unorthodox, if he gets drunk, or if he gives way to his evil desires and passions, he will be a hindrance to Christianity. Christianity teaches us temperance, or self-control. The Spirit commands: "Put to death therefore your members which are upon the earth: fornication, uncleanness, passion, evil desire, and covetousness, which is idolatry; for which things' sake cometh the wrath of God upon the sons of disobedience." (Col. 3: 5, 6.) So many professed Christians cultivate an unforgiving spirit; they bear malice toward their brethren instead of in humility being kind and gentle to all men. They stand on their dignity. They deny any one the right to criticize their conduct or teaching. How different is their conduct from the following teaching of the Spirit: "Put on therefore, as God's elect, holy and beloved, a heart of compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving each other, if any man have a complaint against any; even as the Lord forgave you, so also do ye: and above all these things put on love, which is the bond of perfectness." (Col. 3: 12-14.) Instead of fighting each other, Christians should keep busy in fighting self and the devil. The greatest and most dangerous enemy any one has to conquer is self. Man lusts for power and position. He aspires to leadership instead of humbly following the leadership of Jesus Christ. Power proved a curse to Solomon, the wisest man. The true Christian is the strongest when he realizes his own nothingness in the sight of the Lord. Our noblest ambition is to know, love, and humbly do the will of the Lord. Some boast of their soundness. They tell us that they have been members of the body of Christ for over a quarter of a century, yet they have not sufficiently grown in grace to abstain from strong drink. They are so under the control of their appetites that they are still seen to reel under the influence of drunkenness. Some allow angry words from an unbridled tongue to fly. What a world of mischief they stir up! "And the tongue is a fire: the world of iniquity among our members is the tongue, which defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the wheel of nature, and is set on fire by hell." (James 3: 6.) While we cannot tame the tongue, we can bridle it. Keep thy heart pure; and then if the bridle is taken off the tongue, it will speak the right things. While we contend for the faith, we should also contend for self-mastery. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city." (Prov. 16: 32.) "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service. And be not fashioned according to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God." (Rom. 12: 1, 2.) We must constantly wage a warfare against the flesh. It is a fight, a constant fight, so long as we are in the flesh. "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are contrary the one to the other; that ye may not do the things that ye would." (Gal. 5: 17.) The conflict became so great even with Paul that he cried out: "Wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me out of the body of this death?" But the dark and lowering clouds did not overwhelm him. The rays of light came streaming down through the rifted clouds and he looked up to the true source of all help and said: "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." * * *

Printed Blackness.

Wrong speaking is bad; wrong writing is worse. A well-known publisher has been quoted as saying that "there is no such thing in print as a white lie; all printed lies are black lies; the spoken lie is evanescent and of limited effect, but the printed lie reaches thousands and hundreds of thousands, and its destructive influence cannot be estimated." So it is of anything untruthful or unloving or unguarded that we put into black and white in even a personal letter to a friend; this is almost certain to do a great deal more harm than the same word spoken in conversation. Ink and paper preserve the sin; the words are likely to be read and reread by the one who is injured or wounded or antagonized by them. It is never safe to take pen or pencil in hand while we have in our hearts even a feeling that is wrong.—Sunday School Times.

I give the above to our readers with the request that all our scribes read it and scripturally practice it. We may lose control of our temper, may fly into a rage and say things of which we should be heartily ashamed and for which we should earnestly pray God's forgiveness. But there is no excuse for mean, vicious writing. If we are mad and out of humor, we should seek our closets and pray. Even if it becomes necessary to write unpleasant facts and truths, the writing should be done in a spirit of gentleness, firmness, and meekness. The man who sees nothing but good in himself and nothing but evil in others should take the advice of Christ when he says: "Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." A Golden Opportunity.

BY W. HUME M'HENRY.

The apostle Paul exclaims: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past tracing out!" In attempting to fathom the wisdom manifested by God in dealing with humanity in arranging a dispensation of mercy to all, Paul was overwhelmed and thus exclaimed. Well might we so exclaim to-day. And well might we thank God for presenting to us so many and so grand opportunities of presenting the glorious gospel of Christ to all nations. The church of Christ stands to-day face to face with opportunities unparalleled since the beginning of the Reformation. Practically the whole world is calling for God's word. Many of the most densely populated countries which for so long a time were closed to missionary activities are to-day open fields for the proclamation of the gospel. Does it not look a little like God wants the gospel proclaimed in them, since he has opened the way? You and I with our limited capacities need not try to comprehend the almost innumerable thousands which to-day are entirely ignorant of the living God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Vain and unreasonable efforts are made to erase the stains of sin. The bleeding sacrifices upon thousands of altars remind us that the blood of bulls and goats cannot take away sins. We know (but they do not know) that the precious Lamb of God has shed his own blood for our sins. Why do they not know? Sacrifices and sufferings untold brought Christianity into the world. Well might we humbly thank God for the heroes of the cross who, aflame with the love of God and kindled with an insatiable desire for the salvation of mankind through the blood of Jesus, rose above the vanishing glories of life and counted not their lives as dear unto themselves, that they might accomplish their course and the ministry which they had received from the Lord Jesus to testify the gospel of the grace of God. O that there might be a real revival of that spirit! While the life for Christ is necessarily a life of sacrifice, it is equally a labor of love. Love is something that we must possess or we are nothing. It matters not what may be our intellectual attainments or priestly profession. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Will we really welcome the opportunity of truly sacrificing for Christ in order to place the word of God in the hand and heart of all the peoples of the earth? "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee." Yes, awake. Let us not shrink from what appears a gigantic task. Let us look upon it as a "labor of love," a sacrifice which none should hesitate to make for Christ. It is not a question of can we evangelize the world, but a question of will we do it. God will do his part; will we act to-day?

The religion of Rome is a religion that thrives best in ignorance; it is a reign of ignorance. The invention of the printing press ushered in a new era. In proportion as the printed page penetrated the darkness of popery, in that proportion the mist of ignorance began to vanish. The diffusion of knowledge, especially the word of God, freed Europe from papal bondage. The greatest enemy the printers had then (and even to-day) was the Catholic Church. Well may we thank God for the press. By its means the fruits of the Reformation are seen in every land. The Bible to-day is the most popular book in the world. Its sale far exceeds all others. It is printed in practically every tongue of the earth. I have before me, as I write these lines, a copy issued in 1912 by the British and Foreign Bible Society, in which is shown specimens of Scripture in four hundred and ninety-eight languages in which that society alone has printed the Bible or portions of same. This means that practically all peoples may read the wonderful works of God in their own tongue. Praise God!

Dear brethren, are our eyes closed to the precious opportunity before us of putting God's word into the hands of the people? O that we might open wide our eyes and fully realize the weight of the responsibility that rests upon us! Do not the huge systems of error—a perverted Christianity—make rapid progress? Why? Because of their unflagging zeal to carry their message to the people. Behold the tactics they use to place the printed page in the hands of the people. In this the children of error are wiser than the children of light. Where we have one missionary, they have scores. Where we distribute one copy of the Bible, they distribute train loads of their poisonous literature. Why is this so? Can it be that they are more devoted to their doctrine than we are to the Lord Jesus Christ and his blessed word? I will be pardoned for referring to my own experiences in India to bring this more forcibly before you. Truly there seems to be an awakening in India. At Pandapur, in Poona, and in the far North it is the same—a crying demand for Gospels and tracts. On several occasions Brother Jelley and I have found ourselves in the midst of eager crowds and almost crushed by the people, who, knowing that our supply was limited, would rush upon us. In Poona, even with the assistance of three policemen, the crowd could not be restrained. Cards come to us requesting copies of the Scriptures. We meet people unknown to us in the streets and are asked if we have any books with us. These are cold facts. Our hands are empty except you contribute to this great work. What is true of India is true of other mission fields; at least, I am persuaded that this is the case. Shall the nations perish for want of the "bread of life?" I am persuaded not. I am glad that I can be optimistic over the future prospects of the work of the children of God. Some have heard our appeals, thank God, and many more, after reading this, are going to remember the heathen in India as well as in other nations. Let some congregations or individuals take this up as a regular work. Let some contribute five dollars per month to keep a few men stationed at the railway centers to distribute Gospels and acquaint the people with the work of the Lord. Who can begin to estimate the good that might be accomplished? "What thou doest, do quickly." And, dear brethren, remember that the world needs many more missionaries among the heathens, as well as funds for distributing the word.

"For the heart grows rich in giving,
All its wealth is living grain;
Seeds which mildew in the garner,
Scattered, fill with gold the plain."

Nothing dissipates cobwebs like active service, and we all occasionally weave cobwebs of some sort or other.—Anthony W. Thorold.

Dr. Horner's Resignation and the Ideal New Testament Church.

BY M. C. K.

The latest sensation in religious circles in Louisville, Ky., is the resignation of Dr. W. W. Horner, pastor of the Twenty-second and Walnut Street Baptist Church, and the reasons submitted for his action. As briefly stated by himself, in a note read on the occasion to his congregation, they are as follows:

To the Members of the Twenty-second and Walnut Street Baptist Church.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: After many seasons of very earnest prayer and fasting, I have decided to offer my resignation as your pastor, to take effect the 30th of September.

I am not doing this because of any friction between us, for there is none, and you are well aware of the fact that the fellowship between the pastor and our people, and between the members themselves, is the best the church has known for years. Neither am I taking this step because of any discouragement on my part concerning the future welfare of the church, for the indications are that the possibilities for what the world calls success are as great as they have ever been. Nor am I severing my relation with you for a larger mercenary consideration elsewhere, for I have received no call to a church.

THE VOICE OF GOD.

In a few words, my reason for offering my resignation is simply this: It is the will of God. For many years an impression, which has become a conviction with me, has grown upon me that modern churches do not approach the New Testament ideal of a church, except in rare cases, and there is need to-day for the organization and establishing of pure churches. This must be done by the people to whom was given the truth in its purity by their Lord, who are now known as "Baptists." Furthermore, the greatest need in the world to-day, next to the salvation of sinners, is the unity of the believers in Christ. The Baptists have the only scriptural program upon which all the redeemed of God may unite and not sacrifice any truth; and if true to their Lord, they must do everything within their ability to bring about the unity of believers. Jesus Christ prayed that his children might be one as he and the Father were one. Certainly if the Triune God wills it so, it shall be not only the desire but the purpose of every child of God to bring about this unity.

CALL IS CLEAR.

As clear as my call to the ministry more than twenty-five years ago is the call of God to me to organize and establish a pure church, to whose membership will be invited only those who give evidence of regeneration, who have followed or are willing to follow their Lord in Bible baptism, who pay their debts to God and man, who refrain from sinful pleasures and alignments, and who seek to know and to do the will of God in everything.

I am following where the Spirit leads, and must live the life of faith, taking one step at a time as he shows the way.

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fringed palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

With a love for every member of the church as affectionate as a pastor can feel, and with the prayer that the Lord will send you an undershepherd of his own choosing to take up the work where I lay it down, and with the further wish that spiritual prosperity may attend you always, I am, in the best of bonds.

Your pastor in Christ,

W. W. HORNER.

The Twenty-second and Walnut Street Baptist Church is one of the largest churches in Louisville, having, as at present reported, two thousand and four members; and under the leadership of Dr. Horner it seems to have been signally prosperous and to have at this time a promising and bright future before it. Under such circumstances his published statement of reasons for his action, though it does not enter into doctrinal details, shows, nevertheless, that its author is undoubtedly actuated by high and worthy motives, and it furnishes an occasion for some timely reflections touching the wide divergence between the average popular church of our time and the New Testament ideal.

As a fitting preface to such reflections, our readers will be interested in knowing that the writer, desiring to encourage, at all times and with all persons, every step in the direction of a complete return to the New Testament platform of work and worship, addressed to Dr. Horner the following letter:

Galt House, Louisville, Ky., August 15, 1916.—Dr. W. W. Horner, Twenty-second and Walnut Street Baptist Church, Louisville, Ky.—My Dear Brother: On my return from North Carolina my attention is directed to your recent action in resigning your position as pastor of the Twenty-second and Walnut Street Baptist Church, and the reasons which you assign therefore. Of course, knowing nothing of your principles, plans, and purposes, except as given in the brief statement which appeared in the papers, I may not have sufficient data to express myself definitely and fully on the position you now assume; but, whatever it may be and whatever may be the outcome of your action, it is quite evident that you see the wrong of denominationalism or division in the body of Christ, and that you not only desire complete disentanglement from everything which constitutes denominationalism itself, but to stand on the common ground in religion on which all the children of God can and should stand; and I not only congratulate you on the step thus taken, but am ready to extend the hand of heartiest fellowship and to give you my sincere Godspeed in your noble resolve.

For many years it has been a growing conviction with me that, with the New Testament as our guide, there is not one particle of divine authority for denominationalism in religion, and that it is the duty of every child of God to stand on ground on which every other child of God can stand without any sacrifice of truth, of principle, or of conscience. Unquestionably this is the only position which will stand every test.

Under separate cover I am sending you my editorial review of Dr. Landrum's tract, entitled "If You Are a Christian, Why Not a Baptist?"

Praying God's blessing upon you and that your future efforts may accomplish much toward the union of all believers in Christ, I remain, Yours most fraternally,
M. C. KURFES.

The following courteous and fraternal note was promptly sent in reply:

Your very kind letter and copy of newspaper reached me to-day. I have only had time to read your letter, but shall read the articles to which you refer.

I thank you very much for the interest which you express in my future course, and hope to have the pleasure of meeting you soon. It is my purpose to begin my special life work on Sunday afternoon, October 1, announcement of which will be made through the daily press, and I trust that you may be able to attend this first service.

Again thanking you, I am, Yours cordially,

W. W. HORNER.

That modern church life, in its most popular aspects, with its pompous ritual and secular tendencies, furnishes abundant cause for just complaint and criticism with all who understand and appreciate the simplicity of New Testament order, cannot be well denied; and Dr. Horner is by no means alone in the general view which he seems to take of the regrettable situation. To assist in the effort to effect disentanglement from denominationalism and a complete return to the New Testament, we respectfully invite attention to the following observations in the way of emphasizing some of the points suggested by Dr. Horner's public statement.

1. He calls attention to "the New Testament ideal church." It would probably be a waste of time to even try to get the average fashionable church of to-day to conform to the New Testament ideal, for the simple reason that such churches, judging them by the fruits they bear, seem not to perceive even the necessity for any such conformity. Though professing to follow the New Testament, they claim the right, under what they term the "law of liberty and progress," to depart from it in some instances. But there are others who, like Dr. Horner, see the necessity for strict conformity to the New Testament ideal; and to these and with these, as far as we may reach them, we enter the solemn plea that this ideal can never be attained and maintained except on the condition of adopting and strictly following the principle or rule of procedure embodied in the famous and familiar motto: "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; and where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." Breathes there a mortal who can pick a flaw in this motto? And if it was not intended that the principle which it embodies should be followed, why were the Scriptures given to us at all? If we may depart from this principle, even to the least extent—that is, if we may ever speak where the Scriptures do not speak, and be silent where they do speak—then why may we not ignore the Scriptures altogether, and speak when we please, where we please, as we please, and what we please? If this conclusion does not follow, then we should be glad to know why it does not. Moreover, since we are distinctly told that "the secret things belong unto Jehovah our God; but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever" (Deut. 29: 29), we add that the only possible way to respect this divine classification of things is to proceed in principle in accordance with the motto in question.

2. Dr. Horner declares that "the greatest need in the world to-day, next to the salvation of sinners, is the unity of believers in Christ." Exactly so; but again we ask, how can it ever be accomplished, except by speaking when the Scriptures speak, where the Scriptures speak, what the Scriptures speak, as the Scriptures speak, and being silent in all these particulars as the Scriptures are silent? Is it not as clear as a demonstration that as long as different persons speak in different ways, some departing from the Scriptures in one thing and others in another, just that long divisions and parties will exist? And even if union could be had on some departure from the Scriptures, it would not be the union required by the Lord.

3. Finally, Dr. Horner makes the timely point that God's children should "do everything within their ability to bring about the unity of believers." And here he not only states a great and vital truth, but it points again to the only possible way by which such a desirable and praiseworthy end can ever be attained. We feel absolutely safe in the declaration that denominationalism will never come to an end with the union of all believers in Christ in accordance with the New Testament ideal until the denominations themselves, with an open New Testament, shall be willing to face and discharge the following threefold duty: (1) To carefully survey their faith and practice, retaining whatever they are preaching and practicing that can be read in the New Testament. (2) Laying aside everything that cannot be read therein. (3) Adding to their faith and practice whatever can be read therein that they are not already preaching and practicing.

If this course were faithfully pursued, denominationalism would vanish before the power of the truth like a snow bank before the rising sun, and the union of all believers in Christ would inevitably follow. May the Lord help us to see and to follow this truth.

Flies.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

"Preach the word" is a divine demand that every faithful gospel preacher appreciates and gladly heeds. Every worthy gospel preacher, loyal and true to Christ and his cause, if he feels as he ought to feel, feels as the peerless apostle felt when he wrote: "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me: yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" He believes the gospel "is the power of God unto salvation;" but he also believes "godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Some one has said: "Cleanliness is next to godliness; hence Sunday is church day and Monday is wash day." But I believe cleanliness is not simply next to godliness, but is a very important part of it; hence I believe it is perfectly proper and right for gospel preachers to preach against flies and other filthy and troublesome things, publicly and privately, with tongue and with pen. What some preachers and other people say about flies privately is satisfactory and sufficient, probably; but few express their sentiments on the subject publicly as clearly as they can.

Flies, mosquitoes, and yellow fever were long conceded to be unavoidable evils; but, after it had been clearly and unquestionably demonstrated that without mosquitoes there could be no yellow fever, Panama, New Orleans, Memphis, and other yellow-fever centers suppressed the mosquito; hence there's no more yellow fever there.

Science has made it clear that yellow fever is not the only curse of which the mosquito is the cause; but, still, many a barrel, kettle, tub, can, or pan of water is permitted to become and be a pernicious, pestiferous mosquito factory, furnishing mosquitoes enough to torture and make miserable a family or community that otherwise might be free from them—and happy.

In Uncle Sam's little spat with Spain, bullets killed a few—only a few—of his brave boys in blue, and one is said to have been scared to death in the battle of Manila Bay; but many, without wounds, died of disease resulting from unsanitary conditions prevailing in camps, where flies and filth held high carnival.

Our Uncle Samuel is older and wiser now than he was in 1898; hence from San Antonio, Texas, came, July 15, 1916, the following dispatch: "A half million dollars will be spent immediately by the quartermaster's department in the erection of screened buildings to be used as kitchens and dining rooms. Notification that the war department had authorized this expenditure was received at department headquarters to-day. These screened wire buildings will be erected all along the border, the present plan providing for two thousand six hundred and twenty-five."

So, then, on the American-Mexican border we are to build and maintain two thousand six hundred and twenty-five screened kitchens and dining rooms for the health and happiness of our soldiers on the border, this being only the beginning—the first installment.

Infantile paralysis is claiming so many precious, priceless treasures that our country is startled, shocked, and grieved. From health officials in the capital of our country, in conference concerning this scourge, comes the suggestion: "Suppress the flies." This is simply one of many official suggestions to save the little ones. It is marvelous that any family or community in our country, or in any other civilized country, should ever need such suggestions, or even the simple suggestion: "Swat the fly and save the baby."

It seems certain, in the light of recent scientific investigation and demonstration, that all who have ever died of yellow fever were killed by mosquitoes. How many millions have been killed by flies, no mortal may ever know. Why not screen our homes thoroughly, keep them screened, keep the screens in perfect repair, and keep them securely closed?

Better not have screens, however, than to have them and not properly fit them, not keep them in perfect repair, and not keep them properly closed. A screen with a hole in it, or so adjusted as to permit flies and other pests to pass through crack or crevice at the top, side, or bottom of it, or a screen not kept properly closed, is a fraud—is worse than no screen. To hold a screen shutter open to talk to some one inside or outside of the house, instead of talking through the screen or stepping to the other side of it, is silly.

Why establish and maintain fly factories or mosquito factories? Any vessel, little or large, from a quart cup or can to a mammoth cistern, filled with water, especially rain water, exposed to the light when the weather is warm, is a mosquito factory, unless it is thoroughly covered, and kept covered, with coal oil; hence, any of us may, if we will, supply ourselves and near neighbors with mosquitoes enough to make us all miserable and create a distressing demand for doctors and probably for undertakers.

An unclean, carelessly kept barn, stable, or kitchen may be sufficiently successful as a fly factory; but the most successful, disgusting, detestable, and abominable of all fly factories is a filthy privy, unkept and uncared for.

When you enter a dining room in city, town, or country, and find a swarm of flies there, you may almost absolutely know they have come from some such filthy place. No wonder that "one fly spoils the feast" when we see it in the milk, the gravy, or the soup, and think of whence it came.

Can a home be kept free from flies in "good, old summer time?" Some homes can, I know; and, with proper care, including cleanliness and the liberal use of time, many homes where flies now swarm can be kept comparatively so. Mrs. Larimore and I are occupying during our sojourn at Lawrenceburg a comfortable home on the eastern edge of the town, about one hundred and fifty yards from our nearest neighbors. The house is a two-story frame building of twelve rooms, with a broad porch almost entirely around it. It has been occupied nearly all the year, Mrs. Larimore and I now alone occupying it while the former occupants are away enjoying their summer vacation—probably some of them fighting mosquitoes and flies. At noon, August 16—the middle of the middle of the month supposed to be most favorable for flies—I sought diligently all over the house, inside and outside, and failed to find even one fly. Since then I have repeated that performance frequently with similar result. So, I know one home—and, of course, others—can be kept free from flies in "good, old summer time."

We claim neither chromo nor compliment because of the cleanly condition of this home, however. The honor is not ours. We are simply hoping and trying to keep it as clean and comfortable as we found it. That's all.

Lawrenceburg is a great little town of about twenty-five hundred inhabitants, beautifully situated, with perfect natural drainage, a bountiful supply of water as good as the best, and a fine system of waterworks, including up-to-date sewerage; and I have been informed that local law demands that every human habitation within the corporate limits shall have proper connection with water and sewerage, and be kept in sanitary condition. Why not? So, then, it is not wonderful that some homes here, if not all, are flyless. I move that we make it unanimous, and make Lawrenceburg a spotless, as well as flyless, town.

Does some one say, "Some of us are not able to screen our homes and keep the premises clean and free from flies and mosquitoes?" Soap, water, coal oil, and lime are cheaper than medicine, and screens cost less than the services of physicians and undertakers, to say nothing of the loss of time, and of the trouble, inconvenience, suffering, and sorrow incident to sickness and death.

Lawrenceburg has been in my field of labor forty-seven years, Mars' Hill, my Alabama home, being only about thirty-three miles south of here. While Nashville, about eighty miles north of here, is my home now, I have lived and labored in this field while a generation has been born, brought up, and buried. I have a host of friends in this field, loyal and true—friends as faithful to me as ever David or Jonathan, Damon or Pythias, was to the other.

I think I remember when there were only two people at Lawrenceburg who claimed to be members of the church of Christ, and I'm not sure they lived in the town. Now we have many members and a good meetinghouse here.

The original building—brick—seemed immense when it was new, as the congregation then consisted of only seven members. The church grew so rapidly that the house had to be enlarged long before it became old. The growth of the church in membership, as well as "in grace and in the knowledge of the truth," has been, and still is such that I think the day is not distant when the dear old house, decidedly too small and entirely unsatisfactory now, must give place to an up-to-date building, commensurate in size, shape, and convenience with present demands.

All this is the work, not of one, but of many; and I'm glad I'm one of that many.

Why we are at Lawrenceburg now: "It is good to be here"—always, I had never taken a vacation. Brother Stribling believed I needed a rest, and resolved to give it to me. Brother Thornberry expected his home to be vacant a few weeks, including August; and, when Brother Stribling suggested to him that he was going to bring us here for a rest, if we would agree to come, he said: "I'll be delighted to have them occupy my home and use everything in it and about it exactly as if it all belonged to them." Hence we are here, in Brother Thornberry's home, and at Brother Stribling's expense.

Brother Thornberry insisted on our eating some of his beautiful thoroughbred chickens; but, not being strictly orthodox on the chicken question, we have spared the chickens and eaten the eggs. While resting and recuperating, I am permitted to preach three times a week—Sunday, Sunday night, and Wednesday night.

We have greatly enjoyed the liberality and hospitality of these good brethren and association with friends and loved ones here, and the rest has been exceedingly beneficial to me; but the time of our departure is at hand, as my Manchester meeting must begin Sunday, September 3; and duty demands that I be elsewhere between now and then.

If you notice I have not stuck to my text in this treatise, please remember I'm a preacher. That explains that.

How to Settle Personal Difficulties.

BY E. A. E.

WHY SHOW THE OFFENDER HIS FAULT?

Continuing from last week, this article is an answer to the question, Why should the one sinned against go to the one who has sinned?

First, let us seriously study just what Jesus says:

And if thy brother sin against thee, go, show him his fault between thee and him alone: if he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he hear thee not, take with thee one or two more, that at the mouth of two witnesses or three every word may be established. And if he refuse to hear him, tell it unto the church: and if he refuse to hear the church also, let him be unto thee as the Gentile and the publican. Verily I say unto you, What things soever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and what things soever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. Again I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father who is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. (Matt. 18: 15-20.)

In regard to this very duty of the one who has been sinned against to go to the one who has sinned, Jesus, in Luke 17: 1-4, says:

It is impossible but that occasions of stumbling should come; but woe unto him, through whom they come! It were well for him if a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were thrown into the sea, rather than that he should cause one of these little ones to stumble. Take heed to yourselves: if thy brother sin, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him. And if he sin against thee seven times in the day, and seven times turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him.

Let it be observed, first, that Jesus says to his disciples: "Take heed to yourselves"—be careful, or on your constant guard, that you do not cause one to stumble, do not wrong any man or otherwise sin. But instead of sinning yourselves or causing others to sin, you must seek to save the ones who have sinned.

The command of God to the one who has been sinned against to go to the one who has committed the offense is as plain and positive as any command he has ever given, and the reason for going, or the design, is just as clear and strong. What is it? It is right to study and to teach the design of baptism and the design of every other command of God in so far as the Scriptures give the design. What is the purpose to be accomplished by the offended one's going to the offender, or the design of going? Here it is. Jesus says:

I came not to judge the world, but to save the world. (John 12: 47.)

Jesus did not come to hunt up all the faults, imperfections, and sins of men in order to condemn them, to make out a case against them and send them to perdition; he came in mercy and love to save the lost. All who have sinned are condemned already because of their sins. Jesus knew all have sinned and are condemned, and he came to seek and to save the lost. It is the spirit of Christ and the work of every Christian, not "to find fault," to criticize, to hunt up the sins of others, to condemn them, to send them to torment, and to thank God that they are better than others, but in the gentleness and meekness of Christ to restore, or save, the ones who have sinned—to rescue the perishing and to save the dying. Then the one sinned against goes to the one who has committed the offense, not because he himself is hurt, not to make out a case against the offender, not to humiliate him into making a confession of his guilt, not to wreak vengeance by getting him withdrawn from, but to save him. The one sinned against has done no wrong in the case and his standing with God has in no wise been affected. The one who has in any way wronged another has sinned and will be lost unless he repents and does all in his power to repair the injury done. No one can wrong others and be saved without repentance of the wrong and, so far as possible, repairing the injury. As before stated, the one who has wronged another is the lost sheep and must be restored, or brought to repentance, or he will go down to perdition.

Here it is again: "If thy brother sin, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him." The offender is rebuked in order to induce him to repent and ask for forgiveness. To "show him his fault" is just the same as to "rebuke him." "If he hear thee" is just the same as "if he repent." "Thou hast gained thy brother" is the same as "forgive him." Then the offended one goes to the offender in the name and spirit of Christ, just as Christ came into the world to seek and to save the lost, to induce repentance and to lead to pardon and salvation.

The second effort—the offended one's taking one or two to the offender—is for the same purpose, to save him and to show to all that the effort has been made, for "at the mouth of two witnesses or three every word may be established."

Finally, telling it to the church is for the same purpose. Or, if the wrongdoer is not thus saved, the whole procedure is to save the church from the sinner.

If the wrongdoer is not thus brought to repentance and forgiveness, he is to be treated as the Gentile and the publican. This cannot be done without his being withdrawn from by the church. All the church—all the members—are to unite in trying to save him; hence all must unite in treating him as the Gentile and publican.

"If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father in heaven"—if, when the offended one goes to the offender and the offender repents and begs pardon and the offended one forgives the offender, and the two unite in asking God to forgive him, then God promises to do it, and Jesus promises to be in their midst.

"What things soever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." When the offended one proceeds as God directs, the offender repents, asks forgiveness, and the offended one looses him from his sin, God in heaven likewise looses him.

"What things soever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven." When the offended one and the whole church proceed as God directs and the offender does not repent, but is treated as the Gentile and publican and his sin is bound upon him, God binds it upon him likewise.

These are most solemn declarations to be treated so lightly and with such indifference and disobedience by so many who claim to be Christians. All who refuse to do this as much reject the counsel of God against themselves as those who refuse to be baptized (see Luke 7: 29, 30), or to repent (Luke 13: 1-5), or to believe in Christ (Mark 16: 16).

There is no exception: preachers, elders, teachers, and editors cannot wrong one another in word or deed, or any one else, and be saved without repentance and an effort to repair the injury done. Again, preachers, elders, teachers, and editors cannot obey God without going first alone to the ones who have offended them—that is, wronged them in any way. They must do this in order to save the wrongdoer. But frequently the one who has been wronged becomes so hurt, wrought up, or angry that he much prefers to see the wrongdoer condemned instead of saved. This is wrong.

WHY GO ALONE?

"Go, show him his fault between thee and him alone." Why? If the offender hears the offended one—that is, repents and asks pardon—the trouble is settled, the offender is forgiven and saved, and no one else knows of it or is disturbed in any way by it. Do not tell it to any one else or the whole church and world first. To fail to obey God in this particular is as much disobedience as to fail to obey him in any other. Hear, O ye preachers, elders, teachers, and editors, as well as all others:

For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet stumble [refuse to obey God] in one point, he is become guilty of all. (James 2: 10.)

It is easy for preachers, elders, teachers, and editors to preach and write gravely to others, when asked about settling personal difficulties, to proceed according to Matt. 18: 15-20, and to point out one by one the steps to be taken; but it is far more important to first practice this. But preachers, elders, teachers, and editors may get too much in the habit and assume too much the attitude and air of "It is our business to tell others what to do, but not to do it in reality ourselves." The Pharisees said, and did not, and laid heavy and grievous burdens on people and would not move a little finger to lift them. If preachers, elders, teachers, and editors would practice Matt. 5: 23, 24; Matt. 18: 15-20; James 5: 16—"Confess therefore your sins one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed"—and all the other commandments of God which they can so clearly teach others, there would be clean papers, pure speech, holy hands, and righteous lives among them all. In all good things preachers, elders, teachers, and editors should be examples.

But what preachers, elders, teachers, editors, or others, when wronged, go first alone to the wrongdoer in all earnestness and faith before spreading abroad by tongue and pen their grievances? This is one of the greatest curses to the church to-day.

The more we study the Bible, the more we see how easy it is to fall into a routine of set sermons on certain subjects, if not into ruts, and, therefore, to fall far short of declaring "the whole counsel of God" and teaching "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," while we persuade ourselves that we are doing that very thing. We see, also, how difficult to have the knowledge and faith, love and courage, to do this.

Jesus says whoever hears and does his words is like the wise man who builds his house upon the rock, and whoever does the will of God in heaven shall enter into the kingdom of heaven. Which of the words of Jesus and what part of the will of God must we preach in order to preach "the whole counsel of God" and "all things that pertain unto life and godliness?" And which of the words of Jesus and what part of the will of God can we leave off in disobedience and yet be saved? All who know the will of God will answer, "None." Then why not teach and practice this? What does Jesus teach on the offender's leaving his gift at the altar and going and becoming reconciled to the one he has wronged? What does Jesus teach the one offended or wronged to do in regard to the one who has wronged him? What does he teach on forgiveness, forbearance, mercy, and love? What, on restoring in gentleness the one who has been overtaken in any trespass (Gal. 6: 1, 2)? What, on converting the one who has erred from the faith and saving a soul from death and hiding a multitude of sins (James 5: 20)? What, on seeking not to condemn, but to save the erring ones? What, on confessing our own sins to one another and praying for one another in order to be saved?

Kind readers, when did you hear a full, earnest, scriptural, and therefore spiritual, sermon on "CONFESS YOUR FAULTS ONE TO ANOTHER, AND PRAY ONE FOR ANOTHER, THAT YE MAY BE HEALED?" You have doubtless heard many sermons filled with the confessions and bitter denunciations of the faults and mistakes, heresies and sins of others, and you have read not a few papers filled with the same. But how many preachers, elders, teachers, editors, and others confess in humility and contrition of soul their own faults and sins and ask others to pray for them? How many sermons have you heard, or articles have you read, on "JUDGE NOT, THAT YE BE NOT JUDGED," or on "CASTING THE BEAM OUT OF OUR OWN EYE BEFORE PICKING AT THE MOTE IN ANOTHER'S EYE?"

If there were more teaching in humility on these subjects, on each counting other better than himself, against self-conceit and pride of opinion, and more practice of Christianity, the peace of God would bless the church.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Do you make the same claims for the Gospel Advocate now that you did in 1910, when you said of its position: "In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character. It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself, and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God. It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world. It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let all make a joyful noise unto the Lord." (2) Please explain Matt. 18: 17. What church is there spoken of, this being before Pentecost?

JEFF. D. WELLS.

(1) Truth is eternal and changes not. While man is fallible, liable to err and change, the truth that God has given us is good for this age and all the ages to come. I think it probable that I see my own failings and shortcomings now more clearly than I did when that was published in 1910, while I have learned some new truths and discovered that I have been mistaken about some matters. I do not now see any change or improvement I would make in the above outlined editorial policy of the Gospel Advocate. (2) The church is here spoken of before it had an actual existence. The Savior was giving preparatory instruction, that his disciples might know how to act in the coming kingdom when such an emergency arose. The disciples at this time had very imperfect conceptions of the church, but they knew that worshiping assemblies would be established in the coming kingdom, and to these they necessarily referred the word "church," which means an assembly. Christ says: "And now I have told you before it is come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe." (John 14: 29.)

The new and greater Buford College for young ladies, this city, will open on September 21. The new home at the old Murphy mansion, on Church Street, is now one of the beauty spots of the city. Brother I. H. Gibson, a member of the Russell Street congregation, is the manager. All inquiries addressed to him will receive prompt attention.

L. F. Mason and little daughter, of Polytechnic, Texas, came to see us last week. They are visiting relatives in Tennessee. We learned for the first time the details of the deplorable automobile accident in which Sister Mason lost her life, and certainly sympathize with the bereaved husband and motherless daughter. Brother Mason has time for some meetings and can be reached at McMinnville, Tenn.

From Bynum Black, Ward Springs, Okla., August 23: "I reported my meeting at Center Ridge, Ark., when six had been baptized. I continued the meeting for two days and baptized two more, and one erring sister returned to the fold. I went next to Saratoga, Ark., and had a fine meeting, with seventeen baptized. Then I hurried to Celestin, Okla., to hold a debate with Elder T. S. Bolln, of Fort Worth, Texas. I heard of many who gave Baptist doctrine up. Brethren were rejoicing over the victory."

From R. V. Cawthon, Mount Juliet, Tenn.: "Claude Woodroof has just closed a very successful meeting at Mars' Hill, with four baptisms. He is young, but he is one of the most consecrated workers I have ever seen and deserves credit and encouragement. At present he is in a meeting at Walter Hill. I was to have done the preaching at both of these places, but could not go, and it pleases me to know how well the brethren appreciated Brother Woodroof. I would unhesitatingly recommend him anywhere as safe, sound, earnest, and faithful."

R. A. Zahn, of Louisville, Ky., sends us the following news item of social interest: "You are invited to participate in a surprise silver shower to be given Brother and Sister G. A. Klingman on September 10, 1916. Let us cheer the hearts of our dear brother and sister who have long borne the heat and burden of the day, and who have blessed so many of us. Silver coins, checks and certificates, or anything that your heart prompts you to give, will be acceptable. Let us do what we can. Send money between 3d and 10th of September. Address G. A. Klingman, 124 Philadelphia West, Detroit, Mich."

We note with pleasure the following tribute in the Shelbyville (Tenn.) Gazette: "The Gazette regrets very much to chronicle the departure from our county of Elder John D. Floyd and his estimable family, of Flat Creek. They have gone to Tullahoma to be near their daughter, Mrs. Mitchell. Illness in the family and increasing years of Elder Floyd was the final argument that caused the move. Elder Floyd is, and has been, one of the best citizens of the county for more than half a century. His friends are numbered by all who know him. He has always stood for the best things in life. He made one of the best soldiers there was in the Confederate Army for four years, and since he has made one of the best citizens in the State. We regret to see him leave us; but as he must go, we hope that the Fates may be kind to him and his and that his days may be many and happy in the land of his adoption."

Correspondents should take note of the change in our beloved brother's address.

How She Stopped Her Husband's Drinking

By all Means Write to Her and Learn how She did it.

For over 20 years Jas. Anderson of 161 Pearl Ave., Hillburn, N. Y., was a confirmed drunkard. His case was about as bad as it could be, but a little over twelve years ago his devoted wife, after years of trying, finally succeeded in stopping his drinking entirely.

Write to this woman if you have a relative or friend who drinks

Not only did she save Mr. Anderson but she stopped the drinking of her brother and several of her neighbors as well. All this she accomplished by simple home treatment which she now desires every man and woman who has a relative or friend who drinks, to know all about, for she feels that others can do just as she did.

The treatment can be given secretly if desired, and without cost she will gladly and willingly tell what it is. Therefore every reader of this notice who is interested in curing a dear one of drinking should write to Mrs. Anderson at once. Her reply will come by return mail in a sealed envelope. She does this gladly in hopes that others will be benefited as she was. One thing she asks however, and that is that you do not send money for she has nothing to sell. Simply address your letter with all confidence, to Mrs. Margaret Anderson at the address given above and she will reply by return mail in a sealed envelope.

The Master's Vineyard

Alabama.

Georgiana, August 28.—One was baptized in Mobile this morning. I am on my way to Sanford, Ala., and Laurel Hill, Fla., for mission meetings. I. L. BONES.

Wolf Springs, August 29.—On last Lord's-day night we closed a meeting of six days' duration at Landersville. There were four additions to the one body—three by baptism and one from the Baptists. I am now in a good meeting at this place. C. H. BAKER.

Rogersville, August 29.—The meeting closed at Cedar Hill, Lauderdale County, with splendid success. We had large crowds and good attention. There were nine additions—seven by baptism and two from the denominations. Cedar Hill is certainly a live place. The meeting closed at New Georgia, Limestone County, on Friday night. There were four additions— one baptism and three renewals. The church there will meet every Lord's day for worship and will have Sunday school. Let us all pray that they may be prospered in every good work. I will preach for them as often as I can spare the time from my four places of regular work. J. C. JONES.

Oakman, August 28.—Our meeting here began on the third Lord's day in this month and continued eight days. Brother W. H. Owen, of Henderson, Tenn., did the preaching, and it was well done. The attendance, interest, and attention were good throughout, and we are sure that much good was done in the Master's name. Three persons were baptized. Brother Owen is a forceful speaker and does not fail to declare "the whole counsel of God." The church was greatly strengthened by his able presentation of the gospel. Brother John E. Dunn, of Nashville, Tenn., will begin a meeting for us on the first Lord's day in November and continue it the rest of the month. JEROME MYERS.

Athens, Route 6, August 26.—Brother John Hayes, of Cedar Hill, Texas, closed a week's meeting at Pleasant Valley on August 20. Thirteen souls were gladly baptized in His name. We feel that the meeting was a great success. Brother Hayes preached to the church in daytime and to the world at night. His talks to the "flock" were as though face to face with individuals. He brought us nearer to the Christ by first showing our distance from him and then by presenting the apostolic pattern so forcibly. Such sermons as his "Six Inches from the Truth," "Preach the Gospel and Let Other People Alone," and "My Wife's Melon Vine" are enough to convince any man with understanding at all that the one Way is right and all other ways and names are wrong. Brother Hayes' desire was to stay a few more days at Pleasant Valley, but other fields were calling for him. He is such a strong, faithful worker in the mission field that the church ought not to fail to send him the necessary support. May God continue to bless him in his work. T. W. B.

Arkansas.

Staves, August 27.—Our meeting at Old Union closed last Sunday night. There were no additions, but the brethren said it was the best meeting that had been there for some time. I began here at Pioneer Church on Friday night. We are having real good crowds, considering the opposition there is here. After I am through with this meeting I will return to Kentucky for some meetings. H. F. PENDERGRASS.

Rogers, August 28.—I have been in Oklahoma forty-four days preaching the word. I held meetings at Harrisburg, Eola, and Centralia, with some twenty-five additions in all. Weather very hot, but I kept constantly at it, preaching twice a day, and three times a day part of the time. I rejoice that I can be busy in my Master's service. Of those baptized, some were Indian citizens and some rendered intelligent obedience who had not done so before, in order to satisfy God as well as themselves. The brethren were greatly strengthened and many hearts made to rejoice. I am now at Rogers. I go next to McCurtain, Okla. N. W. MORGAN.

Tupelo, August 28.—Brother Z. D. Barber, of Beedeville, closed a twelve-days' tent meeting at this place on last Thursday night. The attendance was very large, as many as six hundred being present some nights, and the order and attention were the very best. Brother T. C. Reed conducted the song service. Brother Barber knows the "old, old story" well, and tells it with all the power of a soul aglow with love for God and man, and the people hear him with gladness. Twelve persons were baptized and two returned to their duties. We had no congregation here, only a few scattered Christians; but at the close of the meeting a congregation was set in order with twenty-two members who are determined to work for the Master. We have no house; we meet in the schoolhouse. We are trying to raise funds to build a house. We need fifteen hundred dollars to build a house in keeping with our town. We have about eight hundred and fifty dollars already subscribed. Contributions from brethren or churches who wish to aid a worthy cause will be appreciated. Send to W. S. Morgan, chairman of the building committee. This is a strong denominational town. W. S. MORGAN.

Florida.

Lake City, August 26.—I began a series of meetings with the Fidelity church of Christ, near Alachua Station, on July 2, and continued it about two weeks. The Lord greatly blessed our labors to the edification of the body and to the extension of his kingdom. Five souls who had wandered away came back to the fold; six Baptists learned "the way of the Lord more perfectly," laid aside all unscriptural names and practices, and took a stand with us on the Bible alone, one of whom will sound out the word from the sacred stand; and several young men were induced to begin active work in the church. Our labors extended by personal effort into the village of Alachua, where a number of inactive members were induced to begin keeping house for the Lord, and on August 16 a congregation (nineteen members) was set in order and began worship in the home of Brother C. L. Waters, where they will continue to worship until a house of worship can be built. Never before has there been a worshipping congregation in Alachua. When I left, a lot had been selected on which to build a meetinghouse and three hundred and fifty dollars raised with which to build same. The prospects are bright at these two places for a great work for the Lord.

J. O. BARNES.

Georgia.

Lafayette, August 28.—Brother J. D. Gunn, of Sparta, Tenn., began a meeting with the church at this place on August 6 and continued it until August 18, with one addition and much good other ways. Brother Gunn is a strong and forceful preacher and presents the gospel in its fullness.

C. S. THOMASON.

Atlanta, August 21.—I have spent the last three months working with the South Pryor Street Church, in Atlanta. They are a band of willing workers. The sixteen-days' meeting was well attended and resulted in four baptisms. Since then five others have been added to the one body. The venerable James A. Harding and his beloved wife worship there and are a constant source of inspiration to all who know them. The tent meeting at Golden Hill lasted two weeks, closing on August 20 with one confession. Georgia is a great field for laborers and many more are needed. I leave the field only because I wish to better prepare myself for the Lord's work. Before returning to school I am to hold a meeting for my home congregation, near Calvert, Ky.

W. N. LUTON.

Rome, August 27.—Last March, through the influence of Brother S. H. Hall, of Atlanta, I came to this city and held a three-weeks' meeting. During that time I preached through the day from house to house and at the foundry at the noon hour. I was invited to come back again and am here in a meeting. Brother Hall can tell you the need of a regular worker here. This is a city of over fifteen thousand souls; and if ever a mission field needed work, this city does. For my March meeting I received twenty-five dollars. I never went away grumbling, because the church here is weak and every member is poor. But shall Rome go neglected? The brethren have asked me to spend four months with them to make an effort to build

Doctor Says Nuxated Iron Will Increase Strength of Delicate People 200% in Ten Days

In many instances—Persons have suffered untold agony for years doctoring for nervous weakness, stomach, liver or kidney disease or some other ailment when their real trouble was lack of iron in the blood.—How to tell.

New York, N. Y.—In a recent discourse Dr. E. Sauer, a well known Specialist who has studied widely both in this country and Europe, said: If you were to make an actual blood test of all people who are ill you would probably be greatly astonished at the exceedingly large number who lack iron and who are ill for no other reason than the lack of iron. The moment iron is supplied all their multitude of dangerous symptoms disappear. Without iron the blood at once loses the power to change food into living tissue and therefore nothing you eat does you any good; you don't get the strength out of it. The food merely passes through your system like corn through a mill with the rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind. As a result of this continuous blood and nerve starvation, people become generally weakened, nervous and all run down and frequently develop all sorts of conditions. One is too thin; another is burdened with unhealthy fat; some are so weak they can hardly walk; some think they have dyspepsia, kidney or liver trouble; some can't sleep at night, others are sleepy and tired all day; some fussy and irritable; some skinny and bloodless, but all lack physical power and endurance. In some cases it is worse than foolish to take stimulating medicines or narcotic drugs, which only whip up your flagging vital powers for the moment, maybe at the expense of your life later on. No matter what any one tells you, if you are not strong and well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous run down people who were ailing all the time double, and even triple their strength and endurance and entirely get rid of their symptoms of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles in from ten to fourteen days' time simply by taking iron in the proper form, and this, after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. You can talk as you please about all the wonders wrought by new remedies, but when you come down to hard facts there is nothing like good old iron to put color in your cheeks and good, sound healthy flesh on your bones. It is also a great nerve and stomach strengthener and the best blood builder in the world. The only trouble was that the old forms of inorganic iron like tincture of iron, iron acetate, etc. often ruined people's teeth, upset their stomachs and were not assimilated and for these reasons they frequently did more harm than good. But with the discovery of the newer forms of organic iron all this has been overcome. Nuxated Iron, for example is pleasant to take, does not injure the teeth and is almost immediately beneficial.

NOTE—The manufacturers of Nuxated Iron have such unbounded confidence in its potency that they authorize the announcement that they will forfeit $100.00 to any Charitable Institution if they cannot take any man or woman under sixty who lacks iron and increase their strength 200 per cent. or over in four weeks' time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. Also they will refund your money in any case in which Nuxated Iron does not at least double your strength in ten days' time. It is dispensed by all druggists.

Stop Cheating Your Family.

You doubtless fully realize your duty to your family in making your home life attractive, entertaining, cultured, and refined; and you have promised yourself that some day you will fill that vacant spot in the parlor with a splendid piano or player-piano of the sweetest tone and highest quality, or that you will replace the old rattle-trap with a superb new instrument. But the days, the months, and possibly the years have silently crept by, and still there is no good music in your home. In the meantime, home is not what it might be, for a home without a high-grade piano or player-piano is seriously and hopelessly handicapped.

You have only one life to live here; why let procrastination steal your family's best opportunity for social, mental, and spiritual advancement? The Gospel Advocate Piano Club will solve the financial problem for you now. It was organized to overcome the very difficulties which confront you. By clubbing your order with those of ninety-nine other subscribers, you save forty per cent of the price and yet are responsible only for your own order. Convenient terms of payment are provided. You try the instrument in your own home and must be thoroughly satisfied before finally accepting it.

Write for your copy of the club's catalogue and full particulars to-day. Address Associated Piano Clubs, Gospel Advocate Department, Atlanta, Ga.

We have in stock a number of "Studies in Recent Adventism," by Henry C. Sheldon. "An especially timely review and analysis of the assumptions, claims, and teachings of Adventism." The name of the author guarantees the character of the book—its lucidity, its scholarly style, and its weight of authority. It will be an invaluable antidote to the materialism, Russellism, and premillennialism of to-day, and a strong weapon for students and teachers who must meet and answer this false teaching. Price, 50 cents.

up the cause and by that time see if they cannot be in a position to support a man all the time. Now, shall I stay? How can a man with a family to be supported do this work at his own charges? While in this State last winter the preachers and some churches responded to my call to help. Brethren, will you make it possible for me to remain here and work from house to house for four months? I will report my work each month. During August I received support from one church and the following cash donations: From Mrs. Cannon, $2; D. O. Wallace, $2; M. M. Fields, $2; Cora M. Brooks, $5. Brethren, this is your work; we are "laborers together." Shall I hear from you? There are only eleven male members of the church. We want to arrange a meeting for North Rome for next month. I leave this with you with a fervent prayer that you may be moved to support this work. Address me at 608 Broad Street, Rome, Ga.

Fulton, August 30.—I have just closed a mission meeting near here. The crowds were good, attentive, and interested. Four were baptized. Some men and women who never heard us before took great interest. The faithful few there will meet for worship each "first day of the week." I go next to Hamilton, Ala.

H. M. PHILLIPS.

Joyce, August 28.—We closed an eight-days' meeting at Watson's Chapel, twelve miles west of Eubank, last Lord's day. I preached fifteen discourses. Three were baptized and two reclaimed. Large crowds attended. Some came twenty miles to the meeting—persons that I baptized fourteen years ago while laboring in the mountains of Tennessee and Kentucky. Brother R. E. Todd is still with me, doing the baptizing and preaching when I need a day's rest. We are due to be at Galpin by September 1.

JAMES H. MORTON.

Lancaster, August 25.—Brother C. C. Houston, of Henderson, closed a two-weeks' meeting at Scott's Fork, in Garrard County, on Sunday night, August 20. The meeting was almost rained out part of the first week, but after that the audiences and interest increased to the close. Seven obeyed the gospel and became members of the one body, or church of Christ. The church was strengthened and built up in the one faith. Brother Houston shuns not to declare the whole counsel of God. He will be with us again at the same time next year, the Lord willing. Brother J. H. Hines, superintendent of the Potter Orphan Home and School at Bowling Green, visited the congregation at Scott's Fork on the fifth Lord's day in July and preached two fine sermons. The brethren made a collection for the work and will strive to send a monthly contribution. Brother Hines is a fine man, a good preacher, and is doing a most excellent work. He has the best proposition in orphan-home work I have ever known. Let any one interested write him for particulars.

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To cure rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, gallstones, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average, report no benefit:

Shivar Spring,

Box 21M, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your guarantee offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if it fails to benefit my case, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return promptly.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

One of the brightest and most entertaining of all our Sunday-school publications is THE YOUNG PEOPLE, a four-page weekly, devoted especially to the interests and welfare of young people of both sexes, but which will prove a channel of cheer and blessing to older ones as well. This periodical has just been consolidated with THE BUNK STRAY HELPER, and presents the strongest and most essential features of both in an improved form. Three pages are given to stories of an entertaining and elevating character and articles of an educational nature, by gifted and well-informed writers, strikingly illustrated by photo-engravings and line drawings; and one page is devoted to a clear and concise presentation of the Sunday-school lesson, historically and exegetically, by A. B. Lipscomb, one of the editors of the Gospel Advocate, in which are presented the thoughts of many of the world's best thinkers. The size of the page is 10 1/4 x 14 inches. Printed from clear type on good paper.

Tishomingo, August 25.—Our meeting in the latter part of July, conducted by Brother J. T. Harris, of Florence, Ala., resulted in ten additions, one from the Methodists. Brother B. V. Nelson, of Mingo, has purchased a farm here and will soon be ready to meet with us on Lord's days.
LUTHER OWENS.

Amory, August 29.—The meeting at Caldwell Schoolhouse closed without any visible results. The attendance was good and some seemed to be much interested, and I trust some one will gather fruit from the sowing I did. I am now at Hatley for five nights. This is a new place. I preached the first sermon last night. The house was well filled and I think a good impression was made. I hope to lay the foundation for a good meeting here in the future. I go from here to Campbell's Station, Tenn., for a meeting, beginning the first Sunday in September.
R. N. MOODY.

Corinth, August 27.—Brother G. C. Brewer, of Columbia, Tenn., began a meeting at this place on August 13 and continued it until August 25. Under the influence of his preaching twenty-five souls were led to believe in Christ and were baptized. Twelve Christians placed their membership with the local congregation. Splendid interest was manifested from the beginning to the close, and we feel that the church and the community have been greatly benefited by the soul-inspiring sermons given by Brother Brewer. May God bless him for the good he has done for us. He has consented to be with us again in September, 1917.

Heed the Warning
If You Have a Cough!

The deep-seated cough that does not yield to ordinary treatment may lead to distressing pulmonary troubles. Or it may bring on a chronic bronchial affection. Many persons now incapacitated might have avoided such disastrous results by timely care and efficient medical treatment. Among the latter Eckman's Alterative has an enviable record. It is a lime-bearing preparation which is easily assimilated in most instances. Where used in connection with nourishing food and proper living, it has given widespread relief.

Its freedom from poisonous or habit-forming drugs of any nature whatsoever renders it safe to try. And its content of calcium gives it tonic value. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct. Booklet containing information of value and references sent upon request.

OUTLINES OF BIBLE STUDY

REVISED AND ENLARGED

BY G. DALLAS SMITH

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION

Outlines of Bible Study (Revised and Enlarged) is a book of one hundred and twenty pages, besides five full-page maps covering all Bible lands. It is printed in large, clear type, on good, heavy paper, and is substantially bound in stiff cloth.

The book contains seventeen drill lessons for use in Bible drills, Bible readings, or any other Bible class where it is desired to cover the entire scope of the Sacred Record in a short time.

Outlines of Bible Study is not a commentary in any sense of the word. It contains but few comments. It is not "literature" in the same sense that some object to literature. It rather guides one in his study that it may be intelligent and systematic.

Bunker Hill, August 27.—Brother E. H. Hoover began a meeting here on August 11 and closed it on the night of August 22. Five were baptized, one was reclaimed, and one came from a denomination. ARTHUR L. ELAM.

Columbia, August 29.—Our meeting at Berea, in this county, resulted in two restorations and one baptism. The song service was led by Prof. Floyd Moore. I am now at Hilltown, in this county. WILLIAM P. WALKER.

Fowlkes, August 29.—I closed a meeting at Greenfield, with six additions. Three were from the Missionary Baptists. I am now in the midst of a meeting at Fowlkes. Brother Leon Holland is directing the song service. This is my eleventh meeting. I will hold meetings at Sardis, Camden, Hohenwald, and Tiptonville, and at Water Valley, Ky. F. O. HOWELL.

Nashville, August 31.—I closed a meeting at Prosperity, in Wilson County, last night. Jesse Barfield led the singing. Large audiences from "start to finish" and three baptized. A "glorious meeting" indeed, but no more "glorious" than others where the audiences were small and no additions. Wonder where the "glorious-meeting" spirit came from, anyway?

C. E. W. DORRIS.

Trousdale, August 28.—I have just closed a good meeting at Dibrell. Five were baptized, and almost the entire church confessed their unfaithfulness, negligence, and sins. I began a meeting here yesterday, with fairly good hearing. This is my fourth meeting at this place. My next meeting will begin on September 10, at Mangrum, Okla. I hope to be able to establish a congregation there. Pray for us.
R. E. WRIGHT.

Pikeville, Route 1, August 30.—I closed a meeting of twelve-days' duration at Mount Eunice, in Bledsoe County, with fifteen additions—twelve baptized, one restored, one from the Methodist Church, and one from the Baptist Church. The brethren there have a nice, new building, fairly well lighted and seated, and are now in good shape to do much good in the vineyard of the Lord. Some from every family in the community attended the meeting.

J. E. PENDERGRASS.

Nolensville, August 29.—On the fourth Sunday in July I began a meeting with the Leatherwood congregation, in Hickman County, which continued one week, with one baptism. I also held a meeting at Beech Valley, beginning on August 6, with one restored to the fellowship. I have just closed a very enjoyable meeting at Bluff Springs, near Lewisburg. Our meeting continued one week, with eleven baptisms, including one from the Methodists. My brother, Andrew Jackson, led the song service. We shall long remember our pleasant sojourn with these good people. I am now preparing to return to the Bible School.

J. LEONARD JACKSON.

Dixon Springs, August 31.—Our meeting at Three Forks, near Smith's Grove, Ky., closed last Sunday night, with eleven added to the congregation. Six of these were baptized during the meeting, four were restored, and one came from the Baptists. The audiences were large and orderly throughout the meeting. It had been six years since I had been with the people at this place, and the renewal of our former friendship was a blessing to us all. May the Lord bless both those we saw and those who have gone away to other places to make homes. Our meeting at Dixon Springs started off well last night. We hope to continue a week or more. As soon as we close here, I mean, under the blessing of the Lord, to take charge of the Potter Orphans' Home and School for a while, and shall be forced to give up the holding of protracted meetings for a time. We desire the prayers and fellowship of God's children everywhere in the much-neglected work of training orphan children for life here and hereafter.
M. L. MOORE.

Big Springs, August 30.—I held a meeting at Ravenscroft, beginning on June 25 and continuing ten days, with one restored and one baptism. My next meeting was at Spring Fork, Jackson County, with one restored; and one lady made the good confession, but for some cause was not baptized. This meeting began on July 9 and continued ten days. Rain and high water hindered. I began at Liberty, Jackson County, on July 23, and continued eight days, with one baptism. This was the fifth meeting that I have held for the Liberty Church. No more faithful Christians can be found. Next I went to Never Fail, in Cumberland County. This is a small congregation on Cumberland Mountain, and the only congregation in the county that worships as the New Testament directs. The meeting began on August 6 and continued eight days. The church seemed much edified, and a man and his wife obeyed the gospel the following Sunday. Others seemed to be interested. My last meeting began at Antioch, Jackson County, on August 20 and continued eight days. Thirteen were baptized and three confessed their faults and asked to be forgiven. Three stated that they had obeyed the gospel, but realized that they made a mistake in expecting to go to heaven in a religious organization not mentioned in the Bible. All I can advise people to do, when they realize they are wrong, is to correct the mistake. The Antioch meeting was well attended and interest increased through the eight days of the meeting. The singing could hardly be excelled. We all enjoyed the meeting. Surely some had religion; at least, they shouted. Jackson County has had the gospel preached in its borders more than any other county in the State, according to the popula-

I knew that in time it would bring me to an untimely grave, because every moment of the day and night it was slowly yet surely sapping my vitality.

FRED M. LITTLE.

Six Hours Ahead of Roman Time with Their Sabbath.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

There were six hours difference between the beginning of a Roman day and a Jewish day. The Jewish day began in the evening about sunset, while that same day according to the Roman way of counting days did not begin until midnight. In Bible usage the day is not named, but numbered, such as "first," "second," and "third," and so on to the last of the week days, which was called "the seventh day." The Jewish Friday began at sunset on what the Romans called "Thursday evening." Christ observed the passover on the evening of the night part of Friday, which began six hours before the Roman Thursday ended. That is why so many say "the passover was on Thursday night." They get the Roman and Jewish calendar days mixed. And the Jewish day on which the daylight hour of nine o'clock A.M. began ended at six o'clock P.M.; but the Roman (Julian) calendar would continue the day on until midnight. And the Jews, to this day, are governed in all religious affairs by the Jewish calendar days, but in all business affairs they are governed by our present Roman calendar days and date.

"But Moses appointed that Nisan, which is the same with Zanthricus, should be the first month of their festivals, because he brought them out of Egypt in that month. So that this month began the year as to all the solemnities they observed to the honor of God, although he preserved the original order of the months as to selling and buying and other ordinary affairs." (Josephus, page 28, Book I, chapter 3.) At the time of Christ's crucifixion Rome ruled the world, yet to the Jews the law of Moses was still binding, and was so recognized by all New Testament writers when they mentioned the Jewish festivals and Sabbaths. Aside from that, in common, ordinary affairs they would have to be governed by the Roman (Julian) calendar days, months, and years, or it would not be legal; for they knew that the law of Moses had been removed.

But when Jesus was crucified, they had to bury him before sunset, although he was slain under a false charge; hence, murdered. "And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree: his body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day." (Deut. 21: 22.) As Jesus was crucified at 9 A.M., they had to bury him before sunset according to the law of Moses. As he died about three in the afternoon and that day ended at sunset, when the double Sabbath would begin, they had about three hours' time in which to bury him and prepare for that great Sabbath which followed the passover. Jesus counted the day on which he died when he said: "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." In about three hours' time Jesus died, and soon the thief (a penitent believer) was killed and taken down. When there was less than three hours of time left, they met in paradise, but the body of Jesus was alone in the tomb that very day.

The seventh-day bodily rest was a type of the gospel day rest to the soul. The night part of that day of rest would represent the dark-ness of Satan's kingdom into which man had fallen. The gospel brings them out of the kingdom of darkness, sin, and spiritual death, into the light of the gospel day, the light of God's word, the light which Jesus gives. When they take his yoke upon them and learn of him and find rest to the soul, then they are to walk in the light the remainder of their life. If there was any significance attached to the yearly Sabbath which followed the passover, it surely represented the future rest. If the land of Canaan had been the only place of rest, or the heaven that God intended for his people, then the yearly Sabbath would never have been mentioned. As soon as passover day ended, then came the night part of the holy convocation Sabbath day of rest, thanksgiving, and praise, which night part represented the conscious state of the souls of the righteous between death and the resurrection, while the day part would represent the endless Sabbath of rest beyond the resurrection. Christ is our passover. As the Jews observed their passover, then entered into their Sabbath of rest, so we must observe our passover, which is Christ (and it is a lifetime work), then at death we will enter into the night of death, part of our holy Sabbath of rest.

Something for Your Consideration.

BY FLORENCE PICKERILL-SCHICK.

I firmly believe the church of Christ everywhere is entirely too careless in the visiting of new members, also weak ones, and that on this account many drift away, when possibly a short call from several of the members would not only strengthen and encourage them to attend regularly on each Lord's day, but by their interest manifested they might influence others to attend.

I have lived in certain places many months and not a sister ever came to see me. If I had been weak in the faith, it would have had a tendency to make me still weaker; at least, it would not have been any encouragement to press on. So I say we are entirely too careless. We do not do enough personal work; we take too much for granted. Even those who have always been instructed in the straight and narrow way need encouragement by our friendship, and how much more do those who have only lately been brought to see the true light.

We wonder sometimes at the marvelous growth of the sects; but they are always on the alert for new members, and when a stranger moves into the midst they at once go and call and invite them to their church. Of course they grow in numbers. Do we do that? Do we go and invite them even though we have already heard that they lean toward the old paths? No, most of us sit idly by and wait. In the meantime some other person has influenced them to attend his or her church, and we have let an opportunity pass for trying to do good.

Another thing which I believe worthy of our consideration is in advertising where the congregation meets. I have traveled over the country a great deal, and many times land in a strange town over the Lord's day. How often have I failed to find the church! How often have others been in the same predicament! I believe it is our duty to put a sign up in every depot and waiting station in our land, also advertise in every daily paper once a week just where to find the church of Christ worshipping in that place, so that any one wanting to find a true place to worship need not be kept from so doing. Anyhow, brethren, we are letting our light shine and have done a part of our duty, at least. The cost in money will be slight, and who knows what great good it may accomplish?

Brethren, think this over. Act at once; do not let a day pass until you have done something for the cause of Christ. Show more friendship. Tell them where to find you.

Among the Colored People

Work in Mississippi.

On the third Lord's day in July I was called to Old Farmington to baptize a young lady who had been sick for five months and was not able to walk. We carried her to the water on a cot and baptized her on the little bed. This sister, Flora Burgess, departed this life on August 23. She leaves a mother, father, two brothers, and two sisters. J. HANNAN.

The Gospel Tent.

While I was sick during the winter and spring, I used my time in begging for a tent. It was my firm intention to use that tent in Texas, but God willed it otherwise. I was not able to travel after I got the tent; and if I had been, the brethren of this State wanted the tent so much that I could not refuse them. So I loaned them the tent to use until I should feel able to use it, to be used in the vacant places of this State. I had seventeen dollars of my own money in the tent, and they have agreed to give me twelve dollars of that back, and I have given them all that our white brethren put in the tent. After all, what difference does it make, just so the gospel is preached? So far there has not been a night that more than five hundred people have not been preached to during the past fifteen days. Thus far three have been reclaimed and one baptized; but the whole country has been aroused, and I am sure great good will result.

On August 15 our eighth annual meeting was begun in Luther, Okla., and continued until the third Lord's day. While we used a great deal of time trying to arrange plans to reach those places that needed the gospel most, we made the meeting one great big revival, preaching from two to three sermons every day during the week. More than three hundred colored disciples attended the meetings. I do not admire all that is done in these annual meetings, but there is a source of great good in having the saints to assemble themselves together to praise God. I know that a few will try to go beyond "that which is written," but thus far we have been able to keep out most of those things that are not allowed in God's word.

Club Solves Piano Problem.

The greatest danger in buying a piano or player-piano is the difficulty in selecting one of real and lasting quality. There are so many cheap imitations on the market that the chances of full and permanent satisfaction are slight unless you are an expert judge and are extremely careful in your selection.

If you feel that you are not a good judge of the quality, durability, and value of an instrument, or if you have not time to make an exhaustive investigation of these matters, why not throw the responsibility on the piano club? It has already made the investigation for you and will assume the full responsibility of giving you absolute and perfect satisfaction and the largest possible value for your money. What your insurance policy is to your home, the club is to your piano or player-piano.

But the club does not stop there. It clubs your order with those of ninety-nine other subscribers, thus securing the lowest possible factory price for each club member. It provides convenient terms of payment, the strongest guarantees of quality and durability, and gives you the opportunity to try your instrument thoroughly before you buy. The club absolutely guarantees perfect satisfaction in every detail of piano buying. Write for your copy of the catalogue to-day. Address the Associated Piano Clubs, Gospel Advocate Department, Atlanta, Ga.

HOW MRS. BEAN MET THE CRISIS

Carried Safely Through Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Nashville, Tenn.—“When I was going through the Change of Life I had a tumor as large as a child's head. The doctor said it was three years coming and gave me medicine for it until I was called away from the city for some time. Of course I could not go to him then, so my sister-in-law told me that she thought Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would cure it. It helped both the Change of Life and the tumor and when I got home I did not need the doctor. I took the Pinkham remedies until the tumor was gone, the doctor said, and I have not felt it since. I tell every one how I was cured. If this letter will help others you are welcome to use it.”

—Mrs. E. H. BEAN, 525 Joseph Avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a pure remedy containing the extractive properties of good old fashioned roots and herbs, meets the needs of woman's system at this critical period of her life. Try it.

Tennessee.

Memphis, August 26.—The little band of disciples worshipping at Cordova are building a church. They will have to have some assistance. Let all who read this send them a donation. Send to H. C. Arrington, Cordova, Tenn. J. A. COLLUM.

Gordonsburg, August 29.—Our Gordonsburg meeting is moving along very successfully. We have some fine people here. The congregation is a small one, but very zealous. Brother T. M. Lawson is a great power here. He has done a fine work. C. E. HOIT.

Gadsden, August 29.—I began a meeting here on the third Lord's day in August and closed it last night. Four were baptized and one reclaimed. Big crowds attended the services. We were completely rained out each Sunday night. One of the number baptized will be ninety-one years old next February. T. H. ETHERIDGE.

Manchester, August 29.—On the first Lord's day in August I preached at Martin Schoolhouse and had three additions. On the second Lord's day I preached in Pikeville. I stopped over at Whitwell and preached one night. Brother J. M. Norwood lives in Whitwell, and he is one of the best men that I ever met. He believes in having the gospel preached to all men, and he gives liberally. M. B. NEWSOM (colored).

Mount Pleasant, August 28.—I closed an interesting meeting at Lanton's Chapel, near Carter's Creek, last Friday night. Attendance and interest splendid. Two baptized. I began at Spencer Hill, near Mount Pleasant, yesterday with a packed house. One confession last night. Prospects are good for the meeting. From here I go to Colt, Ark., for a meeting, beginning on the third Sunday in September. L. L. BRIGANCE.

Readyville, August 28.—On Wednesday, August 16, I closed an eleven-days' meeting with the congregation at Lafayette, Ga., with one baptism. On Sunday, August 20, I preached at Ridgedale, a suburb of Chattanooga. One young man made the confession and was baptized. The brethren in Ridgedale have purchased a nice lot and will erect a house later. They are now meeting in an upper room. I am now in a meeting at Rock Hill, in Rutherford County. J. D. GUNN.

Texas.

Tyler, August 30.—I have just closed a meeting at Hagansport. There were seven confessions, three confessed their faults, and three joined the disciples from other places—thirteen in all. We organized a congregation with about thirty members. I leave home to-morrow for a month's meeting at Beeville. W. F. LEMMONS.

Farmersville, August 28.—The meeting at West was a good one. Seven were baptized, seven came from the “progressives,” and much good was done with the church. I am at Farmersville now, with six baptisms and several restored. I go next to Glade-water and then home (Dallas) for another year's work with Oak Cliff Church. J. S. DUNN.

Naples, August 28.—I am in a week-old meeting at Rocky Branch, near here, with very large audiences and nine accessions to date. I shall begin at Bethel, near Mount Pleasant, on Wednesday. I will be open for evangelistic engagements from now on, winter and summer. If I can serve the cause in your place, address me at Weatherford, Texas. E. M. TACKETT.

Wichita Falls, August 28.—I preached at Frederick, Okla., on the first Sunday in August, at Iowa Park on the second Sunday, at Burkburnett on the third Sunday, and at Saint Jo on the fourth Sunday. These three points are in Texas. I take up the work here at home the first of September. I have been taking some school work this summer. C. A. BUCHANAN.

Lometa, August 26.—Brother Bedichek did us much good in an eight-days' meeting. Brother Roy Cates sang for us and taught us a music school. He also taught school at one of our missions, and is now in his second school in two months at Senterfit, four miles out. We are moving on nicely here in the work. Four were baptized and one restored last week. BEN WEST.

Cumby, August 28.—Brother Horace W. Busby, of Fort Worth, began our annual meeting on July 30 and closed it on August 13. While only four obeyed the gospel, the meeting was not a failure. At nearly every service, especially at night, the attendance was good and continued to increase to the close. Our tabernacle, which seats about six hundred, was often about full. Several who had never heard our preachers attended the meeting and expressed themselves as being well pleased, and we feel that the seed sown will bring forth fruit some time soon. Brethren T. C. McCormack and Homer Todd conducted the song services. Brother Busby is certainly a power in presenting the truths of the Bible. GEORGE W. HOLLAND.

The Fruit of the Vine.

BY J. PERRY HODGE.

Jesus is the true vine. (John 15: 1.) Are you one of the branches?

If you are a branch of the true vine, do you bear fruit?

If you are a branch of the true vine and do not bear fruit, what reason, if any, can you give for thinking the husbandman will not take you away? (John 15: 2.)

If you are a branch of the true vine and bear fruit, do you bear enough fruit to satisfy the husbandman?

If you are not bearing enough fruit to satisfy him, would you rather be purged or cleansed, in order to bring forth more fruit, or would you rather be cut off? (John 15: 2.)

Do you know that it is through the word which Jesus has spoken that all who are clean were cleansed or purified? (John 15: 3.)

Abide in Christ as a branch, and he will abide in you as the life of the branch (John 15: 4), for he is the way, the truth, and the life. His life is the light of men. (John 1: 1-4.)

A branch cannot bear fruit of itself; it must abide in the vine. Neither can you bear fruit of yourself; you must abide in Christ. (John 15: 4.)

As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. (Gal. 3: 27.) Is that the way you got into Christ?

If you got into Christ by being baptized into him, the only way known to me by which any one can get into him, and abide in him as a branch, and he abides in you as the life of the branch, you will bring forth much fruit. (John 15: 5.)

If you abide not in Christ, you will wither as a branch that has no connection with its vine. Are you in Christ? (John 15: 6.)

The above is a list of questions that all, both Christians and those who are not, will do well to ask themselves and answer conscientiously. There is no closer union than the union that exists between a vine and its branches. The vine can live without the branches, but the branches are absolutely dependent upon the vine for their life.

The vine is dependent upon the branches for the fruitage, and the branches are also dependent upon the vine, for the branches cannot bear fruit without the vine; so without Christ we can do nothing. (John 15: 5.)

To be one with the branches, one must be a branch. Are you a branch? If you are one with Christ, you are one with the branches of Christ. If you have been baptized into Christ, and if you still abide in Christ, you are a branch of Christ and one with all branches of Christ; and the fruit that is borne is the fruit of the vine, otherwise called "the fruit of the Spirit of Christ that is in you."

Conversion.

BY MRS. M. A. BAER.

The writer of this article is eighty-four years old.

Are men converted by the direct operation of the Holy Spirit or through the medium of the gospel? Is a sinner active or not in his conversion? What does the word "conversion" mean? Let us see what the Bible says about it. (Read Ps. 19: 7; Luke 22: 32; Acts 3: 18, 19; James 5: 19, 20.) When Jesus arose from the dead, he instructed his disciples to go "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," saying: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Through these inspired preachers God gives us the gospel and commands us to turn and be converted. The terms of the gospel are so plain that there is no need of misunderstanding them. By accepting and obeying them we are converted, otherwise we are not. So conversion comes from learning the truth; for Jesus, speaking to the Father, says: "Thy word is truth." A man is on the broad road to destruction; he hears the gospel and beholds himself a sinner; he knows he is dead in trespasses and sin. That man is convicted; he heeds the gospel call; he turns and in obedience obeys it. Is that man converted or not? God says: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." It was through the foolishness of preaching that it pleased God to save them that believe. Paul said: "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." So we must hear the word before we can have faith. Does God promise to send the Holy Spirit on a sinner? If so, please give me chapter and verse; I cannot find it. When Peter preached on Pentecost, what did he tell them to do? Did he say, "Now, all that want to be saved, come and give me your hand, be seated on the 'mourner's bench,' and I will pray for the Holy Spirit to come down and convert you right here?" No, indeed; the Bible nowhere says any such thing. But he told them to repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins and then receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. All preachers should tell sinners the same thing; but they won't do it—won't preach what they are commanded at all. The Bible says we are made perfect through works. Now, if a sinner sits down and waits for the Lord to send the Holy Spirit to convict and convert him, he has no promise of being saved. God never conscripts soldiers; they must be volunteers. Jesus says that except we repent we shall all perish. So may the good Lord help us to study his word, live by it, and not be led astray by man's teaching as so many are to-day.

The difference between talent and character is adroitness to keep the old and trodden and courage to make a new road to fresh and better goals. Character makes power which fortifies all the company, by making them see that much is possible and excellent that was not thought of.—Emerson.

Paul's Message to Corinth.

He states in his first letter to this church: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. To the mind of the ancient the word "cross" meant the same as "gallows" to us. Yet the cross was preached to them as the only means of salvation. This was the theme which became "unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God." The cross and its Christ are the only theme for profligate Corinth, intellectual Athens, and decadent Rome. A countryman visiting the city was undecided as to which one of two preachers he should like to hear and made inquiry of a city friend. The friend said: "One preacher speaks in such a way that you lose sight of him and think only of Christ; the other is such a brilliant and eloquent man that your attention is on the preacher all the time." "Take me to hear the first one mentioned," said the countryman. Preachers who preach "Christ, and him crucified," and hide themselves behind the cross, are the preachers that bless the world. I have no sympathy or patience with those who grow tired of simple gospel themes.

The Cross Is the Climax of Types.

The sacrifice which Abel offered, and by which he being dead yet speaketh, pointed to the cross. The altar at Bethel, where Abram called upon the name of the Lord and offered sacrifices, pointed to the cross. Every bird and beast offered on the sacrificial altars of Hebrew worship pointed to the cross. Every scapegoat which was led away into the wilderness, symbolically bearing the sins of the people, pointed to the cross. Truly the cross of Jesus Christ is the climax of types. "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The death of Jesus Christ on Calvary tells, as nothing else can, God's estimate of sin. Some years ago the papers were full of news concerning the coming of a great physician to Chicago to treat the child of a multi-millionaire. The prominence of the physician, the distance traveled, the fee paid—all testify to the seriousness of the child's illness. So the cross emphasizes the awfulness of sin and the hopelessness of any other remedy. Surely sin is terrible to require so great a sacrifice.

Rightful Glorifying.

* In his essay on "The Teaching of Paul in Terms of the Present Day," Sir William Ramsey says: "There is nothing Paul dreads more in the nature of a man than his tendency to think too much of himself and to put himself in the place of God, instead of giving God the glory—in other words, to make himself the center of the universe, instead of regarding God as at once the center of his being and the goal of his development. The result of this is that he loses his perception of the nature of God and his love of God, whom he misrepresents more and more completely in his imagination."

Asylums are filled with lunatics who got there by thinking too much of themselves. And one case is recorded of a patient who actually thought himself to be God and wrote out his edicts in that character. Let us take warning. "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." Jesus said: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

"God forbid that I should glory,
Or make boast of aught beside,
Save the wondrous, heavenly story:
Christ for me was crucified."

Upsetting the World.

One of Wesley's followers had a unique outline for his sermon. It ran like this: "First, the world is wrong way up; second, it has got to be turned upside down; we's the chaps to do it." But who are the "these" that upset the world in the early days of the church? Paul, whose bodily presence was weak; Silas, a lay preacher from Jerusalem; Timothy, a young convert scarcely out of his teens—three men in a city of seventy-five thousand people. But call the police reserves; summon the judges to the benches; make wholesale arrests, for "these men" are on hand. "Art thou the one that troubleth Israel?" inquired Ahab of Elijah. "He is a devil," said the Jews of Christ. "The Christians have done this," said the Roman emperor whenever something bad happened. Why these queries? Why these statements? Why this agitation? Because the world is upside down and Christians are to set it right. And the upsetting power is the gospel, nothing more, nothing less.

Songs in the Night.

No man has more religion than he can show in adversity. The wise man said: "If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small." Nearly one hundred years after Paul and Silas were imprisoned, two great Romans fought a battle in the same vicinity. Cassius, in the bitterness of defeat, hid in his tent and commanded his servants to kill him, while Brutus, in sullen determination, fell upon his sword. How different with Paul and Silas! With them there was no defeat, but a song in the night.

The body may be imprisoned, but the soul can neither be confined within walls nor bound with chains. The feet may be fettered, but the thoughts fly like swift-winged arrows to the angels' home beyond the skies.

David says: "Yet Jehovah will command his loving-kindness in the daytime; and in the night his song shall be with me, even a prayer unto the God of my life." (Ps. 42: 8.)

* * *

The Habit of Doing Things.

It was Paul's custom and habit on entering a strange city to begin work at once by preaching in the synagogue, if that city had one. "As his custom was." This tireless missionary puts to shame the time-serving polley of many to-day. No inquiry to see if the people are prejudiced against him; no careful feeling of the situation to see if there will be personal danger; no sounding of the city officials to see if he will be unmolested; no, nothing of the kind. The people are there, and that is enough. All those who follow impressions, who wait for fair weather and favorable indications, should learn a lesson of this man and form the habit of serving Christ at all times.

Hypocrisy.

Somewhere I have read of a civic celebration held in Paris in the days before the Pan-European conflict rendered such festivities inadvisable. It was in early winter, so there were naturally no leaves or blossoms on the trees, but the ingenuity of man came to the rescue and imitation leaves and foliage were attached to every tree. Everywhere throughout the city, and along the Champs Elysees, one could see hundreds of bushes and trees seemingly in full bloom.

Here is a vivid picture of the hypocrite. With him it is always winter, but he pretends to possess the warmth of religious life and masquerade in flowers not his own. An external view would show the foliage of a well-ordered Christian life, while God, who sees and knows our innermost thoughts, knows it is but sham.—Alan Pressley Wilson.

THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE

OF

THE GOSPEL ADVOCATE

WILL BE

ADVANCED ON JANUARY 1, 1917.

* * *

It is generally understood that everything that goes into the production of a newspaper has increased in price tremendously. These increases range all the way from 50 per cent to 200 per cent. White paper has over doubled in value and is scarce at any price; wrappers for the Gospel Advocate have more than doubled in price; inks of all kinds have advanced in price out of all reason; and so it goes all along the line.

As a matter of self-preservation and protection, it is absolutely necessary that we raise the price on January 1, 1917, to $2 per annum.

We will accept renewal and new subscriptions at the present price—NOW!

We will deal just as fairly and liberally with our present subscribers as possible, and so will accept renewal subscriptions, no matter when the subscription expires, at $1.50 for one year and $3 for two years, provided these subscriptions reach us on or before January 1, 1917. New subscribers accepted NOW at $1.50 a year for one year only, in advance.

We advise, as we say, no matter when your subscription expires, that you send us your renewal for one or two years at $1.50 a year, and send it just as early as possible. We will soon be very busy entering thousands upon thousands of subscriptions between now and January 1, 1917. It is your last chance to get the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year.

However, we shall not ask you to bear all of this extra expense without any corresponding benefit; we shall bear at least a fair proportion. The fact that we cannot afford to longer publish the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year necessitated either making the paper smaller or raising the price and making it larger and better. Our space does not now adequately meet the demands made upon it, so it would be suicidal to cut down the size of the paper. We decided that you were the kind of readers that would prefer a better and a larger paper. So on January 1, 1917, or soon thereafter, the paper will be enlarged to 32 pages. Our purpose is to make the Gospel Advocate the brightest and best religious paper in all the country.

Will you please give this your immediate attention?

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

More About "Our Dun's and Bradstreet's."

The subjoined letter, omitting such passages as would identify the writer, is published as a contribution to an issue that is already of the first magnitude. Coming, as it does, from one who has served more than once as State secretary, and who is among the most powerful in our evangelistic ministry, it confirms, in a most unexpected way, the strong terms in which we have been compelled to admonish on this growing evil.

The writer's conviction that to make his name known "would mean starvation" tells only too plainly how far, in his judgment, this evil has progressed:

First, I want to congratulate you with all my heart for the "Our Dun's and Bradstreet's" article in the July 15 issue of the Christian Standard. I believe in missionary work, and have made it the business of my ministry to ask for all I could conscientiously ask for for the various enterprises, and have promoted considerable missionary work independent of any and all agencies. My Sunday school has just sent an offering, averaging one dollar for each member of the school, as its Children's-Day offering to our Foreign Board. We have made other offerings during the year. I have found great satisfaction in this fellowship, despite some painful experiences, of which I shall speak further on in this note.

I have long realized that there is lurking danger in these organized societies. Can any one question the truth of this statement who reads the article just referred to? But what are we preachers to do? What can we do? Year by year the net is being closer drawn, and more and more good men are being driven out of the ministry who shrink from participation in this worldly-wise and conscienceless scheme for "holding up" churches and individuals in the name of Christian missions. The danger no longer "lurks." It has developed into a well-organized, shrewdly manipulated, and wonderfully successful scheme. I am not saying that as a brotherhood we are giving more than we should give for missions. Far from that. We should be giving a great deal more than we are now giving. But we dare not correct one wrong by committing another. Yet that is what some among us would do, and are doing, as evidenced by the letters from which you quote in the article under discussion. This "system" is not alone of the Foreign Missionary Society. We preachers know that every one of our "organized interests" is "in on the scheme," even down to the State secretaries. They have to be, or lose their jobs. The State secretaries are at the mercy of the national secretaries. Not one of them could long continue in his office were he to rebel against the system, or even fail to cooperate with it.

I know whereof I speak, for I have been a State secretary myself. We doubt not that many local preachers who have fallen in with the scheme, and certain secretaries, especially State and Sunday-school secretaries, will scoff the idea that there is anything at all to the claims of this article. No doubt some have fitted into the scheme so naturally and others so thoughtlessly that they are not aware that any wrong is being done.

Just what is to be done to correct this growing evil is the important question. If there were some way of informing all our official boards as to the facts, doubtless they would cease to consider preachers commended by the secretaries. The boards should know that the only safe plan whereby to secure unprejudiced information concerning preachers is through disinterested sources. It would be impossible for them to go to a source that is more interested, aside from the church they themselves serve, than to go to the secretaries, State and national. And there is not wanting evidence to prove that with the secretaries the one thing that counts is the preacher's record for twisting money out of his parishioners for missionary purposes.

Secretaries often commend preachers whose records are not at all satisfactory—they are usually unsatisfactory until they have at least one living link to their credit, and not quite satisfactory then save to the society for which the living link has been secured.

Perhaps it will not be long until a sufficient number of preachers will have committed themselves to the scheme that the secretaries will no longer be under the necessity of at any time recommending a man who has not a fairly satisfactory record for holding up churches and individuals for missionary funds.

My first experience concerning this matter happened during my first ministry, and that means a good many years ago. I was preaching for a country church. On a certain Lord's day I had taken an offering for State missions. It was the first offering for State missions ever made by that church, then fifty years old. A little later I chanced to meet aboard train my State secretary, and, with great joy, I proceeded to tell him of my fine offering, as I believed it to be. He commended me for my loyalty (to the missionary work), and went on to inform me that, if I expected another pastorate when through there, it would be necessary not only to take the missionary offerings from year to year, but to double up on them as well. That was the first, but not the last, time I have heard the buzz of the big stick.

Perhaps, as I have said so much, I might say more, and tell of one or two other of my experiences with the system. I was serving a church in a State which "articulated" with the American Christian Missionary Society. We failed to take the offering the first Lord's day in May for American missions. We had decided to wait till after harvest, when money would be more plentiful. In the meantime we received a decidedly threatening letter, warning us that if the offering from that particular church was not forthcoming within due season, what would happen—which was plenty. We were slated for exposure, through a certain journal named in the communication, as a traitor to the cause. Another time and in another State we were being considered with a view to being called, along with others, as is usually the case with our churches and boards. This was also a State that "articulated" with the A. C. M. S. One of the men being considered was commended, and was being urged by the A. C. M. S.'s secretary. For reasons which doubtless seemed sufficient, the board made choice of myself as the man for the position. For this piece of independence on the part of the board, the then national secretary proceeded to reprimand in no uncertain terms said board for daring to "pass up" his man. The quotation is mine. I saw the correspondence, but, as several years have elapsed, I cannot now remember the exact language. But it was sharp, and went so far as to insinuate that such conduct was calculated to lose them the help the A. C. M. S. was contributing to that State. We are not through telling our experiences with the "system," but perhaps this is enough for the present.

It is a great pity that mankind is so weak that when individuals are placed in control of machinery of any sort, even church machinery, where money is involved, they are prone to wander from the right path.

I began this communication with no notion of any of it being published, but extended my remarks under "Firstly" beyond my expectations. Should you wish to quote from it at any time, or print it all, you are at liberty to do so; but do not mention my name, for, if you were to do so, as you must know, it would mean starvation, or seek another means of livelihood.

The question raised by our correspondent, "What is to be done?" demands something more than passing comment. It calls for action. What that action must be depends on the character and extent of the evil to be counteracted. It is evident, from the facts here cited and from the statements of other informants, that those who follow these oppressive practices have a double advantage over their victims.

I. They are apparently organized; that is to say, the organizations formed largely through the efforts of the ministry, for other and better purposes, can be, and in some cases certainly are, used to coerce them. In the face of such combined effort, the independent ministry is at a cruel disadvantage.

2. The second advantage is the possession of funds, diverted from other and better purposes, but which may be employed, and, in cases, are believed to have been employed, in the war on the independent ministry. State secretaries, traveling on State funds and paid State salaries, have been known to appear on the ground at the critical moment, without any other apparent errand than to defeat the candidacy of a man obnoxious to the system, or to promote the candidacy of one subservient to the system.

These two great disadvantages must certainly be counteracted if men of independent convictions are to be enabled to protect themselves and one another.

The readiest means, as it appears to us, is to enter into a protective association:

1. To call attention to this evil, and to protest to the societies or boards under whose authority such practices are carried on. We would be slow to believe that any board or society would knowingly sanction them. So far as our knowledge goes, it is limited to salaried officials ambitious to make a record for themselves and to retain their hold on office.

2. To act in concert, to insure that minions of "our Dun's and Bradstreet's" are not installed as officers in our State organizations. It is here that the evil principally lies, and the most effective remedy is to place true men in every responsible position.

3. To maintain a bureau of information, through which these measures can be carried out, and through which ministers and churches can learn something of one another more than merely what pleases a few self-interested officials.

Whether such a form of organization would best serve or not, they owe it to themselves not to leave their names and their usefulness at the mercy of men who boldly avow a policy so unjust and so intolerable. Some form of organization will be necessary if any effective opposition is to be made.

Coupled with the pertinacious efforts to form an ecclesiasticism in which our free churches will figure as units, it will be seen what crushing power would be placed in the hands of a few men who controlled the "Dun's and Bradstreet's" of our ministry.—Christian Standard, August 26.

Preachers Old and Young.

BY W. H. CARTER.

For some time I have thought that something along the line suggested by the head to this article should be said; not to reprove, rebuke, or discourage, but to admonish, exhort, and encourage—that which is suggestive and conducive to the greatest good possible to all who may be concerned. I have halted, waited, studied, and thought maybe I am not the one to undertake this task, and maybe I am not able to say the right thing, or may not say it in the right way. I have followed Brother Elam very closely in what he has said in regard to preachers, preaching and commercializing the gospel, and am not able to point out any defects that I think injurious to the preacher or the cause of Christ. But some good brethren have found some objection to some things he said, and now, if I write, will some one criticize me? I have decided that, if they do, it will work to my good; so I have mustered up courage to venture and risk the consequences. One thing I am sure of is, if I write the truth, God will take care of that, and also of me, although I may have to undergo chastisement from those who may not see things as I do. "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." (Heb. 12: 6.) May we not draw some consolation, some comfort, assurance, and peace of mind, from this? Looking back over forty years of experience in an effort to set forth the truth as it is in Jesus, I can see and feel the chastisement that has befallen me,

I remember what it is to have a wife and children who had not the comforts of life that those for whom I labored, pleaded, and prayed had. I remember how I had to buy food and raiment on credit and then work at some "useful employment" to earn the money to meet the obligation, and preach in private houses, schoolhouses, and in the groves as I had opportunity. In all this I tried to learn the lesson of patience and trust and humility and faith, believing that the Lord would bring good out of it all; if not to me, he would to others. Amid all this I tried not to complain or beg. I did not believe God intended that his children should be beggars. I felt it would be humiliating to me and the cause for which I pleaded. My good wife, who was "a gift of the Lord," when through weakness I faltered and was about to fall, strengthened and encouraged me to go and do all the good I could, saying; "By the help of the Lord, I will take care of the children while you are gone."

O, there are so many things I could say when I think of the joys and sorrows, the trials, conflicts, disappointments, and—shall I say it?—victories. Yes, victories. One great victory has come to wife and me through the lesson we have learned and the patience endured. But the greatest of all is in the building up of the Redeemer's cause in my home county. Forty years ago, when I offered myself as a sacrifice for the spread of the truth, there were two congregations in the county, maybe three—one at Lafayette, one in the west end and one in the east end of the county. They were mostly poor people and one of them disbanded. The one in the west end had internal troubles that hindered its growth. I labored among them, not for their money, for they had it not to give, but to help them grow in grace, in the knowledge of the truth, and make increase of the body. These troubles were finally removed, the church began to grow, and to-day they have a nice congregation, and the members are at peace among themselves and trying to build themselves up in their most holy faith. To-day, instead of two congregations in the county, there are eleven, all in peace and striving to worship God according to his will. But do not understand that I claim all this as the result of my own labor, for other preachers, faithful and true, have labored, and are now laboring, to build up churches, among whom are the Knight brothers, Dave and John, who have been, and are now, sowing the seed of the kingdom. In one community I held a four-days' debate and received one dollar and fifty cents. Now there is a good congregation of disciples in that neighborhood who have not lost love for me, but show their appreciation of my efforts by calling me to preach for them and helping to supply my temporal wants. Last Lord's day (May 14, 1916) was their twenty-seventh anniversary. I was with them the day they began to worship in their new house, and have been with them on the second Lord's day in May most of the years since they began. Last Lord's day we had two sermons, dinner on the ground, and a nice, respectful, and attentive audience, and wife and I returned home full of joy over the association of the day and the prospect for the salvation of other precious souls. The Lord willing, I will assist them in their meeting this fall, beginning the first Lord's day in October. But I must not take up too much space; so I close here until next week. Be sure and read my next, for, the Lord willing, I will tell you something you do not know. I am going to tell you something on a preacher that he would not want me to tell, if he knew it. You do not know who it is, but you will know when I tell it. He will read this, but will not suspicion that he is the one; but after I tell on him he will know it is he, and that I told the truth. The publishers must not "give me away," lest he break this link out of our little chain of reminiscences.

They Let the Fire of Love Go Out.

Once a man and a maiden fair
Chanced to meet one day somewhere.
They met again—yes, many times.
She wrote verses and he made rhymes

He knew not what his fate might be,
But thought he'd try his hand and see;
And when he said, "Will you be mine?"
She had not courage to decline.

Who was the man and the maiden fair?
I give no names, but mention the pair;
But none to one it just fits you,
And that's the point I'm coming to.

Then love was blind; it did not see
A single fault in the wife to be;
Nor she in him had ought to find,
For he excelled among mankind.

But little things came in between,
Their hearts away began to wean,
Till both had grown so very cold
That actually they'd sometimes scold.

Yet neither was a bit more bad
Than on the day they wooed and wed.
The way the whole thing came about,
They let the fire of love go out.

The Word of God in India.

BY E. S. JELLEY, JR.

Brother McHenry and I arrived at Sonal on the first of July. The next day being Lord's day, over one hundred people were present for the Lord's Supper. We have had some preaching, and there are about twenty male students, together with their wives, engaged in the study of the Bible. These students are all preachers or would-be preachers. From here trips have been made by various workers to other towns and the gospel preached. Seven baptisms have occurred here, and six on Brother McHenry's trip to see Brother Wakeker's sick father. The latter desired very much to be baptized; so Brother McHenry baptized him, and he seemed very happy. Later he passed away.

By invitation, we took tea with an Established Church missionary. His church was established not upon the Rock, but upon an act of Parliament. He wanted us to agree to kindly leave this region to him in peaceful possession, as he said the preaching of the gospel in places where the Church of England is established causes hypocrisy and discord. We told him that we are commissioned to make disciples everywhere, and that we hoped in our lifetime to see all India occupied by the church of Christ. He insisted that we tell him whether in our opinion he had any hope of salvation. We gave him a gentle and courteously scriptural reply. Formerly the native workers were profoundly ignorant of the Bible. Now, however, besides being well posted on the subject of first principles, they are beginning to get a good general idea of Bible history, and we are teaching them the Christian evidences. Work is being done here for eternity. We greatly need more missionaries, more helpers, and more money to use in distributing literature. "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed [or he that denies himself in order to assist the seed sower in going out], shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." (Ps. 126, 6.)

War.

You cannot stop war by practicing it. The only way to stop war is to stop practicing it. They only way to stop practicing it is to stop pleading for it. Stop pleading for it under any circumstances. If war is allowable in extreme cases, it is allowable always; for war is confessedly never resorted to except in extreme cases. Every nation now at war is at war, on its own confession, because it could not help it. It is needless to bring up extreme cases as sufficient causes to justify war. If war is right, it is always right when national interests are imperilled. On the other hand, if war is wrong, it is always wrong even though it is to preserve national interests. And if war is justifiable, why should a nation be blamed for being prepared, and why should militarism in a nation be censured? If it is right to go to war, it is right to be prepared for it, and it is only the part of wisdom to be prepared to the limit. In the view that war is admissible at all, militarism in a nation is a virtue.

Some seem to think it strange that "Christian" nations should be at war, but it should not be a matter of the least surprise. It is just what should be expected. All these "Christian" nations maintain that when the inevitable happens war is allowable even to the Christian, and that the first duty of every member of the State is to fight for his country; and if he doesn't, he is shot down. The inevitable has happened and fighting must be done. Each State regrets it, but says war was forced upon it. Each country urges its subjects into battle, calling upon God and averring that if one dies in a "righteous cause" it is the gate to glory. Japan, like the West, makes the exception for war in "extreme" cases and calls upon her sons to immortalize their names in the same way. In her army are some who are "Christians." They have been taught by their pastors and the missionaries that when duty calls, though it is to be regretted, yet they should go, and that if they fall in battle glory awaits them. What else, then, could be expected than that "Christian" nations should be at war? And if in extreme cases war is the proper thing, where is the place for criticism?

But from the Christian point of view war is prohibited for any cause. We are to defend ourselves and maintain our cause by righteousness backed up only by kindness and love. "Resist not evil." "Overcome evil with good." "Love your enemies." "Do good to them that hate you." "Bless them that curse you; bless, and curse not." The only possible way to stop war is to make no allowance for it under any condition or provocation whatsoever, but to condemn it absolutely, and in its place under all circumstances, even to the loss of life and property, to practice the Golden Rule.

Sympathy is feeling with others, and is quite a distinct thing from feeling for them. The latter is more of a quick and evanescent sentiment, good as far as it goes, but not often going far; laudable as long as it lasts, but not always lasting over the hour. Sympathy is a habit, or temper of mind, which means prayer and effort and sacrifice, and a sense of the common lot, with firmness and discrimination, and, best of all, "the mind of Christ."—Bishop Thorold.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

Please Read This.

The writer has just recently closed a very interesting meeting at Menlo, Ga. Four souls were baptized into Christ and the faithful there were greatly strengthened. Menlo is a delightful village about forty-two miles southwest of Chattanooga, at the foot of Lookout Mountain. It is noted for its fine mineral water, and quite a number of people visit it in the summer for their vacations. We have about thirty-five members there, but the most of them are women. Some of the best people that I have ever met constitute the nucleus at this place.

But these people are not doing what they could do for the cause were they only blessed with a convenient place for meeting. They have been meeting in a hall on the second floor. Several efforts have been made to build a house, all of them failing because of their lack of men who could take the work and push it on to success. I found that this has greatly crippled their influence as a church. The outsiders are impressed that, to a large degree, the establishing of a permanent congregation there is an uncertain quantity. Seeing this sore need of a building, I was compelled to insist that it must be built. They have a most desirable lot paid for. The writing of the deed to this property is now in my hands and will be finished this week, the Lord willing. Brother Jim Thomas, of Chattanooga, is now at Menlo for the purpose of going to the woods and having the rough lumber sawed at a mill on his place. The members are giving what they are able to give in lumber, labor, and money. But they need some help. We want the building completed at the earliest possible date and another meeting conducted there so soon as it is sufficiently finished that it can be used for this purpose. Kind reader, will you not help, and do it now? I think I know when people are doing their best and when they need some outside assistance. I know that your help here is needed and that it will be money well spent for the cause of Christ. Send all donations to Miss Georgia Thomas, Menlo, Ga., and its receipt will be acknowledged in this paper.

A Sore Need.

If there ever was a time when more laborers were needed, this is the time. We cannot begin to answer the calls for men to preach the word. It is the duty of the church to preach the gospel from the "rivers to the ends of the earth," even if there were no calls to do so; but it is certainly distressing when we have hungry souls begging us to come and help them, and we simply cannot get to them. How timely are these words of our Lord just now: "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest!" (Matt. 9: 37, 38.)

But the thing that I wish to especially emphasize at this time is the need, not only of praying for more laborers, but the sore need of our actually doing something to increase the forces. Please to note that our Lord not only instructed his disciples to pray for more laborers, but that he immediately sent them into the harvest. (See Matt. 9: 37, 38; 10: 1.) Too, turn to Luke 10: 1-3 and you will see that he sent the seventy into the harvest, praying the "Lord of the harvest to send more laborers" and teaching them to pray the same prayer. It is just as true to say that prayer without works is dead as to say that faith without works is dead. May our Father help every one of us to consider, seriously, the following questions: (1) Are we earnestly praying for more laborers? (2) If so, what are we doing to increase the number of laborers? Are we, like our religious neighbors, expecting them to get a direct call to preach and to be miraculously qualified? Or do we realize that it is our duty to encourage the talent in the church, to put our hands on the young men in our churches who have proven themselves to be holy and without blame before God in love, and to encourage them to give themselves wholly to the ministry of the word? I say that this is our duty. The sore need of more laborers goes without argument. Shall we have them? Others can do as they may; but as for me, I shall continue to encourage every godly young man who has a desire to preach the gospel to prepare himself and give himself wholly to the ministry. Along with this, I shall teach every man and woman, boy and girl, who is a Christian, that it is his and her duty to preach the word by their godly living and by word every opportunity he has, regardless of business calling in life. Christ made no mistake when he found Peter, James, John, and others at their trade and called them from it and encouraged them to give themselves wholly to the preaching of the word. As stated last week, the cause of Christ is suffering for more laborers; both of the farmer-preacher and merchant-preacher class and those who give themselves wholly to the ministry of the word. May the Lord supply this sore need of more laborers.

More Good Reports.

Brother Morgan H. Carter recently closed a short meeting at Hardie's Chapel, with six confessions and baptisms and one from the Baptists. Too, he conducted a short meeting with the Liberty Hill congregation, with six souls baptized into Christ. This good brother is becoming more and more a power for good in our State.

W. M. Brumit, our farmer-preacher and one of our best workers, recently baptized three at Bethany congregation and two near Vilarica. At this writing he is with the Pleasant Grove brethren, in Cobb County, with a crowded house at both services the first Lord's day. We are expecting a fine report of this meeting.

Brother Aruna Clark, of Chattanooga, recently baptized one at Rockmart on his monthly visit there. He is now at Austell in a meeting, and goes from there to Buchanan.

Brother John Hayes, of Cedar Hill, Texas, is now at Rome, and will continue with these brethren a number of weeks. His friends should remember that he is working in waste places and with weak congregations; hence their donations to supply what is lacking will be greatly appreciated. Address him at 608 Broad Street, Rome, Ga.

Brother John T. Smithson, of Hopkinsville, Ky., is now helping Brother Coleman in a meeting near Trenton.

The writer is now with the Lyerly brethren, with two baptisms to date. This is going to be one of the best short meetings I have ever conducted. I go from here to a congregation near Kingston, established by Brother O. D. Bearden, one of our Atlanta elders and a trunkmaker-preacher, and a good one, too. God hasten the day when every child of God will preach the word as far as he or she is able.

No ship can tempt the sea and learn its glory so long as she goes moored by any rope, however long, by which she means to be drawn back again if the sea grows too rough. The soul that trifles and toys with self-sacrifice never can get its true joy and power. Only the soul that with an overwhelming impulse and a perfect trust gives itself up forever to the life of other men finds the delight and peace which such complete self-surrender has to give.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

Some Points of Agreement.

It is very common to assert that "Disciples" and Baptists are in agreement on only one point—baptism in water, instead of ransim. But that is to forget the fundamental doctrine of Baptists, that baptism is to be administered to those only who profess personal faith in the Lord Jesus and give evidence of having "passed from death to life." On this point "Disciples" and Baptists are in full agreement, though they do not agree as to the status of the candidate for baptism. The Baptist believes that the candidate should have a consciousness of sins forgiven, of a personal relation to the Lord Jesus Christ, before baptism. The Disciple would baptize in order to beget such consciousness. He holds that no one has a right to regard himself as in Christ, or saved, until he has been baptized. Just there is the radical distinction between Baptists and "Disciples." Those who have occasion to note the difference should have it clearly in mind. It may be summed up in a nutshell.—Journal and Messenger.

I would very greatly rejoice to see all religionists enjoying that union for which Christ yearned when he prayed: "Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us; that the world may believe that thou didst send me." (John 17: 20, 21.) But so far as my individual responsibility is concerned, I am far more anxious to be in full accord with the Bible than with the Baptists or any other religionists. The thing for us all to do is to conform our teaching to the Bible, and not seek to conform the Bible to our teaching. As the Bible teaches the baptism of believers, it is certainly gratifying that Baptists baptize believers. An unbeliever cannot enjoy Christian baptism. It is not possible to understand how a man can give scriptural evidence of having "passed from death to life" before baptism, as the Savior promises salvation to the baptized believer. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) Either Christ or the man who gives evidence of salvation before and without baptism is mistaken. Again, the Spirit, through Peter, commanded believers on the day of Pentecost: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38.) Those whom Peter addressed could not give evidence of the remission of sins before baptism; for, if so, the Spirit would not command them to repent and be baptized unto the remission of sins. Neither would the Holy Spirit have said to Saul through Ananias: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22: 16.) As remission of sins is in Christ and not out of Christ, it is impossible to understand how the man who has not been baptized into Christ can give scriptural evidence that he has "passed from death to life." "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3.) It would be helpful if the editor of the Journal and Messenger would conform his teaching and practice to the plain teaching of the Bible on this subject.

The editor of the Journal and Messenger continues:

And that difference is so radical that it cannot be overcome, so long as both adhere to their present views of scripture teaching and Christian experience. Only now and then a Baptist speaks of an assurance obtained in baptism, speaking of the day of his baptism as "the happiest day of his life." To very many people it was a happy day, and they can never forget it, as they ought not to forget it. But many Baptists can point to other days and other experiences which almost eclipse the day of their baptism. Usually the happiest day is before baptism, the day of a conscious passage from death to life, and many can sing with John Newton:

"Sweet was the time when first I felt
The Savior's pard'ning blood
Applied to cleanse my soul from guilt,
And bring me home to God."

The man who wrote that hymn was never baptized, but he knew the grace of God and enjoyed as much of his presence as do most of those baptized.

Again, in the above the Journal and Messenger is not in accord with the New Testament teaching on baptism. In New Testament times a man did not believe and put off his baptism for one or two years. Believers were baptized "the same hour of the night," and Saul, though he had fasted three days, did not break his fast until after baptism. So we see that under apostolic practice and preaching a man's belief and baptism were on the same day, even the same hour of the night, though the hour be at midnight. Baptist usage may separate the day of belief and the day of baptism for twelve months, but the New Testament usage joins them together as closely as "the same hour of the night." The Christian does not spend his time pondering over the happiness of any day; but if he is faithful in the service of the Lord, the days prove to be happier as the years come and go. The last day of his life, when the spirit is liberated from the body, is the most triumphant of all the days of his life: "The day of death is better than the day of one's birth." "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

The editor of the Journal and Messenger further continues on the same subject:

It is to be feared that too many people had their highest and deepest and most satisfying experience at the time of their baptism. They look upon the ordinance as a work of virtue which, when performed, gives a right and a precedent for lives of careless profession thereafter. We are always a little doubtful of him who tells us of his baptism as his happiest day, or who makes it conspicuous among the days of his service. It ought to be a good day to the believing, repentant, forgiving, and purposeful soul; it ought to stand out in memory and mark an era in the life of the Christian; but it ought not to be so much more notable than any other day that no other compares with it or excels it. It is to be feared that, in too many cases, baptism is the one thing with some Baptists, as it is the one thing among "Disciples."

One thing is sure, and that is, the man who stops at baptism makes too much out of it. When people are baptized, they have just enlisted as soldiers of the cross. Then, like Paul, "forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before," they "press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Then they must work out their own salvation "with fear and trembling." The life of the believer must be a life of constant prayer and diligence.

A Good Book.

"Christian Treasures" is the name of a neat little volume of 281 pages, lately issued by the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn. It is compiled by our energetic brother, A. B. Lipscomb, being selections from specially written articles of the Gospel Advocate. In reading the book, I thought I would like to quote some portions of it which I considered especially good, but I soon found I would be quoting a large portion of it. To say it is perfect would be claiming more than is due any human production. It is a book, however, containing much wholesome teaching, and it deserves a wide circulation. An excellent book it would be to hand to your neighbor. That's the use I mean to make of it. I am pleased to note that this is Volume I, and that others are soon to follow. The more such books we can have, the better. J. M. McCALLEN.

Fighting the Devil with Fire.

BY E. A. E.

Jesus did not fight the devil, and he does not teach his disciples to fight the devil, with fire. He used "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God"—"It is written"—and for the time the devil left him. (See Matt. 4: 1-11.) In meeting all the mighty temptations and attacks of the devil, even unto his death on the cross, Jesus never resorted to any of the ways and means, tactics and tricks of the devil. Note his prayers and all that he did during the awful night of his betrayal and his prayers on the cross. He forbade the use of the sword.

Eph. 6: 10-20 specifies the full armor of God in which all can "stand against the wiles of the devil," "and, having done all, to stand."

"The church of the living God" is the "institution," or "organization," in which and through which to combat all error and to fight the devil in every way, for through it is made known "the manifold wisdom of God" (Eph. 3: 10); it is "the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3: 15), and through it God is to be glorified forever and ever (Eph. 3: 21).

The children of Israel committed a fatal and far-reaching sin in influence and destruction when they rejected God as their King and undertook to fight the devil with fire. We are familiar with the sad story, Samuel was old; "his sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside after idols, and took bribes, and perverted judgment;" the enemy was consolidated, well organized, and strong. The Israelites were cowardly and weak through lack of faith in God and confidence in his ways and means. It was the wisdom of the world and the tactics and trick of the devil to have a king to judge Israel "like all the nations" (1 Sam. 8.) God said to Samuel: "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not be king over them."

To reject God's system of government was to reject God. Saul turned back from following God, became rebellious, stubborn, idolatrous, and iniquitous, when he "rejected the word of Jehovah." (1 Sam. 15: 22, 23.)

But what of all this? "Much every way."

I urge our readers—every one—to go carefully and seriously over an editorial article of the Christian Standard of August 26, copied on page 915 of this paper. This article embraces a letter "from one who has served more than once as State secretary." Study it.

This letter and this editorial article and other articles of the Christian Standard bring against the societies, both State and national, the most serious and most fearful indictments that mortal hand has ever written. I cannot enumerate them here for lack of space; we shall have to go over the letter and article again to get them all. They both expose the "oppressive practices," the coercing of preachers, the "holding up" of "churches and individuals in the name of Christian missions," "the worldly-wise and conscienceless schemes," and ambitions of "salaried officers" of the societies. The author of the letter not only says that he has "long realized that there is lurking danger in these organized societies," but "that the danger no longer lurks; but has developed into a well-organized, shrewdly manipulated and wonderfully successful scheme," and that "year by year the net is being closer drawn, and more and more good men are being driven out of the ministry who shrink from this worldly-wise and conscienceless scheme of 'holding up' churches and individuals in the name of Christian missions." He also says that the preachers know that "every one of our organized interests" is "on to the scheme," and that the secretaries "have to be" (emphasis his) in this scheme "or lose their job," and that "not one of them could longer continue in his office were he to rebel against the system, or even fail to cooperate with it;" that "the one thing that counts is the preacher's record of twisting money [emphasis mine] out of his parishioners;" that preachers "whose records are not satisfactory" are often commended by secretaries; that he himself has more than once "heard the buzz of the big stick;" and, worse than all, that he does not want his name given, "for, if that should be done, it would mean starvation, or seek another means of livelihood."

In the Christian Standard of July 15 the editor says that the "Missionary Intelligencer" is "the official organ of the Foreign Missionary Society" and that its editor "was the one to adopt the phrase, 'Dun's and Bradstreet's,' to designate the published society receipts," and gives a letter written by the editor of the Missionary Intelligencer to show what is meant by the use of the phrase—that a preacher's rating depends upon the amount of money he raises. This letter, addressed to a preacher, says in part:

First, if you wish to fill the highest place among us, one thing is needed. That is to develop in your people the grace of giving. Have your people double their offerings from year to year. The Methodist Church promotes or degrades a man as he does or does not see that the benevolences of the church are properly attended to. We do the same thing, but in a different way.

This letter then gives an illustration to show that of two men equally competent in every way the one who can get his church to "quadruple the offerings to every interest"

"stands in the front rank of our ministers," while the other is little sought after.

The Christian Standard says:

We can cite a minister in the employ of one of our strong city churches who was mighty on the collections, but who did not have the baptistery open in three years, while the congregation dwindled to half its original size. When forced to leave by the disgusted congregation, "our Dun's and Bradstreet's" officials left no stone unturned to help him to one position after another, although he was well known to be disloyal to the Bible and to the plea. And this continued until he finally went to his own place. This is what is meant to make any society publication the "Dun's and Bradstreet's" of the ministry.

The Standard says it can give other instances of this kind and also "cases where faithful ministers, earnest supporters even of all our missionary societies, have been quite driven from the ministry because they have incurred the hostility of 'our Dun's and Bradstreet's' officials, who have even interfered to exclude them from pulpits to which they have been called. The worst crime is a manhood that refused to be intimidated by 'our Dun's and Bradstreet's' system."

The Standard concludes thus:

The Yearbook tells nothing of a minister's faithfulness and efficiency in his care of the church. It tells nothing of his fidelity to the Scriptures. It tells nothing of missionary and benevolent work independent of the societies. It tells nothing of his ministry, except what he may do for society's treasuries; and to make this "our Dun's and Bradstreet's" is a menace that our independent ministry should properly rebuke. The church that selects a minister because of his rating in "our Dun's and Bradstreet's" need not complain if it secures one who, like the toady above mentioned, serves "our Dun's and Bradstreet's" to the loss of the church employing him.

There is neither comfort nor remedy in saying, "I told you so." Years ago the Gospel Advocate knew and tried to expose these tactics and "shrewdly manipulated schemes" of the societies. Since the real organization of the first societies Tolbert Fanning, Ben Franklin, David Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, and others then, and, later, J. A. Harding, F. D. Srygley, and numerous others, pointed out and emphasized most clearly these evils and their most fearful consequences; but the society brethren "scuffed the idea" that there was any foundation for such alarm and declared that nothing was meant but to "spread the gospel." The Christian Standard compared Brother Lipscomb to the old woman who attempted to sweep back the sea. The Standard now is in the sweeping business, "and the sweeping waves roll on." I have read something about "the irony of fate."

The concluding paragraph of the letter given in this paper is:

It is a great pity that mankind is so weak that, when individuals are placed in control of machinery of any sort, even church machinery, where money is involved, they are prone to wander from the right paths.

Not all, brother, by any means. Brother J. A. Harding once said to me that when institutions are built up and made strong, then the money sharks seek them and get control of them. Self-sacrificing men go into the waste places and build up churches until they become strong, then the ones who preach for a "livelihood" seek to be their "pastors." And sad it is that then many of the churches turn from the self-sacrificing men who built them up. The history of the work of the societies shows that they seek the churches—the money and control of the churches—which the real missionaries have built up. The Gospel Advocate has pointed this out dozens of times.

"Fellowship in Furtherance of the Gospel."

BY M. C. K.

A copy of a tract by John E. Cowden bearing the above title and published in the Tennessee Christian for August, 1916, has been sent to us with the request that we review it in the Gospel Advocate; but a careful reading of its haphazard statements and bungling misrepresentations shows its author to be so utterly lacking in an accurate knowledge of the issue that he is attempting to discuss that a formal review of it is unnecessary. It is astonishing that a brother who has not sufficient knowledge of an issue to even state what that issue is would not have the discretion to leave its discussion to other hands.

No, no, we shall not attempt a formal reply to such a production, but will call attention to enough of its incorrect statements and bungling attempts at reasoning to show how unreliable it is as an attempt to discuss the issue between the society and the antisociety churches. There is a real and important issue between them, but there is nothing beyond a hint of it in the Cowden tract. From the beginning to the end, it nowhere defines that issue. But it says some things, and we now invite attention to some of them.

1. He says "the mistake of many is" that "they demand a 'Thus saith the Lord' for everything that in any way has to do with the work and worship of the church." Now, who are these "many?" We should be glad to know of one solitary congregation anywhere on earth, if there be any such congregation, or even of a solitary person anywhere on earth, if there be any such person, of whom his statement is true. The Gospel Advocate knows of no religious body, nor of a single church, nor of a single individual on earth who demands "a 'Thus saith the Lord' for everything that in any way has to do with the work and worship of the church." There is not a religious people on earth, nor a party among such a people, who do not freely admit, and preach and practice accordingly, that there are many things which in some "way" have "to do with the work and worship of the church" on which we have no "Thus saith the Lord," and on which none is needed. The brother's statement is utterly false in toto.

2. He says: "It is right to breathe in church because Christ did so." Wrong again. "It is" not "right to breathe in church because Christ did so," but "Christ did so" because it is natural and "right to breathe in church" or anywhere else. From such premises, we are left to suppose that the author of this tract is teaching the people that, just as they are to be baptized and eat the Lord's Supper "because Christ did so," so they should "breathe in church because Christ did so!" If the society folks in Tennessee have hitherto been without a Nestor, they surely have one now!

3. Again, he delivers this oracular utterance: "Nor does the fact that there is nothing in the Bible about a thing either include it or exclude it from the church." Now, is not this a brilliant mixture of logic and theology? And will the reader please see how numerous and vast our gains are by such an utterance? For example, "the fact that there is nothing in the Bible about" infant baptism neither "includes it nor excludes it from the church," and, therefore, we may have it or not have it, as we like! And "the fact that there is nothing in the Bible about" sprinkling or pouring neither "includes them nor excludes them from the church," and, therefore, we may have them or not have them, as we like! And "the fact that there is nothing in the Bible about" burning incense in the worship neither "includes it nor excludes it from the church," and, therefore, we may have it or not have it, as we like! But the time would fail us to tell about the Romish counting of beads, auricular confession, or holy water, with the mourners' bench and all the other flummery and spectacle lar performances in the denominational world, for "the fact that there is nothing in the Bible about" them neither "includes them nor excludes them from the church," and, therefore, we may have any or all of them or not, as we like! Thus, by this logic we can make a clean sweep and have anything and everything not mentioned in the Bible, for "the fact that there is nothing in the Bible about" it neither "includes it nor excludes it from the church!" Selah!

4. But listen again to this missionary Nestor: "When we find no word or deed revealing Christ's mind on a matter, we are free to do and use anything that is consistent with his character." Behold our brother's logic again, and see how rich his premises are in yielding conclusions; for, if Christ's "word," spoken through inspired men, is not to be our guide, then we can have incense, infant membership, instrumental music and animal sacrifice in the service of God, who once had them all in his service, which shows that they are "consistent with his character," and that they are, therefore, consistent with the character of Christ. If not, why not? And we can also have the priestly confessional; for, if it be said that the New Testament does not provide for a "priest" to whom confession shall be made, we reply, exactly so, but that circumstances need not hinder us from having one; for "when we find no word or deed revealing Christ's mind on a matter, we are free to do and use anything that is consistent with his character;" and since "we find no word or deed revealing Christ's mind on" having such a priest, and since having one would be "consistent with his character," it follows, of course, that "we are free to" provide one. If not, why not?

5. He says that "Christ on one occasion was asked to give" a "plan for doing Christian work," but that, instead of giving it, "he rebuked John for demanding uniformity of methods in Christian work. (Mark 9: 38-41.)" This is not true. Christ "was asked to give" no such thing. The reader can see for himself by reading the passage. Neither is there any record whatever of John "demanding uniformity of methods in Christian work." The author of this tract misrepresents the New Testament as grossly as he does those who oppose the missionary society. We here give the Gospel Advocate's disposition of this point when it came up in our discussion with the Christian Standard:

Finally, the Standard says: "Whenever brethren are engaged in missionary work, whatever the plan may be, so long as the Scripture doctrine is upheld, let us respect and encourage them for the work's sake (Mark 9: 38-41), trusting to the good Lord to bring it right, in any respect in which they may be at fault as to his perfect will." Certainly, let us do this; but, unless the church itself may be called a "plan," the Gospel Advocate is making no contention for a mere "plan" of work, nor that every church must follow the same plan when the latter means the mere manner of doing a thing. So long as the church remains where God placed it, as the "center of evangelism" with its divinely appointed board of overseers and managers, the Gospel Advocate, all things else being equal, would be quite as willing to follow the Christian Standard's ways of doing things as to follow its own. Hence, Mark 9: 38-41 is totally irrelevant here. The Standard's well-known exegetical skill should have saved it from an application made in precisely the same way to justify the existence of different denominations. In his commentary on Matthew and Mark, Professor McGarvey made this appropriate comment on the passage: "The expression, 'he followeth not us,' means that he was not one of the immediate attendants of Jesus. Seeing such a man casting out demons excited John's jealousy, because he thought that no others than the chosen twelve ought to be honored with this power." There is not only nothing in the passage to justify the existence of different institutions in doing things, but not even the remotest reference to different ways of doing the same thing. The man of whom John complained and the twelve were all doing the same thing in the same way—casting out demons in the name of Jesus. On the mere manner of doing things where God has not spoken, we contend for no way to the exclusion of others; but where he has spoken, as in the case of boards of overseership, we cannot see his order displaced with another under the name of mere "business functions" or "business institutions" without the strongest protest and opposition which we can properly make.

6. He says: "The Gospel Advocate dominates the churches of Tennessee to such an extent that it is fast becoming an ecclesiasticism of the most dangerous type." This statement shows that he either does not know the meaning of the word "ecclesiasticism," or that he misapplies it to suit his purpose, one or the other. A mere tyro in the use of words, if informed concerning the situation in Tennessee, should have known better than to thus apply the term "ecclesiasticism."

7. Again, he says: "The majority of churches and preachers of Tennessee now do not dare to make a move of any kind without first consulting the authorities that be in Nashville." This statement is false and slanderous on the brethren in Nashville. Not only is the statement untrue of "the majority of churches and preachers of Tennessee," but we venture the counter statement that there is not a single church nor a single preacher in Tennessee that would "not dare make a move of" some "kind without first consulting the authorities that be in Nashville." His statement is utterly false; and if he is what he should be, as a Christian, he will publicly retract it and apologize for it.

A Request Granted.

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

If not asking too much of Brother McQuiddy, would like for him to comment on, or give an explanation of, the first nine verses of the sixteenth chapter of Luke. S. D.

Considering the limited time and space we have for such explanation, I will cheerfully do the very best I can to comply with the above request. The passages read: "And he said also unto the disciples, There was a certain rich man, who had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he was wasting his goods. And he called him, and said unto him, What is this that I hear of thee? render the account of thy stewardship; for thou canst be no longer steward. And the steward said within himself, What shall I do, seeing that my lord taketh away the stewardship from me? I have not strength to dig; to beg I am ashamed. I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses. And calling to him each one of his lord's debtors, he said to the first, How much owest thou unto my lord? And he said, A hundred measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bond, and sit down quickly and write fifty. Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, A hundred measures of wheat. He saith unto him, Take thy bond, and write fourscore. And his lord commended the unrighteous steward because he had done wisely: for the sons of this world are for their own generation wiser than the sons of the light. And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles."

This parable of the unjust steward is peculiar to Luke. The steward here was the manager of a great estate which he farmed out to tenants at a stipulated price. He practiced fraud in this way: He would rent to the tenant at a given price and then settle with the owner at a lower price, putting in his own pocket the difference. He, for instance, would collect one hundred measures of wheat from the tenant and pay the owner eighty and keep the twenty. With this preliminary statement, the understanding of the parable is not difficult. When he had wasted the goods of the owner—that is, had taken them by fraud—and was called upon to give an account of his stewardship, and realized that his stewardship was to end promptly, having been so determined by the owner, he began to cast about to discover what was best for him to do. With him, honorable toil was condescension. He would in his own estimation be humiliated to dig in the field as a common laborer; to beg, after filling an exalted position, he was ashamed. How like him are thousands to-day! Rather than make an honest living by honorable toil, they resort to crooked methods or stealing. As he did not have long to remain in the stewardship, he would make hay while the sun shined. He quickly resolved what to do. He determined to make his lord's tenants his friends, to bring them all under personal obligations to himself, so that when he was put out of the stewardship they would receive him into their houses. So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him and inquired as to the amount of the indebtedness of each. This indicates that his stealing had been on the wholesale; he had doubtless reported less to the owner in each individual case than he had charged the tenant. So he could collect less from each tenant than he had contracted to pay and yet have sufficient to settle with the owner, as he had reported to him less than he had charged each tenant. "He said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?" What was the bargain or trade you made? How much did you agree to pay? The debtor answered: "A hundred measures of oil." The steward remembers that he reported this debt to the owner at fifty measures; and as he is now about to lose his stewardship he will not be profited by the extra fifty, so he says to the debtor: "Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty." This would make the impression on the debtor that the steward was favoring him by giving him fifty measures out of his own pocket. He pursues the same course with all the debtors, making the bills and the book to correspond in each case, and thus opening every man's house and heart to him as a dear and accommodating friend.

HIS WISDOM COMMENDED.

The lord—that is, the rich man of verse 1—commended the unjust steward because he had done wisely, but not for the morality of his conduct. So far as we know, the morality of the rich man may have been no better than that of the unjust steward. The unjust steward acted wisely in that he made thoughtful provision for the future while he had the opportunity. This is the important lesson of the parable. What the prudent and wise children of this world do respecting their worldly future is what the children of light should do respecting their eternal future. The practical application is this: As the unjust steward used the unrighteous mammon so as to provide friends to receive him, so Christians should use their means in relieving the necessities of the poor, and in thus befriending them make friends of them. Mammon is personated and represented as unrighteous because it is so often the occasion of unrighteousness. It is so often the instrument and cause of evil. By a figure the qualities that characterize its use are transferred to the thing itself. I understand that the "eternal tabernacles" means heaven; but we are not to understand that the befriended poor will precede us into heaven and receive us there, but the thought is that the heart of love that leads us to do good to the poor fits and prepares us for heaven. It is not safe to press comparisons too far in parables. As the unjust steward used mammon so as to make friends to receive him into their houses, so Christians should use money in a way that it will fit and qualify them for heaven.

The Bible pronounces fearful curses upon the rich who use their wealth for the oppression of the poor. "Come now, ye rich, weep and howl for your miseries that are coming upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and your silver are rusted; and their rust shall be for a testimony against you, and shall eat your flesh as fire. Ye have laid up your treasure in the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who mowed your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth out; and the cries of them that reaped have entered into the ears of the Lord of the Sabaoth." (James 5: 1-4.)

Appreciation.

We have been very much gratified at the responses to our appeals to our readers to cooperate with us in the work of extending the circulation of this paper. The responses have been prompt and liberal. Many who were in arrears have paid up and renewed their subscriptions for another year. Considering the present high cost of paper, this is absolutely necessary.

We have promised our readers that we will not raise the subscription price of the Gospel Advocate to two dollars a year before the first of January, 1917. When we made that promise, we were hopeful that the cost of paper would be less by January 1, but it now appears that we will be disappointed. The best information that we can get indicates that it will be very difficult to buy paper next year at any price. Recently we have had to pay another advance of at least twenty-five per cent for the blank paper on which the Gospel Advocate is printed. We had hoped not to advance the subscription price, but it seems we have been fighting the inevitable. We cannot, no matter how much we may desire it, do the impossible.

Many papers have already advanced the subscription price, but we will not advance before January 1, 1917. This gives all a chance now to take advantage of the old price for another year. If you have a friend, whom you wish to read the Gospel Advocate, now is the time to send in his subscription for one year. If your subscription is behind, now is the time to pay up and to renew for one year in advance. Don't wait until January 1 is here and then complain because you cannot secure the paper at the old price of one dollar and fifty cents a year.

We are very much gratified that we are able to announce to our readers that the Gospel Advocate has now the best paid-up list in its history. In spite of the heavy burden the increased cost of paper is putting on us, we feel encouraged to press forward in the work.

Many are the hearty commendations that we are receiving on the general make-up and improvement of the paper. It is needless to say that we appreciate these and that we are determined to make other improvements as soon as possible. Prompt action is always best.

PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Welcome to Gospel Message Readers.

The management of the Gospel Advocate warmly welcomes into its circle an appreciable number of new readers who were formerly on the list of the Gospel Message. Brother C. M. Stubblefield and his associates have done a useful work in editing this monthly; but in view of the circumstances it is, perhaps, the wisest course to cease publication at this time. In any event, we gladly assume the obligation of assuming the unexpired subscriptions. We hope to make them all permanent subscribers and to have Brother Stubblefield as a frequent contributor. Read his statement that follows:

Inasmuch as the Gospel Message "has been gathered to its fathers," it is meet that some word of explanation be said to its readers:

Two of the best physicians in West Kentucky have advised that, on account of the health of my family, I move to some place having greater altitude, and I feel disposed to act upon this advice. I have failed to induce any of the many worthy preachers in this community to further prosecute the work, and the paper, therefore, ceases to be. There is a pressing need for a small paper in this section, and I sincerely hope to see the day when some worthy brethren will undertake the work of publishing it and push it to success. It can be done.

The publishers of the Gospel Advocate have kindly agreed to send their paper to each of our subscribers until the time of each has expired. The Advocate, be it remembered, is published weekly, whereas the Message was published monthly; hence, though each subscriber will receive as many copies of the Advocate as he would have received of the Message, the subscription of each will expire in exactly one-fourth the time. The Advocate being just twice as large as the Message, the reader will receive, by this arrangement, twice as much reading matter, and of a better sort, than he would had the Message continued.

From the above figures it will be seen that the Advocate would be cheaper at four dollars per year than the Message at fifty cents; and it is sincerely hoped that each of our subscribers will feel disposed to become regular readers of that excellent paper. When all its space is not filled by abler pens, a composition of our own will appear.

C. M. STUBBLEFIELD.

The River of Life.

BY DR. W. H. MURPHY.

The River of Life just peacefully flows

Out from under the bright mountain of bliss,
Where heaven's own fruit eternally grows,
And—O!—there's no other river but this.

This gently flowing stream courses to all
As it comes from the green mountain of bliss,
And gracefully tells its message and call,
And says: "There's no other river but this."

May we all bathe in this river, and find,
As onward it glides through valleys of bliss,
That God did send it to us, and his mind
Will give us no other river but this.

I will treasure this grand river divine,
Which holds in its water such glad some bliss;
I will let all find this river is mine,
And that I know there's no river but this.

The Prospect in Georgia.

BY M. H. CARTER.

God's work is progressing for his honor and glory. I am always glad to hear of precious souls being added to the kingdom, and it is a joy to report to those who love the King that his work is prospering in that particular portion of the vineyard where we are laboring.

Throughout Georgia the forces of Christ are moving on to victory. New congregations are being established and much is being accomplished around the older centers of Christian activity. Many of us are striving to preach the gospel in life and word, some publicly, some privately; and fellowship in prayer, personal work, and finance are being rewarded by Jehovah in the coming of souls to Jesus and the drawing still nearer of those in him. We shall be so glad when this great State has been so evangelized and strong congregations built up to such a degree that we may not only touch all new fields within the State with the fruit of our offerings, but extend the borders of the kingdom far and wide.

The St. John Street Church, in Macon, is the center of a field of excellent opportunities. When the remaining amount is paid on the house, the brethren will be enabled to do more mission work. This church is so located that it should immediately become the nucleus from which the word of God should go out and be planted in quite a number of cities, towns, and country places. The membership has done well thus far. The final payments are due on October 15. The property stands for the amount due the bank and the sum must be raised. I make this as the last appeal of this individual church for funds on building fund. Let every one who can cooperate do so. The church will then be free to carry on much more greatly needed mission work.

A Hearty Amen.

BY I. L. BOLES.

I want to say a hearty amen to Brother Elam's article in the Gospel Advocate of August 31, under the caption, "The Way to Settle Personal Difficulties." This article ought to be published on the front page of every paper in the brotherhood. To it each paper should add an editor's note solemnly pledging the policies of the paper to the holy principles contained in the article and calling on preachers and writers everywhere to make a like resolution. This note should also state positively and permanently that all articles of contrary spirit written for publication would go to the wastebasket and their memories to the dust bin of oblivion.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

M. C. Kurfees is in a good meeting at Huntsville, Ala.

The enrollment of the Nashville Bible School was very gratifying.

James E. Scobey preached at South Harpeth Church last Lord's day to an interested audience.

John E. Dunn has begun a six-weeks' evangelistic campaign in Central Kentucky. He is now at Mackville.

The National Teachers' Normal and Business College, at Henderson, Tenn., opened with a splendid attendance.

Joe W. White held a two-weeks' meeting at Diamond Hill Church, Fort Worth, Texas, which resulted in nine additions. Good crowds attended. This was Brother White's second meeting.

The editor of this page has been preaching one week at Lewisburg, Tenn. Thirty-three additions, including thirty baptisms. It is enough to say that God is blessing his message. He always does.

L. S. White preached in the city last week and also made an interesting talk at the opening of the Nashville Bible School. He was on his way home from an interesting meeting at Washington, D. C.

Charlie Taylor paid us a pleasant visit last week. He was engaged in an interesting meeting at Burnett's Chapel, in Davidson County. He will begin work with the church at Paducah, Ky., on January 1.

From W. T. Hines, Wysox, Ky., September 8: "My meeting at Antioch resulted in seven baptisms and one restored; at Fairview, seventeen baptisms; and two at this place to date. Brethren, pray for the work in this field."

From C. E. Holt, Petersburg, Tenn., September 7: "Our meeting at Chestnut Ridge is doing well. Four baptized to date. I will be with the congregation at Gallatin in October, the meeting to begin on the third Lord's day."

From N. W. Proffitt, Paris, Texas, August 30: "I have just closed a fine meeting with my home congregation, Moore's Springs Church. Interest good, eight baptized. I am now in a meeting at Maxey, with growing interest."

R. E. Wright writes: "I closed a week's meeting at Trousdale on September 3. Four were baptized and more than twenty confessed their wrongs and promised to be faithful. I will begin a meeting at Mangum, Okla., on September 10. I wish the Gospel Advocate much success."

From Hal P. McDonald, Berry, Ala., August 31: "Please say in the Gospel Advocate that I would like to hear from any brethren who live in or near Columbus, Miss. I have been passing this way often this summer, and my connections are such that I could arrange to preach when passing."

From E. O. Coffman, Lawrenceburg, Tenn., September 5: "My meeting with the congregation at Marcella Falls, in Giles County, began on the first Sunday in August and continued for nine days, with fine interest and twenty-one additions. The church at Marcella Falls has bright prospects."

From J. W. Hayter, Shubenacadie, N. S., September 1: "We began work with the brethren here on July 16. The Sunday school has been reorganized and the attendance is increasing. We are having good audiences at our Sunday-evening services. I am much pleased with the Gospel Advocate."

From T. H. Burton, Shelbyville, Tenn., September 8: "Our meeting at Deason continues with much interest. House full at almost every service. We are in the third week. Do not know when we will close. Have had twenty-nine additions and restorations to date. Prospects good for many more."

"A message from Rome" (Ga.): "I am in the second week of the meeting here. New faces every night. Splendid interest. Have arranged another meeting in North Rome as soon as we close at the meetinghouse. Please say that my address is now 400 West Seventh Street instead of #08 Broad." (John Hayes.)

From J. H. Whisnant, Atkins, Ark., September 6: "Our meeting with the church at Flat Rock resulted in thirteen baptisms and one restoration; at Middleton, with A. Douglas assisting, four were baptized and thirteen restored. I am now at home assisting U. G. Wilkinson, with one confession to date. I could conduct some fall meetings."

J. M. Gainer, of Scottsboro, Ala., held a two-weeks' meeting, beginning on the first Lord's day in August, at New Hope, Ala. (Madison County), with nine baptisms, one restored, and one who gave up an unscriptural name and decided to be a Christian only. The next meeting was held at Owen's Cross Roads, a point six miles from here. Fifteen baptisms.

Don Carlos James writes: "Brother McCaleb's receipts of late have been very light—too light to meet expenses. Those wishing to have fellowship with him can send (under five-cents postage) directly to him at Tokyo, Japan, or to me at Route 10, Buechel, Ky. 'The laborer is worthy of his hire.' Don't 'switch' gifts from other workers, lest they also suffer."

From W. S. Long, Jr., Manchester, Tenn., September 7: "This is the fifth day of the meeting here. Brother Larimore is doing the preaching, and we are receiving the gospel in its primitive purity and simplicity. W. C. Brewer is conducting the song service, and is doing it as it should be. Two have made the good confession and been baptized. The writer baptized one at Redden's Chapel last Monday."

From F. B. Srygley, Nashville, Ark., September 5: "The meeting at Corinth is nine days old, and there have been sixteen baptized and one reclaimed to date. It has been announced that the meeting would close to-night and I am to go to Daisy to-morrow. We have had fine audiences at every service here at Corinth. The meeting ought to continue several days longer, but they are rushing me to come on to Daisy."

R. T. Sisco writes from Farmersville, Texas: "On August 19 the meeting began at Farmersville and ran till August 29, with two services every day. J. S. Dunn, of Dallas, did the preaching. I heard him during the last week. I have known Brother Dunn nearly twenty years, have been at a number of places where he has labored, but this was the first series I have ever heard him through. Words cannot express the great good he did by his strong, earnest, gospel lessons. I can say, in truth, that he shunned no lesson, neither to the world nor the church, so far as time would allow. He is the best I ever heard to old, cold, careless churches. Farmersville heard more 'duty' told her than in any one meeting, I am sure. In fact, his preaching was so different to anything before that they were amazed and wondered! It was a treat to my hungry soul. I think the church was taught lessons that will cause them to get busy in God's great work. Several were baptized and some were restored. May our brother live many years to continue this great work."

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Our tent meeting began at Burris' Chapel on Thursday night, August 17, and closed on Sunday night, August 27. One was restored and one was baptized. If any other good was done, I have no way of knowing it. When a meeting is a failure in the way of additions, many are the causes for the failure; and among the most common is, the preacher failed to do his duty. The preacher generally blames the congregation, and so it goes at that. The fact is, preachers and congregations are both to blame when there are no additions to the church. So I am willing to acknowledge the fact that the blame for failure should rest on me; and I am sorry that certain conditions exist which would not exist had I discharged my duty heretofore. But I am human—make many mistakes; but I shall keep on praying and striving to do the right thing, hoping to enter eternal rest when the toil, mistakes, trials, and temptations of life are over.

Propositions are signed up with J. R. Clark (Missionary Baptist) for a discussion to take place in the near future at Jones' Chapel, in Lake County. Date will be given when agreed on. This man Clark has for ten years conducted the meetings at New Liberty, in Lake County. Bear in mind that New Liberty, a Missionary Baptist Church, is just across the public road from Jones' Chapel, a congregation of Christians only. During these meetings Clark has been very abusive and disrespectful to the Jones' Chapel congregation, calling them "Campbellites," liars, and comparing them to negroes, etc. They accuse me of cowardice, of being afraid to meet him in debate. The Baptist Bulldog is boosting him as "the Campbellite skinner," etc. If this all be true, Clark will have quite a number of hides on his string after the debate, as there are about eighty or ninety members of Jones' Chapel; and if I have to lose my hide, I know of no bunch of hides that I would rather my old hide would accompany to a Baptist tanyard than those at Jones' Chapel. I shall do all I can to save the hides of my brethren and sisters, even if I should lose my own.

Brother Holloway, of Texas, had a great meeting at Bogota. There were forty or fifty additions, twenty-five by baptism.

Brother Slayden is now in a meeting at Glass. He began on Wednesday night. I hear they are having a good hearing. I know the preaching is good.

Gospel Advocate Piano Club Prevents Waste.

You will not find many men who would deliberately throw away one hundred dollars, and yet there are many who unintentionally waste that amount every year in one way or another. Careless buying is one of the most common ways of wasting money. The founders of the club had that fact in mind when they adopted the principle of cutting down the cost of pianos by cutting out the waste in marketing them. The club claims to save its members forty per cent, and asks you to give it an opportunity to prove this fact to your entire satisfaction by thoroughly testing the piano in your own home before obligating yourself to pay for it. It will cost you only a postal card to investigate; and if the testimony of club members who have already received their instruments is to be relied upon, you will undoubtedly be delighted with the saving in price, the convenient terms, and the superior quality of the instruments. By uniting our orders in a club of one hundred members, each secures the benefit of the lowest possible factory price; and yet it is responsible only for his own order.

Write for your copy of the catalogue and full particulars to-day. Address The Associated Piano Clubs, Gospel Advocate Department, Atlanta, Ga.

The Tennessee Orphans' Home.

BY W. T. BOAZ.

Brethren, I beg the privilege of making what I hope to be my final appeal to the readers of the Gospel Advocate for the purpose of paying the Tennessee Orphans' Home out of debt.

We now have almost seven weeks before the meeting of the Board of Directors, on October 31, giving us seven Sundays from this date, and I am simply asking that every preacher in the brotherhood, the elders of the different congregations, and those interested in church work and the care and keeping and rearing of orphan children, help me make this one long, hard pull, with our shoulders to the wheel, and every disciple interested in this great proposition with a concert of action all along the line, every congregation making at least one contribution between now and October 31. Every individual who has not the opportunity to join with some congregation in a congregational fellowship to send at least some kind of a donation toward this work.

The children start to school in a few days. About sixty children in school will add quite a considerable expense to our work, besides the debt against the Home. Winter supplies of every description have to be purchased, and I know you will not think it unreasonable of me to ask every friend of the Home to act at once. We must be out of debt by October 31. I know you want the Home in the condition for which we have been laboring and praying now for seven long years, and that you will help us.

Send donations direct to W. T. Boaz, Superintendent Tennessee Orphans' Home, Columbia, Tenn.

The Hair of the Dog.

There is an old saying that "the hair of the dog is good for the bite." In therapeutics this is sometimes quite true.

For instance, in many forms of irritation of the skin or membranes of the body a rubefacient or counter-irritant is the indicated treatment. Counter-irritation is good practice in very many forms of inflammation.

In fact, nature itself instinctively teaches this medical principle; for when we are bitten or stung by insects, there is an uncontrollable desire to scratch, and scratching is a form of counter-irritation.

It is on this principle that Mentholatum—a delicate counter-irritant—is so effective in relieving sunburn, insect bites and stings, burns and bruises.

Mentholatum is an excellent rubefacient. But it is more; it is a germicide and an antiseptic, actually destroying disease germs, if any are present, and protecting against infection when applied to any abrasions of the skin.

THE MASTER'S VINEYARD

Alabama.

Elba, Route 3, September 2.—Brother Van A. Bradley closed his ninth annual meeting at Liberty on July 31. There were no visible results, but I think we had a good meeting. The attendance was the best we have ever had since Brother Bradley has been working with us. He promised to be with us again next summer. He preaches the gospel in its purity and has gained the love and confidence of the brotherhood here.

W. I. ENGLISH.

Rogersville, September 5.—One of the best meetings ever held in Rogersville came to an end, so far as the direct preaching of sermons is concerned, on Sunday evening, August 27. The meeting was begun by two sermons by Brother J. Pettey Ezell and was continued the next week by Brother N. B. Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn. The attendance was good from the start. An average of four hundred people attended the night services. There were thirty-five additions, all by baptism. Great good has been done us as a congregation, and all of us feel that our very lives must be, as it were, sermons to be the means of winning more and more of our friends and neighbors to the simple course our Savior would have us follow.

EARL M. HOBSON.

Florida.

Esto, September 2.—Brother Van A. Bradley, of Nashville, Tenn., preached two weeks for us, beginning on the fourth Lord's day in June. Two additions were the visible results. Rain greatly hindered the progress of the meeting the last week. This was the eighth annual meeting in which Brother Bradley has been with us, besides preaching for us every opportunity between times in all these years. He came here through the solicitation of a Baptist family and conducted a series of meetings eight years ago, which resulted in a small congregation being put to work in the Lord's way. We have a small, but neat, frame building on a desirable lot, with the restrictive clause in the deed. Brother Bradley has made every effort to encourage us, and his labors have been rewarded. We have loyal brethren able to present the gospel in its purity—not preachers, for we have no preachers convenient; but our Lord's-day meetings are both interesting and instructive. Brother Bradley will be with us again next year. Brother T. R. Hicks, of Bradenton, preached eight days at this place, beginning on Friday before the second Lord's day in this month. Two additions were the visible results. This was Brother Hicks' first meeting at Esto, but we were all very favorably impressed and will have him with us again, the Lord willing. When Brother Hicks preached on "The Church," the Baptists tried to get their pastor to defend them, but this he refused to do. So they have become very much discouraged and some even acknowledged their error. We look forward to a great harvest in the future. MRS. R. L. PETERMAN.

Louisiana.

Simpson, September 1.—I have just closed a meeting of two weeks' duration with the Red Store Church, near Boyce, which, so far as additions by primary obedience are concerned, was a failure. The church was in a disorganized and demoralized condition, its members nearly all having gone back to the world. My efforts were directed chiefly at them and resulted in bringing them in penitence to confession of remissness in the past and the promise of faithfulness in the future. They have organized a Sunday school and will meet on the Lord's day to break bread. I begin a meeting at this place to-night with what was once a strong church, but is now reduced to a few remnants by the wolves of modern sanctification and the gift of unknown tongues. Our churches in this State are few and far apart, and generally weak and poor. This is a mission field, and such it must long remain unless help from elsewhere, financial and otherwise, comes to the rescue.

W. D. HUMPHREY.

Tennessee.

McMinnville, September 1.—The visible results of our eight-days' meeting at Oakland were five confessions.

FRED L. WALLACE.

Bolivar, September 1.—Brother G. A. Dunn closed a short meeting at Booneville, Miss., with fifteen additions—twelve by baptism and three from the Baptists and "digressives." Among the number were some of the strongest Methodists there. The church is happy over the result. It was the best meeting ever held here.

C. W. THOMPSON.

Woodbury, September 1.—The meeting at Pleasant Ridge began on the third Lord's day in August and continued eleven days, with sixty-five additions. Brother Charles R. Brewer, of the Nashville Bible School, did the preaching. The church has been strengthened and encouraged to do a greater work in the future. All want Brother Brewer to come back in 1917 to hold another meeting.

C. A. MASON.

Bean's Creek, September 3.—I closed an eleven-days' meeting at Crystal Ridge, four miles east of Mulberry, in Lincoln County, last Thursday morning, at the water. Work done: Twenty-four discourses delivered, twenty-six homes visited, school visited and lecture given, twenty people baptized, six induced to lay down human names and be Christians only, one restored, and a congregation of forty-five or fifty members was organized. We began here at Salem Church to-day, with fine audiences at both services, and shall continue ten or twelve days. I go from here to Brush Creek. GEORGE W. FARMER.

Decherd, September 4.—I closed a nine-days' meeting at Fairview Schoolhouse on August 17, preaching at night only, with two restored. I had to close on account of my throat. I began a meeting at Partain Schoolhouse on the second Lord's day in August and closed it last night with twenty-seven additions. The brethren there had begun work on a new meetinghouse and had the foundation laid before the meeting began. They had a "working" every day until last Saturday night, when I preached the first sermon in the new house. The young men of the neighborhood also helped in the work. Among those baptized were six Methodists and one Baptist. There have been one hundred and two additions in my meetings since April 1. I go next to Center Point, Blount County, to begin a meeting on the second Lord's day in September.

R. E. L. TAYLOR.

Texas.

Trickham, August 28.—The meeting here closed at the water to-day with twelve baptized and three restored. One more to be baptized to-morrow. The meeting ran only nine days, but the brethren thought best to close. I will preach to-night and to-morrow night at a schoolhouse near here.

GEORGE M. RANCE.

Rosebud, August 28.—Brother R. H. McNeal, of Marlin, closed a few days' meeting at Powers' Chapel last night. There was good attendance and good attention, but no additions. This is a strong Methodist and Baptist community and there is much prejudice. One young lady made the good confession, but her relatives would not let her be baptized. Brother McNeal is one of our best and most faithful preachers. He has some time that is not taken up yet, and brethren who want help to build up the cause would do well to secure his services. Brother McNeal will go back to Powers' Chapel on the fourth Sunday in September.

L. STROTHER.

Rock Springs, August 26.—On June 5 I began a series of meetings at Alpine. The attendance was not very good there. The meeting continued ten days and closed without any visible results. On June 25 I began a series of meetings here with my home church, which continued nine days and resulted in one baptism. I began at Concho on July 5 and continued there about ten days, and left the meeting with Brother L. D. Ferguson, who continued it six days longer and closed with about twenty additions. I was at Krum from July 16 to July 31, with two services daily. Seven were baptized and one was restored there. I was at Mobeetie from August 5 to August 14, with two services daily and good crowds in attendance. No visible results. I arrived home last Monday, and shall be busy with the work here the greater part of the time till next spring. I will hold a meeting at Sonora some time this fall.

Commands and Obedience.

BY FRED EWING BLANCHARD.

"Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 19.) Some one has well said that the kind of singing a congregation has often denotes the spiritual temperature thereof. If this be true, I know by experience that many are below normal. The church of Christ throughout our land has this motto: "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; where the Bible is silent, we are silent." We believe this forever settles the instrumental-music question. But in our zeal sometimes we forget that we are commanded to sing. Many of our brethren are well acquainted with Col. 3: 16 and are well satisfied that it means not to play, yet the fact is not pressed that it does mean to sing. There are those who have at their tongue's end numerous passages of scripture commanding us to sing, and who use these same passages to prove that instruments of music are sinful, whose voice is never used to swell the volume of song. For four years I have tried to lead congregational singing, and I always try to have a song book in every one's hand, but from all sides comes the excuse: "O, I just can't sing." What is the matter? Years ago when I went to the "little church in the vale" each person in the audience actually wanted a song book and was disappointed if he failed to get one. And such soul-stirring hymns! They had never had any conservatory training, and they could not put on any of the trills and frills common to modern vocalists, but they could sing. They did not have any man-made organ, and probably half of them knew nothing about notes and scales and staves, but they could sing. I wish that every member of the church would awake to the need of better singing. Let this thought sink deep in your minds; if it is a transgression to play, it is disobedience not to sing. If I am permitted to have an opinion, I think the churches make a great mistake in hiring a leader for a protracted meeting. Nine times out of ten, after the meeting is over, the singing drops back to the same old rut. It costs from fifteen cents to forty dollars or more to get the services of a singer throughout a meeting. Make twenty-five dollars a low average. Any congregation can have a leader of their own for this amount. Select some member of the congregation who is interested in that line and pay his expenses through some reputable Normal. If that is not thought best, get an efficient teacher to teach vocal music for ten or twenty days. A leader can be selected and drilled in that length of time. Brethren, we must wake up. Young people everywhere tell me they do not like to go to some certain church because the singing is so bad. Any live teacher can stir up an interest among the young people of a community, if he has the right make-up and loves the work. Again, there are entirely too many worthless song books on the market. Books discarded years ago are very much superior to those used by a large per cent of the churches to-day.

Let us make the singing an important part of the worship, for it is an important part. Above all, let us interest the young people. Give them something to take the place of the picture shows and immoral amusements that are so ready to lure them. Many times we could have meetings to take the place of dances and card parties—meetings where gospel songs are taught and practiced—if some God-fearing person who has the interest of the young at heart would only do his duty.

The special price on "Christian Hymns" and "Seventy-Seven Sweet Songs" has been discontinued. We would appreciate your order for these books at the regular price. Both are excellent music books.

The Prospect at Paragould, Ark.

BY W. J. JOHNS.

Our meeting with my home congregation began on Thursday night, August 31, to continue two weeks or longer. Brother J. E. Norman, of Texas, is assisting me in the meeting. Our new meetinghouse is in a condition that permits our meeting in it. When we close here, I am ready to assist in meetings at any place where I may be called. I can fill calls until November 1, then I shall enter the schoolroom for five months' work. We will have a course in the Bible.

Brethren, to do the work we have outlined, we need help. I am not going to ask you to contribute directly to our church and school, but will give you our plan by which you can help us very much and at the same time obtain full value for your money. Our plan is to let every reader of the Gospel Advocate obtain one new subscriber and forward to me, and our congregation and literary and Bible school will soon be put upon a firm basis—a school that is much needed, where young men and young ladies can enter, take a literary course, prepare themselves for usefulness here, and, best of all, study the Bible, which teaches us how to live here that we may live happy in the home of the soul. Brethren, please do not pass this by, since you can do so much by a little effort on your part. Every subscriber that pays one dollar and fifty cents gets full value for his money and help in the good work as mentioned above. In sending subscribers, give name and address plainly written. If one thousand of the many readers of the Gospel Advocate will send one new subscriber, the church and school will be a reality. May the Lord help us to do all the good we can before we go hence. Address me at Paragould, Ark.

Bardwell, September 2.—I closed a twelve-days' tent meeting at Reedland last Wednesday night. This was the first meeting ever held in that community by the church of Christ. We had large crowds and fine attention. One was restored and one who made the confession the last night will be baptized to-morrow. JOE RATCLIFFE.

Dancy, September 3.—I have had meetings at the following places this summer: At Laguna, Falls County, Texas, one week, beginning on July 17, with one baptized and six restored; at Myrtle, Miss., about a week, beginning on July 28, with no additions; at Antioch, one week, beginning on August 13, with no additions; at Ruby Schoolhouse, one week, closing on Friday, August 18, with six baptized and two from the Baptists; Brother Lee Jackson, of Tillaroba, assisted in the two meetings last mentioned, which were held in Tate County. Lawrenceburg, September 2.—I am just home from Cheatham County, where I spent five busy weeks doing the work of an evangelist. Our last meeting in that county was at Chapel Hill, and a pleasant one it was. Three were baptized, three restored, and one lady came from the Methodists that was satisfied with her baptism. I begin to-morrow at Center Point, five miles from Lawrenceburg. THOMAS C. KING.

MONEY IN PIGEONS

Make Your Back Yard Profitable

THE demand for squabs in the Northern, Eastern and Southern markets has never been supplied, because pigeon raising as a business is comparatively new. Buy a half dozen pair of select birds, fence in a small portion of your back yard and watch them go to work. Success is easy. They raise from eight to fifteen pairs of squabs a year. Your squabs and fancy birds will bring handsome returns. You will actually make money in a hitherto useless part of your back yard. Pigeon raising is not a fad or fancy. It is a profitable business. Let us start you right. Our breeders are the best, and raised from prize winning parents. We will furnish you with the birds and teach you how to raise them, and you will reap a handsome profit with a very little outlay. Thousands are taking advantage of this same opportunity. Write to-day for our literature on pigeon raising as a money making proposition, or better still, write us to send you a few pair of Belgian Carneaux at $3.00 per pair, White Swiss Mondaines at $5.00 per pair, White Kings at $3.50 per pair, or White Maltese at $4.00 per pair. Our birds are all guaranteed. Your money back if after two months you are not satisfied with their work. Better prices on larger orders. Write to-day and get the pick of the flock.

East Lake, September 2.—The meeting at Caldwell's Schoolhouse, near Amory, Miss., closed without any visible results. This is known as a hard place, but I think there will be a reaping there by and by. I preached three evenings this week at Hatley, a village near Amory, to large audiences. This is a new place for us, and I regret that I could not stay longer. My work with the Mississippi brethren closed with a full house at Christian Chapel on Thursday evening. I have promised to be with them another year. R. N. MOONY.

Theoretically we know that he doeth "all things well" and that "all things work together for good to them that love God;" but it is a triumph of faith which brings great glory to God when, in the time of nature's sorrow, the whole soul of the believer rejoicingly accepts the Lord's dealings.—J. Cutting Down the Cost of Pianos.

Have you ever stopped to ask yourself the question why oranges which sell for five cents each cost only two cents by the box, or why apples sell so much cheaper by the bushel than by a nickel's worth? It is the same way with pianos. If you were to purchase one hundred pianos (eight car loads) from the factory, you would get a much lower price than if you purchased only one. That is why the Gospel Advocate Piano Club, composed of one hundred buyers who club their orders into one big order, is saving its members at least forty per cent on high-grade pianos and player pianos.

You are cordially invited to write for your copy of the club's beautifully illustrated catalogue, which fully explains the big saving in price, the convenient terms, and the guarantees of quality and permanent satisfaction. Address The Associated Piano Clubs, Gospel Advocate Department, Atlanta, Ga.

We have in stock a number of "Studies in Recent Adventism," by Henry C. Sheldon. An especially timely review and analysis of the assumptions, claims, and teachings of Adventism. The name of the author guarantees the character of the book—its lucidity, its scholarly style, and its weight of authority. It will be an invaluable antidote to the materialism, Russellism, and premillennialism of to-day, and a strong weapon for students and teachers who must meet and answer this false teaching. Price, 50 cents.

YOU WILL WRITE A LETTER LIKE THIS.

I wish that I knew which one of the thousands of letters I receive would have the most weight with you, my friend. I cannot quote all of them here, but I am going to ask you to read these carefully and then give me a chance to renew your health and make you write me one very much like them.

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter; but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of rheumatism, you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring at Shelton, S. C. This water overcomes many diseases, including indigestion, gout, uric acid poison, and liver and kidney diseases; but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the management:

If you suffer with rheumatism or with any chronic disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the Shivar Spring, Box 21, R. Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your guarantee offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons (two five-gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial, in accordance with instructions which you will send; and if I derive no benefit, you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return promptly.

The Contribution.

BY C. S. ATSTEIN.

It seems to me that no subject in the whole Christian system is more neglected than this one. The effects of this neglect are being sorely felt in many communities. Widows are not cared for; orphans are in need, and the gospel is not supported. A large part of the censure for these conditions properly belongs to the preachers and elders of the congregations. In fear that they would be accused of preaching for personal gain, the preachers have touched rather lightly or wholly ignored the whole matter. The preacher of the gospel is obligated to teach the truth to the Lord's people on this subject just as faithfully as any other, and he who, through fear of personal criticism, shuns this, betrays spiritual cowardice, and such that is exceedingly hurtful to all who are really interested in apostolic Christianity.

Jesus said to his disciples in Matt. 5: 13; "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men." The universal use of salt is to save things that would otherwise be lost. If it loses this power, Jesus says it is good for nothing. We, as Christians, have been intrusted with the saving power of the world—the gospel. If we fail to take this, and, as it were, apply it to the perishing world, we are unprofitable just in the sense that salt would be if it did not have the power to save meat. Thinking, no doubt, of this very thing, Paul commands Timothy as follows: "Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." (2 Tim. 2: 1, 2.) The gospel is God's power to save the world, and the Scriptures clearly teach that we are responsible for its preaching. "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!"

Again, he says: "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." (Matt. 5: 14.) A light is useful in that it shows the way. So Christians are to show the way. David says the word of the Lord is the light. Then we are to instruct the world with the word of the Lord. Millions sit in utter darkness, having never so much as heard of God, Christ, or the Holy Spirit. What are we doing? We have, perhaps, sent a dozen men from the United States to teach these millions of benighted people. It looks like light under a bushel and salt that has almost lost its saving power. These passages begin to open up the scope of the world-wide need. Together with this, let us remember the needs of the helpless at home and abroad. This is the teaching of the Lord. It is his will that these things shall be systematically and completely done by his disciples.

Under the personal teaching of the apostles, churches arose to the needs of humanity around them and accomplished a work that has been the wonder and marvel of the centuries since. The congregation at Jerusalem set the example of liberality. "All that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need." This liberality, coupled with the truth and zeal in other directions, caused them to wield a powerful influence about them. They let their light shine. When persecution came, about the time of the martyrdom of Stephen, they were all scattered abroad throughout the adjoining provinces, and they "went everywhere preaching the word." No wonder congregations sprang up as if by magic all about them. Thessalonica sounded out the word all over Macedonia and Achaia. This represents a territory larger than all of West Tennessee. I doubt if we have any five congregations now that have thoroughly preached the gospel over so large a territory. (Read 1 Thess. 1.) Not only did they preach the gospel, but they looked after the temporal needs of the widows and the poor.

These scriptural precepts and examples are abundantly sufficient to show the pressing importance and the happy results of liberal contributions to the cause of Christ. It remains now for us to show on whose shoulders this responsibility rests, and when and how much each individual Christian should give into the Lord's treasury. One passage from Paul comes to my mind. It tells concisely the "who," the "when," and the "how much." Here it is: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." (1 Cor. 16: 1, 2.) Who should contribute? "Every one of you." That sounds plain to me. When Jesus took the cup, he said: "Drink ye all of it." If one of the congregation refuses to take the Lord's Supper, we immediately inquire: "What is the matter?" It ought to be a matter of just as serious concern when one fails to lay by in store according to the command of the apostle. "Every one of you" means the rich, the poor, men and women, bond and free. It matters not if I am in debt or poor, this is not to hinder me in this partnership.

When should we make our offerings? "Upon the first day of the week." Acts 20: 7 says the disciples met to break bread on the first day of the week. This is a good proof text to show that we ought to take the Lord's Supper on the first day of the week. Just with equal authority we can contribute of our means on the first day of the week.

Do you ask, "How much does God expect of me?" "As the Lord hath prospered him." This makes it possible for every Christian to give with the same degree of liberality. Really, one Christian should give just as much as another, not in dollars and cents, but the relative amount is the same. 2 Cor. 9: 7 says: "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." Then we are to give as we have purposed in our hearts. But how many really purpose in heart? This means that we are to study the matter over carefully and conscientiously, and then plan to do so much, then give this amount. In Acts 11: 29 it is said that the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief to the brethren. Now we must remember that we are to give of our means as we are prospered, according to our ability, having purposed the amount in our hearts. This is about as definite as the instructions go in the law of liberty. The Jews gave the tithe, or the tenth of their income. We certainly should not do less. We live under a better covenant than they did, and it brings us into greater responsibilities than they had. "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Finally, let me say that there is genuine pleasure in giving to the Lord's cause. When we clothe the naked, feed the hungry, or minister to the sick, Jesus in heaven recognizes the service. Even a cup of water given to the thirsty will be recognized by the Christ. The world of misery and want appeals to us. The Macedonian cry comes to us from all nations of the earth. Give heartily and liberally in the cause of the Man of Calvary and enjoy a glad conscience here and add stars to your crown of righteousness over there.

"Not what we give, but what we share.
For the gift without the giver is bare:
Who gives himself with his alms feeds three—Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me."

Our College Library.

BY W. F. LEDLOW.

During the summer we have received some substantial donations to our library at Thorp Spring Christian College. Several hundred good books have been collected. One sister in Florida has given us her library. We are truly grateful.

We mean to stress the Bible work in the college and grow more spiritual as we grow stronger. We want to have a strong biblical library. We need church histories, commentaries, Bible dictionaries, and works on "Christian Evidences." If you have books you can spare us, ship them to the college. They will help young men and women to live a better life.

Our prospects for a good year were never so bright. People are coming to Thorp Spring and buying property. Indications are that we will have a full school. The school opens on September 18.

My Plan of Work.

BY C. E. HOIT.

I desire to say through the Gospel Advocate that while I appreciate the kind and earnest invitation of the Knoxville brethren to live among them and labor with them in building up the church of Christ in East Tennessee's capital, yet I have yielded to a desire which has been in my heart for several years, and that is to do general evangelistic work.

I have a desire to go wherever God wants me to go, or wherever there is an open door for the glorious gospel of Christ. I am not prepared to say how long I shall continue in this line of work. I have had eleven years' experience in local work. These years have been almost evenly divided between Florence, Ala., and Montgomery, Ala. I have had a pleasant and successful ministry in both these cities. But I am now free to labor wherever the Lord and the brethren want me, and I shall be located at Florence, Ala., after October 1. After that date my address will be 543 North Cherry Street, Florence, Ala.

How She Stopped
Her Husband's Drinking

By all Means Write to Her and Learn how She did it.

For over 20 years Jas. Anderson of 161 Pearl Ave., Hillburn, N. Y., was a confirmed drunkard. His case was about as bad as it could be, but a little over twelve years ago his devoted wife, after years of trying, finally succeeded in stopping his drinking entirely.

Write to this woman if you have a relative or friend who drinks

Not only did she save Mr. Anderson but she stopped the drinking of her brother and several of her neighbors as well. All this she accomplished by simple home treatment which she now desires every man and woman who has a relative or friend who drinks, to know all about, for she feels that others can do just as she did. The treatment can be given secretly if desired, and without cost she will gladly and willingly tell what it is. Therefore every reader of this notice who is interested in curing a dear one of drinking should write to Mrs. Anderson at once. Her reply will come by return mail in a sealed envelope. She does this gladly in hopes that others will be benefited as she was. One thing she asks however, and that is that you do not send money for she has nothing to sell. Simply address your letter with all confidence, to Mrs. Margaret Anderson at the address given above and she will reply by return mail in a sealed envelope.

NERVOUS DISEASES

We have reprinted from a leading health magazine a series of articles by Doctor Biggs treating on Nervous Debility, Melancholia, Sexual Neurasthenia, Nervous Dyspepsia, and other nervous diseases. The articles explain the cause of these ailments and fully describe the treatment employed at the Biggs Sanitarium in such cases. A copy of the pamphlet will be sent FREE to any address on request.

Scott.

On January 10, 1891, God blessed the home of J. M. Evans and wife by giving to it the little girl, Willie. She was called hence on August 15, 1916. To her father and mother she was the source of much happiness and sunshine. As a child, she was obedience personified. She grew to be an intelligent and useful young lady. Early in life she manifested unusual interest in the gospel of her Savior. She obeyed that gospel when but thirteen years of age. She was one of the most active members of the church of Christ in Bemis, Tenn. On September 10, 1914, she was married to D. L. Scott, which relation proved happy, but short. Everywhere she was useful. She scattered roses in the paths of those about her. She was the dearly beloved of those who knew her. Her husband, other relatives, and a host of friends survive her. We believe and trust that she has gone on before to keep company with the redeemed of all the ages in the spirit land. Brother Clarence Greer conducted the funeral services.

G. C. PHITTY.

Anderson.

At the home of her daughter, Mrs. Pauline McFarland, in Lebanon, Tenn., Mrs. Elizabeth Anderson, then in her ninety-third year, passed away, January 29, 1916. She was indeed "a mother in Israel," having been a member of the body of Christ seventy-seven years, entering the church in her early girlhood and living a devout, faithful Christian the remainder of her long life on earth. She and her husband, Brother Church Anderson, reared a Christian family, all their children who attained to suitable age becoming members of the church of Christ. Although Sister Anderson experienced many of the sorrows and tribulations that are the common lot of humanity, she met her trials with a bright, brave, hopeful spirit that rendered her a blessing, not only to her own household, but also to the many friends who loved her. She was remarkably active in both mind and body till almost the close of her life here. Funeral services were conducted in Lebanon by Elder A. S. Derryberry, after which her body was taken to Nashville and buried in Mount Olivet Cemetery, beside the grave of her husband, when and where Brother R. Lin Cave made a beautiful and impressive talk.

EMMA P. LAMORE.

Walker.

Sister Walker, the wife of Brother J. N. Walker, of Memphis, Tenn., has passed into her eternal home, after having suffered much in the flesh. She was born in 1861, in Penola County, Miss. She was reared in the Methodist persuasion, but, having learned the error of her way, obeyed Christ some ten years back, under the preaching of Brother John Dodd. This dear sister, while naturally a frail being, was at all times cheery in disposition, and a visit in her home was always pleasant and good for the guest. I believe she gave me the greatest encouragement of any of my friends on earth. I loved her and have often visited her home after my removal from Memphis, and every time she sent me away glad. But what she said and did for me was done and said to many. I think of her as at rest with the Lord, freed from cares and sorrows. Just such good, pure, noble women as I believe her to have been are the kind that dwell with the Lord forever. I pen these lines in sorrow; but we sorrow in strong hope that our dear friend and sister will be blessed throughout eternity. As to Brother Walker, I do not consider that Memphis has a better Christian. I pray our Heavenly Father to bless him in his loneliness beyond all we may ask or think. May he live many more years to serve the one he has been serving for many years, and in the end may he join his companion to praise the Lord forever in his heavenly sanctuary. J. W. DUNN.

Crowson.

Sister Mary E. Crowson died at the home of one of her sons, at Brownboro, Ala., on March 31, 1916, at the age of seventy-four years. She was a member of the church of Christ about fifty years, and we are sure that much good has been accomplished through her efforts to bless the world and honor God. I have known her about thirty years, and during my entire acquaintance with her she was afflicted, and a more patient sufferer I have never known. With patience and Christian fortitude she endured her affliction, and to the extent of her ability she was a faithful worker for the Lord. Her devoted and faithful Christian husband departed this life about ten years ago, leaving her and seven children to mourn their loss, and now the children can but testify that mother also is gone; and while these dear ones think of father and mother with tears and heartaches, we feel to say: Weep not as those who have no hope. Our Lord says: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.) We believe that Brother and Sister Crowson were faithful to Christ until the time of their death, and by faith we say of them: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them" (Rev. 14: 13.) After the funeral service, conducted by the writer, and attended by a large congregation of neighbors, friends, and relatives, the body of Sister Crowson was laid to rest in Shiloh Cemetery, near Brownsboro, Ala., to await the resurrection morn, to meet her blessed Savior and loved ones gone before, where sad partings come no more.

J. D. JONES.

Rivers.

Brother Daniel R. Rivers was born on April 9, 1838, and departed this life on September 29, 1915, being, at the time of his death, seventy-seven years, five months, and twenty days old. He was married to Miss N. A. J. Coble on December 27, 1859, and to this union five children were born, three of whom—John Rivers, Mrs. Dock Barton, and Mrs. Bart Tanner—survive him. His wife and two children preceded him to the spirit world. He was baptized into Christ on July 14, 1867, by a Brother Gibbons, and was ever afterwards constant in his devotion to the cause of Jesus Christ. Brother Rivers was a close Bible student and possessed a clear vision of the fundamental principles of the doctrine of Jesus Christ. He always enjoyed a conversation on Bible themes and was ever ready to "contend earnestly for the faith." He was a very plain man and always spoke very plainly just what he believed. This plainness of speech was sometimes mistaken for abruptness by those who opposed him. Brother Rivers was one among the first preachers I remember to have heard, and it was under his preaching that I made the "good confession" and was baptized. He and my father were the best of friends for many years, even as far back as I can remember. They sometimes made preaching trips together, both being farmer-preachers, and they always seemed to enjoy their labors together. Perhaps no one outside of his immediate family misses Brother Rivers more than my father, who is now, according to nature, nearing the "borderland." May we all ever be true to the faith for which they have so long and earnestly contended.

remember that first aid to relief is found in abundance of fresh air—day and night—freedom from over-exertion and pure food.

Attention to these matters should do much to arrest the progress of the malady, but in many cases there is need for extra help. Where Nature has to work with a weakened body her power is limited.

Under such circumstances, try Eckman's Alterative, which has been used with large benefit by many sufferers. In numerous cases it has helped to bring about recovery. Also it has been successful in treating asthma and bronchial troubles.

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about a much harm as good for their systems—bel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

I ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.
I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general restorer of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

La Grange, Ga., Nov. 25, 1914.
I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

DYSPEPSIA

Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1914.
For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

RHEUMATISM

Leeds, S. C.
I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

Florence, S. C.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Indigestion much relieved. I wish I could write Shivar Spring Water in the sky so that the world could become acquainted with it.

BILIOUSNESS

Greenville, S. C., Feb. 25, 1914.
For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

High Point, N. C., Oct. 6, 1914.
My wife has had a bad kidney trouble for several years. She has been using the water only about three weeks and it has already made her a new woman. Her color is much improved her appetite is all that she could wish for, her digestion seems to be perfect. We give Shivar Springs credit for it all.

GALLSTONES

Greenville, S. C.
Shivar Spring Water cured my mother of gallstones, or, I might say, it snatched her from the hospital door, as the doctors had said nothing short of an operation would do her any good. After drinking the Water she was able to get out of bed, and is today stout and healthy. I hope these few lines will be of help to some one suffering as my mother did.

W. J. STRAWN.

Williamston, N. C., Oct. 3, 1914.
My doctor said I would have to be operated on for gallstones, but since I have been drinking your water I haven't had to have a doctor.

"EDIFYING AS THE NEED MAY BE"

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Developing Our Faculties.

In explaining why he used parables in teaching, Jesus said to his disciples: "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that which he hath." Upon first reading, we do not see the justice of this rule. It seems hard that a man who has only a little should have that little taken from him. We are intuitively reminded of Nathan's parable of the two men who lived in the same city. One of them was very rich, having many flocks and herds; the other was very poor, having only one little ewe lamb, which he treated as a daughter. The rich man, being desirous to feed a stranger, took the poor man's one lamb, sparing his own flocks. That seemed very unjust to David, as it does to us. On the other hand, it does not seem fair that because a man has already a great deal, more should be bestowed upon him. If this rule was something arbitrary, it would, indeed, be unintelligible; but I think we can understand its meaning and see why its application is right and good if we will consider it, as the great Teacher intended, as a law of human nature and achievement. It is a beneficial law, because it makes the individual better and the world better. The fact is, there could be no such thing as human progress without it. The lesson is this: When we use our powers and faculties, we gain more power and more faculty; when we neglect to use them, they gradually decrease, and at last they perish. In brief, the Savior would teach us that we cannot possess anything in the truest and noblest sense unless we use it.

"Practice Makes Perfect."

"Practice," we understand, "makes perfect." But this is not true of undirected or misdirected practice. It is not the random use of any power, but a carefully arranged practice which improves it—practice directed toward the end. If, for example, one wishes to improve his memory, he cannot do it by endeavoring to recollect at random a variety of facts or words. He must arrange a list of what he is most apt to forget, and study this carefully until it has become firmly fixed in his mind. There must be a definite purpose. A celebrated French juggler tells how he acquired one element of his power—an extreme quickness and accuracy of observation. When a boy, his father often took him through one of the crowded boulevards of Paris and led him slowly past a shop window in which were exhibited a multitude of different articles, and then, returning home, made him tell how many he had been able to recollect. This practice so strengthened and quickened the perceptive powers that he became able to remember every article in a large window by only walking past it a single time. The more exercised his faculty, the more developed it became. The more he had of this quickness of observation, the more was given to him. This illustrates the bright side of the Savior's love.

The Dread Alternative.

There is the dark side, which is portrayed by examples just as numerous and none the less vivid. We must not forget that dread alternative: "But from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath." The fishes in Mammoth Cave are blind. The loss of vision is explained by the fact that they could not use their eyes in that Egyptian darkness. Cessation of function, from whatever cause, is invariably followed by the wasting of the organ in which the function has its seat. The gland which does not secrete, diminishes in bulk; the nerve which does not transmit impressions, wastes away; the muscle which does not contract, withers. So it happens that the arms of a blacksmith enlarge; but the arms of a Hindoo fanatic, which are held in the same position for years, shrink and shrivel in size and force. The same is true of the intellectual organs. When not exercised, they are liable to atrophy. If a person does not take pains to observe and to remember what he observes, the power of observing and of remembering gradually decays. He who does not think seriously on any subject will become frivolous and unable to apply his mind at all.

From Genesis to Revelation.

We may easily apply this rule to the study of the Bible. Here it becomes a matter of acquiring knowledge. It means: "To him that hath knowledge, more shall be given, and he shall have abundance." The first foreign language we learn is difficult; the second is easier; the third is acquired with still greater facility. If we study the history of one nation or one epoch, we find ourselves attracted to another and then to another. The person who has studied botany finds new plants wherever he goes. To a student of animal life, the bugs we crush under our feet become objects of vital interest. The man who travels with an empty mind comes back nearly as ignorant as he went, but the traveler who knows things and who observes is always able to interest himself and others. Now let us see how all of this applies to Bible study. If a person reads the book of Genesis thoughtfully, he will naturally finish the Pentateuch. When that is finished, the Judges will tempt him further. He will certainly not pass by the glory of the Psalms nor the exalted wisdom of the Proverbs. The minor prophets will add their quota of interest. Without any laborious effort, he will eventually discover that he has finished the Old Testament. When he reaches the New Testament, he shall have learned much, he shall have a great deal. But—O!—what undiscovered realms of knowledge now lie before him, and how easily this saving knowledge is approached by him who has read the Old Testament carefully! The Gospels will introduce and collaborate each other. The book of Acts will explain itself. The epistolary division will give him the practical view of the Christian life. Finally, the book of Revelation will provide the earnest reader with a foretaste of heaven. The more he reads, the more he will receive. Thus the word of Christ will dwell in him richly.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

Preachers, Old and Young. No. 2.

BY W. H. CARTER.

Do not come to the conclusion that, during the time mentioned in the preceding article, I received no support at all. After I had been preaching for three or four years, a good brother, seeing my need of a better education, proposed to pay my expenses at Burritt College if I would go. I was there during the term of 1880. Dr. Brents was president and had a Bible class. For ten months I applied myself to study and was greatly benefited. Returning home, and having no horse, nor money to buy one with, the brethren here at Lafayette made up about eighty dollars and gave me. I bought a good saddle horse for one hundred dollars, paying the other twenty dollars myself afterwards as I could get the money. On this horse I went where doors opened for me, and often went and opened the door myself. Good old Brother Billie Carman assisted me greatly in that he would hunt out places and make appointments for me, and then go with me to them. In this way we sowed the seed and prepared the way for the building up of the church. I soon learned to "endure hardness" and to be "content with food and raiment." Sometimes I would get a little money, but most of the time was thankful for what I got to eat and the comfortable shelter the Lord so graciously provided. The people, though often adverse to the doctrine I preached, never refused me food nor shelter, but were kind and hospitable, so that I never had to sleep out of doors nor go to bed hungry. At one appointment, at a private house, I preached four days and baptized fifteen; and only two who attended, who were not members, failed to be baptized, and they were both baptized later.

Some years later my horse died, and again I was left without a horse and had not the money to buy another. This was a great hindrance to my work. I was distressed over it. I would have to borrow, hire, or ask the brethren to send conveyance for me. To pay fifty cents a day for a horse and get twenty-five cents or less per day was not profitable business, but somehow, I cannot now tell (the Lord knows), I kept on going. The brethren began to talk about my need of a horse, and, without solicitation on my part, some contributions were made. Just at this time I received a letter from a preacher stating that in a certain deal he had gotten a horse which he did not need, and, as

I had no horse and was in need of one, they wanted to give him to me, and for me to come or send and get him. I did not feel that he should make so great a sacrifice, and so wrote him. He promptly replied that they did not need the horse, that he was there on the pasture for me, and for me to send and get him. I sent and got the horse. Now whom do you suppose that preacher was? I told you I was going to tell on him. I know him. He is God-loving, a God-fearing and a God-worshiping man. If he were with me and knew I was going to tell it to all who have been reading his good articles on "preachers," "making preachers," "commercializing the gospel," etc., he would say: "Don't, don't—please, for my sake, don't tell it." But, my dear brother, my heart is overflowing with gratitude and my eyes are filled with tears that seem to come gushing from my very soul; and if I can see through these blinding tears to write your name, I must tell it. If not for your sake, please forgive me for telling it for the sake of others. That preacher was our dear brother, E. A. Elam. Now I feel relieved. For what you did privately, if not secretly, I desire to reward you openly. I have spoken of it privately, and possibly publicly, during the many years that have passed. Now I tell it that those who seem not to have understood some of your writing may know that you have not lived alone for self. In Jesus' name and for the good and glory of his cause you gave me the horse, and now in Jesus' name and for the glory of his cause I tell it to all. "Honor to whom honor" is due. Now, brethren, how many preachers do you know who are in need of a horse, or anything else that you are able to supply? Have you the same Christlike, self-sacrificing spirit? Can you say, "I have the horse and do not need him?" The Lord knows all our thoughts and ways and doings, and will give us good measure, heaped up, into our own bosoms.

The old preachers have nearly all passed on to their reward. A few of the old guards linger with us who serve, sometimes, as a balance wheel to regulate the speed of the congregations who have not discarded and placed them "on the shelf." Have you ever heard of children who discarded and cast off their parents in their old age? What was the thought that swelled your heart? Do you say, "ungrateful and unworthy wretches?" Well, how about the churches that cast off the old preacher because he is old? In sacrifice and tears, through trials and troubles and struggles, he labored for the salvation of yourself and your children. Now he is getting old and needs your sympathy, love, encouragement, and support. Are you going to let him spend his last days upon the earth in solitude, suffering, want, and die the death of a pauper? It will not keep him out of heaven, for poor Lazarus was borne on angel's wings to Abraham's bosom, while the one who withheld from him the comforts of life went to torment; and your failure to look after the wants of the old preachers may prove a disadvantage to you when the secrets of all hearts shall be made manifest. Will this apply to you then? "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth." (James 5: 1-4.) Does the old preacher cry for the comforts of life, and do you close your ears to the cry? I am not complaining for myself; I am pleading for the old preachers. I am not one of them yet. I have never begged and do not believe the Lord will let me beg. The old preachers are not begging, and I am not begging for them, but am only trying to point out a duty we all owe them. The old preachers have been, and are now, a blessing to the church. But I have said enough for this time. (To be continued.)

The Power of Motive.

BY JOHN T. HINDS.

All acts of serious consequence have a purpose, or design. This purpose, or design, is the motive power that leads to the performing of the act. When there is no design in view, people act so little or indifferently that practically nothing is accomplished. The question of motive is so closely connected with the act itself that responsibility is fixed in accordance with the motive of the actor. If a gun is accidentally discharged and one kills his friend, no charge of crime is made, for murder was not the motive in the case. Still the person is just as effectively killed as if it were deliberate murder. The penalty affixed for criminal conduct is supposed to be in proportion, largely, with the motive prompting the act. For this reason one man goes to the electric chair for killing a man, while another goes to the penitentiary for a few years. But whatever may be the nature of the act or the consequences of it, the motive in view is what causes the act to be committed.

Whatever else may be said, it is evident that some kind of reward is the motive for most acts. Since rewards are given for labor performed, we are entitled to them when the work is done. Therefore the reward is the design in view in doing the work, and is the real motive in prompting one to do the work. The reward does not have to be of equal intrinsic value with the work done to be the motive. In fact, the reward may be mental satisfaction, fame, honor, wealth, or eternal life. Spiritually considered, it may be of infinitely more value than the work done. Whether less or more, it can be a true reward for work done, and is certain to be the motive for it.

Many rewards are temporary and cannot give lasting satisfaction. In this class will be found wealth and worldly honor. But a good conscience, remission of sins, and eternal life are rewards for good deeds that will never disappoint. Yet most people spend their time far more in pursuit of temporal and temporary rewards than in pursuit of those which are eternal. In truth, most of them ignore the eternal ones altogether.

The case of Moses is presented by Paul as a notable example of labor and sacrifice which the proper motive produced. (See Heb. 11: 24-27.) He forsook Egypt's royal family to take his place among slaves; he chose "ill-treatment with the people of God," rather than "the pleasures of sin for a season;" accounted "the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt." Why? "For he looked unto the recompense of reward." "He endured as seeing him who is invisible." If Moses had not looked beyond death and considered the final reward, no such sacrifices would have been made. No better human example can be found of the power of reward. The purpose in view binds one to his task when all other considerations fail. The farmer bears the heat and burden of the day because he looks to the recompense of reward—the golden harvest, the full barns, and the protection from cold and storm.

The Master is also an example of the same rule. He met ever temptation with success; he bore scourgings and mockings; he endured the cross with its indescribable sufferings, despising its shame, because he looked to the "joy that was set before him." (Heb. 12: 2, 3.) What was that joy? It was the privilege to sit "down at the right hand of the throne of God." The salvation of the world and the glory of his Father was the design in view. This would result in joy to him—a motive that carried him safely through bitterest trials and the cruelest death. Nothing short of the purpose in view could have crowned his work with success.

The apostles are worthy examples in the same line. They did not work to gain position. If that had been the motive, they never would have espoused a cause so unpopular. It could not have been for wealth, else they would not have followed a man who "had not where to lay his head." It could not have been for ease or pleasure; for, if so, they would have renounced it ere the prison doors closed them in. When they kept the faith and fought the good fight, it was because of the "crown of righteousness" laid up for them. Without this "crown of life" as a motive to hold them true to God, they would have fallen from their steadfastness long before death closed the scene. May we, like them, keep the "recompense of reward" constantly before us as the motive to lead us on to final victory. It is dangerous to lose sight of this prize for a single day. Paul says those who strive in the games do it to receive a "corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible."

Now, if the design of being religious is to be saved—to obtain remission of sins and admission to heaven—then we cannot afford to commercialize the gospel. That could only result in earthly rewards, which cannot harmonize with the purpose of gospel obedience. Neither can it be consistent to be religious "to be seen of men." This would make Christianity too common for acceptance. Besides, Paul says: "If I yet please men, I would not be the servant of Christ." Neither must it be our design to conform to the world, else our work will result only in an earthly reward and we will miss the real blessing we need.

To be more specific, take baptism as an example. What is the design in being baptized? It could not be "because of" remission already received; for, if one is saved before baptism, baptism would still have its own design. That would be the reason why it is done. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" is final in the purpose of baptism. As certainly as this passage puts salvation after faith, so certain is it that it also puts it after baptism. People's interest in baptism is in proportion to their understanding its proper design. The one who thinks baptism is not essential to salvation could not be expected to appreciate it as much as one who does. It is no wonder such people put off baptism, even ridicule it, and attend to it in a way that brings no honor to its Author. Since one is held responsible for the purpose in performing an act, then one of the main things of baptism is its design; for it must be conceded that exactly the same act can be performed with the wrong design and be invalid. To immerse a man for the purpose of giving him a bath could not be scriptural baptism. Whatever else may be said, we are sure that it is the purpose in view that leads to action, whether that design be right or wrong.

The Lord's Supper is another example. To have the proper design without eating would not be the Lord's Supper. To eat the wrong things would not be the Supper. To eat the right elements with the wrong design would not be the Lord's Supper. The only way to make the Supper acceptable to the Lord is to have the proper subject, proper elements, and proper design. When eaten thus, it is acceptable to the Lord.

The Christian who appreciates the design and eats to "show the Lord's death till he come" will likely be on hand. With this purpose in view, one can hardly stay away. But if the real design is not appreciated, then people can stay away without troubling their conscience. So, in the Supper, the thing that needs impressing is the design. This, as the motive power, will keep Christians faithful when nothing else will. Until people know and accept the real purpose in the Supper, they will neglect the service and have little interest in regular meetings on Lord's day. Let us press the element of design; therein is the secret of success in all kinds of acts.

Observations. No. 2.

BY LEE JACKSON.

In offering the following suggestions, I want it distinctly understood that they are for the good of the cause for which we plead, and are not designed as reflections upon any one personally, nor are they intended for the purpose of aiding the cause of any partisan faction. At all times it is a matter of conscientious duty with me to humbly endeavor to teach the Scriptures and to preach the gospel, while avoiding all unlearned questions that gender strife among brethren and give rise to heresies or factions. There are those among us who charge preachers with moral cowardice simply because they fail to espouse the cause of some particular faction which has arisen over an issue which is altogether aside from the gospel of Christ in its purity and simplicity. The truth is that it often requires a greater amount of moral courage to enable the preacher to hold himself aloof from factional issues than it does to stand as a combatant with the moral and financial backing of those who are bound together by party interest. These preliminary remarks are offered simply for the reason that not so very long since an esteemed brother understood some things which were said in a previous series of articles as being intended to reflect upon himself personally as a preacher and writer. Both preachers and writers should ever remember that the purport of what they say is to be measured by Him who shall judge the living and the dead at his appearing, and, therefore, refrain from the discussion of unworthy topics and from the use of language which betrays unkind feelings or bitterness of Spirit. A very thoughtful writer has judiciously said that the "man who finds that he enjoys controversy needs an incisive searching of his own heart." Controversy is necessary when there arises opposition to the essential things of gospel teaching, and the man who loves the gospel will always be ready to do battle in its behalf, but no conscientious lover of the truth will engage in word-splitting wrangles over questions of no vital importance simply for the sake of building up a reputation as a debater.

Is it proper for me to suggest that the springing up from time to time of so many differently edited papers among us, and all claiming to represent the plea for a return to New Testament teaching in its simplicity, has probably been a leading cause of many of our present dissensions? In their beginning the majority of these papers have been without any means of support, excepting such as could be gotten through the patronage of brethren whose interest in the enterprise could be immediately enlisted, and this, of course, is always a doubtful quantity. As a natural result, most of such papers soon pass out of existence for want of proper support, while others, being more favorably and more generally received, continue their existence. The editors of papers are always human, like the rest of us mortals, and it perhaps not infrequently happens that aspiring young men launch paper enterprises for the sole purpose of advertising themselves in connection with their work as preachers. And brethren, being also human, are prone to give their support to the paper that makes a specialty in espousing the cause of their pet hobbies or theories. Politicians, for the sake of gaining votes, have been known to make appeals to the partisan feelings and sectional prejudices, and it is not altogether improbable that the editors of religious papers are sometimes guilty of the same thing as a means of gaining patronage. All of us preachers who are human—and there are no others—are laudably ambitious to become favorably known among the brethren and to the general public, and for this reason there is ever before us the danger of seeking to please men rather than take the risk of incurring the displeasure of brethren by adhering strictly to what the Scriptures clearly teach on matters of faith and duty. Having become drunken from the wine of Babylon's cup (Rev. 14: 8), men and women who profess to be Christians have long staggered under the delusion that there is merit in believing in abstract doctrines, which at best amount to no more than plausible opinions which have nothing whatever to do with man's salvation from the ruin of sin, for they neither increase faith nor promote spiritual growth. The unique, characteristic feature of gospel teaching is its concreteness. It is this that fundamentally distinguishes it from all systems of religious teaching which are of human origin. It comes to man as a concrete body of teaching for the purpose of giving sinners faith in a Savior who is both able and willing to save, and for the purpose of making known the positive conditions upon which this salvation is offered to man. And as respects the worship and service enjoined upon Christians as acceptable to God, this divinely arranged body of teaching makes everything so clear that there remains no open field for any legitimate speculation. And yet, with this clear, symmetrical body of inspired teaching as their infallible guide, there are preachers among us who drift away from it and become factionists apparently for no other purpose than that of gaining a following and a support from among those who are factiously inclined. And is it not possible that some editors lend their support to an existing partisan issue as a means of gaining patronage and thereby building up their business interest?

I will hazard one more suggestion in regard to this rather delicate subject. That is, it requires a thoroughly consecrated, well-balanced judgment to wisely edit a paper published in the interest of gospel truth. Many of our young men have at various times gone into the paper-editing business who were lacking in discernment as to the sort of reading matter that should go into the homes of their readers, and as a consequence much has been published that hindered rather than helped the cause of truth for which we plead. I especially call to mind one little paper that was being published a few years ago. Not only was the editor himself lacking in ability to properly edit a paper, but many of the articles published were extreme in their advocacy of partisan issues of no vital importance, articles which could not possibly serve any other purpose than that of misleading the uninformed and creating strifes and dissensions among brethren. I remember that in one of his editorials this editor made the claim that the church of Christ as the kingdom of heaven was set up at 9 o'clock A.M., on March 21, A.D. 33. And yet this paper was being read by hundreds of people who received it as correctly representing our plea for New Testament teaching. One well-informed brother said to me that he read it himself, but was afraid to let his neighbors see it because of its misrepresentations and because of the ugly spirit manifested by those who wrote for it.

THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE OF THE GOSPEL ADVOCATE

WILL BE

ADVANCED ON JANUARY 1, 1917.

It is generally understood that everything that goes into the production of a newspaper has increased in price tremendously. These increases range all the way from 50 per cent to 200 per cent. White paper has over doubled in value and is scarce at any price; wrappers for the Gospel Advocate have more than doubled in price; inks of all kinds have advanced in price out of all reason; and so it goes all along the line.

As a matter of self-preservation and protection, it is absolutely necessary that we raise the price on January 1, 1917, to $2 per annum.

We will accept renewal and new subscriptions at the present price—NOW!

We will deal just as fairly and liberally with our present subscribers as possible, and so will accept renewal subscriptions, no matter when the subscription expires, at $1.50 for one year and $3 for two years, provided these subscriptions reach us on or before January 1, 1917. New subscribers accepted NOW at $1.50 a year for one year only, in advance.

We advise, as we say, no matter when your subscription expires, that you send us your renewal for one or two years at $1.50 a year, and send it just as early as possible. We will soon be very busy entering thousands upon thousands of subscriptions between now and January 1, 1917. It is your last chance to get the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year.

However, we shall not ask you to bear all of this extra expense without any corresponding benefit; we shall bear at least a fair proportion. The fact that we cannot afford to longer publish the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year necessitated either making the paper smaller or raising the price and making it larger and better. Our space does not now adequately meet the demands made upon it, so it would be suicidal to cut down the size of the paper. We decided that you were the kind of readers that would prefer a better and a larger paper. So on January 1, 1917, or soon thereafter, the paper will be enlarged to 32 pages. Our purpose is to make the Gospel Advocate the brightest and best religious paper in all the country.

Will you please give this your immediate attention?

QUERY DEPARTMENT

Brother McQuiddy: Kindly explain 1 Cor. 3: 15: "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." Adam Clarke, in his commentary on this passage, says: "If he sincerely and conscientiously believed what he preached, and yet preached what was wrong, but not through malice or opposition to the gospel, but through mere ignorance, he shall be saved; God, in his mercy, will pass by his errors; and he shall not suffer punishment because he was mistaken." Mr. Clarke is not consistent with the Bible in the above statement, as Paul says that when he persecuted the church of Christ he did it with all conscientiousness, and says that he would have been lost or damned. I shall be glad to read an article from you on this matter.

C. B. BREWER.

It is difficult to satisfactorily understand the passage. Some refer gold, silver, and precious stones, and wood, hay, and stubble, to the character of disciples that an evangelist builds on the one foundation. Every teacher's disciples shall be made manifest in their true characters; for the day of persecution, which is coming on them, will make every one's character plain, because it is of such a nature that the fire of persecution will reveal it. Just so the fire of persecution will try every teacher's disciples, of what sort they are. The gold, silver, and precious stones will endure, will stand the test, will be saved; while the wood, hay, and stubble will not stand the test, but will be lost. This work of the teacher shall be burnt, while the teacher himself shall be saved, yet as through fire. Adam Clarke takes the position that by gold, silver, and precious stones the Spirit certainly means pure and wholesome doctrines; by wood, hay, and stubble, false doctrines. The teacher himself shall be saved, provided he was sincere and conscientious and presented some erroneous doctrines through ignorance and not malice. He shall not suffer punishment because he was mistaken. The errors in doctrine are not on the fundamentals of salvation, but such errors as prevailed in the church at Corinth; for instance, that there should be no resurrection of the body. The teacher who honestly erred in such opinions would be saved. Yet, as in most erroneous teachings there is generally some willful and obstinate ignorance, the salvation of such erroneous teachers is very rare, as is taught here—yet so as by fire. Such are saved with great difficulty; he shall be like a brand plucked out of fire. He is saved as one who escapes from a burning house where all his property is consumed. Paul says: "Though I was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: howbeit I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief." (1 Tim. 1: 13.) No teacher is perfect and entirely free from error. The teacher who faithfully teaches the essentials of salvation will be saved, though he may sincerely and ignorantly hold some erroneous views that are not essential to one's salvation. While I do not dogmatically contend for either interpretation, I rather incline to the latter view.

Brother McQuiddy: Please to explain what the Savior means by "done good" and "done evil" in John 5: 28, 29, which reads: "Marvel not at this: for the hour cometh, in which all that are in the tombs shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of judgment."

HUGH BRADEN.

Those who keep the commands of God do good, while those who live after the lusts of the flesh do evil. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.) "Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may have the right to come to the tree of life, and may enter in by the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.) Those who walk after the flesh do evil and will be resurrected unto damnation. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, parties, envyings, drunkenness, revelings, and such like; of which I forewarn you, even as I did forewarn you, that they who practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." (Gal. 5: 19-21.) Christ shall execute judgment. The good shall come forth to the resurrection of life; the evil, to the resurrection of damnation.

Brother McQuiddy: Would it be right for a member of the church of Christ to take part in meetings of the denominations when propositions are made for all Christians to shake hands or all Christians to stand? M. L. S.

There are some things so simple and self-evident that it appears unnecessary to agitate them. Those who conscientiously believe that denominationalism is sinful should in no way lend encouragement to it. As the Bible nowhere authorizes any such procedure as that mentioned above, Christians who are guided by "it is written" should take no part in such procedure. "And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him." (Col. 3: 17.) Christ never authorized, neither did the apostles resort to, such methods for the conversion of sinners. In opposing such methods, however, we should do so in meekness and as a matter of conscience, and not in order to show our superiority over our religious neighbors.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) What was the difference of positions taken by Scott and Campbell in relation to the design of baptism for the remission of sins up to the time that Campbell went to see Scott in regard to his preaching baptism for remission, I think, in 1827? (2) Did Campbell, when baptized by Luce, state in his confession that he believed baptism was for the remission of sins? (3) It is being preached here that the kingdom came from heaven when the power came. T. R. WATSON.

(1) It was Walter Scott who first gave emphasis to the doctrine of "baptism for the remission of sins," and he also was the first to preach baptism as one of the conditions of forgiveness. William Baxter, Mr. Scott's biographer, claims that Walter Scott was the first to accept the Bible doctrine of baptism unto the remission of sins. I think he is mistaken in this, as Mr. Campbell had talked the matter over with Mr. Scott some time before the New Lisbon meeting, which was in 1827, Mr. Scott finally acquiescing in Mr. Campbell's view. The place of the first proclamation of that great truth was at New Lisbon, Columbiana County, Ohio. Both Campbell and Scott claimed that the doctrine is as old as Christianity itself. (2) No. Campbell did not state in his confession when baptized by Luce that he believed baptism was for the remission of sins. So far as faith goes, a man, in order to be scripturally baptized, is required to believe with all his heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. "Alexander Campbell was baptized on the simple confession that 'Jesus is the Son of God.'" (3) I am not sure I understand the purport of the preaching. In Mark 9: 1 we learn that some present should not taste of death till they should see the kingdom of God come with power. Acts 1: 8 assures the disciples that they should receive power when the Holy Spirit came upon them. As the kingdom was to come with power, and as the power came when the Holy Spirit came, and as the Holy Spirit came upon them on Pentecost, it follows that the power came on that day; and as the kingdom was to come with power, it must also have come on that day.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

The Work at Menlo, Again.

Since making the appeal for the disciples at Menlo, Ga., I have received and sent to them the following donations: F. E. Hall, $2.50; Mrs. H. M. Hammond, $1; J. H. Worsham, $1; Mrs. J. P. Holland, $5. The writer added fifty cents to this to make it even ten dollars and sent it in. Brother Worsham promises more later. B. J. Shamblin promises $2 soon. Dr. Shamblin, of Lyerly, promises $25. A good start, but we must keep the work going. As stated before, I know of no place where a house will accomplish more good than at Menlo. Jim Thomas, of Chattanooga, Tenn., is having the lumber sawed, and by the time this reaches our readers it should be ready. We want the building sufficiently finished for another meeting before winter. Brethren, let me insist that you help us with this, and do it now. Send all donations to Miss Georgia Thomas, Menlo, Ga., and receipt will be duly acknowledged.

Some Important Questions.

A good brother writes as follows: "I ask that you write me whether or not we can have a scriptural church without elders. And if we cannot, how must we appoint them? And what did Paul mean when he wrote to Timothy to lay hands suddenly on no man?"

1. Yes, we can have a scriptural church without elders. Some of the most unscriptural churches that I have seen were congregations with unscriptural elders. If you will read carefully Acts 13 and 14, you will find that congregations were first established and later elders were appointed. Notice, verse 23, chapter 14, says: "And when they had ordained them elders in every church." The church existed first. But it was the church, nevertheless, even while it had no elders. But it is well for us to note here that it is not God's will that a congregation should continue always without elders. The church is very much like a man—it first exists in its infancy and later as the full-grown man. The rule of Paul was to establish a congregation, then leave Titus, Timothy, or some one else with it to feed it and cause it to continue to grow and develop until elders were appointed. The capable men were developed for the eldership; they were then appointed to this work. Read the qualifications of elders and deacons in 1 Tim. 3, and note that verse 10 says: "And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless." The same principle applies to the elders. For a preacher to go into a community and conduct a meeting and baptize seventy-five or a hundred, or a less number, as to that, then immediately appoint elders and deacons, when they are all "novices," or new converts (see 1 Tim. 3: 6), would be very much like putting the newborn babe in its father's pants and telling it to get out and hustle for itself. All such is not only unscriptural, but unnatural. The church first exists in infancy and later in its manhood state. Of course, I understand that an elder or elders could move into a community where there is no congregation, a meeting could be conducted and a congregation established, and you would have in this an elder or elders, a leader already developed, hence it would not be necessary for a Titus or Timothy to be left with the congregation. But it is not God's will that this congregation continue with only one elder. Other men should be developed and qualified for the work and appointed. No congregation is considered developed to the place where God wants it until elders and deacons are qualified and appointed to their work. (See Tit. 1: 5.)

2. God appoints them. It is true that man has a part in this. God tells us the qualifications that they must have, and we, with his word in our hands, are led by him to select this man and that one whom he points out to us with his word. Notice the directions given to the church at Jerusalem about the seven men to fill the office of deacons. (See Acts 6.) This church had the description of the men wanted. With this, the church looked them out. The same is true of the qualifications given for elders and deacons in 1 Tim. 3 and Tit. 1. We simply let God appoint them by taking his description of the men and being thus led to them, call them out, and let them be recognized as the God-ordained men for the work. But let me say again that some of the most unscriptural churches that I have seen were congregations trying to walk with elders almost wholly incompetent for their work. And again, if you will pardon the expression, I will say it is like the five-year-old boy trying to walk with his father's pants on. No wonder that the congregations die, the members become discouraged and quit, and aliens get disgusted and cease to attend the services. They are not edifying. There is no soul food in what is said and the way things are done. God wants the local congregation to be a dynamo of power; he wants the services so conducted that aliens who happen to be present will fall down and confess that "God is in us of a truth" (see 1 Cor. 14: 24, 25). Put a Titus or a Timothy over the young congregations that have not efficient leaders developed. When elders are appointed, teach them that it is their duty to feed the church of God, not bore and drag it to death with unwholesome harangues and wholly unprepared talks. The leaders should study as though all depended on study and pray as though all depended on prayer, that their teaching may be, like the Elberta peach to the physical man, filled with the "juice" of the gospel of grace. May the Lord help us here. We are so sadly lacking with such teachers. Let more teaching and praying along this line be done.

3. "Lay hands suddenly on no man" (1 Tim. 5: 22) has direct reference to disciplining disorderly members, as the context shows. Begin at verse 19 and read right on through verse 22, and you will see. Sometimes brethren get mad, let the carnal nature get worked up, and jerk a brother up and rebuke him or withdraw from him hastily. This is what Paul means. Investigate, and do nothing hastily or by partiality. Do you see? It has been said that "any text of scripture, used out of harmony with the context, is nothing but a pretext." I have known this verse to be used to refer to laying hands on the elders to appoint them to office; that we must not be hasty in doing this, but first prove that the elders have the qualifications. But a child can see that this is not the context here, hence it becomes only a pretext on man's part in trying to prove some point of his. Not that I would have you to understand that it would be wrong to lay hands on elders when you appoint them. I am not taking a position here on this debated question. I simply mean to say that if hands must be laid on elders to appoint them, this is not the scripture that teaches it; you will have to go elsewhere to find it. I may have something to say about this next week. The Lord bless every seeker after the truth.

There is a pleasing story that when a beloved artist-pupil had wrought long at his picture, growing weary and discouraged by reason of the many faults of his work, and had fallen asleep by his easel, the master came softly and with his own hand corrected the pupil's mistakes and finished his picture. So, when we strive to be holy and to do our best and yet are disheartened by our failures, the Master will come and with his own hand correct our mistakes and finish our work—the fashioning of his own image on our soul. When we awake, we shall be satisfied with his likeness.—J. R. Miller.

"Fellowship in Furtherance of the Gospel."

BY M. C. K.

8. He says he contends for the society plan because it "is organized" and "organization is essential to any great work." Exactly so, and God provided and established one for the "great work" of sending the gospel over the earth; and here we come to the real issue between the society and the antisociety churches. It is in no sense an issue over a mere plan, or way, or method of doing a thing, as this tract seems to assume, unless a church with its divinely appointed board of overseers and managers may be called a plan, or way, or method of doing a thing. Where God commands a thing to be done, but gives no plan, or way, or method of doing it, then a discussion of plans, or ways, or methods would be out of place, so far as the question of right or wrong is concerned. We here quote from our discussion with the Christian Standard a statement of the issue that is here involved:

Replying to our question, "If our brother prefers to designate the missionary society with its board of supervisors and managers of the work merely as a 'form or method,' then we respectfully ask, why turn from the divinely appointed 'form or method' of a church with its board of supervisors and managers of the work to a 'form or method' appointed by man?" The Standard says: "In the Standard's view, the church board and the missionary board are not in the same category. The church, as the divinely appointed 'center of evangelism,' is the missionary organization. The society, as a human device, is a subsidiary institution, which the church, the real missionary agency, can use or not, according to its best judgment." But in this view, we respectfully remark, our brother assumes the very opposite of what is correct. The church board and the society board are not only "in the same category" in this case, as we shall show, but so completely has the society board usurped the place and function of the church board that the latter, and not the former, in the case in hand, "is a subsidiary institution." Two facts will establish this point beyond all successful contradiction. (1) In the society arrangement, the churches give over their money to the society board, relinquishing thereon all claim themselves, and leaving it to be used exclusively as the society board may direct. (2) The society board then, to quote again our recent statement of the case, "selects, directs, and controls the missionaries, precisely as it pleases, and the churches can have no voice in, and nothing whatever to do with, the matter." If in such a case the church is not "subsidiary" to the society, then pray tell us how such a thing would be possible? You say, "The Standard does not concede for one moment that the church should surrender its powers to any other organization;" but this, my dear brother, as we have just seen, is precisely what is done in the society arrangement. The Standard has already admitted, earlier in our investigation, that the society arrangement allows the churches to "bundle their money into a hat and send it they know not whither." Not only so, but, so far as missionary work is concerned, the churches, in the society arrangement, have surrendered all power to another organization, and have no voice or control in anything whatever, not even the power to recall a missionary for false teaching. The society alone can do this, and the church is powerless to act. Moreover, he is "the servant of the" missionary "society who paid him," and we respectfully deny that he is "answerable only to the church of which he is a member." He is answerable to the society, and to the society alone, that "selects, directs, and controls" him, and there is not a church on earth that can dismiss him if the society wants to retain him. So far as the missionaries and missionary work are concerned, it is a complete displacement of the divine institution with the human.

The Gospel Advocate at that time further added:

But the Christian Standard seems to feel the necessity for a board of "officers" of an "economical or business character" for the "collection and disbursement of evangelistic funds," and for the general "economical administration" of affairs. Very well; the Gospel Advocate does not object; but again we would respectfully ask, why turn away from the board of management devised and appointed by the Lord to one devised and appointed by man? And let us again say, if the Lord had merely devised and appointed a "voluntary association" for missionary work without devising and appointing therein a board of management, the Christian Standard's point would be well taken in suggesting such a board for that purpose; but this again is precisely what the Lord has done, and we, therefore, cannot turn with the Standard from this divinely appointed board of overseers and managers to one appointed by man.

9. He fails to see the point that is properly made against "the administrative expenses of the" missionary society. No matter how great those expenses might be, that would not prove that the society is wrong, and no one that understands and appreciates the issue makes that use of them. If the society is divinely authorized, we should have it and operate it regardless of expense; but if it is not thus authorized, and puts a financial burden upon the churches which they would not have if left to work under God's board, then such expense should be opposed, and is opposed, on the ground that it is needless. According to the admission of the Foreign Society's own secretary as quoted in this tract, twelve dollars out of every one hundred dollars which the churches contribute in the society way never sees the missionary nor the missionary field, but it is used to support the machinery. When the churches operate under the divinely appointed board and the communication with the missionary is direct, no expense is incurred in getting the money to the missionary except a postage stamp.

10. Still further opposing what he calls "the independent plan," he says that under it "the churches left" a brother "stranded in India in destitute circumstances." What if they did? It was wrong, of course; but what has that to do with the question now before us? "The churches left" Brother Paul "stranded" sometimes "in hunger" and even "in cold and nakedness," and not only without "money to reach home," but without enough to pay his lodging where he was; but he did not become unreasonable and speak in derogatory terms of the plan under which he was operating, but, "working night and day" to pay his way, he tried to correct the churches and get them to do better; and this is precisely what Brother Cowden and all others ought to do with those churches which are now sufficiently lacking in grace and good works to leave a brother "stranded in India in destitute circumstances."

11. He says: "It does seem that any one would hesitate to claim that the New Testament is responsible for a missionary and benevolent plan that is accomplishing so little." But why should they "hesitate to claim" such a thing? "The New Testament is responsible for" several things that are "accomplishing so little" all over the earth, but that neither proves them wrong nor throws discredit upon them. Neither the New Testament nor anything for which it "is responsible" can operate itself. It requires men and women, and men and women who are willing to do what it says, before it can "accomplish" much or little. During our discussion with the Standard, a brother, with about the conception of the present issue that the author of this tract seems to have, jumped into the discussion with some untimely and ugly remarks, something after the fashion of the present critic, branding as a "dismal and blighting failure" a system of missionary work which the Standard itself had admitted was taught in the New Testament, and the following reply, which the Advocate then made, it considers applicable and appropriate now:

By the way, we respectfully suggest to our beloved brother of the Christian Standard that his great journal would better have occupied its space in defending a system which it admits is taught in the New Testament than to permit it to be occupied with an article which brands this system as a "dismal and blighting failure," the author of such an article thus showing himself to be incapable of properly discussing such questions. But we are glad that the Standard was careful to record, though in a very mild form, its editorial disapproval of such a remark. The author of the article and all other men, who cannot be fair and just in discussion, should stay at home on their knees with an open Bible, and prayerfully study such questions before entering the columns of a newspaper or otherwise attempting to discuss them. "Dismal and blighting failure," indeed! Why so? The command to be immersed is a "dismal and blighting failure" where men refuse to obey it and substitute something else for it. The command to pray to Almighty God through Jesus Christ is a "dismal and blighting failure" where men refuse to obey it and substitute for it the "counting of beads," prayer to the "Holy Virgin," and all the other flummery of Rome. The New Testament order of meeting upon the first day of the week to remember the world's Redeemer is a "dismal and blighting failure" where human wisdom substitutes for it meeting once a month or four times a year. Those who contend for the divine system of spreading the gospel over the earth do not stultify themselves by claiming that this system will do the work where men refuse to work it! In such a case, it will accomplish just what all other systems not worked will accomplish, and that is nothing! The author of that Solomonic remark may yet learn that even the missionary society would accomplish precisely the same results where men refuse to work it.

12. Finally, attempting to justify both the society way and the church way of work, he says: "Paul and Barnabas did not agree about their work, and worked separately, still they continued to be brethren." The statement that "Paul and Barnabas did not agree about their work" is not true. There is not one word in the record (see Acts 15: 36-41) that says so. They were in perfect agreement "about their work," but they disagreed on the propriety or expediency of taking a certain man "with them to the work." That is all, and the brother's statement, as usual in this tract, is a misrepresentation.

In conclusion, we suggest that the author of this tract, and all others with his conception of things, "tarry at Jericho" a while before attempting to write tracts on any New Testament subject.

Fighting the Devil with Fire.

BY E. A. E.

The societies were built on a money basis and money is their controlling spirit and ruling power. Jesus declares that both God and money cannot be served, that God will be hated and money loved. Where money is god, all things—manhood, independence, the gospel, the church, and Christ—are sacrificed to it.

I cannot believe that "more and more good men" and "faithful" preachers "have been driven out of the ministry" because of the wicked schemes of the societies. Such men are not faithful and independent, or such schemes and wickedness would drive them to great diligence and boldness in denouncing the societies, in preaching "the whole counsel of God," and in building up churches of Christ free from the control of such iniquitous money powers. There never was a more priest-ridden and pope-domineered people than the Standard and these letters which it publishes represent these churches and frightened and cringing and fawning "pastors" to be. Speaking of one preacher, the Standard says, "the toady above mentioned."

But no secretaries who are afraid to speak out against the pernicious schemes of the societies, or who are afraid, even, to fail to work in harmony with them and under its ambitious "salaried officials," are any worse or more dominated by the love of money than the poor weaklings who withhold their names from these most fearful indictments through fear of losing their jobs, or of starving, or of having to "seek another means of livelihood." This is putting the job—the "livelihood"—above conscience and above God. I had rather be an honest street scavenger, rejoicing in the liberty wherewith God has set me free, and preach the gospel in independence and the love of God, than to be a toadying secretary or "pastor." The man who does not take up a collection for the societies may be a traitor to them; but all these "pastors" and "secretaries," who know these wicked schemes and do not rebel and write and preach open and above board against them, regardless of consequences, are traitors to the cause of Christ. Suppose John the Baptist, Jesus, Stephen, Peter, James, John, Paul, and a host of other "faithful men" and godly women, of whom the world was not worthy, had withheld their names from their scathing denunciations and burning indictments of the Pharisees (who were lovers of money), aristocratic Sadducees, the scribes, and priests, the world would have never had a Savior and there would have never been a Christian martyr.

Study anew Paul's life, or is Paul a back number or not worthy of imitation? Some who do not work through the societies write as if they think Paul's example is not to be followed. Hungry, naked, cold, a night and a day in the deep, in perils of robbers and of false brethren, in perils on land and on sea, in prisons, whipped, beaten with rods, stoned, dragged out as dead, beheaded—all for Christ's sake! But he never stopped preaching. Contrast these with the action of the "good men" and "faithful ministers" who have quit preaching on account of the organized wickedness of the societies, or are afraid to oppose it, lest they should lose their jobs and starve! Nothing could prevent Paul's preaching the gospel. Let the churches fail to support him, and he will work with his own hands and preach the gospel to those who work with him, where he lodges at night, in the synagogues on Sabbath days, and wherever people can be found to hear him; place him in jail and make his feet fast in the stocks, and he will pray and sing praises unto God and preach the gospel at midnight to the jailer and to all who are in his house; let the Jewish council at Jerusalem beat him and in their fury attempt to tear him apart limb by limb, until rescued by the Roman soldiers, and bruised and in pain he will stand on the castle stairs and in love and mercy preach the gospel to his persecutors; place him in prison at Cesarea, and in chains he will preach the gospel to Felix, Festus, King Agrippa, and all the court; put him on a ship as a prisoner, and he will preach the gospel to the centurion and soldiers who have him in charge, and all on board; shipwreck him, and he will bless and preach the gospel to the people among whom he has been cast; chain him in Rome to many different soldiers in turn, and he will preach the gospel to every one of them, until it has been heard throughout the whole prætorian guard (Phil. 1: 12-14) and Cæsar's household (Phil. 4: 22); give him the liberty to do so, and for two whole years in his own hired house he will preach the gospel to all who will come to hear him (Acts 28: 30); cut his head off, and, though dead, like Abel, he will still preach the gospel. No, "good" and "faithful" men are not "driven out of the ministry" through fear of starving or by organized money powers.

When M. C. Kurfees and the Campbell Street Church, in Louisville, about twenty-five years ago, "heard the buzz of the big stick" and received just such a threatening letter from the society as described above, they did not conceal their names and Brother Kurfees never manifested any fear of starving; they spoke out so clear and strong above their own names that their voice was heard throughout the United States and across the sea. All these preachers referred to should have no fears of this man-made, money-loving, and money-ruled organization, but should come out of it, expose its schemes and practices, and lead the churches out of it or build other churches independent of it.

Experience is a sad, cruel, and expensive teacher. These preachers and some churches have learned the lessons mentioned above at the wondrous cost, not only of thousands of dollars of money, but of the peace and unity of hundreds of congregations. Contentions, strife, bitterness, and divisions now flourish as rank weeds in rich soil where love and unity once prevailed.

THE REMEDY.

The Standard speaks of "the independent ministry." It cannot be independent until it shakes off the yoke of the society and rejoices in the freedom of the gospel of Christ and church of God. They ought to count it a great privilege and sweet pleasure to starve for Christ's sake in exposing and leading churches from beneath such a burden of organized wickedness. They cannot remain under it with all their silent protests without being parties to all its iniquitous practices.

But the Standard says the societies have two advantages over "the independent ministry:" (1) They are organized, and (2) they have "the funds"—the funds the churches contribute for nobler purposes. The remedy it proposes is "to enter into a protective association," showing what this association should do. But this is fighting the devil with fire. The enemies of Israel thought they had two advantages—(1) they were well organized, (2) they had "the funds." Israel proposed to fight organization with organization, but in doing so rejected God as their King. Just so now, because the societies are organized and have money, the Standard argues the necessity of an organized "protective association." God has given the organization, the church and its government. Let other organizations alone; fight the societies with the gospel in the church, get out of the societies, be independent, get the churches out of them, and teach the churches to quit contributing to them in order to support the ambitious "salaried officers" and wicked schemes. This is the only remedy. Instead of being starved to death by the societies, starve the societies to death.

With all this before us we can see some little (!) necessity for preaching and writing against making merchandise of the churches (see 2 Pet. 2: 3), turning godliness into a way of gain (see 1 Tim. 6: 5), teaching things which should not be taught "for filthy lucre's sake" (Tit. 1: 10), following "the way of Balaam, . . . who loved the wages of wrongdoing" (see 2 Pet. 2: 15, 16; Rev. 2: 14), and "commercializing the gospel."

But all these things have been "written for our admonition" and warning—not that I hope to benefit the societies, but to point out the "lurking dangers" in similar principles now at work. To be continued, therefore, next week.

A Kind Criticism.

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

In view of the fact that some people object to all advertising in a religious journal, the following criticism with comment is given our readers:

Brother McQuiddy: "In spirit and in truth," would you preach for a congregation of disciples who would keep the rear end of their church building, inside, decorated with various advertisements such as the Gospel Advocate carries, without advising a clean-up? In principle, would it not be about the same? I believe the Gospel Advocate is one among the best religious journals published by the brotherhood; but since there is more or less complaint about the advertising matter, I believe it would have a wider and better influence for good if it would let much of its advertising matter severely alone. Advertisements sell lots of goods; and since Christ cast out of the temple those who sold and bought therein, I ask: Is there room, in any sense of the word, for comparing the cleansing of the temple (Matt. 21: 12, 13) with the above question? X.

I appreciate the adverse criticism as much as the generous praise accorded the Gospel Advocate. Before answering the questions, we should both clearly understand the issue involved.

Our readers should understand that the temple does not typify the church, or meetinghouse, but the spiritual body of Christ. While in the days of Judaism God was worshiped in the temple, it is also a fact that he does not now dwell in houses made with hands. The Spirit speaks through Stephen: "But Solomon built him a house. Howbeit the Most High dwelleth not in houses made with hands." (Acts 7: 47, 48.) The Spirit now dwells in Christians, as is proven by Paul's writings to the Corinthians. He says: "Know ye not that ye are a temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man destroyeth the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, and such are ye." (1 Cor. 3: 16, 17.) On this same subject Paul further writes: "Or know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have from God? and ye are not your own; for ye were bought with a price: glorify God therefore in your body." (1 Cor. 6: 19, 20.) This makes it clear that the Spirit of God dwells not in meetinghouses, but in Christians, and that the body of a Christian is a temple of the Holy Spirit. The walls of a meetinghouse are not any more sacred than the walls of any other house.

I certainly would not object to preaching the gospel of Christ in a house simply because it is papered with the Gospel Advocate. Why should I, since I am doing my very best to preach the gospel through its pages every week? I am not so much concerned about the place in which I preach as I am about the message that I deliver. If I could save some sinner by earnestly preaching the gospel of Christ in a saloon, I would cheerfully do so. I have taught the truth to professed Christians who had the temple of the Holy Spirit saturated with tobacco juice. I have preached Christ, and him crucified, in houses where the floor and seats were soiled with dirt and amber. I do not think that in so doing I was doing anything inconsistent with the religion of Christ. But if I had failed to declare the whole counsel of God, I would have known that I had been derelict in my duty.

There is no pertinency in holding that, because Christ cleansed the temple of sin, therefore religious publishers should refuse legitimate advertising in their papers. The only point in our brother's question, as I understand it, is whether it is wrong to insert advertisements in religious papers. I answer this in the negative. I will further say that papers properly conducted should carry advertisements that will be helpful to their readers. In other words, advertising is simply telling the reader where he may secure goods that he needs at reasonable prices. For instance, we sell Bibles, tracts, and other good books. We advertise these books and their prices. The reader wishes to know where he can get one of these books. We furnish him the information. What is true of us is true of every other advertiser. We have readers who wish to buy cooking stoves. We induce a reliable manufacturer or dealer to advertise stoves and their prices with descriptions in our paper. And so we might continue until we had named every useful and necessary article used by the people. We know where the people can get these things, and we simply furnish the information by advertising. Instead of its being wrong to conduct religious papers on this principle, I am bold to affirm that I think they should be conducted on it. Of course, as we fall short of perfection in all our undertakings, we also fall short in this. But if it is argued that we should not insert legitimate advertising because advertising is sometimes abused, we may reply that for the same reason we could object to the church and even Christianity. There are many hypocrites in the world that use the church as a cloak. Hence, I conclude that legitimate advertising should be encouraged and fostered, while unclean advertising should be condemned and discontinued. Our advertising agent says: "Now we endeavor to the limit of our ability to exclude from the Gospel Advocate everything which is objectionable from the standpoint of quite a severe censorship. Thus we will not accept any advertising which is fraudulent or deceptive, and we go to quite a good deal of trouble to find out whether it is fraudulent or deceptive. Moreover, we publish a guarantee of the reliability of the advertisers, so that, in the event that any reader of the Gospel Advocate is defrauded, we ourselves are liable and cover the loss. Naturally we have to be careful under those conditions. Some people object to medical advertising without much thought as to the ground of the objection. Our view is that medical advertising is as unobjectionable as any other advertising, and that all fraudulent and deceptive advertising should be excluded, whether medical or otherwise. As a matter of fact, medicines have been so much under fire that medical advertising is to-day much more guarded, much more truthful, and much more reliable than the average of other advertising."

Our managing editor, Mr. A. B. Lipscomb, is expected to censor all advertisements that appear in the Gospel Advocate. If an advertisement is known to be unreliable, we decline to insert it in our columns. There seems to be, however, an objection to advertising any kind of patent medicine. I remember a gentleman high up in authority who insisted that we should not insert any patent-medicine advertisement. I reminded him that I had been using Dioxygen and that I had been very greatly benefited by it. When I pressed him for an answer, I learned that he was also using Dioxygen. No one should take the position that all patent medicines are bad. If it be argued that some people are not benefited by such medicines, so it may be argued that some people are not benefited by the doctors. While I have no disposition to criticize the doctors, and while I am sure we have many noble men in the profession, yet much more money is spent on the doctors without deriving benefit than on patent medicines. We do read in the New Testament where a woman had spent all her living upon physicians and could not be healed of any. (See Luke 8: 43.) Some people object to advertising Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and yet I would dare say that you could not convince many of the mothers of this country that their children have not been benefited by the use of this syrup. I remember that this was advertised when I was a boy. I have never heard of the elders of any church disciplining the mothers because they gave their children Winslow's Soothing Syrup. If it is wrong to advertise this medicine, it is also wrong to take it. We should not lose sight of the fact that a medicine that will help one person will not help another. I am reminded here of what a young doctor said concerning taking medicine. He said that "medicine was made to give, not to take." I am sure there is good philosophy in this, and that all of us should take just as little medicine as possible. This all leads me to conclude that the same censorship should be applied to proprietary or patent medicines that is applied to other advertising.

Our advertising agents, who furnish the advertising that appears in many religious papers, say: "All objections that are raised in letters to the publications are referred to us, and if there is any charge made against any advertiser, we carefully investigate the charge, and in the event that the advertiser is found guilty of any wrongdoing, either false statement in his advertising or lack of quality in the article advertised, or lack of integrity in the business methods of the advertiser, we exclude the advertising, not only from the Gospel Advocate, but also from all other publications with which we are connected as advertising managers."

Now is the Time to Renew.

The subscription price of the Gospel Advocate will be advanced on January 1, 1917. While as a matter of self-preservation this is absolutely necessary, yet we have made liberal provisions for our old subscribers. No matter when your subscription expires, you can now renew your subscription for one year at $1.50, or for two years at $3. You should attend to this now, as we will soon be busy entering thousands upon thousands of subscriptions. New subscribers may now renew for one year at $1.50. January 1, 1917, is the last chance to get the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year.

Certainly no old subscriber will complain at the advanced price, when in reality the advance does not affect him for over two years, provided he will now pay his subscription in advance. As has already been announced, the Gospel Advocate has the best paid-up subscription list in its history; still, we would be much gratified if all our subscribers would pay up in advance. This would be very helpful to us by cutting out many losses. It would also furnish us money for paying for our paper, which has to be bought and paid for six months in advance of the date it is needed. Paper is scarce and hard to buy at any price. In order to be able to deliver the paper regularly to our subscribers, we are compelled to anticipate our wants. The writer of this article has been in the publishing business almost a third of a century, but never before has he had to contend with such a condition. We are much encouraged with the cooperation of our readers. By liberal and cheerful responses they have helped us to bear our greatly increased burden. A brother came into the office a few days ago to renew his own and another subscription for one year each. When he saw that he had the privilege of renewing each for two years at the present price, he cheerfully gave us his check for six dollars. There have been already so many hearty responses that we have been greatly stimulated to press forward vigorously in the work. We want our friends and readers to know that we very greatly appreciate the liberal support they have accorded us in the past. We bespeak for the future a much more liberal and enthusiastic support on account of increased cost of production. We are engaged in a great and noble work. Our purpose and highest ambition is to faithfully serve the Lord and to do all the good possible in the publication and circulation of the Gospel Advocate. We reach out an open hand to all our contemporaries in the work and pray that the Lord may give us all the grace and the wisdom to bless and help those about us as we journey through this world.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

Provoking People.

To provoke people should be our constant endeavor, if it is done in the right way. There is an ever-present temptation to do it in the wrong way. "Love is not provoked," but one of love's chief activities is to be provoking—"let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works." This kind of provoking requires study. We are to observe our brother carefully, "bestow thought" upon him, with a view to inciting him to loving thought and word and act. Do people find rising within them impulses toward the highest things when they come in contact with us?—Sunday School Times.

When we discover Christians negligent and failing to do what they should in the service of the Lord, it is our duty to say or do something that will awake them from their slumbers. The Spirit admonishes: "And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works." (Heb. 10: 24.) If our aims and purposes are righteous, even if we do not always use the best methods in provoking our careless brethren to good works, they will not lose their tempers and abuse us for our honest effort, if they love as brethren; for "love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not its own, is not provoked, taketh not account of evil." (1 Cor. 13: 4, 5.) Reproof of any kind should always be given in a spirit of meekness. "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted." (Gal. 6: 1.) We should give thoughtful, prayerful consideration to provoking one another to good works. By words and by the application of right principles we should study to provoke each other to good works and "exhort one another day by day, so long as it is called To-day; lest any one of you be hardened by the deceitfulness of sin." (Heb. 3: 13.) This would be infinitely better than for Brother A to whisper to Brother B that Brother C has been guilty of sin, with the mild injunction: "But be sure to say nothing about it." With that purity of heart and that gentleness and love for each other that should characterize all Christians, we will study to provoke one another "unto love and good works."

Getting it Direct.

What God thinks about any question in our lives we may learn directly from him. "Tell me whether dancing is a sin," asked a young woman of a friend who had led her into a new life of surrender to Christ. It was about a week after her new step that the question of amusements came before her. "I won't tell you," her friend answered. "It is much better to get the information direct. You ask the Lord about that, and I'll pray about it, too." After further urging her friend to tell her opinion of the question and finding her obdurate, the young woman agreed to take it to the Lord in prayer. Several days later they met. "O, I've got my answer," she exclaimed, with a beaming face. There was no doubt what the answer was. "Isn't it much sweeter to get it from Him, direct?" her friend asked. One of the privileges of a completely surrendered Christian is to talk personally and intimately with the Lord Jesus at any moment of the day or night, and upon any conceivable subject.—Sunday School Times.

That friend was wise. David prayed: "Let me fall into the hands of the living God." It is better to look to the Lord than to any man. The Spirit admonishes: "Casting all your anxiety upon him, because he careth for you." (1 Pet. 5: 7.) We cannot sincerely and truly go to the Lord and get the wrong answer. But we must go to the Lord appreciating the obligations that rest upon us, and must be ready to accept the guidance he gives us. David sings: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." (Ps. 46: 1.) We must first show our willingness and desire to be led and guided by him. So long as we trust in our own strength or are ready to go to men for help and guidance, God cannot lead us. "Jehovah is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as are of a contrite spirit." (Ps. 34: 18.) Those who honestly seek after God will not be turned away. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it is of God, or whether I speak from myself." (John 7: 17.)

Satan's Material.

Giving the devil nothing to work with is the secret of victory over sin. Self is the only material that Satan can adapt to his ends. That is why God so longs to have the self in us put to death. At a summer camp meeting where the message of holiness was emphasized, one of the speakers said: "When we are something, the devil can do something with us, but God cannot. When we are nothing, the devil can do nothing with us, but God can." Shall we, then, reckon ourselves "to be dead unto sin, but alive unto God in Christ Jesus"—made alive by the resurrection power of the creator God who creates without existing material? He can create his miracle life in us only if we first let him put self to death. Giving God "nothing," that we may not hinder his working for us, is the secret of the victorious life.—Sunday School Times.

"For every one that exalteth himself shall be humbled; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." (Luke 14: 11.) God's strength is made perfect in weakness. God is able to uphold the man who clings to him in weakness. Hence the Lord said to Paul: "My grace is sufficient for thee: for my power is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my weaknesses, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Wherefore I take pleasure in weaknesses, in injuries, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong." (2 Cor. 12: 9, 10.) What a pity that we all do not appreciate how helpless and insignificant we are! Without the help of the Lord, we are completely at the mercy of the devil. If we rely on our own strength, we are completely in his power. May Jehovah help us to appreciate our nothingness and his greatness!

God is girding every man for a place and a calling, in which, taking it from Him, even though it be internally humble, he may be as consciously exalted as if he held the rule of a kingdom. The truth I propose, then, for your consideration is this: "That God has a definite life plan for every human person, girding him, visibly or invisibly, for some exact thing, which it will be the true significance and glory of his life to have accomplished." Many persons, I am well aware, never think of any such thing. They suppose that, for most men, life is a necessarily stale and common affair. What it means for them they do not know, and they scarcely conceive that it means anything.—Bushnell.

Despite the glorious days behind us with their glamor and mighty deeds, material and spiritual, yet we stand just before the dawn of the greatest day. We must gird ourselves to the battle. The kingdom of God must be set up in the empire of the world. Here we see fulfillment of prophecy—man has traveled westward since the beginning of history, and we stand at the farthest limit of the West. To our West the whole creation faces, on us the eyes of the whole world rest. Will we measure up to our opportunity? May the good God give us grace to do what the Lord requires of us—to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God.—Bishop Hunting.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

T. E. Arterberry writes that A. B. Barret has closed a fine meeting at Savoy, Texas.

From Charlie Taylor: "The meeting at Burnett's Chapel closed with nine baptisms. I am now at College Grove, Tenn."

O. W. Gardner, of Odessa, Mo., was a welcome visitor to this office last Monday. He preached at the Nashville Bible School on Sunday.

A physician and a dentist who know their business and who are faithful Christians are wanted at Berry, Ala. Address J. C. Shepherd.

Morgan H. Carter closed a two-weeks' meeting with the Eighth Avenue congregation, this city, last Friday night. There were three additions.

The editor of this page closed a two-weeks' meeting at Lewisburg, Tenn., Sunday evening. There were fifty-three additions, including forty-two baptisms.

H. W. Wrye reports twenty-six baptisms in the meeting at Verona, Tenn., and fourteen additions, including twelve baptisms, at Hebron, in Wilson County, Tenn.

From C. M. Gleaves, Bellbuckle, Tenn., September 9: "I closed a good meeting at Corinth, Wilson County, with eleven baptized. W. F. Wright led the song service."

M. C. Cayce, of this city, has just closed an interesting meeting of one week's duration at Maple Hill. He will begin a meeting at Hinton's Chapel, in West Nashville, on October 1.

R. D. Smith made us a pleasant visit last week. Churches in need of a good preacher to hold a meeting would do well to write him at Murfreesboro, Tenn., in care of G. Dallas Smith.

C. E. Holt, of Montgomery, Ala., closed the meeting with the Chestnut Ridge congregation, near Petersburg, Tenn., on September 12, at the water's edge. There were nineteen additions to the congregation.

From W. E. Morgan, Dallas, Texas, September 12: "I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Mill Creek, Okla., yesterday. Four were baptized. I am under promise to return there for another meeting next year."

From R. N. Moody, Fountain Creek, Tenn., September 16: "The meeting at Campbell's Station began on September 3 and closed on September 13, with one baptism and one restored. I go from here to New Decatur, Ala., for a meeting."

We are gratified to announce that the brethren have succeeded in erecting a nice house of worship at Finger, Tenn. The few brethren there have made a great effort and sacrifice. N. B. Hardeman began a meeting there last Lord's day.

On September 1 R. C. Bell began a year's work for the Houston Street church of Christ, at Sherman, Texas. He very recently decided to locate in Sherman rather than at Fort Worth. His permanent address is 820 North Cleveland Avenue, Sherman, Texas.

From J. T. Harris, Culleoka, Tenn., September 14: "Since my last report I have held two meetings, at Beech Grove and Salem, both in Lauderdale County, Ala. The two resulted in thirteen baptisms and five restorations. I am now at Stiversville, Tenn., preaching to immense audiences."

From J. B. Nelson: "For the benefit of my friends, I will say that I have rented out my home in Dallas and have moved to Irving, Texas, for one year. Irving is a small town near Dallas. I can have access to both town and country. I am now at Calico Rock, Ark., in a good meeting."

Report from G. W. Riggs: "I began a meeting at Holladay, Tenn., on August 27 and continued it till the following Friday night. Five were baptized, one came from the Baptists, and one was reclaimed. I began at Hearn's Chapel, in Henderson County, Tenn., on September 3, and continued till September 10. Five were baptized."

The brethren at Stanford, Ky., plan to build a house of worship. If any of our readers who are good architects would send a sketch of a frame house seating about two hundred people at moderate cost, it would be appreciated. Dimensions desired are thirty by forty feet, with plaster board for inside walls. Write William Severance, at Stanford, Ky.

Mrs. L. E. Dunn, mother of John E. Dunn, wishes to go to Dallas, Texas, the latter part of October or first of November to spend the winter with her children in Texas. If any friend is going to Texas via Memphis over either the Cotton Belt or Iron Mountain route, please write John E. Dunn, Nashville, Tenn., 1406 Linden Avenue. Sister Dunn desires company on this trip.

A. W. Young, of Gainesville, Texas, is to hold a meeting with T. B. Clark and the saints at McMinnville, embracing the first three Lord's days in October. He has time for another meeting in Tennessee to follow the McMinnville meeting. Brother Young has been evangelizing for more than twenty years and is one of the prominent preachers and writers of Texas. If you need him, address him at Box 222, McMinnville, Tenn.

From Willis G. Jernigan, Orme, Tenn., September 15: "Father and I closed a five-weeks' meeting in Chattanooga a few days ago. Father is now near Centerville in a meeting, while I am laboring with C. C. McCampbell in a meeting at this place. Brother McCampbell will enter the Nashville Bible School shortly. The churches in Chattanooga are growing rapidly. E. H. Hoover is now in a meeting at Highland Park. I will preach at the Cowart Street church of Christ on Sunday."

John E. Dunn was with the Bellwood church, in Wilson County, Tenn. (Brother Elam's home congregation), in a meeting, August 20-27. Four were baptized into Christ. Brother Dunn began a meeting with the Glen's Creek church, in Central Kentucky, on September 3. The meeting continues with good interest. He is to be in Central Kentucky till the middle of October. Brother Dunn goes to Scottsboro, Ala., about the middle of October, and to Oakman, Ala., on November 1. He will wind up this year's work in Alabama.

From Don Carlos Janes, Route 10, Buechel, Ky., September 7: "I heard Brother Glenn preach a good sermon at Buechel last Lord's day. The church there is doing well and will make a special contribution toward a lot fund next Sunday. G. P. Bowser will close his part of the meeting with the colored brethren to-night. He has done some very good work. His sermon 'The King's Insurance Company' is fine indeed. Brother Jorgenson will preach to the negroes to-morrow night and I will speak to them on Sunday."

Beginning on Monday, October 9, at Mount Moriah Baptist Church, C. M. Stubblefield, of the church of Christ, and Elder C. H. Cayce, of the Primitive Baptist Church, will debate questions relating to the conditions of salvation. Mount Moriah is located in the northern part of Marshall County, Ky., three miles northeast of Elva, and six miles southwest of Calvert City. Those living at a distance who desire to attend should write Todd Miller, Benton, Ky., Route 6, and arrangements will be made to convey all persons from the station to the debate.

Fayette, September 11.—The meeting at Guin resulted in five baptisms. Brother Murray, of Mount Pleasant, Tenn., assisted in song. He is a good one. I am now in a meeting at New River, near Fayette, with two baptisms and interest fine. I go next to Hackleburg. This is a mission point. Pray for me. A. D. DIES.

Jamestown, September 5.—Brother Flayil Hall, of Trion, Ga., held an eleven-days' meeting at Berea Church, near this place. This was the first meeting held at this place in a number of years, and the sectarians are greatly frightened. Brother Hall is an ardent worker and is doing a great work. There were seven additions. ETHEL MURPHY.

Hamilton, September 11.—Our meeting here of eight days' duration closed last night. We had one baptism and one reclaimed. There is much prejudice here, yet we had very good crowds. The members are badly in need of a preacher. It is a good field for work, but not extra for pay, as they are not taught to do their duty yet. Any one desiring to know more should write M. C. Mills, Hamilton, Ala. I am now on my way to Miami, Fla. H. M. PHILLIPS.

Arkansas.

Blackton, September 9.—Brother A. Campbell (colored), of Nashville, Tenn., held a two-weeks' meeting at this place. He preached the gospel "as it is written" in a plain and simple manner. Fourteen were baptized and one restored. I. ANDERSON.

Wynne, September 11.—Last night a week ago I closed one of the best meetings of my life at Staves. We had the largest and most attentive crowds that I ever preached to. Two were baptized into the one body and one restored. Last night I began my second meeting for this summer at Winters' Chapel. The meeting opened with many more than the house would hold. H. F. PENDERGRASS.

Lonoke, September 9.—My meeting near Logansport, La., resulted in nineteen baptisms. Of these, six came out from the denominations. Sixteen of them are heads of families. I began a meeting here last night. I will be here the balance of this month. Pray for my success in this rich and wicked city. We have only four or five Christians here. We have a good house. The "progressives" are building their house here now. R. W. ARRINGTON.

Newark, September 6.—The meeting at Gridley resulted in seven baptisms, and two who had gone into the Mormon Church returned to the fold. I am now at Newark in what promises to be my best meeting of the season. It was estimated that more than five hundred persons failed to get seats last night. The brethren have a large tent, well seated and lighted. They are now arranging more seats. This is my fourth meeting here.

Olathe, September 7.—The tent meeting at Delta, eleven miles from Olathe, continues with interest. I am told that the "Church of God" is about torn to pieces (they have been attending the tent meeting regularly), and the "Christian Church" have invited me to enter their house and discuss the issue between us, looking to a possible unity in Delta. Since the tent meeting started they have changed their name over the church door from "Christian Church" to "Church of Christ," and now they wish their members to hear what we claim is the truth on the subject of instrumental music in the worship of God. The "pastor" agrees to present the issue as understood by them, and I am to present it as regarded by us, and the object of this is to discover who is responsible for the division between us. This is the healthy way to proceed. Much interest is aroused in the New Testament order being preached under the tent.

Pensacola, September 7.—Beginning on July 19, I conducted a sixteen-days' meeting at Lowery, Ala., with fourteen added to the one body—twelve by baptism and two by relation. Following this I preached seven sermons at a place called "Berea," with one restored to fellowship. On Friday night before the third Lord's day in August I began a week's meeting at New Providence, about five miles from Bolling, Ala., which resulted in twenty-seven additions. Brother George Cain was with me during the meeting and did part of the preaching. About eight of these converts were successfully treated for that dreaded disease, "morbus Sabbaticus" (Sunday sickness), or, in plain language, were restored to fellowship, confessing their wrongs. This in itself was worth our every effort with this congregation and caused great rejoicing. Fourteen were baptized, one came from the Methodists and four from the Baptists. The Lord willing, I shall hold another meeting for this congregation next August. On August 28 I engaged R. G. Green, one of "Pastor" Russell's folks, in an eight-nights' debate at Bay Minette, Ala. Next week I engage the Second Adventists at Cypress, Fla., and the week following I waste two days of my time in debate with a modern infidel, Mr. D. L. Watson, representing the "Stumblingstones," or "Come-Outers," at Union, near Georgiana, Ala., after which I will take my place among the students of the National Teachers' Normal and Business College, at Henderson, Tenn. W. J. BUTLER.

Georgia.

Trenton, September 11.—The annual protracted meeting at Union, conducted by Brother John T. Smithson, continued eleven days. Nine were baptized and seven restored. We feel that we are getting better lined up for mission work from this church. We are to begin a meeting next Sunday at Deerhead Cove.
C. E. COLEMAN.

Rome, September 12.—The meeting with the church on Fifth Avenue was a great success. Many who never came before were present every service. We have a Sunday school there now, with four classes, and prayer meeting on Thursday nights. The meeting has been moved to North Rome, where we have rented a hall. I am preaching every night and at the foundry at the noon hour. Last night a Baptist preacher shook hands with me in an agreement to debate after our meeting is over, and then backed square down. There is a great work to be done here, and we ask the prayers and fellowship of the faithful.
JOHN HAYES.

Rome, September 10.—Brother John Hayes has just closed one of the best meetings in the history of the church, and began to-night another meeting in North Rome, in a rented hall. Rome is a city of twenty thousand. We need a preacher to work here in Rome all of his time, but are not able to support one. With the help of twenty-five dollars a month from the brotherhood, we can keep Brother Hayes busy right here in Rome. We are all poor and work for wages, but we propose to sacrifice and keep Brother Hayes half of his time. But a greater work can be accomplished by keeping him right here in meetings and house-to-house work. Brethren, shall this city be neglected? Send to me your fellowship. All over twenty-five dollars per month will be put into the tent fund, so by next spring we may buy a tent and preach in every part of the city. Address me at 400 West Seventh Street, Rome, Ga.
W. F. DUNCAN.

Rockingham, Route 1, September 3.—We began a meeting near here on the night of July 29 and continued it till the night of August 6. Brother W. C. Graves, from East Point, did the preaching. We have no meetinghouse, but made arrangements to use an old schoolhouse building now owned by a private party. On the sixth day of the meeting, without any notice, our table and lamps were put on the outside, the door locked, and a notice placed on same stating that if we entered we would be prosecuted by the laws of Georgia. We then continued the meeting in my home for four nights. One young man confessed his faith in Christ and was baptized. The crowd increased from the first night till the last. Brother Graves made many friends and was asked by many to come back and bring a tent. Sister Gray, of Gardner, Tenn., sent us one dollar for the meeting. We thank her much.

Rheumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these diseases are probably related, and all are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your spring water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney, and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time it will produce a permanent cure. I will purify the blood, relieve debility, and stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there, and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was cured."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were cured of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism, and after drinking twenty gallons of your mineral water was entirely cured of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer with rheumatism, or with any chronic disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the

Shivar Spring,
Box 21S, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your guarantee offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons (two five-gallon demi-johns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial, in accordance with instructions which you will send; and if I derive no benefit, you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demi-johns, which I agree to return promptly.

son. I had the cooperation of a faithful band of brethren who seemed anxious to do all possible for the Lord's cause. They have a splendid building, well seated, carpeted, and lighted. In a few weeks they intend to have a new baptistery. During our meeting we had large audiences and as fine attention as I could ask. Seven were baptized and one reclaimed. I am now in a meeting at Milburn. After this meeting I will enter the West Tennessee State Normal at Memphis. My future address will be Memphis, Tenn., Normal Branch. C. S. AUSTIN.

Murray, September 12.—I have just closed my sixth meeting for the season. This last meeting with the Little Rock Church, near Lyles, Tenn., was in many respects the best. The meeting resulted in six baptisms. The interest was good throughout. Many visitors from near-by churches. We especially mention our merchant-preacher, Brother George Lovell, of Lyles, who rendered us help with his presence and prayers at almost every service. I go to Nunnely, Tenn., for a meeting in October. I shall hold other meetings in that part of the country next year, resulting from the influence of the Little Rock meeting. Churches would do well to follow the example of the little congregation at Toone, Tenn., for which I am to hold three mission meetings right soon. Many churches in the "Volunteer" State are able to support many mission meetings where this little congregation can support one. It seems that the younger, smaller, and harder-pressed churches have the greatest interest in mission work. Perhaps their own struggle for existence is a continual reminder of the needs of others. I would like to say that Brother Larimore will be with the Murray church of Christ in a series of meetings, beginning about the middle of October. Persons who would like to visit this meeting should write me at Murray. We are expecting a great spiritual feast.

Corinth, September 11.—On the fourth Lord's day in August I began a meeting near Tuscumbia, Ala., at what is known as the Christian Home Church. Six were baptized and one reclaimed. The meeting closed on the first Lord's-day night in September. On Monday night following I began at Tishomingo, Miss., and continued till Friday night. Three were baptized. The white brethren of Tishomingo were with us one night, and we enjoyed their presence so much. We are always glad to have them with us.

Dancy, September 12.—I have just returned from Reform, where I served as moderator for Brother O. C. Lambert, of Alabama, in a debate with W. T. Stegall (Baptist), of Pontotoc County, Miss. The debate continued three days, and five propositions were debated—total depravity, obedience, faith only, baptism unto remission, and apostasy. The debate was conducted in the proper way, and evidently much good was accomplished. Brother Lambert did his work well, completely answering and overthrowing the Baptist position on every proposition. After the debate I preached one sermon and baptized a man seventy-two years old, who had been a Baptist for fifty-one years. The attendance, attention, and interest were fine, and the impression made upon the community in behalf of the truth was splendid indeed.

Oklahoma.

Coweta, September 11.—I closed a meeting at Choska, near Haskell, last night. The attendance and interest were fairly good. There were no confessions. I am to debate with a Socialist at Stone Bluff next Saturday night.

T. A. PHILLIPS.

Tennessee.

Friendship, September 11.—I closed here last night with a good crowd and fine interest. Two were baptized, and I feel that good otherwise may come of the meeting. A splendid little band of folks they are.

R. D. SMITH.

Mount Airy, September 2.—I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Bethel Church, at the water, this morning. Eighteen were baptized, two came from the Baptists, and two were restored. Brother J. C. Mosley, of Whitwell, led the song service and helped in other ways. We begin at Lee's to-night. J. L. HINES.

Curve, September 7.—Our meeting seems to be moving along nicely, except I haven't yet been able to move any one to obedience. We are having good crowds and the very best attention. Brother L. K. Harding is now with us leading the song service, and he certainly can do this well.

J. C. ESTES.

Centerville, Route 2, September 12.—We had a fine meeting at the old schoolhouse on Haley's Creek. The weather was fine and large crowds attended. The meeting closed last Sunday night. Brother J. T. Gossett did the preaching, and it was fine. There were twelve baptisms and five restorations.

ED. JOHNSON.

Mulberry, Route 3, September 8.—Brother Farmer has just closed a good meeting at Crystal Ridge, with twenty-seven additions—twenty baptized, one restored, and six from other churches. Brother Farmer visited twenty-one homes, preached twenty-three sermons, and closed at the water. Henry Sullenger conducted the singing.

H. B. SULLENGER.

Humboldt, September 12.—I am on my way from Nance's Schoolhouse, in Crockett County, where I have just closed a meeting. Forty-three were added—thirty-three baptisms. Enough money was subscribed the last day of the meeting to build a nice house of worship. An acre of land was donated. I shall visit home folks a few days and go back to Texas.

Obion, September 7.—I began a series of meetings with the Lemalsamac congregation, in Dyer County, on the fourth Lord's day in August and continued it for eleven days. There were

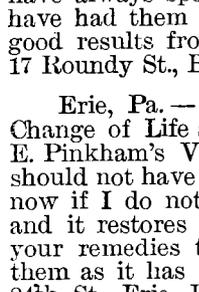

A Woman's Problem

How to Feel Well During Middle Life Told by Three Women Who Learned from Experience.

The Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Read these letters:—

Philadelphia, Pa.—“I started the Change of Life five years ago. I always had a headache and backache with bearing down pains and I would have heat flashes very bad at times with dizzy spells and nervous feelings. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new person and am in better health and no more troubled with the aches and pains I had before I took your wonderful remedy. I recommend it to my friends for I cannot praise it enough.”—MRS. MARGARET GRASSMAN, 759 N. Ringgold St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Beverly, Mass.—“I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for nervousness and dyspepsia, when I was going through the Change of Life. I found it very helpful and I have always spoken of it to other women who suffer as I did and have had them try it and they also have received good results from it.”—MRS. GEORGE A. DUNBAR, 17 Roundy St., Beverly, Mass.

Erie, Pa.—“I was in poor health when the Change of Life started with me and I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, or I think I should not have got over it as easy as I did. Even now if I do not feel good I take the Compound and it restores me in a short time. I will praise your remedies to every woman for it may help them as it has me.”—MRS. E. KISSLING, 931 East 24th St., Erie, Pa.

No other medicine has been so successful in relieving woman's suffering as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Women may receive free and helpful advice by writing the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Such letters are received and answered by women only and held in strict confidence.

Commendations of “Christian Treasures” continue to come in. Volumes I. and II. are now ready for delivery. The price is $1 per volume. Brother Larimore says “it is easy to find single chapters” that are “well worth the price of the volume.” Read his statement and others from appreciative brethren.

If you suffer from women's peculiar ailments causing pain in the head, back, or bowels, feeling of weight and dragging down sensation, falling or displacement of pelvic organs, causing kidney and bladder weakness or constipation and piles, painful or irregular periods, catarrhal conditions and discharges, extreme nervousness, depressed spirits, melancholy, desire to cry, fear of something evil about to happen, creeping feeling along the spine, palpitation, hot flashes, weariness, sallow complexion with dark circles under the eyes, pain in the left breast or a general feeling that life is not worth living,

I INVITE YOU TO SEND TODAY FOR MY FREE TEN DAYS' TREATMENT and learn how these ailments can be easily and surely conquered at home without the dangers and expense of an operation. When you are cured, and able to enjoy life again, you can pass the good word along to some other sufferer. My home treatment is for young or old. MONEY IN PIGEONS

Make Your Back Yard Profitable

THE demand for squabs in the Northern, Eastern and Southern markets has never been supplied, because pigeon raising as a business is comparatively new. Buy a half dozen pair of select birds, fence in a small portion of your back yard and watch them go to work. Success is easy. They raise from eight to fifteen pairs of squabs a year. Your squabs and fancy birds will bring handsome returns. You will actually make money in a hitherto useless part of your back yard. Pigeon raising is not a fad or fancy. It is a profitable business. Let us start you right. Our breeders are the best, and raised from prize winning parents. We will furnish you with the birds and teach you how to raise them, and you will reap a handsome profit with a very little outlay. Thousands are taking advantage of this same opportunity. Write to-day for our literature on pigeon raising as a money making proposition, or better still, write us to send you a few pair of Belgian Carneaux at $3.00 per pair, White Swiss Mondaines at $5.00 per pair, White Kings at $3.50 per pair, or White Maltese at $4.00 per pair. Our birds are all guaranteed. Your money back if after two months you are not satisfied with their work. Better prices on larger orders. Write to-day and get the pick of the flock.

twenty accessions—sixteen baptized, three reclaimed, and one from the Baptists. The meeting would have continued longer but for an outbreak of scarlet fever in the community where it was in progress. T. M. CARNEY.

Columbia, Route 9, September 3.—The meeting began at Berea on the third Sunday in August and continued till the following Sunday night, with one baptized, two reclaimed, others almost persuaded to obey the gospel, and the church much strengthened. The preaching was done by William Walker, of the Nashville Bible School. He is a bold defender of the truth. T. P. HADISON.

Fayetteville, September 12.—The following meetings have been held by Brother R. A. Largen recently, with the results stated: At Delna, twelve additions, with best crowds he ever had there; Catalpa, twelve additions, best of crowds and interest shown; Friendship, twelve additions, much interest manifested; Corder's Cross Roads, twenty additions. This makes a total of ninety-five additions for his work this year. E. C. BROSSARD.

Celina, September 5.—On the last Lord's-day night in August, Brother T. D. Rose, of Smithville, began a series of meetings at Beech Bethany (my home congregation), which continued eight days, with increasing interest from the beginning. Great good was accomplished by his timely lessons to the church. Another appointment called him away just when the interest was splendid. The meeting closed on Monday night, and nine o'clock Tuesday morning was set for baptizing two young men who made the confession at the last service. At the water two more made the confession and were baptized. In all, five were baptized and one reclaimed. JOHN H. ARMS.

Ætna, September 7.—Our meeting at Trenton continued eight days, with good audiences and attention. There were two restorations, one from the Baptists, and one baptism. Trenton is a nice town in a good section of country, but the church there is numerically weak. However, we found "the faithful few" there. I went from Trenton to a point six miles from Newbern. There are a few brethren at this place who meet in a schoolhouse. The Missionary Baptists have preaching there monthly; but those people have not heard the pure, simple gospel a great deal. We had a good hearing and two baptisms. Much of West Tennessee is a good field for mission work. It has some able preachers, but needs many more. J. A. SISCO.

Lexington, September 9.—On February 22, 1915, I began work in Henderson County, spending most of my time with the brethren here in town, and through the summer and fall conducting meetings throughout the county. I have also preached a great deal in the county on monthly appointments. Through our efforts there have been thirty-eight additions to the church and one new place of meeting. The last of June, this year, the brethren through the county bought a tent, and three meetings have been held, resulting in fifteen additions—one at Darden and fourteen at Christian Chapel. Owing to the fact that the church here in town has a few members that have the rule-or-ruin spirit, I thought it best to give up the work here in town, and this I did the last of June, 1916; but, at the request of many of the brethren, I continued the work in the county. My first meeting was a mission meeting at Darden, resulting in one addition and much good for the cause. My second meeting was at Juno, resulting in ten additions. This is the place where, through our efforts, the "digressives" walked out. My third meeting was at Wildersville, resulting in five additions. Brother J. L. Holland was with us in this meeting. My next and last meeting will be at Beacon, beginning on September 10. This will close our work in the county for this year. After that I will be open for a location for next year. A strong effort is being made by the brethren to keep me in the county, and the brethren at Wildersville are anxious for me to locate there and continue the work. I have not yet decided, but most likely will change locations. I shall be glad to visit any place wanting some one to locate with them for evangelistic work.

E. P. WATSON.

Memphis, September 4.—The tent meeting conducted by Brother Cullom at Highland Heights resulted in two or three baptisms. Two persons were baptized during the New South Memphis meeting. The tent meeting near the car barns continued eleven nights and resulted in two baptisms. After this meeting closed, I went out to Lock, about eighteen miles from Memphis, where I assisted Brother Porter Norris and the small band of Christians who worship there in a meeting. One person was baptized before I left. Brother Norris continued the meeting a few days longer, and there were three or four more additions. Brother Norris has done a fine work in that community. One person was baptized at the regular service at Harbert Avenue on July 30. The congregation here gave me a month's vacation, and I spent a part of it on a trip to the Pacific Coast. I certainly enjoyed the trip, and I think it was worth much to me in an educational way. I worshiped one Sunday with the little band at San Diego and heard a Brother Chaffee preach, and I preached at San Francisco the other Sunday I was in California. One person made the confession in San Francisco and was baptized by Brother Langpaap. I like California and hope to make it my home some day. Beginning on Sunday, August 20, I held a short meeting at Ro-Ellen, near Dyersburg, Tenn. The crowds and interest were good, but no one was baptized. I returned from Steele, Mo., on Saturday, where I preached six days, with one baptism. Brother Horton is continuing the meeting. I go to Paducah, Ky., on September 11 for a tent meeting.

W. HALLIDAY TRICE.

Twitty, September 4.—I began here on Saturday night with a small crowd, but now the house will not hold the crowds. Fine interest. My next work will be at home for two weeks, beginning on the third Lord's day; thence Poyner, September 11.—I baptized twenty-three at Tyler. I am now at Poyner. CLED E. WALLACE.

Hallsville, September 8.—We had a good meeting at Whitefield, near Buena Vista, Ark. Large audiences came out and listened well. We added one more efficient brother to the eldership. We expect good work there now. Five persons were baptized. T. E. TATUM.

Houston Heights, September 7.—I got back here on September 2 from my "vacation," which was spent out in the field in meetings in Texas, Tennessee, and Mississippi. I was out seventy-seven days and had seventy-eight additions. I met many good people in the work, and was assisted by several good preachers at various places, besides some good singers to lead in singing. Brother Veteto, of Scott's Hill, Tenn., was with me in Tennessee. He is a good man and a splendid singer. Brother A. W. Sandlin, of Belgreen, Ala., was with me in Mississippi. He is a rousing good singer, and always wants to see the meeting succeed. The church here did some very nice work on the house while I was away, besides working hard to build up the congregation. J. S. Dunn, of Dallas, Texas, will come here for a meeting the last of October, and I go to Dallas for a meeting the first of October. G. A. DUNN.

Thalia, September 3.—We have just closed one of the best meetings I ever attended at Thalia, with Brother S. C. Wall, of Rocky, Okla., doing the preaching. Brother Wall is a humble man and well prepared to preach the word. This was his third meeting with us. There were twenty-five added to the congregation—nineteen by confession and baptism. Two of this number were my children. I baptized three at the last service, one making the confession at the water. The church is much stronger, and, after having completed a nice house of worship, we feel like we are on higher ground. I love to read the Gospel Advocate, and I like the letters from the brethren. I note one from the community in Tennessee where I was reared and where I went to school when a boy. The Derryberrys and Hardisons are all known to me. My sister married M. F. Hardison, who is now at Vernon. I would like very much to hold some meetings at the old home and at Lewisburg.

R. T. HARRIS.

Childress, August 30.—I preached ten days at Pottsville in August, with fourteen baptized, four reclaimed, and one to take membership. I also preached ten days at Indian Gap, with three baptized, two from the Methodists. I baptized one at Pottsville as I was on my way to Hamilton to take the train for home. I came on to Hamilton and preached at night and one young lady made the good confession. I left her for Brother Baugh to baptize the next night. I will preach to-night for Brother W. C. Mitchell in a mission meeting here in Childress, and will go to-morrow to Wheeler County for my next meeting, which begins on Friday night. After

Astonishing Power of Iron to Give Strength to Broken Down Nervous People

Physician Says Ordinary Nuxated Iron Will Increase Strength of Delicate Folk 200 Per Cent. in Two Weeks' Time in Many Instances.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—In a recent discourse Dr. E. Sauer, a well known Specialist who has studied widely both in this country and Europe, said: "If you were to make an actual blood test on all people who are ill you would probably be greatly astonished at the exceedingly large number who lack iron and who are ill for no other reason than the lack of iron. The moment iron is supplied all their multitude of dangerous symptoms disappear. Without iron the blood at once loses the power to change food into living tissue, and therefore nothing you eat does you any good; you don't get the strength out of it. Your food merely passes through your system like corn through a mill with the rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind. As a result of this continuous blood and nerve starvation, people become generally weakened, nervous and all run down, and frequently develop all sorts of conditions. One is too thin; another is burdened with unhealthy fat; some are so weak they can hardly walk; some think they have dyspepsia, kidney or liver trouble; some can't sleep at night, others are sleepy and tired all day; some fussy and irritable; some skinny and bloodless, but all lack physical power and endurance. In such cases it is worse than foolishness to take stimulating medicines or narcotic drugs, which only whip up your flagging vital powers for the moment, maybe at the expense of your lifelater

on. No matter what one tells you, if you are not strong and well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous, run-down people who were ailing all the time double, and even triple their strength and endurance and entirely get rid of their symptoms of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles in from ten to fourteen days' time simply by taxing iron in the proper form, and this, after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. You can talk as you please about all the wonders wrought by new remedies, but when you come down to hard facts there is nothing like good old iron to put color in your cheeks and good, sound healthy flesh on your bones. It is also a great nerve and stomach strengthener and the best blood builder in the world. The only trouble was that the old forms of iron, like tincture of iron, iron acetate, etc., often ruined people's teeth, upset their stomachs and were not assimilated, and for these reasons they frequently did more harm than good. But with the discovery of the newer forms of organic iron all this has been overcome. Nuxated iron, for example, is pleasant to take, does not injure the teeth and is almost immediately beneficial.

NOTE—The manufacturers of Nuxated Iron have such unbounded confidence in its potency that they authorize the announcement that they will forfeit $100.00 to any Charitable Institution if they cannot take any man or woman under sixty who lacks iron and increase their strength 200 per cent. or over in four weeks' time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. Also they will refund your money in any case in which Nuxated Iron does not at least double your strength in ten days' time. It is dispensed in this city by all druggists.

that I will lead the singing for the meeting here at home the last two weeks in September, Brother I. E. Tackett doing the preaching. I will go to Stonewall, Okla., for the first two weeks in October and back to Hamilton County for the last half of the month. Brother Hardy Baugh lives at Hamilton, and is doing a fine work. Who wants a meeting for November? All my time is taken for next June, July, and August, and for the last week of July and all of August, 1918, but I will answer all calls for open time for either meetings or debates. TICE ELKINS.

Neglected Wounds Troublesome.

Did you ever notice how a small wound often festers and produces pus? That is a sign that the wound is becoming infected—it is the danger signal of blood poison. Don't neglect small wounds. Slight bruises, skin abrasions, sores, cuts, burns, pin pricks, etc., often cause blood poison which may prove fatal. Apply Gray's Ointment immediately to the affected part. It allays pain, heals the wound, and prevents the serious and common after effects. It has been used almost daily for ninety-six years by a multitude of families. Isn't that enough proof of its merit? Only 25 cents a box at drug stores. For free sample, write W. F. Gray & Co., 818 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Don't Let a Cold Get a Good Start

The way to check a cold is to fight it from the first. Even the worst maladies often are easily conquered if attacked early enough. Colds may lead to asthma, bronchial troubles and pulmonary affections. In the treatment of these one of the first needs is to build up body resistance.

Eckman's Alterative often has assisted in such upbuilding. As a treatment for the troubles named, it has been used for more than twenty years. And in many instances it has effected lasting relief.

As with any other medicine, it should be regarded only as a first aid to right care and hygienic living—and a safe one. For it contains no narcotics, opiates or habit-forming drugs of any sort. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct. Booklet containing information of value and references sent upon request.

The Viola Meeting.

BY J. C. ESTES.

My prayers are ever that I may be busy all the time in the service of my Master—that, too, where I can do the greatest good in the salvation of souls, regardless of the financial support, believing that this will all be adjusted when I do my full duty. About the time I was ready to leave home for my meetings in Tennessee, one which I had already arranged to hold dropped out of my arrangements and left a vacant time of two weeks in August. I received a letter at home to this effect one day and started for Tennessee the next day. I have had this to occur more summers than one, and always, as I remember it now, my time was filled in some place where we had a good meeting. This time I made efforts to arrange for this two weeks, but failed in every way till Saturday before the meeting began on Sunday. On Saturday morning, August 12, after closing a good meeting near Ashland City, Tenn., I walked into the Gospel Advocate office, expecting to preach the next day for the South College Street church of Christ, in Nashville. Brother A. B. Lipscomb said: "Brother Estes, where are you going to preach to-morrow?" I told him. He said: "How would you like to go to Viola?" I asked: "For a meeting?" He said: "Yes." I knew Viola, perhaps, as well as any one who had never been there. I knew the best talent that could be had preached and held meetings there. I knew, too (for Brother Lipscomb told me), that Brother Jesse P. Sewell, of Abilene, Texas, because of no fault of his own, had disappointed them and gone home to the bedside of Brother Zellner, trustee of Abilene Christian College, who was in a dying condition, as reported to Brother Sewell. I knew I would only be a substitute; that they would still be disappointed, and that this pressure would hinder my work very much. But, again, this thought came to me: Maybe the Lord's hand is in it all and he needs my efforts there, though they may be feeble. Other thoughts flew through my mind like lightning, and I said to myself: "God being my helper, I'll go and do the best I can." As quickly as I could I answered Brother Lipscomb's question: "All right, I suppose." He said: "You will have to leave off preaching at South College Street to-morrow, go to Viola to-day, and begin there to-morrow." I made all preparations and went. For several days I thought I could feel the heavy pressure of their disappointment, and this, together with hoarseness, greatly handicapped me in my work there. While my hoarseness grew worse, I soon began to feel the disappointment pressure giving way, and the interest in the meeting and my work began to take on some life, and by and by precious young souls began to confess their faith in the Christ and to be baptized in his name. Interest grew, and my hoarseness grew till I had to quit speaking for three days and nights; but Brother T. B. Clark, of Knoxville, Tenn., who came to hear me, took my place till I could speak again. Thus the work and interest went on until twenty-four were added to the one body, and we had a most excellent meeting, after all. Souls were saved and the church was much edified and strengthened. We left them rejoicing and happy. We rejoice greatly with them and the angels because of so many being saved. The Viola brethren are too nice, too refined, too Christlike even in such disappointments to intentionally discourage a brother, but, on the other hand, seeing his discouragement, will rally to him in a Christian spirit and help him out by encouraging him every way they can. They are a noble, Christian-hearted people! May the Lord bless them, and especially those recently added to them. Most of the members of the body of Christ at Viola are either named "Bonner" or "Ramsey." Many of them, when they get tired of either one, change to that of the other (in marriage).

On the second Lord's day of our happy stay there the Bonners had a reunion in honor of Grandmother Bonner's eighty-sixth anniversary. There were one hundred and three persons there, most of whom were her folks. Bonners from different places were there to honor mother, grandmother, great-grandmother, and great-great-grandmother. The many, many good things spread on the long tables in the grove greatly told of the numberless good cooks in and about Viola and showed the great supply of fine stuff there to be cooked. If any one who was there did not enjoy those few short, happy hours, I am at a loss to know why. Even grandmother's heart seemed to be only eighty-five years young and very, very happy. May the great Lord, good, merciful, and powerful, give her many more such days of rejoicing with her loved ones here, and, at last, give her a peaceful hour in which the angels will come and take her home to be happy, healthy, great, and good for evermore! May the Lord bless Brother Lipscomb, who was one cause of my going to Viola. I am sure these people have always had a warm place in the Lord's heart. They shall evermore have such a place in my heart.

Opportunity in St. Louis.

BY JARRATT L. SMITH.

To the Churches of Christ in Tennessee: Brethren, I am, unsolicited, asking you, individually or collectively, to help the brethren at Texas and Cherokee Avenues, St. Louis, Mo., support a man in this great field. Brother T. J. Bonner is the one who is willing to come and work this field. The few brethren here in St. Louis have had a struggle so far and would greatly appreciate your coöperation. By having a more centrally located place to worship, they would be able to get the scattered members together. Will not the brethren in Nashville help to get St. Louis in the work and let the work here eventually become great, like that in Nashville? I am hoping that the brethren at my old home town (Murfreesboro) will take a part. What congregation in Tennessee will be the first to give one Lord's-day's collection in each month for a while to this work? Send all contributions to Sister Lottie Johnson, 4019 Botanical Avenue, St. Louis, Mo. Sister Johnson will give receipt for any gifts in the Gospel Advocate.

An Impressive Service.

BY J. D. FLOYD.

Several years ago I was holding a meeting in a small mountain town. One morning I was visiting an aged sister, a widow, who made it a part of her duty to look after the unfortunates around. While engaged in conversation we saw two boys coming down the street crying as though their hearts would break. The good sister went out and asked them what was the trouble, and the reply was: "Baby is dead."

Living out on the side of the mountain a half mile out of town was a ne'er-do-well sort of man. He had a wife and several children, two daughters about grown. The man, instead of having some business by which to provide for his family, spent most of his time tramping over the mountain with gun and dogs. More signs of pinched poverty and destitution I have never seen. The entire family was in rags and tatters. After a few-years' vacation, a baby boy made his advent into the family. Soon he became the idol of the entire family, except the vagabond father. When about a year old, he was taken sick. After a few days he suddenly became worse. The mother sent the little boys before mentioned to the town for the doctor. Soon after they started the little sufferer died, and the mother sent to the boys not to bring the doctor and to come home. They were on the way home when we saw them so bitterly crying. The good sister got her bon-

OUTLINES OF BIBLE STUDY

REVISED AND ENLARGED

BY G. DALLAS SMITH

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION

Outlines of Bible Study (Revised and Enlarged) is a book of one hundred and twenty pages, besides five full-page maps covering all Bible lands. It is printed in large, clear type, on good, heavy paper, and is substantially bound in stiff cloth.

The book contains seventeen drill lessons for use in Bible drills, Bible readings, or any other Bible class where it is desired to cover the entire scope of the Sacred Record in a short time.

Outlines of Bible Study is not a commentary in any sense of the word. It contains but few comments. It is not "literature" in the same sense that some object to literature. It rather guides one in his study that it may be intelligent and systematic.

We have in stock a number of "Studies in Recent Adventism," by Henry C. Sheldon. "An especially timely review and analysis of the assumptions, claims, and teachings of Adventism." The name of the author guarantees the character of the book—its lucidity, its scholarly style, and its weight of authority. It will be an invaluable antidote to the materialism, Russellism, and premillennialism of to-day, and a strong weapon for students and teachers who must meet and answer this false teaching. Price, 50 cents.

net and started out, saying that the child would have to be buried and that some one would have to see about it. She went up to the store and bought the goods necessary to make suitable burial clothes, and then went to the undertaker and arranged for a coffin. She then went out to the home to make what arrangements were needed there. The burial was to be at ten o'clock next morning at the village cemetery. The sister asked me to arrange for a service at the grave. I went to a prominent man in the town, who was both a good singer and a good leader. He got a few young people together and drilled them on some appropriate songs.

We will now take in the situation. The sun shone brightly. The cemetery was on a bench of the mountain, surrounded on every side by a beautiful forest; a beautiful grave in the mountain soil; an open coffin in which was the body of an innocent babe; clinging to a small tree that was near, the mother, poorly clad, with tear-stained eyes, gazing intently at the beautiful form in the coffin; clinging to the tattered skirt of the mother, the two boys, sobbing bitterly; while out in the bushes, as near as they felt they could come in their rags, with streaming eyes, the sisters were looking on. The singers sang—and sang, too, as I have never heard on a similar occasion. I read a chapter, prayed, then made a short talk, showing from the Scriptures the absolute certainty of the salvation of infants, and closed with a contrast between the child's condition then with what it would have been had death not carried it through the veil. The body was lowered in the grave, the grave filled, a nice mound raised, and on it a few simple mountain flowers. Thus ended what to me was one of the most impressive services I ever attended.

Let Us Not Forget.

BY E. A. REDICHEK.

Paul says: "Therefore we should give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." Jude says: "Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." He considered it needful to write and exhort those who had accepted the common salvation to contend earnestly. We have emphasized some of the "all things," and forgotten and allowed to slip other things among the "all things" commanded by Christ and the apostles. Let us not forget, let us not reject, and let us not neglect the spirit, zeal, and love manifested in the life of Christ and his early disciples in giving themselves wholly to God and following Christ with all their heart, soul, mind, and strength, and in presenting their bodies "holy, acceptable unto God," which was their reasonable service. Let us seek to save the lost with greater zeal, love, service, and sacrifice than ever before. Let us heal the sick by helping them to come in touch with healing remedies. Our criticism of miraculous healing will not suffice for rejection or neglect of Christ's pure and undefiled religion. "I was sick, and ye visited me." Remember, the good Samaritan helped the wounded man to a place where his wounds could be healed and left means to help bear the expense of caring for him. Your emphasis of baptism and the Lord's Supper among the "all things" will never recommend you to God's favor while forgetting the sick, wounded, and dying. Your contending for the gospel as God's power to save the lost from sin and hell will avail but little while neglecting to give the more earnest heed to Christ's words, "Go, teach all nations," and while failing to give your service, zeal, money, and love to help reach all in your own little circle of neighbors, to say nothing of millions and billions of souls beyond the seas for whom Christ died. "Let us not forget," for we may be straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel, while we emphasize only a few things among the "all things" commanded by Christ. (See Matt. 28: 19, 20.) God will render a just and sure judgment without respect to persons or organizations and condemn all who have failed to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, give water to the thirsty, and visit those sick or in prison. (See Matt. 25: 31, 46.) Let us give less time to criticizing our neighbors until we bring our teaching and practice up to the divine standard and life of Christ and all the early churches. The world will see our good works and glorify our Father in heaven. This will win souls to Christ. This will win the crown of life for us, and anything short of this is a delusion and will bring defeat. Remember, we must give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we let them slip and we slip off the Rock of Ages into the awful condemnation that awaits every soul that rejects, forgets, and neglects the great salvation. Remember the appeal from San Francisco? Will you reject, neglect, and forget it? God forbid that you should. On the contrary, may you give heed to the earnest appeal: "Come over, and help us."

The "If" That Spoils.

The importance of the word "if" is a matter of frequent comment. It has been called the word with the smallest compass and the largest consequence. It voices an experience common to us all. Each one of us, doubtless, has a great "if" that stands between us and happiness complete. History relates that "if" a certain general had turned up a certain roadway, Napoleon would never have met his Waterloo; "if" a certain king had given the people bread when they asked for it, France might have been spared the horrors of the Revolution; "if" the Hessians had not been feasting with drunkenness and revelry when Washington crossed the Delaware, there would have been a different ending to the American Revolution. "If I had just gone into that little circle of prayer," said a boy in prison, "I would not be here to-day." But there is always that interminable and irrepressible "if" to spoil things.

The "If" That Saves.

But let us not forget that we have some good "ifs" as well as the bad ones. If the air we breathe was not full of oxygen, we would all perish from the earth; if the sun did not shine and the rains did not fall, the crops would fail and starvation would ensue; if the gulf stream did not flow in a certain direction, the isles would be as barren as the coasts of Labrador. But why enumerate more examples? To sum the matter up in one sentence: All God's "ifs" are good. And one of the best of them reads: "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." What glory depends upon this luminous "if!"

A dying judge said to the visiting preacher: "Do you know enough about the law to understand what is meant by joint tenancy?" "No," the preacher said; "I know nothing about the law. I know something of grace, and that is sufficient." "But you should know what the law of cotenancy is," he replied, "that you may appreciate the grace." Then he explained: "If you and I were joint tenants on a farm, I could not say to you, 'This is your hill of corn and this is mine; that is your blade of grass and that is mine;' but we would have share and share alike. I have been thinking with unspeakable joy that Jesus Christ has nothing apart from me, and everything he has is mine." Yes, it helps us to understand what the law of cotenancy is.

The Witness of the Spirit.

Volumes have been written on this subject. But, after all, the Spirit's witness is not so difficult to understand, if we will consider the personal testimony first. Paul says: "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit." Too many try to solve the workings of the Holy Spirit with no reference to their own. What does our spirit witness? Every thoughtful man knows within himself something of his spiritual state, just what is his wish, his intelligent effort. Are these in strict accord with the Father's will as revealed in the word? Have we obeyed the gospel? Are we holding the body under? Over all of its carnal tendencies, is the spirit pure, enlightened, and dominant? All this we know and can testify; and the teaching of this passage is that the Holy Spirit knows as much as our own spirit, and infinitely more. Thus does it corroborate and strengthen the testimony of our own spirits.

"All Things Work Together for Good."

This does not now so appear, but it shall appear in the final consummation of things. When the revelation is complete, we shall have discovered that everything that entered into our lives as Christian men and women has been for our good. W. H. Book offers a very homely, but forcible, illustration of the housewife preparing biscuit. Into that biscuit goes the flour, the soda, the lard, the salt, and the milk. These go through the heating process. All of these, taken together, work out a good biscuit. The salt, when taken alone, does not taste good; the soda is bitter; but when all are taken together, the composite result is good. So it is with our lives. These little things which come into our lives, if they were to stand alone, could not be appreciated, could not be relished; and the heating period, when we are being placed in the oven—we cannot enjoy it, we cannot understand it; but by and by we shall know. Martin Luther said: "The ways of God are like a Hebrew book, which one can only read from the end." And the late lamented Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley, wrote:

"Make us to meet what is or is to be
With fervid welcome, knowing it is sent
To serve us in some way full excellent,
Though we discern it all belately."

The Church at Lewisburg, Tenn.

This church is not absolutely perfect, but it has many good points that commend themselves to Christians everywhere. During a two-weeks' meeting with this congregation I noticed the workings of the congregation closely. The song leader announced that the morning service would begin each day at ten o'clock and the evening service at half past seven. Nothing unusual about this announcement.

But the unusual part was that they did begin exactly on time at each service. The song leader kept his word. And I learned that promptness in beginning was characteristic of the services every Sunday. Again, I learned that every Monday morning in the year the overseers of the congregation hold a business session and direct the affairs of the church with the precision and efficiency that usually mark a bank directors' meeting. Within twenty years' experience as a preacher, this is the first and only church that I have visited who followed this useful plan. And all could do it if they had a mind to. But the thing that touched my heart at Lewisburg more than anything else was the fact that certain good sisters visited some of their sex who had deviated from the path of duty and urged them with tears in their eyes to renew their allegiance to God. And they won them back. At other places that I have visited there is a manifest tendency to abandon some who err to their fate. But the good women at Lewisburg, of whom there are many, were looking at the matter through the Master's eyes.

With the gospel message on our lips and an efficient force of brethren and sisters backing it up, it is small wonder that the Lord blessed the meeting beyond expectation. Did not the Savior say: "According to your faith be it done unto you?"

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

Review of "The Truth of Bible Teachings."

BY E. C. FUQUA.

A brother in Tennessee has sent to me a tract, entitled "The Truth or Bible Teachings," which he requests me to notice through the columns of the Gospel Advocate. With the kind consent of the editors, I will humbly undertake the task, replying, however, to only a few of the vast number of misrepresentations contained in said tract.

This tract of sixty-four pages is evidently of Seventh-Day Adventist authorship; but this point makes little difference, since a false doctrine is soul-destructive, no matter by what denomination taught.

One hundred dollars reward is offered any one who can prove the doctrines in said tract false. We file no claim for the reward, but promise to show the thing false, nevertheless. Indeed, ignorance of the New Testament was never more boldly advertised than in the tract before me.

On page 48, under the heading, "What is the Church of Christ?" our author informs us that the church has no right to withdraw fellowship from members, thus contradicting Paul: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.) Again: "And if any man obeyeth not our word by this epistle, note that man, that ye have no company with him, to the end that he may be ashamed." (Verse 14.) In 1 Cor. 5: 1-13 the church at Corinth is upbraided for neglecting to "put away the wicked man from among" themselves, and they are taught once for all the essential truth that "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." Almost all of the seven churches in Asia addressed by the Holy Spirit (see Rev. 2 and 3) were severely criticized because they had not properly separated themselves from wicked teachers and teachings.

On the same page the tract further says: "Notwithstanding the infant church created the offices of deacon, elder, and bishop [our ignorant author does not know that "elder" and "bishop" are one and the same], to have the rule over them, and filled them by election and ordination (Phil. 1: 1; 1 Tim. 3: 1, 2, 8, 10, 12; 5: 17; Heb. 13: 7, 17, 24; Acts 14: 23), we find they had no authority from Christ for their actions," etc. Where does our author "find" they "had no authority from Christ" for thus teaching and regulating the churches? If the apostles did these things with "no authority from Christ," then almost everything else they did was without his "authority;" but Paul wrote Corinth: "If any man thinketh himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him take knowledge of the things which I write unto you, that they are the commandments of the Lord." (1 Cor. 14: 37.) Paul (1 Cor. 9: 21) declared himself "under law to Christ" in his preaching and conduct, and expressly told the Corinthians that what he had taught them he had "received of the Lord" for that purpose. (1 Cor. 11: 23.) In sending out the apostles, Christ promised that the Holy Spirit should accompany them to guide them "into all the truth" (John 16: 13), and that in their teaching they should speak, not their own teaching, but the Holy Spirit would speak through them: "For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father that speaketh in you" (Matt. 10: 20). Again, he told them: "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that rejecteth you rejecteth me; and he that rejecteth me rejecteth him that sent me." (Luke 10: 16.) Beginning on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of Christ, the apostles "spoke as the Spirit gave them utterance." (Acts 2: 4.) Christ promised the apostles that in their teaching he would be with them "always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 20.) He likewise assured Paul (Acts 26: 16-19) that he would accompany him and direct him in all his teaching.

This array of holy writ clearly shows our author to be an unbeliever in the inspiration of the apostles, and, hence, in the authority which sent and maintained them in their teaching. He rejects the Lord himself because he rejects teachings of the Lord's apostles, of whom the Lord said: "He that rejecteth you rejecteth me." When one sets himself up to judge the apostles of Christ, as our author does, accepting some things they command, but rejecting others, he deserves to be understood as rejecting Christ and sitting in judgment over him. Are we to expect "Bible truth" to come from such a source? Must we bow before the feet of such a "teacher" in order to get "truth" and free our souls from "human speculations" against which our author so earnestly warns us? Nay, verily! He would proselyte us to his sectarianism and thereby render us "twofold more" erroneous than himself.

He continues his unholy criticism of the New Testament apostles as follows: "And he [Christ] ignored the first action of the church, that was the selection of Matthias to take the place of Judas, and chose Paul to fill the vacancy. (Acts 1: 26; 9: 6)." What a colossal misapplication of scripture! From whence does he learn that Christ "ignored the" "action of the church" in the election of Matthias to take the place of Judas? And whence his information that Paul was chosen to "fill the vacancy?" Paul declared he was a witness of Christ's earthly life only as it "was confirmed unto us by them that heard." (Heb. 2: 3.) Paul was not a witness to what Matthias was, hence could not "fill the vacancy" made by Judas' suicide. Paul witnessed what he had seen, but this only referred to the vision wherein he saw Christ as he went to Damascus.

But why consume time and valuable paper space in further indicting a man who violates the first principle of Christianity—namely, rejecting the chosen ambassadors of the Lord as authoritative teachers and presuming to sit in judgment over certain of their actions and teachings? Appropriating a well-used text found in said tract, we retort: "An evil tree cannot bring forth good fruit." A treatise set forth by a man thus denying the apostles the divine right to practice and preach the doctrine of Christ "cannot bring forth good fruit." It is essentially calculated to further the interest of infidelity and can have no place among purely Christian documents. Of the forty-seven subjects discussed in said tract, one may certainly expect to find this streak of skepticism prominent in each of them. If any one escapes, its escape is due solely to its remoteness from the theory of the author of the pernicious teaching set forth in said tract. Every subject treated in said tract is treated by a man who rejects the chosen apostles of the Lord as the authoritative teachers of Christianity. Read it with this before your mind, if you would not become poisoned by it.

Simplicity of the Gospel.

BY C. D. CROUCH.

It has been a firm conviction of mine for years that any human being who possesses enough intelligence to make him a responsible being can, with an open Bible and an honest heart, learn what God wants him to do to be saved both here and hereafter. I have no reason now to say that this is incorrect. On the other hand, I am just as positive in this conviction as I am that Jesus Christ is God's Son.

The severest condemnation is pronounced on the man or angel who would pervert the gospel of Christ. (Gal. 1: 7, 8.) But all faithful children of God are expected to be teachers of the word. (2 Tim. 2: 2.) One of three things evidently follows: (1) God is a diabolical tyrant; or (2) only the wise and learned ones of earth can be God's faithful children; or (3) the gospel is so simple that all can understand it, and, therefore, need not pervert it.

We see some learned and labored articles in some of the papers nowadays that deal in speculation and guesswork. It is strongly hinted by some that it is not possible for us to know what the will of God is; that the Bible does not reveal the same things to all honest students, etc. And it is no uncommon thing for us to hear or read some learned disquisition on "faith in Christ as a personal Savior rather than faith in his word." I know I am not as learned as some folks, but I cannot conceive of one's believing in Christ "as a personal Savior" without believing his word. You cannot separate Christ and his word. You cannot believe his word without believing in the personality of Christ. So all these learned squibs about such are merely bug dust.

I am glad my faith in Christ does not depend upon my understanding all the confusing theories and speculations of men. God proposes to condemn all who disbelieve the gospel (Mark 16: 16), but he calls upon "every creature" to believe it. Some of us are not "learned" (?) enough to understand and believe a good many theories that are now being taught. It follows, therefore, that such theories are not the gospel, or God is made guilty of condemning us for not doing what we cannot do.

I fear that most of this theorizing and speculating is a specious way some folks have of giving out that they are some great ones. It grows out of a desire to appear great and learned, rather than from a desire to know God's will.

The kind of teachers the world needs and must have is that class of men who can impress upon them the simple story of the cross. Many preachers shoot clear over the audience. We need the gospel preached in simple language—New Testament language. The truth is on the surface. Some of the speculators are looking too deep! Many preachers can see things that are not; but the strikingly singular thing is that they fail to see things that are. I sometimes think it would be a fine thing if all these ultra-learned folks could be put in a bunch to themselves, where they could not bother the rest of the human race. But do not be discouraged; we have the New Testament, and we can learn God's will in spite of these things. They have not "cornered" that yet.

"I Have Finished the Course."

BY E. S. LOVELL.

[Since writing this article Brother Lovell has "finished the course" and passed on to his reward. He was a promising young preacher, whose exemplary life was in accord with the spirit of his writings.—EDITOR'S NOTE.]

To understand what the above words meant to the great apostle, we should study his life from the time he was baptized by Ananias in the city of Damascus until he stood before Nero for the second and last time. For more than thirty years he had suffered for Jesus' sake. His life had been one of toil and hardships, but through them all he never wavered, but endured unto the end. He had finished his course "to testify the gospel of the grace of God." "Henceforth," he says, "there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to me at that day; and not to me only, but also to all them that have loved his appearing."

"I have finished the course"—and what a course it was! Who ever, before or since, traveled such a course for Jesus' sake? Hear the apostle: "Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as one beside himself) I more; in labors more abundantly, in prisons more abundantly, in stripes above measure, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of rivers, in perils of robbers, in perils from my countrymen, in perils from the Gentiles, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in labor and travail, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness." Just think of it! And why did he suffer all these things? Hear him: "That I may accomplish my course, and the ministry, which I received from the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God." For more than thirty years he had been an incessant laborer for the Master, but, at last, he has reached his journey's end. The course is now finished and the faith has been kept. He is now ready to cross over the river of death and receive the crown of righteousness that awaits him. What a grand thought it is to know that there is a crown of bright glory laid up for all! But, like Paul, we must accomplish the course, we must "endure unto the end," if we receive it.

Sometimes we see members of the church who are faithful attendants at the Lord's-day service. For years and years they go through rain, snow, mud, and heat to worship their Creator and show forth the death of his Son. They have suffered much for Christ's sake. Their lives have been a great blessing to those around them, and through their faithfulness many have been led to Christ. But now the race is almost finished, the goal is in sight, and they are just ready, as it were, to reach forth and take the crown, when, all of a sudden, they give up without reaching the end. How many have seen this? How many do you see about you to-day who have given up before finishing the course? Will such receive the crown of righteousness that is laid up for them? They seem to think they have reached the end; and if you approach them and talk to them about their duties, they will likely tell you they have done all the good they can or that they are as good as they will ever be.

Preachers, Old and Young. No. 3.

BY W. H. CARTER.

While I believe it a duty to love, respect, and honor the old preachers who have worn themselves out for the good of others, we should not fail to be thankful and rejoice that there are younger ones coming on to fill their places—that is, if they do not get spoiled before they are able to take the places of the older ones. I drove a good distance once to get to hear a young brother preach. After the sermon, one of the brethren asked me what I thought of their preacher. I said: "Well, he will make a right good preacher, if he is not spoiled in the making." He was young, had not been preaching long, and I saw an air about him that I was fearful of. It was not long until he was spoiled. He impressed me that he wanted to appear to be very smart and entertaining. He had been to a Bible School and wanted everybody to know it. He went into the "kingdom of the clergy," and was soon going all the gaits. He now talks about "my church," has him a picture show to draw a crowd, and I learned from what good brethren told me at different places that to get money was his chief purpose. At least, that was the impression made on their minds.

The old preachers of to-day, though the number is fast dwindling away, were once young. They loved the Lord, loved their countrymen, and had a burning desire in their souls for their salvation. Each one's home, with fire light or the tallow candle, was the Bible school in which they learned the Bible and to be humble and loyal. They went forth with Heaven's message into the hills and hollows, mountains and valleys, on horseback or on foot, feeling "woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel," and endured "hardness as good soldiers." By their self-sacrifice and labors of love, congregations have been built up and thousands of souls saved. They went among the destitute and sought not to build on another's foundation. With food and raiment they were content, and thought it no shame nor disgrace to labor at some honest employment to support their families. They had learned to economize, and the spirit of envy and jealousy found no place in their hearts, but each rejoiced in the good the other did. Having the word of God in their hearts and on their tongues, and believing the gospel to be "the power of God unto salvation" and the means of sanctification, union and hope, that had no speculative theories with which to harass, disturb, and divide a peaceful, united, and happy people, they sought to know nothing but the Christ, and him crucified, and truly hid themselves behind the cross of the world's Redeemer. Were they successful? "By their fruits ye shall know them." Look the field over, study it carefully. The churches that exist furnish abundant evidence.

Young men, you who have it in mind to make preachers of yourselves, let me talk plainly to you. I will offer advice in love. Will forty years of labor, of watchfulness, of sacrifice and close observation, prepare one to advise? Have I not seen young men, fresh from the Bible School, brilliant and hopeful, start out with the Bible as their guide, soon take a "pastorate" over those who seemed to love entertainment more than worship; and have I not observed how soon they took up, studied, and began to preach speculative theories and interpretations of the prophecies, and arrayed themselves against the knowledge, wisdom, understanding, and research of such men as David Lipscomb, T. W. Brents, Tolbert Fanning, E. G. Sewell, J. W. McGarvey, I. B. Grubbs, Moses E. Lard, J. F. Rowe, F. G. Allen, Ben Franklin, and a host of others? Have we not read where they have set aside the fundamental truth that the kingdom of Christ was set up on the first Pentecost after his resurrection, which was taught and believed by all those mentioned above, and tried to establish their speculative theory attached to and connected with the second coming of the Christ, that the kingdom will not come till Christ comes, and then claim this to be an "article of faith and hope?" These young men are "Bible-School boys" who, in a few years, have, in their own estimation, it seems, risen in Bible lore and scripture knowledge far above their teachers and superiors. Remember the advice of the old and experienced given to the young king, Rehoboam, and that he followed the advice of the young and inexperienced and brought division, wreck, and ruin to the nation.

Now do not understand me to mean that all the boys that go out from Bible Schools are as mentioned above, or that I am an enemy to such schools. I have never been in very deep sympathy with them, and have been afraid of them, but have never arrayed myself against them. Some young preachers who have gone out from those schools have been tried and found to be true.

Paul gave Timothy, a young preacher, some good advice when he said, "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. 1: 13); and when he said, "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word" (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2); and again when he said: "But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes" (2 Tim. 2: 23; see, also, Tit. 3: 9). "Be not high-minded, but fear." Do not think of yourself more highly than you ought to think. "Let no man despise your youth." Do not try to appear to be learned. Preach to the illiterate so that they can understand you. Do not seek to preach to old congregations, but go out to the schoolhouses, private houses, or any place where the people will come to hear you. Do not consider the financial problem for one moment. Work for the Lord; work as he directs and leave results with him. He will bring good out of all things to you. If you cannot speak well of other preachers, say nothing at all about them. If you feel a desire springing up within you to be a "popular" preacher, pray the Lord to help you crush it out, for it will ruin you. Be kind, courteous, and gentle to all, but shun not to declare "the whole counsel of God."

A Special Price to Preachers.

We have always furnished the Gospel Advocate to preachers and widows at a reduced price. Beginning on October 1, 1916, the price of this paper to preachers and widows will be one dollar and fifty cents a year in advance. The publishers are glad to make this liberal concession.

Many of our readers have commended the publishers for advancing the price of the paper, stating that it is unreasonable to expect the old price to continue, since the cost of production is so much more. One who has been a subscriber to the Advocate for perhaps forty years says we made a mistake in not having the advance take effect on July 1, 1916. This brother is a successful business man and knows well that, on account of increased cost of materials, as an act of self-preservation, we must advance our subscription price.

Many of our old subscribers are taking advantage of the opportunity to renew now for two years. It is better not to wait if you mean to take advantage of the present price. No subscription will be received at less than two dollars a year after January 1, 1917, excepting a special price of one dollar and fifty cents will be made to widows and preachers. The former rate of one dollar a year to preachers and widows will be discontinued on October 1, 1916.

We would suggest to our friends that they call the attention of people who are not taking the paper to the fact that by subscribing now they may secure the paper for one year at one dollar and fifty cents. "'Now' is the watchword of the wise; 'Now' is written upon the banner of the prudent."

The interest in the Gospel Advocate is rapidly growing. The constituency of the paper is active in its support, duly appreciating the effort of the publishers to give the brotherhood a first-class religious paper in every particular. Our receipts on subscriptions have steadily increased during our present fiscal year. While this was necessary, yet the prospects for the future growth and usefulness of the paper are exceedingly bright. We think they were never more flattering and encouraging.

We take this occasion to ask our readers to send us the names and post offices of persons whom they think would subscribe to the paper. We will send them a sample copy and write them soliciting their subscriptions. By thus cooperating with us, you can help us build up the paper. Most people read something. If they do not read good literature, they will read vicious. Why not use your influence to get them to read the paper of your choice?

It is very strange that some few complain at the cost of a religious paper. Some of those who complain spend more for tobacco and chewing gum in a few months than they spend for religious literature in a year. We are engaged in a great work, and we want you to engage with us. Let us press forward together to victory. It is so much easier when we all pull together. It is hard when some draw back. May the Lord lead and guide us all in every good work.

PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

The seven laws of friendship are: (1) Moral sincerity. (2) Likeness of personality—that is, much overlapping of tastes. (3) Complementary personality, sufficient unlikeness to give a zest and flavor to friendship. (4) Community of experience. What friends have lived through together is a bond that holds tight. (5) Growth. Friendship is not static. It must be wooed afresh every day. (6) Loyalty. Not only a faithful recognition of the bonds already established, but also a sincerity and an absence of pretense. There must needs be a succession of growing comradeships for every growing life. It is folly to blow the ashes of a dead fire and pretend to be warmed. (7) Independence of personality.—Edward Howard Griggs.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain 1 Cor. 15: 29; Isa. 52: 15; and Ezek. 36: 25. RUTH.

1 Cor. 15: 29 reads: "Else what shall they do that are baptized for the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, why then are they baptized for them?" This is one among a number of arguments to prove the resurrection from the dead. The Corinthians were baptized. (Acts 18: 8.) Their baptism was a planting in the likeness of the burial and resurrection of Christ. (Rom. 6: 4, 5.) Their baptism in the likeness of the death and resurrection of Christ was in the hope of their own resurrection from the dead through Christ's resurrection. But if Christ has not risen and the dead rise not, this memorial and emblematic burial has no meaning. "Else [if the dead rise not] what shall they do which are baptized for [in view of their resurrection from] the dead, if the dead rise not?" As the dead rise, it is not vain to believe in the resurrection.

Isa. 52: 15 reads: "So shall he sprinkle ["startle"—margin] many nations; kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they understand." The context shows that the wonderful afflictions of Jesus would astonish and startle the different nations of the earth. The Septuagint, the version in use among the Jews in the days of Jesus, and which he quoted, gives it: "Thus shall many nations wonder at him, and kings shall keep their mouths shut." This is the true meaning as now recognized by scholars. The gospel of Christ shall so prevail that all opposition shall finally be overcome; kings and potentates shall be startled and become speechless before his truth.

Ezek. 36: 25 reads: "And I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you." I quote in full Brother David Lipscomb's comment on this verse as it appears in "Queries and Answers," pages 407-410:

In Num. 19: 1-10 we have an account of the preparation of the waters of separation, or purification, or cleansing, as it is called: "And Jehovah spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, This is the statute of the law which Jehovah hath commanded, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring thee a red heifer without spot, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke. And ye shall give her unto Eleazar the priest, and he shall bring her forth without the camp, and one shall slay her before his face: and Eleazar the priest shall take of her blood with his finger, and sprinkle of her blood toward the front of the tent of meeting seven times. And one shall burn the heifer in his sight; her skin, and her flesh, and her blood, with her dung, shall he burn: and the priest shall take cedar wood, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast it into the midst of the burning of the heifer. Then the priest shall wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and afterwards he shall come into the camp, and the priest shall be unclean until the even. And he that burneth her shall wash his clothes in water, and bathe his flesh in water, and shall be unclean until the even. And a man that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer, and lay them up without the camp in a clean place; and it shall be kept for the congregation of the children of Israel for a water for impurity: it is a sin offering. And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: and it shall be unto the children of Israel, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among them, for a statute forever." These ashes of the heifer and the cedar and hyssop were kept, and whenever a Jew or any vessel from any cause became unclean, he must take of water from a running stream, mix these ashes with it, and sprinkle himself or the vessel before he could be clean or come into the congregation of Israel. Verses 11-20 give an example of how it was used: "He that toucheth the dead body of any man shall be unclean seven days: the same shall purify himself therewith on the third day, and on the seventh day he shall be clean: but if he purify not himself the third day, then the seventh day he shall not be clean. Whosoever toucheth a dead person, the body of a man that hath died, and purifieth not himself, defileth the tabernacle of Jehovah; and that soul shall be cut off from Israel: because the water for impurity was not sprinkled upon him, he shall be unclean; his uncleanness is yet upon him. This is the law when a man dieth in a tent: every one that cometh into the tent, and every one that is in the tent, shall be unclean seven days. And every open vessel, which hath no covering bound upon it, is unclean. And whosoever in the open field toucheth one that is slain with a sword, or a dead body, or a bone of a man, or a grave, shall be unclean seven days. And for the unclean they shall take of the ashes of the burning of the sin offering: and running water shall be put thereto in a vessel: and a clean person shall take hyssop, and dip it in the water, and sprinkle it upon the tent, and upon all the vessels, and upon the persons that were there, and upon him that touched the bone, or the slain, or the dead, or the grave: and the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day: and on the seventh day he shall purify him; and he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and shall be clean at even. But the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off from the midst of the assembly, because he hath defiled the sanctuary of Jehovah: the water for impurity hath not been sprinkled upon him; he is unclean." This water was called cleansing, or clean water; purifying, or pure, water. To speak of sprinkling pure water came to mean that the person or vessel was cleansed and purified, just as to bow before the Lord came to mean to pray to him, since men bowed or knelt to pray. So when it says that they were sprinkled with clean water, it meant that they had repented of their wicked ways and turned to the Lord and he had forgiven them. The Jews had gone into idolatry, had been carried into captivity, and were in a foreign land when Ezekiel told them: "And I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep mine ordinances, and do them. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God. And I will save you from all your uncleanness: and I will call for the grain, and will multiply it, and lay no famine upon you." This means that when they repented he would cleanse them—he calls it sprinkling clean water upon them—so purify them and bring them back to their own land and bless them with abundance.

This all may have typified spiritual blessings to those who would be faithful in Christ, but could have had no reference to the ordinances of the New Testament or the conditions of salvation in Christ. We must come to the New Testament when we wish to learn these arguments.

Brother McQuiddy: Should we who are children of God by faith, in full obedience to his divine will, offer prayer in a sectarian church when called upon? I have been called on a number of times and never refused. I take the ground that in praying a prayer in harmony with God's will I may have a chance to influence and teach some one the truth that I may not have an opportunity to reach otherwise. Am I right in this or not? J. OSCAR PAISLEY.

"The Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle toward all, apt to teach, forbearing." (2 Tim. 2: 24.) Christians should be gentle, "showing all meekness toward all men." "But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without variance, without hypocrisy." (James 3: 17.) Those who pray in faith and in accord with the will of God should pray always and everywhere. "I desire therefore that the men pray in every place, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and disputing." (1 Tim. 2: 8.) The Christian should pray that the wicked may be led to Christ through the truth. Men "ought always to pray, and not to faint." All prayers, to be acceptable to God, should be consistent and in accord with the will of Jehovah.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

Help Us Now.

The last news from the Menlo work says that all the rough lumber is sawed and is being put on the lot. Brother Fate Hammond has sent a check for fifteen dollars toward the building fund since last report. We hope to have a splendid report to make of donations received in our next issue.

But, brethren, let me again insist that you come to our aid, and do it now. I cannot tell in this short article how much our succeeding in our present effort to have a building completed there in the next five or six weeks means to the work in this neglected State. We want another meeting at the earliest possible date, and we want it in the new house. Send donations to Miss Georgia Thomas, Menlo, Ga.

More Good News.

Brother Brumit's meeting at Pleasant Grove, in Cobb County, resulted in eleven additions to that congregation. He has just recently spent one week at Veal. Brother Beck reports that his stay there did great good.

Brother Aruna Clark's meeting at Austell did great good. They think he is the best that has visited them. He is at Buchanan at this writing, doing his best to strengthen the work.

Brother W. A. Cameron, of Largo, Fla., is now in a meeting at Hardie's Chapel. The brethren there are delighted to have that hero of faith with them again.

Brother Morgan H. Carter is back from a good meeting in Nashville, Tenn., and reports the best services at Macon last Lord's day that they have had for some time. He is to run over to Columbus the last of this week to help with the work there.

Three were added at West End Avenue last Lord's day—two from the First Christian Church and one confession and baptism. There were also two souls won for Christ by Brother Smelser at Buckhead.

The meeting at Lyerly resulted in five baptisms. Three of these were baptized before I left and two more asked to be baptized by Brother Shamblin after I left. Brother Shamblin reports the work as greatly revived there.

One of the most enjoyable meetings I have been in this year was at Wilson's Mill, near Kingston. This is a work that was started a few years ago by Brother Bearden. He has stuck to it, and I was delighted to find over thirty souls in that section contending for the faith, and a lot donated and deeded to trustees on which to build a church house. I could stay with them but six days. Seven were baptized into Christ, one led from the errors of the Baptists, and arrangements made to put a house on their lot before the weather gets too bad. They will be able to do this, they say, without outside aid. Brother Bearden was with them last Lord's day (September 17) and baptized two more.

Nothing has pleased us more of late than the splendid work that Brother Morgan has done and is now doing. He is a street-car motorman. He has been sending the Gospel Advocate, Friendly Visitor, and other good literature to his home people, near Draketown. They became interested and invited him out to tell them more about it. He went out last Saturday and began a meeting in a schoolhouse near his home people, and has just telephoned me that he is in the best meeting of his life.

Brother Flavil Hall makes the following report of his recent labors:

I have started a meeting at Beaumont, eight miles south of Ringgold, with good interest. There are only two disciples here—Sister T. N. Glass and her daughter, Mrs. Price. On the second Lord's day in August I began a meeting at home with the Hall Valley congregation and continued it eleven days, with good interest and attendance and three baptized. On August 31 I began a meeting at Berea, nine miles west of Lyerly, and continued it eleven days, with good interest, five baptized, and one restored to the fellowship. This had been rendered a "waste place" on account of so many removals, apostasies, and deaths. But it now seems saved from danger of early death. Brother J. T. Murphy has been endeavoring to hold the fort, and rejoices in the success achieved.

Brother John Hayes is now doing a fine work at Rome. By the time this reaches our readers he will be in a meeting at Cedartown. We have about thirty disciples there unorganized. He hopes to put them to work and convert others. Brother Aruna Clark, backed by the congregation at Rockmart, began this good work. Let all who wish to help Brother Hayes in his mission work address him at 608 Broad Street, Rome, Ga.

Brother Graves is now in a fine meeting in a schoolhouse bought by Brother Fate Hammond for a church house, out from Summerville. He reports large crowds and good interest. His recent meeting at Ingleside greatly encouraged the work there with two more added to the number and one erring brother converted.

At this writing I am in one of the most interesting meetings of the year at Lakewood Heights. The three who united at West End Avenue last Lord's day live in this section and are the fruits of this meeting. Better listeners I have never had. The Lord bless the faithful everywhere.

“Who Is Sound?” Is Humanly Not to be Determined”—The Gospel Advocate’s Emphatic Denial Again.

BY M. C. K.

First of all, we ask the reader’s very careful and serious attention to the remarkable, ill-advised, absurd, and ridiculous proposition placed at the head of this article. Note carefully its every word and see with what glaring presumption and cool complacency it makes the assertion which, if true, completely upsets the New Testament, makes much of its teaching the mere mockery of men, and renders null and void what it positively requires of the churches! This absurd and anti-New Testament proposition appears in a recent issue of the Gospel Herald, and in an article contributed by a young man whom we know to be capable of better things. But if he is not already dangerously near or even across the line of infatuation with these visionary theories or with the men who advocate them, one or the other, then some of his erratic statements are strangely inconsistent. They at least show to what unreasonable and absurd extremes he has, for some reason, already gone; and the purpose of this article is to try at least to save such persons from such mistakes in general and from this mistake in particular.

We here reproduce the young man’s exact language which contains the absurd proposition in question:

Brother Armstrong’s article of last week on the fact that “Who is unsound?” is humanly not to be determined seems to me quite pointed and timely. I trust he will write more on the subject and show us that the way to Christian unity is not physical, but spiritual; not mechanical, but biological; not through the iron cast of law, but in the holy bond of love.

The reader will please notice that he actually puts forth that proposition as a fact. But what is it that he says is a “fact?” Why, that “‘Who is sound?’ is humanly not to be determined.” That is, “Who is sound?” cannot be determined by man! He says this is a fact. Now, on the hypothesis that this sage deliverance is true, see what follows. First of all, if it states the truth, then it is impossible for man to “determine” who is or who is not sound in the faith. According to this, a man may be sound in the faith, but nobody can “determine” whether he is or not, and hence nobody can ever know whether one is sound or not. According to this new doctrine, a man may be unsound in the faith, yet, so far as man’s ability to “determine” his status is concerned, he may be sound; and, vice versa, a man may be sound in the faith, yet, so far as man’s ability to “determine” his status is concerned, he may be unsound! The “fact” is, according to this new doctrine, “Who is sound?” is a matter which “is humanly not to be determined;” and, of course, if it is “not to be determined” by man, then man can never know whether anybody is sound or not! Now, are not these visionary theorists making progress! But if it is not progress toward Babylon, then pray tell us what would be?

But this is not all, nor by any means the worst. Paul and the whole New Testament, according to this new doctrine, come in as guilty of teaching what is a sheer absurdity and of inexcusable mockery of men. Under the direction and guidance of the Spirit of God, Paul solemnly imposes upon the elders of the churches the specific duty of guarding them against unsound teachers; and yet this new doctrine comes in and tells us that “Who is sound?” cannot be “determined” by man! How utterly absurd for Paul to tell the elders of the churches to watch and keep out unsound teachers, if it be true, as this young man is now teaching, that “Who is sound?” cannot be “determined” by the elders of the churches nor by any other human beings! Moreover, if this new doctrine be true, why should the New Testament admonish us to “reprove” certain men “sharply, that they may be sound in the faith?” (Tit. 1: 13.) If it cannot be determined by man when men are sound in the faith, why did the Holy Spirit put any such requirement in the New Testament? If this is not a time to “reprove them sharply,” then we at least hesitate not, in the face of such an absurd and plain contradiction of the New Testament, to say that both this young man and his teacher Armstrong should be ashamed of such a deliverance and speedily repent of it.

But listen again to this youthful theologian. Speaking of Christian unity, he says that it comes “not through the iron cast of law, but in the holy bond of love.” Another plain and diametrical contradiction of the New Testament. Why is not “Christian unity” to come “through the iron cast of law,” provided it be “the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus?” (See Rom. 8: 2.) That is precisely the way it must come, if it ever comes properly at all; and until this beloved young brother and all other men are willing to have unity on that “law,” they will not have the unity that is taught in the New Testament. Of course it must be “in the holy bond of love;” but any “bond of love” that does not include “the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus” is wholly worthless in any contention for “Christian unity” as taught in the New Testament.

But listen again. “Christian unity,” this young brother sagely informs us, is “biological!” Now, is not that luminous? Some of us are wondering what it means. When a teacher of religion, in spite of what the New Testament plainly says on “the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus,” advances (?) so far as to speak in high-sounding phrase against "the iron cast of law" and in favor of "biological" Christian unity, we should, perhaps, not be surprised that, in the same article, he would decry against "submission to external ordinances rather than to the living God" and tell us, referring to the blessed Bible, that "the Book . . . should not be substituted for the living God!" But we remind him that, like the visionaries whom he seems to be imitating, he is tardy with his disclosure; for the Christian Scientists and some other denominations long ago got ahead of him in the vain and fruitless attempt to separate "the living God" from "external ordinances" of his own appointment, notably baptism and the Lord's Supper. But, since both the "Book" and the "external ordinances" in question are from "the living God," it is to be hoped that this misguided young brother will be heartily ashamed that he ever wrote such a thing; for, does he not know that a man would have the same right to decry against substituting "the living God" for the "Book" or for the "external ordinances?" They stand or fall together in the Christian system; for the Lord plainly tells us that if we "receive not" what he says and thus reject him, we reject the Father who sent him. (See Luke 10: 16; John 12: 48.)

Finally, he says his "article will be misunderstood by some honest readers." But why so? If he means what he says and he himself understands it, why cannot other folks understand it? This is a bad sign. Men never write that way when perfectly sure of the ground on which they stand and that they can sustain it by a plain and unmistakable "Thus saith the Lord."

We devoutly hope and pray that this one "dip" into the vagaries of the visionary will satisfy this young man, and that he will speedily return to the solid and safe ground.

Fighting the Devil with Fire.

BY E. A. E.

One discouraging thing is, not many readers of religious papers and other church members are sufficiently interested in learning the truth themselves and in having others to learn it as to study the most important issues in the light of the word of God. Paul declares that some are "dull of hearing" for the reason that, when they should be teachers of others, they themselves are still "babes," "without experience ["inexperienced in"—margin] of the word of righteousness," have need of being taught again "the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God," and must be fed on milk—handled tenderly and given baby food; and that they cannot tell the difference between good and evil, because they have not "their senses exercised to discern" the difference. (See Heb. 5: 11-14.)

Through Isaiah (5: 20, 21) God says:

Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter! Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight!

Too many are like Festus, who could see no difference between Paul and the Jews, except "certain questions against him of their own religion, and of one Jesus, who was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive" (Acts 25: 19); or like Gallio, who "cared for none of these things" (Acts 18: 12-17).

A skilled physician, an expert diagnostician, can detect in the human body "lurking" deadly diseases, because he has exercised his senses to do this, while others cannot.

As Paul says to Timothy (1 Tim. 4: 7), all Christians, as well as preachers, should "refuse profane and old wives' fables" and should "exercise" themselves "unto godliness," until by experience "in the word of righteousness," "by reason of use," they "have their senses exercised to discern good and evil."

For this reason Paul says (Tit. 1: 9, 10) that before men are qualified to serve as elders they must hold "to the faithful word which is according to the teaching" in order to be able, not only to teach the church the sound doctrine, but also "to convict the gainsayers;" and he gives the reason:

For there are many unruly men, vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision, whose mouths must be stopped; men who overthrow whole houses, teaching things which they ought not for filthy lucre's sake.

It is a blessed thing to seek truth, and especially the truth, in the love of that truth, and likewise to so teach it. Pilate asked: "What is truth?" (John 18: 38.) The word of God is truth—"thy word is truth." (John 17: 17.)

And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. (John 8: 32.)

Continuing from last week, let it be said that the quotations from the Christian Standard were given to show the more serious and most fearful charges which those who work through the societies bring against them; that from "lurking dangers" the societies have grown into open manifestation of their power over churches and preachers; and that they and the secretaries and "pastors," who are afraid to speak out over their own names in condemnation of them, are all ruled by the love of money. The article closed with citations of passages in the New Testament, showing that God warns against making merchandise of the churches, turning godliness into a way of gain, teaching things which should not be taught "for filthy lucre's sake," and going "in the way of Balaam."

Balaam "loved the wages of wrongdoing" (2 Pet. 2: 15, 16)—that is, he did wrong for money. This wrong was not stealing chickens or robbing a bank, but it was running riotously into error for hire, teaching false doctrine, and forsaking the right way for money. But for the love of money he would have taught the truth and would have acted very differently. (See Jude 11; Rev. 2: 14; and the whole story in Num. 22: 24; 31: 8, 16; Deut. 23: 4, 5.)

In the very beginning of the societies faithful and true men earnestly and clearly pointed out their "lurking dangers." These men were accused by the societies of being "antimissionary," "mossbacks," "old fogies," "nonprogressives," and hindrances to the cause of Christ. It was boldly declared in Nashville that when there should be "a few first-class funerals," meaning the death of Brethren Lipscomb and Sewell—"the cause"—the societies with their instrumental music—would be greatly advanced. After a while some who belonged to the societies began to see, too, these "lurking dangers;" but now they declare the open and high-handed iniquitous schemes of the societies—money schemes, delegated conventions, and all. These societies now have their hands on the throats of fawning "secretaries," cringing "pastors," and helpless churches, twisting the money out of them.

AN APPLICATION.

It is no worse in the societies to accuse the true men who oppose them and their money schemes of being "antimissionary," etc., than it is now in others to accuse faithful and good men, who love the truth and have "anxiety for all the churches," of discouraging the full and generous support of all earnest and godly preachers of the gospel even to the destruction of such preachers, because they warn against making merchandise of the churches and turning godliness into a way of gain in any way. Men who oppose the societies and instrumental music in worship can make merchandise of the churches and preach things they should not "for filthy lucre's sake." Does it follow that good men are "antimissionary;" that they "have destroyed and set at naught one of the ordinances of God" [a serious charge!]; that they are opposed to the generous support of true preachers of the gospel and to such preachers' giving themselves wholly to this work, because they cry out in the anxiety of their souls against any schemes, conceived in "the deceitfulness of riches," for making merchandise of the churches and turning godliness into a way of gain? Or for trying to point out to God's people these sins? (See Isa. 58.) Was Isaiah opposed to the right because he cried out against the wrong? "I trow not."

In warning against the unscriptural basis (a money basis) and unscriptural principles of the societies, in pointing out with a clear vision the huge proportions of sin and rebellion they would assume, and in showing that one departure from God's order will surely lead to another (recently the editor of the Christian Standard had an open debate with one of the most prominent workers in the societies against the unscripturalness of "receiving the pious unimmersed"), Brother Lipscomb urged the opposition of error in its incipiency. Should the same thing not be done now? But Brother Lipscomb was criticized, abused in the papers, and persecuted. The same things are being done now. But Paul says:

Yea, and all that would live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. (Read 2 Tim. 3: 12-14.)

Then he adds:

But evil men and impostors shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.

He next urges Timothy to "abide in the things" which he had "learned and been assured of," knowing of whom he had learned them. So shall we do.

But if a man is criticized and persecuted because he opposes error, unscriptural principles, and money schemes in their incipiency; because he dares to point out these "lurking evils;" and because in faithfulness he ventures to "reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching," he should count it all joy that God considers him worthy to suffer such things. (See James 1: 2-4; Rom. 5: 3-5; 1 Pet. 4: 12-16.) It is sad indeed, however, that otherwise good men and godly women can be influenced to join in such mistreatment. "And thou, too, Brutus!"

Let us wait here until next week, when some things in Brother S. H. Hall's article in this paper of August 31 will be considered. I am rejoiced that Brother Hall says: "Preach the whole counsel of God on the preacher question." (Emphasis his.) I most heartily commend this sound advice. And I commend the endeavor to preach "the whole counsel of God," not only "on the preacher question," but on "all things that pertain unto life and godliness." We cannot go wrong so long as we follow "the whole counsel of God." "On the preacher question" and on all other questions let us be sure that we teach no more than "the whole counsel of God." So, as a pointer, I ask: What is "the whole counsel of God" on preparing, not ordinary young men, but "young men of ability," to preach? Then, what is "the whole counsel of God" on "the inducement" to such "young men of ability to prepare themselves to preach?" I take it to preach the gospel, "Christ, and him crucified," is meant. How, then, according to "the whole counsel of God," can "young men of ability" be induced to preach the gospel of Christ—only this, and nothing more? "The whole counsel of God on this phase of "the preacher question" is going to prove to be "mighty interesting reading." When I learn that what "the whole counsel of God" teaches is the "inducement" necessary to persuade, not ordinary young men, but "young men of ability," to prepare themselves to preach," I shall take great pleasure in both practicing and preaching it. "Satan fashioneth himself into an angel of light," and "his ministers fashion themselves as ministers of righteousness." (2 Cor. 11: 14, 15.) God does not teach his church to prepare her "ministers" with the same inducement and in the same ways as Satan fashions his. The church cannot fight the devil with fire.

Things Interesting or Otherwise.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

We—Mrs. Larimore and I—left Nashville for McMinnville, August 31. We dined that day at the home of our friend and brother, Price Billingsley; and, at 3:30 P.M., started, in a surrey, to the home of my old-time friend, F. M. McDonough, who lives in a pretty little mountain "cove" about eight miles south of McMinnville.

Mr. McDonough claims me as his boy, because, when I was from ten to twelve years old, he taught me to farm, paid me four dollars a month—fully as much as my services were worth—for plowing for him, and won my heart and held it by many acts of kindness that I can never forget.

Last year, when we were in "the Valley"—Sequatchie Valley—where all these things occurred, I mentioned, in an article published in the Gospel Advocate, the death of Mr. McDonough, which, I was informed, had occurred several years before. Having heard, almost immediately after the publication of that article, that he was still alive, I wrote him a letter and mailed him a copy of the article. In reply, he wrote me a good letter and sent me his latest photograph.

He is now nearly ninety-four, having been born, in Sequatchie Valley, four miles below Pikeville, December 22, 1822. From Lawrenceburg we wrote him when he might expect us, and received from him in reply a good letter saying he could scarcely wait for the time to come.

When we reached his home, about an hour before sunset, he was sitting alone on the front porch, waiting and watching for us. Notwithstanding his mind seems not to have been impaired by the lapse of nearly a hundred years, he could not readily realize that I, too, was growing old; hence, when he asked, "Is this Theophilus?" and I replied affirmatively, he said, with an emphasis indicating astonishment and regret: "'Y! your hair is getting gray!"

Though far past ninety, he eats like a boy, sleeps like a baby, and doesn't hesitate to walk two or three miles at a time whensoever he desires to do so. He says he once walked six hundred miles in thirteen consecutive days, and thought it nothing worth mentioning to walk fifty miles between the rising and the setting of the sun, in the days of his youth and young manhood. His son says he walked forty miles one day when he was seventy-seven years old.

That beats me, badly, notwithstanding I, too, am an East Tennessee mountaineer. When, in my youth, I walked forty miles one day, I thought I had done pretty well; and, after walking seventeen miles one afternoon last year—when I was only seventy-two—I genuinely enjoyed a good night's rest, and was in no great hurry to resume my tramp next morning.

Mr. McDonough has buried three wives and all his children but one—James, with whom he lives. James has an estimable wife, and they have four fine boys; and I think their aged father and grandfather is greatly blessed in being the recognized head, or patriarch, of such a family, by every member of which, I believe, he will be tenderly cared for the remnant of his days.

Of course we talked of old times. When I asked him what became of John—his black horse—he said: "The Yankees took him." I said: "I was afraid of John." He said: "Yes, but you could plow old Ball."

He said he remembered well when he landed the big fish—a yard long—that ran away with my tackle in "the deep hole." When I reminded him that he excitedly said, when trying to pull the fish out of the water into the canoe, "It's as big as a hoss!" he laughed heartily and said: "He was a bulger!"

When he saw an automobile come to the gate and stop, about nine o'clock next morning, he knew the time had come for us to go. He remained silent a few moments, and then said: "It is not likely we'll ever meet again." Then, after pausing, to compose himself so he could speak, he said: "Well, be a good boy." Then, after pausing again, he said: "Be a good boy, as you've always been." And that was his farewell message to me.

We dined at Isaac Thurman's, in McMinnville, that day, according to promise, met many friends, missed many we were anxious to meet, and reluctantly left that pleasant place about the middle of the afternoon. Isaac was absent, but "Rebecca" and some of their children were there.

Brother H. L. Walling, whom I visited while in McMinnville, is eighty-four years old. He has "fought a good fight," has "kept the faith," and is able to work, physically, mentally, and spiritually, yet. He lives alone in his comfortable home, cares for his cow, milks, churns, takes care of the milk and butter, cultivates about three acres of land with a hoe, harvests the crops, and evidently enjoys life. He cultivates, harvests, and houses his crops with his own busy hands, a pitchfork and a shovel, a wheelbarrow and a hoe.

He does all this, notwithstanding—young Brother Will Thurman told me—his son is anxious for his father to live with him, and proposes to pay him fifty dollars a month to quit work and do nothing. Brother Walling may "wear out," but he'll never "rust out." He may grow old as years go by; but, if so, he'll be a clean, careful, companionable old man. Always clean shaven, he neither takes, touches, nor tastes tea, coffee, tobacco, Coca-Cola, or any other stimulant or dope. Long may he live as an example for us all.

That evening we reached Manchester, where the series of meetings that began Sunday morning, September 3, is progressing satisfactorily.

The church of Christ at Manchester seems to be loyal to Christ and his cause; but, not knowing its strength, I do not know, of course. I do know we have already learned to love these people; but, not knowing their ability, financial and otherwise, I do not know whether they are living, working, and giving for Christ and his cause to the limit of duty's demands; hence, of course, I do not know whether they are loyal.

Brother W. S. Long is their preacher, and they are so pleased with him and so devoted to him that they do not hesitate to say they have no hope of ever being able to fill his place with his equal, if he ever leaves them—which they hope he may never do. He is an exceedingly pleasant, companionable coworker; and he is certainly doing his whole duty now.

Brother W. C. Brewer is our leader of song service; and, while there may be many better leaders of sacred song service than he, I neither know them nor know of them. There is not the slightest semblance of affectation in his manner, and he never skips a stanza or stops before he reaches the end of the song he is singing. Absolutely free from all bad habits, he is a safe model for any mother's son. I baptized his mother more than forty years ago. Left a widow, long ago, she bravely battled against adversity, brought up her four boys and girls honorably—in Christ Jesus, our Lord—educated them creditably, developed three of them into good gospel preachers; and there is not a goat, a black sheep, or a failure in her flock. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Two great hindrances to usefulness in those who think they wish to be useful, yet have never really tried to be, are pusillanimousness and ambition. They are twin sisters. To put it otherwise, there is the fault of not thinking it worth while to do a little because it is little, and of not caring to do something because it may not lead to much.—Bishop Thorold.

OF

ADVANCED ON JANUARY 1, 1917.

It is generally understood that everything that goes into the production of a newspaper has increased in price tremendously. These increases range all the way from 50 per cent to 200 per cent. White paper has over doubled in value and is scarce at any price; wrappers for the Gospel Advocate have more than doubled in price; inks of all kinds have advanced in price out of all reason; and so it goes all along the line.

As a matter of self-preservation and protection, it is absolutely necessary that we raise the price on January 1, 1917, to $2 per annum.

We will accept renewal and new subscriptions at the present price—NOW!

We will deal just as fairly and liberally with our present subscribers as possible, and so will accept renewal subscriptions, no matter when the subscription expires, at $1.50 for one year and $3 for two years, provided these subscriptions reach us on or before January 1, 1917. New subscribers accepted NOW at $1.50 a year for one year only, in advance.

We advise, as we say, no matter when your subscription expires, that you send us your renewal for one or two years at $1.50 a year, and send it just as early as possible. We will soon be very busy entering thousands upon thousands of subscriptions between now and January 1, 1917. It is your last chance to get the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year.

However, we shall not ask you to bear all of this extra expense without any corresponding benefit; we shall bear at least a fair proportion. The fact that we cannot afford to longer publish the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year necessitated either making the paper smaller or raising the price and making it larger and better. Our space does not now adequately meet the demands made upon it, so it would be suicidal to cut down the size of the paper. We decided that you were the kind of readers that would prefer a better and a larger paper. So on January 1, 1917, or soon thereafter, the paper will be enlarged to 32 pages. Our purpose is to make the Gospel Advocate the brightest and best religious paper in all the country.

Will you please give this your immediate attention?

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

The Bible.

No one can afford to fail to study the Bible. It is the only book that teaches us our origin, mission, and destiny. It teaches us whence we came, what we are, and whither we go. In revealing the Father and Son to us, it shows us our own sinfulness. In teaching us how to live, it shows us how to die.

Nai Soot, a Christian Siamese, says this of the Bible: "It might be likened to a mirror. When any one wishes to see if his face is clean, he takes a mirror and looks; and if it is dirty, he takes soap and water and washes it clean. In the same way, when any one doubts that he has sinned and his heart is defiled, he should take this glass and consider in order that he may behold his sinfulness."

Of the Bible, Pollok has well said: "Hast thou ever heard of such a Book? The author, God himself; the subject, God and man. Salvation, life, and death! Eternal life, eternal death! Dread words whose meaning has no end, no bounds. Most wondrous Book! Bright candle of the Lord! Star of eternity! The only star by which the bark of man could navigate the sea of life and gain the coast of bliss securely. The only star which rose on time and on its dark and troubled billows still, as generation drifting swiftly by succeeded generation, threw a ray of Heaven's own light, and to the hills of God, the eternal hills pointed the sinner's eye."

"Ye search the scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of me." (John 5: 39.) "But abide thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a babe thou hast known the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 14-17.)

Removal.

It is no wonder if the Philadelphia Methodists are indignant. Philadelphia has more Methodists in it than any other city, and gives the most money to the church. The Foreign Mission Society was begun there in 1820, and the Church Extension Society and the Book Concern were begun there. But the Mission Board and the Book Concern have been moved to New York, and now a strong effort is being made by that greedy city to get the Extension Society.—Western Recorder.

If more good can be accomplished by the removal of the Book Concern and Mission Board to New York, then the Philadelphia Methodists should not be indignant. Christians in Philadelphia and Christians in New York should work together for the salvation of souls. It will not be doubted that New York is very much in need of mission work. There is much wickedness in it.

Blocking the System.

God works by system. We have only to study any of his works, whether the stars in the heavens or the petals of a flower, to be overwhelmingly convinced of this. His working spiritually in the lives of human beings evidently moves on also in a great, wonderful system in which he has ordained to need and use believers in Christ. But we can block the system. We know what a block on a city street-car line means; how a comparatively trifling hold-up that brings one car to a standstill soon means the hold-up of another car, then another, and another, until the tracks as far as the eye can reach are filled with waiting, useless cares. So my own "trifling" sin, or my prayerlessness, can block God's great system as it would reach out into many lives through me, and can bring to a standstill in uselessness many messengers that he would otherwise be using—but for myself the barrier. The glad opposite of this is the fact that when God has a clear channel in any Christian his great system of spiritual blessing and accomplishment moves on through that one in so many ways of life-bringing richness that only when we get to heaven can we really know how God works.—Sunday School Times.

God wills to save us. We should cooperate with him and not resist his will. Christ yearned to save Jerusalem. Read his wail over her people: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" (Matt. 23: 37.) We must be vessels of honor before God will work in and through us. "So then, my beloved, even as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God who worketh in you both to will and to work, for his good pleasure." (Phil. 2: 12, 13.) While Christ died to save sinners, he will not force salvation upon the willfully disobedient. He will not force an entrance into the heart of any one. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." (Rev. 3: 20.) We must open the door. Christ is not a burglar. Christ will comfort, strengthen, and save us, if we will only open the door and let him in. It is a blessed thing to have such a Savior. "Having then a great high priest, who hath passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our confession. For we have not a high priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but one that hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore draw near with boldness unto the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy, and may find grace to help us in time of need." (Heb. 4: 14-16.)

Unnecessary Indignation.

A great deal of indignation is expressed by the Catholic Telegraph because President Wilson, on the commission to try to settle affairs with Mexico, along with Secretary Lane and Judge Gray, has appointed Mr. John R. Mott. It hears that Mr. Mott has had something or other to do with the Young Men's Christian Association, and jumps to the conclusion that because he is a Protestant he will be a narrow-minded and bigoted enemy of the Roman Catholic Church. This is a very mistaken idea. A man of Dr. Mott's Christian character and world-wide statesmanship cannot fail to be fair and honorable and wise. This petulant habit of inveighing against all Protestants because they are Protestants has the tendency to awaken suspicion against all Roman Catholics because they are Romanists. This is all wrong. The desire and purpose of Protestants generally is to deal with Roman Catholics, and with all other people, in perfect justice and righteousness, whether they deserve it or not.—Herald and Presbyter.

Christianity is greater than partyism. The man who is truly a Christian will do right, regardless of whom it may please or displease. Factionalism is sinful. No man is as great as God would have him be until he is big enough to do what Christ wants him to do without fear or favor.

Surely we need not fear that the ties of earth will be broken in the heavenly Eden; surely they will be only the stronger and the sweeter for the presence of the Lord; surely all pure and faithful love shall abide with him forever, and its crown be only the brighter, because it is cast at those beloved Feet.—M. E. Townsend.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

H. T. King is in a meeting with the Highland Avenue congregation, this city.

A good brother at Saskatchewan, Canada, sends twenty dollars for missionary work.

George A. Klingman, of Detroit, Mich., is preaching this week at the Nashville Bible School.

J. Pettay Ezell, of New Decatur, Ala., will begin a meeting with the Russell Street congregation, this city, October 8.

Brother Larimore's meeting at Manchester, Tenn., continues with growing interest. There had been eighteen additions at last report.

We had visiting brethren from several Tennessee towns and from Texas at the Russell Street Church last Sunday. All were warmly welcomed.

From A. B. Barret, Abilene, Texas: "I shall begin a meeting at Dyersburg, Tenn., on October 4, and at Hazel, Ky., on October 20. I hope to visit other places while in Tennessee and Kentucky."

P. S. Young, of Plains, Texas, says: "It's the Bible first, then the Gospel Advocate."

P.S. Thank you, Brother Young, for putting us in such company, and may no man reverse the order.

From E. M. Tackett, Naples, Texas: "I have often observed to others that the Gospel Advocate is the greatest religious journal on the earth."

As Abe Lincoln said: "Let us hope that our feet always touch the ground."

We are requested to print the following death notice: "Died, on September 17, 1916, at the home of her parents, Mary Moore Vineyard, aged nineteen years, oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Vineyard, of Poplar Grove, Ark." The Gospel Advocate expresses sympathy.

From John H. Arms, Celina, Tenn., September 23: "Our meeting at Bud's Chapel resulted in two baptisms and one reclaimed. The meeting lasted eight days. The brethren think much good was done. The few faithful ones were much encouraged and edified, and all were greatly benefited."

From J. K. P. Wilkinson, Hillsboro, Texas: "I have been a subscriber for about fifty years. In some ways the Gospel Advocate is better than ever. There is less of egotism, sarcasm, and bitterness, yet as true to the all-sufficiency of the Scriptures in all matters of religious faith and practice."

Morgan H. Carter, 708 Broad Street, Macon, Ga., writes: "I would like to hear from any loyal gospel preacher who wants to work in a mission field and teach school to help pay expenses. We are looking for a true Christian, faithful to the truth. We prefer a single man and one who can lead singing."

Brother Srygley reports a good meeting at Daisy, Ark. The meeting continued fifteen days, with twenty-one additions. He was assisted in the meeting by Brother Lambert, who lives at Daisy. Brother Lambert had already preached three days, with eight added, when Brother Srygley arrived.

From Batsell Baxter, Cordell, Okla.: "I am now teaching in Cordell Christian College. We have an excellent school. The enrollment this year is a march forward in several respects. The work is growing in influence and power. The church at Cordell is in the midst of a good meeting. W. A. Bentley is doing the preaching."

From E. L. Cambron, Winchester, Tenn., September 18: "I closed a very interesting meeting at Old Jefferson last Thursday night, which resulted in nine additions from all sources and the congregation very much strengthened. I will begin a meeting at Morris Schoolhouse next Lord's day. May our Father bless the workers in the field."

J. W. Lamar writes to tell us that Carl Barnette, a preacher of the gospel at Greenville, Ala., is in destitute circumstances and that he is worthy of the fellowship and support of the brethren. We hope this call will not go unheeded. When Brother Lamar visited Brother Barnette, he found the latter barefooted, but busy plowing an ox.

From W. T. Hines, Select, Ky., September 19: "I have just closed a meeting at Wysox which resulted in nine additions—seven baptized. I began here last night. We are expecting a good meeting. On October 3 I am to moderate for my brother, J. L. Hines, in a debate against the General Baptist error at McHenry, on the Illinois Central Railroad."

From Bynum Black, Ward Springs, Okla., September 25: "My meeting at Newark, Ark., in point of attendance, was one of the best of my life. Five persons were baptized. This was my fourth meeting there, besides two discussions. I met H. F. Vermillion, and the Baptists wanted to try it over, selecting Ben M. Bogard to represent them. I am now in a meeting at Rosewood, Texas."

T. B. Clark writes from McMinnville, Tenn., September 22: "Work with this congregation is very encouraging. We had the largest crowds last Lord's day since I came the first of the month. A. W. Young, of Gainesville, Texas, has been secured by this congregation for a meeting for the first three Sundays in October. We hope to do much good. The future of this congregation is very bright."

From C. R. Nichol, Thorp Spring, Texas: "Thorp Spring Christian College opened on Monday, September 18, with considerably the largest enrollment of any previous opening. In all, about two hundred and forty students have enrolled, and about one hundred and sixty of these are in the high school and college. Many new students are coming in. Many visitors were present on opening day."

From C. M. Stubblefield, Paducah, Ky., September 21: "Our last meeting for this year came to a close on Wednesday night. It was conducted under a tent, at a point about two miles from the church, and continued eleven days. W. H. Trice did the preaching. Although there was but one addition, the brethren were well pleased with the effort, seeing that the gospel was presented in such manner that good results must follow."

Don Carlos Janes writes: "In the recent meeting among the colored people in Louisville, in which G. P. Bowser did most of the preaching, two were added. The colored brethren will begin a fund for a lot. I preached in the Highlands on Sunday night. Two baptisms recently. About fifteen persons participated in our "seven-o'clock meeting" for young people not long ago. The Buechel church has made a contribution (over four hundred dollars) for a lot to build on."

We take pleasure in printing the following commendation sent out by the elders of the church at Sherman, Texas: "To the churches of Christ, greeting: R. D. Smith has labored with the Houston Street church of Christ for the past four years—six years in all. He is a faithful, earnest worker, and has accomplished much good here. He is a man of rare ability, and is a pleasant, forceful speaker, not ashamed to declare all the counsel of God. His character is pure and clean and his family above reproach. We very heartily commend him to the brotherhood as a man of convictions, capable of accomplishing much good. We bid him Godspeed."

THE MASTER'S VINEYARD

Alabama.

Veto, September 19.—The work in this part of Limestone County is progressing slowly, but surely. I used the Lynnville and Pulaski tent at Holland's Gin for two weeks, with four additions to the one body, and got a band of disciples there to meet at their homes and keep house for the Lord. From there I took the tent to Pettusville and preached for ten days, with a good deal of opposition from the sectarians there; but three precious souls obeyed the Lord, and the brethren there intend to build them a house for worship on the Lord's day. They meet in the schoolhouse, and now have a membership of twenty-six. Any help that any of the brethren may send to them, in care of Ashford Todd, Elkmont, Ala., for the purpose of building them a church home, will be appreciated.—W. T. Goalen.

Arkansas.

Aplin, September 19.—Brother R. C. Ledbetter, of Oran, Texas, began a meeting at this place on Saturday night before the second Sunday in this month and closed at the water yesterday morning. There were nine baptized and two restored. One of the number baptized is the principal of the school at this place. He and his wife had been Methodists for years until they obeyed the gospel during this meeting.—(Mrs.) Maud Wallace.

Violet Hill, September 19.—We have just closed a very successful meeting at Success. Many were taught and eighteen were baptized. Brother T. W. Croom and his brother, who were in a meeting at Palatka, brought over one to our baptizing before we left. Brother Horace Taylor, of Pratt, Mo., conducted the song service. He is a very promising boy, and I love him. The church at Success is very much alive. I shall hold my fourth meeting there next year.—O. E. Billingsley.

Calico Rock, September 12.—I began a meeting here last Sunday. The prospects are flattering for a good meeting. This is the home of Brother Oscar L. Hays, a good preacher and one of the very best of men. He and his wife are in bed sick. On the first Sunday in this month I closed a good meeting at Duster, Texas, with six baptisms and one restored. This was my third meeting there, and I may return next year. I am to be in Arkansas for three meetings, and then I go to Paris, Texas, for a meeting.—J. B. Nelson.

Springfield, September 12.—My meeting at Cow Lake resulted in six baptisms. At Friendship, in White County, we had four baptisms. From there I went to Romance and lectured on the divinity of Christ and replied to some Baptist misstatements. This is a mission point. Many here never heard a full gospel before, and many were the expressions of surprise and delight. Three were baptized. By the fourth Sunday I shall take up the Lord's work in St. Louis. I need the prayers of God's people for this great work.—Thomas J. Bonner.

McCrary, September 12.—I have just closed a protracted meeting with the Pine Knot congregation. This is a very old and strong congregation. The brethren tell me they have not failed to meet in more than fifty years. We had a good meeting. Twenty-two were baptized and about forty were restored. The Lord willing, I shall return to Pine Knot next year for a meeting. I expect to spend five weeks next year in Greene County. I am now at McCrary in a tent meeting. I shall go from here to Wheeling, Fulton County, for a meeting.—Z. D. Barber.

Florida.

Lake City, September 16.—I recently held a successful meeting at a schoolhouse near Starke. A congregation of loyal disciples, eighteen in number, was set in order to work and worship as the New Testament directs. They are going to work at once to build a good meetinghouse. This congregation will be known as the "Antioch church of Christ." Elder A. J. McKinney, of Starke, has been preaching at this point once a month for some time, and has done much and lasting good. He is a faithful soldier of the cross, but is now old and very feeble. I am to return there when the new house is finished and hold another meeting. I go to Tyler next Tuesday for a meeting with the church at Center Hill.—J. O. Barnes.

Georgia.

Tunnel Hill, September 12.—In the latter part of July I went to Porum, Okla., where I conducted two meetings. The first was held in the Hickory Ridge Schoolhouse, six miles northwest of Porum, and continued over three Lord's days. Four persons became obedient to the Lord and the few brethren were strengthened in faith and zeal and promised to keep house for the Lord. We began in Porum on Wednesday night and closed on Lord's-day night, with a full house and great interest. All were anxious that the meeting should continue, but my arrangements were such that it was impossible for me to continue it. I promised to return to Porum next fall for a meeting. I began a meeting in Tunnel Hill on the third Lord's day in August and continued it over three Lord's days. One came from the Methodists and was baptized, one from the Baptists, and two from the Christian Church at Dalton. Brother J. M. C. Porter, of Blue Ridge, Ga., recently held a tent meeting at Dalton. Six were added by primary obedience and the brethren were much strengthened and are going about making arrangements to build. My next meeting will be at Dunagan.—W. C. Phillips.

Illinois.

Vienna, September 19.—The meeting at Birmingham, Ky., which began on Saturday night before the second Lord's day in September, closed last Lord's day with eleven baptisms. Large crowds greeted us at each service. At times the house would not seat the audience.—W. F. Mathis.

Kentucky.

Beaver Dam, September 16.—I closed a week's meeting last Sunday at Lee's, Tenn., with three baptized. I have just closed a four-days' debate at Gilstrap, Ky. I will begin a meeting at Shrewsbury to-night.—J. L. Hines.

Packard, September 19.—Brother J. H. Hill preached two discourses at Mulberry last Sunday and had fourteen additions, all by baptism. We are gathering a nice little body together at this place. We have no meetinghouse, but arrangements are being made for one. We meet for worship on Lord's day in the homes of the members.—Dan King.

Bowling Green, September 15.—Our meeting at Dixon Springs closed at the expiration of one week without additions. We feel that the meeting did good in the way of helping the children of the Lord to live nearer him. I am now very busy in superintending the Potter Orphans' Home and School. We now have thirty-one in the Home and expect others soon. Any who may feel that they would like to have fellowship in this glorious work are asked to send money to Hugh Potter, Bowling Green, Ky., Route 4, and bundles to M. L. Moore, superintendent, Bowling Green, Route 4.—M. L. Moore.

Hardin, September 18.—I have just closed a protracted effort to save souls over the Tennessee River, in Livingston County. I preached fourteen sermons, baptized four precious souls into Christ, and, we trust, did much good otherwise. Several were "almost persuaded." The meeting should have continued longer, but arrangements had been made to move the tent to another mission point in a few days. The few brethren treated me well in every way. I have far more calls from mission points away from home than I can fill, and must hold one or two mission meetings near home.—H. W. Jones.

Eubank, September 19.—Brother James H. Morton, of Lewisburg, Tenn., conducted a meeting at Cuba Church, two miles from Eubank, beginning on Saturday night before the first Lord's day in September and closing on the night of the third Lord's day. The meeting was well attended from the beginning. There was one baptism. This meeting was held near the home of Brother John Todd, an old gospel preacher. Brother Todd came every day and was with us the last night. Brother Morton is now working in his old field of labor in East Tennessee and Southeast Kentucky, where he spent five years and had over five hundred additions. He has recently been preaching in Pulaski and Casey counties and has had twelve additions. Brother Morton and I will begin a meeting at Estesburg, five miles east of Eubank, next Saturday night, to continue for several days.—A. Kenton Gooch.

Monticello, September 15.—I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Powersburg on September 10. There were good audiences, but no additions. Brother Hamilton Wray led the singing, and he did his part well. The only reason I can give for not being able to induce any to obey the gospel is my inability to so present the truth as to influence them to flee the wrath to come. There is power in the word. The gospel is God's power. If it is so preached as to meet the conditions of the neighborhood, its results will be a rich harvest; when it is not, the fault is in the sower, and not in the seed. However, we were able to start a little band in to worship. Bother O. F. Shearer will labor with and for them, and we trust that in the near future he will be able to reap a rich harvest.—J. D. Walling.

Fountain Run, September 18.—I started out on this Southern evangelistic tour on July 22. I was at Oakwood, near Clarksville, Tenn., thirteen days, with five baptisms and one by statement. From there I went to Trinity, Ala., where I was with Brother B. F. Harding six days, with two confessions and baptisms; thence to Haleyville, Ala., fifteen days, with five confessions; thence to Pokeville, Ky., near Bowling Green, thirteen days, with four confessions. I am now at Fountain Run. Brother Northcross, who is in a tent meeting near here, visited our meeting this morning. I go from here to Gamaliel, and from there to Salem, in Harrison County. This will close my protracted-meeting work for the present. I am to begin labor with the Parkland church, in Louisville, permanently, on November 1.—W. F. Neal.

Sedalia, September 13.—I am now at my home taking a few days' rest. I have held meetings at the following places this summer: Mount Olivet, in Kentucky; Cotham's Chapel, Hendrix Chapel, Jennette, Christian Chapel, Strayleaf, Bargerton, Mount Moriah—all in Tennessee. These have all been good meetings in many ways. I have done most of my preaching to the church this year; however, the number of baptisms has been more than ever before with me. About half of the people I have baptized this summer came from the Methodists and Baptists. I baptized one old lady over seventy years of age. She told me that she had been a member of the Methodist Church for fifty years, but, thanks be to God, she learned the truth in her old days. I go from here to Conyersville, Tenn., and then to Okmulgee, Okla., for meetings.—I. A. Douthitt.

Michigan.

Battle Creek, 112 Manchester Street, September 14.—My wife is making some progress toward recovery. Last Lord's day I was in Detroit and was kept busy all day. I spoke to the prisoners (about three hundred) at the House of Correction at nine o'clock, taught a Bible class at ten, preached at eleven, made a speech at the opening of the new meetinghouse of the German brethren, and preached at night—a red-letter day. Seven baptized in our Japan field lately. Funds short over forty dollars in August. Pray for us.—C. G. Vincent.

Mississippi.

Jacinto, September 17.—Brother Frank Baker, of Belmont, held a meeting at Jacinto the first week in September. The attendance was good. Brother Baker did some good, plain, gospel preaching. Five persons were baptized.—Ida Raper.

Tishomingo, September 12.—Brother W. H. Owen, of Henderson, Tenn., was recently with us and preached three very able discourses. One made the confession and was baptized, this making the eleventh addition to the church at this place this year. We are having a steady growth and everything is moving along very well. We are rejoicing over the advancement of the cause.—F. F. Belue.

Missouri.

Dexter, September 13.—I am now with the Shiloh congregation, eight miles southwest of Dexter. This is my fourth annual meeting here. This congregation has had a hard struggle, but they have gained the victory over every foe. I will be back in Texas about October 1.—D. L. Haile.

North Carolina.

Statesville, September 18.—Our meeting at Vance Schoolhouse, conducted by Brother M. A. Foster, began on the first Lord's day in September and continued over Wednesday after the second Lord's day. Four confessed Christ and were baptized and one was added by fellowship. The people are getting interested in the meetings now, but it was slow at first, it being a new work in this section. We now have thirteen members.—J. Q. Carter.

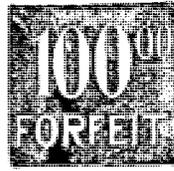

Clemmons, September 14.—Our work in North Carolina is moving along nicely. We have just closed our twelfth meeting since the first of April. Three were baptized in this last meeting, which was held out twelve miles west of the city of Winston-Salem. One congregation is raising one hundred and fifty dollars to re-cover their house. The little congregation in South Winston-Salem is arranging to raise funds for some improvements relative to their church property. Brethren, we need some help in this effort, too. Send gifts to Brother J. B. Whitley, South Winston-Salem, N. C. Another preacher is badly needed in this field. Write me about this if you want a location in a healthy country. Address me at 307 Green Street, Winston-Salem, N. C. There is more work needed than there are laborers to do it.—W. L. Reeves.

Oklahoma.

Mangum, September 18.—I began a meeting near here one week ago yesterday. We have had good interest manifested to date. Three have returned to their "first love," one has come from the Baptists, and six have confessed their faith in the Lord. The meeting will continue all this week.—R. E. Wright.

Pauls Valley, September 16.—I recently held a meeting at Pleasant Glade, Texas, baptizing two and restoring one who had strayed away with the sects. Also, at Gladys, near St. Jo, Texas, three were baptized and five were reclaimed. The church at both places was encouraged and is beautiful hair—coveted by all, but possessed by few. If you have allowed your hair to become coarse, stiff, streaked with gray or void of its original luster, the trouble lies in the absence of the natural hair oil. There can be no life without food; so unless the hair is well fed with proper oil, it cannot be expected to retain its luster and beauty.

La Creole Hair Color Restorer, when applied to the scalp, will restore those ugly, grizzly hairs to their natural color and at the same time leave the hair light and fluffy.

The tremendous success of La Creole Hair Dressing has encouraged a large number of imitations. The merit of this preparation has been proven through fifty years, continuous use; and just as counterfeit money never reaches the same high plane of value as the genuine, so none of the imitations of "La Creole" Hair Dressing ever attain the peculiar value of the original. seemed to be possessed of new zeal, while the gospel was heard by many others. It was my privilege to conduct the song service in three protracted meetings with Brethren C. R. Nichol, J. S. Warlick, and J. E. Dunn. It was a treat to hear these brethren through a meeting. I am now located at Pauls Valley as principal of the high school. One reason, not the least, of my coming here was to establish the cause in this place. Prospects are good, though there will be opposition. A few brethren, no house of worship, and little encouragement shall not hinder our trying to serve the Master. We meet at the courthouse. I hope to make favorable reports of our work later. Pray for us.—Ira L. Winterrowd.

Stigler, September 14.—This leaves me in the midst of a good meeting at Maud. Brother John W. Denton is doing the preaching and I am assisting in the song service. Large crowds and good interest. Brother Denton is a strong, forceful preacher, the most logical reasoner that I have ever been associated with. I will begin a meeting at Whitewright, Texas, on September 21. It will be my first effort as a preacher in Texas. On the night following the close of my singing school at Palatka, Ark., I preached, and had one confession, the daughter of a skeptic. She was buried with the Lord in baptism.—W. W. Slater.

Tennessee.

McMinnville, September 18.—The Mount Leo meeting closed last Saturday night. Nine were baptized. I preached at Smartt yesterday.—Fred L. Wallace.

Riddleton, September 20.—I am now in a meeting at Riddleton. I go next to Rome, in Smith County. Brother W. F. Wright, of Antioch, is leading the song service, and it is being done well.—C. M. Gleaves.

Memphis, September 18.—I am now in a tent meeting in the Highland Heights addition, this city. I will perhaps hold a meeting for the brethren at Cordova in October.—J. A. Cullum.

Lawrenceburg, September 14.—Last night I closed a very pleasant meeting at Center Point, five miles from Lawrenceburg. Four were baptized. I leave to-day for a meeting in Wayne County.—Thomas C. King.

Hampshire, September 13.—I am in the northwestern part of Maury County in a mission meeting. Our meeting is four days old, with large crowds and good interest. Two brethren have confessed their wrongs and one is to be baptized this evening. Brethren, remember us in this work.—J. Clifford Murphy.

Toone, September 21.—I am in a meeting at Cloverport, near Toone. The meeting is five days old, with eleven confessions. Crowds and interest are growing rapidly. I will hold a couple of mission meetings for the Toone church before leaving for Nunnelly, where I begin on the second Sunday in October.—T. B. Thompson.

Lebanon, September 14.—The meeting began here last Lord's day. My brother, George Klingman, has been preaching to large audiences from the very beginning of the meeting. Three souls have been added to the local body thus far—one by baptism.

REV. B. A. WILSON, San Diego, Cal.

Brethren Nix, Tabor, Elam, and Mason have attended the meeting.—John A. Klingman.

Ætna, September 20.—I closed the meeting at Cane Creek Church last Sunday night. The brethren seemed to enjoy the meeting, but we had no additions. This is one of the oldest congregations in the State, and the home of Brother B. F. Hart. It can truly be said that he is one prophet who has honor in his own country.—J. A. Sisco.

Red Boiling Springs, September 11.—Our protracted meeting, conducted by Brother T. Q. Martin, closed on Friday night with sixteen baptized and two restored. Brother John Knight preached on Sunday and Sunday night, and baptized one at the close of the night services. Of the above, four were Baptists and Baptist believers. The meeting was well attended from start to finish.—R. R. Clark.

Shady Grove, September 19.—Our meeting at the old Dunlap Church closed on Monday night. There were ten additions to the church—nine baptisms and one restoration. This is the oldest congregation of disciples in Hickman County and one of the oldest in Tennessee. It is said that the first house of worship was erected in 1820, and even prior to this they worshipped under an arbor.—William P. Walker.

Huntland, September 18.—I closed a fine meeting at Curve last Thursday, with ten baptized. One more wanted to be, but was hindered by an accident. Dr. L. K. Harding, who preaches for them regularly and who is much loved by all the brethren in that part of the country, led the singing. I began here yesterday and had an overflowing house last night. I have one more meeting after this one, and then I go home to engage regular monthly, semi-monthly, or more work anywhere in reach of Dallas. If you need me, write me at 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas.—J. C. Estes.

Lebanon, September 16.—I closed an eleven-days' meeting at Bean's Creek (Salem Church) last Thursday morning, at the water. Work done: Twenty-one discourses preached, nine baptisms, thirty-three homes visited, and two schools visited and a lecture given to each. Among the baptized was a very aged couple, eighty years old. This is one of the oldest congregations in this part of the country. It is in a community made up of good citizens, and we have some most excellent brethren and sisters in the congregation. My home was with Brother John Lipscomb, and he and his most estimable wife know how to make the preacher feel at home. I will begin at Brush Creek to-morrow.—George W. Farmer.

Woodbury, September 18.—During the latter part of August I held a meeting at Corinth Church, in Dekalb County. It was my second meeting there. The first one was held in an old log house; but they now have a nice, new building. The interest was fine, with two baptisms. Next I went to Bluff Springs, in Warren County. Here we have no house; but we raised money to build and secured a lot, and a house will be built at once. Eight were baptized and one was reclaimed. I am now at Bethel, in Rutherford County, at one monthly appointment. Next Lord's day I will be at Gassaway, thence back to Corinth. Then a debate with a Mrs. Skidmore, the "Holiness queen," of Tennessee.—C. H. Smithson.

Shelbyville, September 14.—Brother Thomas H. Burton, of Hartsville, held a meeting for the Deason congregation at Green Hill, under a tent, beginning on the first Sunday in August and closing on Friday night before the third Sunday, with four baptisms. Green Hill is a mission point, and much prejudice exists there, but good attention and interest were shown throughout the meeting. This was the third tent meeting at that place supported by the church at Deason. The brethren and friends there are anxious to have Brother Burton with them again next year. A few brethren there are planning for a place to meet on "the first day of the week" to keep house for the Lord. Brother Burton began a meeting at Deason on the third Sunday in August and continued it till Tuesday night after the second Sunday in September. Twenty-three were baptized, ten confessed their faults, and two came from the denominations.—R. T. F.

Big Springs, September 20.—I am busy five days of each week teaching school in Meigs County; however, I can do some preaching on Saturdays and Lord's days. On the first Sunday in September I preached at Liberty, in McMinn County. I had intended to hold a meeting for the Liberty congregation, but, on account of having to go to teaching, was unable to do so. On the second Sunday I visited Spring Creek and preached for the good people of that community. I am to visit Spring Creek once each month. Last Sunday I was at Cleveland. I found most of the members of the Cleveland congregation at the post of duty. The house of worship is in an unfinished condition. The brethren intend to try to get it in condition to be used through the winter. On Sunday night I preached in the schoolhouse where I am teaching. Are there any preachers out of a job? If so, there is plenty to do in this part of Tennessee. However, if you are looking for an easy job, do not undertake this work. We need faithful preachers of the gospel in this section, and churches in Middle Tennessee need to send them over. What are you going to do about it, brethren?—Fred M. Little.

Waverly, September 21.—Brother Porter Sanders, of Nashville, recently held a meeting at Glenwood, about three miles from this place, with thirteen additions and two restorations. He preached twice a day to fair-sized audiences. The members were greatly helped along the line of duty and are meeting regularly on the first day of the week. Brother W. T. Beasley, of Bellevue, held a meeting under an arbor at Collier's bridge, on Richland Creek, about six miles north of this place, preaching to large and appreciative audiences. There were fourteen additions and three reclamations. There are now located in that neighborhood twenty-nine members of the church. A little over a year ago there were only about half a dozen members. This little band, led by Brethren Stanfield and King, took the matter up and secured Brother Beasley to come and preach for them. They are determined to build a meetinghouse in that commu-

YOUR ENGINE MONEY

- 1 If I can make only $1 clear profit on each engine I sell, I can buy a good farm each year. What more could I ask?
- 2 Regardless of price and profit, I am building just as good an engine as I know how. The name WITTE will never appear on any but high quality engines.
- 3 WITTE engines are built by experts—men who do nothing but specialize on engines. It has taken me 30 years' hard work to build up my factory organization. These men hold their jobs because I believe that each is the best in the country in his line.
- 4 Our own natural gas well right in the factory furnishes free fuel for power. Without this, the coal bill would run thousands of dollars a year. You get the benefit of this saving.
- 5 WITTE engines are sold only direct from factory to user. Former retail prices on my engines were more than double present prices.
- 6 There is a clean business record of 47 years, and an engine building record of 23 years, back of every WITTE engine—never a "failure"—a consistent "spot cash" record. That is why we can buy material at rock bottom prices.
- 7 A wonderful factory equipment. By developing the power of the factory to exclusive engine building, I have been able to construct a great system of machinery that, in the hands of my experts, makes all parts with exactness and great speed.

Taken as a whole, the church in this county is in a prosperous and working condition, nearly all the congregations meeting regularly. Texas.

Waco, September 19.—I baptized five in my second short meeting at Poyner.—Cled E. Wallace.

Denton, September 18.—We began here on Friday night. The house was filled yesterday and last night. Students are here for the schools by the hundreds from all parts of the State. We expect a good meeting.—Horace W. Busby.

Cleburne, September 9.—The King meeting closed on Sunday night, August 20. There were five baptized and one restored. I am at home now for regular work in this community. The church here is alive to every good work. All labor together in the vineyard of the Lord.—F. L. Young.

Grapevine, September 4.—I held a very interesting meeting near Elbert. Three obeyed the gospel. I am now in a meeting at Grapevine. Owing to sickness in my family, I have lost almost all my summer meetings, but am now in the field ready to hold meetings where I am needed.—J. T. Bentley.

Cumby, September 12.—Our meeting at Wayne, Okla., embracing the first two Sundays in August, was attended by large and attentive crowds, but we had no visible results. Our meeting at Bagwell, Texas, embracing the last two Sundays in August and the first in September, was just fine. Eight persons obeyed the gospel. I am now to conduct a meeting at Canadian, Okla.—W. H. George.

San Angelo, September 12.—I am back at my regular work with the church here. Everything is thriving and we are looking forward to many good things for the year. The church is very enthusiastic over the Lord's work, and is willing to make any sacrifices for it. We had splendid audiences last Lord's day. We claim one of the biggest Bible schools among our brethren in the State.—Jewell Matthews.

Paris, September 18.—My meeting at home (Moore's Spring) was well attended. We began on the second Sunday in August and closed on Friday night before the fourth Sunday. Eight were baptized. I began a meeting at Maxey on the fourth Sunday in August and preached twelve days. There were no visible results. I have just closed a meeting at Woozely Schoolhouse, in a Baptist and Methodist community, with one baptized. I go to-morrow night to Point for a week's meeting.—N. W. Proffitt.

Childress, September 16.—I closed, on Thursday night, at Twitty, in Wheeler County, another good meeting, with two baptized, five to take membership, and a solemn promise from the brethren to meet and worship as the Book directs. While there I signed up for an eight-days' debate with an Adventist preacher. The debate will come off about the last of

REVISED AND ENLARGED

BY G. DALLAS SMITH

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION

Outlines of Bible Study (Revised and Enlarged) is a book of one hundred and twenty pages, besides five full-page maps covering all Bible lands. It is printed in large, clear type, on good, heavy paper, and is substantially bound in stiff cloth. The book contains seventeen drill lessons for use in Bible drills, Bible readings, or any other Bible class where it is desired to cover the entire scope of the Sacred Record in a short time. Outlines of Bible Study is not a commentary in any sense of the word. It contains but few comments. It is not "literature" in the same sense that some object to literature. It rather guides one in his study that it may be intelligent and systematic.

November, either at Shamrock or at Lela. I am now at home to assist in a two-weeks' meeting here with Brother Tackett, after which I will go to Oklahoma for a meeting. I will teach a Bible school at Twitty, beginning on January 3 and continuing through the month. The price of my new book, "The Soul of Man," is thirty cents.—Tice Elkins.

Fort Worth, September 15.—Our new brick-veneer meetinghouse at Glenwood, this city, is nearing completion. I preached in it last Wednesday night to a large crowd and two were added. After three more meetings, I will preach regularly again for this church, which will make my fourth year with them. During this time the congregation has grown wonderfully. When I began, we had about eighty members meeting in a tabernacle, which soon had to be enlarged. Now we have the new building and more than three hundred members, the most enthusiastic Christians I have ever had the privilege of working with, and we are expecting the greatest year's work in our history.—Horace W. Busby.

Lees, September 11.—I am writing to make an appeal for help to hold a meeting at Lees. Brother D. S. Ligon is to hold the meeting. This is a mission point. There are only four male members, and only one owns his home, two being renters and one working for wages. Crops are very short here this year. The people here are starving for the gospel, this being a sectarian stronghold. Brethren, if you believe in mission work and can help us in having the gospel preached in this neglected part of the country, please do so. Howsoever small your contribution may be, we will appreciate it. We are about thirteen miles south of Big Springs, a town of about five or six thousand people, with only one small, poor congregation. Send all contributions to Walter Senter or C. L. Burns, Lees, Texas. We will report all contributions.—Walter Senter.

The Mechanics of a Bad Cold.

The disease of the membranes of the organs of breathing known as a cold consists of an inflammation of the membranes, caused by germs.

Any safe antiseptic or germicide will cure a cold by killing the germs if they can be reached.

In an advanced cold the mucus thrown out by the membranes hardens in the air passages, protecting the germs from the application of the germicide.

To reach them, it is necessary to loosen and remove the mucus deposit from the nostrils and other air passages.

This explains why good germicides are often useless in curing old colds.

Mentholatum is especially helpful in such cases. It is not merely a germicide, for its pungent volatile oils encourage secretions by tickling the nerves of the air passages.

The fresh flow loosens the hardened phlegm and permits the germicidal effects of Mentholatum to have full sway. For this reason millions of people use Mentholatum for coughs, colds, cold sores, sore throat, and croup. It is cleanly, safe, agreeable, and useful whenever there is inflammation.

An Immediate Need.

Last spring Mrs. McCaleb went into the hospital and was operated on for an ulcer of the stomach. Happily it proved quite successful, and she is back home again feeling better than she has for a long time. Though she has not fully regained her strength, she is able to do light housework. I have just received the surgeon's bill of one hundred dollars. Other hospital charges were a little over sixty dollars. In order to meet this obligation, I must make a special appeal, something I would much prefer not to do if it could be avoided. Will those whose hearts are stirred to help, please send direct to Mrs. J. M. McCaleb, 2625 Montgomery Street, Louisville, Ky., stating that it is for hospital charges?

Gratefully, yours in advance,

J. M. McCALEB.

Notes from West Tennessee.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

The Rehoboth meeting closed last Thursday night (September 14). Three were baptized and two restored. If the congregation was aroused to any greater activity in the Lord's work, I could not discover it. There were several members that attended only a few times, only a few that attended every time. After all, perhaps, it was only another one of my failures. Brother Carney closed a five-days' meeting at Bethel on Thursday night, with five or six baptized and much interest created. He had to leave to begin another meeting. They asked me to take up the meeting for a few days; so I will begin there to-morrow (September 17).

On Wednesday night Brother Slayden closed a meeting at Glass. I was not permitted to attend; but the report got started that he did some masterly preaching, and I am inclined to believe the report to be true.

Brother White had a great meeting at Oak Ridge again, this being his fourth or fifth meeting in succession at that place. I think he is now at Christian Chapel.

In the last "Notes from West Tennessee" there appears a mistake: "This man Clark has for ten years conducted the meetings at New Liberty, in Lake County." It should have been "two years," and not "ten." The time for the discussion has been agreed on. It is to begin at Jones' Chapel at ten o'clock, Tuesday, November 7, and is to continue for four days. Two propositions will be discussed, two days to be given to each proposition. (1) "The congregation at Jones' Chapel, in Lake County (calling themselves "the church of Christ"), is scriptural in origin, doc-

What They All Say.

A few extracts from letters of club members will give you some idea of the many attractive features of the Gospel Advocate Piano Club and will explain why it is so popular. Here are a few samples taken from the correspondence at random:

I certainly am enjoying my piano. I couldn't have gotten any better piano in Decatur than the one I got from you if I had paid one hundred and fifty dollars more than this one cost me.—Mrs. F. B.

It is a beauty, and we are delighted with it. The tone is perfect. Your club is a grand thing.—Mrs. E. P. M.

I am perfectly delighted with it; and every one that has heard it, or has played on it, says they have never heard a finer-toned one. I can observe such a vast difference between this one and others that are in this community that have been placed by agents. Every one, even those who know nothing about music, can tell the superiority of this piano over others.—Mrs. J. R.

We like it mighty well. The tone is full and clear, and the smooth and glossy finish is certainly superb. We think it much better than we could have done here for the money.—Mr. O. F. P.

The piano has come, and it is everything I could wish it to be. The tone is so soft and mellow it sounds more like a harp. The bass notes are remarkably full and round; the case is specially beautiful. I am entirely delighted with it. I never saw a more perfect instrument.—Mrs. W. J. B.

Almost every letter received from club members contains similar expressions of appreciation. The advertising manager of the Gospel Advocate cordially invites you to write for your copy of the club booklet and catalogue, which explain the big saving in price, the convenient terms, the superior quality and durability of the instruments, the protective guarantees and other attractive features of the club. Address the Associated Piano Clubs, Gospel Advocate Department, Atlanta, Georgia.

trine, and practice." I affirm; Clark denies. (2) "The congregation at New Liberty, in Lake County, (calling themselves "the Missionary Baptist Church"), is scriptural in origin, doctrine, and practice." Clark affirms; I deny. If any brethren from a distance should decide to attend and should go by railroad, get off at Tiptonville, where, if you will let your wants be made known, you will be met and cared for. You can write W. S. Prevost, S. A. Alexander, or Wash Crafton, and they will see after you. Already it is reported that the forthcoming debate will be the last ever heard of John R. Williams—"he will be buried so deep in the rubbish and false teaching of Campbellism that he will not rise till the last day, and then to be consigned to eternal condemnation." So, brethren, all who can, come and see the last effort, the last fight, and be with me in the last hour.

Brother A. H. Lannom, of Illinois, is now in a tent meeting at Ridgeley, Lake County. There are a few who are trying to build up the cause of the Master at that place, but I hear there is division over the things that divide; so we cannot expect any great results under such circumstances.

Brethren, you can subscribe for the Gospel Advocate and help preach the gospel to the lost. Will you do it?

My Trip East.

BY L. S. WHITE.

The last week in July I left home for an extensive trip East. My first stop was in Cincinnati, Ohio. I was there two days, spent part of the time with Brother F. L. Rowe and part with some other good friends. I found Brother Rowe very busy with the Christian Leader and other good work. I preached one night for the church there and met many old friends.

On the first Sunday in August I began a meeting in Washington City. The meeting was held in a large hall in the Masonic Temple, a short distance from the Capitol. The location was good. The congregation is only about three years old and has about twenty-five members. They have met in various parts of the city, but now have permanent quarters where the recent meeting was held. This meeting was supported by the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church in Dallas, except I paid my own expenses in traveling. We were glad to make this sacrifice to help build up the cause of Christ in the nation's capital.

All the male members and part of the women are employes in the government service, as are most other people in Washington. They have had many things to discourage them. In fact, the work in Washington will be a long, hard pull; but a great congregation can be built up there by the right kind of efforts.

While I was there the church selected three good brethren as overseers, and the church seems very determined to do much work, notwithstanding there is no wealth in the congregation. About eight hundred dollars was subscribed to help support a preacher for the first year. This is a remarkable sacrifice for that little band. They are now looking for a suitable preacher to take that work and help them.

The work in Washington will have to be done mainly by house-to-house visits. This kind of work is much more difficult than in the South, where it is no trouble to get an audience.

During our recent meeting more than two hundred and fifty people attended the meeting at different times who had never heard one of our brethren preach before. A great many questions were asked as to what the church of Christ is, etc. One person was baptized, and several members of the church were found and promised to attend the services in the future.

When the proper man is located there, it will be necessary for some outside help to be given for a time. In due time the public will be notified of this. I regard Washington as the greatest mission center in the United States, and I regret that our people have neglected it for so long. The leading denominations are well represented there, and it will be much harder for us to get a start now than twenty-five years ago. But there are some splendid men and women in the little congregation, and they will do all in their power to help.

While in the East I spent a few hours in Baltimore and learned that we have no congregation in that great city of more than seven hundred thousand population. It seems to me that we have neglected the East long enough.

On my return home, I preached two days at St. Marys, W. Va., and had very large audiences at both services. I found the church alive and wide awake. Brother Charles E. Fogel has been with this church for three years, and is doing a great work there.

I also stopped off a week in Nashville. On the Sunday I was there I preached at the Foster Street Church, Watkins Hall, and West Nashville Church in the order named. We had large audiences and enthusiastic services at each place. On Tuesday morning the Nashville Bible School opened its twenty-sixth session. It had the largest enrollment of students in its entire history. Many friends gave encouragement by their presence. Brother F. W. Smith, of Nashville, and I had been selected to deliver the addresses on that occasion. H. Leo Boles is the president of that school. During the four years he has been there he has neither been absent nor tardy a single day or a single recitation. He has a good faculty, and the school is doing a fine work. It will take eternity to reveal all the good that our Bible colleges are doing.

While in Nashville it was also a pleasure and a blessing to be with my mother and one of my sisters. Mother is eighty-three years old and remarkably well preserved. She has almost as much interest in current events as a young person.

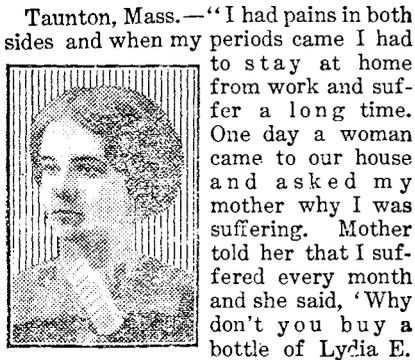

I reached home safely, after an absence of nearly six weeks, and found that everything had been properly cared for. I traveled more than thirty-five hundred miles, and not a train was late at any time. I found the church in Dallas in splendid condition; in fact, it is in the best condition I have ever seen it. I am now busy and happy in the Master's vineyard.

GIRL COULD NOT WORK

How She Was Relieved from Pain by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Taunton, Mass.—“I had pains in both sides and when my periods came I had to stay at home from work and suffer a long time. One day a woman came to our house and asked my mother why I was suffering. Mother told her that I suffered every month and she said, ‘Why don't you buy a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?’ My mother bought it and the next month I was so well that I worked all the month without staying at home a day. I am in good health now and have told lots of girls about it.”—Miss CLARICE MORIN, 22 Russell Street, Taunton, Mass.

Thousands of girls suffer in silence every month rather than consult a physician. If girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion would take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a safe and pure remedy made from roots and herbs, much suffering might be avoided.

OBITUARIES

On account of the large number of obituary notices coming to the Gospel Advocate the following rules must be observed: Obituaries that do not exceed one hundred and fifty words are published free of charge. When they exceed this limit, one cent will be charged for every additional word. Payment must accompany notice or else it will be reduced to one hundred and fifty words. Poetry will not be printed.

Netherland.

On August 31, 1916, I conducted the funeral and burial services of Celia, the fifteen-year-old daughter of Sister Jane Netherland, of Simpson, La. Surely Sister Netherland's burdens are very great. She was left a widow seven years ago, with ten children to hold together and provide for. One year ago her oldest son, a boy of industrious habits, was called to join the father in the spirit world. May the grace of Him who is able to bear our burdens sustain her in this time of great need.

W. D. HUMPHREY.

Burks.

My precious mother, Mrs. S. A. Burks, died on March 23, 1916, at Bentonville, Ark., at the age of eighty-six years. For many years she had been a subscriber to and a devoted reader of the Gospel Advocate. Since her early youth she had been a Christian, always faithful to every duty, and was one of the sweetest and most unselfish characters I have ever known. Though we miss her sadly, it comforts us to know that she is at rest where there is no more pain or weariness.

Mrs. W. T. DUDLEY.

Burns.

The death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Burns, of Palestine, Ark., on Sunday night, August 6, 1916, taking in his flight the spirit of Brother Burns. He was thirty-one years of age and had been a member of the church of Christ for six years. He was faithful to his God and a pillar on which the other members leaned. Brother Burns leaves a wife, three children, a mother, and other relatives and friends to mourn his loss. He was always a dutiful son, a faithful husband, and a loving father. May his wife, children, and friends bear their bereavement with Christian fortitude and prepare to meet him in a better land.

A FRIEND.

Thomas.

Brother Nathan Thomas was born on August 20, 1865. His health failed in the fall of 1912 and for more than three years he was an invalid. He became a Christian more than a year before he died. He was patient during his sickness, bearing his suffering with the patience that becomes a Christian. It was an inspiration to watch his noble wife stay by him to the last, and then through her tears say: “I did my best.” Brother Thomas died at Mango, Fla., on May 23, 1916, having moved here from Alabama in search of health. Liver trouble of some kind was the cause of his death.

He leaves a wife and seven children and a number of brothers and sisters. The writer conducted the funeral.

WILLIAM RUCKER.

Woods.

On Thursday morning, June 8, 1916, the messenger of death entered the home of my dear father and claimed him as its victim. William R. Woods was born in Hardeman County, Tenn., on November 21, 1841. He was at the time of his death nearly seventy-five years old. He was a faithful member of the church of Christ, having obeyed the gospel many years ago. He died very suddenly. While sitting in his chair talking to one of his sons, his sweet spirit quietly passed from this world of sorrow and affliction to one of perfect rest, peace, and love. He leaves four sons and two daughters to mourn his death, his dear wife and our mother having preceded him to a better world just six short months before. Dear brothers and sisters, let each of us so live that when the summons comes for us we can meet them and all be reunited again where separations shall be unknown. DAUGHTER.

Vickers.

On March 28, 1916, Sister Fannie Vickers was seventy-six years of age. From girlhood till she was fifty years old she belonged to the Baptist Church; but, learning “the way of the Lord more perfectly,” she ceased to be a Baptist and became a Christian only, and so lived till the day of her death. For several years her home was in Maury County, Tenn. In 1910 she came to Dyer County, where she lived with her sister (Gregory) till 1913. Since then her home had been with her relatives in Lake County. She died in the home of her niece, Sister Lillie Alexander, and the body sleeps in the dark, cold, and lonesome grave at Cronanville, Tenn. Thus one by one the old guard is passing off, and soon they will all be gone. Who shall rise up to take the place of the old ones and carry on the Lord's work in the offer of salvation to a lost and ruined world? May the Lord bless all the relatives of Sister Vickers and all the faithful in Christ Jesus.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Conley.

On August 1, 1916, Aunt Bettie Conley passed to her reward. She was indeed a “mother in Israel.” In her death the church has lost one of its best members; a husband has lost a faithful companion, and a large family is left to mourn their loss. Brother W. T. Boaz, who conducted the funeral service, likened her unto a tree. She shaded and blessed all who came under her branches. The only consolation we have is that it was the Lord's will for her to go. Aunt Bettie was followed on August 13 by her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Henry Conley, who was also a member of the Vance Schoolhouse congregation. "Addie Mae," as she was familiarly called, was a sweet, motherly little woman, loved by everybody. She was cut down in the springtime of life. The Lord's ways are past understanding, but we know that all things work together for good to those that love the Lord. Funeral services were conducted by Brother John T. Smith, assisted by the writer. H. J. SUDBURY.

Bevis.

Death came and released Brother A. V. Bevis from all earthly suffering on August 1, 1916, in Waterloo, Ala., his home. He was born on March 22, 1852. He was married to Miss Catherine Lee in 1873. His wife and five children—two sons and three daughters—are left to mourn because of his taking away; besides, three brothers, ranging in age from sixty-two to eighty-three years, survive him. He became simply a Christian in 1874, from which time he lived a faithful, Christian life. Through his personal efforts, large influence, and individual sacrifices, the cause of the blessed Christ was permanently established in his home town. He was always found on the side of right when any moral question was at issue; satisfied to take the plain, unvarnished teachings of the Bible as his standard to the close of his earthly pilgrimage. It was my privilege to visit him frequently in his last illness of many months. As to the future, he was always cheerful, having no fears of the beyond, but dreaded the sting of death and hated to leave his loved ones and friends. To all of these we say: Be faithful unto death and you will meet him on the shores of sweet deliverance. Brother Bevis is gone and will be greatly missed by all who knew and loved him. May God in his infinite love and mercy bless us all.

J. L. SMART.

Phillips.

Another home has been darkened and shrouded in sorrow by the angel of death stealing in and claiming for its victim C. J. Phillips, who was born on April 28, 1842, and departed this life on September 1, 1916. He was united in marriage to Jane W. Matthews on January 18, 1871. To this union seven boys and four girls were born, of which two boys and a baby girl preceded him to the grave to await the resurrection. He united with the church of Christ early in life and lived a consistent Christian until death, never failing to extend a helping hand to the distressed and needy. He will be missed—O, so much!—at Friendship church, where he went each Sunday morning for worship. It is sad indeed to know his earthly place with God is vacant, but sweet to realize that he is filling a far brighter place in the great beyond. He was a valiant soldier, having fought bravely during many battles of the Civil War, and was a prosperous business man in the community in which he lived.

Be What You Contend For.

It is right to insist on being called a "Christian" in preference to all other religious names. But before we can consistently contend for this scriptural name, we must be what we contend for. The converts at Antioch were sure-enough Christians; for when Barnabas arrived, he quickly saw that the grace of God was upon them. That grace was manifested in their changed lives. We might well say that they were called "Christians" in derision, had we learned that they were unworthy of the name. But such is not the record of their lives. Too many make a fuss over the name to-day who care little or nothing of its precious meaning to themselves.

A poor boy came to a certain jeweler's shop and asked for work. The foreman asked him if he had ever worked in a jeweler's shop. "No, sir," the boy replied, "but I have worked next door to one." Working next door to a jeweler's shop does not make one a jeweler. Nor does merely going to church or contending for the name make one a Christian. For the sake of your influence upon others and for the salvation of your own soul, be what you contend for. "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

Bring Out Your Scholars.

When Barnabas felt the need of an earnest worker at Antioch, he hunted up Saul. We might say that Barnabas "brought him out," in the way of introducing him to people and to opportunities for larger service. We often hear of mothers "bringing their daughters out" into society, but too rarely hear of Christians recognizing the talents of young converts and bringing them out for Christ. Everywhere there are people whose talents are lost to God's kingdom because no Barnabas has taken an interest in them. The teacher of a Bible class has an unusual opportunity for being a Barnabas, a friend to the friendless and the novice, a bringer into light of great workers in the Master's vineyard. Have you a singer among your pupils whose gifts may be used in the congregation? Bring that singer out. Have you a thoughtful boy who should be trained for leadership? Bring him out. After Saul had been introduced, he became a more preëminent leader than Barnabas, but I believe the introducer will share in the apostle's glory.

In J. R. Miller's book about Paul he tells that one of the most distinguished scientific men of the latter part of the eighteenth century was Sir Humphrey Davy. He made many great discoveries and added many valuable contributions to science. Among those who worked with him was a journeyman named Michael Faraday. He was employed at first only at weekly wages, in unimportant positions. But soon it became apparent that Faraday was himself possessed of a great genius for scientific researches. It is said that when Sir Humphrey Davy was asked what had been his greatest discovery, he said: "Michael Faraday."

In the same sense we may say that Barnabas, more than any other man, recognized and brought into play Saul's capabilities. He was wise enough to discover what Jesus Christ had called a "chosen vessel."

Running Risks for Christ.

It was a magnificent tribute to Paul and Barnabas to describe them as "men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." We can better appreciate this tribute if we will read Paul's own statement of his sufferings, recorded in 2 Cor. 11: 23-28. Most of the apostles met death in some violent manner. History and tradition tell us that Matthew was slain with a sword in Ethiopia; Mark died in Alexandria, as the result of a severe beating; Luke was hanged in Greece; John was exiled to Patmos; Peter was crucified at Rome, head downward; James was beheaded at Jerusalem; James the Less was beaten to death with clubs; Philip was hanged in Phrygia; Bartholomew was flayed alive; Andrew was crucified; Thomas was thrust through with a lance; Jude was shot to death with arrows; Matthias was beheaded; Barnabas was stoned to death; and Paul was beheaded at Rome. It is estimated that fifty millions of persons have suffered martyrdom for the religion of Christ. What have you suffered or risked for his sake?

Disputes and Rightful Contentions.

On the above subject Peloubet writes: "There are five classes of disputes in our day: (1) disputes between nations, leading still to terrible wars; (2) disputes between political parties and over questions of public policy; (3) disputes among the denominations of Christians, of which there are nearly two hundred in the United States; (4) disputes between capital and labor, leading to fierce and injurious strikes and lockouts; (5) disputes between individuals—neighbors, friends, relatives, business associates—over an endless variety of matters, important and trivial." His classification is timely and comprehensive, with one exception. He mentions "disputes among the denominations of Christians." The New Testament does not authorize "denominations of Christians," but, on the other hand, deplors them. And what this brilliant writer classifies as a dispute may stand for an earnest contention for the "faith once for all delivered unto the saints," which every true Christian should stand ready to make. High-minded, open-handed discussion is not a dispute, although the majority of the two hundred or more denominations he mentions are fond of this classification.

The Fruits of Jealousy.

Its fruits are always hurtful and disappointing. Preachers who are envious of the success of their brethren, churches that are envious of their sister churches, give evidence of a lack of saving grace. In this, if in nothing else, they judge themselves unworthy of eternal life. Mr. Moody used to tell with good effect the fable of an eagle which could outfly another and the other didn't like it. The latter saw an archer one day, and said to him: "I wish you would bring down that eagle." The sportsman replied that he would if he only had some feathers to put into the arrow. So the eagle pulled one out of his wing. The arrow was shot, but didn't quite reach the rival eagle: it was flying too high. The envious eagle pulled out more feathers, and kept pulling them out until he lost so many that he couldn't fly, and then the sportsman turned round and killed him. The moral to this fable is that the jealous party receives the worst hurt, and usually the only one. Let all put away, therefore, "all wickedness, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings."

The Fickle Goddess.

By "the fickle goddess" I mean popularity. She is the biggest and most popular flirt in the world, and she has been leading its people on for a long, long time. Neither Christ nor his apostles sought popularity, but she sought to tempt them. Their high-minded conduct quickly restrained her advances. It was but a short distance from the garlands of Christ's triumphal entry to the thorns and nails of his crucifixion. It was but a short distance from the shout, "The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men," to the stone pile outside the city walls. But the word has two senses. "Popularity, in the lowest and most common sense, is not worth the having. Do your duty to the best of your power, win the approbation of your own conscience, and popularity, in its best and highest sense, is sure to follow."

L. E. Huntsman, Again.

BY F. W. SMITH.

I, with the readers of this journal, realize that discussions, no matter how instructive, interesting, and good-natured they may be, should have an end. But as Brother Huntsman wishes to be heard again, I submit what he says:

In Brother Smith's reply are two questions which, it seems to me, need not have been asked had what I presented been thoughtfully considered; but since they have been asked, I will try to make the points involved clearer.

He wants to know how I can say that it is easier to harmonize the hour with the thousand years than to harmonize the thousand years with the (I said one) hour, since I disclaim literal years. I do not know whether the thousand years are literal or not. If literal, what I said is obviously correct. If not literal, does not the expression, "thousand years," convey the idea of a long period? In Rev. 17: 12 we read that the ten kings are to receive authority for one hour. If this is figurative, does it not indicate a very short period? It is not reasonable to suppose that an expression meaning so long a time should be chosen to represent one literal hour. Besides this, "the hour cometh" expresses a point of time, while "the thousand years" expresses duration of time. When we say that the hour has come for a certain trial, we mean by "hour" the point of time at which the trial is to begin, and not the length of the trial. So with "the last day." Paul says: "Inasmuch as he hath appointed a day." We have no right to assume that "day" means more than the time for beginning the things which are to come to pass then. Neither does the singular form prove a one-day judgment and resurrection, for it is often used to express time in general. Jesus said, "Abraham rejoiced to see my day," etc., which simply means the time of his ministry.

He also wants to know why the adverb does not express immediateness when the context shows immediateness. In my first article I gave the Greek New Testament usage which does not countenance such a position. That ought to have been sufficient. In my second article I showed that if the context governed what is expressed by the adverb, we would have the latter expressing remoteness sometimes; and, in fact, we might have it expressing any period of time at the will of the context, which is absurd. That, too, ought to have been sufficient to show the impossibility of the proposition. Sometimes the most effective way of showing that a proposition is not true is to point out the fallacy in it. In this proposition there are several fallacies, but it should be sufficient to point out one. It seems plausible that if the adverb means "next, after that," or, as Brother Smith put it, "the next thing," and there is nothing to show otherwise, it has the force of immediateness. It is true and it is not. Here is the fallacy. In the passage under consideration (1 Cor. 15: 24), the adverb expresses order (and there is not a passage in the New Testament in which its use is more explicitly of order than this), and in every such passage it always (no matter what the context is or what the period of time) means "the next thing"—that is, the next thing under consideration. In Mark 4: 28, 29 it means the next stage of growth of the grain; in 1 Cor. 15: 5, 6 it means the next appearance; and in 1 Cor. 15: 23, 24 it means the next resurrection. In all such passages "then" never expresses time, either immediate or any degree of remoteness. The fallacy lies in applying the meaning of the adverb to what is not under consideration (the interval between certain points of time), instead of to what is under consideration (stage of growth, appearance, or resurrection). There is here, as in the first question, a failure to distinguish between a point of time and duration of time. This matter is important because it is a matter of understanding what is written or misunderstanding it. If we misunderstand, we may wrest the Scriptures even to our own destruction. If I have made the meaning of "then" in 1 Cor. 15: 24 clear to any of the readers of the Gospel Advocate, my object has been accomplished. I might say much more, but I am doubtful whether that would make it any clearer.

1 Cor. 15: 24 says: "Then cometh the end." I ask, the end of what? Evidently the end of Christ's reign, or the end of the world. To this our brother has interposed no objection, but insists that "one thousand years" will intervene between the coming of Christ mentioned in 1 Cor. 15: 23 and "the end." There is not one word in the context to sustain such a contention, and he must assume several things in order to make out his case. (1) He assumes that the "second resurrection," as he calls it, must take place after Christ comes. Could not some one else assume with as much authority as he that the "second resurrection" took place immediately after the resurrection of Christ (Matt. 27: 52, 53), and that his "thousand years" has been going on since? (2) He assumes that the word "then" in 1 Cor. 15: 24 means "order" of events without any reference to time of fulfillment, although he has been compelled to admit that "eita" does in other places mean simply time without the idea of "order."

But now we will see the predicament in which he places himself by his contention. He says: "In the passage under consideration (1 Cor. 15: 24), the adverb expresses order (and there is not a passage in the New Testament in which its use is more explicitly of order than this), and in every such passage it always (no matter what the context is or what the period of time) means the next thing—that is, the next thing under consideration." Well, now, what are the things under consideration in 1 Cor. 15: 23, 24? These, and only these: the resurrection and the end of the world.

Now, I submit that, according to our brother's contention, what he calls the "second resurrection" will have to take place after the end of the world. Why do I say this? Because he insists that the adverb "then" in 1 Cor. 15: 24 denotes "the next thing under consideration;" and as the next thing under consideration to "they that are Christ's at his coming" is "the end"—that is, the end of the world—there is no escape from the position that his "second resurrection" must take place after the end. To avoid this ridiculous position, he must go to the book of Revelation and find something about a "thousand years," which he confesses not to know whether literal or not, and something about "the rest of the dead lived not again," which he does not know to be the literal dead or not, and tack them in between verses 23 and 24 of 1 Cor. 15. The apostle puts the resurrection of the dead "at the last trump" (1 Cor. 15: 52); and if this will not include all the dead, both saint and sinner, then when will sinners be raised? Evidently, if our brother's position be true, after the end of the world.

I said he admitted that "eita" in some passages does not mean "order," but "time." Here is what he says of Mark 8: 25 and John 20: 27: "'Eita' in these passages does not express order, but time." Now, I submitted that if his life depended on it he could not give a shadow of reason why it expresses "time" and not "order" in these passages, and does not express "time," but simply "order," in 1 Cor. 15: 24. He furthermore says my contention that "then" in 1 Cor. 15: 24 has the force of immediateness "is true and it is not true." It may be due to my inability to grasp the fact that what he says is true, but I do not comprehend it. I have said before, and now repeat it, that no one without a leaning at least toward a long period of reign by the Christ after he comes could get any other idea from the simple statements in 1 Cor. 15: 23, 24 than that the end would occur immediately upon the coming of Christ.

BY W. H. CARTER.

Young brethren, let me assure you that there are none who rejoice more in your spiritual growth and success than the old preachers. When they behold your loyalty to Christ and devotion to his cause, they are ready to exclaim, in the language of one of old: "One can chase a thousand, and two can put ten thousand to flight!" This is because their strength is in Jehovah and not in themselves. But, on the other hand, when they see some puffed up, seeking a "pastorate," hunting easy places, showing that they are influenced by the love of money, and who appear to think themselves too good to labor at some honest employment and think of themselves more highly than they ought to think, there are none who deplore it more than the old preachers.

You preach to the brethren and sisters that they are laborers in our Lord's vineyard, and invite the world to become obedient, enter in, and become laborers, too. But how much do you labor yourself? Do you say, "I am giving all my time?" When you preach only on Saturday night, Lord's day and night, and do nothing the other five days of each week, are you giving all your time? To whom, and to what, are you giving it? Laborers, men who will labor every day, are needed. Go out in the highways and byways and preach Christ to the people. Be busy all the time. Do you say, "From whence will come my support?" For whom are you laboring? If you labor for God, look to him who has promised to be with you, to not leave you, and that his grace is always sufficient. Is it not natural for men to look to the one for whom they labor for their support? If we labor for men, we look to men; if we labor for a church, we look to the church; if we labor for the Lord, why not look to the Lord?

A little of the experience of a preacher, once young, might be helpful. Three churches wanted him to preach for them monthly. He agreed to do this, provided the three appointments came on Lord's days following each other, so that he could put in the time between Lord's days preaching in the schoolhouses in the different communities. This was arranged, and during that year many souls were saved and these congregations were greatly strengthened. He could have preached on Lord's days and have "killed time" through the week; but he had a "mind to work," and the brethren were willing to work with him. This almost invariably brings visible success.

Do not preach on Lord's days and frolic through the week. Paul says: "I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." He had no idle time. When not teaching, he was at work, laboring with his own hands to supply the wants of his colaborers. We are no better than was Paul. The preacher who thinks himself too good to work is not good enough to be a preacher.

Do not make yourself a burden to the family who is good enough to give you a home. Wait on yourself. Feed, water, and curry your own horse. Go to the barn and catch, harness, and hitch him up, or saddle him, yourself. The exercise will be good for you. Slip out to the woodpile and put in some time chopping stove wood. That will toughen your muscles, give vigor to the brain, and be conducive to good health, and keep folks from calling you "lazy."

When I first began to try to preach, an old preacher, who has gone on to his reward, gave me something like the following advice: "Do not try to preach sermons on the book of Revelation. Wait until you have studied it carefully. Do not conclude that you understand it too soon. I have been studying it for fifty years and do not understand it yet." I tried to follow his advice. I have read several books, written by men of learning, in which they claimed to set forth the true teaching and correct interpretation of the figures of John, Daniel, and Ezekiel, but they all differed from each other in many points. It seems that some young men of the present age have concluded that the Lord, through the wonderful workings of his grace, has more highly favored them with wisdom than the wisest of the past, to give the correct meaning of these things. But, strange to say, much of the teaching which they are inclined to appropriate to themselves was taught by some before the vessel that contains their reputed wisdom came into existence or became so expanded. I do not mean to say that there is no truth for a young man to learn. He can learn much. But do not become vain and egotistical enough to conclude that you are the only one that knows it. Always hold yourself open to conviction, ready and willing to be taught, and remember that as great, if not greater, men have traveled the road you are traveling.

Your audiences, in the main, will be made up of people who need to be taught the plain and simple truths of the gospel. They may come in automobiles, in surreys, in buggies, and in different ways, and may be dressed in the most up-to-date styles, and may demand short, flowery, entertaining sermons about things foreign to spiritual life and growth; but "preach the word." (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.) Give heed to Paul's advice to Timothy: "Give attention to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. Meditate upon these things [all Paul had written to him]; give thyself wholly to them [not just on Sundays]; that thy profiting may appear to all. Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine [not speculative theories]; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." (1 Tim. 4: 13-17.)

If you are going out to do the work of an evangelist, study the letters to Timothy and Titus earnestly, carefully, and prayerfully, to learn your duty as such. There is no need for one to not know his duty. It is a shame for one to undertake to point out the duty of others when he has not learned his own duty. Seek to please God and not men. If men cast you off because you will not conform to the world, remember that it is better to be cast out by men than for God to cast you out into outer darkness.

In writing these letters, my purpose has not been to complain nor to rebuke, but to admonish and advise. If I have advised, in any respect, contrary to the Holy Truth, reject that and hold to only such as may be found to be good. Perilous times are upon us, and the cause of our blessed Redeemer is suffering for lack of real spirituality, love, devotion, sacrifice, and obedience on the part of those who claim to be Christians. Those who will stand true must stand with the minority. It will take strong faith to stand the strain. Be an example to the unbelievers.

Divergent Views.

BY C. E. HOLT,

This article was suggested by a very thoughtful man of the world, as we are accustomed to speak of them. I here give the substance of some remarks he made to me not many moons since, and which remarks have caused me to make a careful survey of the route over which we have traveled, and which reaches back to the beginning of the nineteenth century—a period of time covering and including about four generations. It would seem that this is at least a part of the time mentioned by the prophet Daniel when he said: "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." (Dan. 12: 4.)

Mr. A— said to me: "Brother Holt, why is it that your people hold so many divergent views on Bible questions? They all seem to be trying to follow the Bible, and they seem to be of one mind in regarding the Bible the only rule and guide in religion; but their differences among themselves are as great as are the differences among the denominations against which they made war in the beginning of their work in the United States about a hundred years ago. I have read the Christian Baptist and a few volumes of the Millennial Harbinger, and was greatly impressed with them, but it seems that your people have failed to keep pace with the movement set on foot by the first preachers of your church. I do not read any of your papers now. I have not read any of your papers since the controversy between the Gospel Advocate and a man in Texas over the rebaptism question. I am told that that Texas man became the recognized leader of a distinct faction in Texas. I have been told that you now have two main divisions, and also a number of subdivisions. It seems that the utopian dreams of your people to unite the religious world have proven to be a fiasco."

It sometimes helps us to know what others think of us. It enables us to see ourselves as others see us. Friendly criticism is helpful if received in the proper spirit.

When what is called the great "restoration movement" was begun in the first part of the nineteenth century, religion was in a very chaotic state. What is called "Protestantism," a great force which had grown up as a result of the work of Wycliffe, Luther, Calvin, Knox, and others in their protest against Romanism, was divided into a number of warring sects which were fighting and devouring each other, and thus, in a large measure, rendering their efforts to restore primitive Christianity nugatory and ineffective. While some were building up, others equally zealous and pious were engaged in tearing down. Almost all the religious bodies were hampered by creeds or humanly devised standards of doctrine and church polity, which made it utterly impossible for them to make any further progress in Christianity without laying themselves open to the grave charge of heresy and disloyalty. Many of the preachers of that time were ignorant of the message of salvation and had substituted the fickleness and delusiveness of the feelings or emotions for an intelligent faith. The gospel ordinances were perverted and taken from their proper settings. The Bible was interpreted in the light of human creeds and human formularies. There was a feeling of great dissatisfaction among a large number of people in many of the most prominent denominations.

The attitude assumed by the first recognized leaders of the Restoration movement had much to do in molding the minds of the future friends and adherents of the movement, especially their attitude toward the Protestant denominations of the day. All were of one mind in regard to Roman Catholicism, but they differed among themselves as to the relationship of the different religious bodies to the church of the New Testament. One of the first, and also one of the most vital, questions with which the first preachers among us had to deal was in relation to our attitude toward the already-existing religious bodies. They reasoned about this way: If we are set for a complete restoration of apostolic teaching and practice—in other words, if we stand for a complete reproduction of the New Testament church—how should we feel and act toward the religious bodies which are wearing unscriptural names, and which are teaching and practicing many things antagonistic to the spirit and genius of the New Testament church—things which are post-apostolic and resting solely upon the authority of councils and conventions of un-inspired men?

It was seen and appreciated by some of the greatest and clearest-minded men among us that the leading Protestant denominations held vital truths in common with each other; that these truths were of vital importance, not because they were held by the different religious bodies of the day, but because they came from, and belong to, the great reservoir of truth, the word of God. By reason of this fact it was held that upon the truths held in common by the different religious bodies, particular emphasis should be placed—not so much from the fact that the religious bodies held these truths, but because these truths are divinely essential and essentially divine, and are, therefore, a part of Christianity itself.

Only the things which were distinctively denominational were to be rejected by the body ecclesiastic.

Upon this idea was based another, and one which proved to be of far-reaching consequences. It was the possibility and the feasibility of Christian union, such as that for which our Savior prayed. The truths which the denominations held in common were to be given full credit and force, and only the opinions of men which had been exalted into conditions of fellowship and of church membership were to be given up, and these, not because they were hurtful within themselves privately held, but because they had been allowed to occupy a place of equal value with matters of faith. At this point a clear discrimination was sought to be made between matters of faith and matters of opinion. Many of the most consecrated and most illustrious preachers of the day accepted this view of the situation, and their sermons on Christian union were so charmingly sweet and so convincingly strong in logic and reason and scriptural appeal that multitudes were drawn to them, and the great work, like an avalanche, swept large sections of country into the greatest movement since Pentecost.

There were others connected with this reformatory and restorative work whose attitude toward the Protestant religious bodies was essentially different from the leaders just mentioned.

These leaders held rigidly and tenaciously to the idea that the different religious bodies are the ecclesiastical children of Rome; that the Roman Catholic Church is the great harlot of John's vision on Patmos, and the Protestant denominations are the offspring of her harlotry. At this point I wish to call attention to the teaching of some very zealous men whom I first heard preach what was then vulgarly styled "Campbellism." They interpreted the language in Rev. 13: 18 as a symbolic description of the sects in Christendom. As the number of the beast was six hundred and sixty-six, so there are just six hundred and sixty-six denominations to-day. I accepted this view, thinking that the preachers certainly knew what they affirmed, and did not know any better until I made an investigation of the matter. I found this to be a partisan and unwarranted view of the facts. There are fewer than two hundred denominations, counting every little party in the world. But the teaching of those who took this latter view of the matter was, in a sense, very different from the teaching of the more charitably inclined and of the more liberal-minded leaders. This latter class of leaders admitted that the denominations held to many truths, but that these truths were vitiated and rendered nugatory by the errors held in connection with the truth. Assuming this attitude toward the religious bodies of the day, they could not with consistency enter into the great work of Christian union which was so strongly featured by the former class of leaders. Hence there has grown up two very diverse and very distinct types of people whose aims and purposes are the same, so far as the restoration of primitive Christianity is concerned, but whose policy as to methods of accomplishment are radically and fundamentally different. There are lesser and smaller bodies within these two, but these two leading elements constitute the greatest forces to be reckoned with in our investigation of the subject. These two elements are agreed, and have always been agreed, upon the unity of God, the Lordship of Jesus, the mission and work of the Holy Spirit, the integrity and all-sufficiency of the Old and New Testaments, the conditions of salvation, and the importance of the church as the only divine institution through which to reach and save the world.

OF

ADVANCED ON JANUARY 1, 1917.

It is generally understood that everything that goes into the production of a newspaper has increased in price tremendously. These increases range all the way from 50 per cent to 200 per cent. White paper has over doubled in value and is scarce at any price; wrappers for the Gospel Advocate have more than doubled in price; inks of all kinds have advanced in price out of all reason; and so it goes all along the line.

As a matter of self-preservation and protection, it is absolutely necessary that we raise the price on January 1, 1917, to $2 per annum.

We will accept renewal and new subscriptions at the present price—NOW!

We will deal just as fairly and liberally with our present subscribers as possible, and so will accept renewal subscriptions, no matter when the subscription expires, at $1.50 for one year and $3 for two years, provided these subscriptions reach us on or before January 1, 1917. New subscribers accepted NOW at $1.50 a year for one year only, in advance.

We advise, as we say, no matter when your subscription expires, that you send us your renewal for one or two years at $1.50 a year, and send it just as early as possible. We will soon be very busy entering thousands upon thousands of subscriptions between now and January 1, 1917. It is your last chance to get the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year.

However, we shall not ask you to bear all of this extra expense without any corresponding benefit; we shall bear at least a fair proportion. The fact that we cannot afford to longer publish the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year necessitated either making the paper smaller or raising the price and making it larger and better. Our space does not now adequately meet the demands made upon it, so it would be suicidal to cut down the size of the paper. We decided that you were the kind of readers that would prefer a better and a larger paper. So on January 1, 1917, or soon thereafter, the paper will be enlarged to 32 pages. Our purpose is to make the Gospel Advocate the brightest and best religious paper in all the country.

Will you please give this your immediate attention?

A Trip to Naini Tal, in Northern India.

BY W. HUME M'HENRY.

To go into details and describe our trip in all of its bearings would be to ask for more space from the publishers than I feel justified in asking for; so I want to be as brief as possible, in order to mention as many things as possible in the smallest space.

Soon after our arrival, Brother Jelley said that after the summer's work we would need a rest, and that we would make a visit to Naini Tal, in Northern India, something like one thousand miles from here. During the summer very little was thought or said about the proposed journey, more than to suggest that it be made in November, after the close of the rainy season. We had worked as hard as we knew how in acquainting ourselves with our work, and felt that really we needed a little rest. One who is very much interested in the work in this field and elsewhere writes very often, warning us to take good care of ourselves, adding that he thinks that more years on the field and not quite so much accomplished each year is much better than to overwork the first few years and have to be driven from the field. But the time came for us to go before November. News came to us that there were two persons in that region who wanted to be baptized. So, as soon as arrangements for the trip could be made, we left for Naini Tal on Monday.

Before leaving, I set the type and printed about four thousand copies of a good tract on "Seeing God." Besides this, we carried quite a number of English tracts and a large bundle of old papers which had accumulated. As we went through Bombay, I purchased one thousand copies of scripture portions. At Muttea (a holy city among the Hindus) we had to change trains. Here we lost the bundle containing the greater part of our tracts. At first we regretted this; but, after taking a second thought, we feel sure that God saw where they were most needed, and we believe that he will place them where they will do much good. On Thursday we reached Kathgodam, at the foot of the mountains. From here we ascended to Naini Tal. Modi Singh, a brother of Umrao Singh, lives at Kathgodam. We learned from him that his brother was intending to come to Kathgodam on the following day. So we decided to remain there and rest. We remained there until Sunday morning; but Brother Umrao Singh did not come, and we decided to pursue our journey. We secured a coolie to carry such luggage as we thought we would have to use and started out to climb the mountain. It was only about twelve miles; so we thought we could easily make the trip in one day. It was a rather warm day, but by taking it easy we were able to reach a little village about two miles from Brother Umrao Singh's about eight o'clock. Here we camped for the night. It is needless to say that we saw much scenery that was indeed beautiful; for one who has been in the mountains knows that, if ever in his life, he is then impressed that God is, and that all things are through him. But one thing attracted our attention as well as excited our pity. We beheld a tree filled with strings of every description. I asked: "What does this mean?" Brother Jelley said: "Each string represents a prayer. The one placing it there is relieved of the trouble of making this petition again by saying it one time and hanging it on the tree, so that as long as he lives his petition will be repeated by the wind moving the string." Were these people all savages and ignoramuses? No doubt many of them were educated, and by the color of the strings we knew that some of them were the holy priests in their religion. They are bound by the chains of darkness. They are in the position that the whole Gentile world was in when Christ came. One thing they lack, and that is a knowledge of Jesus Christ, the Light of the world. Few times do we stop to think that, had not men of God in the days gone by made almost untold sacrifices to have the gospel preached to us, we would to-day be in the same condition that the other Christless countries are in.

"If others to us such mercy have shown,
Let us to others this message make known."

Late in the evening we stopped on the side of the road and broke bread. I spoke for a short time on the language of Paul: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." On Monday morning we reached the home of Brother Umrao Singh, only to find that on Lord's day he went to Kathgodam. But in a few minutes he arrived, for, having been told of our arrival, he at once started back home. We spent one week with him and were very hospitably entertained. We remained with them to break bread on the following Lord's day, and enjoyed the service very much. We found them seemingly very devoted to one another and to God. From Brother Umrao Singh's home we had to make a steep climb of several hundred feet to reach Naini Tal proper. We found it very vigorous exercise, but we enjoyed it and feel sure that it will do us much good. We found a very beautiful little city hid away in the mountains, and by means of a kodak we brought back several interesting views by which to remember our trip. On Sunday afternoon we started again for Kathgodam, this time by a vehicle called an "ekha." It is a very small, light, one-horse vehicle to accommodate three passengers going down the grade and only two in going up. I must say that it was a most exciting ride, and we feel that God was indeed gracious to us in sparing us through such a ride. At each turn of the road I felt that we would be hurled over an embankment. In coming a distance of about thirteen miles we rode behind about four or five horses, as they changed every three or four miles. But while we were not changing horses we were going at a terrific rate of speed.

We reached home sixteen days from the time we started, and felt much better after having rested for a while from our labors in language study.

In Tokyo there are said to be twenty-four self-supporting churches, as follows: Congregationalist, 4; Presbyterian, 10; Methodist, 6; Episcopal, 4. One of the Congregational churches gives about fifteen hundred dollars a year for all purposes and has a membership of about a thousand, half of whom are scattered, while only about half are in attendance. About the same figures would represent one of the Presbyterian churches. The other self-supporting churches are smaller. The church of which I have given particulars is about nineteen years old and has had "Dr. Ebina" as its "pastor" from the beginning. The same is true of the largest Presbyterian church, which from the start has had only one "pastor," Mr. Uemura.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

The Wise Man and the Fool.

Of course, God knows; hence we can rely with absolute confidence upon anything he says. In the writing of Solomon, he has much to say in the way of describing the wise man and the fool. "Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee: rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee." (Prov. 9: 8.) Quite a contrast in these two men! Identically the same thing has exactly the opposite effect on each: the rebuke or correction making one love you and the other hate you. But hear Solomon again: "The way of a fool is right in his own eyes: but he that hearkeneth unto counsel is wise." (Prov. 12: 15.) And more still: "The ear that heareth the reproof of life abideth among the wise." (Prov. 15: 31.) "The ear of the wise seeketh knowledge." (Prov. 18: 15.)

Now, just look around you to-day, and the wise men and the fools you will see. Some love to learn, appreciate suggestions and also corrections; but others love to feel that they know, hence despise your suggestions and hate you for trying to correct them. Please to observe the spirit of the two. Look at the expression in the face of each. Do you note the difference? In the former there is a calm, gentle, loving, sweet expression, I care not how rough the general features of that face may be or howsoever wrinkled with age; but in the latter you see everything but beauty, it matters not how smooth the skin or how perfect the features may be. One has God behind that face that pushes himself through and so fills your eyes with the sunshine of his presence that you cannot see the wrinkles, etc., while the other has Satan behind it that pushes himself through and destroys even the beauty that may be there ever from perfection of form.

But the occasion of this short article on the wise man and the fool is this: Recently I sent a short letter to one of our workers in this State. I wondered if he was making the mistakes that I used to make—viz., not being as careful as he should to preach the gospel in the gentle and kind spirit. So I wrote him and told him of the mistakes I used to make and suggested the rule by which I now am governed: (1) Let no man stay closer to the "one Book" than I do in all my preaching; (2) let no man be kinder and more gentle than I am when trying to show others their errors. Here is his reply: "I thank you, my brother, for your suggestions, and assure you I love to be advised and shall profit by it."

This does not mean that we have to take every suggestion made by others and consider their every correction well founded. I have had suggestions made that I knew well were not practical, and corrections offered that I knew were not well founded. But if my heart is right with God, I will never become angry with any one for trying to correct me, when he does it in the spirit of gentleness and love. God hasten the day when every child of God will have that love for the other that he will kindly give corrections to others and as gladly receive such from others. How timely the words of Paul: "Let brotherly love continue!" (Heb. 13: 1.)

No Excuse for Such Blunders.

Recently I was called upon to meet a Baptist minister, near Villa Rica, Ga., in a short discussion. My speech was prefaced by the divine rule by which all ministers should be governed in their teaching—namely: (1) Preach only what is revealed on each subject we handle (Deut. 29: 29); (2) preach all that is revealed on that subject (Acts 20: 27); (3) be careful to make no additions to the revelation nor subtraction therefrom (Deut. 4: 2; Rev. 22: 18, 19). I then proceeded to tell the people what God says about the church that Christ built. In this, of course, it was clearly shown that it was the house of God, and, as such, rested on Christ as the rock foundation. (1 Tim. 3: 15; Matt. 16: 18; 1 Cor. 3: 11.) The point was made that no soul could rest on Christ as the rock foundation and refuse to become a part of the building that rests upon him. Too, it was shown that the church is the body of Christ, and that Christ sustains a relationship to that body comparable to the relationship that my head sustains to my body. (Eph. 1: 22, 23; Col. 1: 18, 24.) The point then was made that the only way we could sustain that living, vital union with Christ that is so essential to the welfare of our souls is by becoming members of this body that Jesus is connected with as Head. The necessity of our becoming members of the church of Christ was emphasized, and the point made that not one symbol or illustration did Jesus ever use or make of his church that does not show this. Our friend, when he took the floor, frankly admitted that I had said many good things, and that what I had said was true of the invisible church; that it was absolutely essential to salvation, but the visible church was not. Thus he belabored himself on the "visible" and "invisible" churches—one essential and the other nonessential. Then off into the impossibility of apostasy he went, saying that every true child of God was in this invisible church and could never fall, and, as proof, Rom. 9: 38, 39 was introduced.

When I came back to the floor, I simply reminded the audience of the divine rule given above, and stated that all the division in the religious world was due to the fact that preachers would not abide by it. I then turned to my opponent and asked him: "Where in all the Bible does God say one thing about a 'visible' and an 'invisible' church?" Imagine his chagrin when not one reference could he give. I then quoted the scriptures that declare that the church is the body of Christ, and also that there is "but one body." (1 Cor. 12: 20.) He was teaching two churches or bodies, one visible and the other invisible. There is no excuse for such blunders as this. Then, as to the impossibility of apostasy, I told him that the divine rule not only required us to preach only what is revealed, but to preach all that is revealed on the subject we study. I then called his attention to the fact that in speaking of our being separated from God, he had given only a partial revelation; that in Rom. 9: 38, 39 Paul was telling us what could not separate us from the love of God, and that we should preach that to the people. But the Bible has something to say about what can separate us from God; and, too, if we declare the whole counsel of God, we must preach that also. Isaiah says: "But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." There is nothing easier than just preaching the word as you find it in the Bible—and, too, all that God has to say on a subject.

"Our Dun's and Bradstreet's" and Centralization.

BY M. C. K.

There are some interesting developments appearing now in the columns of the Christian Standard concerning the inevitable tendency of even the most innocent form of centralization in religion. That eminent journal, and all other forces that may undertake the task, will lead a forlorn fight against the evils now confronting it in the management and tendencies of the missionary society as long as they are committed by such a society to the principle of centralization. It is useless to mince words or to take a halfway position here, for the New Testament not only makes no provision for centralized authority in religion, but there is not within its pages the slightest vestige of general organization, which is the only soil in which centralization can grow.

In 1910, in its heroic and timely effort to oppose and forestall the establishment of a general convention or delegated ecclesiastical body among the disciples of Christ, the Standard said:

The Scriptures know nothing of power or authority delegated by the churches, or of any body or organization acting in their name or by their authority. To attempt it is to discard the Scriptures as insufficient; to introduce a human institution as superior to the independent church of the New Testament; to give an aggregation of churches an authority superior to that of a single church, the highest ecclesiastical authority known to the word of God.

Commenting on this candid admission, the Gospel Advocate, in its discussion of the society question with the Christian Standard at that time, said:

So far as we are concerned, we have no sympathy either with delegated conventions in religion or with centralized power in modern missionary societies, which open the way for them: Much in the way of machination, plotting, scheming, browbeating and trickery, goes on in the operation of such societies, of which the churches, which support them, know nothing, and the Standard itself, in the effort to make out its own case in the present instance, is compelled to admit this; and it begs, in its issue of July 23, 1910, "to submit as evidence" of it "some bits of a correspondence" which it now has in its possession.

The very same autocratic and dictatorial letter from a missionary society official which the Standard has recently published, in its issue of July 15, 1916, it published then as far back as July, 1910, and we reproduced in full the officious and impertinent letter in our issue of August 11, 1910. We here requote a paragraph from that notable missionary society edict to a preacher of the gospel:

While writing to you, there are two things that I have in mind to say. First, if you wish to fill the highest place among us, one thing is needed. That is to develop in your people the grace of giving. Have your people double their offerings from year to year. The Methodist Church promotes or degrades a man as he does or does not see that all the benevolences of the church are properly attended to. We do the same thing, but in a different way.

The Christian Standard continues to grapple with the same rapidly growing evil, and in its issue of August 26, 1916, "as a contribution to an issue that is already of the first magnitude," it publishes a long letter of complaint from a preacher of the gospel, who it says "is among the most powerful in our evangelistic ministry," and from this letter we quote the following excerpt:

I have long realized that there is lurking danger in these organized societies. Can any one question the truth of this statement who reads the article just referred to? But what are we preachers to do? What can we do? Year by year the net is being closer drawn, and more and more good men are being driven out of the ministry who shrink from participation in this worldly-wise and conscienceless scheme for "holding up" churches and individuals in the name of Christian missions. The danger no longer "lurks." It has developed into a well-organized, shrewdly manipulated, and wonderfully successful scheme. . . . This "system" is not alone of the Foreign Missionary Society. We preachers know that every one of our "organized interests" is "in on the scheme," even down to the State secretaries. They have to be, or lose their jobs. The State secretaries are at the mercy of the national secretaries. Not one of them could long continue in his office were he to rebel against the system, or even fail to cooperate with it. . . . Another time and in another State we were being considered with a view to being called, along with others, as is usually the case, with our churches and boards. This was also a state that "articulated" with the A. C. M. S. One of the men being considered was commended, and was being urged by the A. C. M. S. secretary. For reasons which doubtless seemed sufficient, the board made choice of myself as the man for the position. For this piece of independence on the part of the board, the then national secretary proceeded to reprimand, in no uncertain terms, said board for daring to "pass up" his man.

Now, is not that an inviting picture of ecclesiastical affairs among a people professing to be engaged in a movement to restore the New Testament order of things! On the general situation, we here reproduce the Gospel Advocate's comment called out by that official letter in 1910:

There you have it! The Standard refers to it as "proffers of program honors and official favor." Exactly so! But what about such "officials," anyway? The New Testament knows nothing of them and makes no provision for them. Outside of the local church, which divine wisdom provided, with a board of supervisors, there is no provision made in the New Testament for "a missionary official," or any other kind of an "official," from whom any such letter could be written to a brother preacher. And will the Standard please bear in mind that what the officious writer of this letter and his sympathizers are trying to bring about in a delegated convention is the better to prepare themselves for doing more effectively what they are already doing in a limited way in the societies? Why not nip the thing in the bud by doing away with all general organization, not a vestige of which is found in the New Testament?

We take occasion to add that, as long as our Cincinnati contemporary remains committed to the principle of centralization, to which principle it and all others who adopt the modern missionary society or any other form of general organization are committed, just that long it will have to face and deal with the evil of which it now complains. Man is a fallible creature, extremely liable to become the victim of unholy ambition and thirst for power, whether in church or in state. God knew this, and hence provided an ecclesiastical organization which reduces the possibility of such an evil to a minimum. That ecclesiastical organization is a local church, with its divinely appointed board of overseers and managers, which the Standard admits is "the highest ecclesiastical authority known to the word of God." Hence, when it says, "The question raised by our correspondent, 'What is to be done?' demands something more than passing comment. It calls for action." we most heartily agree; but, instead of attempting to remedy the evil by forming "a protective association," the Gospel Advocate pleads for an abolition and abandonment of all general organization and, hence, all centralization of power in religion, and for a complete return to the independence of the local church as unquestionably set forth in the New Testament, and thus, as suggested in our former comment, "nip the thing in the bud." Then, and only then, will preachers be rated not by this modern "Dun and Bradstreet" standard in the hands of an officious and unauthorized dictator, but by God's board with God's Book as the standard of measurement. The divinely appointed board of overseers and managers in each local church is an expression of God's wisdom on organization, and here we take our stand and plead for a complete restoration of this New Testament order. Even in this arrangement, and in this divinely appointed board, men can and do sometimes become "perverse" and attempt "to draw away the disciples after them" (Acts 20: 30); but the only organization through which they can operate being local and limited, their power for evil is curtailed and reduced to a minimum. We again call upon our beloved and highly esteemed contemporary of the "Queen City" to stand with us on this safe, sane, and sound position.

Brother S. H. Hall's Article of August 31.

BY E. A. E.

"CAN WE CHANGE THESE CONDITIONS?"

Under this heading Brother Hall's article appeared. Let us read it again.

Again I most heartily commend his timely and sound advice: "Preach 'the whole counsel of God' on the preacher question." (Emphasis his.) Then I ask:

1. What does God teach on the subject of preparing men to preach and on supporting preachers?
2. Would God place upon his church so great a responsibility of preparing men to preach the gospel without giving all necessary instruction as to how to do so?
3. Has not God in his wisdom and goodness taught on these questions all that is necessary for his church to know and to do, and has he not left them just as he sees best?
4. Can we go beyond his word on these questions to do more or less?
5. Since God has given a way of preparing men to preach, is it not as great sin to depart from that way as it is to depart from his way of having the preaching done, or doing "missionary work?"
6. Is not a human institution for making preachers as much an impeachment of the wisdom of God as a human institution for having the preaching done?

7. Can any man defend human institutions for making preachers without using identically the same arguments which are made in defending missionary societies?

8. "If any man wills to do his will" (John 7: 16, 17) on these questions, can he not learn what God's will is?

Brother Hall begins his article with the following quotation from a letter to him:

But there seems to be little inducement to young men of ability to prepare themselves to preach, and little inducement to schools to help such young men. The idea seems to be that young men should become preachers by accident—and not to be too much of a preacher, at that; to be farmer-preachers, drummer-preachers, teacher-preachers, or merchant-preachers. Hence, most young men are preparing themselves to follow some profitable business, while the King's business goes begging. Can we do anything to change these conditions?

Every line of this quotation is contrary to the word of God.

First, a world full of sinners, "the harvest indeed . . . plenteous," "the laborers few," prayers ascending to God to "send forth laborers into his harvest," heaven, perdition, and the salvation of souls, and "there seems to be little inducement to young men of ability to prepare themselves to preach!" There may be, then, inducement to young men not of ability. The warnings and hope of the gospel, the life and sacrifice of the Savior, the mercy and love of God, everlasting destruction, eternal life—all exhausted, and "there seems to be little inducement to young men of ability to prepare themselves to preach!" Since all these seem "little inducement," what would seem great inducement? There can be no other inducement except a worldly one—the love of money and popularity. We do not wonder that in the wisdom and goodness of God we read in the New Testament solemn warnings against making merchandise of the churches (2 Pet. 2: 3), turning godliness into a way of gain (1 Tim. 6: 5), teaching things which should not be taught for filthy lucre's sake (Tit. 1: 10, 11), and going in the way of Balaam for hire (2 Pet. 2: 15). Woe unto all "young men of ability" who consider money, an education, an easy place, a fat job, greater inducements to preach than Bible motives—the love of God and salvation of souls! Then, this declaration is contrary to the word of God. It is not only contrary to the word of God, but sets it aside, because it says that the gospel of Christ offers but "little inducement to young men of ability" to preach it. This means that God has not offered adequate inducement to "young men of ability to prepare themselves to preach," or seeks their service without offering sufficient reward.

Since the souls of men cannot be redeemed with silver and gold and worlds of material wealth, but must be redeemed with the "precious blood" of Christ (1 Pet. 1: 18, 19), then silver and gold and material wealth cannot pay or reward faithful and godly men for their great work in saving souls; hence God does not offer this as an inducement. For this reason Paul declares that after sowing spiritual things it is no great thing to reap carnal things; the one is inestimably greater than the other. No good and worthy preacher of the gospel can be paid in money for the good he accomplishes in saving souls. Saving souls is not a money consideration and cannot be put on a money basis; God does not place this work on such a basis. Woe unto churches or "young men of ability" who seek to do this! Churches and individual Christians should delight to have fellowship in furtherance of the gospel and to support well all faithful preachers, especially the old ones, who have spent and been spent in this great and good work. Churches should rally to them and support them well. Let it be said loud and long, clear and strong, that it is Paul himself who declares by inspiration that God has ordained that he who preaches the gospel shall live of the gospel, even as the priests who served at the altar lived of the things of the altar; that the ox, when he treads out the corn, must not be muzzled; that no soldier serves at his own charges; that the laborer is worthy of his hire; that he who plants a vineyard must be the first to partake of its fruit; that he who tends a flock must be a partaker of its milk; that the elders who rule well must be counted worthy of double honor, especially the ones who "labor in the word and in teaching;" and that men should give themselves wholly to the work of preaching. Any one who teaches contrary to this teaches contrary to the Bible. But God declares that elders, for instance, as well as preachers, must not make the money they receive the consideration—"not of constraint, but willingly, according to the will of God; nor yet for filthy lucre's sake, but of a ready mind." (1 Pet. 5: 2, 3.)

But Paul's life was not inconsistent with his teaching. While he waived his right at times to a support, he never made the support a motive for preaching or an inducement to do so. Faithful and godly preachers should be well supported and cannot be too well cared for. Any one of many I could name has done more missionary work—started and built up more churches—in his section of country than the whole missionary society in the same section. Such men should not only be counted "worthy of double honor" while laboring "in the word and in teaching," but should be tenderly and fully and freely cared for even down to old age. But, while this is true, a man who cannot see the difference between making the support and saving souls the motive for preaching, or the inducement, can never become prepared to preach. No man who knows anything of the teaching of the Bible will speak or write against all faithful and godly preachers' living of the gospel and giving themselves wholly to this great work, and no man who knows anything of the teaching of the Bible and the love of God will say the support is the inducement. The man who cannot see this difference is incapable of correctly representing another; he is not a man of ability to preach.

Some very able and godly men have found sufficient inducement in the gospel to turn away from a "profitable business," Paul-like, in order to devote their whole lives to preaching the gospel—to give themselves wholly to the work. It has just occurred to me that the ability of the young men referred to may be overestimated. What kind of ability is necessary to preach the gospel? There are different kinds of ability. Different things are required to constitute ability to preach the gospel. Love of truth, love of souls, love of God, sincere and deep convictions of right, faith unfeigned in Jesus Christ, a clear and sensitive conscience, and being "full of goodness" and "filled with all knowledge" of "him that called us by his own glory and virtue" (see Rom. 15: 14; 2 Pet. 1: 3) are some of the component parts of the ability necessary to preach the gospel. There are different standards of ability, and we must be measured by God's standard. Satan has great ability; so has his ministers. Barnabas was a man of ability, being "a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and faith." (Acts 11: 24.)

But there is now great inducement to young men and to old men to preach the gospel—as great inducement as has been since Jesus came to seek the lost and died to save sinners. Peter and Andrew, James and John, Matthew and Paul, Barnabas and Timothy, Silas and Titus, and numerous others were "young men of ability," who were induced by godly motives to preach the gospel. They had a "profitable business" before they began to preach, but left it in order to preach. Jesus offered the very greatest possible inducement when he said to the four fishermen,

"Come after me, and I will make you fishers of men;" when he called Matthew from "the place of toll" to follow him; and when he moved Paul to give up all he had by inheritance, all he had gained by natural ability and application, and the popularity and standing among men to which he had attained by industry and zeal, and to "count all things to be loss" and "but refuse" "for the excellency of Christ."

For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of glorying? Are not even ye, before our Lord Jesus at his coming? For ye are our glory and our joy. (1 Thess. 2: 19, 20.)

Paul declared that the Philippians also were his crown (Phil. 4: 1), and that the inducement to him to "endure all things" was that sinners might be rescued and "obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." (2 Tim. 2: 10.) Paul felt and declared: "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel."

Is Paul's life a back number? He says no little about the example he set. (Please see 1 Cor. 4: 16; 1 Cor. 11: 1; 2 Thess. 3: 9; Acts 20: 35.) Must his example in all things be followed, except his motive for preaching, or the inducement to do so? Must this one example be set aside? Is not this example consistent with his teaching? Is his life out of harmony with the word of God? One young man, whether of ability or not, wanted to affirm in discussion with me that Paul in making tents while preaching was without "divine sanction," or words to that effect.

This first declaration contains almost identically the same language used by advocates of the societies about twenty-five years ago. Their papers abounded with just such talk of inducing "young men of ability to prepare themselves to preach" and with appeals to help schools to offer sufficient inducement to seek the necessary education. They argued just as this quotation does that "young men of ability" should be supported in schools while "preparing themselves to preach." They assumed, just as this quotation does, that schools, and not the church, are the places in which to make such preparation. To-day many who oppose the societies are making the same appeals, as this quotation shows. But men of the societies to-day gravely declare that these "young men of ability," who twenty-five years ago were thus induced "to prepare themselves to preach," now are twisting money out of churches and individuals in the name of Christian missions. Having prepared themselves by this inducement to preach, the same inducement must be increased in order to keep them in "the ministry." So in less than twenty-five years from now the "young men of ability" who must be induced by a money consideration to even "prepare themselves to preach," although they may oppose societies, will require more of the same inducement to continue to preach, will crowd back the elders, will call them "bosses" (that is just what some of the society workers began to call them years ago), will put the churches under the one-man-pastor system in the name of "the regular minister," will destroy in them all individual service and responsibility, and will likewise twist the money out of them in the name of religion. It is as true as that effect follows cause that when it requires money and fleshly comfort and ease to induce young men to even prepare to preach, it will require more of the same kind of inducement to keep them preaching. It is also just as true that still more of the same kind of inducement will cause them to turn to a more "profitable business." There cannot be a more blighting curse fastened upon the churches than "young men of ability" who must be induced by money considerations to "prepare themselves to preach"—and to seek the preparation, too, which is not taught by the Lord in his church, but such as is found in schools built for that purpose. (To be continued.)

Magnifying Differences.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

The Christian believes in Christ and not in doctrines. The great truth that he believes was expressed for the first time on the banks of the Jordan when a voice from heaven said: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. 3: 17.) The same truth was confessed by Peter when he said: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." (Matt. 16: 16.) The gospel was written in order that we may believe in the Christ. "Many other signs therefore did Jesus in the presence of the disciples, which are not written in this book: but these are written, that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye may have life in his name." (John 20: 30, 31.)

It may be well to emphasize again the fact that Christ is the foundation of the church, and that he is our Prophet, Priest, and King. As our Prophet, he is our infallible guide and teacher; as our Priest, he is our only intercessor; and as our King, he is our only ruler. As our Prophet, we must hear what he says; as our Priest, we must implicitly trust the efficacy of his intercession for us; and as our King, we must unflinchingly and loyally do what he commands us to do. Christ is the foundation of the church. "For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. 3: 11.)

The Scriptures thoroughly furnish us unto every good work; but the church is not built upon the Scriptures, nor do they have the power within themselves to save. They make us wise unto salvation; they lead us unto Christ, who alone can save us. So we see faith is personal, not doctrinal. The Scriptures teach that to believe with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, is all that is necessary, so far as faith goes, in order to salvation. No man has the promise of salvation who does not believe with all his heart that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God. When he believes this truth, he accepts Christ as divine, and, accepting him as divine, he concedes his authority to control his conduct and life. He repents of his sins and is baptized because Christ commands him to repent and be baptized. Then follows a life of faith, hope, obedience, love, and prayer. "We love, because he first loved us."

Christ prayed that the world might be one. "Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us: that the world may believe that thou didst send me." (John 17: 20, 21.) Christians should be one in accepting this: "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all." (Eph. 4: 4.) Alexander Campbell, appreciating the simplicity that is in Christ, thought that the denominations would throw away their creeds and all become one in faith in Christ Jesus. It was not his purpose to found another denomination, but to unite all Christians in the one body of Christ. Men could differ in opinions, but opinions should not be made tests of fellowship. Those who held opinions peculiar to themselves and things which were not the fundamentals of salvation should hold them as private property. "The faith [conviction] which thou hast, have thou to thyself before God." (Rom. 14: 22.) His idea was that as denominationalism faded away a brighter era would dawn for the church. With this thought in his mind, he named his publication the "Millennial Harbinger." But the denominations held on to their creeds and declined to give up their denominationalism. The "Disciples of Christ" were not always consistent with their plea for Christian union. The unreasonable opposition and bitter persecution which they so freely encountered at times led them to contend for certain things which it is not necessary to believe in order to be saved. The Bible clearly teaches that the person who believes and is baptized and lives a faithful Christian will be saved in heaven. He will be saved even if he does not know how the Holy Spirit operates. It is God who operates the Holy Spirit. When a man does what Christ commands him to do, God will take care of the work of the Holy Spirit. Hence our chief concern should be to do just what God bids us to do. We should not disfellowship a man who complies with the conditions of salvation, simply because he fails to understand some things connected with the divine side of salvation. The Campbells understood this. So when Aylett Raines believed the gospel and was baptized, they encouraged him to go forward in living the Christian life, even though he held the erroneous views that all men would finally be made holy and saved. Mr. Raines says of himself: "From the period at which I embraced the primitive form of sound words, I was resolved to take no position upon any doctrinal point, far removed from the death and resurrection of Christ, and to insist upon nothing as an article of union and communion which God had not required as a condition of salvation. These with me constituted the central point in Christianity, the divinely powerful, the transcendently glorious magnet around which all our Christian affections should revolve and to which all Christians should be attracted in one body having one faith, one Spirit, one hope, one baptism, one Lord, one God and Father of all Christians." Christians do not prove false to their faith or convictions simply because they do not disfellowship a man who has obeyed Christ while holding some erroneous views about the resurrection, the work of the Holy Spirit, or just when God forgives the obedient.

We all would rejoice if we could succeed in stirring up people to do what God commands them to do and to cease to press their opinions upon others. I have no disposition to discuss whose opinion is right, but to get all to hold fast the form of sound words.

As I have never found anything definitely revealed in the New Testament concerning the coming of a millennial period, I have gone steadily forward preaching the word and left the Lord free to take care of the millennium without my predictions.

This subject of premillennialism was up in the beginning of the Restoration. I quote from "History of the Disciples of Christ," by William T. Moore, LL.D., pages 303, 304, from the chapter on "Apostasies and Other Difficulties:"

It is said that troubles never come singly. During the same year when Mormonism had its beginning the "Reformers" in the Western Reserve became greatly excited with respect to the millennium. Their success in preaching the "ancient gospel" and the restoration of New Testament Christianity was so great that they became deeply impressed with the idea that the millennial period was near at hand. The earnest, enthusiastic nature of Walter Scott lent itself easily to the acceptance of this near approach of the millennium. He imparted his own enthusiasm to many who were associated with him, and the result was that the churches everywhere were more or less affected by this millennial anticipation. The fruitage of this notion was not conducive to the best development of the plea which the Disciples were making.

Mr. Campbell soon saw that this tendency was likely to go too far. From his point of view, there was considerable truth in the contention of Scott and his associates. He had named his new magazine the "Millennial Harbinger," and this fact itself indicated that he was on the lookout for a new age. Undoubtedly this was the predominant idea in naming his magazine as he did. Still Mr. Campbell was always level-headed with respect to everything. He never lost his balance. His enthusiasm never ran away with his judgment. He understood too well the influence which had to be overcome before the millennial period could arrive. However, his willingness to hear both sides of the question caused him to admit into the columns of the Harbinger a series of articles by S. M. McCorkle, a "sturdy layman," and these essays produced a very profound impression, not only in the Western Reserve, but in other quarters where the Harbinger was circulated. Mr. McCorkle's essays were very able, from his particular point of view, and they did much to accentuate the excitement which had already been at fever heat with respect to the near approach of the millennium. Mr. Campbell saw that something must be done to check the abnormal excitement which had already become widespread. Consequently, in 1834, he began in the Harbinger a series of articles signed by "A Reformed Clergyman," which, while they reviewed Mr. McCorkle's essays, had in view a much wider purpose—viz., that of checking a tendency which he regarded as hindering the practical work of the gospel. He used the nom de plume of "Reformed Clergyman" with the hope of concealing his personality. In this, however, he was not entirely successful. Though his general style was, to some extent, obscured, there were those who soon began to suspect that Mr. Campbell was himself the real author of the essays.

These essays had the effect of creating a reaction against the extreme views which had been advocated by Mr. McCorkle and others, and in the course of a few years the excitement subsided, at least so far that it was no longer a danger to the propagation of the ancient gospel.

Alexander Campbell wrote and published a note, entitled "The Prophecies," introducing S. M. McCorkle's first article on the "Signs of the Times." Here is his note in full:

The attentive reader will have discovered before to-day with what caution we have spoken on the prophecies and millennial matters. Among the causes of this the following is chief: We felt some misgivings in the most popular theories of interpretation; and, although prepossessed in favor of that system which flattered us with the expectation that the moral machinery about to operate, and which was operating upon the world, would usher in the glorious day, supported by the vials of God's wrath on an apostate church, we were involuntarily almost borne forward into another and entirely different system of interpretation. Between these conflicting winds we thought it presumptuous to weigh anchor and launch upon the mighty deep. For the last five or six years we have been waiting for fair winds and a serene sky, and cannot yet say that the prospects are such as to authorize us to tempt the vast abyss. But here comes a bold adventurer, who is determined to make the voyage at all hazards. As he seems destined for the same port, we shall help him to put to sea; and as he appears to sail by the same stars, if he can brave the mighty dangers and get safe to land, we shall hail him as the most fortunate of modern adventurers.

Figures apart, we shall give this brother a fair hearing; for he deserves it! This we say, not because we may agree in the main propositions of his essay, but because he speaks like a man, and because the subject deserves more profound attention than any other, except it be the personal remission of sins. We may add a note occasionally, but he shall be permitted to tell his own story in his own way.

Brother McQuiddy: There has been, and is now, a question among us about what tribe of people crucified Christ. We understand that the Jews were the ones who wanted him put to death, but we understand also that the Roman soldiers did the crucifying. Were the soldiers that put Christ to death Jews or Gentiles? J. J. YARBROUGH.

It is probable that the Jews borrowed crucifixion from the Romans. It was the most terrible and shameful death known to antiquity. The Jews never crucified Jews; nor the Romans, Romans. It was the punishment of robbers and murderers, provided they were slaves; but if they were free, it was thought too infamous a punishment for such, let their crimes be the vilest. With more than a million Jews in Jerusalem inciting and stirring up the Romans to crucify Christ, it would be hard to conclude that all the Jewish tribes did not demand Christ's crucifixion. As there were so many Jews assembled in Jerusalem and probably less than a thousand Roman soldiers, it was a dangerous time for a tumult. While legally the Romans put Christ to death, they did so to satisfy the demands of the Jews, who said: "His blood be on us, and on our children." The Romans had the power of death, not the Jews. The Jews had the will, but not the power.

Wanted to Work.

A man moving to the city told us that he wanted to get into a church where he could have plenty to do. His theory was that the best church for him and his family was one in which they were needed. Very often when people move to cities the choice is between a weak, struggling church and a large, strong, and influential church. The question is not, "Where am I needed?" but, "Where can I find the best preaching and society?" As a general rule, the more one puts into a church in service, the more he gets out in comfort, instruction, and spiritual help.—Herald and Presbyter.

The church needs more like him. Many professed Christians are hunting the easy, shady places. They are not seeking service and work in the Master's vineyard. No one is rightly converted until he enters the vineyard to work. The hungry are to be fed, the naked clothed, and the sick visited. Souls are to be saved. Christ worked, and so must his disciples work. The disciple is not above his Master. Every disciple should seek the field in which he can do the most good for Christ. Many preachers live in the cities who could do more in the country or in a town. It is not best for too many preachers to congregate in one city or place. The world is wide and many souls are perishing for the bread of life. When the disciples became too thick in Jerusalem, God by persecution scattered them. A scattering now would do good. Go into the field where you can do the most good, labor earnestly, and leave the results to the Lord.

A Liberal Church.

A writer in the Christian Standard tells the following story, which, though it has often been told before, is worthy of repeating in our columns:

A denominational friend said to me, speaking of his church: "Ours is the most liberal church there is, because we do not insist upon any form of baptism whatever. We allow the candidate to select how he will be baptized." So I said to him: "Well, omitting any reference to the scriptural proofs for your position, there is a practical question which I should like to ask you. He said: "Say on." And I put this question: "Doctor, when they bring a kicking, squalling infant to the font, how do you find out that it wants to be sprinkled?" He refused to answer, and said that I was ridiculing a grave subject and making light of it.

Congratulations and Regrets.

The Christian Standard announces a new editor, George P. Rutledge. Mr. Rutledge has an honorable record as a writer, so we rejoice to welcome him into the ranks of our editorial brotherhood. S. S. Lappin has proved his ability and shown himself to be a most able and efficient journalist. We regret his departure from the editorial staff of the Christian Standard.

The Kaiser's Motto.

This motto hangs in the workshop of the German Kaiser: "To be strong in pain; to be strong in sorrow; not to wish for the unattainable; to be satisfied with what the day brings; to seek for the good in all things; to have joy in nature and man as one finds them; to give always out of the heart and the best that is in one, no matter what thanks one receives—he who learns this and can live it is a happy, free, and upstanding man."

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

Adversity reveals true friendship.

Are you making a life or just making a living?

R. D. Smith has closed a good meeting at Flat Creek, Tenn.

While everything else is going up, would it not be wise to raise the standard of Christian living?

R. V. Cawthon is in the second week of an interesting meeting at the Cedar Grove Church, near Nashville.

The meeting conducted by Brother H. T. King at Highland Avenue, this city, is being well attended. Two were baptized the first week.

Thomas E. Milholland has changed his address from Madill, Okla., to 616 West Heron Street, Denison, Texas. Let correspondents take notice.

H. E. Winkler is in a good meeting with the church worshipping at Sixth Avenue and Buchanan Street. There have been two baptisms to date.

Change of address: Frank B. Shepherd, from Charleston, Miss., to McMinnville, Tenn.; C. E. Holt, from Montgomery, Ala., to Box 458, Knoxville, Tenn.

The presence of Brother Sim Jones, of Canada, and Brother Elam added much to our last prayer meeting at Russell Street. Both made inspiring talks.

We extend a cordial invitation to all the churches in Nashville and vicinity to hear Brother J. Pettay Ezell in the meeting at Russell Street, which begins next Sunday.

Married, on September 19, noon, at the study of the Russell Street meetinghouse, Nashville, Tenn., Dr. J. B. Neil and Miss Nora Dinges, both of Alexandria, Tenn.: J. F. Pendleton officiated.

From H. F. Pendergrass, McCrary, Ark., September 29: "Our meeting at Winter's Chapel closed last Sunday at the water, with one baptism. I began a meeting at Tip on Monday night. We are having good crowds."

From D. L. Robinson, Smithville, Tenn., September 29: "Our meeting at Sunny Point began on the third Lord's day in September and continued six days, with eight baptisms. Brother T. D. Rose did the preaching, and did it well. I moved here in March and have the work moving on nicely. Pray for us."

Our good friend, Alva Lee Kelton, of this city, while on the road for his house, never forgets to magnify the Savior as he has opportunity. He preached, by invitation, on September 24, for the West Dallas Church, at Dallas, Texas. One made the good confession and another became identified with the congregation.

From C. A. Buchanan, Wichita Falls, Texas, September 29: "I have just returned from points near Hedley. I preached fifteen discourses at McKnight and four at Bray, baptized four, and aroused quite an interest. I will return next year, the Lord willing, and hope to reap a great harvest. I found some fine people up there. Some of them read the Gospel Advocate."

E. M. Borden, of Little Rock, Ark., has promised to hold a debate with the Reorganized Mormons at Woodside, Montana, beginning on November 7. The general church propositions will be discussed. The debate is to last ten nights. A Mr. Bootman will represent the Mormons. The debate will be held in the clubhouse, as that is the only place suitable for public gatherings at that place.

From C. D. Crouch, Fountain Head, Tenn., September 29: "We had two splendid services at home (Rock Springs, Texas) last Sunday. I left there on Monday morning and am now at my father's home. Mother is sick, and has been unable to sit up for the past six weeks. She is improved some, and I hope she may soon be up. I expect to be back at home by October 15. I hope to meet and worship with the church at Portland and at Corinth (near Portland) while I am here."

From J. O. Barnes, Lake City, Fla.: "I began a meeting with the Center Hill church of Christ, near Tyler, Fla., on September 20 and continued it for eight days, with three baptized, one from the Adventists, two from the Freewill Baptists, and two from the Missionary Baptists. The church was much revived and a prayer meeting was started, to meet each Wednesday night. Much interest was manifested otherwise. The church is going ahead to greater usefulness."

W. S. Long, Jr., is making an energetic effort to raise the funds necessary for an evangelistic campaign at Natchez, Miss. R. D. Smith, late of Sherman, Texas, has been secured to do the work. We hope that the churches will take this matter to heart and make a liberal contribution. The little handful of women and children at Natchez have had a hard struggle to get the cause established and deserve unstinted support. Send your contribution to W. S. Long, Manchester, Tenn., who will acknowledge it and see that it is properly applied.

The brethren at Rayland, Texas, announce an oral debate to be conducted between H. F. Oliver, of Austin, Texas, a member of the church of Christ, and Isaiah Watson, of Bryan, Texas, a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. The debate will continue six days and perhaps longer. Both disputants are able men. The Rayland brethren have made preparations to take care of all visitors. The town is sixteen miles west of Vernon, fifteen miles south from Chillicothe, and twenty-one miles from Crowell. There is a jitney service from all of these points to Rayland. Preachers who will notify the brethren will be met at any of these points. Those signing the invitation are J. C. Hampton, A. C. Phillips, T. F. Davis, H. E. Cobb, and J. M. Roberts.

From T. H. Etheridge, Quana, Texas, September 29: "I shall leave Quana for Idaho about October 10 for some mission work. There are a few Christians who are badly scattered in that State, and I am going to try to establish the cause of the Lord at a number of places while in the great Northwest. If there are churches desiring the services of a gospel preacher who is absolutely satisfied with 'what is written,' they may address me at Hazleton, Idaho, after October 10. This work is purely mission; and I do not have the assurance of even my railroad fare; but the King's business requires sacrifices, and I am being laid on the altar willingly. Other mission points and scattering Christians may write me; they will not be turned down if I can possibly reach them."

From R. E. Wright, Wartrace, Tenn., September 29: "I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Mountain View, near Mangum, Okla., last Monday night. Eighteen were baptized, three came out from the Baptists, and three returned from the world to their 'first love.' We then found sixteen others scattered here and there, and with these we left a congregation of forty members. We pray that each of these will both live and work for the Lord Jesus in that locality. The establishment of this congregation is largely due to the faithfulness of Sister M. C. Todd. She moved there from Tennessee some time ago and found no place to worship. She went to work and arranged for this meeting, and the Lord blessed us with a glorious one. I promised to go back next year and hold another meeting for this congregation. Those who want to arrange with me for a meeting while I am in that part of the country should write to me in the near future."

Too many persons go through this life without learning to think seriously. On whatever subject the mind feels a lively interest, attention, though always an effort, becomes a delightful effort. The Master's Vineyard

Alabama.

Moulton, September 25.—On September 10 I began a meeting at Stiversville, Tenn., preaching twice each day for ten days to large and attentive congregations, and baptized thirteen precious souls into Christ.—J. T. Harris.

Montgomery, September 23.—The meeting at Canoe came to a close last night, having continued for nine days and nights. The interest and attendance were very fine throughout. The congregation seemed to be very much pleased with our efforts in the presentation of the truth. Six were baptized and two that had formerly obeyed the gospel cast their lots with the congregation. This congregation is composed of some excellent material, and we predict that, with the proper training and encouragement, they will take their place among the strong and influential congregations of the brotherhood. Dr. J. T. J. Watson takes the oversight, and at present Brother I. L. Boles teaches school here and preaches for them.—Charles L. Talley.

Arkansas.

Newport, September 22.—I closed an excellent meeting last Wednesday night at Calico Rock, with five baptisms. Brother O. L. Hays helped me in this meeting. I am on my way to Beedeville for a meeting.—J. B. Nelson.

Stephens, September 25.—Our annual meeting at Miller's Bluff, La., recently conducted by Brother Carl Anders and me, closed with good interest. I am to go back to hold another meeting within four miles of the same place in October.—J. H. Rogers.

Violet Hill, September 23.—I have conducted two revivals since last report. One was at Success, Ark. There were nineteen added to the worshipping number—eighteen baptized and one restored. It was a great spiritual boom for the church. The brethren treated me royally. The other was at Violet Hill, Ark., where I was reared and where most of my relatives live. There were nineteen added—fourteen baptized and five restored.—O. E. Billingsley.

Dover, September 22.—Our protracted meeting at home (Atkins) resulted in one baptism and, no doubt, much other good. Brother U. G. Wilkinson, of Comanche, Okla., did the preaching, except one sermon by Brother A. Douglas while visiting us. I conducted a meeting at Flat Rock Schoolhouse, with thirteen baptisms and one restoration. Brother Douglas and I conducted a meeting at Middleton, with thirteen restorations and four baptisms. I am now in a mission meeting on Lee Mountain, near Dover. I go next to visit Flat Rock for a few days.—J. H. Whisnant.

Georgia.

Cedartown, September 25.—Meeting at Rome closed with large audiences to the last. One was baptized, others

"almost persuaded." I began here in the City Hall yesterday, with three services.—John Hayes.

Kentucky.

Fordsville, September 26.—I have just closed a nine-days' meeting at Shrewsbury, resulting in three baptisms. I am now at Magan, moderating in the Willis-Taylor debate. I go next to McHenry to engage E. W. Lindsey in a public discussion (October 3-6).—J. L. Hines.

Dexter, September 26.—I closed the meeting at Bradford, Tenn., with two restorations and six baptisms. I preached five discourses at Dunlap Schoolhouse, and one young man obeyed the gospel. I am now in a meeting here, with large crowds. There have been six additions by primary obedience.—William Etheridge.

Bardwell, September 25.—On the third Sunday in September I closed a nine-days' meeting in a pool room in Joppa, Ill., with no additions. I held a meeting there last year with very good results; but when I returned this year, I found the opposition too strong for success in the gospel work. Some one stole my Bible. I pray God's blessings upon the thief.—Joe Ratcliffe.

Oklahoma.

Weatherford, September 25.—I began a meeting at Zion Chapel, near Weatherford, three weeks ago and closed it last night. One was reclaimed and thirty-two baptized. I am on my way to a place near Cordell for a meeting. Then I shall go to Beech Grove, Ark., for a meeting.—Joe H. Blue.

Tennessee.

Rome, September 26.—I am now in a meeting at this place, with good crowds and attention. Brother W. F. Wright, of Antioch, is leading the song service.—C. M. Gleaves.

Lynnville, September 25.—I closed an eight-days' meeting at Smyrna Church, near Bryant Station, last evening, which resulted in four baptisms, three restorations, and one from the Baptists.—H. N. Rutherford.

Toone, September 26.—The meeting at Cloverport, near Toone, closed at the water last Lord's day, with fifteen baptisms. This was one of the most pleasant and profitable meetings I have held this year. I found some splendid people there.—T. B. Thompson.

Lawrenceburg, September 25.—Yesterday I began a series of meetings with the church at Luna's Chapel, eight miles from Lawrenceburg. Fine weather prevailed and large audiences were present at each service. The meeting will continue indefinitely. This is where the Boaz-Hollis debate took place two years ago. Much interest is manifested.—J. Paul Kimbrell.

Leoma, September 26.—Our meeting at Double Branches, in Wayne County, closed on Saturday. Four were baptized. Wayne County is a destitute field. There are only a few churches in the county, and nearly all of them are digressive. Only one loyal preacher in the county. I am now at Leoma. The meeting started off well. Two from the Baptists to be baptized today.—Thomas C. King.

Murfreesboro, September 26.—My meeting with the Flat Creek congregation closed last Sunday night, with two baptisms and a fine interest. The two baptized were young girls, and upon their request they were baptized immediately after confession. I enjoyed the meeting very much. The people were so agreeable to work with; and if I should have a chance to return for another meeting, I would certainly accept their invitation. My next place is near Lawrenceburg, Tenn. Mail sent to me there will reach me all right for the next ten days.—R. D. Smith.

Ethridge, September 24.—I have recently held tent meetings at the following places: On Big Creek, three miles southeast of Campbellville, ten days, one baptism; at Nix's Store, six miles east of Ethridge, eleven days, fourteen baptisms and four restorations; at Reynolds Station, seven and one-half miles north of Pulaski, on the Lynnville pike, eleven days, eleven baptisms and two restorations. A meetinghouse, thirty by forty feet, is now being erected at Nix's Store. I have been preaching at the schoolhouse there on the third Sunday afternoon and night in each month.—B. A. McCollum.

Jackson, September 27.—The church of Christ (Highland Avenue), in September, 1913, called Brother John T. Smith to preach for us and to work with us in the Master's vineyard. The work has been a success under the leadership and teaching of Brother Smith. The cause of Christ in Jackson is now well established, having a fine congregation of excellent men and women willing to spend and to be spent for the Master's cause, having a mind to work and a disposition to worship God just as revealed in his word, largely the results of Brother Smith's efforts; and we verily believe he now could do a greater work here, so we called him for another year, but for some cause he saw fit to go to Sparta. Brother Smith is very popular with this congregation, and we regret to lose his services; however, we extend to the good congregation of Sparta our congratulations and very best wishes for the good work of our blessed Master. Not only do we as a people of the brotherhood regret Brother Smith's leaving us, but the city of Jackson mourns the loss of a good family of splendid citizenship. During Brother Smith's stay with us the work has grown both in numbers and in knowledge of God's word. The work under Brother Smith's training has been so developed that we have a goodly number of brethren who can conduct the public worship properly and to a good advantage. Brother Smith is a man peculiarly fitted for the work of the meek and lowly Man of Galilee. He is well acquainted with the word of God and uses the sword of the Spirit skillfully. Brother Smith does not know how to bend the knee to the man in goodly apparel and frown on those less fortunate in this world's goods; he ever has the words of cheer for the broken-hearted and a hearty hand clasp for every one,

My Big Factory Output Makes WITTE Prices Low

SO far as actual engine value is concerned, I would be justified in charging double the present prices for WITTE engines. Great factory efficiency and selling direct from factory to user makes these prices possible.

I would rather manufacture 10,000 engines a year at a profit of one dollar each, than only 1000 engines at $10 each, or 100 at $100 profit each. Every engine I sell helps sell others.

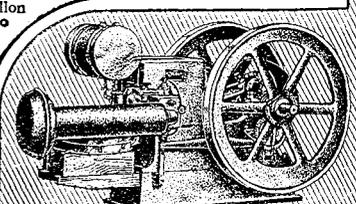

It has been proven that quantity production makes production cost low. I could not build WITTE engines so good if I built only hundreds while I build thousands. A man, for example, who turns fly wheels all day can do a quicker job and better job than if he worked at it only a half hour each day and then ran a truck or swept the floor and worked on pistons the rest of the time. In the big WITTE factory, a man becomes an expert in making his particular part of the engine. My actual cost for high quality engine parts is from 1/4 to 3/4 what many others pay. My own private gas well to furnish power helps hold cost down.

WITTE Engines require only one-tenth of one gallon of fuel per horse-power per hour; develop from 30 to 50 percent surplus power over rating. Made in 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 12, 16 and 22 H.P., sizes in different styles, as ordered to operate on Kerosene, Gasoline, Naphtha, Distillate or Gas, also in stationary, hand portable, portable and sawing. 30-Days' Trial, 5-Year Guarantee. Your Neighbor's Faults.

BY JOHN T. POE.

You see your neighbor's faults very clearly, don't you? How about yours? Have you no faults? If so, what will you do with them? You don't propose to take them to heaven with you, do you? Then what are you going to do with them? You can tell your neighbor what to do with his faults, can't you? But what about yours? Can't you cure your own faults by the process you would recommend to your neighbor? Try it and see.

Worn spirit, is it night with thee?
And art thou weary grown,
Thus tossing on life's troubled sea
Where fiercest winds have blown?
Be still! The day is breaking fast!
Thy Lord shall soon appear,
The darkest hour speaks midnight past,
The sunrise draweth near.

Appeal from Rome, Ga., Emphasized.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

I notice in the Gospel Advocate an appeal which I desire to emphasize while the matter is "warm." It is the appeal from Rome, Ga., to help Brother Hayes stand by that work. I know the conditions in Rome better, I am sure, than any other man. As a humble colaborer with Christ, I planted the congregation in Rome, built their house (the house they are now using), provided at my own expense the seats for this house, and otherwise "tended the flock" there till ill health decreed that I move my little family West. I have watched with jealous eye every movement at Rome for the nearly ten years I have been away, and have noted the struggles through which the brethren have passed. Had I been able, I would have gladly supported a man there at my expense all these years; but I have been insufficiently supported myself, hence could lend no assistance financially. While in Rome I held about one dozen tent meetings in almost every section of the city; and when I left, there was a zealous membership of between sixty and seventy-five souls there, as well as I can recollect. The work should have been taken up immediately by the brotherhood and the flame fanned while still burning, but it was only feebly assisted. Now let me urge the brethren everywhere to contribute to the support of the work there, and to keep it up until it is self-supporting. We are too prone to take hold warmly of a new field and its worker, and then coolly leave him at a crisis, which greatly cripples the past and future of his work. Do not do Rome that way.

I make this suggestion: Let the individuals and congregations assisting Brother Hayes have him communicate to them the exact amount of regular support being received; and if this is insufficient, let these individuals and congregations feel it their duty to call into coöperation with them other individuals and congregations until enough is guaranteed for his support at Rome. Then let all feel this work as a duty to be honorably discharged, as the payment of any other just due; and if in the providence of God any one of the parties is prevented from doing his or her regular part, let said party see to it that some one else is notified and urged to make up the deficiency. In this way, and this way only, can indebtedness be avoided by the worker, if he is pushing the work. It is not enough to coolly inform the worker that you will, "after one more offering," discontinue your fellowship, leaving said worker to take the consequences and face the disasters as his credit may or may not enable him. But before a donor who is depended upon as a regular helper withdraws his donation, it seems to me that he should try to see that his place is properly occupied by another. If this simple and easy businesslike principle were employed, there would never be such a thing as a missionary being humiliated by indebtedness. Nor would there ever be occasion for a special appeal in our papers. Both of these tend to humiliate and cripple mission work, and they argue in the minds of most people in favor of the more "businesslike" church societies. Many times have I been made to feel the sting of this mistake. Brethren, why is it that a missionary must be forced to live and finance a work on less than the living itself demands, and then be criticized if he is unable to do this? Often a tent meeting in Rome would cost me more than my whole month's support would amount to. But it had to be done to plant the church in Rome. Even here it has ever been thus. For instance, the meeting just closed in Delta, Col., cost me thirty dollars in cash, and this cash represented my living expenses for the month. All meetings do not cost this amount. Some cost very little, but all cost something; and if the worker does not "put up the money," who will? The mere livelihood of the worker is only a part of his expenses in a mission work where the cause is aggressing. After a while it would perhaps be different, but then the worker is over yonder in a new field where he is surrounded by former necessities.

The congregations regularly standing by a missionary should ask to know just how much said missionary is receiving, and who are the contributors, and they should use their influence to get others to coöperate with them in his support in case a sufficient amount is not being sent him. He should certainly not be left to "appeal" for his needs. This is a reflection on both him and the brotherhood intending to support him; and it further argues that if this is the New Testament way over the "society" way, the former is a "failure" and the latter "more expedient." The pressing needs at present of Brother McCaleb in Japan should have been ascertained long ago, and I dare say he would have gladly told of his needs ere now had he been asked the plain question if there were such needs. I am pleading for a more intimate communication between the missionary and those who are supporting him. Christ will be better pleased if we do his work in a more orderly, systematic, businesslike way.

Let Us Help You Preach.

BY J. H. WHISNANT.

Many who are not gifted in public or private preaching are becoming aware of the fact that with but little expense they can do much of the desired preaching by means of the printed page. Being a strong believer in this phase of work accounts not only for the establishment of the Christian Literature Depository, through which have been distributed thousands of gospel books, tracts, and leaflets, but also the installing of a printing plant with which to further this work. We now purpose to print a large edition of a new four-page leaflet exposing one of to-day's greatest hindering theories to true Christianity—the "Holiness." We will mail one hundred of them and one hundred assorted leaflets on other important subjects for one dollar. We would like to hear from every one who believes that our warfare is that of "casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ," that we may know how many thousands to print. Never Neglect Colds; Treat Them Promptly

Often they lead to those pulmonary troubles which are responsible for more than one-tenth of all lives lost through illness.

Heavy colds which develop deep-seated coughs or cause inflammation of the air-passages and persist in spite of medication, weaken the system to a point where resistance easily is overcome—and asthma, bronchial and pulmonary troubles are the result. To renew normal resistance, Eckman's Alternative has been found highly beneficial in many instances.

Its lime content is so combined with other remedial agents as to be easily assimilated by the average person—and it contains no narcotics or habit-forming drugs of any sort. So it's safe to try. Give Ear, O Israel!

BY JOHN T. POE.

There are some things contained in the gospel besides the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. And faith, repentance, and baptism do not exhaust its commands in things to be done. After a sincere belief in Christ as the Son of God, who died for our sins, was buried, and rose again for our justification according to the Scriptures, there are yet some things to be added to our faith, if we would succeed in the attainment of eternal life. These steps, well taken, put us into the church, body, or kingdom of Christ, in which we may work out eternal salvation by adding to our faith courage, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love. (2 Pet. 1: 3-10.) The necessity for adding these things is just as imperative as to believe, and more so; for the addition of these things gives us an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God. First principles, or faith, repentance, and baptism, put us into the kingdom of Christ on earth and grant to us such aid and such help as shall thoroughly redeem, pardon, and save us from our sins; for in him (Christ) "we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins." (Eph. 1: 7; see, also, Col. 1: 14.)

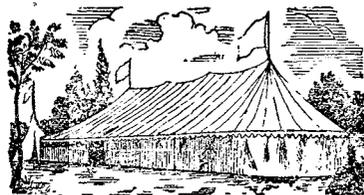

There are two prominent points right here that stand out as plainly as a mountain in the midst of a vast plain. (1) We are saved in Christ, and not out of him, and this salvation is from past sins. (2) If we would be saved and attain unto eternal life, it must be done by a patient continuance in well-doing—by adding to our faith the things named in 2 Pet. 1: 3-10. Jesus has plainly told us that every branch in him that does not bear fruit, the Father taketh away. He prunes off, or cuts away, the dead, unfruitful branches. (John 15: 2.) To bear fruit in the vine, Christ, we must first be in the vine; then we must add the required additions mentioned by Peter and exercise ourselves in well-doing; for in this way are we to have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom.

Thousands of men and women will be lost, although in the kingdom of Christ on earth. Having been baptized into Christ, they cease to go on to perfection and are lost in the end; for "the Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." (Matt. 13: 41.) Those gathered out of the kingdom are water salvationists. They did not trust in Jesus, but in water; they calculated that, having been baptized, they were saved eternally, and, this being the case, they granted to themselves permission to sin and to do all manner of iniquity. But there are many things done by both men and women which will forever debar them from the everlasting kingdom, if they do not repent—cease to do evil and learn to do good. I repeat, baptism puts no one into heaven. It may put us into the kingdom of Christ on earth (see Gal. 3: 27; Rom. 6: 3, 4), but not into the everlasting kingdom. We are admitted into that on other conditions entirely different—well-doing. We must pour into our lamps the oil of good works. Nothing else will suffice to make our lamps burn bright on the other side of death. He that does no good works in the kingdom of Christ here is like the foolish virgins in Matt. 25, whose lamps went out at death, on this side of eternity. The feeble breath of the priest or the preacher in the funeral sermon fanned their lamps into a fitful, momentary glimmer, which dimmed and faded in an hour on this side of the grave, but died and sunk into midnight darkness on the other side, where no oil for such lamps can be obtained. Russell tells his dupes that there is plenty of oil to be had over there merely for the asking, but Jesus says there is none to be had there; and if there were plenty to be had there, while the foolish ones go to get it the door at the marriage feast is shut and they are not allowed to enter. Jesus tells them to depart, he does not know them. How sad to miss it all at the very last!

Three pages are given to stories of an entertaining and elevating character and articles of an educational nature, by gifted and well-informed writers, strikingly illustrated by photo-engravings and line drawings; and one page is devoted to a clear and concise presentation of the Sunday-school lesson, historically and exegetically, by A. B. Lipscomb, one of the editors of the Gospel Advocate, in which are presented the thoughts of many of the world's best thinkers. The size of the page is 10 3/4 x 14 inches. California Notes.

BY L. D. PERKINS.

On the first Lord's day in August I was with the congregation at Fresno, and a splendid audience greeted me. After the service I spent the remainder of the day with Brother Hall, one of the elders, and it was a real enjoyment to be in this home. Fresno now has a population of more than fifty thousand and is a very pretty place, with one of the finest countries to support it in the world. This is where most of the Tennesseans land who come to California. They have a fine street-car system, and the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific both pass through on the way to San Francisco. This church needs a good evangelist to locate with it. Write to J. M. Arterburn, 129 Park Street, Fresno, Cal.

On the second Lord's day I was with the congregation at Tulare. Tulare has a population of thirty-two hundred and fifty. Three creameries give to the city one hundred thousand dollars per month. The land around Tulare is devoted chiefly to stock and alfalfa, yet it is a good fruit country. The land is level and dotted with large oak trees. The Southern Pacific and Santa Fe both pass this place. The land is cheap. Tulare is one of the prettiest places to live in the world. Water can be had at twenty feet, and the river furnishes most of the year practically free water. Write to L. Mead Williams, 259 South F Street, Tulare, Cal.

On the third Lord's day I was at Hanford, one of the cream places of the San Joaquin valley. Hanford has about six thousand people, and the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific both make this place. Around Hanford they raise stock, alfalfa, peaches, apricots, raisins, and almost anything they care to grow. The land is rich, and out from the city you can buy reasonably. Write to Harry McClintock, Hanford, Cal.

All these churches in the San Joaquin Valley are at peace among themselves and are growing. The San Joaquin Valley is fifty miles wide and three hundred miles long, and is rich, level, well watered and one-tenth improved. There are opportunities here for thousands and thousands of Christians to locate and secure good homes and live in a land of sunshine and flowers.

I wish to commend the issue of the Firm Foundation entitled "Christian Colleges and Schools" Number. I am glad that I stand with this people; and not only with them, but with Paul, who went into the school of Tyrannus, and there taught the word of God where other books were being taught. May the Lord bless all of these schools in the work they are doing.

Notes from Abilene, Texas.

BY J. P. SEWELL.

Abilene Christian College opened this year with a net increase in attendance of thirty-seven and one-third per cent over last year. The second week there were fifteen new students; the third, several others. We are well pleased with both faculty and students. Our work is organized and proceeding smoothly quicker than ever before. Others write that they are coming soon, and we are grateful and happy.

From year to year our old patrons and friends have drawn closer to us, new ones have been added, our splendid city stands foursquare back of us, and we are steadily and constantly growing in numbers, equipment, and quality of service.

On Monday night before school opened on Tuesday four young people were baptized.

Brother A. B. Barret is now with us in an excellent meeting. The South Side Church and the College Church are uniting in this service. Three services are held each day—one in the chapel and two in the big tent down town. Ten of our students and one other young man have been baptized, two have confessed their sins, and several put their membership in the congregation. Brother Barret is doing some very plain, strong preaching. The singing is good and the meeting very pleasant every way.

Brethren and sisters from Brownwood, Merkel, Clyde, Winters, Anson, and Nugent, including Brethren W. G. Cypert, E. Christian, and Price Fankhead, have thus far visited our meeting.

Protection Against Infection.

If you bruise, cut, or burn yourself or get a splinter in your flesh, do not neglect the wound just because it is slight. Many deaths from blood poison have resulted from neglecting just such slight wounds. For nearly a century Gray's Ointment has been used as a protection against such infection. You will find a box of this ointment in thousands of homes. It costs only twenty-five cents and will last indefinitely. You cannot afford to be without it. Get a box from your druggist to-day. For allaying pain and healing abrasions and eruptions of the skin, boils, sores, cuts, bruises, burns, etc., it has no equal. For a free sample, write W. F. Gray & Co., 818 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

If we cannot find God in your house and mine, upon the roadside or the margin of the sea; in the bursting seed or opening flower; in the day duty or the night musing—I do not think we should discern Him any more upon the grass of Eden or beneath the moonlight of Gethsemane.—J. Martineau.

Our Work in Winston-Salem, N. C., and its Needs.

BY W. L. REEVES.

Winston-Salem is a very busy little city of over thirty thousand population. It is by far the greatest manufacturing city in the State. Eleven thousand people in Winston-Salem are engaged in manufacturing. The city having the next greatest number is Durham, which has just half as many employed in manufacturing. Four and one-half million dollars is paid out annually for labor in Winston-Salem. This includes wage earners in day labor and all persons receiving salaries in various positions. The value of manufactured products is thirty-seven million dollars yearly.

Just two years ago I pitched a tent in this city for the first meeting held here in a number of years by one who stands strictly for the New Testament way only. Since that time I have helped hold five other meetings in different parts of the city, for which I have received not one cent of personal support from the few brethren in the city; but, instead, I have given liberally of money received for work elsewhere in order to build up this work. In fact, I have done all I can do in this way.

The work is encouraging, but we are hampered for lack of means. We need three hundred dollars help from elsewhere, but we are not calling for but two hundred. If we can raise two hundred, we can manage some way for the balance. Our intention is to not get heavily involved in debt. We are out of debt now, but must go in debt considerably on our church property, if we do not soon get some outside help. Who will be one of fifty to send us four dollars in answer to this prayer?

There is a ripe field for a great work in this city, and the sooner we are well equipped to push the work, the better it will be; for the various sects, "digressives" and all, seem to be much more zealous and are pushing their work more since we started our work two years ago.

Brother M. C. Kurfees, of Louisville, Ky., was with us in a tent meeting in July. He understands the needs here. I am sure he will commend this work to all as a most worthy call, and one where every dollar contributed will be well invested for our Lord and

We must do something soon. Any amount, much or little, will be appreciated and receipted for. Send to J. B. Whitley, Urban Street, South Winston-Salem, N. C., or to W. L. Reeves, Clemmons, N. C.

We want to build up as soon as possible sufficiently to have tent meetings held in the city all summer.

The Church at Bowie, Texas.

BY J. A. CUNNINGHAM.

Thinking that it might be interesting to the brethren in Tennessee, my native home, I will write a short history of the church of Christ in Bowie since my connection with it, ten years ago.

Prior to my locating here the congregation had been torn asunder by the introduction of unscriptural practices (the organ and societies). A few who were opposed to things unscriptural withdrew fellowship and gave up the house to the innovators and went out and erected an arbor, under which they met and worshiped for a while; but they soon secured a lot in the outskirts of town and built a small house, and in this a faithful few were meeting regularly for worship when I first met them. It was soon a manifest truth that our house was not in keeping with the best interests of the cause of Christ, and the location was altogether against the success of the church; hence a lot was secured in a more central location and a plain, frame house erected. Since the house was far enough along in construction to meet to worship in there has never been a failure upon the first day of the week to have the bread and the wine on the table and a few members present to partake of the same in memory of the Redeemer of men.

But few of those whose names were enrolled on the church record in the organization under the brush arbor are with us now. A number have passed over the river to their reward. Many have moved away. But the loss by removal has been about evenly balanced by brethren locating with us from other communities and by additions by primary obedience. We have had a gradual increase in numbers until at present about one hundred and twenty-five hold membership in the congregation.

From year to year we have held protracted meetings of from one to three weeks' duration, each year having more or less additions, with interest increasing from year to year. We have had Brethren T. W. Phillips, Lee Mansfield, Scruggs (of Oklahoma), R. L. Whiteside, C. D. Crouch, and A. O. Colley to do the preaching in our protracted efforts.

Brother Colley was with us last year in a three-weeks' meeting, in which there was much interest manifested. He was with us again this year. The meeting began on August 17 and closed on September 3. Good interest was apparent from the first service and grew with each service until the close. Thirty-five were added to the congregation—eighteen by baptism. On the Sunday after the meeting closed two others made the confession and were baptized. Brother Colley spent the early part of his life in Weakley County, Tenn., and did very effective work in preaching the gospel in West Tennessee and Kentucky.

I trust that the facts above stated may be the means of encouraging others who are unfavorably surrounded and impress the truth that loving, faithful service in the Lord's cause will never fail of success.

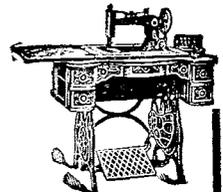

At some other time (if the Lord wills) I will write of the ones who have especially contributed to the success of the work here.

May the grace of God be with all who call upon the Lord out of a pure heart.

The Prospect at Grand Saline, Texas.

BY J. E. BLAKELEY.

I wish to set before the brethren generally the imperative need of the Grand Saline church. I realize that there are many calls made through the papers; some very worthy ones, too, and some not so much so. But I am personally acquainted with conditions at this place and can testify that the needs are most urgent. Had it not been for appeals of this kind and the liberal response to the same, there would have been many valuable church properties lost.

Some of the trials of this little band have been very severe. Three years ago the congregation, being handicapped for lack of a place of worship, decided to build a house; this they did, and the property is now worth seventeen hundred and fifty dollars, conservatively estimated. They made the best payment they could when the house was built, and borrowed money to pay the remainder of the obligation, believing the cause would grow enough in the near future to easily meet the notes as they came due. The property was secured by the restrictive clause.

Last year, before any of the notes were paid, the leading brother in the church died, leaving the work in the hands of amateurs. An appeal was made for help to make some payments on the notes, but very little was received in response.

There is only one active male member in the church; this is Brother J. F. Blakeley. Several months ago he happened to an accident by falling through an elevator shaft from an upper story to the basement of a store where he was working. This has made him a cripple for life; and being a poor man in this world's goods, he is unable to help in the financial burdens of the church. There are but few sisters that can help in the church.

But the severest trial of the church came this summer, when, in the month of June, one W. A. Dawson, digressive, of Wills Point, and the noted evangelist, Brooks, held a meeting in Grand Saline. They did all in their power to destroy the cause in this place. The fact that the little church was hopelessly in debt was a weapon in their hands; and they used it with telling effect, too. They agreed to pay the property out of debt, if the brethren would join them and turn the property over to them. Being so discouraged over the hopelessness of ever meeting the obligation that was now pressing them, nearly all of the members accepted this and went with Dawson and Brooks. My brother, J. F. Blakeley, and Sisters Weeks and Watson were about all the members that remained firm. The Salt City Company, which held the notes against the property, saw an opportunity to secure the money, and asked the payment of the notes. My brother, seeing no hope left, consented for the property to go that way. Just at this point the writer, with Brother W. A. Rushing, of Wills Point, and Brethren T. M. Blakeley and J. B. McGinty, of Terrell, learned of the serious condition of the church at this place. We took it into our hands, made a trip to Mineola to secure the cooperation of the church there to help in standing off the payments of the notes until the money could be raised. We did this by a few of us becoming responsible for the payments. We then went to Grand Saline and called the former members of the church together and put the proposition before them that we would see the notes paid if they would remain loyal and hold the property. This they happily agreed to do, with one or two exceptions. Thus a valuable church property was saved to a worthy church. But those of us who have become responsible for this obligation are poor and must have some help to secure the property permanently. While we are poor, we could not sit by and see this piece of property go into the hands of our enemies.

Now, brethren, here is what we want: We want to find twenty-five churches that will give twenty-five dollars each by November 1, to be applied on this indebtedness, at which time the notes must be paid. Can we find this number of churches? Surely we can. The churches at Terrell, Wills Point, Myrtle Springs, and Mineola are doing their part. Sister Weeks, at Grand Saline, gave twenty-five dollars. The church at Wills Point does not own the seats they are using at the present. Still these churches are willing to make a sacrifice to help save the church at Grand Saline. The debt against the church now amounts to seven hundred and twenty-five dollars. Can we meet this? Now, brethren, in the name of everything that is dear to the cause we love, can we see this property lost to the church for the lack of this amount of money, when it can be easily met by properly distributing the burden?

The following contributions from churches have been received: From Terrell, $25; Kaufman, $25; Kemp, $25; Wills Point, $25; Mineola, $25; Heath, $25; Golden, $25. Personal contributions will be reported later.

Rheumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these diseases are probably related, and all are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes "I have tested your spring water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time it will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, and stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there, and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was cured."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were cured of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism, and after drinking twenty gallons of your mineral water was entirely cured of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

Sound Out the Word.

BY W. S. LONG, JR.

The congregations planted under the directions of the Holy Spirit were taught by the apostle Paul to begin at once to plant other congregations where the gospel had not been heard. In writing to the church at Thessalonica, he tells them with joy of their work of faith and labor of love, and that they were an example to all that believed in Macedonia and Achaia in that they "sounded out the word." This band of disciples was not satisfied simply to hold a meeting once a year at home, but sent forth the word of light to such an extent that their faith was spoken of in every place. The church of Antioch soon after its birth sent missionaries more than a thousand miles away to preach the gospel of Christ. The infant congregation at Philippi was holding forth the word of life by sending again and again their missionary in distant heathen lands. When hardships, persecutions, and disappointments came to the church at Jerusalem, they did not say, "We've had misfortunes and cannot support the gospel," but their members "went everywhere preaching the word."

How many churches in Tennessee have learned to take the church at Thessalonica for an example? We may be sound on first principles and plead with and exhort weak members to meet on the first day of the week; but are we "sounding forth the word of truth?" If the church of Thessalonica were in Tennessee to-day, it would put many congregations to shame.

In Nashville alone we have about twenty-seven congregations and about fifty preachers. With this great number of disciples, with their financial, intellectual, and spiritual strength, the gospel soon could be sounded to all the destitute places in the United States. Why should they send five or six hundred miles to get some one to come and sound in the word, when the New Testament example is to sound out the word?

At the door of Tennessee are Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, and Alabama, with many beautiful cities, almost as destitute of New Testament Christianity as some heathen lands across the waters.

Why should not churches like those at Franklin, Columbia, Gallatin, Fayetteville, McMinnville, and Nashville send preachers into destitute places, North and South, and sound forth the word of life? If Tennessee churches would follow the Bible examples, congregations would be planted in destitute places and we would soon read of the church of Christ in New York

Good Old Home-Made Family Cough Remedy
Much Better than the Ready-Made Kind—Easily and Cheaply Prepared.

If you combined the curative properties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you would hardly have in them all the curative power that lies in this simple "home-made" cough syrup which takes only a few minutes to prepare.

Get from any druggist 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents and gives you a full pint of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. Tastes pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and sugar syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes that line the throat, chest and bronchial tubes, so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, whooping cough and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiaicol and has been used for generations to break up severe coughs.

To avoid disappointment, be sure to ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 233 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

City and almost every other city in the Union.

It has been said through the Gospel Advocate that Nashville is the "Jerusalem" of to-day. In the eighth chapter of Acts we are told that the Jerusalem church was scattered abroad and "went everywhere preaching the word." Shall we sit in lethargy and dream until some persecution drives us into destitute fields where souls are starving for the gospel?

Paul, in 1 Tim. 3: 15, tells us that the church is the pillar and support of the truth. Good, faithful preachers are willing and ready to go to New York, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, Vicksburg, Natchez, and other destitute cities at the word. They cannot go at their own charges and provide for those who are dependent upon them, but are willing to make great sacrifices. No congregation can be true to Bible teaching unless it is "sounding forth the word." When every congregation shall follow the examples set for them long, long ago, "the earth will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

Convalescence after pneumonia, typhoid fever, and the grip is sometimes merely apparent, not real. To make it real and rapid, there is no other tonic so highly to be recommended as Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands so testify. Take Hood's.

Like a Boy at 50 Bubbling Over With Vitality—Taking Iron Did It

Doctor says Nuxated Iron is greatest of all strength builders—Often increases the strength and endurance of delicate, nervous folks 200 per cent. in two weeks time.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Not long ago a man came to me who was nearly half a century old and asked me to give him a preliminary examination for life insurance. I was astonished to find him with the blood pressure of a boy of 20 and as full of vigor, vim and vitality as a young man; in fact a young man he really was notwithstanding his age. The secret he said was taking iron—nuxated iron had filled him with renewed life. At 30 he was in bad health; at 46 careworn and nearly all in. Now at 50 a miracle of vitality and his face beaming with the buoyancy of youth. As I have said a hundred times over, iron is the greatest of all strength builders. If people would only throw away patent medicines and nauseous concoctions and take simple nuxated iron, I am convinced that the lives of thousands of persons might be saved, who now die every year from pneumonia, grippe, consumption, kidney, liver and heart trouble, etc. The real and true cause which started their diseases was nothing more nor less than a weakened condition brought on by lack of iron in the blood. Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living tissue. Without it, no matter how much or what you eat, your food merely passes through you without doing you any good. You don't get the strength out of it and as a consequence you become weak, pale and sickly looking just like a plant trying to grow in a soil deficient in iron. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test; See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous run-down people who were ailing all the while double their strength and endurance and entirely get rid of all symptoms of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles in from ten to fifteen days time simply by taking iron in the proper form. And this after they had in some cases been doctored for months without obtaining any benefit. But don't take the old forms of reduced iron, iron acetate or tincture of iron simply to save a few cents. You must take iron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated like nuxated iron if you want it to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless. Many an athlete or prize-fighter has won the day simply because he knew the secret of great strength and endurance and filled his blood with iron before he went into the fray, while many another has gone down to inglorious defeat simply for the lack of iron.—E. Sauer, M.D.

NOTE—Nuxated Iron, recommended above by Dr. Sauer, is not a patent medicine nor secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists and whose iron constituents are widely prescribed by eminent physicians everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach; on the contrary, it is a most potent remedy, in nearly all forms of indigestion, as well as for nervous, run-down conditions. The manufacturers have such great confidence in Nuxated Iron that they offer to forfeit $100.00 to any charitable institution if they cannot take any man or woman under 60 who lacks iron and increase their strength 200 per cent. or over in four weeks' time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. They also offer to refund your money if it does not at least double your strength and endurance in ten days' time. It is dispensed by all druggists.

Among the Colored People

Brother Keeble's Report.

Since my last report I have held a number of meetings. I held a week's meeting at Bellwood, Tenn., with nine baptized and one restored. I was at Lebanon one week, with one confession and two restored. The meeting at Mount Juliet continued one week. This is a destitute field, there being only two colored disciples there. The white brethren there helped with their presence, their money, and their food. Interest was good, but there were no additions. I preached at Brownsville one week under a large tent the brethren had rented. There was good interest, but no additions. I was at Smithville, Miss., two weeks, preaching night and day, with twelve baptized and three restored. This is a very weak place, but I left them all encouraged to do more for the Master. I spent eight days at New Zion, seven miles out from Senatobia, with services day and night. Fifteen were restored and five were baptized. At Belen the meeting continued eight days, with five baptized and one restored. I preached at Lyons five days, and there were five confessions and one restored and the church edified. I am now (September 20) at Capleville, Tenn., in a very interesting meeting, with two confessions to date. I will be here another week. This is the third meeting I have held for these people. The church here has a spirit to do mission work. When this week ends, it will be five months that I have preached somewhere every night and sometimes in the day.

M. KEEBLE.

Brother Womack's Report.

Our meeting at Lynchburg, Tenn., began on the third Lord's day in September with a pretty fair crowd. We had three services, with dinner on the ground. The work here seems to be in good condition under the management of Brother J. W. Smith. He says they are content with the old Book.

I am now in my old home town and country. It has been so long since I left here that it appears like being in a strange country with a few people that I know. Space will not permit me to tell of the many changes that have taken place. This is where I heard the first gospel sermons, preached by Dr. T. W. Brents, Robert Trimble, and old "Father Lee," as he was then called. This was in the summer of 1865. I had found out something about Methodism, but I lost it in that meeting by hearing these good men preach the gospel. I am holding the meeting in the first colored church of Christ that was built in Moore County, which I, with others, helped to build. It has had some changes and repairs since that time. They have a neat house, and the members, both old and young, seem to be earnest and faithful in the work. I have met only a few of the older people, either white or colored, that I left here years ago. Here in this town, in the white brethren's old meetinghouse, I heard such men as Granville Lipscomb, W. M. Dickson, T. J. Shaw, the Darnalls, Barrett (of Texas), W. D. Carnes, the Sewells, Dr. Bowling, Jones, and others; and but few men since that time have been able to make the gospel any plainer to me than they did. God bless them and their labors. These men made impressions on my mind that the waves of time will never be able to wash out.

We have had one more addition by baptism at the Jackson Street Church and two at the Cowan Street Church, in Nashville, since our last report, and the work is doing fairly well. Brethren Greer and Smalling were with us on the second Lord's day and made good talks. The interest, attendance, and attention were good.

I thank the Lewisburg church (by Dr. Hardison) for their contribution; Mr. and Mrs. Larimore, Joe Hasty, W. T. Selley, and the sisters of the College Street Church and the Jackson Street Church. May the Lord bless them all. We trust that others may fall into line and help us in the work.

Report of Work.

BY FRED W. CHUNN.

Some of the brethren among whom I have labored have requested me to submit a report of my protracted-meeting work for this year.

At Metropolis, Ill., in June, we continued for thirteen days. The church here is weak numerically, but strong spiritually. The crowds were poor, interest good, and one was added to the church.

At Antioch, Weakley County, Tenn., we continued for nine days. We had good crowds here, and good interest after the first few days, but there were no additions.

My best meeting from the standpoint of additions was conducted at Antioch, Graves County, Ky., beginning on the third Lord's day in July. We had great crowds, fine interest, and twenty additions. This church is strong numerically, but too many of its members are inactive, cold, and indifferent. They do not lay by in store on the first day of the week as God has prospered them. Four hundred members pay their regular preacher (one hundred and fifty dollars) and hold one meeting (thirty-seven dollars) yearly; that's all.

At Oak Grove Schoolhouse, in August, we continued for thirteen days, with fine crowds, fine interest, and four additions. This schoolhouse is just one mile from Gleason, where our digressive friends have a congregation. We have conducted two meetings there before this year, having, in all, twenty-three additions; and, despite the efforts of the Gleason folks to draw them into digression, nearly every one has stood immovably upon the sure foundation. They meet regularly in the little schoolhouse.

The church of Christ at Henry, Tenn., supported me in an eleven-days' meeting in a schoolhouse at Routon, Tenn. This meeting was well attended, interest was good, and three were baptized, who took membership at Henry. This was my second meeting at this place, and, the Lord willing, I will begin another there on August 2, 1916.

I preached five nights at Springville the last week in August, with good results. We have no house here, so I preached in the schoolhouse. On Friday night it rained and our audience dwindled down to five, but we had preaching. On Saturday morning I baptized four of our Friday-night audience. Six, in all, were baptized. We have several members living around here.

My last meeting was at Mount Pelia, Weakley County, Tenn. Here we had seven additions to the church, one being a Methodist preacher. Much interest was manifested; but the church is greatly in need of some more good, substantial, men.

I have one more meeting to conduct, at West Union, Weakley County, Tenn., under our new Weakley County tent. I conducted a meeting here last year in the house by permission of our Baptist friends. We had fourteen additions, and one of the Baptist leaders said, "It turned out about like I expected it to," and for this and other reasons we were not permitted the use of the house this year. But God's word is not caged, his servants' mouths are not locked, and a tent makes a fine church house for a week or two.

After October 1 I will be located at Big Sandy, Tenn., where I will teach this year.

The special price on "Christian Hymns" and "Seventy-Seven Sweet Songs" has been discontinued. We would appreciate your order for these books at the regular price. Both are excellent music books.

What is the Club?

The Gospel Advocate Piano Club is both a theory and a fact. The theory is that a piano factory can afford to sell one hundred pianos and player-pianos at a much lower price than it would be willing to make on an order for only one instrument. The fact is that the club has saved each of its members forty per cent.

The theory of the club is "co-operation." The fact is "perfect satisfaction." The theory is: "A square deal to every member." The fact is: "Every member is delighted."

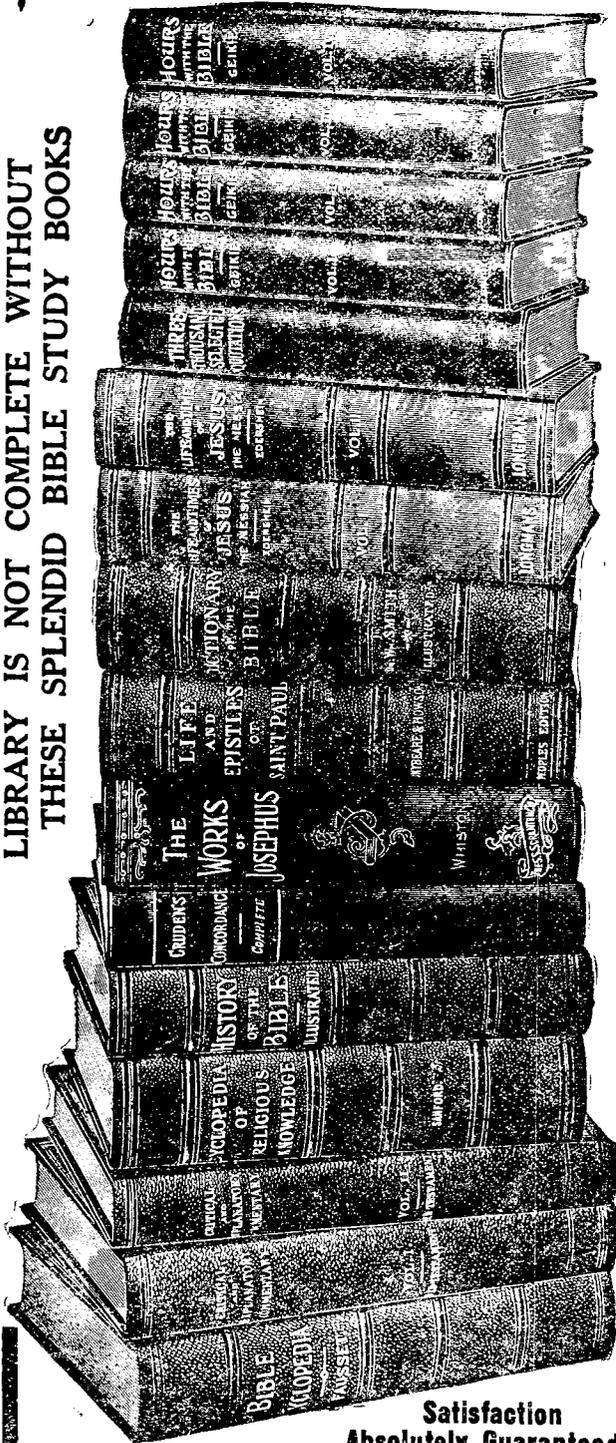

If you are interested in securing a piano or player-piano of the finest quality at the lowest possible factory price, write for your copy of the club's catalogue, discount sheet, and terms. Address Associated Piano Clubs, Gospel Advocate Department, Atlanta, Ga.

The Outlook Is Encouraging.

WHILE the expenditures on the Gospel Advocate are now necessarily heavy, we are gratified to announce that the receipts have recently been very greatly increased. The receipts for the last five months have grown steadily and encouragingly.

Many of our readers who have been reading the Gospel Advocate for years are now renewing their subscriptions for one and two years in advance. It goes without saying that we are pleased to have all our readers take advantage of our liberal terms to old subscribers. It is good economy to renew your paper now for two years at $1.50 a year, since the subscription price on January 1, 1917, will be $2 a year, in advance.

We desire, however, to add many new subscribers to our subscription list. We want every old subscriber to help us double our list of subscribers within the next three months. New subscribers may now subscribe for one year in advance at $1.50 a year. To new subscribers the privilege of securing the paper at $1.50 a year is extended to only one year. We believe that our old subscribers will show the appreciation of the courtesy extended them by sending us now all the new subscribers they can at $1.50 a year. Call the attention of your friends to this opportunity now. Urge them to subscribe now, as the price on January 1, 1917, goes to $2 a year.

The hand in this article is to call the attention of all our readers to the fact that we are inaugurating a campaign for new subscribers. PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

"EDIFYING AS THE NEED MAY BE"

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

The Captivity of Thought.

Paul uses this expression: "Bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ." This is suggestive of the highest degree of Christian growth and development. It represents the supreme excellence of Christian influence, the unreckonable power of Christian warfare, the sum total of Christian endeavor and achievement. It reveals the picture of a man spiritually perfect, so far as one can be in this world. His thoughts and intents are centered upon one purpose and striving for one goal. That purpose is to become obedient unto Christ; that goal is to be saved in heaven.

Pascal tells us: "Man is evidently made for thinking. This is the only excellence he can boast, the only one that differentiates him from the dumb brutes of earth. To think aright is the sum of human duty; and the true art of thinking is to begin with ourselves, our Author, and our end." And yet, "what is it," he asks, "that engrosses the thoughts of the world? Not any of these objects, but pleasure, wealth, honor, and esteem; in fine, the making of ourselves kings without reflecting what it is to be a king or a man."

Mental Carelessness in Religious Matters.

There is undoubtedly a great deal of mental carelessness in dealing with religious matters even among professed Christians. I had occasion once to speak to a friend, who had been immersed, about engaging in the work and worship of the congregation with which I was identified. In answer to my solicitous inquiry, he offered several objections. The chief criticism was that the congregation did not place enough emphasis upon the intellectual side of the Christian religion. It was a nice way of saying that we encourage ignorance among our members. This friend had reference to what he called "preinitiatory knowledge." By way of illustration he went on to say how much a person should know about Old Testament prophecies and figures and New Testament mysteries before he could be intelligently baptized into Christ and make the start in the Christian life. The brief outline of necessary knowledge he gave me was so broad in its scope and so intricate in its bearing that I told him frankly that such a condition would not only bar the children, but most grown-up people, from accepting the Savior. In reply, I tried to impress the fact upon his mind that, in the examples of conversion contained in the Acts of the Apostles, the rudiments of the great lesson of salvation were easily learned, and that many wayfaring men had confessed their belief in the Son of God, turned from their sins, and had entered through baptism into his spiritual kingdom.

Had this friend made the point that many who have been baptized do not appreciate the intellectual side of the religion of Christ; that many do not read and study the word of God with any degree of regularity, and on account of their intermittent efforts do not derive any great amount of pleasure from its perusal; and that many act as if they were afraid of Christian scholarship, many of us would be compelled to shamefacedly confess that his conclusions were correct. The neglect of learning more and more about Jesus Christ and his holy religion is not only unbecoming, but it is disastrous. An intelligent application of the teaching of God's word is necessary for our spiritual cleanliness. "Already ye are clean because of the word which I have spoken unto you." (John 15: 3.) It is necessary for our sanctification. "Sanctify them in the truth; thy word is truth." (John 17: 17.) It is necessary for the expression of our love. "For God is my witness, how I long after you all in the tender mercies of Christ Jesus. And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and all discernment; so that ye may approve the things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and void of offense unto the day of Christ." (Phil. 1: 8-10.)

But let us not gainsay the fact that Christ does not expect us to take the postgraduate course first. Beginners are always welcome in the great Teacher's school.

The Ideas that Cling.

How frequently do we hear a man say that this or that idea "clung to me through life!" Ideas are powerful vehicles in the molding and developing of thought and character. Ideas implanted in the hearts of the young may rule for good or they may ruin. The idea of becoming very rich has caused many a young man to become rich at the cost of his soul. The idea of becoming a useful preacher of the gospel has often led to a life of glorious sacrifice and splendid service.

Sister Andrews, who is now an efficient missionary worker in Japan, states that her going is the result of an idea first conceived when she was but a small girl of tender age. Our ideas are indissolubly associated with our plans. Should not these simple and well-attested facts stir the heart of every faithful teacher? You are not merely teaching the lesson; you are creating ideas that will make or hinder the success of those whom you teach.

Why the Bible is the Greatest Book.

Some would say because it is the oldest book, but this is not the reason. Some would say because it is the most popular book, but this is not the reason. These things are important, but they do not confirm the greatness of the Bible. The best reason is contained in the answer that a slave gave to an infidel. The infidel asked him how it was that he considered the Bible such a wonderful book when he could neither read nor write. "Because it touches my heart," was the laconic answer. This is the reason for the greatness of the Bible. This explains why it is the most important study.

Christianity is important, but it cannot give the answer of a good conscience. Mathematics is important, but it cannot heal a broken heart. The sciences are important, but they cannot point the way to heaven. The languages are important, but they cannot make a man "thoroughly furnished unto all good works." In the study of the Bible you not only add to your intellect, but you find a foundation for your character. Read the Bible and you stand with Moses and partake of his meekness. Read the Bible and you stand with David and partake of his courage. Read the Bible and you stand with Paul and partake of his faith. Read the Bible and you stand with Christ and partake of his love.

An old Scotch preacher was called to a new charge. He explained his relationship to the congregation by saying: "I am the shepherd and you are the sheep. I shall put my mark upon you, and the Bible is the tar bottle." All Christians should have the mark of the Bible upon them. And thinking of the old Scotchman's figure, it is not enough to "smear it on;" we want this wonderful book to permeate every fiber of our being.

The Millennium. No. 1.

[This is the beginning of a series of four articles written and published by Alexander Campbell in the Millennial Harbinger in 1834. Mr. Campbell wrote under the nom de plume of "A Reformed Clergyman," as has already been stated in our columns. Mr. Campbell was neither a premillennialist nor a postmillennialist; but as the claim has been made that he favored premillennialism and as his writings are always read with interest, we shall permit him without comment to speak for himself in our columns. Our readers will readily discover that the doctrine of premillennialism is nothing new.—Editor.]

Mount Olivet, Year of the World 5834.

Dear Sir: This is a day of searching the Bible—an ominous day. "For the divisions of Reuben there are great searchings of heart." Men are looking into the future with curious eyes and anxious souls. I, too, read the prophets. I venerate them all. I listen to their warnings. I can say: "Happy are they who read and understand the words of prophecy." But who dares to be dogmatical on the future? Who can say: "As sure as there is truth in the Bible, this is the true meaning of prophecy?" You have had, for some months past, an alarming correspondent.

He has blown a long blast and a strong blast on the walls of Zion, I have been roused from my repose. I have trimmed my lamp anew. I have given him a hearing—a patient hearing. Your friend, Samuel McCorkle, is worthy of being heard on more accounts than two; so is your friend Begg; and so was your friend Irving. They all prefer ram's horns. They think of Jericho. But, sir, in their interpretations there is not demonstration. They roll on in eccentric orbits, as do all the planets near the sun. Astronomers tell us that the small planets are more eccentric than the large ones. If Jupiter were as eccentric in its orbit as Mercury, the solar system would be destroyed. Large masses of matter revolve in circular orbits; small masses, in elliptical orbits. By this means the balance of the system is perfected. Men of genius are always eccentric; and those who would be thought men of genius pretend to be eccentric. But, sir, when we spiritualize the solar system, we are admonished to regard all geni as near the sun, and as eccentric in their path as their distance from the sun and their own diameter are less than planets more remote. I belong not to the seven primary planets.

I am only a moon, attendant on a large planet; and, therefore, take no honor to myself from my disavowal of eccentricity. To your readers I must be nameless; for I perceive the world is governed by names—it must not be governed by mine. I humbly request an impartial hearing. I ask for no more. I was once a clergyman—I am not now. I am a Christian by profession. I desire no higher honor on the earth, and I aspire to none higher in heaven.

You, sir, are a man of two sides. Other editors have only one side. As I may be regarded on the other side from our friend McCorkle in several very leading points in the interpretation of prophecy, I claim a hearing in your Harbinger. I claim it, sir, because you have two sides; and whether or not you lean to one side, as some suspect, and to McCorkle's side, as some confidently affirm, I expect a hearing. You have had various correspondents on that side—none on my side; and that your readers may have both sides, I doubt not but you will give me a hearing. This, sir, is a trait in your editorial character that will deservedly give your labors a permanency in their effect far transcending those of all your opponents.

I presume that all your readers are acquainted with McCorkle's views and Mr. Begg's, as you have recommended both these authors to their attention. If they have not read them, they certainly ought to read them, for on that side they are most worthy of being heard. But, sir, neither of them has, in my judgment, any well-established and uniform system or rules of interpretation. They are sometimes chimerically literal, and sometimes as arbitrarily spiritual or figurative.

There is one point on which they labor without success, and in which I cannot agree with them. They labor to persuade the reader that their views ought to be sounded loud and far, because of alarming the people into reformation. If their interpretations were as certain as death, and if the literal coming of the Lord was to be expected before the present generation should die, then, indeed, I could perceive some reason for their zeal, and some sound logic in their vehemence; but as their interpretations are not as certain, and their literal advent of the Lord not so immediate, as death to all their readers, there is no philosophy to my mind in their expostulations. The Lord and his apostles sought not to convert men by such means; and Christians can have no stronger arguments than the gospel offers, without the prophecies concerning the millennium, to stir them up to diligence to make their calling and election sure. Notwithstanding all the glowing descriptions which they and all the poets have given of the literal reign of the Messiah in Jerusalem, I would rather be in heaven than Jerusalem, in the land of Judea. After death, which, to me, at least, is more immediate than the millennium, and much more certain than the personal and literal return of the Lord Jesus, before the millennium I expect to be with the Lord if I hold on my way. Now what inducement to holiness could it be to me, or to any one like me, who expects to be present with the Lord so soon as absent from the body, to be even assured that Jesus Christ will literally reign a thousand years in Jerusalem? I would just as soon be with the Lord where he now is, as with him there.

What I mean, sir, is simply this: that to saint and sinner there is no new argument either to turn to God or to be diligent in our calling, from his rhetorical theory of an earthly reign of a thousand years. Therefore, the apostles and prophets who spoke of the millennium two thousand years ago had as much power with men by argument as Samuel McCorkle, a layman, clothed with all his terrors of the crash of the present dispensation and the glories of an earthly paradise. The hope of the resurrection of the dead and of the glories following after was enough for Paul, and it is enough for me. To me that event is in point of time nearer than the millennium.

These brethren, for I presume we are all brethren, though personally unknown to each other—brethren not in opinion, but in faith and in the obedience of faith, and in the hope of the coming of the Lord literally, at some day, before or after the millennium—I say, these brethren appear to me to err in their notions of the conversion of the Jews, as much as in the moral force of their appeals to the people on the near approach of the Lord to reign on earth. According to them, the Jews are to be saved by vision, not by faith. They are to abide still in unbelief till the Lord come and convert them by their eyes rather than their ears. Paul said, if they abide not still in unbelief, the Lord would engraft them into their own olive tree; and that when their heart should turn to the Lord, the veil should be taken from their eyes. But these good brethren, and all the recent pleaders for a literal return, will have the veil taken off their eyes before their heart turn to the Lord—they will have the remnant of the Jews now on earth converted without faith—by sight rather than by hearing.

But, sir, I will attempt to show, without the power of rhetoric (for I am no very flowery rhetorician) that the Scriptures do not teach a literal coming of the Lord before the millennium, nor a conversion of the Jews by sight, nor a literal resurrection of the saints a thousand years, or three hundred and sixty-five thousand years before the general judgment, or the resurrection and final overthrow of the wicked. But they do teach a personal and literal coming of the Lord after the millennium and a general resurrection of all the dead at the proper coming of the Lord.

In what manner I shall attempt this, I will not now stipulate. I will first offer a few strictures on our friend McCorkle's interpretation, and attempt to show that he has studied the Apocalypse till he has become too visionary. I speak with deference, but he has taught me to speak with some degree of confidence.

But I must, to prevent misapprehensions, assure him that the ten pages of tithes and freewill offerings, out of a hundred, which he has presented to the clergy, has not in the least biased my judgment. True, he has been profuse in such incense as the following: "The blind guides, the false teachers of the day"—"stall-fed theologians, those lordly pontiffs in the clerical kingdom"—"speculating priests"—"gospel merchandisers"—"did I wish to make them as corrupt as sin, I would give them what money they would demand"—"the pampered beggars receive and grow fat on the merchandise of the gospel"—"our scrap-mongers and doctors"—"peace-predicting watchmen"—"if we trace these blunders back to their source, they originate where most of our blunders do, among the priests"—"we are listening to the sing-song of the day, the lullabies of our dry, morose divines, telling us a thousand things which need not to be told, a thousand tales, fables, lies"—"the pulpit is the fountain head of error," etc., etc., etc. This is but a single censer full of the incense which our friend offers to these blockheads, dunces, and deceivers. He seems to have forgotten that all reformers were of this very proscribed cast; that all the light and science of Europe, of the world, has come through these accursed priests. I think a little reflection would have softened a hundred periods in these hundred pages. Promiscuous slaughter is cruel and unwise. How many of these very clergymen have embraced the present reformation! A large portion of the Baptist priesthood, in all places where the original gospel (as you call it) has been announced, have renounced their standing among the Baptists. Has not a due proportion of the priesthood to the laity, Methodistic, Christian, and others, come over to the Restoration doctrine? Did not a single act of Parliament, in Old England, make two thousand nonconformist ministers, and eject from their livings that number in one day? The clergy, I mean the Protestant clergy, as a class of men, are the best class in any community. They have their snares and temptations peculiar to themselves, and the people spoil them. Place a thousand of your best laymen in their place; and if in three years they are any better than a thousand of the present priests, then I am no prophet. They would be worse, if not as well educated; for, sir, keep me from an ignorant man in office in church or state! I quarrel with the system much more than with the men. Many of them are not Christians who aspire to the office, and the system gives them an opportunity of exerting an unhappy influence against the truth. But, sir, there were many priests of a more corrupt race than the present, who embraced the gospel in the days of the apostles—in the days of Luther; and I have no doubt there will always be found among them many that fear God, and who will do their duty. Therefore, I must dissent from my friend McCorkle in all the embroidery he has thrown around his interpretations, taken from the skirts of the mantles of his downy, and drowsy, and doling priesthood. These things said, and I proceed to examine some of the positions of my lay brother.

A very stronghold from which our brother often delights to hurl his flaming arguments at these obnoxious priests, is, that there have been three dispensations of two thousand years each (the third not fully expired), and that the millennium will be a fourth and an entirely new dispensation, as distinct from the present as the present is from the past. He discovers some strong points of analogy in these dispensations; and from these points of analogy he reasons that the close of the third or present dispensation and the commencement of the fourth will resemble the close of the preceding and the commencement of the present.

It is unfortunate for any cause when its pleaders begin with analogies. Analogies are the most romantic things we can imagine. A person of a teeming imagination will discover swarms of analogies everywhere. Some have found the whole science of Free Masonry and the gospel in the twelve signs of the zodiac. Then they find the twelve patriarchs, the twelve apostles, the twelve thons of Judah's throne, the twelve gates of the New Jerusalem, the twelve pillars of the sanctum sanctorum of Masonry. Analogies are good illustrations and somewhat corroborative, but they can never amount to argument. It is an injury to a good cause to begin with them; for almost all the works of romance, from the Baron Swedenborg's doctrine of correspondences down to the "High Priest of Nature," begin and end in analogies, generally visible only to those who are near the sun. But it is still worse when the analogies themselves are incomplete; and I am not a little mistaken if this be not the case in the exordium of the layman. Let us, without rhetoric, but with all the aids of logic, examine this matter.

The patriarchal, the Jewish, and the Christian are his three actual dispensations. The two former became corrupt—could not be reformed—therefore went into dissolution. So in the analogy will eventuate the present; and who cannot, from the same premises, infer the fortunes of the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh dispensations? But the two preceding dispensations lasted two thousand years, became corrupt, could not be reformed, and, therefore, were destroyed; so will be the present. Now let it be noticed that if the present dispensation lasts only two thousand years, and because corrupt and incapable of being reformed it should then be destroyed and a new one introduced, there would be no analogy, or, at least, not one of the analogies necessary to the layman's argument, between it and the two preceding; for none of them lasted only two thousand years; both of them were reformed after becoming corrupt, and neither of them was destroyed simply because corrupt! Take notice, reader!

The first, or patriarchal dispensation, continued twenty-five hundred years; and did not go into dissolution by famine, sword, pestilence, fire, or flood, unless we imagine it to have ended in the plagues of Egypt and the drowning of Pharaoh, which, I think, has not been noticed by our friend McCorkle.

The Jewish dispensation lasted only fifteen hundred years, and was dissolved—not only because it was corrupt, but whether corrupt or not it would have been dissolved and destroyed as we do the stubble or straw when we have got the wheat, or pull down and burn up the scaffolding when the house is reared. The Son of God came out of the Jewish dispensation, as the Jewish came out of the patriarchal, and then the kernel being extracted, the shell was thrown into the street.

Before the dissolution of the two former dispensations the people became corrupt and were reformed by sore judgments. The flood came during the first dispensation, long before it closed, in the year of the world 1656—three and a half centuries before the first two thousand years of my good lay brother expired, and nearly nine hundred years before the second dispensation commenced. This was one sore judgment, which reformed the world for a while; and a second sore judgment, at Babel, was the confounding of language and necessary dispersion and alienation of men. Sore judgments, moreover, fell upon many cities during that dispensation—witness Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zebolm.

Again, many sore judgments befell the people under the second dispensation long before it closed—famine, sword, fire, and pestilence; and did not all these judgments exert a moral influence? They were sent into captivity for seventy years. Their city and temple were destroyed and their land given to their enemies—only a remnant of the twelve tribes ever returned from Babylon. Now all this happened five hundred years before that dispensation closed. But were they not effectually reformed from idolatry by the captivity, and were not the reformed restored to their own land and their former privileges?

If, then, the present dispensation ends in two thousand years from its commencement—if it end, and a new one commence by sore judgments, or by a literal and personal return of the Messiah, it will be a new thing under the sun, not analogous to any antecedent dispensation. I must, however, leave my Brother McCorkle and all your readers to meditate upon this matter till you can give them another number. I do not wish to weary them at my very entrance. But tell them that I have not yet finished the analogies of the three dispensations. I have the typical character of the second to examine, and I despair not of yet satisfying the layman himself, that if the former be a type of the latter, that his argument touching dispensations is palpably delusive.

Do, Mr. Editor, apologize to your readers for the abruptness of my style and my positive manner. Old clergymen, even when reformed, still retain a little of their didactic habits. Casks long retain the odor of the first wine which they contained; and I know that my friend McCorkle can bear, without wincing, a healthy application of the flesh brush, judging from his athletic application of it to others. Please inform him and your readers, lest they should prejudge me, that I am decidedly a firm believer in a millennium of one thousand years, to be preceded by the conversion of the Jews and the destruction of all the corrupt hierarchies on earth—the binding of Satan and a resurrection of the primitive church—of the great, and good, and noble spirits of former times. But this only as a hint. Let us have time and patience and read the prophecies with prayer, fasting, and supplication.

Conceal my name till the end of the seventh volume of the Harbinger, that I may be heard without favor or affection, prejudice or partiality.

Baptism of Jesus.

BY A. M. GEORGE.

Most of the religious world, who profess to follow Christ, say: "O, baptism amounts to nothing, so far as our salvation is concerned; we can be saved just as well without it as with it; in short, it has nothing to do with our salvation. And it makes no difference whether we use three drops of water or an ocean." This is, largely, the teaching of the religious (I do not mean Christian) world.

Now I will put by the side of this what God says about it, and let those who have been deceived by those teachers compare the two and reflect. The first is what is called, in the seventh chapter of Mark, "the doctrines and commandments of men." And Jesus said: "Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition." The next, Peter calls "the oracles of God."

No reasonable person will deny that God commands people to be baptized, and I suppose all will admit that it is righteous to obey God. (See Acts 2: 38.) The Son of God came all the way from Galilee to where John was baptizing in the Jordan to be baptized. John objected, thinking that Jesus would better baptize him. Jesus insisted, saying: "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." And John baptized him. This was all simple enough; but now this baptism begins to show some strange results. In being baptized, Jesus completed, or fulfilled, all righteousness; and he could not have done it any other way, for that was God's way. Suppose that Jesus had, like these religious people of the present day, said: "O, Father, I do not consider baptism essential to the fulfillment of all righteousness." What do you suppose would have come of it? But he, in obedience to his Father, was baptized, and so "fulfilled all righteousness," and now his Father seals the matter.

As Jesus goes up out of the water, what happens? Why, just this: Jesus, having "fulfilled all righteousness" in being baptized, the heavens open and the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove comes down and lights upon him. This is strange, indeed. I wonder why God chose this particular time to send his Spirit down upon his Son. I wonder why he did not do it before he was baptized. It seems strange that God should have delayed this until his Son "fulfilled all righteousness" in being baptized. I wonder, also, if God sends his Spirit to men and women now before they "fulfill all righteousness" in being baptized.

This is one of the strange things about this baptism; and now another, even more strange, happens as he comes up out of his baptism with the Holy Spirit resting on him. God speaks from heaven, saying: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Can you see anything strange in this, more than that a miracle has happened? I can, and so can any open-eyed, intelligent man or woman. Why did God not acknowledge Jesus as his Son till after he was baptized? Just because it required baptism to complete, or fulfill, "all righteousness;" that was all.

Now, if God would not acknowledge Jesus as his Son until after he was baptized, do you suppose that he will be more indulgent to you? Do you think that he thinks more of you than he did of Jesus, who never sinned?

Now we, who regard the Bible as truth, know that these things are written there just as I have related them, and we believe it all. If Jesus had declined to be baptized, or if he had even said, "I can see no necessity for it," would there not have been an issue between him and his Father, and would those strange things that followed his baptism ever have taken place? People who hold God and his word lightly may think so, but those in the "strait and narrow way" do not. It would be stranger than all this if God would receive as a son or daughter any man or woman before baptism, if he or she had heard the gospel and had the power to obey.

The Business of Preaching.

BY JEWELL MATTHEWS.

A business, to be successful, must have all of the knowledge, skill, and efficiency in it possible. If the directors of a business are ignorant, unskilled, and inefficient in their directorship and management, the business suffers. The business enterprise may be an honest one and one that will do much good in the business world, but poor management destroys all of its good purposes. The directors, too, may be honest and sincere, but they are not prepared for their tasks.

Every man who preaches the gospel of Christ should consider it his lifelong business. I do not mean that a man should become a preacher for material gain or personal notoriety, but he should view the matter as did the apostle Paul. Paul considered preaching his business, and he felt the weight of responsibility so heavily that he said: "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." Paul's business was to preach the gospel with power that souls might be saved. If any man enters the holy business of preaching for any other purpose than to be instrumental in saving souls, he has the wrong conception of his calling and he will make a flat failure. What we need to-day is more men who realize what it means to preach the gospel.

A man should feel the greatness of his calling so much that he will prepare himself to preach with power as did Paul. The world demands more of a preacher now than it has ever demanded in the past. The time has come when a man cannot get up in the pulpit with a poorly prepared sermon and expect to get results. We very often hear such remarks as: "Brother A, your sermon was good, but it was entirely too long." ("Your sermon was good" was inserted for the sake of politeness.) If we really preached, we would not hear such remarks about the length of our sermons. The trouble is, we go before our audiences with nothing to say; hence we fill our time with endless generalizations and repetitions. Who can listen one hour to such "bunk" and not grow weary? I tell you, brethren, the trouble is with us and not the people. The trouble does not lie wholly in the modern mind, but in the modern "bunk"—called "preaching." When we have something to say to the people, they will most certainly listen, and they will listen with pleasure. A man who does not prepare for the business of preaching has no business trying to preach. The cause of Christ has been brought into disrepute more than once by men who were not prepared to be evangelists. We are guilty of sending young men out to preach who knew practically nothing about the principles of the gospel. The only scripture they knew was a few very familiar passages—such as Mark 16: 16; Acts 2: 38; 1 Pet. 3: 21. What effect do you suppose they had on their hearers? I think the church should let the young men who intend to make preaching their business preach to it until they become thoroughly acquainted with the gospel, then let them go out into the world. It is a shame to encourage any man who does not know the gospel to go to sinners to tell them what they must do to inherit eternal life. The fact that they must be prepared before they can become gospel preachers should be impressed upon the minds of young men who propose to preach or serve as evangelists. We have sadly neglected this.

The greatest business under heaven demands our most careful preparation. Preparation insures everything—knowledge, skill, efficiency, etc. To prepare ourselves, we need to thoroughly familiarize ourselves with the Bible (the fountain of learning), history, and general literature; we need to closely observe contemporary life; and, above all things, we need to think. It is useless for any man to plead ignorance in the midst of a world of books which can be secured at reasonable prices. I welcome the day when all of our preachers will really be prepared to preach.

OF

WILL BE

ADVANCED ON JANUARY 1, 1917.

It is generally understood that everything that goes into the production of a newspaper has increased in price tremendously. These increases range all the way from 50 per cent to 200 per cent. White paper has over doubled in value and is scarce at any price; wrappers for the Gospel Advocate have more than doubled in price; inks of all kinds have advanced in price out of all reason; and so it goes all along the line.

As a matter of self-preservation and protection, it is absolutely necessary that we raise the price on January 1, 1917, to $2 per annum.

We will accept renewal and new subscriptions at the present price—NOW!

We will deal just as fairly and liberally with our present subscribers as possible, and so will accept renewal subscriptions, no matter when the subscription expires, at $1.50 for one year and $3 for two years, provided these subscriptions reach us on or before January 1, 1917. New subscribers accepted NOW at $1.50 a year for one year only, in advance.

We advise, as we say, no matter when your subscription expires, that you send us your renewal for one or two years at $1.50 a year, and send it just as early as possible. We will soon be very busy entering thousands upon thousands of subscriptions between now and January 1, 1917. It is your last chance to get the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year.

However, we shall not ask you to bear all of this extra expense without any corresponding benefit; we shall bear at least a fair proportion. The fact that we cannot afford to longer publish the Gospel Advocate at $1.50 a year necessitated either making the paper smaller or raising the price and making it larger and better. Our space does not now adequately meet the demands made upon it, so it would be suicidal to cut down the size of the paper. We decided that you were the kind of readers that would prefer a better and a larger paper. So on January 1, 1917, or soon thereafter, the paper will be enlarged to 32 pages. Our purpose is to make the Gospel Advocate the brightest and best religious paper in all the country.

Will you please give this your immediate attention?

Brother Jelley's Report.

We gratefully acknowledge receipt of the following fellowship through the kindness of the McQuiddy Printing Company: From Roy Robinson, $2.50; F. H. Woodward, $2; Mrs. D. M. Clark, $1; Roy Robinson, $2.33; T. H. McLean and wife, $3; A. A. Jackson, $1.75; Sister Dunn, $1; Roy Robinson, $1; L. M. Culp, $1; J. K. Timmons, $2; C. E. Jones, $2; J. C. Rushing, $4; J. D. Ott, $20.25. Total, $43.83.

The above was sent on May 18, and was received by me upon my return from the Sonai Bible study the last of July. I may add that I got it just in time to be very useful, as Bible studies are expensive and my railway expenses coming and going are quite heavy. We had about fifty men and women at the Bible study.

Our most devout worker, a mountaineer who had gone to the Deccan as a missionary, died of cholera on July 30. Brother McHenry and I were exposed about as much as he, but God spared us to his work.

In addition to the work among the low castes, work has been begun among the high castes. I had a written debate with with an Arya who is an M.A. English Bibles were asked for and given. An official comes miles to study the Bible. I am getting out a first-class tract.

In the Bhagavad-Puran a king inquires: "Is it true that the Lord (Krishna), the establisher of religion and law, committed the unholy act of adultery?" The answer is that the gods' words are true, but not always their acts, and one must not ever in thought follow their evil acts. India is hungering for just such a Lord as Jesus, although caste, ignorance, and fear of persecution make our progress slow.

Brother McCaleb's Report.

During July I received the following contributions for myself and others:

For Personal Support: Concord, Ontario, Canada, $4.42; Portland Avenue, Louisville, Ky., $10; Ripley, Tenn., $5; Aromas, Cal., $5; Buechel, Ky., $14; Mrs. Oldham, $2.50; by D. L. Cooper, $2.62; C. H. Byrd, Georgia, 45 cents; by H. N. Baker, Ontario, Canada, $4.05; by F. L. Rowe, $7. Total, $55.04. Income in Japan, $32.50.

For Brother Fujimori: W. T. Meou, Louisville, Ky., $10.

For Literature Fund: George W. Graves, $2.50; John van Allman, $2. We need five dollars a month regularly to publish our Japanese paper, the Fukuin, and twenty dollars to pay for the tracts distributed at the great festival on May 5.

Sendagaya (Tokyo) Church: Broadway Church, Los Angeles, $20. We need thirty-four dollars a month to pay the preacher, the Sunday-school teacher, and the land rent.

For Shinjuku Slums: For Brother Ishii, from Miss Belle Brown, Okolona Station, Louisville, Ky., $10. We need seven dollars a month for Brother Ishii.

Zoshigaya Church: Charleston, Miss., $5; Nashville Bible

School Church, $10; Coal City, Ind., by Mrs. Belle Chaney, $10; Miss Mary Walker's Sunday-school class, McMinnville, Tenn., $3.50; Lubbock, Texas, $10. Total, $38.50. We need twenty-five dollars a month to support our three workers here.

Miss Okel Fujimori has finished the middle-school course in the Woman's University and also taken a year and a half in a select school for girls. She will now help her uncle, Otoshige Fujimori, in the mission at Sawara, a town of fifteen or twenty thousand people near his home. I hope the friends who have so generously helped to educate her will continue to contribute as they are able toward her support as a Sunday-school worker. Offerings for her may be sent to me as formerly.

J. M. McCALEB.

Sister Andrews' Report.

The following report shows the funds received by me since reaching Japan:

March—Church at Bohon, Ky., $6.80; through I. B. Bradley, $50.

April—Miss Nina M. Miles' Sunday-school class, Bellevue, Tenn., $1.

May—Through I. B. Bradley, $50.

June—Church at Bohon, Ky., $6; through I. B. Bradley, $50; through the Gospel Advocate, $7; through the Christian Leader, $4.

July—Miss M. Ehresman, $5; Mrs. O. L. Massey, $2.50; through I. B. Bradley, $50.

August—Mrs. E. A. Blackburn, Austin, Texas, $1.

In additions to these donations, I have been the glad recipient of many letters of encouragement, all of which were greatly appreciated. Knowing that brethren and sisters in the Lord are praying for me in this great work makes me more courageous to press on.

May the Lord bless all who are donating to this work and direct me in using all to his glory.

SARAH ANDREWS.

Moving Pictures.

Another young sister has expressed her intention of coming as a missionary to Japan as soon as she is prepared.

The last prohibition of our Lord was to forbid the use of the sword; his last cure was the cure of an enemy; his last prayer was for his persecutors.

A Catholic priest in Nanking, China, was asked about their work in that city, and he replied: "We have been here eighty years and have eighty converts."

"When we do missionary work, we do an eminently scriptural work, and to this extent carry out the will of Heaven and extend the gracious offer of 'our Father who art in heaven.' Do not lose interest in this important work in which we are so weak, but rather endeavor to enlist other givers. There is much we can do if we work with a will." (Don Carlos Janes.)

Suzuki, the ex-prisoner whom I baptized last year, has again been convicted of crime and imprisoned.

There is no cure for old age. It may for a time be deferred; but for it there is only one permanent cure, and that is the resurrection through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Brother Hiratsuka lately visited his native village, and while there he baptized two persons.

This bit of cheering news reached me on August 9 from my son-in-law, John T. Glenn, of Louisville, Ky.: "Wee Lois Anne sends greetings and tenderest love to her dear granddaddy. She says tell you she arrived this morning (Sunday, July 16) at eight fifty, weighs seven pounds and a half, and looks very much like her daddy—or maybe it is like her granddaddy McCaleb." The Lord willing, the Glenss will start for Japan this fall.

Brother S. H. Hall's Article of August 31.

BY E. A. E.

As seen last week, Brother Hall began his article with the following quotation from a letter to him:

But there seems to be little inducement to young men of ability to prepare themselves to preach, and little inducement to schools to help such young men. The idea seems to be that young men should become preachers by accident—and not to be too much of a preacher, at that; to be farmer-preachers, teacher-preachers, or merchant-preachers. Hence, most young men are preparing themselves to follow some profitable business, while the King's business goes begging. Can we do anything to change these conditions?

The question is not, Should all faithful preachers be liberally supported? but, Should the support, however abundant, be the inducement to "prepare" to preach? All who understand the Bible know and teach that it is God's ordinance that those who preach the gospel should live of the gospel, but they also know that God condemns making the support the motive and inducement for preaching. Paul declares that, with his "right in the gospel" and "authority as an apostle of Christ," he never made of this right and authority "a cloak of covetousness." (See 1 Thess. 2: 5-12.) The motive must be pure, the inducement holy, the heart right before God, and the support full and free. All godly men eat and wear decent clothes to live, but eating and wearing clothes is not the inducement to live. Life, says Jesus, is "more than the food, and the body than the raiment." Just so, God has ordained that those who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel, but he has never ordained that men should preach for a "living" or that that is the inducement to preach. The man who lives to eat, with all his ability, is wholly animal; what is the man who preaches to eat?

It was proved abundantly last week that the first declaration of this paragraph virtually sets aside the Bible inducement for preaching the gospel of Christ and substitutes instead a human and worldly one. But, in addition to the Bible inducement offered last week, attention is called to the following:

And they that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever. (Dan. 12: 3.)

To save both himself and those who heard him was the inducement placed before Timothy to preach the gospel. (1 Tim. 4: 16.) As stated last week, the mighty and overruling inducement to Paul was, if by any means, to save some. (See Rom. 11: 14; 1 Cor. 9: 22.) He was so anxious to save souls that he used not to the full his "right in the gospel" that he might "gain the more." (See 1 Cor. 9: 16-23.) A man, of course, may "use to the full" his "right in the gospel" to marry and to a liberal support, but this right is not the inducement to preach. The desire and spirit and work, not only of preachers, but of all Christians, must be to turn sinners from the error of their way, to save souls from death, and to "hide a multitude of sins." (James 5: 19, 20.)

Were it not a matter so serious, it would be ridiculous that all these young men, who seek the inducement of an education and an assured liberal support "to prepare themselves to preach," pronounce themselves "young men of ability." The point is, it is a pity for the church to allow such ability to be wasted or to be turned away from preaching the gospel to "some profitable business." These "young men of ability" must have "some profitable business," and since preaching the gospel is not such a business in "these conditions," they must turn to that which is, even if "the King's business goes begging." And think of it, the churches and these young men are to blame for the loss of so much ability! Souls are going to eternal perdition because these "young men of ability" cannot make a "profitable business" out of preaching! They do not blame themselves for not using their ability to the good of the church, the saving of souls, and the glory of God. The "slothful," "unprofitable," and "wicked servant," who buried his talent and refused to use his ability to the glory of the Lord, has no weight with them: they know God is exacting, austere, and gathers where he does not strew and reaps where he does not sow, and they must have inducement and assurance from some other source.

If churches in many places are close, stingy, and covetous, and fail to liberally support the ones who preach for them, to generously and tenderly care for the faithful and godly old preachers who have worn themselves out preaching the gospel, and to have "fellowship in furtherance of the gospel" in destitute and foreign fields, so much greater—not so much less—is the need and inducement to preach the gospel. This is true, because all such churches, as well as all not in the church at all, need salvation; such churches need to be saved from such sins. Covetousness is idolatry, and is classed with "fornication, uncleanness, passion, evil desire" (Col. 3: 5), extortion, drunkenness, reviling, etc. (1 Cor. 5: 11). No covetous person "hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and God." (Eph. 5: 5.) It is as much "missionary work" and as much the duty of preachers to save idolaters in enlightened America and idolatrous churches here as to try to save the heathen idolaters in China, Japan, India, and darkest Africa. That churches love money and fail to use it to the advancement of Christ's kingdom and the glory of God in all other ways is the great reason that Christian young men should devote themselves with all their ability wholly to preaching "the whole counsel of God" and feeling and saying, "Woe is unto us, if we preach not the gospel!"

If I may be pardoned for a personal reference, I shall be glad to say that about thirty-four years ago an eloquent preacher, who had preached for a while in Wilson County, Tenn., some in Mississippi, some in other places, and was then preaching for a wealthy church in the blue-grass region of Kentucky, wrote me to learn if I would consent to leave Wilson County and preach for a church in the same section of Kentucky, and added that he wanted to get me "from among the stingy churches of Wilson County." I replied that, if his charges against the churches of Wilson County were true, I was in the right place—the place where preaching was more greatly needed than the one to which he wanted me to go—and hence would remain. That man was soon preaching for another church, then trying to sell patents, then on the lecture platform, then preaching for a city church in Texas, and then he went from "pillar to post," with no influence among the churches anywhere and no abiding place.

The men who "pastorate" a year or two in Maine, the next year or two in California, the next year or two in Florida, etc., running after the "inducement," die without any permanent influence for good anywhere, without a home, and abusing the churches generally for illiberality.

I am still in Wilson County, and have been ever since that brother wrote me, with the exception of eight or ten years, when I was at Gallatin, in an adjoining county, but still visiting and holding meetings in Wilson County. I have preached in schoolhouses, groves, private dwellings, and almost every house of worship in the county, have held meetings for almost every congregation in the county, and more meetings for some than any other man, and I have never murmured, or complained, or lacked any good thing in the way of necessary comfort and financial support. In fact, there are as many churches in Wilson County as in any other county in the State, except Davidson County. Rutherford County has, I think, as many as Wilson. The churches of Wilson County are as liberal as other churches, are as ready to help orphans and to support missionaries.

Brother F. B. Srygley has spent more than thirty years in the counties of Wilson and Davidson. He has never received as much "inducement" as modern "young men of ability" require; but he has never complained, has never threatened to seek "some profitable business," and by such economy as all Christians should practice and the help of an industrious and godly wife has a home, and has educated creditably and sent out a happy family of eight useful children, and exerts no small influence for good where he circulates.

The godly host of preachers who have planted the cause of Christ in every land and built up the thousands of churches now in existence have gone forth with pure motive and Bible inducement. All "young men of ability" who must have more than the inducement of the gospel to preach will soon pervert it, divert the churches from the New Testament order of government and work, become burdens upon the churches, hindrances to the kingdom of Christ, or for greater inducement turn to a more "profitable business."

In this connection it is a great pleasure and just to heartily commend the work Brother Hall has done and is still doing in Atlanta, the work Brother John T. Lewis has done and is still doing in Birmingham, and the work others are doing in other places. This is Paul-like. These good men could not have done this needed work without remaining in these places and working with Bible motives. Seeking the "inducement" referred to would have taken them from these fields. Their work and all such work should have the hearty support in every way necessary of all churches of Christ. Brother J. D. Walling, of Monticello, Ky., is another such faithful, Paul-like worker, and needs the support of the churches.

In this connection, too, it ought not to be necessary to have to say that, since the cost of living is so high, the support offered all faithful preachers should be very much increased. But, as a rule, churches now do not contribute any more to the support of the preachers who serve them and preach the gospel in needy fields than they did when the cost of living was but half as much as now. This is not equal and, hence, not right. While all preachers should go from the motive and in the inducement the love and gospel of God place before them, the churches and individual Christians should also act from Bible motives and inducements to support such preachers, and should cheerfully increase their contributions to equal the cost of living. The wages of farm hands and all employees have gone correspondingly higher. A farm hand that could be obtained for fifty cents a day formerly must be paid now a dollar or a dollar and a half. It seems strange that thousands and thousands of business men in the church who see and feel this in all business affairs do not seem to realize it when considering the support of preachers. Besides, churches are just as able to greatly increase the support of preachers as they are to pay double for clothing, provisions, the work of employees, because they receive double for their own labor or for their products. I know true and earnest preachers who receive less to-day than they did when the cost of living was far less, but they are not threatening to turn to "some profitable business." The scriptural way is to teach churches "the whole counsel of God" on this and on all other subjects. We can never go wrong following "the whole counsel of God."

The Christian Life Is a Clean Life.

BY E. G. S.

Jesus said to his disciples: "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." (John 15: 3.) The word "clean" had reference to their lives, their characters; and this cleanness of life had been brought about through the words that Jesus had spoken unto them. They were hearing teaching which had never been heard on earth before, and were trying to follow it out in their own lives as best they could. They had left all and were following him personally, and were accepting and appropriating into their hearts and lives his teaching, and this is what had made them clean.

Jesus also said in another place: "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." (1 Pet. 1: 22.) This passage shows clearly that gospel truth obeyed purifies the souls of those that obey it. It also shows very clearly that people are responsible for pure hearts, and that they can only obtain them by obeying the truth.

Millions of people, with Bible in hand, have allowed themselves to be deceived on this important matter of obeying the truth. We were taught when a boy that the sinner is so depraved that he cannot do anything toward the conversion of his soul "till the Spirit of God enters his heart and teaches him what he is by nature and what he must become by grace." Thus the plain teaching of the word of God is set aside by the doctrines and commandments of men. The word of God is divinely inspired; but the words of men in religion only express the doctrines and opinions of men, which have no power to save, no matter how earnestly they may be obeyed.

But it is said in the Bible: "The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." (Heb. 4: 12.) This explains how and why it is that the word of God saves. It shows that the word of God is not a dead letter, as many have taught. It is a quick, living, and powerful word, and able to convert and save the souls of those that obey it. But there is no intimation that any one that knows the truth and fails to obey it will be saved by it. It is true that one must know the truth before he can obey it, and must obey it before he has any promise that he will be saved. Obedience to the truth is, therefore, God's method of purifying the souls of men. And when men purify their souls by obeying the truth, and thus prepare themselves for salvation, the Lord saves them. Obeying the truth does not pardon the sins of people; it prepares them for God to save them. Hence those that want to be saved must obey the truth, the gospel of Christ, or they never can reach the promise of pardon.

The Savior, in the divine commission, said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." In this passage pardon is not promised till believers have been baptized. Hence those that promise pardon before baptism upset God's holy word and preach a gospel of human wisdom to the people. This sort of teaching sets the word of God aside and preaches a gospel that God never ordained, instead of preaching just what the word of the Lord says; and as men have no power to save those whom they thus deceive, they have no promise from God of salvation while they fail to be baptized. It is certainly easier to preach the plain word of the Lord as it stands on record than it is to get up and preach a gospel devised by human wisdom. The inspired word of God says: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom. 1: 16.) This is plain, positive teaching, and is as certainly true as that the Bible is true. If this were only the language of uninspired men, it would not be worth repeating or relying upon for a moment; but it comes to us as the inspired word of God, and we must so regard it.

So the gospel of Christ is something addressed to the understanding of men. When the inspired apostles were preaching as the Spirit gave them utterance, they preached "Christ, and him crucified." The Jews had known Christ from his childhood up, and many of them thought him to be only a man, and, therefore, an impostor, and crucified him as such. But soon he rose from the dead and ascended to heaven, leaving undoubted evidence that he was what he claimed to be—the Son of God. Hence we have in the word of God every assurance that is needed to show us that he was, and still is, the Son of God. We, therefore, have all the evidence we need that in following the Christ of the New Testament we are in reality following the Son of God, and also the assurance that if we follow him faithfully in this life we will be permitted to live with him in eternity.

Now, if we would think of it seriously, this is enough to keep us faithful to him to the end of this life, and to keep us rejoicing in hope all the days of our lives. I do not know what other assurances could be given us that would be at all needed to keep us in the narrow way till death comes and takes us away to the final home of the saints. It not only prepares us for eternal life to live as required in this life, but affords to us the pleasantest and happiest life that is known to humanity on earth. Why, then, should not Christians always rejoice in the prospects of such an outcome of a life of self-denial and faithfulness on earth? The promise of eternal life to the faithful is just the thing needful to keep us in the right way, and at the same time keep us cheerful and happy. Christians that will continually lead a faithful life ought to be continually cheerful and happy under the great and precious promise of God for a happy home when this life comes to an end; for there is no uncertainty about the fulfillment of God's promises, if people will be faithful in living the Christian life as the word of God directs. Jehovah has never failed to keep his promises to his faithful ones. Let all, therefore, be faithful to the Lord in life, and be happy in trusting that God will fulfill all that he has promised.

A Gross Misrepresentation.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

We have reliable information that R. H. Pigue in the summer of 1916 represented in his sermons at different places that the Gospel Advocate, in its issue of September 28, 1893, and also in its issue of April 23, 1896, indorsed sprinkling and pouring as scriptural baptism. We are informed that he pretended to read clippings from the Gospel Advocate to this effect. If R. H. Pigue alone were concerned, we would pay no attention to such malicious misrepresentations, for they injure no one but the man who makes them; but as R. H. Pigue is indorsed by the Methodist Church, a church of great influence and power, it may be well to deny the charges in toto and demand the proof. Unless the Methodist Church indorses such action and becomes a party to it, since the Gospel Advocate has never been guilty of any such unscriptural teaching, it behooves it to speedily disavow such charges and dismiss from its connection such a character. Such men are not helpful, but hurtful, to Methodism as well as Christianity. I cannot think that the bishops of the Methodist Church will uphold the action of their subordinate. In order that they may have a fair opportunity to uphold or condemn the action of their appointee, we place at their disposal said articles which appeared in the Gospel Advocate of September 28, 1893, and April 23, 1896, provided they wish to read them.

In 1893 F. D. Srygley edited the first page of the Gospel Advocate. Both articles in question appeared on the first page with comments from him. J. J. Haley had been suggested for leadership in Tennessee by A. I. Myhr. F. D. Srygley, in order to show that such a man was not fitted for leadership among disciples of Christ who take the word of God as their guide, quoted from the Church Union of New York to show that J. J. Haley was willing to recognize sprinkling and pouring as baptism; in other words, that he favored "extending the right hand of fellowship, and leaving the question of the form of baptism to the individual." F. D. Srygley strongly opposed all denominationalism and protested vigorously against becoming a member of any religious denomination. He showed in this article that J. J. Haley, while a member of a religious denomination, in his willingness to extend the right hand of fellowship to persons who had been sprinkled for baptism, stood "solitary and alone" against the unanimous protest of the leaders and organs of "his own denomination," in open advocacy of a principle of church polity which discounts one of the plainest commands and corrupts one of the most sacred ordinances of God." So it will be seen that F. D. Srygley was vigorously opposing the position taken by A. I. Myhr, the chief man in the State work in Tennessee, when Myhr represented that J. J. Haley was fitted for "a bright and shining light in organized effort." Pigue, in his discussions, quoted the language of J. J. Haley as if it were the language of the Gospel Advocate, and attributed to this journal the very position it was condemning.

The other article to which reference is made is also from the pen of F. D. Srygley. He was condemning the action of the Cedar Avenue Christian Church, at Cleveland, Ohio, in receiving unimmersed persons into its fellowship. He also quotes in the same article the Christian Standard as opposing such action in a vigorous manner. After clearly and scripturally showing that the religious denominations had no right to say who should be received into fellowship or should not be received into fellowship, and that denominations did not have the right to decide such questions, he appealed to the word of God as the only source of authority on such subjects. His article in the issue of April 23, 1896, closes with the following:

It seems clear enough that Pastor Cooley and his church have gone out from some of "us." It is equally clear that he has not gone out very far, if at all, from some of the rest of "us." The exact truth of the matter is that it is hard to tell where that church has gone, or where "we" are "at." But suppose it has not gone out from "us." What then? Does that prove anything or settle anything? Would the Standard drop the matter and be satisfied with the action of that church in receiving the unimmersed if the Evangelist could sustain the point that in so doing the church has not gone out from "us?" All this effort to measure men and churches by that vague and shadowy thing called "us" is a cut from the same bolt with "Baptist usage" and "the tradition of the elders." In receiving the unimmersed, that church has gone out from the plain teaching and precedents of the New Testament, whether it has gone out from "us" or not. There is a well-defined issue between it and the church in Jerusalem, no matter how it relates "to the Central in Des Moines," or "to the Central in Lexington." At this point it is well to remember the saying of Paul: "But they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise." (2 Cor. 10: 12.) No one who walks by the Book will follow Pastor Cooley and his church, or pastor anybody else and his church, away from the plain teaching and precedents of the New Testament, no matter whether the high court of denominational jurisdiction decides that in such departures they go out from "us" or not. Christians and churches that follow the New Testament care nothing about "us" in the matter of settling questions concerning religious work or worship. They settle them by the Book.

Thus it will be seen that not until truth is falsehood, virtue is vice, and righteousness is unrighteousness, will Pigue be able to make good his perversions.

It will be noted by the casual reader that none of those favoring denominationalism who are willing to receive sprinkled persons into their fellowship contend that sprinkling or pouring is Christian baptism. It appears that as denominationalists they are willing to assume authority to themselves where God has not delegated such authority to them. Some denominationalists are willing to receive into their fellowship people who have had water sprinkled or poured upon them for baptism, and yet they do not believe that the Bible teaches that sprinkling is Christian baptism. If such persons are going to anybody, instead of going to the Methodists, as Pigue claims, they are going to the Roman Catholics, from whom the Methodists borrowed affusion. It certainly would create a great sensation if those favoring affusion could find those who contend that "baptizo" denotes a specific action and means to immerse admitting also that they believe the Bible teaches sprinkling or pouring water upon a subject to be Christian baptism. It is no unusual thing for many who have been sprinkled to learn later "the way of the Lord more perfectly" and be immersed. This occurs so frequently that it attracts very little attention in the religious world.

But returning to Mr. Pigue, of course he did not have any Bible argument to sustain sprinkling or pouring for baptism. If he had, he would not have waited until an article was almost twenty-five years old to quote from it—and that, too, sixteen years after the author of the article was dead. As he was too cowardly to use it while the author was living, he should be too manly to garble it so as to misrepresent and pervert the author's meaning after he is dead.

The attention of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is respectfully called to this article, and to the articles from which garbled extracts were made, which appeared in the Gospel Advocate in its issues of September 28, 1893, and April 23, 1896. If we are to love the truth, deal righteously, and fear God, such conduct as is ascribed to Mr. Pigue certainly demands prompt reproof and condemnation from them.

Brother Kurfees' Illness.

For the first time in eight years our readers will miss in this issue the editorial of Brother M. C. Kurfees. He has been seriously and dangerously ill at the Norton Infirmary, in Louisville, Ky., and unable to attend to his correspondence and editorial work. But we are happy to report that there has been a marked improvement in his condition for the past few days and he is now apparently out of danger. The news of his illness occasioned both grief and sympathy and many prayers were offered for his recovery. We praise the Lord that he has been spared and will soon be able to write again.

Our Pilgrimage.

BY JOHN W. HEDGE.

Earth with all its glories cannot appease the spiritual desire of the man of faith. Like Abraham of old, he is continually looking "for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God;" like the children of Israel, who spent years in wandering to and fro in the wilderness in hope of reaching the "goodly land which floweth with milk and honey." Impressed by the words of our Redeemer, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee," our desire grows stronger, and "onward and upward" we go in divine life. "Heaven holds all to me" is the by-word of "the strangers and pilgrims" which seek for glory and immortality. Each passing day brings us nearer the goal. Soon our faith will vanish away, and then "we shall know even as we are known." Soon the hope which now impresses us will vanish away in reality, for "we shall see him as he is." But our love for each other, as well as for Him who loved us and gave himself for us, will never vanish, as it is a never-dying principle. May we all, as loving children of the King, pass over the river in perfect safety, for "at his right hand there are pleasures for evermore."

The Christian's Attitude Toward War.

BY T. A. PHILLIPS.

I wish to heartily indorse what some brother recently said in the Gospel Advocate on the above subject. Brethren, I am sure this brother is correct in saying that we have failed to teach this subject as we should. How any one can read the teaching of Christ and conclude that a follower of his should engage in war, I cannot see. True, the Christian is a soldier and has his battles to fight. But what kind of war is the soldier of Christ enlisted in? A carnal warfare? A war of bloodshed? No. Paul says "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal," and that "we wrestle not against flesh and blood." He also says that we should have our "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." And while we are to-day hearing so much talk about "preparedness," let us who profess to follow the Prince of Peace emphasize the Bible teaching on the true preparedness. Brethren, shall we let the Quakers be the champions of the truth on the war question? Let every soldier of Christ put on the whole armor of God and sound the bugle call for a war against war until it shall be the faith of every disciple that it is a sin to fight in carnal warfare. Finally, "let us follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another."

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

By J. C. McQuiddy

Receiving the Unimmersed.

Our "Disciple" friends experienced a great thrill—those of them who were assembled at a great (doctrinal) conference, observed in Canton, Ohio, a few weeks ago. They are now much divided over the question whether their churches should receive to membership any who have not been baptized. Two of their papers, the Christian Standard, Cincinnati, and the Christian Century, Chicago, on opposing sides, the former denying and the latter affirming. The editors of two papers were pitted against each other in a great debate, carried on with all due ceremony and solemnity. The two men were called to the platform and introduced by the moderator, who requested the assembly to applaud both at the same time, before they began, and to keep still afterwards. So the gladiators stood while the people applauded; they took each other's hands as the prize fighters do when about to engage in fistcuffs. A reporter says: "The sight of those two editors shaking hands in the presence of the Doctrinal Congress was so impressive that after everything that was said that day shall fade from memory, the people who saw it will still be able to visualize that picture and all it meant." Then they pitched in.

The debaters spent a whole day and an evening on "the question of receiving unimmersed members of evangelical churches into the membership of Disciple churches." Mr. Morrison, in the affirmative, stated his position in three so-called "axioms:"

"1. The members of other evangelical churches are Christians just as truly as are members of Disciples' churches.

"2. The churches whose credentials of membership such persons bring are churches of Christ, just as truly as Disciples' churches are churches of Christ.

"3. The members of these churches are not without baptism, albeit a baptism imperfectly or irregularly administered."

These, of course, it became Mr. Lappin, in the negative, to controvert. It is said that the sympathies of the assembly were with the view of Mr. Lappin; but the friends of Mr. Morrison claim that he won. But the "union" of our "Disciple" friends is having a terrible strain.—Journal and Messenger.

We are more deeply interested in influencing people to do the will of the Lord than we are about receiving them into fellowship. When people obey the Lord, Christ receives them into the church. It is not our privilege to fix the conditions of salvation or to say what is or what is not baptism, only as the Holy Spirit defines baptism. The Spirit teaches us through Paul that there is one baptism. "Baptizo" denotes a specific action, but "baptize" does not necessarily express the thing done. The New Testament does not teach modes of baptism, but teaches that baptism is a specific action. If baptism is the thing that is done, we may have at least three water baptisms by following the present practice. Three candidates present themselves for baptism. One wishes to be immersed, another to be sprinkled, and another poured. Now what is done? The first is immersed. What is the baptism? Surely not the person who is baptized, for he is the subject; not the water, for that is the element in which the baptism takes place; not the administrator, for he performs the baptism; not the ceremony, for that is what proclaims it Christian baptism. But if baptism is the thing done in this first case, it is immersion. What is the thing done in the second case? Clearly it is sprinkling. What in the third case? The answer is pouring. This would make three baptisms; but Paul says there is one. Baptism is not the thing done, unless it is done just as it was in the days of the apostles. With the apostles baptism was a specific action. Christ "was baptized of John in the Jordan. And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens rent asunder, and the Spirit as a dove descending upon him." (Mark 1: 9, 10.) "And John also was baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came and were baptized." (John 3: 23.) In baptism one is born of water: "Except one be born of water and the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) When the eunuch was baptized, "as they went on the way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch saith, Behold, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they both went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they came up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip; and the eunuch saw him no more, for he went on his way rejoicing." (Acts 8: 36-39.) Paul teaches that he and the church at Rome were in baptism buried and resurrected with Christ. "We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life. For if we have become united with him in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." (Rom. 6: 4, 5.) When we are baptized, let us do just as they did in the days of the apostles. Let us go unto the water, where there is much water, go down into the water, be buried in baptism and born of the water, and come up out of the water. When this is done, all Bible believers will rejoice that you have been scripturally baptized, so far as the act goes. God receives into the church all who believe and are baptized. It matters not how the "doctrinal conference" settles the matter of receiving the unimmersed, for no one who walks by the Book will follow any settlement that is not in accord with the Bible. No one who is guided by "It is written" will follow any man away from the plain teaching and precedents of the New Testament. Christians and churches that follow the New Testament care nothing for such "doctrinal conferences" whose aim is the settlement of questions concerning the conditions of entrance into the kingdom of God and the religious work and worship of the church. All such questions must be settled by the Book.

Prohibition in West Virginia.

The Herald and Presbyter is responsible for these figures. We always rejoice to know that our people are practicing temperance (self-control) more and more. Here are the figures:

Two years of prohibition in West Virginia show a reduction of fifty per cent in crime and seventy-five per cent in drunkenness throughout the State. These are the figures given by the State Tax Commissioner, Mr. Fred O. Blue. Reports from more than fifty municipalities show that the year before the law went into effect there were 19,567 arrests, while the first year after the law was passed there were 9,956, and the past year the figures went down to 3,357. Before such figures as these only the enemies of humanity would think of voting against prohibition.

Too Many Leaders.

The Western Recorder scores a good point in the following paragraph:

One trouble in the army of the Lord is that too many want to be leaders. They forget that all armies have very many more privates than officers.

The Lord demands servants, workers, and not so many leaders. The best leader is the greatest servant of all.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

J. H. McBroom changes his address from Murfreesboro, Tenn., to Tomkinsville, Ky. He is working with the church at the new location.

"Linked for life," at Link, Tenn., on October 1, 1916. Mr. Houston Jones and Miss Nora Lee Westbrooks. Both were members of the church. J. S. Westbrooks officiated. We extend congratulations.

We had a good start in the meeting at Russell Street, this city. Brother Ezell has impressed his hearers with his devotion to the great Teacher and his ready acquaintance with the Scriptures.

From H. W. Wrye: "The meeting at Diana, in Giles County, Tenn., closed with fine interest and eighteen additions—twelve by baptism. The congregation will build a meetinghouse right away."

The editor of this page conducted five funeral services during the last week and performed one marriage ceremony in addition to his regular duties. Thus are our sorrows and our joy commingled.

The church at Scottsboro, Ala., desires a good song leader for a meeting to begin on the fourth Lord's day in October. Write Mrs. J. H. Gregory, Scottsboro, Ala., at once. John E. Dunn is to do the preaching.

From Don Carlos Janes, Route 10, Buechel, Ky., October 5: "I preached at Parkland last Sunday morning and at Highlands at night. The colored church on Burnett Avenue made a good start in its first contribution to their building-site fund."

From W. S. Long, Jr., Manchester, Tenn., October 5: "A meeting is now in progress at Antloch, eight miles from here. Attendance good, interest fine, and one baptism to date. I go next to Summitville. Brethren, take the Gospel Advocate and keep up with the spread of the gospel."

Nashville churches are active. M. C. Cayce is in a good meeting at Hinton's Chapel; J. A. Sisco is preaching the gospel with good effect at Pilcher Avenue; and Sam P. Pittman is holding forth at Joy's flower garden. The meeting announced to begin at Belmont Avenue was postponed on account of the death of James A. Allen's mother.

From John E. Dunn, Bohon, Ky., October 5: "We are in the midst of a good meeting at this place. This is our third meeting in Central Kentucky. There were two baptized at Glen's Creek. At Mount Zion fourteen were baptized, two were restored, and two quit a worldly congregation to be simple New Testament Christians. My work in Central Kentucky is very gratifying."

From Paul C. Young, 86 Federal Street, Brunswick, Maine, October 6: "The work at Westbrook moves on rather slowly. Two have been added to the membership lately. I speak on the street corner each Saturday evening. We shall undertake a Sunday-afternoon mission. My interest in missions still hangs with me. I am in school at Bowdoin College looking forward to 'going.'"

From J. D. Walling, Monticello, Ky., October 5: "We closed our tent work for the year at Frazer, Ky., on September 27. Results were one baptism and one from the Methodists. This was said to have been the first gospel preaching ever done at this place. Our audiences and interest grew from the beginning. We were requested to return earlier next year, when we should have better weather."

George W. Farmer, of Lebanon, Tenn., sends us the following announcement: "On the first Lord's day in October

I began a meeting with the church of Christ at Liberty, Tenn. This is a place where our brethren have slept on their rights and sectarianism has been allowed to hold sway; however, the first of last November we held a meeting there and got a few together, and they have been meeting since. The brethren are very weak there, and we will need help. Brethren and sisters within reach of the place, take notice and give us your help and encouragement. We will need you to help carry the load."

As a result of his serious illness, M. C. Kurfees has been unable to answer letters for three weeks. Correspondents will understand the situation. On October 7 our beloved brother was able to write us a brief note, from which we take the following extract:

"The Gospel Advocate is my only channel through which to reach correspondents at present. I understand that it was feared I was near the river's brink. Praise God for his goodness! I am too weak to write more now, and perhaps ought not to have used even this much of my little strength in writing. I express love and gratitude to all."

There were two deaths of Nashville people last week that occasioned unusual grief and sympathy. The death of Sister J. G. Allen, wife of the well-known local preacher, was universally regretted, she being a woman of exceptionally fine character. A large concourse of friends heard F. W. Smith's beautiful tribute to her memory on Sunday afternoon. Newspaper dispatches told of the tragic death of Lane McQuiddy, the son of John T. McQuiddy, one of the elders of the South College Street Church. He was killed by an explosion in the writing room of the Read House at Chattanooga, Tenn. He had just finished writing a letter to his mother, H. T. King and the editor of this page conducted the funeral services on Monday afternoon.

The Tennessee Orphans' Home reunion will be held at Columbia, Tenn., on Tuesday, October 31. Concerning this stellar event W. T. Boaz writes: "We are hoping to have all the brethren who can be with us. We are laboring to lift the debt between now and then. Let any brethren wanting to send a contribution to this work do so at once. I am now at home, and expect to spend the remainder of my time in the office and on the farm, getting everything in shape for the annual reunion. I am trusting and praying that the brethren will come to the rescue of our work. Winter supplies of every kind will make our expenses very heavy in addition to the debt we are trying to pay. Unless the brethren assist us, it will be a matter of impossibility to do what we have in mind. One dollar, or any amount, will help. 'The Lord loveth a cheerful giver.'"

Owing to the health conditions of his family, T. M. Carney, who has lived for many years at Obion, Tenn., thinks it best to move to another climate. We take pleasure in printing the following commendation, signed by H. M. Wilson, C. C. Brown, A. M. Moultrie, and James F. Darnall, elders of the church of Christ at Obion:

"To the church of Christ everywhere—Greeting: T. M. Carney has labored for this congregation as local preacher and missionary evangelist for three years. His work has been very acceptable, both at home and in the evangelistic field. We desire to commend him to the churches of Christ everywhere as a splendid preacher of good ability and as one desirous at all times to preach the Scriptures fully. He and his splendid family make their influence felt for good wherever they labor. Brother Carney is very sociable by nature and a willing worker in all worthy reforms, true to the word of God and love of mankind. His work with us has made the church stronger and the community better. We hope that his good work may continue without interruption and that the Lord will bless his labors in the future as in the past."

Stop Cheating Your Family.

You doubtless fully realize your duty to your family in making your home life attractive, entertaining, cultured, and refined; and you have promised yourself that some day you will fill that vacant spot in the parlor with a splendid piano or player-piano of the sweetest tone and highest quality, or that you will replace the old rattle-trap with a superb new instrument. But the days, the months, and possibly the years have silently crept by, and still there is no good music in your home. CHURCH NEWS

Alabama.

Florence, October 3.—Last Sunday was quite a busy day for me. I was at Moulton. I preached at 11 A.M., baptized six persons at 2 P.M., conducted a funeral service at 3 P.M., and preached at 7:30 P.M.—J. T. Harris.

Spruce Pine, September 29.—I began a meeting on the second Lord's day in August, eight miles east of South Florence, on the Tennessee River. I remained over three Lord's days, with eighteen confessions and a new congregation started to meeting on the first day of the week.—John T. Underwood.

Bear Creek, September 26.—Since last report I have baptized two at New River, five at Guin, four at Hackleburg, and have two here to date. Our interest is fine. I go next to Carbon Hill. Our discussion at Brilliant with the Holiness folks will begin on October 23 and continue four days. Pray for me.—A. D. Dies.

New Decatur, September 29.—On the first Lord's day in September I began a six-days' meeting at Shoal Bluff, in Giles County, Tenn. This is one of my points of labor during this year, and where I labored two years when my home was in Giles County, and this was my fourth meeting with the congregation, the result of which was seventeen baptisms and eight restorations. This church has not been free from its trials, nor is it a perfect church, but it is to be praised for its recent development as manifest in the casting down of factions and hatred. I am pleased to note that there is an inclination to move on and away from such evils, and to this end I pray that each member may become an instrument in the hands of Him whose grace is sufficient for our every need. On the second Lord's day I began a ten-days' meeting with the church at Minor Hill, Tenn. This is my home of some years past, and the work and association was very pleasant indeed. Eight were baptized into Christ. Brother T. Birkly Thigpen, of the Cool Springs congregation, led the song service at both places, and his influence among all classes was a great help to me in the work. He is a young man of splendid character, and deserves to be encouraged unto a thorough preparation for greater things in life. On Wednesday, September 26, it was my pleasure to preside at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the wedding of Brother and Sister G. W. Warren, better known as "Uncle George" and "Aunt Lissie," than whom does not live a better couple. Excellent speeches were made by Brother James Howard, of Pulaski; J. Frank Black, of Minor Hill; H. Chapell Warren, of Rogersville, Ala.; and D. O. Warren, of Florence, Ala. This was an occasion of great joy and comfort to all present, and we pray God to bless the occasion, and the things spoken to the uplifting and ennobling of humanity and to the sweetening and comforting of all the days that may yet be spared to "Uncle George," and "Aunt Lissie." I am now at Rich Pond, Ky.—J. Pettey Ezell.

Georgia.

Trenton, October 2.—Our meeting at Deerhead Cove closed with two baptized and one restored; and one confessed whose parents objected to further obedience. We had another service yesterday and another desires baptism Wednesday. We had the attention of the entire community, and, with the proper effort, we believe a permanent congregation can be established. We have two more meetings for this month.—C. E. Coleman.

Kentucky.

Morganfield, September 26.—I have baptized forty-nine this year to date, and have four more meetings, including the one I am in. Next week I will moderate for my brother, J. L. Hines, in a debate with Mr. E. W. Lindsey, General Baptist, at McHenry.—W. T. Hines.

Kirkmansville, September 28.—Last Lord's-day night I closed a meeting of two weeks' duration at Allegree, which resulted in four baptisms. The brethren there have agreed to have regular Lord's-day meetings, a thing that they have not had for the past four years. Brother R. K. McRae, of Hopkinsville, will preach for the little band once a month. Brother McRae is one of the best men that I have ever met, and a splendid preacher of the gospel. I go to a place near Lexington, Tenn., to begin a meeting next Lord's day. Brethren, pray for me.—C. H. Baker.

Missouri.

Rogersville, October 3.—I have just closed a good meeting at Antioch, in Bollinger County. I baptized five, including a young Baptist preacher. We had good attendance and attention, good seed were sown, and the congregation was strengthened. I shall return next September for my third meeting at that place. I go next to Half Moon, near Dell, Ark.—M. S. Mason.

Tennessee.

McMinnville, October 3.—The Culeoka meeting closed on September 26, with one baptized. Beginning on the night of September 27, I preached one week at Ephesus Church, near Columbia, with good attendance and interest, but no additions. I wish all correspondents to note that my address for the present is McMinnville, Tenn., and I am ready to arrange for meetings anywhere wanted.—L. F. Mason.

Knoxville, October 10.—I wish to say to all my friends, through the Gospel Advocate, that I am now located in Knoxville. I am working with the Broadway church of Christ. Our work at Montgomery, Ala., was very successful, and my parting with the good brethren and sisters there was painful. They treated me well. The ladies of the Catoma Street Church presented me with an elegant present—a gold-headed cane, or stick, a beautiful token of their appreciation.—C. E. Holt.

Livingston, September 30.—Brother Marion Harris and I closed a good meeting at Haydenburg, in Jackson County, last Lord's day, with eight additions, one from the Baptists and one from the Presbyterians, and one erring sister returned. Brother Harris planted the cause at Haydenburg some three or four years ago. There are now about forty-eight members, with a splendid new house of worship, and things seem to be moving along nicely; but when Brother Harris first began preaching there, ignorance and sectarianism, together with pistol firing and rock throwing, were not uncommon. "The entrance of thy words giveth light." A number of good people live in and around Haydenburg. We made our home with Brethren P. T. Clark and Silas Williams. These are good people, full of faith and charity, and they treated us with no little kindness while there. My meeting at Pleasant Grove closed, after eight days' duration, with one reclaimed.—Willie Hunter.

Decherd, September 29.—I have just closed a twelve-days' meeting at Center Point, in Bledsoe County, with twenty-seven additions—twenty-five baptized and two reclaimed. Of the number baptized, six were Baptists and six were Methodists. This is the home of Brother Ben Walker. He and his wife rejoiced very much over the meeting. They have met there many times by themselves to break bread. I moved two miles from that place and preached seven nights in an Adventist college building, with five baptized and one reclaimed. This was a very large building, and it was filled with hearers every night. The meeting closed with about four hundred present. Bledsoe County is a good place to work for the Master. We found many good, loyal brethren who stood by us in those meetings. Brother J. C. Moseley led the song service. He is a good instructor in vocal music. Any congregation wanting a singing school should write him at Whitwell, Tenn., R. F. D. I will go back to Bledsoe County next year. I go next to Dixie Schoolhouse, where I held a meeting last spring. Brethren, help send out more gospel preachers. The cry is, "Come over and help us." I have many calls that I cannot reach.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Recipe for Gray Hair.

To half pint of water add one ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

Iron the Greatest of All Strength Builders, Says Doctor

A Secret of the Great Endurance and Power of Athletes

Ordinary Nuxated Iron Will Make Delicate, Nervous Run-down People 200 Per Cent. Stronger in Two Week's Time in Many Cases.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Most people foolishly seem to think they are going to get renewed health and strength from some stimulating medicine, secret nostrum or narcotic drug, said Dr. Sauer, a well-known specialist who has studied widely both in this country and Europe, when, as a matter of fact, real and true strength can only come from the food you eat. But people often fail to get the strength out of their food because they haven't enough iron in their blood to enable it to change food into living matter. From their weakened, nervous condition they know something is wrong, but they can't tell what, so they generally commence doctoring for stomach, liver or kidney trouble or symptoms of some other ailment caused by the lack of iron in the blood. This thing may go on for years, while the patient suffers untold agony. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous, run-down people who were ailing all the while, double their strength and endurance and entirely got rid of all symptoms of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles in from ten to fourteen days' time simply by taking iron in the proper form. And this after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. But don't take the old forms of reduced iron, iron acetate or tincture of iron simply to save a few cents. You must take iron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated like nuxated iron. If you want it to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless. Many an athlete or prize-fighter has won the day simply because he knew the secret of great strength and endurance and filled his blood with iron before he went into the fray, while many another has gone down into inglorious defeat simply for the lack of iron.

NOTE—Nuxated Iron recommended above by Dr. Sauer is not a patent medicine nor secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists and whose iron constituents is widely prescribed by eminent physicians everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach; on the contrary, it is a most potent remedy in nearly all forms of indigestion, as well as for nervous, run-down conditions. The Manufacturers have such great confidence in Nuxated Iron that they offer to forfeit $100.00 to any charitable institution if they cannot take any man or woman under 60 who lacks iron and increase their strength 200 per cent or over in four weeks' time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. They also offer to refund your money if it does not at least double your strength and endurance in ten days' time. It is dispensed by all druggists.

CAROLINA PIGEON PLANT,
Pen Series C— CLINTON, S. C.

There is no part of human relationships where tender thoughtfulness is so greatly needed as in the home. If a family is to live together in harmony and helpfulness, each must be thoughtful of the other's rights and comfort. To attempt to do as one pleases is sure destruction to the peace of home life. Each ought to yield to the other. Our homes should train us to think first of the welfare of the other members of the family, putting our own interests last. For "even Christ pleased not himself." Than this there is no other surer recipe for happiness.—Selected.

OBITUARIES

On account of the large number of obituary notices coming to the Gospel Advocate the following rules must be observed: Obituaries that do not exceed one hundred and fifty words are published free of charge. When they exceed this limit, one cent will be charged for every additional word. Payment must accompany notice or else it will be reduced to one hundred and fifty words. Poetry will not be printed.

Greene.

John Cecile Greene, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Greene, was born on April 24, 1896, and died at his parents' home, near Coopertown, Tenn., on August 7, 1916. He was a young man of many sterling qualities and was highly esteemed in the community where he lived. He had been a member of the church for seven years. The writer spent a pleasant day in his home during his last illness. At that time our young brother was cheerful and hopeful of recovery and expressed regret at not being able to attend the meeting then in progress. His sudden taking away should remind us all that "in the midst of life we are in the midst of death" and teach the needed lesson of preparation. I would remind the bereaved ones that our religion, like the stone chrysolite, "shines the brightest in the dark," and hope that the memory of the dear departed may be as bright and as beautiful as the flowers placed upon his grave. Brother T. J. Ellis paid a beautiful and touching tribute in the presence of a large concourse of friends, the singing class of which Cecile was a member sang appropriate selections, and his teachers passed resolutions of love and respect. Such tributes, together with the promises of God's word, help to change the dark cloud of sorrow into a bright cloud of angels who minister to our comfort and happiness.

A. B. L.

Cunningham.

Sister Sallie A. Cunningham was born on February 9, 1847, and departed this life on August 15, 1916. "Aunt Sallie," as she was affectionately and tenderly known, numbered her friends by the score, and she leaves on this side of the mystic stream a large circle of loved ones bereft of her helpful presence. In many respects our dear sister was a remarkable woman. Never very strong physically, she was not at all times permitted to enjoy assembling with the saints; nevertheless, her faith was made strong by a childlike trust in the promises of God. The good influences of one's life live after he or she dies. This was brought vividly to the mind of the writer when he remembered the many encouraging words spoken by this faithful soldier of the cross when he was a mere boy, striving to preach the gospel. And what was true concerning our dear, departed sister may be true with all Christians. What a priceless heritage left to posterity! Sister Cunningham's maiden name was "Blackburn," and she leaves several relatives by that name who reside at Franklin, Tenn. On August 16, 1916, at seven thirty o'clock P.M., in the presence of a large gathering of friends and neighbors, at the residence of her son, the writer conducted the funeral service. Burial was made at Franklin, Tenn., with services conducted by Brother F. W. Smith.

LYTTON ALLEY.

Cathey.

A. B. Cathey was born on June 25, 1826, and died on January 18, 1916. He was married to Miss Tennie E. Smith on September 27, 1859. To this union were born thirteen children—nine girls and four boys. He is survived by this family, with the exception of one daughter who died young. The following are the surviving children: W. A. Cathey, J. D. Cathey, T. D. Cathey, Mumford Cathey, Mrs. B. B. Kennedy, Mrs. J. A. Deik, Mrs. Everette Grimmett, and Miss Cannie Cathey, of Maury County, Tenn.; Mrs. T. J. Kirk, Mrs. R. C. White, and Miss Robert L. Kirk, of Texas; and Mrs. E. M. Tarply, of Franklin, Ky. At the time of grandfather's death there had been born about sixty grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren. Any one who is acquainted with this large family can appreciate the value of a true, Christian father. He was reared, lived, and died at his home, on Cathey's Creek, near Isom, Tenn. He served as elder for many years in the church at Isom. He was modest by nature, but strong in his convictions and able to defend the faith. At the end of his long and useful life, it seems to us, he could have spoken as Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." CLARENCE KENNEDY.

Durham.

Sister Mary Lee Durham was born in North Carolina on December 13, 1836, and died at Rush Springs, Okla., on August 18, 1916, of that dread disease, tuberculosis. She was one of the noblest and sweetest Christian girls that it has ever been my lot to meet. At all times it seemed that her whole thought and pleasure was to talk about the Lord's work and to engage in it. Had she lived in days of old, no doubt her greatest delight would have been, like Mary, to sit at the feet of the Savior and converse with him. She would have been "last at the cross and first at the tomb." But now she is gone to that land where her pure spirit can find that congenial company so rarely to be met with here. She was one of my best friends. Even though a girl of that age when giddy youth usually chooses worldly pleasure as the only road to happiness, she on your hair. It is too strongly alkaline and will do a great deal of damage. The hair should be of a soft and silken texture. Each individual hair is of delicate construction and requires scientific, careful treatment. If your hair is harsh, dry, coarse, and scanty, then you are not giving it proper treatment. The hair needs food just as the rest of your body; and in order to keep your scalp nourished and your hair plentiful and beautiful, you should supply it with the proper food and treatment. The Creoles, of Louisiana, possessed a formula for keeping the hair beautiful, and for many years kept the secret to themselves; but now you may enjoy their discovery by using "La Creole" Hair Color Restorer, the same recipe which the Creoles used. It darkens hair in the natural way and keeps the scalp in healthy condition. For sale by all reliable dealers. Price, $1. Manufactured by Van Vleet-Mansfield Drug Company, Memphis, Tenn.

We have in stock a number of "Studies in Recent Adventism," by Henry C. Sheldon. "An especially timely review and analysis of the assumptions, claims, and teachings of Adventism." The name of the author guarantees the character of the book—its lucidity, its scholarly style, and its weight of authority. It will be an invaluable antidote to the materialism, Russellism, and premillennialism of to-day, and a strong weapon for students and teachers who must meet and answer this false teaching. Price, 50 cents.

Commendations of "Christian Treasures" continue to come in. Volumes I. and II. are now ready for delivery. The price is $1 per volume. Brother Larimore says "It is easy to find single chapters" that are "well worth the price of the volume." Read his statement and others from appreciative brethren.

those "that good part, which cannot be taken away," and her words of encouragement to faithful service in the work of the gospel were worth mines of gold. She leaves a father and mother, with many other relatives, to mourn her loss. But let us "sorrow not, as those who have no hope," for in that bright home where she now dwells among "an innumerable company of angels" and "the spirits of just men made perfect," with "God the Judge of all," and "Jesus the mediator of the new covenant," she waits to meet us when we go there, too, which soon we will if we are faithful. May we all soon be reunited with our loved ones in the home of the soul.

Little.

Mrs. Amanda C. Little, (née Nelson) was born in Brownsville, Tenn., on June 29, 1828; was married to W. D. Little on January 18, 1845; and died on June 27, 1916. She was reared under strictly religious influences in a godly home, being baptized into the kingdom of her Savior at the age of sixteen, and lived ever thereafter a devout child of God until the day of her death, as was witnessed by the fact that only a short time before she passed away she seemed to regain her voice and sang the chorus of the sweet old song, "Beyond the Dark Sea." In May, 1845, she moved from Marshall County, Tenn., to Rusk County, Texas, in which State she spent the remainder of her life, save six or seven years. In her earlier life it was her privilege to see and hear such men as David Lipscomb and his collaborators preach. For several years the Gospel Advocate was read and cherished very much by her as her religious paper. After the death of her husband, many years ago, she made her home with her son, T. M. Little, now a successful business man of Clarendon. Having been in this home so much in my ministerial work, it was mine to see and know that no aged and helpless person ever received more kind and tender ministrations of love and care than did Sister Little. She had been blind for many years, yet, from the oldest to the youngest, every hand was ready to minister to any and every want of this saintly mother in Israel. Of all it has been mine to know, she was one of the most devout Christian characters it has ever been my good fortune to meet. The times I have been in her presence, with her Christian conversation and strong faith in the promises of God, have been a great benediction to me in my ministerial work. Peace to her ashes; her soul is at home with God.

Hard Colds. People whose blood is pure are not nearly so likely to take hard colds as are others. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood pure, and this great medicine renews the system after a cold as no other medicine does. Take Hood's.

It seems to be a more important factor in the sum of domestic happiness that a man and his wife agree on what they can afford rather than that they agree on the best poetry.—Selected.

TO END CATARRHAL DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES

If you have Catarrhal Deafness or head noises go to your druggist and get 1 ounce of Paralal (double strength), and add to it 1/2 pint of hot water and 4 ounces of granulated sugar. Take 1 tablespoonful four times a day.

This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy and the mucus stop dropping into the throat. It is easy to prepare, costs little and is pleasant to take. Any one who has Catarrhal Deafness or head noises should give this prescription a trial.

What your insurance policy is to your home, the club is to your piano or player-piano.

But the club does not stop there. It clubs your order with those of ninety-nine other subscribers, thus securing the lowest possible factory price for each club member. It provides convenient terms of payment, the strongest guarantees of quality and durability, and gives you the opportunity to try your instrument thoroughly before you buy. The club absolutely guarantees perfect satisfaction in every detail of piano buying. Write for your copy of the catalogue to-day. The call of God to us all is to rise up and help our Lord in his fight against evil and wrong everywhere.

It is a crime against God and man to speak of the sin of another, if he is now seeking to lead a good life. God forgets, and so should man. In Bavaria, when a man has been convicted of a crime and has by imprisonment paid the penalty, he who speaks or writes of that man's crime is himself punished as a criminal. Another Preacher Gone.

BY L. D. PERKINS.

Henry C. Crowell was born in the State of Arkansas on October 18, 1851, and died in San Bernardino County, Cal., on September 12, 1916. Aside from residing in California fourteen years, he spent the other days of his life in Missouri and Arkansas.

Brother Crowell took his stand with Christ in the year 1882, and for more than thirty years he was a consistent member of the church of Christ. He commenced to preach following his conversion, as did Paul, and continued to preach in a public way until just a few years before he passed away; and while in business, which deprived him of preaching in a public way, he continued to proclaim "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" in a private way, never losing faith in the one common cause of Christ and his church. He held a number of public discussions with those who differed from the Bible in faith and practice in Missouri and Arkansas. He belonged to that class of preachers who work with their hands for a living and then preach as opportunity is afforded. In 1873 he was married to Emma B. Foster, and to this union were born two sons and three daughters, all of whom are living, save the oldest son, who died when quite small. The children all live in San Bernardino, and will be a great comfort to Sister Crowell in her sad loss, and the help and support of her while she lives. Brother Crowell has a brother, G. W. Crowell, who lives in Riverside, Cal., and is one of the leading members of the church at that place.

I have been more closely associated with Brother Crowell since he came to California than almost any one else, and know him better, perhaps, and can truly say that I have never met one that was better-hearted than he was. No man could show more hospitality at his home than could Brother Crowell. As a thinking man, he was above the average; and he had given a close and prayerful study to the word of God, and delighted at all times to talk of its mysteries and its teachings. I could discover mistakes in his life, and he would not be pleased for me to close these few words of tribute without making mention of this fact; but his good traits of character were so abundantly more than the mistakes that I am reminded of the scripture found in Heb. 3: 5, which reads as follows: "And Moses indeed was faithful in all his house as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were afterwards to be spoken." We know from the record in the word of God that Moses was not at all times perfect, and yet he was so near perfect that God overlooks his imperfection, and here the writer speaks of him as being always perfect over his house. The same may be truly said of Brother Crowell. There were so many rare traits of character in his life that we must forget any of the imperfections that come through the weakness of the flesh and regard him as a man who has gone to his great reward. Brother Crowell was a very active man in business, and was near Victorville, Cal., when the sad end came in an automobile accident, he being killed almost instantly. The entire family have our deepest sympathy in this hour of grief. May the Lord bless them and give to them the needed comfort and sympathy.

Why Jesus Succeeded.

BY S. WHITFIELD.

The life of Jesus was a grand success. We are ready to admit this as a fact, for we cannot do otherwise. He was with the Father from the beginning; he lived in this world; he died; and he lives again. People still hear his word, believe on him, and obey him. His life has a great influence on men.

From a worldly point of view, the life of Christ was a failure. The great characters of the Bible who have had such a great influence over people for good are not specially noted in the world, but all believers in the word of God look up to them as heroes and heroines in God's service. The things that are the most pleasing before God are displeasing in the sight of men.

But why did Jesus succeed? Some may be ready to say that he could not do otherwise; that he was the Son of God and had to succeed. But we should remember that he was the God-man; that he partook of man's nature as well as of God's nature. There were conditions complied with in the life of Christ that were at least partly responsible for his success; and these very conditions are the ones that we need to comply with to make our lives count at last. Hence this lesson.

Jesus had no doctrine, opinions, or speculations of his own to teach. His teaching was not his own, but whatever the Father gave him. He did not teach opinions or speculations, but the word itself—the very truths of heaven. He always did the will of his Father. He had no will of his own to do. The secret of his great life along this line was: "Not my will, but thine, be done." "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 8, 9.)

Jesus spent considerable time in prayer. When some great responsibility was before him, he went to God in prayer. Before he chose the apostles he spent a night in prayer. At the close of his talk with the disciples, in the upper room, we have his prayer in John 17. This was before his trial and crucifixion. Then, his prayer in the garden just before Judas came with his band. He prayed on the cross. "Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared." (Heb. 5: 7.)

Jesus was busy in doing good. His life was filled up in doing God's will with the eternal interest of man in view. His life was so full with good that there was no room for evil. "Who went about doing good." (Acts 10: 38.)

Jesus did not try to please men, but he did please his Father. He spoke the truth regardless of results. He reproved sinners, whoever they were. He had no men that he looked up to with a feeling that he must not differ from them. His great life was spent with the sole object of being one with

Selfishness had no part in the life of the Christ. He lived, died, and came forth from the tomb all for the good of others. He was rich with his Father; but for us he became poor, that we might be made rich. "For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." (1 Pet. 2: 21.)

Well-Expanded Lungs Not Enough.

Pure blood is indispensable to the health and strength of the lungs. The delicate structure of these organs makes it necessary. When the blood is impure, the lungs lose their tone; and even if they are permitted to expand freely, they have not the power fully to perform their important work. The fact is, there is nothing more necessary in our physical economy than pure blood, the kind of blood that Hood's Sarsaparilla makes. This medicine is the good, old, reliable family remedy for diseases of the blood, scrofula, rheumatism, catarrh, and low or run-down conditions of the system. At this time, when coughs and colds are so prevalent, Hood's Sarsaparilla is an invaluable tonic. Get it to-day, and begin to take it at once. Accept no substitute.

A fool may be known by six things: anger without cause, speech without profit, change without progress, inquiry without object, putting trust in a stranger, and mistaking foes for friends.—Arabian Proverb.

"Be Converted."

BY C. PETTY.

This subject is not understood alike by all persons. Now there is a cause for this difference among the people, and that cause is the different teachings as to what it is to be converted. Is it something the Lord does, independent of man's action, or is it something that man does himself? What is conversion, and how is it brought about? Does it apply to all persons alike, when all persons are not in the same state or condition? Let us see. In Luke 22: 31, 32 the Savior says to Peter: "Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Now, was Peter to do the same things that he commanded the Jews at Solomon's temple? (Acts 3: 19.) This cannot be, for they were not believers when Peter began preaching to them. So the term "converted" is addressed to persons in the church as well as those out of the church, and means for the addressed to turn right to the extent that he has gone wrong. So when Peter was told to strengthen his brethren after his conversion, he had finished his work under the first commission, and had, no doubt, done his work well. Therefore the term, "be converted," did not mean to Peter what it means to an alien, for an alien's conversion means for him to do all that is embraced in the commission. Again, if a person is a believer, the term, "be converted," does not embrace that to him; and if he has believed and repented, it does not embrace them. So the term, "be converted," embraces just whatever the addressed lacks of a complete return to the Lord.

A Few Practical Health Hints.

Counter irritation is a valuable principle frequently used in medicine to overcome inflammation and attendant pain.

Arousing sleepy glands to do their duty in providing normal secretions in the various organs of the body is another valuable little medical trick.

Destruction of disease germs and sterilizing the field of their attack so that they cannot multiply is accomplished by various germicides and antiseptics.

Mentholatum accomplishes all three of these useful purposes at one stroke.

That is why it is so highly valued for coughs, colds, croup, sore throat, and cold sores.

It encourages the flow of mucus, making it easy to clear the air passages.

It kills the germs which are the cause of the trouble and it allays the inflammation resulting from the attack.

The Blood of Christ.

BY H. W. JONES.

"If we walk in the light, as he [God] is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.)

Yes, "the blood of Jesus cleanseth us from all sin"—if; hence our cleansing in "the blood of Christ" is conditional and not unconditional, as some would have us believe. What, then, are the conditions on which we are cleansed by the blood of Christ? No certain, specific condition is named in this verse; but the general condition, which includes all conditions or requirements, is: "If we walk in the light, as he [God] is in the light." Yes, we must w-a-l-k, not stand idle nor sit on the stool of do-nothing. And to "walk in the light" is to walk as the Lord directs us in his holy word. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path." (Ps. 119: 105.) Without the aid of divine revelation man would grope his way in darkness and superstition as do the heathen unto this day. "O Jehovah, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps," says Jeremiah the prophet. So, then, the Lord directs our wandering footsteps, through the instrumentality of his Inspired word, and we should continue to "walk in his ways." "And that from a babe thou hast known the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 15-17.)

Jesus shed his blood on the Roman cross about nineteen hundred years ago. Where his literal blood now is, no one knows. "How, then, does the blood of Jesus cleanse us from sin today?" you might well ask. I answer, it is by our complying with the conditions or requirements of the new covenant, all of which are sealed by the blood of Jesus. (Read Heb. 8, 9.) "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you," said Jesus to his disciples. Hence, to come to the blood of Christ is to keep his commandments. There is no way short of this. To set aside any one of his commandments is to reject the blood of Jesus Christ. Not a single command sealed by the blood of Christ is "nonessential;" they are all binding, and will be till the end of the age. Then to accept and do his commandments as we learn them is the means whereby "the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Let us, then, "walk in the light"—that is, "do his commandments"—that we "may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city" of our God.

BY C. C. BROWN.

After three years of very successful work, Brother T. M. Carney will leave the work at Obion, Tenn., on November 1. Brother Carney has labored here as local preacher and as missionary evangelist for the congregation with splendid results. He is leaving of his own volition, and this word of commendation is written without his knowledge or solicitation. To say that he and his excellent family are held in the very highest esteem is stating the facts very mildly. As a preacher, he is very much above the average; as a friend and neighbor, he is "tiptop."

In this day of loose teaching and hobby-riding it is a positive delight to hear a man who knows the Bible and does not hesitate to declare the whole counsel of God in love, and yet in all boldness. This is his policy, and right well does he hew to the line. He has rendered us very marked service in our fight for clean citizenship and for law observance, yet all the time with tact and prudence which has put evildoers to shame. His ability to mix and mingle with people makes him a favorite, both in and out of the church. He has his plans about matured for the next year.

Our gospel is a glorious gospel, fraught with the destiny of the human family, and he who declares it to man kind should be true and clean. Its value cannot be measured with silver and gold, for without the shedding of blood—Christ's precious blood—there could be no remission of sins. Its glory is seen in its Author, in its scope, and in its final consummation. He who declares this gospel should fully realize his responsibility; for the preacher's mistake, whether in declaring the whole counsel of God or in substituting something for God's word, may be fatal to the salvation of his hearers.

Life or death, light or darkness, joy or sorrow, heaven or hell—yea, all things that are worth while to have or to shun came through this gospel. In the majesty of the gospel we see the dignity of the minister's calling and the constant warning to honor Christ in all things. To do this, the preacher must be loyal and true, both in word and deed—in the pulpit and in his private life.

Our prayers and best wishes shall go with Brother Carney in whatsoever field the Lord may call him to labor.

Should Women Speak in Public?

BY CLARENCE L. KIRBY.

[This article was written by a young Baptist ministerial student and sent to us for publication by Brother J. O. Barnes, of Lake City, Fla.—Editor's Note.]

In a town where I was at one time, the pastor of one of the churches announced that on the next Sunday night he would let the ladies of the church give a missionary program. He also stated that he was glad that he could let them have this right, and was sure that they would render a fine program. What was the matter with that preacher? Had he read Paul's writings to the Corinthians or to Timothy? I weighed his knowledge of these writings in a balance and found it wanting. I declared that I would not attend the services given by the ladies of the church, and on the way to my lodging I thought how little people read the Book of books.

Wherever we go and find that women are taking part as men, they say that the men do not do their duty and that they have it to do. Why is it true that the men do not do their duty? Is it because the men have just relaxed their efforts and let everything go wrong, or is it because the men have flatly said, "We will work no longer in the church?" No!—a hundred times, No! It is neither of these causes. The men are as willing as ever to do their duty. But it is the women pushing their way into the work and pressing the men aside that causes the negligence of the men. The reason the women are doing this is that they have decided that they can do more and better work.

Statistics show us that there are over forty-five hundred women preachers, besides deaconesses and stewardesses, in the churches of this fair land of ours, and this is a great shame of the churches of the land.

In 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35 we have these words: "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church."

Do the ladies of our churches abide by these scriptures? No, it is the opposite; if the men wish to learn anything, they have to ask their wives at home. It certainly does seem that some women do not feel the shame.

In Phil. 4: 3 Paul tells the Philippians to help the women which labored with him in the gospel. A great many people say that these women taught and spoke to men, but we find in 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12 these words: "Let the women learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." It does not seem reasonable that so great a man as Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ and practically the head of the church work, would allow his co-laborers to teach and preach to men, and then condemn it by his statement in 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12. In Tit. 2: 4 we find that the elderly women are commanded to teach the younger women, and this is probably what Paul's helpers did.

The women say, as another argument, that they are doing a good work, and why not continue in it? It is left to them to decide whether they want to disobey the Bible.

In 1 Tim. 2: 9, 10 Paul tells the women how to dress when going to church. In verses 11-14 we read these words: "Let the women learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression [meaning that women should be in subjection]." What is woman's duty? Read verse 15: "Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety."

Let us prayerfully consider these verses of scripture; and if we believe that the Bible is an inspired Book, let us abide by its teachings.

THE STORY OF A GREAT DISCOVERY.

The hardships of a traveling salesman's life had wrecked my health. My family physician diagnosed my case as chronic gastritis, brought on by disease of the liver and complicated by kidney trouble. I consulted specialists who confirmed his diagnosis. Months passed, I grew worse and was finally compelled to give up my work.

By chance I heard of some wonderful cures which had resulted from drinking the water of a little spring in the Mineral Belt of South Carolina, a picture of which spring appears on this page. In desperation I tried it. On the second day I thought that I could notice some improvement; at the end of the first week my appetite and digestion had returned and I was much stronger; at the end of the third week I felt that I was completely cured. That was six years ago and I still enjoy perfect health.

Knowing that it had restored my health and believing that it had saved my life, I bought the Spring.

I then determined to see whether the water would cure others as it had cured me. I shipped ten gallons absolutely free of charge to each of one thousand sufferers from chronic diseases. Only four reported no benefit from the use of the ten gallons. The other nine hundred and ninety-six reported decided benefit or complete cures. Many claimed that the water had saved their lives.

I realized that I had discovered one of the world's greatest mineral springs, and I decided to devote my life to it. But how could I make the world listen; how could I make them believe my story? The precious water was running to waste while thousands were suffering. I said, I will make them believe me by showing my faith in them and in the curative power of the Spring. I will tell them that the water shall cost them nothing if it fails to benefit.

The world listened! Some wrote for proof and I sent them the letters which I had received from their fellowmen. Others accepted my offer without question. Thousands have written me reporting relief and permanent cure of a great variety of chronic diseases.

But some of the water still ran to waste for lack of belief. I determined that every drop should be used to relieve the sufferings of humanity. To this end I requested the advertising manager of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate to come to see me. At my desk I opened my mail and showed him the letters from men and women from all parts of the country who had suffered and who had found relief. I gave him my letter files and induced him to spend several hours reading my past correspondence with those who were using the water. I showed him the chemical analysis and letters from physicians explaining the curative properties of the water.

He believed, and as a result he has written this announcement for me.

WILL YOU BELIEVE?

I do not ask your implicit faith; only enough to try the water for three weeks as I did. I estimate that I drank about ten gallons and I, therefore, offer gladly to ship you two five gallon demijohns on my guarantee that if you find that it does not benefit you I will promptly refund the price, which is only $2.00. You must promise to drink the water in accordance with the instructions which I will send you and return the empty demijohns. I make you the sole judge as to whether the water has benefited you, and as the Advertising Manager of this paper has kindly consented to guarantee my guarantee to refund your money, if you are not benefited, I hope you will feel perfectly free to accept my offer.

This offer is extended to all who suffer with any chronic disease, except cancer and consumption, but I especially recommend the water for the treatment of stomach, liver, kidney and bladder diseases and for rheumatism, gout, uric acid poisoning, gall stones, diabetes, nervous headache and general debility resulting from impure or impoverished blood. These are the diseases most frequently mentioned in the letters which I have received, but my offer is open to anyone who suffers from any chronic ailment.

Yours sincerely,

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.: Dear Sir. As you are well aware, in 1909 I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered 10 gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months from date I began drinking it gained 29 lbs., was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. The Conversion of Cornelius.

If you are a Gentile, this lesson should have for you a peculiar and abiding interest; for it deals with that particular example of conversion that has been designated "the opening of the door of the church by divine authority to the Gentiles." "Great issues are frequently fought out on very narrow fields," writes H. A. Birks. Applying that truism to the case before us, we may see foreshadowed in the conversion of Cornelius the spiritual destiny of all Gentile Christians. For seven or eight years previous the gospel had been preached to Jews and to Jewish proselytes in Judea and Samaria, and many of them had become obedient to the faith; but they had not yet learned that the "middle wall of partition" heretofore separating them from the Gentiles had been broken down by the death of Jesus and forever taken away.

Prophecies Relative to the Gentiles.

The prophecies bearing on this signal event were too plain to be mistaken. Isaiah had said: "The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." And again, speaking of God's spiritual house, he had prophesied that "all nations shall flow unto it." Because of their Jewish training, Jewish expectations, and Jewish prejudices, the disciples of Christ did not, previous to this time, think of the blessings of the gospel flowing out to the nations through any other channel than that of the Mosaic law, with all its cumbersome ceremonies. Even the apostles themselves were not fully enlightened on this point until God himself put forth his hand, opened the door, and placed the Gentiles on terms of equality with the Jews in the enjoyment of gospel blessings. The conversion of Cornelius, therefore, marks the beginning of a new era in the preaching of the gospel and in the history of the church. The chasm that exists between the blacks and whites in this country is small compared with the difference that existed between Jew and Greek. That chasm was bridged by a bloodless revolution. After this conversion, all should understand that "there is no distinction between Jew and Greek; for the same Lord is Lord of all, and is rich unto all that call upon him."

The Character of Cornelius.

Cornelius was a centurion, which corresponds to our word "captain," and means literally "commander of a hundred men." I heard a colored man say that he knew there was one musician among the early disciples. "Doesn't it read that Cornelius was a member of the Italian band?" he insisted. I tried to explain that it was not that kind of a band, but a company made up of Romans born in Italy. Some claim that Cornelius was a member of the famous Cornelian gens, and point with pride to the fact that the great Scipio, the Wellington of Roman history, was a Cornelius; that the mother of the two reformers, Tiberius and Caius Gracchus, was named Cornelia; that the powerful Sulla, the great reviver of the aristocracy at Rome, boasted the same proud name. But without guessing at Cornelius' lineage, it pleases me best to say that he was great, not because of his ancestry, but because of himself. A man's family connections do not help him much if he himself is lacking in those qualities that proclaim a true man.

"The rank is but the guinea's stamp—
A man's a man for a' that."

Cornelius was a devout man, a seeker after God. In addition to being a good husband and father, he was generous and prayerful and "well reported of" by the Jews. The angel in the vision said unto him: "Thy prayers and thine alms are gone up for a memorial before God." The word means a "remembrance offering." The constant prayer of the Jew was: "Remember me, O God." In the Mosaic law the memorial was that part of the meal offering—the handful of flour with oil and incense—which the priest burned upon the altar and which ascended unto the Lord as a sweet savor. Cornelius' prayers are likened to this memorial. God heard them, for he saw that Cornelius was doing his best, and looked with favor upon him.

Giving and Praying Are Twin Virtues.

I would have you note how closely the grace of giving is connected with prayer in this delineation. Cornelius "gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always." Giving and praying are really twin virtues. They should go hand in hand together. A story is told of a saintly old man in Maine who was attending a meeting in behalf of foreign missions. The presiding brother asked him to lead in prayer, and the old man was seen fumbling in his pockets. Thinking he had been misunderstood, the chairman said: "Brother, I didn't ask you to give; I asked you to pray." "O, yes," the old man replied; "I heard you, but I can't pray until I have given something." If we all felt that way about it, we would soon be in the same class with the deacon who, being unable to attend prayer meeting, appointed in behalf of a brother who was sick, sent his son with a load of potatoes, meat, and flour, with instructions to say: "Here are my prayers."

The Purpose of the Angel's Visit.

We should not misconstrue the purpose of the angel's visit to Cornelius. It is evident that when the angel departed from him he was in the same state as before the angel came. The heavenly messenger did not reveal to him another gospel, did not preach to him the gospel already revealed, did not "speak peace unto his soul," or in any other way give to him assurance that his sins were forgiven. Cornelius was still out of Christ. Angels are not permitted to preach the gospel to sinners. The word of reconciliation was not committed to them, but to the apostles; and the apostles, not angels, were to make it known to all nations in order to the obedience of faith. Why, then, was the angel's visit? Simply, in the absence of other means and agencies, to put Cornelius in touch with that apostle whom God had chosen to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. Peter could do far more for Cornelius than the angel could. Arthur T. Pierson once said: "However poor a preacher, I can preach the gospel better than Gabriel can, because Gabriel cannot say what I can say: 'I am a sinner saved by grace.'" We should remember that this was the formative period of the church. The gospel plan of salvation had not yet been fully developed in its relation to the Gentile world. God was gradually unfolding its truths and principles as the apostles and their collaborators needed them. Preachers were not found at that time, as they are now, in almost every city. New Testaments were not printed by the millions and given to all who were not able to buy. What then was the meaning of the angel's visit to Cornelius? You will find the answer in Peter's words, who represents the angel as saying: "Send to Joppa, and fetch Simon, whose surname is Peter; who shall speak unto thee words whereby thou shalt be saved, thou and all thy house."

If an angel sent to a man who did not have the New Testament or any part of it was not permitted to preach the gospel to him or assure him of the pardon of his sins, how can we expect God to send an angel to us, visibly or invisibly, to declare his will or speak peace to our souls, when we already have in our possession the whole of his revealed will, from which we may learn the way of truth and life? Can we expect God to do more for us than he did for Cornelius, or any one else, even in the age of signs and wonders? Revelation and common sense answer, No.

How Did God Interpret Peter's Vision?

We should not overlook the important fact that a vision was given to the preacher as well as to the convert. Alexander Maclaren expresses this coincidence tersely and beautifully by saying: "God, as it were, lays his right hand on Cornelius and his left on Peter, and impels them toward each other." And in the case of Peter's vision God becomes his own interpreter. The meaning is made clear by the events that quickly follow. The arrival of the messengers just as Peter awoke out of his trance shows that God was directing all of these events to a gracious and glorious end. The statement which was made by the messengers of the cause and object of their visit was the first link in the chain of remarkable events that gradually unfolded to Peter the full import of the vision itself. Another providential event was that six Jewish brethren from Joppa accompanied Peter when he went away with the messengers. There was need for these brethren later on, first at Cesarea and then at Jerusalem. It may have been a wise precaution on Peter's part to take them along, but it was none the less providential, for neither he nor they knew at this time what would occur at Cesarea. God's hand was in every detail of this portentous event.

Next week we shall write about what took place at the house of Cornelius.

The Millennium. No. 2.

Mr. McCorkle reasons too much from analogy—too much from analogy to be convincing. But his reasoning from analogy is even more specious than his reasoning from type to antitype. He often tells us that the history and fortunes of the Jewish church typify the history of the Gentile church. Let it be admitted that the Jewish people were a typical people, and their history typical of ours; and what follows? That the Christian church is to end as did the Jewish church—by a similar visitation? So affirms my lay brother. But, then, where is the antitype? Is the antitype of famine, sword, and fire, famine, sword, and fire? Is the antitype of temporal judgments, temporal judgments? Either he or I have wholly misunderstood the nature of types. Babylon, with me, is a type, but not of a literal city—of an ecclesiastical city, and not of a city of brick houses. Famine may be a type; but can it be a type of famine? The Jewish captivity and return may be a type; but it cannot be the type of a literal captivity and return. So he seems to reason; for he alleges that "if the past were a type of the present, the present must close as did the past." If the former closed by temporal judgments, then the present dispensation must close with temporal judgments. I would rather suppose it ought to be with spiritual judgments, if the former were a type of the latter. Light is a metaphor, but not of light. Temporal judgments or calamities may be a metaphor or type, but not of temporal calamities. There is a spiritual Jerusalem, Egypt, and Sodom—a spiritual Babylon, too, if by spiritual we mean figurative. But the figurative and the literal are not literally the same.

I am doubtless understood; and if so, may I not affirm that if the Jewish dispensation, the people under it, and God's government of them, were types of the Christian dispensation, the people under it, and God's government of them; then, on that hypothesis, the present church cannot end as did the Jewish; for if it do, then the close of the former is not a type of the close of the latter. Noah's salvation in an ark during the deluge, Peter says, has its antitype in Christian immersion; but is there an ark or a deluge in the antitype? If, then, the Jewish church in its close was a type of the Christian in its close, that the latter may be the antitype, there must not be literally sword, famine, or fire in the consummation of the present dispensation.

But again, my good Brother Samuel says, in very strong terms, that the church is never to come out of the wilderness—he defies any one to show in the prophecies an intimation of her return. His words are: "The church is never to come up out of the wilderness. I challenge the text, the solitary text to the contrary. It is one of the wretched blunders of our teachers, and palmed on the world as Bible." Then query on his doctrine of types: Where is the antitype for the Jews coming up out of the wilderness? Did God's ancient church never come up out of the wilderness? And may I not add that if the history of the Jews be a type of the history of the Gentile church, and the Jews were delivered from the literal Babylon, must we believe that the Christian church, now in Babylon, is never to come out of Babylon, but to be destroyed within her walls? Is there not a war between his doctrine of types and his interpretation of prophecies?

I would not be understood as disputing against the typical character both of the religion and of the history of the people of the Jews, for I believe both to have been typical; and for this reason, among others, I expect the church to come out of Babylon before Babylon is destroyed; but I remonstrate against the loose style in which the layman speaks of types, and his application of a typical character to God's judgments, which destroys the true doctrine of types as applicable to the whole religion of Moses.

While animadverting on the preliminaries of your correspondent, Mr. Editor, may I not ask: On what authority does he so repeatedly call the Christian church the Gentile church? Is not Jerusalem the mother of us all? Were not the first Christians all Jews? And did not the apostles unite and make one new body of Jews and Gentiles under Christ? Why, then, regard the Christian church as if exclusively a Gentile thing? Is it to complete your correspondent's doctrine of types, to make way for his demonstration, that, as the Jewish nation fell, so will the Gentile nation, called "the church," come to its close? The slightest inclination of two straight lines will, if they are projected, end in an angle. We had need, then, to be cautious in laying the premises of any argument so pregnant with tremendous consequences as that of our friend. We must not talk loosely of types, facts, reason, and analogy; but proceed with caution, examination, and the assurance of testimony.

Having so far examined the first part of his "Signs of the Times," or what pertains to his analogies and types, and shown, we think, that while these furnish much matter for declamation and fine rhetorical appeals, there is nothing of the certainty of demonstration, logic, or faith in those chapters of his work, we proceed to his comments upon the prophecies.

In general terms let me observe:

1. That the layman generally, if not always, when in a strait in making out the meaning of prophecy, carries his system across the swamp on the bridge of analogies and types. So that, in fact, all through his interpretations he relies more upon his analogies and types for proof than on anything he finds in prophecy.

2. He attributes a much greater amount of ignorance to the priesthood than can possibly be sustained by any written documents. For example, in speaking of the seals, he says (on page 25, in a pamphlet form of his "Signs of the Times," which you sent me): "The most alarming and the most misapplied prophecies in the whole Bible may be found, Rev. 6: 12 to the end. Our priests, almost universally, quote the prophecy as a portrait of the final day." These must be very illiterate priests, indeed; for I know of no learned man, no writer on prophecy, living or dead, that holds the views which our friend McCorkle imputes almost universally to the priests. Perhaps he only means the Indiana priests. Certainly he cannot find any person of note, living or dead, who affirms that the sixth seal alludes to the final consummation. All men of good common sense, and all men of learning, are one in their views of the sixth seal, so far as that it relates to a political or ecclesiastical revolution long before the final consummation. Among Catholics themselves there is a very general agreement on this subject, especially since the twelfth century. The Abbot Joachim, in the twelfth century; Pierre De Olive, in the thirteenth century; Ubertinus De Casalis, in the fourteenth century, are with Samuel McCorkle here. So is Dr. Wall, Vitranga, Bishop Newton, Daubuz, Dr. Aphorpe, Pyle, Waple, Mede, More, etc., etc.

Even the most ancient commentators are of the same opinion; among whom are Victorinus, Andrew, and Arthas, whose commentaries on the Revelation are still extant, and who all flourished before the seventh century closed.

3. His comments are sometimes most arbitrary, and so far-fetched and forced that they are destitute of even plausibility.

4. So much incensed at those who spiritualize away the letter of prophecy, he seems occasionally to run into the opposite extreme, and literalizes the spirit of prophecy.

The reasons which compel me to make these general remarks on his performances will appear in the sequel. And though it may at first view appear that we ought to commence with an examination of what he says on the six seals, to sustain these exceptions to his treatise; yet, as the finding of fault is not our object, only as it may serve to correct some wrong impressions and to set the whole matter of prophecy in a more intelligible attitude before the student, we proceed to examine his views of the First Resurrection spoken of in the twentieth chapter of the Revelation. This, although almost at the end of the chapter, is so inwrought into the whole commentary before us that it deservedly occupies our attention first. That there is to be a literal and proper resurrection of certain saints and martyrs a thousand years antecedent to another literal resurrection is a matter assumed by all who expect a literal personal return of the Messiah at the destruction of antichrist and the man of sin. [Mr. McCorkle seems to confound "antichrist" with "the man of sin." Here he is not literal enough. John's "antichrists" are either professed apostates or skeptics; Paul's "man of sin" is a professor of the Christian faith, and sits in the temple of God. This will come in our way more directly at another time.]

It is agreed on all hands that the vision of the things which were to come to pass subsequent to the times of John's exile begins with the first verse of the fourth chapter of the Apocalypse, and ends with the seventh verse of the twenty-second chapter. The whole vision, then, occupies eighteen chapters and seven verses. It begins with, "I saw, and behold a door opened in heaven;" and ends with, "Blessed is he who keeps the words of the prophecy of this book." "I John saw and heard these things."

This great vision is composed of several separate and distinct visions in regular succession. Of these, the vision of the Book, or Scroll, sealed with seven seals, is first. The opening and development of six of these seals occupies the fourth, fifth, and seventh chapters of the book.

At the opening of the seventh seal there was a solemn pause in heaven for half an hour, and a second vision occupies the prophet—seven angels standing with seven trumpets. These prepare each to sound his blast. The reports or sounds of these seven angels with these trumpets occupy the eighth, ninth, tenth, and eleventh chapters of the book; and if we add the developments attendant on these seven angels or the separate visions filling up this portion of the prophecy, we are led forward to the close of the fourteenth chapter. But here we have the independent visions of the Two Witnesses—the Woman in heaven clothed with the Sun—a Battle in heaven—a ferocious Beast rising out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns—a Beast ascending out of the earth, having two horns like a lamb, with the tongue of a dragon—the Angel with the sharp sickle.

The third principal vision begins with the fifteenth chapter: seven angels with the seven last plagues—vials of the wrath of God. The pouring out of these vials and all their details extends to the end of the nineteenth chapter. Then follow the vision of the binding of Satan—the First Resurrection—the Millennium—Satan's release from prison—the battle of Gog and Magog—the Final Judgment—the New Heavens and Earth—and the descent of the New Jerusalem.

Now this whole vision, composed of numerous separate visions, gives one prospective view of the destinies of the Christian dispensation till the close of time; but all of it veiled in figure. If we take any portion of it literally and other portions of it figuratively, we must have some unequivocal reason or authority for this mode of interpretation, else we destroy the intelligibility of the whole.

Visions are always in figure, and they must be understood figuratively, if understood at all. Concede to one commentator that the first resurrection is a literal resurrection, and you may concede to another that the binding of Satan with a chain is a literal binding, and that Gog and Magog are the literal Gog and Magog of Old Testament history.

It is, indeed, conceded on all hands that some circumstances in a vision must be represented without figure, that it may be intelligible; but these are never the subject-matter or principal object in the vision. They are the mere connections of its parts. We must then object to that system of interpretation which arbitrarily takes as literal the whole of any section of this vision. Such, in our judgment, is the error of our lay brother on the passage under consideration. He represents the principal topic or figure in the vision of the first resurrection as literal with all its attendant circumstances. Hence he deduces a new doctrine not taught by any New Testament author in any of the canonical Scriptures. For it must be confessed that neither Jesus, nor Paul, nor Peter, nor any of the apostles in their writings ever speak of two literal resurrections, or of a resurrection of some saints a thousand years before others or before the wicked.

Is not, then, this doctrine of a literal resurrection of the saints, to live and reign a thousand years on this earth before another resurrection, to be received with caution? And ought not the single passage in the New Testament on which it rests, or from which it is deduced, to be clear and forcible, to warrant so much confidence as some express on the subject? But is this the fact? No. It rests wholly on a single figurative passage found in the visions of John, and that in connection with the binding of Satan with a great chain, and the insurrections of Gog and Magog around the camp of the saints.

But we may be asked, have we any authority from the Bible, Old Testament or New, to speak of a figurative resurrection? Yes, of a figurative burial, graves, resurrection, and ascension to heaven. Let those who doubt it read Ezekiel's description of God's people coming up out of their graves: "O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land." This is only a part of the vision of the resurrection (figurative, indeed) described by Ezekiel in chapter 37.

The apostle Paul speaks more than once of being buried with Christ, and of being raised with him; and on this ground says to the Colossians: "Since you have been raised with Christ—ascend—or set your affections on things above." And does not John himself, in the eleventh chapter of his vision, speak of the corpses of the two witnesses lying unburied, and of the spirit of life entering them, and of their ascension into heaven?

Now, on my friend McCorkle's doctrine of analogies, may I not ask: If the Jewish church was to have a resurrection out of her graves, may not the Christian church have a similar resurrection? And if the Spirit of life revived the two witnesses, why may it not revive the whole Christian church? And if they ascended up to heaven, may not the Christian church ascend thither also in the same manner? And if God should put his Spirit into the raised Christian church as he promised to do to the house of Israel after he brings them up out of their graves, may not they be said to be blessed and holy who have a part in the first resurrection, as well as the Jews, for whom he displays such power and love?

If Sodom, Egypt, and Babylon, in this scenic representation of things, are said to live again in the corrupt hierarchies of the apostate church, may not the souls of them who were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus—the saints and martyrs of ancient times—be said to live and reign with Christ in the millennial church? And if Christians can figuratively be said now to be crucified with Christ and suffer with him, may they not be said to live and reign with him on earth? How much more easy of conception is this, and how much more in harmony with the figures of this book and with the order of things, than the layman's triumphant church on earth, composed of men and women in the flesh, in company with, or under the government of, ancient martyrs and all the saints of olden times! What an incongruous mass will replenish this millennial church! Here are groups of men, women, and children, eating, drinking, sleeping, marrying and giving in marriage, while Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Paul, Stephen, and John are looking over them (as shepherds tending their flocks) for three hundred thousand years! What pleasure will Elijah, Moses, and Daniel have in the fine corn fields, olive yards, vineyards, meadows, and gardens of that happy period! Will the melody of the groves, and the beauties of spring, summer, and autumn, delight the senses of spiritual and incorruptible bodies, that neither breathe the air nor feast on earthly products! And what, let me again ask, is the scheme or mode of reasoning which gave birth to such a heterogeneous association as that described by the layman on page 40? It is this: Fifteen chapters of the visions of John are understood figuratively, and the three last literally. And why, I cannot say. But he says: "If this resurrection be a figure of Christianity being renovated, there will be a new thing under the sun; and God will not deal with this dispensation as he has formerly done"—that is, it would be contrary to my system of analogies!

We have much to say on the finding of the dragon, on the first resurrection, and on the insurrections of Gog and Magog, before we finish this topic. I will only add that I cannot imagine anything more incongruous than to have one set of saints in a state of trial or probation, and another set who has passed out of that state, living together on our planet, at the same time. A part of those, too, in a state of trial, walking by vision, while another part of the same class, at a greater distance from the King, are walking by faith.

If weak thy reason, or thy faith, why, my good brother, choose the harder side? Have patience with me, as I have had patience with thee.

Holding Forth the Word of Life.

BY CHARLIE TAYLOR.

First, I wish to ask this question: What is "the word of life?" The word of life is the gospel, as we find in John 6: 63: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." In John 17: 17 Jesus says: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." And Paul tells us, in Eph. 1: 13, that the word of truth is the gospel of our salvation: "In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that you believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise."

But why is it called "the word of life?" Because it promises life. Hear Jesus in John 5: 24: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." The word, when believed and obeyed, will give life, as we shall see later.

To whom does it promise life? Says one: "All that you have got to do is to believe, and God will give you life." I am sure, dear reader, from the language of James (2: 24), "Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only," that nothing short of an obedient faith will procure the life of the gospel. The Romans were justified by faith. (Rom. 5: 1.) In the next chapter Paul says: "Ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness." (Rom. 6: 17, 18.) It follows, therefore, that their faith was an obedient faith. The faith that leads an individual to do what God says is the faith that brings one into the possession of the life promised by the word of truth.

Paul exhorts the church at Philippi to "hold forth the word of life." As a church we should hold forth the word, and as individuals also. The church at Thessalonica "sounded out the word" so that they "were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia." (See 1 Thess. 1: 7, 8.) The church at Antioch sent out Paul on a missionary tour, and he preached the word to those that were in darkness; and through the preaching of the word many were turned "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." When Paul and Barnabas returned home from their journey of sounding out the word under the jurisdiction of the Antioch church, they called the church together and "rehearsed all that God had done with them." Thus we have apostolic example for sounding out the word; and we can see very clearly that the church is the heaven-born society through which the work of preaching the word to those in the cold, bleak mountains of sin is to be done. Then let us be content with this heaven-born institution, with Christ as Head, and do the work through the church, and give the glory to God. Paul tells us, in 1 Tim. 3: 15, that the church is "the pillar and ground of the truth." The church is to support the truth. The churches of the apostolic age were busily engaged in the spread of the gospel, and it is the duty of the church of God to-day to continue the work for the salvation of the world.

The order of evangelizing the world is laid down in the last words of Jesus to his disciples when he ascended to his Father, recorded in Acts 1: 8: "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." First, "in Jerusalem"—that is, at home; second, "Judea"—the surrounding country; next, "Samaria"—still farther out; and "unto the uttermost part of the earth"—the foreign field. To my mind, this is the divine plan of doing missionary work; and I am sure that the work of evangelizing the world will never be accomplished till we fall on the divine plan of doing the work. If you will notice the rapid growth of the church during the first three centuries of its history, you will be convinced of the truthfulness of this statement.

Not only as a church should we hold forth the word of life, but as individuals also. It is the duty of every Christian. We are to "shine as lights in the world." There is not a member of the church so obscure as to be exempt from this obligation. How are we to do this? First, by example. In Matt. 5: 16 the Savior says: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." By letting our light shine—that is, by our good works, our daily walk—we are thus holding forth the word of life. Second, we should hold forth the word of life by our efforts to send the gospel to those that have it not. There is no one but what can contribute something, though it may be but two mites. Again, we can hold forth the word of life in our conversation. We can talk the word; we can let our conversation be such as becometh the children of God. And by thus doing we can wield an influence over the hearts and lives of those with whom we come in contact.

Finally, dear reader, let me admonish you to hold forth the word of life by contending for the faith, rebuking sin, and being ever ready and anxious to do all that you can to save yourself and them that hear you. (1 Tim. 4: 16.)

Keeping the Unity of the Spirit.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

"I therefore, the prisoner in the Lord, beseech you to walk worthily of the calling wherewith ye were called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." (Eph. 4: 1-3.)

The above injunction comes to each and every Christian everywhere, and for all time to come, with the stamp of inspiration upon it, and it is fraught with the deepest significance and with the greatest importance, because the success and usefulness of the church so much depend upon it. Now, in order to this, we must recognize the principles as expressed by Christ and his apostles. We now give attention to some of these.

The Spirit to Teach. "But the Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things." (John 14: 26.) Some of the disciples of Christ were very soon to become teachers of God, apostles of Jesus Christ, and they were not to rely on their human wisdom, neither were they left to dream things out, nor to guess them out, but they were to be taught them, and the Holy Spirit was to do the teaching, and it was to teach them "all things." Everything that God wanted revealed concerning himself; Jesus, the Son; heaven; hell; man, and what man should do and be, and his relation and duty to God and to his fellow-man, was to be revealed, made known, and the Holy Spirit was to teach the apostles these things; and they were not to begin teaching these things till they were taught themselves, as we learn from the words of Jesus just before his ascension into heaven, when he said: "Ye are witnesses of these things. And behold, I send forth the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city, until ye be clothed with power from on high." (Luke 24: 48, 49.) Thus we see the apostles were not to begin their operations till the Holy Spirit came to teach them, and it was to bring to their remembrance "all" that Jesus had "said unto them." Jehovah told in the days of Moses what he would do. "Jehovah thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken." "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee; and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him." (Deut. 18: 15, 18, 19; see, also, Acts 3: 22, 23.) Now, Jesus had been teaching in the presence of his disciples previous to this, but the time is near for him to go to the Father, and the apostles were to teach the world, but not till they had been taught by the Holy Spirit whom he was to send to "teach" them and "bring to their remembrance" what he had said. Upon this rests the credibility and ultimate divine authority of the gospel history. "But," says Paul, "unto us God revealed them through the Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For who among men knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of the man, which is in him? even so the things of God none knoweth, save the Spirit of God. But we received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is from God; that we might know the things that were freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Spirit teacheth; combining spiritual things with spiritual words." (1 Cor. 2: 10-13.) This was true of the apostles and all of the inspired writers and wholly in accord with Jesus' promise. When they began writing and speaking orally, they were guided by the Holy Spirit, and they expressed nothing except what the Spirit guided them in expressing.

The Spirit to Guide in Truth. Jesus has said: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life." (John 14: 6.) All we are to get in the Father, we get through Christ. He is the truth of all we find in the Father when we get to him. "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." (Col. 2: 9.) Now the Holy Spirit is called "the Spirit of truth;" so he further states: "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all the truth: for he shall not speak from himself; but what things soever he shall hear, these shall he speak: and he shall declare unto you the things that are to come." (John 16: 13.) We note the expressions, "take of mine," "declare it unto you," in verses 14, 15. Now the Holy Spirit guided in "all the truth," "brought to their remembrance" and "taught them all things," and we shall rest assured of the fact that it led them all in the same way, taught them the same things, and these inspired writers have given it to the world as it was given to them. Now, if the world will only be willing to receive it as they, the inspired writers, have given it, it will make of all disciples, Christians, children of God; and if these children will be willing to walk by it "worthily" in the spirit of "lowliness" and "meekness," with "long-suffering," "forbearing one another in love," then the unity of the Spirit will be kept in the bond of peace, and, as a result of this, the church will be built up, souls will be saved, and the name of God will run and be glorified.

"Quit Slacking."

BY E. S. JELLEY, JR.

A couple of years ago the above words might have been considered slang; now, however, they have, by general suffrage of the British nation, an honored place in the language; for England is at war, and the "slacker" is on every hand written down as an enemy of his country.

If a man insists on a Saturday afternoon off from work, although it be at his own expense, he is put down upon the lecture platform as a "slacker." What does he mean by taking four or five hours off? Does he not know that his country is at war? If he goes to the seaside, he gets presented with a white feather. It constitutes him a slacker and a great deal worse. If he hesitates about surrendering all of his rights as a labor-union man and refuses to countenance the employment of nonunion men and women, and to himself work alongside of them some hours more per day than the union laws permit, then he is a "slacker" and a traitor, directly responsible for the inability of British arms to win on the field, and on a par with the German or the Turk. And all this time the Chancellor of the Exchequer is devising new ways of laying on the taxes at a rate that would probably have made former generations revolt. Why? Because their country is at war. Most Englishmen and many Britishers beyond the seas recognize the force of this argument, while more than eight hundred thousand heads of families have voluntarily gone out to be butchered for the sake of their country.

Does this matter have any bearing upon the duty of disciples? I think so. "Our citizenship is in heaven," and our Sovereign is at war. He has been at war for about six thousand years, and some eighteen hundred and eighty-one years ago he himself, after thirty-three years of hardships, was seized by the enemy and crucified on our behalf. And this Sovereign of ours tells us to "fight the good fight of faith," "to be faithful unto death;" that we must every one deny ourselves and bear our cross; and that we are "not above" our Lord, who had "not where to lay his head." Brethren, I will not say there are any "slackers" among us, unless it be myself; but, in view of the above scriptures, it would be well for each of us to hold a session with his own conscience to determine whether or not he is doing all he can to advance the cause of his Lord.

In the Japanese declaration of war, the emperor said: "We, therefore, command our army and navy to fight the German empire with all their power." So, likewise, in our Lord's declaration of war against Satan, he said: "Go, make disciples of all nations;" "Go ye into all the world."

There are now millions of volunteer soldiers fighting Germany, ready to die for their country, in addition to the stay-at-home guards and the munitions workers. But, brethren, even the little body of heretic Holy Rollers has more missionaries out here in India than the Lord of the universe can muster. Whose fault is it? Why do you not volunteer for active service at home or abroad—particularly abroad, as there are fourteen hundred millions abroad and only a handful of missionaries, while in the little corner called "home" there are thousands of the necessary home-guard preachers? And if you really cannot go abroad or devote your time at home to preaching, is it a fact that you exert all possible energy in behalf of Christ? Do you tax yourself all you can bear to carry on the war? Do you avoid luxuries and worldly pleasure for the sake of the cause of the great King? If so, he will doubtless say to you: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." I should like to have him say that to me.

One Day's Wages.

In the home of a missionary I saw on the wall a sheet on which were printed the photos of all their missionaries and a request to give "one day's wages." This was gotten out in America, and the home forces were taking this method of stirring up more zeal. "That seems like a mighty little to give," observed the missionary, "but there are many that do not even give that much." Yes, one day's wages out of a whole year does seem like a small amount—so small that it ought to be in the reach of every one. But let us see what it would amount to. One day's wages! Well, that little country church of only ten male members giving a day's wages—what would it mean? A day's wages would not be less than a dollar each all round. Ten dollars, then, for the little out-of-the-way church of only ten male members. Let us suppose all the nine thousand churches to be as weak as this one and that a day's wages by all the wage earners would amount to only ten dollars to the church; how much would it amount to? Just ninety thousand dollars. Think of that! Yet we have only touched the hem of the garment of the churches; for a day's wages with many would run up to hundreds of dollars, and when all should be added the figures would be truly astonishing.

Seeking the Truth.

The following letter was written to Miss Sarah Andrews on August 19 by a young woman of her Bible class:

My Dear Miss Andrews: I am very glad to hear that you are very well in Karuizawa. When Mr. and Mrs. Campbell were killed I thought you must be frightened, and wanted to write to you, but at that time I did not know your home. I have been in Tokyo this vacation. Here has been cooler than last year, and so easy to study.

I am reading the New Testament every day. My father, who is dead, was a Chinese scholar; so I read the Confucianism and the book of Mencius. I have eagerness in religion, so read some books of Buddhism. Therefore I am studying the New Testament, comparing with these books. Now I am going to know the true God. If you teach me my questions, I will be glad. I hope to be versed in the commands of God by your kindness. After I understand the outline of the New Testament, I will be a faithful believer, and hope to exert my best for religion. Please give me the light of knowledge and let me joy in the brightness when you return to Tokyo.

I hope to see you in September. I hope you take good care of your dear self.

For the most part our boys are fair and square in their dealings. Now and then one comes in that is different. Mr. S—— left for his home in the country one morning early. He didn't tell me good-by, but left word that he didn't have time. "He had all day the day before," I replied. "He went off two months behind with his room rent." See how one sin leads to another? First he was dishonest, this made him impolite in not telling me good-by, and then he left a lie in the mouth of a fellow-student.

Has the Cross Lost Its Power?

A friend of mine, out of this State, saw in one of Atlanta's daily papers the following announcement of a church social that recently took place in the First Christian Church, of this city, and wants to know about it:

A new departure in church entertainments will be a "cabaret social" at the First Christian Church, corner Pryor and Trinity Avenues, on next Friday evening at eight o'clock, to which all young people of the city, and college students and strangers particularly, are not only invited, but requested to come.

The Bible school has direct charge of the entertainment, and is going to introduce new and unique stunts galore for the enjoyment of its guests. And best of all, perhaps, there will be absolutely no charge for anything. The fun, which includes everything, is free to all. A cordial welcome awaits those who come, with assurance that they will very quickly be made to feel at home.

As to the program, there will be plenty of it, and will include some of the city's best musical talent. But it will not all be presented in one spot or at one time. It will be more or less spontaneous, with singers going through the audience as they sing, or giving a selection in one part of the building or another wherever they happen to be at the psychological moment.

But the "cabaret social" is not alone for the young people. All ages will be there, and an attractive and comfortable place will be fixed up for the pleasure of the "young old" folks who prefer to sit and watch the fun rather than take an active part in it.

The side-show feature will be in evidence, one of the most interesting being a trip to the moon on the Airship Arnot, the experience of a lifetime. Surprises and pleasures will abound on all sides.

Not the least important feature will be the refreshments. For this purpose the wienie man will be on the job, as will the sandwich girls, to keep one from getting hungry. And in case of thirst, this may quickly be quenched at attractive booths from which delicious cold punch will be served by still more attractive young ladies.

An informal evening of joy and pleasure awaits all who come, offering a splendid opportunity for getting acquainted and forming new and pleasant associations, and the only admission fee asked is a pleasant smile and cordial handshake.

In justice to the First Christian Church, I am glad to say that I asked a friend of mine, who is a member there and who was also present, about this affair, and she informs me that the above is highly colored and exaggerated, and that it is wholly false to call it a "cabaret." I give the following announcement that appeared in The Christian Call, a paper published by the congregation:

The main object of our social is to get our people together for fellowship and a general good time; to invite young people who have no church home, especially those in colleges.

Date of social, Friday, September 29, at 8 P.M.

The following committees have been appointed up to date, and more will be appointed later, as every class in the school is to have a part:

Refreshment Committee—Auditorium Class. All classes wishing to make donations to this committee are requested to report same to the following: Mrs. C. E. Turner, chairman; Mrs. Witherspoon, Mrs. Anthony, Mrs. Toney, Mrs. Beatty, Mrs. Downing, Mrs. Matthews, Mrs. Burnett.

Serving Refreshment Committee—Mrs. Marshall's and Mrs. Schley's classes.

Entertainment Committee (to furnish program and special features of amusement)—Caroline Thomas, chairman; Mrs. Pansy Schley, Mrs. Evan Harrel, Mrs. John Kerksis, Mr. Archie Mitchell, Mr. Craighead.

Punch Bowl Committee—Mrs. Stanley's and Mrs. Barnes' classes.

Decoration Committee—Delta Alpha and Royal Guards classes.

Check Room—V. B. G. class.

Get-'Em-Together Committee—Harry Jones, chairman; Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. Berry, Mrs. Jones, Mr. Hubbard, Mr. Craighead, Mr. Stanley.

"Getabout" Committee (to visit Tech and other schools with invitations to social)—Mr. Burnett, chairman.

Pages—Boy Scouts.

Orchestra—Mr. Wheeler.

Old Folks Committee—Royal Guards. This committee is to look after the comfort and entertainment of the old folks and invalids. A special corner will be fixed up with comfortable chairs and other attractive features.

Badges—It was suggested that all classes wear badges at the social with name of class printed on same, and have the individual's name typewritten across bottom; this to be taken up in the individual classes.

Welcome Committee—Mr. Stephen Hook, chairman; Guy Hall, Harry Jones, J. B. Bowen, C. E. Turner, S. C. Shelton, G. C. Edmondson, Mrs. Frank Stewart, Mrs. Witherspoon, Mrs. Elizabeth Robinson, Mrs. Anthony, Mrs. Cawthorn, Mrs. Charles Goodman.

This is a standing committee in our school. Mr. Hook requests that each member be present in time for the opening exercises of the school, wearing their badges, and remaining on duty until the church services begin.

Now this is the best that I can do, so far as present information is concerned, to give our readers the facts about this social. You have the reporter's announcement, which, I suppose, was written, not in criticism, but as an advertisement of the affair. Then you have the announcements from the paper published by the church in question. The right and just thing to do is to judge it by what they (the members of the First Christian Church themselves) have to say about it. There are some fine people in this congregation, and I would very much dislike to misrepresent them, or any one else, as to that matter.

But are they allowing themselves to be, indeed and in truth, friends to the sinner in such a performance? Paul, in his efforts to save, says he determined to know nothing among the people but "Christ, and him crucified." (See 1 Cor. 2: 2.) Again, he says: "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us who are saved it is the power of God." Has the cross ceased to be a power among our Christian Church brethren? If not, why cease to use it and resort to the above methods of drawing the people? The membership of the First Christian Church, I am told, stands above the thousand mark. But take all of the above appeals that they make to the flesh to hold their number, and what will the membership be? No, my dear brethren, when you catch people with such appeals to the flesh, you must hold them with such; and if you let these things go, a large per cent of those you think you have led to Christ will go. Come to the West End Avenue church of Christ or go to the South Pryor Street church of Christ, where the cross is the power, and cease to waste your precious time and money for "that which is not bread." "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat that which is good. . . . For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith Jehovah. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." (Isa. 55: 1, 2, 8, 9.)

BY E. A. E.

But there seems to be little inducement to young men of ability to prepare themselves to preach, and little inducement to schools to help such young men. The idea seems to be that young men should become preachers by accident—and not to be too much of a preacher, at that; to be farmer-preachers, teacher-preachers, or merchant-preachers. Hence most young men are preparing themselves to follow some profitable business, while the King's business goes begging. Can we do anything to change these conditions?

It has been proved most clearly and fully that the first declaration of this paragraph is contrary to the word of God, because there is now as great "inducement" to preachers as there has ever been.

The second declaration is contrary to the word of God, because it makes schools, and not the church, institutions in which to prepare men for preaching the gospel. God has ordained the church, and not schools, for this purpose.

Some months ago, knowing that "young men of ability" and some of no ability are depending upon schools and the "inducement" mentioned above to "prepare themselves to preach," I took much pains to present the Bible way of making preachers. I may have failed. Then let him who can, give it. There is such a way. These articles were commended by Brother H. Leo Boles, president of the Nashville Bible School, and other thoughtful and godly men. I now ask Brother S. H. Hall, also the author of the above paragraph, and others to give the New Testament way of making preachers. Certainly God has revealed a way of doing a work so vastly important. Brother Hall says the way to "change these conditions"—the conditions so deplored by the author of the above paragraph—is to "preach the whole counsel of God on the preacher question." (Emphasis his.) This is just the thing to do. Then let Brother Hall give the Bible way of making preachers. He and many others can give "the New Testament way of doing missionary work;" it is in order now for him and them to give the Bible way of making preachers. The time has come for doing this.

Attention is called to the following statements:

1. Since it is right to be governed by the New Testament in sending out and supporting preachers, it is right to be governed by it in making preachers.

2. Or, since it is wrong to depart from the New Testament in sending out and supporting preachers, it is wrong to depart from it in making them.

3. Since it is contrary to the word of God to form a separate organization from the church to do one work God has committed to the church, it is equally contrary to the word of God to form a separate organization to do any other work God has committed to the church.

4. No one can defend schools as organizations for making preachers.

5. In the attempt to defend schools as organizations for making preachers, the same arguments are used as are used in defense of missionary societies.

6. The same scriptures which condemn missionary societies in principle condemn schools for making preachers.

7. It is right and our duty to teach the Bible in schools to all pupils alike; it is wrong to turn them into organizations for making preachers and professional singers. Since preachers, as all others, must attend school, it is right for them to attend the ones in which the Bible is taught.

What is it to teach the Bible in school or elsewhere? It is to teach the existence of God with all his attributes, man's responsibility and obligation to God, and that the Bible is the word of God; it is to teach piety and reverence for God, and that "the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom;" it is to teach that to fear God and keep his commandments is the whole duty of man—man's peace and happiness; it is to teach the industry, economy, honesty, integrity, uprightness, truthfulness, sincerity, useful employment, righteousness, godliness, and all the every-day right living of the Bible—entire submission to God—that he rules throughout the universe, and that everything on earth or in heaven—suns and systems of worlds, men, and angels—out of harmony with his will must perish.

Righteousness exalts a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people. (Prov. 14: 34.)

Homes and schools are the best places to instill into the hearts of the young the principles of righteousness and justice, mercy and truth. Whenever schools teach their pupils to tell the truth, to be honest and upright, to be law-abiding citizens, to treat others as they would be treated, etc., they are teaching the Bible to that extent. No man can offer any reason whatever why schools should not teach pupils to honor their father and mother, to obey their parents in the Lord, to make themselves profitable by following some honorable occupation, to fear God, to respect rulers, to be peace-loving and peace-maintaining citizens and neighbors—the entire Bible with all its principles of right living at all times and in all relationships of life, the reign of the Prince of Peace in all hearts and homes and nations, and glory to God in the highest.

With many, teaching the Bible in school is only making preachers, as if all pupils and people in the world should not know the characters, literature, principles, spirit, Savior, God, and salvation of the Bible. With others, teaching the Bible in school is teaching only men's theories, notions, speculations, peculiar views, and denominational tenets, or "our position." None of this is teaching the Bible, and it is contrary to the word of God to build schools for these purposes.

In regard to Bible schools already in existence, some points must be vigilantly guarded:

1. They must not be turned into institutions for making professional preachers and singers, clerical classes, or preachers of any sort. This is not God's way of making preachers.

2. They must not be turned into places for teaching men's peculiar views, theories, speculations, and doctrines.

3. They must not be put into the hands of men who are lacking in a thorough knowledge of the real teaching of the Bible in regard to all right living and on "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," or "the whole counsel of God." Neither must they be put into the hands of men who have not well-established characters for purity and honor and who have not deep convictions and lofty conceptions of integrity, uprightness, and all Christian virtues. Paul says he took thought for things honorable in the sight of all men. Men and women may have great literary ability and attainments and be wholly unfit to teach. Men without characters cannot build characters in others. Degrees from universities alone are not sufficient qualifications for teaching anywhere.

4. Thousands of good men and women have given their hard-earned money to build up these schools, in which the Bible, with all its principles of honesty, uprightness, truthfulness, virtue, peace, purity, righteousness, and godliness, can be taught to all pupils alike, and it is a sin to pervert them into institutions for making preachers, especially a favored and clerical class, and for emphasizing the peculiar views and notions of men.

Just here one thing Brother Hall says may be turned to good account. He says:

One way to take from the truth is to emphasize some part of a subject to the neglect and destruction of some other part.

A school which emphasizes "special providence," one which features "sect baptism," another which makes it a special point to show how to meet the errors of the denominations, another which stresses peculiar views on unfulfilled prophecies and the second coming of Christ, and still another which makes a specialty of turning out preachers and singers does the very thing which Brother Hall condemns. In this way parts of the truth are neglected and destroyed and wrong principles are practiced and error is propagated. I know it to be a fact that some men who "emphasize some parts of a subject" and some points of doctrine to the neglect of others, and some peculiar views of their own, are more popular lecturers and preachers in some schools, as in some congregations, than humble, faithful, and all-round men who know nothing but "Christ, and him crucified," and strive to teach on all subjects "the whole counsel of God."

The more powerful any man is for good, the more powerful he is for evil when his abilities are devoted to propagation of error or any wrong. An ignorant thief pilfers; an educated one steals an office, loots a bank, or robs and betrays a government. An ignorant man in error does far less harm than the educated one. Just so, the more powerful any means is for good, the more powerful for evil it becomes when perverted from the good. Schools, which are powerful for good, become more powerful for evil when perverted from their good purpose. This perversion must be opposed in its incipiency. All tendencies to turn schools into institutions for making preachers, professional singers, emphasizing any special views and theories of men, neglecting anything the Bible teaches, or developing any professional workers in the church of any kind, must be opposed vigorously in their incipiency. When schools begin the work of making preachers, the next step is to make a clerical class claiming special rights and privileges because they are preachers. We must not wait until these evils have developed and have fastened themselves, like an incubus, upon the churches.

Many true and faithful men saw first "the lurking evil" of the societies and pointed them out most clearly. These men were mocked and laughed to scorn, misrepresented, abused, and persecuted. But hundreds in the societies now declare that the evil no longer lurks, but has manifested itself in irresistible power. Shall we sit still and see another lurking evil grow stealthily and surely into another mighty power?

All this crying out for "inducement" to "young men of ability" and for "schools to help such young men" to "prepare themselves to preach" is a lurking evil coming to the front and making demands upon the churches to support a system which God never ordained. This is wrong in two particulars, at least:

1. God has not ordained schools for making preachers, or that churches should support schools for that purpose.

2. While God has "ordained that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel," he has never ordained that men shall live of the gospel before they have preached it and in prospect of preaching it, or that men should be paid for work they have not done. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." God has ordained that if any man will not work, neither shall he eat.

Another instance is a quartet, composed of preachers and graduates and others, with a teacher part of the time as general manager, going over the country singing hymns, home ballads, comic songs, and giving ludicrous recitals for churches in the name of religion and as an advertisement of a Bible School. No entrance fee was charged, but a collection was taken up before the congregations were dismissed. These young men did nothing through the day of any service to any one, and only sang a little and made themselves ridiculous at night. This performance could not have been for the edification and spiritual advancement of the churches; it must have been for the entertainment of the audiences, on one hand, and the money there was in it to the performers, on the other. Young people in the churches do not know any better; young people in some Bible Schools are led to believe such things in the churches are right; some of these schools indorse such performances in the churches; and whereunto will this grow? While some churches encourage this now, fifteen years ago not a faithful church in the land would have tolerated it. Good men and women now decline to attend. A preacher of some experience and an editor was asked if he indorses such performances and young men's resorting to such to raise a little cash, and he said he did not; but when asked why he did not speak out against it, he said it would do no good for him to go against a whole Bible School.

When Paul said to Timothy, "Be diligent in these things: give thyself wholly to them," he certainly did not mean such performances as these.

The third statement in this paragraph—becoming preachers "by accident," etc.—is contrary to the word of God for two reasons: (1) The Bible does not make preachers by accident; (2) no one, except some "young men of ability," ever thought of accusing one of advancing such an "idea."

The next statement is contrary to the word of God, because the Bible says not one word about "farmer-preachers, teacher-preachers, merchant-preachers," etc. These expressions have been taken up in derision of the fact that Paul-like men have done much toward planting and building up the numerous churches of the land, whose "inducement" to preach "young men of ability" are now seeking.

It is not true that "the King's business goes begging." God is no beggar; he is "able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham;" his work depends upon no clerical class. When all such "young men of ability" turn their attention to "some profitable business," "the King's business" will be rid of a great hindrance.

And no one should seek to "change" Bible "conditions"—the Bible inducements to preach, the Bible way of making preachers, and the Bible way of supporting preachers.

Let us have more articles and more teaching every way on the Bible way of making preachers—Bible motives, Bible inducements, Bible support, and all.

(To be continued.)

Withdrawing Fellowship from the Disorderly.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

That it is scriptural and, therefore, right to withdraw from the ungodly and disobedient, is accepted by all who believe the Bible. The command to withdraw from such is as clear, specific, and positive as is the language of the commission when it says that "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." In proof of this I quote a few passages. "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.) Thus it is seen that Christians cannot be faithful to God without withdrawing from the disorderly, since this command is so positive and clear. Again, I quote 1 Tim. 1: 19, 20: "Holding faith and a good conscience; which some having thrust from them made shipwreck concerning the faith: of whom is Hymenæus and Alexander; whom I delivered unto Satan, that they might be taught not to blaspheme." The Holy Spirit clearly and strongly condemns the action of the church at Corinth in its failure to withdraw fellowship from a fornicator. The Corinthian church, it seems, was puffed up and was not grieved that it had such a member among them. The Holy Spirit, through Paul, commands: "In the name of our Lord Jesus, ye being gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus, to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." (1 Cor. 5: 4, 5.)

Christians, however, should withdraw fellowship from the disobedient and disorderly (1) for the salvation of the church and (2) for the redemption and salvation of the man himself. As the church at Corinth seemed to glory in the course of the wicked man, the Holy Spirit, through Paul, says: "Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, even as ye are unleavened." (1 Cor. 5: 6, 7.) Thus it will be seen that Christians should not fellowship and recognize evil in any form. To fellowship and uphold an evildoer makes one responsible for his wrongdoing, and is also conducive to the contamination of the whole body. The wicked member may lead many others into sin and rebellion.

Our duty to restore comes before our duty to withdraw. Therefore, while Christians should withdraw fellowship from the wicked, and not associate with them in any way that will uphold and encourage them in their wickedness, yet they should withdraw fellowship from them as a last resort and after every scriptural effort toward restoration has been exhausted. We should proceed just as a surgeon proceeds as a last resort to amputate a member of the body for the protection of the other members of the body. Read the following admonition of the Holy Spirit: "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." (Gal. 6: 1, 2.)

I would emphasize the thought that we should be very considerate and not take any unwise and unscriptural step in dealing with the disorderly walking. If we hear rumors of evil, instead of whispering those rumors to others, it is our duty to go in person to the offender and admonish him to refrain from all evil doing. The Bible admonishes Christians: "But exhort one another day by day, so long as it is called To-day; lest any one of you be hardened by the deceitfulness of sin." (Heb. 3: 13.) When a brother has been guilty of a trespass, if we love him as one Christian should love another, we will not go and tell it to our neighbors and friends, but we will go to him in a spirit of gentleness, kindness, and firmness, and admonish him to cease any evil into which he may have fallen. "Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, does not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not its own, is not provoked, taketh not account of evil." (1 Cor. 13: 4, 5.) If we properly consider our own frailties and weaknesses, and, in addition, the wondrous love of God for us all, we will not proclaim to the world the trespasses and shortcomings of our weak brethren, but in tenderness we will go to them and endeavor to lift them up. The Holy Spirit admonishes: "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you." (Eph. 4: 32.) But how different are the actions of many professed Christians! With unmeasured words and unbridled tongues, as talebearers, they go about peddling scandals and evil reports on their brethren. If such would only cease their evil whisperings, the erring ones, by proper scriptural action, could be saved and brought into a closer union with God. Solomon tells us: "For lack of wood the fire goeth out; and where there is no whisperer, contention ceaseth. As coals are to hot embers, and wood to fire; so is a contentious man to inflame strife." (Prov. 26: 20, 21.) Such action has sent many a weak and well-meaning soul to perdition. The Bible nowhere authorizes such a course, and the disciple who engages in it is far meaner than the weak brother whom he pretends to seek to reform.

Neither do the Scriptures authorize us to write letters to members on whom evil reports have been circulated, stating a day on which they must come and make confession to the church, otherwise they will no longer be members of the body of Christ. Such action is wholly unscriptural and is as far from the spirit of Christ as virtue is from vice. Such a method of fencing brethren out of the kingdom of Christ should never be named among Christians. Even the elders of the church are not authorized to take such action, for they might write and make such demands on erring members and the members fail to receive the letters. Furthermore well-informed Christians will not be governed by such arbitrary and unscriptural action. The Bible is clear as to our duty in the case of personal offenses: "And if thy brother sin against thee, go, show him his fault between thee and him alone; if he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he hear thee not, take with thee one or two more, that at the mouth of two witnesses or three every word may be established. And if he refuse to hear them, tell it unto the church: and if he refuse to hear the church also, let him be unto thee as the Gentile and the publican." (Matt. 18: 15-17.) So when our brethren sin, we should go to them and seek to redeem them in the spirit of meekness and humility. We may add stars to our crowns by going to our brethren who are in error, both as to conduct and doctrine, and leading them out of their sins into purer and nobler lives.

James (5: 19, 20) says: "My brethren, if any among you err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins." Every possible effort should be made to show the erring their mistakes before bringing them before the elders of the church and withdrawing fellowship from them. When it is a necessity to withdraw fellowship, it is always painful to true Christians, and they do it simply because God commands it, and it must be done for the salvation of the evildoer and the protection of the body of Christ. Elders of a church should never be so timid that they are afraid to go to those in error and point out to them the fearful consequences of their sins. And even when they find it necessary for the protection of the church to withdraw from the unruly and disobedient, they should not then count them as enemies, but should admonish them as erring brethren. Paul admonishes the Thessalonians: "And if any man obeyeth not our word by this epistle, note that man, that ye have no company with him, to the end that he may be ashamed. And yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother." (2 Thess. 3: 14, 15.) When we withdraw fellowship from the wicked, we should decline to associate with them in any way that will recognize and countenance their sins. "I wrote unto you in my epistle to have no company with fornicators; not at all meaning with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous and extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world: but as it is, I wrote unto you not to keep company, if any man that is named a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a reviler, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no, not to eat." (1 Cor. 5: 9-11.)

New Subscribers.

Christians do not live for themselves alone. They are thoughtful and prayerful for the welfare of others. The Christian is satisfied with nothing short of his best for the salvation of the world. With an indifferent service he is not satisfied.

Every subscriber to this paper has it in his power to render a valuable service to his friends, neighbors, and acquaintances. New subscribers can now secure the Gospel Advocate for fifty cents less a year than on January 1, 1917. The publishers have been so loath to advance the subscription price of this journal that they delayed the advance in price just as long as possible. While, as a matter of self-preservation, they finally decided to advance the price, they also made ample provisions for both old and new subscribers who wish to take advantage of the present low price. They favored their old subscribers by granting them the privilege of renewing now for two years at the rate of $1.50 a year. New subscribers can now subscribe at the rate of $1.50 a year. After January 1, 1917, all will be required to pay $2 a year, in advance.

We have been very much pleased to have so many of our old subscribers renew for two years in advance. As our readers have many friends whom they wish to read the Gospel Advocate, we suggest to every reader of this paper that he tell his friends who are not reading it that by subscribing now the paper can be obtained at $1.50 a year. Many will be glad to save fifty cents by subscribing now. We appeal to our readers not to ignore this request, but to call the attention of nonsubscribers to it at once. Tell them how much you enjoy the paper and that you derive great benefit from reading it. By so doing you will benefit your friends and help us to greatly increase our list of subscribers. You may never know in this life the good you do by getting the people to read the Gospel Advocate. We should circulate good papers. They show sinners the plan of salvation; they develop and strengthen Christians in every good work; they cheer the desponding and guide the erring in the way of life.

Now is the time to send new subscribers. Do not procrastinate, for January 1, 1917, is almost here. Those who do not read the Advocate will not know of this special opportunity unless you tell them about it. If you will tell them about it and speak a word for the paper, many will be glad to subscribe now. We appeal to our readers to help us double our list by January 1, 1917.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

By J. C. McQuiddy

Brother Elam's Articles Commended.

Brother Elam has recently been giving our readers some most excellent articles. His article last week was exceptionally fine. Young men who have little inducement to preach should not preach at all. Such men are a curse to the pulpit. The man who loves the pleasures and fleeting treasures of this world more than souls is not fit to preach. While no preacher should preach for a living, he must live while he preaches. The church that does not support the faithful, gospel preacher is unworthy its name. All preachers should realize with Paul: "For woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." And every church should realize that woe is unto it, if it support not the gospel, for the church is "the pillar and ground of the truth."

A Startling Move.

One of the most startling moves of the New Rationalism among Northern Baptists was the recent attempt to capture the Baptist Missionary Training School for Young Women at Chicago.—Christian Standard.

The tendency of many universities to teach rationalism, and not the Bible, is indeed alarming and distressing. Many schools founded to teach Christianity are teaching rationalism.

A Sad Story.

The Christian Standard (Disciple) seems to be responsible for this "sad story:"

"A preacher once told me this sad story. He was holding revival services, and a little nine-year-old girl wanted to join the church, but her father and mother objected. Before the revival closed, she was taken ill and died. Some three months later he had a special invitation to hold services in the community again, which he did. The mother and father of the little girl came forward and became members of the church; but three months later the conscience-stricken mother landed in the insane asylum because she had opposed and hindered her child from becoming a Christian."

"Because she had opposed and hindered her child from becoming a Christian," was it? To become a Christian—was it to become a member of the "Christian" Church? If she had only been "baptized and joined the church," she would have been saved! Because she was not baptized she was lost, was she? What shall be said or thought of a church or a ministry that teaches men so? Would that mother have thought it, had she not been under the influence of a "Disciple" church?—Journal and Messenger.

It may be possible and even probable that the nine-year-old girl had not reached the age of accountability. No one is a sinner before the age of accountability. No certain age can be fixed as the age of responsibility. Some become responsible at a much younger age than do others. It is always wise and safe to obey the gospel when young. Those who obey while young usually make the most active and faithful Christians. Solomon says: "Remember also thy Creator in the days of thy youth, before the evil days come, and the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." (Eccles. 12: 1.)

When people obey the gospel, they become Christians, they become members of the church, or body of Christ, and do not "join" the church. The same process that makes one a Christian makes him also a member of the church of Christ. To be a member of the body of Christ is sufficient for the salvation of the soul. It is a mistake for any Christian to "join" any religious denomination. If responsible people enjoy the promise of salvation without obedience to the gospel, why should Christ suffer, bleed, and die for the sins of the world? It is the essence of presumption for a man to promise salvation where God has not promised it. God promises salvation to the obedient believer. "But though we, or an angel from heaven, should preach unto you any gospel other than that which we preached unto you, let him be anathema. As we have said before, so say I now again, If any man preacheth unto you any gospel other than that which ye received, let him be anathema." (Gal. 1: 8, 9.)

Are We Losing Interest in Bible Study?

A good brother is distressed about our Sunday schools. He says they are losing power, that instruction has given place to entertainment, that our children were never more poorly trained in Bible and religious knowledge than now. Well, fathers can easily learn whether there is any truth in these words by examining their children in Bible and religious knowledge.—Western Recorder.

As the home is the salt of the church, as the church is the salt of the earth, it is well to inquire: Are we losing interest in Bible study at home? Do we pray in our homes as did our fathers and mothers? Without interest in Bible study in the home, we cannot have interest in it in the church. Bible study in the home is conducive of Bible study in the church. The more one studies the Bible at home, the more capable is he to teach the truth in church. Our tendency to deify the past sometimes leads us into pessimism of the present. My children have studied the Bible more than I did when a boy. They know more truth than I did. They have attended the Bible class more than I did. While we are woefully lacking in knowledge and zeal, it is probable that there is more Bible reading now than ever before.

Restricted Communion.

The Western Recorder, Louisville, Ky., says: "Beyond doubt, there are many—yea, very many—Baptists in the North who have repudiated the dogma of restricted communion. This might seem a small matter, yet the arrested progress of our Northern brethren is no doubt due to their position on this question. This was the beginning, and the end is not yet, though painfully evident." We think the Recorder in error as to the great number of "open-communion" Baptists in the North, as also as to the "arrested progress of our Northern brethren." It is true that some of our churches, and more pastors, have become weak on the "communion" question, and are hedging to avoid the appearance of "narrowness." They do not want to be "peculiar," and are not willing to bear the reproach of Christ. They do not apprehend the fact that the Lord has raised up Baptists to stand as witnesses to the truth, whether their numbers be many or few. They seem to think that the value of Baptists, in the eyes of the Master, depends upon their numbers, rather than upon their consistent adherence to the great principles set forth in the word of God. But let the Recorder know that there are yet "seven thousand" who have not gone over to the pedobaptists.—Journal and Messenger.

The Lord's Supper should be eaten only by Christians. It was instituted for Christians and not for alien sinners. Christians should carefully examine themselves and not their brethren. I must examine myself and not my brother. It is not the prerogative of a Christian to invite another to, or exclude another from, the Lord's table. "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat." Christians should be concerned about doing the will of God and not about numbers. The Lord will take care of the numbers.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

M. C. Cayce closed a good meeting at Hinton's Chapel, this city, with four baptisms.

Change of address: Thomas J. Bonner, from Neosho, Mo., to 6432 Colorado Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

James A. Allen began a meeting with the Belmont Avenue congregation, this city, Sunday.

T. B. Larimore closed the meeting at Pikeville, Tenn., on October 15. He will begin at Murray, Ky., next Sunday.

C. M. Stubblefield, of Paducah, Ky., preached at Franklin, Ky., Sunday. He paid this office a pleasant visit last Monday.

We hear good reports from the meeting just closed at Pilcher Avenue, this city. J. A. Sisco did some excellent work in this meeting.

John R. Williams, of Hornbeak, Tenn., has been engaged to meet J. R. Clark, Baptist, of Creal Springs, Ill., in a five-days' debate, beginning on November 7.

A. G. Freed, of Henderson, Tenn., writes: "The school is fine. New students are entering daily. Many are yet to come. Bible classes are doing great work."

A. W. Young, of Gainesville, Texas, closed a two-weeks' meeting at McMinnville, Tenn., on Sunday night. There were seventeen baptisms. The meeting did great good.

S. H. Hall, of Atlanta, Ga., will begin a two-months' evangelistic campaign in the West next Sunday, when he will preach at Fort Worth, Texas. We wish for him great success in this work.

From H. N. Rutherford, Lynnville, Tenn., October 12: "I closed an eleven-days' meeting at Roberson Fork, about five miles from Lynnville, with nineteen added—eleven restorations and eight baptisms."

Our meeting at Russell Street, this city, is growing in interest. Brother Ezell's simple presentation of the great fundamental themes of the gospel has elicited favorable comment from a great many people.

From J. Paul Kimbrell, Summertown, Tenn., October 12: "The meeting at Luna's Chapel resulted in no additions, but the church was strengthened and built up. The Baptists are building a new house near there. I am now teaching a school of vocal music at Summertown."

From C. G. Vincent, Lewisville, Ohio, October 12: "Married, at the home of the bride, in Detroit, Mich., on October 4, Miss Eloise Klingman, daughter of George A. Klingman, to Mr. Christopher Montross. The writer performed the ceremony."

The Gospel Advocate extends heartiest congratulations.

Our esteemed brother, T. A. Smith, of Fowlkes, Tenn., who suffered a stroke of paralysis nearly seven years ago, will be seventy-three years old on October 29. His faithful wife suggests that his old friends write him personal letters. This would add a deal of sunshine to a shut-in's life, and we hope there may be a shower of kind remembrances.

Carl Barnett, Greenville, Ala., writes: "On September 11 my house was destroyed by fire. The greater part of my library was lost. If any of the brethren have any second-hand books of the following authors, I will very much appreciate the gift of them, as I lost mine in the fire: Liddell and Scott's Greek-English Lexicon, Thayer's Greek-English Lexicon, Sophocles' Greek-English Lexicon, 'The Devil and Socialism' (W. F. Lemmons), 'Handbook on Baptism' (J. W. Shepherd)."

From J. P. Sewell, Abilene, Texas, October 9: "Last night we closed what has been a most excellent meeting.

It was held by the two congregations, the Chestnut Street and the college congregation, and A. B. Barret did the preaching. There were twenty-four additions to the two congregations, including seventeen baptisms—fourteen of our own students and three others. Brother Barret founded Abilene Christian College, and it was a peculiar pleasure to have him visit us and see that his work here was not in vain."

W. T. Jones, Route 3, Box 73, Rector, Ark., writes: "We are looking for a man to preach for us once a month. We would also be glad to have lay members to locate with us. We have a fair congregation of loyal brethren, but need more. Lands can be purchased at a reasonable price. Should any read this who desire to change locations, I will tell them about or show them the country. This is a hilly country, with rich creek valleys, and we have a white population of good people. I would be glad to interest some good preacher."

From Horace W. Busby, Era, October 7: "Austin Taylor and I are here now in a meeting, with good prospects. The Denton meeting was a great success in many ways. Interest was good till the close. About thirty were baptized, some came from the Christian Church, some were restored, and a number became identified from other places. In all, I think about ninety were added to the congregation. R. L. Whiteside labors with the church regularly and is loved by all. He helped in the meeting and did the baptizing. I promised to return next year for the month of September."

From L. S. White, Dallas, Texas, October 9: "The work at the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church, this city, is doing well. The interest is growing along all lines. There have been additions every Sunday since my return home. Yesterday eight grown people took fellowship with us. On the Sunday before I preached in the afternoon at the West Dallas Church and baptized four persons who had made the confession at the prayer meeting a few nights before. There are two good protracted meetings in progress in Dallas, conducted by G. A. Dunn, of Houston, and W. L. Swinney. Much good is being done in both meetings."

From J. Clifford Murphy, Mount Pleasant, Tenn., Route 1, October 14: "Is there some brother in Tennessee, near some good school and church of Christ, that would like to let me have some land to work so I can make a living for my family, so I can preach the gospel? I know how to work and preach some, too, and I am not afraid of work. Could you rent me a home or sell me a small one? Brethren, I am a poor man, but you know I have to stay somewhere. I am more than willing to work so I can preach. Can some of you share some of your property with me? We are brethren. Now I am not wanting to get near some church so I can preach for them, but so my family can go to church while I go out and preach. Now, if you are interested in me and in having the gospel preached, write me at once."

Brother Kurfees Is Convalescent.

Our beloved brother, M. C. Kurfees, is slowly recovering from his recent and very dangerous illness. His present condition is such, however, that numerous queries which reached him before and during his illness, with much other correspondence, will be compelled to wait indefinitely for attention; but just as soon as it may seem proper he will give attention to all such matters. Brother Kurfees speaks his appreciation in the following extract from a private note: "Please say, furthermore, that my heart overflows with a gratitude which words cannot express for the numerous messages of sympathy and tokens of love and kindness that have been shown me. How can I ever be properly thankful for it all? The Lord bless all my friends."

CHURCH NEWS

Arkansas.

England, October 5.—Brother Fuqua has just closed a meeting at this place, with no visible results and very poor attendance. This is a hard place, with just a few scattered brethren and sisters; but we are very anxious to establish the cause here. This is in one of the richest sections of Arkansas. England is a town of probably two thousand people. Brother John T. Hinds came here eighteen years ago and preached in an arbor and baptized quite a number, and since that time there has been no preaching to speak of until Brother Fuqua came and held a meeting. Several have promised to meet with us at our house on Lord's day. I came here last June, and am going to do all I can to plant the cause here. Any coöperation from the brethren at large will be very thankfully received.—T. L. Helm.

Georgia.

Cedartown, October 4.—The mission meeting here closed to-night. Two persons were baptized and twenty brethren who had grown cold reconsecrated themselves to the Lord and agreed to meet regularly for worship. About thirty or forty will be in the Sunday-school work with four classes. This meeting deserves the mention of Brother and Sister Horan and Sister Nettie West. It was their own zeal that made the work go. I shall return to the Rome work to-morrow.—John Hayes.

Illinois.

Elizabethtown, October 3.—I have just returned from my two-months' stay in Tennessee. While there I preached at a number of places. My first meeting was at Lane's Ferry, in Dyer County, a mission point. This meeting was supported by the Rehoboth congregation. From this place I went to Rehoboth; thence to Push, on Reelfoot Lake, in Obion County, another mission point. This meeting was supported by a few members that were scattered in that part of the county and by Brother T. H. Etheridge, of Quanah, Texas. From here I went to Ridgely for a tent meeting. Here I found a digressive element, also some as true and tried members as can be found. The two parties started in to buy a lot and build; but when the "insurgents" found that the restrictive clause was to be in the deed, they flew the track and will have nothing to do with it. As a result, Brother Wolsternholme has paid out the lot, and it is decided to him; and so long as it is in his hands we need suffer any uneasiness, for he is as true as pure gold. The "digressives" say the board is going to help them to build a house, and that they would put their money in a Catholic institution before they would help the loyal brethren to build a house. They will not partake of the emblems with the loyal ones. We have only three or four active male members in Ridgely, and they have decided to build a house. Shall they

Every Cold Should Be Considered Serious

So say the best medical authorities. Unless promptly checked, often they lead to chronic bronchial and pulmonary troubles which may prove fatal.

If your cough or cold has not responded to treatment—and remember, medicine should not be solely relied on—timely use of Eckman's Alterative may give you relief.

For more than twenty years it has been benefiting sufferers from these disorders. It is especially indicated where the system demands lime, for it contains calcium chloride so combined as to be easily assimilated by the average person.

Gospel Advocate Piano Club Prevents Waste.

You will not find many men who would deliberately throw away one hundred dollars, and yet there are many who unintentionally waste that amount every year in one way or another. Careless buying is one of the most common ways of wasting money. The founders of the club had that fact in mind when they adopted the principle of cutting down the cost of pianos by cutting out the waste in marketing them. The club claims to save its members forty per cent, and asks you to give it an opportunity to prove this fact to your entire satisfaction by thoroughly testing the piano in your own home before obligating yourself to pay for it. It will cost you only a postal card to investigate; and if the testimony of club members who have already received their instruments is to be relied upon, you will undoubtedly be delighted with the saving in price, the convenient terms, and the superior quality of the instruments. By uniting our orders in a club of one hundred members, each secures the benefit of the lowest possible factory price, and yet it is responsible only for his own order.

Write for your copy of the catalogue and full particulars to-day. Address The Associated Piano Clubs, Gospel Advocate Department, Atlanta, Ga.

have help or not? Will we let the board help establish vain worship in Ridgely, and see the faithful struggle and strive for existence? If we will build first, we can build up a good congregation; but if they go first, it will be much harder on us. I shall keep my eye on this place; and if these brethren make a reasonable effort, I shall inform the brotherhood and shall expect them to respond.—A. H. Lannom.

Louisiana.

Haynesville, October 6.—I have just had the keen pleasure of conducting a gospel meeting at Violet Hill, my old home, where I was born and reared. My old neighbors, friends, and relatives came out to hear me in great numbers. The house was filled to overflowing continually. There were nineteen additions. I baptized some of my old neighbors that I never once dreamed of baptizing when I was a boy growing up among them. I baptized one brother, one sister, and some cousins.—O. E. Billingsley.

Oklahoma.

Castle, October 3.—On the second Lord's day in September I began a meeting at Morse and continued it over the fourth Lord's-day night, with four baptized into the one body. I began here at Castle last night. There is no congregation here—just a few scattering disciples who are not now (if ever) in duty. I am going to do my best to stir them into activity. I preached at home (Okemah) last Lord's day, morning and night. The work there is moving along nicely.—H. L. Taylor.

Texas.

El Paso, October 2.—Good crowds and three additions at our regular services yesterday.—J. W. Dunn.

Leesville, October 2.—I preached here Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night. One was restored. I shall begin a meeting at Fairview next Friday.—G. M. Rance.

Kenedy, October 2.—I closed a meeting of two weeks' duration a week ago at Beeville, a town of from four to five thousand people, with no visible results, except that the church is in better shape for future work. There were but two or three families meeting regularly. Six congregations cooperated in the meeting. The town is almost wholly given over to sectarianism and Catholicism. All our hard efforts failed to get the people out, and therefore our crowds were small, but those who came were interested. I am to begin a meeting at Rockdale on Saturday night. I can answer other calls. Address me at 733 S. Augusta Street, Tyler, Texas.—W. F. Lemmons.

There are seven big reasons why WITTE Engines can be made so good and sold at such low prices.

- 1 WITTE engines are sold direct from factory to user. Former retail prices on my engines were more than double.
- 2 If I can make only $1 clear profit on each engine I sell, I can buy a good farm each year. What more could I ask?
- 3 Regardless of price and profit, I am building just as good an engine as I know how. The name WITTE will never appear on any but high quality engines.
- 4 WITTE engines are built by experts—men who do nothing but specialize on engines. It has taken me 30 years hard work to build up my factory organization. These men hold their jobs because I believe that each is the best in the country in his line.
- 5 Our own natural gas well furnishes free fuel for power. Without this, the fuel would run thousands of dollars a year. You benefit by this saving.
- 6 There is a clean business record of 47 years back of every WITTE engine—never a "failure"—a consistent "spot cash" record. That is why we can buy material at rock bottom prices.
- 7 A wonderful factory equipment. By exclusive engine building, I have been able to construct a great system of machinery that, in the hands of my experts makes all parts with exactness and great speed.

Just write your name and address on a postal card or scrap of paper with the words "How to Judge Engines," and we will send our new, valuable, big book on engines absolutely free. Also our

Women Once Invalids

Now in Good Health Through Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Say it is Household Necessity. Doctor Called it a Miracle.

All women ought to know the wonderful effects of taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound even on those who seem hopelessly ill. Here are three actual cases:

Harrisburg, Penn.—“When I was single I suffered a great deal from female weakness because my work compelled me to stand all day. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for that and was made stronger by its use. After I was married I took the Compound again for a female trouble and after three months I passed what the doctor called a growth. He said it was a miracle that it came away as one generally goes under the knife to have them removed. I never want to be without your Compound in the house.”—Mrs. FRANK K. NOEL, 1642 Fulton St., Harrisburg, Penn.

Hardly Able to Move.

Albert Lea, Minn.—“For about a year I had sharp pains across my back and hips and was hardly able to move around the house. My head would ache and I was dizzy and had no appetite. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, I am feeling stronger than for years. I have a little boy eight months old and am doing my work all alone. I would not be without your remedies in the house as there are none like them.”—Mrs. F. E. YOSR, 611 Water St., Albert Lea, Minn.

Three Doctors Gave Her Up.

Pittsburg, Penn.—“Your medicine has helped me wonderfully. When I was a girl 18 years old I was always sickly and delicate and suffered from irregularities. Three doctors gave me up and said I would go into consumption. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and with the third bottle began to feel better. I soon became regular and I got strong and shortly after I was married. Now I have two nice stout healthy children and am able to work hard every day.”—Mrs. CLEMENTINA DUERRING, 34 Gardner St., Troy Hill, Pittsburg, Penn.

All women are invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special advice,—it will be confidential.

Do not let impending difficulties unman you, but face them bravely if they come. Oftentimes the hindrances that lie in the path of duty may be compared to the tollgates upon our turnpike roads; they are kept shut until we are just upon them and then fly open, as it were, of themselves; and that is true enough. If they had been open a week beforehand, we could but have gone through at last.—John Newton.

Never shrink from deep devotion, because you fear its trials or its sacrifices. Paul, in martyrdom, was unspeakably happier than God's half-hearted servants.—W. R. Huntington.

The Master's Vineyard

Arkansas.

Beedeville, October 2.—I closed an excellent meeting at this place last night. Two were baptized and two restored. I go to Palestine to begin to-night. I am to return to Arkansas in 1917 for several meetings.—J. B. Nelson.

Florida.

Miami, October 9.—The work moves along well here. Good crowds and interest at each service. One baptism yesterday. This is a hard place for the cause of Christ to grow, but I believe we are on the upward way.—H. M. Phillips.

Georgia.

Cedartown, October 7.—We wish all the readers of the Gospel Advocate to hear of our good meeting held here by Brother John Hayes, of Cedar Hill, Texas. The meeting was a success. Two obeyed the gospel. The members here have not met for worship in several years or been interested whatever. Now we are all together again and will meet every Lord's day for communion services and Sunday school. We have already secured a hall to meet in. We cannot say too much for Brother Hayes' splendid work here. As he could not be here on Sunday, we were fortunate to have Brother Graves, of East Point, to start our new work for us. We wish the prayers of the brotherhood that Cedartown may grow stronger daily for the cause of Christ.—John C. Horan.

Illinois.

Brookport, October 10.—The church of Christ at Brookport continues to grow. The church here lost one of its best members last May by the death of A. J. Kerr; but, realizing its loss through the death of this God-fearing brother, the church put forth even more energy to do its duty. To-day the church is spiritually strong and everything working along nicely, with large and attentive crowds at almost every service. Brother W. F. Mathis, one of our very best young preachers, has been engaged to hold a meeting, beginning on December 25. In January he will begin to preach for the church one Lord's day in each month during 1917.—A. T. Kerr.

Watska, October 9.—I left home the latter part of June and stopped with the congregation at Covington, Ind., for prayer meeting on Thursday night, remaining over until Saturday. Then I went to Clinton, Ind., and preached until Tuesday night for the Fairview congregation. I baptized one at that point. I next visited Christian Chapel, at Dongola, Ill., where I preached five sermons and visited old friends until July 5. We had one baptism at that point. Then I went to Buckner, Ill., and preached a few nights and over the second Lord's day. There was one baptism. Then I went to Celt, Mo., where I began a meeting on July 13, and continued it a few nights, preaching in a Baptist chapel. We have only a few members there, all poor. There was lots of prejudice to be met. Although no one obeyed, yet seed was sown for a future harvest. Next I went to Branch, Mo. I found rather peculiar conditions there. We have a house and a number of members scattered around, yet for quite a while there has been no preaching and no meeting for worship. The Holiness people and the world were running a Sunday school and a midweek prayer meeting, and the Holiness preacher had by some means gotten an appointment for one Lord's day each month. The first night I was there was the night for prayer meeting, so I had the privilege of sitting back in our own house and listening to one of the preachers of the Holiness cult. On Lord's day I preached to a very small audience in a private home. I began again at Branch and had a good hearing. One was baptized and one restored. There were several hindrances in the work at that point. Next I went to a point near Urbana, where I found Brother Brumback in a meeting divided between a schoolhouse and an arbor. I preached four times and took two confessions. Brother Brumback continued a few days longer, with two or three more confessions. All were baptized. I then went back to Celt and stayed over Lord's day, but failed to get the members to have the communion. I found there a man and his wife who are good people, but who, although they were immersed some twelve or more years ago, have never partaken of the emblems in their lives, claiming that they are not worthy. After a month's work in Dallas County, Mo., I hastened on to Douglas County, where about thirteen years ago I did a great deal of work. I was met at the train by three faithful persons whom I baptized in my first meeting in that county in 1903. They took me down near Smallett, where I preached for one week in the church house known as "Bethel," which I was active in building in 1904-05. Then in a brush arbor, some five miles away, I continued two weeks, with ten baptisms and the work well revived. This congregation has had some troubles, but many are standing firm and a bright outlook is before them. Next I went to Otter Creek Church, in Ozark County, where I held a week's meeting, with two baptisms. I am now at home resting a few days before beginning my next meetings.—Andrew Perry.

Kentucky.

Hestand, October 7.—Brother Rose, of Smithville, Tenn., began a meeting at Vernon on September 24 and continued it eight days and nights. Attendance fairly good, attention fine, with six baptisms and two reclaimed. Brother Rose is very zealous and much devoted to the cause of Christ. We hope to have him with us again.—Mrs. Nettie Spear.

Fulton, October 10.—On Tuesday night, October 17, I will begin a meeting at Hohenwald, Tenn., the county seat of Lewis County. This is my second meeting at this place this year, and my fifteenth meeting for the season. My meeting at Fowlkes, Tenn., closed with thirteen additions, two of which were from the Missionary Baptists. I will preach a series of sermons in our new church building, this city, beginning on the third Sunday in November.—F. O. Howell.

Monticello, October 5.—We have begun work on our house here with the purpose of completing it by the first of the year. We will be in debt about two thousand dollars when finished. How we are to pay this without the aid of the brotherhood, we cannot now see. We have received from the brotherhood away from home about fifty dollars. I think I know several brethren who could give us one hundred dollars each and make a very profitable investment. I know of no place where money could more profitably be spent than here. We are now making the effort of our life. We are thankful indeed to note the success that is crowning our efforts. But the fight is by no means over. There will never be a time when we can stack arms. It is only by faithful service that we can expect to reap a golden harvest. Brother, what will the harvest be? "As we sow, so shall we reap." If we had one thousand dollars, we could take care of the rest. Are there not ten men that will take care of the one thousand dollars? Do it now.—J. D. Walling.

Louisiana.

Vivian, October 9.—My meeting at Shiloh, in Stoddard County, Mo., was a good one. This was my fourth annual meeting in succession there. I went from there to Pratt, in Ripley County, and preached alternately a few days with a Holiness preacher. I certainly enjoyed the contest. I am now at Good Exchange, near Vivian, in a meeting. I will go from here to Blodgett, Texas.—D. L. Halle.

Missouri.

Poplar Bluff, October 10.—On the fourth Lord's day in August I began a meeting with the congregation at Mullins, Okla. This meeting lasted nearly two weeks. The audiences were fairly large and very attentive, but no additions to the body of the Lord. From there we went to Charleston, Ark., and held a meeting about two and one-half miles south of Charleston, with three additions. I have just closed a two-weeks' meeting with the Green Forest congregation, near Poplar Bluff. This meeting resulted in three baptisms. I am at present in a mission meeting near the same place.—David Thompson.

Tennessee.

Pleasant Shade, October 10.—I began here yesterday, and will be here one or two weeks, and then go home, I think now. We had a fine meeting at Shady Grove, near Huntland. There were ten additions, and outsiders were greatly stirred and members much elated and edified. The principal of the school and his wife were baptized. Brethren there will now build their house of worship. We got one Methodist family there. Beginning with the first Lord's day in November, I will have time to engage, one, two, three, or four Lord's days per month, anywhere within eighty miles or more of Dallas, Texas. If you need my services, write me at 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas. I have preached every Lord's day this year so far, and I do not want to miss any. Write now, and I will get it.—J. C. Estes.

Why Take Risks?

Many cases of gangrene and blood poison result from the neglect of small sores, cuts, bruises, skin abrasions, etc. Numerous deaths occur from blood poison due to infection of slight wounds. Whether the wound is painful or not, treat it immediately with Gray's Ointment, which, for ninety-six years, has been an indispensable family remedy. It allays pain, heals the wound, and frees you from all danger of troublesome after effects. It is invaluable for treating abrasions and eruptions of the skin, boils, ulcers, burns, bruises, cuts, sores, etc. Mrs. N. E. Coleman, of Mount Jackson, Va., writes: "I have used it in my family for fifteen years, and have not found any ointment equal to it." Only twenty-five cents a box at druggists'. For free sample, write to W. F. Gray & Co., 818 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Chills

and fever, though not immediately dangerous, are extremely unpleasant, and if neglected may prove fatal. If you are troubled with dumb or shivering chills and fever, malaria, liver trouble, or jaundice, why not safeguard yourself against such discomforts and avoid a possible fatality? Use only that which has been tried and proclaimed efficient by others. Plantation Chill and Fever Tonic and Liver Regulator is a well known reliable remedy, harmless, but effective. It contains no calomel, arsenic, or other dangerous drugs. For sale by best dealers everywhere; price, fifty cents. Manufactured by the Van Vleet-Mansfield Drug Company, Memphis, Tenn.

Doctor Says Nuxated Iron Will Increase Strength of Delicate People 200% in Ten Days

In many instances—Persons have suffered untold agony for years doctoring for nervous weakness, stomach, liver or kidney disease or some other ailment when their real trouble was lack of iron in the blood.—How to tell.

New York, N. Y.—In a recent discourse Dr. E. Sauer, a well known Specialist who has studied widely both in this country and Europe, said: If you were to make an actual blood test of all people who are ill you would probably be greatly astonished at the exceedingly large number who lack iron and who are ill for no other reason than the lack of iron. The moment iron is supplied all their multitude of dangerous symptoms disappear. Without iron the blood at once loses the power to change food into living tissue and therefore nothing you eat does you any good; you don't get the strength out of it. The food merely passes through your system like corn through a mill with the rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind. As a result of this continuous blood and nerve starvation, people become generally weakened, nervous and all run down and frequently develop all sorts of conditions. One is too thin; another is burdened with unhealthy fat; some are so weak they can hardly walk; some think they have dyspepsia, kidney or liver trouble; some can't sleep at night, others are sleepy and tired all day; some fussy and irritable; some skinny and bloodless, but all lack physical power and endurance. In some cases it is worse than foolish to take stimulating medicines or narcotic drugs, which only whip up your flagging vital powers for the moment, maybe at the expense of your life later on. No matter what any one tells you, if you are not strong and well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous run down people who were ailing all the time double, and even triple their strength and endurance and entirely get rid of their symptoms of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles in from ten to fourteen days' time simply by taking iron in the proper form, and this, after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. You can talk as you please about all the wonders wrought by new remedies, but when you come down to hard facts there is nothing like good old iron to put color in your cheeks and good, sound healthy flesh on your bones. It is also a great nerve and stomach strengthener and the best blood builder in the world. The only trouble was that the old forms of inorganic iron like tincture of iron, iron acetate, etc., often ruined people's teeth, upset their stomachs and were not assimilated and for these reasons they frequently did more harm than good. But with the discovery of the newer forms of organic iron all this has been overcome. Nuxated Iron, for example is pleasant to take, does not injure the teeth and is almost immediately beneficial.

NOTE—The manufacturers of Nuxated Iron have such unbounded confidence in its potency that they authorize the announcement that if they forfeit $100.00 to any Charitable Institution if they cannot take any man or woman under sixty who lacks iron and increase their strength 200 per cent. or over in four weeks' time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. Also they will refund your money in any case in which Nuxated Iron does not at least double your strength in ten days' time. It is dispensed by all druggists.

Notes from West Tennessee.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

The "faithful few" in West Tennessee are still holding on, with no disposition to give up the fight. In some congregations there is a clamor for a change of preachers—want "something new." Poor preachers, like worn-out and broken-down mules, become back numbers and must seek other fields or be turned out in the "commons." Poor congregations, that have to be bored to death with a certain class of preachers who are thinking more of the price paid than they are of the salvation of souls! Some preachers, after holding two successful meetings for a congregation, refuse to hold the third meeting and advise the congregation to get some other preacher, so that failure may come on him. Brethren, do you think this manner of procedure is treating your brother preacher right? I know of a preacher that held two good meetings for a certain congregation, with several additions in both. The congregation wanted him to return for the third meeting. He said: "No; I think you should get another man." Now, why did he advise them to get another man? It is very plain to all that he wanted the other man to be the one who would fail in the way of additions. It seems to me there is just a little bit of selfishness on the part of the man who thus advises the congregation.

Brother Elam has just closed a short meeting at Cloverdale, in Obion County. Brother Elam not being able to get there on time, Brother Holloway, of Texas, who has been in West Tennessee since July 1 holding some wonderful meetings, was called and preached for a few days until Brother Elam could get there. Brother Holloway baptized one. Unless Brother Elam can return in 1917 and hold the meeting at Cloverdale, I am sorry for the poor fellow who has to follow him. We have no preachers in West Tennessee in Brother Elam's class as a preacher; and as Cloverdale has gone to the very top in the selection of a preacher for this meeting, it will be hard on the next man. He should think he has done wonders if he only can keep the membership awake. It is right, brethren, for you to hear the great men preach for the benefit it is to you. It is right, too, for you to go and hear the little preacher for the benefit it is to him; it helps him so very much. So do not sit down on the little preacher and say to him by your actions: "Your preaching does not interest me like Brother Elam's did." Some of your loved ones may pass away, and poor, devoted, consecrated, hard-worked Brother Elam

THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

One of the brightest and most entertaining of all our Sunday-school publications is THE YOUNG PEOPLE, a four-page weekly, devoted especially to the interests and welfare of young people of both sexes, but which will prove a channel of cheer and blessing to older ones as well. This periodical has just been consolidated with THE BIBLE STUDY HELPER, and presents the strongest and most essential features of both in an improved form. Three pages are given to stories of an entertaining and elevating character and articles of an educational nature, by gifted and well-informed writers, strikingly illustrated by photo-engravings and fine drawings; and one page is devoted to a clear and concise presentation of the Sunday-school lesson, historically and exegetically, by A. B. Lipscomb, one of the editors of the Gospel Advocate, in which are presented the thoughts of many of the world's best thinkers. The size of the page is 10 3/4 x 14 inches. Printed from clear type on good paper.

cannot be with all of you in your trouble. So you will have to fall back on the little preacher whom you have snubbed, perhaps, because he could not preach like Brother Elam. Brethren, be consistent. What a grand and glorious thing it would be if all of us preachers could preach like Brother Elam! But we just can't do it; but we can reach and preach to a class of people that Brother Elam just cannot—does not have the time to preach to. Then why should we be turned down, turned out, cast aside, called "poor preachers" and "no good," etc., all because we do not and cannot preach like Brother Elam? Brethren, I am not saying these things merely in my own behalf; but I am saying them in behalf of good, worthy preachers, not called "big preachers," but good, honest, truthful, godly men, who greatly desire to assist in building up the church of God and doing good for their fellow-men. Brethren, give them a hearing.

The Needs of this Immediate Field.

BY F. P. FONNER.

By "this immediate field" I have in mind this place (Buffalo, W. Va.) and contiguous territory as a mission field for the churches of Christ. True it is that the writer has been doing some mission work in this section; but as only a few persons have stood by me in this work, I have never been able to create a general interest in it; and yet it is one of the most needy mission fields on earth. There is not a single congregation within the limits of this field that is able to support an evangelist for one good meeting a year, as he must and should be supported, if he does anything at all in the "regions beyond." These conditions prevail over a large part of the territory in the Southern end of West Virginia. A few noble characters, aided to some extent by a few equally noble-hearted men and women who have the true cause of Christ at heart, are trying to plant and develop churches of Christ at various points in these southern counties. At this point I have baptized a number of persons; but most of them, like myself, are in very ordinary circumstances. Besides this, we are without a meeting place, except a schoolhouse on Lord's days only; and for some time we did not have that. Many times I preached in private houses and under trees, until additions began to come in; then it gradually became a little better for us. Brethren, some of you know that I am not very strong; and you will not be surprised, perhaps, when I tell you that I often went to these meetings when not able to go. I also did quite a bit of work at distant points and received but little help. I did this because I loved—and I still love—the cause of Christ; and I am now somewhat in debt and must have some help soon from my brethren at large. Wife and I have practiced the strictest economy in order to do this work; and, with all that, at times I have been unable to go among the poor at a distance, where I ought to go, because I had no money. The cry for help has come to me from God's poor in various places; but I could not help them, because my hands were tied. I confess with shame that I have sometimes failed in missionary effort in the past because my friends failed to "send once and again" to my necessities, or because other friends in places where I have labored seemed to think that mission work consisted in preaching faith, repentance, and baptism to churches. Of course, such persons are not interested in real mission work anywhere, and would help no one to do it. Yes, I have failed sometimes; and so have many others failed for the same reasons. To-day this cry of distress is entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. It is heard in India, Japan, and in the islands of the sea; and last, but not least, it is heard all over this fair land of ours. Who will heed the call, and at once give our missionaries some show to do their work as it should be done? Some of us seem to have nothing to do except to make a living, while the poor preacher strives to do the same and work in the Lord's vineyard also. This is neither just nor right, since the obligation to do mission work is laid upon all. Personally I do not love money, except for the good it enables me to do. But if my brethren will enable me to do the needed work in this section, it will place me under lasting obligations to them. Please remember that I am willing to "make tents" when able to do it; but I very much fear that I have been compelled to make too many of them for my own good and that of the cause of Christ. This is a money-order office, but I can use a check. Please address me at Buffalo, W. Va., Box 81. I earnestly pray God that many may respond to this and similar calls.

Have you ever stopped to ask yourself the question why oranges which sell for five cents each cost only two cents by the box, or why apples sell so much cheaper by the bushel than by a nickel's worth? It is the same way with pianos. If you were to purchase one hundred pianos (eight car loads) from the factory, you would get a much lower price than if you purchased only one. That is why the Gospel Advocate Piano Club, composed of one hundred buyers who club their orders into one big order, is saving its members at least forty per cent on high-grade pianos and player pianos.

You are cordially invited to write for your copy of the club's beautifully illustrated catalogue, which fully explains the big saving in price, the convenient terms, and the guarantees of quality and permanent satisfaction. MONEY IN PIGEONS

Make Your Back Yard Profitable

THE demand for squabs in the Northern, Eastern and Southern markets has never been supplied, because pigeon raising as a business is comparatively new. Buy a half dozen pair of select birds, fence in a small portion of your back yard and watch them go to work. Success is easy. They raise from eight to fifteen pairs of squabs a year. Your squabs and fancy birds will bring handsome returns. You will actually make money in a hitherto useless part of your back yard. Pigeon raising is not a fad or fancy. It is a profitable business. Let us start you right. Our breeders are the best, and raised from prize winning parents. We will furnish you with the birds and teach you how to raise them, and you will reap a handsome profit with a very little outlay. Thousands are taking advantage of this same opportunity. Write to-day for our literature on pigeon raising as a money making proposition, or better still, write us to send you a few pair of Belgian Carneaux at $3.00 per pair, White Swiss Mondaines at $5.00 per pair, White Kings at $3.50 per pair, or White Maltese at $4.00 per pair. Our birds are all guaranteed. Your money back if after two months you are not satisfied with their work. Better prices on larger orders. Write to-day and get the pick of the flock.

BY F. E. EXUM.

How our hearts go out in sympathy for one who is alone in the world, with no one to love him, no one to care for him, no one to speak kindly to him, no one sorry when he goes out or anxiously awaiting his return! How unfortunate is the person that has no bosom companion, but plods his way through life alone!

Those of us who have friends and loved ones about us must some day leave them behind, at least for a time, and go out into the great beyond. When we go, will we be out in the great universe alone, or will the hand of Jesus gently lead us home? That remains for us to decide with our manner of life. Jesus has promised that he will never leave us and never forsake us, if we will obey his will and follow him. How blessed is this promise! And how encouraging and consoling is the thought that if we love the cause of Jesus now and follow him, when we come to the dark, chilly waters of the river of death, his rod and his staff will comfort us and we will not be alone!

Work at Lynchburg.

Brother S. W. Womack, of Nashville, assisted me in a meeting at Lynchburg, Tenn., beginning on the third Lord's day in September and continuing till the fourth Lord's-day night. We had splendid attendance, attention, and interest, but no additions. I think much good was accomplished in the way of sowing the seed. Brother Womack's preaching was plain and simple and all seemed to understand it. The brethren and sisters composing the membership were built up and encouraged and have taken on new life in the work.

The Lynchburg congregation is an old one, made up of young members and a few old ones. We have a pretty fair church house—the same one, with some few changes, in which Brother S. W. Womack, Brother M. F. Womack, and the writer were set apart as preachers many years ago. Since that time we have tried to bless the world with our labors. Brother M. F. Womack has passed over the river, and all of the old brethren that took part in the services at that time are gone, and we, too, will soon have to go.

During August and September I held meetings at Gum Spring, Fayetteville, and Booneville. Fayetteville is a mission point, with one or two members living near the town. A few of the white brethren and sisters aid in the work. At Booneville we have a small membership worshipping in a schoolhouse. The outlook at each of these points is encouraging. The work at Gum Spring is moving on nicely. They have a house and a pretty fair membership.

I am thankful to all who are helping in the work. J. W. SMITH.

Stringham.

Died, at Higginson, Ark., on September 17, 1916, Mrs. Zelia Betty Stringham, aged thirty-two years. She was baptized by Brother R. P. Meeks, in Henderson, Tenn., in her fourteenth year. She leaves a husband and many relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Washed clean in the blood of Christ, may we join her in that everlasting home over yonder.

MRS. ALICE DEAN.

Houghton.

Brother T. M. Houghton was born in Sumter County, Ga., on March 11, 1844. In 1862 he enlisted in the Civil War, entering Company D, Eleventh Texas Infantry. He obeyed the gospel at the age of thirty-three years and lived a pure, Christian life until death. He had been afflicted for several years before he died. He bore his afflictions so patiently. I have known him for many years, and he was a true man from every standpoint. He leaves a wife and five children, three boys and two girls. He died in San Angelo, Texas, on September 4, 1916. Funeral services were conducted by Brother Jewell Matthews. We hope to meet Brother Houghton where parting will be no more.

J. D. SHIPMAN.

Burnette.

The death angel came and took from us dear Turner, a treasure whom we prized so highly. I have often visited the home to see him with his tattered and torn old Book, the blessed Bible, which bears the scars of only his good work, and hear his sweet voice singing "Death is Only a Dream" and "Calling Me Over the Tide," when he was weakened so by the strain. He loved his church and was true to his profession, and this was manifested by precept and example. He had an infant child who preceded him to await him in the sweet beyond. He was born on March 3, 1872; was married on December 19, 1894; and departed this life on May 25, 1916. He was a member of the church of Christ, having obeyed Christ's teachings in 1910 under the preaching of Brother S. R. Logue. He leaves, to mourn his death, a wife, Mrs. Annie Baker Burnette, and seven children—Zona, Oris, Carson, Ray, Louise, Thelma, and Eugenia. He is gone and now awaits our coming.

MRS. MAUDE BAKER WARD.

Akin.

On the afternoon of January 26, 1916, the spirit of Rachel Whiteside, wife of Brother Elbert Akin, left the temple in which it had dwelt a little less than twenty-four years and gently passed into eternity. She was baptized into Christ in 1906 by Brother J. Paul Slayden, and for the ten remaining years allotted to her here she was strong in the faith. She was ever willing and ready to be helpful to others. She was married in December, 1911, and from that time such confidence existed between her and her young husband that peace reigned in her home. While no little ones blessed her home, she manifested a great desire to fill woman's God-given mission and was never happier than when working for little children. Despite the torrents of rain that were falling, Brother Will Morton, taking as his text, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends," spoke words of comfort and admonition to an immense throng of sorrowing loved ones. So, after all that loving hearts and willing hands could do, she went away, leaving a husband, a father, mother, five sisters, and one brother to sorrow, but not as those who have no hope.

J. K. K.

Howell.

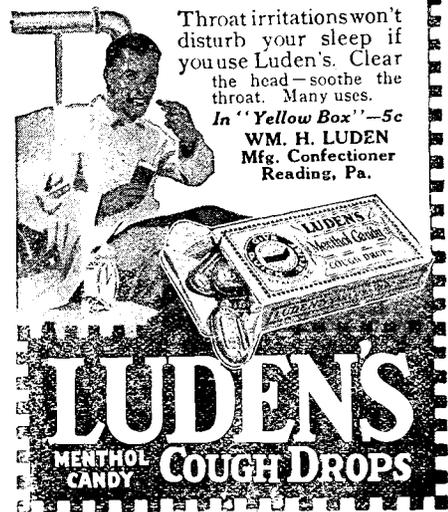

On August 5, 1916, the home of Brother and Sister J. F. Howell, near Lake City, Fla., was draped in mourning, when their daughter, Bessie, was called from them by death. Bessie was nearly fifteen years of age, having been born on October 10, 1901. She was sick five days of blood poison in the face, and her suffering was very great. All that kind and loving hands could do was done to relieve her and restore her, but it seemed the Lord's will for her to be taken. So let us look up and say: "Lord, thou knowest best; thy will be done." Bessie was a good girl, industrious, truthful, and virtuous. She became obedient to the gospel three years ago, being baptized by my husband, J. O. Barnes, at New Hope. She leaves behind a large circle of friends, besides a father, mother, three brothers, and three sisters, to mourn for her. I would say to them: Weep not for her as those who have no hope; for Bessie, we believe, was a true Christian and left evidence that she will be transplanted from earth to heaven and have eternal rest in that celestial city where death shall never come. She was laid to rest in Suwanee County. Funeral services were conducted by Brother H. J. Bass, a neighbor who had rendered them much kindness in this affliction. May the Father of mercy hover over this bereaved family and aid them in their efforts to be devout Christians.

MRS. J. O. BARNES.

son. Loving hands had done all that could be done and medical skill was wholly exhausted; but the message, "Come up higher," had to be answered. So calm and peaceful the end came. Closing her eyes as if for slumber, her spirit took its flight and dear mother was no more in this old world. No more can we hear her sweet words of counsel and advice; no more can we hear her sweet and tender voice; no more can we see her smiling face awaiting us at Sunday school and church services, where she loved so much to go. O, how happy it made her to know that she would always see her children take their places in church and Sunday school, where she had taught them to go! It is hard to say good-by to mother, even though it may be for a short while; yet we know that our God never makes any mistakes, and "we know that all things work together for good to them that love God;" and while we are sad, yet we are glad, for we know we will some day be with her where partings will be no more and tears are never shed. So, dear brothers and sisters, let us be more faithful to our Lord's cause to each other, and to the sick, for whom she was ever ready to lend a helping hand. Mother was sixty-five years of age. She was born and reared in Carroll County, Tenn. She leaves a husband, two sons, three daughters, two sisters, four brothers, and a host of relatives and friends whom she loved. Mother obeyed the gospel when quite young and was married to E. T. Simpson on January 9, 1877.

HOW TO MAKE COFFEE

By the greatest coffee merchants in the world

With pictures of three wives and what their husbands say of their coffee

There has been a great deal written and said about making coffee, and wherever you go, each woman thinks her way is best. Yet we all know how much coffee varies; good one meal—bad the next—often so bad you simply can't drink it.

Don't be discouraged if you are not getting coffee as fine as you would like to have. Don't be satisfied to drink coffee which is "just medium." A million other women make coffee their husbands brag about, and it is so easy for you to do it.

Instead of coffee which you only put up with because you can't get the kind you would like to have, you can get coffee which every member of your family will enjoy, coffee which every visitor will praise, coffee which you yourself couldn't do without.

Mrs. Jones boils her coffee

How to make Boiled Coffee; the way most people make coffee: Be sure that the pot is clean. Have your coffee ground medium fine, just the size Arbuckles' Ground coffee is. Allow one heaping tablespoonful to each cup of water, with one extra spoonful of coffee for the pot. Put the coffee into the pot, add cold water. Let boil until it is just the strength you like. Settle with a dash of cold water.

The Drip Method, the simplest way: Have your coffee ground very fine, almost to a powder. Use only half a tablespoonful to a cup, with an extra one for the pot. (This method requires only half as much coffee as used for other methods.) Put the coffee in a piece of clean cheese cloth; pour boiling water through it slowly—through once only. Be sure to have water boiling. This does not make as strong coffee as boiling—if you want it stronger, don't make it this way—increasing the amount of coffee won't make it any stronger.

Percolator coffee—the surest method: Use a medium fine ground coffee for percolators, (just the size Arbuckles' Ground coffee is). Allow a tablespoonful to each cup of coffee and one extra; let the water percolate up through the coffee until it is just the right strength. Making coffee this way, you can have it just as mild or strong as you like, and you can rely on its being good every time.

Mrs. Green never uses anything but a percolator

To get these results, the coffee itself must be right and must always be the same Things you should watch out for

Mrs. Smith makes drip coffee

The coffee itself: There are hundreds of varieties of coffee grown. The coffee itself must be put up by men who know coffee! Arbuckles' Coffee is. It is put up by Arbuckle Bros., the greatest coffee merchants in the world. They can give you the value in coffee which no one else can afford to give.

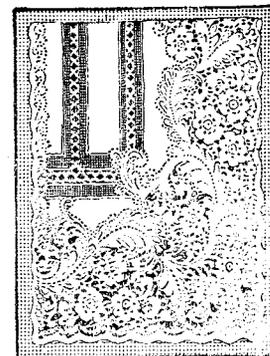

Clean and fresh: No matter how good coffee itself is, if it isn't well taken care of, it makes a poor drink. Arbuckles' Coffee is put up in sealed, dust-proof packages, carefully wrapped to protect it from moisture, dirt, store odors. It arrives in your kitchen strong, full of flavor.

Always the same: Arbuckles' Coffee today is the biggest selling coffee in the United States. Did you ever stop to think what this means? To think how good a coffee must be to be the biggest seller in the United States? From the moment it was put on the market, it was a success. Today, it is used in over a million homes in the United States.

Beautiful Gifts: We share our profits with you by giving you useful and beautiful premiums for signatures saved from Arbuckles' packages. We buy premiums for over a million users of Arbuckles' Coffee. Buying in such large quantities makes it possible for us to give the greatest premium values ever seen. In every package of Arbuckles' Coffee there is a circular showing our premiums. Be sure to get it and see how quickly and easily you can get what you want, all without any cost.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.
Dear Sir: Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years, and have always had trouble with it till I got your appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable Godsend to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it. My rupture is now all healed up, and nothing ever did it but your appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself, I will say a good word for your appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am,
Yours very sincerely,

JAMES A. BRITTON,
80 Spring Street, Bethlehem, Pa.

CONFEDERATE VETERAN CURED.

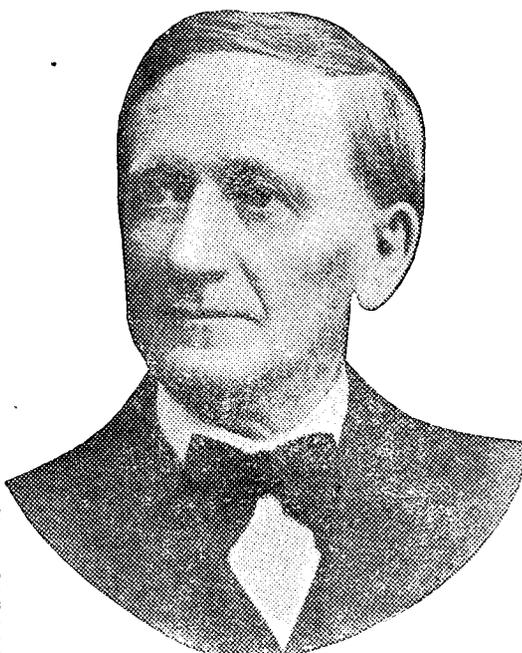

Mr. C. E. Brooks,
Dear Sir: I am glad to tell you that I am now sound and well and can plow or do any heavy work. I can say your appliance has effected a permanent cure. Before getting your appliance I was in a terrible condition, and had given up all hope of ever being any better. If it hadn't been for your appliance, I would never have been cured. I am sixty-eight years old, and served three years in Eckles' Artillery, Oglethorpe Company. I hope God will reward you for the good you are doing for suffering humanity.
Yours sincerely,

H. D. BANKS,
Commerce, Ga., R. F. D. No. 11.

OTHERS FAILED, BUT THE APPLIANCE CURED.

C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.
Dear Sir: Your appliance did all you claim for the little boy, and more; for it cured him sound and well. We let him wear it for about a year in all, although it cured him three months after he had begun to wear it. We had tried several other remedies and got no relief, and I shall certainly recommend it to friends, for we surely owe it to you.
Yours respectfully,

WILLIAM PATTERSON,
717 South Main Street, Akron, O.

The above is C. E. Brooks, inventor of the Appliance, who cured himself and who has been curing others for over thirty years. If ruptured, write him to-day at Marshall, Mich.

CURED AT THE AGE OF SEVENTY-SIX.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.
Dear Sir: I began using your appliance for the cure of rupture (I had a pretty bad case), I think, in May, 1905. On November 20, 1905, I quit using it. Since that time I have not needed or used it. I am well of rupture, and rank myself among those cured by the Brooks discovery, which, considering my age—seventy-six years—I regard as remarkable.
Very sincerely yours,

SAM A. HOOVER,
Jamestown, N. C.

CHILD CURED IN FOUR MONTHS.

Brooks Rupture Appliance Company.
Gentlemen: The baby's rupture is altogether cured, thanks to your appliance, and we are so thankful to you. If we could only have known of it sooner, our little boy would not have had to suffer near as much as he did. He wore your brace a little over four months and has not worn it now for six weeks.
Yours very truly,

ANDREW EGGENBERGER,
21 Jansen Street, Dubuque, Ia.

Ten Reasons Why

YOU SHOULD SEND FOR BROOKS RUPTURE APPLIANCE

1. It is absolutely the only appliance of the kind on the market to-day, and in it are embodied the principles that inventors have sought after for years.
2. The appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of position.
3. Being an air cushion of soft rubber, it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation.
4. Unlike the ordinary so-called "pads" used in other trusses, it is not cumbersome or ungainly.
5. It is small, soft, and pliable, and positively cannot be detected through the clothing.
6. The soft, pliable bands holding the appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.
7. There is nothing about it to get foul; and when it becomes soiled, it can be washed without injuring it in the least.
8. There are no metal springs in the appliance to torture one by cutting and bruising the flesh.
9. All of the material of which the appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe appliance to wear.
10. My reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and my prices are so reasonable, my terms so fair, that there certainly should be no hesitancy in sending free coupon to-day.

Remember

I send my Appliance on trial to prove what I say is true. You are to be the judge. Fill out free coupon below and mail to-day.

How Churches Are Started.

In the article last week we told how divine agency had been employed to send the apostle Peter with the gospel message to the house of Cornelius. In the meantime, while Cornelius was awaiting the arrival of Peter, he "called together his kinsmen and his near friends," that they, too, might receive any benefit that was coming to him. And here let me add that this is another mark of splendid character. If the facts relating to the establishment of the churches of Christ were collated, you would doubtless find that the majority of the largest congregations in the land were started by some thoughtful brother or sister calling together "kinsmen and friends." A good Christian man and his wife moved a few weeks ago to Mississippi. A few days after his arrival he wrote me in substance: "There is another Christian family in this county, and we will soon have a congregation." That is the true evangelistic spirit. "They that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." He is no Christian at all who forgets his God and his religion when he moves into a new country. I have little sympathy for the many appeals which read: "We have only two or three families here, and no church." What such Christians need is not money; it is backbone.

I am reminded of W. T. Ellis' story of an old-time experience meeting. One member testified, saying: "I dipped my bucket in the well of salvation twelve years ago, and I have been dipping it in every day since." Another member testified quite differently, saying: "I dipped my bucket in the well of salvation ten years ago, and it's been full ever since." "Yes, you did," said one of the members who knew the man's life, "and I'll bet your bucket's got wiggle-talls in it." The man who forgets Christ because he moves to a new country needs to dip again.

Not a Gathering of Infants.

Peter asks for what purpose they have sent for him. Cornelius rehearses the matter from the beginning, commends Peter for coming, and adds: "Now therefore we are all here present in the sight of God, to hear all things that have been commanded thee of the Lord." It is evident from the character of the audience, as well as what Cornelius here says, that all who were then present were capable of hearing, understanding, believing, and obeying the gospel, each on his own responsibility. It was not a gathering of infants.

The Sum and Substance of Peter's Speech.

And now the stage is set for one of the most glorious scenes in human history. The preacher is there, the audience is before him, waiting with anxious hearts to hear what he may say; and the Holy Spirit is present in all his enlightening, quickening, and comforting power, as he always is wherever honest seekers after truth and the gospel of Christ are found. Is anything yet needed in order to the conversion of Cornelius and his friends? There certainly is. Peter is yet to speak to them and declare unto them words whereby they might be saved. Plants do not and cannot spring up without seed; hence the incorruptible seed, the word of God that lives and abides forever, must be deeply implanted within their hearts, that they may be begotten to a new life in Christ Jesus.

It is not necessary for me to comment at length on Peter's speech, further than to say that, like Paul, he knew nothing "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." The sum and substance of his discourse is Jesus of Nazareth, the anointed of God, in his life, death, burial, resurrection, and mediation, as the Son of God, the Savior of sinners. Not only the preaching of the apostles, but also the testimony of the prophets, points to him as the One, and the only One, through whose name believers may receive the remissions of sins. The apostle brings the whole matter to a decisive test, which may be stated thus: Receive Jesus as your Savior and live, or reject him and die. The happy conclusion of the whole matter is expressed in part of one verse: "And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ."

Who Administers the Baptism of the Holy Spirit?

It is often said that if men are baptized in the Holy Spirit, as these people were, it is a matter of little importance whether they are baptized in water or not. But Peter, acting under the direct influence of the Holy Spirit, did not reason that way. The commission under which he was laboring commanded him to teach men, and then to baptize them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; and the only baptism he could administer was baptism in water. The apostles were never authorized or empowered to baptize any one in the Holy Spirit, and no one was ever commanded to be baptized in the Holy Spirit. This baptism could be administered by the Lord only, as John the Baptist clearly taught. It was a promise to the disciples to be enjoyed by them whenever the Lord saw fit to bestow it upon them.

Imaginary and Exceptional Cases.

There is a tendency in some minds to fly off at a tangent on untaught and impractical questions, based on imaginary and exceptional cases. Some have asked concerning Cornelius: "What would have become of this good man, had he died previous to this time?" But I do not press this imaginary question. It is of no particular importance to any of us who have ever heard the gospel of Christ. I ask you to consider the real facts in the case. Cornelius did not die previous to this time. He lived to hear, believe, and obey the gospel of Christ, and to enjoy all the blessings which God had connected with his obedience. The point I would emphasize here is this: Cornelius, a just, devout, God-fearing, almsgiving, prayerful man, had to hear something and do something in order to be saved. Morality and devotion and almsgiving, all combined, do not of themselves constitute any one a disciple of Jesus or bring any one into the actual enjoyment of the blessings found in the kingdom of Christ. If they do, then Cornelius was already in the church and in a saved state before the gospel was preached unto him; and if this is true, then it is not a case of conversion, as Luke makes it out, but the whole narrative is as great a riddle as was ever propounded to men.

The Great Question for the Sinner.

If you are out of Christ, the question for you to consider as a responsible human being is not, "What will become of those who have never heard the gospel, and therefore have never had the opportunity to either accept or reject it?" but, "What will become of me if, having heard the gospel, I die without obeying it?" The question is real; it is not imaginary.

And in closing let me add that if you are a Gentile Peter's vision is your vision. It opened the way for you and brought into newborn light the solemn truth that "God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him." The angel in bright apparel who stood before Cornelius is your messenger, too. He has led you to the Man who tells you with a heart full of love words whereby you may be saved. In the matter of your salvation, may George Elliot's words never apply to you: "The angels visit us, and we only know them when they are gone."

The Millennium. No. 8.

THE BINDING OF THE DRAGON.

Our lay brother is very eloquent on the inability of a corrupt government to renovate itself. Apostasy never stops. He that slides must always fall. Retrograde movements, like revolutions, never change their course. "Does corruption ever purge itself?" These are some of the axioms on which he relies to prove the necessity of the personal and immediate return of the Lord. His conclusions are not, in our judgment, in his premises. Grant all his axiomatics and it would only follow that the physical hand of God must be interposed; that the vials of his wrath must be drained out on the kingdom of the beast. This we expect, and this is all that he can prove from the premises in his commentary. If the Lord must appear in person to put down his enemies and introduce a better era, it must be shown from other documents than these. These we shall examine in due time.

Our present object is first to show that it is neither impossible nor improbable that great revolutions may be effected by moral means alone, and still greater changes by moral means combined with the judgments of God. The two extremes on this question are moral means alone and physical means alone. Mr. McCorkle and the millenarians plead for the latter, and others for the former.

With all the light we have upon the subject, we plead for a combination of the two—for moral means and physical means combined. The proposition and the proof, the doctrine and the miracle, the denunciation and the plague.

Let us meanwhile estimate what intellectual and moral means may do, from what they have done. Compare Christendom in the year 1834 with Christendom in the year 1534. Greater, however, would be the contrast were we to take 1234. Will any man say that things have been growing worse ever since the Protestant Reformation, and that the world is now riper for destruction than it was then? Has there been no retrograde motion during these three last centuries?

A few ideas excoagulated by Bacon, Locke, and Newton have changed the politics, economics, and the whole moral and physical science of half the world, as respects territory. The physical and moral science, derived, too, indirectly or directly (it matters not) from the Protestant Reformation, has advanced society ten generations in a single century. A few ideas excoagulated by Luther, Calvin, Zuinglius, etc., have redeemed the earth from the grossest bondage and ignorance in all things mental, moral, and mechanical. The triumphs of a few religious and scientific ideas are inscribed upon ten thousand pillars. Monuments more astonishing than the Egyptian pyramids or the Tartar wall stand on both continents, in many of the islands, cities, and villages—in the wilderness itself—in the valleys and mountains—on the rivers and the seas—indicative of the regeneration of mind and commemorative of the splendid triumphs of truth over ages of darkness and superstition. Who can tell what a few more original thoughts on the subjects of religious education and government will do? The press seems destined to tear up all sorts of error by the root and to remodel society after a pattern as novel as overwhelming.

Tens now count hundreds, and hundreds thousands, in the progress of time and its manifold and sublime innovations and revolutions. The invention of gunpowder, the mariner's compass, the printing press, the discovery of America, the American Revolution—what have they wrought? That the Bible may be read and understood by all men—a proposition which has called forth ten thousand volumes, what magic power has it displayed! And, Mr. Editor, not to flatter yourself and compeers, should you succeed in establishing five propositions, which I could select from your Christian Baptist, I am persuaded a revolution as extensive and as valuable (to say the least of it) as the Protestant Reformation, would again regenerate and bless the world in ten thousand ways, which neither you nor the most sanguine of your friends could trace out.

This is, of all ages and of all generations, the most unpropitious for the assertion of the dogma that moral and intellectual means can benefit society in no very valuable not permanent way. Almost every common newspaper presents insuperable difficulties to such a preposterous opinion. But remember, sir, I go not for moral means alone. I only attempt in my own feeble way to show that moral means may do more than we are aware, from what they have actually achieved already. Do I not, sir, reason correctly when I reason from what was to what is—from what has been done to what may be done? I claim not the benefit of either arithmetical or geometrical progression, though I cannot see why I should be denied either.

But, sir, I have written at the head of this essay, "The Binding of the Dragon," and the reader will expect that I now say something upon this singular phrase. God works by means. The Spirit informs us that as a prelude to the first resurrection an angel is to descend from heaven. For what, sir? To bind and fetter Satan before the Messiah descends! Astonishing! Does the king of kings—does the triumphant Messiah who fought and conquered Satan, in person alone and unsupported in the wilderness of Judea, in the days of his flesh, now require Satan to be bound before he appears on the arena? Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in Askelon, lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the uncircumcised triumph; that before Jesus the mighty Conqueror descends to vindicate his cause and to make it triumphant, an angel must descend from heaven, with a great chain in his hand to bind down the dragon, the old serpent and Satan, in the nethermost abyss! It cannot be, sir! If the Lord is literally and personally to return to introduce the millennium, I promise for him that he will never require such an advantage over his adversary. He will not send before him some mighty angel, who is himself an overmatch for Satan, to bind him down to Tartarus to make way for his easy triumph, that he may usher in the glorious millennium without an opponent.

* This single thought seems to me to present an insuperable objection to the whole scheme of the advocates of a literal and personal return of the Messiah, at the time of the resurrection of the martyred saints, which cannot be believed; for, sir, this binding of the dragon is so placed as the precursor to this resurrection that it must be regarded as preparative to it. I see only one way to escape from it; but, as far as is known to me, no literalist has ever thought it expedient to hazard it. It is to suppose that the descending angel, with the key of the abyss and the great chain in his hand, is the Messiah himself. Be he who he may, however, it is he that lays hold on the dragon, that old serpent, and binds him for a thousand years.

Immediately after the sealing down of the dragon, John saw thrones filled with saints—a new dynasty, indeed! A glorious era when "saints shall judge the world!" All the millennial kings will then be saints. The dragon, secured by the angel of the Lord, disturbs not their reign for one thousand years. Christ reigns over the universe, and the saints reign on earth; and all this subsequent to the binding and securing of Satan; for John saw not the thrones nor the enthroned saints till the angel had locked the prison door. Enough is said to show that the descending angel introduces the reign of the saints; consequently, the immediate precursors of the millennium are set forth under the figure of the descending angel with the key of the abyss and a great chain in his hand.

Now, unless we know how much power this dragon has to deceive the nations, we cannot calculate the consequences of his imprisonment. Were I to assert that this alone is sufficient to give the gospel a triumphant spread from pole to pole in a single year, would all the facts, reasonings, types, and analogies of my Brother Samuel McCorkle be sufficient to disprove it? He might call upon me to prove my assertion, but that is all he could do. He cannot disprove it. Because he knows not but that there may be an adequate cause for that great revolution, and God never did employ anything more nor anything less than an adequate cause for any work of his, moral or physical. It is, then, in my judgment, extremely hazardous to plead for the personal appearance of the Messiah to usher in the millennium, on the ground that all other means are inadequate until it can be shown that the binding of the dragon is inadequate to all the splendid results that are supposed to ensue upon the commencement of this new era.

In these remarks I intend no more than the exposure of the inconclusive reasonings of all the millenarians—of all who plead for two literal resurrections a thousand years apart, for a literal and personal return of the Messiah to put down the dragon and to introduce the millennium. I affirm not how much power the dragon now exercises in all the superstitions and delusions on earth; I do not say, though it is to my mind very probable, that the gospel would instantly be an overmatch for all other imposition were this deceiving and infatuating power out of the way. But I say, until it is shown that this would be inadequate to the triumph of the truth, no one ought to violate the rule of the Roman poet: "Nec deus interit, nisi dignus vindice nodus incidit." In English thus: "Never introduce a god into the poem unless you have found a difficulty which none but a god can overcome." No person ought to introduce the Messiah himself into a scene for which an inferior agent is quite sufficient.

Were I, indeed, asked to demonstrate that such an event as that described in securing the dragon is all-sufficient to place the saints on thrones, I should collect all that is said in the volume on the power, cunning, intrigue, and malice of the dragon, exerted against the truth; then I presume it would appear that the removal of all these out of the way would give to the gospel the triumph which we all anticipate. And here, Mr. Editor, I am reminded of a saying of one of your reforming brethren who was making great headway among the Methodists: "O, sir," said he, "if these Methodist preachers were all sent as missionaries to Africa, how soon would the old gospel convert all the Methodists in America?" This worthy and zealous brother used to say that "taking a hundred pounds out of one scale was just equal to putting a hundred pounds in the other."

If I am asked for the symbolic import of the beginning of the twentieth chapter of Revelation, I ask the reader to accompany me through the nineteenth chapter. Toward the close of it, and before the commencement of the twentieth chapter, he will observe that the prophet has before him "the great supper of God," a supper at which all the birds of prey are guests, and feasted upon the flesh of kings, commanders, captains, and their armies; that after the overthrow of all the despotisms and corrupt hierarchies figured under the beast and the false prophet, and their being cast into the lake which burned with brimstone, he saw a messenger from heaven descending to secure and restrain for a thousand years the dragon, symbol of all despotic power—that spirit which tyrannized in the Egyptian, Assyrian, Persian, Grecian, Roman governments, and all the submonarchies, aristocracies, and republics that arose out of their ruins. This spirit, this satanic dynasty of dynasties, which in all ages has stood up against God's rightful sovereignty and supremacy, being completely put down by a power derived from heaven, set forth in the descending angel of the Lord, there arises the new dynasty of the saints sitting on all the thrones of all the nations of the world.

To prevent the mistake of my friend Samuel McCorkle and others, the prophet says that the persons who received judgment, or the scepter, were (not men raised from the dead—but) the souls of them who had been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, etc., who never did succumb to any authority in religion but that of the Messiah. These are the spirits that now reign with Christ, support his supremacy, acknowledge his official glory and personal divinity, defend his principles, and rejoice in his salvation.

"The rest of the dead," the tyrants and firebrands of the earth, the spirits that supported the dragon, revived not again till the thousand years were expired.

I need not, in the usual prosing way of many commentators, go into an explanation of all the imagery of the vision, as if my readers had not five grains of sense themselves. I need not tell them that the abyss means the sea—that the sea is the symbol of confusion and war—that the key and the chain with which the angel were furnished were not literally forged out of iron—and that the dragon was not a literal serpent, nor the angel descending from heaven a literal angel—any more than a literal throne, a literal soul, and a literal resurrection of saints literally dead, who lived four, five, or six thousand years ago.

I exhibit no more than the grand idea—the import or moral of the passage of this scenic representation of things. And, indeed, the burthen of this paper is only to show that the context of the resurrection in debate furnishes an adequate cause for the introduction of the reign of saints on all earthly thrones, and the triumph of the gospel over all lands, without the necessity of the Messiah reigning literally in Jerusalem for a thousand years.

From heaven the power descends, the judgments of God, the vials of his wrath accompanying the proclamation of the apostolic gospel, as the miracles of that age accompanied the preaching of the apostles. This combination of physical and moral means seems all sufficient not only for the imagery of the vision, but also for the work to be done; and he that adds to the means necessary to the end neither honors God nor himself.

Those who preach a hell of brimstone and a lake of fire, drawn from the scenes of this vision, properly belong to the literalists, who, with my friend of the Signs of the Times, choose to select a chapter in the Apocalypse, and arbitrarily divest it of its scenic character, and read and interpret it as the moral law written on two tables of stone.

As an additional argument to that drawn from the first, second, and third verses of this chapter, to refute the literal application of the fourth and fifth verses, I will add another drawn from the seventh and eighth verses. And will not Samuel McCorkle himself yield that the fifth and sixth verses must be understood figuratively if I show that the context, both before and after, are susceptible of no other than a figurative application.

These verses affirm that when the thousand years shall be accomplished, "Satan shall be loosed from his confinement, and he shall go forth to deceive the nations which are in the four corners of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together for war, whose number is like the sand of the sea." The adversary will be released—the nations remote from the central focus, Jerusalem, will, like the extremities of the body, first grow cold. The nations will be deceived—a new tyranny will appear; for the spirit of war has gone abroad. Then appear Gog and Magog. Who are these? I answer, not the literal Gog and Magog of the Jewish people; but as Sodom, Egypt, and Babylon, as well as the souls of them beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, have all revived, so will the Gog and Magog of Ezekiel revive after the thousand years shall be expired. Magog is reckoned among the sons of Japheth. (Gen. 10: 2.) But Ezekiel uses Magog as the name of the country over which Gog reigned. Michaelis thinks that Magog denotes those vast tracts of country to the north of India and China which the Greeks call "Scythia," and we "Tartary." The Arabs call the Chinese wall "Seld Yagot et Magog"—that is, "Agger Gog et Magog." This is my view of the matter. The Tartars are now, and long have been, the only people that fill the outlines of Ezekiel's picture. These, in combination with the bands of Gomer and Togarmah, with troops from Persia, Ethiopia, and Lybia, constituted the invading and plundering hosts of Ezekiel. That the Gog and Magog of John cannot be these is not to be disputed, but a people like them. Hence, as the Egypt, Sodom, Babylon, Gog and Magog of John denote only states, and cities, and people, like these literally so called, I argue that the souls of those beheaded for Jesus, who are to fill the millennial thrones and to be the judges of the millennial period, will consist of a race of men like them, as the Gog and Magog of the context before us resemble the Gog and Magog of Old Testament history. It is referred to the reader to say whether we might not, with the confidence of my friend McCorkle, now assert that there is no foundation for the theory of a literal resurrection of the saints at the commencement of the millennium in the twentieth chapter of the Revelation; and if not there to be found, we are sure he cannot find it in any other book, Old Testament or New Testament. This subject, may, however, be still farther illustrated as we proceed with our examinations of the prophecies.

Promptness Now Saves You Money.

Brotherly consideration prompts us to advise our readers again of the advance in our subscription price to take effect on January 1, 1917. While it would be to our financial interest for you to wait until that time to send us your orders, it would not be to yours. Therefore we urge immediate action.

Paper is still advancing, and has advanced recently about three hundred per cent. This is the paper on which we have been printing the Gospel Advocate. We have been urging our readers to send us new subscribers at present price of $1.50 a year before the advance takes place on January 1, 1917. It is a matter of necessity that we advance the price. We have also extended to our old readers the privilege of renewing for two years at the price of $1.50 per year, provided they do so now. After January 1, 1917, it will be too late to take advantage of this liberal offer.

The writer of this notice has been in the paper business for about thirty-two years. Never before has he seen such great advances in printing paper. We have done everything that we can to protect our readers, and we hope that they will show their appreciation of our efforts by sending us new subscribers. Many who are not now reading the Gospel Advocate no doubt intend to do so. It would be wise for them to subscribe now, rather than to wait until the advance takes effect. By prompt action now, they can save fifty cents on the subscription price of the paper. The rate has already advanced to $1.50 to widows and preachers. All widows and all preachers will now be expected to pay $1.50, as it takes almost this amount to publish the paper for one year.

We would be pleased to announce to our readers that the prospects are bright for the lowering of prices on paper, but the end is not yet in sight. Heretofore we have hoped against hope, and even now it seems that it will be many months hence before there will be any decline in paper. We suggest that all our subscribers get busy and run up the Gospel Advocate list to over double its present number. With an enlarged list we would be able to turn out each paper at a lower price than we can with a small list. What ever you do, act promptly and send us a large list of new subscribers.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

By J. C. McQuiddy

The War in Prophecy.

Every now and again we receive a letter from some one who claims to have been studying the Bible, and who sends us as the result of his or her own study a screed out of the writings of some half-educated crank. Our correspondents really think they have studied the Bible because they have looked up some, or perhaps all, of the passages which they quote; but that is not Bible study. They are, in fact, simply repeating what they have been taught, by some one who is incompetent to read the Bible intelligently, because he reads it only to find support for his own fanciful, and sometimes fantastic, ideas.

There is no room in the Witness for that sort of "Bible study."

This great war gives a fine chance to would-be interpreters of prophecy to air their theories, but before accepting any of these theories the reader should study the subject for himself or herself. And that does not mean, letting some self-constituted teacher lead one by the nose through the Bible and show him what to read and how to understand it.

A man who is advertising himself as an interpreter of prophecy heads his advertisement as follows: "Claims Russia is Mentioned in the Bible." This heading is apparently designed to convey the idea that the view expressed in it is new, whereas it is far from new. The gentleman quotes Ezek. 38: 2—"Son of man, set thy face toward Gog, of the land of Magog, the prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal, and prophesy against him"—and offers the following explanation:

"Used in this connection, the word 'Gog' means 'ruler.' He is the ruler of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal.

"'Rosh' is the original for the present name 'Russia.' Gesenius, the great Hebrew lexicographer, says: 'By Rosh is meant the tribe on the north of the Taurus, so-called from the neighborhood of the Rha or Volga, and in this name and tribe we have the first traces of the Russ or Russian nation.'

"Tubal gave his name to the large territory that to-day is known as Tobolsk, situated in the northwestern part of Asiatic Russia. Meshech gave his name to the Moschi of which Herodotus speaks as settling near the Black Sea. There the Moschi became known as Muskovs, and later, as Rawlinson says, they were called Muscovites and built Moscow and gave the name Muscovy to Russia throughout the East."

The similarity of the names is certainly interesting, and it is quite possible that the identifications of the ancient with the modern names may be correct; but to assume that it is necessarily correct, and then attempt to interpret prophecy on the basis of that assumption, is like building "a house upon the sand" or "a castle in the air."

Let any one read the whole passage—the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth chapters of Ezekiel—and he will see that it is impossible to apply it to this war or to modern Russia without taking extreme liberties with the text. The northern warriors were to come on horseback, and the war to which the prophecy referred was to be fought with bows and arrows and handstaves and swords and spears and shields. The climax of that war was to come in Palestine, when God himself would overthrow the northern invaders, and the Israelites were to occupy seven years in burning all these wooden weapons brought against them by their enemies. The prophecy is very specific, and could not possibly refer to present conditions unless the terms used are merely symbolical, and in that case the names must also be understood as symbolical, and that would make any attempt to identify them with modern names useless.

We know nothing at all about the man whose advertisement is quoted above, and we do not know what his interpretation of prophecy is. We do know that any attempt to foretell the outcome of the present war from Ezekiel's prophecy would be foolish. And we do know that very many persons are always ready to jump at any teaching of this sort which seems to give them new light. And the object of this article is to warn our readers once more against allowing themselves to be captivated by any fanciful theories. There are very many persons who are not sufficiently interested in the teaching of the Bible to study the book comprehensively, but who take great delight in any teaching that seems to them new and clever, and it is upon this class of persons that teachers of fanciful theories depend for a living, and some of them get quite rich by humbugging their dupes.—New York Weekly Witness.

The above from the New York Weekly Witness is so timely and appropriate that we give it to our readers in full. While there are "wars and rumors of wars," there are also varied and fanciful interpretations of prophecy. Many seem more concerned about interpreting unfulfilled prophecy than they do about obeying the simple commands of God. Some people always appear to be ready to jump into something new instead of studying carefully the Bible for themselves and obeying the plain word of God. If we will only take care of our present duties as the Lord reveals them to us, the future will take care of itself. "The secret things belong unto Jehovah our God; but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law." (Deut. 29: 29.)

The Beaten Oil of the Sanctuary.

Many temptations come to a minister not to prepare his sermons. Who has not had the experience of going into his pulpit, by necessity, with scant preparation, and having an extempore effort meet with great approval from the congregation? Perhaps on these occasions the preacher talked his own convictions more and the convictions of reference works less.

This judgment of his congregation tempts him to be satisfied with scant preparation. Besides, there is the awful stress of work under which the modern minister lives. There are not hours enough in the day. Under these conditions more than one man abandons the scholarly field, which, after all, is simply the ideal of good workmanship.

The preacher should remember, however, that there are hundreds in the community who do not go to any church for the reason that the preaching is not good enough. "Have you chosen a church yet?" one newcomer in a suburb was asked. "No," he replied; "I have been all around, and no preacher has yet convinced me that he studies for his sermons. I won't go to church where I can't learn anything." This man is but one of a large tribe.

It is hard to put everything into a sermon. A sermon should have carefully digested facts. It should have conviction. It should have an object that relates to the welfare of the congregation. It should have abundant illustration and human appeal. Above all, it should have religion. If people would compliment their minister only for the really helpful things in his sermon, and not in general terms, he might soon be guided by his hearers into more helpful preaching.

Preparing the sermon was likened by the old homiletic writers to the beating of the oil for sanctuary use. Nothing but the best is fit for God's house and for the needs of human souls who struggle day by day after righteousness.—Christian Century.

The preacher who spends time in the preparation of his sermon and loses sleep over it will not be disturbed in its delivery by sleepers in his audience. On the other hand, if he gives little thought to the preparation of his sermon, his audience will also give no consideration to it. An empty preacher makes a listless audience, while an interested one usually has an appreciative hearing. Preachers should covet adverse criticisms as well as compliments. The man who will not profit by criticism is unworthy a compliment. The preacher should know and love the truth and should be impelled by a consuming desire to preach Christ, and him crucified.

Laborers Wanted.

We publish the following from Brother Morgan H. Carter in reference to an urgent need in this field:

God has always favored work. He is a worker, and constantly calls for those who are willing to toil and suffer and serve. In the parables which Jesus gave us concerning his kingdom, he constantly pictured his subjects actively engaged in profitable employment. The soldiers of the king are commanded to fight; the laborers of the vineyard must work, those who enlist in the race are victorious only when they run. Christianity is a religion of progress and sacrificial service. We are not suffering for Jesus to-day as we ought. The command, "Follow me," is not being obeyed to the degree that it ought. We are willing to follow Jesus only a part of the way. We sing the hymn, "Where He Leads I'll Follow," but are we doing it? That is the question? "Anywhere with Jesus" is a good motto, but going there and staying is real Christianity. It is easy to say, "Lord, Lord," and be a stickler for what "we believe is orthodox Christianity," and to stand up for "our plea" and debate against what some call "sectarianism." I deeply regret to see that many of those who cry loud and long for some things are of little good in true service which is absolutely essential to our spiritual development.

It is quite sad to see so many men of marked intellectual ability fail to manifest a passion for souls which would lead to the sacrifice of themselves on the altar of suffering and service for Christ's sake. There has never been a time in the world's history when the call for God's bond servants to labor in his vineyard was stronger. The harvest indeed is white, but the laborers are few and far between in destitute fields. I sometimes think it sad that so many preach for the wealthy churches and other work is neglected. Scatter out and possibly you will have more elbow room and not so much time to get into trouble, as when several are contending over one fat job. The need of true, gospel preaching in life and word is urgent. Not only the millions of China and Japan and the multitudes from the jungles of Africa deserve our attention, but even in America there is a terrific and overwhelming need of the light, life, and love which come to sin-cursed souls when they hear of Jesus and, believing, take him as their King. Sometimes I wonder why Christians who are merchants, doctors, farmers, and especially school-teachers, are so well contented to live in ease and comparative luxury, being of some little service to their "loyal" congregation, but never really doing anything worth while for Jesus, except to live a nice, decent life which brings its own reward from a social viewpoint in their community. Why cannot some of these people sell out and move to some places where they are really needed, start a new work for God—in fact, go, preaching the word and helping those whom they touch to live for Jesus. There are great numbers of cities, towns, and country places in this State and those round about where such work is deeply needed. Are you, my friend, willing to go where Jesus leads? If so, do you conscientiously believe that the place where you are now is of all places in all the world that place which God would personally direct you to work? Under all circumstances ask yourself the question, What would Jesus do? Then go and do likewise. He promised to ever be with us when we are faithful. We need not fear. He has overcome the world. His grace is sufficient. Let us be pure, prayerful, Scripture-searching, soul-saving Christians, and God will help us.

We greatly need two consecrated workers, both young men who are able to teach in graded schools and who will use opportunities of preaching Christ. The support is meager and the work abundant. The association is very interesting. If you would like to know more of these places, write me. I shall be glad to give any one information regarding opportunities in this particular section for Christian activity. If you have friends or relatives in Georgia whom you would like for us to stop by and see when we pass, kindly let me know. Remember us in your prayers. These places offer exceptional opportunities for doing much good.

More Good News.

I here give our readers some reports from Brethren Hayes and Price.

1. Brother Hayes writes: "Our meeting at Cedartown closed to-night with two confessions. We would have continued longer, but had no place to preach. This has been one of my best meetings. Twenty have agreed to keep house for the Lord. I ordered literature and it has come. We have one Bible class, one Advanced Quarterly class, one Intermediate Quarterly class, and one Card class. They have secured a place for regular worship." We rejoice with Brother Hayes in the way the Lord is blessing his efforts. Brother Graves was with this new congregation on October 8, and we will do all we can to help Brother Hayes in keeping this work pushed onward and upward. I trust that our readers will remember that Brother Hayes needs some help to stay with the work in that section. Did you see what Brother Fuqua had to say in the Gospel Advocate of October 5 about the Rome work? Twenty-five dollars regularly contributed will enable the Rome brethren to keep him in that field. Who will help? Send all donations to John Hayes, 400 West Seventh Street, Rome, Ga.

2. Brother Hugh A. Price writes: "I am not quite so blue as when I wrote you before. I have just closed an altar meeting near Mineola. Three were baptized and one came from the Baptists. A congregation was established. There are fourteen members, and they are enthusiastic. They have good leaders, and will meet on the first day of the week to 'break bread.' The brother who came from the Baptists gave us a lot and a sister has promised the framing for the house, and we are working now to get the money to do the rest." This makes six new congregations started in the State for this year. How we do need more laborers in this field to help water these places! The Lord bless Brother Price in his great work. Let me ask the brethren in Brooks County to see that Brother Price is supported and kept continually in the work. At this writing he is helping Brother Adair Chapman in a meeting near Moultrie.

Something About Mission Work.

BY S. O. MARTIN.

If the people of this age would do their Christian duty, the next generation would be more blessed. No man liveth unto himself; therefore we ought to consider the great commission as universal. Let us now take Luke's account of it as a text.

"And he said unto them, These are my words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, how that all things must needs be fulfilled, which are written in the law of Moses, and the prophets, and the psalms, concerning me. Then opened he their mind, that they might understand the scriptures; and he said unto them, Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." (Luke 24: 44-48.) A crucified Savior was, no doubt, a different Savior from that the apostles at that time looked for. But he came and "tasted death for every man." The goat that fled with the sins of the people on his head is a type of Christ. The law, the psalms, and the prophets were, and are, to be fulfilled in Christ. It is said that "Christ, the incarnate Son of God, crucified, risen, and glorified, is the essence of all scripture." Then let us see if the great commission ended with the apostles.

Matthew adds: "And, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." As I made mention in the beginning, we might not in this generation see the result of a consecrated church, but it would count in the next generation. We would be the observers from too close an angle. The man who gazes upon a forest from a distance gains a better idea of its relation to the rest of the landscape than the man who is walking among its trees. Mrs. Browning says that every age, through being beheld too close, is ill-discerned by those who have not lived past it:

We'll suppose
Mount Athos carved, as Alexander schemed,
To some colossal statue of a man;
The peasants, gathering brushwood in his ear,
Had guessed as little as the browsing goats
Of form or feature of humanity
Up there—in fact, had traveled five miles off
Or ere the giant image broke on them—
Full human profile, nose and chin distinct,
Mouth muttering rhythms of silence up the sky,
And fed at evening with the blood of suns;
Grand torso—hand that flung perpetually
The largess of a silver river down
To all the country pastures. 'Tis ever thus
With times we live in—eternally too great
To be apprehended near.

Warneck, the great German writer on missions, shows that the whole church of the present is the result of the missionary work of the past. That which gave the church its origin abides as the condition of its life. Now I come to the main part of the issue—some objections to sending missionaries to foreign fields.

These objections always come from those that are not willing to give anything to the cause. Such objections as, "Too much money expended for nothing," "Our missionaries too much exposed to danger," and many other objections might be considered, but we notice this last one. Christianity presents a God who is worthy of our confidence and love and service. The poets have a great insight to show us things. They are interpreters of God and truth sometimes.

I cannot go
Where universal love smiles not around,
Sustaining all yon orbs and all their suns;
From seeming evil still educing good,
And better thence again, and better still,
In infinite progression.

With a courageous heart let us do what we can for the cause of Christianity. As for me, I expect to cast my lot with the missionaries of India for a while. I am laying my plans to go by the first of November. All those that wish to help me carry the gospel to India may be a co-laborer with me by sending their gifts to Don Carlos Janes, Route 10, Buechel, Ky

McCaleb's Moving Pictures.

We hear much these days of "new concepts," "new perspectives," and "new standards," as though they really meant something radically different from what we have formally known. I recently listened to a man who said we have the same privilege to break away from the customs and habits of thought of our time that Jesus and John did from the customs and habits of thought of their time. He illustrated what he meant by saying that Jesus set aside the law for a higher gospel. In like manner in this twentieth century we have outgrown a gospel of two thousand years ago. This would put Christ on a level with man and raise man to the dignity (not to say divinity) of being his own moral guide, a light to himself—a god in himself. If the speaker had applied his remarks to mere customs and traditions which have sprung up around the Christian faith, no objection would be offered; or if he had said we are not to be shackled by the conceptions and thoughts of our predecessors in our growth in the knowledge of the truth, again no objection could be raised; but to apply the rule to the "first principles of the doctrine of Christ" is to destroy the moral law. The time will never come when we may break away from the conception of one God. The time can never be when men can break away from the world's only Redeemer. The time can hardly come when murder will be meritorious and theft no crime. We probably have not yet reached the time, even though it be the twentieth century, when children may with impunity cast off their parents and adultery be a virtue.

One of our Christian boys of Zoshigaya Gakuin, who recently went home for the summer vacation, writes a card from his home in the north, as follows: "I returned home in safety, so please be easy about me. During th's vacation I purpose to work for our God. My teacher will please take good care of himself. Good-by."

Two men entered into a written agreement. It was made by correspondence. In the agreement was the clause, "including" so and so, the expenses shall be shared equally. One party failed to note that the word was cut off from the preceding sentence by a period and that it also began with a capital. By thus attaching it to the preceding sentence instead of the following, where it belonged, there was a difference of five dollars. He thus forfeited this amount by taking a period for a comma and by overlooking a capital letter. "How readest thou?"

On August 1 forty missionaries of the Seventh-Day Adventists sailed from San Francisco for the Philippines, China, and Japan. In numbers the Adventists are a feeble folk, perhaps not as many by one-fourth as the churches of Christ. Shall we let others show more zeal for a mixed and erroneous gospel than we show for the truth?

Brother S. H. Hall's Article of August 31.

BY E. A. E.

Brother Hall says some excellent things in his article, which need to be emphasized and commended. Instances:

Preach the whole counsel of God on the preacher question. (Emphasis his.)

The only way to remedy any wrong on any question is to preach the whole counsel of God on that question.

One way to take from the truth is to emphasize some part of a subject to the neglect and destruction of some other part.

Let me add another thing, which has been most clearly stated and strongly impressed in all God's dealings with the race—namely, let alone absolutely all questions of every description which God says avoid. No sin can lead to bitterer results and more fearful consequences than the one of producing strife over the questions which God says avoid. All preachers, elders, teachers, and all Christians should read frequently and studiously Paul's letters to Timothy and Titus and other passages of the word of God in both the Old and New Testaments on this question of what should be let alone. Nothing must be added to, nothing must be taken from, the word of God—his will on all subjects. With Paul, all must determine to "know nothing, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified;" to preach not themselves, "but Christ Jesus as Lord," and themselves servants for Jesus' sake (2 Cor. 4: 5); to proclaim the gospel, to preach the word, and to neither "pervert the gospel of Christ" (Gal. 1: 7), wrest the scriptures (2 Pet. 3: 16), handle "the word of God deceitfully" (2 Cor. 4:

2), corrupt the word of God (2 Cor. 2: 17), nor by smooth and fair speech to beguile the hearts of the innocent (Rom. 16: 17, 18). The gospel of Christ "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. 1: 16), and that is all all preachers preach who preach for the salvation of souls. All who preach something else are preaching for something else. Read again Deut. 4: 2; Deut. 12: 32; Deut. 18: 20-22 (coupled with Acts 3: 22; Matt. 7: 24-27); Matt. 7: 21; Gal. 1: 8, 9; Rev. 22: 18-22.

And still another thing must be said and practiced—namely, "the whole counsel of God" must be preached, not only on any given subject, but on all subjects—"all things that pertain unto life and godliness"—all this and nothing but this.

Let me say again, preachers and teachers have no choice of what to preach and teach, because God himself has made that choice and settled that question by telling all what to preach and teach and by pronouncing the woes of eternal perdition upon all who preach or teach more or less.

And let me say once more that that which one preaches depends altogether on that for which one preaches. If that is popularity, then one preaches that which will render him popular; if that is fame, then one tries to preach that which will make him famous; if that is money, then one preaches that which will bring him the most money; if that is the salvation of souls, then one preaches that which will save souls—the gospel—and will not preach anything else.

For am I now seeking the favor of men, or of God? or am I striving to please men? If I were still pleasing men, I should not be a servant of Christ. (Gal. 1: 10.)

Even Jesus pleased not himself (Rom. 15: 3; John 8: 29), but did always the things which pleased his Father, and the people killed him. Just so now, "all that would live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." (2 Tim. 3: 12.) One cannot serve two masters, cannot please God and men, cannot preach for souls and for something else; therefore, every one must choose and has chosen whom he will serve and what he will preach. As one chooses to please God, he chooses to preach the gospel and to save souls. The humblest God uses mightily for this purpose.

In the article of October 12 there was a mistake. I intended to say: "And think of it, the churches—not these young men—are to blame for the loss of so much ability." The complaint is that "young men of ability" could turn many to righteousness, greatly extend the kingdom of God among men, and turn the world right side up for Christ, but the churches do not offer them money enough to do it. Hence "the King's business goes begging." These "young men of ability" feel themselves under no obligation and sense of duty to God to teach the church and to save sinners.

Whether so much emphasis can be placed on one part of a subject to take from and destroy some other part, I do not know; some parts of the truth are destroyed by neglect, if not by a willful failure to emphasize them or even notice them at all. For some years I have seen so much emphasis given to the "idea" of preparing "young men of ability" to preach—and that, too, in a way not designated by the Bible—that I have feared that the truth on the subject has been "destroyed." Has not something in this way been taken from the Bible? For this reason I have done all I can to emphasize "the whole counsel of God" on making preachers. For some years I have seen so much emphasis placed on the churches to support such young men even while "preparing" to preach, to the neglect and destruction of the truth on the subject, that I have made an effort to get "the whole counsel of God" on this subject before all churches and all preachers. I am rejoiced to have such men as Brother Hall join me in this good and great work of teaching "the whole counsel of God" on these subjects, as well as on all others.

While Brother Hall's article contains these excellent things, I am not able to see how he reconciles Paul's work and teaching to the following declaration:

All the apostles, except Paul, gave themselves wholly [emphasis his] to the preaching of the word, and not even would they neglect it for such work as caring for the poor.

He cites Acts 6: 2—"It is not fit that we should forsake the word of God and serve tables"—as proof of his statement. I ask, what is giving oneself wholly to the work of preaching the gospel or to the cause of Christ? If Paul never gave himself wholly—body and mind and soul—to the great work of preaching the gospel, no one ever did or ever can. Paul worked and taught by inspiration. No teaching which casts any reflection on Paul's life or teaching as a Christian can be true. He gave himself so wholly to this work that he worked with his own hands in order to support himself and company at times while he and they preached. Furthermore, he gave himself to the Christian life so wholly that he worked with his own hands in order to set all churches for all time an example and to show all how to follow useful employment that they may both supply their own necessary wants, or "have need of nothing," and to have something to give to the needy. He teaches Christians to study to be quiet; to attend to their own business; to follow some useful employment in order not to be unprofitable to the church and mankind in general; that if any man will not work, neither shall he eat; and that the ones who have no useful employment, but are idlers and busybodies, are disorderly and should be withdrawn from. (Read thoughtfully Tit. 3: 14—margin; 1 Thess. 4: 10-12; 2 Thess. 3: 6-15; Eph. 4: 28; Acts 20: 34, 35.) Paul declares that he labored more than all the apostles. (1 Cor. 15: 10.) If they "gave themselves wholly to the preaching of the word," he gave himself more wholly to it. There never was so great a preacher and so great a man as Paul. Paul's working with his own hands in order to preach the gospel does not prove that he did not give himself wholly to the work, but proves most effectually that he did, since nothing—not even want, hunger, nakedness, poverty—could stop him. Not all the sufferings and persecutions mentioned in 2 Cor. 11: 22-23 could stop him.

At Jerusalem others could look after certain Grecian widows, while the apostles continued "steadfastly in prayer and in the ministry of the word;" but Peter, James, and John would have Paul "remember the poor," "which very thing" he "was zealous to do." (Gal. 2: 10.) He and Barnabas carried the contribution for the poor from Antioch in Syria to Jerusalem and placed it in the hands of the elders there. (Acts 11: 29, 30.) He taught the churches everywhere he went preaching to contribute to the necessity of the saints (1 Cor. 16: 1-4; 2 Cor. 8, 9), and carried "alms"—these contributions—to Jerusalem to his own nation (Acts 24: 17; Rom. 15: 25, 26). He uses the expression, "ministering to the saints," to show what he did. When he made these long journeys to Jerusalem, "ministering to the saints," was he any the less wholly given to the work of preaching the gospel, or the work of Christ, than the other apostles?

Any cause is in the throes of death when it has to eliminate any part of Paul's example or teaching to sustain itself.

In his timely, worthy, and much appreciated articles, Brother W. H. Carter very clearly shows who gives himself wholly to the work of preaching the gospel and who does not.

During our lifetime or the lifetime of the generation preceding us no man in our knowledge has given himself more wholly, or so much so, to the cause of Christ as our venerable and beloved Brother Lipscomb. He has not "located" with some congregation as "the pastor" or "the regular minister," and has had more or less business all his life—has been a tentmaker; yet "the kingdom of God and his righteousness" has been always first with him. He has manifested "anxiety for all the churches," has studied and taught and prayed for their unity and peace and edification, and has given all his time and splendid abilities and means to the cause of his Master for its advancement in every way. His good wife, as a faithful servant of God, has cheerfully cooperated with him in self-denial and economy and industry in all this good work. This humble pair, true and faithful and godly, have lived an economical and industrious, righteous and beautiful, life. Are their industry, economy, home, and comfort in their old age, with all their work and "fellowship in the furtherance of the gospel," their gifts to the poor, and their donations to the cause of Christ, any signs that they have not given themselves wholly to the preaching of the word? People do not have to be idle, indolent, and dependent in order to give themselves "wholly to these things." I fear that these "young men of ability," not knowing yet much about the word of God, think that giving themselves "wholly to these things" means that the churches should educate them free of cost, afterwards support them and their families free from all care and responsibility, and then prepare a place of comfort for them in old age. Does a young man of ability, who has been encouraged for not a few years as a preacher and who receives as a preacher fifteen hundred dollars a year and "a month's vacation," give himself "wholly to the preaching of the gospel" when he contemplates at times going upon the platform as a lecturer or turns to the practice of law? Any man who cannot make more money at something else than he receives for preaching is hardly fit to preach. The same "inducement" is necessary to keep a man preaching which caused him to begin. If the love of God caused him to begin, the love of God will keep him at it. If something else caused him to begin, that something else is necessary to keep him at it; and if that something else is greater somewhere else, he will quit preaching and go there.

As we have seen, and as every one who studies the Bible knows, God has ordained that those who preach the gospel should live of the gospel. Churches should not pin the preachers down to a bare existence, but should liberally support them in their faithfulness, so that by economy and industry, just as merchants, physicians, teachers, etc., they may have the comforts of life in old age. But God never ordained that preachers and their families should live without industry, economy, and self-helpfulness, and in idleness, any more than he ordained that other Christians should. The priests who served at the altar and partook of the things of the altar, when not serving in Jerusalem, were at home attending to their home affairs, tilling the ground allotted to them, looking after whatever flocks or herds they possessed, and teaching their children to work and otherwise to obey God.

Brother Hall says:

Had Paul taught on this subject as some do to-day, the other apostles would have been dishonored and abused and dubbed as "hirelings."

Brother Hall knows of such teaching, or he would not say it is being done. I heartily join him in condemning it and in condemning any other teaching contrary to that of Paul. Whoever teaches as Brother Hall says is guilty almost of blasphemy. I shall be glad to see him point out such teachers and shall join him in doing my best to counteract their influence. The teaching of Paul on any subject cannot be set aside or changed in any way.

Furthermore, Brother Hall says:

Well, then, if we are to encourage the idea of only the farmer-preacher, etc., to the destruction of the preacher that gives himself wholly to the word, then we have destroyed and set at naught one of the ordinances of God, etc.

Again, I say Brother Hall certainly knows of some who "encourage the idea of only the farmer-preacher," etc., or he would not make such statements; but such ideas are contrary to the word of God, and I say again I shall gladly join him, or have him join me, in searching out and declaring "the whole counsel of God" on this as well as on all other subjects. "The whole counsel of God" cannot hurt any one, neither preachers nor churches; so let all have it. It is the only guide. I am rejoiced that we are to have it on the Bible way of making preachers; on the motives, inducements, and purposes for preaching; on what to preach; on supporting faithful and true preachers; on turning godliness into a way of gain; and on all Bible subjects.

A Misguided Church.

BY J. C. McQUIDDY.

The following letter is self-explanatory and pictures a lamentable condition. It would be pleasing to know that our Informant had unintentionally portrayed conditions worse than they are.

Brother McQuiddy: There is a condition existing in the church circle where I am located which is somewhat serious and far-reaching in its effect. I am between two fires, and under the circumstances I cannot decide which is the better.

Some years ago there was a church of Disciples here. The usual digressive spirit entered and wrought the work it usually does and split the church. The "digressives" have been busy and have built a fairly strong congregation and have done some good work. However, they have all the "attachments" peculiar to their positions—viz., aid societies, unions, leagues, etc.

Our brethren really have done nothing, and there are a few of the worst "cranks" in the world among them. There are also a few who really want to progress, but the other class squeals "Digression!" every time a move is made for the better. A good, loyal, old brother who preaches for them monthly got them to throw aside some of their "crankiness" some months ago and get to work. They ordered some literature of you, classified their children, and put them to work. But in the absence of our good preacher brother, these pessimists got in their work and raised such a howl that the Bible work of the children was discontinued, and every other little improvement with it was thrown aside, and everything is back in the same old rut. Their services seem to be as dead and uninspiring as any I ever saw in my life, and I have had several years' experience and observation of real church work. I am a teacher and was educated in some of our best Bible schools; therefore I believe I understand the duties of the church fairly well. I was present last Lord's day, and these cranks just made the most ungodly mess of matters. They are continually doing so, and have some good members so outdone that they hardly know which way to turn. The public has no respect for this congregation and a mere handful of people can be found at any service. They gain absolutely no ground, and have not for these several years, in a little city of about eleven thousand people. One good, loyal brother from West Tennessee came here and started to work with them. He is a business man and has some real ability. He became disgusted, sends his children to the Presbyterian Sunday school, and he goes to the digressive church. He isn't satisfied at all, but he considers that both churches are "digressive," and the "loyal" one the more so of the two, since it digresses from both Book and work.

Several in the digressive church are not satisfied at all, but will not go to the other place, because it does absolutely nothing but invite public reproach and criticism.

There are not enough of the progressive type in the "loyal" congregation to rule it, since some of them are "on the fence" and will not move with either class.

I am a new man here, and would ruin everything if I were to try to bring a reformation. I read an article some weeks ago through the Gospel Advocate in which some brother advised us not to go where our hearts were not in the worship. Were I to take this advice, I would certainly decline to attend any church in this place under the circumstances. There is a very small hope to be entertained about a reformation, it seems. What would you do? Please discuss the matter at length for the good of some of these folks.

X.

In commenting on the above, I deal with existing conditions in that church as represented by our informant. Without any reflection on the brother who criticizes the church, it is proper to say, however, that most men are prone to exaggerate the weaknesses and shortcomings of those with whom they are not working. It is hard for most people to do justice to those with whom they do not agree.

We should clearly understand that in matters of faith there should be unity; in matters of opinion, liberty. Since the Bible does not reveal any method of doing church work to the exclusion of other methods of doing church work, no man has a scriptural right to make his opinions with respect to anything a fundamental of salvation. To do so is to worship God without avail. "But in vain do they worship me, teaching as their doctrines the precepts of men." (Matt. 15: 9.) While Christians claim for themselves the right to their own convictions, they should also have the Christian spirit that will allow their brethren to entertain a different view of methods of work from their own, as the Scriptures do not reveal any peculiar method of work. Almost all Christians differ among themselves in regard to practical matters. Every man is doing his work in his own way. The Bible lays down no ironclad system for determining methods of working. There is the largest liberty allowed with respect to all these matters. All this applies as forcibly to a "digressive" church as it does to a "loyal" church. While this is so, it is unmistakably true that there is no very great difference in methods.

In the communion service we have a striking example. For many years the time of administering the Lord's Supper has been practically the same in nearly all churches. Still, there are old disciples now living who can remember when there was considerable controversy as to whether the Supper should be administered in the morning, the afternoon, or night. Now such a matter is treated with indifference. Furthermore, some churches take the Lord's Supper before preaching and others after preaching, as may suit the taste and convenience of the congregation. Many of the churches are now using individual communion cups, while others are not. In all such matters of expediency it is as unscriptural to bind a method of work upon the consciences of men where the Bible has not done so as it is to make additions to, and subtractions from, the prescribed worship of God.

Christians make a great mistake when they object to methods of work employed by their brethren and seek to bind their way of working upon them. The mother who nags her boy over everything soon loses her power of control over him. The boy concludes that she objects to his doing anything. But the mother who gives her son to understand that she demands obedience of him only where God demands it and requires her to do so will command the respect and obedience of her son. So it is in the church. Those who oppose everything weaken themselves; and even when they make just criticisms on unscriptural teaching and practice, their criticism loses its influence. It is unwise to make issues where God has made none. Such a course always destroys the usefulness and influence of the party doing so.

The Holy Spirit nowhere tells us just what literature we shall use in teaching the Bible. Neither does it prescribe any particular method. Some preachers use the blackboard in teaching, others use charts, some preach without either. Some people teach by the method of questions and answers, which was employed very largely in the synagogue teaching, and also in the days of Christ and the apostles. However, this method of teaching was not employed to the exclusion of a public proclamation of the gospel. Whenever a man seeks to force out of the teaching this method, he is seeking to bind his brethren where God has not bound them, and, therefore, makes a very grievous mistake. If these brethren will not study the Bible, and do not wish to avail themselves of every useful aid in the study of the Bible, they should not object to their brethren's doing so. The truth is, all Christians should be progressive; they should use the most efficient methods and the best possible system for teaching the truth and advancing the cause of Jesus Christ. Since the Bible does not reveal any ironclad system of teaching, loyal churches have no quarrel with anybody about the method of doing the Lord's work. As the soul is of more importance than the body and as it is worth more than a thousand worlds like this, it certainly behooves us to be as efficient and as capable as possible in the great work of saving souls.

The only point at issue between "loyal" churches and "digressive" churches is whether Christians shall turn away from the blood-bought church of Jesus Christ to a human institution for the conversion of the world. Since the church is the "pillar and ground of the truth," the "light of the world," the "salt of the earth," it is a reflection on the wisdom and power of God to turn from that which has been sealed by the blood of Jesus Christ to a human institution for the conversion of sinners. Using efficient methods in the church for doing the things the Lord has commanded strengthens, and does not belittle, this holy institution. The Bible furnishes us unto every good work in the church. "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) Brethren who are doing nothing and expecting to go to heaven by criticizing others should get busy in the service of the Lord. They should abandon immediately their shiftless, indolent, and indifferent life. It would be well for them to read the language of the Holy Spirit and apply it to themselves, when he says: "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee." (Eph. 5: 14.)

Doubtless our brother represents these brethren correctly when he says that they have lost their influence with their neighbors. Men must have a correct practice as well as a correct theory. Our dear Lord's best interpreters are humble human souls. Two wrongs never make one right. Because those brethren will do nothing, and thus become guilty before God, is no reason why another should uphold that which he believes to be wrong. If the brother thinks Presbyterianism is wrong, he should not give his influence to the upbuilding of it. Christians, to have the proper influence, must at least be consistent. "I know, and am persuaded in the Lord Jesus, that nothing is unclean of itself; save that to him who accounteth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." (Rom. 14: 14.) The man who maintains his honor and integrity must be true to his own convictions. "The faith which thou hast, have thou to thyself before God. Happy is he that judgeth not himself in that which he approveth." (Verse 22.)

Men who are made of the right stuff are not quitters. It requires obstacles and opposition to bring out the very best that is within us. The man must think meanly of himself who gives up the fight because there are some stones that must be rolled out of the way. Where would we have been to-day, if such men as Luther, Campbell, and others had been so weak and cowardly as to cease to do all within their power to advance the kingdom of God?

"Fight on, my soul, till death
Shall bring thee to thy God;
He'll take thee, at thy parting breath,
To his divine abode."

Coffee County and Sequatchie Valley.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Our Manchester meeting, which embraced four Sundays, closed Sunday night, September 24. We—Mrs. Larimore and I—are treated delightfully everywhere; but we have been treated better nowhere than at Manchester.

Manchester, a pretty little town of somewhat less than two thousand inhabitants, is the capital of Coffee County—and Coffee is a "coming" county. I believe narcotics, stimulants, and all kinds of "dope," as usually used, are a curse; hence, having tested tea, coffee, and Coca-Cola, and found them good things for me to let alone, I neither take nor taste nor touch any one of them; but I have been interested in Coffee County more than fifty years, having tramped and scouted all over that county in the far-away days of my youth.

Coffee County has so many charms that probably I should forbear to mention any of them; but I can never forget Big Duck, Little Duck, the ruins of the old stone fort and its fortifications between those two rivers (mute reminders of prehistoric people), the picturesque Big Falls, the no-less picturesque Little Falls, or the friends who favored us with a trip to them all and to many other places and things we were glad to see, the last, but not the least, being the head of Elk River, which I saw many years ago.

When we reached the spring that is now the head of Elk River, there was nothing familiar in its appearance to me. It did not, in any way, resemble the spring I remembered as the head of the Elk. While we lingered in the vicinity of the spring, eating dinner and resting before beginning our return trip, several teamsters stopped at the spring for their noontide rest; and, from one of them, we learned that the spring there now is not the spring I saw in the long ago. He showed us the depression in the ground, now almost filled with sand, where the waters that formed Elk River once boiled up through the sand, making the beautiful spring I remember so well. He said a dispute once arose concerning its ownership among three men whose lands "cornered" in the great spring, and they were about to resort to law to settle the question, when the spring quietly sank out of sight there, and out of the quarrel, rising where it now is, about two or three hundred yards from where it then was, thus ending the "fuss" and probably preventing a fight. Wise spring, to thus quietly withdraw from a storm center and resume business in a safer and better place—much wiser than some men that I know!

We are now at Pikeville, Tenn., where my present meeting began Sunday morning, October 1.

Pikeville is the capital of the upper county of Sequatchie Valley, which consists of three counties—Marion, at the foot; Sequatchie, in the middle; and Bledsoe, at the head; the capitals of the three counties being Jasper, Dunlap, and Pikeville, respectively.

Locally, at least, two questions concerning the valley have not yet been definitely and satisfactorily settled—the spelling and the meaning of the name of the valley and its central county. There are many flags in Pikeville now advertising the "Sequachee Valley Fair"—now past—indicating that the prevailing local opinion may favor that spelling of the word; but "Sequatchie," having been accepted and adopted by State, national, and press authorities, is the spelling sure to stand the test of time, I think.

My mother, who loved the Cherokee language and could speak it fluently, wrote the name of the valley "Sequatchie," advocated that spelling of the name of Sequatchie County when it was christened, and the question of the spelling of its name was exhaustively discussed about sixty years ago; and, when she spoke the word, with the emphasis on the middle syllable, on which her voice seemed to love to linger, its sound was as soft and smooth and sweet as the whisper of love from the sorrowful depths of a broken heart.

I have been to the editorial sanctum of The Bledsonian here, and have questioned, relative to these two disputed points, the two polite young gentlemen responsible for that progressive little paper's existence and success—examined them "under the rule," only one of them being there each time I have been there. One of them expressed the opinion that "Sequatchie" means "Hog Trough;" the other, that "Sequachee" means "Land of Many Waters."

From "a sketch of the early history of the Sequatchie Valley," found in the Nashville Banner, which says "the valley lies between Walden's Ridge and the Cumberland Mountains, the valley being one of the most beautiful in the South," I quote "the name is supposed to mean Hog or Possum River."

Summing up the substance of it all, we have about this. Probably, at least possibly, "Sequachee" or "Sequatchie" may mean "Land of Many Waters," "Hog Trough," "Hog River," "Possum River," or something else, if it means anything. So, there you are, knowing, at least, that you know little or nothing about it.

It is literally a "land of many waters;" hence that may be the meaning of its musical name—and Mrs. Larimore believes it is, because of its appropriateness; but, I think, if an angel from heaven should stand on some towering peak among the mountains that surround it, and view it, as Moses viewed the promised land from Pisgah's lofty summit, that angel might call it "Paradise."

"The Valley," as I have called it and heard it called nearly all my life, extending from Bridgeport, on the Tennessee River, on the south, about eighty miles north, to "The Head," with an estimated average width of about three miles, hence an area of about two hundred and forty square miles, was my home in the days of my youth; and I love the valley, the mountains that shadow it, and the people that inhabit it, still.

This beautiful valley is now at its best. Herds of fine cattle and other fat stock are peacefully grazing in its green pastures, quietly resting in the shade of its tall trees, or leisurely wading in its clear waters. Farmers are filling their pens with pumpkins, their cribs with corn, and their barns with hay. It is certainly a land of milk and honey, where birds and blossoms, chickens and children, ducks and geese, guineas and turkeys abound.

The mountains, always inspiring to me, were beautifully green a few days ago; but now they are gradually clothing themselves in their gorgeous autumn glory, and are more inspiringly beautiful each day than they were the day before. The mountain that bounds the valley on the east and the mountain that bounds it on the west are practically parallel till, going north from the great river, they near "The Head," when the former gently leans to the left, the latter to the right, and they lay their heads together upon the pillow from beneath which the beautiful Sequatchie bursts, clear as crystal and pure as the dew of heaven, as it begins its race through the valley to the Tennessee River, eighty miles away.

The first time I ever heard of the church of Christ was a few weeks after Madison Love came into the valley, preached in the shade of some tall trees, and baptized my mother and sister. I was then "wrestling with the Lord" at "the mourners' bench," in a revival at Mossy Creek (now Jefferson City), Tenn. When I reached home, at nine o'clock, having walked across the mountain and up the valley from Chattanooga to Dunlap that day, my mother met me at the door, embraced me, and, while I was yet in her arms, said: "My son, your sister and I have joined the church." I asked: "When did you get religion?" And then and there she gave me the first light on that subject that ever entered my mind. Till then I had never imagined that it was possible for it to be possible for it to ever be possible for any mortal to ever get into any church without going to "the mourners' bench," "getting religion," and telling "a Christian experience."

This wonderful valley is not free from the shadow of such strange superstitions and dangerous delusions yet. Recently I sought and found an opportunity to talk to an aged friend relative to the salvation of his soul. He was a man when I was born, and was my friend in the days of my childhood and youth. Though decidedly above the average in intellect and intelligence, he has never obeyed the gospel. When I mentioned the matter to him, he said: "That's all fixed up. I'm perfectly satisfied. I don't want to make any change." When I asked him for a reason of his hope, he said: "Y, I preached once. Didn't you know that? Well, we'd met for preaching; there was no preacher there—the preacher didn't come. The Lord appeared to me—I saw him just as plainly as I see you now—and said: 'You're going to preach to-day.' I said: 'I can't preach.' He said again: 'You're going to preach to-day.' I said: 'I've never tried to preach in my life. I can't preach.' He said: 'You're going to preach to-day.' He said it three times. We sang a song and I preached—preached, I thought, the finest sermon I had ever heard."

That man is an honest, upright, honorable product of Sequatchie Valley, who would not invest a dollar in a farm or a home without a clear title—a good deed; but his title to a home eternal is that strange delusion; and he is perfectly satisfied with it!

I remember well when such an "experience" as that, related at a revival or a "foot-washing," anywhere in this valley, would have raised a shout all over the house, and would have been accepted as a perfectly satisfactory passport into any church between these mountains!

While we should appreciate the brighter light in which we live to-day, we should remember that our obligations are commensurate with our opportunities, and should let our light shine—should obey the gospel and live the Christian life till Heaven calls us home.

Christ incarnates in his own life the perfect precepts which he taught to men; but his holy example does not repel, it sweetly attracts. There are lives that are beautiful as the frost on the window pane, and they are as cold as they are beautiful. Far otherwise was the perfect character of the Lord Jesus. His whole earthly career had in it an element of wonderful encouragement for us in our struggles toward the higher life. His incarnation was to some degree an eclipsing of his glory as the Son of God; the cloud of his humanity veiled the dazzling splendor of his divinity. For our encouragement Christ did not consider equality with God as a possession to be retained, but he humbled himself to become a man, that we like him might be exalted because of our lowliness in service, our loyalty in obedience, and our likeness in character.—The Evangel.

It is impossible to doubt that our Lord means us to find both peace and joy in looking forward to his reappearing. Sinners, as we are, with memories of so many transgressions clinging to us, we yet are invited to find our springs of comfort here; and, therefore, if we are, however insufficiently, yet truly loving Christ, and in the midst of all our shortcomings, faults, and failures are yet having our loins girded and our lights burning, we may—nay, we ought to, rejoice in this blessed prospect: "Where I am, there ye may be also."—T. V. Fosbery.

Christian holiness is the reproduction in the individual of the life of the incarnate Son of God.—Robert Otley.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

The Gospel Advocate list is growing.

From Thomas E. Milholland, Denison, Texas: "I baptized eight last week at Mannsville, Okla."

T. Q. Martin, of Winchester, Ky., is in a meeting with the Campbell Street congregation, Louisville, Ky.

E. C. Fuqua, of Olathe, Col., came to see us last week. He was en route to Green's Chapel, near Horse Cave, Ky., for a meeting.

From Mrs. Bob Parris, Centerville, October 3: "The Gospel Advocate gets better every week, and I do not feel like I could do without it."

From Fred L. Wallace, Spencer, Tenn., October 20: "I was at my regular monthly appointment at Smartt, Tenn., last Lord's day. There were three baptisms."

The meeting being conducted at Belmont Avenue, this city, by James A. Allen, is increasing in interest. All Nashville Christians should encourage this work.

From J. L. Hines, Asphalt, Ky., October 19: "I closed a week's meeting at Christian Home, in Butler County, last Sunday, with two baptisms and one restored. I am now in a meeting here."

Our venerable brother, E. G. Sewell, passed his eighty-sixth milestone yesterday. He preached for the Russell Street congregation last Sunday morning. Though quite feeble, he preached in his usual good form.

Sister John E. Dunn underwent a very serious operation in this city on October 18, but we are glad to report that her recovery is hopeful. Brother Dunn is filled with deep anxiety and would appreciate the prayers of the faithful.

Married, at the bride's home, 1820 Twelfth Avenue, North, this city, at 7:30 o'clock, Monday morning, October 23, Mr. J. D. Womack and Miss Ethel Hawkins. R. V. Cawthon performed the ceremony. Immediately after the wedding the happy couple left for a short stay in Birmingham, Ala.

Married, on October 11, at the home of the bride's parents, near Cookeville, Tenn., Miss Norma Hutchison to Hubert Halle, and Miss Willette Hutchison to Dr. John O. Cummins. The brides are sisters. W. L. Karnes, who officiated, wishes both couples long and happy and useful lives.

P. S. Young, of Plains, Texas, is one of our many enthusiastic readers and workers. Through personal effort he has induced nearly every family in the congregation to subscribe for the Gospel Advocate. It was through his effort, too, that this small, but live, congregation was established.

From Jewell Matthews, San Angelo, Texas, October 9: "The interest yesterday was good at both services. We are gradually climbing upward in the Lord's work. Can any one put me in touch with some descendant of James G. Matthews and Clinton Matthews, both pioneer preachers of the word?"

On October 19, I. B. Bradley, of Dickson, Tenn., officiated at the marriage of Mr. C. Bailey Harper, of Opelousas, La., and Miss Emma Jane Phillips, at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. C. J. Phillips, at Stayton, Tenn. Brother Bradley expresses best wishes for these friends in their new relation.

From Don Carlos Janes, Route 10, Buechel, Ky., October 18: "E. E. Joynes and wife, of Philadelphia, recently spent a few days in Louisville. On Lord's day he preached at Portland Avenue in the morning, at the Burnett Avenue colored church in the afternoon, and at the Highland Church at night."

F. B. Stygley began a meeting at Martin, Tenn., last Sunday. F. W. Smith is in the second week of a good meeting at Florence, Ala. T. C. King, a very useful preacher, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., is recovering from a slight operation performed in this city. He has paid us several enjoyable visits.

From C. E. Coleman, October 20: "I began a meeting on October 15 at Shiloh, in Dekalb County, Ala. Three persons have made the confession. Interest is good and we have hopes of establishing a working congregation here. I preached one week here in July. Virgil Davis, of Trenton, Ga., is leading the singing. The meeting continues."

Rain interfered somewhat with the progress of the meeting at Russell Street Church, this city, but the church was greatly edified through Brother Ezell's fine teaching. A noble young man was baptized and several took membership with the congregation. The meeting closed Thursday night, but on last Sunday seven more useful members became affiliated with our work.

From W. F. Lemmons, Tyler, Texas, October 17: "I closed a splendid meeting near Rockdale, Texas, last Monday, at the water. Two were baptized, and much good was done in the way of educating the church, which we organized last July. They are growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Several were almost persuaded. They want me to hold another meeting in 1917. I realize more and more the need of simplifying the truth and comparing truth with error. It is impossible to make the truth too plain."

A brother writes from Awim, Ala., October 19: "Our services are generally good each Lord's day. We have had preaching on the first Lord's day in each month since February. We had a good meeting and a singing school in August, but we have not heard any preaching since. We were disappointed in that the brother who labors with us could not be here in September or October. We hope he will come in November. We think it best to have regular preaching to keep us aroused to our duty. Let us be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

From Hal P. McDonald, Berry, Ala., October 17: "Alabama Christian College has entered upon the second month's work. Seldom do you see a faculty and a student body welded more closely to their work than we have here. Our enrollment increases every week. Our people need much to see the difference between Caesar's educational system and God's system as carried out by his faithful children. Many brethren in our field are patronizing State and sectarian schools, which, had they sent to us, would have helped in an hour of need and would have doubly repaid them in the exchange of heaven. Brethren, write for our catalogue and free literature. Send us your children. They need our work. They need it now."

Thorp Spring (Texas) Christian College has enrolled more than two hundred and sixty students. More than one hundred and seventy-five of these are in the high school and college. Others are to enter soon. C. R. Nichol says: "The outlook was never so bright. The students are at work, and the school has employed some of the most competent instructors in the South to do the teaching. The work is very strong in each department. We are grateful for all that has been done toward promoting the interests of our school. Many gospel preachers are showing an interest in the work here. The school will continue to make such improvements as are necessary to build the school up to one the strongest educational institutions in the South."

Batesville, October 16.—My meeting at Canadan, Okla. was just fine. Two were baptized. My meeting at Paoli resulted in five baptisms. I am now in a fine meeting at Batesville. I began here last Sunday. There have been four confessions to date.—W. H. George.

Olathe, October 16.—My four-weeks' tent meeting in Delta, eleven miles from Olathe, has had astonishing results so far. Aside from one addition from the Baptists, there seems now to be certain an addition of a whole church with one hundred members, preacher and all. This church is the "First Christian Church," of Delta. My discussions of instrumental music under my tent aroused this church to demand a discussion of the question in their house. I consented. The discussion was called on the night of October 2 and continued four nights. However, on the third night my antagonist, the Christian minister, Brother Obert, practically laid down under the proposition, publicly stating that, so far as he was concerned, he would be glad to see the instrument laid aside and peace and harmony brought about. I replied that this was what Christ commanded and what I was seeking. The debate suddenly assumed the form of a business meeting looking to the possible unity of the two bodies. The last night of the debate was wholly consumed in studying the matters of "conscience," "liberty," and "expediency," with the end of perfect unity in mind. It was evident with each speech that we were getting closer together. The debate closed with announcements that we were determined to get together and that a "business meeting" would be called within four nights for the purpose of removing all difficulties possible. A committee of four from each of the two bodies was named and the time set for the meeting. This meeting was held. The minister and the three elders of the church immediately announced their desire to roll the instrument out for the sake of unity, but the question of the certain driving of a few members away by such a dogmatic action (as it would appear to them) seemed to demand consideration. It was agreed, for the sake of these ignorant persons, that a couple of weeks more should be allowed in which to talk with these persons and try to get them to see the unrighteousness of their demands. In the meantime, since we cannot praise God when the instrument is being used, and since Christ commands us to praise him in our assembling to worship, it was agreed that a part of the praise should be without the instrument each Lord's day and evening, out of deference to our consciences, and a part with the instrument, so as to "ease off" in the minds of the others, it being announced to the audience that we would take no part in the song service when songs were being sung with the instrument. This temporary arrangement, purely to aid the elders and minister in their hard task of getting all their untaught associates to act in obedience to Christ, is understood to cover the two or three weeks deemed necessary for the task, and this only. We do this as an expression of our willingness to aid them in their noble undertaking, it being understood that all means will immediately be brought to bear upon the unruly ones to lead them into obedience; and in the event they cannot be persuaded, the change will be made over their protest. And if in any matter the pledge made us in these premises is not redeemed—if, in other words, the elders and those now seeking to get the instrument out yield to the demands of the few who wish to retain it—we will immediately establish a separate congregation in Delta. But we have every confidence that this will never be necessary. The organ is virtually dead in Delta. It merely awaits burial.—E. C. Fuqua.

Jacksonville, October 16.—On August 27 I began a meeting with the Mount Hope Church, in Lawrence County, Ala. On the third day of the meeting we put up a tent in town on the lot which the brethren recently purchased and onto which they expect to soon move the meetinghouse. At present the house is in an undesirable location about a mile from town. This meeting was in many respects a most enjoyable and profitable one, continuing through Sunday, September 10, with fine audiences and splendid hearing at every service. There were two baptisms, one from the Baptists who claimed for herself scriptural baptism, and four were restored. We were very much helped and encouraged during the last few days of the meeting by the presence and help of Brother and Sister I. B. Bradley, of Dickson, Tenn. Their presence was an inspiration. Brother Bradley preached one night. The church was left very much strengthened and encouraged, and all seemed determined to do more for the Lord. The work in Jacksonville continues to move along nicely. Since last report three have been baptized at our regular services and the congregation as a whole seems to be taking on new life. We are now in a tent meeting in the eastern part of the city, with very good interest being shown. The meeting is a week old, with one addition to date. This is the third tent meeting of the church this year, and we expect, the Lord willing, to follow this one with another before cool weather sets in. We solicit the continued prayers of all the faithful brethren everywhere in our efforts here.—WILLS H. ALLEN.

CUT THIS OUT

OLD ENGLISH RECIPE FOR CATARRHAL DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES.

If you know of some one who is troubled with Catarrhal Deafness, head noises or ordinary catarrh cut out this formula and hand it to them, and you will have been the means of saving some poor sufferer perhaps from total deafness. In England scientists for a long time past have recognized that catarrh is a constitutional disease and necessarily requires a constitutional treatment.

Sprays, inhalers and nose douches are liable to irritate the delicate air passages and force the disease into the middle ear which frequently means total deafness, or else the disease is driven down the air passages towards the lungs which is equally as dangerous. The following formula which is used extensively in the damp English climate is a constitutional treatment and should prove especially efficacious to sufferers here who live under more favorable climatic conditions.

Secure from your Druggist 1 ounce of Permint (Double strength). Take this home and add to it 1/2 pint of hot water and 4 ounces of granulated sugar; stir until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day. This will often bring quick relief from distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy and hearing improve as the inflammation in the eustachian tubes is reduced. Permint is used in this way as it acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system and has a slight tonic action that facilitates the recovery of the patient. The preparation is easy to make, cost little and is pleasant to take. Every person who has catarrh should give this treatment a trial.

Piles Cured at Home by New Absorption Method.

If you suffer from bleeding, itching, blind, or protruding piles, send me your address, and I will tell you how to cure yourself at home by the new absorption treatment; and will also send some of this home treatment free for trial, with references from your own locality, if requested. Users report immediate relief and speedy cure. Send no money, but tell others of this offer. Write to-day to Mrs. M. Summers, Box 145, South Bend, Ind.

sulted in three baptisms and, I trust, the entire church spiritually strengthened. I have held seven meetings since the first of June which resulted in thirty-four baptisms and two from the Baptists. This closes my evangelistic work for this season. I shall be glad to visit and talk with any congregation desiring to locate a man for the coming year.—C. H. Baker.

Eubank, October 12.—I am glad to report another good meeting, conducted by Brother James H. Morton, of Lewisburg, Tenn., beginning on September 19 and closing on September 23. Three young ladies were baptized. Two of them were my granddaughters. I did the baptizing. I want the prayers of all the faithful for these two granddaughters. This meeting was held with the church of Christ at Eubank, at the home of the writer. Brother Morton has just returned from a preaching trip thirty miles west of Eubank. He preached at Dry Fork and Bethany, near the Russell County line. At Dry Fork they had not heard a gospel sermon in five years. In meetings Brother Morton has held near Eubank, in Pulaski and Casey counties, there have been eighteen additions, including a few restorations. He will begin a meeting to-day at Freedom, in Pulaski County; thence to Etna; thence to Estersburg; thence to Norwood. Brother Morton is holding up remarkably well for a man of his age. He will be seventy-five at his next birthday.—A. Kenton Gooch.

Louisiana.

Amite, October 11.—I am in the second meeting here this year, drawing good crowds, notwithstanding there is a very strong revival being conducted in the Methodist Church. This is the home of Brother J. W. Johnson, who, with Brother Sitman, of New Orleans, is giving valuable assistance. We hope to lay plans for the erection of a building here.—A. K. Ramsey.

Michigan.

Detroit, October 18.—It gives us great pleasure to report the results of Brother Clarence G. Vincent's recent visit to the Detroit churches. On Friday, October 6, Plum Street Church was crowded to its capacity. It was a real "welcome-home" service, all the Detroit churches being represented. Brother Vincent, with the aid of a magic lantern, brought Japan and the Japanese missions into our very midst. The pictures were well chosen to give a splendid idea of the progressive quality of the people; and, above all, the lecturer brought home the need of Japan to-day, the opportunity of Christian missions, and in particular the need of Tokyo missions. The pictures and the talk were both educational in the highest sense—Christ for every man's life. No man could look at the intelligent faces of the Japanese Christians and fail to be convinced that Japanese have it in them to become splendid Christian workers. The Detroit churches are going to get into this work. Already there has been felt a revival of missionary interest. Brother Otto Fujimori is dear to the hearts of us all; and plans for the larger support of his work, as well as that of Brethren Vincent and McCaleb, are being formulated. This morning Plum Street took up a collection of one hundred dollars to begin the contribution. A mass meeting of all the churches is also being planned for an intimate discussion of the needs of the Japanese workers. Brother Vincent is beginning a tour of the churches of America. Those who are yet to hear him have a treat in store. We have a group of rare workers in Japan. Let us get well acquainted with them, so we may all be proud of them and feel that we are having a personal knowledge of, and a personal part in, this work. "They that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." Let us hold up the hands of the workers, that the forces of righteousness may continue on to greater victories.—Alex. Linn Trout.

Missouri.

Poplar Bluff, October 10.—I recently held a meeting near Hardin, Ky., and established a small congregation there. My next meeting was at Grinnell, Ill. We established a congregation of twelve members there and converted a Baptist preacher. This makes two Baptist preachers that I have converted with "the sword of the Spirit." I next came to Missouri and held two meetings; thence back to Illinois, where I held two fine meetings—one at Samoth and one at Berl. I went next to Kentucky and held a meeting, but had to close too soon in order to debate with F. S. Gipson, a Missionary Baptist, near Quin, Mo.—J. J. Padgett.

Ohio.

Trimbale, October 16.—I began a meeting with good interest at this place yesterday. On the second Lord's day I closed a twenty-two days' meeting at Trenton, Fla., with twenty-five additions to the local congregation—nineteen baptized, two from the Baptists, and four restored to the fellowship. The congregation there endeavors to maintain purity of membership, excluding from their fellowship disorderly members and refusing to see them come back to the fold for shelter and security.—Flavel Hall.

Oklahoma.

Marietta, October 12.—I have just closed my thirteenth meeting for 1916. I have two more meetings yet promised and then I will begin my monthly appointments. A good deal of my work this year has been mission work. Financial support has been very deficient, but otherwise I have been wonderfully blessed. The Lord has so graciously blessed me in my feeble efforts this year that my determination is to do more for him another year. The church of Christ is growing rapidly in Oklahoma. We have almost every imaginable religion to oppose us in this State. So let us do all we can to make believers of the people. It takes both churches and preachers to do the work.—F. S. Vance.

Comanche, October 18.—Wife and I left home in Comanche three months ago (July 18) and started on a tour in which I was to engage in preaching and debating. Our first stop was a short one at Summerfield, Okla., for a little debate with a socialist and preaching over Sunday; next a three-nights' stop, preaching at Booneville, Ark.; thence to Moreland for a short meeting, with splendid interest; next to Beebe and Romance for debates with G. G. Hamilton, socialist; from there to Round Rock Schoolhouse, near Dover, preaching one week and baptizing three; then a week at Gravel Hill; and from there to Atkins for one week, with one baptized—all this in Arkansas. From Atkins we went to Shell Knob, Mo., where I preached two weeks, with ten baptized and one restored. We then made our way back to Oklahoma, stopping with the brethren at Seminole over the second Sunday in October. We then came home for a brief rest, after almost three months' continuous labor and travel. A few days more and I will be in the field again. I have some work promised, but I have some time for the winter not promised, also some time in 1917 not yet arranged. I would be glad to hear from those needing my services.—U. G. Wilkinson.

Tennessee.

Gallatin, October 16.—Our meeting here starts off well. Brother W. G. Klingman is song leader, and that is a guarantee that the singing is fine.—C. E. Holt.

Spencer, October 14.—For the past six days I have been assisting the brethren at Spencer in a meeting. The visible results are two baptized and one reclaimed.—Fred L. Wallace.

Hohenwald, October 18.—I began a meeting at this place last night. This is my second meeting here this year. The prospects are good for a meeting. We have a number of loyal brethren here. The brethren and sisters have improved the appearance of the church building a great deal since our last meeting and the church seems to be in good condition.—F. O. Howell.

Mount Pleasant, October 14.—Our meeting began at Riversburg on October 1 and closed on October 11, with four baptized into Christ. There was good interest all the way through, the tent being full to overflowing all the time. The churches at Pulaski and New Providence helped some in this meeting by their presence and in a financial way. May others follow their example. This was a mission meeting.—J. Clifford Murphy.

St. Joseph, October 4.—My work in the Master's vineyard resulted for the summer about as follows: At Mountain Springs, Ala., three baptisms; Cool Springs, Tenn., no confessions; New Zion, Tenn., two baptisms; Romine Schoolhouse, Ala., no confessions; Mount Zion, Ala., twenty-five additions—seventeen baptisms; Lone Cedar, Ala., two baptisms; Shiloh, Ala., no confessions; tent meeting three miles of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., seven baptized; mission meeting near Red Hill, Tenn., one baptism. The meeting at the latter point should have continued longer, but on the eighth day of the meeting I was called home. My wife had fallen from a wagon and sustained serious injuries. If she gets sufficiently able for me to leave her, I will begin a meeting at Crewstown, Tenn., on October 8. Brethren, pray for me.—William Behel.

Decherd, October 16.—I have just closed a tent meeting at Dixie Schoolhouse, at the water, with twenty-five additions. This was one of the most interesting meetings I have held this year. This was my second meeting there this year. When I went there last April, there were only two members in that neighborhood—Brother Joe V. Davis and wife. There was a great deal of prejudice, but I got them to hear the truth. Among those added were four Methodists, four Baptists, and three Dunkards. Mr. Joe Sherrill, an outsider, gave us a choice lot on which to build a meetinghouse. We all came together, cleaned off the lot, and the brethren are going to build at once. If any one wishes to help these brethren, they should send their contributions to Brother Joe Davis, at Hillsboro, Tenn. The brethren are poor in this world's goods, but they are determined to build a meetinghouse. Since the first of April I have been instrumental in getting one hundred and sixty souls added to the church of Christ, with two new meetinghouses being built. I have received three hundred and twenty-five dollars for my work this year. I have many calls that I cannot fill. The cry is: "Come over and preach for us." Brethren, we need more preachers in this field.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Cleveland, October 18.—Nearly three years ago Brother George W. Farmer held a several-days' meeting in a small rented hall in the town of Cleveland. There were at that time less than twenty members of the congregation. In the spring following Brother Farmer's meeting I was induced to move to Cleveland, the capital of Bradley County, and undertake "the work of an evangelist" in and around Cleveland. With many disappointments, we have done the best we could. There are more members now than there were when Brother Farmer held that meeting in the little hall. They are now erecting a little brick-veneered house in which to worship. I am teaching school twenty miles from Cleveland, but I go home as often as I can and do and say whatever is possible to encourage the church to continue to sacrifice in order to sustain the cause in that beautiful part of Tennessee. Recently two families have moved to Cleveland from Clifty, who are Christians, and have cast their lot with the church of Christ. Last Lord's day we had some young married people from Cookeville to worship with us; also Brother R. L. Heffington, of Riceville, encouraged us with his presence. Brother George W. Farmer is to begin a meeting on the second Lord's day in November for the Cleveland church. We think it very fitting that Brother Farmer hold the first meeting in the new house, since he started the good work. The church at Stewart's Creek, in Rutherford County, sent us a contribution of eight dollars and seventy-five cents to help in the good work. Are there others who will do likewise? The cause is not self-sustaining in Bradley County, but the preacher is trying to be. Any contribution sent to J. M. Carl, Cleveland, Tenn., will be used to carry on the work of the Lord in this East Tennessee section.—Fred M. Little.

Take Iron, Says Doctor, if You Want Plenty of "Stay There" Strength Like an Athlete!

Ordinary Nuxated Iron Will Make Delicate,
Nervous, Rundown People 200%
Stronger in Two Week's Time,
In Many Cases.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Most people foolishly seem to think they are going to get renewed health and strength from some stimulating medicine, secret nostrum or narcotic drug, said Dr. Sauer, a well known Specialist who has studied widely both in this country and Europe, when, as a matter of fact, real and true strength can only come from the food you eat. But people often fail to get the strength out of their food because they haven't enough iron in their blood to enable it to change food into living matter. From their weakened, nervous condition they know something is wrong, but they can't tell what, so they generally commence doctoring for stomach, liver or kidney trouble or symptoms of some other ailment caused by the lack of iron in the blood. This thing may go on for years, while the patient suffers untold agony. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test. See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous, rundown people who were ailing all the while, double and even triple their strength and endurance and entirely get rid of all symptoms of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles in from ten to fourteen days' time simply by taking iron in the proper form, and this after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. But don't take the old forms of reduced iron, iron acetate or tincture of iron simply to save a few cents. You must take iron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated like nuxated iron if you want it to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless. Many an athlete or prize fighter has won the day simply because he knew the secret of great strength and endurance and filled his blood with iron before he went into the arena, while many another has gone down to inglorious defeat simply for the lack of iron.

NOTE—Nuxated Iron recommended above by Dr. Sauer, is one of the newer organic iron compounds. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach; on the contrary, it is a most potent remedy in nearly all forms of indigestion, as well as for nervous, run-down conditions. The Manufacturers have such great confidence in Nuxated Iron that they offer to forfeit $100.00 to any charitable institution if they cannot take any man or woman under 60 who lacks iron and increase their strength 200 per cent or over in four weeks' time provided they have no serious organic trouble. They also offer to refund your money if it does not at least double your strength and endurance in ten days' time. It is dispensed by all druggists.

Evangelists as Officers.

BY U. G. WILKINSON.

Those brethren who for reasons unknown want to deny the official character of evangelists and to advocate and advance the peculiar and unorthodox position that we have no evangelists now have got themselves into a peculiar mess of late. The latest position with them is that Timothy and Titus were specially selected to perform a special work at certain special times and places, and does not authorize any one to do a general work of the same kind, or to say that the character of work done by them is supposed to possess a general characteristic or to be perpetuated beyond their time or the places where they were instructed and required to do his work. Here I am reminded of the old couplets:

So many people in these latter days
That read the Bible in so many ways,
Some read as though it did not speak to them,
But to the people of Jerusalem;
And others read, as I have often thought,
To teach the Book instead of being taught.

Suppose we admit that the work of Timothy and Titus was a special work, then it would furnish us with a precedent for cases of a similar nature. And when the nature of the case arises for the work of an evangelist, either general or special, to become necessary, wisdom would suggest that we follow the Bible precedent as the safest method. If not, why not? So you have not mended the matter at all in making the instructions given to evangelists in the Epistle to Timothy and Titus special instead of general. You will have to try again. We certainly have such work to do now—and that, too, in abundance—as was performed by Timothy and Titus; hence we still need just such officials as they, as Campbell and all other great Bible scholars in all ages have understood and taught, until these modern innovators, who wish to place all the power—executive, judicial, and ministerial—in the local bishops, mis-called by them "elders." But we are not ready to accept their innovations in the face of the plain Bible instructions.

It is true that evangelists frequently abuse and misuse their powers; and this is especially true of the "located evangelists." But the same may be truly said of the bishop, and especially the "chairman elder." If that is grounds for denying the power of the one, it certainly is also for the other. Since for the goose is sauce for the gander. In fact, when it comes to being "lords over God's heritage" instead of "ensamples to the flock," as Peter commands (1 Pet. 5), if I am to be guided by common experience in the matter (and I know of no other way), then the bishop has got the evangelist skinned a city block. In very many places we find such officers (bishops) believing themselves to be the all-powerful rulers for both God and man, whose mandates must never be questioned or reviewed, and any one who does so is considered presumptuous indeed. They decide who shall and shall not preach, and when and where and how. They decide when the meeting shall be held and who shall hold it, who shall be withdrawn from and who retained. In fact, they consider the church as an absolute monarchy, with themselves as monarch, to decide with as much authority as a pope himself all questions—legislative, judicial, ministerial, and executive—without the right of appeal or review on the part of others. Now who can beat this for abuse of power and authority?

If there are no evangelists now to "set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders," then who is to do these things? And whence does the bishop receive his official authority? Is he made a bishop by natural or acquired qualifications? Is he elected to office by the church? Please give us some light here, and please, too, cite the passages that support your contentions, if you do not quote them.

The truth is that there is as much authority for the evangelist as for the bishop; one is as important in the church as the other. Each has a particular work to perform, and each is absolutely essential to the well-being of the church. The fact that any member of the church may perform, under the proper circumstances, the work of an evangelist, even an old woman, as has been suggested by some brethren, is no argument against the existence and necessity for the office. The same is true of the bishop. Under the proper circumstances, she might perform the duties of a bishop with equal authority in scripture as well as reason. So might she, also, under the proper circumstances, perform similar duties to those performed by the President of the United States; but that would neither make her the President nor prove that there is no such official as the President. A crow might fly across a field and drop a grain of corn from his mouth, and the corn might grow and produce a stalk and ear, the same as if it had been planted by the farmer; but that would not be called planting corn; neither would it make the crow a farmer, much less to prove that there is no such thing as a farmer.

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION

Outlines of Bible Study (Revised and Enlarged) is a book of one hundred and twenty pages, besides five full-page maps covering all Bible lands. It is printed in large, clear type, on good, heavy paper, and is substantially bound in stiff cloth.

The book contains seventeen drill lessons for use in Bible drills, Bible readings, or any other Bible class where it is desired to cover the entire scope of the Sacred Record in a short time.

Outlines of Bible Study is not a commentary in any sense of the word. It contains but few comments. It is not "literature" in the same sense that some object to literature. It rather guides one in his study that it may be intelligent and systematic.

As a tonic and remedial agent in the treatment of tuberculosis, this element is being studied by scientists and physicians everywhere.

For more than two decades users of Eckman's Alterative have tested its efficacy in such cases, for calcium chlorid is one of the chief constituents of this preparation, which has produced beneficial results in thousands of instances. And in this form it is so combined as to be easily assimilated.

Again, let me say that the powers and duties of the evangelist and bishop are different. Neither has the right to usurp the place of authority of the other. The bishop's power and authority are local, confined to his own congregation over which he is overseer. It is purely executive—that is, to carry into effect the wishes of the body over which he presides; and as such, when it is exercised according to the Bible—that is, lawfully (2 Tim. 2: 5)—it is absolute. The evangelist's power and authority are not necessarily local, not executive, nor judicial, but advisory and ministerial. He can "reprove, rebuke, exhort," "preach the word;" "commit the same unto faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also," etc. (2 Tim. 2: 2; 4: 1-5.) Also, he has the duty to "set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders," and to perform such other acts as is authorized to be performed by him in the first chapter and, in fact, the entire book of Titus, as well as the books of Timothy. And this he is certainly to do with "all authority." (Tit. 2: 15.) And even those brethren who deny the existence of the evangelist—that is, the scriptural authority for his existence—go on exercising all these powers and duties, and even frequently exceeding them. How can they do so, if they have no such authority? "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth." But enough for the present.

A Simple Therapeutic Statement.

The problem in cases of coughs, colds, sore throat, and to a degree in croup is:

First, to remove the phlegm which forms a culture for the germs of these diseases and prevents medication of the inflamed membranes.

Second, to apply to the diseased membranes a germicide or antiseptic which will destroy the germs of the disease.

Third, to allay the inflammation or blood congestion in the membranes, thereby permitting them to return to their normal functions.

Mentholatum accomplishes these ends.

The phlegm is loosened by the volatile oils which are pungent and penetrating, in a sense tickling the nerves to an accelerated discharge, which liquifies the phlegm and hastens its removal.

As these oils are antiseptic, they cleanse the diseased surfaces and stop the propagation of the dangerous germs.

The volatile oils of Mentholatum are slightly irritating, acting as a cleanly poultice to the inflamed surfaces and driving out the inflammation.

That is why Mentholatum liberally applied is found so useful in treating coughs, colds, croup, and sore throat.

Huntsville, October 18.—A successful meeting has just closed in our town, held by Brother R. A. Largen. The meeting continued sixteen days, and was one of the most successful meetings that has been held in Huntsville for some time. Twenty-three were added by baptism and reclamation. Great interest was shown by all that heard Brother Largen and all learned to love him. I am sure it will prove a great blessing to any congregation that is fortunate enough to secure his services. He bids fair to do much good, as he is young and energetic, yet godly in his deportment.—H. F. Taylor.

Oklahoma.

Purdy, October 18.—I began a meeting here on Sunday morning, which promises to be very successful. I go from here to Robinson, Ark. I have no engagements after January 20, 1916, but have every week occupied until then. Let some church in Northeastern Oklahoma write for a meeting the latter part of January. Just before coming to Purdy I closed one of the best little meetings I ever held, five miles south of Hwasse, Ark., at "High Top" Schoolhouse. Five were baptized, one of whom had been a Baptist, and three were added otherwise. Correspondents may address me here for the next two or three weeks. My permanent address is Gravette, Ark.—Robert R. Hull.

Tennessee.

Riceville, October 13.—On Saturday night before the third Lord's day in September I began a meeting at Dunegan, Ga., in a new union church house, it being the first meeting held in the house. The meeting was held over three Lord's days, closing on the night of the first Lord's day in October. Six were baptized into Christ. After the congregation had been dismissed, a young woman who had been baptized into the Baptist Church fifteen years ago requested that I come to her home, which was ten miles away, the next day, and baptize her into Christ. When I got to the appointed place for baptism, I found the young woman and another lady who had been a Methodist, whose husband I had baptized a few weeks before, both at the water dressed for baptism. I am now at Riceville in a meeting, Brother Will Hailford, from Oklahoma, is in a meeting at Union Grove, near Cleveland, and has baptized eight to date.—W. C. Phillips.

Murfreesboro, October 10.—The meeting near Lawrenceburg closed on Sunday night, after continuing eight days. The meeting was a kind of continuation of a meeting held by Brother Thornberry a few days prior to the time I commenced, and which resulted in about sixteen baptisms. I preached twice the first Sunday, once every day in the week to good crowds, and the last Sunday there were really four services—one at 11 A.M.; one at the water, where two made the confession; one at the home of Brother Gather (where we were rained in) at 7:30 P.M.; then, when we were about ready to retire for the night, a runner came and said the crowd waited at the tent, and we went at nine o'clock and had a little meeting there. I met lots of good people and enjoyed the meeting very much. The Christians of Lawrenceburg and other near-by places were constantly in attendance and helped much in every way. Brother Thornberry, who labors at Lawrenceburg, was with us almost every day, and we found him a most excellent man in every way. I visited the school at Lawrenceburg, where he teaches the Bible every day the High School runs. This is a great work, and the good to come of it cannot be measured. Ten were baptized in my meeting, and we feel that much other good was accomplished. I go to Winchester tomorrow.—R. D. Smith.

Nashville, October 5.—On August 20 I began a meeting with the Summerfield congregation, four miles from Tracy City, and continued it two weeks. Six were added as a result, and the church said much other good was accomplished. On September 3 I began at Tracy City and continued for two weeks. This meeting resulted in one baptism and one from the Baptists. From there I went to Pryor Ridge for a meeting, beginning on September 17 and closing on Friday night, September 29. This meeting will long be remembered by me. Ten were added, all by baptism. One was a woman over eighty-five years old. Another remarkable incident occurred. While baptizing there, a man (John Dyer, of Tracy City, Route 1) came to me at the water's edge and said, in the exact language of Acts 8: 36: "Here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" I answered in the exact language of Philip: "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." He then, in the exact language of the convert of old, said: "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." Then, without another word or a moment's delay, I led him down into the water (and we both went down into the water, as in Acts 8: 38), and I baptized him. Who can doubt this case? I cannot close without making mention of the exceedingly courteous treatment received at each place. These congregations are all poor as to this world's goods, but rich in grace and the love of the truth, and know exactly how to show genuine, old-fashioned, Southern hospitality, that will not only make you feel at home, but to be at home with them. To know them is to love them. May God's blessings ever be theirs.—W. W. Bates.

Elora, October 17.—I began preaching at a schoolhouse, about five miles west of Iron City, on the fourth Sunday in September, near the home of my brother, A. J. Bradley. I preached only six sermons. I do not think I did any good at all. My brother is trying to keep up the Lord's-day service there, but is having a hard time. We intended, in our recent effort, to hold over the next Sunday, but on account of "wild cat" or some other kind of liquor we had to close. The next Sunday, the first day of October, I preached two sermons to a very large crowd at the Wolf Creek Schoolhouse, with a fine dinner on the ground. A few of us met at the Wade graveyard on Saturday, September 30, to remound and otherwise beautify and identify the graves of fathers, mothers, and other loved ones, and expected a service there; but business and other things, which seemed to control most of our Iron City people, brought out a very small number, and the service was declined. The writer holds the Wade graveyard in sacred remembrance because of the sleeping remains of loved ones there. On the second Sunday in October we began at Gnat Grove, in Marshall County, and closed on the third Sunday morning, preaching fourteen times. Two were baptized and one was restored. I have done quite a lot of preaching there for about twenty-five years. We certainly have quite a lot of good people there, and at the close of the recent meeting they remembered their old brother in a very acceptable and substantial way. Our audiences there increased till our crowds could not be seated. They had me to promise to be with them again next October should I be spared and able to attend. After closing at Gnat Grove, I met a nice audience in the bank building at Diana on Sunday night. They will build a house of worship there at an early date.—J. R. Bradley.

Texas.

Fort Worth, October 12.—I have just closed a very fine meeting with the church of Christ at Alamogordo, N. M. Five were baptized and one restored. The "hobby" faction in that place hates the Gospel Advocate and all systematic efforts to teach and build up the church; but we have a fine band of disciples in Alamogordo.—T. W. Phillips.

Floresville, October 17.—I closed a good ten-days' meeting at Fairview yesterday. Four were baptized, four were restored, and one took membership from the Verdi congregation. Some of the congregation at Verdi assisted us much in the singing. They had not had a meeting in four years. The church was much encouraged and some prejudice was removed.—G. M. Rance.

Childress, October 8.—I have just closed a mission meeting of one week here at home. I baptized one lady, who had been brought up a Catholic, her husband a Holiness, and she had a battle to get the chance to obey the Lord. The devil surely did rage when he saw she was determined to obey, but she won out, and is happy to-night. I leave to-night for a meeting at Hamilton, and have time for a ten-days' meeting right after that. Who wants the time from the fifth Sunday in this month to the second Sunday in November? Now just a word about my book, "The Soul of Man." It is not free, as some have understood it, but is thirty cents per copy; so when you write for one, do not write a postal, but send thirty cents in a letter, and you will never regret the price.—Tice Elkins.

Memphis, October 16.—During the meeting at Amarillo last July, in which Brother F. L. Young and I were leaders, a young lady was baptized whose home is at Dimmitt, county seat of Castro County, where there was no church of Christ. I then suggested to some Amarillo sisters that we save this girl by my holding a meeting and starting a congregation at her home. This was a happy thought to these sisters; so Sister C. C. Loving, wife of one of the Amarillo elders, arranged the meeting, enlisted some Hereford brethren to help finance it, and then raised some more money in the Amarillo church. I began the meeting, in the only meetinghouse at Dimmitt, on October 1, with some visiting brethren from Hereford and with a very large audience of Dimmitt people. I tried to "speak the truth in love," and "not to strive, but be gentle," and the people, seemingly unprejudiced, came throughout the meeting and seemed to enjoy the word. On Sunday, October 8, the meeting came to a close, with three services, one sister returning from the Methodists and one from the "progressives." I left under promise to return next summer and hold a two-weeks' meeting. While Dimmitt gave me a large contribution, yet I was sent out by the Amarillo and Hereford churches and reported to them. Does not this seem parallel with Antioch sending out Paul and Barnabas and their returning to Antioch and reporting to the congregation? Is not this God's plan? If so, why not use the plan more? Really, is not this better, in that it stimulates the congregation to do such services and reap reward, than for the preacher to do all the arranging, all the preaching and singing, and most of the paying, and then a vast amount of grumbling (some do) and charging the church with being "slothful and stingy"? Ninety-five per cent of the congregations will assist in any good work when they have their attention directed properly to it. Brethren, let us work God's plan more, and thereby save many precious souls. Eternity alone will reveal the good our work at Dimmitt has already done. May God bless the faithful at Amarillo and Hereford for their noble example.—O. M. Reynolds.

Recipe for Gray Hair.

To half pint of water add one ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

Forbearance.

"Forbearance" is a magic word in home life. In it is wrapped up the love that suffereth long and is kind, that seeketh not her own, that thinketh no evil, that is not easily provoked, and that endureth all things. We are too "touchy." Our common temptation is to "stand up for our rights" about trivial things, when the Christlier way would be to yield cheerfully to others. Forbearance is essential to a happy home life. Without it there must be continual jarring and discord. With it there will be peace.—Selected.

The Home.

The home life claims an obligation from every member of a family. Our debt to the common interests of the home is more real than our debt to most of the outside affairs that demand so much of our attention. Put home first. We should recognize the home as a divine institution which we dare not neglect. This truth is too much overlooked, and the result is a dangerous decay of the home life.—Exchange.

The Perfect Duties.

Gentleness and cheerfulness come before all morality. They are the perfect duties. If your morals make you dreary, they are wrong. I do not say, "give them up," for they may be all you have; but conceal them like a vice, lest they spoil the lives of better and simpler people.—Stevenson.

The Judgment.

BY C. R. AUSTIN.

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." (Rev. 20: 12.)

This is the language of the apostle John, written under very trying and peculiar circumstances. He was an exile on the island of Patmos. While there he had the great spiritual vision the record of which we call "Revelation." He was permitted to be a witness of "things to come." He saw the trials and triumphs of the people of God through all ages. He saw the final consummation of all things in the universal judgment. There is no theory nor speculation in this language; hence there can be no error in accepting John's description as being absolutely true and accurate. Not only this, but we should look upon this language as the grandest description of the grandest event that we have ever thought of.

First we are impressed with the universal feature of the judgment. "I saw the dead, small and great," John says. The commission under which the apostles preached was universal. "Go ye into all the world," "teach all nations," "preach the gospel to every creature" were expressions in the instructions of the glorified Christ. This universal commission places universal responsibility upon Christians to carry the gospel and upon sinners to accept it. This further necessitates a universal judgment. The king on his throne will not escape the judgment any more than the peasant in his hovel. The rich, the poor, the bond, the free, male and female, Jew and Greek, will be there. We may and can refuse to obey the gospel. We can refuse to go to church. We can spurn every command of our God here, but we will all be at the judgment. Paul says: "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." (2 Cor. 5: 10.)

There comes to me a familiar courtroom scene. The prisoner is being tried for his life. He has an able attorney to represent him, and his trial is to be before a just judge. There are statute books there containing the laws of the commonwealth in which he lives. He is to be tried by "the law and testimony." The law is the written standard of morality, and the testimony is to show whether his life comes up to that standard or falls short of it. Somewhat similar to this, we have under consideration God's great court room. We ourselves are the ones that will be tried for our lives. Christ as an able attorney will plead for us at the bar of justice. God is a just and righteous Judge. We will be tried by the law (the books) and the testimony (the deeds done in the body).

"Ignorance of the law excuses no man." This is a familiar legal phrase. We can see the necessity of it in civil law, because if ignorance of the law would excuse me for a violation of the law, I would be sure never to learn the law. How is it with God's law? Will he excuse me at the judgment if I have failed to learn his law here? It is strange logic to say that he will. Jesus says to the unbelieving Jews: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." (John 5: 39.) Peter puts knowledge as one of the additions in 2 Pet. 1: 6. The Bible comes to us as God's law. It will be his standard at judgment. It is sealed with the blood of his own Son. It tells us how to prepare for judgment. God will hold us responsible for learning and knowing his law. A man may do wonderful things in the name of the Lord and yet be unable to stand the trial at the last day. The Savior speaks of such in his Sermon on the Mount. "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. 7: 22, 23.) Even though we may claim to do many great things in the name of the Lord, unless it be according to that written in the books, it will not profit.

Let us imagine that we are standing with John on Patmos, and that God is to allow us to see some of the noted characters of the earth as they pass before the Judge to learn their destiny. We would see Cain and Abel, perhaps, as the first ones. The books are opened. The law to them is that they were to offer animal sacrifices to Jehovah. Abel's works are such as are commanded in God's law; he stands the test. Cain did not obey the law to him, and a fearful day will be the judgment to him. Next, we might see Abraham come in the mighty con-course before God. The books are opened, and he is judged out of the things written in the books. The writing in the books says for him to go out of Ur of Chaldea into a strange land. And "by faith he arose and went, not knowing whither he went."

The books say for him to offer Isaac for a burnt offering on Mount Moriah; and he did this. His works fill up the standard of God's law in the books. We see another great man pass before God in judgment. This is the great king of Babylon, Belshazzar. His works are not those commanded in the books. He disregarded the law of the Lord and defiled the sacred furniture of Jehovah's temple. His doom has already been written on the wall of his palace: "Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting." From this viewpoint let us look once more; and this time behold John the Baptist, the harbinger of the Christ. The books are opened, and more law is found with which he must comply. Not only the national law of Israel, but special law with reference to himself must be considered. He must prepare the way of the Christ, must be a voice in the wilderness. He must turn the hearts of the fathers to the children and the hearts of the children to the fathers, must prepare a people made ready for the Lord. He did this faithfully and died a martyr to the cause of righteousness. To such God says: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." All these faithful characters that obeyed God will stand the trial and be eternally justified and glorified in God's presence.

Let us once more imagine that we can leave Patmos and stand in God's presence, ourselves to be judged of him. This will be a reality some day. When our works are made known, when the books are opened, when the comparison is made, will we be acquitted or condemned? God's law says for us to believe on his Son. Can you say at judgment, "I did this?" The law says for you to repent of your sins. (Acts 2: 38.) Have you done this? If not, you are not ready. The law says for you to confess Jesus as the Christ. (Rom. 10: 9, 10.) Have you made the confession? When the books are opened, they will read therein that you should be baptized. (Acts 22: 16; 2: 38.) Have you done this? It is a part of the preparation for the great trial. The law says that we are to live holy, consecrated lives, adding good to our lives and taking out that which is bad. Until we have done these things we are taking an awful risk to meet God in the judgment trial. This life is a preparatory period. The law cannot be changed. (See Gal. 1: 8, 9.) Our works must conform to God's standard. May we so live that we may meet God in peace and stand justified in his presence.

The Potter Orphans' Home.

BY WILLIS H. ALLEN.

It was my privilege recently to spend a few pleasant hours at the Potter Orphans' Home. It was a genuine pleasure to me to look into the bright faces of the thirty children of the Home, some of whom I had known before, and to watch the activity and industry shown by them. All seemed to be happy and contented and are progressing well in their studies and their work. Brother M. L. Moore, the new superintendent of the Home, outlined to me the plans and work that he was endeavoring to get started; and he is evidently going to make things move there, provided he can receive the necessary support from the brethren. At about six o'clock the bell rang, and I was invited to eat supper with the little ones, and I did my part. The children formed a line in the big hall and marched into the dining room in an orderly way, each one taking his place at the tables. Before thanks were expressed, the children still standing, Brother Moore had them to repeat in concert the first twelve verses of the fifth chapter of Matthew, which was done in a perfect manner, each child pronouncing every word together. This was especially impressive to me. Brother Moore is instructing them daily in the regular school branches, and especially in the word of the Lord, and is impressing them with his earnestness.

While I was with them, I wished that every Christian could have an opportunity to visit this Home and see something of what it means to care for little orphans. And I thought of this scripture: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." And what a blessing it is to all who are having a part in this great work! The work is altogether worthy of the greatest sacrifices made for it and of those that might yet be made. Many are contributing regularly to this good work; but it is taking all of the funds to meet the expenses of the work at present, and the contributions are not sufficient to enable the trustees to do what they would like to do. It has for some time been their intention to install a system of waterworks in the building, and some contributions have been made especially for this, but as yet the funds have been insufficient to meet the expenses of this installment. Brethren, think what this will mean to these little ones in convenience, comfort, and health during the cold winter months that will soon be on them. They need it and ought to have it. Let us provide the means for the waterworks. A little help from

The Needs of the Church at Tupelo, Ark.

BY W. S. MORGAN.

Allow us to ask, through the Gospel Advocate, the brethren to please send us one Lord's-day's contribution to help complete our church house at Tupelo. We are a loyal congregation, twenty-two in number, set in order last August. We now meet regularly on the first of the week in the school-house. We have all of our framing on the ground and the building site paid for. We lack about two hundred and seventy-five dollars having enough subscribed to pay for the house. We hope the brethren in Christ will assist us. It looks like we have done almost all we can do, unless we can get help. We wish to thank the brethren for the liberal help already given. We thank all in advance for the help they may give.

"EDIFYING AS THE NEED MAY BE"

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Teachers and Dancing.

I do not know of another thing that needs to be more closely guarded by the overseers of God's flock than to see to it that the teachers of the Bible classes in the church are men and women of good moral character. It is not enough to ask whether such and such an applicant is a member of the church, but it should be known that he or she is a member above reproach. We should remember that the example of teachers counts for more than their words. One may be proficient along other lines; but if the example is bad, proficiency will not atone for the lack of character. In this age, when dancing is becoming more and more popular, it is not unusual to find a teacher who winks at this popular craze. I have known of a few cases where the teacher was heard to say to the class members: "I see no harm in it." Thus the young people in the class who are hesitating about accepting invitations to dance are led to believe that it is so mild a thing as not to receive the condemnation of a leading church member. Surely it was in rebuke of such a worldly-minded spirit that Jesus said: "Whoso shall cause one of these little ones that believe on me to stumble, it is profitable for him that a great millstone should be hanged about his neck, and that he should be sunk in the depth of the sea. Woe unto the world because of occasions of stumbling."

Can See the Harm if You Look For It.

Despite the opinion of many light-hearted people, there is harm in dancing, and the most thoughtless Christian can be made to see that harm of the matter is brought home in the right way. The editor of the Herald of Christian Liberty has given some pertinent and timely remarks along this line that are worthy of reproduction. He says:

No dancer ought to hold the place of a teacher in the Sunday school. I know there are some who differ from me as to this fact, but answer me one question: Is there any reason in having a teacher take charge of a Sunday-school class on Sunday, seeking to teach the pupils the way of life, and then go out from the Sunday school during the week and kill by dancing the work she tried to do on Sunday? That is just what will happen. There is not only no sense in doing that sort of thing, but it is a course unworthy of the Christian life, and should not be tolerated in any Christian Sunday school. There are few bigger stumblingstones in the church of Christ to-day than dancing church members. Occasionally I hear one asking: "What harm is there in dancing?" It is the pathway to ruin. If you do not know what that means, ask some ripe and experienced Christian to tell you what it means. If you cannot get such a friend to show you wherein it is the way to ruin, then send to some bookstore and buy and read a little book called "From the Ballroom to Hell." That will make the danger plain. I once met a young man who was a great lover of the dance. I condemned it in his presence. He declared there was no harm in it. I said: "I can convince you (and he was a dancer) in three minutes." He said: "O, no, you can't!" I said: "Let me try." I then asked him this question: "Would you be willing to see your sisters go on the floor and dance with any young man?" He had three beautiful sisters. He looked at me hesitatingly, and then said: "No, I would not be willing to see them dance with any one." Exactly! A dancer, a man who knows from actual practice what evil there is in the dance, was unwilling to see any man dance with his sister. Why? O, because he knew the evil in it. He was not willing to see his sisters exposed to that evil, but he was willing to induce some other man's sister to so expose herself. The dance has no place in the life of any faithful Christian. Keep your Sunday-school teachers out of it, by all means, both for their own good and for the good of the children under their instruction, and also for the good of the church.

To overseers and teachers alike the advice of Paul is superlatively important: "Be thou an ensample to them that believe, in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity." No one can be an example in purity who encourages dancing. And here is a case where a little leaven of the evil sort will leaven the whole lump.

Faith in the Class.

Do you ever become discouraged at the prospect of making something good and great out of the rough boys or the apparently thoughtless girls in your class? If so, you will find a very strengthening thought in Paul's definition of faith. You should not lose faith in your class material so long as you have the faith which is the "assurance of things hoped for." Miss Tarbell truly says: "It is teachers who have had such assurance and conviction, who have seen in their pupils more than was evident to most beholders, and looking beyond the carelessness and thoughtlessness, and even, it may be, the actual evil in their lives, have seen the noble characters into which they might grow, who have persevered and won. Never lose faith in your pupils; never falter in your belief that their souls are adapted to the seed you are trying to sow."

Really, dear teacher, you can test your own faith to-day by analyzing your feelings toward your class. How strong is that faith? Let it be strong enough to see a Timothy or a Titus in the making, and never an unhappy Demas.

Leading Them to Christ.

A good teacher will usually lead pupils to Christ. I have noted that when I preach at places where there are live, consecrated teachers, we invariably have confessions. Time and again I have heard them say through tears of joy and thanksgiving: "Brother Lipscomb, that one is a member of my class." Have you been the Phillip to take God's message to each member of your class? S. D. Gordon tells of a friend who attended the funeral of a young woman. Meeting the preacher of the church where she attended, he asked: "Was Mary a Christian?" To his surprise, a pained look came into the man's face as he replied: "Three weeks ago I had a strong impulse to speak to her; but I did not, and I do not know." A moment later he met the girl's Sunday-school teacher, and asked her the same question. Quickly the tears came as she said: "Two weeks ago a voice seemed to say to me, 'Speak to Mary,' and I knew what it meant, and I intended to; but I did not, and I do not know."

Jesus always knows, and he will hold us personally responsible for our negligence.

The Millennium. No. 4.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

The literalists contend that the phrase, "coming of the Lord," always means a personal appearance of the Lord, and nothing else. Their system of interpretation makes this necessary; for if this phrase be ever used like all other phrases, figuratively, then their system totters. We shall, therefore, be at some pains to examine the acceptance of this phrase.

Prior to this, though subservient to it, there is a classification of the apostles and prophets with respect to the dates of their respective writings, indispensable to an accurate interpretation or application of their predictions. Every interpreter of prophecy works in the dark, who has not all the prophets, Old Testament and New Testament, arranged with special reference to two great epochs in sacred history. These are the captivity of Judah and the final destruction of Jerusalem. In classifying the Old Testament prophets relative to the former event, we make three distinct classes:

1. Those who wrote antecedent to the Jewish captivity.
2. Those who wrote in whole or in part during that captivity.
3. Those who wrote after the captivity.

The arrangement must be made with accuracy before any person can either interpret or apply, with confidence, their predictions.

The New Testament prophecies must be arranged in two classes: those uttered and written before the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, and those written after. Numerous and great errors have been published to the world on the prophecies, through inattention to this classification. Not only with reference to the question now before us, but in reference to all that we may say on the subject of prophecy, we shall, according to the best documentary proof of the most learned biblical chronologists, proceed to the classification of the Jewish and Christian prophets with respect to these two great epochs in sacred history.

Jewish Prophets of the First Class.—Those who finished their testimony before the Babylonian captivity of Judah are: Jonah, who prophesied B.C. 862, before the captivity 256; Amos, who prophesied B.C. 787, before the captivity 181; Hosea, who prophesied B.C. 785, before the captivity 179; Joel, who prophesied B.C. 789, before the captivity 179; Isaiah, who prophesied B.C. 760, before the captivity 154; Micah, who prophesied B.C. 750, before the captivity 144; Nahum, who prophesied B.C. 113, before the captivity 107; Zephaniah, who prophesied B.C. 630, before the captivity 24.

Jewish Prophets of the Second Class.—Jeremiah wrote from 629 to 588, twenty-three years before the captivity and nineteen under it; Habakkuk, about the time of the captivity; Daniel, 603, from the third to the sixty-ninth year under the captivity; Ezekiel, 595, from the eleventh to the thirty-second year of the captivity; Obadiah, 587, prophesied under the captivity nineteen years.

Jewish Prophets of the Third Class.—Haggai, 520, commenced sixteen years after the return; Zechariah, 520, after the return sixteen years; Malachi, 397, after the return one hundred and thirty-nine years.

Concerning Zechariah, it is agreed that from the ninth chapter to the end was written nineteen years before the captivity closed, and the first eight chapters of Zechariah are sixty-seven years later than the last.

But sixteen of the Old Testament prophets have transmitted to posterity their own predictions under their own names. The Jews enumerated forty-eight prophets and seven prophetesses. We, however, can reckon only forty-nine in all. These lived nearly in the following order of time: Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, David, Gad, Nathan, Solomon, Jeddo, Shemaiah, Ahijah, Hanani, Jehu son of Hanan, Azariah, Elijah, Elisha, Micah, Hosea, Amos, Jonah, Eliezer the son of Dodaviah, Jahaziel, Isaiah, Micah, Obed, Nahum, Joel, Jeremiah, Zephaniah, Huldah, Igdalfah, Habakkuk, Ezekiel, Obadiah, Daniel, Haggai, Urijah, Zechariah, Malachi.

Of these, eight wrote before the captivity of Judah; three, after the return; and during the captivity, six, one of whom also wrote after the return. So that all the sixteen Jewish prophets, whose works are still extant, flourished in a period of Jewish history less than four centuries.

All these facts are of much value in understanding many of their allusions, and especially their style, as the sequel may disclose.

The New Testament prophets all wrote before the destruction of Jerusalem, except John the apostle, who wrote after it, as all antiquity avoucheth. In the reign of Domitian he was banished to the island of Patmos, about the year 95, at which time he had the vision recorded in the Apocalypse.

That there is some danger in being too literal in the interpretation of prophecy may be learned from the prophecies written before and during the captivity. But to give an instance that cannot be explained away, I will select an example from one who wrote after the return, at least one hundred and thirty-nine years. He speaks of a great and notable day of the Lord; consequently, it was then future, and is not to be sought in the calamities that befell Judah or Israel in their captivities; but he speaks of the coming of Elijah before that day. Now suppose the Jews in the time of Messiah had expected this day of the Lord was at hand; and among them had been a layman, a great literalist, like my friend McCorkle, who, in sounding the alarm, exclaimed that the day of the Lord was to be preceded by the literal return of Elijah, how great would have been the error! Had he waited for the literal and personal return of Elijah, and argued that the coming of Elijah literally meant the coming of Elijah, would not the day of the Lord have overtaken him unawares? Elijah never came, yet the prophecy was truly fulfilled; so, though Jesus return not personally before the millennium, still it may be truly said that the Lord will destroy the man of sin by the brightness of his coming. I say, it is possible, and probable, too, that the Lord may come in some other sense than by a literal personal return.

The particular import of such phrases as "the day of the Lord," "the last days," "the coming of the Lord," "the great and terrible day of the Lord," can only be ascertained satisfactorily by attending to the time in which the prophet wrote; for there have been a plurality of last days, of days of the Lord, of great and notable and terrible days of the Lord, of comings of the Lord. Through inattention to this, Messrs. Begg, McCorkle, and other literalists have regarded these phrases as of one and the same import wherever they have found them. If I mistake not, Mr. Begg somewhere asserts that the words "coming of the Lord," always mean a literal coming or personal appearance of the Lord. We are at issue here.

But not to lose sight of the subject before us, and that we may all see that much depends upon a strict regard to the era of each prophet, we shall exemplify this matter by a reference to sundry remarkable days of the Lord.

Isa. 13: 6: "Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty." "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it. For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light; the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible. I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir. Therefore I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger." (Verses 9-13.) The question now is, What day of the Lord is this? Is it past or future? We affirm that it is past. The prophet wrote seven hundred and sixty years before Christ, or one hundred and fifty-four years before the captivity of Judah; but this day of the Lord was at hand when he wrote this prophecy. It is dated about one hundred and thirty years before the captivity. Again, it is the message of the Lord concerning Babylon! The prophecy begins with these words: "The burden of Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amoz did see." The Medes are spoken of in verse 17 as the instruments of God's vengeance, and toward the close of the vision (verse 19) it is written: "And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah." It is, then, certain that this day of the Lord, with all its sublime and awful scenery—the obscuration of the sun, moon, and stars—the shaking of the heavens, the removal of the earth, and the destruction of sinners out of it—refers to the coming of the Lord to destroy the Assyrian empire. If, now, all this awfully sublime imagery, characteristic of this terrible day of the Lord, was apposite to the events of that day, how diffident ought we to be in asserting that the same imagery descriptive of other days of the Lord, fierce and terrible, must be understood literally, or that the day of the Lord imports the literal coming of the Lord to usher in the millennium! The day of the Lord came upon Sodom and Gomorrah—upon Babylon—upon Judea—and will come upon Babylon the Great, the mystical Babylon of the Apocalypse. Ancient Babylon fell by the sword, but not in one day. Cyrus slaughtered many of its inhabitants. Darius Hystaspes afterwards still more fully depopulated it. Xerxes destroyed its temples, including that of Belus. A Parthian king afterwards carried multitudes of its inhabitants into captivity. The building of Seleucia on the Tigris exhausted the last remains of its inhabitants, and for thousands of years it has lain in perfect ruins. Its site is scarcely known. In the words of Milton:

"And in their palaces,
Where luxury late reign'd, sea monsters whelp'd
And stabled."

Such was the day of the Lord on Babylon. The prophecy was uttered about two hundred years before the event.

In Joel 2: 1 we have the day of the Lord upon Judea: "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain; let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." This day of the Lord is described at great length, a part of which only we have room to quote; "A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains; a great people and a strong; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations." (Verse 2.) "The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble; the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining; and the Lord shall utter his voice before his army; for his camp is very great; for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?" (Verses 10, 11.) This description of the day of the Lord, threatened to Judea in all the poetic imagery of the prophet, can be understood only of the ravages of the clouds of locusts and caterpillars, which, to use the words of the poet, "left the land behind them a desolate wilderness, which, before then, was as the garden of Eden."

In the same chapter we have another day of the Lord, referring to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, in verses 28-32. This is quoted and applied by Peter, in part, in his Pentecostian address. The imagery is the same with the day of the Lord upon Babylon. But in Zech. 14: 1, 2 we have the destruction of the city still more graphically exhibited: "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city." Those nations which composed the Roman army are then spoken of as the objects of divine vengeance; for as the Lord destroyed them that destroyed Babylon, so did he destroy them that destroyed Jerusalem. But in the fourth verse the prophet resumes the description of the destruction. As Cyrus was God's instrument, and as the Lord did upon Babylon what Cyrus did; so Titus is his instrument against Jerusalem, and the Lord stands where Titus stood. For upon the Mount of Olives, the spot on which our Lord stood when he foretold its fall by the Romans, stood Titus; there he posted his army to batter down Jerusalem. Here the tenth legion that came to him from Jericho was placed, as Josephus declares, in the wars of the Jews. (Lib. 6, c. 3.) Mount Olivet, by the lines of circumvallation, the redoubts and trenches made by the besieging army, was cleft in twain. But here I find myself unceremoniously making my intrenchments on debatable ground, and shall leave this strong post of my friends, Begg and McCorkle, till a more convenient season.

We are at present examining those great epochs, called "the day of the Lord," and have already found that "the day of the Lord," in the mouth of a prophet, means some future day of vengeance and judgment upon the people to whom he addresses himself, and that all these days are described in the same imagery, clothed in the sublime of terrible grandeur and majesty. Poets cannot be found more similar in their descriptions of spring and autumn than are these prophets who describe those moments of divine indignation against nations once the objects of God's peculiar favor.

As much depends on establishing this matter firmly in the mind of the student of prophecy, I shall be at double pains to prove the proposition before me. We shall, then, briefly notice a few similar passages.

The day of the Lord upon Egypt, or upon Pharaoh's army. "For this is the day of the Lord God of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries; and the sword shall devour, and it shall be satiate and made drunk with their blood; for the Lord God of hosts hath a sacrifice in the north country by the river Euphrates. . . . O virgin, the daughter of Egypt: in vain shalt thou use many medicines; for thou shalt not be cured." (Jer. 46: 10, 11.)

Ezekiel the prophet thus describes the day of the Lord on Egypt: "For the day is near, even the day of the Lord is near, a cloudy day; it shall be the time of the beathen. And the sword shall come upon Egypt," etc. (See Ezek. 30: 3-19.) The day of the Lord is represented always as a dark and cloudy day, as in Zech. 14: 6, 7: "In that day the light shall not be clear, nor dark; but it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night." Hear Amos: "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! to what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light." (Amos 5: 18.) "Shall not the day of the Lord be darkness, and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it?" (Verse 20.)

Malachi speaks of the day of the Lord coming upon the Jews in the most appalling terms: "Behold, the day

cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." (Mal. 4: 1.) "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." (Verse 5.) It may here be pertinently observed, that the day of the Lord on apostate Christendom will be still more terrible than the day of the Lord upon Sodom and Gomorrah—than the day of the Lord upon Egypt, upon Assyria, upon Babylon, upon Judea, or upon Jerusalem—because more elevated and distinguished than any of them. Need we observe that the day of the Lord mentioned by Malachi is ascertained to be the day of his vengeance upon the second temple and Jerusalem by the Romans, inasmuch as he wrote after the former day of the Lord upon Judea, spoken of by the prophets before the captivity?

In the Epistles the phrases, "the coming of the Lord" and "the day of the Lord," are used in the same latitude. In the following passages the phrase, "the day of the Lord," denotes "the judgment of the great day," which certainly is a day subsequent to the millennium itself. Reference is found to this day: "Deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." (1 Cor. 5: 5.) "We are your rejoicing, even as ye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus." (2 Cor. 1: 14.) But, says Peter: "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3: 10.) My good lay brother became spiritual when he found this description of the day of the Lord clashing with his theory of a literal personal return before the millennium. He ridicules the doctrine of "world burning" as too literal, because it literally burned up his system. But of this in its proper place.

That the destruction of Jerusalem is spoken of in the Epistles, both as "the day of the Lord" and "the coming of the Lord," will, I think, appear as evident as that there are diverse days of the Lord in the Old Testament prophets. In the first letter to the Thessalonians, Paul, speaking to the Jews, says: "Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men: forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill up their sins always: for the wrath [or vengeance] is coming upon them at last [or to the uttermost]." (1 Thess. 2: 15, 16.) In reference to "the times and seasons" of this wrath, Paul, before the close of the letter, says: "Ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape." (1 Thess. 5: 1-3.) That this was a day nigh at hand the apostle clearly intimates—a day which the Thessalonians were expecting to see, for he says that day of the Lord which cometh as a thief in the night shall not "come upon you unawares." That the words, "coming to the Lord," are also used figuratively in both Testaments can be as fully and as clearly demonstrated as that the phrase, "day of the Lord," is applicable to various judgments of God inflicted upon diverse nations, kindreds, and people in different ages of the world.

There is one literal day of the Lord, and there is one literal coming of the Lord still future; but our object now shall be to show that there is a figurative coming of the Lord as well as a literal coming. And to proceed: The first time that we find the word "come" in relation to God, in the way of promise, is in Ex. 20: 24; "In all places where I record my name I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee." Was this a literal or a figurative coming of the Lord? But I may be asked: "What do you mean by a figurative coming?" To which I answer: Any display of God's gracious or vindictive presence—any interposition or vivid display of God's favor or of his wrath—is, in all propriety of speech, thus expressed.

In the book of Genesis itself we are taught the beauty and propriety of this style: "God came to Abimelech in a dream by night." (Gen. 20: 3.) "The Lord came down to see the city and the tower." (Gen. 11: 5.) "God came to Laban the Syrian in a dream by night." (Gen. 31: 24.) So the phrase became current in the time of Moses: "God came unto Balaam [at night] and said," etc. (Num. 22: 9.)

This is the language of the Bible. It is not peculiar to any writer. David, as well as Moses and all the prophets, speaks thus. David, addressing the Lord, says: "O when wilt thou come unto me? I will walk within my house with a perfect heart." In the same style, Jesus said: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." "I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come into him, and will sup with him, and he with me." "We will come and make our abode with him."

In the same style the apostles speak of the coming of the Lord, when his power is to be displayed upon his enemies. Thus the day of the Lord upon Jerusalem is described by both Paul and James. Paul says to the believing Hebrews in regard of their suffering persecution from their countrymen, "Ye have need of patience;" but it is only for a short period; "for," continues he, "yet a little while, and he that shall come [or is to come] will come, and will not tarry." (Heb. 10: 36, 37.) James also says: "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." As the husbandman is patient, "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James 5: 7, 8.) Thus the ancient prophets spoke of God's vindictive displays upon his enemies. "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompence; he will come and save you." (Isa. 35: 4.) "For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire." (Isa. 66: 15.) "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." (Ps. 50: 3.)

Having now, we think, fully shown that the phrase, "coming of the Lord," does not necessarily mean a personal appearance, but that it certainly, in various passages, means no more than some special interposition or display of his power in the way of judgment or of mercy, may we not ask: On what ground do the literalists, who argue for the personal return of the Messiah to usher in the millennium, or to avenge the man of sin, rest their arguments? Have we not satisfactorily shown that this main pillar of their edifice stands upon the sand? And may we not, with all Scripture evidence and authority, assert that, as the Lord came to route the builders of Babel, to destroy Egypt, to break in pieces the Assyrian, to destroy Babylon, to avenge Jerusalem, so will he destroy the man of sin by the brightness of his coming?

Brother Zellner Gone to His Reward.

BY J. P. SEWELL.

At two o'clock on August 14, 1916, Brother Zellner took his departure to higher realms. His wife, all of his children, and Sister Sewell and I were with him when he left.

A great life has passed over. He was looked to and depended on by the board of trustees of Abilene Christian College as our "tower of strength." He always looked forward. He believed in God and in his fellows. He was always ready to go forward, and could always lead his co-workers forward. This can be said of no ordinary man. Brother Zellner was a great man.

First, he was great physically. He stood out above the masses in his great, magnificent body, one among thousands. When that body moved, even when it sat in repose, it inspired the idea of hope, confidence, aggressiveness, power, force. When he walked down the street, you unconsciously stepped aside and respectfully glanced back at him as he strode on, cheerfully greeting his many friends. Little children did not fear him, but in admiration and confidence drew about him.

Second, he was great in intellect. He thought big thoughts. He thought clearly, calmly, and correctly; and, above all, he thought honestly and justly. Many minds can think shrewdly, keenly, accurately, and quickly, that cannot rise above environment, personal interests, and prejudice, to think honestly and justly. Not so with Brother Zellner. He could look squarely at the facts of a proposition and think on them without seeing the shadows of surrounding facts as perfectly as any man I ever saw. Only great minds can do this. Consequently his judgments were correct and just.

Third, he was great in character. He did small things and big things in a big way. He did not do "little" things. He was a born leader, big, strong, confident, and aggressive. The man against him, as well as the man with him, expected him to win. But he didn't expect him to win by little methods, and he didn't. He didn't even think and talk about "littleness" in others. He just dismissed it. He was honest, kind, gentle, unyielding, long-suffering, loyal, bright, cheery, optimistic. He was great in character.

Fourth, he was great in Christian service. I never knew him to ask a favor or service of any kind of any one, or to even look like he desired or expected one. He appreciated, even to the last moment of his conscious life, every kindness shown him. But it was his delight to serve others, and especially so as a Christian. He just one time became discouraged about Abilene Christian College; but as he drove into town that day he saw Brother Whiteside baptizing a number of fine young people, and he said he asked God to forgive him for his lack of faith and to help him never to waver again. So far as I know, he never did. Not only did he respond to our every call with money, time, and work; but when there was a meetinghouse to build, mission work to do, the poor to be fed, the sick to be ministered unto, or any other service to perform in Christ's name, he was ready. No holding back, no note of doubt or anxiety did you see or hear in him. He lived in a plain "box and stripped" house, costing a few hundred dollars, while he spent thousands upon thousands in the service of humanity in the name of his Savior. And the fine thing about it is that it was such a pleasure to him to do it. He always made me feel like I had done him a great favor when I called his attention to a place where he could spend a thousand or so dollars for Christ.

Space forbids. I must stop. Truly a great man has passed over. Abilene Christian College has lost a friend and supporter never to be forgotten. So profound is the love and respect for him here that his name is rarely mentioned: and when it is, we stand with uncovered heads.

Commendation.

Dear Brother Elam: I have read your article in the Gospel Advocate of October 12 with much interest. Of course I always enjoy your writings, since we used to walk together four miles and back, when you did some of your first preaching and I did some of my first singing, and, as you say, preached in a "private dwelling." You laid the foundation in that town (Florence, Ala.), where they have now a large working congregation.

You say there are as many congregations in Wilson County as any other county in the State, except Davidson County. I believe Maury County will stand with you on the number of churches. We have about thirty, but haven't one thing to boast of. Had we done our whole duty, there would have been more than that; and had there been that self-sacrificing and missionary spirit among us that the pioneer preachers had, we would have had more.

There are too many preachers looking for the churches that are already built up instead of going out and finding places to build up churches.

Four years ago the churches in Maury County bought me a tent, and during the summer and fall months when I am not in a meeting with some church I find a place to pitch that tent and go to work; and by this means we reach many people we would not reach otherwise.

Somebody might criticize us when we tell them we are preaching in the county where we have been all of our lives; but when we can get all we can do, and the work is needed to be done, why not remain in the field and do the work?

I find that where the congregation is small in numbers and weak in "inducement" (money) it is not crowded with preachers. A poor sister said to me not long since: "The preachers won't come to see us now; they have all quit us." I said to her: "I will come." I went, and we had a good meeting. I have nothing whatever to boast of. Really, I am ashamed of myself that I have not done more.

My faith hasn't been strong enough. Your articles have stimulated me; and when I read them, I feel like I can and must do more.

Somebody should preach and write about these things. So I would say to you: Keep on moving your pen along this line.

We do not want men to lose sight of the great and prime motive in the preaching of the glorious gospel of the bleeding Son of God; and there is danger of this unless the warning of the danger signal is kept out. The Bible side may seem a little lonesome sometimes, as when good old Elijah said: "Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life." But there is comfort in the thought that the Lord will never forsake his people. Keep on in the good work. Fraternaly. F. C. SOWELL.

Brother Sowell is correct in the statement that there are more congregations in Maury County than there are in Wilson. There are eight or ten more in Maury than in Wilson. Since looking them over, I find that one or two other counties have more than Wilson.

With Brother Sowell in regard to the congregations of Maury County, I do not say that the ones of Wilson, either, have done all they could have done. E. A. ELAM.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

Brother McQuiddy: I visited a sister in Christ, and on Lord's day (not being where there was a congregation) I asked her to take the Lord's Supper with me. She said she believed in taking it in the church house, but not in homes. Please explain this and show that it is scriptural to take it anywhere Christians may meet. A SISTER.

The disciples met in an upper chamber upon the first day of the week to break bread. It was not in a church house. "And there were many lights in the upper chamber where we were gathered together." (Acts 20: 8.) The primitive disciples were accustomed to meet in an upper chamber in the temple; and on this account they might have preferred an upper chamber whenever they could secure it. The Holy Spirit does not prescribe whether we shall break bread in the open air, in a hall, in a private house, or in a church house. Disciples who appreciate the wondrous sacrifices of Jesus as they should will meet somewhere upon the first day of the week to break bread. Disciples proclaim their failure to properly love Jesus when they neglect to meet to break bread upon the first day of the week. The church of Christ is composed of living members. We may meet with the church in the homes of Christians. "Salute the church that is in their house." (Rom. 16: 5.) "The churches of Asia salute you. Aquila and Prisca salute you much in the Lord, with the church that is in their house." (1 Cor. 16: 19.) It is clearly scriptural and right for Christians to meet and break bread in the homes of Christians. However, if a church house is convenient, the proper thing to do is for Christians to assemble there and worship God together. No disciple should decline to meet there because of malice toward some who meet in the church house.

Brother Freed: (1) Please explain Matt. 19: 28; also, Luke 22: 29, 30. What became of the promise to Judas, it being made by Christ himself? (2) What is the gulf between the rich man and Lazarus? (Luke 16: 26.)

JEFF D. WELLS.

(1) "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." (Matt. 19: 28.) It will be noticed that the promise did not include Judas. The promise to sit upon thrones in his kingdom when Jesus was on the throne of his glory was to his disciples that had followed him—"ye which have followed me." This Judas had not done. This is seen in Luke 22: 28: "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations." Judas did not "continue" with him. Thrones signify authority. The apostles who "followed" Jesus and "continued" with him are on thrones now. (Rev. 20: 4.) "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them." We are also "in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory." We are in the one-thousand-years' reign with Christ, the apostles are on thrones, and we are under them. (2) "And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from hence." (Luke 16: 26.) This "great gulf fixed" is not one measured by yards, feet, and inches, but one of moral separation. This is shown by the conversation which took place across this gulf. Two men may sit close together on the same seat, yet a "great gulf" exist "between" them—a gulf of moral and spiritual separation. This gulf may be crossed either way in life, but not after death. There will be no post-mortem gospel. As death comes, so will the judgment find us. "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." (Heb. 9: 27.)

Brother Freed: (1) Please explain Heb. 6: 4-6 in connection with Heb. 10: 26-30. I do not think Paul means to teach us that any one who has fallen by the wayside cannot receive pardon, if he or she desires pardon and repents. A brother in his sermon last evening took the position that an erring one cannot come back. I took issue with the brother, and I desire your counsel in the matter of explaining. (2) Is it not a fact, Brother Freed, that the Bible teaches two laws of pardon—one to the alien and one to the erring child?

WILL W. FREELAND.

(1) "For as touching those who were once enlightened and tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Spirit, and tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the age to come, and then fall away, it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance." (Heb. 6: 4-6.) It will be noticed that it is said of these characters that they "fall away." It is further said of them: "It is impossible to renew them." We should notice the difference between "falling" and "falling away." If we be on a moving train and fall, we can rise again; but were we to "fall away," it is quite different. So with the characters of Heb. 6. They had "fallen away." To one who had just fallen, Peter said: "Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." (Acts 8: 22.) There is a point on the downward way, whence, should the erring child reach it, it is impossible to return. Those of Heb. 6 had reached this point; Simon of Acts 8 had not gone so far on the downward road. The willful sin of Heb. 10: 26 is "forsaking the assembling of ourselves together" upon the first day of the week. We are to exhort one another, "and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." The disciples met upon the first day of the week to break bread. (Acts 20: 7.) We "sin willfully" when we forsake the assembling of ourselves upon this glorious day. "There remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." There is no other sacrifice for sins, save the one pictured to us in the "bread" and "cup." Jesus said of the bread, "This is my body;" and of the cup, "This is my blood." He further said: "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." (1 Cor. 11: 26.) What will become of this world, "if we sin willfully?" There is "a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." (Verse 27.) But what will become of brethren who neglect the worship, fail to "show the Lord's death till he come?" "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing?" (Verses 28, 29.) (2) The Bible teaches that we become Christians by faith in Christ, repentance of sins, and a burial with Christ in baptism into the sacred names of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. If we fall, as did Simon, the Spirit says: "Repent, and pray [to] God." But of those who "fell away" the same Spirit says: "It is impossible to renew them again unto repentance."

Report on Mission Funds.

BY DON CARLOS JAMES.

The last previous report covered funds handled from October 1, 1915, to April 30, 1916. This report covers funds handled from May 1, 1916, to September 30, 1916, and the balances are as of October 1.

Received for J. M. McCaleb, $58.97; forwarded, $54.22; balance, $4.75.

Received for C. G. Vincent (building site, personal, etc.), $120.76; all forwarded.

Received for John T. Glenn, nothing. Funds previously reported ($432.75) received for his traveling expenses to Japan are (except $2) on interest awaiting the time when Brother Glenn and family leave for their field of labor. It is now time to receive gifts for their maintenance on the field.

Received for E. S. Jelley, $222.96; plus balance of $17.64, equals $240.60; all sent to him.

Received for W. H. McHenry, $66.46; plus balance of fifty cents, equals $66.96; all forwarded. In the last two items are some gifts for other than personal support, as literature or printing fund.

Miscellaneous: Old balance for sending missionary to India, $10. (R. H. Boll is custodian of the main part of this fund, which will probably be sufficient to send the prospective missionaries to India this fall.) Received for Brother Armstrong-Hopkins, $4; forwarded to Nellie Straiton, Fort Worth, Texas. Received for J. D. Walling, $2.50; sent to him.

Received for native helpers of E. S. Jelley, $357; plus balance of $90.50, equals $447.50; all sent.

Received for Brother McHenry's helper, $369.85; plus balance of $33.71, equals $403.56; all forwarded.

Received for (my) free literature, $1.83; plus balance of $10.06, equals $11.89.

Received to support new missionaries in India, $33. About $60 a month should be provided for these workers, and two months' support should be ready by November 1, so they can carry this with them.

Summary: Total balances on hand May 1, 1916, $595.16; total receipts since, $1,237.33; total, $1,832.49; forwarded, $1,340.10; balance on hand October 1, $492.39.

In the above balance are $10 for India travel fund and $33 for support of new missionaries for India, which it is expected will be used by November, and $432.75 to send missionaries to Japan, which is likely to be used this year (with the accumulated interest). Minus these sums the balance on hand October 1 is only $16.64, made up of $4.75 for Brother McCaleb and $11.89 in the free literature fund.

I usually remit two or three times a month to the workers in India. It takes about three months to send a letter and get a reply. Funds for others forwarded at various intervals. Each donor is receipted by me, and it is expected that he will also be receipted from the field. All funds are sent without reduction.

Special Needs.—Brother Vincent is still in need of money to complete the rebuilding fund in Japan; his work there costs money in his absence also; and keeping his wife at the sanitarium is expensive. Brother McCaleb has had hospital and surgical work in his family to the extent of about $160. Regular support for four more Americans is now in order.

Sending Funds.—I can use your checks without loss if they come from Kentucky or a bordering State. Outside of that territory, please remit by draft on New York, Chicago, or St. Louis, or by money order. It is not safe to send currency in an unregistered letter. If you take the risk, wrap your bills in plenty of paper. Please notice that, while I have moved only a short distance out of Louisville, my address is now Route 10, Buechel, Ky. You can send money orders on either Buechel or Louisville.

According to request, I acknowledge receipt of two dollars for Brother McCaleb from a sister at Frost, Texas. She could as safely intrust her name to me as her money.

Help the Japanese Work.

BY I. B. BRADLEY.

In a letter dated September 24, Sister Sarah Andrews says: "I am sorry to make the following request, but find it necessary under the circumstances. If you can, I would like to have a check each month, although it is not fifty dollars. The natives have a habit of collecting all that is due them at the end of each month, and I find it a little embarrassing. . . . I have my house rent, coal bill, grocery bill, and many other items to meet, besides my tuition. Do not worry if you cannot send it each month. I will get on, for God is my Father." She also says, in acknowledging the receipt of the last check sent her: "Please extend to those in the home congregation, who are making contributions, or are in any way showing interest in this great work, my sincere thanks and appreciation. Also to those who, although they do not know me, are giving to this fund."

In referring to her work she says: "My part of the work in the church continues to be with the English students. It is surprising, the vast number of English-speaking natives there are in Tokyo. Of course this is not as true in other towns, except Yokohama. I love this work, but will wait the day when I can work with those who do not speak English."

She is attending school now, taking Japanese language lessons. It will take about two years to get through. Then she can work anywhere among the natives. This will cost her about five dollars and fifty cents each month, all told. Brother McCaleb writes that she needs this promptly, as the Japs collect their bills at the end of each month. But she needs funds for house rent, etc., as she states in the above quotation. As you will see from her request, I have not been able to send her a check each month. She has been there nearly ten months, and I have been able to send her but three hundred and ten dollars. She ought to have had five hundred dollars for this ten months. I need for immediate use one hundred and fifty dollars, and one hundred and fifty dollars by December 1. Shall I have it?

I wish I could get the original contributors to this fund—those who helped to supply the funds for her passage—to realize that we are greatly responsible for her support. We sent her there, brethren, and ought we not feel the responsibility of her maintenance? Surely we will not let her have to appeal for support continually. Let us send, at once, a contribution for her needs. Mine is ready to go when yours is ready to join it. A preacher who is interested in her work pledges fifty cents a month for her tuition. Will not ten more pledge this amount and send it to me by the last of this month and each month till she finishes her language study?

Brethren, this is an urgent need. Let us not be "slightful," but "diligent," in the King's business. Open your hearts and let your liberality abound toward this work. Remember, every penny goes to Miss Andrews. All the expense is borne by me. I will acknowledge all receipts for this work. Brethren, do not put this aside and forget this work. Send me a contribution now. "The King's business requireth haste."

Locating and Building Meetinghouses.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Long ago David said, "See now, I dwell in a house of cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth within curtains," indicating—the context clearly confirming the thought—that he was ashamed and conscience-smitten because the house in which he dwelt was so much better than the house in which Jehovah dwelt, in the sense in which Jehovah dwelt in the ark of God. I wish our brethren everywhere had more of the sentiment thus expressed by David—an unwillingness to dwell in a better house than they provide as the house of the Lord, as the meeting place of the saints.

So much has been said and written against vain show in the location, erection, and ornamentation of church houses that we have swung to the other extreme; hence often, very often, our meetinghouses are inconveniently located and disgracefully shabby and uncomfortable, where members of the church meeting in them are amply able to buy good locations and build comfortable, convenient, commodious houses.

Poverty may sometimes be the cause of meetinghouses' being shabby, uncomfortable, and badly located; but it is often simply paraded as an excuse for that condition of things. We should certainly be especially careful to select suitable sites for our church houses. An unsuitable house can be replaced by one that is suitable as a congregation grows and strengthens, but a poor location is a handicap forever.

Lack of judgment, forethought, and care is often responsible for our failure to secure a good location. Brethren sometimes select a good location, but are slow about securing it, talk too much and do too little; and it passes beyond their reach, they finally having to build on a site not nearly so suitable, probably paying more for that unsuitable site than the better location would have cost, if they had used, to secure it, even half the diligence any one of them would have exercised in attending to his own individual business.

I have seen, during the fifty years I have devoted to preaching the gospel, so many instances of this lack of judgment, foresight, and diligence in the selection of locations and the building of meetinghouses—have seen so many of them this year—that I am constrained to call attention to these things, by telling just a little of the much I have observed along this line, hoping to thus stir up some of our brethren to the exercise of more care, diligence, liberality, and good taste in locating and building our houses for public work and worship.

In a pretty little town in which I recently preached, the first time I went to our meetinghouse, the good brother who accompanied me pointed out, on a good street, a large, delightfully shaded, well-located lot, of which he said: "We contemplated buying this lot, and could have bought it for less than half the sum we paid for the lot finally bought; but we waited too long, till this lot passed into other hands, and then we had to take just what we could get."

When we reached the meetinghouse, recently erected, I was not surprised to find it located on a narrow, back street, unmacadamized and free from even a respectable substitute for pavements, with the backs of two filthy, disgusting open privies directly in front of the front door, the house fronting the back of lots on which dwellings were located, with only the width of that narrow street between the privies and our front door!

It was such a source of worry to me, to contrast the two locations, and to think of what the brethren there could have done and what they had done, that I chose another route, longer and rougher, to the meetinghouse—one that did not take me by the beautiful lot we could have had instead of the location we had—a location so poor that many people of the town declined to come to our meetinghouse at all, for which I did not blame them.

In another town in which I once held a meeting, a faithful, fearless, pioneer gospel preacher, and, subsequently, his son, another brave pioneer soldier of the cross, owned and occupied, many years ago, the best location—one hundred by three hundred feet—for a meetinghouse and preacher's home in the town—unquestionably the best.

The substantial, comfortable, commodious old residence, built more than a century ago, stood on the upper end of the long lot—on the corner that faces the Public Square—and our neat little meetinghouse, with acoustic properties almost perfect, stands on the lower end of the lot, about three hundred feet from the Square, facing a prominent street that bounds the lot, its full length, on the south.

Recently that old, old house and all the lot except the lower end, occupied by our meetinghouse, were sold, for twelve hundred dollars, to a man not interested in our work, and thus slipped away from the church of Christ, probably forever! Why will our brethren anywhere—not to say everywhere—permit a thing like that?

Possibly poverty may be the cause in a few such cases; but not in this case, I know. Probably Idolatrie is the cause in many cases; but certainly not in this. Paul says covetousness is idolatry; but the church in that place seems to be generous, unselfish, and liberal. This case is, to me, a mysteriously mysterious mystery; hence I shall not suggest a probable or even possible explanation of it. I presume that lot could have been bought by the church of Christ there for one thousand dollars; for it belonged to brethren, was on the market and advertised for sale a long, long time, and was finally sold, house and all, for twelve hundred dollars.

There are many reasons why that church needs that property, and needs it badly; but probably duty does not demand that I try to enumerate them, or that I even mention the three fly factories—two privies and a barn—with-in about thirty-three feet of the pulpit, making it difficult sometimes to keep flies out of the cup on the Lord's table!

The old historic home having been recently torn down and hauled away, and there being no fence around the lot, the place is a public hitching, feeding, and loafing place; hence, while preaching there, I frequently had to step off the sidewalk near the meetinghouse, mud or no mud, and walk around mules or horses to get to the door, women and children, of course, having to do the same.

Our Lewisburg (Tenn.) brethren were once in a situation somewhat similar to that in which the brethren I have just mentioned are now—dependent on the mercy of others not in sympathy with them religiously, and almost forced out of house and home by unendurable nuisances. The Lewisburg brethren simply had to abandon the place where they had long met for work and worship, buy a location in another part of the town, and build a house on it. So it may be—and, I believe, so it must eventually be—with these other brethren.

Paul said to the Corinthian Christians: "I write not these things to shame you, but as my beloved sons I warn you." (1 Cor. 4: 14.) Likewise, I mention these matters, not to shame the Christians of whom I write or any others, but to remind all Christians, everywhere, that it is our solemn duty to never permit such a state of affairs to exist anywhere, if we can prevent it—and we can nearly always prevent it.

We can never sacrifice too much in the service of Him who sacrificed the wealth of the universe and died on Calvary's cruel cross to save us and those we love and those who love us. We should rejoice and be glad to consecrate mind, muscle, and money; time, tongue, and talent; head, hand, and heart; body, soul, and spirit—all that we have and all that we are—to the cause of Him who, "though rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich."

"Man needs but little here below;
Nor needs that little long."

Our Savior says: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." (Matt. 6: 19-21.) And the Spirit, by the pen of the peerless apostle, says to every gospel preacher: "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life." (1 Tim. 6: 17-19.)

I have been credibly informed—so credibly that I believe the information to be correct—that, many years ago, a childless wife, chiding her covetous—hence, idolatrous—husband for living like a hog and forcing her to live like a heathen, instead of living like a man and having all necessary comforts and conveniences in his home, finally sought relief in tears, and said: "You can't live always, and you'd better enjoy some of your gold while you do live. You can't take it with you when you die; and, if you could, it wouldn't do you any good, for it would melt as soon as you got there."

A few days after that, Jesse James and his clan came into that community, where I have been many a time, looted that miser's little old bank, and carried away his beloved cash.

Even that, however, may have been a blessing in disguise. If the loss of a fortune is the salvation of a soul, the loss of that fortune is not a misfortune; for our Savior says, "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" the context clearly showing that he considers the salvation of even one soul of more importance than all the wealth of this wide, wide world.

When buying church lots and building church houses, we should always remember, and never forget, that the best is never too good. We should likewise remember, and never forget, that the meetinghouse of the saints, where they expect to meet each other, their Savior and their friends, should always be in as nearly a perfect state of repair and as orderly, neat and clean, dustless and spotless, as possible—and, last, but not least, always properly ventilated. Many a preacher falls, many a mortal coughs, and many an audience becomes dull and drowsy, because of defective ventilation.

The Bible the Greatest Book,

BY E. G. S.

Of all the books in the whole world, there is none other to be compared with the Bible, the book of God; and yet it is appreciated by only a few according to its real value. We look at this great earth with all it contains; we look at the starry heavens in their shining beauty; we look at man, who is "fearfully and wonderfully made," and we are almost overwhelmed by what we see. Then the question arises, Whence came all these wonders? And if it were not for the Bible, there would be no answer to such questions. The earth, with its beautiful valleys, its hills, its lofty mountains, its flowing rivers, its lakes, its seas, and its mighty oceans—if God had not revealed the origin of all these things, who could answer the question, Whence came they? The earth and all its appendages and great varieties were created before there was a human being in existence to see it done. Hence, if God had not told us of the origin of the earth and all it contains, no man to-day could give the information. But the first sentence in the Bible says: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." This is a wonderful statement, and gives a flood of light where all would have been darkness if God had not spoken out in unmistakable terms. So there has never been any doubt by any one in any country, where the Bible has gone and is believed, as to the origin of all things earthly. But the Bible gives a plain historical account of the origin of the earth and man and all the earth contains. It also gives us a brief account of the history of man on the earth for four thousand years, and, prophetically, to the end of time. But these things are only a part of what the Bible does for man. It shows us that man is the greatest, the most intelligent part of God's creation, that he stands at the head of all created beings on earth in intelligence, reasoning powers, and his capabilities of almost endless improvement. The Bible also plainly shows that this world and this life is only the beginning of man's existence. Death is not an extinction of man's existence, but only a change in the kind of existence. The body of flesh dies and goes back to the earth, whence it came. The Lord said to Adam: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3: 19.) This had reference to man's body, but not to his soul. The body of man is from the dust of the earth; but the spirit, the soul of man, is from God, who gave it. And that part of man never dies. It did not come from the earth and cannot return to the earth. God gave that, and to him it will return. All these things come to us through the Bible, the word of God.

The body is flesh, and is, therefore, mortal. But the heart, the spirit, the soul of man, is from God and cannot die. The cultivation of the heart, the formation of character, belongs to man, and he is fully responsible for the character he possesses. God from the beginning has taught man how to live, how to behave himself, and what sort of character he must form; and it is a matter of fact that in all the ages of the world's history all who have lived as God required have been the prosperous and happy people of this world. There was nothing to disturb the happiness and prosperity of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden while they were faithful to the Lord; but as soon as they sinned, their troubles began. The Jewish people were the happiest and most prosperous people in the whole world so long as they were faithful to the word of God; but when they began to sin, their troubles began, and continued as long as they continued in sin. The New Testament promises many blessings in this life and everlasting happiness in the world to come to all that will faithfully obey the word of God. So it certainly is strange that all the people in Bible lands do not serve God with all their soul, mind, and strength; and yet it is a fact that only comparatively few of them do so. Why they do not would be hard to explain, when there is so much involved in it. Only a part of those who claim to serve the Lord carry it out faithfully to the end of life. Hence the road to destruction is said to be broad, and that many go in thereat; while the way to eternal life is narrow, and but few find it. These things are strange; but the Bible tells us so, and we are expected to believe it. What a grand thing it would be if these facts could be reversed and the many could be induced to go in the narrow way that leads to everlasting life!

The Bible points out the narrow way in great plainness, so that all who will may see it and walk in it. And the beauty of it is, there is so much more light and joy in the narrow way than in the broad way and the wide gate. One of the great differences is, there is no hope in the broad way of ever reaching any true happiness; but in the narrow way there is always hope of a glorious outcome at the end of a faithful life. This hope of the final outcome of Christianity is so great that the word of God says we are "saved by hope." (Rom. 8: 24.) This does not mean that hope alone saves; for a hope not founded upon the word of God, and in faithful obedience to that word, is a dead hope and will never reach salvation. It takes a faithful, Christian life to enjoy gospel hope. Eternal life is not promised to the unfaithful. Only those that hold out faithfully to the end have any promise of eternal life. It was said to the church in Smyrna: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.) There is, indeed, no promise of eternal life to the unfaithful. There is, therefore, no promise of eternal life, except to the faithful servants of God, who continue to be faithful to the end of life. But the promises to those that become Christians and continue to be faithful are full and strong and faithful and sure.

All these things we learn from the Bible, the precious book that God has given. Hence the Bible should be appreciated and loved above all other books. If all people would become Christians and live as the Bible directs, they would all be certain of a home in heaven after death. And the continued hope of this heavenly home in the eternal world gives great joy. Hence the lives that are worthy of so great an outcome are the purest and happiest lives that can be lived on this earth and the only happy ones in eternity. This should be the earnest effort of all while life is granted on earth; and all who are faithful will have the Lord's help.

Some Questions and Answers.

BY E. A. E.

Brother Elam: Last Lord's day a young brother preached on "the thief on the cross." By way of proving that the thief was not saved, he asserted that neither God nor Jesus had the power to forgive sins until after the atonement was made and the kingdom established. He said that Jesus could only cure physical ills while in this world. Please tell us what you think of this.

X.

This young brother must have meant that which is stated in Heb. 10: 1-25; Rom. 3: 25; and other passages. He doubtless did not make the truth clear and was unfortunate and unguarded in his declarations and assertions. Some young men, as well as some older ones, are rash in their assertions about what God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit can and cannot do, as if the almighty and all-wise One were limited by human ignorance—ignorance, too, of the teaching of the Bible. The passages referred to above show that the blood of animal sacrifices could not cleanse from sin forever, and there was "a remembrance made of sins year by year;" hence the yearly atonement. (See Lev. 16.) The blood of Christ alone can cleanse from sin forever. (See Heb. 8: 9; 12: 18-29; and especially 9: 15.) In his "righteousness" and "forbearance" God passed over "the sins done aforesaid." (Rom. 3: 25.) All who lived in faith and obedience to God then were forgiven and saved by the blood of Christ, as all now who live in faith and obedience to God are saved by the blood of Christ. Jesus died for the sins of the world—from Adam to the end of time. The Old Testament abounds in expressions of forgiveness.

Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. (Ps. 32: 1.)

Jehovah, thou hast been favorable unto thy land; thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob. Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people; thou hast covered all their sin. (Ps. 85: 1, 2.)

Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases. (Ps. 103: 3.)

The Lord fully instructed the children of Israel in regard to what must be done in order to be forgiven. (See Lev. 6: 1-7; Ezek. 33: 10-16, for examples.)

Enoch and Elijah were translated; were they not forgiven? Moses, having been dead for about fifteen hundred years, stood in the glory of God with Jesus on the mount of transfiguration, as did Elijah; was he not forgiven? Lazarus was in Abraham's bosom; was he not forgiven? Were the heroes of faith mentioned in Heb. 11 not forgiven? By faith, which led to obedience to God then, they looked forward to "the promises" (verses 13-16), which were fulfilled in Christ (2 Cor. 1: 20), and were forgiven and saved; by faith, which leads to obedience to God now, people look to Christ and are in him forgiven and saved.

And these all, having had witness borne to them through their faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing concerning us, that apart from us they should not be made perfect. (Heb. 11: 39, 40.)

It is far from the truth to say, "Jesus could only cure physical ills while in this world." All bodily afflictions, or "physical ills," are not punishment for the sins of the ones afflicted, as in the case of the man born blind in John 9, for he could not have been born blind because of his own sins. Then, opening his eyes was no forgiveness of any sin he had committed causing his blindness. He was not forgiven of any sins he had committed, or "converted," at the time his eyes were opened. Later he accepted Jesus as the Christ. Jesus frequently declared while on earth that he had the power to forgive sins. He forgave the woman mentioned in Luke 7: 36-50, although she was not healed of any "physical ill." Her sins, which were many, were forgiven, because she loved much. "And he said unto the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace."

The Jews knew Jesus claimed to forgive sins on earth and accused him of blasphemy for making the claim. They saw him heal many afflicted ones; hence knew that he could do that, and that that was not what he meant when he forgave sins. He showed, however, by the power to work miracles that he could forgive sins. (See Matt. 9: 1-8.)

Why should any one strain to try to prove the thief on the cross was not saved? What has been gained if it could be proved that he actually lifted up his eyes in torment with the rich man and did not go with Jesus that day to Paradise. (See Luke 23: 43; 2 Cor. 12: 4; Rev. 2: 7.) People are saved now, not as the thief on the cross, not as Lazarus, not as any before Jesus died and arose from the dead, but according to the will of God now sealed by the death and blood of Christ. (See Heb. 9: 11-22; 10: 8-10.)

The only way to turn sinners from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God, to build up the church and to glorify the Father in heaven, is to preach the gospel—its facts, its commands, its promises, its consistent and happy life, its hope, and its salvation. Preach Christ, and him crucified; preach that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the Savior of the world; preach what the Bible says on faith, and on what to believe and in whom to believe, and on what questions to be avoided; preach all the Bible says on repentance and the fruit of repentance; preach all the Bible says on baptism—what it is, who should be baptized, and why; teach all who have gladly received the word of God and been baptized to observe all things whatsoever Jesus has commanded—to continue “steadfastly in the apostles’ teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers;” therefore, teach people how to live the Christian life day by day both in the home and in all business affairs of life, to tell the truth always, to be honest, to pay their debts, to meet their obligations to all, to render to all their dues, to study to be quiet and to attend to their own business, to love their neighbors as themselves, to treat all others as they would be treated, to practice self-control, to live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world, and to rejoice in the promises of God and hope of Christ’s coming and the home which he gives in heaven. This is far better than trying to be wise and smart. The whole counsel of God saves.

Help the Fanning Orphan School.

BY E. A. E.

On the second Thursday in October the trustees of this school held their regular quarterly meeting. The treasurer reported the sum of the donations he had received, which donations have appeared, or will yet appear, in this paper; but not enough has been received to relieve the school of the debt, which has already been given. The debt has been reduced to the extent of the sum received. The trustees decided it is best to continue these appeals and request all friends to orphans and helpless worthy girls to come to the assistance of such a noble work. The trustees have given to the school of their money, and have given “again and again,” and have given also, and are still giving, cheerfully, their time and attention, and now they feel that it is right to give one other thing—that is, give all others an open and continued opportunity to contribute to this work.

The school is well managed. It is in the hands of thirteen worthy men as trustees and a faithful superintendent and his good wife, all of whom are bound by all the principles of Christianity to use it and all its means for the purpose for which they have been contributed; and this they are doing. The good the school is accomplishing cannot be measured by flight of years. But others—all others—should feel and are under as much obligation as these trustees to care for and to help develop into useful women the orphan and poor girls of the land. Why not? The superintendent reported that, while the school had sixty-one or two pupils in the building, he could take only twenty-five poor and needy ones free for lack of funds. The others pay only the cost of keeping them, most of whom are sent by individuals or by congregations. But the superintendent further reported that he was forced to turn away eighteen or twenty from the free list for lack of means. The donations and interest from endowments are not sufficient to support more than the twenty-five. All practical men can see that an increase of the endowment fund will enable the school to carry more such girls. The other eighteen or twenty should be in the school. Even then the pay pupils could be educated as well. Here is a school built in the generosity of good men and women, where homeless and helpless worthy young girls can have a home with modern conveniences, refined and Christian, in which they receive a collegiate education unto graduation, training in all domestic affairs and duties—“domestic science” in real practice—by competent and experienced teachers, daily instruction in both the knowledge and practice of the Bible, and sent out finally competent to fill useful positions in life; and it does seem that many other good men and women would rejoice to contribute to the progress of this school and to the increase of the good it is doing. They will. I am glad I believe in men and women. There are now as heroic and self-sacrificing, true and faithful, righteous and godly men and women as any who have ever lived—men and women who will die for right and truth.

As has been stated, the school needs money for two things—(1) to pay its present indebtedness, (2) to increase its usefulness by enlarging its endowment fund. The Nashville people right now are contributing thousands and thousands of dollars to Vanderbilt University; they have contributed thousands to the Young Men’s Christian Association and to the Young Women’s Christian Association, and to other institutions. Why cannot the good men and women of the land give as much to the Fanning Orphan School, an institution in some respects superior to all the rest?

There is not a more worthy work for girls, one which needs help more, or one which should be more abundantly and cheerfully supported. Men and women of means can endow this school now and have the abiding pleasure of seeing the good results while they live, and still reap the greater reward after death.

Send all contributions to the treasurer, A. N. Trice, corner Wall and Monroe Streets, Nashville, Tenn.

Attention, Brethren!

BY R. E. WRIGHT.

Pensacola, Fla., was visited by a storm on October 18, which did much damage. Brother Jesse F. Love lost his home during this storm. His home must be rebuilt, and he, like most gospel preachers, has but little, if any, money ahead with which to rebuild. Brethren, let us share this loss with him and his family. Send a donation to-day to Mrs. Jesse F. Love, (1300 Block) East Gadsden Street, Pensacola, Fla., and the Lord will bless you. (James 2: 14-18.)

How like the Master it was to go after those two sorrowing ones on the very day of his triumphant resurrection! He thought it worth while to walk seven miles and spend two hours in the work of comforting two obscure, lowly, dejected disciples. The tenderness of his love comes out in that. When his great work of testimony and of suffering was over, his tender work of comforting still went on.—G. H. Knight.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

By J. C. McQuiddy

Praises Motives, but Criticises Means.

Mildly criticizing the means used, but strongly commending the motives of Dr. W. W. Horner, who resigned the pastorate of the Twenty-second and Walnut Street Baptist Church to launch a movement for the establishment of a "pure church and the unity of believers in Jesus Christ," Dr. E. L. Powell, pastor of the First Christian Church, last night preached a sermon on "What Constitutes a Pure Church." Dr. Horner sat in the audience and heard Dr. Powell compliment him on his courage and wholesome spiritual discontent and announce that he would not be the man to throw one stone in the way of his movement. Dr. Powell's only criticism was that Dr. Horner, instead of conducting the campaign in the church to which he belonged, resigned to have access to an independent platform. A pure church, one to which only those who believed in Christ, repented, and were baptized belonged, was not a new kind of a church, Dr. Powell asserted, but the primitive kind—the New Testament kind.—Louisville (Ky.) Post.

Would it not be well for Dr. E. L. Powell to take his own medicine? We do read about a pure church in the New Testament. Believers were baptized into Christ. When they were thus baptized into Christ, they became members of his body. Then, these churches continued steadfastly in the apostolic teaching, in the breaking of bread, in the fellowship, and in the prayers. We learn also that singing was an item of worship in the apostolic church. We do not read in the New Testament of there being any organs or any aid societies in the churches. They were content to worship in simplicity. Why does not Dr. Powell do likewise?

Certainly, if we would all walk by faith, act as they did in the days of the apostles, and do just what we find them doing in the apostolic church, we would be able to live together in peace and unity. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" (Ps. 133: 1.) If we will be guided by "it is written" in becoming members of the church, and also in living the Christian life, we may "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Infidelity in Universities.

Mr. James B. Tannehill, who is a vigorous and scholarly writer, has recently written a book, entitled "A Defense of the Faith of the Fathers." His defense is a strong and vigorous protest against modern infidelity. He speaks with certainty when he says:

A professor in a denominational college, university, or training school who destroys the influence of God's word and undermines the faith of young men and women under him, by teaching the "modern view of the Bible," is tenfold more dangerous than the avowed skeptic or agnostic. The seminary teacher who says that there is no efficacy in prayer, that scriptural miracles are impossible, or that Jesus was but a man, is to be avoided as you would shun a viper. A denominational school which has in its faculty those who deny the truthfulness of divine revelation, or teach that the Bible and science are incompatible, is a thousand times more damaging to our young people than the same teaching coming from the godless unsectarian school. Satan gets in his most deadly work when dressed in the garb of a saint.

Christian parents should be very slow to send their children to a school where higher criticism is taught and where simple faith in the gospel of Christ is undermined. While some of our universities are teaching the wisdom of men, they are failing to teach the word of God in its simplicity. Their teaching tends to make skeptics and not Christians. Men who set themselves up as wiser than God are not fit to teach our children. If we can accept one miracle of the Bible, we can accept all; and to reject one means to reject all. It is well for us all to remember that man by wisdom knows not God. We must depend upon the Bible to teach us our origin, mission, and destiny. The Bible teaches us whence we came, what we are, and whither we go. Parents cannot be too careful about the education they give their children.

Disturbing the Quiet.

For a quiet time with Jesus, more is needed than a quiet place. Indeed, a true quiet time may be had in the noisiest place, and the quietest place of prayer may witness great disturbance and noise. For it is the quiet that reigns in the heart which makes possible a quiet time with the Lord. A Christian man whose habit it is to give at least an hour in the morning to Bible study and prayer, and who at different periods has had wonderful blessing in it, found himself straining after a renewal of these blessings. He came to the Bible study and prayer wondering whether he would get out of them all that God had for him, and was constantly asking himself whether he was in the right frame of mind to get God's message and to pray the right way. Suddenly one morning, as such thoughts were going through his mind, the Spirit revealed to him that he was making a quiet time with God impossible. He was filling the hour with the disturbance of human thought. He confessed his fault of trying to help God with his work, and then let his heart quietly rest in Jesus, trusting him for any kind of manifestation that he thought best in his quiet hour. When he had done that, he at once realized that now he could have a real quiet time because he was silent before God and waiting upon him alone. So the best quiet hours with the Lord come only to those who have learned how to be quiet in him moment by moment all through the twenty-four hours.—Sunday School Times.

No man can find happiness while depending on the material things. Material things cannot give rest to our weary spirits. If we would find freedom from care, from the burdens and trying responsibilities of life, we must accept the admonition of the Holy Spirit and cast all our burdens upon Christ, for he careth for us. If we will only trust him fully and recline upon him for help when the dark and lowering clouds threaten to overwhelm us, we will soon learn that each cloud has a lining of light. No evil can be so terrible and no misfortune so great that Christ cannot bring good to us out of the seeming evil. If we will only trust in him and look to him for complete guidance and direction in life, we may appreciate the sweetness of the blessed assurance: "And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.)

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

From R. D. Smith, Sparta, Tenn., October 28: "The meeting at Winchester closed last Monday night with five baptisms."

C. E. Wooldridge, of Fayetteville, Tenn., preached at Foster Street Church, this city, Sunday. He also spoke at the down-town meeting.

Frances Alinda Northcut has arrived to bless the home of a very useful preacher who hails from Tracy City, Tenn. "And again we say, Rejoice!"

Eight persons took membership with the Belmont Avenue congregation, this city, and one was baptized, during the meeting just closed. James A. Allen did some excellent preaching.

W. T. Hines recently closed a sixteen-days' meeting at Lafayette, Ky., with four baptisms and seven from the "Christian Church." A church was organized with twenty-two members.

The church of Christ at Rogers, Ark., desire a preaching brother to locate with them and do evangelistic work in Benton County. Married man preferred. Address A. F. Warren, Rogers, Ark.

From J. A. Cullum, Memphis, Tenn., October 24: "My meeting in the Highland Heights addition, this city, resulted in three additions. This congregation is quite zealous. It is a pleasure indeed to work for and with such people."

From C. E. Holt, Gallatin, Tenn., October 26: "Our meeting at this place grows in interest. Fourteen added to date—all by baptism, except one. Olmstead is a fine man to work with in a meeting. It is a genuine pleasure to be with him."

From J. L. Hines, Central City, Ky., October 28: "I closed a ten-days' meeting yesterday at New Liberty Church, in Edmonson County, with six baptized, one from the General Baptists, and one restored. I begin next at Sugar Grove, in Ohio County."

Don Carlos Janes writes: "'Christian Treasures,' Volume I., made up of articles which were prepared for and published in special numbers of the Gospel Advocate, is suitable for a place in a Christian's collection of books and is entitled to being called a good book."

From T. H. Etheridge, Hazelton, Idaho, October 26: "I closed here last night. Seven were restored to their 'first love.' No baptisms. Crowds were small—from ten to thirty people. Only two or three besides the members came regularly. I go to Twin Falls to-day for a two-weeks' siege."

From J. D. Northcut, Orme, Tenn., October 26: "I am again in the field after a rest of two months. I am here in a good meeting. I closed a fine two-weeks' meeting at Huntland with five baptized and one reclaimed. I will begin at West Riverside, McMinnville, on the second Sunday in November."

Believing in the eternal fitness of things, our friend, J. S. Westbrook, is putting Link, Tenn., on the matrimonial map. Here is the latest: "Married, at Link, October 15, seated in a buggy, in the presence of a large crowd of their friends, Mr. Elbert Joel Rowland to Miss Ofer Inez Barber. We wish for them a long and happy life."

On this week's missionary page is a statement from I. B. Bradley, of Dickson, Tenn., relative to the needs of Miss Sarah Andrews, the newest of our missionary workers in Japan. We have watched with interest the work of this noble young woman, and we believe it is worthy of the commendation and support of Christians everywhere.

From J. Perry Hodge, 2905 Tampa Street, Tampa, Fla., October 25: "I wish to assist those of our loyal brethren who preach the pure gospel to devote their whole time to the ministry, and desire that this fact be made known to them through the Gospel Advocate in order that they may get in touch with me at an early date. They may address me at the above place."

Anent F. W. Smith's meeting at Florence, Ala., a daily exchange says: "Much favorable comment has been passed on the forceful, straight-from-the-shoulder manner in which the great truths concerning time and eternity have been presented." Thomas Williams, of the Russell Street congregation, in Nashville, is leading the singing in a most acceptable manner. I. C. Hoskins, as always, is a noble coworker.

From W. S. Long, Jr., Largo, Fla., October 29: "The meeting with the Largo church of Christ began to-day. The future of this meeting is very promising. This is the home of W. A. Cameron. He is one of Florida's most consecrated, hard-working, sacrificing, and God-fearing preachers, and has planted more congregations in the State than any other preacher in it. J. Harry Brown, of Clearwater, is a member of this congregation. He was a roommate of T. B. Larimore in Brother Fanning's school about fifty years ago. Do not neglect to enroll your name for the Gospel Advocate before January 1."

We are glad to note the good work being done in behalf of orphan children at the Potter Orphans' Home and School, Bowling Green, Ky., under the able supervision of M. L. Moore, and heartily second the sentiment of his latest report, which follows: "We are getting on well with the work at the Potter Orphans' Home and School. We now have thirty-two children. Rather strange that there should be sixteen boys and the same number of girls. We have school from eight to twelve daily. With the approach of winter and the high cost of coal and all kinds of food, the opportunity for all who will to have fellowship with us in this great work is increased. We hope the Lord will cause us to see the duty we have so long neglected and lead us to take care of the orphan in his name. Any one desiring to send money for this cause will please send to Hugh Potter, Bowling Green, Ky., Route 4; if you send bundles or supplies of any kind, please send to M. L. Moore, Bowling Green, Ky., Route 4."

They say, that Bailey Brooks, of Tracy City, Tenn., is a mighty good blacksmith, but he is also said to his credit that he "seeks first the kingdom of God," as the following report indicates: "I have just closed a meeting at Gruetli, Tenn. I was in Kentucky at a place called 'Packard.' None of our brethren had ever preached there, but eight were added to Christ. I have held three meetings this year at places where I did not get anything in the way of money; but I enjoy sowing the seed of the kingdom. I am still working with my own hands and preaching somewhere all the time. I have held five meetings this year, in which twenty-three souls were added to the cause of Christ. I married six couples and preached five funerals. The rest of my work has been in the interest of Christ, trying to do all I could for others. It has been very hard to do the work that I have to do in the shop. But Christ and his apostles had a hard time. So I will go on and do the best I can until the call is made to come up higher."

The Lord give us more blacksmiths with the spirit of Bailey Brooks to preach the gospel and to shoe horses in his name!

"In the Snake Country."

BY T. H. ETHERIDGE.

Idaho is a rich farming and mining and stock-raising country covering about eighty thousand square miles—almost exactly double the area of Tennessee. She had nearly four hundred thousand inhabitants in 1910, and has had quite an influx of population in the last five or six years; so we can safely estimate that there are one-half million people in this commonwealth; but, sad to say, there are very few loyal Christians in all this big State. I have heard of but two churches satisfied with "what is written." These are not very near each other. But I have heard of a number of members of the out body scattered by twos and threes in different places. I am here in some mission work, hoping to establish some congregations in Snake River Valley. This is the rich farming section of the State, and there is not a loyal preacher in it known to me. There are a number of "digressives," and the corresponding secretary of the State Missionary Society lives at one of the towns I shall make soon—Twin Falls, in Twin Falls County. I am not to be here long, as I came on my own charges, save that Brother J. M. Thrash, of Olustee, or near Olustee, Okla., paid my way up here; and railroad fare within the State is seven cents the mile, and I cannot stand that long, as I have no income. I shall spend what I have, though. Perhaps I shall get a letter, or possibly a "write up" in the papers, suggesting that I get me an "honest occupation" and stay with this work. Well, I have an occupation that I think is honest—to wit, preaching the gospel; and if any one will convince me that it is not an honest one, I shall quit it. A man cannot come here and answer the calls for work that are being made and stay at home all the time to make a living at some other honest occupation.

I want to stay long enough to get a partial support worked up for some able man here, and have him come, with some church or churches behind him, to fill up "what is lacking," and let him put in his time the year round sounding out the word in this sadly neglected field. I now have calls from half a dozen places where there are but few members and where they do not meet to keep house for our Lord. I shall report the success or failure of the work occasionally under the caption, "In the Snake Country." Brethren, pray that we may succeed in saving many precious souls and that Idaho may be brought to Christ. I am now at Hazelton.

Prepare This for a Bad Cough—It's Fine

Cheaply and Easily Made, but Does the Work Quickly.

The finest cough syrup that money can buy,—costing only about one-fifth as much as ready-made preparations,—can easily be made up at home. The way it takes hold and conquers distressing coughs, throat and chest colds will really make you enthusiastic about it.

Any druggist can supply you with 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth). Pour this into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Shake thoroughly and it is ready for use. The total cost is about 54 cents and gives you a full pint—a family supply—of a most effectual, pleasant tasting remedy. It keeps perfectly.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the inflamed or swollen throat membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough will disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, whooping cough or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiaecol and is known the world over for its prompt healing effect on the throat membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 233 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

WIFE TOO ILL TO WORK

IN BED MOST OF TIME

Her Health Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Indianapolis, Indiana. — "My health was so poor and my constitution so run down that I could not work. I was thin, pale and weak, weighed but 109 pounds and was in bed most of the time. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and five months later I weighed 133 pounds. I do all the housework and washing for eleven and I can truthfully say Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been a godsend to me for I would have been in my grave today but for it." I would tell all women suffering as I was to try your valuable remedy." — Mrs. Wm. Green, 332 S. Addison Street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

There is hardly a neighborhood in this country, wherein some woman has not found health by using this good old-fashioned root and herb remedy.

If there is anything about which you would like special advice, write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

BY LOLA A. BEALL.

When I get grown,
I mean to do
So many things;
Yes, that is true.
For this old world
I mean to explore,
And visit the land
From shore to shore—
When I get grown.

When I get grown,
A change there'll be
In this broad land,
From sea to sea.
I shall stir the hearts,
Of the sinners there,
And teach them how
To obey and care—
When I get grown.

When I get grown,
I mean to go
Into far lands
Of sin and woe;
I shall teach the heathen
About our God,
And how to live
While upon this sod—
When I get grown.

I shall stir the hearts,
With my beautiful songs,
Of all the people
As I pass along.
So then they will think
Of heaven above,
The Father and Son
And the holy love—
When I get grown.

When I get grown,
I shall be so wise;
All the people of earth
Shall be hypnotized
With my great knowledge
Of love divine,
And there'll be no man
I shall leave behind—
When I get grown.

When I get grown,
I shall visit the land
Where Christ once stood
With uplifted hands;
I shall cross through Egypt
Into Gallilee,
And there the truest
Of women I'll be—
When I get grown.

When I get grown,
On Jordan's banks
I mean to kneel
And give my thanks
To our dear Father
Who lives above
For cleansing me
With his holy love—
When I get grown.

What They All Say.

A few extracts from letters of club members will give you some idea of the many attractive features of the Gospel Advocate Piano Club and will explain why it is so popular. Here are a few samples taken from the correspondence at random:

I certainly am enjoying my piano. I couldn't have gotten any better piano in Decatur than the one I got from you if I had paid one hundred and fifty dollars more than this one cost me.—Mrs. F. B.

It is a beauty, and we are delighted with it. The tone is perfect. Your club is a grand thing.—Mrs. E. P. M.

I am perfectly delighted with it; and every one that has heard it, or has played on it, says they have never heard a finer-toned one. I can observe such a vast difference between this one and others that are in this community that have been placed by agents. Every one, even those who know nothing about music, can tell the superiority of this piano over others.—Mrs. J. R.

We like it mighty well. The tone is full and clear, and the smooth and glossy finish is certainly superb. We think it much better than we could have done here for the money.—Mr. O. F. P.

The piano has come, and it is everything I could wish it to be. The tone is so soft and mellow it sounds more like a harp. The bass notes are remarkably full and round; the case is specially beautiful. I am entirely delighted with it. I never saw a more perfect instrument.—Mrs. W. J. B.

Almost every letter received from club members contains similar expressions of appreciation. The advertising manager of the Gospel Advocate cordially invites you to write for your copy of the club booklet and catalogue, which explain the big saving in price, the convenient terms, the superior quality and durability of the instruments, the protective guarantees and other attractive features of the club. Address the Associated Piano Clubs, Gospel Advocate Department, Atlanta, Georgia.

Courage.

In presence of God's call let your words be: "Perish mere human expediency; perish the counting of the cost; the living by sight—all this miserable coquetting and compromising with error in the vain hope of preserving the truth." So only can you be a man indeed; so only can you be a true woman. Onward, like Abram, even though it be from the Father's house; onward, even though it be into a strange country; onward, even though it be into dark circumstances; onward, even though famine surround thee there; onward, even though it be still farther down into some Egypt; and leave the consequences with God. For underneath are the Everlasting Arms.—F. C. EWER.

Rheumatism Conquered.

R. L. Eastman, secretary Nashville Board of Trade, Nashville, Tenn., writes: "My attention was called to your remedy, 'Renwar,' for rheumatic troubles. I gave it a trial and have been permanently relieved. It is with pleasure I indorse the merits of 'Renwar' for rheumatism."

"Renwar," the new, scientific remedy, relieves quickly and permanently rheumatism, by removing from the blood the cause of the trouble—uric acid. Many wonderful cures of cases of long standing are being reported. If you suffer from rheumatism, you cannot afford to miss this opportunity to be well again. "Renwar" is sold by all druggists (price, fifty cents per bottle), or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price. Warner Drug Company, Nashville, Tenn.

Stafford.

Little Dollie Dimple, the sweet and cheery daughter of Brother and Sister Joseph E. and Annie L. Stafford, was born on December 1, 1908, and died on October 4, 1916, at 4:50 A.M. She remained only seven years, ten months, and three days in her earthly home; but she was a joy and sunshine to the family, a bright beam and a delight in the Sunday school of the church of Christ at Cookeville, Tenn. And when on that October morn angels came and Dollie Dimple went home to Jesus with them, a sweeter child or gentler spirit never entered the pearly gates. We buried her little body beneath the maples and left it resting under a bank of autumn flowers.

L. J. JACKSON.

Morris.

After suffering three weeks with typhoid fever, Grover Adlee Morris gave up the ghost at 10:30 P.M., October 12, 1916, at a hospital in El Paso, Texas. He was twenty-three years, eleven months, and nine days of age at death, had been married three years and five months, and was a Christian three years. He was by nature modest, unassuming, and quiet in manner of life. He lived a clean, honest, and upright life. His departure occasioned much sorrow on the part of his wife, relatives, the church, and friends. It is very sad to see one entering into real usefulness cut down. We know no reason why he should not be happy now and henceforth. We esteemed him as a Christian gentleman who was true to his convictions, a friend of the Lord and his people, and a great lover of mother and his home. Our deepest sympathy is extended to his Christian wife and loved ones. J. W. DUNN.

Martin.

On October 12, 1916, Brother W. R. Martin departed this life at the home of his mother-in-law, Sister Myers, in Calloway County, Ky., four miles northwest of Murray. Brother Martin was born in Maury County, Tenn., about forty-five years ago. He became a Christian at the age of fifteen, and lived a faithful life in the service of the Master until the Lord saw fit to gather him home. Brother Martin was an evangelistic singer for a number of years and rendered a greatly appreciated service. He was in the civil service for a period of years in his latter life after his health began to fail. He suffered with acute indigestion for a time, and finally this drifted into tubercular trouble, and he was soon called into eternity. Burial service was held by the writer, and the remains were laid to rest near the home where he died. The message announcing the death of our beloved brother will be received with much sorrow by a great concourse of brethren who loved him. May the comforts of our Savior's love abide continually with Sister Martin, who so patiently and tenderly ministered to our brother's wants until the last. F. O. HOWELL.

Hoogendoorn.

The death angel visited the community of Elmwood, Okla., on September 14, 1916, and claimed for its victim old Brother Garrett Hoogendoorn. He was born in Holland on June 18, 1844. In 1870 he was married to Alberta Schippers. She departed this life several years ago. To this union four children were born—Jacob, Mary, John, and Garrett—all of whom survive him. He was born into the kingdom of Christ on May 9, 1911, and lived a faithful member until death. His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at South Flat in the presence of a large crowd. The writer spoke words of comfort to the bereaved ones and emphasized the importance of preparing for this separation while living. It was my privilege to know him nearly two years, as we met together for worship on Lord's days at Garrett Schoolhouse. During these two years of our acquaintance not one word did I ever hear uttered against him by saint or sinner. The church has lost one of its faithful members here on earth, the children have lost a loving father, and the community has lost one of its best citizens.

H. A. WHITEFIELD.

Lester.

Little Rachel Lester, infant daughter of George and Stella Lester, was born into the earthly home of her parents on August 14, 1914, and was transplanted on June 27, 1916, from the bosom of loving care and devotion to that better and far more excellent place of abode where all her earthly losses shall be compensated her a hundredfold through the wonderful and perfect love of God. She is survived by father, mother, three sisters, two brothers, and a number of other relatives who are grieved because of her departure. We loved her much, very much, yet we know that God loves her infinitely more; and while our hearts are heavy almost to breaking, we realize fully that our loss is her eternal gain; and this strengthening and comforting assurance prevents our grief from becoming despair. Little Rachel was an unusually bright and happy baby, but was ever frail in body, and this fact constituted her the especial charge of each member of her family; consequently they considered her welfare in all things and loved her accordingly. This being true, the gloom and sadness which necessarily follow the sudden removal of a ray of sunshine from our homes and lives has, if possible, been intensified, but (God's word being true) we know that it shines on with greater brilliancy and splendor in the presence of Father and Son. Blessed be the name of the Lord!

AUNT VIRDA.

Arendale.

Miss Elsie Arendale, daughter of the late Joseph B. and Mrs. Belle Arendale, of Bridgeport, Ala., died of tuberculosis, in New Mexico, on April 24, 1916. Walter and Helen Arendale, a younger brother and sister, who went West with Elsie to take care of her, returned with the corpse. On arriving here on Friday night, April 28, kind friends and relatives met them at the train. The floral offerings were many and beautiful. The burial took place on Saturday morning, at Rocky Springs Cemetery, funeral services being conducted by Brother Jeruigan. In the fall of 1906, while teaching here in Alatennga College, Brother Claus and his wife and I went out to Rocky Springs one Sunday morning, when Brother Claus told the "old, old story" in his own noble way. After the sermon Elsie Arendale made the confession, and a few days later she was buried with Christ in baptism by Brother Claus. Since then I had been intimately associated with Elsie, and I always found her pure, true, sweet, modest, kind-hearted—a faithful follower of Jesus. Elsie was a beautiful girl about twenty-three or twenty-four years old. It is heart-rending to her mother, I know, for it has only been about two years since her husband died; and Irene, a younger sister, died in 1915. But God has called her higher, and we must bow in humble submission to his will.

(Miss) MATTIE HOOPER.

Lee.

The East Point (Ga.) congregation has suffered the loss of one of its most beloved, devoted, and consecrated sisters. Sister Mary Lee, wife of Elder J. M. Lee, passed into the unseen world on October 19, 1916, after having been confined to her bed for about three months. The human tongue cannot express the love that we all had for this sister. She was loved by both the church and them that are without. When Brother S. H. Hall pitched his tent here about five years ago, Brother and Sister Lee were among the first that took their stand on the Bible; and this sister never did waver, but was "faithful unto death." She was, like Dorcas, "full of good works and almsdeeds." She set an example for the younger sisters in meekness, love, and humility. When the East Point church house was being built, this sister would go there at night and hold the light for her husband to see how to drive the nails. She was instrumental in raising money to help pay for the church building. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Cook, and was born in Campbell County in 1880. She has seven sisters and three brothers now living, some of whom are members of the Christian Church, and others of the church of Christ. She has a boy about fourteen years old, who was baptized into Christ this summer. Her husband is elder in the church and a consecrated Christian. Her body was brought into the church house and the writer conducted the funeral service. It was an inspiration to him to speak over the dead body of one of God's saints. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." W. C. GRAVES.

The True Comforter.

To comfort, in the highest sense, is a prerogative of God himself. The Father of our blessed Lord is "the God of all comfort;" our Lord Jesus Christ, with the Father, is implored by the apostle to "comfort our hearts;" and God the Holy Ghost bears the title of "the Comforter." Thus the source and fountain of comfort is none other than the Triune God. The derivation of the word sufficiently indicates that to comfort is not merely to soothe and to console, but "to strengthen, to invigorate." If we in any degree communicate strength or vigor to others, most assuredly it can only be by helping them to draw nearer to the true Giver of both.—T. V. Fosbery.

Boils Disappear.

Away back in 1820 a North Carolina physician compounded an ointment for treating boils and other affections of the skin. So successfully did this preparation work that its fame soon spread. To-day it will be found in a vast number of homes. If you suffer from boils, carbuncles, or other skin eruptions, ask your druggist for a twenty-five-cent box of Gray's Ointment. It is also an effective protection against blood poison resulting from abrasions of the skin, cuts, sores, bruises, burns, etc. If your druggist does not sell Gray's Ointment, send us his name and we will send you a generous free sample, postpaid. Address W. F. Gray & Company, 818 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out; to feel clean inside—no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism, or gassy, acid stomach—you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify, and freshen the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless except a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel—like you felt before your blood, nerves, and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons—begin this treatment, and, above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening, and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast act on the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels.

Salts Fine For Aching Kidneys

We Eat Too Much Meat Which Clogs Kidneys, Then the Back Hurts.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness, and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean; and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless, inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Relief in Pulmonary Or Throat Troubles depends largely on the sufferer's ability to upbuild a weakened system, and thus hasten a return of normal body functions.

In this effort much depends on fresh air—night and day—and rest and good food. The patient should refrain from work that overtaxes, and all sanitary precautions should be taken. These commonsense measures do not always achieve the desired results unless aided by proper medication.

It is here that Eckman's Alternative has evidenced its worth, for in many cases it has effected lasting benefit. And often such troubles seem to yield to it.

In no case is its use attended with possible harm, since it contains no poisonous or habit-forming drugs. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct. Booklet containing information of value and references sent upon request.

The Master's Vineyard

Colorado.

Olathe, October 12.—The debate on instrumental music between Brother E. C. Fuqua, of the church of Christ, and the pastor of the Christian Church is a thing of the past. This makes the third debate Brother Fuqua has held since he moved to the Western Slope, and we have learned that the cause of truth is always safe in his hands. This debate was held at Delta, a town of about three thousand people. Brother Fuqua recently held a tent meeting in the town, and some of the Christian Church people became dissatisfied with the organ and insisted on their pastor discussing the subject with Brother Fuqua. After the third night it became evident that the Christian Church wanted the debate to close, which it did on the fourth night. The leaders in the Christian Church promised to use their influence to have the organ rolled out of the church, and a committee of four was appointed from each church to consider plans for the union of the two peoples. At the meeting of the committee one of their elders served notice on them that, if the organ did not go out, he was going out. The other elders said they were between two fires. Some of the congregation said they were going out if the organ did not, and some said they were going out if it did; but the leaders promised to do their best to remove the organ, if that would bring about unity between the two peoples. We have only a few members at Delta, perhaps ten or twelve, and they are poor people; consequently Brother Fuqua did not receive a dollar for either the meeting or debate, but, on the other hand, he was out thirty or forty dollars for expenses; but they have promised to help pay the expense as soon as they can. The little congregation at Olathe is getting along nicely. The appeal we made recently in behalf of Brother Fuqua seems to have met with little or no response, and unless some help comes soon from some source we fear he will be compelled to quit this, the most needy of all mission fields. He is getting only about thirty-five dollars per month, and he has had to pay thirteen dollars per month for a small three-room house (including water and lights); so you see there is not much left for a family of three to live on. Consequently he has been running gradually behind until he owes over three hundred dollars. In almost twenty-five years' experience in the church of Christ, I have never met a more able, earnest, and devoted preacher of the gospel than he. Neither have I ever met any one that is making greater sacrifice and suffering greater hardships and privation, that others may have the gospel preached to them. Some churches in Tennessee and Kentucky have asked Brother Fuqua to hold some meetings for them this fall, and he is now engaged in that work. If we had our way, he would not have been permitted to leave here for one week, as this valley needs ten such preachers all the time, and he seems to be the only man in the broth-hood that will make the sacrifice necessary to labor in such a field.—J. I. Foster.

Georgia.

Rome, October 25.—The work here grows. At each service our attendance is better and the interest good. On Monday night we attended a sectarian meeting in North Rome and distributed some literature. We went back last night, and, as expected, the preacher took his text on the "Campbellites." After he had finished, I asked the privilege to talk. He refused and threatened to have us arrested. Several begged me to return and begin a meeting. One man of the world offered us a lot for a tent. This work must be done. Surely there are churches that will respond to the work. I have received only sixteen dollars and fifty cents this month in the way of support. Let us keep this before the churches, so that a man may stay right here until the work can be made self-supporting. There are just a few here that will sacrifice, and their help is not sufficient. After the preacher dismissed the audience, I got out on the street and stopped him and told him he surely could not think his course was such as to convince people that his teaching was safe. We pray that some lovers of this work will respond to this call.—John Hayes.

Kentucky.

Murray, October 23.—My last meeting for the season was held in a schoolhouse south of Poplar Bluff, Mo. This was a mission point, there never having been a gospel meeting held in that side of the county. Three were baptized and a good foundation laid for future work. Brother Larimore is now with the church at Murray. All who know him know that we are having a spiritual feast.—David Thompson.

Schochoh, October 23.—The meeting at this place, conducted by Brother J. Paul Sladen, embracing three Lord's days, closed to-day at the water, with eight souls added by obedience to the gospel, others convinced of the way, and the church much edified and built up in the Christian hope. Brother Slayden believes the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and preaches it with all the power of his soul without fear or favor.—J. M. Rutherford.

Fairview, October 23.—Brother John T. Smithson has just closed a fifteen-days' meeting at Little River, with six to obey the gospel—four the last day. The first week Brother Smithson preached to the church, his theme being "Preach the Word;" and he failed not to "declare the whole counsel of God." He is now in a meeting at Bluff Springs; and Brother Richard McRae, of Hopkinsville, filled his place last Sunday at Little River. On the previous Sunday Brother Thomas D. Rose, of Smithville, made a good talk to that congregation. Brother Hughlin Pendergrass has gone to Dayton, Ohio. People here are drunk on ignorance. It seems that many never read the word of God.—C. B. Brewer.

Sugar Grove, October 23.—This is the second week of the meeting at this place. The attention, interest, and attendance are fairly good. There has been one confession. Our meeting at Lynchburg, Tenn., closed with fairly good interest, but no additions. On the first Lord's-day morning in October Brother G. P. Bowser spoke for the Jackson Street Church, in Nashville; Brother Smalling preached at night. I spoke there on the second Lord's day, morning and night. I am informed that the new chapel and school building will be ready for services by the second Lord's day in November. At that time all who are friends to a good cause and work are invited to be present. Brethren Black, Elliston, Campbell, and others need to be commended for their work on the building; Brethren A. M. Burton, S. P. Pittman, D. Lipscomb, and other white brethren and sisters who have taken the financial lead in this good and much-needed work should be long remembered, and never forgotten, by us; and Sister Tuggle should be held in high appreciation by all. Praise the Lord for sending us the good, faithful workers!—S. W. Womack (colored).

Missouri.

St. Louis, 4019 Botanical Avenue, October 23.—We now have Brother T. J. Bonner with us permanently. We are sure to build up the cause in St. Louis. We have had some new people out every Lord's day since Brother Bonner came. Let everybody remember to send us names and addresses of friends and relatives in the city, that we may look them up and try to enlist them in the work. Pray for us and our efforts in this city.—Lottie Johnson.

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine. Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots fashish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

Hines-Wade Debate.

BY W. L. WARREN.

This discussion took place at Warren's Mill Church (Ghstrap, Ky.) on September 12-15, between Elder J. W. Wade, Missionary Baptist, and J. L. Hines, Christian. The general church propositions were discussed. Elder Wade led in the discussion the first two days, arguing that the tabernacle and temple were types of the church. Brother Hines granted this, but contended that they were not types of the Missionary Baptist Church. He introduced, on the establishing of the church, Dan. 2: 44; Matt. 16: 18; Zach. 6: 12, 13; Isa. 7: 14; 9: 6, 7; Luke 1: 26; 2: 11; and set up his church in Galilee of Matt. 4: 18-20. When pressed hard for the power, he moved it to the mount of transfiguration. On hereditary total depravity, Elder Wade quoted the following: Isa. 1: 5-10 [Brother Hines showed that that was God's children]; Job 14: 4; Ps. 51: 5; 58: 3; all of which were turned against him with telling effect. The doctrines of the Missionary Baptists were completely sifted by Brother Hines. Brother Hines led the last two days and made a fine impression for the truth.

This debate was held about four miles from Cromwell, Ky., where Brother Hines met Elder J. H. Tow, Missionary Baptist, on the same propositions. Brother T. D. Willis moderated for Brother Hines; Elder John Wheeler, for Elder Wade.

Stubblefield-Cayce Debate.

BY W. HALLIDAY PRICE.

Beginning on Monday, October 9, and continuing four days, there was a religious debate at Mount Moriah Baptist Church, seven miles south of Calvert City, Ky., between C. N. Stubblefield (Christian), of Paducah, Ky., and C. H. Cayce (Primitive Baptist), of Martin, Tenn. For two days Cayce affirmed that alien sinners receive eternal life without conditions on their part; and the following two days Stubblefield affirmed that faith, repentance, confession, and baptism are conditions of salvation to the alien sinner. Cayce is a pretty fair debater, but he does and says some things that one would hardly expect from a man of his ability and standing among his people. Brother Stubblefield is a good debater and did fine work in this discussion, and the brethren were highly pleased with his efforts. The crowds were estimated at anywhere from seven hundred to one thousand each day, and great interest was manifested and good order prevailed throughout the discussion. There were fourteen Christian preachers present and several Baptist ministers in attendance. The good people of the community entertained the visitors hospitably and all seemed to enjoy the stay and the debate very much. A Baptist minister by the name of Phillips moderated for Brother Cayce, and the writer served in that capacity for Brother Stubblefield.

The Sin of Neglect.

BY F. E. EXUM.

There is, perhaps, no sin in the world so widespread or so easy to commit as the sin of neglect; in fact, this sin is often committed by not doing anything at all.

The Savior said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.) Salvation is offered through obedience to the gospel of Christ. Paul says: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." (Rom 1: 16.) Again, he says: "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." (I Cor. 1: 21.) Now, suppose that, instead of reading and studying the word of God, going to church to worship God and hear the gospel preached, you just simply stay at home and read the news, do as you please, and take things easy. You have not committed any crime against the law of the land or against your neighbor. O, no! But what have you done? In practically doing nothing you have committed the sin of neglect. You have neglected your duty toward your Creator. Paul says: "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" There is no escape.

It is so easy to neglect. You can neglect to hear the gospel; you can go where it is preached and then neglect to listen to it; you can listen to it and then neglect to obey it. The Savior spoke a parable to teach us against the sin of neglect, saying: "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." (Matt. 25: 1-4.) Now why were five of these virgins wise and five foolish? Simply because five of them neglected to take oil in their vessels with their lamps. And you will remember that because of this neglect, when the bridegroom came, they were unprepared to meet him, and the door of the bridal chamber was shut and they were left on the outside. To begin with, these ten virgins were all on an equal footing; they all had lamps, and they all had vessels in which to carry oil for their lamps, and equal opportunity to secure oil; but the five wise virgins took advantage of the time in which they could prepare to meet the bridegroom and make preparation, while the other five neglected their opportunity until it was too late. In this parable are represented the two great classes of humanity to-day—those who are preparing to stand before God in judgment and those who are neglecting to make such preparation. We are, as it were, in a great training school; and if at the end of this life we are not prepared to stand before the judgment bar of God, it will be because we have neglected our opportunities.

In failing to do works of righteousness, things that will make the world better, we commit the sin of neglect. All who will can live "soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world."

If You Can Say.

If you can say at close of day
 You've helped a chap along—
 Some weary one along life's way
 Who somehow started wrong;
 If he has heard a cheering word,
 As on his way he went,
 Which has a nobler impulse stirred,
 Count thou that day well spent.

If you have won at set of sun
 A smile on some one's face,
 Who, losing in the race he's run,
 Finds life a dreary place;
 If you can cheer a heart so drear
 That all the world seems sad,
 And bid it hope instead of fear,
 'Tis more than gold, my lad.

Have Dark Hair and Look Young

Nobody Can Tell When You Darken
Gray, Faded Hair With Sage Tea.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy, and abundant with a brew of sage tea and sulphur. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded, or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about fifty cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known down-town druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. It is so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears. After another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft, and abundant.

Three pages are given to stories of an entertaining and elevating character and articles of an educational nature, by gifted and well-informed writers; strikingly illustrated by photo-engravings and line drawings; and one page is devoted to a clear and concise presentation of the Sunday-school lesson, historically and exegetically, by A. CHURCH NEWS

Oklahoma.

Stigler, October 20.—The meeting at Whitewright, Texas, continued for three weeks and was considered a great success, notwithstanding the fact that it was a very busy season of the year, being in the midst of cotton gathering. So every one was busy, the farmers, merchants, bankers, and all. We had a great meeting. Three were baptized and one took membership. I learned to love the brethren at Whitewright. They know how to care for a preacher's wife in a financial way. I will teach a singing school there in February. I went from there to Dallas. While in Dallas I had the pleasure of attending the meeting at Oak Cliff Church, conducted by Brother G. A. Dunn, of Houston, Texas. Brother Dunn is a great preacher and they had a fine meeting. I also met Brother J. S. Dunn, the regular minister at Oak Cliff. It was a real treat to meet with these brethren and talk with them. Brother J. S. Dunn is certainly loved and appreciated by his home church. On Sunday morning, October 15, I made my way to the home of Brother L. S. White, he having telephoned me while I was at ices, and the elders asked me to preach at Pearl and Bryan Streets Church on Sunday night. I found Brother White sick in bed and not able to attend church. I attended the morning services and the elders asked me to preach at the morning services. There was a large audience present. The services were almost completely rained out on Sunday night; however, we had a few present, and I made a talk for them. It was a pleasure indeed to meet with these brethren and to see the zeal manifested by them in the interest of the Master. The work there is progressing nicely. Large attendance and additions at almost every service. The contribution ranges from thirty-five dollars to one hundred dollars every Lord's day. They love Brother White and appreciate his services very much. On Sunday afternoon I visited Brother White and had a very pleasant talk with him. I spent the night with Brother Kitching, one of the elders, and I think that I have never met a more godly man and consecrated Christian. His good wife and daughter are devoted Christians and treated me very kindly. I also had a talk with Brother Vickery, another elder of the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church. He seems to be a consecrated Christian and very much interested in the work of the Lord. On Monday morning I visited Dr. J. M. Jones and had a long talk with him, which was appreciated very much. After talking with Dr. Jones, I next visited B. F. Cullom, the County Clerk, and had a talk with him, which was very interesting indeed. I spent Monday night with Brother J. B. Nelson, who is now living at Irving, near Dallas. I met Brother Nelson some eight years ago, and have been associated with him a great deal since that time, and have learned to love him very dearly; so it was indeed a great pleasure for me to have the opportunity of being in his home again after an absence of eight years. On Tuesday I made my way to Celeste, where I preached on Tuesday night. I was glad to meet with the brethren at Celeste. Some eight or ten of the brethren came down from Whitewright and spent the time with me at Celeste. I returned home on Wednesday and will preach at Konawa, Okla., Sunday. My trip to Texas has been very profitable to me in many ways. May God bless the faithful, and may he, in his goodness and mercy, give us faith, strength, and courage to fight for a clean pulpit and a clean pew.—W. W. Slater.

Tennessee.

Red Boiling Springs, October 22.—On October 8 Brother J. U. Patterson began a meeting with the church at Leonard. Eight were baptized and two reclaimed. Outsiders were greatly stirred and members much edified. The audiences were large and very attentive the last day and night of the meeting.—Ira Davis.

Dunlap, October 22.—I have just closed a singing school here on the mountain, at Dunlap mines. I have preached a few sermons and baptized nine persons. I found enough members to establish a congregation of about twenty-two persons. They are having Bible classes and meeting on the first day of the week.—J. C. Mosley.

College Grove, October 21.—Brother Charley Taylor began a tent meeting at this place on Thursday evening before the third Lord's day in September, which closed with the afternoon service on the fourth Lord's day. There were no additions. One was restored. Brother Taylor failed not to declare "the whole counsel of God," and we can see that the seed were indeed sown. There had been no preaching done by our brethren at this place since Brother Grant held a meeting here some twenty years ago, until this year. Brother W. T. Boaz, through the courtesy of the Presbyterians, was permitted to preach in their church house in the spring; afterwards Brother Paul Slayden preached twice, and Brother Gid Riggs, of California, once, at the same place. Brother Taylor announced at the close of his meeting that he would be back next September and hold a month's meeting. While we have great opposition here, we hope to some day establish a loyal congregation.—R. P. Thurman.

West Nashville, Route 12, October 18.—My meeting at Smyrna Church, near Cookeville, continued thirteen days and resulted in five baptisms. Then for eight days I engaged in a meeting with the Fairview brethren, in Putnam County, which resulted in four baptisms and one from the Presbyterians who had been immersed. My next meeting, at Bull Run, Davidson County, continued eight days, with five baptized. After this I engaged in two meetings in Warren County—one at Stewart, which lasted eight days, with two baptized and one from the Baptists; the other at Cherry Springs, which continued eight days, with ten baptized and two restored. At present I am engaged in a meeting in Bell's Bend, Davidson County, with five baptisms to date. For the most part, throughout these meetings we had good crowds and good interest, and we trust much good was done in the name of the Master.—George W. Graves.

Texas.

Temple, October 23.—I am on my way home (Lometa) from Ennis, where I preached yesterday. I found a good church in Ennis, where Brother Wilbur White has done good work in recent months. I am to preach in Weatherford on November 5. Brother D. W. Nichol fills my place at home in my absence.—Ben West.

Kilgore, October 21.—My protracted-meeting work for the year has ended. I have held eleven meetings. A goodly number have been added to the "one body" under my feeble efforts. I am to enter the East Texas Training School at Troup, on November 1, to better prepare myself for the ministry. I would like to correspond with congregations within one hundred miles of Troup that desire monthly preaching. I would also like to arrange several meetings with congregations anywhere for next summer. Address me at Troup, Texas.—John W. Hedge.

Colorado, October 18.—This has been a very busy year with me. In February last I returned to Mexico, hoping to be able to take up my work there. I held a twenty-days' meeting at Chama, Tamaulipas, in which I baptized eight; twelve days at Columbus, Tamaulipas, with three baptized. By that time the excitement about the United States Army being in Mexico began running so high that it was impossible to hold meetings. The whole talk of both Americans and Mexicans was intervention and war. I preached at a few places, but could not hold protracted meetings. Finally we were warned by the United States authorities to get out of Mexico. I crossed the border into United States territory at Laredo, Texas, on June 12. During the last six weeks I was in Mexico there were few letters or other mail that got into or out of that country. My family, who were at Sterling, Texas, had not heard from me in twenty days when I crossed the border. To add to my difficulties, I was robbed of all my money by pickpockets at Tampico, Mexico, as I was boarding the train to come out. Fortunately, they did not get my railroad ticket. Since coming out of Mexico, I have held meetings as follows: At Dunn, Texas, with six baptized; Ira, five baptized; Hermleigh, eight baptized; Trent, twenty-two baptized; Post, eight baptized; Hope, N. M., thirty-five baptized. The Lord willing, I shall yet hold meetings this year at Colorado, Lorraine, Buford, and Roscoe, all in Texas. I have received one hundred and nineteen calls for meetings during 1917. I cannot hold more than twenty of them. The harvest is ripe, but the laborers are few.—W. A. Schultz.

Willis-Taylor Debate.

BY T. D. WILLIS.

This debate was held at Magan, Ohio County, Ky., beginning on September 26 and continuing four days. The church propositions were discussed, each affirming identity in name, origin, doctrine, and practice. The debate was largely attended and there was good interest and attention throughout. J. L. Hines, of Central City, moderated for me and did his work well. I had heard Taylor in two debates and had moderated in one; therefore I knew his line of argument. As Taylor is one of the leading preachers in the Missionary Baptist Church, I want the Gospel Advocate readers to see how confused and contradictory were his answers to some plain and pointed questions:

"Give the exact day the Missionary Baptist Church was established on the earth?" "Matt. 4: 18."

"Who established the Missionary Baptist Church?" "Christ."

"Is the term, 'Missionary Baptist Church,' in the Bible?" "No."

"Name one blessing inside of the Missionary Baptist Church that cannot be had on the outside, that is eternal in nature?" "Every blessing—baptism, Lord's Supper, etc."

"When was the New Testament church established, and by whom?" "Matt. 4: 18."

"Is it not a fact that all of God's children belong to the New Testament church? If so, is the Missionary Baptist Church that church?" "No."

"Are all the members of Christ's body members of the Missionary Baptist Church?" "Yes, like the church at Corinth."

"Is the Missionary Baptist Church essential to the saving of the soul? If so, in what way?" "No."

"Is the church Christ's bride? If so, what name should she wear, and why?" "No, not the earthly church—not married."

"Does your wife wear your name, and why?" "Yes, but not my title [Rev.]."

"Can a man be a Missionary Baptist preacher who is not a member of a Missionary Baptist Church?" "Yes, John only."

"Was John a Missionary Baptist preacher?" "Yes."

"Is a Baptist one who baptizes?" "Yes, and one baptized."

"Was Christ a Baptist?" "Yes."

"Can a man be a member of the church of Christ without being a Baptist?" "No."

"Can he be a Christian without being a Baptist?" "Yes."

"What makes him a Christian?" "Faith."

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

The Problem of Diabetes.

Diabetes results from a failure to assimilate food taken. The cause of the failure is unknown. The result of the failure is an excess of sugar in the blood and a gradual wasting away of flesh even when the appetite may remain good. Most physicians admit that they have no certain and sure treatment for diabetes.

This is rather hard on the patient, who usually prefers to take any sort of an experimental treatment rather than make no effort to get well. No one likes to be condemned to death.

Yet many people do recover from diabetes; and not a few of them attribute their recovery to the use of Warner's Safe Diabetes Remedy, which preparation has been on the market for forty years. Had it not proven efficient in restoring patients afflicted with diabetes to health again, it would long since have passed away and have been forgotten; on the contrary, it is on the market everywhere, and is very extensively used with satisfactory results. A formula which has been tried and tested for forty years is well worth consideration by any sufferer from diabetes.

The preparation is made from herbs and other ingredients of such character as to be harmless. If you suffer from this trouble, send for free sample of Warner's Safe Diabetes Remedy, or secure a bottle from your druggist.

Calomel Makes You Sick, Ugh!

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Better Than Calomel and Cannot Salivate.

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury—quick-silver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into your bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated, and all knocked out, and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel, just remember that your druggist sells for fifty cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and cannot salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day; it loses you a day's work. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children, because it is perfectly harmless and does not gripe.

"Are Primitive and General Baptists saved?" "If trusting."

"Has a saved man a right to the Lord's table?" "No, not unless a member of the church."

"Does it not take more than the gospel to make a Baptist?" "Yes."

"Name one essential thing that separates you from other Baptists." "Means and missions."

"Did you pray before you repented?" "When I repented."

"Is it right to be baptized?" "Yes."

"Can you be saved without doing right?" "Yes—without baptism."

"Can any one get into the Baptist Church without being baptized?" "No."

"Can any one get into the kingdom of heaven without being baptized?" "Yes."

"EDIFYING AS THE NEED MAY BE"

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Lightening the Ship.

It has been said that "the ship is safe in the water so long as the water is not in the ship." So the Christian is safe in the world if the world is not in the Christian. In the journey of life it is often necessary to lighten the ship; for our wealth, our cares, our treasures may become burdens and sink us. Paul, the master seaman, urged Christians to "lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us."

In the Account of the Voyage to Rome.

Can we not learn a fruitful lesson from the fact that when the danger was imminent they threw the freight overboard? There are a multitude of things of value in themselves which are, nevertheless, a handicap in life's voyage; and to the one whom they burden it is not always plain that they should be thrown out. It requires insight to see what is of vital importance and what may be profitably neglected. What not to do is often of as great importance as what to do. "The art of life is to attend to the things which matter and to neglect the rest." This is a wise saying. A study of Martha's way and Mary's way will help. Likewise the following two passages will show some things that should be dispensed with: (1) "Casting all your anxiety upon him, because he careth for you." (1 Pet. 5: 7.) (2) "Lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." (Heb. 12: 1.)

When We Need an Anchor.

Paul was the safe leader on this voyage because he had prepared himself for leadership. His prayer prevailed because he had fulfilled the conditions of profitable prayer. He was full of courage and good cheer because he had lived a life of trust in God. How are you preparing for emergencies in your life and in the lives of others?

When the waves of trouble threaten our destruction, we need an anchor. When we are solicited to go into sin, we need an anchor. When we are tempted to drift with the tide of worldliness, we need an anchor. Paul says: "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil." (Heb. 6: 19.) But there are times when we need to raise the anchors and to hoist the mainsail. When God says, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward," one sail is worth more than four anchors.

How Paul Came to Rome.

Paul had long hoped and prayed that he might preach the gospel in Rome, but the way had not opened for him; at last, after a long imprisonment at Cesarea and a long and perilous sea journey, he reached Rome a prisoner. This was not the way he had himself planned to come, but it proved a far better way for his great object of making known the gospel. Had he come to Rome a free man, he never could have reached the Roman legions and Caesar's household. (Phil. 4: 22.) In Phil. 1: 12, 13 he recognizes this fact: "Now I would have you know, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the progress of the gospel; so that my bonds became manifest in Christ throughout the whole prætorian guard, and to all the rest." And this reminds us of the blessed fact that "God cannot always be traced, but he can always be trusted."

While Paul was pressed in spirit, his soul filled with a sense of loneliness, the trying events through which he had passed in the last two years resting a depressing burden upon him, like a sudden sunburst from behind the clouds came the unexpected meeting of friends at the Appil Forum. The horse will enjoy his feed while his mate is dying in the next stall. But a man can weep with those that weep and rejoice with those that rejoice, and in so doing be a benediction. "A word in due season, how good is it!" (Prov. 15: 23.)

The Answer of a Good Conscience.

Dr. Schaff defines "conscience" thus: "'Conscience' is the inborn sense of right and wrong, the moral law written on our hearts, which judges of the moral character of our motives and actions, and approves or censures, condemns or justifies us accordingly." The Scriptures teach that one's conscience may be weakened (1 Cor. 8: 12); wounded (1 Cor. 8: 12); made evil (Heb. 10: 22); become a source of joy (2 Cor. 1: 12); defiled (Tit. 1: 15); seared (1 Tim. 4: 2); become a witness for us (Rom. 9: 1); a witness against us (John 8: 9); made good (1 Pet. 3: 16).

In the matter of conscience, it was Felix before Paul rather than Paul before Felix; for Felix trembled, while Paul's conduct was one of perfect repose, the pose of a man with a conscience void of offense toward God and toward man. Agrippa, Bernice, and Festus went their way, little realizing that they had been at the parting of the roads which meant destiny for them. Felix had said, "Go thy way." Agrippa had said, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian;" Festus had said, "Thou art mad." Each one decided against Christ. None of these gave the answer of a good conscience.

Sometimes a man's conscience does not trouble him because it is hardened. The story is told of how a minister had just finished his sermon, and the air still quivered with his burning words. But the people sat erect, disturbed, embarrassed. "Is there," the preacher asked, "one here in whose breast these words strike like barbed arrow for the truth that is in them?" And he sat down. "That was hard on John," said old James; "but he deserves it every word." "A blow from the shoulder for James," said old John. "Time he got one, too." But the little saint hurried home and knelt by her little bed and cried aloud in her anguish; "My God, have mercy upon me!"

And the troubled conscience of the little saint was the only good fruit of the sermon.

A Little Homily on Sacrifice.

Sacrifices are of two kinds; propitiatory and thank offering; atonement and acknowledgment. Christ has made the first; we are to make the second.

Mary broke her alabaster box of very precious ointment and poured it on the Master's head. What is your alabaster box? Is it time, money, talent, intellect, service, love? Let us remember that Christ deserves the best we have.

The psalmist said: "The sacrifices of God are a broken heart; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."

The person who insists on making an entire dedication of himself to God is likely to meet opposition. But let him remember whom he hath chosen and take courage. "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

It is said that Cæsar had his courtiers repeat in his presence: "Remember that thou art Cæsar." Thus Paul exhorts: "Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called."

To arrive at a just estimate of ourselves, the estimate must be accompanied with the consciousness that all is God's gift. Gratitude will keep down conceit.

The Second Coming of Christ.

BY W. H. CARTER.

This is not a new doctrine, but is as old as the New Testament Scriptures. Do you believe Christ is going to come again? Do you know of any one among the brethren who does not believe in his second coming? This seems to be a new discovery among some. At least, they talk about it as though this truth had but recently been dug out of the rich mine of eternal truth. But is there not something back of this second-coming theory? I heard one of the advocates of the new theory preach three sermons, in which he had much to say about the prophecies and the gathering of the Jews. His speech was nice, delivery good and entertaining. While I could believe with him that Christ will come again, I could not accept his speculative theory that the Jews will be gathered at Jerusalem before he comes. Some are advocating the idea that, when he comes, he will ascend to David's literal throne in Jerusalem and will, in flesh and bone, reign over fleshly Israel for one thousand years. If I am correctly informed, they deny that Dan. 2: 35-44 has been fulfilled. They also deny that Christ is on David's throne. They propose to debate, but want the spiritual reign and kingdom eliminated. What does this all mean? If it means anything, does it not mean that Christ has set up a spiritual kingdom, is a spiritual King, and is reigning on a spiritual throne? Does it not mean that the thing will be changed when Christ comes from a spiritual to a fleshly kingdom? This, perhaps, explains why some are contending that, when Christ comes, he will come in a fleshly body. He will then be ready to take his seat on a fleshly throne and reign over a fleshly people—fleshly Israel. If this be true, how badly I have misunderstood the Bible! I thought that the righteous dead would be raised when Christ comes, not in the fleshly body, but the spiritual. If so, will they be in the kingdom, too? If so, will the kingdom be composed of subjects both in the flesh and those in the spirit? Those who are living when Christ comes will be changed. Will they be changed from a fleshly to a spiritual body? If not, in what will the change consist? Will it be from the spiritual kingdom to the fleshly?

Now, if Dan. 2: 35-44 has not been fulfilled, then the kingdom promised therein has not been set up; and as only one kingdom is promised, then this prophecy does not refer to the spiritual, but to the fleshly; and as it is not to "be left to other people," but "shall stand forever," why limit it to the millennium—to one thousand years? That is not forever. The time for the existence of this kingdom begins with its establishment; it will not be established until Christ comes, and then it "shall stand forever." Do such ideas come from a strong, sound, and unperturbed mind?

No wonder that, in the discussion of this proposition, they want to eliminate all argument about the "spiritual reign and kingdom." If Christ is not on David's throne, whose throne is he on? God's promise to David was that his throne should be established forever in heaven (Ps. 89: 35-37), and the Holy Spirit declares that God had raised Jesus up to sit on David's throne (Acts 2: 25-31), and states that he is at the right hand of God exalted. It was declared of him that God would give unto him the throne of his father David; he is to reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. (Luke 1: 31-33.) On the day of Pentecost the Spirit announced that God had made him both Lord and Christ. He had exalted him to be a Prince and a Savior. (Acts 5: 31.) He is a high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens (Heb. 8: 1); is a priest on his throne (Zech. 6: 13); is set down at the right hand of the throne of God (Heb. 12: 2); is set down with his Father in his throne (Rev. 3: 21). But, according to the new theology, I suppose these quotations all refer to the "spiritual reign and kingdom" and no time must be wasted on them.

Some seem to think the coming of Christ is imminent—that is, it will occur immediately. There seemed to be some who had this idea in Paul's day, and he wrote about it in this way: "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." (2 Thess. 2: 1-3.) Jesus himself said that neither he, nor the angels, nor any man, knew when he would come; that no one knew that but the Father. Adventists, C. T. Russell, and others have had it very imminent for some time, have gone so far as to set the day; but the Lord has shown how little they know about it.

The Bible teaches us that Jesus is going to come. He said: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." (John 14: 2, 3.) The thing needful for us all is to be ready, to be constantly on the watch, whether we regard his coming as being imminent or otherwise. The truth is, we do not know. It is right to believe all the Bible says about it, but we are under no obligation to accept and believe the speculative theories of men. When we do, to the disruption of the body of Christ, we sin.

Some brethren seem to be more concerned about what some men say about Christ's coming, and what he will do when he comes, than they are about what the Lord has said. There is no teaching known to me that Christ will establish a kingdom when he comes; that he will come in a fleshly body and reign over fleshly Israel for even one year. But he will do something when he comes. Of this event Paul says: "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," etc. (2 Thess. 1: 7-10.) In the gospel we are taught to reject the doctrines and commandments of men.

When he comes, he will bring his reward to the faithful. He will make up his jewels and gather his people home. He will not come to establish a kingdom, but to judge the world in righteousness. What we read about the kingdom then is that he will deliver it up to the Father. (1 Cor. 15: 24.) Whether he will be one thousand years or one day in judging the world and rewarding the faithful is a matter of small concern to us. The all-important thing with us should be to be ready when he comes. If one can get any comfort out of the "imminence" of his coming, let him have it to himself, and not become dogmatic about it and deceive himself into the notion that it is a "matter of faith." A smart man who thinks himself favored above others with grace to understand ought to know the difference between faith and opinion. To fall in this is to betray weakness rather than prove strength. For hundreds of years there have been premillennialists who have created no very great stir among the disciples of the Lord. In itself it does but little damage; but when one begins to speculate on what will take place when the Lord comes, and bases his conjectures on prophetic figures, he is apt to mislead some and cause division and trouble in some of the churches. If all would preach what the Bible says, no more and no less, no debating and strife would follow; but when one begins to inject his notions, opinions, and speculative theories into the subject, then contentions, strife, and division may be expected. Already, if I am correctly informed, one church is bordering on to strife. In selecting a preacher, some of the older and more experienced brethren wanted a certain man who is opposed to all speculation; but the "pastor," who is much younger and of the premillennial crowd of "sixty," it is claimed, overruled, and they got another man. This has an inkling that they themselves are drawing the line, which will result in no good to the cause in that community. "Truth, though crushed to earth, will rise again." "Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come: but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh!" (Matt. 18: 7.)

Why contend that Christ will come in flesh and bone, but without blood? Can a body of flesh and bone have life without blood? Under the old covenant, which was fleshly, the blood was declared to be the life. (Gen. 9: 4; Lev. 17: 11.) The life of the flesh is in the blood. Then flesh without blood is dead. Now, if one has the right to assume that our Lord will come in a body of flesh and bone without blood, why may I not assume that he will come in a dead body, as the flesh is dead without blood? While the Bible tells us that Jesus is coming, where does it tell us that he is coming in a body of flesh and bone without blood? Do you say we are told (Acts 1: 9-11) that he "shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven?" But does "like manner" refer to the material of which his body was constructed or the way in which he ascended into heaven? If one has the right to infer that it refers to a body of flesh and bone, why may I not infer that the body must have blood in it to give it life? Is not this whole thing a theory built upon an inference? And is not that very unsafe? Why resort to such speculation? What good can possibly result from it?

If you believe, as some have believed and as some do believe, that there will be a millennium following the coming of Christ—a thousand years of peaceful reign here on the earth—no one will challenge your right to so believe; but when you tack on to this the Adventist theory of a second chance, or the Russell theory of the gathering of the Jews, of Christ's ascending to David's throne, establishing his kingdom and reigning over fleshly Israel for one thousand years, etc., you may expect such teaching to be called in question.

Our Treatment of the Truth.

BY CARL G. SMITH.

There would be no need for the word "truth" if there were no untruths or errors. We use words to convey ideas; so did Christ and the apostles. All the ideas we have ever received from God, Christ, or the apostles have come to us through words. That truth and untruth are in the world is known to all; that men will lie to one another is hard to say, but true. But it is not so much about truth separate from Christianity that I wish to speak; but I want to know what Christ meant when he said, "I am the truth."

While Christ was on earth he used many expressions in a general sense. The words, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life," are used this way; so, also, this expression of John: "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." A great mistake is made in taking the general sayings for details. Our text is used in a broad sense; then let us work it out in its details.

To prepare our minds for a study of the subject, there are four facts we must notice. We must admit, first, that we can err concerning the truth, and by so doing overthrow the faith of some. (2 Tim. 2: 18.) Second, that we can resist the truth. (2 Tim. 3: 8.) Third, we can turn our ears away from the truth, and thereby close one of the avenues through which we may learn the truth. (2 Tim. 4: 4.) But, fourth, we have a great consolation in the fact that if one errs from the truth and one converts him, he saves a soul from death and hides a multitude of sins. (James 5: 20.)

Although there is very little hope for the one who turns his ears from the truth or resists it, yet we may do a great work in turning people from error. We are quite ready to ask the question, as Pilate asked it during the trial of Jesus: "What is truth?" Jesus had just said: "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." This is another general statement. We understand this better from the language of Jesus in John 17: 17: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." Our minds must be like the mind of God in some sense at least, or he would never have addressed us in words; nor would he have given us the great and grand book, the Bible. We understand by the expression, "Thy word is truth," that his will is revealed to us through his word. We also understand from 2 Pet. 1: 3, which reads, "According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue," that his word is the only source from which we may get a knowledge of anything pertaining to our salvation; or, in other words, the Bible contains all the truth that relates, so far as we are concerned, to the hereafter. The part of the truth in the Bible that bears the greatest relation to us is not the Old Testament, but the New Testament, and this came to us through Jesus. "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." (John 1: 17.)

The best way to determine what a thing is, is to find out what it will do. Then what will the truth do for us? Christ told some believing Jews: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 31, 32.) The truth, then, will make Christians free from sin; and this can only come by first knowing it. But we desire to know the effect of the truth on one who has never become a Christian. James says in verse 18 of the first chapter of his letter to Christians: "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth." They were caused to exist as Christians by the word of truth. Peter says: "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." (1 Pet. 1: 22, 23.) Thus we see that a Christian, when he sins, or an alien sinner, is freed from sin by obeying the truth.

If the truth will do this for us, what ought we to do with it—or, better, what must we do with it—before it will do this? It is very plain from verse 4 of the fourth chapter of Paul's second letter to Timothy that we should not turn our ears from the truth, but we must use our ears and eyes to hear and read the word of truth and our hearts to understand and know it. (See Matt. 13: 15.) After we know the truth, we should not be like some people Paul wrote about in the first chapter of Romans, who changed the truth of God into a lie; but we should believe it as it is and love it to the extent that we will obey it. Our duty thenceforth is to speak and teach the truth and to be like the people John wrote to when he said: "I rejoice greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth."

Much of the New Testament is taken up in telling us that hearing the truth is the first detail in the general plan of "salvation by faith;" that belief is the second, but by no means the only one; that repentance, confession, and baptism follow in natural order. The many details of the Christian life are taken up in the letters to Christians.

Evangelistic Work.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

The salvation of all men depends upon evangelism. To evangelize means simply to preach the religion of Christ. All salvation depends upon doing this faithfully. That is why evangelistic work is extremely important, not only as to quantity, but also as to quality. Men's salvation depends not merely upon belief, but upon the thing believed. Hence evangelistic work consists not merely of announcing the grace of God to a lost world, but in making plain and full every condition upon which God's grace can be appropriated by men.

This latter definition involves a close study of the question. The commonly accepted "evangelist" is one who, usually, comes into the community and makes his announcement of the main qualifications of a Christian—the principal prerequisites to remission—and then passes on to another community for the same character of work. This is good so far as it goes, but it appears to us as being short, in most instances, of the "work of an evangelist" as laid down in the new covenant.

Now, in a land where "evangelists" are every day seen and heard, such "evangelistic work" may be considered satisfactory; but in lands like the State of Colorado, where evangelists are as scarce as polar bears, "the work of an evangelist" embraces more than that commonly considered "evangelistic work." Here not only must one make the customary announcements of the conditions of salvation, but he is required to stand by and guard, nourish, admonish, and strengthen his former efforts. He must remain with the work for the work's sake.

If an evangelist in this country should merely drop in and "hold a meeting" in each community, then go on his way, as is customary with most evangelists in Eastern sections, after preaching to practically every soul in Colorado, he would leave the State without anything of permanence gained for the cause of Christ, though many may have received his message and obeyed the Lord in baptism.

The old "Jerusalem gospel" is so new to these people that they cannot accept it readily. They must first be untaught the many human tenets they have received, before they can be taught to receive pure Christianity; then, the current of popular custom being so strong to tide, they have to be constantly fed, assisted, encouraged, and reassured. This requires the residence of the evangelist among them indefinitely. No congregation can be established—in Colorado, at least—through merely an "evangelistic effort." Some one must remain with the "results" of the "campaign," or else all that was gained therein will be lost. And herein is the problem in this State. By going from place to place and preaching "a little here, a little there," many more might be baptized; but this will all be lost to a large extent, if it is not followed up by some one to "strengthen the things that remain" and "set in order the things that are wanting" in every place. Where there is no one else to depend on (as is the case in most of this Western country), the evangelist himself has to tarry long at most places or lose what has been gained at each. This accounts for no more baptisms in Colorado than have been reported; we are careful to try to hold all we gain here.

I cannot think of leaving Olathe, for instance, under one year. No congregation can be developed in less time here; sometimes more time is required. I was closely associated with Bellvue for four years, and finally had to leave it to its own guarding. I am happy to say it was able to take care of itself and is developing itself into a power in Colorado.

Every community in the State will require some like sturdy labor on the part of whoever undertakes the work. The work will, therefore, be necessarily slow, but in time the whole State will be covered. If a house is built, as was done at Bellvue, it will be some years before the congregation will be able to materially assist the work in other communities. Hence the evangelist will be dependent upon outside support, mostly, for some years yet.

We are doing this Colorado work according to the best judgment available from all sources. Helpful criticism will always be appreciated by the workers here, but this work cannot be compared with and judged by other places where conditions differ. The day is not far distant when, if the work here is continued, Colorado will be a source of great assistance in the evangelization of other destitute places. It must be remembered that Colorado has practically been forgotten in our zeal for other places, and what Tennessee, for instance, was at the beginning of the Reformation, Colorado is now. At the present rate it will be some time before Colorado is brought abreast of Tennessee, but the Lord grant that some day it will be done—that the rate of the present will be greatly increased in the not-far-distant future. When a few well-organized congregations are distributed at strategic points throughout the State (which is the one thing now being sought), the work of covering the rest of the territory will be far more rapidly effected. Hence the determination to spend some time with each section where a congregation is contemplated, until said congregation is well established and thoroughly grounded in all the teaching of the Master, is admittedly the wisest course looking to the permanent good of the whole field. This, we believe, is the true New Testament method of successful evangelism.

Directory of Congregations of the Church of Christ.

BY T. B. CLARK.

I have been working for about one year to secure information about the church of Christ in the different States in the Union. I am gathering, little by little, information each day, and shall keep this up until I can publish a very accurate list. In January, 1917, I mean to publish what I have. In addition to general information about the church, I will make the directory of general use. I mean to include our schools, papers, literature depositories, books, and all things of help and interest to Christians. Foreign mission stations and things the church should know better about will be included.

If there are those who are so far away, or have started meeting this year, that feel that they may not be included in this information, let them write me, at Box 222, McMinnville, Tenn., that they may be certain to be listed in the directory.

I want all the information that can be had from every place and about everything that would be of interest to those who are in the church. Those who want the directory may have it for twenty-five cents by sending money in before January. Write me freely what you think of such a work. May I hear from you soon? Address T. B. Clark, McMinnville, Tenn.

For Brother Ishii in the slums of Shinjuku: Nothing received. Partly self-supporting. Need seven dollars a month.

For the Zoshigaya Church: Charleston, Miss., $5. Need twenty-four dollars and fifty cents a month to keep the work going at this place.

Twenty dollars of the bill for the fifty thousand tracts distributed at the festival at the Katori shrine on May 5 is yet unpaid. I am anxious to pay off the debt and push on to something else.

Miss Sarah Andrews.

Brother I. B. Bradley in a recent issue of the Gospel Advocate called for a more liberal response in support of Sister Andrews, a call very timely, and one I hope will meet with a hearty response. As Brother Bradley stated, our sister has received through him only five remittances of fifty dollars each in eight months. This means she is one hundred and fifty dollars short of what she ought to have. Keeping house for herself and bearing the necessary expenses connected with a home and friends whom she must receive, fifty dollars a month is a modest sum; and when it falls even much below this, she must suffer lack. She has received a few small offerings outside the fifty dollars Brother Bradley endeavors to send each month, but not nearly enough to make up the one hundred and fifty dollars.

In addition to the amount needed as stated above, it is due the friends at home that they know that she must pay for the school year beginning on September 19, sixty-five dollars—a school for the study of the Japanese language. Being very economical in her manner of life, she has been able to keep even with her financial obligations up to the present. But she is preparing to enter the Japanese language school for missionaries in a few days without her first installment for tuition—thirty dollars. I hope churches or individuals may be induced to give regularly toward her support and work till she is adequately supported. If a church is able to give only a dollar a month, then give that, and do it regularly and continuously. Another will feel able to give five, another ten, it may be. There are many churches not giving anything to the work in any foreign land. These nongiving churches should be enlisted. If the brethren who preach for these churches will take the matter in hand, they can accomplish much. Without their cooperation but little can be done.

Sister Andrews never complains, but is contented with such things as she has—and without what she does not have. For this very reason she is all the more worthy of a more generous support. I am taking the liberty to write this, not letting her know it, for I have an idea she would object.

Considering the few in number there are laboring in foreign fields and the abundance which the home churches have to supply them, it does seem that they ought not to go poorly supplied.

McCaleb's Moving Pictures.

Let us not forget those who silently work behind the curtain and keep the pot boiling. Take this, for example, from one of them, who has been absent from duty only one day in four years: "We have had a very pleasant summer up to about ten days ago. It is now getting very, very warm—something like it was during the time you used to visit the office when the writer was serving his time after six o'clock in the evening."

Brother Hanabuchi is a cook by trade. For the last year he and his wife, also a zealous Christian, have been serving in the home of a certain missionary. The missionary went to Karuzawa for the summer. He and another family arranged to occupy the same house. Misunderstandings arose between the missionaries and the servants, and Hanabuchi and his wife were dismissed. The wife got another place, but the husband failed to find a job. We talked the matter over. Hanabuchi was still recommended by the missionary who dismissed him as an honest, economical cook. Remembering his zeal and the earnestness of his prayers in the prayer meetings, we wondered if he might be able also to feed men's souls. I went and hunted him up and found him with his Bible open. I suggested that while he was out of a job he go to the village of Kutsukake, near the new farm, and where we hoped to begin Christian work, and go from house to house, give out tracts, and teach the people. At the same time I stated that we would not attempt anything like a salary, but would only give him a little present. He immediately entered upon the work, and for two days has come back telling of his experiences. Just as Peter could catch men better than fish, we hope it may also turn out that Brother Hanabuchi may become a dispenser of the bread of life rather than the bread which perisheth.

A sister from Arkansas sends $2.50, collected among her friends, and adds: "I am sorry we have not more to send, but pray that this may do some good toward giving light to those in darkness."

You can aid us in our missionary efforts in Japan by sending us names of friends who would like to read the Missionary Messenger. Hear what a reader says about it: "Gladly I hand out the papers you send. I do not understand how one can read them and not want to send or go."

Scott's Hill Church, in West Tennessee, through Brother H. P. Davenport, sends her regular fifth-Sunday offering, and with it the brother writes: "Inclosed find check for ten dollars and sixty cents from the church. We are having our protracted meeting now: five additions to date. Brother C. S. Austin is preaching for us. I hope you are getting along all right." It is worthy of note that not even a protracted meeting can turn Scott's Hill from her regular contribution to Japan, but right in the midst of the meeting she gives even more than at other times. I have made two visits to Scott's Hill, both of which were a source of inspiration to me.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

Brother McQuiddy: In our last Quarterly we had a question: "Where was Paul beaten, or at what three places was he beaten with rods?" It gave one place and asked where the other two were. Some of us are undecided. Please give the three places.

J. B. ANDERSON.

The Bible gives only one of the places, which was Philippi. We are not told where the other two places were. The question was asked in order to stimulate investigation and thought.

Brother Freed: Please explain Matt. 19: 14 in the next issue of the Gospel Advocate.

HUGH BRADEN.

"Then there were brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence." (Matt. 19: 13-15.) This scripture is often quoted by preachers to support the practice of sprinkling infants. Hence, we cannot blame people for asking questions when teachers willfully read into the word of God things that are not even hinted at in all the Bible. But this scripture says just as much about "infant baptism" as any one in all the book of God—that is, simply nothing at all. Jesus says of the little children, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." It is plain what he did. "And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them." (Mark 10: 16.)

Brother Freed: Why should we oppose the State Missionary Board? Are they not sending the gospel to the heathen land through their organization? Will the people taught the plan of salvation be saved and the State board be honored and glorified? Can we not send our money through this association at a money saving, as the association is complete in its organization, and receive God's approval? Is it not a good way to teach our children to give? For they can give through the State board before they obey the gospel. If we take any part in the above-named institution, will James 2: 10, which says, "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all," apply to us?

JEFF D. WELLS.

We shall answer all the questions together. "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God." (Eph. 3: 10.) "Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen." (Verse 21.) These scriptures should be reason enough for any one to oppose the "State Missionary Board." The church is God's appointed missionary institution, and the elders are the divinely appointed board. Any "State board" dishonors God and robs him of the "glory in the church." It rejects the wisdom of God by supplanting the divine institution with a human one. It says, by its existence, that a humanly appointed board has more sense than the divinely appointed one. Is there a work that a Christian should do that cannot be done in and through the blood-bought institution—the church? Can the heathen not have the gospel through it? Cannot the people be taught the plan of salvation and God and Christ be glorified through the church? Can we not send our money through the church, even at a saving? Is it not complete in its organization, and does it not receive God's approval? Is it not a good way to teach our children to give through the church? If we do "all in the name of Christ," will we not be saved? To answer any of these negatively is to question the wisdom of God. So is it to do any of these things through a man-made missionary board. James 2: 10 certainly applies to those who take any part in such human organizations.

Brother Freed: Please be so kind as to explain the following scriptures in regard to the idea that the Baptists hold that when you are once and truly converted you cannot fall from grace. (John 10: 25-29; Rom. 8: 38, 39.) X.

"But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give unto them eternal life: and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." (John 10: 25-29.) Sheep represent the humble and honest-hearted among men. These are the ones who hear and obey the Savior's voice. No others will. The promise of safety and security are to those who "hear my voice" and "follow me." Can any harm befall such? No, indeed. Heaven and earth is pledged for their protection. Eternal life is theirs. "No man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." It would be a strange doctrine to teach that there is danger to one who hears the Savior's voice and follows him. But when he ceases to hear that voice and refuses to follow the Savior, does he still have the promise of "eternal life" and God's protecting hand? Has he not been "drawn away of his own lust, and enticed? Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." (James 1: 14, 15.) "But when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live?" (Ezek. 18: 24.) Some poor little fellow, who has a theory to sustain, says, "Yes." He says the righteous man may turn away and steal, lie, cheat, murder, and be guilty of all the black crimes in the catalogue of sin, go down in death with these upon him, still God will save him. But listen to the prophet: "All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die. . . . When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die." (Verses 24-26.) This same truth is expressed by the apostle: "Cursed children: which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray." (2 Pet. 2: 14, 15.) If there is any one truth made plain in all the Bible, it is the fact that there is danger of the Christian's falling away and being finally lost. "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Rom. 8: 28-39.) The question here is: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" (Verse 35.) Can death? No. Can life? No. Can angels? No. Can principalities? No. Is there anything able to separate us from the love of God? Ten thousand times, no! So far as we know, when the Judge in the last day says to the wicked, "Depart, ye cursed," God's love will follow them. But "what shall separate us from God?" is quite a different question. "But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." (Isa. 59: 2.) Jesus says: "He that overcometh shall inherit all things;" but liars, adulterers, the unbelieving, and the abominable "shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." (Rev. 21: 7, 8.)

Hearing and Doing the Word.

BY E. G. S.

Jesus said: "Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like: he is like a man which built a house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it: for it was founded upon a rock." (Luke 6: 47, 48.)

When Jesus would impress people with the importance of doing his will and the danger of not doing it, he spoke plainly, leaving no room for doubt as to what he said. The people that heard him understood it; and when it was put to record in the New Testament, it was so plain that all even to the end of time may understand it. He meant to be understood and knew how to adapt himself to their understanding; and to the very end of time all that want to understand him will be able to do so. Moreover, if it was ever important for any one to be understood, it was certainly so in his case. He spoke not only for time, but for eternity also. Not only that, but the power is with him to execute what he said both in time and through eternity. No man will ever be able to avert the terrible destiny so plainly declared in the above figurative language. Man may forget it, but God will not. Hence it is needful for all men to very seriously consider it. All men are building for eternity all the time. They are either building on the sand or the Rock of truth. Only a few are building on the ing on the sand. The matter of self-denial is a difficult thing for humanity to accomplish. Man clothed in human flesh naturally inclines to love the things of the flesh; but Jesus makes the positive demand that all that would come to him must deny the flesh.

We must not only come to him to hear what he has to say, but we must do what he requires of us. Nothing else under the heavens will suffice but the word of the Lord. Men may invent what they please, but it will not be accepted by the Lord. We must do just what he commands. The wisdom of this whole world combined cannot substitute anything in place of God's word that will be accepted by him. Thousands and millions to-day are substituting sprinkling in place of baptism; but they cannot find an intimation in the word of God that it will be accepted of him. It is, therefore, a very daring and dangerous presumption to try to do so. But millions are doing it. It is said of Christ: "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace." (Eph. 1: 7.) It is true that many are claiming that sprinkling is a mode of baptism. This, however, is a mistake. Since the word "baptism" means immersion in plain English, how is it possible for immersion to be done by sprinkling? In sprinkling, the water is handled and sprinkled on the man. In immersion, the man is handled, is dipped in the water. This, therefore, cannot be done by sprinkling a few drops of water upon him. But when the one to be baptized is immersed in water and raised up out of the water, the command to be baptized is completely obeyed; but it cannot be done in any other way. Hence those that have only had a little water sprinkled upon them have not been baptized at all, and those that have only been sprinkled are not in Christ; for the word of God plainly expresses that people are baptized into Christ. Paul says to Christians: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" This passage shows us several things in its connection. In the first place, it emphatically shows us that all who are scripturally baptized do thereby enter into Christ. It also shows that baptism is a burial and a resurrection. Sprinkling a little water upon people, therefore, is not baptism.

It is, therefore, a matter of great importance to start right in Christianity; that we be sure to get the truth as recorded in the New Testament, and follow that closely, and not be turned aside by any sort of theory of human opinions. The Holy Spirit has given us the whole truth in Christianity as far as we need to know it in order to become Christians. Not only must people learn the truth of the gospel, but they must obey the truth just as the Lord has given it to us. And when we have become Christians by obeying the gospel, we must go right on living the Christian life day by day, at home and abroad, wherever duty leads. One of the continued duties of Christianity is to meet regularly on the first day of the week to break bread. If we willingly or carelessly neglect this, we, in so doing, are departing from the living God. The word of God says: "For if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." (Heb. 10: 26, 27.) Hence, if we embrace the truth and afterwards turn away from it and walk the way of truth no more, our doom is forever and unchangeably fixed for eternity; but if we continue on faithfully in the service of God while we live, we are as sure of eternal life as that the Bible is the word of God. Peter, after naming many of the things which make up the Christian life, says: "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 1: 10, 11.) This language is very plain and strong and ought to be very satisfying and encouraging to the Lord's people; for there is no sort of uncertainty in regard to the final outcome of an earnest, faithful, Christian life. The Lord has certainly been very kind to give such assurances to those who faithfully serve him in their earthly lives. Surely such promises ought to inspire every Christian on earth to be faithful in his service to him. Such promises ought to keep every child of God on earth in the narrow way till death comes and takes him away to that glorious reward—to that happy home where disappointments, sufferings, and the thought of death will never disturb any more, and where their happiness will never cease while endless ages roll.

Some Questions and Answers.

BY E. A. E.

Dear Brother Elam: (1) What prompted Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians? (2) What prompted his second epistle to this church? (2) Does Paul in 2 Cor. 6: 14-18 mean that a Christian must not carry life insurance, or belong to the Woodmen of the World, as a matter of business in providing for his family after his death? Some brethren are members of the "W. O. W." One brother, who is well to do in this world's goods, objected to a preacher's conducting a series of meetings (the preacher is not well to do and is scarcely able to support his family) for his home congregation, holding that the preacher, being a member of the "W. O. W.," is unequally yoked together with unbelievers. I contend that if such is carried on as religious services, or if Christians connect it with religious service, or if they allow it to come between them and their duty to God, then they are in error. A clear explanation of these questions will be very helpful in settling some difficulties in Southern Alabama. X.

P.S. I traded a cow to a brother for thirty bushels of corn. He said the barrel he measured it in holds [shells out, I guess.—Editor] one and one-fourth bushels. When I shelled it and measured it, there were twenty-two bushels. It weighed twenty-three and one-fourth bushels. Is it right for me to go to him for the other six and three-fourth bushels?

I know nothing of this transaction, except as stated above.

If two brethren—two Christians—cannot measure thirty bushels of corn, they should get some honest sinner to measure it for them.

If one brother agreed to take that barrel for one bushel and a peck, he should stand to his agreement. Since the other brother promised thirty bushels of corn, he should give it, if it requires all the corn in Southern Alabama to do so. What are seven or eight bushels of corn to the salvation of the soul?

An honest man, whether a Christian or not, puts his word above cribs of corn, herds of cattle, and worlds of wealth.

Christians are truthful, honest, upright, and are determined to treat all others in all trades and relationships of life in justice and mercy and righteousness as they would be treated. Christians study and endeavor to be honest—"take thought for things honorable in the sight of all men," sinners as well as saints. (Rom. 12: 17.)

The Bible is very clear in regard to just balances, honest weights, full measures, etc. (See Lev. 19: 35, 36; Deut. 25: 13-16; Prov. 11: 1; Prov. 16: 11; Prov. 20: 10, 23.) God blessed or cursed Israel according to the honesty or dishonesty of measures. One of the sins which brought the captivity was false balances, small weights, short measures, and deceitful dealing. (See Ezek. 45: 9-12; Hos. 12: 7-9; Amos 8: 4-10.)

See what Jesus says on "good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over," and "with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again." (Luke 6: 37, 38; Matt. 5: 1, 2; Mark 4: 24.)

It is a shame that the government has to lay its hand of justice on church members, as well as on others, and compel full weights and measures and pure food, drugs, etc.

To corrupt food is not only to steal, but to murder the innocent and helpless.

1 Cor. 6: 1-11 declares that there should be enough "wise men" in the church to decide matters of right or wrong between brethren; that it is wrong for brethren to have lawsuits with one another; that they should "take wrong and be defrauded" rather than to do wrong and go to law in order to adjust their differences before "unbelievers;" and that they certainly should not defraud or in any way wrong one another. It gives the reason—namely, that "the unrighteous" (those who defraud and in any way wrong others), the "covetous," "extortioners," with fornicators, idolaters, drunkards, etc., cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

Let not these two brethren think I am applying all this to them; I am not acquainted with them; I am writing for the good of all who may read this.

1, 2. Paul established the church at Corinth. (Acts 18: 1-17.) About five years afterwards he wrote the letter called "First Corinthians," and not long afterwards he wrote the one called "Second Corinthians." After he left Corinth and previous to his writing the first letter, many serious troubles arose in that church. There were strife and division (1 Cor. 1: 10-12; 3: 1-9); his apostolic authority was questioned (1 Cor. 4: 1-21); fornication of the basest kind was practiced (1 Cor. 5: 1-13); there were lawsuits among brethren (1 Cor. 6: 1-8); sacrifices were offered to idols (1 Cor. 8; 10: 14-22); the Lord's Supper was perverted (1 Cor. 11: 17-34); the purpose of spiritual gifts was misunderstood and jealousies arose (1 Cor. 12, 13, 14); some women desired to make public speeches (1 Cor. 14: 33-37); and some denied the resurrection (1 Cor. 15: 12-19). Paul wrote these letters to correct these sins, to counteract the machinations of false teachers, to defend his apostolic authority, and to encourage and edify and strengthen the faithful in Christ. (See 2 Cor. 2: 9; 7: 2-16.)

3. We learn from 2 Cor. 6: 14-18 and 7: 1 that Christians can have no "fellowship" with "iniquity," no "communion" with "darkness," no "concord" with "Belial," no "portion" with an "unbeliever," no "agreement" with "idols;" that they are the "temple of the living God;" that, therefore, they should come out from among all such and be "separate" and touch no "unclean thing;" and that they should for these reasons "cleanse" them "from all defilement of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

An "unbeliever" is not one whose faith is weak or dead, or one who has not learned all the truth; but one who does not believe the gospel—does not believe in Jesus as the Christ and Son of God—or one who does not believe the wisdom and means of God are adequate and sufficient to accomplish his purposes. Through "unbelief" the children of Israel fell in the wilderness. They lusted after evil things; they were idolaters and fornicators; they murmured and were dissatisfied with God's ways and means; they tempted God; they did not believe in God; they rebelled; they "despised" God. (See Heb. 3; 1 Cor. 10: 1-12; Deut. 1: 26-32; Ps. 78: 22; Ps. 106: 7-46; especially Num. 14: 1-12.) Paul persecuted the church in unbelief. (1 Tim. 1: 13.) Christians are warned against "an evil heart of unbelief, in falling away from the living God." (Heb. 3: 12.) Unbelievers follow Belial, worship idols in the temple of idols, drink the cup and partake of the tables of demons (1 Cor. 10: 20-22), or in some way turn away from God and the gospel of salvation. Christians, then, cannot be yoked with or join unbelievers in any of their worship or acts of unbelief, sin and rebellion, or anything which cannot be done by faith. All that Christians do, in word or deed, must be done in the name of the Lord Jesus. (Col. 3: 17.)

"Iniquity" is anything unfair, unequal, unjust, or evil. Righteousness is right doing. "He that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he [Christ] is righteous." (John 3: 7.) Jesus was righteous because he did God's will. All who meet all their obligations in all trades and all affairs of life according to the will of God are righteous—not according to man's selfish and unjust conceptions of right. Men may belong to forty different churches, occupy the chief seats in the synagogue, wear religious clothes, make long prayers for a pretense, proclaim their own generosity with a blast of trumpets, disfigure their faces so as to appear unto men to fast, and strain out a gnat, but they can never be righteous until they love "truth in the inward parts" (Ps. 51: 6); speak the truth in all things and, hence, lie not at all (Eph. 4: 25; Col. 3: 9); slander not with tongue, take up no reproach against their neighbor, swear to their own hurt and change not, in no way oppress the poor, and take no bribe against the innocent (Ps. 15); and, in all things, according to the will of God, treat others as they would be treated. A righteous man places himself in another man's situation and acts from that viewpoint. Men whose "inward part is very wickedness," whose "throat is an open sepulcher," in whose mouth is "no faithfulness," and who "flatter [make smooth] with their tongue" (Ps. 5: 9), are not righteous. There can be no "fellowship" [copartnership] between righteousness and iniquity. I wish I had the power to make all church members feel this and to act accordingly. Jesus "loved righteousness and hated iniquity," and for this reason he was "anointed with the oil of gladness above" his "fellows." "The scepter of uprightness is the scepter of his kingdom." He rules with this scepter. Every one ruled by Jesus is upright. No one can be a Christian who does not love righteousness—fair and open and honest dealing, upright and honorable conduct, and everything true and pure and good—and hate iniquity—everything unfair, crooked, unequal, unjust, fraudulent, and evil.

Let integrity and uprightness preserve me. (Ps. 25: 21.)

We cannot now take up at length every contrast drawn in this passage. It is helpful, however, to study and to rightly apply to ourselves every one of them.

Eph. 5: 3-14 will help us to see that light has no communion with darkness, that Christians are light and not darkness, and should "walk as children of light."

"Belial" means "worthlessness." The Old Testament speaks frequently of "sons of Belial" and "daughters of Belial," mean and base men and wicked women. (See Deut. 13: 13; Judg. 19: 22; 1 Sam. 1: 16; 2 Sam. 16: 7.) In this passage it stands for Satan. There is no concord between Christ and Satan, and none between the children of God and children of the devil.

Comments have been made on the "believer" and "unbeliever."

The temple of God—Christians—has no agreement "with idols." Christians can in no way worship idols. They are commanded to "flee from idolatry." (1 Cor. 10: 14; see 1 Cor. 10: 7; 1 John 5: 21; Acts 15: 20.) Christians cannot engage in the fornication and other pollutions connected with idol worship.

Hence, God calls upon all his children to come out from among all idol worshipers, to "touch no unclean thing," to engage in no iniquitous practices, to cleanse themselves of "all defilement of flesh and spirit," and to perfect holiness in the fear of God," and he will receive them and be to them a Father and they will be to him sons and daughters.

This passage—2 Cor. 6: 14 to 7: 1—does not forbid Christians' associating and dealing with men of the world in all legitimate and honest and upright ways. It forbids Christians' engaging in any acts of unbelief, of unrighteousness or of iniquity, and engaging in any way in idol worship and any uncleanness and pollutions connected therewith; and it forbids any association with unbelievers which lead to or involve such sins.

The church is God's institution for all charitable and benevolent purposes. The Scriptures furnish "the man of God" "completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) In order to do all such work, Christians have no necessity for belonging to any of the benevolent institutions of the world. All benevolent work should be done by Christians for and in the name of Christ and to the glory of God; they should glorify God "in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever." (Eph. 3: 21.) So far as helping others, caring for the poor, feeding and clothing the hungry and naked, and honoring widows indeed are concerned, God has made all this a part of the work of the church—of Christians as such.

Purely as a matter of business, some—many Christians—deposit money in different insurance companies that they may keep it safe and have it ready in old age. As a matter of business, many—almost all business men—insure their property. They do not do these things for benevolent purposes, but as matters of business. Those who differ from them in this should not mistreat them and disfellowship them. I know some good and most excellent men who do not insure their property, but they do not object to preachers' preaching for them because they insure their property. Brother Lipscomb taught against life insurance all his life, but he worked and preached as fellow-elder with Brother J. C. Martin, who was a prominent man in a life insurance company and made his living that way. He had a written discussion with Brother Martin on the subject, and yet they worked together as preacher and fellow-elders in Christian love and peace for more than twenty-five years.

In mind we ought to be men. (1 Cor. 14: 20.)

Scriptures Misapplied.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

The following passages are often misapplied: Matt. 5: 23, 24, which read: "If therefore thou art offering thy gift at the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Also Matt. 18: 15-17, which reads as follows: "And if thy brother sin against thee, go, show him his fault between thee and him alone: if he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he hear thee not, take with thee one or two more, that at the mouth of two witnesses or three every word may be established. And if he refuse to hear them, tell it unto the church: and if he refuse to hear the church also, let him be unto thee as the Gentile and the publican."

When a man in the discharge of a public duty exposes the sophistry and wrongdoing of others, he is sometimes referred to these scriptures as authority for his going to brethren who have without a cause misrepresented and maligned him. If a man who teaches publicly were to do this, he would not be able to do anything else but go to people whom he had offended by firmly standing for righteousness and seeking a reconciliation with them. As I understand Matt. 5: 23, 24, we are taught that evil must be nipped in the bud. An unkind thought of another may be the foundation which leads to murder. A Christian must live so as not to be an enemy to any man; nor should he consider any man an enemy to himself without the fullest evidence; for surmises of evil concerning a brother or another can never rest in the bosom of him who loves God and his brother also. "Love thinketh no evil." This does not mean that the man who faithfully discharges his duty will not be persecuted and will not be misrepresented; for all who live godly lives in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. However, the Christian should be able, like Christ, to live so as to be an enemy to no man. While Christ loved his enemies and died for them, and was the one absolutely innocent, pure, and guiltless being, yet he was crucified on the rugged cross between two thieves. Christians should not expect their innocence and virtue to protect them from slander and misrepresentation.

It should be noted that the scripture does not say, "and there rememberest that thy brother thinketh he hath aught against thee." The scripture reads, "and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee." If the brother has any cause or foundation for his feeling, then the cause should be removed. As surely as a man is faithful to duty and stands bravely and firmly for the right will evil men abuse and misrepresent him. Nowadays men are oftener persecuted for their virtues than for their vices. The true soldier of the cross must so live that he can pray for those who despitefully use and persecute him. The same is true of Matt. 18: 15-17. The Christian often make enemies by contending for truth and righteousness. If while doing this he keeps his own heart free from guile, free from envy, and free from malice, he is not expected to hunt up those who misrepresent and persecute him because he is faithful in the discharge of his Christian duty. Only strong, courageous, and brave men are able to attain to such heights in living the Christian life. While Matt. 18: 15-17 applies to personal offenses, we should note carefully the steps to be taken. When a brother has actually sinned or sinned against us—for some of the ancient authorities omit "against thee"—the first thing to be done is to go to the man who has sinned against us. This does not say that we are to go first to his neighbor, to our neighbor, to his enemy, or even to the church. This is the manner in which many professed Christians act. When a brother trespasses against them, they go to everybody else and tell it to them, instead of first going to the man and telling him his fault alone. "Go, show him his fault between thee and him alone." But if he refuse to hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, so that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. If a brother has grievously sinned against another Christian, that Christian has no right to bring him before the church for his grievous sin until he has first gone to him in person and sought to lead him into the right way, and then, if he has refused to hear him, has taken with him two or three more brethren and made a persistent effort to redeem him from his evil way. As Christians, we should devote such persevering effort to save our brethren. Reproving a brother who had sinned was a positive command under the law. (See Lev. 19: 17.) Not until we have gone singly to the offender, and then carried with us two or three witnesses more, have we the right to bring him before the church. After we have exhausted all these, if he still refuses to hear the church, then he is to be as a heathen man and a publican to us.

Help the Fanning Orphan School.

BY E. A. E.

It affords us much pleasure to report the amounts given to the school in response to these appeals, and the names of the donors. If any name or amount has not been given, the oversight has been unintentional and my fault, and not the fault of our careful and worthy treasurer. In travelling around to meetings, I miss sometimes some mail.

The school as a whole is grateful for all contributions. The trustees wish me to say this. They are very much interested in the good and progress of the school and are pleased that others are interested and ready to come to their assistance. When debts come before the trustees to be paid, obligations to be met, and poor and worthy girls ask for admittance and have to be turned away, they appreciate gratefully whatever contributions others make in order to assist the school in these particulars. They feel, too, that all who can help the school should realize the same obligations to do so.

Since our last report the following contributions have been received: From W. P. Lowe, Oakland, Ky., $1; church at Watertown, Tenn., $25; "A Sister," $1; A. Y. Stalker, Hartsville, Tenn., $1; Mrs. Charles C. Richards, Normandy, Tenn., $3; L. E. Huntsman, Beamsville, Ontario, Canada, $3; Sister Miller, Nashville, Tenn., $1; Mrs. Gertrude Sims, Christiana, Tenn., $1; A. M. Burton, Nashville, Tenn., $12.50; Mrs. M. N. Some of the contributors are giving so much by installments, hence their names appear more than once.

Friends, come to the help of poor and needy girls by helping this school. Our readers are not called upon to help another school just like this one and which is doing the work of this one. Other schools and homes for orphans need help and should have it. This school does, too. Let all be helped, and let us help all. Reader, do not fail to help some other because you have helped this school; do not fail to help this one because you have helped some others.

Send all contributions to the treasurer, A. N. Trice, corner Wall and Monroe Streets, Nashville, Tenn.

A Prayer.

These are the gifts I ask of Thee, Spirit serene:
Strength for the daily task;
Courage to face the road;
Good cheer to help me bear the traveler's load;
And for the hours of rest that come between,
An inward joy in all things heard and seen.

These are the sins I fain would have Thee take away:
Malice and cold disdain;
Hot anger, sullen hate;
Scorn of the lowly, envy of the great;
And discontent that casts a shadow gray
On all the brightness of a common day.

—Van Dyke.

There are blessings which we cannot obtain if we cannot accept and endure suffering. There are joys which can come to us only through sorrow. There are revealings of divine truth which we can get only when earth's lights have gone out. There are harvests which can grow only after the ploughshare has done its rough work. Not to be willing to endure pain and suffering is not to be able to get the best things of grace.—Selected.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

By J. C. McQuiddy

A Great Nuisance.

One of our esteemed contemporaries thinks that the greatest nuisance to be found in our midst to-day is the "Sunday-school" official who is always planning and scheming to substitute the publications of outside publishers. We may add that the man to be dreaded is the one who would substitute anybody's publication for the Bible. While it is proper and right to have good helps, when classes come to recite they should use the Bible and leave all other publications behind. Any one who knows anything about the study of the Scriptures understands that much help is derived from the use of Smith's Bible Dictionary, a complete concordance of the Scriptures, and helpful commentaries used with a grain of salt.

God's Question.

God is not interested in knowing whether men have sinned or not. He knows that all men have sinned. Nor is he chiefly concerned as to the amount of sinning that a man has done. For the character of any sin is so deadly that a little goes the whole way. The thing that interests God most is well expressed in Paul Rader's saying: "God's question of you is not, 'How much have you sinned?' but, 'How much have you washed?'" Are you this moment trusting Jesus and his blood for your complete cleansing from all sin?—Sunday School Times.

The great concern of every Christian should be to learn to loathe and hate sin in whatever form it is found. No man can hope to be saved by his meritorious works. No man, save the Lord Jesus Christ, has ever lived a sinless life. Those who have learned to regard sin in its proper light always feel like saying, as did the publican: "God be merciful to me a sinner." Without the grace, mercy, and atoning blood of Jesus Christ, none of us could ever be saved. While we fight the battle of faith and endeavor to reach the mountain top of a perfected and consecrated life, we must rely upon our Heavenly Father for strength and guidance. If after life's battle is fought we are saved, we will realize fully that all of our mistakes and shortcomings were washed out in the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. In the language of the Holy Spirit we will say: "Not by works done in righteousness, which we did ourselves, but according to his mercy he saved us, through the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit."

* * *

Christian Work.

It is not enough for the children of God to be punctual in attending the church services. While it is well for God's children to be prompt at the prayer meeting, regular at the Lord's table upon the first day of the week, and ever present at the preaching services of the church, yet no Christian who has been faithful in all of these should think for one moment that he has done the work that he was called to do. It is not enough to pray for the starving while we keep our purses closed; nor have we met the demands of Christianity when we suffer the lost to perish while we pray for their salvation, yet neglect to reach out to them a helping hand.

Constant appeals are coming to us. The appeal of the starving in Armenia and in Assyria comes to us most insistently. If we only have the spirit of the Master, the opportunity is afforded us to help them in some way.

We may not be able to do great things. We may not give them thousands, but we can send a small contribution which the Lord can make abound unto the accomplishment of great things.

Christians should be slow to enjoy luxury and feasting while thousands are perishing for food. The amount we spend for one needless luxury might furnish the necessary food to many who are in dire distress. In these dark days of cruel war and sorrow the whole world is akin, so far as the heart is tender and Christlike. Christianity consists in deed rather than in word. If at last we would enter through the pearly gates into the city, we must sacrifice while we are living. We must lift up the fallen, cheer the despondent, and teach the erring the way of life. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service. And be not fashioned according to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

Church Architecture.

Churchly architecture for many generations included towers and spires. The old cathedrals were famous according to the number and height of their spires. Modest country churches must have steeples. Now, as a recent writer puts it, one does not often see a new Protestant church built with a spire. "The old sentiment of the spire pointing to the sky, the former idea of its being an attraction and ornament, and the traditional notion that it made the building not only stately, but ecclesiastical, have given way to utility. The primary end now sought is adaptation to the purposes for which the structure is built. The cost of a great tower and tall spire will sometimes build a Bible school annex or fully equip the interior of the house. In some sections even the 'bungalow' type is being used with great effect as to both economy and comfort."—Herald and Presbyterian.

Our churches would do well to pay careful heed to the structure of edifices in which to worship. While such buildings should not be constructed for display, they should be so constructed as to furnish light and air, and also for the comfort of the congregation. In building church houses, it would be well to make ample arrangements for the proper teaching and instruction of the different classes, as one of the best methods of teaching is the catechetical. The truth may be learned and impressed more readily by means of questions and answers than by the public proclamation of the gospel. We would like to impress upon our readers the necessity of giving more care and attention to proper architecture for the congregation. While we may worship God anywhere, it is certainly proper to have a commodious, well-ventilated building, properly arranged for the uses of the congregation.

Various types of church architecture are shown in a booklet issued last year by the Board of Church Erection of the Presbyterian Church. Churches would do well to consider carefully the style of buildings to be erected. Many Christians select very unsightly positions for the erection of their church houses. Others build them without any reference to light, ventilation, comfort, or convenience. All church buildings should be arranged for the systematic study of the Bible by the class system. More Bible information is gained by the catechetical method of studying the Scriptures than by almost any other method in vogue.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Compiled by A. B. Lipscomb

It is earnestly desired that a good physician, who is also a good Christian, locate at Clemmons, N. C. For particulars, address M. V. Warner.

W. J. Johns changes his address from Paragould, Ark., to Gainesville, Ark., where he will teach in the public school. He will also preach for the church at Gainesville.

A large concourse of friends attended the annual reunion at the Tennessee Orphans' Home at Columbia on October 31. The reports for the last year indicated that the Home was practically clear of debt.

Mrs. D. L. Friddle, of Jackson, Ala., is an enthusiastic supporter of the Gospel Advocate. In a friendly letter she says: "I have been a regular reader ever since the Civil War, as my father took it then."

J. L. Hines, of Central City, Ky., will remove to a new field soon. He wishes to correspond with some dependable preacher relative to continuing the work in Central City. If you are interested and feel qualified, write him at once.

From John Hayes, Rockmart, Ga., November 1: "The meeting here is three days old, with splendid attendance and interest. People who never heard a gospel preacher are attending. A Methodist has requested me to call and talk with them."

From J. S. Westbrook: "Well, Brother Lipscomb, here is the latest bulletin from the Link matrimonial market. Linked for life, at Link, Tenn., on October 26, Mr. J. G. Holden and Mrs. Emma Sanders, the writer officiating." Who says there is nothing in a name?

From Tice Elkins, Wichita Falls, Texas, November 2: "I closed at Hamilton on Sunday night, with large crowds and a good meeting. One Baptist lady was baptized. The 'digressives' are stirred up. I will go back for another meeting in April. I began here Tuesday night."

Our readers will rejoice to learn that Brother Kurfees is so greatly improved in health that he will resume his editorial work on the Gospel Advocate with an article to appear in our issue of November 16. This article is full of tender, human interest, and all who read it will be benefited.

F. W. Smith's meeting at Florence, Tenn., was unusually successful. There were twenty additions to the congregation, and all were pleased with our brother's forceful, stirring sermons on the living themes that appertain to the kingdom. Thomas Williams, of Nashville, led the singing in a most acceptable manner.

Wanted—To correspond with a loyal preacher of the church of Christ who would like to move to Florida and evangelize. Location, Lake City. I want an active man with a small family, who is willing to make a sacrifice for the souls of men and help me in the work in and around Lake City. No hobby rider need apply. Write me at Lake City, Fla.—J. O. Barnes.

From W. H. George, Elijah, Mo., November 4: "I am now at this place in a meeting, with four additions to date. This meeting will close Sunday night. I go next to Gama-riel, Ark., the home of my father and mother. My meeting at Batesville, Ark., was a success. Sixteen were baptized and one restored. We had fine crowds and the best of interest throughout the meeting. Batesville is the home of my wife's father and mother. I send best wishes to the Gospel Advocate."

We have received the sad news of the death of W. T. Goalen, who has been a very useful evangelist in Alabama and whose reports have appeared in our columns. He died, after a three-weeks' illness, at Elkmont, Ala., on October 31. The funeral services were conducted by J. T. Clark, J. Pettey Ezell, and Mitchell Pullias. We will print a longer notice of this good man in an early issue, for which we are indebted to Brother Clark.

John H. Hines, former superintendent of the Potter Orphans' Home, is now busy in the evangelistic field. He writes as follows: "On September 10 I began a meeting at Center, Ky. No visible results. On September 25 I was with the church at Russellville. Visible results were one baptized and two restored. On October 9 I began a meeting at Bear Wallow. During this meeting one young man obeyed the Lord. My present address is Hopkinsville, Ky."
