It Pays to Be Thorough.

It pays to be thorough. Thoroughness is not only a security against failure, but an assurance that the finished work will be something worth while. Many years ago an ambitious country boy planned to go to a large city and make a name for himself in the business world. He read this advertisement in the paper: "Wanted-A bright, energetic boy. Address in own handwriting, 'Wholesale House." The advertiser was at the head of a large business. The country boy wrote a letter of application. He read it and then tore it up. He wrote another, with the same result. And still another. After working for hours, he wrote one that suited him and forwarded it. In two days he received a letter asking him to come to the office of the advertiser. "Did you write this letter?" was the employer's first and only question. The boy answered modestly: "Yes." "The position is yours," the employer said. He had received more than two hundred letters, but that country boy's letter was the only one that appealed to him. It demonstrated a spirit of thoroughness. It was neat, carefully written, and well worded. The letter was the only recommendation needed. The boy is now one of the most successful business men in this country, and he frequently tells this little story of his start in the business world to encourage other boys to be thorough even from the very beginning. . . .

The Evolution of a Painstaking Boy.

There is another true story that brings out the same lesson in a different way. A lady was returning to the home of her childhood after an absence of thirty years. The town had grown and prospered until it no longer resembled the little village that she had pictured in her mind. "Whose beautiful home is that?" she asked, pointing to a residence that was not only substantial, but elegant in its every appearance. "That is the home of Dr. William Walker, whom we regard as the best physician in the State," her escort replied. "O, yes, I remember little Willie Walker!" the lady said. "He was the little fellow that picked such nice berries. Father used to say that you need never sort his berries the second time. They were always perfect." So it happened that little Willie, the perfect berry picker, came to be the leading physician. Thoroughness was the basis of his success. Thoroughness had borne its fruit for thirty years. "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men." The evolution of a painstaking boy is usually the making of a thoroughly good man. And if this principle of thoroughness works such wonders in business life, how mightily should it prevail in matters of spiritual progress!

A Good Resolution for 1918.

Let us resolve to be thorough in our work for the Master during 1918. We cannot please him unless we do; for, while Jesus is a tender-hearted and forgiving Lord, he will not condone slipshod service. The best rule for thoroughness is found in Paul's words to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." To be thorough, we must study the Book that makes a man "thoroughly furnished unto all good works:" and in doing this we have the assurance that It will be the most profitable investment we can make. Begin the new year with the resolution that you will study the Bible from beginning to end before the year is done; that you will not miss a single Lord's-day service, nor any part of it; that you will always be prompt and cheerful and thorough in the performance of every duty. Let no duty be considered too small for your careful attention. The most important part of a phonographic record is the needle. It is estimated that this small instrument travels not less than three miles in its circuit every time a piece is played. Not only must the needle travel this distance, but it must not deviate the one-thousandth of a fraction of an inch from its groove, else the harmony of the selection is destroyed. Thus a life, to be in perfect harmony with God's will, must not deviate from the path outlined in his "guidebook from earth to heaven." For the year 1918 "let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer."

The Mission of the Church.

BY J. PORTER SANDERS.

"Husbands, leve your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself up for it; that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word, that he might present the church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." (Eph. 5: 25-27,)

The church of which mention is made in the word of God is the greatest, grandest, sublimest, and most glorious institution in the land of the living or known to mortals here below. Its prominence, preëminence, grandeur, and magnificence are seen over and above all other institutions.

1. In view of its origin. With whom did the church of which the Bible speaks originate? It originated with Him who stands at its head and for whom it is named. Every church or institution must have a head, place, and time of beginning. Every body must have a head. The Mormon body has deeph Smith as its head. The Lutheran Church has Martin Luther as its head. Go back the stream of tending literature in one content of the Methodist Church. Who stands at the head of the church of which mention is made.

have found the beginning of the Methodist Church. Who stands at the head of the church of which mention is made in the Book? Peter? No. Peter was doorkeeper. Alexander Campbell? No. The church of which the Book speaks was in existence about eighteen hundred years before Alexander Campbell was born. The church of which the Bible speaks antedates every institution peculiar to the Christian age. Who stands at its head? Who started it? "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead." (Col. 1: 18; see, also, Eph. 1: 20-22.) These passages tell us that Christ is the head and that he is the beginning of the church of which the Bible speaks.

2. In view of its cost. I realize that the intrinsic worth and value of a thing is not always computable or determinable by the price paid therefor; but I know that the value of the church of Christ is inestimable, incomputable, and unfathomable, otherwise the God of heaven would not have sacrificed his only Son to die such an ignominious and shameful death to purchase it. The church of Christ has been purchased by his own shed blood. Any church not purchased with his blood is not his, and he has purchased but one.

3. In view of its destiny. Every institution originated by man or any set of men is destined to destruction. "Every plant which my heavenly Father planted not shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 13.) His father did not plant, establish, or originate the Campulate, Method is Baptist, or Preseyterian Church; hence it such institution or plants are in existence, they will be rooted up and destroyed. He planted only the church of which his Son stands as head—the church of Christ, body of Christ, of which every individual Christian is a member by virtue of his obedience to the gospel. Daniel (2: 44) tells us that this kingdom or church will "stand forever." And Paul says: "Then cometh the end, when he shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father." (1 Cor. 15: 24.) Your being saved and delivered up to the Father in the day of judgment depends upon your being in the institution that he planted in the world—the church of Christ, body of Christ, church of the living God.

4. In view of its mission. Think of it! An institution that originated in the mind of Jehovah, that cost the life of his only Son to purchase it, and that is destined to exist coetaneous and contemporary with the never-ending cycles of eternity, must have a great, grand, and glorious mission to fill in the world. Everything that Jehovah has placed in this world has a mission to fill, a work to do, a duty to perform. Jehovah had a purpose and object in the creation of man, and he has a great mission to fill or duty to perform. Jesus was sent into this world on the greatest of all missions. He came to seek and to save that which was lost—the human family.

Whatever we may find the mission of the church, collectively or as a body, to be, becomes my mission and your mission to the extent of our ability as individual members of that church or body. The church is made up or composed of Christians, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and severally members thereof." (1 Cor. 12: 27.) "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?" (1 Cor. 3: 16.) There is a responsibility resting upon each individual Christian as members of the body, or church of Christ. "From whom all the body fitly framed and knit together through that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in due measure of each several part, maketh the increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love." (Eph. 4: 16.) Each joint must supply its part in this great work.

1. It is the mission of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ to promulgate, disseminate, make known, or preach the gospel to the lost sons and daughters of Adam's benighted race. Sometimes we hear the remark from some that they do not believe in missionaries' being sent to foreign fields of labor. If they do not, it is because they lack faith in the teaching of Christ. The religion of Jesus is preeminently a missionary religion just as comprehensive as the habitable globe, with no such distinctions and discriminations as domestic and foreign fields of labor. The Book says go "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" in all the world. The Book says "go," Who is to do this going Every Christian. How! He may preach the gospel with his tongue, with his pen, or with his life, by living the principles of the gospel in his life. "And how shall they preach, except they be sent?" (Rom. 10: 15.) "And ye yourselves also know, ye Philippians, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only; for even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my need. Not that I seek for the gift; but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account." (Phil. 4: 15-17.) Paul says again that the church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth. (1 Tim. 3: 14.) It is the pillar, ground, stay, or support, of the truth. It is the mission of the church to send the truth to those who have it not. "To the intent that now unto the principalities and the powers in the heavenly places might be made known through the church the manifold wisdom of God." (Eph. 3: 10.) Jesus taught that whosoever would give even a cup of water to drink to a disciple in the name of a disciple, or because we belong to Christ (not to the lodge), we would not lose our reward. (See Mark 9: 41.) Sometimes the question is asked: "What is God going to do with the heathen who dies in his sins, not having heard, believed, and obeyed the gospel?" We are all anxious to know what God is going to do with the other fellow. What is he going to do with me? What is he going to do with you? God has not promised to save a single soul in disobedience to the gospel. Peter asks: "What shall be the end of them that obey not the gospel?" (See 1 Pet. 4: 16, 17.) This applies to souls in China, Japan, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Alabama alike-anywhere and everywhere. Paul says that those who die, not having obeyed

the gospel, will be punished with everlasting destruction. (See 2 Thess. 1: 7.9.) This applies to souls in Europe as well as to souls in Nestville. What is God going to do with those Christians who claim to be the church of Christ, who have the truth and know their duty, and fail or refuse to send the gospel light to those who sit in spiritual darkness, ignorance, and superstition? Now read the third chapter of Ezekiel, I shall not take the space to quote it verbatim. You will find that Ezekiel was made a watchman unto the house of Israel. He was commanded to hear the word from Jehovah and give them warning from him. The record says that when Jehovah says that the wicked man shall die and we give him not warning, the same wicked man shall die, whether in Japan or Tennessee, but his blood will he require at our hands. O, the responsibility that rests upon each and every Christian to do his or her bit in sending the gospel light to those who have it not! Bead this chapter eargistly and prevenfully.

not! Read this chapter earefully and prayerfully.

2. It is the mission of the church of the living God to save the world. "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till it was all leavened." (Matt. 13: 33.) It is the work or property of leaven to assimilate or change that into which it is placed, but one million bushels of leaven will never leaven one teacup full of meal unless the two in some way come in contact with each other. The power that saves is in the gospel of the Son of God, but the saving power of the gospel will never save one lost soul unless in some way the gospel and the sinner are brought in contact with each other. Here is where the work of the church comes in-bringing the sinner and the gospel together. The church can preach the gospel to the lost with the tongue, the pen, and the lives lived by Christian men and Christian women. Christians, comprising the church of the Lord Jesus, are the salt of the earth. (Matt. 5: 13.) It is the property of salt to save; but unless the salt and fresh meat come in contact with each other, the meat will spoil. So Christians are the salt of the earth, the saving power, if they retain their influence for good. Hence the necessity of guarding our lives and influence, that those "of the contrary party may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of us," (Tit. 2: 7, 8.) Paul says "we have this treasure [God's plan or power for saving the lost in earthen yessels." (2 Cor. 1: 7) and 7. It is the mission of the chyfch of the Lord Jesus to be a light reflector, light dispenser, light bearer, or light disseminator. Jesus says that Christians, composing his church, are "the light of the world." (Matt. 5: 14.) Jesus said while here that he was "the Light of the world." He is gone now and says that his followers are the light of the world. On one occasion the demand was made: "We would see Jesus." That is the demand of the world now. They are looking for the Christlike life. Those who saw Jesus in the flesh saw God. It is the desire of our Heavonly Father that the world see Jesus in the flock now in the lives lived by Christians. A great many times I fear the world is disappointed. Paul says: "Do all things without murmurings and questionings; that ye may become blameless and harmless, children of God without blemish in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye are seen as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life." (Phil. 2: 14-16.) From this we see the gospel is the word of life, the word that gives life or light and saves; but it must be held forth. The church is the candlestick. (Rev. 2: 20.) The candlestick is that which holds up and supports the light. The sun is for the purpose of giving light to the material universe and its inhabitants, but a dark cloud will obscure that light from us. So will bad habits, evil deeds, and ungodly lives obscure and hide our influence for good. O, how we ought to guard our influence!

4. It is the mission of the New Testament church that she should make herself ready, having arrayed herself in pure linen, clean and white. "Let us rejoice and be exceeding glad, and let us give the glory unto him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And it was given unto her that she should array herself in fine linen, bright and pure: for the fine linen is the righteous acts of the saints." (Rev. 19: 7-9.) Here we learn that it is the mission of the church, the bride, to be ready when Jesus, the Bridegroom, comes the second time. She is to be dressed in pure linen, bright and pure. What is this? The righteous acts of the saints. "But when the king came in to behold the guests, he saw there a man who had not on a wedding garment: and he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless." (Matt. 22: 12.) O, dear reader, thinly of this question being asked you at the last moment! You will never be granted an entrance into the realms of celestial bliss unless in life you achieve and acquire that Christian character represented or described by the wedding garment mentioned above.

Brother Dunn Enters a New Field.

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY,

Brother John E. Dunn has gone as a kind of missionary and good Samaritan to work among our soldier boys now in training in the army cantonments. As a volunteer religious worker, under the auspices of the National War Work Council, he has charge of one of the Young Men's Christian Association buildings at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C.

I think we have all felt that something should be done for the spiritual welfare of the young men now being gathered in the nation's soldier camps-felt that we should try to take the gospel there and do what was possible to counteract evil tendencies and to keep those who are Christians in touch with church life. But we have been in doubt how to proceed in that direction. It was suggested that Brother Dunn would be most fit for such an effort. whereupon that good man declared his willingness to undertake the work. And it was decided that he should go, though it was found that he would have to join the Y. M. C. A and by the War Work Council be officially assigned to a definite sphere of labor. Only in this way can we send a man to work among and have free access to the soldlers. These necessary steps were taken, and thus Brother Dunn is now in the camp with the soldiers, the church at Cookeville, Tenn., very graciously and generously engaging to support his family, and the Lawrence Avenue Church, in Nashville, Tenn., paying his incidental expenses and equipping him for the work, while his living expenses are met by the Association in the camp where he is quartered.

Brother Dunn is not a part of the army, but in this way he is permitted to go in and work with those who undoubtedly need, and will continue sorely to need, the succor he can give. In no way is he restricted as to his teaching. He may go on unmolested preaching Christ, and him crucified, and leading men to obey God. In both public preaching and in private social touch, he has an unlimited field to work in. And while his building serves but one regiment of soldiers, he yet may keep in touch with and do personal work among the boys throughout the camp. To the full measure of his splendid energies he may minister to the hearts, the minds, and mayhaps even to the bodies of our boys. Is not this a great door opened to us?

We of Warren County, Tenn., have many boys at Camp Sevier. And, speaking personally, what a consolation to know that we have there with them a man of the stamp of Brother Dunn, who rejoices to devote his whole time and mind and energies to teaching them the way of God in truth, impressing right principles upon them, and generally looking after and guiding them! And, of course, he may serve not only our own boys and those who are members of the body of Christ, but also, as far as in him is, all others of those splendid fellows who soon-alas!must go away to fight and perhaps to die on foreign fields. And where is a man more energetic, warm-hearted, and consecrated than John Evans Dunn? His selection for this enterprise is most fortunate—he seems especially fitted for it. But the work is very hard and confining and will heavily tax his resources. He may not have to go overseas, but likely he will be kept at this task for the duration of the war. And in this great and untried undertaking he asks for and should have the sympathy and daily prayers of all the brethren.

The Christian's Behavior in the Present Crisis. BY JOHN E. DUNN.

The world is now passing through a terrible ordeal—the world war—such as this generation has never seen before, and the like we shall most likely never see again. The present distress that is upon us calls for a knowledge of duty and a wisdom in doing our duty that most of us do not have. I believe the present calamity has caught most of the best of us off our guard and almost wholly unprepared to deal with the situation wisely, calmly, and scripturally. The following scriptures bearing on the subject should be carefully studied:

"Put them in mind to be in subjection to rulers, to authorities, to be obedient, to be ready unto every good work, to speak evil of no man, not to be contentious, to be gentle, showing all meekness toward all men." (Tit. 3: 1, 2.) "Be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as sent by him for vengeance on evildoers and for praise to them that do well. For so is the will of God, that by well-doing ye should put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: as free, and not using your freedom for a cloak of wickedness, but as bond servants of God. Honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the king." (1 Pet. 2: 13-17.)

Christians, above all men, should be "obedient" to civil authorities, humble, kind, courteous, and wise in both their language and behavior, "showing all meekness toward all men." The present is a time when Christians ought to be "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." This does not mean that we should obey man rather than God, if a clash between God's kingdom and the kingdoms of this world should come. The course of the apostles Peter and Paul furnish us with both teaching and examples in such an emergency. Peter and John, when "charged" by civil authorities "not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus," answered: "Whether it is right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye: for we cannot but speak the things which we saw and heard." Again: "We must obey God rather than men." If the time should ever come when Christians are ordered to disobey God, they should obey God and accept the punishment of the civil authorities submissively. They should accept whatever persecution befalls them without murmur or complaint, if it be to go to prison or death. Under severe trial God's children should in patience and self-control possess their souls. In times like these we should manifest the spirit of Christ.

I am sorry to say that in a number of instances I have seen brethren (men and women) manifest an ugly and resentful spirit. I have heard them use angry words and speak evil of the government and the officials. Such behavior is unbecoming to a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus and in disobedience to New Testament teaching. Such conduct only makes it more difficult for those who are asking the officials to consider their consciences. It places the Christian, who ought to be an example unto all men, in an ugly light before the world.

During twenty-five years of public career as a minister of the gospel I have had to deal with officials and public servants. I have traveled much and have been in constant contact with railroad officials. I have often gone before government officials in behalf of unfortunates. I have always endeavored to make my wants known in a courteous and submissive manner. I never have in any instance been treated discourteously or harshly. In nearly every instance my requests have been granted.

I believe in times like these especially we should show ourselves polite, kind, gentle, and submissive. We should seek to be helpful and not antagonize. Now is a most excellent time to study the examples in behavior of Christ, Joseph, Daniel, Peter, and Paul. If we will be faithful to duty and manifest a gentle and submissive disposition, I believe we shall come out all right. We are now being offered the greatest opportunity of our lives to be of genuine service to suffering humanity. As for me and my house, we shall serve all we can in kindness and love.

Taking the Oversight.

BY JOHN T. HINDS.

The apostic Peter, who claimed to be "a fellow elder," exhorted the elders in the following words: "Tend the flock of God which is among you, exercising the oversight, not of constraint, but willingly, according to the will of God; nor yet for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as lording it over the charge allotted to you, but making yourselves ensamples to the flock." (1 Pet. 5: 2, 3.) It seems hardly possible to crowd more sound, helpful advice into the same number of words than is found in this statement. Perhaps no apostolic instruction would be more beneficial to the church than this, if it were faithfully carried out. Individually the elders do not need advice any more than other Christians, but as elders their work should have a much broader influence than the ordinary member.

The value of the elders' work and position in the church is seen at once when we consider the names applied to them. The term "elder," which carries the thought of age, implies general experience. It is not considered wise in human affairs to fill the most responsible places with young and inexperienced persons. Men, to be elders, should be old enough to know something of life's real problems, and in the church long-enough to know something of church problems. Apani covers the case at this point by saying: "Not a novice, lest being puffed up he fall into the condemnation of the devil." (1 Tim. 3: 6.) The term "pastors" also is applicable to elders. This is seen in Acts 20: 28, where Paul tells the elders to "feed" the church. The Greek for "feed" in the noun form is the word translated "pastors;" hence, the elders are the spiritual feeders of the flock.

In the same verse the apostle says the Holy Spirit had made them "overseers," or, as given in the Revised Version, "bishops." The word "bishop," then, gives the idea of oversight. Since elders are "overseers" of congregations, we can see the need of the apostle's exhortation about taking or exercising the oversight. I do not wish to note all the items in this exhortation; but, presuming the elders to have all the desirable traits here commended, let us consider simply the question of doing the work—actually exercising the oversight.

I am convinced that many elders are good men, well posted, "apt to teach," and possess in no small degree the qualifications given, but are practical failures in overseeing the work. Some way the real idea in the word "overseer" seems never to have made any impression upon them.

If it were anything else except the church, they would at once understand what overseership mean. But in the church the idea prevails in many congregations that the elders are to do all the work, or practically all. They are expected to read the scripture lessons, offer the prayers, preside at the Lord's table, and make about all the talks. If it is not expected thus by many congregations, I fear some elders expect it that way. Some may even want it that way.

That kind of procedure would be strange in other things. An overseer is just a superintendent. Overseers are expected to know how to do the work, else they would not know how to direct it, but not to do it all. Imagine a road overseer doing all the work, while the men under him sit around and watch. No more fatal mistake, I am sure, can be made by elders than to do about all the work. Just how by such a system they can expect to develop any talent in the congregation is not easy to see. Where will future elders, deacons, and evangelists come from, with such handling of congregations?

It will not do to suppose other congregations will raise up elders and preachers, for they might reason after the same fashion. It will not meet the case, either, to say that your congregation is so well posted and has had so many good preachers that they cannot endure the mistakes and weak efforts of the members. If that is the case, your members need a change of heart. We are not supposed to conduct public worship to meet the demands of the worldly-minded element, but rather to worship God and strengthen the weak. The congregation needs the development, and oversensitive members who are not willing for it are seriously failing in both work and kindness.

Why should elders read the lesson every Lord's day, when, perhaps, there are fifty brethren who could easily take part in this part of the work? Why ask the same two or three only to read instead of asking different ones every service? Why should one of the elders always preside at the Lord's table, when others could easily and acceptably do it? Why should the regular deacons always pass the emblems, when many others are always present? Why not teach every brother to offer thanks and dismiss, so any of them might serve? In short, why do not elders oversee the work instead of trying to do it all?

No use to say that members will not take part. Some may not be persuaded to do anything, but most of them can be influenced to do something. A good overseer shows his skill when he gets all to do something. Give the simplest and easiest tasks to the inexperienced, but give all something to do. In this way all the talent will be developed, every one will have his heart in the work, and future elders and preachers will grow up among us, while elders will be doing the work of bishops by really "exercising the oversight." Next Lord's day is the time to begin this work if it has not been already started.

There is no use to say that teaching and studying the Bible in the Bible-study work will meet the demands in this matter. Nothing but actually appearing before the whole church in some capacity will wear off the embarrassment and make one a public worker in the church. No amount of special or private teaching will make one a public worker. It may help much in preparing for the work, but real success comes in public work of any kind only to the one who undertakes the work itself. Why elders fail in having this work done, I cannot understand. Overseers should be overseers in fact.

The power which thinks and works within us is, according to its nature, a power as never-dying as that which holds together suns and stars. . . . Its nature is eternal as the divine mind, and the supports of my being (not of my corporeal form) are as firm as the pillars of the universe.—Herder.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

Brother McQuiddy: In a town where there is no Young Men's Christian Association hall, is it wrong to use the meetinghouse for a lecturer to explain the work of the Y. M. C. A. in the war or training camps and to raise money for that work? What I want to know in particular is, Is it wrong to use the house for the lecture?

S. P. HOCHSTETTER.

As the meetinghouse is only a convenience or expedient, there can certainly be no wrong in permitting the Y. M. C. A. to use it for a lecture. The body of Christ, composed of men and women, and not the meetinghouse, is the church. While we may deface the walls of a building, it is not possible to morally corrupt wood and stone. While people should love the church and should have pride in the place where the church assembles, there certainly can be no wrong in granting the Y. M. C. A. permission to lecture in the building, as such lecture neither defaces nor corrupts the meetinghouse.

Brother McQuiddy: 2 Chron, 9: 30 states that "Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel forty years," Please state the age of Solomon at the time of his death, giving book, chapter, and verse where the age is given.

J. N. WATKINS.

The Bible does not state in so many words Solomon's age when he died. We have an account, however, in 2 Sam. 12: 24, of Solomon's birth. This, according to the chronology, was 1033 B.C. The passage reads: "And David comforted Bath-sheba his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her: and she bare a son, and he called his name Solomon." We learn from 1 Kings 11: 42, 43 of Solomon's death. These verses read: "And the time that Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel was forty years. And Solomon slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead." This was 975 B.C. Subtracting 975 B.C. from 1033 B.C. would make Solomon fifty-eight years old at the time of his death. Solomon was crowned king of Gihon by the direction of his father when aged and infirm. This was 1015 B.C. He was the tenth son of David, and second by Bath-sheba. . . .

Brother McQuiddy: You seemed to have failed to get my question. I did not seek to know if it was right to confess Christ, our sins, etc.; but, is an oral confession, a confession with the mouth, confession that Jesus is the Christ, a condition of pardon as is faith, repentance, and baptism? I understand we Christians are required to confess Christ and confess our sins as long as we live, but this has no reference to my question. ISH SIMMONS.

I do not understand from the teaching of the word of God that the formal confession is made a prerequisite of salvation as is faith, repentance and baptism. The conditions of salvation, as laid down by Christ himself in the great commission, are faith, repentance, and baptism. When we go to the first teaching under this commission, we find that on the day of Pentecost the conditions of salvation were faith, repentance, and baptism. This is also true of every example of conversion that we find in the Acts of the Apostles. In the case of Philip and the eunuch, Philip inquired of him to know about his faith, as he was acting under the commission that "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." As he had demanded baptism at his hands, he was ready to baptize him, provided he believed. So he said: "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." However, as one must have faith in order to be scripturally baptized, the baptist should inquire as to the faith of the candidate. The most direct way to learn this is to ask the question: "Do you believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God?"

Withdrawal of Fellowship From the Disorderly Walking.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Subtraction is as necessary as addition. Churches that seek to build up a large membership regardless of the character of the membership are not living in obedience to the plain and positive commands of the Lord. A large membership composed of wood, hay, and stubble-composed of people who do not lead holy and unblamable lives-is not "the light of the world" and "the salt of the earth." The Holy Spirit meant much when he said: "For the grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men, instructing us, to the intent that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world; looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works." (Tit. 2: 11-14.) While the Holy Spirit permits us to keep company with fornicators, the covetous, extortioners, and idolaters, because we could not live in the world without associating with such, yet he does not permit us to keep company with one who is called "a brother" that is guilty of such acts. He says: "But as it is, I wrote unto you not to keep company, if any man that is named a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a reviler, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no, not to eat." (1 Cor. 5: 11.) From this we learn that a Christian is not to associate with one who professes to wear the name of Christ and is guilty of such wickedness in a way that would build him up or uphold him in his wrongdoing. This means far more than withdrawing from such in the assembly of the saints: it means to withdraw our association in the ordinary affairs of life. We are not to eat with such a one, neither to keep company with him. This does not mean, however, that we are to count such a one as an enemy because he has fallen into error; but we are to admonish him as a brother and seek to lead him out of his wrongdoing.

Paul, in writing to the Thessalonians, says: "And if any man obeyeth not our word by this epistle, note that man, that ye have no company with him, to the end that he may be ashamed. And yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother." (2 Thess. 3: 14, 15.) Cutting off a member from the body of Christ should be the last resort. It should never be done in a spirit of malice or persecution, but in a spirit of love and firmness.

A POSITIVE COMMAND.

The command to withdraw from the disorderly is simple, clear, and positive. It is no harder to understand than the language, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." The command is in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, meaning that by his authority and direction the withdrawal is done. If we cannot withdraw from one in the name of Christ, then we should not withdraw at all. It should be clear also that we withdraw ourselves from a brother because of disorderly walking. Paul says: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of us." Thus it will be noted that this was not a simple admonition or exhortation, but a positive command to withdraw, not from a few or some, but from "every brother that walketh disorderly." Faithful churches will see that this scripture is obeyed. Unfaithful churches will permit adulterers, extortioners, and revilers to live in full fellowship and good standing in the church. Paul, in writing of the fornicator who had his father's wife, commands the church at Corinih: "In the name of our Lord Jesus, ye being gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus, to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." (1 Cor. 5; 4, 5.) It will be seen that the withdrawal is, first, for the salvation of the offender or guilty person, and, secondly, for the protection of the church, as "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." If adulterers, idolaters, and revilers are permitted to live in the church in full fellowship and good standing, others will be emboldened to do likewise, and thus the whole body will become corrupt. In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, in the love of the truth, and in the fear of God, churches should withdraw from the disorderly walking. They should not permit the law of the land to prosecute such offenders and put them in the penitentiary before withdrawing fellowship from them. While we criticize politicians and find fault with our lawmakers, yet it is too true that often they land criminals in the penitentiary before the church withdraws fellowship from them. Evidently the church at Corinth withdrew from the guilty criminal who had his father's wife. We learn that the turning him over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh had the desired effect, for of this same person Paul writes in 2 Cor. 2: 5-8: "But if any hath caused sorrow, he hath caused sorrow, not to me, but in part (that I press not too heavily) to you all. Sufficient to such a one is this punishment which was inflicted by the many; so that contrariwise ye should rather forgive him and comfort him, lest by any means such a one should be swallowed up with his overmuch sorrow. Wherefore I beseech you to confirm your love toward him." Criminals must be sorry for their sins; and not only sorry, but so sorry that they turn away from them. It must not be a sorrow of the world, or sorrow simply because one's sin is discovered. "The sorrow of the world worketh death." Truly penitent men loathe and hate sin with all the intensity of their souls. They spew it out of their mouths, trample it under their feet, and put it forever behind their backs. No man has gotten sin out of his system who deliberately and willfully refuses to confess his sin. While all have sinned and come far short of the glory of God, in order to stand approved and accepted in his sight, like David, they must be ready to say: "I have

Churches are sometimes loath to do as God directs, considering the consequences. It is not our prerogative to consider the consequences; but we must consider only what God commands us to do, do it, and leave the consequences with him. Paul says: "Holding faith and a good conscience; which some having thrust from them made shipwreck concerning the faith: of whom is Hymenæus and Alexander; whom I delivered unto Satan, that they might be taught not to blaspheme." (1 Tim. 1: 19, 20.) Until we have the courage to do as did Paul, excommunicate those who have made shipwreck of the faith, we are not true to the word of the Lord. The word of the wicked "will eat as doth a gangrene: of whom is Hymenæus and Philetus; men who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already, and overthrow the faith of some." (2 Tim. 2: 17, 18.)

TURN AWAY FROM FACTIONISTS.

Paul, in writing to the church at Rome, says: "New I beseech you, brethren, mark them that are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the doctrine which ye learned: and turn away from them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Christ, but their own belly; and by their smooth and fair speech they beguile the hearts of the innocent." (Rom. 16: 17, 18.) Men who uphold factionalism and those who are guilty of dividing churches contrary to the doctrine of Christ become guilty of these sins. Evangelists should not be guilty of such conduct, for it is not warranted by the word of God. The beloved John writes: "If any one cometh unto you, and bringeth not this teaching, receive him not into your house, and give him no greeting: for he that giveth him greeting partaketh in his evil works." (2 John 10, 11.) Preachers have too high a regard for unity who place unity above the plain and positive teaching of the word of God. Paul labeled divisions and contentions over preferences for preachers "carnality," and to be carnalminded is death. As Christ is not divided, so we may say that the truth is a unit and does not produce a divided sentiment. Men who place Paul or Cephas or Apollos above the truth have not the spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ. When we have been as true to the word of God as possible, still there will be evildoers stealing the livery of heaven in which to serve the devil. There will be those professing a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. There will be whited sepulchers claiming to be in the church, while in reality they are tares in the world and will at last sink down to eternal wee. The church is in the world. "The field is the world." The wheat and the tares grow together in the world, but not in the church, as the church is smaller than the world and represents only a peculiar people, zealous of good works. It represents those who have crucified the lusts of the flesh and the affections thereof and are living nearer and "nearer, my God, to thee."

Is There More Than One Way? BY E. G. S.

Some people seem disgusted at the idea that there is but one way to get into Christ and be saved. It is an admitted fact that salvation is in Christ, and that people must get into him to reach salvation. Now we are not talking about what God can do, but about what he has done, to save sinners. God is able to do anything that ought to be done, so far as we know. But the serious question with us is, what has he required the people to do? All this has been plainly revealed in the New Testament, and our business is to learn what that is and then obey just as directed.

In the New Testament we learn that when Jesus had said, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," the people were astonished at what he said and wanted to know how a man could be born again when he was old; they were astonished beyond measure and asked how that could be. See the first part of the third chapter of John, where the passage occurs. When we understand that Jesus was Hlustrating how people enter into Christ, into the kingdom of God on earth, we can readily understand the figure. Baptism being the last step in the obedience to the gospel in becoming Christians, we can readily understand it. That is, if we regard baptism as an immersion, a burial in water, the figure of the passage is easily understood. In baptism, people are buried in the water and immediately raised up out of it. This action is very similar to a birth and puts people into Christ, and it is in that act they are introduced into Christ, in whom is salvation. (See Eph. 3, first part of the chapter.) -So it is very plain that baptism, which is performed in water, is the entrance into Christ, "in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace." This shows clearly that remission of sins comes to us when we are baptized into Christ, and not till then. But if we change the act of baptism into sprinkling or pouring, then those that were alien sinners are not in Christ and cannot be; for baptism is the only step in the Christian religion in which water can be used by divine authority. It also shows us that baptism is a burial, since it is the only sense in which water is used in the Christian religion as an ordinance. But if we reject immersion and put sprinkling in its place, we destroy the idea of baptism being a burial; and yet the word of God emphatically says, "buried with him in baptism." (See Rom. 6: 4.) Hence we not only knock out part of the inspired word of God, but we knock out the whole idea of receiving remission of sins, when we drop out baptism as a condition of remission, for the simple reason that remission of sins is not promised till people are baptized. Those, therefore, who drop out immersion not only change the word of God, but defraud themselves out of the promise of salvation. Sprinkling a little water on people defrauds people out of salvation; for there is no promise of salvation till baptism has been performed—and baptism means immersion. Therefore, to reach the promise of pardon, aliens must believe the gospel, repent, and be baptized; and then the promise is sure, for it is God's promise.

Obedience to the gospel is man's part, but the promise of pardon is God's part. And when the alien sinner believes, repents, and is baptized, his pardon is sure. God will never fail to fulfill his promise when man fills the obedience required of him. When man does his part, he may be perfectly sure that God will do what he has promised. But the promise of heaven will not be fulfilled till a faithful, Christian life has been completed. Hence the Christian must be faithful in the service of God to the end of life to be sure of heaven when he dies. But why should there be a failure in the Christian life, when heaven is promised at the end of that sort of life? Everything needful, therefore, to move the Christian to be faithful to the end of life has been given; and if a failure is made, it will be man's fault, and not on the Lord's part. The Lord's part, therefore, is complete, and it only remains for man to complete his part, and then heaven is sure. Surely such promises on the part of God ought to stimulate all Christians to be faithful until death takes them away. If they will do this, they may be happy in life and at death and through all eternity. Surely such a prospect ought to stimulate Christians to be faithful.

Therefore, when alien sinners want to be saved, they must believe the gospel, repent, and be baptized, in order to be sure their past sins are forgiven. Then they must go right on living the Christian life as given in the New Testament. Nothing short of faithful obedience, both in becoming Christians and in living the Christian life as the word of the Lord directs, will prepare people for heaven. This is plainly taught in the New Testament; and if people do not obey it, they have no promise of eternal life. It is not enough, therefore, to become Christians; but so long as they live they must faithfully live the Christian life, even until death calls them away. If the doctrine that a Christian can never fall away and be lost were true, then falling from grace would be an impossibility. But no such teaching is found in the New Testament. On the other hand, the New Testament plainly teaches that those who turn away from a righteous life and go back into a sinful life the remainder of their days are certain to be eternally lost.

The Future of Men.

BY D. L.

Many will dissent from the position that there is more of scripture truth in the world and greater love for it, and especially among the disciples of Christ, and more real inclination to obey God, than there was fifty years ago, or at any previous time in the world's history. None the less, we are sure these things are true.

Fifty years ago the knowledge of the Scriptures was confined to a few persons. Among the disciples some studied certain portions of the Bible, and were familiar with these portions, but were ignorant of the other portions of it. They learned that there were certain general divisions of the Scripture, and this knowledge caused them to ignore all parts, save what they esteemed specially directed to them. I have known preachers to deprecate the study of the Old Testament as useless and have had elders of the church to tell me that they thought the time given to the study of the Old Testament was wasted. Those who think this have failed to grasp the teachings of the New Testament, for it continually refers to the Old Testament for illustration and precedent, and says the things in the Old Testament were recorded for our admonition and instruction and warning. Those who thus teach and those who fail to study the Old Testament cut themselves off from this warning and instruction given by the Lord for their good.

There are divisions of the Bible that must be observed to properly understand it. These divisions are as much a part of the revelation of God as is the matter contained in the Scriptures. While there are divisions in the Scriptures, there is also a connection between the different portions which must be observed in order to a proper understanding of the different parts. No one portion can be well understood without a true conception of the Bible as a connected whole. The disciples had taken one step forward, but had failed to realize the importance of studying the Book as a connected whole; hence their conclusions were often one-sided and imperfect.

Outside of the disciples there was an entire neglect of the study of the Scriptures, even by church members, save as done by preachers. The Book to the masses of the people was almost as entirely unknown as if yet hid in its original Greek. The ordinary preachers read it as detached and disconnected proverbs and texts, about which they could weave sermons. On these sermons the masses depended for their knowledge of the Bible. It was meager and disconnected.

There were a few scholars in Europe and America that had studied the Bible as a connected whole, and some of them had written commentaries on the Scriptures that will through future years be monuments to their industry, learning, and fidelity in teaching the word of God. These were read but little by preachers or others. A. Campbell and his father were reared and educated among those students of the Bible in Scotland and came to America, settled in the Western country, and popularized that knowledge and aroused an interest among the people in Bible study. From this impetus the study of the Bible has spread in continually widening circles to the present.

Much of this study has been from an unfavorable standpoint and under unfavorable surroundings. In the days of the ignorance of the Scriptures parties had arisen and denominations built up in the religious world. The study of the Scriptures was from a party standpoint and for the purpose of sustaining party dogmas and denominational organizations. But in studying the Scriptures from this standpoint and for these ends, truths not directly bearing on these party questions would creep into the minds and hearts of many, and when party strife had exhausted itself. these truths would spring up in the heart and life. There is such a thing as persons running so far in the interest of party that a reaction will take place and they will see the evil and wrong of the parties and will turn from them and seek religious development in other directions-the direction of personal piety, purity, and holiness.

Then men differ to some extent in mental capacity and moral tempers, so that the same truths will impress different persons somewhat differently. There will be no antagonism or contradiction in the impressions made, but diversity. One class of men will be impressed with the truths concerning the church as a body, with its organization and ordinances and public services and worship; another class of men, with sympathetic temperaments, will be impressed with the work of looking after the sick, the distressed, and the poor, and of administering help and comfort to them; still another class of men will be impressed with the honesty, uprightness, and integrity taught in the Scriptures; and each of these classes would be lightly impressed with the features of Bible teaching that impressed the others. Each of these classes left to themselves would develop abnormally along one line and negleet the truths running along the other lines. To avoid this, God combines them into one body-the church of Jesus Christ-so that the different temperaments and tendencies may moderate each other and through the combination a united and harmonious development of the body of Christ might be secured. The ruling tendency of one class will complement the weakness of the other. In this way God can make one completed and harmonious body out of one-sided and imperfect parts. Man is one-sided and imperfect; the word of God is many-sided, wellrounded, complete, and perfect. But man in his imperfection develops, if left alone, into a one-sided partisan.

In spiritual and religious matters there are ebbs and flows in the currents. The flow in one direction produces an ebb in another that draws the current in turn in that direction. These influences must be taken into consideration in estimating the religious condition of the world.

The Bible has been studied from a partisan standpoint for the last one hundred years. The party spirit has been developed abnormally and all else has been sacrificed to the interest of party. In the observance of scripture knowledge emotional excitement was substituted for intelligent submission to the word of God. With the increase of scripture knowledge and under stress of party contention this has been given up, and party fealty and work to build up the party have well-nigh absorbed all the elements of true religion. To raise money to build up the party has become the great leading motive in all religious parties. Care for the poor and help for the afflicted have been provided partly from drinking in the Spirit of Christ and partly because, under the public sentiment developed by the study of the word of God, the care of the afflicted is an effective means of strengthening and building up the party.

But there has been an almost entire neglect of personal devotion, private and family worship, and regard for integrity and honesty among church members. Under the one-sidedness of humanity many men who reverence God and the Bible, seeing the neglect of these things in the churches, turn from the churches and let their religion run wholly in practical honesty and charity. This is so marked at this time that, along with the demands of business that honesty and integrity should be observed, they are held in higher esteem in the business world than in the churches. This is owing to the influence of the Bible on the community generally-those who failed to be impressed with the importance of church membership and the observance of the ordinances of religion, through which man's sense of responsibility to God is kept alive; but their religion consists in being honest toward men and in helping the needy. Even among preachers strict truthfulness and honesty in rendering to every man that which is his due is lightly regarded. The moral and public sentiment in the world is better on this question of honesty and integrity than it is in the churches. Instances are not rare of persons being condemned in the courts for dishonesty that are never interfered with in the churches. This arises from a perversion of the true ends and purposes of the Christian religion on the part of both classes in some points.

An increased knowledge of the Bible must produce a waning interest in parties, a greater regard for truth and honesty, and personal and private devotion. This first shows itself in a waning interest in religion as now manifested in denominationalism. In losing this interest all churches share the indifference. This has the appearance of indifference, skepticism, infidelity toward God. It does in some cases result in this. But a general declension of interest in all churches may be expected when the tide of feeling for the parties begins to recede. I believe the spirit of devotion to party has passed the flood tide; the rage for organizations to build up the party is receding.

As impossible as the result seems, all parties, all denominations in religion, must be broken down and swept out of the way before the rule of Jesus can find its perfect work on earth. This prospect is discouraging to all who do not believe firmly in God and his word. But the result must come. With this must come a falling away from professed faith in God. None the less, the work must be done. The mission of the word of God is to root up and destroy, as well as to plant and build up. One must precede the other until in the religious world every practice and party and society and denomination not planted by God shall be rooted up, that the word of God, the seed of the kingdom, may have free course and bear much fruit. The darkest hour frequently precedes the dawn. "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed forever: but thou, Lord, art most high for evermore." (Ps. 92: 7, 8.) All the nations and people that have set at defiance the will of God in the past have perished. It will continue to be so until the end. The failure of all the teachings and institutions not founded upon the Rock, the immovable Rock of God's word, must come. Only they who build upon the Rock will survive; and however dark the prospect or widespread the prevailing desolation, they who trust God and are faithful to his word will abide with God. Teach and spread the word of God; reject all else. God is full of mercy and compassion, and forbears long with man.

"For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neitheir root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked: for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." There has been a temporal and temporary fulfillment of this once; there will be a spiritual and eternal one in the future.

A Great Opportunity.

The times in which we are now living are, in many respects, quite distressing. We are called upon to endure hardships and to make sacrifices. Many homes in our land have seen their young men leave to become soldiers in the army which the government is assembling in camps and cantonments to train for active service in the field.

Seeing the great need of sending preachers of the gospel to the camps, we appealed to Brother John E. Dunn, of the Lawrence Avenue congregation, to make the sacrifice to go. However, before the appeal had been made, he said he had been seriously considering the matter. Soon the way was opened, and he left for Greenville, S. C., on December 26. He has gone to a great missionary field. and we trust he will accomplish great good for the cause of Christ and humanity. We heartily commend the congregation at Cookeville, Tenn., in voluntarily promising to contribute largely to the support of his family while he is away on his mission of mercy. His own congregation advanced the necessary funds for his equipment and travel, hoping other congregations, when advised of the situation, would willingly help bear the burden and seek fellowship in the work.

The brethren of Texas are putting forth efforts to help the soldier boys in Texas encampments.

The circumstances are such as demands a sacrifice on the part of all who feel an interest in the welfare of our young men in the army,

But I must say, in behalf of Sister Dunn, that she certainly is contributing much to this great work when she is willing for her husband to be away from their home engaged in working for the temporal and eternal welfare of the young men of the army. Many fond mothers whose boys have been called to leave their homes to enter the army are praying to-day for "peace on earth and good will to man."

Nehemiah.

A lonely figure on a city wall, Inspecting all the ruin wrought through years Of feebleness, of warfare, and decay! The moon's enchanting light is over all, But of its glamor unaware appears The man absorbed in his intense survey.

O, get thee forth upon thy ruined walls,
Forth in the silence of the dewy night!
Like Nehemiah see the wreck, and plan
To build like him; in vain Sanballat calls
Derisive names, and Jews bewail their plight—
The wall proceeds, for God has found the man.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

Atlanta.

My eleventh year in this splendid city has just ended, and the twelfth year has been entered with songs, prayers, and thanksgiving. It would be hard to find another place as good as Atlanta. Too, it would be hard to find Christians who excel the faithful here. Last year was the best in the history of the work, and everything indicates that 1918 will be a récord breaker. Brother Morgan H. Carter, who has done such a fine work at Macon, has moved to this place, which means more than words can express to our work. Carter lives close to God. He is just fine. He knows how to "hustle." That you may know that I speak the truth, I give a "bit" of the work he is doing. He preaches, as a rule, three times on Lord's days, conducts a Bible drill for the young people every Sunday evening, and conducts a similar drill at East Point on Tuesday nights and at South Pryor Street on Wednesday nights. Besides this, he is doing some university work, visits the sick, and conducts a Bible-story class for the children on Thursday afternoons. He is putting new life into the work, and is appreciated by every member of the church. Other men will soon be here to join us in this great work.

I feel here that I should say a word about four more men we have here—viz.: O. D. Bearden, Hugh E. Garrett, H. C. Morgan, and T. J. Hunton. Brother Bearden and his wife's loyalty to God started the Atlanta work. Garrett was baptized by Brother Bearden about seven years ago. He is another man that has grown wonderfully and now wields the sword of the Spirit with power. He has had burdens to bear and battles to fight that but few know about. But, in spite of this, he has been, and continues to be, one of our best workers. Morgan and Hunton are not so old in the service; but they have been working side by side for nearly a year, preaching here and there and helping the work greatly. There are others here that I would be glad to mention, but time and space forbid.

I am glad to say that I am in the best of health, so far as I can tell. I weigh one hundred and ninety pounds—too much to do the walking that I once did.

May I ask our friends everywhere to continue to pray for us? Too, let me insist that every one of our readers in this State work as never before during the year 1918. The Lord bless the faithful everywhere.

The Work at Dalton, Ga.

Brother W. C. Graves and wife are now located at Dalton, and will give that section of the State their undivided attention. We have small congregations at Donnegin, Tunnel Hill, and Mount Sinai, not very far from Dalton. Brother Graves will see to their needs as well as the work in Dalton. His last report indicates that the work goes well, and we are expecting great good to be done there this year.

I feel it not amiss to say a few words about Brother Graves. He was baptized in May, 1912, during the second meeting conducted at East Point. His growth has been marvelous. He spent two years in the Nashville Bible School. He loves the truth, and nothing delights him more than the privilege of teaching it to others. We have no man in the State more dependable than he. Graves can take the hardest places—places where others, as a rule, would fail—and come out with success. He knows how to "stick to it." We are proud of Graves, and our prayers follow him wherever he goes. The Lord bless him in his new field.

The Work at Macon.

Brother C. E. Coleman and family have moved to Macon, and will keep busy in the central city of the State. Macon is a fine place to live and work. The congregation there has in it some of our most reliable members. I would be glad here to call each one by name and speak of his and her excellence in the work of our Lord. These splendid people have in Brother Coleman and wife two characters unexcelled in consecration to God and devotion to his kingdom. But few people live as close to God as Charlie Coleman and wife. Macon is to be congratulated for securing the services of such people. Nothing but good news are we expecting from their section of the State this year. The Lord will bless and keep them.

Camp Gordon.

I am glad to report that our preaching and communion services at Camp Gordon on Lord's-day afternoons are becoming more and more interesting. Two of the soldier boys—George Willey and Clifford F. Pinkston—were baptized into Christ on Christmas Day, and were entertained in the home of Brother J. T. Farmer. Brother and Sister Farmer have one son in France and another soon to go, and it was a pleasure for them to do for the above-named soldiers as they would have others do for their own.

Why Search the Scriptures?

BY MORGAN H. CARTER.

In the midst of an age of criticism and unbelief relative to the inspiration of the Bible, some have imagined that this is the time when we must defend the Scriptures. But, as some one has recently said, "I believe the Scriptures will defend themselves." We would not talk of defending a lion, but we would say, "Let him loose." So may we say: "Let loose the word of God. Teach it and preach it by word and life, and it is capable of defending itself and bringing about in the world, through the coöp eration of the Holy Spirit, the condition which Jehovah desired."

Why search the Scriptures? Because this library of sixty-six volumes, composed by about thirty-six men, covering a period of some sixteen centuries, written in the Hebrew and Greek languages, composes the greatest historical collection of books the world has ever seen. No man knows history who is ignorant of the Scriptures. If you would be learned in the really authentic annals of men, then become conversant with the Book of books.

Again I say search the Scriptures, because they contian the only satisfactory explanation of the creation of our universe. The nebular hypothesis, the Darwin theory of evolution, and a multitude of similar ideas have come. Many of them have seen their day and passed, and the passing of the others shall come so surely as the sun rises and sets; for in the end there shall be victory, and God's word shall stand out supreme. We find the explanation of the origin of life, the law of species, and the great fundamental facts upon which all true science is based. He that would know this universe must know the word of God, because God is the biggest and best thing in the universe.

We should also search the Scriptures because they contain the richest literary gems. Milton has well said: "There are no orations like those of the prophets, and no songs like the songs of Zion." If you would be cultured in the greatest things that have brought about the most splendid culture the world has ever seen, then search the Scriptures, for they bring an image of Him who is the ideal of all those who possess the true greatness that shall stand forever.

These three reasons, which are great in themselves, sink into comparative insignificance when you see three other reasons far greater in their magnitude. Let me briefly call your attention to these last and supreme reasons.

First, search the Bible because it is the word of God. Jehovah has not spoken in vain. He, the all-powerful, all-wise, just, holy, and merciful God, full of loving-kindness and mercy, who spoke unto our fathers in times past, has spoken to us in these last days through his Son. This message is full of power and is used for the salvation of the lost. God has spoken to you. Will you not hear? God has offered you pardon and salvation and eternal life. Will you not accept this love letter which he sends, and drink of its truth, that you may live?

With such a diversity of ideas, with such a multiplicity of churches and creeds, we are bewildered if we undertake from a viewpoint of simple reason to ascertain which is right. But God has provided a plan by which we may know the absolutely safe course, and that plan is to take Christ himself as our Savior. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. . . . For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." He provides salvation for those who will accept him as their Savior and make him constantly the master of their souls.

"Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." Finally, we must eat of God's word because it is essential to our being. Just as God has made us physical beings who absolutely must eat in order to live, and just as this food is brought into beings through a process which God alone understands, so our spiritual existence is dependent upon spiritual food which is made up entirely of the word of God, and for which no man can offer a substitute. "Why will ye die?" Come to Christ. Crown him King of all. Take his word, even himself, as your food; take his Holy Spirit and live the Christ life for the glory of God and the salvation of men. Now is the acceptable time. To-day is the day of days to sacrifice, serve, and suffer for God. Awake! Arise! On to victory for Christ!

In Memory of David Lipscomb

David Lipscomb's life is an open book, complete, and 1 would not change it, if I could; but, in compliance with the Standard's request, and with Sister Lipscomb's approval, I write this brief memorial.

At 10:50 P.M., Sunday, November 11, 1917, he ceased to breathe, thus terminating an apparently peaceful, painless, dreamless sleep that occupied the last ninety-six hours of his long, eventful, useful life.

That's the way he hoped to go, and that's the way he went. It was meet that his long life of labor in the vine-yard of the Lord should end with such sweet, restful sleep; and it was especially so because that was in strictest accord with his oft-expressed desire, hence, we may believe, in answer to his fervent prayer, "to go to sleep on this side and wake up on the other."

If he had lived seventy-one days longer—till January 21, 1918—he would have been eighty-seven years old,

He was a plain, modest, unassuming man, apparently as nearly absolutely free from ostentation and affectation as it is possible for even a gospel preacher to be, and freedom from affectation and ostentation should be a crowning, conspicuous characteristic of every gospel preacher.

One child, a son named "Zellner," was born to him and his wife, and lived nine months. Brother Lipscomb was devoted to the child, and the child was devoted to him. Had that son lived, he would now be fifty-four years old. When he passed away, Brother Lipscomb said: "I hoped to raise him up to work for the Lord; but, now that he is gone, I shall have to work all the harder myself." He tenderly loved little children—possibly loved them more tenderly because of the little one he had lost—was thoughtful of the wishes and welfare of the young; and he received love, confidence, and esteem in return.

He was intensely interested in the Fanning Orphan School, manifested that interest in many ways, and all the pupils in the school called him "Uncle Dave." One of those girls—Mary Whitaker (Mrs. Smith), a happy Christian woman, wife and mother now—says: "If I should write about him, I'd be sure to mention his kindness to children, especially the children of the Orphan School," Mary was one of the best of those children; hence her love for "Uncle Dave" was as it should have been, and she will gratefully and lovingly remember him as long as she lives.

He gave generously and liberally to the Nashville Bible School, established by him and his faithful coworker, James A. Harding; to the Fanning Orphan School, and to other worthy enterprises, and was also generous in helping the poor and needy privately. Realizing the need of a fund for payment of teachers who should devote their time in teaching the Bible in the Bible School, he contributed both money and influence to the creating of such a fund.

He was editor of the Gospel Advocate more than fifty years, contributing to its columns constantly forty-seven years. During the earlier period of his work on the paper, he lived twelve miles from Nashville, always preferring country life to city life; and he went to Nashville daily, often going horseback, because, much of the time, the roads were impassable for vehicles.

As a writer, he was fearless and aggressive; hence in print he sometimes seemed harsh; but, personally, he was kind and gentle. As a preacher, he was profound, pathetic, and practical, as well as strictly scriptural.

He went where and did what he believed duty demanded, regardless of danger, damage, or detriment to himself. In 1866 and also in 1873 Nashville was the scene of almost indescribable sorrow and suffering incident to a terrible scourge of cholera. Brother Lipscomb left his home, went to the stricken city, and gratuitously nursed the sick each time till the epidemic completed its course. The Robertson Association cared for cholera victims through those terrible times; but Brother Lipscomb induced the Church Street church of Christ to coöperate, in a church capacity, with the Robertson Association, under the direction of Dr. Bowling.

Through those epidemics he nursed with nuns—Sisters of Charity. He took them, two at a time, in his buggy, from place to place, wheresoever they were needed, worked with them, and thus learned much of their spirit. Thenceforth he considered them brave, sincere, self-sacrificing women.

Soon after that second scourge subsided and conditions became nearly normal, Brother Lipscomb himself was attacked by the dread disease against which he had battled so bravely to save others, and the attack was so severe that he was believed to be almost in the valley of the shadow of death.

He was kind to the erring. During the trying times just mentioned, when the attention of the Robertson Association was called to certain cases, some members of the association were somewhat averse to giving them such attention as was accorded to others, because they were said to be disreputable characters; but Brother Lipscomb said: "Let us nurse them now, and save them, if we can, and preach to them afterwards."

He was a close and constant student of the Bible, and was perfectly satisfied with whatsoever it said. Even its silence satisfied him, and he deemed it dangerous to presume to disregard that silence. During his four years' sickness and consequent confinement to his home, his house, his room, he kept his Bible near him, sometimes on a table, sometimes on the arm of his chair, always within reach; and he read it almost constantly, when he could.

He was patient. Partially paralyzed and consequently confined to his home, later to his room, and finally to his chair, four long years, he never, even once, complained or manifested even the slightest symptom of irritability or fretfulness—never spoke in any other tone than that of hopeful cheerfulness.

He and his eminently worthy wife were one more than fifty-five years, and she was his constant companion and affectionate nurse during all the days of his affliction. During much of that time the only way she could communicate with him was by asking him direct questions, as he could express assent or dissent when he could not frame sentences. When she could not understand what he tried to say, he would never show the least irritation, but would say, evidently to console her, "Not important."

Every first day of the week during his long confinement, except the day of his death, he commemorated the Lord's death in the Lord's way.

His four years' affliction seemed to be almost perfectly painless. Sunday morning, November 4, his wife discovered that he was more nearly perfectly helpless than he had ever been before. Monday he was better, however. Tuesday he seemed to be still improving. But Wednesday night, about midnight, he went to sleep to wake no more here. His wife had long prayed, as only a wife or mother can pray, that he might not suffer as he neared the end; and he not only neared, but reached, the end without the slightest suffering, so far as she could see.

As he ceased to breathe, the vision and prayer of Stephen flashed into the mind of his wife; she prayed, "Lord Jesus, receive his spirit," and only his body was left with her.—T. B. Larimore, in Christian Standard.

The War Sufferers' Fund.

We have received the following acknowledgment from the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief:

American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, New York, December 22, 1917.—Mr. A. B. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Mr. Lipscomb: In inclosing the treasurer's official receipt, we wish to add a word of personal appreciation on behalf of the people "out there" in Armenia, Syria, Western Asla, and the Russian Caucasus, to whom your readers have helped to bring a bit of the Christmas spirit.

On December 8 the following message came from the land of the Christ Child: "Long-awaited opportunity of relief in Palestine has arrived. Sickness and destitution serious, especially in cities. Funds in hands very inadequate. Refugee hospital established near Gaza overcrowded. Three more required. Seed, grain, clothing, medical supplies can be secured in Egypt for Palestine relief when funds permit."

Because you have given to the little hungry children and broken-hearted mothers of the land of the first Christmas, may the full measure of the spirit of the Christmas season be yours. Sincerely, C. V. VICKREY,

AT HOME AND ABROAD

T. H. Matheson writes from Saint Jo, Texas: "Our church work here is doing well, and we expect to do greater things during 1918."

W. H. Rhodes would like to secure a copy of "Our Orthodoxy in the Civil Courts." If you know where he can get a copy, write Brother Rhodes at Stockman, Texas.

Mr. Elisha A. Webb and Miss Sallie C. Hibbett were married, at Burnett's Chapel, near Antioch, Tenn., on Saturday, December 22. Both are Christians. We extend congratulations.

Married, on Saturday, December 29, at Grandview Heights, Nashville, Tenn., Mr. Elam Albert Sanders to Miss Lola Lee Dickson, J. C. McQuiddy officiating. The Gospei Advocate extends heartiest congratulations.

Evangelist G. A. Dunn is the first to suggest that we "put a preacher in Jerusalem and build a church where Jesus Christ moved heaven and earth." We hope and pray that this timely suggestion may ripen into a glorious reality.

Earl H. Claar, of Selden, Kan, would like to get in touch with some preaching brother who is willing to do farm work through the week and preach for neighboring churches on Sunday. This is a healthy section of the country.

The address of John E. Dunn is Army Y. M. C. A., Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C. On another page of this issue our readers will find a statement of his appointments and an outline of the work he proposes to do among the soldier boys.

Change of address: C. M. Pullias, from Huntsville, Ala., to 412 Saint Charles Avenue, Birmingham, Ala.; John T. Smithson, from Hopkinsville, Ky., to 811 Forest Avenue, Montgomery, Ala. We wish success for both of these preachers in their new fields of labor.

From T. E. Arterberry, Savoy, Texas: "The church here raised one hundred and ten dollars at our morning services on December 23 to help Brother J. H. Lawson build a place of worship for the soldier boys at Camp Bowie, Texas. We think this will be a good work and expect to help support it liberally. The elders are J. J. Jenkins, H. H. Arterberry, and E. A. McMahon."

From J. S. Daugherty, Kirbyville, Texas, December 24: "I was with the faithful at Jasper yesterday. They are repairing their house of worship and preparing for greater work in 1918. The year 1917 has fallen a little below the average year, in point of new members, for me. Fifty-four were added to the one body from all sources—thirty-seven baptized, nine from the 'digressives,' and eight restored. I was well suppored at all the meetings."

Married, on Saturday, December 22, Mr. James Smith to Mrs. Elizabeth Trice, both of Nashville; Wednesday, December 26, Mr. W. L. Harris, of Nashville, to Miss Nellie V. White, of Bowling Green, Ky.; Thursday, December 27, Mr. Charles E. Hanvey to Miss Sara Bena Tanksley, both of Nashville; Monday, December 31, Prof. Edward Saxon, of Lexington, Ky., to Miss Emma Medearis, of Nashville. A. B. Lipscomb officiated at these weddings and wishes for all the contracting parties unalloyed happiness.

From Jennie Clarke, Belle Haven Orphan Home and School, Luling, Texas: "Fifteen cases of measles developed at the Home on the day following Christmas. One little girl anxious to do her part, concealed her true condition and appeared on the program at the Christmas exercises. We thank all who sent Christmas cheer and gifts. Owing to the sad conditions confronting me, I request that the donors will please excuse delay in acknowledging their letters and gifts. Pray for these dear little ones that they all may recover without the loss of one."

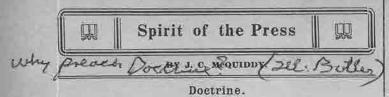

Sister Kate Killebrew writes: "Please say in the Gospel Advocate that the little band at San Francisco, Cal., received seven dollars from the Bethany congregation, near Cottage Grove, Tenn. We have quite a little sum now on hand for the church lot, and expect to get it as soon as we can. Can't some of the churches help us? Brother W. H. Trice preaches for us every fifth Sunday. He has located at Fresno. We notice through the Advocate that Brother Klingman wishes to locate here and work among the Japanese, and, I suppose, among us as well. We shall be pleased to have him."

J. A. Cullum writes from Memphis, Tenn.: "Let me insist that any and all loyal ministers coming through Memphis stop and meet with us and preach for us. Those Christians passing through our city who desire to get in touch with us should telephone J. Paul Slayden, Hemlock 5787 (his street address is 2065 Cowden), or telephone me. Walnut 9124 (my street address is 264 Haynes Avenue). Let any persons having friends or relatives either visiting or living here that should be attending church write me, giving their names and addresses, that I may look them up and get them to come to church."

From H. H. Montgomery, Shreveport, La.: "I have just read Brother Kurfees' article in the Advocate of December 20 on Dr. J. E. Thompson's book, 'The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom.' The article completely accords with my honest convictions. I have read the book through twice, and really enjoyed reading it on account of the plainness in which the Doctor expresses himself and the new thoughts he brings out, but I do not know that his conclusions are correct. They may be correct. But it seems to me that at this time we need men and women to be taught the gospel of Christ and persuaded to accept it and practice all of its teaching, and God will take care of the future."

From J. C. Estes, Dallas, Texas, December 22: "Our work for 1917 has about ended and another year will soon be ushered in. I always look back and wish I had done more, or could have done more, in the Lord's service. Though Christmas, because of the high prices of everything, finds us poorer financially, we have many, many things for which to be most thankful, one of which is better health, rendering us more able to do our work in the Lord's service. I have one Sunday per month to engage my time, beginning with January. Any congregation needing my services for that time will please write me at 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas. I can reach almost any place from Dallas very conveniently and will be glad to serve you, if the Lord wills."

From the church and college at Thorp Spring, Texas: . The brethren at Thorp Spring can be counted with the thousands of admirers of the late David Lipscomb. We believe that one of God's great men has fallen asleep, and that time and eternity alone will reveal the full measure of his greatness. The many testimonials concerning this good man are certainly evidence that Brother Lipscomb influenced an unusually wide circle of people, and that his loss is mourned by thousands of Christians. It would pay every Christian to study carefully the characteristics of our dear Brother Lipscomb, to learn wherein are to be found the essentials to genuine greatness. To the Gospel Advocate, Sister Lipscomb, and other close friends and relatives of Brother Lipscomb, we take this method of expressing condolence and sympathy."-Foy E. Wallace, W. F. Ledlow, C. R. Nichol, Carl A. Gardner.

It is strange that everybody does not see that the most narrow and ignorant people in the world are those who denounce doctrine. Every man who thinks has a doctrine—that is, everybody but the idiots. Tom Paine had a doctrine, and so did Bob Ingersoll. They could not help having one any more than they could help breathing. not make an idiot of yourself by denouncing doctrine.-Western Recorder.

No one can live in harmony with the Bible teaching without preaching doctrine. "But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully, as knowing this, that law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and unruly, for the ungodly and sinners, for the unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, for fornicators, for abusers of themselves with men, for menstealers, for liars, for false swearers, and if there be any other thing contrary to the sound doctrine." (1 Tim. 1: 8-10.) Paul admonishes Timothy: "Till I come, give heed to reading, to exhortation, to teaching." (1 Tim. 4: 13.) He also says to Timothy: "But thou didst follow my teaching [doctrine], conduct, purpose, faith, long-suffering, love, patience." (2 Tim. 3: 10.) It is worse than folly to try to abolish teaching (doctrine) from our religious papers. Every true man should contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to . . the saints.

Jerusalem Redeemed by the British.

Doubtless it is gratifying to both Jews and Christians alike that Jerusalem was occupied, not by aliens and Infidels, but by Christians, during the Christmas that has hjast gone. The thought has never been pleasing to Jews and Christians that the land of Gethsemane and the Mount of Olives, the heritage of the house of David, was occupied by Turks and infidels. Sight has not been lost of the fact that the Holy Sepulcher has been committed for centuries into the keeping of Moslem hands, and the city has become for them one of the sacred places of the earth, and Christ incorporated into their hierarchy of prophets. Moslem troops of India, being unable to stand the rigors of winter in France, were transferred to participate in the Eastern campaign, and thereby helped to effect the deliverance of Jerusalem from Moslem rule. The religious significance of the fall of Jerusalem is very encouraging to Jews and to Christians, and Christians, without discussing the merits or demerits of the war, readily rejoice that the sacred places are now in the keeping of believers in Christ. The New York Sun states that German propaganda, foreseeing the end now accomplished, has been emphasizing "the insignificance of the city to the cause of the central powers and its unimportance as a point of strategic operations." The New York Sun, however, does not agree with German propaganda, but it continues:

In reality, the Kaiser had every reason to save Jerusalem from the allies. From the time of his spectacular entrance into the city he has sought to transform it into a Near-East stronghold of Teutonism. He built the Church of the Holy Redeemer near the Holy Sepulcher, the massive German Roman Catholic Church, and the Kaiserin Victoria Hospital, and then prepared them for usefulness in his future military plans by equipping their lofty towers with wireless instruments and great searchlights that swept the neighboring country.

The strategic value of Jerusalem is not insignificant. With the control that it gives over the Judean hills, it places in the hands of the allies the key to Galilee. It permits the penetration of the country to the north, the acquisition of Mount Carmel, Nazareth, and the Sea of Galilee. The German scheme of expansion in the Holy Land is ended; the loss to the Kaiser is the loss of another colony.

The restoration of Jerusalem to Christianity is a great victory for civilization. It means not only the return of the holy places of sacred history to Christianity, but the lifting of the hideous burden of Turkish misrule from a people who have suffered for centuries from its cruelties, exactions, and oppressions.

As the Jews have been scattered over the earth for over thirty-three hundred years and have had no land to call their own, the event to them cannot be overestimated. The Jewish Morning Journal (New York), after giving the title of "Messiah" to Great Britain, says that she is the "first conqueror of the holy city since the days of Cyrus to merit the title." The Literary Digest tells us: "The British government has already pledged itself to the establishment of Palestine as a national home for the Jews, and Zionists the world over hail the realization of their hopes." Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, a New York Zionist, said to a Tribune reporter that he was "doubly happy at the news, because it would give the Jews opportunity to solve their problems in their own long-hoped-for manner." The Jewish Morning Journal writes jubilantly as

Our holy ancient capital has many times fallen into the hands of a conqueror since the sons of Judah conquered and burned her after the death of Joshua, the son of Nun, as told in the first chapters of Judges. But at no time has she fallen into hands other than Jewish under such circumstances as the present, and her passing into new hands has never had such deep interest for millions of Jews in other lands as this time.

England is conquering Palestine for us. One must himself be a Jew and know the Holy Writ in the original language to grasp what it all means to the Jew who has not entirely estranged himself from his brethren.

All questions about the future sovereignty over our ancient homeland are answered and all doubt is dispelled. Palestine belongs to England, and will remain with her after the world war and after all possible changes which we can imagine for the future which can be of practical interest to us. Palestine is now under the dominion of the power which has promised to permit us to establish there a Jewish homeland, under the power which is allied with great and free America and with beautiful and lovely France to make the world safe for democracy, safer for the oppressed nationalities, for the homeless and wandering Jews, who are themselves not sure whether they are a nation or not.

Let no one say any more that the world war has brought us nothing or that our fallen brethren in the different armies died in vain.

The recent revolution in Russia will undoubtedly change the manner of life in Palestine even if the city should be freely restored to its old rulers. Mr. D. M. Hermalin, Yiddish editor of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy, among other things, said in the New York Tribune:

Some maintain that the motive power might be the reestablishment of their old religious services. There is no hope for this. England has explicitly said that if Palestine is restored to the Jews they would have to keep aloof from all the sacred shrines established by other religions.

On Mount Moriah, where Solomon's temple once loomed above all other edifices of old Israel, the Mohammedans erected the famous Mosque of Omar, considered as one of the most adored centers of Islam. Even if it were possible to demolish that mosque, the great mass of the Jewish liberals would never permit the rebuilding of the temple.

Israel is on the verge of being rehabilitated as a nation on its own traditional soil; but liberty and democracy, the greatest factors of modern civilization, may thwart the long-hoped-for fulfillment. Should Israel pray for a return of barbarism and tyranny, so that it might be able to return to the land of its ancestors? Time, the great decider of the fate of nations, will also solve this perplexing problem.

While we may not be able to fully understand the meaning and significance of all that is occurring, let us hope that it will all be worked out for the good of the human

FOR THROAT AND LUNGS STUBBORN COUGHS AND COLDS

Eckman's SOLD BY ALL LEADING DRUGGISTS Why I Am Happy.

BY J. WILL HENLEY,

I believe I am the happiest man in Hot Springs, even if I am yet far from my normal condition. The doctors say I should rest a few days from the treatments and baths and regain some flesh and strength lost by the excessive sweatings I have had to take, and then return and take up the second course.

Just as I was beginning to feel real blue at the thought of having to spend even one day here waiting for sufficient strength to tackle the last month's treatment, a good man handed me a check with this message: "Go home to those sweet babies, spend the days with them, and return here by January 5, anyway, and fight this to a finish. Draw on me for your resturn ticket." How can I ever live a life good enough to demonstrate my appreciation of such love and friendship? God help me.

My general condition is much improved, although I do not look it. I am pale, poor, and very weak; but I was told when I came here that I might expect such to be. Had I known my real condition at the time I came, I never could have had the heart to try to live through it. But I am so glad I did not know it, for, as it is, 1 am going to get well. Had I not come here and made this effort, I would not be alive to-day. God and you brethren have made it possible for me to live. And listen, some brethren and sisters who know me and my life asked to be permitted to take up my entire indebtedness and rest my mind from that responsibility. It was humiliating to do such a thing; but to-day every cent of the old, outstanding bills and note is wiped out, or the money is in the mails to wipe it out. Just how to thank God and good people enough for such deeds of purest love and fastest friendship is a problem to me. I think at times of how I have suffered at the hands and mouths of those who should have been my friends and for no earthly cause were not, and it makes me a little "blue" and to feel discouraged; but when those who know me best and have known me longest, together with some who never even saw me, walk up to my burdens and say, "Brother Henley, let us take them and bear them for you," my poor heart leaps for joy and my soul sinks before God, feeling its utter unworthiness for such noble acts of Christian love and friendship.

I am, the Lord willing, going to spend the holidays with my wife and babies, and return on the strength of my faith in God and his people to see me through this trial for my life. I can no more doubt them than I could doubt the love of my mother. Brethren, pray for my safe journey home and my sure return here to this wonderful haven of health. Ask God to lead us all aright, and may we be pleased to let him lead. When I am able, if the editors will permit me, I want to write much of my experiences here and with my friends, many of whom I will not see on this earth. My every want has been loyally and faithfully supplied. I know that such treatment must continue if I win, but I have not a fear now. God is directing in all this affair. You may not believe it, but I have not the strength nor the time now to argue the question with you, but will let God continue his leadership until all is well

A Call From Camp Sevier.

We noticed in the Gospel Advocate a plan for sending the Advocate to soldier boys in camp. We appreciate the effort of the editors, and Brother Lipscomb writes that many readers are responding readily. The movement certainly manifests a Christian spirit, and it is a pleasure indeed to read of the progress of the gospel even when the world is in a turmoil of war. Every Christian soldier sends thanks for your interest in his welfare.

Perhaps there are some who would like to do their "bit," but are not able to contribute to this fund. We suggest that you "write to a soldier." A soldier appreciates a good letter more than anything else. It is an interesting sight to see the boys gather around a table in the company street while the mail is called, and it is amusing to hear each one sing out "Here!" when his name is called. A letter will bring out a smile when all else has failed. It is through correspondence that we keep in touch with the outside world, for we live a more or less secluded life, and every soldier should have a Christian correspondent to help him keep pure, clean ideals of life constantly before him. Will you "write to a soldier?" "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus;" then we may be sure we will not be neglected, for "all things work together for good to them that love God."

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

Gaandma Kept Her Locks Dark, Glossy, and Youthful With Sage Tea and Sulphur

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Suiphur for darkening gray, streaked, and faded hair is grand-mother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advan-

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," for about fifty cents a bottle. It is very popular, because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft luster and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

"The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom."

The book contains twenty-six chapters. In the "Preface" the author says: "In presenting this volume, entitled 'The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom,' it is not the author's wish to promulgate any new theory on the Apocalypse, nor is it his desire to support any of the many old theories. His purpose is rather to present the future history of the world and church by a translation of symbols and a transcription of the wonderful scriptures found in the Apocalypse which were given by God to show these things."

In the entire discussion the author proceeds upon certain definite assumptions:

- 1. The book of Revelation, since it is a revelation, does not refer to or contain things that were matters of history at the time the message of the book was delivered to John.
- 2. That the expression "shortly come to pass" is equal to "come to pass quickly" and does not have reference to the immediate coming of these events, but rather to the fact that when they start to come their coming will be quickly consummated. Not proven, but plausible.
- 3. That the word "hand," when used figuratively in the Bible, is a synonym for "law."
- 4. That "seest" refers to something in the future, things yet to be seen, rather than to the things that were present when John wrote. Not proven and cannot be proven.
- 5. That the "man-child" of Rev. 12 is the same as the "messengers" or "angels" of the churches. Not proven.
- 6. That "star" and "angel" in Revelation is equal to all of God's true children from John's time down to the second coming of Christ. Unproven.
- 7. That the seven churches of Revelation are future "provincial" churches and not churches that were then in existence, but only typified by the churches that are mentioned in Revelation. Reasonable.
- That the church of the New Testament is invisible and international.
 Not true, but an interesting theory.
- 9. That there is no such thing as church succession, but the success of messengers or angels or stars. Of course unproven.
- 10. That the stars or angels are not the messengers to the seven churches, but of the seven churches to the world in general, but to the seven future provincial churches in particular. Reasonable.
- 11. That the book of Revelation was not intended for Christians or churches of the past, but for those who will compose the future seven provincial churches.

12. That the appearing of the Lord, about which the present-day Christian is to be concerned and to look for, is not his coming in the cloud in glory in the air, but his coming to the Christian who dies before he does come in the cloud in glory.

It seems to this reviewer that the author often makes too much of his unproven definitions. For instance, it would be hard for him to prove that the word "hand" every time used figuratively means "law." He would also find it impossible to prove that the "seed of men" referred to in Dan. 2: 41-43 is the word of God, the Bible as we now have it. Much of his whole book is, however, made to hinge on this identification of the seed of man with the word.

He says in his book: There have never been but four kinds of human kingdoms. The first was a sole monarchy, introduced by the king of Babylon, a kingdom in which one man had dominion. The second kingdom is a sovereignty under two kings, a dual monarchy united by one constitution. The third form of government, which was introduced by Greece, is a monarchy wherein the prerogatives of a monarch were shared by many great families, now called the "aristocracy of the kingdom." The fourth form of monarchy was the iron kingdom. which was democracy, or popular form of government. This was introduced by Rome and finds its most perfect form or development in the United States.

The author in but one chapter gives any bint as to his denominational alignment. In his discussion of the "seed of man" he would lead one to believe that he is a pronounced believer in the doctrine of the reformation, or the doctrine popularly known as "Campbellism."

It is impossible to give anything like an intelligent review of the book without making the review too extensive. In spite of whatever defects an individual reader may find in the book, he will find it interesting, entertaining, readable, illuminating, and informing. In the author's own summing up of the book we have the following statements:

- 1. "A time will come before the coming of Christ when the spirit and power of democracy will be universal and supreme on the whole earth, and no man will be allowed to wear a crown or be called 'king,' 'prince,' or 'emperor.'"
- 2. "The first universal reign of democracy or republicanism will be a paternal government and will own every dollar's worth of wealth on the whole earth. This is the God-appointed destiny of popular sovereignty or democracy as introduced into the world by the Roman empire, and is appointed by God to take place before the coming of Christ."

3. "Two monarchial forms of gov ernment will follow a universal reign The kingdoms or of democracy. forms of government introduced by Greece and Medo-Persia will each have a universal reign before the coming of Christ, as we have seen in previous chapters."

4. "The kingdom or form of government introduced by Medo-Persia, with its immutable laws, will yet rule every tribe and nation and tongue of earth before the coming of Christ. With it will come the great prophetic tribulations referred to by Christ and Daniel and placed with the falling away by Paul. These are fully delineated by the great and beloved apostle John in the Apocalypse and found in previous chapters of this volume. They will be fulfilled before the coming of Christ."

5. "The kingdom or form of government, a monarchial government introduced by Greece, will be the last human kingdom to have universal reign on earth, and it will be here and will be destroyed by Christ at his coming."

6. "During the universal reign of these three kingdoms the earth will be ablaze with the most stupendous miracles, and they cover about twentythree hundred days, or nearly seven years."

7. "Before the coming of Christ and before the rise of either of the three above-named universal reigns, the first great universal kingdom will arise. The duration of the time of its existence is not revealed. It may continue for many centuries. It will embrace every nation of earth, and is equipped by its vast power to fill the earth with the most intense and uninterrupted peace for numberless years and centuries if it is used by men to do so. It is a federation of all the kingdoms of earth under one and the same constitution."

8. "These prophecies, as is clearly shown in previous chapters of this volume, point to a time before the coming of Christ that the dominion of the Turk, the Japanese, the Chinese, and all other nonprofessors of Christian faith must be converted or lay down the scepter at the feet of the Christendom ruler."

It can be seen at once, from even this brief statement of the author's views, that he is neither a post nor a pronounced premilienarian. He says emphatically in his book that it is impossible that Christ should come within the next seven years.

This reviewer does not profess to be an authority on the book of Revelation, does not even claim to know much about it, but, barring the manifest unwarranted assumptions in the book (and they are numerous), it seems to this reviewer that there is more sense and more scripture behind what this author has written than is to be found in any other single volume on the book of the Revelation .- J. W. Gillon, in Baptist and Reflector.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If Your Back Is Aching or Bladder Both ers, Drink Lots of Water and Eat Less Meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activlty. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In twenty-four hours they strain from it five hundred grains of acid and waste; so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water; you can't drink too much. Also get from any pharma-eist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which every one should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Among the Colored Folks

Brother Womack's Report.

On the first Lord's day in November and a few nights following I was with the church in Lebanon. Interest from the September meeting was still burning and things moving on nicely.

On the second and third Lord's days I was at Silver Point and met with the trustees in their meeting. Attendance and interest were good, and prospects are encouraging for a good school. Brother Sam P. Pittman, of the Nashville Bible School, was with us on the third Lord's day and made two fine talks to the school, the church, and the people at large, which were uplifting to all-so much so that they say for him to visit them again He is a great young man. A large number of the white people were out to hear him and were highly pleased with his preaching.

On the fourth Lord's day, morning and night, I was with my home church—the Jackson Street Church, in Nashville; and on the four succeeding nights Brother Pittman and the young men from the Bible School were with us, and Brother Pittman did some good, sound preaching. The weather being very cold, the attendance was not large, but the attention was very good.

On the night of December 5 Brother Cuff and another young man of the Bible School was with us and made splendid talks. This is the fruit of Brother D. Lipscomb's labor. He is dead and gone, but his works are still alive. On the first Lord's day in December I preached for the church; Brother Smalling, at 7:30 P.M. On the second Lord's day, morning and night, Brother Bynum, of Memphis, preached for us, but the weather was so cold our attendance was small.

Since my last writing I have been made very sad to know that we have had to give up Brother D. Lipscomb, whose life and life work have been a great blessing to my life and many others. He has been helpful to me in many ways. He was the first to mention about a school like the Nashville Bible School to be started among us, and said at the time he spoke to me about it that he had a heavy load on him in getting their school on foot, but for us to make a move and see what we could do and he would help us, and he did so, and helped some all along; and when the effort was made to raise funds to build the chapel for the school, he was one of a number to give one hundred dollars, and said if he did not break down in his health he would give more and would use his influence to that end. So many times I have met him at the office, and any part of the Book that I did not understand, he was ready to help me out on it. Our loss is his gain. May we have the faith to work as he worked, and may we also have a home over the river.

Thanks to all for their aid in the work this year. Send me a gift for the holidays. Address me at 1502 Hamilton Street, Nashville, Tenn.

S. W. WOMACK.

The Italian Mission at Bellaire, Ohio.

BY LOUIS DASARO.

On the morning of November 18 my wife, my sister-in-law, and I began to worship. At the Bible study there were fifteen scholars present. We had a fine meeting.

My wife and I are using your means and all the talent we possess in teaching the Italian people here the way of life. This month we will begin night school in English and Italian, teaching on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays. I am anxious to preach to the Italians, but must have more regular assistance. I do not hope to realize anything personally, but desire only the means absolutely necessary to continue this good work. Will you bear these things in mind and help to pay up promptly. that our work may continue and together we may have something to offer the Master when our labor is over?

Money received: From the church at Mount Juliet, Tenn., $10; Joy's Flower Garden, Nashville, Tenn., $5; Eleventh Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., $10; Flemington, Pa., $11.37; F. L. Rowe, 50 cents; Bolivar, Pa., $2.25; Sumerville, Pa., $5; Fred E. Dennis, $1; Sunbury, Pa., $4.

Dear brethren and sisters, accept our heartfelt thanks for this fellowship; but do not forget us, or we shall fail. Address me at Shadyside, Ohio, Box 1272.

If we love God, the reward promised us is nothing less than the sight of God himself face to face, an abiding vision, an ecstasy of vast intelligence for evermore. Think how such a reward transcends all the expectations, all the possibilities even, of our nature!—Selected.

Self-control may be developed in precisely the same manner as we tone up a weak muscle—by little exercises day by day. Let us each day do, as mere exercises of discipline in moral gymnastics, a few acts that are disagreeable to us, the doing of which will help us in instant action in our hour of need.—W. G. Jordan.

Good Books Make the Best Gifts

Below we offer a list of books on vital topics that should be of interest to every preacher, Sunday-school teacher, and Bible lover. Have you a friend out of the church whom you are trying hard to reach and save? Send him one of these books. If he is "almost persuaded," it may clinch the argument for you. If he is lukewarm, it may stir him to action. In any event, it will be appreciated.

The list includes most excellent books, printed and bound in first-class style. Postpaid prices are quoted. We have recently printed an edition of "Life of Elder John Smith," "Christian System," and "The Evidences of Christianity." We believe that a book worth publishing deserves to be accurately printed and neatly and substantially bound.

Special Bible Study at Thorp Spring.

Beginning on January 22, 1918, Thorp Spring Christian College will offer a six-weeks' course in Bible and related subjects. There are many who need to attend college, but who are unable to do so the full year, who can attend during the six weeks. It is largely for this class that this special course is provided.

Brother Nichol will conduct classes in the preparation and delivery of sermons and in debating. It is generally known among the brethren that Brother Nichol has more than twenty years' experience as a preacher, debater, and Bible teacher. He has held. perhaps, more debates than any other man of his age in the United States.

Brother Ledlow has been a preacher and constant Bible student for twentythree years. He is a ripe scholar, especially in Bible, Greek, church history, and Christian evidences. During the six weeks he will offer special courses in biblical interpretation, church history, the book of Hebrews, and in other branches for which there may be a demand. You will not be disappointed.

These courses are meant primarily for preachers, elders, and deacons. Many expect to attend, and the school anticipates some great work.

Both board and tuition at Thorp Spring are less than board alone in most places. In order to guarantee you the best service, a small tuition will be charged.

The school continues to grow and improve. A number of students will soon enter. CARL A. GARDNER, Dean.

For the future, every man will know that if the world is to free itself from war, that freedom must be bought with a price. Each individual man must resolutely discipline himself; he must trim away the self-indulgence of his will; he must graft his will into the will of God. There must be more worship, private and public; more sacrifice for neighbors and for the world; a more pitiless flagellation of all selfishness and worldliness in our own soul. We must, by the ideals of citizenship, build up our own nation to be a saint among the nations of the world: the national honor as sensitive as the individual's honor: the nation's brotherliness as tender as the brotherliness of St. Francis; the nation's love for men a shadow of the sacrifice of Christ .- C. The Church Hindered by Faddists.

In recent years the churches have been hindered and hurt by all sorts of "movements." Specialists, not to say faddists, have exerted themselves to draw all the churches to the support of their peculiar schemes and plans. They have inaugurated all sorts of reforms, and they are constantly calling for "conferences" and "conventions" to further these enterprises.

These men and their "movements" have become as numerous as the locusts of Egypt, and they are a positive affliction to all the churches. They distract the minds of multitudes of good people from the essential work of the church and divert their energies to unimportant matters.

In a recent issue of one of the religious periodicals published in a Northern State I read the following just complaint written by a man who was in a position to observe the evil of these "movements" and who had the courage to speak his mind:

"There are so many men sitting in office chairs whose chief business seems to be to stare out of the window and originate schemes that work well on paper that the poor pastor has the life well-nigh harassed out of him to keep in touch with all that is proposed. The preachers need just about one quadrennium which will be devoted exclusively to preaching of the gospel. Yes, that sounds a trifle trite and somewhat like cant; but it has the advantage of being true and of representing the sentiment of the church at large. Give the regular departments a chance - the Sunday school, the prayer meeting, and the church itself. Stop this everlasting interference that wastes the time and energy of pastors and church leaders generally."

We might inquire: Why this waste? And a just answer would be: There is no good reason for it.

Many of the men who are thus harassing the churches would do more good if they would close their offices and go into the work of the churches to which they belong and show themselves active and zealous in that field.

It is to be feared that there is much vanity, if nothing worse, in many of these schemes. Petty promoters wish to hold office and occupy place in the public eye. They enjoy running to and fro, holding conventions and conferences and having their utterances paraded in the newspapers. A subtle temptation may penetrate even the best work, and pride may permeate the noblest endeavors.

The real religious work of the country which amounts to anything is being done by the churches, and not by these "movements" and agitations. The truth of this statement is conclusively shown by the fact that these "movements" constantly run to the churches for shelter and support. Without the churches they would soon spend all their efforts and perish ignominiously. In truth, they are parasites upon the churches and fatten upon its blood.

An injurious result which has followed these spectacular "movements" is the growing distaste of many people for any other sort of work. prayer meeting is neglected; the ordinary services of the church are ignored; the study of the Bible in the Sunday school is abandoned. All these plain and highly necessary things are becoming insipid to men and women who have become enamored of picturesque "movements" and spectacular reforms. But without these plain things religion will cease to exist in the land. It is perfectly obvious, therefore, that the Christianity of our country is not promoted, but is rather injured, by these manifold movements.

Hysteria is hurtful always, and these movements are distinctly hysterical in methods and spirit. The patron saint of every one of them is Saint Vitus, and they enjoy nothing so much as a kind of holy-dancing excitement. Without such excitement they feel that nothing is being accomplished, and that with such excitement the whole world is being brought to consecration by a convulsion.

The time-and-money effort expended upon these movements is worse than wasted. The same energy, if bestowed upon the work of the churches, would yield far greater and better results, and no unwholesome hysteria would arise. Above all things, our times need more quietness. The demands of business are very great, the requirements of social life are exacting, and many other things serve to distract human nature to a dangerous degree. Why, then, should the distractions of the multitude of unnecessary "movements" be added to make conditions still worse? Why should not the people go quietly to their churches and in these holy places worship reverently and fervently the God of their fathers? Why should not time be given for profound meditation and hours of protracted communion with God? Why should not people hear again the Master inviting them to go apart with him and rest a while?-W. A. Candler, in Atlanta Journal.

The apostles obeyed the first call and so received other calls, and thus attained their glory. Obey the call, whatever it be; if it be but a step, it is still a step in following Christ. Only, whatever he saith unto you, "do it."—Dr. Pusey.

Nervousness and Disorders of the Nervous System.

The energy that gives life to the body is known to be "nerve force." It is this hidden energy that creates the difference between the living and the dead body. It is the indefinable something that the body is robbed of in death.

Irregular distribution of the nerve force is responsible for many of the disorders of the system; consequently, any remedy that has the power to soothe the irritated nerves, thus regulating the supply of nervous energy, is of inestimable value.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is such a medicine. It not only soothes the irritated nerves, but it induces a more regular distribution of the nerve force, and thus assists the bodily organs in performing their proper functions. Furthermore, it induces a natural sleep, which is nature's greatest tonic and strengthener.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is especially recommended in cases of sick, bilious, and nervous headache; epilepsy; fits; irregular, profuse, and painful menses; neuralgia; sciatica; sleeplessness; melancholy; backache; nervous irritation and nervous dyspepsia.

For more than twenty-five years Dr. Miles' Nervine has been largely used, and the success that it has met with on all sides is the best proof of its merit.

If you think that Dr. Miles' Nervine is suited to your case, procure a bottle from your druggist, take it according to directions which you will find wrapped around the bottle; and then, if you are not benefited, return the empty bottle, one only, to your druggist, and he will return your money in full. The Miles Medical Company repays him the full retail price, so there is no reason why he should not return your money promptly.

Field Notes.

BY C. E. HOLT.

I recently visited Iron City, Lawrenceburg, Ethridge, and Mount Pleasant, in Tennessee, in the interest of the Gospel Advocate.

The church at Iron City is doing well. Brother E. O. Coffman, of Lawrenceburg, and a principal of the Lawrence County High School, located at the latter place, is their regular preacher. Brother Coffman is a man of fine ability and should be in the field all of his time preaching the gospel. But he teaches and preaches, as many other competent preachers and teachers do. Working in "double harness" is commendable in a man when "single harness" does not enough loaves and fishes bring. The "loaves and fishes" are very important, and the money with which to purchase them must be in greater amounts now than ever before. Churches should remember this and make their contributions two or three times larger than in former years. Flour, meat, and lard are three times as high as they were five years ago. Another preacher who is working in "double harness" and pulling a "double load" without kick or murmur or protest is Brother C. S. Austin. of Mount Pleasant. He teaches in one of Mount Pleasant's best schools, and preaches every Lord's day for the church of Christ in that city. He is young and vigorous and strong. He is capable of a great deal of work. He is a lovable and a loving man of sterling worth and character. He has a noble wife cooperating with him in his work. She was formerly Miss Starbuck, of Linden, Tenn. 1 baptized her a few years ago, before she met Brother Austin. I then thought that she was fine material for a preacher's wife. I was not mistaken. I may, and do, make mistakes in some things, but not in regard to women who are suitable companions for preachers. Brother Austin helped me greatly, taking me around in his " Ford " My time there was too short. Brother Austin also showed fine judgment in purchasing all the volumes of "Letters and Sermons" of the "inimitable" T. B. Larimore. Every gospel preacher and every other kind of preacher should own and read these books.

At Lawrenceburg I preached to a fine audience, in which there were seven preachers present-Brethren Thomas C. King, J. E. Thornberry, E. O. Coffman, and four others whose names I do not recall. All those preachers said I preached a good sermon. All did not speak out, but Brother Thornberry spoke for them.

Busybodies.

For reasons that are very apparent to the editors of the Gospel Advocate a few busybodies who have taken up with some speculative doctrines and are daily endeavoring to build up a sect to be devoted to their tenets are studiously circulating the story that the Gospel Advocate is "losing ground in the brotherhood," and are giving vent to similar disparaging assertions about the circulation and influence of the paper. We understand clearly enough that in the hearts of those who make these unwarranted assertions "the wish is father to the thought." But cruel as it may seem, we are bound, for the sake of the truth, to puncture the gaseous balloon upon which they are trying to boost themselves skyward and declare it to be merely a figment of their speculative brains. When this story first came to our ears, it was our first impulse to write some of those who were busiest in circulating it and express a righteous indignation, but after thinking further over the matter we changed our mind. We have come to realize that in religious as well as in commercial circles "every knock is a boost;" and usually it happens that when one deliberately tells a falsehood, he himself is the worst sufferer. The fact that these talkers got very busy spreading the story immediately after the death of our venerable editor, David Lipscomb, is also significant. He himself safeguarded the interests of the paper before his departure, so far as he was humanly able to do so, and passed to his reward with a feeling of confidence as to its future growth and influence. But these advisers would have you believe that our lamented leader was woefully lacking in judgment and that the present editors are not deserving of such confidence. It is interesting to know that time and again while David Lipscomb lived the same dire predictions relative to the paper were made by malcontents desirous of its failure, but, by the grace of God, the paper continued to live despite every effort to break it down. Of course the present corps of editors are fallible and will no doubt make some mistakes, and it may eventually appear that we are "losing out with the brotherhood," but, frankly, there is no reason at the present writing for alarm. Of one thing we are sure: So long as we have breath in our bodies and strength to lend a hand, it is our sincere purpose to see that the paper goes forward and not backward in point of circulation and influence, and we are determined to smile at every unjust criticism and try as much as possible to "overcome evil with good."

Lopsidedness in Religion.

BY JOHN D. EVANS.

All material structures, to be beautiful, must be symmetrical in all their proportions. The same is true of that grander temple which every Christian is daily buildingthe temple of Christian character. Did you ever see a "lopsided" Christian-one whose whole life was developed along disproportionate lines, who seemed unable to weigh facts in their proper relation to each other, one who satisfies himself with the study of one side of a question and then becomes obsessed with an insane desire to exploit the opinions thus deduced before the world as the "center and sum of all truth?" Most of us have seen them. Their "name is legion." Not only in the religious world at large, but even "among our own selves" preachers get into the unfortunate habit which usually results in "hobbyism." From the writer's viewpoint there are no two "isms" in religious Christendom that have wrought more evil than the twin sisters, "hobbyism" and "denominationalism," both of which are the result of the disposition upon the part of preachers, writers, and teachers more especially, to place undue emphasis or stress upon the teaching of one of the inspired writers, wholly ignoring the equally important teaching of other writers upon the same subject. Some one has truly said: "The most insidious and dangerous way to break any of God's commandments is to bisect them, ignoring one-half while trying to obey the other half." It was this kind of a sin that cost Saul his kingdom and that has ever been the most fruitful source of denominationalism-the failure to accept and "declare all the counsel of God" upon any scriptural subject. John Wesley, emphasizing the doctrine of justification by faith as opposed to works, and John Calvin, "foreordination" and "predestination," with other reformers, formulated creeds and built up large religious societies founded upon their peculiar views or theories of salvation and church government. Some laid special stress upon "method in their operations;" some, upon "ritualism;" some, upon the form of government; some, upon the cultivation of the emotional nature; some, upon the cultivation of the mind; etc. The result is a "divided house" with warring sects and parties, each with his "shibboleth," one saying, "Lo, here is Christ," and another, "Lo, there," etc., instead of a united army fighting under one banner against the common foe. As the poet suggests:

So many gods, so many creeds, So many ways that wind and wind, When all that this old world needs Is just the art of being kind.

What the world needs, it seems to me, is a religious "melting pot," into which the various and conflicting creeds of Christendom shall be thrown to be purged of their dross and fused into one universal creed proclaiming "the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

It is gratifying to know that from the Babel of confusion in the religious world every now and then some man of courage and strong faith has raised his voice in protest against such conditions, making a strong plea for the "finality, sufficiency, and completeness" of the holy Scriptures in all matters of faith and conduct.

The work of these reformers in restoring primitive Christianity has not been without good fruit. There is a happy trend in the direction of revising and abbreviating human creeds. They are not regarded with such sacred veneration as in former years. The shackles of ecclesiasticism are being thrown into the discard. Religious leaders are learning that "the Bible, and the Bible alone," is not only "the religion of the Protestants," but of the whole world

Dr. Baldwin, who spent over forty years of his life in the ministry, touches the keynote in the relation of his own experience. He says: "At thirty, after examining as best I could the philosophies and religions of the world, I said: 'Nothing is better than the gospel of Christ.' At forty, when burdens began to press upon me and years seemed to hasten, I said: 'There is nothing so good as the gospel of Christ.' At fifty, when there were empty chairs in my home and the mound builders had done me service, I said: 'There is nothing to be compared with the gospel of Christ.' At sixty, when my second sight saw through the illusions and vanity of things, I said: 'There is nothing but the gospel of Christ." A greater than Dr. Baldwin said, two thousand years ago: "I determined to know nothing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."

The disposition upon the part of religious teachers to give undue emphasis to any one phase of scriptural teaching, to the exclusion of other equally important teaching upon the same subject, always results in religious confusion. One of the first and absolute essentials in the study of God's word is to properly relate all the teaching of the inspired writers upon the subject under consideration.

The idea of "bisecting" or "segregating" the commandments of God into "essential" and "nonessential" classes is both "foolish and hurtful" and exceedingly sinful.

There have been vain attempts to separate "creed" and "conduct," "faith" and "works," the "mystical" and the "practical," the "emotional" and "intellectual," the first and second commandments, failing to realize that they have been divinely related and conjoined. They need to learn that "what God hath joined together" should not be "put asunder" by man—not even by preachers.

Conversion involves the turning to God in the intellect, in the emotions, and in the will. It means more than an "emotional upheaval, resulting in a religious fervor." Salvation involves the activities of the whole man. Religion is the right use of one's whole self." We cannot come into saving relationship with God and remain there, except through service to our fellow man. "Human needs are God's altars for a daily service that in reality is divine, though unconsciously rendered. They who offer it not there in good intent can offer it nowhere in reality, however they perform with psalms and incense what they call divine service in churches." Not "heresy of thought" is to be condemned so much at the judgment, but "heresy of conduct," according to our Lord's own teaching. What have you done? What have you left undone?

But we would not undervalue creed. Subjective faith has its place as well as objective. Faith undergirds all vital work. Without it, it is "impossible to please God." "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Prayer has its place in the divine arrangement. It is the Christian's "vital breath," without which the spiritual man would wither and die. The singing of "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" has its place. All these things are fundamental. We have a spiritual nature that must be trained. Prayer, song, meditation, and worship are necessary to such training. But they are only means to an end. valuable only in what they lead to, valueless if they abide alone. As Mr. Wesley says: "The distinguishing marks of a Christian are not his opinions or his feelings. What I demand is holiness of life." Mr. Beecher said: "A Christian is one who obeys Christ, no matter how he feels." Christ said: "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" And again: "By their fruits ye shall know them." James adds: "Faith without works is dead, being alone."

Christianity as revealed in the Bible is more than the intellectual acceptance of a system of truth. It is more than our thoughts about God and about Christ. Nor does it exhaust itself in prayer, psalm singing, or devotional exercises of the soul. Some one has truly said: "The best translation of the Bible I have ever seen is its translation into real life." Then "a pure faith, a true creed, a missionary life that will transmute both into life and faith for the good of man, is the best!"

The man of God that would develop a well-rounded character, symmetrical in all its forms, must take the word of God as his creed, making it the "man of his counsel," a "lamp unto his feet, and a light unto his pathway." Believing with all his heart the "eternal verities of the gospel," he makes it the purpose of his life to translate them into real, living, active, loving deeds for the good of humanity.

He welcomes the opportunity to go up to the temple

"at the hour of prayer" for spiritual refreshments, soul training; but he is not unmindful of the beggar that is "waiting at the gate" as he comes out to mingle again with the multitudes. He has a faith that can be seen, that "works by love." He says to the impracticable theorist: "You must show me your faith without your works;" I will show you my faith by my works."

With one hand in the hand of God and the other in the hand of his fellow man, he toils onward and upward until God calls him to "join the choir invisible"

> "Of those immortal dead who live again In minds made better by their presence."

A Letter from One of the Canadian Boys in France, BY JOHN E. DUNN.

The following letter will be of much interest to many of the readers of the Gospel Advocate:

Somewhere in France, November 23, 1917.—Dear Brother Dunn: Just a few lines in answer to your letter which I received to-day, which was dated October 23. It took exactly one month to reach me. I was sure very pleased to get your letter, as it helps and encourages me in the faith our Lord Jesus Christ taught us. Thanks very much for the advice as regards the Lord's Supper. I am sorry I did not write you before about it. I certainly will partake of it whenever I get the chance.

You will notice I am in France now, and my address is Spr. R. O. Franklin, No 507687 Canadian Third Division Signal Corps B. A. F., France. I feel just the same about the war as you do. I sincerely hope it will soon end and that God spares us to see the ones so dear to us at home. You are always in my prayers as much as the dear ones at home. I wish you every success in the work that is set out before you by God.

Brother Dunn, you will please excuse my pencil and short letters, as you know we are not allowed to say any-othing regarding military matters. So you can easily see it cuts our letters short.

I am glad U. S. A. is going in so strongly, for as soon as they bring lots of reinforcements, the sooner the war will end. Every little helps in war times.

France is a lovely country, but very old-fashioned out in the country. We are having lovely weather here at present. It is dry and not the least bit cold. In fact, you would never think it was November at all.

I have picked up a little French, enough to be able to buy things in a store. The people here talk so fast that you cannot pick anything out of a conversation. I have got the most of the common phrases off. They are a great people for their religion. Every little pièce on a street they have a small house built into another house, is about eight feet square. There they have inside an altar and Jesus on a cross, which is a Protestant religious altar. Little houses have the Virgin Mary with Jesus as a That is Roman Catholic. Whenever anybody little child. that is true to that faith passes these places, he makes the sign of a cross on his breast. The French people have some fine cathedrals and seem to be quite religious. They put the most of their money into it.

Well, I think I have said all this time. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain, Yours in Christ, REGINALD OWEN FRANKLIN.

I have given this letter as an interesting bit of news from this young brother. I met him in Canada. When I bade him good-by, I gave him spiritual advice and asked him to write to me. We have kept up a regular correspondence. This, letter shows the influence one can have over a young man. My heart goes out for these boys.

I go myself as a volunteer religious worker to Camp Sevier. My family will be supported by the Cookeville church while I am doing this work. I leave for Greenville on December 26. I shall give my address in the religious press, and all who have children or friends in Camp Sevier can send their names to me. I shall take pleasure in hunting them up and doing them all the good I can. I especially want the names of all members of the church in Camp Sevier, but I go to do good to all, regardless of their faith or no faith.

A Kindly Admonition. No. 1. BY W. H. CARTER.

"Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." (2 Cor. 13: 11.) "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.)

Now, you Bible readers know that there are many other scriptures that might be quoted which contain the same lesson as the above. These are plain, but let us quote the following: "But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you." (2 Cor. 10: 13.) "That we shall be enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly." (Verse 15.) "And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God." (Gal. 6: 16.) "Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing. Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample." (Phil. 3: 16, 17.) "For we walk by faith, not by sight." (2 Cor. 5: 7.)

Now, when we see the churches through our country practically in a disorganized state, with notions, speculations, and opinions where faith should abound; where men are wanting all others to follow after that which seems right to them; where there is contention, strife, and division; where the sheep have no shepherd to lead them into the green pastures and sparkling fountain of God's eternal truth; where men desire to be leaders, but not the Lord's kind, and teach perverse things to draw away disciples after them; where there is not a scripturally appointed and qualified eldership-it is enough to make any lover of the church of God and the cause of the world's Redeemer weep. I am not a crank nor a hobbyist because I call attention to these things. They exist, have been on the increase for years, and men who ought to see them have allowed Satan, prejudice, a desire to be popular, or something else, to blind their eyes. Do you say I am wild and fanatical along this line? Suppose I say the same about you; who is taught or convinced thereby? The truth is, I am stating facts. These things exist. Let me state a fact: I know of but few churches in the State of Tennessee, to say nothing of some other States, that have a "divinely," or scripturally, appointed eldership. Men have resorted to their own wisdom and suggest their own way, and follow not after the wisdom and way of God. Men are selected, but not appointed at all, when God's law to the evangelists is "to appoint." (See Tit. 1: 5.)

Now I want to tell you something: A man who stands high among the brethren, is well educated, and is worthy of esteem, said: "When men are selected and this is announced to the church, they are then appointed. That is all there is of it." This is having its influence. There are many who indorse the statement made by him. Is he right, or is he mistaken? In Acts 6: 1-6 it is clearly shown that the selection and the appointment were not the same. They are two separate and distinct acts, one performed by one party and the other by another. You select and we will appoint, said the apostles. If the church selects and some one announces that A and B have been selected to take the oversight, this is only an announcement that they have been selected for that work, and there the matter is left without an appointment at all. There is positively no appointment in this. Titus was to appoint elders. (Tit. 1: 5.) Paul and Barnabas appointed elders in every church. (Acts 14: 23.) Do you say they did not lay their hands on them? How do you know they did not? Do you say the Scriptures do not say they did? Do the Scriptures say "they announced that certain men had been selected?" But the Scriptures say absolutely nothing about that. Why is it, brethren, that you oppose one thing because you say the Scriptures do not teach it, and then do something else that the Scriptures do not teach? Are you offering your opinion as a rule for the government of others? Listen: "Where the Bible speaks, we will speak; and where the Bible is silent, we will be silent." "We will give a 'Thus saith the Lord' for what we teach and practice, or we will quit it." These were statements made by the pioneers many years ago. How is it now? Has this not been reversed by some? Do not some speak where the Bible is silent and remain silent where the Bible speaks, especially in regard to the appointment of men to a work in the church? Brethren, this loose, slipshod, haphazard way of doing the Lord's work is a sin and has led to much evil.

Responses Are Encouraging.

As we have launched into the new year of 1918 and as our readers are responding readily and cheerfully to our earnest solicitations to increase the circulation of the Gospel Advocate, we are glad to inform them that we are getting many renewals and new subscribers. A number are sending contributions to have the paper sent to our soldier boys who are now in the camps. This is an important work and should not be neglected. No one will question for one moment that it is right and proper to preach the gospel in its purity to those who are in the camps. Why should we remain idle while others are improving the opportunity? It is folly to wait and then lament because others improved the opportunity of teaching the people in the camps their peculiar doctrines and tenets. We have the truth; and if we love the truth, we are willing to make sacrifices in order for its advancement in the world.

We are making an unprecedented offer, and are appealing to our old subscribers to call attention to this offer, so as to add many new names to our list. In this offer we request that new subscribers have us send the Gospel Advocate for a year at the regular price of $2, sending us only $1, with the promise to send the remaining $1 at the end of six months; and if not satisfied with the paper, to write to the publishers that you are disappointed. We will then return to you the one dollar and cancel your subscription and you shall owe us nothing. In doing this we are putting the paper on its merits. We want to get it before the people, and believe that if we can do this they will be so pleased with it that they will not be willing to forego the benefit that is derived from reading it regularly.

As now is the best time to secure new subscribers, we are earnestly appealing to every subscriber to call the attention of others to this offer and do what he can to help us add many new names to the list. Don't wait. "Time and tide wait for no man." Many a man has made a failure of life simply because he postponed important decisions. Decide to-day and go to work to roll up a large list of subscribers to the Gospel Advocate.

We take this occasion to thank our readers who have heartily supported the paper in the past. We are not unmindful of the good work that they have done for us. Still there are some who have not realized the importance of working to extend the circulation of the paper. We are appealing now for that substantial support that will make it possible for us to do more and more in the great work of preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Let us hear from you immediately.

PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Prudence in Giving.

It seems that many impostors are taking advantage of war conditions and are going from house to house in the guise of collectors for various charitable and beneficent agencies. People should not give to such fakers, and should make sure that in all of their gifts they are giving through regular authorized and accredited persons. Those who give their means to such criminals have nothing left to give to the proper ones who solicit for the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. War Fund, and other funds. All money for the Red Cross should be given to authorized agents or representatives. This is a time for large gifts and for continuous giving. With a scarcity of coal, a scarcity of food, and with the tremendous amount that our people are called upon to expend, there is no way out of giving, and giving liberally; but he who is wise will not give one cent to fraudulent collectors

Some Complaints.

We have had a few complaints from some of our subscribers that the Gospel Advocate is late in reaching them. For the information of all who may be late in getting their papers, we want to say that the paper is mailed regularly every Wednesday, with very few exceptions. Hereafter we shall try to make no exception, and even when holidays come we will try to make some provision by which the paper can be mailed either ahead of time or on time. We find that many of our exchanges are late reaching us. Papers which before the war would reach us on Thursday ofjentimes do not reach us until Saturday. The reason for this delay is that the railroads of the country are very heavily taxed, so much so that they cannot deliver mails as promptly as heretofore. The government's needs, growing out of the war, must be first met, and, naturally enough, freight, express, and mails are delayed. It may be that since the government has taken over the railroads this delay will be overcome. Let us hope so. We want to assure our subscribers that, considering present conditions, we are very much gratified with the support they are rendering the paper. We are receiving many words of encouragement from all parts of the country. It is our purpose and constant desire to improve the paper. Any suggestions looking in this direction will be gladly received.

"Bear Ye One Another's Burdens."

Holy writ is clear in admonishing us to bear "one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Those who are blessed with all the necessities of life, in their joy and gladness should not forget to remember those who are in privations, sorrow, and deep affliction. Their hearts should go out to the afflicted in much sympathy and tenderness. Now we all have an opportunity of purifying our hearts and cleansing our hands, of loathing and hating sin, and doing that which will be helpful to those about us, that we have never had before. On the other hand, those who are in sorrow and sadness should remember that they are not alone in this experience, since many others may have far heavier burdens than they themselves have. But there is no affliction so terrible that God's grace is not sufficient to enable us to bear it. Christians must learn the lesson of looking away from this world and of putting their trust wholly and unreservedly in the Lord Jesus Christ. We should not inflict those about us with our sorrows, our heartaches and burdens. In patience, in trust, and in humility, we should remember that each heart knows its own bitterness, and that this is doubly true in times of war. Christians, because their sons are called to war, because the brightest and best are taken, should not imagine that others are not passing through the very same trying ordeal. A German writer, in writing on "The Countries After the War," relates the old proverb: "A great war leaves a country with three armies—an army of cripples, an army of mourners, and an army of thieves." Let us, like the Spartan mothers, in these trying times be brave. If our hearts are sad and if our burdens are quadrupled, let us still press forward with one determination to serve the Lord, casting our burdens upon him, knowing that he careth for us.

Jerusalem in the Hands of Christians.

That Jerusalem should have fallen into the hands of a Christian government after having been held by the Turks for long centuries is one of the gratifying and romantic elements of the present war. That Great Britain will administer affairs for the city and region to the immeasurable advantage of the people and the satisfaction of the Christian world, is assured. Whatever may be the future developments, it is a pleasure to know that the Holy City and the Holy Land are no longer dominated by the infidel and enemy Turk.—Herald and Presbyter.

All Christians certainly are rejoiced that the Holy City, Jerusalem, is now in the hands of Christians. It matters little with them whether the capture of Jerusalem by the British suggests the probability of the reëstablishment of the kingdom of Israel in Palestine. It may be that many Jews will be gathered back to Jerusalem. I remember in a conversation with a Jew on a steamer sailing on Lake Michigan that he said: "Jews like America. This is a free country, and one in which they can make money. Therefore they have no desire to return to Jerusalem." There doubtless is much truth in this statement. The American Israelite, anticipating the British success, said:

Whatever the decision of the allies in regard to Palestine, it can hardly fail to improve the conditions and enlarge the liberty of life in Palestine; and if the Jews in large numbers choose to take advantage of the fact, the object of Zionism will, in due time, be accomplished and the Jewish nation will live time, the accomplished and fig tree. When that happens, the Jewish problem that afflicts the rest of the world will tend to disappear.

Lynching Negroes.

The burning of a negro at the stake in Tennessee is a disgrace to Tennesseeans. This does not mean any approach to an excuse of the horrible crime committed and confessed to by the negro. But savagery will never be cured by savagery. Diabolism is the poorest possible substitute for law and civilization. Inhumanity, though espousing the cause of home protection, is barbarism still. The Midland apologizes to Georgians for comments on their reign of lawlessness. We bow our head in shame. A mite of comfort comes from the truth that most sober-minded Tennesseeans condemn this brutal manifestation of a bloodthirsty mob and join their voices in appeal that the courts show backbone enough to punish this lawless punishment of lawlessness.—Midland Methodist.

No Christian will uphold the destruction of criminals by lynch law. The worst feature of such action is not that the criminal is taken away, but the effect that it has upon those who engage in such crimes. It makes them blood-thirsty and destroys within them that love for virtue and righteousness that is characteristic of the true man. Our people should labor to abolish such vicious criminality from our State and from the whole country. No matter how terrible the crime for which the lynching is perpetrated. that does not justify the people in dragging themselves down to the level of the brute. Our citizenship should be encouraged to let the, law take its course. Our judges, courts, and juries should see that the law is justly executed. The law is a terror to evil and not to good.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

The Last Lord's Day in the Year.

December 30, 1917, in spite of the biting cold, was a most delightful day with the Atlanta work. Brother Morgan H. Carter had just returned from a short visit to Lynn ville, Tenn., and preached at East Point in the forenoon and met his Bible class at West End at 7:15 P.M. Brother Ben Harding, of Sheffield, Ala., was with the South Pryor Street brethren in the forenoon service, preached a fine discourse at Camp Gordon in the afternoon on the elements that make great men, and finished the day's work with a strong discourse on "Temptation" at a union service at West End Avenue at 8 P.M. Brother Harding is the son of our beloved J. A. Harding, and his visit did great good. We are hoping that he will become one of the permanent workers in this great city. Brother C. P. Poole was with the brethren at Macon, and brings a fine report of the work there. We are glad to learn that the Macon Christians are delighted with Brother Coleman and wife.

Another Enjoyable Meeting.

Brother John E. Dunn spent the night of December 27 with us. He was on his way to Camp Sevier, at Greenville, S. C., where he is engaged in special work with our soldier boys. A meeting was called in the home of Brother R. A. Harwell for the purpose of letting as many members as could, conveniently, meet Brother Dunn and send him on to his work with our prayers and best wishes. Prayers were offered by Brethren Dunn, Ben Harding, O. D. Bearden, and the writer. Brother Dunn read and commented on the Twenty-third Psalm. Short talks were also made by Brother Harding and the writer. Special songs were sung. It was such a soul-stirring and enjoyable occasion. I cannot believe we had one present who was not whole-heartedly in the work of our Lord. The Harwell family is one of our best. two large rooms thrown into one by the sliding doors being pushed back, two big fires making every corner in the rooms perfectly comfortable, and members of the church together who love each other devotedly-could you think of anything sweeter and more to be desired? I had to ask the question: "If such gatherings are so enjoyable when only a few of us are together in a lovely home like this, what will heaven be when all the redeemed are together?" But right in the midst of this levely occasion there was a pause. Homes came to our minds that had not coal to burn even in our own country; even in this country thousands were shivering in cold for lack of fuel and clothing. What could it be across the sea where wives are bowed down in sorrow because of the loss of husband; mothers crushed because their last son had been taken; and thousands had crossed the river of death, not only by shell and bullet, but because of nothing to eat! We had to stop and pray for them. Then we gave special thought to our own boys in the camps in the homeland and of their mothers who are so anxious about them. Out of it all may God bring us a purer, happier, and better people; people who are more willing to serve humanity, and in this way serve God.

The brethren everywhere should remember Brother Dunn in his work at Camp Sevier. We wanted him to remain here at Camp Gordon. But there are too many of the Tennessee boys who are members of the church at the former place, and too many mothers so deeply interested in the work that Brother Dunn is to do for us, to even try to hold him here. The church at Cookeville, Tenn., is to be praised for their liberality toward Brother Dunn's loved ones at home while he is away doing his best for the boys of our country. Too, the Lawrence Avenue congregation, in Nashville, should ever rejoice that they had the pleasure of furnishing Brother Dunn with the necessary equipment for the work.

Let me ask the mothers who have boys at Camp Sevier to send their names and full addresses to John E. Dunn, Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., care of the Y. M. C. A. He will gladly meet them and do his best for them. Please do not expect Brother Dunn to answer letters unless stamps are inclosed. He will not have time to answer all letters; besides, it costs too much to expect him to answer at his expense.

Let me also insist that you let us know about the boys that come to Camp Gordon. We have services every Lord's-day afternoon at 2:30 at Casualty Department No. 2, Section "F." Let the boys know about this, so that they may be with us.

In His Steps.

BY MORGAN H. CARTER.

"He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked."

To-day the Christian's greatest danger is to have a form of godliness, but in reality—in the thoughts, words, and deeds of life—to deny the power thereof; in other words, to have a religion of the head and not of the heart, to say and do not. Such a religion is vain and empty. No joy, no blessedness, no great strength of character comes through this weakened faith.

Now what is the cause of such a condition? It is a lack of sincerity, a failure to have deep conviction of the sinfulness of sin, and the emptiness of form. It comes from holding theories more precious than Christ, from substituting ritualism for a real faith in the living Christ and the Holy Spirit as revealed in the word of God.

What is the remedy for this unfortunate and sinful state of mind and action? Just the remedy which God provides for other wrong conditions—the "normal life." When we have wrongly used the body, the best corrective often is to go back to the normal life, or, better say for many folks, on to the normal life. So our souls need really to live the normal spiritual life. But to live this new life we must be born again. We must become filled with the spirit of Christ. Then it is our great joy to come closer to Christ, "to walk even as he walked"—not so perfectly always, but with a supreme desire to please God and save men.

We all have the opportunity of doing a great work of service these days; and our inheritance in the kingdom prepared for us from the foundation of the world is conditioned on our attitude toward Christ and the resulting activities. "Come, ye blessed of my Father," he says to the saved: "for I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." So the joy of living was great to those who ministered unto the Lord. But was that great joy of ministering only given to those who saw him in the flesh? O, no; and here is where our very rare privilege comes, when the King replies: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." What a joy to know that the help we give to the men and women, boys and girls, whom we meet daily, when done in the name of Jesus, is as unto him! What a dreadful thought, on the other hand, when he says to those who neglect the needs of their fellow men: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into the eternal fire which is prepared for the devil and his angels: for I was hungry, and ye did not give me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not." The lost will open their eyes in amazement, thinking they have never come face to face with Jesus. But he will continue: "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto me."

Awake, arise, go help some soul to-day. It does no good to say, "Be warmed and filled," unless we warm and fill the needy. Help men to help themselves; get the spirit of Christ; go about doing good; "brighten the corner where you are;" speak the cheering word; give the fellow who is "down and out" the glad hand; tell the lost of their precious Savior. Do your best always in all things to help every one in the greatest possible measure. Thus you may live the normal life—the life of joy in Christ Jesus.

I have just received, through the Gospel Advocate, donations as follows: From J. O. Rushing, $8; Mrs. James Ford, $1.25; H. C. and J. B. Edwards, $50; Irene Hicks, $2; I. B. Bradley, $5; Annie Peebles, $1; P. A. Gibson, $5.25; G. C. Myers, $2; H. B. Young, $5. Total, $79.50. I wish to express my thanks to all these friends for their fellowship in the gospel, which is especially appreciated in these troublous times.

Brother Ishiguro baptized three persons at the Zoshigaya chapel two weeks ago. My weekly Bible classes range from six to fifteen. Last night (November 18) I spoke on "God and Noah." It made a good impression. Brother Hashimoto, the elder of the church, spoke in the morning at the Lord's Supper on John 3: 16. Miss Lillie Cypert arrived on October 25. She and Miss Andrews are happily located in the Yoshigaya mission home, and both are busy at the language. Sister Cypert seems to be well qualified for the work upon which she has entered. I hope those who contributed to defray her expenses to Japan will continue their contributions regularly to her. Her address is the same as mine, as all three houses go under the same number-68 Zoshigaya, Tokyo, Japan. Or you may send to D. C. Janes, Route 10, Buechel, Ky. Happy New Year to all our friends!

Notes and Items of Interest from Japan.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

This heading reads as if the writer were in Japan. He is not, but his heart is there. Hence this heading.

Brother Ishiguro writes: "I baptized three persons a few days ago. Our work is doing well and most of the members are faithful. I am working hard for the will of God, that it may be done on earth. Thank you for the money for our work." Brother Ishiguro is an earnest worker. He never tires of preaching the gospel. He is not a scholarly man, yet he is well qualified educationally to do a great work among his people.

Brother Hiratsuka says, among other things: "We published the Church Record this month, and mailed copies to all the members and to others whom we are trying to reach with the gospel message. This little paper is good for the church, for it contains all the reports and gives the names of our faithful brethren." This little church newspaper is gotten out about twice a year, sometimes quarterly. A copy of this issue came to me, and I was glad to note how well the brethren over there are doing. They are doing their best, but they need a leader in the person of some faithful American missionary. Who will go? Who will go now? It is impossible for me to tell you just how much the presence of a good man means to the native Christians. In a score of ways he can help and lead them

Brother Hiratsuka, always thankful and appreciative, closes his letter thus: "We are most thankful for the offering from American brothers and sisters. We could not get along without their blessed assistance. We are always thanking God for you all, and we pray for you at all our meetings. You, please, pray for us, because it gives us more courage when we know that you are praying for us." (Of course, it is understood that I smooth out the English.)

The offerings for November for this work amounted to sixty-eight dollars and thirty cents—not enough by twelve dollars, as eighty dollars a month is needed. If I were personally able to finance the shortage, I would be glad to do it. But I feel certain that the brethren are not going to let this work come to naught, for that would be a shame and a disgrace. Let us not even think of that possible outcome. We can help the Red Cross, the suffering in Europe, the needy at home, etc., and at the same time have a part in this good work in Japan. I forward funds on the first of each month; so I request the brethren to send regularly for this purpose. Address me at 137 East Third Street, Dayton, Ohio.

To-day my wife and I called on Sister Jelley, mother of our pioneer missionary to India. Sister Jelley is an invalid, but cheerful and hopeful. We sang and prayed with her. We are planning to begin a mission here.

Moving Pictures.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

On September 25 I was fifty-six years old. Nearly half of my life has been spent in Japan. I am as well and strong as when we first arrived, if not more so. God will bless any man or woman with a hundred years on this earth who will live in harmony with the natural and spiritual laws he has ordained.

In giving out tracts to the country people in and around Karuizawa, it was interesting to watch the results. I met a man driving a cart, and as he rode by I handed him a tract, a copy of the Fukuin. As he received it he thanked me, saying he had become one already, meaning that he was already a believer. I met an older man. His face did not indicate a very high degree of intelligence. When I offered him a tract, he did not so much as look at it. He looked vaguely into space and refused. "I can't see to read," he said. "But maybe you have a friend who can read to you," I remarked. "No, I have no friend," was his reply; and he moved on.

My Interpreter.

I read the sacred Book one day and found
I understood at last a meaning well,
That long lay hidden in its obscure cell
Of miracle—a seed long underground;
But now the plant rose to my happy view—
A healing plant in form and fragrance fine;
To foster in my soul the germ divine
A guileless child had been as sun and dew.

I marvel not, O Christ, that thou didst say,
Let children come to me. They best explain
Thy truth: when we have labored all in vain
To grasp the sense, some happy child at play
Expounds—a flash as from the throne above,
Glimpse in that kingdom they are members of.

Let Us Give Thanks.

For the courage which comes when we call While troubles like hailstones fall; For the help that is somehow nigh In the deepest night when we cry; For the path that is certainly shown When we pray in the dark alone, Let us give thanks!

For the knowledge we gain if we wait And bear all the buffets of fate; For the vision that beautifies sight If we look under wrong for the right; For the gleam of the Ultimate Goal That shines on each reverent soul, Let us give thanks!

For the consciousness stirring in creeds, That love is the thing the world needs; For the cry of the travailing earth That is giving a new faith birth; For the God we are learning to find In the heart and the soul and the mind, Let us give thanks!

For the growth of the spirit through pain, Like a plant in the soil and the rain; For the dropping of needless things Which the sword of a sorrow brings; For the meaning and purpose of life, Which dawns on us out of the strife, Let us give thanks!

-Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Thinking.

Thinking is quite easy when you know how. It is true that few of us do it. Most of us allow our minds to dribble, to meander aimlessly about along lines of least resistance, like water that has trickled over a Mississippi levee and gone here and there about the flats, getting muddler and muddier until it soaks into the lush earth or is evaporated into the thin air. That is what most of us call thinking. The mind that works that way gets nowhere; it never accomplishes anything; its owner is merely flotsam on the stream of life.-Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Happiness.

The true happiness is of a retired nature, and an enemy to pomp and noise. It arises, in the first place, from the enjoyment of one's self; and in the next from the friendship and conversation of a few select companions. It loves shade and solitude and naturally haunts groves and fountains, fields and meadows; in short, it feels everything it wants within itself, and receives no addition from the multitudes of witnesses and spectators. On the contrary, false happiness loves to be in a crowd and to draw the eyes of the world upon her. She does not receive satisfaction from the applause which she gives herself, but from the admiration which she raises in others. She flourishes in courts and palaces, theaters and assemblies, and has no existence but when she is looked upon .- Addison.

Effective Weapon of Ancients.

Among the simplest and yet one of the most effective inventions of ancient times was the javelin with a point of soft iron employed by Julius Cæsar in his Gallic wars. The Roman legionaries hurled these weapons against the shields of their enemies. The iron head penetrated the outer covering of bulls' hide, but flattened against the hard wood or metal back of the shield, and thus became hooked to this protector. The shanks of the dangling javelins so impeded the movement of the barbarian soldiers that they were forced either to throw away their shields and fight uncovered against the Romans or else stop long enough (a fatal delay in their advance) to disincumber themselves from this unique weapon, which may properly be called the dumdum pilum, the progenitor of the soft-nose, or dumdum, bullet of to-day.-Exchange.

I heard men speak continually of going to a "better world" rather than of its coming to them; but in that prayer which they have straight from the lips of "the Light of the world" there is not anything about going to another world; only of another government coming into this, which will constitute it a new world indeed; new heavens and new earth: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."-Ruskin.

. . . Forgiveness.

The gospel presents the rule of Christian forgiveness in the parable of the king who would take account of his servants. It is this, that want of charity casts a man out of grace, even the grace of forgiveness: so that the burden of his former sins is again laid upon him.

We are told not to deceive ourselves because the various stages of this parable find no exact fulfillment in our own case. The worst case of this kind may take place in the heart only, scarcely, if at all, known by outward gesture, word, or deed, but only known to the great Searcher of hearts.

The great difficulty we find in forgiving deep wrongs against ourselves shows us how great must be God's love, who so freely forgives us. Those who refuse to forgive prove that they themselves are not forgiven and not prepared for forgiveness. When we pray the Lord's prayer, "Forgive as we forgive," we should be sure that we are praying for mercy and not for our own condemnation.

A large sense of the fallibility of human nature is indispensable to charity. Love, then, must be the guiding star that shall help us cultivate the spirit of fair judgment and rational helpfulness; and Christian love, we are told, is just plety with its petals fully spread.-Exchange.

* * * Human Body Will Not Thrive in Shadow.

A woman has declared that at one hundred and six she is in better health and happier than at any previous time in her life. Surely a woman who is healthy at one hundred and six ought to be happy. She would have to be happy to be healthy. None but a happy disposition could carry one through so many years. A gloomy temperament would strangle life out of the body long before the age of one hundred and six.

The human body can no more thrive in shadow than can a rose.

Old age ought to be the happiest period of life, particularly for a woman. If she has kept her mind active and has wisely refused to settle into the dull rut that people always have ready for her, she can begin in old age to enjoy.life in earnest.

In old age there is no more worry about the babies, no more suffering for others. The children are grown up, and, if her part has been well done, they are a prop and a solace to her. Grandchildren are a delight without the bitter, constant worry.

The woman grown old in years should be at her best mentally. She is free to indulge her tastes, enjoy a good book and the conversation of genial minds.

Women retain their vitality and spirits longer than men do. The burdens of life fall from them gradually, and the peace of retirement from active duties comes upon them little by little, almost imperceptibly.-Christian Herald.

Urgent Request to Contributors of the Tennessee Orphans' Home.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

For some time an auditor has been at work on the books of the Tennessee Orphans' Home. On account of lack of data and only partial bookkeeping, the auditor has had much trouble in getting the real facts as to the amount of funds contributed and disbursed by the Home. He reports to me that he has found a number of very grave errors, and requests that all contributors to the Home send him any data, such as canceled checks or any kind of vouchers showing the amount that they contributed to the Home. The auditor has gone through the banks at Columbia and has gotten the deposit tickets of the Home. Many contributors have reported to him amounts they have contributed, others have not done so.

As it is the wish of the directors and auditor to get a full and complete audit, one that is impartial and fair to all concerned, I desire to impress upon our readers and contributors to the Home the necessity and importance of furnishing all information that they have in their possession. As it is the determination of the directors to make an annual report of funds received and disbursed by the Home, the books must be audited annually from this on by a competent auditor just as is done by any well-regulated and managed business. Of course this audit is expensive, and we regret that the books were in such condition that so much labor had to be expended to get the facts. The contributors, however, can help us by acting promptly. Send any information, canceled checks, vouchers, or any data that you may have, to F. O. Beerman, 700 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

More On New Testament Nomenclature.

BY M. C. K.

We wish now to redeem the promise made in our issue of November 1, 1917, "to consider the question of local churches and what constitutes them 'churches of Christ.'" In the meantime we have recovered a letter which was called out by a previous discussion of the question, but was misplaced months ago, containing a number of queries to which we shall now give attention. From the letter, which was from Brother John T. Lewis, of Birmingham, Ala., we here publish the paragraphs containing his queries:

In answering my question as to whether it is sectarian to say "the church of Christ at West End" or "the church of Christ at Woodlawn," you say: "If the aim is to follow the New Testament, why select one New Testament term to designate the church, to the exclusion of all other New Testament terms used to designate it?"

Now, if saying "the church of Christ at West End" and "the church of Christ at Woodlawn" excludes all other New Testament terms used to designate the church, it is only in ignorance and unbelief that I so use the terms. However, I have never thought when Paul simply used the term, "the church of God which is at Corinth," that he excluded all other New Testament terms used to desig-

But we never get too old to learn. A few years ago I saw on a meetinghouse, in one of our Southern cities, "The church of God," and under that in parenthesis, "The Christian Church." I had never been able to understand why the preacher felt called upon to put in that explanation; but I suppose now that he thought in using the term, "the church of God," as Paul used it, that he was excluding something, and, guessing at what it was, he guessed it to be "the Christian Church;" so he put that in, too.

In making our announcements in the papers here, for the benefit of strangers who may be in the city, we have to be brief. I am sure if I should send in an announceto be brief. I am sure if I should send in an amounte-ment saying "the church of Christ, the body of Christ, the sheep of Christ, the fold of Christ, the bride of Christ, the sheep of God, the church, kingdom of his dear Son, the house of God, the church, the church of God, will meet at Charles Street, West End, and Sixtieth Street, Woodlawn," the editor would pass the announcement on to the wastebasket for the lack of brevity.

So all I wanted to know from you was, could I use the term "church of Christ" to get our meeting places before the people without being a sectarian or excluding anything or anybody?

You ask this question: "For example, if our brother were called upon to speak of 'the church of Christ in Birmingham,' to whom would he apply the term?" Then you say: "He could not apply it scripturally, if he did not include in it all the people of God in Birmingham. He would not dare to apply it exclusively to the two men-tioned local churches as 'the church of Christ in Birmingham,' for the simple reason that there are other people of God in Birmingham that do not belong to these two churches.

I have been laboring here in this great city for nearly ten years, contending simply for the New Testament order of things. During this time members have moved here from Tennessee and Kentucky, some of them not only from strong congregations, but close kin of some of our strongest gospel preachers, and when they got here they cast their lot with other people. I have never been able to understand before how they could do that, but I see now they had evidently learned before they left their home congregations that there were other people of God in Birmingham that do not belong to the two mentioned churches. And since we use the term "church of Christ" in an unscriptural sense to designate the two local churches, to avoid this blunder also is possibly another reason for their casting their lots with other people of God. In fact, what difference does it make as to where you are, just so you are with the people of God?

To "recognize the fact" that "the church of Christ in Birmingham" is divided, is it necessary for me to recognize the leaders of the different factions and parties as my esteemed contemporaries or my colaborers? Or, in recognizing the fact, should I not mark the leaders and turn away from them as Paul says do in Rom. 16: 17?

Thanking you again for further teaching along this Thanking you again to the faith.

John T. Lewis.

While, in the main, this letter shows that its author has the correct conception of New Testament phraseology, it nevertheless shows that, to a given extent, he labors under a misconception of the New Testament use of certain terms; and we invite special attention to the following points:

1. He says: "I have never thought when Paul simply used the term, 'the church of God which is at Corinth,' that he excluded all other New Testament terms used to designate it." And what our brother here thought of Paul is exactly the truth; but, if we understand his course in his use of the term "the church of Christ at West End" or "the church of Christ at Woodlawn," he departs from Paul's usage of terms in the fact that he never varies in his announcements from the one term, and thus he does use it "to the exclusion of all other New Testament terms used to designate it;" whereas Paul did not use the term, "the church of God which is at Corinth," in this exclusive way, but used numerous other terms as well. It is not wrong to say "the church of Christ at West End" or "the church of Christ at Woodlawn," but why never use any other term? Paul did not do this way, but used different terms, not necessarily at the same time, but at different times. Can we not follow Paul? We answer our own question by saying that it is extremely difficult to follow him in this badly divided and sectarian-ridden age of ours.

2. The Southern preacher who inscribed on the church building the term "the church of God," even with his parenthetical "explanation," never varying from the use of that term and that explanation, was not, as our brother mistakenly assumes, "using the term as Paul used it," for Paul never used it in that exclusive way. Paul sometimes said "church of God," sometimes "churches of Christ," and sometimes he used other designations. If the Southern preacher had done this way, he would have been "using the term as Paul used it." But we agree with Brother Lewis that to use all the New Testament terms designating the church in a single newspaper announcement would be rather cumbersome, and most likely "the editor would pass the announcement on to the wastebasket;" but neither this consideration nor any other consideration will justify us in the use of only one New Testament term always to designate the church, to the exclusion of other New Testament terms used to designate it.

3. He says: "Could I use the term 'church of Christ' to get our meeting places before the people without being sectarian or excluding anything or anybody?" Yes, you can on two conditions—(1) if you apply it to those who are Christians or people of God; (2) if you include in it all who are Christians or people of God in the territory to which you apply it. It is all right to use any New Testament term to designate the church at any time and at any place when such term is used to designate simply what it is used in the New Testament to designate, no more and no less. In other words, it is always right, of course, to follow the New Testament in our usage of terms.

4. Referring to those who moved to Birmingham "from Tennessee and Kentucky, some of" them being "from strong congregations" and from "some of our strongest gospel preachers," and who, on arriving, "cast their lot with other people" than those constituting "the two mentioned local churches," our brother says he has "never been able to understand before how they could do that, but" that, from our reasoning, he now sees that "they had evidently learned before they left their home congregations that there were other people of God in Birmingham that do not belong to the two mentioned churches." Well, did they not learn the truth when they learned this? But he asks: "What difference does it make as to where you are, just so you are with the people of God?" It makes very much and very serious difference whether you are with the people of God who go right or with the people of God who go wrong, and both classes have practically always existed ever since God had a people on earth. If there really are no "people of God in Birmingham who do not belong to the two mentioned churches," then they already have the union of the people of God in that "great city" and do not need to preach and plead for it any longer,

5. Finally, this question is asked: "Is it necessary for me to recognize the leaders of the different factions and parties as my esteemed contemporaries or my colaborers?" That depends on whether they are estimable or not, and whether they are in any way and to any extent laboring with you. It does not necessarily follow that a man is not one of the people of God because he is doing what God does not approve and in which we cannot properly join him. As we read the New Testament, it is the duty of every child of God to occupy the same ground which every other child of God should occupy, and to engage only in such work as is approved of God and in which every other child of God can engage.

It will require another article to cover the remaining ground included in the promise in our issue of November 1.

Partisans in the Church. BY J. C. M'Q.

Last week I gave the scriptural teaching on the subject of withdrawing from the disorderly walking. Before leaving this subject it is proper to emphasize that the withdrawal from the disorderly walking should not be done hastily and without due deliberation. It must be done in the name of the Lord, and should be done upon the first day of the week when the body assembles in the name of Christ for worship. The punishment inflicted on the fornicator in the church at Corinth was inflicted by the many. So the elders should not announce the withdrawal from a member until the sentiment of the church largely favors such withdrawal.

CHRISTIANS SHOULD LIVE HOLY LIVES.

The influence of a godly, consecrated Christian life is perfectly irresistible. It falls as gently on the tender consciences of men and women as the snowflake on the bosom of the placid lake. Godly living is more influential in the conversion of the world than eloquent preaching from the pulpit. Those who have the spirit of Christ do not deliberately go into sin and then demand that the sin be proven upon them, but stay just as far away from sin as possible. The Bible requires Christians to lead holy and unblamable lives. Their lives are to be above reproach. For the edification and uplift of our readers, I quote a number of passages upon this subject. The Holy Spirit says of Zacharias and Elizabeth: "And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." (Luke 1: 6.) We read again in 1 Cor. 1: 6-8: "Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: so that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye be unreprovable in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." Again, the Holy Spirit, through Paul, speaks in no unmistakable language on this subject: "That ye may become blameless and harmless, children of God without blemish in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye are seen as lights in the world." (Phil. 2: 15.) Again, in writing to the Thessalonians, the same apostle says: "And the God of peace himself sanctify you wholly; and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire, without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." (1 Thess. 5: 23.) The impulsive, fearless, and outspoken Peter admonishes: "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for these things, give diligence that ye may be found in peace, without spot and blameless in his sight." (2 Pet. 3: 14.) The Holy Spirit, in speaking through Paul. says to the church at Colosse: "Yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and without blemish and unreprovable before him." (Col. 1: 22.) Many other scriptures of the same import may be read with interest. These scriptures show beyond doubt that those who love the truth and who are consumingly in earnest about doing the will of God will seek to lead holy and unblamable lives. They will not do as the offender from whom the church withdrew. He had been guilty of unchristian conduct. When the church remonstrated with him about it, he demanded the proof and showed no disposition to condemn himself for living in a way that brought reproach upon the cause of Christ. The man who deliberately goes into temptation is more than half fallen. If he be serving God and seeking to glorify him in body, soul, and spirit, he is determined to stay so far away from evil and all that may be construed as evil that he will do nothing which may bring censure down upon his head and lead people to criticize his conduct as a Christian. Hence, Paul, in writing to the church at Rome, says: "Let not then your good be evil spoken of." (Rom, 14: 16.) I have always doubted the sincerity of any one's Christianity who will do even good in a way that is calculated to bring down censure and reproach on the integrity of his intentions, when, by a little prudence and discretion, all of this could be avoided and the good done in a way that is above reproach and that would undoubtedly reflect honor and glory on the name of Jesus

THE INFLUENCE OF TESTIMONY ON OUR HEARTS.

Testimony exerts different degrees of influence on different states of the heart. The man who is seeking to build up a party more than he is seeking to advance the religion of Jesus Christ will look with a degree of allowance upon error, provided by so doing he can build up his party. The man who loves the truth, desires truth, is unprejudiced and unbiased in his heart, readily receives evidence that establishes the truth, even though such evidence condemns partyism and also those he loves dearly. The heart that is partisan is not seeking the truth, but party. The truth does not find a ready reception in the partisan heart and produces fruit slowly, if at all. Frequently the heart so loves error and wrongdoing that it is wedded to party and is determined to hold to party in spite of truth. When such is the case, truth infuriates the heart and makes it more bitter. Such partisans stop their ears to the truth, close their eyes to all facts, and cling to party at all hazards. They are not laboring to establish the truth, but a party, and love partyism and not the truth. The greater the miracles Jesus wrought in the presence of such hearts, the more bitter they became and the more determined they were to destroy him. The same spirit is not dead in the church to-day. When men are strong enough, courageous enough, and wise enough to stand by the truth regardless of consequences, such partisans condemn them because they are not building up the party. If such partisans should happen to preach the truth, they are hopelessly given over to ruin, evil, and darkness. The truth preached from such a motive will not save a soul. Often editors, preachers, and elders, and many Christians, become so wedded to a man or a party that they are wholly unable to see the wrong such person or party does. If in sympathy with a man and if in love with him, they condone even falsehood and uphold him in the wrong, instead of speaking out boldly and fearlessly condemning that wrong. The heart in such a condition is not receptive to the truth. Unless such a heart is changed and becomes ready to receive the truth, even if it condemn father, mother, wife, husband, brother, or sister, it will never hear the "Well done" of the Lord Jesus Christ. Some persons with honest hearts are yet so bitterly prejudiced that it takes time and much testimony to remove these prejudices. It is impossible, however, for an honest person to always shut his eyes to the facts and testimony. Time will remove these prejudices. Paul was a striking illustration of this. Blinded by his prejudices, being exceedingly mad against the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ and determined to stamp it out, he fought that religion with a zeal worthy of a nobler cause. But when he was convinced of the truthfulness of that religion, he turned completely around and gave his whole life to it with a zeal, earnestness, and enthusiasm that has perhaps characterized the life of no other man.

The Christian does not desire to find fault with his brother. He is grieved to find that the life of his brother is not in harmony with its profession. But, when the evidence is overwhelming to this effect, with a receptive heart, desiring to build up the religion of Jesus Christ and not any party, he condemns the wrong and fearlessly contends for the right, regardless of the criticisms of the partisans in the church. The man in love with the truth will not uphold error in the life of a brother, because truth is in conflict with error and always at war with it.

Some happen to be on the side of truth. Being reared in the association of truth, they may do the truth for a while from force of habit; but whenever they are called upon to sacrifice party and partisan interests, then they cannot be depended upon. They will prefer the party to the truth. May God give us all that love for the truth and that devotion to it that will lead us to accept it, stand for it, and do it, regardless of what others may say or think of us.

Christians Must Lead Peaceable Lives.

BY E. G. S.

Paul teaches that thanks should be said for all men. He puts it thus: "I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." (1 Tim. 2: 2.) So Christians are not only required to lead peaceable lives, but they must pray for their rulers and governors that they may be permitted to do so. And not only are thanks to be given for all, but prayers and intercessions are to be made also for all. Prayer is not a mere individual, personal matter. It is not enough that a man should pray for himself personally and as an individual, but he must extend his prayer in behalf of all men. Christians should cultivate an interest in behalf of others as well as for themselves. It is likely that all people are more or less indifferent about the welfare of others. Hence there was a necessity that just such lessons as the above passage contains should be taught.

People must of necessity think of themselves and their own individual duties and responsibilities, but they must not allow themselves to become selfish and think only of themselves and their own personal welfare. Christians especially must be very careful to guard against selfishness and think of, and work for, the well-being of others along with themselves. Jesus never was what we would call "selfish," thinking only of himself and his own good. He thought much about what he was to do for others, especially what he was to do for the salvation of sinners. Hence he thought enough about himself and the work he was to accomplish to keep himself always in the line of duty, making preparation for what he was to accomplish in the world for the salvation of souls. Hence nothing that he said or did was out of harmony with the great work he had come into the world to accomplish. He spoke very plainly of the death that was destined to come upon him. He knew that his suffering was to be for the human race, and not simply as a matter of punishment, and hence he endured it patiently. So, if we suffer because we are followers of Christ, we should endure it patiently, knowing that it cannot harm our souls, if we continue to be faithful to the Lord. Christians, therefore, should all strive to be faithful to the Lord; and if they are faithful in that, they may be sure that the blessings of the Lord will rest upon them. The trouble with many is that they become so deeply interested in financial matters that they do not think enough about the interests of their souls. This is, indeed, the most important interest we have: for if we lose our souls, the most important interest we have is lost. Hence all should be instant in striving to attain the highest interest of their souls. This can be attained only through the Christian religion. If all will be faithful in the service of God, the highest interest they have will thereby be obtained; but if we neglect the service of God, the most lasting and the most important interest in our reach is neglected and forever lost. Christianity is the highest interest that is in our reach; and if we reject that, we reject the highest interest that we can possibly have. If we reject it through life, the highest interest we have or can have in this life is lost. Hence, as a certain song says:

> Life is the time to serve the Lord. The time to insure the great reward.

In this life is the only time in which we can secure this great reward, the salvation of our souls. If we neglect the gospel through this life, we will be lost in eternity. Provisions for eternal life are made for all that faithfully obey the Lord in this life, but there has been no arrangements provided for eternal life for those that reject the gospel through this life. All, therefore, that desire eternal life must make preparation for it in this life. To do this requires that we be busy in the service of the Lord to the end of life. The word of the Lord is very specific in requiring that we hold out faithfully to the end. Hence there is no time we can stop and say we are done till the end comes. Then, if we have been faithful, we will be called up higher to spend eternity with the faithful in the heavenly home. Therefore it is our highest interest to spend our earthly lives in the service of God. If we do not, we shall be cast off forever. Paul lived a faithful life on earth and was all the time looking for a happy home in heaven. We can all do likewise, if we will be faithful to the Lord while we live. Paul seemed to grow in faithfulness while he lived and was all the time rejoicing in hope of a happy home in eternity. We can do likewise, if we will serve the Lord faithfully while we live; but if we become worldly-minded and forget our duties to the Lord till we die, eternal death is sure. Eternal life is the most important thing we can work for in this life. Hence all should be up and doing while life lasts. The most awful mistake that can be made in this life, therefore, is to neglect the Christian religion; for if we do, eternal ruin is sure. Let all, therefore, be sure to learn and do the Lord's will while they live. Eternal life can be found in no other way. And so we must, if we would all be sure of much happiness in life and of eternal life after death. This is a subject all should seriously consider, and be sure to embrace and practice Christianity to the end of this life, and thus be ready to step off into eternal life to live with all the saved throughout eternity.

To the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief: By your authority we have caused the books and vouchers of the committee to be examined by Messrs. Barrow, Wade, and Guthrie & Co., chartered accountants of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Boston, and London. They have submitted an extended report which shows a most satisfactory condition and an exceptional record. Every dollar received by the treasurer has been forwarded for the relief of the people for whom it was given. No portion of the funds was employed for administrative expenses, these being provided privately. The report further shows that the committee has sent for relief $3,162.25 more than has been received in contributions, this amount representing interest received on daily balances held against outstanding drafts from the field.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

"May God bless and prosper you."-F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va.

"May the Gospel Advocate force live for a long time to contend for the truth. There is no paper so dear to me."
—H. M. Towery, Scranton, Ark.

G. A. Jamieson reports a new congregation of thirty members at Hanna, Alberta, Canada, There is an enrollment of eighty-two in the Bible-study classes.

Changes of address: C. E. Coleman, from Trenton, Ga., to 200 Woolfolk Street, Macon, Ga.; H. C. Shoulders, from Winchester, Ky., to Sellersburg, Ind. May the Lord bless these two useful men in their new fields.

W. T. Hines writes from Braman, Okla.: "I held a meeting here of two weeks' duration. No visible results, but we hope to see results after a while. At the last we had much snow, which stopped the country people from attending."

From R. V. Cawthon, Mount Juliet, Tenn., January 4: "I have been confined to my bed, ever since I saw you last, with boils and erysipelas. I am able to sit up now, however, and hope to be out soon. May the Lord bless you and the dear old Gospel Advocate in accomplishing more good this year than ever."

From Evander S. Samuels, Burgess, Miss., January 3: "I would like to hear from any school board that desires to elect a principal who is a loyal Christian and who is a university man with eight years' experience as a teacher, and whose wife is also an experienced teacher. Have taught our home school four years."

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, December 31: "There were four good services at the Ennis Avenue Church yesterday and one addition. I made four visits in the sick rooms in the afternoon. I baptized two men following the Friday-evening Bible lesson. The minister has begun a series of thirteen sermons on Acts of Apostles."

Earl M. Hodson writes from Rogersville, Ala.: "I am so glad you are putting the Postmaster-General's permission to send papers to soldiers; I shall send all the Gospel Advocates that I can find. I am so glad, too, to know that Brother Dunn goes to one of the camps. God bless his going. Greater success than ever to the Gospel Advocate in the new year."

From A. L. Gepford, 1613 South Walnut Street, Shelbyville, III.: "Kindly say through the columns of the Gospel Advocate that I am looking for a home among the churches of the South, and would be pleased to hear from any congregation in need of a meeting or one which wishes to locate a man for regular work in the city or in city and county combined. I can give first-class references both as to character and ability."

From C. E. Coleman, 200 Woolfolk Street, Macon, Ga., December 31: "On December 27, at my home, Mr. Eugene Alexander Stuckey and Miss Sadie Belle Elder were united in marriage by the writer. Mr. Stuckey is a wholesale merchant of Brunswick, Ga. Miss Sadie Belle is a daughter of Brother and Sister Elder, of Estill Springs, Tenn. She attended the Nashville Bible School two or three sessions and has lately been teaching in Brunswick."

From the brethren at Pikeville, Tenn.: "We are trying to build a house for the Lord at Red Hill. This place is fought hard by the sects. The members are nearly all poor. If we cannot get more help, we do not know how we can pull through. One brother said if we would put the material on the ground, he would build the house, but that seems to be the hard part, Please help us, as the Lord loves a cheerful giver." (Jim Agee, Sam Dyer, G. S. Marsh, Committee.)

From Charles Pullen, Greenville, S. C.: "Dr. Carson has kindly consented to give us the use of a classroom for our Lord's-day worship. All Christians in Camp Sevier who desire to meet with brethren for worship on Lord's day are cordially invited to come to the 'Y'. Unit 86, at 2:30 P.M. If your wives or friends are here, bring them along and help us worship God 'in spirit and in truth.' The quarantine has hindered our work, but with your help we hope to see the cause of Christ grow even in an army camp."

M. C. Kurfees writes: "I am rejoiced to see the announcement that John E. Dunn has been appointed a religious worker among the soldier boys at Camp Sevier, at Greenville, S. C. This will be great for the boys and comforting to their mothers and other relatives and friends. As Paul at the time he wrote the Philippian Epistle, took advantage of a similar situation among the Roman soldiers and so used it that 'the whole pretorian guard' heard of Christ, so those of us who know Brother Dunn feel sure that he will make the best possible use of the situation and prove a great moral and religious support to many a soldier."

From Foy E. Wallace, Sr., Thorp Spring, Texas, January 3: "Our great and good men are falling fast. I am sad over this. So many in the last year have died that will be almost impossible to ever replace. I thank God, though, that we have a large body of young preachers coming on, perhaps the largest ever known to us, that are really preparing themselves for good work. May the lives and labors of these godly men—Lipscomb, Poe, as well as many of these old soldiers that have not yet answered the roll call—be an example and inspiration to the young preachers of the land that will go far in saving the church from further apostasy led by the 'digressives.'"

From J. C. Estes, Dallas, Texas, January 4: "Another year has been ushered in upon us and another true soldier of the cross has been promoted to a higher position—John T. Poe. Time and tide are speeding us all on either to weal or woe. May we be true and faithful—no slackers—in our Master's cause, which is greater and, if slackers, more terrible and awful than the world war. Last Lord's day I preached at Tolbert, where, in the beginning of 1902, I began my ministerial work in this country, which I mark as the real and true beginning of my preaching. The Lord willing, I shall go back there the fifth Sundays. I have one Sunday per month to engage in this year. If you want my services, write me at 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas.

From D. S. Ligon, Forgan, Okla., December 28: "I do not know what the brethren will do in this 'Strip' another year, but I do not see how I can remain here on the support I have received this year. The brethren here, as for the most part of them, have done their part well, but some have not done anything, and it has come to pass that not many brethren who are well fixed at home and with an old and well-established congregation will help in mission work. I have received some help from a few brethren through the Leader, and one or two congregations have sent me a donation. All this has not been much, but it helped me. I feel that I have done my duty here in preaching the word of the Lord. Till further notice all may address me at Denton, Texas, my home."

From T. A. Phillips, Drumright, Okla., January 5: "May I be permitted at this late hour to speak a few words in regard to the passing of David Lipscomb? I shall always be glad that I had the pleasure of meeting and talking with that grand old disciple before God called him home. I visited his home in Nashville in the fall of 1915 and talked with him for perhaps half an hour. He was then very feeble. I remember that he did not arise, but remained in a reclining chair. One statement he made which impressed me very much was: 'The Bible is a book that never grows old.' Of course, we deplore his death; but we should be glad that he lived and that from his beautiful life of faith and works we may receive inspiration that will help us to walk in the narrow way that leads unto life eternal. But really David Lipscomb is not dead, for we can truly say of him that he lives in his works; and though we say he is dead, yet he speaks. May God help us all to do more in this new year than in the past."

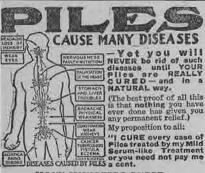

From R. C. Bell, Dallas, Texas, January 1: "New Year greetings! I am using this date, which we all expect to use, so many times, for the first time; for I am upearly and it is yet before day, 1918. As I use it, I prey God's blessings upon the world for the year, because in all probability it is to be a year of war and suffering for many peoples, who will feel the need of God's help and should seek it as never before. Evidently God's people, along with others, need chastisement from him, and will obtain spiritual good if they would but walk humbly and faithfully before their God. I am in the midst of a pleasant session in school. Between preaching every first day of the week and school work the other six, I am kept very busy; but I expect relief in June, when I hope, the Lord willing, to obtain a university M.A. degree. I am working for this degree that I may be the better equipped for God's work and because I think I can use it to his glory. During the summer months I, beginning at Alvord, Texas, as soon as school is out, shall be in the evangelistic field. My address for the next six months is 2610 State Street, Dallas, Texas."

Nichol-Penick Debate.

BY J. PAUL KIMBRELL.

Yesterday (December 15) marked the close of a discussion at Grayville between C. R. Nichol and I. N. Peniek. It is needless to say that it was interesting from start to finish, as both sides were ably represented. All who know Brother Nichol know him to be one of our strongest debaters, and Elder Penick is generally conceded to be one of the ablest representatives of the Baptist people. Four propositions were discussed-namely: (1) "The Scriptures teach that baptism to a proper subject is for (in order to) remission of sins." (2) "The Scriptures teach that the New Testament church was set up (established) during the personal ministry of Christ on earth." (3) "The Scriptures teach that the regenerate child of God can so apostatize as to be finally lost." (4) "The Scriptures teach that in regeneration and salvation the Holy Spirit comes in direct, immediate touch with the heart."

In this report I wish to give both men credit for gentlemanly conduct and to deal out fairness and justice to both, but it must be said that Elder Penick's weakness was manifested in his failure, in most cases, to examine the proof texts submitted. Although he held up for the first two days better than expected, he began on the third day to lose his footing and weakened to the end. On the fourth day he did not even define his proposition. Early in his first affirmative he branched off from the operation of the Spirit on to the doctrine of total depravity. The following speeches on both sides dealt to a great extent with that doctrine. Elder Penick was pressed to tell whether his body or spirit sinned. He would not say which did the sinning. He was also pressed to tell where the spirit of a child came from. He would not say, To make a long story short, it was a great victory for the truth.

Three of our preaching brethren were present and six Baptist preachers. J. W. Jenkins, of Norris City, III., moderated for Elder Penick, and the writer for Brother Nichol.

In East Tennessee.

BY FRED M. LITTLE.

Almost four years have passed since the writer moved to Cleveland to work in the interest of the church in this section. If I could have looked forward at that time and seen what I can now realize to be facts, very likely I would not have ventured to undertake the task; but I am not sorry now that the effort has been made. Some good has been done and some have sacrificed in the past and will continue faithful under any circumstances. The burden of the church here resolves itself into paying the indebtedness on a church building, and I am trying to discharge my duties as the head of my family by teaching school.

Very few are here now who were here as members of the congregation when I came. Some have moved away, and some have become discouraged and fallen out of line. There are twoscore or more who have united with the congregation from time to time, so that the work is kept up; and we are hoping the day will come when we will be free of debt and all will rejoice in the fact that the work in East Tennessee has not failed. So the congregation asks you to remember it in your prayers and gifts.

The writer wishes all his friends to know that while his name is not appearing in the paper often, yet he is at work every day in the interest of all that he conceives to be worth working for-a living in this world and a home in heaven.

That 1918 will bring peace to a weary world is my prayer.

Value of a Soul. BY JOHN T. POE.

Human nature is something wonderful, a thing we do not now understand. That we shall know ourselves in the eternal state as God knows us here is possible and highly probable. Inspiration says that we shall know as we are known, and that seems to give assurance. But I am sure of one thing now: that few men ever stop to ask, "For what purpose did God make man?" It is certain that God had a purpose in the creation of man. Divine wisdom does not work at random; and since man is, so far as we know, the highest work ever yet evolved from the divine source, we must conclude that some high and noble purpose moved divine wisdom to create man. It is wonderful to sit down and think of the things God did to prepare a place for man before he created him. The earth, with all its tenantry-insects, fishes, fowls, animals-all were made for man. The flowers and fruits of earth are all for his use. They were created for him. And when, through great periods of time, the earth was ready for man, God created him and gave him dominion over all he had made on the earth. Man dominated all; the earth, with all it contained, was his. This, all this, for man and his use and happiness, at his inn, or stopping place, on the way to his final abode, his eternal home. There, in the final abode, man will reach the glory for which God designed him. Of that home, prepared for the redeemed and saved of men, we have but a faint idea. God has kindly given us, I suppose, all that we are able to understand of its beauty and glory; but we may be sure that its grandeur, glory, and magnificence will be as far above any conception we can have of it here as the heavens are high above the earth. Paul, who was once permitted to see it, could tell us nothing of it. He knew no law of language by which to convey its grandeur, its wonderful glory, to men; for men can understand such things only by comparison, and there was nothing on earth to compare with things in heaven, and so Paul summed it up in one expression and called it "an eternal weight of glory." That was the best he could do. But there are yet some other faint glimmerings given us in Revelation. "They shall sit with me on my throne," said Jesus. And again: "They shall reign with me." And yet again from Paul: "Don't you know you shall govern angels?" through John in Patmos we get a glimpse of the holy city, with its gates of pearl, its river of life and tree of life, and the streets paved with pure, transparent gold that looked like a sea of glass; and God dwelling with his children; and then the crowns-O. the crowns we all shall wear! Angels wear no crowns, but God's children will. "Kings and priests unto God." O, the glory of it! Who can describe it? And it is eternal. That means forever and for evermore. No wender Jesus valued a human soul as worth more than worlds; and it is evident that God created man to have glory and honor and to be placed over the works of his hands.

Self-Help.

Every man and woman in the land ought to prize above almost every other quality the capacity for selfhelp; and yet every man and woman in the land will at some time or other be sorely in need of the help of others, and at some time or other will find that he or she can in turn give help even to the strongest. The quality of self-help is so splendid a quality that nothing can compensate for its loss; yet, like every virtue, it can be twisted into a fault to the point of coldhearted arrogance, of inability to understand that now and then the strongest may be in need of aid, and that for this reason alone, if for no other, the strong should always be glad of the chance in turn to aid the weak .- Theodore Roosevelt.

OBITUARIES

Wheeler.

Alexander Sevier Wheeler was born in Marion County, Tenn., on March 15, 1837. Two years later he moved, with his parents, to Polk County, Ga. In his twenty-ninth year he was married to Miss Sarah Elmira Wilkins. To this union were born eight boys and five girls. He confessed his Savior and was baptized in 1867, and lived a Christian life until his death. He died on September 2, 1917. He is survived by his wife and six children.

A FRIEND.

Tevis.

The publishers of the Gospel Advocate will be sorry to hear of the death of old Brother Nat Tevis, of Crandall, Texas. He had been a reader of the Advocate for a number of years. He was seventy-six years old. Ever since he began to read the Advocate, he said he began to read the Advocate, he said the more he read it, the better he liked it. It was his companion for the last eight years. His Bible and the Gospel Advocate were his com-pany. His wife died eight years ago. "Uncle Nat," as we all called him, was a mighty good man. He took sick with a severe cold on Monday and only lived until Thursday. He died on November 15, 1917. We will surely miss him in our Lord's-day service. He was faithful until the last. Brother William White was born on March 16, 1877. He married Alice Tyler on September 3, 1896, and to this union were born eleven children—eight girls and three boys. Brother White obeyed the gospel in 1900 and lived true to the cause until 1900 and lived true to the cause until his death. All of his children that are old enough to know their duty are Christians. The home, the church, and the neighborhood have suffered a great loss; but our loss is his gain. His leved ones weep, but not as those who have no hope. The writer had the privilege of baptizing his mother at the age of seventy-six. She went to her reward a few weeks before his going away. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

MORRIS M. BEARD.

Williams.

W. Syd Williams was born and reared in Carroll County, Tenn. He moved from Tennessee to Rector, Ark., where he lived until four years ago, when he moved to Campbell, Mo., where he lived until his death, which occurred on Wednesday morning, November 21, after five days' illness of pneumonia. Brother Williams was a Christian in the true sense of the word, and no higher tribute can be paid to any man. In his death the church at Campbell has lost a strong link in their chain of usefulness; the

A Novel Method and Very Effective -- Costs but Little to Try.

There is a way out of every difficulty. and those who suffer from catarrh can learn of a pleasant and novel method of relief if they will take the trouble to write a brief letter.

In Atlanta there is a respected physician who has been treating catarrh success-fully by a unique plan, for over forty-three years, and yet a lot of catarrh sufferers don't know about him. He doesn't advise internal medi-cines, which may upset the stomach, nor sprays, salves and such things, which cannot reach far back enough. His is the smoke-vapor method, and is produced by a remedy made from such natural medicinal agents as herbs. flowers and berries.

By writing to Dr.J.W. Blosser, 881 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and enclosing ten cents in coin or (stamps, he will forward a trial outfit ready for you to use. Dr. Blosser's remedy has been found very effective, not only in chronic catarrh, but in catarrhal headaches, asthma, roaring and buzzing in the ears leading to loss of hearing.

Send ten cents for this trial outfit, and watch it clear up the breathing tubes so that you will feel you could have saved yourself a lot of suffering and trouble if you had heard of Dr. Blosser's Remedy before.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a small bottle of Danderine right now-Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless, and seraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff-that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the bair as dandruff. It robs the bair of its luster, its strength, and its very life, eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which, if not remedied, causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine to-night, now, any time, will surely save your hair.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair. Try it!

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

Don't Stay Gray! Here's a Simple Receipt that Anybody Can Apply With a Hair Brush.

The use of sage and sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's She used it to keep her hair time. beautifully dark, glossy, and attrac-tive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded, or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out of date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a fifty-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after an-other application or two it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Com-pound is a delightful tollet requisite for these who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

Blood Poison is Sneaking.

It steals upon you in the most unexpected manner. Beginning with a mere scratch of the skin and aided by the careless touch of a pair of dirty hands, the slight wound becomes infected, festers, and spreads. The application of Gray's Ointment in all cases of cuts, burns, scalds, bruises, stings, sores, whether large or small, will put a stop to any possible chance of infection and blood poison. URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a Class of Salts if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You -Drink Lots of Water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back, or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive. It cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Opportunity at Poplar Bluff, Mo. BY L. M. WARD.

Our city has a population of about ten thousand inhabitants and is one of the largest, best, and busiest towns in Southeast Missouri. Out of the ten thousand people, we have about twelve faithful members of the church of Christ who meet regularly on each Lord's day to study the word of God and observe the Lord's Supper. While It is true that we have been organized some three years, it is also true that we have had almost every disadvantage that one could think of. We have not had a building in which to hold services, except in a lodge hall or basement, either of which is a very undesirable place for worship, and this is one of the greatest disadvantages that we have had to contend with. Again, the town has in it about ten different sectarian bodies, each one having its influence over a certain number of people, so that it is very difficult for us to get a hearing. But the greatest difficulty with the church here at present is that we are too weak in a financial way to support a minister. Some months ago we purchased, through the Poplar Bluff Loan and Building Association, the Southern Methodist property here, at a cost of twenty-five hundred dollars. Seven of our members are paying for this in monthly payments of twenty-three dollars and forty-three cents per month. The company holds a deed of trust for two thousand dollars, on which our payments are being applied, and our note which we gave for the balance of five hundred dollars will be due in March. So, taking these things into consideration, it does not seem likely that we will be financially able to support a preacher soon. During existence we have had some two or three short meetings, but, owing to the fact that we have had no desirable place in which to hold them, it was next to impossible for us to get a hearing, the result being that we had very poor success. But we have not quit, neither do we expect to; for we believe that if we continue the fight of faith, God will bless us and erown us with success,

Now, brethren, what we need is a minister. We are not asking for money, but we do believe that if some plan could be made for some of the stronger congregations to send us a good, lively brother to work with us for a few months, a great work could be accomplished-a work that would enable us to increase in numbers and finance until we could pay a man ourselves. It seems that a town of this size is in a sad state of affairs when there are so many different religious bodies here, and not one of them teaching the plain, simple, unadulterated gospel of Christ. We believe that there are numerous people who are members of the other churches, as well as those who have never united with any body, who would unite with the church if we could get in touch with them through the gospel. it should be done now, for the time is coming, and now is, when these bodies are drifting so far away from the truth that many are becoming dissatisfied, and now is the time for the loyal church to launch forth a battle for the truth in this town. Brethren, will not some one coöperate with us in placing a good, strong man here who will be able to teach the truth and defend it?

This is a brief outline of the situation here, and any communication will be promptly answered. If further information is desired, write to Dr. Dewitt Eskew or L. M. Ward, Poplar Bluff, Mo.

Recipe for Gray Hair.

Field Notes.

BY C. E. HOLT.

In this issue I wish to say a few things in regard to Florence and its environments. We now have a wave of business prosperity unparalleled in the history of the country. Many years ago a "mushroom" boom struck this city, on which a few rode into fortunes, while the multitudes were fleeced and bled and left disconcerted and discouraged, many of them financially wrecked. That "phantom" boom soon subsided because there was nothing backing it but foundationless speculations. It is not so now. The government is building huge nitrate plants here, costing millions of dollars, and these with their accessories will bring thousands of people and millions of wealth to Florence and surrounding country. Possibly there is no better place in the United States to invest than Florence, Ala. But some will ask: How is the church of Christ advancing? keeping pace with the other lines of interest? I am glad to state that since I returned to Florence I have visited a number of points in the county where there are prosperous churches of Christ. While the church in the city has drawn liberally upon the country churches for its growth and strength within the last decade, and is still enjoying a decided growth from this source, yet the country churches are more prosperous than I have ever known them to be, both in number and efficiency. A large part of their prosperity is due to the work of our evangelist, Brother J. T. Harris. He has spent several years in evangelistic work in Lauderdale County and in contiguous territory. The Gospel Advocate has quite a circulation among the disciples of this county, but we want to enlarge its circulation among them. Brother L. T. Farrar has been, and is yet, a great power in this section of country. Prospects for the present year are very good.

The Useful Peanut.

The peanut is a sturdy friend in time of need. Now when the Food Administration is asking that fats be saved, the peanut comes to the rescue in more than one combination. There is peanut butter, for instance. It should be more widely used. The only reason that it is not is because people do not know how best to use it. Even peanut-butter sandwiches are seldom well made.

The "butter" for them should never be spread as it comes from the jar. Put it in a cup or bowl and combine it with twice as much thin cream, milk, or water. Stir until thoroughly creamy and of the consistency of mayonnaise, then vary the flavor by adding a little shaved cheese, chopped pickles or olives, hot catchup, orange marmalade, chopped dates and lemon juice, salad dressing, of onion juice, with a little bit of salt as required.

Besides its use in sandwiches, however, there are countless other delicious ways of using peanut butter, as in soups, breads, and cakes. It serves both as shortening and thickening and adds richness, color, and flavor. No food, of course, can be judged by its fuel value alone; but it is interesting to note that, from the point of fuel value, peanut butter is worth three times its weight in round steak, four times its weight in eggs, seven times its weight in potatoes, and twice its weight in bread.-Selected.

Keep Our Bodies Warm.

Pure, rich, red blood is a necessity in the production of animal heat. It keeps our bodies warm. We all know very well that when the arteries that carry it to a limb are bound or tied, the temperature of the limb is immediately lowered.

There is a suggestion in this that, at this time of year especially, we should take Hood's Sarsaparilla, if our blood is impure, impoverished, or pale. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood good in quality and quantity. It has an unequaled record for radi-cally and permanently removing blood diseases, scrofula, rheumatism, and catarrh, and giving strength and tone to the whole system. It is a scientific combination of roots, barks, herbs, and other medicinal substances that have long been used by successful physicians. Get it to-day.-Advt.

Lighten Your Cares.

"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Quick is the succession of human events. The cares of to-day are seldom the cares of to-morrow; and when we lie down at night we may safely say to most of our troubles: "Ye have done your worst, and we shall meet no more."-Cowper.

"He Careth for You." BY JOHN HAYES

The year 1917 is now gone; and tonight, while reading my evening lesson, this precious promise comes to me with cheer and comfort: "Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you." (1 Pet. 5: 7.)

Looking back over a hard year's work and recounting the trials and dark days that have been mine, it is sweet to find comfort in this precious promise: "He careth for you."

The child of God forgets that he is his cares upon the Lord. Where is there an earthly friend so true and faithful as that? And how often do we rob ourselves of that peace of soul by not trusting in Him who has said, "He eareth for you?" To-night my heart is sad. A son drafted in the army and two little girls with no mother's tender influence; but with all this, how glad I am to live and labor for the kingdom of Christ!

The year just closed has been a busy year for me, but I am not satisfied If God lets me live on through 1918, I hope to do more preaching than ever before. Much of my time has been spent in the mission work, and no one loves this kind of work more than I do. Trusting Him for life and the things needful for support, I bid the old year good-by. I have made mistakes, have failed in many ways, but with faith in God I look ahead, fully determined to be hard at work in a warfare that means no compromise. no quitting, no surrender, "until the war is over."

My address for two months will be Mooresville, Ala.

Our unpaid bills are: Song books $4.20; tracts, $3. Total, $7.20.

Summary: Total receipts, $82.60; total paid out or due, $63.49; balance on hand, December 23, $19.11.

December contributors outside of Minneapolis: An Indiana brother, $1: Earl Martin and wife, Nashwauk, Minn., $2; A. M. Burton, Tennessee, $10; A. Williams, Illinois, $8; "A Sister," Hamilton, Mo., $1; Sophie Wiley, California, $1; L. I. Gibbs, California, $3; Anna Ogden, Indiana, $1; "A Sister in Christ," Salem, Ind., $5.

Aid to the extent of $2.11 was received from Louisville in the form of extra song books (new), and some tracts from Huron, S. D.

Brother Smith found the extremely cold weather of the first part of December too much for his Southern blood and clothing and returned South on December 18. Of the receipts above, twenty dollars was received after he left. We continue our home meetings, and hope to have public meetings soon.

We were rejoiced to discover two more loyal Christian families last Sunday—Brother F. S. Taylor and his wife, his son and his son's wife. We will be glad to know of any true and loyal evangelist coming this way, as we hope to be able to arrange some special meetings for any who could stop long enough to hold some mission meetings. Address me at 4405 Xerxes Avenue, South.

An Appreciation.

BY JOHN THOMAS RAMSEY.

I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate for about fifteen years, and I am safe in saying that it has made me to-day what I am-the writings from such men as D. Lipscomb, T. B. Larimore, E. A. Elam, E. G. Sewell, A. B. Lipscomb, J. C. McQuiddy, M. C. Kurfees, H. Leo Boles, F. W. Smith, and other great men whom I shall not mention for lack of space. I can truly say that the Gospel Advocate is the best and safest paper among the brotherhood to-day, and we cannot do without it. Let every reader of the Advocate send in some new subscriptions by the first of January. It was through the Gospel Advocate that Brother Lipscomb's work and life was so widely manifested, and I must say that the life and work of Brother Lipscomb no one can change. It will always stand as the pages of an open history, and nobody has a right to try to change it. Brethren, let us all be faithful and true, for it may not be long until we shall follow after. My address is 2317 North Hall Street, Dallas, Texas.

Former Health Commissioner Says Nuxated Iron

Should Be Used in Every Hospital and Prescribed by Every Physician—Attributes His own Great Physical Activity Today at Over 60 Years of Age Largely to His Personal Use of Nuxated Iron

WHAT FORMER HEALTH COMMISSIONER KERR SAYS

"As Health Commissioner of the City of Chicago, I was importuned many times to recommend different medicines, mineral waters, etc. Never yet have I gone on record as favoring any particular remedy, but I feel that in Nuxated Iron an exception should be made to the rule. I have taken Nuxated Iron myself and experienced its health-giving strength-bullding effect, and in the interest of the public welfare, I feel it my duty to make known the results of fits use. I am well past my three-score years and want to say that I believe that my own great physical activity is due largely today to my personal use of Nuxated Iron, and if my endorsement shall induce anaemic, nervous, run-downmen and women to take Nuxated Iron, and receive the wonderful tonic benefits which I have received. I shall feel greatly gratified that I made an exception to my life-long rule in recommending it. From my own experience with Nuxated Iron, I feel that it is such a valuable remedy that it ought to be used in every hospital and prescribed by every physician in this country."

M-WKReyn Former Health Commissioner, City of Chicago

NOTE—Nuxated Iron, which has been used by Former Health Commissioner Kerr with such surprising results, and which is prescribed and recommended by physicians in such a great variety of cases, is not a patient medicine nor secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic fron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeds most potent remedy for nearly all forms of indigestion as well as most potent remedy in nearly all forms of indigestion as well as most potent remedy in nearly all forms of indigestion as well as most potent remedy in nearly all forms of indigestion as well as and troubles of Health Comforts 1300,000 to any charitable institution if they cannot take any man or woman under 80 who lacks from and increase their strength 100 per cent, or over in four weeks' time provided they have no serious organic trouble. They also offer to refund your money if it does not at east double your strength and edurance in ten days' time. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

Former Health Commissioner Kerr has given years of his life fighting for public health in his own and other cities. It was he who introduced Anti-toxin for Dightheria in Chicago's Health Department. He purified the milk for the Consumers and thereby helped to save the lives of thousands of bables. He introduced the anti-splitting ordinance which has been copied all over the country and also took care of the sewers and garbage in the interest of public health. He is positive that the wide-spread use of Nuxated from would greatly lessen the worries and troubles of Health Commissioners in keeping up a high standard of public health.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir: Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years, and have always had trouble with it till I got your appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable Godsend to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture If all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it. My rupture is now all healed up, and nothing ever did it but your appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself. I will say a good word for your appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am.

Yours very sincerely,

- I It is absolutely the only appli-ance of the kind on the market to-day, and in it are embodied the prin-ciples that inventors have sought after for years.
- 2. The appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of position.
- Being an air cushion of soft rub-ber, it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation.
- 4. Unlike the ordinary so-called "pads" used in other trusses, it is not cumbersome or ungainly.
- It is small, soft, and pliable, and positively cannot be detected through the clothing.
- 6. The soft, pliable bands holding the appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.
- 7. There is nothing about it to get foul; and when it becomes solled, it can be washed without injuring it in the least.
- There are no metal springs in the appliance to torture one by cut-ting and bruising the flesh.
- 9. All of the material of which the appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe appliance to wear.
- 10. My reputation for honesty and fair dealing 's so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and my prices are so reasonable, my terms so fair, that there certainly should be no hesitancy in sending free coupon to-day.

EDIFYING AS THE NEED MAY BE

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

The Matter of Exemption.

Our Lord has always demanded faith of his followers. Fundamentally he never requires more faith at one time than another-at every time just enough to accept him and trust him. The amount of faith is indicated by the song we sing, "Only Trust and Obey." But there are times when one's faith is more severely tried than at other times. As Christians, we sometimes allow ourselves to believe that we are entitled to exemption from many things that try and vex men's souls. We do not openly rebel, but we raise the question: "Why does God permit certain individuals to pass through such trying afflictions?" We should remember that the Savior never promised his followers exemption from trial and affliction, but, on the other hand, warned that these things would come upon them even as they had come to him. "Remember the word that I said unto you, A servant is not greater than his lord." In not granting exemption from trial to his followers, Jesus followed his Father's rule as brought out in the Old Testament. God called Abraham to fulfill a task that has no parallel in history. He warned Moses that he would have plenty of opposition, not only from alien enemies, but in the ranks of rebellious people he was to lead through the wilderness. He told Isaiah to go and prophesy to a people, but told him, too, that this people would not hear him. If thus the Father tried the hearts of men, we should not be surprised to hear the Son say to his disciples: "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." Nor should we be surprised to hear the apostle Paul, with his face set toward Jerusalem, say: "And now, behold, I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there; save that the Holy Spirit testifieth unto me in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me."

A Signal Example of Nonexemption.

One of the most striking examples of nonexemption from trial is that of John the Baptist. Just before the tragedy of his death and while he was lying in prison patiently waiting, no doubt, for his Master to come and take him from the clutches of a cruel, heartless, godless tyrant, his faith was put to a very great test. How natural it would have been for John to have grown impatient! Why should the herald of the king be cut down in the prime of his manhood's usefulness? Why should he lose his head because he had dared to speak the truth to the sinful Herod? Why should he suffer a slow death in a damp, disease-laden prison, while the One for whom he had risked his life went about his business apparently unmindful of his friend? It is small wonder that the thought came into John's heart that perhaps he had been mistaken in the man. After all, it appeared that this Jesus was not "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." Determined to clear up the mystery, he sends two of his faithful disciples to make a specific inquiry of Jesus. John's question was: "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" This question is a witness of his wonderful faith in the promises of God. You might have robbed John of his faith in the personality of the One whom he honestly believed was the Savior, but his faith in the promise was unflinching. He reasoned that if Jesus was not the One, God would send another. But of still greater significance is Jesus' reply contained in Matt. 11: 4-6. Read it and you will find two things that not only John the Baptist, but every disciple, must learn. Jesus teaches: (1) You must believe and trust me fully. (2) You must be willing to make any sacrifice I may demand, even though you do not understand. The answer was entirely satisfactory to John. It should be to us.

A Time to Remember.

To-day, while the world is being drenched with human blood and while suffering and sorrow cast dark shadows over nearly every home, the scoffer and the lukewarm professor of religion raise the question: "Where is your Christianity, and what is it worth?" We have great reason for the exercise of simple, childlike faith in God. It is time to remember what Jesus said: "The servant is not above his Lord." It is time to recall Simon Peter's words and take courage, "though now for a little while, if need be, ye have been put to grief in manifold trials, that the proof of your faith, being more precious than gold that perisheth though it is proved by fire, may be found unto praise and glory and honor at the revelation of Jesus Christ." "Blessed is he," Jesus said, "whosoever shall find no occasion of stumbling in me." Some are taking advantage of this crisis to descant upon what they call "the signs of the coming kingdom." It would be better for every man among us to keep busy giving to this weary, heart-sick world some tangible, living proof of Christ's kingdom already established and his faith in it. "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with a willing spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee."

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

Power of the Press.

One of the greatest powers in the world is the printing press. It is a power for the dissemination of ideas and theories and propagandas unequaled, be they good or bad, true or false. In the early days of Christianity and for many years after its inauguration upon earth the printing press was unknown, possibly not having entered the minds of the greatest visionaries of that age. But the transmission of thought and ideas through writing is very old, dating back to the remotest ages of antiquity.

I am sure that the time will never come when the press can be safely and successfully substituted for the presence and power and personal magnetism of the individual; this fact is clearly seen in the divine economy set forth in the apostolic writings. But the printing press as a powerful agent in the propagation of truth should not be lost sight of, nor its importance minimized by Christians whose duty it is to teach the truth to all nations. The printing press is not only one of the most economical, but also one of the most effectual, methods of getting the truth before the people. A small investment in the way of a religious paper, tract, or book often brings fine results.

Some years ago a brother in a Tennessee town told me how he managed to convert his wife. This, as many can testify, is not always an easy thing to do, even when one has his heart set on the work. The same is just as true of many husbands who are unsaved and whose wives are anxious to convert them. But the brother's plan was simple and cheap and effective. He took the Gospel Advocate, and would always call his wife's attention to some story in the "Home Reading" without any reference to any article on any doctrinal matter. In this way the good woman became interested in the weekly visits of the paper, and also in the writings of some of the preachers whom she knew personally; and if the paper should be late in making its appearance, she would make some remark indicating her interest in the paper. Finally the husband suggested as a matter of economy that they discontinue the paper for a time, at least. To this suggestion the wife kindly, but firmly, objected, saying that she would much prefer the Advocate to some of the many secular papers and magazines for which they had the habit of subscribing at the beginning of each new year. Soon after this the wife obeyed the gospel, and then cheerfully admitted that the Advocate was the chief agency in her conversion.

A small tract on a vital theme, well written, costing no more than five or ten cents, will often work wonders. A little book published by the McQuiddy Printing Company, the title of which is "Evidence of Pardon," and which retails at twenty-five cents, worked a perfect revolution in a Pennsylvania town. A young sister purchased a copy of "Evidence of Pardon" and passed it around among her Methodist friends; as a result, eleven of them came into the church of Christ from reading the little book.

The McQuiddy Printing Company, of Nashville, Tenn., publishes thousands of books and tracts that should be in the hands of people who need the very knowledge they contain. Other books and tracts should be written on vital themes. Controversial literature is sometimes needed; but some good tracts with pith and point and virility, of a positive character, are needed. Let dead issues rest, and let long-winded, platitudinous articles and essays be thrown overboard, that the ship of salvation be not burdened with a useless and worthless cargo. Let personal grievances be put into places of seclusion and forgetfulness, and let us get on a higher and grander and loftier plane. Let us make the present year one of unprecedented activity and usefulness.

The Lord's Possession.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." (Ps. 24: 1.)

We are accustomed to speak of material things as "ours' or "mine," which is true only in a secondary sense; for we are but the stewards into whose hands our Master has intrusted his goods. The earth and they that dwell therein are God's by the right of creation and preservation, and in the highest and truest sense man owns nothing. Man is but a tenant on this globe, with a very short tenure called "life;" and the more of this world's goods he has intrusted to him, the greater becomes his responsibility before God. There can be no question about man's responsibility for the use he makes of material things. There are a number of parables given by the Savior, as well as a number of plain passages, which teach in the clearest manner that man will be held to a strict account in the last day for the use to which he puts his Master's goods.

The earth is God's storehouse from which he brings food for the sustenance of his creatures, and man has no right to abuse and impoverish the ground to which he may have a legal title. There is a great principle involved in the matter of rightful ownership. It is God's, made as one means of perpetuating the race of man; and for one generation to so use the ground as though it was not a rich legacy bequeathed to them to be handed down to coming generations is a sin and the basest ingratitude. While the soil responds to the touch of industry, smiling upon the toller with its golden fruitage, it needs rest and care, as if it were some living being. It can be neglected, abused, and impoverished until it cannot give seed to the sower nor bread to the eater. Great portions of the earth have been so abused that artificial stimulants in the way of chemical fertilizers are necessary to its production at all, while under proper treatment this soil should be even after many centuries almost virgin. The great trouble lies in man's selfishness, which leads him to grasp for what is in sight without a consideration for those who may come after him. If through the grace of my fellow being I should be granted the use of his house for a limited time, and I should abuse his property, others would quickly judge me as unworthy of such favors. The same is true of all who abuse what God gives them to use while dwelling here. It should be a principle of great gratitude with all who till the soil to so use it that their gratitude may be manifest. There is, of course, a certain amount of unavoidable waste and deterioration of the soil, resulting from the washing rains; but many farmers, through carelessness or neglect, permit lands to go to waste in this way which could be checked.

The preservation of the soil becomes a most interesting and serious proposition when viewed in its proper light. It is not only the foundation of man's physical being, but it is the very bed rock of all industrial enterprises. As a noted politician once remarked: "Burn up your cities, and you can rebuild them; but destroy the farms, and grass will grow in your streets." Walking along the streets of Toronto, Canada, a few years ago, my companion. who was a resident of that beautiful city, took great pride in calling my attention to the wonderful and marvelous enterprises of busy Toronto. I said to him: "Do you know what upholds and sustains all this?" His reply was: "Money." "No, no," said I; "it is the man out yonder digging in the ground." The only man that adds to the material wealth of the world is the one who brings from the bosom of earth its rich products. The so-called "business" man is simply engaged in the exchanging of commodities without creating one dime of wealth. Our treatment of the earth shows a great lack of appreciation as well as a proper feeling of obligation to coming genera-

It is not difficult to at least measurably comprehend the sense in which "the earth is the Lord's," but we may experience some difficulty in grasping the truth that "they that dwell therein" are also his. To be sure, it is easy to understand how that part of the race who, accepting the gospel, are designated as the "blood-bought" become the possession of the Lord; but in what sense are the wicked and depraved his? They are said to be the children or servants of the devil, and yet belong unto the Lord There is one passage which seems to furnish a solution to the matter-viz.: "For in him we live, and move, and have our being," (Acts 17: 28.) The wicked are his in the sense of preservation, and God uses the wicked as instruments through which to accomplish his purposes. "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee." (Ps. 76: 10.) There are multiplied instances in which God used wicked chararcters for the fulfilling of prophecies. It was foretold that the great city of Babylon should be destroyed, and the Lord fulfilled this prediction through the wicked and idolatrous Mede and Persian. Darius was called the servant of God because he did what God wanted done, and because through providential means the Lord made it possible for him to destroy Babylon. Pharaoh, Joseph's brethren, the Jewish nation, and Judas in particular, all furnish examples of this fact. God rules in the kingdoms or governments of men, and at times brings to the throne or chief seat the very basest of men. "The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the lowest of men." (Dan. 4: 17.) When for the accomplishment of a divine purpose it becomes necessary for a base man to be exalted to rulership, the rabble become the servants of God in electing such to office, while those who want what they call a "good man" are unconsciously fighting against the Most High. There is great danger of nations becoming too prosperous in material things, which too often serve to inflate them with an unholy pride that forgets God. This was the trouble with Babylon and her king, which needed to be brought to a realization that God is. Nations become "stiff-necked," and nothing but tyrannical rule, internal dissensions, and an oppression leading to the cry for bread will bring them to their senses. Hence it should not always be construed as a calamity when wicked, deprayed, and debased men assume the reins of temporal power, for God may be using such for the general welfare of man. Yes, the wicked often unconsciously do the will of God and thus become his servants. But it is infinitely better to become servants of God in a religious or spiritual sense, thus being his possession as his peculiar people to show forth his praises; to be his in a willing and intelligent sense, that we may render voluntary praise and a free-will service which leads to a life of unending bliss.

What Does "D.D." Mean?

BY S. H. HALL.

This question was asked, a few moments before this article was begun, and the answer was: "Doctor of Divinity." This was in harmony with all that I had ever heard of this title that some seem so fond of wearing. But, in looking over The Sunday American, published in this city, dated January 6, 1918, 1 find what is claimed to be the statements of "the Rev. Dr. W. C. Endly, D.D.," of Cleveland, Ohio, under the attractive headlines: "To Explore at Last the Holy Places of Jerusalem-Seven Great Mysteries Which Now May Be Solved." He thinks there will be discoveries that will aid us greatly in meeting the attacks of the skeptic. Says he: "When they are found, the fabric of Christianity will be complete. Discrepancies, made so much of by the skeptic, which now form much of the discussion of the Bible, will be removed when these lost books are found." Such a statement makes you think that this "D.D." is, indeed, a believer in Christianity, an opponent to infidelity and skepticism. But what shall we say when the following is considered?

It is possible the very body of the Savior himself may be discovered. There is considerable doubt as to whether the ancient Jews embalmed the bodies of their dead, but there are authorities who contend that they did so preserve the bodies of the greatest men. If the Savior's body was embalmed, it will be found in the lost tomb. Where this tomb is now is a mystery. It is not believed by many modern scholars that it is underneath the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, where, for so many years, it was thought to be. It may be under the Rock of Omar, the site of the Temple. Only exploration will determine this; but it is certain that the Savior was buried under the then city of Jerusalem, in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, and this will be identified by its inscription.

Such a statement, coming from one who claims to be a friend of the Blble, makes me wonder if the title "Doctor of Divinity" can mean, connected with this man's name, what we are wont to say it means. It seems to me it will have to be changed, in this case, anyhow, to "the doctrine of the devil." The idea of any one's claiming that the body of Jesus may be found "underneath the Church of the Holy Sepulcher" or "the Rock of Omar," and, at the same time, claim to believe in Christianity! There is just as much sense in talking about believing in a living, walking man with his head cut absolutely off. Does Mr. Endly believe in the resurrection of Jesus Christ? Does he not know that this resurrection is the "keystone" to the wonderful proof structure that establishes the fact that Christ is the Son of God? Paul says: "Who was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." (See Rom. 1: 4.) Does Mr. Endly think that Christ's body was resurrected? If so, why does he think it may be found under the Rock of Omar, well preserved because of its being embalmed? If it should be found, then how could be meet the enemy as described in Matt. 27: 62-66? Did the enemy not hold a conference and, in anticipation of Christ's repeated prediction that he would rise the third day, put a guard there, "lest haply his disciples come and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead?" Did not the women come to the sepulcher on the first day of the week and find not the body? Did not Peter and John, after getting this news, run to the sepulcher and actually enter the tomb, but found not the body, but the linen in which he was wrapped? Did not the apostles see him after he was risen, and handle him, and identify his body as the one in which he lived before his death? Yet Mr. Endly says the body of Jesus may be found now under the site of Solomon's Temple, and identified by finding it in a tomb on which is inscribed "The Tomb of Joseph of Arimathea." Talk about finding something that would enable us to better meet the skeptic! Find what this "D.D." says may be found, and the skeptic will beat the life out of us, if I may use the expression.

Come, Mr. Endly, and tell us more about this. But let me tell you a few things now before the exploration begins -viz.: The body of Jesus will not be found under the Rock of Omar or underneath the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. The enemy tried to keep the body in the sepulcher. And when it was resurrected, they paid the soldiers to lie by saying that while they slept the disciples came and stole it away, which report continued among the Jews for years. In spite of this, this wonderful divine (?) says the body was in the sepulcher all the while and remains there. Such teachers are worse than infidels-the outspoken infidels; they are "wolves in sheep's clothing;" they are preaching infidelity under the cloak of Christianity. Again I say that "D.D.," with such, means not "Doctor of Divinity," but "the doctrine of devils," which Paul declared would come in the last days. (See 1 Tim. 4: 1,)

The following from Elders Johnnie Bruington and S. L. Hunter, of Livingston, Tenn., Route 1, is self-explanatory: "The contribution of five dollars sent in for the War Sufferers' Fund, for the Armenian Fund, credited to Hunter & Son, Livingston, Tenn., of December 27, should have been credited to the church at Holly Springs. The mistake was ours. Will you please make mention of it? We mean to contribute more soon."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Why the Gospel Advocate? Three Reasons.

Honestly, why should people subscribe for the Gospel Advocate? And why do the publishers "keep everlastingly at it" in stirring up interest in the paper? We have answered these questions in our columns many, many times. This week we will let the friends of the paper speak out.

First, because it provides a weekly incentive to the study and application of the Bible. Sister Luke McMenaway, of Lebanon, Tenn., writes this testimony: "I have read the Gospel Advocate for many years, and look forward to its coming each week. It supports and helps me to understand the Book of all books, the Bible." This good sister's message is not unusual. Almost daily we receive letters of the same tenor. Surely a journal that magnifies God's word is worthy of every Christian's support. Are you losing interest in this wonderful Book? Is it true that some member of your family or some dear friend has grown careless in Bible reading? Why not supply the mental stimulant that has helped hundreds? Make it a blessing in your home. It will not suffice to merely "take the paper." That is like buying medicine and laying it upon the shelf. But read the paper carefully and in a truly sympathetic way, and you will be helped.

Second, to keep informed on live religious topics. Brother B. H. Murphy, of Cookeville, Tenn., makes this request: "Please keep on sending the Gospel Advocate, as I always like to have it near, so I can get a good sermon at any time." This journal endeavors to supply its readers with articles that are sermons in themselves. In addition, we print the news of the churches, the activities of evangelists, and everything that is calculated to promote progress in the spread of the gospel and the maintenance of New Testament ideals in work and worship. Surely each Christian owes it to himself to keep informed and to be edified to the highest degree possible. It is wise to be acquainted with the hopes and aspirations of the brethren everywhere, to rejoice in that which is good, and to be warned against departures from truth and righteousness.

Third, as an evidence of your own faith and sense of loyalty in critical times. The well-known evangelist, Foy E. Wallace, Sr., of Thorp Spring, Texas, writes: "I cannot well do without the Gospel Advocate. It is a very welcome visitor to my home, and I hope to keep it coming even if it is war times." We wish Brother Wallace and every other reader who has stood nobly by us during this war crisis to know that they have a warm place in our hearts. There is a debt of gratitude which we shall strive to repay by improving the paper. When people are asked to economize for the sake of humanity, they should do it, but not at the expense of their spiritual welfare. That would be false economy. We may rightfully cut out luxuries, but we should do nothing that would discount our spiritual development or the advancement of the Master's cause. We really believe it is a mark of faith and loyalty to keep your paper coming.

Our readers are still sending in subscriptions for the soldier boys. There are so many that a personal acknowledgment of all would be expensive in point of postage. But, remember, we got it, and we thank you; so does the soldier boy.

Do not overlook that "Unprecedented Offer," Briefly stated, we request that new subscribers have us send the Gospel Advocate for a year at the regular price of $2, sending us only $1, with the promise to send the remaining $1 at the end of six months; and if not satisfied with the paper, to write to the publishers that you are disappointed. We will then return to you the one dollar and cancel your subscription and you shall owe us nothing. In doing this we are putting the paper on its merits.

A Good Example.

It is not enough to criticize bad people and to point out their evil ways; but unless we do good ourselves and devote our energies to useful activities and service, we shall be failures. If we cannot do something more than criticize and find fault, we shall not be noted for our virtues. So long as we are pointing out the way to others in precept, we should also show them the way by example. Consistent, godly living is the most effective teaching.

The Glorification of Liberalism.

The Aviator of The Presbyterian takes exception to the glorification of liberalism by a Chicago University pro-fessor who tells how people have been driven from the church by orthodox preaching and are won back again by the beautiful story of Jesus Christ as liberal preachers tell it. All of which, he says, "makes one smile when he looks up the statistics of the 'liberal' and the conservative churches, which show that the so-called 'liberal' denominations are weaker in America to-day than they were a hundred years ago, and that their pulpits are only kept filled by recruits from the orthodox churches-recruits for whose education orthodox boards of education have often paid."—Herald and Presbyter.

No preacher will lose his power and influence for good by simply declaring the gospel message. The man who preaches the gospel in its purity will never become a back number. Those who have been captivated by the wisdom of the world and who have startled many with their brilliancy have faded away and are forgotten; still the law of Moses lives. The religion of Jesus Christ is in the world to stay. No man should desire more liberality than is afforded by the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. Christ made us free, and free indeed. To teach and preach any other gospel than the gospel of Christ is to bring down the anathemas of heaven upon our heads. Those who wish to preach and glorify liberalism will soon perish with that liberalism, while "the word of the Lord endureth forever."

Preaching.

Preaching is the divinely appointed method of saving the lost, developing the saved, and propagating the principles of the Christian religion to the uttermost parts of the earth. Nothing can take the place of preaching in the divine economy. There are many things that can be used as aids in the work of the ongoing of the kingdom, but there is absolutely nothing that can take the place of the preached word. We fear, however, that our present conception of preaching is a modern one, not the apostolic conception. When we think of preaching, we think of a stately oration carefully prepared and faultlessly delivered, while the apostolic conception of preaching was the simple story of Christ for sinners slain. What we need simple story of Christ for sinners slain. to-day is not up-to-date p preaching.—Western Recorder. up-to-date preaching, but back-to-date

Our esteemed contemporary is right when it contends that we should have apostolic preaching rather than modern preaching. We might go further and say that it would be well to have simple living and to have simple Christianity as practiced by the early Christians. As the stream has so far progressed from its fountain head, its waters have become polluted and corrupt. Christians should demand of preachers that they preach the wordthat they preach the gospel of Christ-for it is only by obedience to the gospel that men can be saved. Preachers should not hesitate to speak out boldly, bravely, and fearlessly, declaring all the counsel of God.

Jewish History.

For the information of our readers, I quote The American Israelite as saying that the year 1917 "will be marked by two most important events in Jewish history. One was the Russian revolution, with the emancipation of the six million Jews, ten times as many as went out of Egypt at the exodus. The other is the conquest of Palestine and more especially Jerusalem by the allied troops, redeeming the Holy Land from Turkish misrule and assuring such Jews as choose to settle there full civil, religious, and probably political rights." The American Israelite recognizes that the Russian revolution may be overthrown and that the British may not keep their hold on Palestine. It adds that, with Russia free and Palestine under British control, "the remaining plague spots in Europe are Roumania and Poland, and all of the Germanic States, though in a lesser degree." It sees reason to hope for the best, and concludes that "1918 may bring the two things that we Jews most ardently pray for-peace, an honorable peace, following upon allied victory, and the final full emancipation of Jews the world over to put an end to the Jewish question, which has vexed ourselves and all the world for the last two thousand years."

* * * Loyal to His Creed.

The Herald and Presbyter, quoting one of our contributors, says:

A writer in the Gospel Advocate describes the religious destitution in the Northwest. He says: "I have not run across a single loyal person in our five years in Minnesota. He means loyal, not to the government, but to his theological creed. The trouble is not so much with Minnesota as with his sectarian doctrine, which sees nothing good in any who do not subscribe to it.

What right has the editor of the Herald and Presbyter to put a construction on the language of the contributor that is not warranted? The contributor did not tell what he meant by "loyal;" so why should the editor of the Herald and Presbyter undertake to do something for him that he did not do for himself? If the contributor meant that he had not found any one in Minnesota who was worshiping according to the New Testament pattern, and the New Testament is his creed, is there any harm in making such a statement? Is it not a fact that many religious editors of prominent religious journals do not think it really necessary to worship God as did the primitive church? Is it not frequently contended and argued that there is no necessity for one's being so punctilious as to demand a "Thus saith the Lord" for all that he does as worship to God? What has the editor of the Herald and Presbyter to say on this subject?

Less Than One Hundred Men in the United States Who Think Internationally.

Henry Morgenthau, former ambassador to Turkey, in an address recently, told his audience that there are less than one hundred men in the United States who are capable of thinking internationally. I am inclined to the view that in this he is mistaken. Doubtless there are many people who think internationally. The foreign-mission enterprises of all the churches and an earnest desire to preach the gospel to every creature in the world have turned the attention of many to the salvation of the human race. Missionaries have disseminated much information among the people of the United States. They return from foreign countries and preach each in his own locality. Through the unification of such effort, the Christian people of this nation have come to have a vivid conception of the world at large. There are many editors in this country so well informed that they think internationally. However, it is doubtless true that the terrible war that is now being waged has turned the attention of the people to international affairs as never before.

Professional Preachers.

BY E. A. ELAM.

Professional means "pertaining to a profession or to a calling; following a profession." "Profession" is used in this article in the sense of "calling," "vocation," a "business" upon which one subsists.

A preacher is one who preaches, whether he preaches "the gospel of Christ" or "a different doctrine," the whole counsel of God or a perverted gospel.

Every one who reads this paper knows, or should know, that the Bible teaches that all who can preach the gospel of Christ in Christ's spirit should and must do so. All such are called of God to preach. Woe is unto such who do not preach.

Every one who reads this paper knows, or should know, that God has ordained that he who preaches the gespel shall live of the gospel as much so and as liberally as the priest who attended the altar lived of the things of the altar; as much so as he who sows and plows lives of the fruit of his labor; as much so as the soldier is sustained by his government, and the ox which treads out the corn is fed from his master's crib.

know, that God declares that some preach themselves and not the Lord Jesus (2 Cor. 4: 5); that some handle "the word of God deceitfully" (2 Cor. 4: 2); that some corrupt the word of God, or "make merchandise" of it (margin, 2 Cor. 2: 17); that some are covetous and make merchandise of the churches (2 Pet. 2: 3), or peddle out their religious wares; that some suppose "that godliness is a way of gain" and produce strife and railing, being sick "about questionings and disputes of words" (1 Tim. 6: 3-5); that some wrest the scriptures "unto their own destruction" (2 Pet. 3: 16); and that some preach a different or perverted gospel" (Gal. 1: 6-9).

The word translated "to make merchandise," Thayer says, means "to go a-trading, to travel for business, to traffic, to trade;" "to import for sale;" "to deal in;" "to use a thing or person for gain." He cites 2 Pet. 2: 3-"make merchandise"-and James 4: 13, which see,

This is a most serious thing and a most fearful chargethat is, the charge which God himself makes that some turn godliness into a way of gain and make merchandise of the gospel.

Then let it be repeated and understood that, while God has ordained that all who proclaim the gospel should live of it, and should live of it as fully as the priests lived of the things of the altar and on the principle that the laborer is worthy of his hire, yet he also declares that whosoever traffics in religious wares or uses either persons or churches for the purpose of getting gain makes merchandise of the gospel.

Again let me say that what one preaches depends upon why one preaches. A preacher can have anxiety for all the churches" as did Paul, or he can use the churches as a matter of gain to himself.

One who is not a preacher and churches themselves can and sometimes do make merchandise of the gospel or traffic in religious affairs and use preachers and religion to further their selfish ends.

Every one who has read the Bible with any thoughtfulness whatever knows that It has never been popular to preach the word of God-"the whole counsel of God"and nothing more. Every one should know that Noah was "a preacher of righteousness" against the whole world, and that as all the people before the flood "were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, . . until the flood came and took them all away," so they will be doing when Christ comes. (Matt. 24: 38, 39.) Every one should know that Abraham, the father of the faithful, was separated from his kindred and the idolatrous world and there were not enough godly people in the world to keep him from being a stranger in a strange land. Moses, Joshua, and Samuel stood almost alone, not only against the wicked nations of earth, but also in teaching even God's chosen people his true worship. Elijah had only a few, comparatively, with him. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, John the Baptist, and the true prophets of all ages were greatly in the minority and sorely persecuted. Jesus was wounded in the house of his friends, forsaken by his apostles, and crucified for his confession of the truth. The apostles and early church were all scattered abroad, imprisoned, and many martyred for the gospel's sake. Every one should know that God condemns going with the multitude to do evil (Ex. 23: 2), and that Paul declares that "all that would live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (2 Tim. 2: 12). Stephen asks this question of the Jews who stoned him: "Which of the prophets did not your fathers persecute?" Has any one sufficient interest to read Matt. 23: 29-39?

Every one who has read the Bible knows, or should know, that God would not so solemnly warn even Christians against drunkenness, anger, wrath, malice, back-Yet every one who reads this paper knows, or should I biting, slander, lying, fraud, covetousness, stealing, dishonesty, adultery, and all sins which come through the flesh, were there no danger of Christians' yielding to temptations and committing such sins. The more church members are seen to-day indulging in such sins, and even ruled many times by such passions, the more is seen the necessity of such warnings from God. Just so, God would not so solemnly and so frequently warn all elders, preachers, and all other church members against serving for flithy lucre's sake, turning godliness into a way of gain, and making merchandise of the gospel, were there no danger of their doing such things.

Every one who reads the Bible knows, or should know, that in all fraud, corruption, serving for money, bribetaking, love of luxury and ease, self-righteousness, and rebellion against God in Israel of old, the priests and prophets—the shepherds of God's people—were the leaders. Eli's sons were greedy and fornicators; Samuel's sons perverted judgment, went after money, and took bribes. In Isaiah's time the priests and prophets recled and staggered through strong drink, they were swallowed up with wine, they erred in vision, they stumbled in judgment, because all their tables were filled with vomit and filthiness. (Isa. 28: 7, 8.) They are compared to dumb and slumbering dogs, greedy dogs that never have enough. These shepherds were without understanding; they turned from God to their own ways, and one and all to their own gain. Again, it is stated that they filled themselves with strong drink. (Isa. 56: 9-12.) Jeremiah (5: 30, 31) says it was "a wonderful and horrible thing" that the prophets prophested falsely, that the priests bore rule at the prophets' hands, and that the people loved to have it so. He declares that the shepherds were brutish (Jer. 10: 21), and that they had destroyed and scattered God's flock and were responsible for the downfall of Judah, because of swearing, adultery, and false teaching. (Read Jer. 23.) enemy entered Jerusalem "because of the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests." (Lam. 4: Ezekiel (34: 1-10) says the shepherds were 12. 13.) greedy and fed themselves instead of feeding the sheep; that they killed and ate the fatlings; that they clothed themselves with the wool; and that, therefore, the sheep were scattered and became a prey to the enemy. Micah (3: 11) says the heads of the people judged for reward, the priests taught for hire, and the prophets prophesied for money, and for that reason Zion would be plowed as a field, Jerusalem would become heaps, and "the mountain of the house as the high places of a forest."

The same sad story of wickedness and rebellion is told of the prophets and priests of the kingdom of Israel. The corrupt condition of that kingdom was worse than that of Judah. Read the book of Amos. It states that in the midst of the great wealth, prosperity, ease, luxury, and worldly glory of that kingdom there was all kinds of oppression of the poor and needy, cruel neglect of the afflicted, licentiousness, and a famine "of hearing the words of Jehovah."

Later there was such a dearth "of hearing the words of Jehovah" in the kingdom of Judah. Jehoiakim, the king, in his contempt for the word of God, cut with his penknife the roll of the book of God sent him by Jeremiah and burnt the whole of it in the fire before him. (Jer. 36: 20-26.) The prophets and priests disobeyed and forgot the law, fed upon the sins of the people, and set their hearts upon their iniquities. It was "like people, like priest." The people wanted such teaching, and the priests and prophets were always ready to furnish it. "The people were destroyed for lack of knowledge." (Hos. 4: 6-10.)

Human nature is the same always. The temptations of to-day are the same which Satan placed before the prophets and priests of Israel. The love of money is as powerful now as then, is yet the root of all kinds of evil, and covet-ousness is idolatry. Is it reasonable to suppose the preachers and shepherds of the church of Christ are all beyond such temptations and cannot be influenced by money? Is it reasonable to suppose that under the mighty influences of money and popularity none seek place and power? Paul declares of Timothy, in sending him to Philippi, that he had "no man likeminded," who would truly care for the church there, for the reason that "all seek their own" and "not the things of Jesus Christ." (Phil. 2: 19-24.) In what ratio do the Timothys of to-day stand to those who seek their own?

Every one who has read the New Testament knows, or should know, that that book points out plainly the stumblingblocks, sins, idolatry, and downfall of the children of Israel as warnings to all Christians against following their evil example. It solemnly and abundantly warns all against false gods, false Christs, false apostles, false prophets, false shepherds and teachers, and false brethren. It plainly states that there are many unruly men and vain talkers and deceivers, who teach things which they should not teach for filthy lucre's sake. It states again that people will not endure the sound doctrine, but, having itching ears, will turn from the truth to fables and will heap up unto themselves such teachers as will gratify their lust. (2 Tim. 4: 1-4; Tit. 1: 9-11.) It shows that there are pites of such teachers. As Jeremiah said, "it is an astonishment and horrible thing" that so many preachers can be found who are ready to "deliver the goods."

Are not the people in general perishing for lack of knowledge—"knowledge of the truth?"

Can preachers and other teachers realize how fearful and horrible it is, with open Bible in hand and the example of Him who spake as never man spake before them, to preach and teach according to the wisdom and ways of the world and in the spirit of the world? Paul declares that if he were yet pleasing men, he could not be pleasing to God.

It is no wonder that Jeremiah wept and has been called the "weeping prophet." Godly men and women weep today. There is not a dearth of preachers, but is there not a famine of "hearing the word of Jehovah?" Too much preaching is only on the surface, generalities, platitudes, latitudinarian, kaleidoscopic, or the theories and judgment and doctrines of men. Men can appear to be brave and can boast of their courage when it costs nothing to do so. Preachers should not study to be flippant, to become popular, to "get by," and to avoid declaring "the whole counsel of God," while appearing to do so. The morals and manners and examples of all preachers and teachers must be good, according to the standard of the Bible. But all know that the standard of truthfulness, honesty, humility, self-denial, virtue, purity, etc., with some, is far below that required by the word of God. It is a sad fact that some, whose character for honesty or purity or godliness is shady, to say the least of it, are anxious to be in the limelight, critical of the action of churches and dictatorial as to what churches should do. Some modest, humble, Christian people lately spoke of a certain preacher as smart, bright, a preacher of good sermons, but added, "He has no manners." Since being uncouth, discourteous, impolite-to say nothing of lack of purity of thought and life and of true piety-destroys a preacher's influence for good, why do some in egotism seem to take pride in thus hindering the cause of Christ? A man's life is only the outgrowth of his heart. "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."

While this matter is before us, let attention be called to many articles of many religious papers. Do these articles in humility and the spirit of Christ and love of the truth seek to teach righteousness, true holiness, reverence for God, and implicit submission to his will? Are they not rather efforts to force in a partisan spirit the theories, speculations, and dogmas of the writers upon their readers? Are they according to the teaching and spirit of Phil. 2: 1-11, of each considering the other better than himself and doing nothing through faction and vainglory.

Another grievous thing is that some congregations, notwithstanding the lack of piety and purity, reverence and love of the truth in some preachers and singers, seek them and encourage them and in a partisan spirit take sides with them if they speak well, debate well, and sing well. No one can believe that the will of God sustains such a course. There is need of sympathy, forbearance, patience, forgiveness, and love, as well as repentance; but it is altogether against the will of God to give people prominence through their weakness and sin. If such really are penitent and desire to be saved, they are humble, meek, modest, and tremble at the word of God.

All true and godly men and women rally to the man who has been falsely accused in order to vindicate him; or if he is guilty, to restore him and forgive him, upon his repentance. But it is wholly contrary to the will of God and altogether destructive of the harmony and peace and purity of the church to take sides with a wrongdoer and in a fleshly and partisan spirit attempt to uphold him in his sins.

As in Jeremiah's time, is not the word of God being stolen from the people?

The word of God cannot be made to conform to the ways and spirit of the world, or to support the theories of man. All prayers and effort should be made to bring all men to the knowledge of the truth, submission to the will of God, and into possession of the Spirit of Christ.

There are more Bibles printed in the various languages of earth to-day and more widespread knowledge of things belonging to the Bible-its history, geography, literature, characters, etc.-than in any previous age of the world: but comparatively there is very little of making the word of God a lamp unto the feet and light unto the path, of receiving the word of God as the seed of the kingdom into good and honest hearts in order to bring forth the peaceable fruits of righteousness, and of laying it up in the heart In order not to sin against God. Various forms of religion and different religious rites are one thing, and implicit submission to the will of God is another. Not every one who is religious or says "Lord, Lord," shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of God. Submission to the will of God is essential to the peace and happinesss and salvation of the race. It is one thing to make religious talks, and quite a different thing, it may be, to preach the will of God. There is very much preaching everywhere about the Bible and about Christ, but comparatively very little preaching of "the word," "the gospel of Christ," "Christ, and him crucified," and a determination to know nothing else.

But as there have always been true and faithful and godly men and women from Abel to the present generation, there are, therefore, such now who love God and men and the truth, and who will endure persecution and suffer death rather than violate their consciences and deny the Lord. I am happy to record myself as having confidence in men—true and courageous, faithful and manly men—and in a host of tried and godly women.

The Ideal Preacher.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Shakespeare, in "The Merchant of Venice," says: "It is a good divine that follows his own instructions. I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching." Simply because it is far easier to teach than to practice virtue is no reason why the preacher should give himself over to the ungoverned lusts of the flesh; and what is true of the minister is also true of all Christians. Paul admonishes Timothy, his son in the gospel: "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an ensample to them that believe, in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity." (1 Tim. 4: 12.) Surely the Holy Spirit would not command Timothy to be a pattern in word and deed, in faith, love, and purity, were it not possible for him to be such an example. In writing to the church at Rome, Paul, with a mighty stroke, drives home the thought that the preacher should be one to practice his own teaching when he says: "Thou therefore that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou rob temples? thou who gloriest in the law, through thy transgression of the law dishonorest thou God?" (Rom. 2: 21-23.) While in the flesh no one can practice the law of God perfectly, yet the ideal preacher will put forth an honest endeavor to do so. He will not viciously nullify the good effects of his own teaching by sinful gratification of the fleshly appetites. The vicious and immoral conduct of some preachers and evangelists reminds us of the pollution that existed among the prophets when Zephaniah prophesied. Of those who received not instruction and trusted not in Jehovah, he says: Her prophets are light and treacherous persons; her priests have profaned the sanctuary, they have done violence to the law." (Zeph. 3: 4.) The preacher who lives for the world and seeks worldly gratification and glory becomes a weakling and sinks down to the level of the lowest and basest people. In the long ago Hosea wrote of such characters: "They feed on the sin of my people, and set their heart on their iniquity. And it shall be, like people, like priest; and I will punish them for their ways, and will requite them their doings. And they shall eat, and not have enough; they shall play the harlot, and shall not increase; because they have left off taking heed to Jehovah." (Hos. 4: 8-10.) The teacher without moral stamina, integrity, and self-control sinks to the pollution of the weakest of those to whom he ministers. While this is true of the preacher who is a weakling, it may be said of the ideal preacher who is courageous, wise, and good, that he wields a great influence in lifting up the people to his level; so we may truly say: "Like priest, like people." The preacher who knows, loves, and obeys the truth stands a tower of strength in any community for righteousness. The ideal preacher preaches the word.

THE GOSPEL GOD'S POWER TO SALVATION.

The fearless, bold, and self-sacrificing Paul declares: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek," (Rom. 1: 16.) Because the gospel is the instrument for the conversion of the world, Christ commanded his apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) The one who preaches any other gospel, though he be an angel from heaven, shall be anathema. Paul declares: "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." In the warfare of life the Christian fights with the sword of the Spirit. As an equipment, the word of God thoroughly furnishes unto every good work. (2 Tim. 3: 17.) The ideal preacher respects and honors

THE SACREDNESS OF THE FAMILY.

The family is ordained of God for the perpetuation, happiness, and purity of the race. The family is the fountain from which the stream of life flows. If the fountain be foul, then will the stream that flows from it be impure. Many are the perils that are now menacing the family. God's oldest institution appointed for the happiness, nobility, and elevation of the race. Many dangers threaten its very existence, as is evidenced by the alarming increase in divorces and the alarming prevalence of the social evil which degrades man to the level of the brute. In addition to these is the bold advocacy of anarchistic socialism for the abolition of the family. The family is the salt of the church and society as the church is the salt of the earth. The true preacher will create a sentiment in favor of a pure, Christian home. He will stand for its permanence, its sacredness, and its holiness. He will impress upon all the divine origin of the family and its necessity for the purity and amelioration of the human race. When a preacher so far loses sight of his work as to sin against the marriage relation, he will loathe himself, and as David, when he had sinned with Bathsheba, he will pray: "Purify me with hyssop, and I shall be clean: wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow. Make me to hear joy and gladness, that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice. Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities. Create in me a clean heart. O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Cast me not away from thy presence; and take not thy holy Spirit from me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with a willing spirit." (Ps. 51: 7-12.) It is bad to fall; it is worse not to get up with eyes on the cross. It is bad to sin; but it is worse not to loathe, confess, and turn from it. The man who violates the sacred ties of the family sins against God, the human race, and his own soul. I have no language that adequately pictures the ills that flow from such depravity. I would admonish such sinners in the words of James: "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep; let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall exalt you." (James 4: 8-10.) With a proper appreciation of the love of God and the great sacrifices and terrible sufferings of the Christ, "every one that hath this hope set on him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." (1 John 3: 3.)

GLORYING IN THE CROSS.

Every faithful preacher, like Paul, should glory in the cross of Christ. Paul says: "But far be it from me to glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, through which the world hath been crucified unto me, and I unto the world." (Gal. 6: 14.) Again, in writing to the Corinthian church, he admonishes: "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." (1 Cor. 10: 31.) We further learn that when he visited the church at Corinth he said: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." (1 Cor. 2: 2.) While the preacher should be a well-informed man, so long as he follows the example of Paul, he will depend on the gospel of Jesus Christ for correcting evils, and will not turn aside to politics and civic righteousness. The preacher who cannot have an influence in uplifting, elevating, and purifying humanity by preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ can never save the world by turning away from the cross of Christ to politics. We may all show our faith in Christ by presenting and practicing the word of God, thus displaying that we have not a doubt as to the efficiency of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ when it is earnestly and faithfully proclaimed. While proclaiming the gospel of Jesus Christ, every faithful minister should meditate on the teaching of Phil. 4: 8. In the language of another:

"All thoughts of ill, all evil deeds,
That have their roots in thoughts of ill—
All these must first be trampled down
Beneath our feet, if we would gain
In the bright fields of fair renown,
The right of eminent domain."

Shall We Have a Complete Audit?

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Last week we published an earnest request to contributors of the Tennessee Orphans' Home to report all moneys that they had contributed to the Home. The auditor informs me that reports are coming in, but that many have not reported. He also informs me that some have said that W. T. Boaz is being persecuted. To such a charge I enter an emphatic protest and denial. I had as much to do as any one else with this audit, the audit being authorized by Dr. S. T. Hardison, president of the Board at that time. During the lifetime of the Home there have been three persons who handled the funds of the Homenamely, John W. Fry, J. W. Jackson, and W. T. Boaz. The auditor received instructions to audit the accounts of each fairly and impartially. I positively would have nothing to do with an audit that did not treat all connected with it alike.

I am glad to say that I do not have the names of the persons declining to send in reports for the reason that they think W. T. Boaz has been persecuted. To all such, however, I press the question: Is reporting the facts persecuting W. T. Boaz? Is not a fair and impartial audit a protection to any honest man? The man who has honestly handled the funds of others covets and demands such an audit. The person who refuses to give the facts just as they are has a misconception of what is right and should look well to his own soul's salvation. As Christians, we have no right to shield or protect any one in wrongdoing. Those who have contributed to the Home can make this audit complete if they will do so. I appeal to their sense of justice and fairness as to whether or not it shall be done. If we care for the future of the Home and for the good that it may do, we must see that things are run properly, fairly, and honorably, in a businesslike manner. Unless this can be done, I shall decline to have anything further to do with the Home. I believe that it can be done, and that when contributors understand the situation they will voluntarily and cheerfully report as others are doing. Some have said that they meant to give to W. T. Boaz and not to the Home. This is hardly the honorable thing to do, when W. T. Boaz was paid a salary by the Home and was chosen especially to look after its interests and its welfare. Enough has already been found by the auditors to show that the funds have not been handled as they should have been. They have no hesitancy in making this charge. But it is the desire of all fair and impartial people to get a full and complete audit, so that we may steer clear of such mistakes in the future and safeguard the best interests of the Home.

When the audit was undertaken, I did not have a doubt but that the books would be found correct, and I so told W. T. Boaz. However, I am not partisan enough to close my eyes to all the facts and to imagine that the audit was inspired by a spirit of persecution, when I know that such is not the case.

Faith.

I will not doubt, though all my ships at sea Come drifting home with broken masts and sails; I will believe the hand which never fails From seeming evil worketh good for me. And though I weep because those sails are tattered, Still will I cry, while my best hopes lie shattered: "I trust in Thee."

I will not doubt, though all my prayers return
Unanswered from the still, white realm above.
I will believe it is an all-wise love
Which has refused these things for which I yearn;
And though at times I cannot keep from grieving,
Yet the pure arder of my fixed believing
Undimmed shall burn.

I will not doubt, though sorrows fall like rain,
And troubles swarm like bees about a hive;
I will believe the heights for which I strive
Are only reached by anguish and by pain;
And though I groan and writhe beneath my crosses,
I yet shall see through my severest losses
The greater gain.

I will not doubt. Well anchored is this faith.

Like some stanch ship, my soul braves every gale,
So strong its courage that it will not qual!
To breast the mighty unknown sea of death.
O, may I cry, though body parts with spirit,
"I do not doubt," so listening worlds may hear it,
With my last breath. —Selected.

Aim at Excellence.

Do not be content with mediocrity. Try to be something in this world and you surely will be something. Aim at excellence and excellence will be attained. This is the greatest secret of success and eminence. "I cannot do it" has never accomplished anything. "I will try" has wrought very many wonders.—Selected.

Be Thankful Every Day.

The purely passive contemplation of all good ought to be granted to common days on which no more has occurred than the daily round of little pleasures and the absence of more than ordinary annoyances. With the evening offering of a silent thanksgiving to God, we take conscious possession of simple happiness and enjoy it once again, instead of slipping off past God's best gifts as men so often do. Thus thanksgiving involves the recognition that all this good is from God, and this recognition reacts on our own mood, creating conscious joy and humble trust in the God who will continue to bless in things both great and small.—Selected.

Volcanoes Hottest on Surface.

Notwithstanding what schoolbooks have said, it now appears that a volcano is hottest on its surface rather than below it. This is the conclusion drawn by a scientist who has made extensive investigations in craters in Hawaii and has obtained samples of gases and lava before they reached the air. Laboratory studies of these samples make it appear probable that much of the heat required to keep an open lava basin in fluid condition is supplied by the chemical action of the gases. From these investigations the scientist concludes that in times of great activity the temperature at the surface of a volcano undoubtedly is higher than that below the surface.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Rainy Sundays.

I attend church on rainy Sundays because:

- 1. God has blessed the Lord's day and hallowed it, making no exception for hot or cold or stormy days.
- 2. I expect my minister to be there. I should be surprised if he were to stay at home on account of the weather.
- 3. If his hands fail through weakness, I shall have great reason to blame myself, unless I sustain him by my prayers and presence.
- By staying away I may lose the prayers which may bring God's blessing, and the sermon that would have done me great good.
- 5. My presence is more needed on Sundays when there are few than on those days when the church is crowded.
- 6. Whatever station I hold in the church, my example must influence others. If I stay away, why may not they? —The Parish Leaflet.

Education of the Streets.

It is a common belief that the children of the poorer classes in large cities acquire a certain amount of valuable education by running the streets. Actual tests usually indicate, however, that such children stand very low in all the higher forms of intelligence, and this might have been suspected from an examination of the environment in which they are brought up. Association with older people is one of the most important factors in a child's education; but in the poorer classes the dwellings are so small that a child must spend most of his waking hours outside, and nowhere does he come in close contact with many older persons of ability.

No matter how much one may admire the development of modern industrial society, he can hardly believe that it offers a full and rich environment in which a child may "unfold." If a child had inherited ability (and many of the children who roam the streets have not), it could hardly be called into full play by the stimulus of a modern city street which, compared with the country, offers little for a child to do. Much has been said of the evils of child labor, but under modern city conditions it is conceivable that child idleness may sometimes be equally injurious.— Exchange.

Civilization of Ages Ago.

Scattered all over the Yucatan peninsula are monuments to a civilization that flourished thousands of years ago. Just how many thousand nobody knows, and scientists differ very materially in their ideas on the subject. The prevailing belief, however, is that this civilization was in full swing as late as the beginning of the Christian era. Other scientists say the ruins antedate those of Egypt.

Yucatan can well be called "the American Egypt," writes George Minor in the Mexico Review. The ruins of one hundred and seventy-two cities, big and little, have been discovered, and not a quarter of the territory has been carefully explored, for the tropical verdure makes the finding of the ruins difficult. You might pass within a hundred feet of a wonderful old temple or pyramid a hundred times and not discover it, so effectively does the jungle screen these crumbling monuments of the distant past and shield them from the prying eyes of this inquisitive and presumptuous age.

Of the one hundred and seventy-two clusters of ruins discovered, two sets represent what were once large and prosperous cities, of about one-half million inhabitants each. Doubtless at different times each one of these two cities was the capital of the country.—Exchange.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) In Dan. 1: 8 it is said that "Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's meat," etc. Why did he thus purpose in his heart? (2) In Dan. 3: 16:18 it is said that Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego refused to comply with the king's command to fall down and worship the image which Nebuchadnezzar had set up. Why did they refuse? (3) In Acts 3: 18, 19, when the rulers of the Jews commanded Peter and John not to teach in the name of Christ, why did they give the answer that they did? Why did they not obey those rulers in all three cases?

JOHN H. ARMS.

(1) The reasons Daniel would not eat meat from the royal table were probably three. First, because they ate from the royal table unclean beasts which were forbidden by the Jewish law; second, because they ate beasts which had been strangled, or not properly blooded; third, because the beasts that were eaten were first offered as victims to their gods. (2) Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego could not fall down and worship the image without downright disobedience to Jehovah. Their sense of right and their desire to uphold it would not permit them thus to disobey God. (3) They did not obey these rulers, for to do so would have been disobedience to God. They chose to obey God rather than men, just as any other man should do.

Brother McQuiddy: Our congregation is somewhat divided over this question: Is it unsafe to observe the Lord's Supper after six o'clock on Sunday evening? Our minister preaches for three congregations. As some of our members do not come out in the morning to the Bible classes, we observe the Supper at the evening service when we have preaching, beginning at seven o'clock. Our preacher refuses to wait on the table after six o'clock, as he says the Lord's Supper was given under the Jewish dispensation and that Monday begins at six o'clock as it did then. Please give us some light on this.

Mrs. B. A. GOAD.

If people would try as hard to serve God as they do to create issues for discussion, there would be fewer discussions and more service rendered to God. From Acts 20: 7 we learn that the disciples met to break bread upon the first day of the week. This is the day on which Christians observed it. When the church met at Troas on the first day of the week to observe the Lord's Supper, the Jewish and Gentile Christians evidently were not reckoning the day to begin at midnight, but to begin, according to the Jewish count, at six o'clock in the afternoon. This being true, the first day of the week would begin at six o'clock on Saturday and end at six o'clock Sunday evening. It does seem that Christians could meet between eight o'clock A.M. and six o'clock P.M. on Sunday. Of course it depends on the location of the church as to the time when six o'clock in the morning arrives. Washington time is one hour faster than Nashville time. When it is twelve o'clock at Bristol, Tenn.-Va., it is eleven o'clock by Nashville time. I cannot see the necessity for raising such questions. There cannot be a doubt about meeting on the first day of the week if we meet between six A.M. and six P.M. Sunday.

Brother McQuiddy: The ladies of the Red Cross are selling chances on a cake. I was asked to buy one, but I refused, giving as my reason that I feared it was gambling. (1) Is it right for Christians to partake in such methods to raise money for the Red Cross or anything else? (2) How far would you advise Christians to go into this Red-Cross work? (3) What advice would you give to Christians about helping to raise the Y. M. C. A. war fund? (4) If it is all right to help the Y. M. C. A., would it not be right to help the Tennessee Missionary Society to do the same work? (5) Instead of Christians' doing their "bit" in the above organization, would it not be better for the church to select a man to represent it in Europe?

J. G. MALPHURS.

(1) It is as wrong to raise money for the Red Cross by gambling as it is to raise money for the church in this manner. Gambling within itself is wrong and should never be encouraged. (2) Christians must decide themselves and for themselves just how far they will go into Red-Cross work. Christians, however, should not become anarchists and refuse to pay taxes to the government, simply because the government could not carry on the war and could not exist as a government unless its subjects pay taxes. From the nature of some questions that are being asked, it looks very much like Christians are taking advantage of Christianity to decline to do some things that Christianity requires and teaches them to do. The religion of Christ teaches us to help the afflicted and to feed the starving, regardless of the cause of the affliction or of the starvation. The editor of the Query Department has no sympathy whatever with that spirit that would lead a man to shirk his duty. The Bible clearly teaches that Christians should submit to "the powers that be" and uphold those powers, unless such submission would violate the law of God. Whenever the government forbids Christians to preach the gospel or do anything that looks toward the extension of Christianity in the world, or anything contrary to the will of God, then Christians should do as did Peter and John, who said that "we ought to obey God rather than men." (3) Christians are required to give individually, as well as through the church upon the first day of the week. Many times Christians are called upon to help a worthy object when they cannot call the church together before making contribution for such purposes. The Y. M. C. A. is the only agency that is recognized by the government for the distribution of war funds in certain channels. As an individual, I cannot give through the church to this work, so I give through the Y. M. C. A., giving the honor and glory to the Lord Jesus Christ. (4) The Tennessee Missionary Society was organized to do the work that the church should do, and usurps the prerogatives and functions of the church. The church is "the light of the world," the pillar and support of the truth. The government emphasizes the point, and the people generally understand, that the Y. M. C. A. is not a church organization and is not organized for the conversion of the world, as the Tennessee Missionary Society claims to be. (5) Under present conditions this suggestion is impracticable. For the benefit of our brother and all others, I would emphasize that every man should be true to his conscience. "To him that accounteth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." (Rom. 14: 14.) His conscience may be wrong, but he cannot be a true man while violating it. We do read in the Bible where individuals, and not churches, were called upon to be unfaithful to their consciences or convictions, but that rather than do this they suffered death, or martyrdom. Christians should do so now. But every man must decide this question for himself. As I understand the word of God, war is ethically and morally wrong; but as to whether a man should fight for any good cause is the very question at issue and on which there is much diversity of sentiment even among Christians. While it is not my purpose to discuss this issue, for I think it unwise to do so, I will say, however, that I regard it as a very grave mistake to charge that our forefathers, who purchased our liberty by the shedding of blood, were murderers.

The brethren at Nelsonville, Ky., would like to get in touch with two teachers, men preferred, to teach, beginning next July. They have a small congregation and need the help of those who could lead in meetings. Address T. L. Vettitow, Nelsonville, Ky.

Reece H. Rogers has moved to Fort Deposit, Ala., and will preach for the congregations at Fort Deposit, Greenville, and Evergreen. He states that "the day we moved in our house we were much surprised with a stock of provisions, including everything from salt to ham,"

Wanted—To buy or lease a small farm for boy and self, somewhere in Mississippi, near a congregation where wife can worship. I want to preach on Sundays wherever I can find an audience, and when I can get out of the crop hold mission meetings. Let any congregation interested address D. N. Barnett at Boaz, Ky., Route 1.

Sister Jennie Clarke writes from the Bell Haven Orphans' Home, Luling, Texas, January 9: "For the benefit of the readers of the Gospel Advocate who are interested in the welfare of the orphans of Bell Haven, please state that since my last report of the epidemic of measles the number of patients has increased to thirty-three. We have had no serious results so far."

From J. A. Bates, Trafalgar, Ark., January 8: "I see in the Gospel Advocate of January 3 that G. A. Dunn makes the suggestion that we send a preacher to Jerusalem and establish a church there. I think that is one of the wisest things that can be done. Set up the church of our Lord Jesus where it has been torn down by his enemies. What a grand thought! Dear brethren, let us unite on this proposition. May every one take pride and zeal in this undertaking, that the Lord may bless their undertaking."

From J. H. Stone, Spruce Pine, Ala., January 10: "There will be a public discussion at Brilliant, Ala., to continue four nights, beginning on January 28. The church of Christ will be represented by W. H. Sandy, of Dennis, Miss.; the Nazarene Church will be represented by W. D. Killingsworth, of Fayette, Ala. Brilliant is eight miles east of Winfield, on the Illinois Central Railroad. Those wishing to attend the discussion will write to W. W. Gaddis, Winfield, Route 4, and arrangements will be made to care for you."

D. F. Draper writes: "Ben West and Miss Laura Love were married on December 27. Brother West is well known to the brotherhood as being one of our best gospel preachers, one of the purest and most earnest workers. He is now laboring with the brethren at Ennis, Texas, I have known him personally for some time; and he says I helped to start him in the ministry. The bride is a devoted Christian, educated and refined, and was at the time of their marriage principal of one of the city schools of her town. We wish for them a happy and prosperous journey through life."

We thank Brother Draper for sending us this important social note and join him in extending best wishes.

From W. C. Graves, Dalton, Ga.: "The Lord willing, wife and I purpose to give way during this year ten thousand tracts of free literature. In this way we hope to preach the gospel to many that we otherwise would not reach. I have about fifteen different tracts covering the teaching of the church of Christ on important subjects. Each has the name 'church of Christ' on the front page, so those reading them will know what religious body they represent. If you have in mind some person who is out of Christ, send name and address and four cents in stamps, and I will gladly mail them one of each."

The editor commends this good intention.

From Don Carlos Janes, Buechel, Ky., January 7: "Oscar Embrey, who lately came to us from the Baptists, preached in the Highlands last night, and Clinton Davidson preached in the morning. The fotal contributions reported by the treasurer yesterday for 1917 were $2,264.58, being larger than those for the preceding year by more than two hundred and fifty dollars. There were twenty additions and one restoration. Our work at the colored church goes along nicely, and we are sending S. O. Martin, in India, twenty-five dollars a month, besides other expenditures. Brother Jorgenson, who has been sick of late, sometimes suffering intensely, is better. A number of the soldiers from Camp Taylor are coming into the city for church services,"

M. C. Kurfees writes from Louisville, Ky.: "That splendid and timely article of John E. Dunn, 'The Christian's Behavior in the Present Crisis, in the Gospel Advocate of January 3, ought to be sown broadcast among Christian families all over the United States; and if pasted in the hat of every pacifist of the class who 'use angry words and speak evil of the government and the officials,' and then faithfully heeded, it would hasten the end of the terrible war. I am glad that a man of such fine sense of discrimination as shown by Brother Dunn has gone among the soldiers, and that, to the extent of his work, it will be through such a man that the government and its officials will form their ideas of the church of God and of Christians. And he will not be among the soldiers long until they will be glad he is with them."

From J. L. Pummill, Dallas, Texas: "A large crowd attended the first service of the year at the Pearl and Bryan Streets church of Christ, Although the wind was blowing cold from the north, many people came to each of the services of the day. Two took membership at the morning A. O. Colley preached two able discourses. service. church is growing in number and in love. We have never seen greater harmony and love. We feel that we can truly sing: Blest be the tie that binds our nearts in Christian love. The church is in good condition financially and is being run on a strictly business basis. The entire membership is standing by Brother Colley in his work, and we feel that we have a bright prospect for a great year's work for the Lord here. In fact, we think he is one of the Lord's humble servants. The war has claimed some of Some of them are camped near Dallas and cannot attend the morning services as well as some of our other members, so we have the Lord's Supper both at the morning and evening services; so those who cannot attend the morning services are not deprived of the privilege of the communion service. We wish the Gospel Advocate and the entire brotherhood much joy in working for the Lord. The elders of the church at Pearl and Bryan Streets are J. L. Ferguson, S. C. Jackson, H. C. Kitching, J. L. SALTS IS FINE FOR KIDNEYS, QUIT MEAT

Flush the Kidneys at Once When Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers Meat Forms Uric Acid.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and pol-sons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, head-aches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders, comes from sluggish kidnevs.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage, or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water be-fore breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generato flush clogged kidneys and tions stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure. It makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding seri-ous kidney complications.

The Price of Greatness.

The death of David Lipscomb suggests certain thoughts to my mind. Even those who radically differed from him in religious matters admit that he was a great man. We admire a life like the one he lived. Perhaps some of us wish we could live lives of such great influence for good. We all ought to desire to do the greatest possible good. We ought not to desire to become great except for the good that might develop therefrom. But there is one thing we should remember: if we ever become great, we must pay the price. I mean by this that greatness is purchased at a sacrifice which is greater than most men will make. Most of us would like to have the honors which come to such a man as David Lipscomb. Most of us have not enough ability; and even if we had, we would not pay the price. There may have been men of as great ability as Brother Lipscomb who did not become so great because they would not make the necessary sacrifices. I do not mean that David Lipscomb strove to be great in the eyes of the world. for one of the chief points of his greatness was that he did not strive to be so. I mean that he brought himself under such complete control to the will of the Master that the glories and rewards of the earth left him entirely unmoved. This in addition to his remarkable mind could not but make him a man of great influence in the David Lipscomb is only one illustration of the point I am trying to make. It has been true all through the ages. The difference between men has not consisted so much in their native abilities as it has in the use they make of their abilities. Most men are willing to put forth only mediocre efforts, and as a result their achievements are mediocre.

"The heights by great men reached and kept

Were not attained by sudden flight;

But they, while their companions slept. Were toiling upward in the night."

Thomas A. Edison has in wonderful inventions surpassed all others. He has perhaps worked harder than any other man in America. It is said that some one said to him: "Mr. Edison, you have had a great inspiration." Mr. Edison, with a scowl, replied: "It is not inspiration; it is perspiration." He attributes his success more to his prodigious toil than to his prodigious genius. Many men would like to possess the honors and rewards of Thomas A. Edison. How many are willing to work eighteen hours each day and deny themselves almost all pleasures and recreation and to a large extent the society of family and friends in order to attain these?

I am almost, if not altogether, moved to envy when I see and hear any one play skillfully on a piano. It seems wonderful. But I know that the performer, in order to gain that knowledge of the keys and that control over the fingers, has spent nerveracking, prosaic hours in the intense heat of the summer in hard study of that most disheartening of all printed matter-written music-and in practice that is far from inspiring. Most people, because they lack time or inclination to make the necessary effort to learn to play, must content themselves with performing on a phonegraph. To reproduce is always easier than to produce.

As has already been stated, many of us would be willing to be as great in spiritual matters as was David Lipscomb, but we are not willing to deny ourselves of the luxuries of life. We are not willing to give our all to the service of God. We are not willing to spend weary hours in search of the truth which God has given. We are not willing to tell the truth when the telling of it raises up enemies and offends our friends. And because we are not willing to do things, we can never become great.

But here is another consideration we should not overlook. We may do our best, and yet never occupy any other place in the world but an obscure one. It may be we are onetalent instead of ten-talent men. If we do our best, we are as great as the ten-talent man who does his best. And think of the responsibilities of the men of great opportunities! The shores of time are filled with wrecks of ten-talent men. If David Lipscomb had chosen to dissipate his great abilities instead of using them for the glory of God, what a fearful reckoning would there have been! And it may be that in the glory land some poor washerwoman who faithfully served God in her sphere will occupy as honored a place as he .- J. N. Gardner, in Gospel Herald.

what is needed most is an increase in the germ-fighting strength. To do this successfully you need to put on healthy flesh, rouse the liver to vigorous action, so it will throw off these germs, and purify the blood so that there will be no "weak spots," or soil for germ-growth.

The Cause of Gray Hair.

Hair grows gray by reason of the same cause which produces dwarfed yellow stalks of corn instead of strong, dark-green, growthy stalks-lack of nutrition. Hair, like the crops of the field, must be fed, either naturally from the scalp as the stalk of corn is fed from the soil, or artificial hair food may be applied as fertilizer is applied to the soil to enrich it. Unless your hair is supplied with its natural oilthe food on which it subsists-you may expect it to cease its flourishing and lose its natural luster, color, and beauty. The hair must have food on which to live. Do not neglect it or it will lose its luster, become stiff and coarse and eventually gray. Begins now and prevent the appearance of age by using a natural hair oil, "La Creole." It will keep the hair soft, fluffy, and beautiful. Tupelo, December 20.—Last December we began to build a house for the church of Christ, and on March 17 we had completed the same at a cost of more than two thousand dollars. Our congregation was set in order in August, 1916, with twenty-four members, seven of whom moved away, leaving only seventeen followers here. When the house was finished we owed a balance of six hundred and seventy-three dollars and seventy cents. We made a note for the same, and our note fell due on December 15. On December 12 we paid $471.50. This left a balance we paid $471.50. This left a balance due of $228.20. The bank has promised us all the extension we want on the note. Forgan, January 8.—The meeting at Prairieview, near Woodward, closed at the water on Tuesday before Christmas Day, with five baptisms. We went to the river to baptize one, and when we gave the invitation four others came up and made the good confession. This meeting was held during that cold week, too; but we did not miss a single service. The river was frozen over and we had to cut the ice, some four or five inches thick, to do the baptizing. It takes faith and courage to obey the Lord; but if people have faith and courage, they will not wait till a more "convenient season," but will get up and move out, putting their trust in Him who gave the com-mandment. I am now at Kendrick, and the meeting starts off very nicely. -D. S. Ligon.

Why not have a school taught? I can teach a night class. No question but what you need the instruction, and I know I need the work. I believe I am capable of teaching a good school. Let me teach for you, and I promise you that I will hold as many mission meetings as any preacher in the brotherhood who has a family to support. New-Year Resolutions. BY H. J. STAFFORD.

I note on the first page of the Gospel Advocate some very inspiring thoughts under "Resolutions for 1918." As for me, I am persuaded to resolve to strive to make the year 1918 the best year of my life. For many years I have made New-Year resolutions in different lines, all of them, however, for my good and for the good of others, had they been kept; but with shame and regret many of them were broken, and before long I would find myself drifting backward in the same old rut as before. But, brethren and sisters, one and all, great and small, in Christ Jesus, let us line up this year for Jesus. Especially would I urge and exhort those of my class-I mean those weak in faith, careless and indifferent concerning the Lord's work-to get together, and while time and opportunity is ours let us do something for Jesus. I am sick and tired of this summertime, plaything religion. We are prone to boast of our learned preachers, and thank God we have them, and we need thousands more of them. We also boast that our doctrine or faith cannot be overcome, and thank God that is also true. But, then, what do we do? I almost tremble when I think of the past few years. Three years ago I was born into God's family, and now I am only a babe-just a babe, haven't grown in grace, yet I am three years nearer the judgment, and I shudder at the thought of going to face the judgment with such a record. Would not the Father say to me what he said to the one-talent man? I know he certainly would not say "well done," for it would not be well done with me. So, brethren, you who are like me-puny, lukewarm Christians -let each of us repent in sackcloth and ashes, return to God our Father, and not only promise to be faithful, but do what we promise, and he will bless our labors here and save us in the end. Let each of us set aside some special line of work to do this year, and not stop until we do that. and then do more. I have in mind some persons that, if God permits, I shall try to lead to Christ this year. I also have in mind some fallen ones that I am going to try to restore as stated above, and have resolved to try to serve my Lord this year, if I am permitted to live. I have resolved not to let one day go by without reading a portion of God's word unless provdentially hindered; also not to allow one day to pass without reverently humbling my heart to God in prayer and thanksgiving. I have also resolved to give more freely of my scanty means to the Father's work. Brethren, you who are weak and sickly like myself, will you not line up with me in this 1918 resolution? We have brethren, some of them gray-headed, who have been members for years, and some of them elders, who will not pray in public, wait on the Lord's table, or even return thanks at the table. Some of them will not even attend the Lord's-day services, except once a month, on preaching day; then they will pay a quarter and brag on the sermon. Worse than thatwith shame and regret I say it, yet it is true-I know one elder, a man in his fifties, the head of a family, who will drink, he will swear, and even gamble, and then go to the Bible class with a good lesson when he does go, and partake of the emblems. Now, brethren, by the help of God, can we not beat this? Can we ever get to heaven unless we do? As for me, I will serve the Lord, and I pray that others may be inspired by this poorly paragraphed letter to do likewise. Will all the faithful who read these lines pray for me, that I may live up to my resolutions and be saved in the day of final accounts?

A Letter from Sister Minnie Poe.

The following letter from the daughter of the lamented John T. Poe will be of interest to many of our readers:

Mr. A. B. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn. Dear Brother Lipscomb: My mother, through my hands, thanks you for the kind words of sympathy you have sent her, and for the sorrow expressed therein. We know that we have a host of sympathizers among the friends of our father, and that he will be missed very sincerely through the days to come.

He was one of the most ardent of the old-time Christians I have ever known, and was always ready for any sacrifice or struggle that might be necessary for the cause he loved so well. I am sure you will be interested in knowing that one of the last things he said was, "I have fought the fight, but have not always made as good a fight as I might; but I have kept the faith." He passed to his reward through several hours of intense agony, but at the last he fell asleep like a little child in the arms of its

One of the things that he grieved over most was the news of Brother Lipscomb's death, and I feel sure he thought of him more than he let us know. Now they are reunited, never-more to be parted, and all that great host of friends who preceded him to that better land are united in one host to praise the Lord for his goodness to Many times he remarked to us in the last year or two of his life: "All the friends I have known from boyhood and all the great men whom I was so fond of in my early days have gone on, and what a gathering of friends are now waiting for me on the other side!" He was too feeble to get out from home among his friends here, and for weeks he sat on the front porch when the weather permitted, looking off toward the sky and thinking of the glories beyond his sight. Now he knows and understands all that was a mystery to him then. And this cruel war-he worried so much over that; but now he knows the end of it all and can say, "All is well." Brother Wallace has promised to write you a sketch of father's life, which I think will reach you in a few days. Thanking you for all your sympathy and your kindness to him and to us, I am, with Christian love,

Very sincerely, MINNIE POE.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Cet a small bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life, has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair; besides, it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life; and if not overcome, it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store, and just try it.

OBITUARIES

Smith.

A. Smith was born on October 22, 1846, and was called to his reward on September 23, 1917. He was married twice, and was blessed wih two excellent women. He began preaching the gospel in 1871 and continued until eight years ago, when he was stricken with paralysis while preaching. His friends thought he would not be able to preach again, but he recovered sufficiently to teach the good word which he so dearly loved. Brother Smith was one of the most Paul-like preachers I have ever known, and labored under the most trying circumstances. His delight was to glorify and magnify God and bless fallen humanity. He never neglected the poorer places; yet it is wonderful and encouraging to see how the Lord blessed him with homes, brethren, sisters, and a loving, faithful companion, who stood by him until death. May the Lord's blessings ever be with her until she is called to meet her companion where parting is no more. Brother Smith was asso ciated with the Gospel Advocate for some years, and his labor was highly appreciated by it. He was a great admirer of our beloved brother, David Lipscomb, and preceded him only a few weeks to the heavenly home. Another one of the good Lord's noblemen S. F. Morrow. has been called.

Sparkman.

Miss Emma V. Kerr was born in Bradley County, Tenn., on March 28, 1856. She moved to Texas with her parents in 1876. She was married to A. J. Sparkman on January 15, 1882. To this union seven children were born, of whom five are living-one daughter and four sons; two daughters are dead. Brother Sparkman died on November 2, 1899. At the time of his death all the children were alive. Sister Sparkman was almost an invalid at the time of his death, but continued to keep the family home at Era, Cooke County, Texas, until her death. For the last seven or eight years she had been almost helpless, but she was always cheerful and nation. This writer visited her and patient. This writer visited her many times, and she always enjoyed talking about the affairs of the Mas-ter's kingdom. She obeyed the gospel about thirty years ago, and in her de-clining years the Bible was her chief book. She read it daily and could talk on any subject of scripture teaching. Her children all obeyed the gospe, and she has some grandchildren who are also Christians. Her home was a favorite place for many good friends to meet, and her wise counsel in the affairs of life and her good teaching of the Master's kingdom will be missed by those who knew her. She died on September 16, 1917, and was buried in the Era cemetery. earnest, faithful, Christian woman has passed through the valley of the shadow of death, but her deeds will live until the end of time and be reckoned in eternity. Iron Is Greatest of All Strength Builders, Says Doctor

A Secret of the Great Endurance and Powers of Athletes

Nervous, Rundown People 100 Per Cent. Stronger in Two Weeks' Time in Many Cases

NEW YORK, N. Y .- Most people foolishly seem to think they are going to get renewed health and strength from some stimulating medicine, secret nestrum or naracotic drug, said Dr. E. Sauer, a Boston Physicion who has studied widely both in this country and Great European Medical Institutions when, as a matter of fact, real and true strength can only come from the food you eat. But people often fail to get the strength out of their food because they haven't enough iron in their blood to enable it to change food into living matter. From their weakened, nervous condition they know something is wrong but they can't tell what, so they generally commence doctoring what, so they generally commence doctoring for stomach, liver or kidney trouble or symptoms of some other alliment caused by lack of iron in the blood. This thing may go on for years, while the patient suffers untold agony. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next, take two fivegrain tablets of ordinary nuxsted fron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then lest your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous, run-down people who were affing all the while, doubte their strength and endurance and entirely get rid of all symptoms

Ordinary Nuxated Iron Will Make Delicate, of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles in from ten to fourteen days' time simply by taking iron in the proper form. And this after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. But don't take the old forms of reduced iron, iron acetate or tincture of iron simply to save a few cents. You must take fron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated like nuxated fron if you want it to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless. Many an athlete or prize-fighter has won the day simply because he knew the secret of great strength and endurance and filled his blood with iron before he went into the affray, while many another has gone down to inglorious defeat simply for the lack of iron.

NOTE—Nuxated Iron recommended above by Dr. E. Sauer, is one of the newer organic iron compounds, Unike the older inorganic from products it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach; on the contrary, it is a most potent remedy, in nearly all forms of indigestion, as well as for nervous, run-down conditions. The Manufacturers have such great confidence in Nuxated Iron that they offer to forfet $100.00 to any charitable institution if they cannot take any man or woman under 60 who lacks iron and increase their strength 100 per cent, or over in four weeks' time provided they have no serious organic trouble. They also offer to refund your money if it does not at least double your strength and endurance in ten days' time, It is dispensed by all good druggists,

February 4, 1864, in Gilmer County, Ga. His father and mother came to Tennessee when James was one year old, and they located in Marion County, near Jasper. James grew to man-hood in the neighborhood where he died. On December 30, 1888, he was married to Miss Nettle McGill, and to this union there were born eleven children, nine of whom are living with their mother, the other two having died in infancy. He confessed Christ and was baptized by E. H. Boyd in the fall of 1891. He read the Bible much, always seeking the truth and to learn the way more perfectly, and was always firm in contending for what he believed to be the truth. He attended services regularly as long as he was able to go, walking nearly a mile to church, though he weighed over three hundred pounds. He had heart trouble for a number of years, and for over a year before his death he was unable to go about much. He enjoyed the confidence and respect of all who knew him. He was indeed a just man. His funeral was held at the old Allan home place, a very large crowd attending the funeral and burial, showing the esteem in which he was held. The discourse was by he was held. The discourse was by Brother E. H. Hoover, of Chattanooga, Tenn. He was a firm friend of the Gospel Advocate, reading it every week, and was especially fond of the writings of Brother David Lipscomb. We feel that, while he had faults (none of us are perfect here), he has gone on to await us on the bright eternal shore; so we sorrow, but not without hope. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." H. B. ALLAN.

Mollov.

D. M. Molloy was born at Spencer, Tenn., on January 21, 1840. On the morning of Thanksgiving Day, No-vember 29, 1917, his soul went back to God. He was married to Martha J. Russell on March 25, 1868. To them were born seven children—four girls and three boys. One little girl went to live with Jesus while yet in her babyhood. His wife, three daughters, three sons, one sister, and one brother survive him. In 1906 he, with his family, came from Tennessee to Oklahoma, and have since made Hollis their home. He gave his heart to the Lord in his youth and lived an earnest, faithful life till God took him. The Heavenly Father did not permit him to suffer long. While he had not been feeling well for several days, he did not seem to be several days, he did not seem to be seriously ill until the day before he died, when he was stricken with pneumonia. We believe he was ready to go. He had done the best he could with life. He had been faithful and true to his Master. He loved to read and study the word of God, and unless hindered by sickness was always in his place at worship on Lord's day. He had the satisfaction of seeing all of his children obey the gospel. He was a subscriber and close reader of the Gospel Advocate for thirty-five years. He has passed to the other side. May we all learn a lesson from his open, honest, God-fearing life, that, when our time comes to cross the dark river, we, also, may enter "through the gates into the city." The funeral services were held at the church of Christ at Hollis. Brother R. L. Gillentine told of the life of the deceased in beautiful and well-chosen words, after which the remains were laid to rest in the Hollis cemetery, to await the coming of the Lord. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them."

THE CREAM OF SONGS

"The Cross and Resurrection in Song" represents the fruits of the hardest and most careful work of our lives in striving to give to music lovers the best that can be produced. It contains the cream from our former productions, combined with the cream from plates owned by The Union Song Book Company, of this city, and about one hundred new songs that represent the best that can now be produced. The melody is of the sweetest and most soul-stirring quality. The words are deeply spiritual and present the fullness of gospel teaching.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION Great Failures. BY F. P. FONNER.

Very often the greatest apparent successes are really the greatest failures in the end. This is perfectly apparent to any thinking person who has the cause of Christ at heart. present-day so-called "revival meeting" often becomes a gigantic failure because it is not followed up by proper after teaching. The "all things" commanded by the Savior in many instances are never taught the people, because the evangelist must hurry on to the next appointment. He is doing "evangelistic work;" and this "evangelistic work" seems to consist in preaching a few "revival sermons" at each point and in reporting additions to the papers. The "busy evangelist" does not seem to have much time to devote to practical teaching. It seems to be too tedious a process for him. Perhaps there is not sufficient glory in it for him. Perhaps the commercial side of it does not suit his fancy. And perhaps by pursuing this course our would-be popular evangelist has a better chance to inform the brethren of the very great failures being made by our real mission workers at home and abroad. There may be some commercialism in that sort of evangelism. It may increase the pay of the popular evangelist, and at the same time it may lessen the support of some true mission worker either at home or in some foreign country. It may starve out some true mission worker somewhere before the young converts can be confirmed in the faith, and that would be a very great failure resulting in the loss of human souls. But who is responsible for this? If the so-called "popular evangelist" who influences the churches against our mission workers is not responsible for this condition, then who is responsible for it? The real missionary who is willing to do the work, but who is thus starved out, is not responsible for the failure. He is the victim of circumstances, and is made to suffer because some one somewhere is trying to become a very great man at his expense. Thus it seems that popular evangelism has a death grip on some of our churches, and is actually choking the life out of them. This and the one-man-pastor system are deadly enemies of the churches of Christ; where either prevails to any extent, there is very often nothing that resembles a true church of God. And when a true mission worker locates in such a place, he frequently finds nothing but spiritual death and decay upon every hand. And when he makes an effort to establish the worship by teaching the people to continue "steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship.

and in breaking of bread and in prayers," they sometimes regard him as some sort of an innovator. At any rate, they say: "He can't preach." But why do they think that he cannot preach? Is it because former preachers failed to make known "all the counsel of God?" Is it because they did not remain long enough to develop the talents of the brethren to such an extent as to enable them to know the truth when they hear it? Surely some great failures have been made by some one, or else the present church would be more alive to her opportunities. But is not this condition of things due in a measure to the efforts of some to ride into public favor at the expense of truth and righteousness? We dare not say that this is not true in some cases. One such preacher can counteract the influence of a dozen good men who desire to know nothing "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." This lastmentioned class of men have crucified the lusts of the flesh. They are actuated by no impure or unholy desires. They will preach the old Jerusalem gospel anywhere at a sacrifice. Their Palpitation and Other Disorders of the Heart.

Weak hearts are exceedingly common. Directly you are conscious of the fact that you have a heart, it means that your heart is not acting normally and that it needs attention.

Every time your heart misses a beat, its efficiency is lessened.

Heart trouble, taken in its early stages, may not be difficult to relieve; but the more the treatment is delayed, the harder it is to obtain permanent relief. If there is the slightest symptom to show that your heart is weak or diseased, you should not delay taking treatment.

Dr. Miles' Heart Treatment has been the popular choice for more than twenty years. It has stood the test of time in a manner that forbids any doubt as to efficiency. People who praised this remedy twenty years ago still believe in it and are only too glad to state that the trouble has never returned.

Any of these symptoms may indicate heart trouble: Shortness of breath, fluttering or palpitation, choking sensation, irregular pulse, weak or hungry spells, swelling of the feet or ankles, pain under the left shoulder blade.

If you notice any of these symptoms, get a bottle of Dr. Miles' Heart Treatment. You risk nothing; for if the first bottle fails to benefit you, you have only to return the empty bottle to your druggist and your money will be cheerfully refunded.

object is to do good. They do not report so many additions as our wouldbe "popular evangelist" who works among the churches, because their work is usually in destitute places and among the weak congregations. But these men are not failures. In the eyes of God they may be eminently successful, while the men who make converts in great numbers and then forsake them may be the greatest failures on earth. Then why not encourage men who will work any place where it is needed? These men and their helpers are doing about all the real mission work being done anywhere. They should not be hindered in their work for lack of means. Sending "once and again" to their necessities is the New Testament rule in all such cases. This rule should be observed by the disciples of Jesus.

Little Sins.

A single grain of iodine will give color to seven thousand times its weight of water. So, spiritually, one sin may effect the whole life. If the evil that assails us were as frightful in its aspect as in its essence, we should run little danger from its assaults; but too often it besets us in fair forms and in dazzling colors, and herein lies our peril; and this evil is not confined to our own lives, but involves others.—Sermonizer.

Seven.

BY JOHN T. POE.

It seems that the Lord has fixed "seven" as a full and complete number. Why, I do not know. It will astonish any one to note how many times this number occurs in the Scriptures, and always as a full and complete number. Seven days, one week; seven weeks, one jubilee; seven trumpets completed the periods of the world's history, and seven seals opened reveals the history of the church through time, with a statement of what occurs during each period, long or short. The periods in trumpets, seals, and vials of wrath, each marks a complete period, with minor periods, seven in number, making up the whole or complete history. Seven letters depict, I think, seven periods of the church history

We seem now it be in that period of world history marked by the sounding of the sixth trumpet (see Rev. 9), in which four angels are turned loose for destruction and the slaying of onethird of men. And we are in the sixth seal, and the latter part of it. The seventh-trumpet period, and last of the trumpets and seals, it seems, is to be very short. I think we are in the ponring out of the last three vials, perhaps in the second, with greater woe to occur in the last; and which will complete the judgment of God poured out on an idolatrous world. And yet men will not repent.

These are opinions I have formed from the study of Revelation. I do not present these thoughts as facts, but only as my opinion of the wonderful symbols of that most mysterious book in all the Bible. I have a right to an opinion in the matter, if I tell it as an opinion. So, then, no one is bound to receive it as anything but an opinion, and they are not even bound to receive that. You, dear reader, may have your own opinion of these things. But do not say it is a fact. You do not know. There are lots of wonderful things to happen yet, no doubt, and the coming of Jesus to judge the world in righteousness may be near at hand or it may be several years yet.

Some are expecting the war to end in January (1918), and are stating it as a fact. If it ends in less than five years, I shall be surprised; and it may last ten. The bulldog tenacity of the German kaiser, who is fighting for his crown, will not let loose till he has to -not as long as a single hope remains, and then some. He has got to go, but he will not as long as he can help it.

It may be a little farther around the corners of a square deal, but the road is better.-Anon.

Shall We Build? BY J. H. LAWSON.

Some weeks ago I had occasion to visit Camp Bowie, at Fort Worth, Texas, and also Camp Travis, at San Antonio, and while viewing the great number of the young manhood of our country my mind went out to the moral and spiritual needs of the young men thus cut off from the influence of father and mother. I visited many of the tents and conversed with many of these young men. While visiting the different parts of the camp I kept a close lookout for opportunities that were offered the soldiers. I found many nice Y. M. C. A. tabernacles, nicely furnished, heated and lighted, with attendants and amusements, writing material, and a welcome. also found two large tabernacles built and equipped by the Baptist people, with plenty of Baptist literature for the boys, and preaching at regular intervals by able men of that denomination. I also found that the Catholics had their places of worship and teaching, and men to look after the needs of those who might seek help from them. I later learned that in one corner of the camp the church of Christ had a mission and that brethren from Glenwood Church were doing their "bit" there, but were at a great disadvantage in location and building.

While standing in the midst of this great camp I prayed that a tabernacle might be erected in keeping with the needs of that field, and later I presented the matter to a number of faithful brethren, and these brethren urged me to take up the matter with the brethren and raise sufficient funds to build and equip a suitable tabernacle. This I am now trying to do, and to date I have about five hundred dollars promised, payable on or before February 1, provided it is called for. Unless there is enough promised to make the work a success, I shall not attempt to build. We must have at least three thousand dollars, and five thousand would be much better. If the amount necessary is promised. then I shall place the matter under a faithful congregation, that they may have charge of the funds and that "to him [Christ] be glory in the church." We must have a tabernacle that will seat six or eight hundred people, with reading and writing rooms. I shall see that a suitable man is in charge of the work for all his time, for there is a great opportunity to do our "bit."

Shall we fail? Certainly not. We must not, for the Lord expects us to do our part. I shall have more to say later, but now, if you want a part in this great undertaking, write me at Sherman, Texas, and tell me how much you will give, to be paid by Feb-

Edifying as the Need May Be

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Men or Hogs?

When Jesus healed the demoniac in the Gadarene country, the inhabitants besought him to depart from their borders. One man had been redeemed, but two thousand hogs had been lost. Hence, Jesus' stay was too costly. We have some analogies in modern life. The men who are making money by selling immoral books or exploiting immoral pictures, by child labor, by graft, by gambling, by any kind of dishonesty, desire that the followers of Jesus should depart and let them alone. In the Cleveland experiment with criminals an objector asked whether it was not a costly way of dealing with criminals. Would the municipal farm make expenses? The answer made to him was: "We are not making expenses; we are making men." In Phœnix, Ariz., the sheriff poured out ten thousand dollars' worth of liquor on the streets. It had been taken away from bootleggers, and every pint of it represented an actual conviction. But many a red-nosed "rummy" was crying: "What a waste!"

If our business cannot stand the scrutiny of Jesus Christ, to have it destroyed would be a blessing to us and to the country. We have heard enough of taking Jesus in "as a silent partner." Let him be an active and everyday counselor.

Treating Everybody Alike.

Men are prone to seek acquaintance with the rich, and sometimes to fawn upon them; while nobody, as a rule, goes out of his way to make the acquaintance of a poor man, and especially if he thinks he will be asked to do the poor man a favor. On the other hand, there are some preachers who seem to take a delight in "handing it to the rich" in their sermons, while the sins of the poor are not especially mentioned. What was Jesus' rule in such matters? Did he make the nice social distinctions that men make? No, emphatically no. He treated all classes of men alike. Nicodemus, a great man among the Jews, came to him for a conference, and Jesus treated him with courtesy. Jairus, another rich man among the Jews and a ruler of the synagogue, came and asked a great favor. Jesus set about to perform that favor; but, despite the greatness of Jairus and the seeming need of haste in going on to his house, Jesus stopped on the way to attend to the pressing needs of a very poor woman who had spent all her money trying to get well. The fact that Nicodemus and Jairus belonged to the party of Pharisees, who were bitterly hostile toward the Savior, did not make any difference with him. Most of his visitors and supplicants were poor people; but, whether rich or poor, wise or ignorant, great or humble, he treated them all with courtesy and kindness. As Lang puts it: "For each one of them there was the infinite longing of his love, the infinite desire of his compassion, the infinite willingness of his help." Christians now are called upon to meet and deal with rich and poor. If we imitate our Master, we will neither toady to the rich nor neglect the poor; but we will be kind and courteous to both and do them good as we have opportunity.

"Why Are Ye Fearful?"

Most of us think we are in dire straits indeed when it comes to such a pass in our lives that there is no help in sight except from God. We are like the old lady who rushed up anxiously to the captain during a storm and asked whether there was any danger. The captain solemnly replied: "Madam, we must trust in God." The old lady threw both hands up and wailed: "O, has it come to that?" We feel thus because we have not as yet learned the secret of fearlessness. "Perfect love," declares Peter, ' casteth out fear." Over the mantelpiece in Mr. Gladstone's bedroom was displayed the text; "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee." We are told that he never went forth to a day's duties without first asking God's guidance. George Macdonald declares: "Fear is faithlessness." He was, no doubt, thinking of Jesus' questions to the disciples on the storm-tossed lake: Why are ye fearful? have ye not yet faith?" If during these times of stress and storm we begin to be overanxious and to fear, let us take an inventory of our faith. If it is not enough to trust Jesus, it is small enough to explain the fear that encompasses us. Carlyle says that the extent to which we have put fear under our feet is a good measure of manhood.

> "Take from our souls the strain and stress, And let our ordered lives confess The beauty of thy peace."

A Kindly Admonition. No. 2. BY W. H. CARTER.

A young preacher, not long since, said to me: "Now I don't want you to let the position I have taken cause you to think any less of me. I want us to think just as much of each other as we always have." "No," said I. "it shall not make me dislike you. I have heard that you have aligned yourself with those who oppose ordination, and am very sorry of it." Then he said: "Well, I just fell on that side, I hardly know why, but I hope to have an opportunity to talk it all over with you some day." Now the point I wish to make is, neither a preacher nor any one else should "just fall" on any side of any question, not knowing "why." A preacher, above all others, should set the example of walking by faith, and be able to give a "Thus saith the Lord" for what he does, and not "just fall" into things.

We are not under obligation to what the Bible does not teach, but must stand for what it does teach. To say the Bible does not say a certain thing must be done in a certain way is not the "whole duty of man." I am under obligation to show the way it does teach. To say the Bible does not teach any way is not sound speech. It is not consistent with the character of God to tell us to do a thing as a matter of service to him and then give no instruction, either by precept or example, as to how the thing is to be done. If, in the appointing of elders, God has revealed no way, then why oppose any way that may be suggested? To do so, it seems to me, would be to exalt my own opinion above that of others and to seek to force my opinion upon others as their rule of faith and practice. How many ways of appointing have you heard objection to? I have heard of but one-the laying on of hands. Able brethren have objected to this, but I have heard of no objection to any other way; and yet they tell us the Bible teaches no way. Is it possible, brethren, that "just any old way" will do? If so, why object to laying on hands? Is that not a way? Do you say the Bible does not teach that they laid hands on to appoint? Then what does the Bible teach that they did? Do you say the Bible does not teach us how the appointing was done? Then how do you know they did not lay hands on them? You are involved in an inconsistency, my brethren, which is the cause of more division and trouble.

Several years ago, perhaps twenty-five or thirty, I told some brethren in the Gospel Advocate office that the position they took against the laying on of hands in appointing would lead to no elders at all. To-day, in some congregations, we have three classes—one that believe in appointing by laying on hands; another that believe in having elders, but do not believe in laying on hands; and another that do not believe in having elders at all now. Do you call this confusion, division, sin? Well, somebody's teaching is the cause of it. Let us measure our faith, teaching, and practice by the word of the Lord, and let the guilty repent.

But it may be you have been taught, and have accepted the teaching, that hands were always laid on to perform a miracle, or to convey supernatural power. I have been taught that, too, but a personal investigation has kept me from believing it. My observation is that such is assumption and not fact. I do not know of a single place, or example, where hands were laid on any one to convey spiritual gifts, or miraculous power, and believe I am fully warranted in the denial that there is such a passage. If you, my dear brother (I mean all, from the college president to the "foot-back" preacher in the mountains and hills), know of such scripture, you will do me a favor if you will write me and refer me to it.

Now, if you do not believe in laying on hands to appoint, what do you believe in? Is there anything in "the unity of the faith" to you? There should be much in it to us all. If we have differences of understanding, the Scriptures, if believed and practiced, will bring us into the "unity of the faith." But I am told that the passage from which I have quoted (Eph. 4: 13) knocks the elders out. I am not sure of that. We are taught in logic that that which proves too much does not prove anything. Paul says: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith," etc. (Eph. 4: 11-16.) You say this leaves the elders out? Yes. Why so? Because these things were only to continue "till we come in the unity of the faith." From this, then, the evangelist goes out, too, as well as the elders. Now, my brother, if from this we eliminate the elders, and are to have no elders now, we must eliminate the evangelist also; for he, too, was given "till we come in the unity of the faith." Do you say that we have no such evangelists now? Well, what is the difference? Why, you say, "they were inspired." Who says they were inspired? Is that not an assumption? Timothy was an evangelist, and Paul does not write to him like he was an inspired man. But you think the difference now is, an evangelist to-day is an uninspired man. Well, do you not claim that elders then were inspired, too? Now, if uninspired evangelists may continue, why may not uninspired elders continue? In this you are forced to use your guessing apparatus, and not the wisdom of God. If this puts the eiders out, it puts the evangelists out. If it is wrong to have elders now, it is wrong to have evangelists now. This is not if this passage puts elders out, and it is wrong to have elders now, it puts all teachers out, and it is wrong to have any teachers now. So you prove too much. If I believed that teaching, I would quit preaching and follow "old Beck" the balance of my days here. But enough for this time.

Evangelistic Report for One Year.

BY R. V. CAWTHON.

My work for last year was hard, but very pleasant. Some of it was very trying on account of poor health, but altogether it was enjoyable. My highest aspiration from boyhood has been to preach the gospel, and now it is being realized when I am constantly in the service. I do not enjoy eating idle bread, so the year was a busy one. During the winter months I taught Bible classes and assisted in prayer meetings at different places. In early spring I began tent work where there was no congregations or very weak ones, and then for thirty weeks I was in protracted meetings without any stop.

During this time I preached four hundred and forty sermons, established one congregation, baptized seventy-four persons, restored thirteen to the fellowship, and spent a great deal of time trying to strengthen those already in the faith. I delivered many lectures in public schools and colleges, trying to remove prejudice from the hearts of the young and prepare them for the gospel of Jesus. I believe lots of good can be accomplished in this way, and I never miss an opportunity like this. Youth is the seedline of life, and they should never be slighted or forgotten.

Brother Claude H. Woodroof labored with me most of the year, and I consider him the best helper I have ever had. He loves the cause and will make a grand success.

My work was enjoyable, but many times I became discouraged when the good was not accomplished that I knew should be. The cause of this, I am sure, was indifference on the part of so-called "Christians." This is by far greater than I have ever known and fills its mission in blighting the hopes and thwarting the purpose of Christianity. How can we expect the sinner to be interested when the Christian is not? Paul spoke of a people "having a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge." The majority of congregations now have a knowledge of God without any zeal. Where are the ones like David, who say by actions: "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord?" So we have to spend the most of our time stirring up the brethren to duty. I cannot see why any one could be so indifferent concerning that which is most important of all.

The visible results were far short of what I usually accomplish, and the encouragement equally as short. Still, I tried earnestly to hold up the cause.

I hoped at the beginning of the year to pay a little on my home debt, but, instead, I was compelled to go in debt about one hundred dollars more to give my family the necessities of life. I labored much of the year with very weak congregations, where I only received from nine to twelve dollars per week, with nine depending wholly on me for support. I do not regret a particle of this work, and expect to return to practically every one of them this year for another meeting. Of course I struck some places where they were extra good to me, and I thank the Lord for everything received and the little good that may have been accomplished.

Some preachers have given up the work, saying they "couldn't make a living." I went into the ministry for life, and expect to stick through persecution or hardship, and I am trying to learn the lesson of Paul, "in all things to be content." May the Lord bless us in being more faithful through wars, prosperity, or calamity.

A Great Question.

BY C. E. HOLT.

Here is a question to which an answer is sought. put the question to each reader of the Gospel Advocate: Do you believe that the teachings of Christ can be put into practice; and, if so, do you believe his teaching would bring the results that Jesus said it would bring? Do you answer in the affirmative? Well, let us see. "Ye have heard that it was said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy: but I say unto you, Love your enemies, and pray for them that persecute you; that ye may be sons of your Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 5: 43, 44.) Again, the Spirit, through Paul, says: "Avenge not yourselves, beloved, but give place unto the wrath of God: for it is written, Vengeance belongeth unto me; I will recompense, saith the Lord. But if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12: 19-21.) Suppose all the nations now at war should adopt this beautifully divine and humanitarian policy or course of conduct toward each other, how long would the war last? It would be ended at once. Swords would be converted into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. Nation would not lift up sword against nation; neither would they learn war any more. What a blessed vision of peace universal! Will this glorious era ever dawn upon this war-stricken, blood-stained earth? Yes. Again I answer, Yes. But when shall this glorious era dawn? When shall all war clouds roll away, nevermore to return? Not while unregenerate men rule the world. As long as we have unregenerate men and women, we will have wars and human suffering. Unregenerate humanity proceeds upon the principle that "might makes right." Their idea is that the weak must submit to the strong.

It has ever been so, and it will continue to be that the spirit of greed, love of power and place and wealth is deaf to the bitter wails of the widows and orphans in their sufferings caused by wars. "Let them weep; let them suffer," says the spirit of greed. Such men are strangers to the great truth which lies at the very foundation of man's redemption-viz., the common Fatherhood of God and the common brotherhood of man. This is a doctrine that is divinely true and that is truly divine. This truth was never more clearly set forth than when the princely preacher, the apostle to the Gentiles, stood on Mars' Hill, in the then proud city of Grecian learning, amid the great philosophers of that age, and announced it as the foundation of God's love and mercy to the world. We cannot forbear quoting his words. They flash back to the very beginning of man's existence on earth, and they send a stream of light athwart the centuries and the millenniums beyond the power of human vision and comprehension. "The God that made the world and all things therein, he, being Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is he served by men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he himself giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and he made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he is not far from each one of us: for in him we live and move and have our being; as certain even of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring." (Acts 17: 24-28.) This great truth is seen in the Savior's command to preach the gospel to the whole creation. All nations are included. In him all racial and national lines are blotted out. We talk about some method by which to bring about a league of nations, thereby insuring to the world a permanent peace. It is folly of the supremest type to thus talk. There is only one way to bring into existence a unity of nations, so that "peace on earth and good will among men" may reign supreme and undisturbed, and that is for all to accept and own Jesus Christ as their rightful and righteous Sovereign. In him, and in him alone, can they meet and live and work together in union and harmony and peace. Through the divine telescope of inspiration Paul was enabled to see this glorious consummation. This is the way he teaches it: "Making known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he purposed in him unto a dispensation of the fullness of the times, to sum up [gather together] all things in Christ." (Eph. 1: 9, 10.)

As the years roll away the time of this consummation draws nearer. God's program was made out before the foundation of this mundane sphere was laid; before the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted the joyful anthem of creation's beauty and symmetry and loveliness. Let us pray that the Lord will enlarge our vision, enabling us to see the wonderful things in his law, his purpose; and his love to the human race. Let us pray for grace that we may be able to follow in the heaven-born way of truth, doing unto others as we would have others do unto us. Then shall the wilderness blossom as the rose, and the crooked ways shall be made straight and the rough places be made smooth.

A Good Example.

Elder John E. Dunn, a well-known minister of the church of Christ, of Nashville, Tenn., has been sent by the local congregation at Cookeville, Tenn., to Greenville, S. C., and the Y. M. C. A. has appointed him Religious Secretary of Unit 85, at Camp Sevier. The parents of the boys from this section who are in Camp Sevier will doubtless read this announcement with joy, as Brother Dunn was at one time a member of the faculty of Dixie College and endeared himself to the people of the upper country in many ways. The fact that he is now living among them in camp, sympathizing, cheering, and helping them in every possible way in his power, will be comforting and consoling to the anxious mothers and fathers at home. Brother Dunn is busy from early morning till late at night, publicly and privately, among the soldiers. Therefore it has been suggested that the folks at home write to their boys, giving them his address, and ask them to call on him, since it would take quite a while for him to find all the boys in that large camp of forty thousand. Relatives of the boys who are planning to visit Camp Sevier should also note Brother Dunn's address and arrange to meet him.

The church at Cookeville has pledged to support Brother Dunn's family while he is away, since he receives no salary, but is simply a voluntary worker, and regular reports will be received from him by the elders of the congregation at Cookeville. It would be impossible for him to answer all the letters he receives from the fathers, mothers, wives, and loved ones at home; hence those who desire to do so may hear from him through the church at Cookeville.

Brother Dunn's mission is not only to help those who are identified with the church, but all who may need his services; and even though your boy may not be a member of the church, Brother Dunn will take pleasure in making his acquaintance and will be glad to look after his welfare, both spiritually and temporally, whenever an opportunity presents itself.

HAYDEN YOUNG.

The church at Cookeville is setting a good example for other churches. Brother Dunn is engaged in a most noble work. We cannot neglect our boys who have been carried to the camps without being guilty in the sight of the Lord. The great commission provides for the preaching of the gospel to every creature. Other faithful ministers would do well to volunteer their services. They should be ready to go and make the sacrifices necessary in order to preach the gospel to every one in the camps. While preachers should be ready to do such work, churches should also be ready to follow the example of the church at Cookeville and cheerfully support those who volunteer their services.

How many preachers will volunteer to undertake this work? And how many churches will volunteer to support their families while engaged in the work, as the church at Cookeville has done? May our hearts be made glad by the hearty response of many preachers and many churches.

A Letter to Her Teacher

[When Brother J. O. Blaine, of Portland, Tenn., showed us this letter from one whom he had taught many years ago, it seemed so tender and sweet and beautiful and genuine withal that our first impulse was to let all our readers see it. Brother Blaine reluctantly granted permission.—Eduror's Note.]

Calvert, Texas, December 3, 1917.—My Dear Professor Blaine: It is a beautiful custom of your friends to gather about you and make your birthday the happiest of the year. I can only be with you in spirit and send these words which so poorly express the sentiments which the day awakens.

I did not know long years ago when I met my new teacher that I had clasped the hand which would be the guiding one for all good upon my future. I did not know that you were to be the dearest, truest, most faithful friend that I would ever know. You were not only destined to guide me through the intricacies of higher mathematics, but were to mold my character as well. That I am not a splendid, noble, gracious woman is not your fault; you did the best which was possible with the material at hand, and I confess, in full appreciation of your efforts, that what is finest in my character I owe to your influence. When our intercourse as teacher and pupil was finished, and like a butterfly I fluttered out into the world to taste the sweets of every social pleasure, I always felt your restraining hand upon my giddy, care-free life. I know that you have known few hours of greater happiness than when, after long years, your prayers for me were answered and I became a Christian.

I have known you in many phases of life. I have seen your beautiful, devoted, home life; I have seen the sacrifices which you have made for your Lord; I have known you when death robbed you of your best beloved. There was no bitterness in your sorrow, but with tear-dimmed eyes and trembling lips you sung with breaking heart:

"My faith looks up to thee, Thou Lamb of Calvary."

Do you remember your first visit to my Texas home? O, how proud I was that you would come so far to see one of your schoolgirls! How glad I was that my mother and brother would know the teacher-friend to whom I owed so much! Time had laid his hand upon us both; but when we recalled the years which were gone, we seemed to find the fountain of youth.

I will never forget when I turned to you and sobbed out my despair when my precious brother died. I seemed to feel your hand upon my head. My burden became lighter when I laid it upon you. You are a prince before your God; he loves you; and when you raised your great heart in prayer for my poor old mother and for me, he had respect for your petition, and you were allowed to give the comfort and the peace which no other could.

Ah, Professor Blaine, a grand, beautiful, unselfish life leads up to the eighty-third milestone, which you reach to-day. There are no shadows on the years which reach out before you. Crowned with the love of all who know you, wearing the honor and respect of all men, you are pressing forward like a vallant soldier to receive the reward promised those who have fought the good fight. For you

"The land breeze of heaven is beginning to play, Earth's shadows are meeting eternity's day, And its tumult is hushed in the past."

For all that you have been to me, I give the thanks and love which shall endure as long as we both shall live.

The end of life is not happiness, but goodness. The aim of education is not to interest the child, but to incite and guide his self-activity. Seeking goodness, we win happiness; inciting self-activity, we quicken interest.—Selected.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

Brother McQuiddy: My position has been that the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and all other institutions organized for purpose of doing benevolent work are probably dained of God and perfectly good for the purposes for which they are formed, but that the Christian has no right to do such work through any other institution than the It seems to me that all missionary and church of Christ. benevolent societies are in the same class-organized for purpose of doing the work which the church has failed (almost entirely) to do and usurping the honor and glory which should go to the church. Sometimes I even wonder if the Bible colleges and the religious publishing houses are not robbing the church of its rightful place as the "light of the world." Please advise what you think of this. H. L. MEEKS.

I have never seen anything in the word of God to indicate that the Red Cross or the Y. M. C. A. are ordained of God for doing benevolent work. The very genius and spirit of Christianity requires Christians to do such work. Christians engaged in business are not always permitted to run their business according to their own ideas. Christians may claim that they manage their own business. but, if so, they make a mistake in making such claims. As we are all in the government and in society, we must be influenced by our surroundings. As the Scriptures clearly teach me to render to Cæsar the things that belong to Cæsar and as Christ himself paid tribute to Cæsar, I certainly, as a Christian, can submit to the government and be patriotic to the government by contributing funds through the Y. M. C. A., the only agency accredited by the government for such work. If it be true that as an individual Christian I am required to do all good works through the church, and the church alone, then it is a mistake even to contribute funds in harmony with the government's wishes. However, I have never understood that the Scriptures teach that I can do no work as an individual, but that all my good work must be church work. If contributing to the Red Cross and to the Y. M. C. A. war fund destroys the work of preaching the gospel, saps the very foundation of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ, and is destructive of the church that he died to establish, then, as a Christian, I should not contribute to such work. If, as our brother says, however, these are ordained of God for doing this benevolent work, and the Bible requires submission to the powers that are ordained of God, it could not be possible that in so doing I would be destroying the church of God or belittling the work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Who is to officiate at the Lord's table? Can others than the elders do so without detriment to the church? (2) Is it wrong to refuse to put in your membership in the congregation where you worship? (3) How ordain or appoint elders? (4) Is it scriptural to call the church the "Christian church?" (5) Should the church beg outsiders or sinners for help? (6) What is the best way to deal with a chronic objector? (7) Should a preacher do anything but preach—for instance, farm, trade, clerk, etc.? (8) Is it wrong to fail to call on the young men to take a public part in the worship?

(1) The Bible nowhere teaches anything concerning "officiating" at the Lord's table. The Lord's table is for Christians. They are to offer thanks and give one to another. Formality in its observance is without scriptural warrant. Because one gives thanks is no reason why this should be called "officiating at the Lord's table." The elders are those who look after the welfare of the congregation, and they may call on any disciple to do this. Every Christian is a king and priest unto God to offer his own sacrifice to God. Each must partake of the loaf and of the fruit of the vine for himself. The one who leads in giving thanks is not a whit above him who receives and partakes of the emblems. (2) Christians should stand identified with the church of Christ in the community where they live. If a man has any influence for or against the religion of Christ, it is at home among his neighbors and not in some distant community. Orderly-walking Christians will stand identified with the Christian people where they live. (3) I do not find any clear example of how elders were ordained or appointed. I have proceeded in some instances like this: I have made announcement, say, one month before elders were to be selected. I have asked members of the church to name those who were best fitted for the work according to the scriptural teaching on the subject. When the names were furnished, they were announced, giving each and every one the privilege to object to any that were suggested. If no objection was made, it went down as the unanimous decision of the church that these were chosen as elders. (4) I find no authority in the word of God for calling the church of Christ the "Christian church." It is sometimes argued that "Christian" is an adjective and qualifies "church," and that as the church is composed of Christians there is no wrong in calling it the "Christian church." It is better, however, to speak as the Bible speaks. (5) I have never believed in begging any one, not even Christians, to contribute to the church. Christians should know their duty on this subject and should contribute cheerfully and freely as the Lord has blessed them. If sinners voluntarily give to the church, I can see no wrong in accepting such gifts, as Solomon accepted the gifts of King Hiram. (6) The Bible does not point out any specific way of dealing with a chronic objector. Every chronic objector must be dealt with in harmony with his nature. The man who knows and understands the objector would be better qualified to deal with him than one who knows nothing of his peculiar characteristics. (7) Paul made tents as well as preached the gospel. If it were right for Paul, it is right for a preacher to-day to do likewise. If all our preachers had a good, practical, business education; if they were well-informed as to the needs of the people generally, they would be much better fitted to cope with the problems that are thrust upon them as they labor to build up the cause of Jesus Christ. Preachers should be able to teach by example and by their lives, as well as by the public proclamation of the truth. Many are able to proclaim the gospel forcefully and successfully who make most woeful failures when it comes to practicing the Christian religion. While men cannot practice as perfectly as they preach, as they have a perfect law to preach and an imperfect nature to contend with in the practice of that law, yet preachers should labor earnestly to lead lives of godliness, that are unblamable and above reproach. (8) If the old men had not been called on when young to take part and develop their talents, they would be unfitted for the work that they now do. If our young men are ever developed and become efficient workers in the church, they must be given an opportunity to grow. The blacksmith's arm is developed by use; the preacher learns how to preach by preaching; the teacher learns how to teach by teaching; and so with the different callings of life. It is a very grave mistake not to call on the young men and to encourage them to do that for which they are the best fitted. Such failure is unscriptural and does not meet with the approval of God.

The Christian Standard Ignores Our Response to the Missionary Society Convention Proceedings.

BY M. C. K.

In the light of what seemed such an auspicious beginning of exchanges with our society brethren inaugurated by the Sweeney committee's fraternal approach to us and the Christian Standard's comment on "the thin partition" between us, it is with no little regret on our part that neither the Standard nor any other journal, so far as we know, has attempted to meet our response to the proceedings at Kansas City. We mention the Standard in particular because of its reference to the matter and its generous publication of our reply to the Sweeney committee. We hailed it as an auspicious moment when that committee submitted its draft of a new Constitution for the society for our consideration, and we resolved, from the very start, to meet the case, as best we might, at every point of development and in the spirit and manner which become brethren who engage to consider their differences; and hence, to clarify the issue and reduce it to that which alone is vital, we said in reply to the committee:

I wish to state, for the benefit of those brethren of the missionary society who regard the institution as a mere business method of carrying out a divine requirement, that we not only have no objection to human business methods of doing divine things where no method of doing them is divinely prescribed, but we know that some such method in such cases is indispensable to a proper prosecution of any work; but it is when an alleged business arrangement is adopted under the name of a method which we conceive to be a clear contravention at some other point of that which is divinely ordained that we feel compelled to object; and here, in our judgment, is the principal, if not, indeed, the only material, objection to the plan proposed in the present Constitution-namely, its interference with the autonomy and independence of the local church. Here God has specifically legislated, and no measure, either as a business method or in any other way, should be adopted for any purpose whatever that contravenes that legislation. Hence our necessary demurrer at this point; for, notwithstanding there is in the preamble to the Constitution now under consideration an explicit avowal of "steadfast adherence to the independence and autonomy of the local churches," and even other well-intended and manifest safeguards in the body of the instrument against interference at this point, yet I must respectfully remind you that the constitutional provision for deciding matters for the cooperating churches by a majority vote of the members composing "the International Convention," whether viva voce or by ballot, would in principle be an agreement in advance, on the part of such churches, to abide by the decision of the majority, whether that decision might be to support false teachers or to do anything else in which a church might be unable to acquiesce, and this would unmistakably be a transference of control in ecclesiastical affairs from the local church organization, where God has placed it, to a general organization, where it is placed by man.

Then, in our issue of November 15, 1917, referring gratefully to the courtesy of the society in publishing in full with comment our letter in the "Convention Daily" at Kansas City, we said:

We appreciate these generous words and the kindly spirit thus shown in dealing with our letter, and it affords us no little pleasure to assure the brethren of the society that we stand ready to meet them, not only halfway, but all the way, in any matter and to any extent where we can do so without any sacrifice of truth or conviction.

Then, in our issue of November 29, 1917, commenting on the ground of our contention for the independence of the local church, we said:

We who are contending for the independence of the local church feel compelled, by the clearest and strongest convictions, to oppose any ecclesiastic arrangement which even potentially commits the churches to the alternative of either permitting things settled by the King to be changed by a majority vote of the people or to withdraw from the arrangement. Such an arrangement itself is Such an arrangement itself is wrong. Of course, in the case of any and all actions taken by the Convention under the Constitution now before us, the local churches are left free to take such action as they see fit" as to whether they will bow to such action of the Convention and go with it in a wrong, or withdraw from the organization; but this is to yield the point in dispute and to admit the validity of our contention that the Con-stitution provides for the Convention's "interference with the autonomy and independence of the local church.

Finally, to our brethren of the other side, and in the same issue of our paper, we put this pointed, but courteous and brotherly, question:

Will our brethren advocating this measure kindly answer this question: If action taken by the Convention, as provided for by this Constitution, should be to uphold and continue in its service false teachers, would not the local churches be compelled to either support such action or to withdraw from the concern? It is not sufficient to be reminded here that they would not be likely to take such action. The question is, does the arrangement give them the power to do it? We should be glad to have this question squarely faced with a plain "yes" or "no." If we are mistaken in our induction and statement of facts, it can be answered "no;" but if we are not thus mistaken, it should be answered "yes," and this fact would confirm our con-

We have seen no response from any quarter. It was not in harmony with our conception of either Christian courtesy or Christian responsibility in such matters to ignore them or even unnecessarily delay their proper treatment; and with this repeated statement of our attitude in the matter, we rest the case for the present.

Forgiveness.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Forgiveness carries with it the thought of lifting up or away, meaning that God lifts up and carries away our sins. He is represented as easting them behind his back, as removing them as far from us as the east is from the west, and as burying them in the heart of the mighty deep. For our own good, we must forgive those who trespass against us. If we harbor and dwell upon the wrongs that have been done us, our natures become morose and sour and we become repellant to all with whom we associate. By entertaining a vicious and malignant spirit, we drive all the sunshine from our lives and bring down upon ourselves threatening and destructive clouds. If we would be useful, happy, and helpful to all about us, we must forgive. Without such a spirit of forgiveness, we know that God will not hear our supplications. David says: "Lord, hear my voice: let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications. If thou, Jehovah, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who could stand? But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared." (Ps. 130: 2-4.) When we have erred and sinned, like David, we should pray to fall into the hands of the living God, for God is more merciful and far more forgiving than our fellow creatures. He has assured us that "every sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Spirit shall not be forgiven." (Matt. 12: 31.) Thus it is seen that God in his goodness forgives all sin, save the sin against the Holy Spirit. All who forgive, who strive to know the will of God and are faithful in doing it, may be assured that they have not committed the sin against the Holy Spirit.

GOD FORGIVES THROUGH CHRIST.

"Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to come into this world to lead a life of poverty, suffering, and ignominy, and to die the shameful death of the cross, in order that we might enjoy the remission of sins through him. "And in none other is there salvation: for neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved." (Acts 4: 12.) This same Jesus who was mistreated, rejected, and crucified by wicked persecutors, "did God exalt with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins." (Acts 5: 31.) Only through Christ, and by an acceptance of the conditions imposed upon us by him, can we enjoy the remission of sins. Were we to confide in our own strength and through our own wisdom expect to provide means through which to enjoy the remission of sins, we would make a miserable failure. Through Christ we may enjoy the remission of sins, and with Paul each of us can say: "I can do all things in him [Christ] that strengtheneth me."

In order that the Gentiles be forgiven and enjoy the remission of sins with an eternal inheritance, we learn that Paul was sent to preach to them "Christ, and him crucified "-" to open their eyes, that they may turn from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive remission of sins and an inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith in me." (Acts 26: 18.) We might as well attempt to blot out the sun, obliterate the stars, and dry up the ocean as to hope to enjoy remission of sins, except in and through the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul, in writing to the Ephesians, declares: "In whom we have our redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses, according to the riches of his grace." (Eph. 1: 7.) He teaches the same precious truth in writing to the church at Colosse. As "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps," so no man can hope to enjoy remission and the approval of the Heavenly Father, only as he enjoys them in and through the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. So it behoves God's children to know the truth and to obey it. All who thus follow the Lord are assured of forgiveness in this life and of life eternal in the world to come.

WE MUST FORGIVE TO BE FORGIVEN.

This same Jesus who condescended to bow the heavens in love and to come down on the wings of mercy to redeem fallen man teaches us, in language that cannot be misunderstood: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." (Matt. 6: 14, 15.) As God graciously forgives our iniquities and removes them from us, holding them against us no more forever, so must we be gracious to forgive those who have trespassed against us. The Holy Spirit admonishes: "And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you." (Eph. 4: 32.) The Holy Spirit, writing to Christians, further exhorts: "Put on therefore, as God's elect, holy and beloved, a heart of compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving each other, if any man have a complaint against any; even as the Lord forgave you, so also do ye." (Col. 3: 12.)

CONDITION OF FORGIVENESS.

As the Lord does not forgive those who refuse to repent, so the Bible does not teach us to forgive those who have sinned against us until they repent. Were God to forgive the impenitent sinner, the very stones would cry out against it and the demons in hell would expect to be transformed into angels of light. There is such a terrible conflict between sin and righteousness that it is impossible for God to forgive an impenitent soul. The man who has sinned and offended his brethren must hate the wrong he has done and must put it beneath his feet before he has any claim on their forgiveness. So long as he loves and practices sin, he will have no fellowship with those who crucify the flesh and the lusts thereof. If we would be forgiven, we must repent. Repentance, which is a change of will produced by godly sorrow, leads to reformation of life. The Holy Spirit admonishes: "Take heed to yourselves: if thy brother sin, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him." (Luke 17: 3.) When a man is truly penitent, he confesses with his mouth, and not with his heart, the wrong that he has done. With the mouth, and not with the heart, confession is made unto salvation. We cannot expect to enjoy forgiveness unless we are sufficiently penitent to confess our sins. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." The truly penitent man is not sorry that he is caught, but is sorry that he has brought reproach on the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. His is a godly sorrow, and not a sorrow of the world which worketh death. Being penitent, it is his purpose to undo the wrong that he has done in so far as possible. He is not so anxious to put himself forward before the public as he is to make sure that he has set himself right before God.

SELF-FORGIVENESS.

No man can forgive himself and know that he stands justified before God until he has repented and confessed his sins. He must respect himself before he can enjoy God's approval and the confidence of the brethren. Having forever turned away from sin and realizing that he has been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb, he can truly say, in the language of Dr. Wortman:

I mourn, dear Christ, the sins that wounded thee; Thou mournest more, they have so wounded me. I'll hurt no more this blundering, bleeding soul Thy wounded hands would so gently make whole. Correct, O Lord, the all-mistutored zeal That makes more sore the sores thy love would heal, Deeming we best sweet Mercy's will obey When we not self but suffering selves would slay.

Alas! on soul and body many a scar All self-inflicted in this needless war, Where we misdeem amidst strange alarms God's bugle blast of peace a call to arms.

Aye, aye, to arms! To arms thou callest me; To arms—thine own strong arms of sympathy! Brave Christ, thus arming, thou dost best disarm me Of all such weapons as may charm but harm me!

We must rise above sin, must trample it beneath our feet, and upon conquered selves rise to a nobler and purer life before we can enjoy that "peace that passeth all understanding." So long as we are conscious of unforgiven sins and realize that our lives are not such as meet the approval of Jehovah, it is not possible for us to enjoy any real peace and happiness. Standing condemned in the eyes of Jehovah, we must pass through the world in darkness, misery, and suffering. If our own heart condemn us, we are lost.

Professional Preachers. No. 2. BY E. A. E.

Let us read 2 Pet. 2 several times. To read it casually one time is not sufficient. Believing this, as we do every word of God, it should impress us profoundly. Gabriel said to Mary: "No word from God shall be void of power."

The first three verses of this chapter declare: (1) That as there were false prophets among God's people of old, so will there be false teachers among the disciples of Christ; (2) that these false teachers will "privily bring in destructive heresies" ["sects of perdition"—margin] and, "denying even the Master that bought them," will bring upon themselves "swift destruction;" (3) that many will be the "lascivious doings" of these false teachers; (4) that because of the works of these false teachers "the way of the truth" will "be evil spoken of;" (5) that covetousness prompts these false teachers to "make merchandise" "with feigned words" of Christians generally; (6) that the sentence of these false teachers "now from of old lingereth not and their destruction slumbereth not."

What one person of all who study the Bible can doubt that to-day "the way of the truth" is "evil spoken of?"

Think of this—"the way of the truth!" What is "the way of the truth?" It is the way into which and along which always the truth leads all who accept it. What is the truth? The word of God is the truth. (John 17: 17.) Jesus proclaims that he is "the way, and the truth, and the life," and that no one can come unto the Father but by him. (John 14: 6.) No one can go "the way of the truth" except by following the example of Jesus and having the spirit of Christ.

How fearful, then, it is for men who claim to be teachers of the truth, and nothing but the truth, to cause any of those who are endeavoring to follow the word of God in all things to be held up to the ridicule and reproach of the world and to be spoken of as evildoers! It is no wonder God declares that the sentence of such lingers not and their destruction slumbers not.

Since angels sinned, we should not be surprised, although we are grieved, that some preachers go wrong and that there are now some false teachers.

Jesus says: "It is impossible but that occasions of stumbling should come; but woe unto him through whom they come!"

"God spared not angels when they sinned," "spared not the ancient world," turned Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes and "condemned them with an overthrow," and will destroy all false teachers. In corrupting and destroying others, false teachers will receive destruction as the hire of their wrongdoing.

But as God "preserved Noah and seven others" and "delivered righteous Lot," he knows how "to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to keep the ungodly under punishment unto the day of judgment."

Note carefully and seriously God's description of these false teachers: they are unrighteous, lascivious, have "eyes full of adultery," daring, self-willed, fear "not to rail at dignities," rail "in matters whereof they are ignorant," "creatures without reason," "born mere animals," walk "after the flesh, in the lust of defilement," "count it pleasure to revel in the daytime," "spots and biemishes," covetous and "exercise their hearts in covetousness," "children of cursing," "are springs without water," "mists driven by the storm," and have forsaken "the right way."

One false teacher can hardly be guilty of all these sins. Some false teachers are "lascivious" and have "eyes full of adultery." It is not unusual for some preacher to be found guilty of adultery. Having been convicted, he acknowledges (!) his guilt and goes on preaching with as much popularity, seemingly, as ever. But these sins do not prevent such teachers' turning godliness into a way of gain.

While not "lascivious" and while not having "eyes full of adultery," other false teachers, through the love of money, follow "the way of Balaam, . . . who loved the wages of wrongdoing."

But what about Balaam? Let all study his case and see what about him. The church in Pergamum had in it some who held to "the teaching of Balaam." (Rev. 2: 14.) For money Balaam tried for three times to curse God's people, when God had blessed them and had told Balaam he could not curse them and should not attempt to do so. God turned Balaam's curses into blessings-that is, God made him bless instead of curse the Israelites. When Balaam could not curse them, he then taught Balak to cast a stumblingblock in their way and to induce them to sacrifice to idols and to commit fornication. When the Israelites did this, God himself cursed them by slaying twenty-three thousand in one day. Just as Balaam did this for money, so these false teachers through the love of money "entice unsteadfast souls." Through "great swelling words of vanity" and "in the lusts of the flesh, by lasciviousness," they "entice" "those who are just escaping from" the ones who "live in error," promising "liberty," "while they themselves are bond servants of corruption.'

Let us think a while. How horrible is this! Just as babes in Christ are coming out from those who live in error and are being separated from the world, there are numbers of false teachers who are ready through the love of money to entice them by "great swelling words" and by "their smooth and fair speech" back into the bondage of error and sin. No sooner have thousands come out of denominationalism than numerous teachers begin the subtle work of forming them into another huge denomination and entice them into it. Has not the call, "Back to the New Testament as the only rule of faith and practice and the New Testament church and order of work and worship," almost been silenced? It is no wonder that this chapter declares that "the blackness of darkness" has been reserved for such teachers and that they had better never known the way of righteousness. The dog has gone back to his vomit and the sow, once washed, to her wallowing in the mire. 14154

How solemn and fearful is the responsibility of preachers; God does not teach that both preachers and the ones preached to, when overtaken in any trespass, cannot and may not and should not repent and be restored; but he does teach all to bring forth fruit worthy of repentance, to be humble, modest, meek, lowly, and to show by their good manner of life in every way they are faithful followers of Jesus. God teaches also that the man who has done wrong must receive the same treatment as the woman who has done the same wrong, and as much mercy and love must be extended to the woman as the man.

"No man can serve two masters." A man "cannot serve God and mammon." If he undertakes to serve both, he will fail in his service to God, and it will in the course of time be plainly manifested which one he does serve.

It should be said here, not only what one preaches depends upon why one preaches, but also what one preaches depends upon the master one serves. If one serves the true and living God and seeks first his kingdom and his right-eousness, one will determine to know nothing "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified," to "preach the word," to never shun to declare "the whole counsel of God," and to glory in nothing save the cross of Christ. (Gal. 6: 14.)

There cannot be a more fearful and awful consequence than that which follows leading people to perdition through teaching error or a failure to teach the whole truth in season and out of season. Had Paul shrunk from declaring "the whole counsel of God," he says he would have gone to the judgment with the blood of men on his soul. The only way to be pure from the blood of all men is to preach "the whole counsel of God." The preacher must stand in God's counsel and cause the people to hear God's words—not something else—not anything less than God's words and not anything more than God's words. (See Jer. 23: 22.) Hele Grant God's Words.

Christians are the light of the world and the salt of the earth, and all, as they have ability, are to teach others the will of God; but it is a most serious and solemn thing to put oneself forward as a teacher or preacher and guide to others. Let us read James 3: 1, 2:

Be not many of you teachers, my brethren, knowing that we shall receive heavier judgment. For in many things we all stumble. If any stumbleth not in word, the same is a perfect man, able to bridle the whole body also.

Some see a connection between this exhortation and the statement in the preceding chapter that faith apart from works is dead, because the more men think faith without obedience is sufficient, the more they are inclined to become teachers, because it is easier to teach than to practice that which is taught.

The more men are made to see the importance of practicing what they teach, and feel the responsibility of teachers and the eternal fearfulness of teaching error and failing to teach all the truth, the less will they push themselves forward as teachers and preachers.

Jesus, the greatest of all teachers, first practiced what he teaches. He "began both to do and to teach." (Acts 1: 1.)
He says that in order to become his disciple one must deny self and follow him. Paul exhorts elders to take heed first to themselves and then to the church (Acts 20: 28);
Peter exhorts them to be "ensamples to the flock" (1 Pet. 5: 3). The qualifications of elders show that they are first to practice the good lessons they are to teach others.

(1 Tim. 3: 1-7; Tit. 1: 5-11.) Timothy and Titus were to be examples. (1 Tim. 4: 12; Tit. 2: 7, 8.) All Christians are commanded to be examples—to so let their light shine before men, that others seeing their good works may glorify God. (Matt. 5: 16.)

The Pharisees were condemned because they taught and did not. They liked the title of "teacher" or "master," and loved the chief seats in the synagogue, etc. (Matt. 23: 1-12.) The Jews were condemned on this point:

Thou therefore that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? . . . For circumcision indeed profiteth, if thou be a doer of the law; but if thou be a transgressor of the law, thy circumcision is become uncircumcision. (Rom. 2: 21-25.)

There were many false teachers in James' day. (See Acts 15: 24; Tit. 1: 10, 11.)

As stated above, a teacher's or preacher's responsibility is great; and the higher one's position and the greater one's influence, the greater the condemnation when one fails to fill that position and to exert the proper influence.

None are forbidden to teach the word of God in humility and to the best of their ability; but self-exaltation, pushing oneself f rward, seeking "chief seats," and wearing littles are condemned. Let one fill well a humble position and wait until prepared and invited to "come up higher." Many should not teach because they are not competent. The Hebrew Christians were reproved because in their inactivity they had not become competent teachers of others. (Heb. 5: 11141) All have the right to teach, and as they become competent, first in Christian character and then in the knowledge of the truth, must teach; but were unto the church and the world when those who have neither the Christian character nor knowledge of the truth necessary to fit them for teachers or preachers presume to teach and preach! Or would be compared.

God commands all Christians to grow in the grace and the knowledge of Christ, and, as they thus become competent, to teach others, but to do so in modesty and humility, earnestness and faithfulness, both by example and precept. "Aged women" are to teach the younger women the good lessons of Tit. 2: 3-5. That which Timothy had learned from Paul he was to commit to "faithful men" who were "able to teach others also." (2 Tim. 2: 2.)

"Men must prove themselves faithful before they should be sent out to teach others.

Who can doubt that the church is in a sad condition to-day for lack of faithful teachers? In many places the young have been taken unawares and the church generally filled with the spirit of the world through lack of plain. tender, loving, strong, and faithful teachers. From different quarters the complaint comes that there is not that direct, plain, faithful teaching of the word of God in the spirit of Christ and love of the truth and with the burden of souls on the heart as the former generation of preachers gave, and which is especially necessary to the preaching of the gospel at any time. God demands that the gospel of Christ-its facts, commands, the godly life it requires, its promises and hope-be preached-who Jesus is, what he has done for the world, what he is, where he is now, what he is doing for the church now and is ready to do for the world, that he will come again, and what will take place then. God teaches nothing more fully and plainer than that which he commands to be preached and that which he forbids to be preached.

I repeat that a preacher has no choice of what to preach. God settles that and commands the preacher to "preach the word." Good Ans. to many Questions

One reason James gives for declaring that not many should be teachers is: "For in many things we all stundle." And the teacher or preacher who stumbles receives "the heavier judgment." This is true because he places himself, in many cases, before the church and world as a teacher and guide and example to others. Teaching and preaching are not irresponsible work. Suppose one preaches error or fails to teach all the word of God and souls in consequence are lost! One should go at preaching and teaching with fear and trembling.

Space will not permit the quotation of numerous passages showing that all are human, all have faults, all make mistakes, and all "in many things stumble"—not in will ful disobedience to God or transgression of his will, but in ignorance and weakness. (See 1 Kings 8, 462, Prev. 20: 3; 1 John 12-8.) Yet some seem so presumptuously certain that they cannot be mistaken that their conduct borders very close, at least, on willful procedure.

He who "stumbleth not in word, the same is a perfect man, able to bridle the whole body." There is some connection between teaching and stumbling "in word." Timothy was commanded to "hold the pattern of sound words" (2 Tim. 1: 13); and Titus, to be an example in the use of "sound speech" (Tit. 2: 8). False teachers stumble both in word and doctrine. There are "vain talkers and deceivers" (Tit. 1: 10; 1 Tim. 1: 6), who "by their smooth and fair speech . . . beguile the hearts of the innocent" (Rom. 16: 17, 18); there are others whose words "eat ["spread"—margin] as doth a gangrene." (2 Tim. 2: 17.)

"The Angel of the Church of Ephesus." BY E. G. S.

This does not mean that it was a heavenly angel ruling in the church at Ephesus; it only means that the church at Ephesus had a messenger, not an angel of heaven, that lived and moved among them. The word "angel" means "a messenger." Hence the angel of the church of Ephesus was not a heavenly angel, but simply a messenger, whom they sent on certain business matters and to attend to the business concerns of the church. Hence these messengers were members of the church at that place, acting as servants of the church very much in the capacity of deacons, or servants of the church, and that were prominent as leaders or teachers in the church. There were heavenly angels in connection with the miraculous age of the church. In Acts 5: 19 we have this language: "But the angel of the Lord opened the prison doors and brought them out." This was likely a heavenly angel that could do things in a miraculous way. But the angels to whom the seven letters were addressed for the seven churches of Asia were likely prominent men of these churches that were competent to be leaders in the public teaching of the church. That class of men were often inspired men, and competent to attend to the practical teaching of the congregation which seems to have been common in the first age of the church. But after the New Testament was completed, it served as the divine guidance of the church in all of its work of faith and labor of love. Hence we have no need of men to-day endowed with divine inspiration to act as leaders. We already have the inspired teaching of the New Testament to lead us in all the ways of righteousness and truth. What we now need to lead us in the right way is to make ourselves acquainted with the inspired teaching of the New Testament. That teaching was sufficient in the first age of the church to lead all that would follow it in the way of righteousness and truth, and that same inspired teaching of the New Testament is sufficient to lead us all in the way of rightcourness and true holiness now. The only trouble with us is whether we will follow this inspired teaching in our lives every day or not; for if we fail to do so, we will fail to enjoy the precious promise of eternal life. We should, therefore. keep this important matter in mind every day and see to it that we are in the right way, the straight and narrow way. The way in which we are to walk is plainly pointed out to us in the New Testament; and if we do not walk in it, it will be our own fault, not the Lord's; and the loss will be ours, and not the Lord's. It seems strange that any should be lost when salvation is offered to all without money or price. It is only demanded that we shall deny ungodliness and worldly lusts and live as directed by our Lord and Master.

It is true that while Christianity requires much self-denial, it affords in return the happiest life that can be lived on earth and prepares people for eternal happiness in the world to come. There is no reason, therefore, why any one should be lost in any land where the New Testament can be had. Why should any one refuse a pure and holy life on earth, when it makes life so much more endurable here and promises eternal happiness in the world to come? Christianity is not offered for money, but it demands a pure, clean, honest, and holy life; and no other sort of life will secure the great promise of eternal life. It begins its great work of elevating people here in this mortal life by teaching them something higher, purer, and nobler than anything humanity can gain by its own wisdom, and, in addition, promises everlasting life to the finally faithful. The idea of eternal life did not originate in the minds of mortals. It is purely a matter of revelation from God. If uninspired men could have made the promise of immortality, they could not possibly carry it out. But the idea of immortality and eternal life did not originate with men, but with God; and God, who has made the promise, is fully able to carry it out, and we are fully assured in his word that he will carry it out if we will be faithful in living as his word directs. Why, then, should we not be faithful in living as his word requires? No good or sensible reason can possibly be given as to why we should not follow the divine guidance of his holy word to lead us. But we may understand that the great enemy of souls will do all that he can do to hinder us from making a humble and earnest effort to secure these eternal interests of the soul; but God will help us, if we will be faithful in his service to the end of life.

Indeed, the greatest work we can perform in this life is found and carried out by doing faithfully the revealed will of God. Hence all Christians should strive to understand and follow the teaching of the New Testament. This, however, does not mean that we should neglect the reading of the Old Testament; for it will greatly aid us in understanding the New Testament to read and study the Old Testament. So the Lord has not left us to make our way through this mortal life in darkness. He has given us the light of eternal life, so that we may secure all that is promised to the faithful. God has been wondrously kind in teaching us so plainly how to live so as to be taken to this heavenly home when we end this mortal life, and we may fully trust him to take us to that home when we have finished up this mortal life in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; but if we disregard his holy will in this life, we may be sure that he will not give us the heavenly home. Surely we will not be so thoughtless as to disregard the will of God while blessed with the wonderful privilege of doing the will of God in this life, which alone can prepare us for a home in heaven when this short life is ended.

Contributors to the Tennessee Orphans' Home Are Reporting.

I am glad to announce to our readers that the auditor says a number of contributors to the Home are making reports—a number have sent in canceled checks, vouchers, etc. As this is very helpful to the auditor in order that he may make a fair and complete audit of the books, those who have contributed to the Home are urgently requested to make their reports at once. The auditor is now making an examination of the money orders issued to the Home. So soon as our contributors send us in their reports the audit will be closed. Promptness will greatly facilitate and expedite matters.

THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T

Shall We Close the Churches?

We have heard food conservation preached and have also been urged to conserve coal and other fuel until it has become almost second nature with us to do so. now hearing it urged by many people that the churches should be closed in order to conserve the scanty fuel supply. It is not my purpose to discourage economy on the part of the churches and to intimate that they should not conserve coal. It is fully conceded that the authorities are within their rights when they make such requests, but the church of Christ is also within its rights when it urges that institutions of less value to the world than the church should be closed also in order to conserve fuel. It is hardly fair to ask the churches to close, while allowing the brewery, the pool room, and the theater to run wide open, using coal bountifully. It is evident that the churches should be active, as the need for the gospel and its uplifting power is greater than it has ever been. With almost the whole world waging war and with the terrible bloodshed that is now deluging our country, the church, if possible, should put forth more energy, more thought, and more effort for the salvation of souls than it has in the past. The Michigan Christian Advocate, Detroit, is responsible for the following timely suggestions:

We have not heard of the authorities asking the saloons to close. We did hear something about their closing an hour earlier. The saloons are open sixteen or eighteen hours per day for six days, while the churches are open a few hours in the week. Yet fuel administrators see the salvation of the fuel situation in closing the churches, but for some reason have overlooked the saloons and the breweries. By all means close the churches, but close the saloons first. Do not stop the forces of salvation and let the forces of damnation run full blast.

Close the churches? Yes. But close the pool rooms first. We have heard of no command that these festering spots on our streets, these schools of vice, should be closed. To be sure, it needs a command; for saloons and pool rooms are not moved by humanitarian appeals, unless the proprietors chanced to be the humans benefited. There is not one single interest that would suffer if every pool room in the State was closed, and that forever. Yet the churches are asked to step aside for these pest shops. Why not ask them to combine? The fewer, the better; fewer places for young sports and toughs to hang out. Close them up for the winter and some mother's boy will be saved. By all means close the churches, but close the pool rooms first.

Close the churches? Yes. But close the theaters and dance halls first. This is not a homily on amusements. We simply raise the question of which is likely to better conserve the interests of the republic—to keep the heart of the people true to high ideals in these strange days; to comfort the stricken; to strengthen the young manhood of the land to make the supreme sacrifice; to prepare the mind and heart of all for the burden that is being thrust upon us—the church, or these places of questionable, if not harmful, amusements? Better close the places of flippancy rather than the place of prayer. Better close those institutions which dissipate the stuff of which life is made and keep open those which conserve the best.

As a sheer matter of good sense and good patriotism, it is the height of folly to close the churches of the land. It is the church that supports the Liberty loans, the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. Every constructive and healing agency that has to do with this world war finds support and inspiration in the churches. To ask the churches to do anything that will impair their efficiency is folly bordering on idiocy on the part of those who have aught to do with the government and its war problems. The loyalty of the churches is constantly imposed upon.

Let pastors and official boards demand that every useless and destructive agency in the community close its door before they heed either request or command to close the doors of the church of the living God.

The Minister's Salary.

It is frequently insisted by some workingmen that ministers of the gospel receive exorbitant salaries. It is true that in some cities there are a few ministers who receive large salaries, but the two hundred thousand or more ministers throughout the United States receive less, on an average, than the average mechanic. Thousands of them receive less than ten dollars a week. The average minister spent fifteen years in school, college, and seminary in preparation for his life's work, meanwhile paying for his own support; while the hodcarrier who may not be able to read or write receives more for his year's work—even though he learned his trade in a day, and on that day received higher wages than the fully equipped minister.

Meanwhile the demands upon the minister are of such a nature that he has the greatest difficulty in living up to the high standard which everybody expects of him. He must wear better clothes; he must live in a better house; he must buy more books; he is expected to contribute more to charitable institutions and movements than the most highly skilled mechanic in his church.

Furthermore, during these years of preparation, and because he mingles with the best-educated men in the community, his ethical tastes have been cultivated to such a degree that it is very difficult for a man of fine sensibilities to live on the coarser things in life. He must keep up to the times, socially and intellectually. To do this, he must attend lectures, travel great distances at his own expense to attend meetings of ministers of his denomination, both State and national. He is expected to perform a vast service in the community for which he receives no pay.

The perilous "dead line" constantly stares him in the face. The average church prefers the young minister, because ordinarily he is more popular. He has not been able to save any money. When old age comes, he often becomes a life-insurance agent or a book agent, or devotes himself to some other task which, at best, must be disagreeable.

In spite of these discomforts and trials, the average minister goes on, year after year, uncomplaining. He spent fifteen years in preparation for his work, knowing full well just what was before him.

You may not agree with the preacher's theology; you may think that he does not know as much about the labor question as you do—for which, perhaps, he is partly to blame; but any fair-minded man will at least respect him for his devotion to a cause which has for its sole purpose the uplifting of the community and the leveling up of the standard of living of all the people.—Charles Stelzle, in Christian Intelligencer.

Every true minister of the gospel is engaged in the work, not for the money he receives, but for the love of souls. If the church could get rid of every man engaged in preaching the gospel who makes it a profession and who preaches simply for the shekels that he receives, it would be a good riddance. I am glad to say that I have not been associated with many of our preachers whom I thought were preaching the gospel in order to make money out of their calling. I would say to all young men entering the ministry with the idea of getting rich or being exceedingly well cared for by the brotherhood, that it would be well for them to seek some other calling. However, if a man is anxious to do good; if he has a purpose and desire to teach the erring the way of the Lord, to help the poor, and to uplift the fallen, then the ministry affords him a splendid opportunity for such work. Paul is a good example for every young man. Think of the sacrifices that he made, of the persecutions that he endured, and of the terrible hunger and shipwrecks through which he passed, and then decide whether or not you are willing to suffer in order that the religion of Jesus Christ may be advanced in the world. While the preacher is called upon to make sacrifices, yet those very sacrifices enhance his happiness and better qualify him for new responsibilities and duties in life. The rich and indigent do not get the most out of life, but those who are inspired by a noble purpose and who live to make the world better.

"I regard the Gospel Advocate as the best paper in the brotherhood."—E. P. Watson, Dugger, Ind.

This office is abiding strictly by the order of the Fuel Administrator and on that account will not be open for the next nine Mondays. We are working all day Saturday.

I. C. Hoskins writes that the prospects at Florence, Ala., are better, so far as the church is concerned. There have been four additions recently and more are expected. Brother Hoskins sends us a copy of a fine missionary sermon, which we hope to print soon.

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, January 14: "We had three good services yesterday despite the snow. Four corps of Sunday-afternoon visitors organized to invite people to our services and also to go into the sick room. We have done this for quite a time and have increased the attendance materially."

From J. B. Trigg, Jonah, Texas, January 10: "Please announce through the Gospel Advocate that I am expecting to make a trip to Tennessee about next June and would like to hold some meetings while there. If anybody wants my services in Tennessee and Arkansas, they will please let me hear from them right away, so I can make out my program."

From W. J. Johnson, Amite, La., January 18: "We have received the following contributions for the church work here: From the church at Fullerton, La., $10; church at Hemming, Tenn., $10; Mrs. T. D. Johnson, Bethel, Tenn., $2; Mrs. G. R. Witherow, Bethel, Tenn., $1. We greatly appreciate these gifts. Let us praise the Lord for all his kindnesses; they are many."

From Miss Nellie Straiton, Fort Worth, Texas: "I appreciate very much indeed the help the Gospel Advocate and the other Christian papers have given me in my work for our missionaries. The churches and Christians throughout the country have also given me much encouragement and coöperation. I thank you all on behalf of the missionaries themselves."

From M. S. Mason, Rogersville, Mo., January 14: "I have been kept out of the work by business and bad weather for the last month, but if the weather permits I will begin the work again by visiting the Walnut Hill congregation on Sunday next. By calling in some work in Illinois, I have the first two weeks in December open for a meeting, if some congregation wishes the time."

Fred W. Chunn writes from Springville, Tenn.: "On Monday evening, December 24, 1917, at the home of the bride, Brother F. L. Paisley and Miss Jessie Taylor, both of Metropolis, Ill., were quietly married. The only festivities following the wedding were a preaching service and sacred songs. Brother Paisley, recently of the Nashville Bible School, is a coming young preacher, earnest, active, and ever loyal to the truth. The bride is a pure, self-sacrificing, Christian girl, such as a preacher needs. We wish for them much happiness and expect from them great things. May God bless the union."

A. W. Young, of Gainesville, Texas, writes: "I have accepted the work with the South Side Central church of Christ, of Fort Worth, Texas, and will devote all of my time, except two months in summer, to the work in that city. My address is changed from Gainesville to Box 464, Fort Worth, Texas, and I ask that my friends please make a note of the change. I also ask that brethren and sisters having friends and acquaintances in the city of Fort Worth write me their location, that I may look them up. I also want information about soldier boys who are members of the church or from Christian families, if they are at Camp Bowie."

From C. D. Crouch, Rock Springs, Texas, January 13: "Our work here moves along as usual. Bad weather to-day and a small attendance at worship. I think the church is in better condition than ever before. During the past year we have supported two protracted meetings here and a native worker in India, and I have been supported by the church here. A better spirit prevails than formerly, I think. However, it is deemed best to change preachers, and my second year's work will terminate with the close of next month. I shall be glad to hear from any congregation that desires a preacher. I shall be ready to change locations by March 1."

A good wish from S. H. Pate, Lebanon, Tenn.: "We hope you may have a prosperous year and be able to do much good in disseminating the wonderful truths of God's word in the hearts of the people. We enjoy reading the Gospel Advocate very much. Wife and I have been constant readers of it for about fifty-two years, and expect to continue so long as we live, if it continues to remain loyal to the truth, as it has for more than fifty years, and we feel quite sure it will; for we know the majority of the ones who stand at the helm of the grand old ship while she rides the waves of the present troubles, and are very sure they will, and point to all on board the beacon light on the other shore. May God help us to be faithful."

The venerable Philip N. Compton, aged ninety-one years, four months, and twelve days, died at his home in this city last Saturday. He was a cotemporary of David Lipscomb, and was highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. Brother Compton was born on September 7, 1826. He was married to Lucy J. Turner on July 27, 1851. At the time of his death they had been married sixty-six years and six months. He was a member of the church for forty-eight years, having been baptized by the late David Lipscomb. He was instrumental in establishing the old Compton's Chapel, on the Granny White road, and was also a charter member of the Lawrence Avenue church of Christ. It was his desire that no one eulogize him in the funeral service, but that his life should speak for itself.

letter from the soldier boys at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C.: "Last Lord's day and to-day Brother Dunn met with us for worship. In spite of the extreme cold and the icy roads, about twelve soldier boys met for the Lord's Supper. We have fallen in love with Brother Dunn, for he seems as a father to us. He inquires about our needs and asks about those in the hospital. You at home cannot realize what a comfort it is to a Christian at a soldiers' camp to have a man like Brother Dunn to teach us the word of God and give us advice and cheer. have questioned the propriety of Brother Dunn's coming But the only real question is whether he is willing to make the necessary sacrifice to come. Brother Dunn has made the sacrifice, and he certainly is doing a great work. He deserves the support and prayers of the brethren everywhere. Do not forget him, for conditions here are new to him, and he gets lonesome just as well as the rest of us. Remember us all in your prayers.'

NUX, IRON, PEPSIN AND SARSAPARILLA

The combination of two great medicines, Hood's Sarsaparilla and Peptiron, by taking them in conjunction, one before eating and the other after, brings into co-operation the above-named substances, best for the blood, nerves and digestive organs.

This combination is especially recommended in cases that are scrofulous, or rheumatic, anemic and nervous, or where the blood is both impure and pale, deficient in ironone of the most common disease conditions of the present day.

In cases where a laxative is needed, Hood's Pills should be taken. They work in perfect harmony with Hood's Sarsaparilla and Peptiron, and are mild and efficient.

THE CREAM OF SONGS

"The Cross and Resurrection in Song" represents the fruits of the hardest and most careful work of our lives in striving to give to music lovers the best that can be produced. It contains The Cream from our former productions, combined with The Cream from plates owned by the Union Song Book Company, of this city, and about one hundred new songs that represent the best that can now be produced. The melody is of the sweetest and most soul-stirring quality. The words are deeply spiritual and present the fullness of gospel teaching.

A more serviceable book you could not purchase. It has enough of the old music in it—the sweet old songs our grandparents loved to sing—to enable any congregation to use it at once. Too, it has enough new music to more than meet the demands of those who are looking for new music only.

GRAY HAIR BECOMES DARK AND BEAUTIFUL

Look Years Younger! Try Grandma's Recipe of Sage and Suphur and Nobody Will Know.

Almost every one knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly com-pounded, brings back the natural color and luster to the hair when faded, streaked, or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sul-phur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for about fifty cents. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick, and glossy, and you look years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

Notes from North Texas.

BY T. H. MATHESON.

We had a quiet Christmas here, and, according to the best way of thinking, it approached more the ideal. Some people never have a Christmas unless they are spending a great deal of time and money on frivolous matters; but we are glad the church is beginning to understand that it is high time for sacrifice.

Our eleven-o'clock service is well attended, and when we can get as good attendance at all the other services we will grow rapidly.

It is well that I have spent some of my time this week in the woods with Brother John T. Lauderdale, for now a very cold spell is upon us and the poor preachers with their families can enjoy a few hours within. Whoever follows Brother Lauderdale with an ax will eat heartily and sleep soundly. He is a good preacher and preaches regularly. He tells me that he has preached at Garza for eight years and has missed only one appointment. He begins a meeting on Lord's day at Durant, Okla.

I have enrolled quite a few names for the Gospel Advocate this week, and I have purposed one hundred subscriptions by February. How many will join in such an effort? With the exception of only a short time, I have read the Advocate from the time that I could read a paper. It would be safe to sav that I have read more from Brother D. Lipscomb than from any one, and to show my appreciation of him I would like to place a thousand copies of the Advocate to his memory. Among the subscribers this week are three elders and one preacher. The elders are Brethren H. D. McDowell and E. W. Hilburn, of Saint Jo, and Brother J. B. Reeves, of Belcherville. Brother Frank E. Chism, of Valley View, was the preacher. Brother Chism is an excellent young preacher and is preaching regularly in Montague County. Too, I enrolled the clerk and the song leader of our congregation, Brethren S. C. Roach and W. W. Davis.

Safety First.

It is mighty easy to make little of every scratch, cut, burn, and sting. Sometimes you can neglect them and luckily get by without any serious infection. If you do, do not think you are fortunate. The next case of neglect may prove fatal. Blood poison is likely to set in unexpectedly, and the result may be fatal. Do not play with fate. Take care of your body. In every case of broken skin apply Gray's Ointment immediately and freely. It is healing and antiseptic. For nearly century one of nature's greatest methods of insurance against infection. Murfreesboro, January 3.- I write in behalf of our Christian brethren and friends at Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., without a leader or even an opportunity to serve God "as it is written;" for there is not a loyal church of Christ in their nearest town. Columbia. I hope some brother will volunteer to go among our soldier boys and extend to them the gospel and help the brethren to continue their worship "as it is written." Dear readers, pray for them. X.

Mount Pleasant, December 27.-Last September I moved to Mount Pleasant from Memphis. This part of the State was new territory to me, as practically all of my work had been in West Tennessee. There is always an element of risk in going to a new place. There are so many good brethren and sisters and so many good loyal congregations in West Tennessee that it was a matter of sadness to me to leave for an untried field. I am glad to say, how-ever, that the people of Mount Pleasant are all and more than I expected. My work with them, so far, has been very satisfactory, and the place already has a homelike appearance to me. I preach for the congregation twice each Sunday. We have our Bible study, and I teach a class in We have our In our Wednesday-night prayer meeting we are studying Brother G. Dallas Smith's "Outlines of the Bible," and we like it very much. The members of my family were especially remem-bered by a "shower" of all kinds of good things to eat and an abundance of them. These things have a double significance now. In these days of high prices things to eat are valuable, and we were glad of the thoughtfuland we were grad of the cholighten-ness of the good people that prepared and sent these things. To be remem-bered by so many and in such a way makes us grateful and happy. I am impressed with the people of Maury County in a general way. They all seem to be courteous and social. AImost every one you meet speaks to you and has some word of cheer or good will to say. The country is a spendid farming section. Constipation, Biliousness, and Liver Disorders.

Cleanliness is the first law of health. and it means more than keeping the hands and body clean. It demands that the inside of the body shall be kept clear of impurities. It demands that the waste products be not allowed to stay any longer in the body than nature normally provides.

The importance of keeping your bowels normal is seen when it is remembered that there is not a solitary disease in the entire list that does not demand as one of the first requisites in its treatment the thorough elimination of waste matter from the bowels.

Two of the commonest cause of constipation are wrong diet and irregularity in going to stool. The liver failing to secrete enough bile is another potent reason.

Dr. Miles' Liver Pills are an ideal remedy for such a condition. They gently stimulate the action of the liver and bowels, and, with careful attention to habits of stool and diet, insure their proper and regular action.

The following are some of the reasons why we so strongly advocate the use of Dr. Miles' Liver Pills in cases of torpid liver, billousness, constipation, and indigestion: Because they do not cause griping or other unpleasant sensations like ordinary pills; because their use does not derange the stomach, liver, or bowels; because they are a very gentle laxative; and, if properly used, cause natural movements of the bowels; because they are small, mild, and sure.

Jesus Alone.

Jesus stood alone, in the presence of Pontius Pilate, bound and bruised, with the crown of thorns pressing upon his brow. His own had forsaken him and fled. He was treading the wine press alone; of his people there were none with him. Faith had died in the heart of his disciples; love lingered, but not hope in the fulfillment of his mission, in his power to redeem and to save. To them the cross seemed the symbol of defeat; the grave, the end of the dream that they had dreamed of the coming of the kingdom of God. But Christ was never more truly King. He stood before Pontius Pilate; and when the challenge came, whether prompted by pity or by scorn-"Art thou a King then?"-the answer rang out clear and full of courage, strong with conviction: "Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I might bear witness unto the truth."-Selected

"The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom."

Prof. J. W. Grant, of Nashville, Tenn., writes: "I have finished reading through the recent work, by Dr. J. E. Thompson, 'The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom.' It is wonderfully unique in every respect. Being abreast with the present war condition of the world, as well as with the political situation of the na tions, and also strictly nondenominational, I do not see why the circulation of the book should not reach even the high mark of a hundred thousand or more, if properly advertised. theories are absolutely new and differ entirely in almost every respect from any that have before been put forward in regard to the prophecies of Daniel and the Apocalypse. I have read all that I have found on these subjects, but nothing at all approaching this, either as to the theories advanced or the grandeur of their conception. As to the great conceptions and startling details, there is nothing that I know of in any way approaching it since the Englishman, Stewart. interpreted the prophetic scheme in the building of the Great Pyramid of Cheops, an interpretation which he brought out in his writings more than a hundred years ago. He, too, had far less prominent and interesting scriptures to draw upon, as well as fewer in number. While I cannot agree with the author as to his premises and conclusions, I can say that the book would be profitable reading to any one at all interested in the prophecies of the Scriptures. I think it will do any one good who will carefully read it and study at the same time its scripture references, and I hope it may have a very extended circulation."

G. R. Bethurum, of Nashville, Tenn., writes: "I have just finished reading the 'History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom,' and was very much edified and instructed by the author's exposition of these prophecies. His conclusions are well founded and entirely different from anything that I have ever read upon these subjects. His faith in God's word is inspiring; and whether one agrees with him or not in his conclusions, one can be very greatly benefited by breathing the atmosphere of faith and confidence in God as manifested in his writings."

John R. Williams, of Hornbeak, Tenn., writes: "Of all that I have ever read on Daniel and Revelation, this book is quite different-unlike anything I have read. The author certainly holds the mind of the reader to what he has to say. I wish I were able to pass upon the merits of the book. I dare not say he is incorrect in his conclusions, for he may be correct. He certainly is an advanced thinker, reading and thinking ahead of the most of us."

Dr. T. A. Patrick, of Fayetteville, Tenn., writes: "Allow me to thank you for sending me the book. It has benefited me many times more than the price of the book. Inclosed you will find a check for one dollar and fifty cents."

A Four-Days' Discussion.

BY T. A. PHILLIPS.

A four-days' debate was recently held at Ravendale Church, near Drumright, Okla., between Brother M. L. Lawrence and W. C. Austin, Freewill Baptist. The general church questions were discussed. Austin contended that the church began in the garden of Eden and that Abel was the first member. Austin is a good debater, and, considering the weakness of his position, he did well. Brother Lawrence is a young man, but did a good work in the debate, and I am sure the cause of truth will be strengthened by the debate. Both speakers manifested a kind and Christian spirit, and the debate closed with everybody feeling good. Brethren, let us have more debates in that spirit. I moderated for Brother Lawrence.

Coca-Cola Case Settled by Consent Decree.

By mutual consent and to the mutual satisfaction of the United States government and the Coca-Cola Company, their litigation was finally and amicably settled by a consent decree, which was entered by Judge Sanford, of the District Court of the United States, Southern Division, Eastern District of Tennessee, November 12, 1917.

This litigation, which has attracted widespread attention because of the many fine points of law involved, was commenced in October, 1909, eight years ago, when the government filed a libel proceeding, alleging adulteration and misbranding.

The government's charge of adulteration was based on the admitted fact that Coca-Cola contains caffein, which is the active principle or refreshing element of tea. But the Coca-Cola Company produced evidence that their product contained much less caffein than an ordinary cup of tea, as commonly prepared, and that the source of caffein in Coca-Cola is from tea leaves; that the caffein in Coca-Cola is the same in form and effect as that of tea, and that their product was not, therefore, adulterated within the legal interpretation of the pure-food law.

The government's charge of misbranding was based upon the claim that Coca-Cola did not contain any Coca and little, if any, Cola, and that, therefore, the name "Coca-Cola" was misleading, and that the product was, therefore, misbranded. The Coca-Cola Company admitted that their product does not contain the active principle of Coca, but they produced evidence that it does contain the flavoring extracts of both Coca and Cola, and that the name "Coca-Cola" was, therefore,

Order Fertilizers Now or You May Have to Do Without Them This Season

The freight congestion is serious. You will help yourself, us, the railroads, and the Government by giving your order for Fertilizers NOW to your dealer. If all the farmers do this, the dealer can then "bunch" his orders, and be able to order his cars of fertilizers loaded to full capacity. The Government urges that all cars be so loaded.

When the goods arrive haul them home, and put them into your barn until you are ready to use them. If the movement of railroad cars becomes any more serious you may not get a pound of fertilizer at any price.

Our 50 factories, and distributing points are so well located geographically as to enable us to get fertilizers to you with minimum amount of hauling.

not misleading, and that their product, therefore, was not misbranded.

Many fine points of law were involved in the litigation, which was decided in favor of the Coca-Cola Company by the United States District Court at Chattanooga in 1909, after a trial lasting three weeks. The gov ernment, at the expiration of a year, appealed the case to the Court of Appeals sitting in Cincinnati, which court confirmed the verdict of the lower court. The government then appealed to the Supreme Court, which overruled the lower court on the points of law involved and sent the case back to the lower court to be reheard as to the facts involved.

In the meantime, the Coca-Cola Company, during the nine years of litigation, had made certain technical improvements in their processes of manufacture, which not only resulted in improving the flavor and quality of their product, but also reduced the amount of caffein to about one-for the quantity contained in an avecup of tea. Thus, by mutual constant a settlement was reached in the long-litigated case without the necessity of a rehearing in the courts, the points of law having long since been decided by the Supreme Court.

Shall We Have a Four-Year College?

BY J. P. SEWELL.

President C. R. Nichol, of Thorn Spring Christian College, has raised the above question in an article recently published in the Gospel Advocate. I take it that the question is open to discussion by any one who is interested. I am deeply interested, and have been for many years. I have thought over this problem much and seriously.

That some adequate provision should be made for the higher education of our boys and girls under instruction and influences consistent with our faith is beyond question. To fail to thus provide for our children is to sin against them in a most serious manner. But when we consider making this provision, many serious questions arise.

I am sure Brother Nichol is stating facts just as they are when he says he has talked to many who think a four-year college should be built at Thorp Spring. This is natural; Brother Nichol talks mostly with students, patrons, and friends of Thorp Spring Christian College. I can just as truthfully say that I have not talked to a soul that feels that way about it. I have, however, talked to many who think Abilene is the place. This is natural; I talk to students, patrons, and friends of Abilene Christian College. Then we cannot get anywhere that way, can we?

We could easily settle the matter if the Thorp Spring people could see their way clear to say to us: "You go ahead and establish a four-year college; we will remain a junior college and cooperate with you." Or if we could see our way clear to say to them: "You be the four-year college, and we will remain a junior college and cooperate with you." In either way we could settle the matter of cooperation. But I am afraid there is too much humanity at each place to make this possible.

Again, we might present the claims of each place and seek an expression of the majority; but, after it was over, I am afraid some one might feel that the public had been "influenced."

Or we could both proceed to establish and conduct four-year colleges. This would likely result in envy and unholy, nagging competition. would likely have two colleges eking out a miserable existence for a time, and then the failure of one or, more likely, of both.

And then some of the colleges out of Texas might lay claim to the right to be "it." Cordell Christian College is already a four-year college, receiving in her State full four years' high school and three years' college credit. And if some of these out-of-Texas institutions should refuse to cooperate, it might cause some trouble.

These are some of the troubles that present themselves as matters now

Then, what shall we do? I am going to make a few suggestions. I think there should be in Texas a coordinated system of Christian education, not a number of competing schools. The management of these schools should be so correlated as to leave each one independent to conduct its own affairs and to leave room for friendly, wholesome rivalry, but making impossible unholy, nagging comnetition

Under an arrangement of this kind, Thorp Spring Christian College and Abilene Christian College should continue at present as standard junior colleges. They are the only ones who have qualified as such. Sabinal and Lockney should be reopened as training schools.

Instead of undertaking the tremendous task of building a standard senior college, we should establish in connection with the University of Texas, or some other high-grade university, a Christian Chapter House, where our junior-college graduates could go for the balance of their work. A Christian home could thus be provided. Bible teaching of a high order and other instruction called for could be given. These students could take their literary work in the established institution in connection with which the Chapter House would be located. If in the University of Texas, without tuition.

I believe our present needs can be cared for better in this way than by undertaking a senior college of our

I do not think the present possible patronage would justify the outlay that would be necessary in buildings, laboratories, libraries, faculty, etc. Especially will this be true while the war continues. The junior and senior classes of the four-year colleges are the ones to suffer most. One such institution in Texas which had fifty-five graduates last year has only three men in the senior class this year.

The war will necessarily bring about financial conditions under which only such expansions as are absolutely necessary should be under-The building, equipping, and manning a senior college calls for an immense amount of money. Is it reasonable to expect this money under present conditions? Is it right to ask for it, if the same purpose can be served without it?

Then it may be asked, Why have the

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To relieve rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uric-acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

junior college? Why not send our students to the University and the Chapter House from the start?

Students doing the first two years' college work need the benefits of small classes, personal touch with their instructors, protection from the outside world—the benefits of the small college. They can then with advantage go to the larger institutions and enter upon a broader life with safety, if a good Christian Chapter House is provided, with Bible teaching and Christian training. We are not especially interested in teaching the secular branches. We teach these that we may have the opportunity for the spiritual training. We need separate schools in which to do this until the student reaches a certain stage of development. After that I believe we can accomplish our purposes as well or better in connection with the university.

It would at least give time for growth, study, and adjustments, and possibly save us grave and embarrassing mistakes. Our purpose must be Christian service. To this end we should get together and be willing to sacrifice and be sacrificed. I suggest a plan. A much better one may be suggested. If so, I shall be glad.

Let us put two of the Thorp Spring Christian College trustees on the Abilene Christian College Board, and two Abilene Christian College trustees on the Thorp Spring Christian College board. If Gunter is willing to come in, give her two members on each board and the other schools representation on her board. Then compose a board of trustees with an equal number of members from the junior college boards, one each from the training schools, and a president of the board who belongs to none of the other boards. Let this board control the Chapter House for our higher work. I believe this plan would remove friction and bring about the cooperation that must be before our ideals can be accomplished. We could then go before the brotherhood and raise a fund for Christian education-not for this school or that. United with a solid front and a united support, we can do great things.

When one Chapter House is thoroughly established, others may be needed, or we may grow the need for and the ability to build and conduct a high-grade senior college. Until then I think we will be wise to meet our present needs in a possible way.

A creditable four-year college cannot be established and conducted with less than two hundred thousand dollars. Are we ready for it? Would it not be better to have some really firstclass junior colleges and meet our present needs as suggested above? Or would it be better to have some cheap, poorly equipped four-year colleges? Or can we, and will we, make the sacrifices to have a really good four-year college?

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

SALTS IF KIDNEYS OR BLADDER BOTHER

miess to Flush Kidneys and Neutralize Irritating Acids— Splendid for System. Harmless

Kidney and bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread. The water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation, and is very profuse; again, there is diffi-culty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it. because they cannot control urina-tion. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric-acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, efferves-cent lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trouble.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

I have just finished my second debate with the Primitive Baptists in Olathe this fall. I fear we will never get another debate here, and my moderator so announced publicly during the debate. Too much truth gets be fore the people during a debate to be relished by the denominations. They are always the losers in a debate for this reason. However, we will reach the people after a while even though they allow us no other debates.

Last night (January 6) I was invited to preach in a schoolhouse some six miles from Olathe. The house was entirely filled and all paid close attention. At the close of the service they urged me to leave an appointment there for "every Sunday night indefinitely." This I gladly did. I have already baptized about thirty of those people, and I am hopeful of baptizing

The war excitement has broken into religious interests here considerably. about thirteen of our young members being drafted, though as yet only one has been sent away. We have not a "slacker" among all our thirteen young men, as each one desires to help his country to the extent of his power.

As I predicted last winter, there will be no "union meeting" in Olathe this year. The one they had last winter, costing about fifteen hundred dollars in money and three weeks' hard work by an "evangelist" and five other preachers, the choir leader and a choir of perhaps two hundred voices, not to mention the personal work by all the denominations cooperating, resulted in little perceptible advantage to the denominations. I followed this with a schoolhouse meeting, having many of the same people to preach to, and converted in said meeting nearly forty people, baptizing nineteen at one time in Olathe. This meeting cost only about twenty gallons of gasoline, which was paid for by the people where I preached; and they gave me fifteen dollars. Those not entirely converted were placed far beyond the reach of sectarianism, so that the denominations were discouraged from trying again in Olathe. As for myself, I claim no honor for this. It was the truth of God that won: and it will win everywhere as it won here.

New York, N. Y .- In a recent discourse Dr. E. Sauer, a Boston physician who has studied widely both in this country and in great European medical institutions, said: "If you were to medical institutions, said: "If you were to make an actual blood test on all people who are ill you would probably be greatly astonished at the exceedingly large number who lack iron and who are ill for no other reason than the lack of iron. you, even Jesus: whom the heaven must receive [retain] until e times of restoration of all things, whereof God spake by the mouth of his holy prophets that have been from of old." (Acts 3: 19-21.)

Does not the above scripture sound like "the restoration of all things" will have something to do with the time of the second coming of the Lord? And does it not say the heaven must retain the Lord until all things are restored? Now, if that "restoration of all things" means that, before Jesus returns, man must be restored to his pristine state, as when God pronounced him "very good," at the rate of progress that has been made since the apostles "fell asleep," when will the world be ready for his re-turn? Let some of the "imminent" second-comers answer this in harmony with their teaching.

News from Two States.

BY F. O. HOWELL.

We hear nothing further from the proposed debate between Brother Hardeman and J. E. Skinner since Brother Hardeman sent propositions, signed, into the Latham community. Wonder why?

Brother T. M. Carney preached his first sermon at Cloverdale, Tenn., on the first Sunday in the year. Brother Carney reports that his wife is in a better state of health than a year ago.

Brother John R. Williams celebrated his sixty-sixth anniversary on the fifth Sunday in December and preached a sermon at Hornbeak, Tenn., his home. Many of the brethren remembered this aged soldier of the cross by valuable gifts and contributions. Brother Williams, we are told, has averaged baptizing about sixty persons annually for the last thirty-five years.

The church at Mayfield, Ky., built a nice, little house of worship during the past summer. The surprising feature about the affair was that the contract was let and the work was done in about six weeks. Brother H. H. Hancock is a hustler in the service of the Lord. The house cost about eighteen hundred dollars.

The brethren at Middleton, Tenn., where the writer has held two tent meetings the last two years, have all the material on the grounds for the erecting of a church house and will push the work to completion as opportunity permits. These brethren mean business.

The church at Fulton, Ky., will employ their preacher for half time, beginning with the first of the year, instead of preaching once per month as heretofore: A splendid set of brethren and sisters constitute the membership here. The writer is entering into the fifth year of his service with this church.

The church at Glass, Tenn., where the writer has preached monthly the past three years, raised about eight hundred dollars last year for all purposes. This church contributed twenty-two dollars and fifty cents per month to Brother Fugua's work in Colorado and gave Brother Williams a substantial purse each month.

Brother W. E. Morgan held a meeting at Mayfield, Ky., last fall, which resulted in eighteen additions to the congregation. Brother Morgan held a good meeting in a tent about eight miles southeast of Fulton late in the season, with several baptized.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir: Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years, and have always had trouble with it till I got your appliance. It is very easy to wear, fite neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted liself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body and seemed to be a part of the body as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable Godsend to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture If all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear It. They would certainly never regret it.

My rupture is now all healed up, and nothing ever did it but your appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself, I will say a good word for your appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am,

Yours very sincerely,

JAMES A BRITTON,

C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir: I never wore the appliance a minute over six months, and was cured sound and well; and I want to say no man ever did any harder work than I did while I was using it—I hauled forty perch of rock too big for any man to lift. I was ruptured eighteen years, and words cannot tell how thankful I am. Use my name if you like.

Yours sincerely,

RUFUS FIELDS,

OTHERS FAILED, BUT THE APPLIANCE CURED.

Dear Sir: Your appliance did all you claim for the little boy, and more, for it cured him sound and well. We let him wear it for about a year in all, although it cured him three months after he had begun to wear it. We had tried several other remedies and got no-relief; and I shall certainly recommend it to friends, for we surely owe it to you.

Yours respectfully,

WILLIAM PATTERSON,

No. 717 South Main Street, Akron, O.

The above is C. E. Brooks, inventor of the Appliance, who cured bimself and who has been curing others for over thirty years. If ruptured, write him to-day at Marshall, Mich.

"RESULTS ARE MARVELOUS."

C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir: I tried all kinds of trusses without any relief until I bought your appliance.

The results are marvelous, and I pray God that you may live long and prosper and may help suffering humanity as you did me.

You can use this letter as you think best, and I will answer any inquiry that is made with a stamped envelope in-

My age is sixty-five years.

CHILD CURED IN FOUR MONTHS.

21 Jansen Street, Dubuque, Ia. Brooks Rupture Appliance Company.

Gentlemen: The baby's rupture is altogether cured, thanks to your appliance, and we are so thankful to you. If we could only have known of it sooner, our little boy would not have had to suffer nearly as much as he did. He wore your brace a little over four months, and has not worn it now for six weeks.

Yours very truly,

ANDREW EGGENBERGER,

Ten Reasons Why

YOU SHOULD SEND FOR BROOKS RUPTURE APPLIANCE.

- 1. It is absolutely the only appli-ance of the kind on the market to-day, and in it are embodied the prin-ciples that inventors have sought after for years.
- The appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of po-sition.
- 3. Being an air cushion of soft rub-ber, it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation.
- Unlike the ordinary so-called "pads" used in other trusses, it is not cumbersome or ungainly.
- It is small, soft, and pliable, and positively cannot be detected through the clothing.
- The soft, pliable bands holding the appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.
- 7. There is nothing about it to get foul; and when it becomes solled, it can be washed without injuring it in the least.
- There are no metal springs in the appliance to torture one by cut-ting and bruising the flesh.
- 9. All of the material of which the appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe appliance to wear.
- 10. My reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and my prices are so reasonable, my terms so fair, that there certainly should be no hesitancy in sending free coupon to-day.

Remember

I send my Appliance on trial to prove what I say is true. You are to be the judge. Fill out free coupon below and mail to-day.

Edifying as the Need May Be

"Even As You and L"

We should receive comfort from the fact that Jesus selected his disciples from the ranks of ordinary men. "Suppose," says Dr. R. E. Thompson, "that our Lord had made up his company out of rare and selected natures, of men who never would have doubted what he said or flinched from peril or acted on the lower motives, how much we would have lost! We should have felt that these were exceptional men-that they did not feel our difficulties or need the help we do in our temptations. We should have said it was a beautiful story, full of religious poetry, but unfitted to take hold of people like us." Exactly so. But now, when we study the temperaments and habits of the twelve, we have the consolation that they were "even as you and I." Their Master was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin; while they had the same experience, with a human result. Let us not lose sight of the fact, however, that under their Teacher's guiding hand they were susceptible to marked improvement day by day as they continued with him. The personality of Jesus, the spiritual atmosphere in which they lived, was, doubtless, the strongest influence affecting the disciples. It has been very truthfully said that all the moral precepts which are taught even by the great headmasters are of small consequence compared with the personality of those teachers themselves. Paul states this truth in beautiful figure: "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." How wonderfully gentle and long-suffering toward these imperfect men, and how little fault he found with them, after all! Because he knew their imperfections he let Patience have her perfect work. So he will deal with us if we become his disciples indeed and in truth.

"What Are These Among So Many?"

Not long since the daily papers reported a dis at Washington, in which a million dollars' wo was consumed. A church member asked the "What are we going to do, with food becom every day?" We would naturally expect a w worry over such a condition, but it ill becomes of Jesus Christ to become overanxious. It ren Andrew's question. When he told Jesus there five loaves and two fishes, he added: "But whs among so many?" Again and again in their f the same dilemma would confront them. The ciples, these few instrumentalities, these we these few principles of truth-what are these millions of people to be brought into the kingd mighty powers of opposition to be overthrown? feeding the five thousand with the scant suppl showed that he could multiply feeble instru And still we ask the same question: How sha ples, so few in comparison with the great teem of humanity out of Christ, make progress in the of so many evils to be overcome, so much work and so little time in which to do it? We nee minded of God's power and set that over a thought of our weakness. We need to rejoice that we can plant and water, but "God give crease." We may fall down on the job, but abundantly able. When we give freely what Go when we as individuals and churches distribut the blessings God bestows, we shall find that I than we received at first. Is there not a lesso the fact that as Jesus kept breaking the loav ciples passed them out? We stand in thos shoes to-day and should be glorifying our Mas service to humanity. I read a saying by Lyr that impressed me deeply, and so I pass it "The question is not, What can you do? but, you and God together do?" Let us put the rig in the slogan so frequently attributed to the find in it comfort for every time of need.

A Message from the Valley.

A good sister, who has evidently been brough to the Lord through suffering and who is findh of her faith "more precious than gold," ser message:

My Dear Brother Lipscomb: I have long had of Christian unity on my mind and heart. last few days I have gone, through fasting a almost into the valley of death, and from my the way, with every earthly consideration oblitthe

e su ithir i pr sitic ited my mind and heart, I wish to send back a warning, or admonition rather, to the brotherhood at large.

I feel that steps are soon to be taken in that direction, and necessarily so, for the time is fast approaching when God's children must be one in order to carry out his will on earth as it is done in heaven. But, my dear brother, let us tread softly, for we are on God's land, and nothing matters now, save that his will be done.

I do not presume to suggest any plan. I only beg of you all that through fasting and prayer you humble yourselves before God, and he will not leave you alone.

I feel that the earth is soon to pass through the throes of death; and be sure that everything will go, save that which is necessary to carry out His will on earth. And remember, too, none of His sheep must be lost.

I do not feel blame or censure for any brother. I only feel that we are groping about in the dark.

Let us all seek more perfect faith, hope, and love, which are necessary to bring us to the dawn of a more perfect day, when, for Christ's sake, all will be swallowed up in the love which passeth all understanding.

I wish to impress the fact that none of His sheep must be left outside the fold; and remember, too, we are all to be clothed with humility.

May God, for Christ's sake, lead us all aright, and may God's blessings rest upon his children everywhere.

A SISTER IN CHRIST.

We do not generally print communications where no name is given, but this one apparently was sent with such good intent that we are pleased to give it to our readers. It may or it may not be prophetic, but the call to humility and a more perfect love should not go unheeded.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

A Kindly Admonition. No. 3.

BY W. H. CARTER.

The churches—all the congregations—in the days of the apostles had a plurality of elders in them. The elders were to take the oversight of and feed the church. (See Acts 20: 28; 1 Pet. 5: 1, 2.) They were God's appointed rulers. (1 Tim. 3: 4, 5; 5: 17; Heb. 13: 7, 17.) The church is God's government on the earth, and through the eldership is God's appointed way of ruling. When, through Moses, God had led Israel out of Egypt, he established a form of government for them. But they rebelled, rejected God, and demanded a king. Is history repeating itself in the church? They wanted to be like the other nations that had their kings. Are we wanting to be like the denominations that have no elders?

Man is "fearfully and wonderfully made." Paul said: "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." (1 Cor. 9: 27.) Man has to be governed. Without good, intelligent government, he will go back to heathenism and savagery. God knew what man needed-what was best for his good; so, in forming his church, kingdom, government, he appointed that there should be elders in every church, and that they should "take the oversight" and "feed the flock." It was this way in the days of the apostles. Now, is a church apostolic to-day that has no elders in it? We decide this by the New Testament church. The New Testament is our guide, our "rule of faith and practice." If we may set it aside in this matter, why not in other things? The denominations set it aside and adopt their own way as to elders, baptism, the Lord's Supper, and other things. Shall we be like them?

I know the influence is great. With the president and faculty of Bible schools, the editors of papers, and leading influential preachers lined up against a thing, it requires nerve, courage, and backbone for one to stand out in the open against them. But if he is "on the right side" and has the word of God for his defense, "one can chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight." You may be ostracized by men and churches; but if you are contending for "what is written," are true and faithful, though all men forsake you, God will be with you, and at the judgment it will be better for you than for them.

I am not making an argument, in this, in favor of laying on hands, or any other way to appoint, so much as to call your attention to the loose, careless, slipshod, haphazard, indifferent, unscriptural way of selecting and appointing elders. No wonder they are not being regarded as they should be. No wonder incompetent and unqualified men are inducted into the office—men who only suit men and are installed according to the wisdom of men. If you think this is putting it too strong, then tell me what you do, and refer me to the chapter and verse that so teaches, and I will repent, so far as you are concerned. Remember, one says: "Appoint a committee and let them select the elders and announce them." Chapter and verse, please. Another says: "Let the church select and some one announce the selection." Chapter and verse, please. Another says: "Select the men, and then let all the members come and shake hands with them." Chapter and verse, please. Another says: "Let the church select the men to be appointed, and then let the evangelist lay his hands on them." Chapter and verse, please.

Now there may be other ways practiced than those mentioned above; if so, and you know of them, then add them to the list, and then search the Scriptures and see which, if either, is right. Young men, you who have started out to do the work of an evangelist, will you make this a special study, that you may do this part of your evangelistic duty as God directs? Let me admonish you, as one that loves you and desires that you glorify God in all things, that you do so. When you determine to follow the inspired Book, I am sure what the result will be. Read Acts of Apostles, First Timothy, Second Timothy, Titus, and First Peter. Earnestly pray that you may learn God's way, if he has any. Don't be afraid of man, no matter what his position may be. If the churches, some of them who have more prejudice than knowledge, drop you, remember that, in the great day, God may drop them and hold you up. If they fail to support you, do as others have had to dotake up some useful employment to earn an honest living, and preach as you have opportunity, and God will do the

Now, to the churches a word, and I close. Some of you, I know, are poor and hard run, while others have plenty and to spare. I have labored for some who were able, and for some who were not able, to supply my wants. Those who are able think, perhaps, that if all would do as well as they, the preacher would get plenty. Well, all do not do as well-that is, give as much as you; they are not able to. But, counting ability, it is possible that they do better than you. Do you ever make inquiry as to your preacher's needs? He will not voluntarily tell you, because he does not want to appear as a beggar. Are you giving to foreign missions and to other things, while the man whom you have called to preach for you is in need? He does not stipulate with you to give so much preaching for so much pay. He leaves that to your honor as Christians. Suppose you engage a man to work for you. Nothing is said about pay. He leaves that to your honor. When the work is done, you pay him one-half, two-thirds, or three-fourths of what he ought to have. Would he credit you with being possessed of much honor? There are more ways than one to "rob God." You have a duty to perform, and for the performance of that duty you are responsible to God. When you carry your wheat to the mill, could you not take an extra bushel for the preacher? When you gather in your corn, could you not carry an extra barrel to the preacher? When you kill your hogs, could you not carry a ham, a shoulder, or a half of a hog to the preacher? Could not some one go around and gather the corn, another the flour, and another the meat, and take it to him? And you sisters, when you are marketing your butter, milk, and eggs, could you not lighten the heart and make the preacher's wife happy by dividing with her? This is a small thing, but it means much to the preacher. It not only supplies his home with these needful things, but cheers his heart and stimulates him to greater zeal to know that he is thus loved and cared for. Look after and supply your preacher's wants and you will be a happier people.

Brother Dunn's Ministry in Camp Sevier.

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

I am pleased to pass on to the brotherhood and the general public the following letter from Brother John E. Dunn relative to his work among the soldier boys at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C. An intimate, personal sort of document, it must go direct to hearts which, gripped with a great anxiety, now turn longingly to the camps where loved ones are quartered and who hunger for any scrap of news therefrom, while it should interest all those who love the gospel and want it taught everywhere. He writes:

This is the busiest place I ever saw, and living here is painful to the flesh. I live in the camp and take my meals at the officers' mess shack, where, though we have plenty to eat, yet the food is poorly prepared. We have no servants, and I get in wood, build the fires, and do the sweeping. I do a certain amount of routine work every day, such as staying at the desk, selling stamps, cards, and money orders, and giving out stationery and distributing among the soldiers books from the camp library. busy sixteen hours a day-every minute from six in the morning till our bedtime, ten at night, and sometimes later. If there were a dozen of me, every one would have his hands full. I have no fire in my room, and not even a door-shutter to my door. It is about like living in an open I am exposed to the severe elements-out day and night in the sleet and snow and rain. We never pay any attention here to such a thing as the weather. T have to keep on two suits of underwear, two pairs of socks, woolen shirt, sweater, and leather leggings, and sometimes over all this another suit, with heavy overcoat and overshoes. And when I go to bed, I put on all the clothes and cover I have. But I feel fine and am perfectly well, and I rejoice that God sent me here to minister and to serve. I thank God for those good brethren who made it possible for me to come, and it is comforting to know that so many of you are praying for me.

I usually preach somewhere every Lord's-day, morning and night. And on that day, at ten o'clock in the morning, I teach a Bible class, which numbers about twenty-five; and in the afternoon, from two-thirty to three-thirty, the faithful members of the church of Christ meet with me in a room at Y. M. C. A. Unit 86 for the Lord's Supper and the complete New Testament worship. It is a comfortable and quiet place in which to worship and our meetings are fine. We have some boys here as good as the world holds. Thirteen of us were present yesterday, and we shall find many more. The camp is large and some of us are miles apart, and frequently the boys are detailed for duty at the hour of worship, and so cannot meet with us.

At other times I teach Bible classes, visit hospitals and prisons, talk to the boys, pray with them, and hear them confess their sins. They are as glad as glad can be that I have come, and they come to me and break down and crypitifully, and some of their mothers write me heart-rending letters. A Baptist boy came to me and confessed his sins and asked me to pray for him; also a Presbyterian. I draw no lines. I do good to all, do all I can to lead all toward God, as far as possible. And on our m mercy and service we are allowed the freest accornight I may visit hospitals, prisons, drill greall the tents from those of privates to the high in the camp, and everybody welcomes and treat teously. I enjoy perfect freedom in my religithing that is unlawful to teach or practice in the likewise unlawful outside the camp.

Finally, however, Brother Dunn says to me:

There appeared in your first article bearing work here the following incorrect statement: found he (Brother Dunn) would have to join th A., and these necessary steps were taken." Now signed a contract to be submissive to military regulations, I did not join anything. Not one we me about joining anything. I took no oath. of the army. The truth is, the War Departmen ignated the War Work Council Y. M. C. A. as organization to pass on all those who, as civilia: workers, would enter and live in the national ca and naval and military stations; and in order volunteer religious worker. I might preach to th I made application to this War Work Council, wa and assigned to this camp. This is all there is t I want to add that by all means we should put every camp in the nation. When I see what the Protestants, and even Jews are doing for the boys, our own boys included, I am ashamed o our so-called "loyal" brethren. However, you make the above-mentioned correction, as some of are jumping on me, and I am too busy to give Nor am I the least worried. I have but one everywhere and only one life to live.

I am sorry for the mistake, and in Brother D words I most cheerfully offer the correction. It is urged that this good man in his importal labor be remembered in the prayers of all the me add a hearty amen to his declaration that make an effort to put a man at every post whe diers may be ministered to and the gospel preach

Even from the economic viewpoint it seems to Mr. Hoffman "certainly lamentable at a time when every adult life has a decidedly enhanced value there should be such a needless sacrifice of human life, which may be conservatively estimated at annually not less than 7,500 deaths for the continental United States." Yes, comments the Lincoln Nebraska State Journal, "these statistics are a discredit to the United States as they would be to any civilized nation. People, schools, churches—above all, the courts—should look to themselves for cause and cure."

Mr. Hoffman's table showing the number of homicides in thirty-one American cities, with their rate per 100,000 population, we reprint as follows from The Spectator:

It will be noted that Memphis heads the list, as it did last year, and that the first five cities are all located in the South. Southern editors attribute the high murder rate in their section to the existence of a large negro population in their cities. The Atlanta Constitution declares that the negroes of the Southern cities hold human life much more cheaply than do white people. For instance, "it very often happens that a negro who wouldn't dare kill a white man, when in the heat of passion or with a drink of liquor in his stomach and with a razor in his pocket, will unceremoniously cut the throat of a member of his own race." Another Southern paper, the Chattanooga News, observes that the homicide rate is "too high, anyway, leaving the negro out of it." Besides, it adds, this is no excuse. The South should not play "the baby act," but ought rather "to manifest its capacity for selfgovernment." "A consistent and persistent campaign of education for enforcing the law would doubtless result in a much more favorable showing," concludes The News: "let's try it." The Memphis Commercial-Appeal, which admits that the 1916 death rate from violence is bad enough, declares that the vital statistics used by Mr. Hoffman are misleading. It gives Memphis only sixteen murders actually committed in the city, and one hundred and twenty-eight in and out of the city, but credited to Memphis. The city's bad reputation for murders is attributed by this editor to the fact that "there is more killing in the vicinity of Memphis than in any other Southern city," and the victims all come to Memphis hospitals to be treated and die in the city, where their deaths are charged up to the municipality. So, while The Commercial-Appeal insists upon a reduced homicide rate among both whites and negroes in Memphis and expects the elimination of the city's saloons and gambling houses to give 1917 a much better record than 1916, it feels likewise bound to "insist that our country friends learn to adjust their difficulties without resorting to hip-pocket hardware." The Nashville Tennessean, which admits the authenticity of Mr. Hoffman's figures, is pleased at the drop in the Nashville murder rate from the preceding year and generously offers the following explanation of the many murders in the sister Tennessee city:

Memphis is peculiarly situated, being on the border lines of Tennessee, Arkansas, and Mississippi. This fact is responsible in large measure for the great number of murders in that city. Persons from other States go to Memphis; if they fall into evil company and commit crimes, they feel they have a good opportunity to escape justice by fleeing, within a few minutes, across the line into another State. The river traffic there brings in a mixed populace from all parts of the country, North and South. Memphis is holding crime to the minimum, considering the unusual conditions in that city.

Nashville deplores the commission of the crime of murder, as does any other city. It is not a good recommendation for a city to have murders committed within its borders, but conditions as to populace and the industrial situation should always be taken into consideration when comparing these crimes.

Dayton, Ohio, is sixth on Mr. Hoffman's list, but showed the greatest gain in the homicide rate over the preceding year. This is explained by the editor of the Dayton News as being due to the large floating population which came with the great munitions boom of 1916, and in 1917 the number of homicides are said to have dropped to normal.

Some encouragement is found by editors in the lower suicide rate in 1916, and still more by the reported falling off in the number of lynchings in 1917, but the St. Joseph (Mo.) News-Press hears that police officials report a large increase of crime since the United States entered the war, and cites the fifteen bank robberies in the Middle West during sixty days. Even though the lynching figures show a decrease from those of the preceding year, democracy is shamed by the record of the causes which prompted most of them, says the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times. In 1917, reports Principal Moton, of Tuskegee Institute, thirty-six negroes and two white men were lynched. Eleven of the negroes were accused of attacks on women-the "usual crime "-the others of such trivial offenses as "not getting out of the road and being insolent," "disputing a white man's word," "stealing a goat," "accidentally killing a child by running automobile over it," "vagrancy," "writing insolent letters." All but two of the Jynchings were in the South, Georgia and Texas leading with six each. The Grand Rapids News thinks that the record will be better next year, "for the war, with all its horrors and stirrings of natural passions, will breed more toleration." -Literary Digest.

Information Wanted.

BY S. H. HALL.

The following has just been received from a man who is loyal and faithful to the Book; and, in addition to answering him by letter, I am giving this bit of information through the Gospel Advocate, that all interested in the work we are doing at Camp Gordon may know. Here is the letter, with questions:

Dear Brother Hall: I notice from the papers that you are doing a noble work in the camp at your town. I write for some information relative to your work among these boys, so that I may give intelligent and accurate answers to others. The information desired is in the following questions:

1. What is the nature of this work?

2. Do you teach them by preaching or otherwise?

3. If so, do you declare unto them the whole counsel of God, or are you restricted in your teaching? If restricted, to what degree?

4. Did you join the Y. M. C. A. in order to do the work among these boys?

Answering the above in the order the questions are asked, I will say:

- I know of no difference in the work we are doing at Camp Gordon and the work we do at our regular places of worship every Lord's day. The work is identical.
- 2. The regular Lord's-day worship is engaged in, consisting of singing, praying, the Lord's Supper, and fellowship. We have teaching or preaching in connection with this worship and as a part of it.
 - 3. The whole counsel of God is declared to the best of our ability. We have not been asked to restrict our teaching in any way.

e ea

4. No, none of our workers here have joined the Y. M. C. A. in order to do this work. This privilege is granted us, first, because there are young men in the camp, with whom the regular worship of the church on the first day of the week is fundamental. We are allowed to take the Supper to them. We are also allowed the privilege of preaching to the boys who are not Christians. Here it is well to say that the officials, as a rule, are glad to have all the boys to make some profession of religion and that their morality be kept on the highest plane. Two more of the young men confessed their faith in Christ last Lord's day (January 20) and will be baptized at our chapel in the city to-morrow (Wednesday) night.

In conclusion, I am glad to say that this work is no little pleasure to us. Brother Morgan H. Carter or I, sometimes both, may be found at the camp every Lord's day at 2:30 P.M., at Casualty Department No. 2, Section F. We would so much appreciate the friends and relatives of the boys who are members of the church either writing us or the boys, to the end that they may know the place and hour of meeting and be with us. It is hard to find the boys unless you have their full address, including number of their company, etc. Announcements are made every Saturday in our three daily papers here. The members we have met have greatly pleased us with their loyalty and faithfulness. Some deserve special mention, of whom we hope to write later. We are planning to have all the boys who are members entertained in our homes soon. Some have come in already, but we want them as a body. Of course, they have to get their leave of absence together to do this.

May the Lord bless the boys at Camp Gordon and at all the other camps, and bring this terrible war to a close speedily.

The Responses Are Encouraging.

Doubtless our readers will be pleased to know that the receipts of the Gospel Advocate during the recent cold weather have been better than at any time in its past history during such severe weather. Weather conditions have had no effect upon our subscribers, and new subscriptions and renewals have been coming in very rapidly. We still have room, however, for many more, and earnestly request that every one constitute himself an agent of the paper and do all within his power to send us a number of new subscribers. The fact should not be overlooked that those sending in new subscriptions, not renewats, may send us one dollar, and at the end of the six months send us another one dollar if satisfied with the paper. If not satisfied with the paper, the subscriber may write us to that effect and we will refund the one dollar and he will owe us nothing. The fact should not be overlooked, however, that this, of necessity, applies only to new subscribers. It is a proposition in order to bring the merits of the paper squarely before our readers.

In the short space allotted to this write-up, we do not have room to call attention to the many good things that are being said about the Gospel Advocate. We reserve these for some future time. However, we will at this time quote from Mrs. Emma Cunningham, of Columbia, Tenn., who says: "I think the paper gets better all the time. I certainly would not like to be without it. I am talking for it all the time, and when Brother Holt was here I gave him a list of names to see." Brother J. Pettey Ezell, of Albany, Ala., has been doing some good work for the Advocate, and proposes to do more in the future. We would be glad to interest every young preacher in the work. Preachers can greatly help us in extending the circulation of the paper by a little effort and without much sacrifice on their part.

This is the time to strike for new subscribers. Do not delay, but begin work now; begin it earnestly a with a will that is certain to get results. We nestly asking for your hearty cooperation and fe bwsb in this work. The publishers and editors of the Advocate are making sacrifices because they are the paper is doing a great work in leading people to Chris We believe that those who read the paper have t san spirit and that they are willing to make sacrifices also order to bring the paper before the people that will 1 benefited by the perusal of its pages.

Let Us Have the Truth Concerning the Teni ssee Orphans' Home.

BY J. C. M'Q.

The people of Columbia, and especially the me chant have profited by having the Tennessee Orphans Hon located in their city. While the people of Columb a has made sacrifices for the Home and have displayed mendable interest in the work, those who have do to bus ness with the Home and who have contributed mone to it may further advance its interests by now r portin to F. O. Beerman, auditor, 700 Stahlman Building Nasl ville, Tenn., funds contributed to the Home. The Hom has been favored and well provided for in the pas by r ceiving various contributions from all parts of the Unite States. Contributions have been liberal and gener us, fo which we are thankful.

Our readers should not think for one moment hat w are disposed to find fault with those who feel kindl toward the former superintendent of the Home. A thinketh no evil," it is commendable in them no to be lieve him guilty of wrongdoing until the facts lead to suc a conclusion. The writer of this article pursued the sam course and recommends it to all others. It is not wise however, to close one's eyes to the truth and to stubborn! refuse to be convinced when the facts speak unmistakabl to the contrary. The audit is now in progress, and eac and every one who is interested in the work of the Hom may learn undisputable facts by cooperating and corre sponding with the auditor, and sending all canceled check and other information concerning the Home to him. It i important that this be attended to at once, as the audi must be closed.

The chairman of the Board of Directors has called ; meeting of the Board for 10:30 A.M., February 12, and a that time it is expected that the auditor will make hi report. The suppression of facts may prove detrimenta instead of helpful to those who have handled the fund of the Home. As has been said heretofore, every treasure: of the Home is being audited precisely alike. No par tiality is being shown. As the auditor has in his posses sion the canceled checks of the treasurers of the Home those having contributed to W. T. Boaz, John W. Fry, o J. W. Jackson funds that were not intended for the Home should make this evident. If W. T. Boaz was handed sum: for preaching, and these were not intended for the Home the auditor would like to know it. True love never sup presses the truth. The man who would place the interests of any individual above that of the Tennessee Orphans Home has entirely the wrong conception of his duty. The Home is deserving of the hearty support and cooperation of all good people. It cannot prosper and cannot do its work successfully by suppressing the facts or the truth from those who are contributing for its support, neither can those who have contributed to the Home serve its interests by suppression of facts.

Action is the word of God; thought alone is but his shadow. They who disjoin thought and action seek to divide duty, and deny the eternal unity.-Mazzini.

Brother McQuiddy: Please answer, through the Query Department, whether or not it is a sin for a Christian to hold office as judge and pass sentence upon lawbreakers. X.

For answer to this question I will refer the querist to "Civil Government," a book written by Brother David Lipscomb on this subject. While Brother Lipscomb took the position that Christians should not participate in civil government, he never made it a test of fellowship, nor do I understand that he took the position that a man could not be saved and hold an office. I know of no such scriptural teaching.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Is it necessary that a Christian join the Red Cross in order to help take care of the sick, wounded, dying, and those destitute of this world's goods? (2) Is it necessary for a Christian to join the Y. M. C. A. to minister spiritual services?

TIM WALKER.

(1) It is evident that it is not necessary to join the Red Cross in order to do Christian work, such as feeding the bungry, visiting the sick, etc. (2) Neither is it necessary to become a member of the Y. M. C. A. in order to preach the gospel to those who are in darkness. I do not understand that the government requires one to be a member of the Y. M. C. A. in order to do this, but simply demands that a preacher be recommended by the proper authorities.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain 1 John 3: 22, which reads: "And whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments and do the things that are pleasing in his sight." What are his commandments? Are they contained in the next verse, which reads: "And this is his commandment, that we should believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, even as he gave us commandment?" Are they faith and love, or every precept in the New Testament? What are "the things that are pleasing in his sight?"

P. J. Pryor.

This means that our prayers are heard because we keep his commandments. We are commanded, if we ask anything, to ask it in accord with his will—to ask in faith, nothing doubting. He that prays in faith and according to the will of God and is observing the commands of God has the assurance that his prayers will be heard. When it says, "And this is his commandment, That we should believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another," the meaning is that all the commands God has given may be summed up in one with two parts—namely, faith in Jesus Christ and love of the brethren. The man who has faith in Christ loves God with all his heart and also loves the brethren.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Is it a sin for a follower of Christ who lives two or three miles from the place of worship to absent himself on the first day of the week on account of very disagreeable weather? If so, what is the scriptural way to atone for same, or, in other words, to be pardoned? (2) Is it scriptural or acceptable for two or three to meet at a neighbor's house to worship, while at the same time worship is being conducted at a near-by church by the other members of the body?

A. G. WARMATH.

(1) The answer to this question depends largely upon conditions. Some persons are probably able to go to worship in the severest weather, while others are not. Whenever possible, if people are in love with the Lord, they will attend worship. (2) I do not think it advisable for a number of members to meet in a neighbor's house instead of meeting at the regular place appointed for worship. Circumstances may arise in which such action would be justified, but usually it is not justified. When the brethren love one another as the Lord directs, and when they are anxious to advance the cause of the Lord Jesus Christ, it will be their pleasure to meet with the members of the one body.

Brother McQuiddy: Is it wrong to work on the Lord's day? In other words, if a man goes to church and partakes of the Lord's Supper on the Lord's day, would it be wrong for him to work the remainder of the day?

The Scriptures teach us that the first day of the week should be devoted to the service of our Lord Jesus Christ. We learn from history that the early disciples met and spent the day in worshiping God. While the Bible nowhere commands us not to work on the Lord's day, we may know beyond a doubt that if we give our time to his service it will be well pleasing to him. Man's very constitution demands rest from the exacting duties of the week. I am satisfied that the man who works vigorously during six days of the week will accomplish more than if he works continuously seven days in the week. Of necessity we must do some work on the Lord's day. If we bridle and saddle a horse to ride to church, we have worked. If we get out and look after the automobile and get it in condition to run, we have done something. As to just how much we shall do is left largely to expediency. As the government requires us not to work on the first day of the week, as faithful Christians it is our duty to submit to the government in this. If, therefore, we should go to work regularly on that day, we would be living in defiance to the government and would be bringing reproach on the Lord Jesus Christ and disobeying God. Christians should abstain from the very appearance of evil and lead unblamable lives. .

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Please explain 1 Tim. 5: 23.
(2) I have been called narrow-minded because I hold that a rich man cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. Please help me on this.

Mrs. C. L. Taylor.

(1) The passage reads: "Be no longer a drinker of water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities." Paul, in giving this admonition, evidently had in mind Timothy's physical condition. He was probably an invalid at this time, and the water at Ephesus was not good. He was suffering with an infirmity of the stomach, so Paul advised him to drink wine. This shows that strong, healthy people are not advised to drink wine, but that the sick are advised to take it as a medicine. Timothy was leading an abstemious life and was living as the priests under the Mosaic law, who, while performing sacred rites, were forbidden to drink wine. The prohibition is as follows: "Drink no wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tent of meeting, that ye die not: it shall be a statute forever throughout your generations." (Lev. 10: 9.) It was necessary to improve Timothy's physical condition in order that he might do the important work that was dependent upon him at Ephesus. Timothy seems to have been the only person fitted for the work which the apostle appointed to him. Timothy could not continue to do the work if he followed his present mode of abstemiousness. It was necessary, therefore, that he receive divine authority to take a little wine for his stomach's sake. (2) It is not a sin to be rich, provided men make their money honorably and use it as God directs. Those who trust in riches cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. We read of rich men's being saved, as well as poor men. Wealth only increases one's responsibilities. A wrong use of money will drag one down to hell.

Hereafter.

"Jesus answered and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." (John 13: 7.)

We do not know how blessings flow
From tears that follow laughter;
How Joy within her hand conceals
The stab that sorrow dumbly feels;
We do not know how blessings flow,
But we shall know hereafter.

We do not know how good will grow,
With Evil the ingrafter;
How, hidden in the briers of care,
The blossomed soul scents all the air;
We do not know how good will grow,
But we shall know hereafter.

We do not know how wind will blow,
With Love himself the wafter:
How from the clouds of pain they bring
Fall showers that feed joy's deathless spring;
We do not know how winds will blow,
But we shall know hereafter.

We do not know what Death will show
Of life that comes thereafter;
How all that we have hoped or willed
By wondrous Power will be fulfilled;
We do not know what Death will show,
But we shall know hereafter.

You Yourself.

Your greatest problem is yourself. You are also your greatest treasure. If you can get yourself determined upon—find out what you are and what you are for—and if you can discover and develop the elements of value in your nature, your life will take on the beauty of orderliness and your need of the savings bank will be less and less, for you will be your own riches.—Richard Wightman.

Humor the Best Tonic.

Keep in good humor. It is not great calamities that embitter existence; it is the petty vexations, the small jeal-ousies, the little disappointments, the minor miseries, that make the heart heavy and the temper sour. Do not let them. Anger is a pure waste of vitality; it is always fool ish and always unworthy, except in very rare cases, when it is kindled by seeing wrong done to another or a dumb animal abused; and even that seldom mends the matter. Keep in good humor. Benjamin Franklin's ready smile and indomitable good humor did as much for his country in the old Congress as Adams' fire or Jefferson's wisdom. He clothed wisdom with smiles and softened contentious minds into acquiescence. Keep in good humor.—Selected.

Failure.

Argue and elaborate as we will on our burdens, we know fate has been good to us. Life is not all sunshine. If it were, we would very soon grow tired of life. Disappointments, setbacks, disillusionments, come to every one, and we must expect they will come to us. Indeed, we have no voice in the matter. They will come to us as surely as day follows night; but do we accept them patiently? That is another story.

Many women look only on the dark side of life. "What's the use?" they say, dejectedly. "Everything I try to do turns out a failure." There is a tiny breath selfishness here. "I" is very prominent in these women thoughts. Perhaps if they did something worth while to some one else their work would be crowned with success Doing something for another has never yet turned out failure. There is not a case on record showing where faure has followed a kind deed done for another. Perhapthis other did not appreciate the efforts taken in her behappet the fact remains that the woman who put herself of to make another woman happy experienced a wonderf happiness herself.—New York Evening Telegram.

Judge Not.

Would that we could read others' minds as we know of own! Think of the misunderstandings this would preven the jealousies, the heartaches, the silent, angry reproaches! Men do not think nearly so ill of us as verification in the more of kindness at love among us than we give men credit for. The world not nearly so unsympathetic as we in our feverish ment processes often paint it to ourselves.

One's gloating, ungovernable thoughts conjure up the worst that might be possible until he believes it to be true. He hides a fancied hurt and turns it over and over in he thoughts until his mind is stagnant with it, and no goe seems possible, while all the time his trouble is merel or at least mainly, the result of his imagination.

We know a man who never could think or write speak an unkind thought of any other, for he continual practiced the plan—when suspicion or fancied hurt sougharbor in his mind—of burying it deep under kind thoughts. If his friend seemed to have failed in his frienship, it was not the slight or the snub or the hurtful worthat this man remembered. He painted his mind whi with the remembrance of all the kind words, loving deed winning acts of his friend. And in the worst of us the are these virtues,

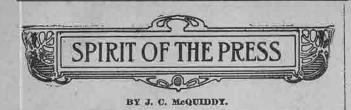

And after we have done all this—brought our souls God and asked him to purify them of the angry or caption thought—how frequently do we find that we ourselves we in the wrong rather than the other, or at least that or hurt was purely of the imagination!

"Judge not, that ye be not judged." The world is fu of trouble and sin, but it is fuller still of kind thought loving intentions toward others, and a universal desito do good to all men. The man who seems indifferent you, or hateful, may even think more highly of you the you deserve.—Selected.

The Function of the Church.

The church must be looked to to-day to save, to enlarg and to release the moral values and resources of the nation to keep our moral sense and perspective clear; to preserve the purity and aim of the nation; to defend it from so didness, from the spirit of vengeance or recompens. There are enthusiasms which the hour can kindle to a green heat, but which have yet their time of testing to mee. When the day of tension comes and the enthusiasms of the hour have died down and the black shadows fall acrothe land, then the nation will realize its need of the work which only the church can do in producing the calm to alty that abides and the steadfastness that wears down are outlasts death.

The supreme business of the church is to recover and mediate to men the risen and living Christ. We need clear and unflinching conviction as to the world's supren need of him and his supreme adequacy to the world, conviction clear and distinct to our thought to-day ar uttered and proved by the moral life and energy of the church, its love, its purity, and its justice, in this hour its opportunity and of the world's need.—Robert E. Speer.

The German View of the War.

I have called attention in these columns heretofore to the fact that the Germans claim to be a "chosen people," a tribal divinity selected for a special work, as were the Jews. God appears to be great with the German emperor, while he seems to have little or no use for the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. Prof. Wilhelm Ostwald, one of the agents of the German propaganda, appears to be very serious even in writing the following: "In our country, God the Father is reserved for the personal use of the emperor. In one instance he was mentioned in a report of the general staff, but it is to be noted that he has not appeared there a second time." The fact should not be overlooked that the Kalser, though continually calling upon God, never appeals to him through the Lord Jesus Christ. The religion of the New Testament teaches us: "And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, giving thanks to God the Father through him." It appears that if the Germans claim any religion for themselves, as a nation it must now claim a religion that leaves out the Lord Jesus Christ. This view is made clear from the position of German pastors, professors, and writers, as is shown in the following extract from the Chicago Tribune:

Early in the war a German pastor declared that Germany ought to reject the New Testament and cling mightily to the Old Testament. Away with the gentle Nazarene! Give us instead the God of Battles!

In a report from Amsterdam of an address by the Kaiser to his troops on the Verdun front the following passage is quoted: "The year 1917 with its great battles has proved that the German people have in the Lord of Creation above an unconditional and avowed ally on whom it can absolutely rely. Without him all would have been in vain.'

We shall quote, presently, from several German preachers and religious writers, but we do not intend to lay an undeserved emphasis upon any one citation. We aim merely to exhibit what seems to us a trend. To our way of thinking, the trend is away from Christianity and toward the religion, not of the prophetic period, but of old Israel.

"We have become a nation of wrath," says the German dramatist and critic Philippi. "We think only of war. We execute God Almighty's will, and the edicts of his justice we will fulfill in vengeance upon the ungodly. calls us to murderous battles, even if worlds should thereby fall to ruins. Like gardens of roses, our wounds blossom at the gates of heaven." Pastor Martin Hennig, author of "Der Krieg und Wir," says: "The principle which the Kaiser impressed on his soldiers lives in his own soul: Each must so do his duty that, when he shall one day answer the heavenly bugle call, he may stand forth with a clear conscience before his God and his old Kaiser.'" In Paster Vorwerk's "Battle Prayer" we read: "Thou who dwellest in thy heaven, above cherubim, seraphim, and Zeppelins, thou who art enthroned as a God of thunder in the midst of lightning from the clouds and lightning from sword and cannon, send thunder, lightning, hail, and tempest hurling upon our enemy and hurl him down to dark burial pits." Professor Deissmann writes: "The dark burial pits." Professor Deissmann writes: "The German God is not only the theme of some of our poets and prophets, but also a historian like Max Lenz has, with flery tongue and in deep thankfulness, borne witness to the German God in our holy war. The German, the national God! Has war in this case impaired or has it steeled religion? I say it has steeled it. This is no release to gion? I say it has steeled it. This is no relapse to a lower level, but a mounting up to God himself."

When the Kaiser speaks of his "good old German God" and of himself as "Jehovah's sword," it is clear that, like the writers just quoted, he has reverted to the preprophetic period of Jewish antiquity and worships a tribal divinity who glories in battle, hating all save his chosen people. From the preprophetic conception of Jehovah it is but a step to the Mohammedan conception of Allah. The Turks were not greatly deceived, after all, when told that Wilhelm II. had turned Mohammedan. With a little revision of terminology and a little tinkering of metaphysics, he could do it without blinking.

Thus it is seen that the German Kaiser has absolutely no use for the religion of the meek and lowly Nazarene. He does not seek to uphold his war policy and the terrible bloodshed that he is inflicting upon the world by an appeal to the New Testament. As the Germans have lost all sanity and have no respect whatever for the religion of Christ, no one in this country who believes in standing for the religion of Christ in its simplicity and purity can uphold the action the Germans are taking. Germany succeeded in having the German language adopted by nearly all the leading American institutions and taught largely and liberally to their students. Moreover, higher criticism or German Kultur was introduced into many of the institutions, thus tending to destroy the religion of Christ in its simplicity and purity. No man can accept German Kultur and believe with all his heart in the divinity of Christ and in the miracles worked and indorsed by him, which we find recorded in the New Testament.

Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, in his Christmas message brings out forcefully and clearly the thought that the German effort is to destroy the religion of Jesus Christ from the face of the earth. have held the same position for some time that Mr. Watterson holds, and have felt that the sooner German Kultur is driven from the borders of the United States, the better it will be for this country. Any influence that seeks to build up the human and tear down the divine is to be deplored, condemned, and not fostered. But Mr. Watterson says:

Surely the future looks black enough, yet it holds a hope, a single hope. One, and one power only, can arrest the descent and save us. That is the Christian religion.

the descent and save us. That is the Christian religion.

Democracy is but a side issue. The paramount issue, underlying the issue of democracy, is the religion of Christ, and him crucified; the bed rock of civilization; the source and resource of all that is worth having in the world that is, that gives promise in the world to come; not as an abstraction; not as a huddle of sects and factions; but as a mighty force and principle of being. The word of God, delivered by the gentle Nazarene upon the hillsides of Judea, sanctified by the Cross of Calvary, has survived every assault. It is now arrayed upon land and sea to every assault. It is now arrayed upon land and sea to meet the deadliest of all assaults, Satan turned loose for one last, final struggle.

The Kaiser boldly threw down the gage of battle-infidel Germany against the believing world—Kultur against Christianity—the gospel of late against the gospel of love. Thus is he Satan personified—"Myself and God," merely his way of proclaiming it—for his "God" is Beelzebub, the angel of destruction, his creed the devil's own, his aim and end a hell on earth. Never did Crusader lift battle-ax in holier war against the Saracen than is waged by our soldiers of the Cross against the German. The Issues are indeed identical.

If the world is to be saved from destruction-physical no less than spiritual destruction—it will be saved alone by the Christian religion. That eliminated leaves the earth to eternal war. For fifty years Germany has been organizing and laboring to supplant it with Kultur, the genius of infidelity. Her college professors have been obsessed with Her universities have seethed with it. In acclaiming "Myself and God," the Kaiser has put the imperial seal upon it. When our armies have run it to its lair—when they have crushed it—naught will have been gained unless the glorious banner of the Cross is hoisted-even as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness—and the misled masses of Germany are bade to gather about it and beneath it as sadly they collect the debris of their ruin for the reconstruction of the Fatherland.

Let every American soldier swear this day—this Christ-mas morn—that he will link him and his with the Christchild-the Light of Love-that suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried, that descended into hell, that the third day arose from the dead and ascended into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God, the Father Almighty!

AT HOME AND ABROAD

C. E. Wooldridge, of Fayetteville, Tenn., came to see us Tuesday,

John Hayes, of Trenton, Fla., was a visitor to this office last week.

Fred Cowin, of McMinnville, Tenn., has just finished an interesting series of illustrated lectures at the Nashville Bible School.

J. L. Hines and wife stopped to see us Tuesday. They were en route to Meaford, Ontario, Canada, where Brother Hines will preach this winter.

From Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Allen, Brentwood, Tenn.: "May the year bring you great success in a business way and greater peace and happiness than has ever been your lot."

From A. O. Colley, Dallas, Texas: "We are enjoying the weekly visits of the Gospel Advocate. It comes filled with good things every week. The work at Pearl and Bryan Streets church of Christ is moving along nicely."

A faithful brother who lives in a foreign land is anxious to secure back numbers of the Gospel Advocate of the following dates; 1912—January 4, 11, 25; February 22: April 4; June 13; 1913—December 4, 31. If you have any of these copies, send to A. B. Lipscomb, and you will confer a great favor on the brother who desires them.

From Claud F. Witty, Detroit, Mich., January 23: "At Warren Avenue we had very interesting meetings last Lord's day, with two added by membership. Brother McGary reported excellent meetings at Pontiac, with some five new members located. Brother Fleming said that they had good meetings at Flint, and Brother Seehoffer gave a similar report of the meetings at the colored mission."

M. L. Moore writes from Franklin, Ky.: "I am giving full time to the Lord's cause in Bowling Green, Ky. Our audiences are growing and the interest is increasing with each service. It is time to do all for the leading of people to Jesus that is possible for us to do. I am glad of the response that God's children are making for the suffering. We shall never do too much in Jesus' name to help the suffering. May the Lord bless and keep you."

From C. R. Rice, Hundred, W. Va., January 22: "The meeting of seventeen days' duration with the brethren at Marietta, Ohio, closed with ten added to the church there. Their membership is about three hundred and fifty. Scarcely a Lord's day passes without about three hundred of the members being present. Preaching makes no increase in attendance. Theirs is a commendable conscience in that particular. T. Q. Martin preaches one-fourth time there, and is dearly beloved."

From Charles Holder, Bridgeport, Ala., January 23: "I here give a report of my work for the year 1917. I preached four hundred and twenty-five times; conducted ten funerals; performed five marriage ceremonies; baptized seventy-two persons; restored seven; received ten from the denominations, who claimed to have been baptized for the remission of sins; established three congregations; and sold and gave away a few over ten thousand books, tracts, and leaflets by the brethren. Please pray for me, that I may do and be better during 1918."

From J. C. Mosley, Daus, Tenn., January 19: "Our singing class here is fine. The people here are holding out faithful for Christ. I have received a letter from Brother Holder. He wants me to come to Alabama and teach about three schools. I have promised him to come, as I want to go South some. It is cold here. Brethren, do not get discouraged about the war. Be faithful and win you a home where there are no wars. Pray on, sing, teach, give thank break bread, lay by in store, watch, add to your faith, I patient, be temperate, be kind, be true, gain knowledge, I of one mind, bridle your tongue so your religion won't I in vain. I am going back to Bledsoe County. I will give Bridgeport the month of March, Winchester later, ar Graysville later."

J. W. Fincher writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "In the parle of the Southern Hotel, Jackson, Tenn., in the presence . friends and guests of the hotel, at the hour of 1:30 P.N Wednesday, January 23, 1918, Miss Ruth Pearl Wilson, near Martin, Tenn., became the bride of Mr. John C. Ta lor, of Henderson, Tenn., Elder I. A. Dowthitt officiatir with a beautiful and most impressive ceremony. The brice is a capable young Christian woman, and Brother Tayle is a devout preacher of the gospel, who will evident develop to such proportions that he will some day occur an enviable position among the big preachers of the brot erhood. May God bless this union and enable both Brothe and Sister Taylor to appreciate their mission in the worl and to improve each and every opportunity as it is pr sented them to be happy and make others happy as the journey through life together."

Thomas E. Milholland writes from Denison, Texas "The Armstrong Avenue church of Christ is a splendi congregation. They have 'a mind to work.' I have bee with them about one year and a half. I lived in the tow of Denison during this time fifteen months. grown from sixty-five to one hundred and seventy-five. has been hard work, but I have enjoyed it. The Lord ha wonderfully blessed us. Last Lord's day (January 20 three of the elders of the Southside Christian Church tired of the ways of the world, came to us. They are a good and able men as teachers. This caused us all to r joice. They tell us that several more of their number as looking and longing for 'the old paths.' Seldom three elders come together. This is an evidence that good an great men know that the way of Christ is right; that hi church needs no human additions, creeds, or confessions and to live with a conscience void of offense toward ma and God, they have the courage to come to it. May other follow their good and safe example, and may God help t all to strive together for the faith of the gospel."

From John E. Dunn, Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C.: " work tremendously hard from 6 A.M. until 10 P.M. seve days every week. I go in military prisons, in hospital mix and mingle with the men from generals down t privates, and everybody treats me courteously. The off cers are exceptionally nice to us. They welcome us. religious workers have more privileges than officers, pr vates, or other civilians. We enter any place in the camp day or night, on our missions of love and mercy. Almos every one in private life who has not been in a camp mis judges us, and nearly all the critics through ignorance miss the mark. I came here out of pure love for sufferin humanity, love for sinners, and love for our boys, bein sent by the church and the pleadings and tears of th mothers of our boys. If I were a dozen men instead c one, I could be busy all the time. I came through the onl designated channel there is, by act of the War Departmen for a man to live in the camps, know all about the live of the soldiers and be where one can serve all the time enjoying more privileges by our government than an other class of workers. Life here is painful to the flesh but I rejoice in it and thank God that I am here."

In a private letter Brother Dunn states that he coul make good use of a postage fund in answering letters from anxious Christian mothers and wives. We feel sure that the mere mention of this need will supply our brother necessity. Address John E. Dunn, Army Y. M. C. A., Cam; Sevier, Greenville, S. C.

MISSIONARY

Notes and Items from Japan.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

This week I prepared and sent out to formerly interested brethren a letter setting forth the immediate needs of the Otsuka and Kamitomizaka missions in Tokyo. I hope that there will be a liberal and a regular response to these needs. We cannot afford to allow that well-begun work to be hindered by lack of fellowship. These letters will also reach the few who are still assisting these mission points. It is hoped that the letter will inspire all such to continue in their faithfulness and to even "abound more and more" in their zeal and love.

Offerings for this work should reach me a few days before the close of each month, as the necessary monthly amount ought to leave here on the first day of the month in order to insure its arrival in Japan by the end of the month. Ships on the Pacific are not very numerous now, consequently mails are not regular, and ample time must be allowed. In normal times a letter from Dayton to Tokyo makes the trip in from eighteen to twenty-one days. Now we feel happy if it makes it in thirty days. The brethren will, therefore, bear this in mind and remit in good time, so no delays will interfere with our work over there.

Reports and letters go to show that last year was really a great year for the cause at these two mission stations. The Japanese brethren have gone forward in a most creditable way and progress in several directions has been made. The courage, faith, zeal, and love of these brothers and sisters "in the Lord," together with their growth in these Christian virtues, have been evident.

An interested sister asks what, if any, arrangements have been made with the landowner of the leased lot on which our meetinghouse stands. When it seemed wise, for the present, to give up the effort to raise a large sum of money for a lot and building, I at once wrote Brother Hiratsuka to learn what he could do under the circumstances, and a letter just received informs me that the landowner agreed to let us remain longer for the consideration of more money for land rent. No long lease could be obtained; so this is a temporary arrangement. We are glad to get even this concession and feel relieved. Let us hope that soon after the war closes this need can be taken care of in a way that will forever settle the land problem.

In my next I hope to give some interesting quotations from letters from Japan. I have written enough for this time. Let me again remind the reader that his or her offering is needed to keep this worthy work going. Be prompt, liberal, and cheerful. May the Lord bless us all during the coming trying and testing days.

My address is 137 East Third Street, Dayton, Ohio.

"Whose God Is Their Belly."

BY W. HUME M'HENRY.

Paul said of a certain class of people, "Whose God is their belly." In reading this utterance, I had always understood that he was referring to the professed followers of Christ. I have often fancied that I was acquainted with some of those people. I had never thought of them as loudly claiming their "belly" as their God, but simply as manifesting an indifference to things religious, while at the same time showing marked interest in things that help to fill their belly. "I believe in home missions"—but rarely give a nickel for this purpose. "I believe the heathen at home should first be converted, and then will be time enough to convert the 'black-skins'"—but never send a preacher among those heathen at home. "I want to first lay by a nice sum for a rainy day, and then I will help the poor missionaries." These are the sayings of people whose real god is their belly; still, they would be angry if I should tell them so.

But recently I met an educated Hindu importer in a railway train. Since he spoke English, I thought I would have a good chance of telling him of Christ and at the same time would get some of the strongest arguments used in defense of Hinduism. But I was mistaken. He plainly declared first and last that his God was his belly. He considered his first duty to be to his stomach; and if he had any time left after filling his belly, he might spend it in worship. But he added: "Times are so hard that it takes twenty-four hours out of each day to fill my stomach." No argument I could produce could reach his heart: everything struck his belly. I tried to impress him with the fact that God was our Father and naturally felt grieved at the rebellion of his children, and asked him if he would be pleased if his daughter (then in a hospital) should forget him and begin calling some one else "father." He replied: "If I was not dependent upon her, I cannot say that I would be grieved." We parted company.

Brethren, let not such a heart or belly be in any of you, lest you become narrow in your reasoning and the nations starve for the "Bread of life" while you labor for the bread that perisheth.

The above is my last remittance to India for 1917. Who will help make the next one, the first in 1918, a large one? In making New Year resolutions, did you resolve to give at least once each month for missionaries? If you did not, it is not too late to make this resolution now. I will gladly forward any remittance. Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas.

I forward all remittances in full and bear all incidental expenses myself. During December Sister Lafferty, of Pilot Point, Texas, sent me one dollar to help pay postage. I appreciate this very much indeed.

The South's Showing.

BY J. C. M'Q.

On page 99 of this issue will be found an article taken from the Literary Digest of January 19, entitled "More Murders Than Ever." The reader will please turn to that article and read it carefully before reading this.

I called up the Chief of Police, Alex Barthell, of this city. and found that the number of homicides in Nashville during 1916 were twenty-four, and not twenty-nine. This would place Nashville seventh in the list, instead of fourth, and would also give Dayton. Ohio, a little higher rate than Nashville, provided the number at Dayton is correctly reported. Our readers will doubtless be pleased to know that the number of homicides in Nashville during 1917 was seven, a very decided decrease over 1916. While all right-thinking people deeply deplore murders, homicides, and killings, the cities of the South should not be cast down by a comparison with other cities. I cannot believe that the people of the South are naturally more bloodthirsty and more vicious than the people of other sections of the country. Accepting as a fact that the rate of homicides per capita in the South is higher than in any other portion of the country, there is a reason that give satisfactory explanation for the higher rate. The should not be overlooked that the Civil War of 18 was fought mainly in the South. After the war the Klux Klan operated in the South. From "The Birth Nation," which has been shown in all parts of the cou it appears that this was a necessity. The negroes, wh an ignorant and uneducated people, have lived in South. Naturally that would have some influence in ging the people down, unless the white population them up to their level. While the South better u stands the negro and has done far more for him that other section of the country, yet it has never been al lift the negro up to a level with the Caucasian race. doubtless true that there are many cases where the 1 has been badly treated by people of the South; and would naturally be expected anywhere. The Civil the Ku-Klux, and the negro placing a low value on li educated the South in the shedding of blood. The Lit Digest accepts this principle as true when it quotes the St. Joseph (Mo.) News-Press that it "hears that I officials report a large increase of crime since the U States entered the war, and cites the fifteen bank beries in the Middle West during sixty days." though the lynching figures show a decrease from the the preceding year, democracy is shamed by the reco the causes which prompted most of them, says the burgh Gazette-Times." Considering the demoraliz and the depletion of the country that followed the War; considering the bloody battles through which people of the South had passed, and then the Ku-Klux that followed immediately upon the heels of the war. very clear that the South has done remarkably we have reached the civilization that she has. People o South should take courage and press forward, clinging right principles, doing the right regardless of the sequences, and remembering that such a life leads to all that is noblest, best, and purest. The people o Southland should feel like the lamented Senator Car. when he said: "The South is a land that has known rows; it is a land that has broken the ashen crust moistened it with tears; a land scarred and riven by plowshare of war and billowed with the graves of dead; but a land of legend, a land of song, a land of lowed and heroic memories. To that land every dre my blood, every fiber of my being, every pulsation o heart, is consecrated forever. I was born of her w I was nurtured at her breast; and when my last hour come, I pray God that I may be pillowed upon her b and rocked to sleep within her tender and encircling a:

The Salt of the Earth.

BY E. G. S.

Jesus said of his disciples: "Ye are the salt of earth." But he at once explained that this was true when they were true and faithful in the service o Lord. If they ceased to do his will, their saving p was lost. This is a very important lesson to all Chris to be always faithful in doing the Lord's will. The no course of life that will save our souls if we leave the Christian religion; but the religion of Christ, faith followed, helps us to be happy here and prepares u happiness in the world to come. Nothing outside of (tianity can prepare us for eternity. Hence our Chri duties must be attended to in this life, or we will be su lose our souls forever. Whatever else may be lost i curing salvation will be no real loss to us if we se eternal life; but there is nothing in all the world that possibly make up for the loss of the soul. However, attend to the demands of Christianity through life, ing can defeat the salvation of our souls. The Lord will take care of all such, and Satan and his hosts can have no control over them.

And the Lord has so arranged these matters as to throw the responsibility of our souls upon us. This is the way he puts it in his holy word: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.) Nor does this way of putting the matter take any advantage of the sinner. In the preceding verse he had ordered that the gospel should be preached in "all the world," "to every creature;" and when this has been done, those who do not obey the gospel are left without excuse. God, in his great wisdom and mercy, gives the sinner every advantage he needs for the saving of his soul. Hence the decree that "he that believeth not shall be damned" takes no advantage of the sinner. All know that sinners can believe, repent, and be baptized, if they will. Hundreds and thousands did these things in the days of the apostles, and untold thousands are still doing them and are being saved just as they were under the preaching of the inspired apostles. Hence, if all in Bible lands are not saved, it will be their own fault. It is a fact, however, that there are vast multitudes in Bible lands that do not obey the gospel. Besides, in the New Testament it is said: "But they have not all obeyed the gospel." (Rom. 10: 16.) Likely there has never been a nation in which all of the people, at any time, had obeyed the gospel, and likely there never will be. Hence the promise of salvation was only to those that would obey the gospel. Why it is that so many people fail to obey the gospel when it is preached to them would be hard to explain, but it is a fact that many of them do not.

That people that believe the Bible will live for a lifetime in countries where the Bible may be found in almost every home and where nearly every one claims to believe its truth, and yet a very large number of them never become Christians, is passing strange and hard to explain; but that it is true is everywhere apparent among the people. "The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" so blind and mislead people that the most important matter in all the world is neglected. There is nothing so sad as the loss of the soul. Nevertheless, a large part of the human race do not so consider it in the struggles of this busy life, and many fail to give any attention to the true interests of the soul till it is too late, and thus pass into the unseen world without any preparation whatever. When one comes to struggle with death, it is then too late to make preparation for the soul. How strange that the most important matter of our lives should be overlooked and passed by till it becomes too late and the soul is forever lost! It were better for all such that they had never been born. But if people will deny ungodliness and worldly lusts and fix their hearts and lives on the important matters of eternity, they may be reasonably happy in this life and ready for true happiness in the life beyond. God has arranged for all this in the Christian religion. So let us be faithful in this life in order that we may save our souls and be happy in eternity. Surely, with the hope of eternal life and glory before us, we can afford to be true to the Lord to the end of this short life.

Professional Preachers. No. 8.

BY E. A. E.

Some thirty years ago a respectable number, if not a majority, of the thoughtful men and not a few of the pious women of a denominational church in a flourishing city thought it best for that church in particular and the people in general to change preachers, but the rest thought otherwise. There was no difference in regard to church doctrine. A genuine church row ensued. The preacher and his admirers finally withdrew, erected a costly and imposing house, and began the work of building up a rival church in the same quarter of the city.

Can any one deny, or will any one undertake to deny, the fact that the majority of the latter church, if not some of the original ones, were dominated by a factious, partisan, and bitter spirit, and thought more of the preacher than of Christ? Can any one be found who will contend that that preacher was filled with the spirit of Christ, worked for the unity and peace of the church, and in self-sacrifice sought the greatest good to the greatest number? On the other hand, will any one deny, or attempt to deny, that that preacher sought his own and not the things of Jesus Christ, or seemed determined to hold his place regardless of the cost-namely, the strife, bitterness, and division his course produced? Is this not an example of doing things through faction and vainglory instead of each counting other better than himself? (See Phil. 2: 1-11,)

That preacher, seeking in the spirit of Christ the harmony and Christian fellowship of that church, should have declared that before he would allow the members to divide over him he would get so far away they could not hear of him.

About the same time, in a town in another part of the same State, a preacher, who claimed to belong to no denomination, but to be a Christian only, and his crowd of sympathizers did the same thing—that is, he divided the church over himself, and he and his crowd built another house and attempted in strife to build another congregation.

We all know of other congregations in different parts of the world that have recently pursued the same unwise, unscriptural, and ruinous course and are now in this sad and sinful divided condition; yet these congregations claim to be "churches of Christ," whose head is Christ alone and whose only rule of faith and practice is the New Testament in his blood. In some places the two houses are on the same street and in sight of each other.

No one can fail to see the folly and sin and rebellion of such a suicidal course. If such a course is not stubbornness and rebellion against God in the face of all his plain and positive commands to sacrifice everything, except the gospel of Christ, for unity and peace, who can sin and rebel against him? Can nailing Jesus to the cross and piercing his literal body be any worse than dividing his spiritual body in vanity and pride, love of preëminence, and personal preferences?

Can preachers preach for such congregations in such a way as to encourage them in factions and strife and divisions, except as professional preachers? Preachers of the gospel—of Christ, and him crucified—can take no part in factions and can take no sides with factionists or parties to factions. The only thing the faithful preacher wants to know is, what is the will of God? The only reason for which any true and godly preacher will visit and preach for such congregations is to show that such a course is disobedience to God, that a house divided against itself cannot stand, that ruin will soon overtake them, and to persuade them to repent and to build themselves up in love. This all preachers should do.

What greater sin can a man commit than to draw away the disciples after himself?

Some years ago a preacher was persuaded by a number of good and wise men to remove to a certain town in order to help preserve the unity and peace of the congregation there and to build it up in the faith. On the afternoon of the first Sunday he preached there the church had a business meeting in order to talk over the work. When everything had been discussed and the meeting was ready to adjourn, one of the elders said: "Just a word more: when Brother - desires to change his field of labor, he must give the church three months' notice, so that it can look out a suitable man to take his place; and when the church sees fit to change preachers, it will give him three months' notice, so that he can look up another field." The preacher replied that he would agree to half of that-when he thought he had done God's will there and was needed elsewhere, he would give the church all the notice it wanted, but the church need not give him any notice at all; that as he entered the pulpit the elders could tell him that was to be his last sermon and he would be obliged to them, because he was seeking their good and not his own temporal aggrandizement, and, with a world full of sinners about him, was not seeking places to preach. Such a preacher will never try to hold on to a place contrary to the judgment of even some of the elders and older and wise brethren. It is unwise and results in wrong for elders and others to allow a contention, and especially a division, over a preacher.

Some of these questions and many others arise because of departures from the New Testament order of things.

A generation ago the cry was, "Back to the New Testament"-the New Testament church with its elders and their work, the New Testament women and their sphere and work, the New Testament preachers and their motives and work and reward, the New Testament worship and work, "all things that pertain unto life and godliness." "the whole counsel of God"-back to Christ. What is the cry now? What is heard mostly from the pulpits? What is seen mostly in religious papers? God and Christ and the Holy Spirit are the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; without the blood of Christ now there is no salvation; the gospel is forever the same; the church and its elders and deacons and other members and Head are the same; the work and mission of the church are the same; the New Testament is the same; heaven and eternal destruction are the same. Why is not all the preaching the same? If all the preaching and teaching are not the same, who is responsible? The preaching must be the same. And the preaching of all true, conscientious, earnest, and faithful preachers of the gospel of Christ is the same. All who "preach the word," "the gospel," "Christ, and him crucified," declare "the whole counsel of God," "speak as it were oracles of God," "hold the pattern of sound words," "even the word of our Lord Jesus Christ," give diligence to handle "aright the word of truth," add nothing to and take nothing from the word of God, determine to know nothing else, preach not themselves and their own theories and speculations and wisdom, and in the fear of God studiously avoid all questions which God charges them to avoid, do preach "the same thing" and are "perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment."

When A preaches less than the gospel—less than "the whole counsel of God;" B preaches the gospel, no more, no less, and declares "the whole counsel of God;" and C preaches more than the gospel—more than the revealed will of God or "the whole counsel of God;" then both A and C differ from B and still more widely from each other. A and C are responsible for these differences. If A and C alone were affected by their differences from the word of God, the consequences would not be so fearful; but all who believe and follow their teaching are led away from the truth into division. What must B do? Must be preach less than the gospel in order to agree with A? Must be preach more than the gospel in order to agree with C. Or must be practice and preach simply the word of God in order to be of God? (See John 8: 47.)

He who preaches "the word," declares "the whole counsel of God," in season and out of season, adds nothing to and takes nothing from the gospel, and preaches an teaches it in the words which the Holy Spirit gives, can not be responsible for the consequences. And "the whole counsel of God" must be preached, regardless of consequences to the preacher.

If the preacher is fearful of drawing wrong conclusion and preaching more or less than the word of God (an he should be very fearful of doing so), let him simply read to his hearers or quote in his writing without comment or conclusion by his wisdom all that God says of any given subject. To get all of the word of God on given subject before the people is sufficient, because the can understand the word of God far more easily than great deal of the preaching they are accustomed to hear and if the word of God is not sufficient, God would hav given more.

I overheard recently a part of a conversation betwee two ladies who were evidently members of some denomination in the city where they live. I was forced to health what they were saying, being situated so close to them, of to remove. They were discussing modern preaching, and they concluded that it was simply "the blind leading the blind," to use their own expression. An intelligent physician and member of a denomination in his town told me has tired of the preaching to which he had to listen, was told that a thoughtful lady, who is a member and religious worker in her denomination in the town when she lives, said she could not bear to hear the preaching forced upon her and would have to remain away from church.

There never was a more opportune time or propition time for preaching the word of God. People are hunge ing for it.

God pronounces a blessing upon the man who is of contrite spirit and trembles at his word. (Isa. 66: 2, 5.)

Jonah was commanded to preach "the preaching which God bade him. (Jonah 3: 2.)

No one can withhold the word of God from the peop or preach to them more than the word of God without being held responsible for their blood.

Paul's charge to Timothy before God, before Christ, ar in view of the judgment, to "preach the word," and to t so in season and out of season, comes upon us with 1 creased force as we study our duty to God and men.

Taken together, there are many true, tried, conscietious, faithful preachers of "the word" in the land, as more to follow. There are many young preachers whether while modest and humble and unpretentious, are faithful to Christ and are earnestly contending "for the fail which was once for all delivered unto the saints." The young men, as they cling to the cross and preach the wo in the spirit of Christ and in the fear of God, will be ful as a mighty influence in the land. In this hope I rejoice.

My son, Fred McAlister, died on December 25, 1917, aged twenty-four years. He had been an invalid for several years. He died with bronchitis. He was a member of the church of Christ. He was the youngest son of W. J. and Mary T. McAlister, of the Wells Hill Church.

Hunt.

Carrie Thomas Hunt was born on November 19, 1886, and departed this life on December 19, 1917. How sad the separation! But we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we believe she is at rest. She obeyed the gospel at the age of fifteen, under the preaching of Brother L. S. White, and lived a consecrated Christian until her spirit took its flight. She is survived by her husband, R. D. Hunt, and three children. O, how we miss her! But we realize that our loss is her eternal gain. Brother M. L. Moore conducted the funeral services at Polkville, and the remains were laid to rest in the Thomas burying ground. Brethren, pray for us. MOTHER.

Acre.

On December 30, 1917, Sister Geneva Acre quietly left her earthly house of She was born in 1852, and lived on earth sixty-five years, seven months, and one day. Sister Acre was married to Brother Frank Acre in 1866, Brother Acre died about eighteen years ago. Since that time Sister Acre has lived with her two daughters, Sister Ivie Cook and Sister Daisy Yose. Sister Acre was an industrious and cheerful Christian woman, and her children and grandchildren will keenly feel her absence. May God comfort her in this sorrow. May heavenly sunshine be upon their pathway as they strive to live the upright Christian life.

Chesship.

A. E. Tribble was born on Mary April 12, 1852, and died on October 21, 1917. She was married to J. M. Chesshir on October 5, 1872. To union were born eight children. To this ter Chesshir joined the Baptist Church while young, but became a member of the church of Christ about 1875, of under the preaching Charles Carlton, and lived a faithful Christian until death. She was kind and affectionate to all and was always found at the house of God when the disciples met for worship, if she was able. She was a loving and helpful companion and a true mother. Sister Chesshir leaves a husband, an aged mother, two daughters, five sons, and a host of friends and relatives, to mourn her death. Let me say to the bereaved ones: Weep not as those that have no hope. If you will be faithful to the Lord, you can meet Sister Chesshir where partings come no more. Baker.

Mrs. Virgia Baker, daughter of Mrs. J. M. Capps, died at her home, east of Rutherford, Tenn., on October 31, 1917. She had been in frail health for many months, but patiently tried to go about her duty until a few months before death. She obeyed Christ when young and was ever faithful unto the end, though heavily burdened with sorrow and toil. Being left with three little children to rear, she sadly took up her cross and bore it patiently. She taught for many years and educated her three boys. When not teaching she was busy in the home and on the farm. Her work shows how well her duty was done. But the end is reached and her work is over and she rests from But the end is reached and her labors; and the frail body will be changed to a glorified one like unto To the loved ones, espeour Savior. cially the good, patient mother, who helped her bear her burdens all the way, we would say: Just a little longjust a little farther on, and then will be rest, sweet rest, and a reunion of loved ones, and a crown of righteousness awaiting those who obey To the boys we would say: Hold up the good name of your mother. Downey.

On August 26, 1917, Brother T. J. Downey departed this life. He was born on January 28, 1852. He married Nancy H. Land on October 27, 1870. They were both baptized into the one body the same day, a few months before their marriage. This dear bother left a wife and ely all. dear brother left a wife and six children: W. L. Downey, Centerville, Tenn.; J. R. Downey, Hohenwald; Mrs. Laura Duncan, Swan; Mrs. M. H. Warren, Brush Creek; Mrs. John Warren, Brush Creek; Mrs. John Bates, Swan; Mrs. J. R. Breece, Kimmins. Brother Downey was devoted to the cause of Christ and is greatly missed by his brethren. He is missed most, of course, by his wife, they were so devoted; but she has the great consolation that she does not have to weep as one without hope, for it will only be a matter of time till she can go and spend eternity with him, where there are no more sad goodbyes. Paul said: "It is better to depart and to be with Christ." So let us not weep for him, but live so as to meet him again. The writer spoke words of comfort to the bereaved at Hohenwald. A large crowd assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to Brother Downey, which fact showed how highly he was held in the estimation of his friends and brethren.

Bell.

Mrs. Jennie Bell, wife of S. M. Bell, died at her home, east of Rutherford, Tenn., on November 17, 1917. Having journeyed here for over a half century, then suffering intensely for over weeks, she was called to that home where comes no pain, no sorrow or death. She became a Christian when young and was a faithful member of the church of Christ until death. She was a devoted wife and mother, bringing her children up in the fear of the Lord. All five of them became Christians at a tender age, and now they can rise up and call her blessed. She was of a cheerful disposition, dispelling sadness and scattering sun-shine wherever she went—a kind and helpful neighbor, a power for good to those about her. To the husband who has journeyed so long with her and who was so patient and kind in her sickness and to the sorrowing chil-dren we would say: "Sorrow not, as those who have no hope." McFarland.

Dr. John William McFarland was born on March 22, 1843, and died on December 20, 1917, at the home of his son, Dr. Jerry McFarland, where the funeral services were conducted by Brother E. A. Elam and the writer. Although the deceased had been in failing health for several years, he was seldom absent from the meetings of the church on Lord's days, and took the Lord's Supper at his home when not physically able to leave the home. The last Lord's day before his death he broke the loaf with his wife and daughter and expressed himself as being ready to meet his Lord. Brother McFarland gave his heart and life to obedience of the God in the gospel about fifty-eight years ago, under the preaching of Elder Caleb Sewell, with his mother and sister. He was an elder of the Berea Church for many years, and moved to Lebanon about twenty-three years ago, where he also served as elder. For many years he was engaged in the practice of medicine in the Berea neighborhood and in Lebanon. He served four years in the Civil War and was faithful in the discharge of his duties. Brother McFarland was greatly devoted to his family and is survived by an affectionate wife, three sons, two daughters, and two sisters.

Tucker.

On July 20, 1917, the angel of death took from our midst a life in the bloom of youth (aged sixteen), that it may be transplanted to bloom, grow, and shine more radiantly in that beautiful city of gold. Miss Hazel Tucker, the subject of this obituary, was the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Tucker, 227 Talbot Avenue, Jackson, Tenn. The funeral services were conducted by Brother Austin in the presence of a large concourse of sympathizing relatives and friends. In early life she obeyed the gospel of Christ, and ever afterwards lived a most devout Christian life. Her life was filled with many loving deeds of kindness-living for righteousness here and for immortal glory beyond this vale of tears. She possessed a meek and contrite spirit, with a noble desire to scatter sunshine and flowers along the pathway of the living, rather than place thorns in their way and plant flowers on their graves. godly life she lived while here will be a benediction to those who knew her. In selecting scripture verses to which her life so beautifully conformed, the writer knows of no others more appropriate than the following: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; their works do follow them. "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." To the bereaved ones I would say: Weep not as those who have no hope, but look forward with a joyful heart to that time when you shall meet your loved one again face to face in that "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," whose maker and builder is God.

Key.

On December 1, 1917, the spirit of Sister Pink Key, of Town Creek, Ala., went back to God, who gave it, and on the Lord's day, at three o'clock in the afternoon, her earthly remains were tenderly laid away in the silent city of the dead at Town Creek, amidst a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends. Before her mar-riage Sister Key's name was "Ellie Crook." She was born on September 22, 1880, thus making the length of her journey through this life thirtyseven years, two months, and eight days. She obeyed the gospel of her loving Savior in July, 1910, and was baptized by Brother A. J. McCarty, at Anson, Texas. The greatest thing that the writer or any one else could say of another can be said about Sister Key: "She was a Christian." She was a most lovable character, both at home and abroad. In the community where she lived she has left kind words and Christlike acts to do good, although she is not there herself. was a devoted mother, a loyal wife, a true friend, and a faithful Christian, and she will be greatly missed by her husband, her children, her relatives. and her friends. What Is An Internal Bath?

By R. W. BEAL.

FUCH has been said and volumes have been written describing at length the many kinds of baths civilized man has indulged in from time to time. Every possible resource of the human mind has been brought into play to fashion new methods of bathing; but, strange as it may seem, the most important, as well as the most beneficial of all baths, the "In-ternal Bath," has been given little thought. The reason for this is proba-bly due to the fact that few people seem to realize the tremendous part that internal bathing plays in the acquiring and maintaining of health.

If you were to ask a dozen people to define an internal bath, you would have as many different definitions, and the probability is that not one of them would be correct. To avoid any misconception as to what constitutes an internal bath, let it be said that a hot-water enema is no more an internal bath than a bill of fare is a dinner.

If it were possible and agreeable to take the great mass of thinking people to witness an average post-mortem, the sights they would see and the things they would learn would prove of such lasting benefit and impress them so profoundly that further argument in favor of internal bathing would be unnecessary to convince them. Unfortunately, however, it is not possible to do this, profitable as such an experience would doubtless prove to be. There is, then, only one other way to get this information into their hands, and that is by acquainting them with such knowledge as will enable them to appreciate the value of this long-sought-for health-producing necessity.

Few people realize what a very little thing is necessary sometimes to improve their physical condition; also they have almost no conception of how a little carelessness, indifference, or neglect can be the fundamental cause of the most virulent disease. For instance, that universal disorder from which almost all humanity is suffer-ing, known as "constipation," "autoing, known as "constipation," "auto-intoxication," "auto-infection," and a multitude of other terms, is not only curable, but preventable, through the consistent practice of internal bathing.

How many people realize that normal functioning of the bowels and a clean intestinal tract make it impossi-ble to become sick? "Man of to-day is only fifty per cent efficient." Re-duced to simple English, this means that most men are trying to do a man's portion of work on half a man's power. This applies equally to women.

That it is impossible to continue to do this indefinitely must be apparent to all. Nature never intended the delicate human organism to be operated on a hundred per cent overload. A machine could not stand this and not break down, and the body certainly cannot do more than a machine. There is entirely too much unnecessary and avoidable sickness in the world.

How many people can you name, inriow many people can you name, including yourelf, who are physically vigorous, healthy, and strong? The number is appallingly small.

It is not a complex matter to keep in condition, but it takes a little time; and in these strenuous days people have time to do everything else necessary for the attainment of happiness but the most essential thing of all, that of giving their bodies their proper care.

Would you believe that five to ten minutes of time devoted to systematic internal bathing can make you healthy and maintain your physical efficiency Granting that such a indefinitely? simple procedure as this will do what is claimed for it, is it not worth while to learn more about that which will accomplish this end? Internal bathing will do this, and it will do it for people of all ages and in all conditions of health and disease.

People do not seem to realize, strange to say, how important it is to keep the body free from accumulated body-waste poisons. Their doing so would prevent the absorption into the blood of the poisonous excretions of the body, and health would be the in-evitable result.

If you would keep your blood pure, your heart normal, your eyes clear, your complexion clean, your mind keen, your blood pressure normal, your nerves relaxed, and be able to enjoy the vigor of youth in your declining years, practice internal bathing, and begin to-day.

Now that your attention has been called to the importance of internal bathing, it may be that a number of questions will suggest themselves to your mind. You will probaby want to know what an internal bath is, why people should take them, and the way to take them. These and countless other questions are all answered in a booklet, entitled "The What, the Why, booklet, entitled "The What, the Why, and the Way of Internal Bathing," written by Dr. Charles A. Tyrrell, the inventor of the "J. B. L. Cascade," whose lifelong study and research along this line make him the pre-eminent authority on this subject. Not only has internal bathing saved and prolonged Dr. Tyrrell's own life. and prolonged Dr. Tyrrell's own life, but the lives of a multitude of hopeless individuals have been equally spared and prolonged. No book has ever been written containing such a vast amount of practical information to the business man, the worker, and All that is necessary the housewife. to secure this book is to write to Dr. Charles A. Tyrrell at No. 134 West Sixty-fifth Street, New York City, and mention having read this article in the Gospel Advocate, and the same will be immediatey mailed to you free of all cost or obligation.

Perhaps you realize now, more than ever, the truth of these statements; and if the reading of this article will result in a proper appreciation on your part of the value of internal bathing, it will have served its purpose. What you will want to do now is to avail yourself of the opportunity for learning more about the subject, and your writing for this book will give you that information. Do not put off doing this, but send for the book now, while the matter is fresh in your mind.

Procrastination is the thief "Frocrastination is the thief of time."
A thief is one who steals something. Do not allow procrastination to cheat you out of your opportunity to get this valuable information, which is free for the asking. If you would be natural, be healthy. It is unnatural to be sick. Why be unnatural, when it is such a simple thing to be well? A Jewish Legend.

The great Rabbi Gamaliel once brought the Old Testament Scriptures to the Roman emperor, Hadrian, who, after a study of the sacred book, rashly retorted to the rabbi that in the story of Genesis he criticized the Creator because he had stolen one of Adam's ribs. Gamaliel was bewildered and perplexed, but his daughter rose to the occasion.

"Let me answer the emperor," she begged, "and I will vindicate our holy writings."

So on the next day she presented herself before Hadrian.

"O Emperor of the Romans," she cried, "truly a terrible thing has happened, wherefore we invoke thy aid!"

Hadrian was greatly concerned, and asked what it was. The Hebrew maiden replied that at the dead hour of midnight a thief had subtly and stealthily entered their abode and had stolen away a silver flagon, although it was true, she added, that he had left a golden flagon in its place.

"Why," cried the Roman emperor, "that was no robber, but a benefactor! Would that such a one might rob me,

The Hebrew maiden smiled a subtle Oriental smile. "Ah!" she said, looking down and blushing sweetly. "Why, then, do you blame the Creator and accuse him of theft, seeing that, if he took a rib from Adam, he left him Eve instead?"-Selected.

The Right of Youth.

The desire of youth to live its own life is overwhelming and is to be expected. Parents who unthinkingly hold that these young lives were put into the home for the pleasure and benefit of the parents and that they must, therefore, conform in every least degree to the destiny marked out for them, may expect some sort of trouble. Each human soul is sent into the world to express its own individual portion of the divine life, and those who would suppress this power or direct it into channels which they have unalterably marked out are working contrary to divine law.-Mrs. Woodallen Chapman.

Florida Notes. BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I left Nashville on January 1 for Florida and reached Jacksonville on Wednesday at 2 P.M., nearly five hours late. I spent the night there, but put in most of my time resting. I tried to get Brother Scobey's son, who is at the army camp, over the telephone, but failed. I am sure he would have been glad to talk with me, as I had spent the Sunday afternoon before with his father and mother. It would doubtless have been better than a letter from home to have seen me, as I had so recently been with his loved ones. I left Nashville covered in snow, but there was none to be seen even in Atlanta. I will see no more snow, I guess, while I remain in Florida.

I preached last Sunday and Sunday night at Largo. This is the home of Brother W. A. Cameron. I found him away at Jacksonville, where he began a meeting last Sunday. Brother Cameron has made Largo his home for many years, but he is still very much loved and appreciated by the church and people of that community. This shows he has lived an exemplary life among them. Preachers are too apt to wear out, both with the church and the world, when they remain too long in one place. However, it is not always the preacher's fault. Sometimes he preaches the truth plainly, and those who are unwilling to accept it criticize him, and the brethren begin to want another man who is more acceptable to the outsiders and sinners generally. The brethren think they love the truth, but sometimes they will not stand by the man who preaches, because he is unpopular with sinners. It is sometimes wonderful how much influence the worst people in the neighborhood have in selecting the preachers for our churches. I think it is all right to change preachers frequently and give the people the opportunity to hear different talent, but I do not believe a man should be turned down for making a bold fight against sin and innovations simply because a few guilty ones object to the preacher. Churches should strive to give the people such teaching as they need, rather than the kind they want. The church at Largo seems willing to stand by the man who faithfully and lovingly teaches the truth. This is right, and it is the way to really serve and bless the world.

I am now back at Tarpon Springs, where my daughter, Dr. Belcher, and little Mary Irving live. This is our only grandchild, and she must be a very smart child. Is it possible I could be deceived about this? Well, if I am, things are not what they seem. next Sunday and I am t=

Sunday night, and longer if I feel that I can do any good. The congregation is very small here, numbering only about one dozen, but they are doing what they can; at least, they are meeting and are trying to serve God "as it is written." I will do what I can to encourage them in the right way.

The weather is very fine here for me, though the people here complain at the cold they have had since about December 1. They must have had some frost, because I can see signs of it on tender vegetation. But what is a little frost to one who has been pinched for several mornings with zero weather? The days since I came here have been about like the middle of April back at home. I feel a little bad to slip off down here to this warm climate and leave so many good friends back there to shiver and worry over the fuel proposition. This is a great winter climate, but let me say to my friends in Tennessee and Kentucky: You can come nearer making everything you need to eat and wear in your own country than in any other place known to me. "Godliness with contentment is great gain." This is to say to my friends and brethren back at home that I am feeling fine; and if the "eats" hold out as good as they have been so far, I will come back, maybe, so fat they will not know me. I am here for only two months. Tarpon Springs, Fla., will be my address till March 1.

Notes from California.

BY W. HALLIDAY TRICE.

Tempus fugit! The year 1917 is forever gone. We have passed another milestone on the journey of life. We are one year nearer eternity than ever before! Solemn indeed is the march of months and the tread of time. One year ago to-day (January 6) I landed in Fresno, and I began a meeting with the Nevada Avenue church of Christ on the following day. During the past year I held short meetings at the following places: Fresno, Hanford, Madera, Patterson. and Santa Rosa. I have also preached some at San Francisco, Berkeley, Turlock, Lathrop, Tulare, and Aromas. I baptized eleven persons in 1917-nine in Fresno, one at Hanford, and one at Madera. My regular work for the past year was: Two Sundays each month at Fresno, one at Dinuba, and one in Madera. I am to preach three Sundays at Fresno this year, and possibly at Dinuba the other Sunday. While only a few have been baptized in Fresno the past year, a good many have moved here from other points, and we now have large crowds each Sunday. We have some excellent people in the congregation here, and they have "a mind to work." I am still very much in love with California and have no notion of leaving the State. The stone that marks the geographical center of the State is in Fresno; and it is also in the heart of the great San Joaquin Valley and almost midway between the two large cities of the State. The city is growing by leaps and bounds and there are wonderful opportunities in every line of endeaver. Success to the Gospel Advocate and its readers. May this be the best year in the history of the

Mr. Hoover Says:

The food situation in Europe is far graver than when the preliminary survey of the food supply of the world for this year was made.

Beyond the demands of the allies there is a call upon us by the friendly neutrals for food supplies; and if we cannot at least in part respond to these neutral calls, starvation on an unparalleled scale must ensue.

Food has now taken a dominant position in the war, and we must ask the American people to sacrifice far more than was at first thought necessary. We have exported the whole of the surplus of the wheat from this harvest after reserving to ourselves an amount sufficient for our normal consumption of seed and flour until the next harvest, and, therefore, the amount of wheat flour that the United States can contribute to mix with the war bread of our allies during this winter will be simply the amount that our people reduce their consumption month by month. In other words, every grain of wheat or its products that our associates in this war receive from the United States from now on will be exactly the amount that our people have saved each month on their behalf.

The allies to-day ask for twenty-five per cent more meat and fats (pork, dairy products, and vegetable oils) than we consider our monthly production permits us to send them-unless we can consume less.

Thus every particle of diminished consumption by the American people is one particle more for the soldiers, men, women, and children of the people associated with us in this war, and for the starving people in other countries. This is a personal obligation upon every one of us toward some individual abroad who will suffer privation to the extent of our own individual negligence.

A great many individuals in our population eat far more food than is necessary to maintain their health and strength. In this emergency only the simplest of living is patriotic.

We want no person in the United States to eat less than is required for good health and full strength, for in this emergency America requires every atom of the productive power of our people. While many can eat less, all of our population can substitute other foodstuffs for the few that are vitally needed for export.

There is no waste of food among any of the peoples to whom we must send food-there is the most drastic reduction in their consumption; there is actual privation among their women and children; there is starvation in

It is a matter for the conscientious consideration of every individual that he or she should eat only that which is necessary to maintain bodily health and strength and unselfishly to select those foodstuffs the use of which relieves international necessities, this winter of 1918 lies the period when there will be tested in this great free country of ours the question as to whether or not our people are capable of voluntary individual self-sacrifice to save the world.

S. W. Womack's Report.

On the third Lord's day in December I worshiped with the Russell Street congregation in East Nashville. The services were in remembrance of old Brother D. Lipscomb, and the speaker was Brother A. B. Lipscomb. The preaching and the services throughout were deep and searching and uplifting. I had many handshakes by the old and young members. They said they were glad to see me there and invited me back again. So I came away feeling good. I thank this congregation for their words of kindness and for their aid.

On the third Lord's day, morning and night, Brother M. Keeble preached at the Jackson Street Church.

The fourth Lord's day was a mission day with us, and Brother Keeble was with us again. The attendance, attention, and interest were good. The collection amounted to fifteen dollars, and the services seemed to be an uplift to all. There was one added by baptism.

On the fifth Lord's day I preached for the Belfast Chapel congregation, in Marshall County. It was a cold, bleak day. The attendance was small, but the attention was good. All present seemed to enjoy the services very much and invited me back again.

All of the churches and brethren and sisters who were so kind to think of me for the holidays have my thanks for the same. The little band at Sugar Grove, Ky., remembered me with a box with many good things.

I began another year's work with my home congregation on the first Lord's day in January. Brother G. P. Bowser, of Silver Point, preached for us. On the second Lord's day we had preaching at the morning services by Brother A. C. Campbell; at night, by Brother O. A. Eccles, of Silver Point. The cold weather kept many away, but a good interest was manifested by those who were present. The work, I think, starts off nicely. Brethren, pray for us, and let me hear from you. S. W. Womack.

Evangelistic Work for Three Years.

For three years I have labored to reach my people with the gospel, and, judging from the results, I feel that I have done my duty, and now I am entering into my fourth year's work with a desire to do more than I have ever done. I have been asked a number of times by brethren who favor the plan the "digressives" have to support the evangelist, how I am supported, and my answer is, God will provide; for in the commission Christ promises to be with the one who will faithfully carry the message, and I had rather rely on God's plan than man's. I here give a brief report of my work for each year, not that I want to be seen, but so the world may know how a gospel preacher is to be supported.

For the year 1915: Additions, 90; sermons preached, 240; miles traveled, 5,260; donations received, $495.87.

For the year 1916: Additions, 165; sermons preached, 335; miles traveled, 5,000; donations received, $657.78.

For the year 1917: Additions, 104; sermons preached, 297; miles traveled, 6,497; donations received, $778.27.

Totals for the three years: Additions, 359; sermons preached, 872; miles traveled, 16,757; donations received, $1,931.92.

I wish I could make a much better report than this; but I will try, if the Lord wills, to do more the next three years. I hope this report will prove that the loyal brethren will support the work without the aid of any human institution. This report does not include such things as clothing and provisions which the brethren have given me.

I am glad to say that the white brethren and sisters have greatly encouraged and assisted me in my labors, and the colored disciples everywhere are wide awake to the work of reaching the world with the gospel.

During these three years I have baptized four sectarian preachers. Three weeks ago I was in Turner, Ark., and I was told that one of the preachers had entered that section and baptized three old persons into the church of Christ, and it made my heart leap for joy just to think that a few months ago I baptized him. It is my intention this year to enter more mission fields. The church at Capleville, Tenn., has promised me the use of their tent and also promised to aid in the work.

I am praying that our motto be this year and all coming years: "Greater things for God." Thanks to all who have had a part in my work. My address is 2013 Jefferson Street, Nashville, Tenn. M. KEERLE.

Why I Believe in Nuxated Iron

A Strength-Builder For The Nation BY E. SAUER, M. D.

Probably no remedy has ever met with such phenomenal success as has Nuxated Iron. It is conservatively estimated that over three million people annually are taking it in this country alone. It has been highly endorsed and used by Former United States Senators and Members of Congress; Physicians who have been connected with well-known hospitals have prescribed and recommended it; Monseigneur Nannini, a prominent Catholic Clergyman, recommends it to all members of the Catholic Church. Former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr, of Chicago, says it ought to be used in every hospital and prescribed by every physician. Sarah Bernhardt -"the Divine Sarah," the world's most noted actress, has ordered a large quantity sent to the French soldiers to help give them strength, power and endurance.

Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago, and former House Surgeon Jefferson Park Hospital, Chicago, says Muxated Iron has proven through his own tests of it to excel any preparation he has ever used for creating red blood, building up the nerves, strengthening the muscles and correcting digestive disorders.

Dr. H. B. Vail, formerly physician in the Baitimore Hospital and Medical Examiner, says that time and again he has prescribed Nuxated Iron and surprised patients at the rapidity with which the weakness and general debility were replaced by a renewed feeling of strength and vitality.

If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

Note:—Nuxated Iron, which has been used by former Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and other prominent people with such surprising results, and which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians in such a great variety of cases, is not a patent medicine nor secret remedy, but one which is well known to drugists and whose bronconstituents are widely prescribed by eminent physicians everywhise. Unlike the older morganic from products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teetin mass the back nor upset the stomach; on the contrary it is a most point remedy in pearly all forms of indigestion as well as for nervous, run-down conditions. The manufacturers have such preat confidence in Nuxated Iron, that they offer to forfeit $100 to any charitable institution if they cannot take any man or woman under 50 who lacks iron and increase their strength 100 per cent, or over in four weeks't time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. They also offer to refund your money if it does not at least double your strength and endurance in ten days' time. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If it is coated, your little one's stomach, liver, and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless; doesn't sleep, eat, or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhæa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

CHURCH NEWS

North Carolina.

Winston-Salem, January 10.—Our three years' work in North Carolina has resulted in great good to numbers of people. About two hundred have been baptized, and many scattered members have been induced to go to work regularly for the Lord, and yet there is labor to do along this line. We have awakened interest enough to build three houses for worship and improve some old ones. Our desire is to make stronger efforts this year than ever to build up the little, weak congregations and, in the meantime, convert as many to the truth as we can. By a united effort more can be done. That is why Christ prayed for unity. Where it requires two or more to carry a weight, one must let it alone. My address is 711 Devonshire Street, Winston-Salem, N. C.-W. L. Reeves.

Decherd January 22.—I visited the Sewanee congregation last Lord's day and preached at eleven o'clock. In the afternoon Brother J. L. Brother Long has been preaching at this place since last fall, and is doing a good work.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Dallas, January 11.—It seems as if the North Pole has blown down upon us here in Texas this morning. It certainly is cold and everything is covered with snow. I was at Grand Saline last Lord's day, and shall go to Wills Point to-morrow, the Lord willing to present the state of the ing, to preach Sunday. I yet have one Sunday in each month to engage in work somewhere. Any one or any church needing my assistance one or more Sundays per month will please write me at 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas. I have all my time engaged except one Sunday per month; but if any one place wants more than one Sunday, it will be all right to give up one now engaged .- J. C. Estes.

The freight congestion is serious. You will help yourself, us, the railroads, and the Government by giving your order for Fertilizers NOW to your dealer. If all the farmers do this, the dealer can then "bunch" his orders, and be able to order his cars of fertilizers loaded to full capacity. The Government urges that all cars be so loaded.

When the goods arrive haul them home, and put them into your barn until you are ready to use them. If the movement of railroad cars becomes any more serious you may not get a pound of fertilizer at any price.

The Lexington (Ky.) Building Fund.

BY H. C. SHOULDERS.

Those who have been planning to send a contribution for the above fund will please note the change of my address from Winchester, Ky., to Sellersburg, Ind. I shall continue to do all I can for the work in Lexington. These brethren are working hard to restore the primitive teaching of the New Testament in their worship. Numbers have had fellowship in this great work, but they need more help yet to put them where they will be able to stand alone and get where they can keep the work going and spread out by sounding out the word of life. They desire to make another payment on February 2. The debt now is sixteen hundred dollars. I have nearly two hundred dollars in bank to pay on the debt at present. This leaves a balance of about fourteen hundred dollars. There are enough brethren and sisters who will read this to pay off the debt by each giving one dollar. Three hundred congregations could give five dollars each and the debt would be paid and a little left to start the repairing that is necessary. Now, brethren, do not wait for the other fellow to start the work. Do your part right now and the debt will be paid, and God will bless one and all. Every cent will be acknowledged through the Gospel Advocate and the Christian Leader. Every one with his or her shoulder to the wheel on the home run and the debt will be paid and every one of us will be happy. Remember, my address is Sellersburg, Ind., and the day we want to pay the debt is the second day of February.

DARKEN GRAY HAIR, LOOK YOUNG, PRETTY

Grandma's Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur Darkens so Naturally That Nobody Can Tell.

Hair that loses its color and luster, or when it fades, turns gray, dull, and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a fifty-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears. But what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, be-sides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and luster and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite to impart color and a youthful appearance to the hair. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

A Novel Method and Very Effective -Costs but Little to Try.

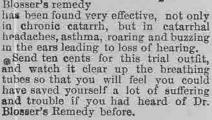

There is a way out of every difficulty, and those who suffer from catarrh can learn of a pleasant and novel method of relief if they will take the trouble to write a brief letter.

In Atlanta there is a respected physician who has been treating catarrh successfully by a unique plan, for over plan, for over forty-three years, and yet a lot of catarrh sufferers don't know about him. He doosn't advise internal medicines, which may upset the stomach, nor sprays, salves and such things, which cannot reach far back enough. His is the smoke-vapor method, and is produced by a remedy made from such natural medicinal agents as herbs, flowers and berries.

By writing to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 881 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and enclosing ten cents in coin or (stamps, he will forward a trial forward a outfit ready for to use. Dr. Blosser's remedy

Buckner, January 21.—Since the beginning of this year many thoughts concerning 1917 have crowded through my mind. Much of this thinking has been caused by the many reminis-cences which I have read in the Gospel Advocate and the Firm Foundation. There are many happy recollections and some sad, regretful ones. The year was filled to overflowing with exciting events. The church work with which I have had to do has been, for the most part, more successful than usual. I helped to conduct five evangelistic gospel meetings during the year. The first was during the last part of July, at Homer, La., with the Union Grove church of Christ. The meeting was exceptionally well attended. There were twenty-four baptisms and a number of restorations. We had to close too soon on account of my wife's being My second meeting was at Nichols Schoolhouse, in Nevada County, Ark., where I have done mission work for three years. The effort resulted in a few additions and the building of a new church house which is an honor to the little church there and to the neighborhood. My third meeting was at Bethel, near Waldo, a Baptist stronghold. I held this meeting while at home with my sick wife. There were seventeen baptisms and a number of wanderers converted from the way of wrong. My fourth meeting was at Kenyon, where Brother C. L. Wilkerson had held four meetings during the last four years, with seventy baptisms. Our meeting was delayed two weeks and then broken into twice on account of my having to return home—once to be examined for the Federal service and once to attend to my wife. But the meeting was a good one. There were forty-two baptisms and eight restorations. The Baptists were clamoring for a debate when the meeting began. Some of the brethren were not altogether against the idea. On the first Sunday of the meeting I signed propositions to meet J. N. Weaver in debate. This discussion resulted in much good. The people found that a man can debate and stay in a good humor. There were six baptisms at the close of the debate, some from the Baptists. My fifth meeting was at Success. The meeting continued seven days. There were six baptisms and some restorations. were just getting started when it became necessary for me to go to the debate above mentioned. The church at Waldo had another splendid meeting, with our beloved brother, J. Will Henley, at the helm.—O. E. Billingsley.

Hot Springs, January 17.—It was a great joy to be at home a few days during Christmas week and feel the tender touch of little hands and hear the prattle of childish voices I had not heard for so long. But the trip was not good for me in many ways. I contracted a heavy cold the night I left for home and gradually grew worse until we decided the only safe thing for me was to return to Hot Springs as quickly as possible. Neuralgia and grip had about "knocked me out" by the time I arrived, Janu-

I am much improved, and hope to be able to preach some soon. Several brethren have visited me, and not a few have inquired about my health since returning. God bless every one of them. Everybody here is good to me. A stranger in the bath house this morning asked me how long I intended to remain. I told him I wanted to stay until I was well; but as my means had reached an alarmingly low mite, I would likely be out in a few days. I told him the story of how grandly and loyally I had been treated by so many good folks, and told him also about how I appreciated their every act of Christian kindness, and that I could not afford to ask them to do more for me. He offered to loan me the money to continue the treatments. I thanked him as kindly as I could, and when I declined to accept his generous offer he seemed hurt that I should refuse to let him thus help me. I desire now to "owe no man anything" but love. Even those who do not love me and would seek to do me harm, God knows I have nothing but the kindest feelings for I have made many mistakes in life, and I would give a world, if I had one, to forget some of them; but I thank my Lord that I have always stood ready to correct, as far as possible, every one of them. It pays. It pays to try, even though we fail. It is far better to try and forever fail than to forever fail to try. Some churches that had arranged with me to hold their meetings this year have decided that I would not be able to preach and have made arrangements with other preachers to hold them. However, I feel that I shall not be out of a place to preach on account of the change. I have every hope of being able yet to reach most of the places where I have appointments to hold meetings. For the last sixteen years I have been busy, too busy for my physical good. I hope now to hear from all points where I am to hold meetings and from all who may be anxious to have me during the year, that I may arrange my routes and get in touch with my correspondents. If am permitted to stay here through this month, I hope to be able to take up my work in regular form by the middle of February. May our God abundantly bless every faithful effort to advance his cause. I am yet a bur-den upon my friends, but friends will continue to bear it until I am on the safe side; at least, that is what I am believing about it. I never can repay the noble ones for their great love and many kindnesses to me. Brethren, will you pray for me, that I may be completely restored and be able to spend the last of my life in the proclamation and defense of the truth?-J. Will Henley.

Colorado.

Olathe, January 16.-A letter just received from Bellvue announces another death—that of Sister Pennock, wife of Brother Bill Pennock, one of our very best members at Bellyue. She was a most devoted sister, as well as a model wife and mother. She was always at her post on the first day of the week when health possibly permitted; and on Lord's days, during my recent meeting there, though scarcely able to sit up, she was always on a front seat, in a chair especially provided for her, and took deep interest in the worship and the sermon. But in these respects she was only one among a number at Bellvue. I have planted, through the grace of God, many a congregation, but here at Bellvue I believe I find the deepest devotion to Christ, the most ardent zeal for his cause, and the most willing and happy obedience to his every call that I have ever noted. Bellvue was almost the first fruits of my labors in Colorado and has received far more than one-half of my attention, and probably every other man who has preached in Colorado in the last eight years has preached at Bellyue through my solicitation. Bellvue has lost, in latter years, six of her most faithful members, including one of the elders; but we try to keep the number increas-My recent meeting there resulted in four being added to the congrega-Brother Bailey has also baptized a few there in the last year or Soon, if the present rate continues, there will be as large a congregation of Bellvue's faithful gathered, so far as earthly remains are concerned, in the little "silent city of the dead" as are still struggling in the "land of the living." Be it so, for the "land of the living." Be it so, for Bellvue was established through the grace of Christ especially to prepare the people of that community for the state of the dead; and it is, indeed, a stepping-stone to life and joy eternal. These Bellvue brethren are poor, but exceedingly liberal with the little they have. I recently called upon sympathetic brethren to help them lift the mortgage on their house, amounting to two hundred and seventy dollars. Brother Willis informs me that they have received enough to bring the debt down to one hundred and thirty dollars, which is past due. The little church in Denver sent them thirty dollars recently; and Eleventh Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., sent them about sixteen dollars. Other contribu-tions were mostly from individuals and came in small amounts, but were highly appreciated just the same. If Denver can give them thirty dollars, surely there are many congregations that could do that much; and only four at thirty dollars each would about cancel the debt. I do not, of course, presume to dictate the amount each should give, but I most humbly beg that the remaining amount be sent those brethren immediately. Let us try one more time, and then we will say no more. Send all money to Brother Elmore Willis, Bellvue, Col., and he will faithfully apply and acknowledge all means sent him. As to myself, I have not been out of the house for one week to-day-laid up with a severe abscess in my ear and cheek bone. I suffer constantly both day and night, but I hope to be over with it and out into the field shortly. I am losing much precious time nursing my affliction, and, so far as I can see, it is adding nothing to the king-dom of God, either. —E. C. Fuqua.

Michigan.

Detroit, January 21.-Since many of the best Christian families of South have moved to Detroit during the last few months on account of the splendid opportunities to make a good living, and since not a few of them placed their membership with the Warren Avenue congregation, it occurred to me that it would be well to let their friends "back home" know something of their work in the Lord's vineyard. They have not only greatly strengthened the local congregation, but they have enabled us to plant the work in several new fields that we could not have reached, without their help, for many months yet to come. Michigan is a very large and prosperous State, and yet there are towns and cities even as large as Nashville that have no churches of Christ, and not even Christian churches, in them, in almost every part of the State. While the Warren Avenue church is not large, being started less than three years ago with but fifteen members in a small storeroom, we have fully resolved that, with the help of our Heavenly Father, we will not only do all in our power to establish churches in every section of Detroit, but we will see that some of the cities of the State also have the pure gospel. Our first effort was at Flint, a city of our first enort was at this some six-ninety thousand inhabitants, some six-turing miles out of Detroit. We began ty-five miles out of Detroit. We began there with one member in a private home; now there is a splendid congregation of about fifty members, which has a bright future before it. Brother A. W. Hastings, one of the Warren Avenue deacons, has done most of the preaching at Flint. Our second effort was among the colored people of Detroit. It is said that there are now about thirty thousand colored people here, and the number is rapidly increasing. We began this work in a very modest way during the past summer; and while there are but about a dozen members as yet, we are sure a fine congregation will soon be established among these people. Brother Carl H. Seehoffer, another one of the Warren Avenue deacons, especially looks after this mission. Our third looks after this mission. Gar-effort was at Camp Custer, Battle cured the use of a good room in one of the Y. M. C. A. buildings, where we spread the Lord's Supper and have a devotional and preaching service. This mission is under the immediate care of Brother H. F. Fleming. Our fourth effort was at Pontiac, a city of about thirty thousand inhabitants, twentyfive miles out of Detroit. This mission is but two or three months old. and yet it is showing unusual health and vigor. There are fifteen or twenty members there, and new ones are added each Lord's day. Brother L. V. McGary has the oversight and care of the work at Pontiac. In addition to the brethren mentioned above, there are a number of others that do splendid work as public preachers, and we expect to start work in at least two other places in the near future. other brethren think of changing locations, I am sure they will make no mistake in coming to Detroit. It is one of the finest cities in the world, work is plentiful and wages are good, and I know of no place where there are greater opportunities to do good work in the church than right here. HEAVY MEAT EATERS HAVE SLOW KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat If You Feel Backachy or Have Bladder Trouble—Take Glass of Salts

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid, which excites the kidneys; become overworked from strain, get sluggish, and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood; then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness, and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage, or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kid-neys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irrita-tion, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; it makes a delightful effer-vescent lithia-water drink, which every one should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

The Value of a Plan.

Every Christian life needs a plansteady, well-kept, good all the year round-to give direction to all Christian efforts. Without a plan, we become fitful, zealous at one time, cold at another. Satan cannot conquer a Christian life that has a plan to live by. Our circumstances in life are very different, and by necessity the plans will be modified thereby; still, each one should realize the value of system, and arrange a method which accords with our vocation.

If you plan to go to church each Sunday, you will be there more regularly than if you leave it to be decided from time to time. Whatever you resolve to do will sometimes be difficult to perform, and you have saved your resolution if you can meet the difficulty with the response, "That's my plan," and follow it out. If we could read the records of human life, we would find that we have many times fallen into bad habits, neglected our duties, yielded to temptation, broken our good resolutions, simply because our Christian life was a kind of haphazard, go-as-you-feel sort of thing, and lacked a well-kept plan.-Selected.

David Grayson says, in the American Magazine: "The best partners of solitude are books. I like to take a book with me in my pocket, although, be it here confessed, I find the world so full of interesting things-sights, sounds, odors-that often I never read a word in it. It is like having a valued friend with you, though you walk for miles without saying a word to him or he to you; but if you really know your friend, it is a curious thing how, subconsciously, you are aware of what he is thinking and feeling about this hillside or that distant view. And so it is with books. It is enough to have this writer in your pocket, for the very thought of him and what he would say to these old fields and pleasant trees is ever freshly delightful; and he never interrupts nor intrudes his thoughts upon yours unless you desire it."

Why Self-Denial?

When Jesus first spoke explicitly to his disciples about the sufferings he must endure and told that he would be killed in fulfillment of his mission, Simon Peter did not like it a little bit. He was bold enough to take Jesus aside and remonstrate with him about such talk. The apostle must have reasoned within himself: "This is not the language of a king; surely this is not the path to conquest and victory." The interruption of the startled and excited Peter gave Jesus a fine opportunity, not only to correct this man's misconception, but to teach all men everywhere that Christ had chosen to build sovereignty upon sacrifice. The mistake of Peter is a common one. Self-denial seems to be the hardest thing for us to understand and to seek after. It does not mean giving up pleasant things because they are pleasant. Self-denial for self-denial's sake is not a virtue and is not pleasing to God. He does not find sweet incense in our pains and troubles. On the other hand, he wishes us to be happy as he is, and he knows that only through self-denial can such joys be obtained. There is no other way of opening the door to man's highest possibilities, his fullest development, his purest holiness, his greatest happiness, his largest usefulness, his real success in life.

> "Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to thee."

Attention!

"Attention!" cries the officer in command, and every soldier's ear is open and alert, awaiting the next command. Would to God we could learn the value of such attention in the hearing of Jesus' commands! Physical deafness is a great calamity, but spiritual deafness is infinitely worse. Solomon said: "Wisdom crieth out; she uttereth her voice" in the streets." But how many are deaf to Wisdom's cry! Jesus said, "Take heed how ye hear;" and: "He that hath ears, let him hear." If we have good ears, we should use them. Attention is the secret of memory. We must hold our ears closely to their business of hearing and keep the mind upon what is being said. "Hearken diligently," saith the prophet. There is in this the figure of heeding to catch the lowest whisper. There are many who have heard with the hearing of the outward ear, but have not heard in the sense of attending nor in the sense of understanding, and certainly not in the sense of obeying. Some one has divided the world into four classes-unbelievers, make-believers, half-believers, and believers. In which class do you or I belong? Only the believers have promise of salvation. To unbelieve or make believe or half believe is to fail. Jesus says to us, as he said to his soldiers in Galilee: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Let no Christian be listless when he speaks, nor tongue-tied when it comes to preaching his gospel.

The Mountains.

The greatest events relating to the history of mankind are connected with mountains. Our attention in the Bible is first called to them as places of refuge from the two judgments of water and fire. The ark rests upon the mountains of Ararat, and man, having passed through the great flood, kneels upon the earth first where it is nearest heaven and mingles with the mountain clouds the smoke of his sacrifice of thanksgiving. The sight of a mountain may provoke a morbid fear or an ecstasy of joy, according to the mood of the beholder. After a long stay in a place of luxury and sin, we hear Lot's complaining reply: "I cannot escape to the mountain, lest evil overtake me." How different must have been the heart of David when he exclaimed: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the mountains: from whence shall my help come?" We might study Moriah as the mount of bitterness, Sinai as the mount of law, Calvary as the mount of grace, and Hermon as the mount of glory.

People often like to retain the ecstasies of religious feeling. This they may not do, but they can retain the blessings of the Christian religion by going down from the mount and using their experience in transfiguring their daily cares and burdens and bringing men and women to Christ. As Henry Drummond aptly puts it: "God does not make the mountain tops to be inhabited; they are not for the homes of men. We ascend the height to get a broader vision of our earthly surroundings, but we do not tarry there." Even so our blessed Savior went up into the mountain to pray, but came down to minister and to bless.

"Be a Child," Says Jesus.

The human nature of Jesus' twelve disciples is portrayed by the fact that they disputed among themselves as to who should be the greatest in his kingdom. Their error lay not in their desire to be great in the kingdom of heaven, but in their ideal of greatness. Jesus did not rebuke their desire to be great, but showed them the road to true great ness by saying: "If any man would be first, he shall be last of all, and servant of all." Their desire was legitimate, but their ideal was too low. The world says, "Be a man;" Christ said, "Be a child," and to illustrate his point he sat a child in the midst of them as an object lesson of sincerity and trustfulness. The whole principle of Christ's kingdom is the exact opposite of the usual worldly plan. Nearly all the evils that have come to the church have come through a disregard of this command-a desire to be honored and to rule, rather than to serve and help. We must learn to avoid selfish greatness. The wish to be greater than others is always a wrong ambition. The wish to be as great, as good, as useful as possible, to grow and improve, is right. The desire to serve others can never be too strong. Trench wrote: "God many a spiritual house has reared, but never one where lowliness was not placed first, the corner stone." "Not once in history alone," writes Whittier, "but every day and always, Christ sets the little child in the midst of us as the truest reminder of himself. teaching us the secret of happiness and leading us into the kingdom by the way of humility and tenderness."

Let us look upon the child and learn to walk in Jesus'

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

As Others See It.

BY F. W. SMITH,

The Gospel Advocate is not the only religious journal that protests against the kind of speculation which disturbs and distracts the minds of the people, as the following, from the Christian Standard of January 19, will show:

THE SECOND ADVENT.

These are the days when discussions of the second advent of Christ are prevalent and numerous. There are many voices crying, "Lo, here!" and "Lo, there!" with very little unanimity of opinion. The Christian World, of London, recently published a manifesto, entitled "The Significance of the Hour," signed by the following eminent names: G. Campbell Morgan, A. C. Dixon, W. Fuller Gooch, J. Stnart Holden, H. Webb-Peploe, F. S. Webster, Dinsdale T. Young, Alfred Bird, J. S. Harrison, and F. B. Meyer.

The manifesto itself reads as follows:

"1. That the present crisis points toward the close of the times of the Gentiles.

"2. That the revelation of our Lord may be expected at any moment, when he will be manifested as evidently as to his disciples on the evening of his resurrection.

"3. That the completed church will be translated to be forever with the Lord.

"4. That Israel will be restored to its own land in un-belief, and be afterwards converted by the appearance of Christ on its behalf.

"5. That all human schemes of reconstruction must be subsidiary to the second coming of our Lord, because all nations will then be subject to his rule.

"6. That under the reign of Christ there will be a further great effusion of the Holy Spirit upon all flesh.

"7. That the truths embodied in this statement are of the utmost practical value in determining Christian character and action with reference to the pressing problems of the hour.

"N.B. This is a general statement, which does not profess to decide on particular details of prophetic interpreta-

In the next issue of the World there was a volume of protest, signed by a large number of equally prominent ministers. The position taken by these men is well summed up in the statement of one of the best known of them, Prin. P. T. Forsyth. Dr. Forsyth, who is well known to American readers through his volume, "Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind," says:

"Sir: I am sorry to see the 'Advent Testimony' in your issue of November 8. I speak with much respect for its signatories, but with much regret for evangelical religion. Such views are always apt to float up to the surface in a time of serious crisis; but they rest on a treatment of scripture which the Holy Spirit, by his great gift to the church of historical scholarship, has long been making obsolete, which the moral principle of the kingdom of God antiquates, and which turns the Bible from a grand sacrament to a millstone round the neck of the gospel. As I look back, I do not recall one holding these views who ever did the New Testament the honor of becoming a recognized scholar in it.

"They are views, also, which seem unsettling to the public, not to say exciting. Paul had to quell and moralize them. They tend to sap, in apocalyptic dreams which are no part of revelation, the moral fortitude which is the first thing religion should supply at such a time as this. Apocalypse is prophecy in a decline. It is the refuge of a pessimism which it is faith's business to destroy.

"The Bible is not there to write history in advance. That does nothing for a religion of moral redemption. The great transaction is done. As sure as Christ, the Redeemer, lives and reigns, there is a grand consummation of history in a kingdom of God organic with history. But about the times, seasons, and scenery of it we have no information whatsoever, any more than we have a census of the land beyond death where the kingdom is in full course, or a scheme of town planning of the New Jerusalem. All that type of religion belongs to sight and not to faith. It is visionary and not moral in its note. To expatiate on it deflects faith, and robs it of historic sense and public effect. P. T. FORSYTH.

"Hackney College, Hampstead.

"P.S. Since writing the above I have had the opportunity of meeting some twenty well-known ministers in another interest. The matter was broached, though not by me. And there was a great unanimous desire to protect by some caveat like this certain sections of their people, who would naturally be impressed by the eminence of some of the names of the document to which I allude. T. F.

The question of the second advent being one in which the law of liberty holds good throughout-for we presume no advocate of the Restoration would claim that any particular theory of it which he may accept should be imposed upon others—we do not deem it necessary to add to the confusion by elaborating our own personal views. We do however, that an exaggerated emphasis upon the subject is likely to cause a lessened interest in more important and vital considerations. The time when our Lord may come matters little, if we are found doing his work when it arrives. The all-important thing is to do Of one thing we are certain, and that is that this world is sure to end for each one of us in a very short time, whether it ends for all of us at the same time or not. Speculations in regard to the exact date of the final consummation may be interesting and not entirely profitless, but they should not be allowed to interfere with the program of active service which our Lord has given to his followers.

The Standard very correctly says that the question of the second advent is "one in which the law of liberty holds good throughout;" but when it "presumes no advocate of the Restoration would claim that any particular theory of it which he may accept should be imposed upon others," its presumption is not well founded, for that is exactly what has been done and what is still being done. Because of the Gospel Advocate's opposition to this very thing it has been adversely criticized by some, and it is both refreshing and encouraging to see the very able and influential Christian Standard entering its protest against such procedure. The Standard takes its stand on the matter thus: "We do not deem it necessary to add to the confusion by elaborating our own personal views. We do believe, however, that an exaggerated emphasis upon the subject is likely to cause a lessened interest in more important and vital considerations." As is clearly shown by the Standard, very many of the leading denominational preachers are also protesting against this "exaggerated emphasis" upon these speculative theories about the coming of Christ and what shall take place.

There will be no better time than now to call attention to a somewhat prevalent idea among professed members of the body of Christ-viz., that the teaching and preaching of a brother should not be publicly criticized. The writer heard one of the ablest men in the church-one who held many public debates with denominational preacherssay this: "I will cross swords all day long with a sectarian, but excuse me from any controversy with my breth-I was very young in the cause at that time, but even then It seemed to me one of the most inconsistent things I ever heard. Why would he "cross swords with a sectarian?" Because he believed him a teacher of false doctrine; and I insist for the very same reason he should have been willing to "cross swords" with one called a brother that was found teaching false doctrine. Is false doctrine less dangerous coming from a member of the body of Christ than from one termed an outsider? Away with such namby-pamby, sickly sentimentalism! It is not only the privilege, but the absolute duty, of any of my brethren to publicly criticize what he or they regard as false doctrine in my preaching or writings, and I have always welcomed such criticisms. I would feel actually ashamed of any one claiming to be my friend who would become offended because some one of my brethren should publicly criticize my teaching adversely. True friendship will not prompt such a course, but, on the other hand, will be anxious to know if the criticism is just, and, if so, just as ready to reject my erroneous doctrine as that of any one else.

The solemn, unvarnished, and naked truth is, there are people possessed of a blind infatuation for certain preachers, who make themselves silly in resenting any and every adverse criticism that may be offered against their idols. Take, for instance, G. Campbell Morgan, one of the signers of the manifesto gotten up by London preachers. This man is a very popular idol with a large class of religionists, not only in Europe, but also in America. Many of these will bitterly resent the criticism put forth by P. T. Forsyth, and voiced by many leading clergymen, without knowing anything whatever of the merits of the criticism. They simply know that their man has been criticized, and that is sufficient to "cast the fat into the fire."

Again, there are those with such delicate and sensitive nerves that they go into hysterics when they pick up a paper with religious controversy in it. To all such an honest contention for the truth is "fussing," and they look upon that as almost an unpardonable sin, ignorant of the fact that the Bible is full of what they call "fussing." What a pity these exceedingly pious souls were not present to rebuke the Savior and his apostles in at least some of their heated controversies! Their righteous souls would have been outraged if they had been present at some of the heated controversies Christ had with the religionists of his day; but, fortunately for their timorous souls, they live in a different age. Nine times out of ten these wouldbe guardians of the peace of Zion are either ignorant of the word of God or else willing to let the thorns and thistles of sectarianism take the place of the seed of the kingdom in the soil of human hearts. When, if it should ever be so disloyal to Christ, the Gospel Advocate shuts out of its columns what many of this age call "fussing," then I, for one, shall have naught to do with it. Passive goodness simply is of little value.

Why We Took Another.

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

On the first day of the new year of 1918, wife and I went to the Tennessee Children's Home Society, in Nashville, and took therefrom a wee brown-eyed, goldenhaired baby girl, nameless save for the sweet appellation of "Dorothy," and brought her back with us for adoption.

We, of course, know that there are many other homes, specially those that are childless, which are more able than are we to assume the obligation of caring for and rearing homeless infant charges. We believe it our duty, nevertheless, to do all we can to serve them. They are here and have as much right to life as any of us. Though as pure as angels, and with the right opportunities and assistance they could attain to lives of usefulness and honor, yet the odds are heavily against them, and they can live and get a proper foothold here only by the generosity of somebody. Otherwise they may die early of disease or grow up to lives of vice. Why should not we attempt to do what we can, however little it must be, to help them, specially now when the whole world groans under an awful load of suffering and sacrifice? Besides, wife and I feel that we ourselves, though poor in this world's goods, need the discipline and self-denial which the taking of this another babe necessarily brings; and, most of all, denied children of our own, we greatly desire to raise a good family of these homeless ones and demonstrate that such a course is practicable and wise and

It is not true that the fewer the children, the better type they are. But it is true, proved ten thousand times over, that large families are the happiest and may be raised well without big incomes. Do we not all remember some homes, though the number now-alas!-is diminishing, which, though far from being even well to do. yet somehow managed to bring up great schools of happy. healthy children? David says, "Children are a heritage of the Lord," and adds: "Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them." God says, "I will that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house," and commands older women that they "teach the young women to be sober, to love their busbands, to love their children, to be discreet, chaste, keepers at home." his way is always wise and best. To rear children is the main reason for the existence of a home, to which the man and woman virtually pledge themselves by marriage, and the home which raises no children is a dismal and inexcusable failure. It is a failure because, lacking children, it breaks down fundamentally; dismal because no home is happy without children; and inexcusable because, if the married pair are denied children of their own, other homeless darlings ask for shelter there. What is to become of us when husbands and wives, from selfish fear of responsibility or out of desire for vapid ease and pleasure, do not want, and even take steps to avoid, children? What must we think when such people, though owing much for their existence here, yet turn deaf ears to piteous calls from the helpless, and perhaps shamelessly bestow their affection upon some worthless pet animal instead?

It is not to be denied that some evil tendencies are inborn. It is a grievous violation of the law of God, which must be punished, for children to be born out of wedlock—a tragic thing for a child so to be born. But, thanks be to God, holy surroundings and careful, right training can restrain, if not overcome, evil inbred tendencies and bad blood. Besides, it is much more the direction in which we travel than the point from where we start that counts in this feverish and momentous race of life. It is a matter of common knowledge that some of the world's noblest characters have had origins either unknown or very humble. And it is easily demonstrated that those who harp most on blue blood are themselves of sorry scrub stock, and often have children who, though legally born and start life with no prejudice against them, yet turn out to be the worst rakes to be found. At any rate, even the best of us possess enough bad blood to keep us humble.

Thus wife and I, in spite of evil suspicions and wagging tongues, have taken this our third child, and, invoking God's loving care and the sympathy of all those whose hearts are true and tender, we pledge anew to do our utmost to raise these children well. We would set a godly example before selfish ease lovers, shirkers of responsibility and domestic slackers, and would arrest the attention of other childless married people and induce them to adopt homeless children. We put in our plea that these unfortunate waifs be given a fair chance at life. O, the blessings they will bestow-a thousand to one they ask in return-and the wonders they work, even curing women who are sick from having nothing to do!

Four Wise Men.

(With apologies to Mother Goose.)

BY C. R. PIETY.

There were four men at Lexington, And they were wondrous wise. They jumped into theology Some deeper than their eyes: And when they tried to teach young men A brand-new "high" way out, They got lost in the mist and muck And floundered round about,

Some victims, though, escaped at last, And told how they were fed-On jellyfish and sauria And lots o' things long dead; Told how they found ancestral tracks Right up a coco palm, And heard their grandpa's monkey chat And sing a monkey psalm.

Their guides led on through mist and muck Plumb up to Jonah's whale-The prophet never was inside, But riding on its tail. They saw Saint Peter catch a fish, And in its mouth no "mon; And Peter said: "To speak of lies, My Master sure told one.

Ah, 'twas a dark and spooky road. And I don't blame the boys; When four wise men would force them on, They made a dreadful noise. And some one cried, "Investigate;" But no gate was about; And when Dame Justice would climb in, The wise men kicked her out.

Their dealings with opponents all Were most unchristian, too; But they are blind with mist and muck, And know not what they do. Yes, these four men at Lexington Were super-wondrous wise They jumped into theology Some deeper than their eyes.

An allotment of $650,000 her just been sobled	baseds

An allotment of $650,000 has just been cabled abroad through the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief for distribution as follows:

$200,000 to Constantinople, to be distributed by American citizens attached to the Swedish legation.

$75,000 to Beirut for the Lebanon region. The American College will have charge of these funds.

$100,000 cabled to Jerusalem for distribution throughout Palestine. Consul Garrels, of Cairo, is in charge of the relief here until Consul Glazebrook returns from America

These appropriations were made by the Executive Committee-Samuel T. Dutton, Cleveland H. Dodge, Henry Morgenthau, William B. Millar, George T. Scott, James L. Barton, Charles R. Crane, and C. V. Vickrey—after consultation with Charles Beury, a Philadelphia lawyer, who has just returned from a trip through Western Persia and the Russian Caucasus. Others who have given valuable advice as to the proper proportioning of funds are Consul Otis H. Glazebrook, of Palestine, and Consul W. Stanley Hollis, who has just returned from Beirut.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Encouraging.

Our readers will be pleased to learn that Kentucky, which has been famous for its "pretty women, fine horses and whisky," is the second State to put itself on record, through its Legislature, as in favor of the prohibitory amendment to the National Constitution. The vote authorizing this amendment was twenty-seven to five in the Senate and sixty-six to ten in the House. Mississippi was the first State to lead in placing itself on record as favoring national prohibition. Its vote was somewhat stronger than that of Kentucky.

The Need of Religious Workers in the Camps.

Publicity has been given through the press to the fact that the government is desirous of securing more ministers to work as chaplains in the army. While the Y. M. C. A. has been selected and recognized as the body to recommend ministers for religious workers in the army, it has also been discovered that the Y. M. C. A. work needs the religious influence that only faithful ministers can organize and secure. I have learned from both my sons who are now in the service of the government, one in the army and the other in the navy, that the war Y. M. C. A. is doing a very much needed work. Neither of my sons thought very much of the Y. M. C. A. as conducted in our cities in time of peace, but they emphasize that the war Y. M. C. A. is very different. They state that it is in many ways very helpful and beneficial to the soldiers, and both have said that contributions to the Y. M. C. A. War Fund were well spent.

It is necessary that the government safeguard its soldiers by seeing that those who are admitted to the camps are trustworthy. If it were not so, German spies would undoubtedly assume the garb of ministers, enter the camps, and thus do untold mischief. Hence the government decided to protect itself by simply calling on the Y. M. C. A. to look into the character of all Protestant ministers who seek to preach in the camps, not giving to the Y. M. C. A. any authority, however, to interfere with the religious belief and teaching of any faithful minister of the gospel. Hence the Y. M. C. A. is no more than a civil agency. The government further recognizes that the Y. M. C. A. cannot accomplish the work to be done without calling to such work spiritual-minded chaplains, who are essential whenever and wherever the real welfare of the soldier is at stake. I have learned from the Herald and Presbyter that many of the Presbyterian churches are releasing some of their most faithful ministers for longer or shorter terms in order that they may enter the camps and preach to the soldiers. Presbyterians and other denominational bodies are not slow to take advantage of the opportunity that the government is giving for them to preach their doctrines to the soldiers in the camps. Why should those who claim to have no creed but the Bible, and who hold that they are simply Christians, neglect such an opportunity? In the present crisis, no greater calamity could befall the church of Christ than for it to neglect to send faithful ministers of the gospel to preach the gospel of Christ to the soldiers. Since the government has generously opened the way, demanding only that the minister give satisfactory evidence that he is what he claims to be, Christians should promptly avail themselves of the opportunity.

This journal has committed itself unreservedly to the work that Brother John E. Dunn has undertaken and does not see any reason for unfavorable criticism of Brother Dunn's course. Brother Dunn is not a member of the Y. M. C. A., and is working faithfully, enduring hardships as did the apostles, in order that he may preach Christ, and him crucified. There is no reason for discussing the propriety or scripturalness of entering this open door and taking advantage of this opportunity to preach the gospel to our sons who have been conscripted by the government for its service. The Savior commands: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." The minister preaches the same gospel inside the camp that he preaches on the outside of the camp. Christians who are enjoying the freedom and the blessings of their homes, who are devoting their time and their energies to civil affairs, even though they are conscientiously opposed to fighting, should not object to preaching the gospel to those in the camps. People on the outside have no right to assume superior goodness over those who are on the inside. While it is beautiful to lead a life of prayer, to obey God, to read and study the Bible, yet the man who does it should not claim that he is the only one that is true to his conscience and who enjoys the favor of God.

From the Literary Digest of January 26, it appears that there are only about two hundred conscientious objectors who stand out absolutely against the government. While it should be freely conceded, and is freely conceded, that these men rank high in point of character, yet we dare not say they rank any higher than the many thousands upon thousands of young men who have felt impelled by their conscience to stand back of the government and to defend the country that they love. While this journal discourages war, yet it is not disposed to disfellowship the young man who feels that it is his duty to take up arms to oppose the tyranny that he has been tauglit to hate all of his life and to defend the religious freedom that he so dearly loves. The Literary Digest speaks pointedly upon this subject as follows:

Moreover, these conscientious objectors have no monopoly of conscience. It is not to be assumed that their inward monitors speak more clearly to them than those same silent watchmen of the soul have spoken to tens of thousands of young men who have gone into training and to thousands more who have already gone overseas without hesitation. Many of these young men have grown up in Sunday schools, and Christian homes. churches, They have felt within them the working of inherited antipathies to tyranny, cruelty, and the selfish ambition of They have come to feel that the call to the war lords. young men of their generation to maintain the institutions of freedom and to hold civilization at the point which it has reached in the slow evolution of the ages was as distinctive and imperative to them as it was to their fathers and grandfathers, who in their time felt that resistance to tyrants was obedience to God. Indeed, in the case of many of these soldiers who compose our great new army, it was their consciences that would not give them peace until they went forth. . . .

When the followers of Jesus at the beginning of America's participation in the war seemed to be shut up to a choice between two different ways-and most of themsome after prolonged thought and prayer-chose to stand with their government, it was not because they considered it the ideal way under certain circumstances, but because they looked upon it as the best practical way under exist-They have never ceased to sorrow ing circumstances. that such means have to be used or to hope that through the use of such means deliverance will come from the menace that goes with the existence of the awful and tremendous modern enginery of warfare, in which one nation above all others has gloried and which one nation more than any other has been reluctant to give up. Christian men now in the war will never cease to pray that everything which they do may be done in good con-science toward God, and that they and those who come after them may be as ready to heal and to restore as they have been to smite.

Some Queries on Brother Dunn's Work.

BY M. C. K.

This article is prepared and published in deference to brethren who have doubts about the propriety of work in connection with an organization like the Y. M. C. A. when it is appointed by the civil government to provide a way for religious work among its soldiers during the war. To the full extent of our ability and opportunity, we are willing and glad to answer questions at all times; but in answering these questions at this particular time, it is necessary to submit to our readers some preliminary matters which are of the most vital and serious importance, and concerning which there must be a definite and distinct understanding.

1. Let it be distinctly understood that answering these queries is not, under the existing circumstances, reopening our columns to the war discussion. The management of the Gospel Advocate foreseeing, in the light of rapidly increasing developments, that such a discussion, at this critical and perilous time, when our country is at war and the passions of men even among Christians are at high tide, would not only not do good in the way of settling the issues in dispute, but would fan the flames of strife, widen the already existing breach between men in the churches, and add to the onerous burden of our government by creating further friction among its citizens, very properly and wisely decided to exclude the discussion, for the time being, from our columns.

2. This most timely and judicious action on the part of the Advocate's management, prompted alone by Christian prudence and sagacity, was not a reversal of the paper's policy of free and full discussion of all questions coming within the range of its sphere and mission, but it was the mere exercise of common sense and sound judgment on the single and exclusive point of untimeliness of a discussion, in the actual maintenance of that policy.

3. The leading factor determining this decision was the unnecessarily jagged and critical attitude toward the national government assumed by some religious people in their violent opposition to the war. This attitude is as lamentable as it is unnecessary. Why not, and preëminently at a time like this, show by our whole bearing and conduct that our lives are models of strict adherence to the divine requirement that we show respect and consideration for "the powers that be?" What a dire reflection, not upon Christianity, but upon either the hellow profession or the misguided view of Christians who, by unnecessary and unguarded speech which sows seeds of dissatisfaction and sedition, have laid themselves liable to arrest and imprisonment! In the face of such a belligerent display made in the name of conscience and pacificism, no wonder that, with the government officials, according to the Literary Digest, "there is the fear that if any leniency is shown in dealing with objectors, a host of slackers will develop consciences overnight." Of course, no Christian should ever perform any act which he believes to be a sin against God; and we do not believe, if all religious people had been wisely discreet and deferential in their bearing and conduct toward those in authority in the present crisis, that our government would ever have exacted such a performance from one of its citizens; but such a prudent course is one thing, and the unnecessary flaunting of one's convictions about war into the face of our government, or anywhere else, at a time when it will convince nobody and do no good, but harm, is quite another and different thing. No citizen should ever cry "conscience" at such a time until asked to do something which he cannot conscientiously do.

4. Not only did the decision of the management seem both wise and imperative at the time it was made and announced, but all subsequent developments have confirmed the wisdom of it, and our constituency is laid under a lasting debt of gratitude for this timely exhibition of sound sense and wise forethought which mark the men at our helm. Never did they reach a wiser decision, and the proof of it is not only still on the increase, but is rapidly accumulating on every hand.

5. Finally, the wisdom on the part of all persons and all agencies of every character, including newspapers, shown by avoiding any course that might tend to create excitement and foment strife in the country, whether among religious people or others, was and is solemnly emphasized by the very serious international situation which, in the view of our government, was threatening and still threatens our national existence. Never mind now about whether you think, or whether your neighbor thinks, there was or was not any just ground for such a view. We are not attempting to state what anybody apart from the government thought, nor even whether the government was right in what it thought; but we are simply stating a fact, that our government had informed us that, in its view, not only was the national existence in peril, but that it either had to go to war or choose an alternative course that would be vastly worse than war, involving the invasion of our shores by the beast of barbarism, the devastation of our land and our homes, and the possible slaughter of our helpless women and children, and that, much as It regretted the necessity for such action, it had sorrowfully chosen the former course. In view of the unmistakable signs on the international horizon both before and since the beginning of the great holocaust, it is not difficult for the close student of history to conclude that our government may be right in its view. But whether it is or not, we know something of the bloody past and of its slowlyworking, but sure and insidious, causes and direful consequences, and never was there a time riper for its repetition on the most gigantic scale of history than now. Never, from the day when the unprincipled Attila led his demoniacal and merciless hordes of Huns in the fifth century to the collapse of the dream of world dominion in Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo in the nineteenth, was there ever such a foe to civilization as that which now, at least according to all appearances, threatens the utter destruction of every principle fought and died for by the fathers of this republic in the War of the Revolution,

Hence, when our government declared its view and announced its decision, with a forecast of its course, it was not a theory with which Christians had to deal, but a situation, and they must, therefore, in the light of God's word, adjust themselves to it as best they might. In that word they read: "Let every soul be in subjection to the higher powers." "Put them in mind to be in subjection to rulers, to authorities, to be obedient, to be ready unto every good work." "Be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake; whether to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as sent by him for vengeance on evil doers." "As we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith." And in view of these pointed passages and of this portentous situation, Brother Dunn and thousands of other religious people over the country resolved on two things: (1) That they would do everything they could conscientiously do to stand by the government in such a crisis. (2) That they would be, as Paul says, "ready unto every good work," and, therefore, seize and utilize every available opportunity to minister to the welfare of its soldiers, both for their bodies and for their souls.

Hence, we now gladly give attention to their work in the camps and the auspices under which it is done. The following questions have been submitted:

1. If it is scriptural for one to work, as Brother Dunn is doing, for, or under the direction of, a human organization, for the salvation of the souls of men at Camp Sevier, receiving a salary from that human organization for his labors, why is it not scriptural for Christians and churches to put their money into the treasury of that organization, out of which said salary is to be paid?

2. If it is scriptural for one to work, as Brother Dunn is doing, for, or under the direction of, the Y. M. C. A .- a human organization—for the salvation of the souls of men at Camp Sevier, receiving a salary from that organization for such labors, why is it not scriptural for one to work, as others are doing, for, or under the direction of, the C. M. S .- another human organization-for the salvation of the souls of men not at Camp Sevier, receiving a salary from this organization for such labors?

3. If it is scriptural for Christians and churches to put money into the treasury of the Y. M. C. A., out of which Brother Dunn's salary is to be paid, why is it not scriptural for Christians and churches to put their money into the treasury of the A. C. M. S., out of which the salary of others is to be paid, who are laboring for the salvation of the souls of men not at Camp Sevier?

C. M. STUBBLEFIELD.

Please note, first of all, that all of these questions proceed on the erroneous assumption that Brother Dunn is working in, and under the direction of, the Y. M. C. A. This is a mistake. Brother Dunn has never joined and is not a member of the Y. M. C. A. One of our contributors, being under the impression that he had, made a statement to that effect in a recent issue of the Advocate, but it is a mistake. The following statements are taken from letters just received from Brother Dunn:

"I regret that Brother Billingsley made the mistake of saying I joined the Y. M. C. A."

"I did not join the Y. M. C. A. Not a word was said to me about joining it or anything else.

"Not one word was ever said to me about joining any-

"I preach and practice in camp exactly as I do out of it."

"Any teaching or practice unlawful in here is unlawful outside."

"Last Sunday I taught a Bible class at 9 to 10 A.M.; had twenty-seven in the class of as fine young men as the world has.

But my best work is the personal work I do in tents and in my hut. Scores of boys come to me and I go to them.

"Some of the best boys in the world are here. A large number of members of the church are here.

"I have all the opportunity I could desire to minister to our boys' in every way. If I were a dozen men, I could be busy all the time."

After stating that "the War Work Council" gives him his personal living expenses, he says:

"I earn all they pay me in routine work for them which every one must do. I am exposed to the weather and all kinds of hardships."

I work harder here than I ever did before in my life. I begin at 6 P.M. and work in a rush till 10 P.M."

To the question, "Are you allowed there to teach, preach, and practice, including the worship of God as required by the New Testament, just as you would be allowed to do outside of that camp?" he unqualifiedly answers, "Yes."

But is not the Y. M. C. A. in some way connected with the work in the camp? The United States Government has appointed the Y. M. C. A., not to teach religion or have others to teach it according to Y. M. C. A. principles, but as the government's agency to provide for its being taught and practiced by Protestants as they may see proper to teach and practice it; and it has appointed the Knights of Columbus in the same way for the Catholics. The government did not decide on anything that should or should not be taught, and neither of these agencies has delegated to it any such jurisdiction. On the contrary, each of them is merely an expression of the benevolent will and attitude of our government toward the Bible and Christianity. The sum of the whole matter is that through these agencies the government simply and graciously says to all the religious people among its citizens: "Come in here, if you will, and preach the gospel to our soldiers and otherwise conduct religious work and worship among them as you see proper." Should we not thank God that we have a government with such profound respect for the Bible and for Christianity as to make provision to have them taught? Yea, instead of assuming an attitude of cold and carping criticism, should we not thank God that our government accords us the liberty to go among its soldiers and preach and practice untrammeled the whole Bible precisely as we preach and practice it elsewhere? What matters it to us what particular agency the government may appoint for such a purpose? If the government appointed some agency to tell us what to teach and to direct us in it, of course we could not go into it; but it has done no such thing. To take an extreme case in illustration, suppose the government should appoint one of the denominations, not to teach religion, but to provide for its being taught by those who wished to teach it, should we not seize the opportunity and go in and teach it? If not, why not? If a denomination opens its pulpit or any other channel and asks us to come in and teach the people the truth, should we not do it? If right to do it out of the military camp, why is it not right to do it in one? That would not make us members of such a denomination, nor would our work be through or under the direction of such a denomination, but it would be precisely what it is anywhere else outside of the camp. The government systematizes all its work and appoints different agencies to open the way for the different lines of work which it permits to be done among its soldiers; and, of course, it should be nothing to us as to what particular agency shall open the camp door for us when we knock for entrance and for the privilege of work. Indeed, let us suppose the government should appoint the A. C. M. S., "another human organization," not to teach religion, but to provide for its being taught by those who wish to teach it. Should we not seize the opportunity? If not, why not? This is not saying that a denomination is right, for it is not, and neither does it say that the A. C. M. S. is right, for it is not; but it merely says that if either a denomination or the A. C. M. S. is put in charge of the people at a given place, and will provide a way for us to go to them and teach the whole Bible and to practice it precisely as it is, surely we should do it.

But what is the difference between working thus and in working under a denomination or the A. C. M. S. "as others are doing" outside of the camp? "Much every way." In the former case, the agency is simply a civil agency—an agency appointed by the civil government—and has no jurisdiction over, and nothing whatever to do with, the teaching; whereas, in the latter, it does have jurisdiction over, and has all to do with, the teaching. In the latter case, the agency requires that certain doctrines, and they alone, shall be preached and practiced; and if those who work under them dare to preach and practice otherwise, they will soon get orders from headquarters to either stop it or get out, one or the other.

Finally, the soldiers, in a sense, do not belong to themselves, but to the government; and the government, freely giving us the liberty to preach and practice the full gospel among them and to lead them, if we can, to do the same thing, reserves the right, as a matter of order, to appoint its own agency to open the way for that line of work. The government does not stop to ask whether the teacher is a Methodist, a Baptist, an Episcopalian, or what not. It appoints an agency through which all who wish to do so can go to its soldiers with the gospel. To take another extreme case, suppose the United States Government had charge of all the people of the world as it has of its soldiers, and we could only reach them with the gospel through the government's agency, would it matter to us what particular agency of the government opened the way for us to do so? Assuredly not. Brother Dunn's work is not done in and through the Y. M. C. A., but the Y. M. C. A. opens the door to the field in which it is done in and through the church, precisely as it is when the government of Japan or of China or any other conceivable agency opens a door to a field in which the church through its members can work,

God bless Brother Dunn in his self-sacrificing and praiseworthy efforts in behalf of the brave and noble boys who are drawn into the fearful conflict, and God bless the Cookeville church in its agreement to stand by and support his faithful and devoted family in his absence; and may the same gracious God, whose eye is on all battle lines and who "maketh wars to cease," grant that this war may put an end to war!

Churches and Individuals May Make Merchandise of Preachers and Religion.

BY E. A. E.

Let us study 1 Tim. 6: 3-10.

We have learned that the man who teaches "a different doctrine" and consents "not to sound words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness [inculcates a godly life]," is "puffed up;" does not know anything; dotes "about questionings and disputes of words;" excites "envy" and "produces strife, railings, evil surmisings, and wranglings of men corrupt in mind and bereft of the truth;" and supposes "that godliness is a way of gain,"

We should learn also that other individuals and congregations of individuals, as well as such teachers, may turn godliness into a way of gain and prove unfaithful to God.

We should learn, furthermore, that "godliness with contentment" in all persons "is great gain;" that this is true because we brought nothing into the world and cannot carry anything out; that "having food and covering we shall be therewith content;" that all who set their hearts on becoming rich "fall into a temptation and a snare and many foolish and hurtful lusts;" that these drown men "in destruction and perdition;" that "the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil," or that men do all kinds of evil things and commit all sorts of crimes for money; and that by "reaching after money" some Christians "have been led astray from the faith and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows."

The love of money is confined to no certain class of men or religious sect. While some preacher makes merchandise of the gospel, many church members go astray from the faith and are lost through the love of money.

We believe all the Bible says about the woes of drunkenness, the inevitable ruin here and destruction hereafter into which it leads, and we solemnly warn all against it. We must also believe all it says against the love of money, the temptations, snares, foolish and hurtful lusts into which it leads people now and the whirlpool of destruction and perdition in which it drowns them hereafter, and we should as constantly and solemnly warn all against that fearful evil. Men make and sell whisky and send other souls with their own to perdition for money.

Covetousness is idelatry (Col. 3: 5), and the covetous person is an idelater (Eph. 5: 5). "The wrath of God" will fall upon the covetous as upon fornicators, drunkards, and others who are governed by vile passions. The covetous man can have no "inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and God." Shall we not try to save the covetous as we try to save the drunkards?

And one out of the multitude said unto him, Teacher, bld my brother divide the inheritance with me. But he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you? And he said unto them, Take heed, and keep yourselves from all covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. (Luke 12: 13-15.)

The expression, "all covetousness," shows there are different manifestations of covetousness. It is not the purpose of this article to speak of "all covetousness," but of that manifestation of it shown in making merchandise of religion, or using preachers and religion to serve temporal and personal, selfish and worldly ends,

This record does not refer to the justice or injustice of the division of the inheritance which had already been made, if one had been made at all, because neither is involved in the lesson. The brother mentioned may have been the firstborn; and, if so, his was a double portion of the father's inheritance, while the other children received equal shares. It was covetousness which prompted this man's request, and Jesus, seeing the covetousness of his heart, used the request to warn all against "all covetousness."

This man cared nothing for Jesus or for the teaching of Jesus; he saw that Jesus had a wonderful influence and attempted to use Jesus to serve his own covetous purpose. Jesus, of course, saw this, and hence he asked: "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?"

Religion is a great power and the church has a wonderful influence, and designing men seek to use this power and influence to accomplish their ambitious purposes; but the church should not be used and should not allow itself to be used to serve the financial and temporal and worldly ends of any man or company of men. Men who would so use the church and preachers make of them a cloak of covetousness. No preacher should quit his work of preaching Christ, and him crucified, to serve any worldly purposes of any class of men.

FAITHFUL PREACHERS MUST BE LIBERALLY SUPPORTED.

Let us study 1 Cor. 9. In this chapter Paul defends himself against false charges of false teachers and sets forth his abundant right to a generous support. (1) He declared his right to food and drink while planting and building up the church at Corinth. Since he had this right, the church was under obligation to furnish that to which he had the right. Since he had this right, the support was due him, and they could not withhold it without sin, except, of course, with his consent. (2) Since he and Barnabas with others had the right both to marry and "to lead about" their wives where they went to preach, their wives, industrious, Christians, and colaborers with them, should likewise be supported. Since it is the faithful preacher's right to have his wife live where he does, it is the duty of the church to support him to the extent that he can do this. (3) He asks if he and Barnabas only had not the right to forbear working and to devote their whole time to preaching as the need required. Since this was their right in the gospel, this support was due them from the church so that they could give their time to this work, and the church should meet its obligations. (4) Since a soldier does not serve at his own charges, but is supported by the government he serves, so the preacher should be supported by the ones he serves. (5) Since the man who plants a vineyard eats of the fruit, so the preacher who plants and builds up a congregation has a right to the fruit of a support. He is the one who should have the support. (6) Since the one who feeds the flock eats of the milk of that flock, so the preacher who watches after and builds up a congregation should receive a support. (7) The law teaches the same. This is not claimed only as a matter of right and justice between men and after the manner in which honest men deal with one another, but God also teaches it. (8) Since the ox when he treads out the grain must not be muzzled, so God, who wrote this for our sakes, teaches that the laborer is worthy of his hire. Since the laborer is worthy of his hire, it is due him, and he should have it. (9) Since he who sows and plows and threshes does so in hope of living of the harvest, so he who sows spiritual seed should have the hope of reaping carnal things in the way of support as well as the eternal reward. (10) Since spiritual things are superlatively above carnal things, it is no great matter for the sower of the spiritual things to receive a support in carnal things. The one who truly sows the spiritual things has brought the ones who receives them under lasting obligations to him. In another place Paul declares that for this reason the Gentiles were debtors to the Jews. Then the ones who sow the spiritual things indeed and in full have done far more for the ones benefited than can be returned by way of carnal things. (11) As is many times the case now, so it was with Paul, the men who did not plant and build up the church at Corinth reaped the carnal things, while Paul, who did the work, was in want, and others supplied his want. Yet he had the true and God-appointed right to the support. (12) Since those who ministered in the temple had their "portion with the altar," "even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel shall live of the gospel."

Paul waived these rights for the reasons he gives, that he might the better win souls and gain the more; but they were his God-ordained rights, and they are the God-ordained rights of all true and earnest, self-sacrificing and faithful preachers of the gospel.

A preacher himself may waive these rights, but no congregation can deprive him of them.

God has ordained baptism through faith in Christ, repentance, and the Lord's Supper. So he has ordained "that they that proclaim the gospel shall live of the gospel." The last ordinance can no more be set aside than the others. Shall God's ordinance stand? Let all, then, who receive the gospel endeavor to carry this one out.

Since the laborer is worthy of his hire, it is the duty of those for whom he labors to pay the hire. This is his due. Paul made all the above declarations to show the church.

es everywhere that the obligation to support those who really and truly preach the gospel rests upon them. As the obligation to support the priests and Levites rested upon the other tribes, so the obligation to support true and faithful preachers of the gospel rests upon the churches.

The priests and Levites had their cities and suburbs, their homes and families, their flocks and herds, and were required to be industrious and to rear their children in industrious and self-supporting habits; yet, in addition to their homes and what they did when at home, they received their "portion of the things of the altar." That which they received from the other tribes enabled them to live comfortably and as well upon an average as the rest. No Jew was allowed to say that the priests and Levites had their own homes, did not need much, and hence he would withhold his tenth from them. We have not the space now to dwell upon it, but withholding the tenth was counted robbery of God.

In turn with the other tribes, the Levites were required to tithe their tenth.

From this we see that God never intended that the priests and Levites should eke out only a bare existence, or live all along from hand to mouth, while they faithfully attended upon his holy service; but he arranged and ordained their generous support, so that, free from this care, they could the more effectually serve in the temple and at the altar. Furthermore, when they reached the age of retirement as priests, God arranged for them to have homes and comforts in old age. Just so, God has arranged and ordained that his faithful servants who preach his gospel and labor in the word and teaching, giving themselves wholly to the greatest work in the world, shall be so generously and regularly supported, that they may be free from the anxiety and strain of having to obtain in some other way the means to support in comfort their families, furnish them comfortable homes, educate their children, and discharge all other duties. The supportshould be sufficiently liberal that by the industry, economy, and self-help of his children, used by others in general, the preacher can have a home and its comforts in old age.

The will of God on this subject, as well as on all other "things that pertain unto life and godliness," is plain enough, when we desire to know and to practice it.

Exonorating Brother Jelley.

After a careful investigation of all the facts as far as they are available to us at this distance, it is our conclusion that no evidence has been submitted by W. Hume Mc-Henry and others that shows any moral wrong or guilt on the part of E. S. Jelley, Jr., missionary in India, but that, on the contrary, he has done, and is doing, a fine work in that field and is entirely worthy of continued support from the churches. It is our judgment that the statement signed and submitted by S. Armstrong-Hopkins, George F. Armstrong-Hopkins, W. Hume McHenry, Nola H. McHenry, S. O. Martin, and Alice B. Martin, implicating unworthiness on his part, should be withdrawn with proper apologies, and that they should remove, as far as they can, any other obstacle in the way of his work.

We wish it clearly understood that we make this statement, not as a bureau of authority with jurisdiction over such matters, but merely and solely because, as their brethren in Christ, both sides of this controversy in India have appealed to us with a mass of testimony for our consideration and asked for our judgment in the case.

The Blessed Dead.

One of the most sensible things that I can now name is the Christian's possessing that feeling about death that the Holy Scriptures naturally lead the followers of Christ to have. In the first place, it is a fact that needs no discussion that man is not put here on earth to stay-the journey has to end. Why not get wholly reconciled to this fact? Common sense and common honesty demand that we do this. In the second place, the Bible clearly teaches that this earth is not our real home; that our constitutional rights are not here—that they are in heaven, where Christ is. "For our citizenship [commonwealth] is in heaven; whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able even to subject all things unto himself." Our Father in heaven loves to see us long for this better home, this eternal home. "But now they [the ancient worthies who confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth] desire a better country, that is, a heavenly; wherefore [for this very reason] God is not ashamed of them, to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city." Yes, our Father in heaven loves to see us desire a better country, to have a living and longing desire to be absolutely with him; perfectly willing, however, to remain here just as long as he wants us to stay to accomplish his purposes. Think of the father and mother in the lovely home yonder. Miles away there is a son or a daughter in a foreign country, a country not their own. And this father and mother are brought face to face with the fact that their child is satisfied there, has no desire to start home. What would you think of this? All such children, you agree with me, are wayward children and have lost natural affection. May I say that all who claim to be children of God that long not for the better home, for the time when they can see our dear Heavenly Father face to face, and the Man who died for us as he is, are also wayward children, and have lost-if, indeed, they ever possessed it-the spiritual affection that true religion always gives. I tell you, I am afraid some of us are not close enough akin to God to want to go to heaven. It is absolutely unreasonable to claim to be a child of God and, at the same time, dread the idea of passing by way of death to the home that is "far better" than this. I shall not multiply quotations. What is the need of it? Death is a most precious thing to the real child of God, so the Bible declares, and you know it is right on all positions. "Precious in the sight of Jehovah is the death of his saints." (Ps. 116: 15.) Tears of sorrow no more have I to shed for departed Christians, but tears of joy and gladness ever come when I think of them now. Of course, I have tears of sorrow to shed for some who are left behind. For instance, mothers sometimes are taken from children who need them; and such is sad to me.

In connection with the above, I am constrained to say a few words about a few deaths of recent date.

1. Mrs. Hattie Christian Stiles. This sister was born on August 25, 1889; was baptized into Christ, at "Old Smyrna," Warren County, Tenn., at the age of fifteen; was married to W. L. Stiles, at McMinnville, Tenn., on May 12, 1907; and died on November 2, 1917, at Ashland, Okla., leaving her husband, four children, and a host of friends

It was my pleasure to know this good woman almost from childhood. She married my wife's brother, and much of her life have I seen. A sweeter woman never lived. The very essence of gentleness and kindness seemed ever to animate her whole life. No home was ever adorned with a more godly, Christlike life. Her gentle, sweet life was not lived in vain; for all of us who knew her cannot forget her, and will ever take inspiration from her as we continually see her moving, on memory's stage, so calmly, serenely, and uncomplainingly, during her whole life, in the home and among her friends and neighbors. God bless her dear children and her husband in looking up instead of being discouraged, and rejoicing that for her they can ever cling to a hope that is brighter than day.

2. Together in life and death. Mrs. Mary J. Childress was born on November 22, 1854, and died on November 15. 1917. Miss Mattie J. Gay was born on January 25, 1860, and died on November 17, 1917.

I know of no two deaths more beautiful. The most of their years here were spent together, their last years especially. How beautiful was their devotion to each other! And their love for the church of our Lord Jesus Christ was sublime. West End Avenue congregation has never had more faithful members. They moved close to the church building so that they could be at every service; and how they did enjoy its services! We have had no members who not only attended the regular services, but supported with their presence every mission meeting we would conduct, it mattered not in what section of the city. How great was their appreciation of all the church ever did for them whenever they needed her help! It is a genuine pleasure to help such appreciative souls. The gospel of Christ they loved and taught wherever they went. and souls are now in the church because of their life and teaching.

But the end must come. Health failed. They hated so much to let their little home in which they had lived in love together be broken up. But, for their sakes and the convenience of those who had to administer to them in their sickness, they were moved into the home of their sister, Mrs. Shirley Reynolds, and permitted to spend their last days in the same room. Sister Childress slipped away two days before Sister Gay, all of which Sister Gay real ized. Her body was embalmed and moved across the hall to another room to await her sister. Both were conscious till near the last, especially Sister Gay. It was my pleasure to talk with them, as the end was drawing nigh, about the change. How precious, indeed, is the Christian's hope! Yes, it drives every cloud away. Thought I, if my eleven years in Atlanta had done no more than prepare these two sisters for such a glorious "home-going," it is worth every sacrifice, every burden, that I have had to bear. But these two are not all, by any means. These sisters had been taught what the Bible says about heaven, and they believed it, hence were glad to go. Side by side their bodies were placed in our house of worship where they had enjoyed so many services together, and the final words, preparatory to their burial, were said by Brother O. D. Bearden, Brother Morgan H. Carter, and the writer. The largest crowd we have had for a funeral service was in attendance. After the services, their bodies were placed in the same grave at West View. How beautiful and lovely in life and death is the history of these two sisters! And not one doubt do we have that they are still together "over there."

3. "Aunt Jane." Mrs. Laura Jane McCravy was born on August 8, 1842, and died on December 22, 1917, "Aunt Jane" and "Uncle Perry" are familiar names to the most of the Atlanta members. Brother McCravy died about five years ago. Sister McCravy had an intense longing to go from that time until her end did come. We had difficulty in making her contented to remain here. But, in spite of this, she was such a source of strength to those of us who had the pleasure of being with her and trying to make her happy. No two souls has had more to do in establishing, firmly, primitive Christianity in Atlanta. The house at West End Avenue now rests on the lot donated by them. They loaned the "faithful few" who were here then the money with which to build, and gave them their own time to refund it. Had it not been for their loyalty and faithfulness to Christ, the many such deaths as described above in Sisters Gay and Childress might not have been. Eternity alone can tell the good that comes out of our doing our best and making sacrifices for the cause of Christ. I shall ever remember with pleasure the little I tried to do to make "Aunt Jane" happy in her last years here, and only wish I could have done more. Her home was with Brother and Sister Maddox, of the West End Avenue congregation, much of the time she spent in this city. They treated her as their own mother, and "Aunt Jane" went home with a living appreciation for all they did for her. Her last days were spent in the home of Sister Martha Pickens, of Marietta, Ga., her grandniece. Martha is a devoted Christian, and is to be praised for her kindness and tenderness to "Aunt Jane." I pray that the Lord may ever bless her. Sister McCravy's body was placed beside her husband's at Smyrna, Ga.

4. Mrs. Melissa Todd. This sister was born on December 12, 1859; was baptized into Christ by Brother Jesse Sewell in 1875; was married to Jesse Todd on December 11, 1892; died on December 30, 1917; was buried at Corinth, Dekalb County, Tenn., on New Year's Day, the funeral services being conducted by Brother Perry Potter, of Dibrell, Tenn. She is survived by her husband, a daughter, Valmer, and a son, Leonard. They are all members of the church of Christ.

Time and space forbid my writing of this sister as I would like. She was an unusually strong religious character, forever interested in the work of the church. Here she took the lead of her husband; not that Brother Jesse was not interested, but she was more interested. She simply could not live and see church work drag. Well do I remember the days I first spent in this good woman's home. Corinth then was not doing so well. The tears would roll from her eyes as she would talk to me about the work, and she would ask: "What must I do?" The same interest in church work went with her wherever she went. A few years ago Brother Todd went to Oklahoma, because his business interests led him there. There she found scattered Christians not meeting to worship their God. This distressed her. She started the worship and wrote to me to come for a meeting. I could not, and Brother R. E. Wright went in my stead. Souls were converted to Christ and Christians encouraged. As her son and daughter were growing old enough to obey the gospel, how anxious she was about them! I wish I could find all the letters she wrote me about Valmer and Leonard. How she did pray and long to see them both Christians! This she lived to see; and how glad these two dear young people should ever be that they let mother go home with this consciousness of them!

It was my pleasure to see Sister Todd just a few days before she was taken from McMinnville to Nashville, Tenn., for an operation. I did not know till then that she was in such wretched health. I am so glad I got to be with her, pray with her, and encourage her all I could. I could not go with her to the hospital, but I wrote Sister Flora Travis, of Nashville, who takes such a delight in helping other and she did her best for them. Valmer wrote so beautifully of their appreciation of all Sister Flora did for her mother and for them in their grief.

I simply cannot encourage the idea of overmuch grieving when a Christian goes home, it looks so out of place, with the Bible open before me. Certainly sorrow we have, and this the Bible recognizes, and God condemns us not for having it. But certainly Brother Todd, Valmer, and Leonard have so many things to rejoice over that they will not let themselves grieve overmuch because of their great loss, which loss is only for a brief stretch of time. I love to think of the words of Cowper as he meditated upon the death of his mother, out of which meditation came his beautiful "Ode to Mother," in which he says:

My boast is not deduced from birth, From loins enthroned and rulers of the earth; But higher far my proud pretensions rise: I am the son of a mother passed into the skies.

Two Valuable Pages.

[We are greatly strengthened and encouraged by this commendatory article written by T. Q. Martin, who now lives at St. Marys, W. Va.—Editor's Note.]

I carefully read the greater part of the issue of the Gospel Advocate of December 20. I have been a subscriber to that paper for twenty-six years, and have always welcomed its weekly visits to my humble home, but it is more welcome than ever since I am so far away from my Southland friends, its editors and contributors. On pages 1232 and 1233 of that issue I find a notice of Dr. Thompson's book by M. C. Kurfees, and an article on "The True Test," by T. B. Larimore. Both of these productions grip my very heart.

I beg the privilege of quoting one sentence from Brother Kurfees: "My own judgment is that preachers and all other religious teachers can spend the time more profitably by teaching the things which contain man's duty to God and man, and by leaving unfulfilled prophecy to be worked out by its divine Author in his own way and time; and in this course I am assured that I will mislead no one." To me this seems sane, sound, and safe, and I say most heartily, Amen!

Then, the beloved Larimore calls attention, in his humble and sincere manner, to a serious and woeful mistake that the world has made and is still making-that of bathing the graves of the dead with tears and covering them with flowers, while heaping upon the head of the living persecutions and curses. The struggle against sin and weakness is a hard one, and we need love and sympathy and tears and flowers to encourage us now. When the battle is finished and the struggle is over, when the spirit is gone from this house of clay, I shall neither need nor feel the hand grasp. I shall not hear the kind word nor see the rose or carnation that may be placed upon my casket or my grave. God help me so to live that when my eyes are closed in death some one may be able to say: "He cheered my heart with words of sympathy and smoothed life's rugged road by ministrations of love."

Life is short. Soon the opportunity for helping burdened souls will be forever gone. Let us cultivate the spirit of reverence for God's holy word and that of love sincere for our fellow man. Herein lies the great value of the above-mentioned pages.

From J. W. Brents, Italy, Texas, January 30: "Being a very busy man, I seldom ever make a report. Besides preaching to five congregations each month, I teach school five days each week, being principal of the Italy High School. The churches I visit are in excellent condition. I read with pleasure the Gospel Advocate each week and derive a great deal of benefit from it, but many of us 'sigh for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still." J. S. Dunn and I will exchange appointments on the third Lord's day in February. He will go to Midlothian and I to Oak Cliff, Dallas. Sixteen years ago the congregation at Midlothian was organized and Brother Dunn preached the first sermon. So it will be somewhat of a reunion for former members of this church."

From Silas E. Templeton, Rogersville, Ala., January 29: "On last Lord's-day morning I preached at Romine School house, and at Rogersville in the afternoon. We had average audiences for rainy weather. We have moved to this place to labor with the congregation here and four others close in the country. This is a great field in which to labor for the Master. 'The harvest indeed is plenteous.' We are trusting that we can accomplish much and lasting good this year working with these zealous and godly people of this section. May the Father, through Jesus, give us all strength enough to enlarge our work of faith and labor of love before the night comes, when we cannot work—yea, before Christ shall come to gather his jewels home. On last Wednesday afternoon and evening there were many good things to eat delivered, free of charge, to us, in our new home. May God bless the givers. Let us not forget to pray."

I think the Gospel Advocate has been on a better basis lately than it was for a while, and I am glad that such is the case. I get a great deal of good out of the Advocate, and I intend to take it as long as I live, if it keeps the same principles as it holds-to let the Bible guide in the I realize that it would be impossible to publish a paper to suit all who chance to read it, and for that reason I may expect to see something now and then that does not suit me; but I just consider that you brethren are not especially trying to do that, but that you write as you think best, and I am glad of it. I often see some brethren who refuse to take a paper because the writers do not all write to please them. I am willing to grant that I may be as much in the wrong, since we are all human and, therefore, not perfect. I shall be glad to help out in the paper in that which may be in my power to do so. I have in the past secured quite a number of subscribers and have written some for the paper; however, I have feit a little backward in writing for the Advocate, but trust that that will all wear off as time goes by. Success and the best of wishes to the Advocate force.—H. M. Phillips, Miami, Fla.

From E. C. Fuqua, Olathe, Col., January 28: "In the worst storm of the winter, in below-zero weather, I went out six miles from Olathe last night and preached to a nice audience in a schoolhouse. One young man made the confession and was baptized to-day. He is from a Primitive Baptist family, and is a fruit of the recent debates I held here with the Primitive Baptists. I have baptized two from this family this season. I verily believe I will convert the whole family. He came six miles to be baptized in the icy water. Such faith will stick through all trials. I was scarcely able to get out of doors (having been confined to my room for more than two weeks), but I believed good would be accomplished if I should go to that schoolhouse last night. It cost me two dollars and a half to get out there through the storm; but a soul, in my estimation, is worth infinitely more than that. I left an appointment for next Sunday night. All of our winter has come upon us at once. At Ouray, only a few miles distant, the snow is reported to be more than ten feet deep on the level. It has been snowing here for two weeks, off and on; but we have less here in the valley, as a rule. We are also having the coldest winter in the history of the weather department. Our city water supply pipe is frozen for a mile in one place, and all our water comes from a great spring meanwhile. The water pressure being low and the food regulation being stringent puts us where we have to be cautious in all matters of living. But the word of God is not bound. The church continues to grow, little by little, whether in storm or in shine, for which we give thanks to God. My health is some better, though I am stone deaf at present. I manage to fill my appointments now in all kinds of weather and thus keep the work growing. Let us all pray for its success ere and elsewhere.'

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION Do Not Study the Book of Reve-Intion

BY J. E. THOMPSON.

The experience of the wisest and best men who now live or who have lived since the Apocalypse was writ ten and sent to the seven churches of Asia tells us that we cannot learn the things of that book by studying it. The study of the book of Revelation will get us nothing; it will and can lead to nothing but the most prolific fields of speculation. No one ever acquired anything else from its study. This is the common, the universal conclusion reached by about all sensible men of all ages who have studied it. The writer's own experience tells him this is true and that no man can study this book and not be guilty of unprofitable speculations, neither can he secure anything thereby but barren results. We may study this book, may memorize it and be able to repeat every word in it, morning, noon, and night, through the days of a long lifetime, and yet we can get nothing from it, except the sweet euphony of its words, the sound of its fascinating and charming phraseology. The thrilling sound of its words appeals to our imagination, and this faculty in man always rises to the occasion and dances over its rare expression, like the sound of melodious music wakes within us our sense of time and causes us to involuntarily assume its measure. The experience and common sense of mankind repudiate the study of the Apocalypse; neither do the words nor the silence of the Scriptures encourage it. Nothing can be gained by its study. It was never given by God to be studied. It was given by him to be

Has any reader of the Gospel Advocate ever attempted to read its things by looking up the meaning of the figurative words and symbols in the Apocalypse and translating them by their use in the Bible? If not, you have never read a sentence in that book. It takes faith here with labor and patience.

"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of the proph-(Rev. 1: 3.) The blessing is not to him that studieth, but it is promised to him that "readeth" and to them that "hear" its words. To "read" is to understand, and to "hear" is to understand. This is shown to be true from the use of these words in the English language, and especially in the Bible. To study is to meditate, to speculate, to contemplate. The study of the Apocalypse may be legitimate and useful after we have translated the words and read and thoroughly understood them.

It is true the act of studying is commended by God in the Old Testament as well as in the New Testament, but it is not commended by him in the Apocalypse. The injunction is there changed, and we are told to read and hear its word. Why did God change the injunction primarily from studying and meditating and tell us to read and hear the words of the Apocalypse? Because the Apocalypse is written in a system of symbols and figurative words, never used or spoken by any nation or tongue of earth, and no man can be benefited by studying the scenes of a book couched in an unknown tongue before he can read that language. For instance, if the Declaration of Independence were written in Latin and I could not read that language, I might study, I might even memorize all its Latin words and repeat them scores of times each day for years, and yet I never could learn the meaning of the things of that document until I learned to read the Latin words or until I heard their meaning from a Latin scholar. The same is true of the scenes of the Apocalypse; they must be translated to be understood.

In the first verse of the book of Revelation, God tells us that book is a revelation; he tells us it is to show its things to his servants; in the second verse he promises a blessing to those who read and hear. Is it a revelation? Can man read and hear its things in the sense of understanding them, or is the great God of the Bible mocking man?

In defense of the sincerity and truth of this declaration by God that teaches us that the book is a revelation and man can read and hear its words and be blessed thereby, we in humility of mind and heart, but with an immovable and unwavering faith in this word of God, as well as all of his messages to man, do honor to ourselves in casting into the scale with his word our insignificant experience, our all along this line, like one drop of water in the boundless seas and oceans of earth, or like one grain of sand amid the numberless sands upon the seashore, when compared with the infinitely wise and illuminating truth of God's word, and boldly challenge the infidelity of any man as to the literal truth of this statement of God.

Have you ever read or heard the things of a single scene of the Apocalypse in the sense these words are used in the Bible? If not, you know nothing about it, and can never know until you surrender your wisdom and accept God's guidance in reading its words. No two men who ever translated a single one of its scenes by the use of a Concordance, a Bible, and a little common sense ever disagreed as to its meaning, any more than any two men ever disagreed on the reading of a Latin or Greek sentence when properly translated. On the other hand, no two men ever agreed as to the things of a single one of its scenes who attempted to study out its meaning. If you ever learn anything about the scenes of the Apocalypse, you must learn to trust in the wisdom and truth of God's word by the reading and hearing of its words. This will get you results, as well as exalt and enthrone your Creator and his wonderful words of life higher in your esteem, your love, and your veneration, than any other part of the whole Bible can do. About the Calendar.

BY J. H. WHISNANT,

Some time ago Brother Lipscomb made kindly mention of "The Church of Christ Educational Calendar" which was designed and printed by the writer to help to get and to keep the cardinal truths concerning the "one body" before the minds of the public and to cause them to know where and when to attend our services. Several orders came in response; and while I would be glad for the brethren everywhere to know what all who have written or spoken of the calendar have said, I shall ask space for only a few words of commendation. This because of two things-viz.: I have a few hundred yet on hand; I think if the churches see their real value there will be a demand for a large edition next year.

Brother J. L. Gordon, of Center Ridge, Ark., writes: "I think they are real nice and ought to be in the home of every Christian. If parents and children would learn to read and reread the scriptures contained with each month on the calendar, they would be far better prepared than a great many who neglect reading almost entirely. I shall be glad to recommend them and help you all I can in the sale of them."

Brother C. I. Hawkins, of Rosiclare, Ill., writes: "I received your letter and calendars O.K. I have sold all but three and have orders for ten more. So I inclose four dollars and ninetyfive cents for the dozen already received and for two dozen more, which please send at once. They sure sell good; and if I don't sell them I'll give them away, for they are sure nice. I am selling them to church members and sinners alike."

Brother H. H. Montgomery, of Shreveport, La., writes: "I received the calendars in due time and distributed them among my Bible class to-day; and as I had not ordered enough to go around, by giving one to the boys and girls of each family, I am sending two dollars for more of them. I am going to have each one of my class, ranging from ten to fourteen years old, to memorize the scriptures for each month, so they can write out what they have learned and read it to the class at the end of the month. I hope in this way to get their minds filled with the truths therein taught."

These brethren have well expressed my idea of the home use of the calendar; but do not forget that the prime idea in the designing was their use in public places. We do not advertise our services enough. Do not think that they are printed for novelty or speculation. If I come out even on them, I shall rejoice that I have helped to put out more than one thousand preachers for the year 1918.

Calendars are twenty-five cents each, three for fifty cents, seven for one dollar, twelve for $1.65, prepaid Won't you help me get them out ere February is gone? Address me at Atkins, Ark.

The Master's Vineyard

Alabama.

Albany, January 26 .- The church at Albany is in good working order, the best in its nearly eight years of history, for which we are all both thankful and happy. We have planned a good program for the year and hope to realize great pleasure and profit in the execution of same. I remain, as heretofore, with this church half my heretofore, with this church half my time. While in many things we fall short, yet I must say again that I know of no other congregation which is so nearly my ideal of "the church of the firstborn." May we ever re-main humble in the sight of the Lond of the lond that we may be evaled to the end that we may be exalted. My work out of the city changed with the beginning of the year. Brother R. S. King succeeds me at Shoal Bluff, in Giles County, Tenn., where I have labored for the past seven years. There are among these brethren some as good and faithful men and women as can be found among the faithful of the Lord; and while there are some evils which need to be removed, yet this body is a very deserving one and is by far above the average. My love for them abounds, for with them I have labored and suffered long in the one common cause. Brother S. E. Templeton is now located at Rogersville, in Lauderdale County, Ala., and, therefore, becomes my successor at Rogersville and Mount Carmel, my old home churches. These are good congregations and are developing some splendid talent which we hope may be used greatly to the Lord's glory. No people have ever been better to me than these people at home, and, of course, I love them most, for to them I owe most. I pray that the work may prosper in the hands of these splendid men. May this be a splendid year for the sowing and the reaping of the seed of the kingdom.-J. Pettey Ezell.

Box 72, Mims, January 23.—I left Nashville on December 21 for Capulet congregation, near Ocala, Fla. meeting was hindered by cold weather, but continued till the night of December 31. It is a small congregation, but embraces some fine people. Brother Fred Hooper, whom I baptized about ten years ago at Sam's Creek, in Cheatham County, Tenn., and who married here, got Brother B. W. Colson, a godly man, to help establish this congregation. Brother Colson now lives there. On New Year's Day we left for Mims via Clear Water, where we saw the Gulf of Mexico, Tampa. Brother George Hoover was not at home; and my letter having failed to reach them, I did not meet any of the churches there. I talked to Sister Hoover over the telephone. The meet-ing here began on January 6 and closed on January 20 at the morning service. Small audiences and no additions. I am making this place headquarters. Through the liberality of Brother John J. Hart, who promised to assist the few here, I am able to remain a while. This week I am preaching at a union house, two or three miles away, to better audiences. Next Saturday night and over Lord's day I am to be with the few at New Smyrna. Later.

on my way home, I am to be at Macclenny for the third time. While we see ice occasionally and are now by an oil heater, yet we are spared much of the severe cold experienced back "at home."-R. C. White.

Winchester, January 28.-We had a good service at Lexington yesterday. A splendid young man, a student, made the good confession at the morning service and put on the Lord at Winchester to-day. The church at Lexington are happy in their work of love for the Master. May their light grow more brilliant as the days go by. -J. D. Walling.

Missouri.

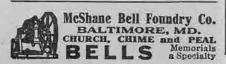

Rogersville, January 28 .- I visited Walnut Hill on the third Lord's day. Preached Saturday night and Sunday, but dismissed on Sunday night because of bad weather. I visited Ed-wards Chapel, near Northview, last Lord's day and preached some time there. My time now is all arranged for 1918. The brethren are treating me nicely, which my good wife and I appreciate. I go to Flint Hill, in Dade County, next Lord's day .- M. S. Mason.

Oklahoma.

Kendrick, January 22.-I am still here at Kendrick preaching the word. We had a very good hearing last night. I will preach a night or two more, then go back to Forgan, where I spent last year; but I will be there only a short time, as it looks like I cannot get the support I should have to be able to stay in that field. We have some good brethren all over the "Strip;" but the cause is weak in that section of country and they need help. For instance, the little band I set in order at Guymon is weak and will need help to get fully established. I set them to work there with only nineteen members, and they have just recently bought a house for one thousand dollars. They paid two hundred dollars down and are to raise two hundred dollars this month. They need a meeting now to keep building up. I have done my best in all this field. The churches at Forgan and out at Mount Olive Schoolhouse have stood by me financially, while some promised help who have not helped; but, in the main, they have done their best. For a while my address will be Forgan, Okla. Any mail addressed to Denton, Texas, will reach me.—D. S. Ligon.

North Texas Notes.

BY T. H. MATHESON.

Being able to start only by "can't afford," I went out as an "infantryman" on December 7 and came back with a severe blizzard on December 10. The points of attack were Bulcher, Spencer, Bonita, and Nocona. I was able to preach one night at all the places except Nocona, and would have preached there but for the weather. I had quite an experience cutting wood, plowing, walking, preaching, and otherwise advocating the gospel. I was royally entertained by all, and, while the roads the most of the way were a sand bed, I never missed a meal or a place to lay my head. I enrolled many names for the Gospel Advocate, and I certainly wish that I could mention all, but space forbids. The greater part of the brethren with whom I met were formerly of Tennessee, and, of course, this, coupled with a Texas spirit, gave a warm welcome.

At Bulcher, where I held a meeting in September, they are keeping up the public worship, and I was very much impressed with their faithfulness. Brethren Hair and Cross are the main stakes there now. Brother Hair is from West Tennessee and has a large family, with many sons holding responsible positions in life. One son is in the post-office department at Washington, D. C.

Spencer is a schoolhouse in a sand bed; but here we had our best crowd. If these brethren had a place of meeting conveniently located, they would do great things. They have been especially blessed with good crops this year. Brother J. W. Convers is an elder of this congregation and is sixtynine years old. While with him he showed me a good letter just received from his uncle, H. C. Arrington, who is an elder of the congregation at Cordova, Tenn. Brother Conyers' son, W. A. Conyers, is a farmer-preacher, and a good one. I enrolled all the Converses for the Advocate. I spent the night with Brother W. L. Phillips while at Spencer. He is a good singer and foremost in the worship. Brother R. Thompson, a young farmer-preach er, formerly of Goree, Texas, has lately located with the Spencer brethren, and no doubt will be of great service in that section. Brother George M. Dill, who lives near the Corinth Schoolhouse, and who is interested in establishing the cause at that place, showed me around and assisted me with the paper.

On short notice our crowd at Bonita was small, but we had an interesting service. Brother Everett, another farmer-preacher, preached regularly for this congregation. I did not meet him. I enrolled one new name in Bonita-Sister J. A. Howard, the widow of Brother Howard, who was a gospel preacher and from Tennessee.

It was a bad day at Nocona, but I kept going until the first train home. Brother J. J. Wood, one of the elders there, whom I had met, carried me to his home and piloted me around until the weather got too cold. It was a pleasure to be in his home, and it was interesting to note that Sister Wood, who is now seventy-three years old, was so active and cheerful, finding time to knit for the soldier boys. She told me that it was her second war to knit for, but this time she was relieved of the thread making, I visited Brother Grimsley, another elder of the congregation, who was sick. Brother Grimsley is the preacher at Nocona. I found Sister Mildred Moore and spent a few pleasant minutes with her. She was glad to know that I was the son of J. W. Matheson, whom she knew at Cliff Creek, in Haywood County, Tenn. She was the daughter of Brother Whitelaw, a pioneer preacher in West Tennessee. I will return to Nocona when the weather is more favorable.

The freight congestion is serious. You will help yourself, us, the rail-roads, and the Government by giving your order for Fertilizers NOW to your dealer. If all the farmers do this, the dealer can then "bunch" his orders, and be able to order his cars of fertilizers loaded to full capacity. The Government urges that all cars be so loaded.

When the goods arrive haul them home, and put them into your barn until you are ready to use them. If the movement of railroad cars becomes any more serious you may not get a pound of fertilizer at any price.

GLASS OF SALTS IF YOUR KIDNEYS HURT

Eat Less Meat If You Feel Backachy or Have Stomach Trouble— Salts Fine for Kidneys.

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels—removing all the acids, waste, and poison—else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generato clean and stimulate gish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmand makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases

Lebanon, January 31.—I preached for the Union Chapel congregation at Rockwood last Lord's day at 11 A.M. and at Pond Grove at 3 P.M. One confession at Pond Grove. Owing to inclement weather we had no evening services. It will be hard to find a congregation that will excel Union Chapel, considering their strength numerically and financially. Brother Thomas D. Rose, of Monterey, will visit this congregation monthly for a time. By the help of Brother Rose's teaching, they have prospects of accomplishing a great work there.—George W. Farmer.

Jackson, January 28.—I was with the church at Macon. The Macon brethren are planning for great things this year by "sounding forth the word." The Brownsville congregation expects to build a new house of worship in spite of the war. Brother J. Paul Slayden will hold their meeting in May. Nothing like looking forward and planning. I like to see churches plan ahead. Brethren who are moving to Jackson or who live near there will please write me and send me their addresses. My address is 396 Highland Avenue, Jackson, Tenn.—W. S. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life, eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which, if not remedied, causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. Does the Soul Die When the Body Dies?

BY JOHN T. POE.

To one who believes the Bible there ought to be no doubt as to the existence of the soul, or spirit, after the death of the body. A man who has read the Bible with any care or attention does not need to ask a question on that subject. Solomon, the wise man, said: "Then [at death] shall the body return to dust as it was, and the spirit to God who gave it."

At the transfiguration on the mount, Moses and Elijah appeared and talked with Jesus about the things he was to suffer at Jerusalem, and the apostles saw and heard them. Moses' body had returned to dust nearly fifteen hundred years before, but his spirit, or soul, was still alive and conscious.

While Elijah was alive on earth, he prayed over the dead body of a boy, and said, "O Lord, let this child's soul come again into his body," and the boy lived again. When the body of Jesus was laid in the tomb, it was a dead body. It revived again by his power on the third day, just as Jesus said it would. He said he would raise it up again, and he did. But if, as many modern Sadducees claim, the whole man had died-soul, body, and spirit-he could not have raised his body. The dead cannot make anything live.

John was so impressed with the majesty and glory of the messenger who talked with him in Patmos that he fell down to worship him as deity; but the messenger at once lifted him up, and said: "See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God." (Rev. 22: 9.) His body had gone to dust centuries before, no doubt; but the soul still lived, was serving God.

According to Lake 16, Jesus had pity upon the curiosity of man, raised the curtain that hides the future, and gave us a glimpse of the state or condition of things after death and before the final judgment, that we might know (1) that the man does not die when the body dies, and (2) that the soul is yet conscious while the body moulders to dust. The body is not the man-only the house in which for a time the man sojourns on earth.

"Life is real, life is earnest, And the grave is not its goal. Dust thou art, to dust returnest, Was not spoken of the soul.

SELF-PLAYER PIANOS FOR THE OLD FOLKS

If your musical education was neglected so that you have been deprived of the pleasures of music, do not inflict your children with a similar handicap for life. Let them learn music while they are young, while they have plenty of time and while their minds are receptive. Encourage them by providing a splendid piano, or, better still, a combination piano and self-player which every member of the family can use and enjoy. Our self-player gives you the two instruments in one, and the saving effected by the Club makes it cost you little more than you would ordinarily pay for a good plain piano.

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN

By uniting our orders in a Club of one hundred buyers we get the benefits of a big wholesale factory reduction. Thus each Club member helps every other Club member by helping himself. You are responsible only for your own purchase, and as the Management secures the other ninety-nine members you have nothing to do but place your own order through the Club. Every feature of the Club is guaranteed so that there is absolutely no possibility of dissatisfaction.

Write for your copy of the catalogue and Club booklet, describing and picturing the various styles of pianos and player-pianos and explaining the many attractive features of the Club.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall. Mich.

Dear Sir: Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years, and have always had trouble with it till I got your appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted liself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body and seemed to be a part of the body and seemed to be a part of the body as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable Godsend to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it. My rupture is now all healed up, and nothing ever did it but your appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself, I will say a good word for your appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is, a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am,

Yours very sincerely,

JAMES A BRITTON,

CURED IN SIX MONTHS AFTER EIGHTEEN YEARS.

Hinton, Ry.

C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir: I never wore the appliance a minute over six months, and was cured sound and well; and I want to say no man ever did any harder work than I did while I was using It—I hauled forty perch of rock too big for any man to lift.

I was ruptured eighteen years, and words cannot tell how thankful I am. Use my name if you like.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Sir: Your appliance did all you claim for the little boy, and more, for it cured him sound and well. We let him wear it for about a year in all, although it cured him three months after he had begun to wear it. We had tried several other remedies and got no relief; and I shall certainly recommend it to friends, for we surely owe it to you.

Yours respectfully,

CHILD CURED IN FOUR MONTHS.

21 Jansen Street, Dubuque, Ia. Brooks Rupture Appliance Company.

Gentlemen: The baby's rupture is altogether cured, thanks to your appliance, and we are so thankful to you. If we could only have known of it sooner, our little boy would not have had to suffer nearly as much as he did. He wore your brace a little over four months, and has not worn it now for six weeks.

Ten Reasons

YOU SHOULD SEND FOR BROOKS RUPTURE APPLIANCE.

- 1. It is absolutely the only appli-ance of the kind on the market to-day, and in it are embedded the prin-ciples that inventors have sought after for years.
- The appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of po-sition.
- Being an air cushion of soft rub-ber, it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation.
- Unlike the ordinary so-called "pads" used in other trusses, it is not cumbersome or ungainly.
- It is small, soft, and plieble, and positively cannot be detected through the clothing.
- The soft, pliable bands holding the appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.
- There is nothing about it to get foul; and when it becomes soiled, it can be washed without injuring it in the least.
- There are no metal springs in the appliance to torture one by cut-ting and bruising the flesh.
- All of the material of which the appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe appliance to wear.
- 10. My reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and my prices are so reasonable, my terms so fair, that there certainly should be so hesitancy in sending free coupon to-day.

Remember

I send my Appliance on trial to prove what I say is true. You are to be the judge. Fill out free coupon below and mail to-day.

Edifying as the Need May Be

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Nashville Awakened.

The public announcement that the United States government is to construct an immense powder plant at Hadley's Bend, in the environs of Nashville, has greatly increased the business prospects of our fair city. It is stated that the plant is to cost sixty million dollars and will employ approximately twenty thousand skilled workmen. It is estimated that the coming of these workmen with their fami lies will mean an increase of fifty thousand to our population. We will find some difficulty, no doubt, in housing so many new citizens, but Nashville has set herself to the task with a vim and determination to make everything pleasant and comfortable for them. Civic organizations are meeting daily to discuss ways and means. Fine boulevards will be built to the Bend, the street-car service will be extended, and adequate transportation facilities by rail and river will be secured. It is confidently expected that real-estate values will be greatly improved and that there will be plenty of money in circulation.

Nashville Christians should become wide awake to this great opportunity of preaching the gospel to new hearers, many of whom, no doubt, have never heard the pure, unvarnished message. While others are planning to get the money these people will surely spend, we should be ready to spend some money to save their souls. Furthermore, we should do all within our power to make theirs an uplifting environment.

The city represents the unit of our homes and home life. We cannot differentiate the thought of one from the other. If the atmosphere of the city is clean and pure, it means that our inhabitants are of this kind. If the citizenship is sordid and grasping and small, it means that the city can never become larger than the men and women it harbors. The character of the one determines the character of the other.

Nashville has always been regarded as a good place to live. While her citizens have been extending the commercial lines and reaching out for greater industrial assets, be it said to their credit that they have not neglected their hearthstones. Greed for money has never yet swallowed up the milk of human kindness and hospitality. We frankly admit that our skyscrapers are few and our factories are not very thick or of such tremendous importance as those in other cities; but when it comes to the municipal asset of homes, the reason why we have received with open arms so many of her citizens is not because they were exiled, but because they have found that there is no better place to live in all the world than here in the "Athens of the South." It is our pride that this city not only affords an opportunity for people to work the livelong day, but there is also an opportunity to worship God and to rest under advantages which money cannot buy.

And so may it remain when the great host of new citizens are settled in our midst.

For the Coming One.

A Christian Jew, in speaking of the present Jewish method of keeping the Passover, said that always, through the centuries back, and now, on every paschal table there have been, and are, set an extra plate and cup. If a stranger should ask the meaning of this, the Jew would answer: "These are for the coming One." This custom suggests a wonderfully beautiful and significant lesson. Christ is the long-promised coming One. Jews and Gentiles alike should realize that he has come. And in connection with this glorious fact there is impressed at the Lord's Supper the still more glorious one that he is coming again and we are to be with him forever. "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink the cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come."

One supreme reason, then, why we should be faithful in this matter is because our faithfulness will keep us "looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works."

In many a home there are kept little mementos that are sacred. How pitiably small they are! A little shoe, a bit of ribbon, a lock of hair, a faded scrap of paper. They have no commercial value, but their intrinsic worth is beyond computation. To view them is to long for "the touch of a vanished hand" and to sigh for "the sound of a voice that is still." How disappointing it would be to believe that we shall never see our loved ones again, to feel that those little mementos are all that we shall ever possess! But this picture of unrelieved gloom is dissipated by the glorious teaching that "He is coming again," and "even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Thus the Lord's Supper points to the glad reunion of the faithful. "And so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Exercise of Faith.

BY JAMES A. ALLEN.

We live in an age that boasts some of the most marvelous inventions of all time. They enlarge our conception of the powers and genius of man. Some of the things that are now practical realities, some of the things that are now actually performed, would, if related a few years ago, have been considered as but wild and fitful flights of fancy, as tales of fiction and romance. In every branch of human endeavor the exertions of man have grown to colossal proportions.

We advance only in things upon which we bestow energy, attention, and time. The least-talented pupil will finally master the study of anything upon which he concentrates his energy and thought, but the most brilliant mind will make no progress at all in the accomplishment of anything upon which he bestows no effort or labor. As the muscles of the body that are used are the ones that develop and grow strong, so the faculties of the mind that are employed are the faculties that grow. Those that are not used lie dormant and weak.

In this commercial age men are giants in everything that pertains to this life-to the goods and chattels, to the fame, fortune, and pleasures of this world. In laboring for that which may be seen with the material eye and for that which may be heard with the material ear, they have grown to immense stature; but in laboring for that which must be seen and heard by an eye and ear of faith, they are but pigmies and dwarfs, and those faculties which should be the most employed are the ones that lie the most lethargic and undeveloped. In other words, men will labor for a temporal, but not for an eternal, reward. They will readily devote their time and talent, and will invest their means, in order to gain some worldly end; but the same men will not invest a penny, a moment, or a thought in anything for which the reward is to be received at the resurrection of the just. Many who will exert their might upon the illusionary projects of this life will not so much as give a cup of cold water to a disciple in the name of a disciple. The reward of the one is seen, temporal, fleeting, and transitory; the reward of the other is unseen and eternal. The cause is, "all men have not faith." Many are giants in everything but faith. In worldly things they are giants; in faith they are pigmies.

In the Scriptures we read of men who were "full of faith." Their hearts were filled with God's word and it was manifested in their lives. They showed their faith by their works. They believed that out of Christ men are in their sins and are, therefore, lost; and such being their faith, they "went everywhere preaching the word." Endurance of fatigue, suffering, hardship in all of its forms, afforded them an actual pleasure. "For our light affliction," said one of them, "which is for the moment, worketh for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory." They were persecuted, their property was confiscated, all the engines of horrid vengeance were turned mercilessly upon them. But they were unintimidated. "They therefore departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer dishonor for the Name. And every day, in the temple and at home, they ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus as the Christ."

Sometimes I think that one of the greatest hindrances to the advancement of the gospel is the presence of infidelity in the churches. I do not mean that the people are really infidel in the sense that they do not have a nominal faith in their hearts. Indeed, in this enlightened age, the mental reputation of any man is in jeopardy if it becomes known that he entertains skeptical illusions. The evidence is incontrovertible, invulnerable; the testimony is superlatively more than a rational mind could demand; and I am persuaded that there are comparatively few men who really have the mental audacity to doubt it. But there seems to be a lack of realization, a lethargy of the mind and heart, that is so conspicuously exhibited in a kind of paralysis of the Christian life of so many of the disciples. Can a man believe, really believe, that there is an awful hell awaiting the wicked and unfaithful, a Gehenna of flame, "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," and yet make no effort whatever to avoid so horrible a destiny? If he does not try to avoid it, he either does not believe it or is not mentally bright. Can a man really believe that there is a glorious heaven, a "city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God," in which the redeemed of all the ages shall enjoy unspeakable happiness forever and ever, and yet make no effort to go there? The man who really believes that there is such a place would, like Paul, "count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowedge of Christ Jesus my Lord." No man can form an adequate idea of the inestimable good that would result from such a faith.

But it has been said that the history of most men can be put on a tombstone. What they do besides eat and sleep and enjoy as much worldly pleasure as they can is a negligible quantity. No effort to win heaven, no effort to shun hell, no honor rendered to God by obeying him, no good done to men, seems to be the rule, and all of their labor is performed for the meat that perishes. I pray that all men, and especially the household of faith, may awake to a sense of things; for "the night cometh, when no man can work."

Important Words.

BY C. E. HOLT.

The great saint, apostle, and prophet, whose name was changed from "Saul" to "Paul" and who by the latter name is known throughout the realm of civilization, said: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." It is very manifest that we are in the "last days" and that we are in the midst of "perilous times." "Blood and fire and vapor of smoke" shall be poured out in abundance before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. This is being fulfilled before our eyes. Europe is baptized in blood and fire and smoke. Her blood and treasure are being poured out with an unsparing hand. Our own once peaceful and prosperous nation, America, has entered the terrible maelstrom of war and destruction. The situation is serious, complex, and hard to understand from a human viewpoint.

Thousands of good people are asking the question: "What is our duty in the matter?" Our duty is plain. We must be loyal to our government. We must be true to the principles of freedom, justice, and equality of rights guaranteed to us in the Constitution of the United States. in the securing of which blood and treasure were poured out without stint or grudge or selfishness by our illustrious forefathers. But for this great government of ours, we would not have the religious freedom we enjoy, a blessing than which there is none of more vital and far-reaching importance. No king nor potentate nor pope can dictate to us any certain form of religion, nor a system of worship unapproved by our conscience. Religious freedom is a gift from heaven protected and fostered by our government. In our government we have liberty without license, law without oppression, and religion without fanaticism. Therefore we should stand by our President with our money, our service, and, if need be, with our lives. We cannot consistently do otherwise.

But we should always remember, and never forget, that, above all, God rules. We must be loyal to Him from whom all blessings flow. In the midst of war we should remembre the spiritual welfare of the people. While we hold aloft and unfurled to the breeze our beautiful star-spangled banner, emblem of liberty and unity and love, we should not allow the banner of our King, the Prince of Peace, to trail in the dust. We must not neglect the church of Christ and its interests. We must keep up our contributions and our attendance. The church of Christ will stand when all human plants shall be rooted up.

Three things in this world cover all our social, religious, and political interests-the family, the church, and the nation. The fact that some families and some churches and some nations do not conduct themselves becomingly and properly in the management of the affairs peculiar to each is no good, sound reason or argument why we should make a wholesale and indiscriminate repudiation of all domestic, religious, and national institutions and obligations. We should recognize the fact that everything in this world has been abused. We should not quit growing corn and wheat and potatoes because large quantities of these have been converted into "booze." Everything is good if properly used. It is the abuse or misuse of things that brings curses instead of blessings. God created nothing that is evil within itself. The Bible is a source of light and knowledge and wisdom when legitimately used; but when perverted, abused, or misused, it is forced to support many of the most pernicious doctrines on earth. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."

Lipscomb and Harding Portraits.

BY R. C. WHITE.

Since last notice orders have been placed for portraits (with frames) of Brethren B. Lipscomb and J. A. Harding. These are to be unveiled and presented to the Nashville Bible School, the Lord willing, next May. We have received considerable funds since last report, but need more yet. Advanced prices have caught us as well as all other business interests. Some, I regret, who ought to eagerly respond liberally have not. No Nashville Bible School student ought to even be asked, really just reminded of the opportunity to do honor to two of God's great men—men of the nineteenth century akin to the three of ancient times. (See Ezek. 14: 14.)

Brother Lipscomb cheerfully consented over a year before his death for us to do this. Brother Harding agrees. We must not fail. When I think of this even at advance in prices calling for over two hundred and fifty dollars, I know a little from each will be no burden or waste. Far better leave off show, soft drinks, do your own shaving or shoe shining, omit face powder, etc., to do "honor to whom honor is due." I am reminded of Jesus' commendation of the woman who, in the eyes of some, wasted what might otherwise have been used for the poor. "The poor you have always," he said. So it is now. Only now can we do honor in this respect. Come on, friends and alumni, and let us have your donation of from one dollar to five dollars as you feel able. Do not be afraid you will waste that trivial sum-trivial when compared with the duty to bless the world and future students with portraits of these two men. Send to me at once, and say, as Brother S. R. Logue: "Yes, I will give." (Italics mine.) Ye "committee of seven," do as Mrs. J. N. Armstrong has done-send twenty-five dollars at once. Send to R. C. White, 322 Peachtree Street, Nashville, Tenn.

Resolutions Passed by the Trustees of the Fanning Orphan School.

Whereas, in the providence of God, our dearly beloved brother, David Lipscomb, Sr., has been called from his work of faith and labor of love among men into that rest which remains for the people of God; and

Whereas, in this event, the cause of pure and primitive Christianity has lost one of its strongest and most decided advocates, as is abundantly evidenced by his unfaltering faith, his undaunted courage, his untiring labors, his earnest devotion to the church, the pillar and ground of the truth, and his heroic contention "for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints;" and

Whereas the Board of Trustees of the Fanning Orphan School, of which board he was president almost from its organization to the date of his death, deeply feel this great loss, and especially so in no longer having the privilege of sitting at the feet of this godly man, who for so many years presided over their deliberations and by whose wise counsel and safe advice the School was guarded and guided aright:

Be it resolved, therefore, That while bereaved and sad over his departure, we appreciate more highly than ever his generous gifts and long service to the School, gratefully cherish his memory, and shall ever keep in mind his sentiments, Christian counsel, desires, and prayers for the good and future success of the Fanning Orphan School, as expressed in what he thought at the time would be his last message to the Board of Trustees. This message contains, with other things, his prayers for the good of the School and for the trustees' wisdom to guide it aright, and his desires that it be kept on conservative ground and in harmony with the original design of Brother and Sister Fanning.

Be it resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the Board of Trustees, a copy furnished the daily papers of Nashville, and the Gospel Advocate, whose columns Brother Lipscomb used so freely for the upbuilding of the School, and also a copy be sent to Sister Lipscomb, his faithful wife.

Furthermore, be it resolved, That we shall strive to be true to the trust which has been left us and to meet him in "the better land." E. A. ELAM, Chairman;

A Tribute to Brother Poe.

BY FOY E. WALLACE, SR.

Brother John T. Poe, of Longview, Texas, left his mortal body and went home, his eternal home, December 21, 1917. A great man, a great preacher, a great writer, and one of the most active and best-known preachers of the South has fallen. He had been suffering more or less with heart trouble for two years, but was able to do active work in the Master's vineyard until near the end. He lived about three hours after the spell that took him away came upon him. The writer reached his home a few hours after his death. He talked happily and cheerfully with his family and did some writing the night that he was taken for the worse, feeling as well as usual when he retired at bedtime. The family was awakened at midnight to find him suffering. He told them that the end had come. All that the doctors and loving hands and hearts could do was in vain. His wife and her daughter, Miss Minnie Poe, were with him to the end.

Brother Poe was a great man. But few in the Southland have preached and have written more than he has, having held many very successful meetings in many of the Southern cities of the different States. He has preached extensively in Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama, Oklahoma, and Tennessee. Thousands have been led to Christ through his ministry. His clear, short-and-to-the-point articles have been read by thousands of admiring friends who were never permitted to see him face to face, and these thousands will stand with bowed heads and weep as they read these lines because of the loss to us and the church of a great man.

The funeral was conducted at his home before a large crowd of friends and brethren by W. P. Mings and Foy E. Wallace, Sr.

John T. Poe was born in Tuscaloosa, Ala., on August 30, 1836. He moved with his parents to Texas when a boy and located in Polk County. He joined the Fourth Regiment of Green's Brigade, Fourth Texas Cavalry, and served throughout the War between the States. At the battle of Glorieta, New Mexico, he was wounded above the heart, and was held a prisoner at Santa Fé by General Sibley. When he was given an honorable discharge, he walked from Santa Fé, N. M., to San Antonio, Texas. On May 28, 1863, he was married to Miss Carrie Wright, who is left to mourn her loss and to live the few remaining years without him. To this union six children were born, four of whom survive him.

After the close of the war Brother Poe moved to Longview. He put on the armor in God's army as recruiting officer in 1868, and fought under the flag of Christ for fifty years. He never let up, was a terror to sin in all of its forms. Brother Poe died with the armor on and the sword of the Spirit in his heart and hand. He believed that the modern Christian Church in her departures was the worst hindrance to the success of New Testament Christianity that we have to deal with to-day. In the beginning of the division he took his stand on the right side and fought the departures with all his might, and never let up until his tongue and pen could move no more.

Book Reviews.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"First Lessons in Child Training," by Zella M. Walters, contains one hundred and fifty-six pages of the most helpful and instructive matter on this subject I have ever read from an uninspired man. The book is a perfect gem of useful information and should be in every home in the land. The following from chapter 2, on the subject of obedience, will give some idea of its value: "We must have obedience, for we cannot build character without it. It is the great foundation virtue. When God placed man in the garden, he asked but one thing of him-obedience. What does the enlightened parent desire when the child is asked to obey? Simply self-control. We want the child to learn to obey the best that is in himself; in short, to obey himself. A thoughtful mother realizes that the years during which she can guide the child entirely are very few. When he goes to school, he begins to get out of her control. He must begin to rely upon himself. With each passing year he must do more self-governing. When he goes away to college or steps out to his work in the world, the mother loosens her last hold of authority upon him. If she has been a successful mother, she may still have a large part in shaping the direction of his life, but she can no longer command. All of her training, from the first baby days to young manhood or womanhood, has been directed toward making the child self-controlled. This is the real obedience. It is the bringing of the will in order to an authority that we have faith in, when we cannot understand." Then follows a contrast with that so-called "obedience" which "is a bending to fear or force." It is clearly shown that true obedience results from the principle of right. With the principle of right instilled into the youthful mind, loving obedience will flow as a stream from the fountain. This book can be had either from the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn., or the Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio. Cloth, sixty cents; paper, thirty-five cents.

"Forty-seven Reasons for Not Being a Methodist," by E. M. Borden. All who know Brother Borden's ability as a preacher and writer will expect to find in this tract of twenty-four pages sound and scriptural reasons for not being a Methodist. The author supports every position with invincible logic reënforced by a clear and legitimate application of the word. Any one desiring this tract can procure it from the author, whose address is Little Rock, Ark. Price, ten cents:

"Jesus is Coming to Earth Again" is a neatly bound volume of sixty-three pages by M. E. Dodd. The book is beautifully written, and from a literary consideration it is first-class. But the author, like all others who have written on the subject, in an effort to magnify and exalt the final coming of Christ, indulges in more or less speculation. It is true there is less in this book which, in my judgment, is subject to criticism than in any which has come my way. The author builds an argument on the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew which is clearly a misapplication of Christ's words. Again, he makes an application of Zech. 14: 4 that is purely guesswork, for he makes this passage refer to the final coming of Christ. The context or setting of this passage forbids any such application as the author has made of it, as, it most clearly seems to me, he should have known. He closes the second chapter of his book with these words: "Soon shall we see the Sun of righteousness rising with healing in his wings, and his coming shall be the rise and fall of nations. Even so, come quickly, Lord Jesus!" This is predicated upon his argument that this war is a fulfillment of Matt. 24, and is, therefore, the beginning of the end. It may be, but neither M. E. Dodd nor any other living soul knows it is. We should, of course, preach and teach all that the New Testament says on the final coming of Christ, and derive all the comfort, warning, and exhortation possible from it; but when we think we can exalt or magnify this great coming epoch in the history of the world with greater emphasis than God has done in the imperishable monument of bread and wine, we reflect upon his wisdom and power. God has instituted a weekly memorial feast for the express purpose of emphasizing the coming of his Son, which speaks with more eloquence and more potency than all the human tongues of all the ages. Let us not become one-sided in our teaching, emphasizing one vital truth above and to the neglect of others. I know of no saint who does not believe that Christ is coming again, and all who sit at the Lord's table proclaim their faith in the promise left upon the sacred page that their blessed Master is coming. The chief and all-important thing is to be prepared for his coming, or for death, which seals our destiny. This book can be procured from the Southern Tract Society, Box 16, Shreveport, La. Cloth bound.

"Civil Government"—Its Origin, Mission, and Destiny, and the Christian's Relations to It. This book is the outgrowth of the author's most matured thoughts on this subjest. A. Wilkinson said of it: "I think the book is worth its weight in gold." Pages, 158. Price, 75 cents.

"Salvation from Sin." This book is composed of the editorials of David Lipscomb, collated by J. W. Shepherd, and contains many of the best and most profound thoughts of its author. It contains an index to subjects and an index to scriptures. Contains 440 large pages; printed in large, clear type. Price, $1.50.

Fraternal Admonition a Duty.

BY J. C. M'Q.

So long as men are fallible, so long will there be necessity for admonishing one another and for an effort to correct, in the spirit of Christ, those in error. If all men understood the Bible perfectly and practiced its precepts, there would not be any necessity for admonition or exhortation. However, many people have no knowledge of the true teaching of the word of God. In addition to this number, there are many others who have little or no respect for its teaching and the authority of Christ. Years ago I held a meeting in a community where the standard of morality was so low that I felt powerless to do much good in leading people to Christ. Plain and positive declarations of the Bible seemed to have little influence with the majority of the hearers.

It is a deplorable fact that many preachers do not have a clear knowledge of the spirit and teaching of the Bible. The Savior clearly declares that "whosoever shall put away his wife except for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth her when she is put away committeth adultery" (Matt. 19: 9), and the Holy Spirit instructs Christians to "mark them that are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the doctrine which ye learned: and turn away from them" (Rom. 16: 17). In the face of such emphatic teaching, there are preachers who will baptize persons who are living in adultery. Of course, there can be no scriptural baptism without penitence, and we know that when a man is living in adultery he has not repented. While it may appear exacting, difficult, and hard to do just what God commands, yet teachers of the truth should have the courage to boldly and fearlessly do it, leaving the results with Jehovah. The scriptural way is the easiest way, and the only way, out of any difficulty. Considering the fact that some preachers baptize those living in adultery and that some preachers uphold factionalism and dissension and other wrongs, it is evident that even among preachers there is not that respect and reverence for Christ's authority that should characterize all Christians. The teacher who knows and loves the truth will be guided by it in all his actions, regardless of results. He will do his duty, leaving consequences in the hands of an all-wise God.

THOSE WHO EXHORT SHOULD SHOW THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

Paul admonishes: "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted." (Gal. 6: 1.) With kind consideration and forbearance Christians should admonish those who are in error. The exhortation should be given, not forgetful of the frailties of human nature and of the constant conflict that is being waged between the spirit and the flesh. Even though our admonitions are given to the disorderly walking, to the weak, and to the faint-hearted, we should be long-suffering and kind in giving them. Remembering our own sins and shortcomings, we should not be unmindful of the Holy Spirit's words when he says: "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you." (Eph. 4: 32.) Those who admonish others should do so in the fear of God and in the love of the truth. Their highest ambition should be, not to gain the plaudits of men, not for any personal gain, but for the honor and glory of God. Teachers should be sure that their admonitions are in harmony with the truth and that they come from pure hearts desirous of benefiting those to whom they are delivered. The Holy Spirit clearly admonishes on this subject in 1 Thess. 2: 3-8: "For our exhortation is not of error, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile: but even as we have been approved of God to be intrusted with the gospel, so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God who proveth our hearts. For neither at any time were we found using words of flattery, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness, God is witness; nor seeking glory of men, neither from you nor from others, when we might have claimed authority as apostles of Christ. But we were gentle in the midst of you, as when a nurse cherisheth her own children: even so, being affectionately desirous of you, we were well pleased to impart unto you, not the gospel of God only. but also our own souls, because ye were become very dear to us." It is hard to understand how an exhortation delivered in gentleness, kindness, and firmness, when delivered to a person desiring to follow the Lord, can fail in its purpose. The admonished, if possessed with the spirit of Christ, will certainly hear the admonition given, if satisfied that it is given for his good.

A MISCONCEPTION.

There can be no doubt about the scriptural warning and authority for admonishing and exhorting one another. We have the same authority for exhorting one another that we have for preaching the word. Paul commanded Timothy: "I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom, preach the word; be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching." (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.) The Holy Spirit commanded Titus (2: 6) as follows: "The younger men likewise exhort to be sober-minded." Again, we are taught in Heb. 3: 13: "Exhort one another day by day, so long as it is called To-day; lest any one of you be hardened by the deceitfulness of sin." The same apostle, guided by the Holy Spirit, in writing to the Hebrews, again commands: "And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking our own assembling together, as the custom of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day drawing nigh." (Heb. 10: 24, 25.) Paul, in writing to the church at Rome, declares: "And I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye yourselves are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another." (Rom. 15: 14.) These scriptures establish divine authority for exhortation, admonition, reproof, and rebuke. Those who are weak and faint-hearted should be exhorted and encouraged to a stronger and more courageous life. Those in sin and error should be reproved and rebuked for their sins. The exhortation and admonition, the reproof and rebuke, should all be given for the purpose of provoking the one involved to love and to good works. Such admonitions and exhortations are to be frequent and continuous until they have the desired effect. Christians are to exhort and admonish one another daily. If a brother sees a brother making a mistake, and if he is firm in the conviction that he is not teaching and living in harmony with the word of God, he should go to that brother and admonish him in the hope of leading him out of his error.

Whenever a Christian sees a disciple of Christ committing sin and declines to go to him, if that Christian himself has the proper regard for the truth, it shows that he has no confidence in the man that is guilty of wrongdoing and that he feels that his admonition would not be accepted should he go to him and admonish him. Still, in view of these facts and in view of the positive command to exhort one another, to exhort one another daily, and to exhort one another in the hope of provoking unto love and good works, we find that some disciples are ready to charge those who so exhort them with evil intent. They even go so far as to charge that it is their desire to rule and boss everything and everybody; and yet the disciple who fails to do this is out of harmony with the word of No Christian can be faithful to the positive and clear teachings of the Holy Spirit without admonishing those who are in error.

This is written in the hope that our readers will do their full duty and will fearlessly oppose error wherever it is found and regardless of the person in whom it is found. Churches make a great mistake to receive and uphold teachers who teach error and who fail to teach according to the word of God. The elders of our churches cannot be too faithful in insisting that those who propose to show the congregations the way of salvation lead pure, holy, and consecrated lives. Too many unworthy teachers who lead immoral lives, who have not the love of the truth and the fear of God in their hearts, have been permitted and encouraged to labor among the churches. A reformation is needed here.

"The Light of the World."

BY E. G. S.

Jesus said of his disciples: "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." (Matt. 5: 14) The light that comes from God is the grandest light that this world holds. Men that are raised up in the light of God's holy word are the most enlightened people that live upon the face of the earth. They are also the most refined, and are capable of the highest and most refined sympathies, of any that live on the earth. There is more genuine human kindness in Bible lands than in any other parts of the earth. Where the light of Heaven's truth has never gone, there is no genuine civilization. Furthermore, the most enlightened people in Bible lands are those that give the most attention to the teaching of the word of God; and, too, among those who read the New Testament there is a refinement of a much higher and purer type than among those that read the Old Testament only. Hence those nations that give most heed to the New Testament are the most refined the world holds to-day.

The teaching of the New Testament is of a higher and more refined grade every way than the teaching of the Old Testament. The teachers of the Old Testament were lacking in elements of true refinement which those of the New Testament possessed. Moses was the main teacher of the Old Testament, and the people of that age were not ready for the refined teaching of the New Testament and would not have received it. They had to be trained up to it a little at a time.

When Christ began his personal ministry, began to teach as no one else had ever taught, the Jews soon began to oppose him and to reject him. Finally, in the midst of the grandest teaching that had ever been done on this earth, the Jews conspired against him and through false testimony put him to death. But they could not confine him in the grave. In an effort to do this, they put their guards around the grave to make sure that no man or company of men should steal him away. But something else occurred. When the third morning came, there was a great earthquake, and the guard that had been placed around the grave fell down as dead, and Jesus arose triumphantly from the grave in spite of all human power to prevent it. When men undertake to fight against God, they always make a failure, and all who undertake to fight against Christ are likewise doomed to failure. Men may abuse him and misrepresent him, may exhaust all their wisdom in their rash fight against him, but it will all prove futile in the end; for Christ will surely become the Judge of all the earth and all such will be compelled to submit to him. Godly people will strive to do the will of God in all that it requires.

Some people live under the delusion that the Lord will do the very things he has commanded them to do, and so they wait for him to do the work for them. They delude themselves with the idea that they cannot do the things he has required them to do. Thus they virtually accuse the Lord of commanding people to do what they cannot do, and of dooming them to eternal punishment because they do not do what they cannot do. This is certainly a very dangerous and inconsistent doctrine. It is dangerous because the word of God does not teach it, and because, too, it is liable to discourage men from doing what the word of the Lord commands them to do. Besides, it is a slander upon the revealed character of God. It would be very unjust on the part of parents to command their children to do what they know they cannot do, and then punish them because they did not do what they knew they could not do. God does no such thing, and it is altogether wrong to accuse him of it.

Then, too, the doctrine of man's inability to do the will of God conflicts with the positive statement of Christ that Christians are "the light of the world." They are "the light of the world" by manifesting in their lives the light and the beauty of the Christian religion as expressed in the word of the Lord. It is the light, the elevating power, of the word of God, manifested in their lives, that makes Christians "the light of the world." Therefore, Christians should be exceedingly careful that their lives shall be directed by the word of God, so they may be truly "the light of the world."

Those that are guided by human creeds in their religious lives and work instead of the revealed will of God are not the light of the world in a scriptural sense. They are, indeed, in darkness, and are doing the works of darkness, and will be forever cast out from the presence of the Lord. Therefore, it is to the true interest of the people of this world to read and study the New Testament and strive to live as it directs. There is no other way for them to reach the blessings of God here or in the world to come. Nevertheless, thousands are teaching that the word of God is a dead letter and can impart no spiritual life. All such disregard this positive statement of inspiration: "The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." (Heb. 4: 12.) Such teaching is a palpable contradiction of this plain and positive statement and should be at once repudiated by every lover of God's precious and holy word.

Congregations and Individuals May Make Merchandise of Preachers and Religion.

BY E. A. E.

The last article showed abundantly-

- 1. That, while preachers are under obligations to God and men to preach the gospel regardless of consequences, individuals and congregations, blessed by the gospel, are under reciprocal obligations to support such preachers and teachers
- 2. That all obligations are not on preachers and teachers, but all others are under as great obligations as these to save the world.
- 3. That, since spiritual blessings are so greatly above and so much more vastly important than temporal ones, it is no "great matter" for preachers to receive the "carnal things" from those to whom they have sowed "spiritual things."
- 4. That, therefore, the true and faithful preachers and the elders who "labor in the word and in teaching" do a far greater work than the ones who only contribute "carnal things."
- 5. That the ones who receive the "spiritual things" are debtors to those who sow them.
- 6. And that, if there be any individuals and congregations that do not know all this, they should be taught it.

The above teaching of the Bible is plain, yet there is more. The Bible teaches that to know this and not do it is sin—is robberu.

To him therefore that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin. (James 4: 17.)

It is as great sin for congregations and individuals, blessed by the gospel, not to liberally support the faithful preachers who proclaim it and the elders who "labor in the word and in teaching" as it is for the preachers and elders to refuse to do this spiritual work without so much pay.

All the failures and sin are not on one side.

Will a man rob God? yet ye rob me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with the curse; for ye rob me, even this whole nation. Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there may be food in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. (Mal. 3: 8-10.)

These tithes were offerings to God and were used to support priests and Levites. Then, to withhold this support was robbery of God.

Since God has "ordained that they that proclaim the gospel shall live of the gospel," that those who receive "spiritual things" shall contribute the "carnal things" to the support of the sowers of the spiritual things," and that "the laborer is worthy of his hire," etc., it is robbery to withhold this support. It is robbery of God, because he ordained this support and it is an offering to him, "an odor of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing" to him (Phil. 4: 18); it is robbery of the ones who proclaim the gospel and teach the word of God and to whom the "hire" is due; and the ones who withhold it rob themselves of the blessedness of giving and, therefore, of salvation. Without repentance and the fruits of repentance, robbers cannot be saved.

This is not a matter of indifference or of choice on the part of those who have been blessed with the gospel—that is, congregations and individuals, who have received the "spiritual things" from preachers and other teachers, cannot withhold the support or give it at will, as they choose; it is God's command that they give it. To withhold it is disobedience to God. When people choose to serve God, they choose to do this, because it is a part of the service of God.

Under the above obligations no congregation can deal with preachers and teachers upon the principle of getting as much preaching and other work as possible for as little pay as possible. This is driving a bargain and making merchandise of the preachers and teachers.

Some preachers who seem to strive to get as much pay as possible for as little work as possible may drive some congregations to this other extreme.

Because true and faithful preachers, desirous of accomplishing the greatest good, go when called upon and where they see they are needed, making no demand upon anybody for any kind of support, but leaving that to the generosity of the ones served, congregations and individuals should not take advantage of them on this account and withhold the liberal support due them. Doing this comes either by ignorance or of something worse. Let us hope it comes of ignorance and that all such will do better when they learn better.

Congregations should know that they are not to deal with preachers upon the principle of so many dollars for so many sermons any more than preachers are to offer so many sermons for so many dollars. This course is as mercenary and as sinful in congregations as in preachers.

Preaching the gospel and teaching the word of God are not commodities to be bought and sold.

Paul very plainly taught the Corinthians that he sought their salvation and not their money; but he reproved and shamed them for their treatment of him and taught them their duty in regard to supporting the gospel.

Many congregations, especially in villages and the country, desire the services of preachers once a month, having preaching Sunday morning and at night. Each congregation, without any consultation with the preacher, sets "the price," or names the amount, it thinks the preacher should have. The preacher goes, a short or a long distance, as the case may be, pays his traveling expenses, does his best in every way, and gratefully receives what may be handed him, whether the amount is sufficient to support him and his family a week or not. Were he to say it is not sufficient, who doubts that some one would cry, "Preaching for the money!"

But this is not all. This amount is not only not sufficient to support him and his family a week; but should he fail for some unavoidable reason—sickness or something else—to meet his appointment, he does not, as a rule, receive it at all. This is not "living of the gospel," not supporting the preacher so that he can give his time to his great work, but is dealing with him on the ground of no delivery of a sermon, no pay, notwithstanding how much other work he may do.

I knew a congregation some years ago to cut off almost half of what, upon its own decision, it gave the preacher on his monthly visits when he was called away in the afternoon to attend a funeral service. No preaching, no pay. This is as bad as no pay, no preaching.

On the other hand, I am glad to say that I know, not one, but many congregations, and think there are still many more, that take pleasure in contributing to the preacher's support when he is for any unavoidable cause unable to reach them. I know some congregations that increase the amount, double it sometimes and sometimes quadruple it, as the preacher's conditions at home require and prevent his filling his appointments. This winter I know congregations that wrote their preachers nice and encouraging letters, inclosing a check, and saying: "Do not try to come through the extreme cold weather and while there is sickness at home." This is generous and gratefully appreciated, I know; but it is right, and is giving "carnal things" when "spiritual things" have been sown. This is supporting the preacher so that he can preach the gospel when and where he has the opportunity. This is not a selfish consideration of receiving so much for so much.

A certain congregation needs the services of a preacher and invites him to visit it once a month or as often as he can. The preacher is convinced that the congregation needs teaching and that others in the community can be reached with the gospel, and decides to spend as much time with it as can be taken from other work. But to do this he must make some change of work from another congregation to this one. This congregation is very much larger in membership and also more financially able to support him than the one he leaves, but it gives him only about one-third as much. He does his duty-preaches where he thinks he can do the greatest good; but what does this congregation do? We see what it fails to do. To put it mildly, it needs teaching. But it is an old congregation and should know. I call attention to this to say that such treatment of the preacher is not just and right, and that congregations fall short of sacrifice and duty as well as some preachers. Men of the world do not deal so.

Some congregations want the "spiritual things," or, if not really "spiritual things," the entertainment of preaching, without, it seems, the readiness to contribute the "carnal things." In all such cases, they really need "spiritual things"—to be taught the will of God on the grace of giving.

Can congregations have a more effective way of showing their utter lack of appreciation of "spiritual things" than by a refusal or failure to contribute their "carnal things" to the generous support of the gospel—that is, to the ones who faithfully preach it?

W. H. Gresham-"Uncle Billy."

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Many years ago a stranger came into the community now known as Mars' Hill, Ala. He was neither the first nor the last stranger who came into that community before my advent there; but he was the one about whom I wish to write, incidentally, because the destiny of the subject of this memorial depended so much upon the life and labors of that solitary stranger.

The stranger traveled on horseback, and his baggage consisted of a pair of saddlebags, a few essential articles of clothing, a Bible, and a hymn book. His mission was to "preach the word."

In that community was one, and only one, preaching place; and that place had been prepared and paid for by voluntary contributions collected from all the people, with the understanding and positive promise that any preacher who chanced to come that way might preach there, if he would.

The school-teacher announced in the presence of his school that a preacher from afar—from probably seventy miles south—would begin a series of meetings in the community meetinghouse at a certain specified hour.

Before the appointed hour arrived, however, the startling announcement was hastily circulated that that preacher could not preach there. Those who thus canceled the stranger's appointment to preach there said: "When we promised contributors to our building fund that anybody's preacher might preach in the house, we meant any orthodox preacher, of course; and this preacher's not orthodox. He preaches a dangerous doctrine."

Some of the very best people in the community, however, resented that insult to the stranger; and some of them had evidence that the uninitiated could not comprehend that the stranger was a respectable and respected citizen of the community in which he lived. Some of these asked the preacher if he would preach in the shade of the trees down by the creek and the spring near by. He replied: "I will gladly preach wheresoever the people may prepare for me to preach, if anybody will hear me." The immediate result was a successful series of meetings there—where thousands, since then, have heard the sweet old story of Jesus and his love.

The Gresham home, than which there was no better home in the community, was, and is, about three hundred yards from the spot where the preacher stood in the shade as he preached the word to appreciative people who had never previously heard such preaching.

The Gresham family was an honest, industrious, intelligent—and, subsequently, Christian—family; and William Henry, a promising youth, was a worthy member of it. Notwithstanding he was still in his teens, he had spent much time at "the mourners' bench" in unsatisfactory efforts to "get religion." This made him very anxious to hear the new preacher, for he still hoped his case might not be entirely hopeless.

The doctrine was so startlingly strange, however, that he promptly repudiated it, and resolved to prepare to prove its fallacy. To this end, he noted, with pencil, every quotation the preacher made, the preacher having requested all who so desired to do so; and, immediately after each discourse, he searched the Scriptures for evidence that the preacher misquoted and misapplied them.

It required little of such preaching and investigation to make the honest youth a believer of the gospel system of salvation, as he had long been a believer in God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, and the Bible. A sincere, penitent believer, he publicly confessed his faith in Christ; went, with the preacher, down into the beautiful stream, where many hundreds have subsequently been baptized; and was buried, by baptism, into death with Christ, and raised up to walk in newness of life.

By the time he got his feet firmly planted on the pebbly bottom of the creek and the water out of his face, so he could breathe comfortably, he was a skeptic. By the time he got out of the water, he was an infidel. By the time he got into dry clothes, he was an atheist. Why? He still believed feeling to be the divine evidence of pardon. He knew he had done all divinity required him to do "for the remission of sins." He had not received the expected feeling. Therefore, he was skeptic, infidel, atheist.

His first resolve was to never hear another sermon. Then he resolved to hear one more—and never another. But that one more sermon saved him. "Religion" was the subject on which the preacher preached that time. He handled the subject under three heads: the religion of demons, the religion of men, the religion of Divinity—demoniacal religion, human religion, divine religion.

At the conclusion of that sermon and thenceforth as long as he subsequently lived in this beautiful world—about seventy years—the erstwhile skeptic, infidel, atheist, always honest, was an uncompromising believer in Christ and his cause. He saw clearly, and as clearly explained, the difference between walking by feeling and walking by faith. Early in the manhood period of his life, he began to preach the gospel, which he continued to do till only seventeen days before weakness forced him to go to bed, to walk and work no more.

Brother Gresham was born, March 8, 1832; was married, March 5, 1858; went home, to be with friends and loved ones "over there," November 14, 1917. I knew him intimately and well forty-seven years. We lived within a quarter of a mile of each other a third of a century. He was always true to his family, his friends, to Christ and his cause.

But one member of his father's large family is left—Sister Maggie—and she is perfectly prepared to go, as were all the other members of the family, as, one by one, they were called up higher, to rest and rejoice forever in the Paradise of God.

Tennessee Orphans' Home.

BY J. C. M'QUIDDY.

The investigation into the affairs of the Tennessee Orphans' Home has clearly developed one thing—that is, that the churches have responded very cheerfully and liberally to the needs of the Home. I have learned from letters received by the auditor that sums of money have been sent from many of the far-away States for the support of this work. As the Home is now without a superintendent, as no one has been called to take the place of W. T. Boaz, it becomes necessary for us to let the churches know our wants and appeal to them to make liberal contributions in this hour of need. The Home is running smoothly, being in charge of Sister Granville Lipscomb, the widow of the late lamented G. Lipscomb, and Sister Bettie Alexander, of Hartsville, Tenn. Both are most estimable women and are well fitted for the work.

The Board of Directors will have a meeting before this notice reaches our readers, as they were called to meet Tuesday, February 12, at 10:30 A.M., in the office of the Home. The work of caring for orphans is a work in which all can heartily unite. While there is a disposition to discuss almost everything that we undertake, I have never heard any one call in question the scripturalness and necessity of taking care of orphan children. After much earnest prayer and serious reflection, it has been decided to ask the churches throughout the country to make a liberal contribution on the first Lord's day in March for the Tennessee Orphans' Home. The funds of the institution are just about exhausted. While it appears that the debt is not a heavy one and it is the hope of the directors to soon wipe it out, yet we must have funds with which to operate the Home. We have from forty to forty-five orphan children now in the Home, who must be fed, clothed, and trained for future usefulness. We make this appeal, therefore, to the churches, confidently believing that they will respond heartfly and cheerfully. who are not able to give large sums should not forget that many small amounts aggregate a large sum. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver" and will abundantly bless the man who casts in the widow's mite. Send all contributions to the Tennessee Orphans' Home, Columbia, Tenn.

Misrepresentations.

Sometimes it is not only permissible, but even imperative, that we notice and correct misrepresentations, but there are other times when they should not be noticed at all. Our Lord, it seems, usually pursued the latter course, though he sometimes pursued the former. Again, with our limited knowledge of men and things, there are times when it is difficult to know which course it is better and wiser to pursue.

Apropos to this situation, there recently appeared, in the columns of one of our contemporaries which we highly esteem, an article, written by one of its editors, which is not only a perversion of facts, but is a gross misrepresentation of the Gospel Advocate concerning its relation to the Y. M. C. A. and other human institutions. If the author of the article did not know when he was writing it that he was misrepresenting us, it was because he did not make use of means of information easily at his command; and hence, beyond this word of explanation, we feel that so gross a misrepresentation of us, made in such a way and under such circumstances, should be passed by us in silence, for which reason we respectfully decline any further notice of this case. Correction: Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Culp, of Bells, Tenn., should have been credited with two dollars instead of one dollar in our last statement. Two dollars was the amount forwarded.

The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief is unique in that its audited report shows that in administering more than $7,000,000 it has actually sent and administered for relief $25,000 more than it has received in contributions. Not only has one hundred cents of every dollar been sent for relief, but the interest on daily balances held in reserve against outstanding drafts has been added, securing the above result and suggesting the title, "one hundred and one per cent efficient."

Not one cent is paid from relief funds for salaries or commissions either in the United States or in Asia. The administrative expenses in America, including printing, postage, cabling funds, and office expenses, are met privately, while the administration abroad is handled by American consuls (money transmitted through the State Department) and a hundred or more American missionaries, physicians, and teachers, who give their services without expense to relief funds.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

One person I have to make good: myself. But my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make him happy—if I may,—Stevenson.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain 1 Tim. 5: 24, 25, which reads: "Some men's sins are evident, going before unto judgment; and some men also they follow after. In like manner also there are good works that are evident; and such as are otherwise cannot be hid." W. F. BATES.

Paul had been discussing discipline. Some men's lives are fully known. Their sins are open and are not concealed, while others conceal their sins and they will not be made fully manifest until the judgment. The same is true of good works. Some men are credited with far more than they deserve, while the good deeds of others will not be clearly revealed until the judgment. At the judgment every man's deeds will be estimated aright.

Brother Sewell: Please write a short article on Jude 9. Are we to understand that the devil thought he really had a claim on Moses? Give all the light on it you can.

R. C. Roy.

I do not know what the devil wanted with the body of Moses. The Bible does not tell, and we have no other means of finding out about it. We might guess at what he wanted with it; but that would only be our opinion and not worth anything in deciding facts, and we will not even venture a guess. We only know that he contended for it and that it was simply said to him: "The Lord rebuke thee." This is all we know about it. The very fact that the devil wanted the body is evidence that there was no good intention about it. Hence all he received was the rebuke, and that was evidently all he deserved. If we had inspired men now, they might, perhaps, tell us something more about it; but as it is, we can only guess at it and pass it by.

Brother Sewell: Please explain 1 John 3: 9. W. S. Corson.

The ninth verse of the third chapter of First John reads thus: "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." This passage means that a man cannot live in sin, lead a sinful life, and live the Christian life at the same time. The two are so thoroughly unlike that they cannot be made to harmonize. In becoming a Christian, one passes out of a sinful life and enters upon a spiritual life—a life that is wholly unlike the worldly life that he has been leading. When one is truly born of God he ceases his sinful life and walks with God-that is, lives as the word of God directs. When one obeys the gospel and enters upon this new life, the old life is laid aside, necessarily, as he cannot now lead a sinful life; for "his seed," the word of God, remains in him. So one that becomes a Christian must crucify the flesh, cease to live in sin, if he desires to go to heaven when he dies.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain Rom. 8: 29, 30. N. G. White.

The passage our brother wishes explained read as follows: "For whom he foreknew, he also foreordained to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren; and whom he foreordained, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also glorified." Foreknowledge does not mean predestination. Augustine says: "There can be no predestination without foreknowledge; but there can be foreknowledge without predestination." Foreknowledge is simply the act of foreknowing.

The service of Christ. (2) It is a matter of as to whether one partakes of the Lord's Sup standing. all things because there are no limitations to his knowledge, but he does not foresee it because he has decreed it. While God foreknows all things, he has decreed the character that shall be conformed to the image of his Son. He has predestined that all who believe in and obey the Lord Jesus Christ shall be his children. The only thing predestined or foreordained is that those who love and obey God shall be his children.

Brother McQuiddy: Brother Franklin, in his "Gospei Preacher," says: "A Calvinist and an Arminian cannot fellowship each other, because the one is a Calvinist and the other is an Arminian. The one holds the five points of Calvinism and the other the opposite five points of Arminianism." What I desire to know is: What are the five points of Calvinism, and what are the five points of Arminianism?

W. J. JOHNS.

The five points of Calvinism are: "Election or predestination, limited atonement, total depravity, effectual calling, and the perseverance of the saints." Calvinism "has been subject to many variations and modifications in different churches and at various times." The five articles of Arminianism are: "(1) Conditional election and reprobation, in opposition to the absolute predestination taught by Calvin; (2) universal redemption, or that the atonement was made by Christ for all mankind, though none but believers can be partakers of the benefit; (3) that man, in order to exercise true faith, must be regenerated and renewed by the operation of the Holy Spirit, which is the gift of God; (4) that man may resist divine grace; (5) that man may relapse from a state of grace, in opposition to Calvin's doctrine of the perseverance of the saints." I have given both the five points of Calvinism and of Arminianism as defined in Webster's New International Dictionary.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) What is meant by "counting the cost?" Explain Luke 14: 28-33. (2) Give example of some "indifferent things" now in vogue. (Rom. 14; 1 Cor. 8.) Are "occasional drinks," as some aver, "things indifferent?" (3) What is the besetting sin?

JAMES E. CHESSOR.

(1) Luke 14; 28-33 reads: "For which of you, desiring to build a tower, doth not first sit down and count the cost, whether he have wherewith to complete it? Lest haply, when he hath laid a foundation, and is not able to finish, all that behold begin to mock him, saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish. Or what king, as he goeth to encounter another king in war, will not sit down first and take counsel whether he is able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand? Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and asketh conditions of peace. So therefore whosoever he be of you that renounceth not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." Any man of wisdom, before entering any enterprise, will calculate just what amount is required to complete the enterprise. do otherwise would be folly. A sensible man would not lay the foundation of a house until he felt sure he was able to finish the house. So every one becoming a Christian appreciates the fact that he must give up every obstacle to the service of Christ. (2) It is a matter of indifference as to whether one partakes of the Lord's Supper before or after preaching. It is also a matter of indifference as to whether one shall observe the Lord's Supper sitting or standing. "Occasional drinks" of whisky are never indifferent and may not be classed with "indifferent things." (3) In regard to the "besetting sin," it is probable that different people have different besetting sins. The "besetting sin" of the Hebrew Christians, spoken of in Heb. 12: 1, was unbelief. The unbelief of individuals doubtless

A Prayer for Those at Sea.

God of the outstretched heavens above, Lord of the all-encircling sea, In this our hour of dire distress We cry to thee, we cry to thee.

Master of all that nature is,
Lord of the calm and storm art thou;
Let not thy awful majesty
Turn from us now, turn from us now.

God of our fathers—Israel's God—
Who smote the opposing sea in twain,
We pray to thee in this dark hour
To save again, to save again.

Father of all the sons of men,
Father of Christ who did thy will,
Through him—as once o'er Galilee—
Speak: "Peace, be still; peace, be still."
—George Beaumont Benford.

There is a great power in the little word "no," when it is spoken resolutely and courageously. It has often been like a giant rock by the sea, as it has met and hurled back the mighty waves of temptation. Whatsoever is wrong, we must meet with a firm, strong "No;" but whatever is right, we should welcome into our life with a hearty, cheerful "Yes."—Exchange.

Catch Fish in Their Hands.

Fishing in Samoan seas is often done by the women and without nets, boats, or hooks. They simply wade into the water and form themselves into a ring. The fishes being so plentiful, they are almost sure to imprison some in the ring. Those women are very quick and active, and every time they catch a fish with their hands they simply throw it, alive, into the basket on their back.—Exchange.

A Parable.

A tourist tells of coming upon a village which nestled on the bosom of a great mountain. He asked the villagers if they had many storms. "Yes," they replied, "if there is a storm anywhere in the neighborhood, it seems to find us out."

"How do you account for this?" asked the visitor.

They answered: "Those who seem to know say it is because of the mountain, which towers above our village. If he sees a cloud anywhere on the horizon, he beckons until it settles on his brow."

This visitor inquired further if they had many accidents from lightning.

"Not one," they replied. "We have seen the lightning strike the mountain countless times—and a grand sight it is—but no one in the village is ever touched. We have the thunder, which shakes our houses, and then we have the rain, which fills our gardens with the beauty that every one admires."

This is a parable of what Jesus Christ is to us and to all who believe on him. He is the mountain on which the storm breaks. On Calvary the tempests of ages have burst about his head; but all who nestle in his love are sheltered in him. "In me ye shall have peace," he said. He is our eternal keeper, because he took the storms on his own breast that we might hide in safety under the shadow of his love. We lift up our eyes unto the mountains, and rest in peace and in confidence, because "help cometh from the Lord, who made heaven and earth."—Selected.

The River of God.

With a touch of mysticism and as a practical thought we may liken the love of God and the gospel of Jesus to an unspeakably splendid river. We know how a river originates and develops. Up in the mountains in the clear air, where nothing has been defiled by man, is the source. It is very small at first—possibly only a tiny rivulet. It plunges and swirls over boulders or later through grassy meadows, its waters ever increasing in volume until, with magnificent benignity, it bears great vessels on its bosom and rolls, a superb smile of God's strength and goodness, to the sea.

The River of God seems at first so small that in the wilderness of this world we can hardly find it. It looks turbid and restless at the beginning, but as we follow it we find how beautiful and strong it is. It is in our hearts. This river of Divine Love will ever flow through our own souls and in the world if we are willing to give place to it.

The clarity and beauty of this river is sometimes spoiled by earthly contaminations. Those who would enjoy it to the full must separate themselves from the things which darken or soil it.

It is an irresistible current. As the great continental streams have broken down mountains and every obstruction in their resistless march to the ocean, so is the progress of the eternal Gospel of our Lord. Men may try to impede its onward course. They may ignore the tide of love that it bears to them. The nations may make its waters foul with the earthliness of greed, politics, or sin, but it will continue to sweep on forever, and in every generation bear witness to the imperishable and infinite mercy of God.

I would have my readers enjoy the spiritual River of God. When weary, drink of its pure waters near the mountain top and find strength for each fateful day. When polluted with worldliness or pride, wash in its limpid waters and be clean. In simple faith, trust yourselves to its broad bosom and it will bear you thereon to a wonderful sea. What is that sea? It is the infinite enjoyment of the illimitable love of God in Jesus Christ. It is the sea that John saw in his vision. It is also a sea of shining gold amid the inexhaustible riches of heaven. The River of God is full of spiritual water. To those carried on its tide the prayer of Whittier appeals when he asks for

"Some humble door among many mansions, Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease, And flows forever through Heaven's green expansions The River of Thy Peace."

-William C. Allen, in Exchange.

It has been estimated that a gentle wind travels about five miles per hour, a high wind about thirty to forty-five miles per hour, and a great hurricane eighty to one hundred miles per hour. The velocity of the earth on its own axis exceeds, it is believed, one thousand miles an hour. The velocity of the earth around the sun is calculated to be sixty-six thousand miles per hour, and the velocity of the moon to be two thousand two hundred and seventy-three miles per hour.—Exchange.

Sunlight and Moonlight.

There are many magnificent phenomena associated with the play of sunlight and moonlight among the floating vapors and crystals of the atmosphere, such as the coronas, or "glories," that often appear around the sun or the moon when the air is filled with translucent clouds or with extremely minute particles of water vapor. Like the halo, the corona is formed in the immediate neighborhood of, and is symmetrically disposed around, the luminary whose light gives rise to it.—Exchange.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS

By J. C. McQuiddy

Not the Spirit of Christ.

Twenty Kansas men have recently contributed fifty dollars each to make the first thousand of a million-dollar reward to be made to the person who will assassinate the These men may be Americans, but they are German in their methods. Leave assassination and outrage of every kind to the Kaiser and his armies. There is no room for them in America. It were better that the German army would batter down our national Capitol and the Kaiser make America a German colony than that we should become so Prussianized as to resort to assassination to accomplish our ends. It is not easy to restrain our hatred in such an age as this, but a land whose distinguishing characteristic-democracy-came direct from the cross of Calvary should be able to offer the prayer of Him who hung upon the central cross for his assassins: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."-United Presbyterian.

It is to be hoped that no Christian is among the twenty Kansas men who are contributing fifty dollars for the assassination of the Kaiser. While we may think it would be a mercy for him to be removed and thus save the lives of the thousands and multiplied thousands of young soldiers who will be slaughtered, yet it is not the spirit of Christ to stoop to assassination in order to attain such an end. Christianity requires us to minister to a German in need the same as it requires us to minister to an Englishman, a Frenchman, or an Italian in need.

* * * Very Little Change.

Serious times are upon us, and yet it does not seem that most people realize their seriousness. Very little change has been made in the style of living in most cases. Many people are observing meatless and wheatless days, but that is only the substitution of one kind of food for another. Whatever may be the case in private homes, in public places-hotels, restaurants, dining cars-there is no evidence of cutting down of the bill of fare on the part of their patrons. There is no falling off that is appreciable in the indulgence in pleasure. It would be supposed that the people of the country would be drawn more closely to God, that they would be more earnest and importunate in prayer. If they realized the seriousness of our situation, it would be expected that they would flock to God's house to besiege the throne of grace for protection for their loved ones and friends in the service of the country, who are or soon will be facing the dangers of the battlefield. Are we as a people waiting for a long list of fatalities to be flashed across the waters before we shall come to a true conception of the state of affairs? Would it not be better for us to humble ourselves before God, confessing our sins to him, and ask his blessing upon us and our army and navy?—The Presbyterian of the South.

The Presbyterian of the South states clearly an important fact. People are claiming to make sacrifices, and yet they are making very few sacrifices in order to win the war. As our country is in this great war, we should make every effort to get out of it at the earliest possible date. None of us can have any pleasure in realizing that thousands are shedding their blood. Such carnage is deplorable, and it is to be hoped that the military spirit will soon be driven from the world and that the nations will learn war no more. If we are really in earnest about this, we should pray more, sacrifice more, and do more in order to accomplish this desired end.

* * * Moral Conservation.

If our soldiers and sailors are worth protecting in this country, in camps and cantonments, they are worth protecting in foreign countries, from drunkenness and vice. The cry goes up, from the homes and communities and churches all over our land, that our government must take steps to guard them from evil conditions in foreign lands.

The people are willing, if need be, to give up their sons, but they are not willing that they shall be sacrificed on the altars of sin.

Let our own military regulations be such as to properly shield them, and let diplomatic representations be made to our allies that shall lead them to be friends, and not enemies, to the soldiers whom we have sent over to help fight their battles. Let them understand that our soldiers must not be made victims of drink and of vice.

Let there be the conservation of the lives, the physical health, and especially the moral health and life of the young men who have gone to the front to fight for the preservation of the life and liberty of the world. But while fighting to make the world safe for democracy, let us bear in mind, all the time, the struggle will be all in vain if democracy itself be not made safe. If the noble character of our young men be broken down and the survivors come home with their strength and morals dissipated by evil habits, it will prove to be a dismal catastrophe overtaking them and all of us.—Herald and Presbyter.

The foregoing is so timely that I cheerfully give it space on this page. The character of our young men must be preserved, as it is more important than anything else. With corrupt morals and evil habits, no one can prove a blessing to those about him. While Mr. Hoover is urging the people to conserve food, Christians all over this land of ours should be insistent that the government conserve the morals of our boys who are being taken away from us. A boy of soberness and integrity and of uprightness will do more for his country than one with dissipated habits and dulled moral perception.

Our Weak Points.

The Herald and Presbyter states that one hundred persons were asked recently to answer the question: "What are the chief points of weakness in our temporary American life?" While it appears that the answers differ very widely, yet when carefully analyzed they appear singularly alike. The answers which appeared in a book on American ideals are as follows:

Twenty-seven persons said: "Materialism, deminance of money, worship of bigness, deference to material success." Twenty said: "Want of thoroughness, and superficiality." Sixteen said: "Extravagance and wastefulness." Fifteen: "Self-indulgence and complacency." Eight: "Evasion of law when possible without being caught." Fourteen: "Lack of perspective and ignorance of foreign nations." Eight: "Shallowness in religion." Five: "Class legislation and class solidarity." Three: "Intemperance." And three: "Love of display."

Some of the answers were quite full, and amplested the

Some of the answers were quite full, and emphasized the tendency to selfish indulgence, sports, materialism, and irreligion. A religious director of six thousand university students wrote: "One weakness is that of indulgence. Our life is crammed these days with opportunity for relaxing; the picture show, the ball game, the theater, the novel, and the canoe grip the lives of a great many and absorb their best energies."

A banker wrote: "The passion for 'getting on,' with accompanying failure to see what one is getting on toward. Pride in power and in the ownership of things. Too great reliance on the finality of material. The lust for spending and having others know that one spends."

Another banker wrote: "Materialistic tendencies. Striving for effect at the expense of any or all ideals. Lack of simplicity. Lack of serious application to present or future problems. Loss of early ideals through the breaking up of what formerly constituted 'homelife.' Lack of interest in religious thought."

It is evident to the casual observer that there is much truth in the answers, and they furnish food for much sober reflection. It is well for us to note our weaknesses and overcome them. Such information should serve as a stimulant to a nobler life.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Don Carlos Janes informs us that missionary gifts sent to his home address, Buechel, Ky., will reach him all right while he is on his Southern preaching and lecturing trip.

Mrs. Harriet Baker, of Woodsfield, Ohio, now in her seventy-fifth year, writes to tell us that she "enjoys the Gospel Advocate more and more, as it seems to get better all the time."

A deserving young woman wishes a place in a good, Christian home where she can earn board and lodging while taking a business course in Nashville. Inquire of A. B. Lipseomb.

T. R. Busby, of Mangum, Okla., says: "I have been taking the Gospel Advocate for fifteen years, and cannot afford to be without it, as there are so many good pieces that help me live a better life."

Our venerable brother, H. L. Walling, of McMinnville, Tenn., writes: "I took the Gospel Advocate under Tolbert Fanning and have taken it every year of its publication since. It is the best paper in the world to stand for the truth of God, and it was never better than now."

John W. Beasley preached at Central Chapel, in Wilson County, Tenn., the first Lord's day in February. One confessed her faith in Christ and was baptized that afternoon The ice, which was three inches thick, was cut that she might render obedience to her Master. Such faith is very commendable.

C. M. Stubblefield, of Montgomery, Ala., writes: "My brother, J. H. Stubblefield, of Fulton, Ky., has a tent, thirty by seventy feet, practically new, having been used but twice, which he wants to sell. He is willing to dispose of it at a considerable reduction in price, and to give one time in which to pay for it."

Mr. Warren R. Starling and Miss Annie Curry, both of Miami, Fla., were united in marriage on February 3, 1918, before a large audience in the meetinghouse of the church of Christ. Both are excellent young people and members of the one body. Their many friends wish for them a happy and prosperous life. The ceremony was performed by H. M. Phillips.

Beginning on Tuesday, February 19, N. B. Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn., will engage Elder J. E. Skinner (Missionary Baptist) in a four-days' debate at Bible Union, near Latham, Tenn. Those wishing to attend will please write to L. A. Winstead or T. F. Brundige, Route 4, Dresden, Tenn., and they will have conveyance at Martin, Tenn., to get them to Latham.

From W. Curtis Porter, Monette, Ark., February 4: "I preached at Monette yesterday. F. M. Strickland filled his appointment at Mangrum. I have some time for meetings not yet called for. I can answer calls anywhere. I am practically unknown to Gospel Advocate readers, although some may have read of me through the Firm Foundation and Christian Leader. First to call, first served."

From Joe L. Netherland, Yuma, Tenn., February 2: "The beginning of this year finds me very busy teaching in high school and preaching on week ends. I trust that I may be in position to do more for the Master this year than I have done in any previous year. Therefore I am arranging my work for the spring and summer, and would be glad to correspond with any congregation needing my services during May or June. I have arranged to be in Texas during July."

From D. S. Ligon, Forgan, Okla., February 6: "I closed the meeting at Kendrick, Okla., on the fourth Sunday night in January. We have some of the best brethren and sisters there I have ever met at any place. I preached at Mount Olivet Schoolhouse, near here, last Lord's day, and will preach here next Sunday. I am to begin a meeting near Woodward, Okla., next Tuesday night. I had a good meeting there just before Christmas. I hope to have a good meeting this time."

From E. N. Glenn, Deming, N. M.: "I am now located at Camp Cody, and would be glad to have the correct addresses of all soldier boys here who are members of the church of Christ, I understand there are one hundred and twenty-thee members here, but, on account of strict regulations of the camp, it is very difficult to get in touch with the boys. I can also use good, religious books, tracts, and leaflets for free distribution, and will be glad to circulate them discreetly. Please cooperate now, as the boys may be gone in a few weeks. Let us work while it is called to-day."

From Horace W. Busby, Fort Worth, Texas, February 4: "Our services were splendid at Glenwood, this city, yesterday. The house was well filled with earnest listeners. The singing was unusually good. Eight were identified with the congregation from different sources. At the business meeting in the afternoon it was shown that the financial condition was above normal, all bills having been paid and a nice balance left in the treasury. Our membership is gradually climbing toward the five-hundred mark, and at the present rate of increase it will be reached by summer. My time for meeting work is promised for this year, and I am arranging for next year, the Lord willing."

From W. T. Hines, Box 23, Braman, Okla., February 9: "The work here at Braman is moving along nicely. The church is growing, not in numbers, but spiritually. have had the pleasure of listening to J. C. Frazee, of Van Buren, Ind. It has done us all good to feast on the things that he has learned from God's word. He has a standing invitation here. I was glad to see J. E. Dunn's statement in regard to the work at Camp Sevier, also Brother Billingsley's correction. Now I want to say: Press on, Brother Dunn, and we will stand with you. Brethren, if we have no money, let us pray for the work; but if we have money, let us both pray and give. Now, we want a Christian blacksmith to locate at Braman, also a Christian merchant." If not strictly all right, we do not want you, as we want to deal with Christians in earthly affairs, too. If interested, write me."

We certainly appreciate the following cheering words from T. J. Ellis, of Coopertown, Tenn .: "This is the fortyninth year since I became a subscriber to the Gospel Advocate, and all of these years it has been a source of consolation, encouragement, and instruction to me. Without its hallowed influence, I do not know where and what I would have been. The noble life work of Brother Lipscomb and Brother Sewell, which has been long, earnest, and beautiful, and their influence for good will live on and on for ages to come. We are thankful that we have such lives as an example to follow, and we hope that Brother Sewell may have many years yet in which to finish up his work of faith and labor of love, and may his last days be his happiest days. We feel satisfied that the younger corps of editors will carry forward the grand work so wisely left in their hands. May they live long to labor for the Master's cause; and may we all feel such deep interest in the work and influence of the Gospel Advocate as will cause us to give to it our most loyal support; and may the banner of Prince Immanuel never be allowed to trail in the dust. 'O the good we all may do while the days are going by!""

Sad Word from India.

BY DON CARLOS JANES.

This afternoon, before I had entirely finished a letter to India in which I spoke of Sister S. O. Martin writing some articles about the products of that country. I was handed my mail, which included a black-bordered envelope and the announcement of the death of Sister Martin, in November. This is a great loss to our young brother and a loss to the cause of Christ. Let all who wish to say a kind and encouraging word address Brother Martin immediately at Satara, District Satara, Bombay Presidency, British India (two cents on cards and five cents on letters); or write your message on a small sheet of paper and send it to me, and I will post them in a bunch to him.

I have this month for him only six dollars. How do the brethren expect a man to live on that? They do not expect it at all. I suppose it may be due to the press of other matters. There have been many calls for things relating to the war and it is easy to neglect, but think what neglect here means to the man there. Funds for Brother McHenry are also short this month. Brethren, we are a small body of people, and those of us who give to foreign missions are still smaller. Those who can give to worldly and temporal matters are millions. Therefore let us be very faithful to God and see to it that we do not neglect the missionaries.

Personal checks should have five cents added for collection charges. Kindly let me have your remittances promptly. My address is Buechel, Ky.

Total amount forwarded during the year, $1,011.20.

I wish to express my sincere thanks to the religious papers, churches, classes, and individual Christians who have helped me in this great work of telling the story of our Heavenly Father and our Savior Jesus Christ to those in spiritual darkness in heathen India; for those of us who cannot go in person are telling the old, old story of love when we, in the name of Jesus, give to support those who are nobly serving him on the foreign field.

The gifts varied in size from five cents to forty dollars, and were all sent in full to the missionaries. I am glad to be able to do this work and to pay the postage and other incidental expenses. Once or twice I received a few cents in stamps from some of those who gave, and one sister in Texas sent me one dollar to help pay postage. I appreciated this very much indeed. Full detailed reports were printed each month in the following papers: Gospel Advocate, Gospel Herald, Christian Leader, and Firm Foundation.

This money was sent from Canada and from the following twenty-two States: Texas, Kansas, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, Missouri, Michigan, Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana, Georgia, Idaho, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, California, Arkansas, Illinois, Nebraska, New Mexico, Florida, New York, and Maine. Many encouraging messages were sent for the missionaries, and many prayers have been offered in their behalf.

I will gladly forward your gift. Send it in any way you can. Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas

Death of Sister Martin.

BY SALENI ARMSTRONG-HOPKINS.

Alice Balden Martin, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Balden, was born in Mercer County, Ky., on September 14, 1894. When she was one year old, her parents moved into the fine old brick house near Ebenezer school, where she lived until about to sail from America en route to India. When Alice was but nine or ten years of age, she was deprived of her mother's care, companionship, etc., by death, and thus sustained the heaviest blow that can come to mortals in this life, especially so when visited by such an affliction in one's early youth as in the case of little Alice Balden. Within a few years of the mother's death two of the elder sisters were also called away by death; and still later the remaining sisters, who were older than Alice herself, were married and left their father's house for homes of their own, with the exception of one, who, together with Alice, was left to keep house for their father and their brothers, who still remained on the home farm. Early in life Alice was baptized by McGarvey Lenox. It is not say ing too much to say that she was a faithful, consistent member and attendant at church; for during the two years previous to sailing for India she missed only one Sunday in attendance at Ebenezer Church. On November 7, 1915, Alice Balden was made acquainted with Mr. S. O. Martin, who preached at Ebenezer on that day, and to him, at least, that has proven to be one of the happiest days and most fortunate of his life; and so it came to pass that, on October 18, 1916, Alice Balden was married to Samuel Obadiah Martin; and on November 4, 1916, in company with her young groom, she sailed from San Francisco, Cal., for Dehra Dun, British India, where the two of them arrived safely on December 28, 1916. Sister Martin was a true helpmeet to her husband, and gave every promise of being an efficient missionary of the cross. This, however, was not to be. She had suffered from a most intractable nausea, which was almost incessant, and which yielded to no remedy, to no remedial agent. This was fought from the beginning, but to no avail. She died on November 22, 1917, and the funeral and burial occurred the next day. We all knew Sister Martin to be ripe for heaven, and we cannot mourn for her as those who have no hope.

Sister Martin's coming to India had nothing whatever to do with her illness. Had she been at home, in America, or anywhere else, it would, under similar circumstances, have occurred just the same. Sister Martin was a sweet and lovable woman, and we all loved her dearly. For her husband, who was most devoted to her, we all feel the profoundest sympathy. Brother Martin did everything in his power for her as long as she lived. He spared no pains, no expense, no labor, no attention.

THE OLD RELIABLE BLOOD BUILDER

Still retains its supremacy. People still take Hood's Sarsaparilla because it is an old family friend, has proved its merit to three generations—in purified blood, expelled humors, restored appetite, relieved rheumatism, banished tired feelings.

It long ago became recognized as the standard blood purifier and general tonic. It originated in a Boston physician's successful prescription, and comprises medicinal roots, herbs, barks and berries such as are often prescribed for ailments of the blood, stomach, liver and kidneys. Buy it in the same style package your mother bought it in,—same fine appearance, same pleasant taste, same certainty of good results.

"What Beautiful Hair!"

Have you ever heard that remark made as some one passed by who had carefully kept hair? Did it not make you envious, and did it not make you ashamed of every coarse, stiff, or gray hair in your head? Did it not make you wish that you, too, had kept your hair carefully and could hear similar compliments passed on you? Do not envy a beautiful head of hair. It is your privilege to have one. The beauty of the hair depends entirely on its care, and its luster depends on the food on which it subsists. Hair must be fed. Every single hair is a distinctly individual living thing, and it demands food. Unless you feed it, it is going to be stiff and coarse and void of beauty. Follow the example of the Creoles of Louisiana, who pride themselves on their hair. Get their recipe. It was kept as a race secret for many years, but you can get it now by asking your dealer for "La Creole," the natural hair dressing, or by sending one dollar to the Van Vleet-Mansfield Drug Company, Memphis, Tenn.

Notes from Two States, BY F. O. HOWELL.

At this writing there are remnants of twenty snows on the ground in West Tennessee and West Kentucky, the first one of which fell on December 7, and this is January 26. For snow and cold weather in this section, this winter, we are told, is unprecedented in the history of the nation. We have all combined into an associated charities. We have a public fund, which is dispensed by investigating committee. There has been an unprecedented amount of destitution. All the church people have combined their efforts, and the most perfect system of relief work I have ever seen in execution is being accomplished.

In keeping with the spirit of the government order for fuel conservation, the churches of Fulton, Ky., have combined their Sunday-night services. All meet in one auditorium and hold a joint service. The ministers of the city alternate in preaching. All the Protestant churches except the Missionary Baptists have entered this combined service.

Brother John Taylor, of Henderson, Tenn., is preaching monthly for Mc-Connell and Mount Vernon churches of Christ, in Obion County, Tenn., this year.

Brother W. E. Morgan preaches monthly for Oak Grove and Brother A. L. Wilson for Knob Creek. Brother J. L. Holland continues his work at Enon. These are some of the churches near Fulton, and are composed of an excellent set of men and women.

Brother Joe Ratcliffe, of Bardwell, Ky., has had rheumatism this winter, but is better now. Brother Ratcliffe is one of the ablest preachers in this section. He has some time for monthly preaching that is not promised. Any church that has no one to serve could not do better than to secure the services of Brother Ratcliffe.

Brother F. W. Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., will assist the church at Fulton in a meeting in May. We are hoping and praying for a great meeting.

Our church work at Obion, Tenn., is moving steadily and surely along The deacons have publicly asked that all cases of destitution in the city, whether they be members of the church or not, be reported to them. The churches in these parts are not leaving charity to be meted out by the lodges, as is too often the case.

Much is being written about preachers and the following of preaching for a livelihood. Whether it be scriptural to do this or not, one thing is evident: unless the support of the preachers be increased with the increased cost of living, many a faithful, God-fearing, God-loving, sacrificing preacher will

Strange Vapor Drives Out Catarrh

A Novel Method and Very Effective -Costs but Little to Try.

There is a way out of every difficulty, and those who suffer from catarrh can learn of a pleasant and novel method of relief if they will take the trouble to write a brief letter.

In Atlanta there is a respected physician who has been treating catarth successfully by a unique plan, for over forty-three years, and yet a lot of catarrh sufferers don't know about him. He doesn't advise internal medicines, which may upset the stomach, nor sprays, salves and such things, which cannot reach far back enough. His is the smoke-vapor method, and is produced by a remedy made from such natural medicinal agents as herbs, flowers and berries.

By writing to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 881 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and enclosing ten cents in coin or stamps, he will forward a trial outfit ready for you to use. Dr. Blosser's remedy has been found very effective, not only in chronic catarrh, but in catarrhal headaches, asthma, roaring and buzzing in the ears leading to loss of hearing. Send ten cents for this trial outfit, be compelled to "cease the ministry of the word and serve tables" to support his family. There is not another class of men on earth that there is as much expected of as is expected of preachers. Preachers are expected to go at their own expense and sacrifice and conduct funerals. This is not the universal practice, thank the Lord. Brethren are under as much moral obligation to pay the preacher as they are the doctor or the undertaker. While the gospel is free, the preacher should be paid for his service in keeping with his needs and his earning capacity. Many of the churches in the country have been forced by bad weather to call off appointments, and some of them have failed to remember the "laborer" as being "worthy of his hire." This very fact has involved many a gospel preacher and thrown him into financial embarrassment.

Stop! Calomel ls Ouicksilver

Churches in these parts usually contract with the preacher for so much of his time and agree to pay him so much money. Sometimes they fail; and when they do, the poor preacher is made to suffer, and sometimes his creditors are made to think he is dishonest. Personally, I have been well supported, but some of my preaching brethren have not

A Word to the Brethren.

BY J. WILL HENLEY.

Feeling that many hearts are still anxious about my condition, and having been so faithfully and loyally cared for during my first two-months' stay here, I feel it my duty to let you hear now. I have already informed you of my visit to home and family and of my return, sick and exhausted. Well, I arrived in a storm and have been "storm-bound" ever since, shut up in a hotel, impatiently waiting and hoping for weather open enough for me to resume my baths and treatments with some regularity. The advancement toward victory made during my first stay has been sufficient to convince all who saw me when I first came that I can get well here. I have the utmost confidence in this wonderful water and in the treatments I get from my faithful and attentive physician. Last Lord's day I went over to Little Rock and worshiped with the faithful few there. O what a joy, after three months' absence from the public worship of my Lord, to be permitted to sit around the table of my Savior with those who love me! If you never had the experience, brethren, you cannot realize what it means. How my heart has yearned for that privilege! I knew I was not really able to go, and, besides, the weather was awfully bad, cold and wet; but my soul was starving and my heart was famishing for the word, the worship, and the fellowship with God's saints, and I just said, "Lord, I am going," and I went. Brother J. Hal Bradley met me at the Union Station and assisted me to reach the church building. The hour had long passed for worship, but the audience-which, no doubt, was good for the day-waited until I arrived. O the joy that thrilled my very soul when I walked into that little chapel! Brother J. D. Borden and his good wife. E. M. Borden's wife and children, Sister Parsons, E. M. Borden's sister from Texarkana, and in whose home 1 spent some happy moments last summer, were all there to meet and to greet me. God bless them! Dear old Brother Bateman, my "next-door neighbor" at Sabinal, Texas, with his wonderful Christian family, lives there. I love Brother Bateman as a father. His dear, good wife, who is waiting for him in heaven, was a mother to my wife and to my babies. Two "soldier boys" were there. A Brother Ellis, a noble young fellow who is so interested in Christianity that he has tried to preach to his comrades at Camp Pike, so much enjoyed the services he had to tell it. and all were inspired with his remarks. Brother Stephenson, a fruit of my feeble efforts at Jonesboro, Ark.. was the other soldier. I was so glad to see him. Brother Brewer, a lifelong friend, of Sharp County, lives there now, and is a valuable member of the little band. But I must close this note.

Brethren, I want to ask you to again earnestly pray for me and for my family in far-away, drought-stricken South Texas. The greatest attention, perhaps, ever given one so humble and so weak as I has been mine to enjoy. But my funds are gone and I am here trying to win a victory over disease and misfortune. I cannot and do not call upon you now. Your goodness in the past and your unbounded confidence, demonstrated to me, make me love you more than I can tell. If you will only pray for me as I have requested, asking the Lord to guide you exactly as he would have you go, remembering me and my loved ones, I shall be perfectly satisfied with the results. If it falls to my lot to fail here for lack of proper means with which to carry on the effort, I shall never complain, but resign myself to the one thought that it was as my Heavenly Father wanted it to be. Believe it if you will or doubt it as you may, but I am satisfied that when you pray, and meditate upon God's holy word as you pray, and consider your duty to God and to men, all that comes of that service is as it should be. Let God be praised for all the great and unmerited blessings that have so abundantly been ours to have in the past, and may we be more worthy of any that shall come to us in the future. We owe one debt now which we have no hopes nor earthly desire to ever fully repay-a debt of gratitude to God and his people-for it is a pleasure to be forever paying on that debt. May God bless every one of you. My hopes to enter my work by February 15 are all gone to naught; but God will rule, and I will yet be able to meet most of my appointments. At any rate, that is how I feel about it. I am taking it "for granted" that my former letter was published and that this will be. I have not seen a copy of either of the papers since I came here last October. May God bless the papers for the greatest good possible.

My address is Hotel Como, Hot Springs, Ark.

"The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom."

J. H. Ring, of Nashville, Tenn., writes: "I have read 'The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom,' by J. E. Thompson; and while I am not a member of the same church, vet I am constrained to believe that in writing this book, although taking a position altogether different from all other writers on Revelation, the author has put into his book more scripture and sound reasoning, and has made the prophecies of the Bible plainer to the mind of the average Bible reader, than probably any one who ever wrote a book on Revelation and the prophecies of Daniel. It is indeed an interesting volume and should be read by every one interested in Bible prophecies."

G. W. Beckman, of Manchester, Tenn., writes in regard to J. E. Thompson's book: "The work is certainly the result of deep thought. Great care has been taken by the author in the translation of symbols. He waives aside the multitude of previous works which set up the pope of Rome as the beast, and the scripture proof he brings to bear for this purpose seems all-sufficient. The work is a radical departure from old theories and is well worthy of the highest praise."

OU remember in the spring, Bill, I applied V-C Fertilizer to that corn land. You were a "Doubting Thomas." You didn't think 'twould pay. Where no fertilizer was used, my yield was about the same as yours, but where the crop was fertilized, the yield per acre was 13 bushels more. It cost me about $3 to get those extra 13 bushels.

"Now I've turned in my hogs. Those 13 bushels of corn will make more than 100 pounds of hog meat. It's just plain business sense to convert $3 worth of fertilizer into $20 worth of pork. 50 acres of my corn land will make $1,000 more profit on hogs than was possible more profit on hogs than was possible without V-C."

There are lots of men like Bill whose farms are under-productive because they do not replace the plant foods each crop extracts.

Others like Mr. McIver Williamson, of South Carolina, use from 1400 to 2000 pounds to the acre and not only make more corn - but make it at a much lower cost per bushel-and enrich the land as well. They convert chemicals into cash.
V-C Fertilizers contain every element needed to make both stalk and grain.

Among the Colored Folks

Things That We Should Be Thankful For.

BY M. KEEBLE.

While sitting at home on account of such severe weather and studying God's word, I can see so many things to be thankful for. I thank God for that dear old mother that brought me into this great world and instilled that great principle into me to love God, and for that father that labored hard to give to his family the necessities of life and took me by the hand and led me to church every Lord's day. We need more parents like these, for a child reared this way will never depart from its training. At the age of fourteen I obeyed the gospel, and I am so thankful that I began to serve the Lord early in life, so I never learned so many evil habits that most young men learn. When about eighteen years old, I married a daughter of S. W. Womack. I never thought at first what a blessing it was to marry into this Christian man's family, but I am thankful now. If there ever was a Christian anywhere, this old servant is one. While I am young, I am trying to live humble and meek like him. and I thank God for the impression his life has made on me. Some people send flowers and put them on the casket after death, but I believe in giving them while we live. I am a young preacher endeavoring to make a success in life; and if I can just make the man that Brother Womack is, I will be so thankful. His success in life, in a material way, has not been very great, but I have reference to the great treasures he is laying up in heaven. He has established more churches and done more to keep "digressivism" out of this State than any colored man I know of anywhere; and had it not been for the instruction he received from such men as Brother David Lipscomb and Brother E. G. Sewell, he could not have succeeded as he has. I have been in conversation with him thousands of times on scriptural subjects, and he rarely ever finishes without mentioning one or the other of these great men. About nineteen years ago Brother A. C. Campbell decided to pull out from "digressivism," and he had courage enough to begin a mission in his own home. As soon as Brother Womack learned of it, he joined hand in hand with him, and they worked for some time this way, and the interest grew so we had to get a larger place to worship; so we purchased a piece of property on the corner of Jackson Street and Fourteenth Avenue, North, known as the "Jackson Street church of Christ," and we are so thankful for this work that these two worthy Christian preachers have done. Brother Campbell is nearly sixty years of age, but is yet active in the ministry, and I know of no man that is doing more to convert the world than he. As I have been closely connected with these two brethren for about twenty years or more, I can truthfully say they have suffered while preaching the gospel, and their wives need to be praised for their great endurance, and for all of this we thank the Lord. It was these two men that encouraged me to preach the gospel, and I shall never be through praising them and thanking God for such blessings. Neither of these men know that I am writing this article. I just thought it proper to say a few words about the good they are doing and have done. Brother Womack and Brother Campbell say that the Gospel Advocate has been second with them, and the Bible first.

Speaking concerning the Advocate, it has been a great help to me in studying the Bible. I have been reading it ever since I learned to read. My grandfather took it until his death; then, after I married into Brother Womack's family, I found it there. So I am still reading it. May God bless and lead those in whose hands the paper is to remain, and may it go forth blessing the world as it did when that great and noble servant, David Lipscomb, lived. Some brethren think that the paper will not be what it used to be, but I believe such men as J. C. McQuiddy, A. B. Lipscomb, and T. B. Larimore are fully able in every sense to cause the paper to hold its present position in the world, and, like Joshua, they will lead us across Jordan. For all of these rich blessings we thank our Heavenly Father.

I want to thank the editors of the Gospel Advocate for publishing my articles and reports from time to time.

Let the McQuiddy Printing Company do your printing, binding, en graving, and lithographing.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, Iluffy and beautiful-Get a small bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life, has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair; besides, it immedissolves every particle of diately dandruff. You cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life; and if not overcome, it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, leosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store, and just try it.

Abilene Christian College Classed A-Plus.

BY J. P. SEWELL.

The standards and classification committee of the Association of Texas Colleges has classed Abilene Christian College A-Plus. No higher distinction can come to a school in Texas from the viewpoint of educational efficiency. We have worked hard and long, and a number of people have made sacrifices that would not be believed, except by those who live closest to them and know them best, in order to bring our work to this standard. Of course we are grateful and happy.

We feel that the fact that a school is Christian demands that it meet the very highest educational standards. No sacrifice of Christian truth and spirit are necessary to this end. But under present conditions a tremendous material sacrifice is necessary, and it is no easy thing to find the men and women who are willing. We are deeply grateful for those we have found. May God give us more like them, that we may do a greater work for him.

Your Five Hundred Muscles.

The five hundred muscles in the human body depend on pure and rich blood for their health and contractile energy, which is the ability to labor. If they are given impure blood, they become enfeebled, the step loses its elasticity, the arm its efficiency, and there is incapacity to perform the usual amount of labor.

What a great blessing Hood's Sarsaparilla has been to the many toiling thousands whose blood it has made and kept pure and rich! This medicine cleanses the blood of all humors, inherited or acquired, and strengthens and tones the whole system. It is important, to be sure, that you get Hood's Sarsaparilla when you ask for it. No substitute for it is like it .-- Advt.

Will You Do Your Bit?

BY R. B. NEAL,

Will you do your bit? For what? To aid in battling the Seer. He, like the Kaiser, is an "autocrat." His system is a growing menace to both church and State. My age, seventy one on February 19, and health, or lack of it, cut me off from both evangelistic and pastoral work. I am limited to "den" and pen work. I own a cottage home and a good garden spot. Thanks to my brethren, I have an income of twenty-five dollars per month. We (wife and I) can live without fear of the wolf or cares of riches-about the condition that wise Agur prayed for. (Prov. 30.)

I have thousands of anti-Mormon tracts to give the preachers and to send into such places as Idaho. I have manuscripts of thirty pamphlets and one hundred leaflets to go into the printer's hands. Will you do your "bit," reader, in this work? My address is Grayson, Ky.

Meditation is the great storehouse of our spiritual dynamics, where divine energies lie hid for any enterprise and the hero is strengthened for his field .- J. Martineau.

Swiss Funeral Customs Odd.

The funeral customs of the Swiss are very peculiar. At the death of a person the family inserts a formal black-edged announcement in the papers asking for sympathy and stating that the "mourning urn" will be exhibited during certain hours on a special day. In front of the house where the person died there is placed a little black table covered with black cloth, on which stands a black jar. Into this the friends of the family drop little black-margined visiting cards, some times with a few words of sympathy on them. The urn is put on the table on the day of the funeral. Only men ever go to the churchyard, and they generally follow the hearse on foot .-Exchange.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidthey become overworked, get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of The urine becomes cloudy, the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog, you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste, or you will be a real sick person shortly. first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region; you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness; stomach gets sour, tongue coated, and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts, take a table-spoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

CHURCH NEWS

Florida.

Lake City, February 4.—Through correspondence Brother J. H. Murrell, of Tennessee City, Tenn., came to Lake City on January 7 and held a ten-days' meeting with the church here. He then began at New Hope, three miles away, and continued eight days. From there he went to a schoolhouse (a destitute point), four miles away, where he continued one week. He also preached a few sermons at a distant point. He left to-day for an appointment near Fenholloway, where he will continue indefinitely. Brother Murrell is a Christian man and a good preacher, and we most heartily recommend him to any faithful congregation who may need a meeting. His permanent address while in Florida will be Lake Letters addressed to him here will be forwarded to him wherever he may be in the work. We hope to keep him in the State permanently, but may not be able to do so. This is a great mission field, and we need many more workers in this part of God's garden; but we need men who will stay and endure hardness as good soldiers .-J. O. Barnes.

Plant City, February 1 .- Since leaving home I have visited and preached or lectured (or both) at Dalton, Atlanta, Valdosta, and Remerton, in Georgia, and at Jacksonville and Plant City, in this State. In Dalton I met Brother W. C. Graves, who is stirring up things in that section. Brother Hall was out of the city most of the time I was in Atlanta, but we had din-ner together. Brother Morgan H. Carter, a hustling young man, is helping in the Atlanta work. Brother J. A. Harding made me step lively as I accompanied him one morning on his usual walk. Brother G. E. Claus is working in Valdosta and at Remerton, where I made the acquaintance of Brother Dowling, one of our aged preachers. I was also one night with the Macon church, where C. E. Cole-Though not expecting man preaches. to preach in Jacksonville, I was enabled (through the enterprise of Brother and Sister Willis Allen) to speak to a fair-sized audience which was gathered on very short notice. will be here for some time yet with Brethren Hanor, Bushong, and others. -Don Carlos Janes.

Tennessee.

Dickson, February 5.—I have just returned from Campbell, Mo., where I preached three discourses on February 2 and 3, with one added from the Presbyterians. The church is in good shape, so far as I could learn, and they are anxious to do more for the work. I visited them at their request. I suppose I will be with the church in Columbia next Lord's day, at Centerville on the third Lord's day, and at Tuscumbia, Ala., on the fourth Lord's day. I preached my last sermon at Dickson on the fourth Lord's day in January, closing twelve years and nine months.—I. B Bradley.

Hohenwald, Route 1, February 3.— The church work here is progressing nicely. I was awakened this morning just before day by some one on my front porch calling for me, and I gr' up, put on my clothes, and found that it was a young man of a Roman Catholic family who wanted to know what to do to be saved. I read to him Christ's commission, then read Acts 2 and several other examples in Acts, and then asked if he understood them. He replied that he did and demanded baptism of me. So I went to the near-by creek (Swan Creek) and baptized him, which reminded me of the case of the eunuch, as there was no one present but he and I. I am no preacher, but a servant of the Lord desiring to do his will. Pray for us.—Thomas M. Lawson.

Allen's Creek, Route 2, February 5. I have been laboring in the gospel in Wayne County two years, in almost a destitute field. I have worked very hard to support myself, that I might not be chargeable to the church, have succeeded so far and have gained the friendship of all the people. have encouraging letters and statements from my brethren to come right on and continue to preach for them. According to their statements, my preaching is having a good impression; so I will continue, if the Lord is willing, hoping for visible results. We have had very few additions to the one body; so the laborers are few, but the harvest is great. Brethren, pray that the Lord of the harvest may send more laborers into his vineyard. We hope to be able to build a house of worship near the center of this county and see the cause of our blessed Savior prosper greatly. I do not know how long I can hold up and labor with my own hands to be self-supporting, but I have confidence in the good brethren that when I fail they will come to my If all would wake up and assistance. support the cause, I am sure that many unsaved souls would be reached. Brethren, pray for me.-C. A. Laneas-

San Antonio, January 15.—We had good services Sunday. Brother Larimore did the preaching. Two were baptized, two took membership, and one was restored. Brother Larimore's work with us has been pleasant and profitable. His work will be long remembered by the saints in San Antonio. Our prospects are fine.—W. D. Bills.

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

Killed by Poisons

All scientists agree that poisonous products in the blood are eliminated by the kidneys and liver. The kidneys act as a kind of filter for these products. When the kidneys are changed or de-generated, by disease or old age, then these poisons are retained in the body. these poisons are retained in the body. If we wish to prevent old age coming on too soon, or if we want to increase our chances for a long life, Dr. Pierce of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., says that you should drink plenty of water daily between meals to flush the kidneys. Then procure at your nearest drug store Anuric. This Anuric drives the uric acid out. Scientific men have learned that in gout, also rheumatism, poisonous uric acid crystals are deposited in or about the joints, in the muscles - where inflammation is set up.

If we wish to keep our kidneys in the best condition a diet of milk and vege-tables, with only little meat once a day, is the most suitable. Drink plenty of pure water, take Anuric three times a day for a month. An-u-ric is many times more potent than lithia and dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.

Send 10 cents to Dr. Pierce, if you wish to obtain a trial package of Anuric.

CLIFTON, TENN.—"I wish to say that I suffered from backache and kidney trouble for some time. I could hardly do any kind of work. I heard of Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets so I tried them, and they cured my backache. I hope people who are troubled with backache will give Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets a good trial. They do all that is required of them—they will not fail to benefit."—MISS ERMINE RUTH MOSER, R. F. D. 2.

MILTON, N. C.—"I suffered very much with my back and limbs. Had some derangement of the kidneys but after using Anuric I obtained redief and have had no trouble since. I cheerfully recommend the Anuric Tablets to all who suffer from too much uric acid in the system."—CAPT. W. G. GRAVES.

In many of the rural districts preaching has been postponed, the schools have dismissed, the roads have been blockaded by snow and ice, and business in general almost paralyzed. However, during the last few days the roads have been getting in condition to permit people to come to town in vehicles. I have three appointments away from home, but, owing to the weather conditions just mentioned, have not been able to fill them all. But one congregation sent us their remembrance yesterday in the form of a nice contribution, for which we are very thankful. I am sure this is the right way to treat the preacher who is faithful to God, and his family. hope that congregations in other places may remember their preachers, because these blessings will never be forgotten by the faithful preacher, and it gives one the consolation that comes to every one who is thoughtful of others-viz, that you are not selfish and appreciate the abundance of blessings with which you are surrounded. The church here in Union City remem-bered us at Christmas by sending to our home an abundance of nice things We were very thankful for to eat. We were very thankful for their thoughtfulness and generosity in our behalf.—T. M. Carney.

St. Elmo, January 26.—It might be interesting to the brethren who have labored here, and encouraging to others, to learn of the continued fidelity of the saints at St. Elmo. It has been only four years since the church was organized here. About six years ago Brother G. C. Brewer, in spite of strong opposition on the part of enemies to the truth, proclaimed the word in a tent near where the church house now stands. The following year he assisted the brethren in holding an-other meeting and setting the church in order. The word, as ably set forth by Brother Brewer, had its effect and scores of persons were baptized into the one body. Before many months elapsed the brethren decided to build a house in which to worship. Hence preparations were made for the task. A resolution was made by this faithful number not to ask for any assistance from outside congregations, at least until every nerve was strained.

The house was built-a well-equipped, well-arranged brick structure. Those who designed it manifested good taste, for the style and location are superb. Within this building, as a result of the united efforts of the church, assisted in several protracted meetings Brethren Brewer, Billingsley, Haskins, Hall, and others, many have confessed the Lord's name. These good men have endeared themselves to the people of this vicinity and have done much in upbuilding the cause; yet it is not due to their work alone that the church has progressed. There are some of the most consecrated men and women in the church at St. Elmo that the sun ever shone upon. The last of the year found us with an indebtedness of about three thousand eight hundred and twenty-three dollars still on the building. It was determined that at least two-thirds of this be raised before the new year. It was also agreed that the church stand by its former resolution and not ask for any aid from other congregations, for they realized that the brethren other localities had problems of their own. The first Lord's day in 1918 was one of the most interesting days for the church in a long while. The audience anxiously listened to the report of the campaign. When the donations had been totaled up, we were about forty dollars short of the purposed amount. Immediately upon this announcement, donations were made. So prompt were the donors that it was necessary to stop the gifts and announce "enough." These gifts released the last of seventy-three notes of thirty dollars each. One of the brethren then took the notes and placed them in a pan, which he put on the stand, then he very gracefully set them on fire. While the notes were burning the congregation arose and sang "God's Hand Is in It All." After the song there were several speeches expressing the joy and encouragement of having the debt raised. One brother said: "I'd shout if I knew how." Attention was called to the fact that now the church is free to do greater things in the year that is before us. This reduced our debt from three thousand eight hundred and twentythree dollars to fourteen hundred and twenty dollars. Before the meeting was dismissed that day, one of the godly men who had done much in re-Before the meeting leasing the aforementioned notes offered to give half of this remaining amount (seven hundred and ten dol-lars), if the members would make up the rest. So we hope to be able to announce soon that the church house is entirely out of debt. It gives me much joy to labor among such good people-men and women who are willing to sacrifice for the propagation of the gospel. But Christians are good anywhere. Let us take courage in that if to Him we are true, nothing can separate us from his love, and we can be more than conquerors through Him that loved us .- F. L. Wallace.

What Shall We Do?

BY J. H. LAWSON.

We shall build and equip a good tabernacle at Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas. I now have promised more than sixteen hundred dollars for this work, and eighteen faithful preachers have agreed to help me raise the remainder necessary to build. We shall erect a tabernacle large enough to seat about six hundred persons, with two or three reading and writing rooms in connection therewith. I have agreed to take charge of the work under the Houston Street Church, Sherman, and one of the churches at Fort Worth. These churches will assist in every way they can. All the churches in Fort Worth have assured me of their hearty cooperation, and Brethren Horace W. Busby and A. W. Young have prom-Ised their assistance in carrying the work to a success. These brethren labor with two of the churches in Fort Worth and will be in position to render valuable assistance. Several other faithful preachers have agreed to help me in preaching the gospel to the boys in Camp Bowie. We are assured of a fine location for our tabernacle, and our aim is to begin the erection of the building by February 15. We will need means to equip this building, and I earnestly urge all who desire a part in this work to send their offerings to J. H. Lawson, Camp Bowie Fund, Continental Bank and Trust Company, Fort Worth, Texas, and at the same time write me at Sherman, Texas, stating amount sent, that I may keep the matter properly recorded. Brother Wilkerson, formerly of Tennessee, is president of this bank, and the bank has consented to become custodian of funds.

I am hoping and praying that at least fifteen hundred dollars more than is now in sight may be ready by February 15. Write me at once at Sherman, Texas.

You Can Tell the People Who Have from in Their Blood -Strong, Healthy, Vigorous Folks!

Doctor Says Ordinary Nuxated Iron Will increase their strength and endurance in from Increase the Strength of Nervous, Run-Down People in Two Weeks'

Time in Many Cases.

Time in Many Cases. Time in Many Cases.

Side of the strong of the stro stimulants are what keep them suffering and stimulants are what keep them suffering and vainly longing to be strong. Their real trouble is lack of iron in the blood. Without iron the blood has no power to change food into living tissue and therefore, nothing you eat does you good; you don't get the strength out of it. When iron is supplied it enriches the impoverished blood and gives the body greater resistance to ward off disease. I have seen dozens of nervous, rundown people who were alling all the time getting benefit from anything.

If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. There is nothing like good old iron to help put color in your cheeks and sound, healthy flesh on your bones. But you must take iron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated like nuxated from if you want it to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless.

NOTE—Nuxated Iron recommended above by Dr. E. Sauer, is one of the newer organic iron compounds. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the atomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entrely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refamil your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

In four meetings we went through the Galatian letter, and on last Lord's day we had one of the best sermons that I have ever heard, based on the first two chapters of Ephesians, from Brother C. S. Osterhus, of Robbinsdale, Minn.

At the present time we are planning on a short meeting by Brother O. We feel that we must get into a good hall in the near future in order to do the most good in the shortest time, and when we find our location our expense will be considerably increased.

Are there not many members of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ in places where they have already established a strong congregation, or in places where they are now doing nothing, who would like to have fellowship in this good work of building a true church of Christ in this strategic center for the radiation of the truth throughout the Northwest?

Are not the immortal souls of those right at our doors of at least as great value in the sight of the Master as the bodies of the physically afflicted of Europe? I pray God that his people may not forget to ponder that point in their commendable zeal to help where help is needed. Any contributions made to this work will be faithfully accounted for and carefully used.

Notice of General Conference.

The eighteenth session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episconal Church, South, will convene in Atlanta, Ga., on Thursday, May 2, 1918, and will last about three weeks. Many important matters will be brought before the Conference. The most vital one, perhaps, will be the unification of the churches North and South. The question will be discussed in all its phases, and the report of the Committee on Unification will open up angles at which the speakers for and against will have full play for oratorical display. A daily edition of the Christian Advocate will be published. The publishers have employed skilled and trained stenographers to report its proceedings. Great and important questions pertaining to church government and administration will come before the Conference. If you are interested in what this great ecclesiastical body will do, send $1.25 to Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., and order a copy of the Daily Advocate sent to your address. The subscription books are now open.

The Decadence of the Decalogue.

It is my purpose in this article to revive interest in the Ten Commandments. There are too many people in this world who look upon Moses as a back number and who place his laws in the same category with other ancient relics. They too easily forget the important fact that God was the author and giver of the Decalogue. Moses was but the mouthpiece of Deity, as he himself declared: "These words Jehovah spake unto all your assembly in the mount out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice." (Dent. 5: 22.) How strange that men should entirely forget what God once uttered with a loud voice! Yet some have forgotten, while others have made the Ten Commandments the subject of jest and ridicule. A satirist in Life wrote: "We note the passing of the Ten Commandments with something of regret. While they were with us for a considerable period of years, they did excellent service. The fact that he [Moses] copied the commandments from the Book of the Dead is nothing against him. Almost every great writer has copied the ideas of others. Moses knew his public. It was a stroke of supreme genius on his part to have recognized instantly the value of the Ten Commandments for his day and generation, and to have advertised them in the way he did." These bright remarks were evidently intended as a defense of the Ten Commandments. To portray Moses merely as a copyist and advertising genius may cause the world to smile, but such an estimate does not honor God.

The New Ten Commandments.

So far has the world departed from the spirit and practice of the Ten Commandments that we might truly say that public opinion has reversed them. Instead of the ancient Decalogue we have another which reads:

- 1. Thou shalt have other gods besides God, even the Almighty Dollar and thine own ease and pleasure.
- 2. Thou shalt make unto thee graven images of the Son of God and bow down thyself to them.
- 3. Thou shalt curse and swear, for profanity is a virtue in man.
- 4. Thou shalt do anything on the Lord's day but keep it holy—sleep, loaf, work, or play. As it please thee, so do.
- 5. Honor thy father and mother, but do not let their advice stand in the way of thy plans.
 - 6. Thou shalt kill thine enemy.
- 7. Thou shalt "see the world" and "sow wild oats" in thy youth, for prostitution is inevitable.
 - 8. Thou shalt steal within the law.
- 9. Thou shalt insinuate evil against thy neighbor and publish it in the papers.
- 10. Thou shalt covet all things. Thou shalt covet thy neighbor's job; thou shalt covet his trade, and his business, and his house, and his automobile, and his wife, and her cook, and everything that is thy neighbor's; so shalt thou catch him off his guard and get them for thyself.

The Basis of All Codes of Law.

Not only have the Ten Commandments been forgotten, but they have also been repudiated. Weak and dangerous substitutes are offered in the place of them. Such a woeful condition makes it incumbent upon God's children to read and study the Ten Commandments and by both teaching and practice set them forth in their true light before all the people. Viewed purely from the historical side, they are worthy of our closest attention, involving both miraculous wisdom and human endowment. Centuries ago a race of slaves broke from bondage in Egypt and escaped into the wilderness. Forty years afterwards they appeared again, an organized band, with a wonderful code of lawsbrief, but comprehensive. They are comprehensive enough to embrace all great interests of mankind. They are fundamental enough to be authoritative to-day, more than three thousand years later, and to lie at the basis of all codes of law in civilized communities. Analyzed, they show a sense of proper proportion, putting first things first. They break into two groups, the first pertaining to man's duties to God, and the second to man's duties toward his fellow man.

Man's Relation to God.

Very properly the Decalogue begins with man's relations to God. That is where the race began its thinking. We are told that everywhere, in all ages and climes, man has believed in the existence of a great and powerful being who was more or less concerned with the affairs of men; and everywhere and always he has sought in some fashion to worship him, whether Baal or Jupiter or the "unknown God." Never has a tribe been found so primitive that they did not have some form of worship of some deity. The mission of the Hebrews to the world was to give it knowledge of the one God, a great and holy God. How eminently fitting, then, that the first command should be, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," and that the next two should further set forth Jehovah's demand for its supreme place, for the recognition of his spiritual nature, and for reverence to be observed toward him.

Then comes his demand for one day in seven to be set apart for physical rest and for thinking and learning about God. It began with the word "remember." Whether or not the intent was to suggest that this was not a new command is not known for a certainty; but the fact remains that this one, most of all, is written in man's physical nature, on his face, on his muscles, and in his nerves. The Sabbath has been superseded by the Lord's day, but the principle of one day in seven for rest and public worship remains intact. To-day man's body and mind, no less than his soul, calls out for a seventh day of rest. From the pioneers of 1849, traveling slowly in ox carts across our Western plains to the gold fields of California, down to the munition workers of the East, everywhere the paradox has been found true that six days' work is better than seven-that man and beast can do more and come out better in the long run.

The First Commandment With Promise.

The fifth command reads: "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long on the land which Jehovah thy God giveth thee." Paul calls it "the first commandment with promise." Some very obedient children have lived to a good old age, while others have died young. It is my belief that this promise was national rather than individual, and that the "land" referred to was the land of Canaan. This fifth command has been called the pivot on which the turn is made from duties to God to duties to man. As the parent is in the place of God to the little child, as his relation to the child is the favorite biblical figure of God's relation to man, the command seems to belong to the first group. But, on the human side, it is significant that in that long-ago time the mother is linked with the father on an equal plane. The command does not read, "Take up with your father;" or, "Make dad your pal;" or, "Be nice to mother." It reads: "Honor thy father and thy mother." As Paul more aptly expresses it: "Children, obey your parents."

Man's Relation to His Fellow Man.

The second group in the Decalogue deals with man's duties toward his fellow men. Here we find a number of dark words that are not pleasant to the ear—such words as "kill" and "adultery" and "steal" and "false" and "covet." God used these because no other words could so forcibly express his meaning. We may praise him that these commands which lie at the foundation of all good society are not expressed in mysterious phrases. There is a story of a British officer in India who went to the chaplain to argue religion with him. During their talk the officer said: "Religion is all very well, but you must admit there are difficulties—about the miracles, for instance." The chaplain knew the man and his habits, his besetting sin, and, quietly looking him in the face, answered him: "Yes, there are some things, I'll admit, in the Bible that are not very plain; but the seventh command, which reads, 'Thou shalt not commit adultery,' is very plain." The officer had enough of religious argument for that day. The ninth commandment calls attention to the law of truth, which is essential to confidence between man and man. When a man's word or a nation's word is a "scrap of paper," only anarchy or chaos or confusion can result. We need to beware of the man or woman who does not respect the Ten Commandments. Such people are a menace to any community. These commands are the protection of life, of the family, of property.

Jesus Gives the Gist of All.

Let us notice briefly Jesus' attitude toward the Ten Commandments. A certain scribe on one occasion asked him the question: "What commandment is the first of all?" Jesus answered: "The first is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God, the Lord is one: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. The second is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these." In the Savior's answer we find the gist of the Ten Commandments. He taught that not any one commandment was greater or smaller, heavier or lighter, than another, but that all sprang from these two as their root and principle, and stood in living connection with them; not disjointed ordinances of which the letter was to be weighed, but a "life springing from love to God and love to man." The Talmud reckons the laws of Moses to be six hundred and thirteen in number, the positive at two hundred and forty-eight and the negative at three hundred and sixtyfive. Moses himself expressed Israel's full duty by giving ten. Then, reminding them of God's instructions in the mount, he said: "He added no more." Looking down the ages, Moses said: "Jehovah thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken." When this prophecy was fulfilled and Jesus the great Teacher came, he embodied the Ten Commandments in two. "To keep so many laws," said the Jews, "is an angel's work." But Jesus, far more considerate than the Talmud for our human frailties, knowing how prone we are to forget, gave two commandments, and said: "On these two commandments the whole law hangeth, and the prophets." Charles H. Brent says: "With that incomparable delicacy of touch which is found everywhere in Christ's dealings with men, and with that reverence for the human character which made him far more hesitant in the imposition of commandments than any other leader of men, he has given us the opportunity of faith-and what is comparable with it!" The man who has faith will do all that Jesus requires, and will do it gladly. He will express that faith by his works. He will confess the Savior's name, he will be baptized according to Jesus' word, and every day he will live a life that demonstrates a love for God and his fellow man.

No Sealed Orders.

Our journey is often likened to the course of a vessel over an angry sea. Just now the winds seem to be more fierce and the billows seem to be leaping higher than ever before. But let God's children thank him that they are not required to sail under "sealed orders." For us there is no uncharted sea. God has given us plain instructions. Far back in the distant past he took Moses upon the top of the mount and gave him the Ten Commandments for the guidance of his people. Fifteen hundred years later came Jesus and simplified the chart for us. To Israel and to us the message is the same: "This is the end of the matter; all hath been heard; fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man." And with the message I connect the promise; "If a man love me, he will keep my word: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." And with the promise I connect the invitation: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

It Is Precisely As We Surmised.

BY F. W. SMITH.

It is no marked evidence of the spirit of Christ for one to prophesy evil with the hope that the prophecy may be fulfilled. Such a spirit is really wicked in the extreme, and no honest person will harbor it for a moment. But when all signs point in a certain direction, there can be no harm in expressing the judgment that certain results will follow. Hence, in harmony with this righteous course, it was predicted that a concerted action would be launched by some, at least, of the society brethren in Tennessee to switch into line the churches not identified with the society arrangements. As to the correctness of the prediction, the following will amply justify:

One of the best things of the whole convention was the report given by Brother John B. Cowden for the Commission on Unity. There were two things the commission had sion on Unity. There were two things the commission had tried to do. (1) Convince our conservative brethren that our position was worthy of respect. (2) Show a fraternal attitude. He said there were two difficulties to be over-come in this work. (1) To get a hearing among these brethren. (2) The Gospel Advocate. He then spoke of the results that had been accomplished. (1) Thousands of tracts had been sent out and had been read eagerly. (2) He had been privileged to meet and talk with many of these good people and was glad to report that they desired to try to know us better and to strive more to show we were brethren. The report of the Future Work Commit-tee, of which Brother Cowden was chairman, will show how this report was received and the attitude of the convention. But the words of Brother Morgan, spoken at this time, from a heart full of love, will indicate how we all felt: "Brethren, we don't want a triumph over any onedo we?-but Christ's triumph. We be brethren. care whether they ever have an organ-let each congregation decide for themselves—all we want is to be brethren." To this all said a hearty "amen."

This report is a part of the proceedings of a convention held in Nashville, September 25-28, 1917, which was denominated "The Convention of the Churches of Christ of Tennessee," concerning which I desire to make the following remarks:

1. The name of the convention itself is incorrect and. therefore, misleading. There were exceedingly few of the churches of Christ of Tennessee represented in that convention. By far the greater number of the churches of this State have no such convention and no arrangements demanding such conventions. Hence, for the report to have been within the bounds of facts, it should have read, "The Convention of a Few of the Churches of Christ of Tennessee." It is wrong and an absolute injustice for these brethren to include in their reports those whom they know do not affiliate with them in their society methods, and, as a matter of simple justice, they are very kindly requested to cease this course. There is no intimation here of those refusing to affiliate in such proceedings possessing higher moral standards or greater sincerity of action, but it is simply based upon a firm conviction of truth and duty. The society brethren cannot do less, it seems to me, than to accord us this right.

2. It is modestly suggested that the "Commission on Unity" has pursued a very unwise course in its efforts to bring about the ostensibly desired ends. Brother John B. Cowden, chairman of said commission, has flooded the country with tracts in a vain effort with a one-sided controversy to convert the nonsociety and nonorgan churches to adopt such things in their work and worship. He has thus wasted much printer's ink and stamps; and if he had known what little impression such literature would have on those to whom he sent It, surely he would have saved himself the time, trouble, and expense. By far bigger men than Brother Cowden have been trying to convert the churches of this State from the error (?) of their way for, lo, these many years, and yet they will not convert. Now let it be understood, once for all, that this division among the churches is deplored by the nonsociety brethren fully as much as by the other side, and, moreover, they are as fully anxious for "unity" as the other side; but they recognize the fact that there can be no unity acceptable in the sight of God which is not based upon his word. Hence the word of God, and that alone, constitutes a common basis for unity; and if the society brethren think we will not meet them on that "common ground," they are very much mistaken. All we desire is an opportunity to show them their mistake in such an idea. Most certainly the New Testament Scriptures furnish the "common ground," and we very sincerely ask our society brethren this question: Will you meet us on the New Testament and stand with us on its clear and implicit teaching as to how to worship God and how to do missionary work?

3. Brother Cowden says: "There are two difficulties to be overcome in this work. (1) To get a hearing among these brethren. (2) The Gospel Advocate." Now it is really complimentary to the Gospel Advocate to be charged with being an obstacle in the way of some things; but if Brother Cowden means to even insinuate that the Gospel Advocate stands in the way of scriptural unity among the professed followers of Christ, he has done this paper and its lifelong policy a very great injustice. He should not thus misrepresent his brethren; and if he does not know better than to make such a statement, it is no fault of the Advocate's.

4. Brother Cowden and Brother Morgan differ very materially on the matter of instrumental music in the worship. Brother Morgan says, "We don't care whether they ever have an organ—let each congregation decide for themselves;" while Brother Cowden has scattered broadcast a tract on the subject which, if correct, makes it a positive duty to have an organ. This he does in trying to prove that the word "psallo," translated "sing" in the New Testament, involves instrumental accompaniment. Brother Morgan will assume no such position; and, furthermore, I believe he will go a long way toward unity, because he has told me so. Brother Cowden has expressed "mildly" his views of the Advocate in comparison to the way some others have done the same thing. In years gone by some of the society brethren said the thing would not succeed in this State until David Lipscomb was dead. I heard with my own ears one make this remark: "There will have to be a few first-class funerals in Tennessee before the work can succeed." Well, David Lipscomb has gone, and Brother Sewell is not far behind him, and still there has been no stampede of the churches toward society methods.

In conclusion, I desire to repeat: Will "the Commission on Unity" meet us on the basis of the New Testament? Now, brethren, if you really desire unity, show it by your acceptance of this proposition, and let us get down to business, and thus do away with this shameful division which is not only sinful, but such a great hindrance to the Master's cause.

"The Mania for Meetings and Movements."

BY S. H. HALL.

Bishop W. A. Candler, of Methodist fame, has a most timely article in one of our Atlanta papers, and it is so good that I am constrained to pass it on. There are a few points on which criticism might, with propriety, be offered, but I do not like to strike at people when their faces are headed the right way. The Lord hasten the day when all will come to the one church and organization the New Testament talks about and work as "one man" in it. Here is the article:

"Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together" is an apostolic injunction which the American people obey perfectly. Indeed, they overdo it.

There is a mania for meetings and organizations.

Every profession and every trade has its association, with officers, dues, an official organ, and all sorts of meetings, seasonable and unseasonable.

Even the sufferers from hay fever have a national association, the nasal bond holding them together in distressing fellowship.

The number of religious assemblies has become so great that many of them injure religion in their attempts to serve the cause. Like parasites, they sap the life of the body to which they cling. The manifold conventions held are beginning to be injurious in many respects.

In former days almost any thriving community of pious people was glad to entertain any religious body which was characterized by worthy aims and proper methods. But the number of associations and conventions has so increased in recent years that the people are not now so hospitably inclined toward religious assemblies. They have grown weary of them, and are not to be blamed for having grown tired of opening their homes to all sorts of delegations. Even necessary and proper meetings are no longer desired in many places. Thus the spirit of hospitality has been impaired by being imposed on too frequently.

But this is not the worst result. The damage to home life which has been wrought by the multiplication of meetings is a more serious consequence.

There is a widespread neglect of family worship, and to a considerable degree it may be traced to the enormous increase of meetings outside the home. A zealous man or woman, undertaking to attend all "the societies" of the church and the annual conventions of the societies, is forced to neglect the home. What can compensate the church for the extinguishing of the altar fires in the homes of the people?

Why cannot the church—the whole church—attend to its proper business without splitting itself up into so many societies and wearing itself out with fractionalism?

The wasteless money on needless machinery is enough to accomplish a vast deal of good if directly applied to the work of the church, without the intervention of multiplied societies and expensive conventions.

Our Lord commanded his followers to go into all the world and give his gospel to every creature. The missionary obligation rests on his words, and it is a perfectly plain matter. Nevertheless, there be many who have to attend a half dozen missionary conventions a year in order to keep their zeal for the mission cause from expiring. A great deal of money is expended in this way which would achieve more if placed in the treasury of the church directly. The outlay upon ourselves to keep us disposed to meet our missionary obligations reminds one of the amount of water which has to be poured into a dry wooden pump before any can be gotten out of it.

A reasonable number of missionary meetings for the purpose of becoming informed concerning the needs of special fields and the general progress of the work is necessary, but a constant compassing of sea and land to keep one's interest alive in missions seems something worse than useless. It may become a sort of dissipation.

Another hurtful result of multiplying meetings arises from the programs and speakers. Men and women are appointed to read papers or make addresses on a great variety of themes, and most appointees for such service strive to say something "original" and striking. The quality most in request is what is called "snap." This brings a temptation to care less for what is true than for what is new. But once a man has said a thing, he gets ready to contend for it; what at first he was a trifle uncertain about, he begins to believe as strongly as if it were holy writ. Out of multiplied meetings, therefore, have sprung great swarms of faddists, hobby riders, and reformers. Our land is covered with them as Egypt was infested with the plague of locusts. They would devour all the best things of the past in order to make room for all the untried things which imagination can conceive under the stimulation of the desire to be fresh and sparkling in an address before a convention.

Excessive meetings are the breeding grounds of rickety reformers, who would, if they could, set the world afire in order to be known as the most brilliant incendiaries of the Close akin to this evil result is another. It is this: A man who speaks for a cause may easily fall into the delusion that he has by his speech discharged fully his obligation with reference to it. His moral energy is so exhausted by speaking that he has nothing left for action.

It is an old jibe to talk of temperance reformers who spoke for temperance often under the stimulant of drink. Of course, it was unkind and unfair, but nevertheless it is true that the temperance sentiments of some men have been for speaking use only.

And there are some men who have no more than a speaking acquaintance with the cause of missions. Their consciences are satisfied by their speeches, and they feel that nothing more should be expected of them.

Pulpit crators have been known to plead the cause of the neglected classes of the slums, who would never have accepted willingly a pastorate to a church located in a slum district. Guthrie refused any other sort of pastorate, because his heart was really with the poor and distressed people of a great Scotch city; but he was not famous for making the rounds of conventions and delivering addresses on "social service." He served while others talked.

Our Master has warned us of the danger of prophesying in his name without really knowing him, and of saying, "Lord, Lord," very solemnly without doing what he commands. The habit of speech making at conventions brings this peril very near to many men. In that market place speech is in great request, and the demand creates the supply.

May not a deal of vanity and pride enter into the overfondness of some people for conventions? In the conventions there are offices to be filled and titles to be conferred. The zeal of such people vanishes like a mist when they are not elected to office by the convention. They like uppermost seats in the conventional synagogues. How otherwise could they ever be known? The rolls of officers for certain conventions are crowded with the names of very inferior men who have been lifted into notice by election to position, who without such election would never have been heard of beyond the limits of the militia districts in which they reside. They dearly love "publicity" and "the publicity bureau of the convention." During the sessions of their conventions their faces become nearly as familiar to the readers of the local newspapers as the face of Lydia Pinkham or the horse and rider in the advertisement of "Mexican Mustang Liniment."

There is perhaps one other society needed in America, and no more than one. Perhaps a society is needed to kill about half the societies which are existing already. What a blessed organization that would be!

But it would reduce printers' bills; for all the conventions and their officers must have much printing, such as circulars, questionaires, announcements, programs, etc. It would reduce also the postal receipts of the government. Likewise railway fares would be reduced; for more people would stay at home and fewer people would be galloping over the land in pursuit of meetings. Upon the whole, however, there would be much saved. Postage would be reduced, but prayers in the home might become more common. Fewer passenger tickets might be sold; but if people stayed at home more, there might be produced a greater tonnage of freight, for running about is rather unproductive business.

If we had fewer conventions of reformers and more people pursuing wholesome lives at home, there might be fewer reformations needed. The mania for meetings and movements leads to the neglect by parents of multiplied thousands of children who in mature life need reforming, because parental negligence has deformed them.

Mr. Candler says the American people obey "perfectly" the command to "forsake not the assembling of yourselves together," then says we "overdo it." Just how a thing that is "overdone" is perfectly done is not clear. The command to forsake not the assembling of ourselves together has reference to the regular assembly of the saints on the first day of the week to commemorate the death of our Lord, and has no reference whatever to our trying to keep up with the schemes and inventions of men. 1 do not see how this command could be "overdone," and do not believe it has ever been overdone. Assembling ourselves together on the first day of the week in response to the call of some human organization, to do the work of some society, and not to do the work of the church in commemorating the death of our Lord, is not "overdoing" the command, but is not doing it at all.

As to a society that would destroy half of the societies already existing, I call Mr. Candler's attention to the fact that we have a society already in existence that would destroy all of them—viz., that institution which Christ calls his "church." He says: "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 13.) If you will take the "discipline" Christ gave his church—viz., the New Testament—and get all religious people to go by it, you will have but one church or society in existence, and we will all be one as we are commanded. If you should start one more human organization to destroy half of the human societies now in existence, who would decide which half to destroy and which half to let remain? There is just one way to right the wrong—viz., come to the Bible and walk as it directs.

But I am glad to see the many good things in the above from our Methodist friend, and pray that he will fight on until he gets enough of the useless, unscriptural organizations and conventions with which his church is overloaded sufficiently eliminated that she may have the strength to arise, freed from her burdens, and come back to the New Testament order of things.

Brother Dunn's Letter.

Army Y. M. C. A., Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., February 11, 1918.—To My Friends in General: Yesterday I was to have been in Atlanta. I had expected to make a hurried visit to Atlanta on business about our work. I had notified Brother S. H. Hall, and he had made appointments for me as follows: At West End Avenue in the forenoon, at Camp Gordon at the regular worship at 2:30 P.M., and at Y. M. C. A. Unit 153 at 7 P.M. On Thursday morning one of my associates was taken to the base hospital with spinal meningitis. It was thought he would live but a very few hours. On Friday he began to get better, and to-day it is thought he will get well.

Six of us are quarantined, and we do not know how long we shall be kept in quarantine. We are all well and taking treatment. I am not a bit afraid. Our medical corps, the officers and privates, will do anything for us that knowledge, skill, and money can do. Our doctors tell us that they think we are in no danger. I have as good friends here as any person ever had. There are some most excellent Christian young men here. In the army, as a rule, everybody is ready to stick to you and help. One thing we all learn, and that is to stick to each other through "thick and thin."

Yesterday afternoon Emmet Travis came by my window and got the emblems of the Lord's Supper. After their worship, Emmet Travis, Clark Dunn, and Anderson Hardison came to see me. I sat in the window and talked to them about half an hour. They reported a fine meeting. We have some members—wives and mothers of soldiers—in Greenville. We invite them to our Lord's-day worship at 2:30 P.M. every Lord's day at Y. M. C. A. Unit 86, up near the Field Artillery (Colonel Berry's and Colonel Luke Lea's regiments). We have a nice place to meet, and this is our fixed and regular meeting for worship.

It is impossible for me to hunt up all the members in the camp and scattered over the city. I can be reached over the telephone at Camp Sevier, No. 9105. I live at Unit 85.

I request the friends not to send old papers to us. Weekly papers later than the second week are not wanted. Monthly papers and magazines later than the second month are not wanted. We need all the good papers and magazines we can get, if they are up to date. Some have sent papers to us a month out of date, and some two months. The boys don't care for papers out of date. When you read your paper, mail it immediately to Army Y. M. C. A. Camp Sevier. If you want me to give it out, write my name on it. It costs but one cent.

Yesterday at 10 A.M. we (the six of us in quarantine) assembled in our library room, sang, prayed, and carefully went over the Sunday-school lesson. I spread the table for the Lord's Supper. I read from Matt. 26 and 1 Cor. 11 the full New Testament teaching on the Lord's Supper. I then talked at length on the Supper just as I have always taught in the churches. Each one said it was one of the best services he ever experienced.

While shut in we are answering the many letters of the friends back at home and reading. I get stacks of letters asking me about the boys. I give attention to them as rapidly as I can.

May God help all of us to be humble, submissive, find our places, do our duty, and serve as becometh faithful Christians.

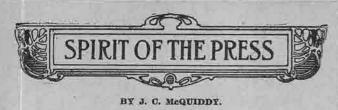

Most fraternally,

JOHN E. DUNN.

In Memory of David Lipscomb

It has been my privilege to read only the reprints from the pen of Brother D. Lipscomb. We shall expect to see them from time to time now on different subjects. We read and re-read what the many different ones had to say in the memorials, and were reminded of the thought that "none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." (Rom. 14: 7.) Long live the Gospel Advocate and the thoughts and deeds of our beloved brother which put it in motion over fifty years ago.—C. B. Patton, Route 3, Troy, Tenn.

It was with much sadness that I learned of the death of our dear aged brother, David Lipscomb. It doesn't seem right that he is dead. His writings, and especially his answers, have been a great source of instruction to me for more than a quarter of a century. When a question puzzled me, I had only to write Brother Lipscomb or Brother Burnett, and the matter was settled. It is hard for me to realize that both these grand men are now gone. I have known Brother Burnett for more than thirty years, intimately, but have only known Brother David Lipscomb through his writings; but I loved him just the same. O, if all men could and would live as these grand men lived and die as they died! I hope, some happy day, to meet them in a better land; "then shall we know as we are known."—Ed S. Duncan, Mount Pleasant, Texas.

A Returned Primitive Christianity.

Dr. Newton, of the London City Temple, anticipating the capture of Jerusalem by the British forces, says: "When our army captures Jerusalem, pray that Jerusalem may capture us all anew. We need that old high religion and that passion for righteousness to transform our patriotism to-day. If we lose sight of Jerusalem, Athens fails, with all its intellectual power; Rome fails, with all its military might; London fails, too."

Encouraging.

The Herald and Presbyter says:

South Carolina has ratified the national prohibition amendment, thus making five States that are so far on the safe side. It is well to press the matter with all promptness and diligence. We believe that the amendment will be carried, but it will take much earnest enterprise to do it. It must be borne in mind that to carry it demands favorable action in both bodies of thirty-six States, or seventy-two bodies in all; while to defeat it the liquor forces will need to be successful in only one body of each of thirteen States, or thirteen bodies in all. It is a terrific task that is before us, but it is God's work, and with God all things are possible. Let us trust in him and not be afraid.

Those who fayor the amendment being made to the Constitution of the United States should not do less, but should be more vigorous in their opposition to intemperance. Intemperance is a stain upon our civilization that should be wiped out. The strong should help the weak by taking the temptation away from them. There will be enough temptations without the temptation of strong drink.

Charges Made by Germany.

The Herald and Presbyter says that the Germans are charging that the American churches are not supporting the war and are opposed to its prosecution. The editor of this page does not profess to know whether this is true or false; but if it be true, the reason for it is evident. Conscientious objectors and pacifists are much more noisy and write much more about the war than those who have been impelled to enter it from a sense of duty. The editor of the Herald and Presbyter says:

Among the many false charges made by the Germans for the encouragement of their people at home is that the American churches are not supporting the war and are opposed to its prosecution. Nothing is more false, Yet we can see how the enemy might wish for this to be true. The moral support of the churches is of incalculable value. Failing to possess it, the government would be weak. The attitude of our American ministers and churches is that of the most loyal and steadfast support of the government in its battle for human rights. They realize that the victory of the allies is the only way to secure righteous and enduring peace. For this in unstinted measure they are working and praying.

The Poor at Our Own Door.

The perilous times through which we are passing will greatly increase the burdens of the poor. While the demands made by the government are very heavy upon us, we should not neglect the poor; for the poor will feel the need of fuel, food, and clothing more than any other class. Christians should allow their lights to shine, and should display a generosity and a liberality that has hitherto been unknown.

The Christian Standard speaks as follows upon this subject:

The war has fathomed the depths of the human heart, and a liberality such as history has never before recorded is lifted up and out—it shines like the noonday sun.

Aside from the government drives, various war causes are constantly pressed, to each of which the American people heartily respond. The war will burden our government with debt, it will temporarily upset our commerce, and it will wrap homes in crape. On the other hand, it will sober us up, make us more economical, cause us to abolish the liquor traffic, and add blessings that cannot be enumerated. And one of these blessings, already fragrant, is the spirit of philanthropy which broods over every community—it is as a bottle of perfume broken in a room.

However, our liberality—at least, the liberality which is in the limelight—abounds at the touch of the war hand. Our money is given to the cantonment enterprises, the work of love on the blood-stained field, and the unfortunates in countries that have been devastated.

All this we should do; no war call must be unheeded; every drive is as important as is the task of building ships and mobilizing our armies. Yet we cannot afford to forget the Savior's statement: "Ye have the poor always with you."

In time of peace, every city, every town has its poor. The war has not made the poor rich. Already the war has aggravated conditions among the poor, and the situation is likely to be made worse as the war progresses. The poor suffer more than do any other classes as a consequence of higher prices, fuel shortage, etc.

We have not investigated the condition of local charity treasuries. But we are wondering if they are receiving support commensurate with the demands made upon them.

Respond to the war drives; give to the Armenian and Syrian Fund and other foreign causes; help every city which, like Halifax, is hit with a calamity; but do not forget the poor at your own door!

Forgiveness.

There can be nothing of more importance to us than forgiveness. As one's eternal destiny depends on his forgiving others, he should freely forgive all wrongs done him in order that he may be forgiven. The Christian Standard prints the following most excellent thought on forgiveness.

Epictetus said: "Forgiveness is better than revenge; for forgiveness is the sign of a gentle nature, but revenge the sign of a savage nature." And One greater than Epictetus said: "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Likewise, in the model prayer, we find the petition: "Forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors."

The Master declares, in this petition, and in his comment upon it, that we can have no hope of forgiveness so long as there is in the heart a grudge against another. Nor is there room here for argument—he has settled the question.

"I can forgive, but I can't forget," we are prone to say. It would perhaps be impossible to blot the wrong done by another out of memory. We cannot even conceive of God, whose mind sweeps the ages from beginning to end, forgetting anything in the sense of losing memory. However, God does not treasure in his heart the forgiven sins of his people. Nor can we—a sin forgiven cannot be treasured. Johnson, in "The Rambler," wrote: "Of him that hopes Jehnson, in "The Rambler," wrote: "Of him that hopes to be forgiven it is indispensably required that he forgive. It is, therefore, superfluous to urge any other motive. On this great duty eternity is suspended, and to him that refuses to practice it, the throne of mercy is inaccessible, and the Savior of the world has been born in vain."

Capture of Jerusalem of No Military Value.

Some military critics say that the capture of Jerusalem has a sentimental rather than a military value. Without passing on the correctness or incorrectness of this view, it is but fair that we should state that other critics say that General Allenby is actually winning the war in Palestine, and that if Turkey falls away from the Central Alliance, Bulgaria is doomed and the Austro-German armies in Italy must run for their Teutonic holes. One critic suggests that it would "match in fine with the eternal fitness of things if the recovery of the Holy Land should mean the preservation of civilization."

Some Questions on the "Powers That Be." BY M. C. K:

Being pressed for time with numerous other matters upon his hands demanding constant attention, Brother Mc-Quiddy has turned over to me a number of questions which have been submitted for consideration in our columns. It would be contrary to the course adopted by the Gospel Advocate in the present national crisis to discuss at this time some of the questions which have been propounded; but, in the hope of lending timely assistance to honest inquirers making the effort to properly adjust themselves to the present trying situation, we give attention to the following New Testament quotation and queries from Brethren B. F. Camp and W. T. Beasley:

Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power. resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: for he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake. For for this cause pay ye tribute also. (Rom. 13: 1-6.)

- 1. Do "the powers that be" mean earthly governments?
- Would it include the United States government?
- Would it include the German government?
- Would I receive damnation if I were to resist the government of the United States?
- Would I not receive damnation by resisting the German government?

Referring to those who go to the camps and work among the soldiers, as Brother Dunn is doing, another query is:

6. If the government of the United States would not permit us to preach to the soldier boys unless we would trample under foot (1) our conscience, (2) the word of God, (3) the church of God, . . . would it not have would it not have been better for the cause of Christ not to have gone?

Now, as to Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 6, we answer, yes, although. as we saw two weeks ago concerning No. 6, in connection with Brother Dunn's work, the United States government imposes no such restrictions on workers. In the light of queries which still come in, it seems difficult to get some brethren to see the facts here just as they are. Brother Dunn is not a member of the Y. M. C. A., and his work is as far from being through that institution as it ever was at any time in his life. He is not only not in, nor working through, the Y. M. C. A., but it has nothing whatever to do with his work. It is the agency appointed by the civil government to open to all Protestants the field for work among the soldiers; and when they enter that field, their work is wholly separate from, and independent of, that agency precisely as it is separate from, and independent of, the Indian, the Chinese, or the Japanese goverment which opens to them a field for work among its citizens. With thoughtful brethren, it ought to be sufficient to state such facts without wasting time arguing over them. Neither has Brother Dunn, nor have the managers and editors of the Gospel Advocate, who are faithfully and sympathetically trying to minister to the souls and bodies of soldiers, departed in the least from the sacred principle of legalty to God's word and to his church in the work which they are doing, but are as true and unflinchingly devoted to that principle to-day as ever before in their lives.

This leaves Nos. 4 and 5 to be answered. The querist's purpose at this point seems to be to make it appear that. if Christians, under the different governments of earth, undertake, at a time like this, to submit to "the powers that be," they will be arrayed in deadly conflict against each other, and that, therefore, if the Gospel Advocate or anybody else advises them to submit to "the powers that be," they are guilty of advising Christians to array themselves against each other in such deadly conflict.

Now, such reasoning wears the appearance of being plausible, but, after all, there may be more in this situation than the querist imagines. Sometimes a sword has two edges and cuts both ways. Let us see. In substance, one query is: "Would a Christian do wrong if he should resist the government of the United States?" Then, if that question should be answered, "Yes," another is: "Would not a Christian also do wrong if he should resist the German government?" Suppose we should answer unqualifiedly both of these questions in the affirmative and should actually find, if the advice were carried out, that Christians are thus arrayed against each other, then who would be responsible for the conflict? Did the querist not quote that identical advice from the New Testament itself? Does he not refer us to the very passage where an inspired apostle himself gave the advice? Then, who is the author of this command that Christians submit to "the powers that be?" And suppose the consequences of following such a command, under different governments, be ever so dire and calamitous, who is responsible for them? Is the Gospel Advocate? Is the querist, because he repeats the command in the columns of a religious journal? Of course. neither is; but these facts will enable the querist to see that the sword of his question cuts in his own direction precisely as it does in that of any other.

The fact is, this command is from the Lord and is recorded in the New Testament, and it is our duty, of course to show proper respect for it, no matter whether we are in Germany or in the United States. But the question is further pressed: "Would I receive damnation if I were to resist the government?" Well, what does Paul say about it? Quoting from the Common Version, which our querist quotes, here is his exact reply: "They that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." Now, what shall we do about it? Thus, every solitary thing which is here turned back on the Gospel Advocate is turned back on Paul and the New Testament. In other words, the command is in the word of God. It comes from God himself. Hence, whoever attempts to bring those who appeal to it into an inconsistency because Christians may be under the different governments that are arrayed against each other in war is attempting, whether consciously or unconsciously. to bring God and his word into an inconsistency. If not, why not? Hence, no matter whether Christians are in Germany, the United States, or anywhere else, the only consistent course that is open to them is to adjust themselves to whatever situation may be thrust upon them, and to go their full length in doing all that they believe this and other commands of God require of them or permit them to do, and leave the result with him. Surely this course is safe in any part of the world.

On the relative merits of the two particular governments named by the querist, we gladly take occasion to say that some of us most assuredly would not like to be under the German government; but if we were under it, we would either promptly get out from under it, if we could; or, if we could not do this, then, under that government, precisely as here under our own benign and free government, we would try to do whatever we believed God required or permitted, no more and no less, and take the consequences. This course maintains alike respect for the consciences of men, on the one hand, and for the word of God, on the other hand. It does not undertake to dogmatically settle for men specific points where God has spoken to them in general terms only; and, in the light of all available facts in the case, we do not see how it would be possible to pursue a wiser or safer course.

Manifest Mistakes.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Somewhere in some of our many song books is something somewhat similar to this:

"The mistakes of my life have been many, But the sins of my heart have been more,"

I never try to sing that, for the same reason that I never try to sing: "I care not for riches, neither silver nor gold."

I have made so many mistakes, myself, that I am appalled and, figuratively speaking, almost paralyzed sometimes when thinking of their multitude, and of the magnitude of some of them; but I know the sins of my heart have not been more.

I would gladly correct every mistake I have ever made, if I could; but my mistakes are a part of my record, and I can never erase even one of them.

I am neither old enough nor wise enough nor good enough to deem it safe to call much attention to the mistakes of others; but certainly somebody should call attention to some of our manifest mistakes.

So far as my limited observation shows, men make more mistakes at the Lord's table, where they frequently talk and pray, instead of simply giving thanks, as the Bible authorizes, than anywhere else in the service of the Lord.

Very recently, when an elder (?), who manifestly lacks at least seven of the scriptural qualifications of a scriptural elder, publicly expressed thanks to God for "the spilled blood which Christ spilt on Calvary's cross," a devout, sincere sister in Christ said to me: "I do wish our brethren would quit talking about the Savior's spilling his blood. There's no Bible authority for it. There's no truth in it. There's no sense in it. Everybody ought to know all that; but probably some people will talk and preach and pray about 'the spilt blood of the Savior' while the world stands. Still, the Savior never spilt his blood."

That elder made a manifest mistake when he mentioned "the spilled blood which Christ spilt on Calvary's cross;" but we should not wonder at his making a mistake, for brethren made a greater mistake when they made him believe himself to be an elder, notwithstanding he lacked at least seven of the Bible "must's" of being one. What respect for the Bible do we manifest when we ignore seven of its "must's" in making an elder?

It is a manifest mistake to assume that the apostle Paul monopolized the time set apart for the Lord's Supper, "when the discriples came together to break bread" (Acts 20: 7), preaching till midnight before the communion, thus crowding the communion out of its place, beyond the limits of the Lord's day, into Monday.

Of course the disciples did, at the proper time, what they came together to do. Then, after the communion, "Paul preached unto them." The next morning—the morning of the day we call "Monday"—bread was broken for an entirely different purpose—to satisfy the physical demands of Paul and probably others. (Acts 20: 11.)

Probably the most astounding manifest mistake relating in any way to this sacred service is made when the fruit of the vine left in the glasses after the service is preserved and used in similar service some subsequent Sunday Some who read this may think such a thing has never been done; but it has been done, nevertheless. No sane, civilized head of any household, hotel, or boarding house would pour the milk left in the glasses from which guests or others had been drinking back into the pitcher from which it had been poured, and serve it at the next meal. The Lord's table should be the nicest, neatest, cleanest table in all the world, if possible.

Waiving all consideration of the question of whether the fruit of the vine on the Lord's table should be fermented or unfermented, "a certain rich man" made a manifest mistake when he bought a jug of fermented wine—to which some objected—for communion purposes, instead of unfermented, "because," as he publicly stated to the church, "it was twenty-five cents cheaper." The "cents" end of the business was the end that interested him most, regardless of the wishes of others. That certain rich man is still alive, too—physically.

Such mistakes are unfortunate and regrettable, of course, and we should strive to avoid them; but we should remember it is neither logical, charitable, nor Christian to condemn each other because of occasional mistakes. I have not meddled with politics enough to seriously disturb the political equilibrium of the world since our war of the sixties, and I'm not disposed to meddle with politics much now; but the following editorial in the San Antonio Express of January 31 accords so completely with the point I am trying to impress that I shall let it speak for me:

OCCASIONAL, BUT NOT CHARACTERISTIC.

Secretary Baker, in his fine statement of the splendid war work of the nation, admitted that there were faults and failures in every department of the service, but that these faults and failures were occasional, not characteristic. It is a happy statement of the case, and one that is borne out by the investigation. It shows that Mr. Chamberlain's accusation that the War Department has "fallen down" is false. It also proves that President Wilson was correct in describing Mr. Chamberlain's remarks as a distortion of the truth.

There is no commoner fallacy than that of deducing general conclusions from special or exceptional cases. It is the fallacy of the man on the street and of the statesman in the senate. The fallacy consists in drawing too large a conclusion from the premises. A doctor may lose a patient; but, because of that, to say that physician has "fallen down" in practice is to state an untrue conclusion. The inference is too large, hence is false. The most successful practitioner occasionally loses a patient. That is not evidence of a breakdown or a collapse in practice. The occasional loss is not a sign of characteristic incompetence.

This principle is true in character and conduct. Many a good man has occasional lapse. His character should racity, in sincerity, and in charity. His character should not be judged by the isolated lapse, but by his characteristic, regular conduct. There is no man who does not sometic, regular conduct. There is no man who does not sometic, regular conduct. good man has occasional lapses in conduct, lapses in vetimes do things unworthy of his character. This is merely saying man is human. To draw the conclusion that any man who occasionally makes such lapses is a scoundrel is too large an inference from the facts.

This illogical and unfair way, however, is the method of the slanderer and the traducer. Gossip and rumor fly far on the wings of such falsities. The method is at heart uncharitable, dishonest, and untrue.

When Secretary Baker exposed this fallacy in his fine discrimination between the occasional and the characteristic, he not only vindicated his department, but he threw a ray of light on the processes of the human heart.

Congregations and Individuals May Make Merchandise of Preachers and Religion.

BY E. A. E.

Continuing from last week, it may be said that some congregations want preaching on Sundays, but they seem to not be willing to support the preacher. They seek through the week to find some idle preacher whom they can use on the following Sunday. Then what they give him would not support him and his family one day, if It would pay his railroad or street-car fare. This course has the appearance of getting as much preaching as possible at the least cost, or making merchandise of the preacher. True and righteous and Christian people do not want to pursue such a course. They want to be liberal themselves and want to teach the congregation to be liberal.

As true and faithful preachers work so as to accomplish the greatest good, congregations must do the same. There is no difference between the purpose of the preacher and that of the congregation; all are Christians, all have the spirit of Christ, and all work for the accomplishment of the greatest good and the glory of God, each one doing the work to which he is best suited. Each one in the congregation-and, therefore, the whole congregation-is equally responsible to the extent of ability with the preacher for the salvation of the world.

Each congregation should look over its field of operation. note its needs, and spare no money and no pains to cultivate it to the best advantage and greatest results.

The conversion of sinners and the edification of the church, with all these two works embrace, are the two general results sought.

The elders and others may be competent to do some or all of this work. If so, "the elders who rule well" must be "counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and in teaching," because God's law is that the ox when he treads out the corn must not be muzzled, and "the laborer is worthy of his hire." (1 Tim. 5: 17, 18.) Hence there is no way for a congregation to be relieved of this duty of supporting its faithful teachers. From this it is seen that God's rule is that every congregation on earth, when in proper working order, must support faithful preachers and teachers of "the word." The church that does not do this is not fully developed.

Paul shows that there may be two or more such teachers in one congregation, and, when this is true, all should be supported according to their labor. There is a difference in work: "the elders who rule well" must be "counted worthy of double honor;" the ones who do not rule well are not to be so counted; while the ones who "labor in the word and in teaching" are especially "worthy of double honor"-must be supported according to work.

The important questions are: Do we really believe the New Testament? Do we intend to follow it in all things? Should congregations be built up and put to work fully after the New Testament pattern and teaching, and, therefore, with scripturally qualified elders doing their scriptural work and receiving scriptural support?

That which the New Testament says about the qualifications, work, and support of elders seems "idle talk" to many. They seem not to know what God requires here. But the New Testament church can never be restored until all its working force has been set in order according to that book. We cannot stop short of scriptural teachers and preachers and their full and scriptural support. Why not teach and work to this end?

If a congregation has not scripturally qualified elders, doing scriptural work and receiving a scriptural support, then, as Titus worked on the island of Crete and Timothy with the elders and church at Ephesus, the elders and other older and wise ones of the congregation should secure the help of some true, tried, and faithful preacher, who can and will develop the elders and other members and build up the whole church to its full working capacity, and whom it can use and will use to preach the gospel wherever people can be gathered together to hear it and from house to house—that is, to evangelize the surrounding country, as Paul did the country around Ephesus.

If one congregation cannot do so, two or more should support a preacher.

While it is scriptural to use a preacher thus, it is equally unscriptural to use him so as, or to allow him, to destroy the scriptural work and support of the elders and the individual work of any other members of the body of Christ. Every member has his own mission to fill and work to do. No one can do the work of another. "For each man shall bear his own burden." To change God's order at this point is as harmful, as destructive of the church, and as rebellious as to do so at any other point. While all faithful and true preachers of the gospel and all teachers of the church work and pray for the New Testament order of worship on the first day of the week, they must work and pray for the New Testament order of church government, church work, church discipline, and everything else God teaches.

To use and support a preacher as the New Testament requires is right, of course, and a hundredfold better, therefore, than to "trust to luck" to pick up one for the coming Sunday and a different one for every Sunday in the month. Besides, supporting a preacher generously and heartily joining him in the scriptural work of preaching the gospel where it is needed will develop the whole congregation in the grace and blessedness of giving and the great work of helping to save others.

Attending church on Sunday mornings, listening to preaching, contributing some ordinary sum, partaking of the Lord's Supper, and doing all that God requires them (and doing all "in spirit and truth"), while spending the remainder of the day in comfortable ease and the rest of the week in the zealous pursuit of temporal and selfish interests, comes far short of what God requires of his people. The question arises here: Are those who lead this kind of life prepared to worship God "in spirit and truth" on the first day of the week?

"The field is the world," and it must be cultivated by the church, because the church is "the pillar and ground of the truth "-not the preacher only, and certainly not some man-made institution. The church as a whole must engage in and must accomplish this work. The church must do this work, too, as the church, the body of Christ, the temple of the Holy Spirit, the habitation of God.

Unto him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever. Amen. (Eph. 3: 21.)

The church can glorify God only as it fulfills its mission. This institution, as such, has been built in the wisdom and love and power of God and is all-sufficient.

To try to pick up preaching on Sundays at as little cost as possible is not God's order, and is making merchandise of the gospel as much so as any preacher ever did. This sin is as much to be condemned in congregations as in any preacher.

Furthermore, when the cost of living in many respects was not more than one-third of what it is now, some congregations had the custom, made by themselves alone, of giving the preacher a fixed amount for preaching once a month or oftener and for holding a meeting. This amount was small enough, and many times not sufficient to support the preacher then, especially after deducting traveling expenses. But now, when the cost of living all round is almost three times what it was then, they continue to give him the same amount-no more. To increase this amount, as should be done, according to the cost of living, will prove no greater sacrifice on the part of congregations, because the members receive higher wages and three times as much for the products of their farms. Let us count a little: multiply what a congregation gives a preacher for a monthly appointment by four, deduct the traveling expenses, and see if he and his family can live on what he receives. Then, when hindered by sickness or some other unavoidable cause and he receives nothing, can he live? But when he himself is sick or others of his family are sick, it costs him the more to live, and he, therefore, needs the more.

Again, during the winter months, when the cost of living is always the greatest, preachers, except the ones laboring with congregations in towns and cities, receive the least.

But while the cost of living has so much increased, the faithful, true, steadfast, self-sacrificing, and heroic preacher, reaching out still for the good and salvation of the world, must economize, do without, and be thankful for the meager support he receives, fixed by the church fifteen or twenty years ago. Poor fellow! Poor, yet rich, having nothing, and yet having all! But he shrinks not; shirks not; flinches not; is not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; declares "the whole counsel of God;" keeps back nothing that is profitable; seeks the souls and not the money of people; goes not with the multitude to do evil; upholds the church as "the pillar and ground of the truth" and trusts in its all-sufficiency to accomplish all God has ordained it to do; is made strong in weakness; rejoices that he is counted worthy to sacrifice and suffer for Christ's sake; and knows that, while the wicked may flourish for a time, it will still be well with him who clings to the cross and knows nothing save Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

With all the teaching of the Bible on this subject before us, we see that the earnest and true preacher of the gospel is not an object of charity; but that the "carnal things"—the liberal support—which he should receive after he has sown "spiritual things" are his due, as the hire is due the laborer. No honest man treats his physician, his school-teacher, his laborer, etc., as objects of charity. No self-respecting, honest, and faithful preacher will allow himself to be treated as an object of charity. The man who makes himself a kind of religious beggar lacks in dependence and one essential qualification, at least, to make him a useful and true preacher.

A congregation cannot be any more liberal or any better in any way than the men and women who compose it. It has been said a corporation has no conscience; but it has all the conscience which the men who compose it have. So a congregation is as liberal in helping the poor, visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and supporting gospel preachers as the persons who compose it

Some persons in all congregations are more liberal, more faithful, and more godly than others. This is true for at least two reasons: (1) Some are older in the church than others; (2) some have made more progress than others, being more studious of the Bible and striving harder to obey God. But it is impossible for a congregation, as a whole, to advance beyond the liberality, righteousness, godliness, and entire spiritual development of its leaders. Hence, in giving the qualifications of elders, God declares that men not "given to hospitality," who love money and are "greedy of filthy lucre," are unfit to serve. Those who are "no lovers of money," are "not greedy of filthy lucre," and are "given to hospitality" can easily lead others into the same Christian characteristics. Water cannot rise higher than its level, and a congregation can hardly get beyond its leaders. If its leaders are selfish, narrow, ungenerous, niggard, and accustomed to driving close bargains and trying always to get as much of anything for as little as possible, how can the congregation, as such, be otherwise? It is most unfortunate, as well as unscriptural, for congregations to be burdened with such leaders. Sometimes the leaders of a congregation engage in a questionable business, have the spirit of the world, and conduct the affairs of the church after the ways and wisdom of the world instead of according to the teaching of the Bible and spirit of Christ. Under such conditions congregations can never grow and become spiritual and powers for good.

The leaders of congregations must be generous, bighearted, whole-souled, noble-spirited, spiritual-minded, Christlike men—in other words, they must study and know the Bible and must be such men as the New Testament says they must be.

It seems difficult for some congregations and some preachers to see at the same time all sides of questions. Self-interest, pride of opinion, love of popularity, or some other worldly thing blinds them. But all the Bible teaches on all subjects must be studied before all the truth can be known and done and preached.

Preachers sometimes complain of a poor support, while they acknowledge they have never tried to teach all the counsel of God on the subject of giving cheerfully for all purposes for which God teaches his people to give. Preachers and elders are duty bound to God and men to teach all the will of God on this subject, as well as on all subjects—not, as Paul says, that it may be so done unto them, but, as the Bible teaches, for the salvation of those who give. Preachers cannot be selfish, one-sided, one-ideaed, partisan, and preach "the whole counsel of God." God has "called and sent them" to "preach the word"—the preaching which he bids them—to add nothing to it, to take nothing from it.

These articles are the conclusion of the ones begun some months ago. These, with all other articles I have ever written and all sermons I have ever preached, I must meet at the judgment bar of God. All the good or evil all people have done by their daily lives or by writing and preaching will meet them at the judgment. May God have mercy upon us all!

I have just received word of the unexpected death of Sister Alice Martin, and I am sure that all those who knew either Brother or Sister Martin will sympathize with Brother Martin in this great loss. I did not have the privilege of knowing either of them, our two latest missionaries to India, personally; but through their letters and the letters of others about them I have come to know them and appreciate the sacrifice they made in going to India to enter the Master's service in that far-away, sindarkened land.

All those who have followed the work of missions in India will remember that it was a year ago last fall that Brother and Sister Martin left this country for India, and that through Brother Martin's prolonged and serious illness Sister Martin watched over him and cared for him with a patience and trust in God which showed a great strength of character.

After Brother Martin's recovery and a rest in the hills, they both moved to Satara, where they took an active part in helping the other missionaries in the mission work; and all the time they were studying the language to better fit them for the work to be done. Then, on November 21, Sister Martin was called to pass over the river of death. These partings here are sad, and our hearts go out in sympathy to Brother Martin in India, and to the members of Sister Martin's family in this country; but we look forward with a bright and happy hope to the meeting in "the sweet by and by." Our Savior has gone to prepare the mansions above, and we know that all those who have been faithful to him here will meet again in that happy land where there are no more partings or sorrow or tears, but where there will be love and joy and peace in the presence of our Heavenly Father and our Savior.

Contributions sent to Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas, will be forwarded as desired.

To Every Preacher a Missionary.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

There are in the United States about twenty-four hundred preachers of the gospel who are pretty well united as to what its fundamental teachings are. These twentyfour hundred ministers can double the number of workers by a little extra effort, sending these twenty-four hundred new workers into destitute fields at home and abroad. To show how it may be done, I cite a single example: Brother I. B. Bradley, of Dickson, Tenn., a little more than two years ago, took the responsibility of supporting Miss Saran Andrews, of the Dickson church, as a missionary in Japan at the rate of fifty dollars a month. He raised the amount necessary to send her to Japan (two hundred dollars), and, in addition to this, has sent her the full amount promised. with a Christmas gift or two for good count. Our esteemed brother, aside from his duties as minister of the Dickson church, has done this, and seemingly without any strained effort. An occasional article to the papers, with a word spoken privately now and then, coupled with the prayer of faith, has done the work. Neither has his support been cut off nor even diminished by assuming the support of a missionary. The churches are abundantly able to give for the support of both the home preacher and the missionary when they are awakened and made willing.

What Brother Bradley is doing, others can do. average preacher, by the protracted meetings held and the work he does otherwise, ministers to a dozen or more churches during the year. One or two missionary sermons to each of these churches, stating definitely the missionary for whom the offerings are intended, and at the same time telling of the missionary's work and in what country located, pointing the same out on a map, if possible, would bring a response sufficient for his support. If the preacher has no missionary thus to back, he should follow the good example of Brother Bradley and find one. There are many that will go if only they are encouraged. Miss Lillie Cypert is now in Japan, and she and Miss Andrews are living and working together. She is here without a pledge as to her support. I am writing Brother O. E. Billingsley, of Buckner, Ark., who knows our sister and who took special interest in helping her off to Japan, if he will take the responsibility of raising her support. In case this is not practicable for him, it remains for some other brother to come forward and do it.

Acknowledging our last remittance, the secretary of the Polish Victims' Relief Fund writes as follows:

Dear Friend: The contribution of your readers toward the relief of the starving war victims in Poland has been received by us, and we beg of you to accept our most heartfelt thanks for your generosity.

Your generous response to our appeal conclusively proves your interest in our cause, which is the cause of suffering humanity. Thus encouraged, we take the liberty of bringing most respectfully before you the timid request that you forward to some kind friend or acquaintance of yours the inclosed appeal. So many people are still unaware of Poland's plight. Perhaps they would never hear about it otherwise. Their hearts may be touched and God will bless them as he will bless you. Gratefully yours,

W. O. GORSKI, Honorary Executive Secretary.

In the appeal referred to in this letter the committee

For every hundred births there are two hundred and forty deaths. The newly born children die almost immediately, for their mothers have nothing to give them but their tears. Deaths from dysentery, typhus, tuberculosis, and famine are increasing daily.

Eleven million people are entirely dependent upon charity, and German charity provides for no one. It begins and ends at home. Only money can buy food. The sacred duty of caring for those unfortunates is in-cumbent upon the Polish Victims' Relief Fund of New York. Recognized by the State Department in Washington as the only clearing house in this country for the transmission of relief money to the Poles in Poland, this organization must strive to save those who miraculously have escaped death so far. But we are helpless without your help.

It is Germany's obvious aim to exterminate the Polish population, for it stands to reason that a depopulated country is more easily colonized (in this case Germanized) than a land inhabited by undaunted people.

By helping the starving, shelterless Poles, you will be serving the cause of your own country; you will be defeating Germany's aims and ambitions.

A contribution from you, no matter how small, will save one or more lives. A refusal on your part will be equivalent to a death sentence for at least one human being in far-away Poland.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after our own; but the great man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude. With consistency a great soul has simply nothing to do. Speak what you think now, in hard words, and to-morrow speak what to-morrow thinks, in hard words again, though it contradict everything you said to-day.- Emerson.

In Behalf of the Orphans.

The directors of the Tennessee Orphans' Home have asked that the churches throughout the country make a liberal contribution for the care of the orphans on the first Sunday in March. They have not selected this Sunday because it is better than any other Lord's day in the year, but because the needs of the Home are pressing, and what Christians have in mind to do should be done quickly, and it was thought that the date selected would allow ample time to make due announcement and for all to get ready for the contribution. Of course, if it can be taken up sooner, so much the better. By all means let every Christian have fellowship in this good work on the first Sunday in March or as soon thereafter as practical. The funds will be used for wiping out the present debt of the Home and for its maintenance. Here is a fine opportunity for a practical demonstration of that pure and undefiled religion that never forgets the homeless and the suffering. Send all contributions to the Tennessee Orphans' Home, Columbia,

If we seek for glory, let us learn that the highest glory is to forget self and to surrender life for the blessings of others. That is the path by which Christ sought and found it, "leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps."-Alexander Maclaren.

T. Q. Martin, of St. Marys, W. Va., is preaching this week at the Nashville Bible School.

We are now exempt from heatless Mondays. Come to see us on Monday or any other day that suits.

Our invalid brother, J. Will Henley, writes that he is much improved. He is taking treatment at Hot Springs, Ark.

W. J. Higdon, of Pennsboro, W. Va., has been reading the Gospel Advocate "for over forty-five years and does not wish to miss a copy."

Jesse P. Sewell, president of Abilene Christian College, will preach at Russell Street Church, this city, next Sunday. All are invited.

Mrs. Lillie Moore, of Corinth, Miss., says: "I enjoy reading the Gospel Advocate so much, and think it is the finest religious paper published."

W. W. Bates preached for the congregation on Twelfth Avenue, North, this city, last Sunday, morning and night. The attendance was large at both services. There were two restorations.

From Mrs. James Ford, Cookeville, Tenn., February 11: "Just a few lines to tell you how very much I enjoy the Gospel Advocate. It seems that it gets better all the time and is such a source of strength to all Christians who read it. May it live long and continue to do good."

From R. H. Johnson, Booneville, Ark., February 13: "I am now ready to arrange my protracted-meeting work for the year 1918. I have promised a few meetings, but have some time not yet taken. Any congregation wanting my services may address me at Box 244, Booneville, Ark."

T. B. Larimore writes: "I am engaged in a series of meetings at Uvalde, Texas, now. From here I go to Riverside, Cal.; from Riverside to Los Angeles, for a month's meeting, beginning on March 31; from Los Angeles to Hanford; from Hanford to Fresno; and from Fresno to Berkeley."

John E. Dunn is anxious to have a school man and church worker to be associated with him in the work among the soldiers at Camp Sevier. He thinks that one could secure a position as educational director of one of the units. The applicant should be over thirty-one years of age. If interested, write Brother Dunn at Y. M. C. A. Headquarters, Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C.

From W. M. Mann, Aquilla, Texas, Box 235: "On account of the loss of our dear, sweet baby, we have become very much dissatisfied with our location. I have resigned my school and am now looking for a new location. I would be glad to hear from any congregation desiring to locate a preacher. This is my tenth year preaching, and I have taught school the past five winters, but desire now to enter the field again for all of my time. I have time for one or two more meetings in the summer. Who wants the time? I would be glad to hear from some congregation wanting to locate a preacher soon."

From J. C. Estes, 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas, February 13: "I have not been making regular reports this year, but it is not because I have not been busy. I stay busy almost all the time. I have not missed preaching on Sunday from one to three times but once since 1915, and only two times that year. But now, because of a recent change in my work, I have one Sunday to engage anywhere I may be needed. Write me at the above address, if I can help you in the Lord's work in any way by my services. I go to Crandall one Sunday, to Grand Saline one, and to Marietta, Okla., one. I have some promises for donations for the work at Camp Bowie."

From Tice Elkins, Henrietta, Texas, February 15: "I am now living in Henrietta, and like it. I will begin a meeting here the fourth Lord's day in this month, and will do my very best to establish the cause here. No church here now, but one when the meeting is over is my aim. It will take three weeks to do the preaching needed to start with. It will take one hundred dollars to support and pay my expenses to hold the meeting and advertise it, and that must be raised somewhere. Most of it will have to come from those who love the Lord at other places. Are you one of such? Then send your contribution to A. J. Williams, Henrietta, Texas, or direct to me. I am depending on you, and you must help do this work. Do not forget old Brother Mitchell, at Bayside, Texas, and many other deserving ones. I preached at Childress last Sunday, and will go to Charlie next Sunday, and then here at home to begin the siege."

R. E. L. Taylor, of Decherd, Tenn., preached the funeral discourse for the two young men who were slain on February 8 at Estill, Springs, Tenn., by the negro McIlherron. Concerning this sad event he writes: "Two young men are gone-Pearce Rogers, aged twenty-three years, and Jesse Tigrett, aged twenty years. Both met instant death at the hands of an enemy. Neither was a Christian. Rogers leaves a father and mother, two brothers and two sisters, all members of the church of Christ and all living Christian lives, except the two brothers, who have not obeyed the gospel yet. Tigrett leaves a father and mother, also several brothers and sisters. I trust this will be a warning to those that are out of Christ to make ready, for we know not the day nor the hour when the Son of man shall come. This was my first time to conduct a double funeral. The two bodies were placed side by side in the new Center Grove meetinghouse. A large crowd was present. This was the saddest funeral I ever witnessed. Every one present was in sympathy with the relatives of these young men. Both were laid to rest in the Center Grove cemetery."

From J. L. Hines, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, February 8: "I noticed in the Gospel Advocate of January 31 that our good brother, F. B. Srygley, writes of the glories of Florida and shows that he has a very sympathetic heart for the Nashvillians who are being pinched by the cold weather. Brother Srygley, just send me a flower, lest I forget the sunshine. We (wife and I) left Nashville on January 29 for Meaford, where we are to labor during the year 1918. Our first stop-over was at Louisville, Ky., whence we took a side trip to my old home near Springfield, Ky. After spending a few days visiting relatives, we came again to Louisville and went to Campbell Street Church to worship. Brother Kurfees preached a splendid sermon on 'Giving.' We left that city at 1:30 P.M., Sunday, and arrived in Buffalo, N. Y., at 7 A.M., Monday. This far we had an enjoyable time; but from Buffalo to Meaford (about two hundred miles distant), we had to change cars five times. The cold was intense; the wind, brisk. We came through wreckage, ice, snowdrifts, and other things that would make a Southerner feel miserable; but, to cap the climax, when we were within twenty miles of Meaford, our train stuck fast in the snow. It was storming. So when we could not go forward or backward, we were hustled to the baggage car, a coupling pin was removed, and thus we proceeded to our destination. The snow is from two to four feet deep, the temperature about twenty below zero. The people here do not seem to mind the cold. We had a good-sized crowd out to prayer meeting Wednesday night. All are looking forward for greater things for the Lord this year. Pray for us."

CLEANS THE BLOOD TONES THE NERVES

The gratifying results attending the faithful use of the new medici-nal combination, Hood's Sarsapa-rilla before eating and Peptiron after eating, are seen in purer blood, stronger nerves, improved condition of the whole system.

They are results that make this course of treatment the most economical for sufferers from impure, impoverished blood, weak, unsteady nerves-no other accomplishes so much for each cent expended.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Peptiron aid each other, and to take both is to derive a four-fold benefit.

If a laxative is needed in connection with them, the gentle and thor moth Hood's Pills should be used.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" FOR LIVER AND BOWELS

Sick Headache, Constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath—Candy Cathartic.

No odds how bad your liver, stomach, or bowels, how much your head aches, how miserable you are from constipation, indigestion, biliousness, and sluggish bowels, you always get relief with Cascarets. They immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. A ten-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean, stomach sweet, and head clear for months. They work while you sleep.

Watch the Baby.

If he is fretful, restless, and out of sorts, you can trace the cause to his stomach and liver. If the bowels do not act regularly, there is a possible danger of serious illness. Constipation, if allowed to continue, may produce self-poisoning or autointoxication, and this condition should be promptly rectified. The best general tonic for the baby or for the older folks is Plantation Chill and Fever Tonic and Liver Regulator, a purely vegetable compound. It contains no calomel or other injurious drugs. Highly recom-mended for babies and growing children. It excites and invigorates sluggish livers and puts you on your feet again. Buy a bottle and keep it handy. Price, 50 cents. The Christian Home. No. 12. BY M. S. MASON.

But as I pressed my farewell kiss upon its cold brow, the heaviness of mourning would be lifted from my bosom as into one ear of my heart Conscience would whisper, "You were true to your trust," and into the other Hope would whisper as to David of old: "You cannot call it back to you, but you can go to it." But if I had been so tender-hearted that when my child was wayward I had suffered him to go on rather than punish him and redeem him from error, and he had traveled downward till one night in the licensed saloon in a drunken brawl he was stabbed to death, and that girl had left my roof and joined the ranks of those at whom the world points the finger of shame, I would go to that boy's grave and hide my face on that mound and weep till every bit of clay was moistened with my tears, and would pray God that he might take me away and no longer have me suffer the piercing heart pangs that rend my bosom as I watch the daily walks and nightly revels of a lost daughter.

Many parents say: "I know I ought to be firmer with my children, but 1 just love them too much to be harsh with them." Now let me say to you that you do not really love your children. Your love is not a real love. It isn't a full love. It does not accomplish enough, and it may, through its weakness, fail to accomplish anything. May I define love, not to the young people, but the old people? Love is that emotion of the human soul that seeks the highest good of the individual toward whom it is directed. I dislike that kind of so-called "love" that only manifests itself when your young son has been punished by the teacher and builds a barricade of family protection about the poor, persecuted little darling, or howls in jealous rage when your daughter is defeated in a contest, and declares all over town that it was a case of fraud and partiality. That kind of so-called "love" is too spasmodic, reckless, and ignorant. If you really love your children, you will keep calm in both cases; for in the former you foster disobedience, and in the latter you set a very evil example. A few years ago a lad from our town was arraigned in court. I attended his trial. By his side in the courtroom sat his father and mother and two brothers, all rallying to his support in time of trouble. Now, 1 had been watching that boy for months and months, and I knew he would sconer or later be in trouble. He was a disturber at church. He

A Novel Method and Very Effective -Costs but Little to Try.

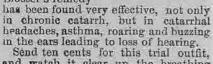

There is a way out of every difficulty, and those who suffer from catarrh can learn of a pleasant and novel method of relief if they will take the trouble to write a brief letter.

In Atlanta there is a respected physician who has been treating catarrh successfully by a unique plan, for over forty-three years, and yet a lot of catarrh sufferers don't know about him. He dorsn't advise internal medicines, which may upset the stomach, nor sprays, salves and such things, which cannot reach far back enough. His is the smoke-vapor method, and is produced by a remedy made from such natural medicinal agents as herbs, flowers and berries.

By writing to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 881 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and enclosing ten stamps, he will forward a trial outfit ready for you to use. Dr. Blosser's remedy and watch it clear up the breathing tubes so that you will feel you could have saved yourself a lot of suffering and trouble if you had heard of Dr. Blosser's Remedy before.

Calomel To-Day, Sick To-Morrow

Dose of Nasty Calomel Makes You Sick and You Lose a Day's Work.

Calomel salivates! It's mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile, it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel bilious, headachy, constipated, and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a fifty-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful; and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel to-day, you'll be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you; while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone, you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition, and ready for work or play. It's harmless, pleasant, and safe to give to children; they like it.

of much evil. But I never knew of any family gathering to warn him of the end of the way he was traveling and arrest him in his reckless career. No, nothing said or done to keep him out of trouble; but when he gets into trouble, then mother becomes frantic, sister faints, and father and brother scour the country for bondsmen to keep him out of jail. You struggle nobly to get them out when they get in. Why not struggle just as nobly to keep them from ever getting in?

I know a man who had a very refractory daughter. She was positively vicious. He had done all in his power to reform her, but had failed. She became guilty of a finable offense. He called his daughter to him and spoke tenderly, yet firmly, and said: "Daughter, I have advised you and taught you, prayed for you, and I have always come to your rescue, but you are still a bad girl. Now, though it casts the dark shadow of disgrace over our proud family name and pulls deeply at our very heartstrings, this time I am going to let you face your troubles alone; and that may teach you the lesson that during all these years, with my most earnest and patient effort, you have failed to learn. You go to jail." And there in prison, suffering the reproach of friends, relatives, and vulgar criminals, a rich, educated young lady of high social standing paid her fine. She came out reformed. She was saved to loved ones' society and to God by what conservatives call a "very radical parent;" and one soul saved is worth any price it may cost.

That father had real love. That is my love-the love that saves the child. Fathers, don't bail your boys out and pay their fines and uphold them in their waywardness till they lose their souls. Let them break rocks on the streets; let them suffer the penalties of their own misdeeds; let them even go to jail. It may take that to save them. Parents, quit being domestic scapegoats, bearing on your own heads all the sins of the children. With every stroke of the sledge on the rock pile they will make a moral resolution, and in the loneliness of the prison cell they will have time to think, and for the first time in life they will realize their duty to themselves, their fellow men, and their God. It is ten thousand times more honorable to pound rocks on the street than to stack money at the gambling table, and ten thousand times nobler to go to jail than to spend a life of sugar-coated respectability and spend eternity in hell. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." So let me plead with you not to stop short of anything less than the correction that will make "I Would Not Part with it for $10.000"

Prophecy and the Jews "Startling Fulfillment of the Prophecies Concerning the Jews in the Last Days."

By the Rev. Jacob H. Rosenberg, Supt. of the Hebrew Christian Association.

We are sure that it will open the eyes and convince anyone who will read it. It is impossible to secure stronger proof of the inspiration of the Scriptures, also of the fact that we are living in the end of this age, than is found in this booklet.

Written by a converted Jew, an ordained minister of the Gospei who has made careful study of prophecy from a Jewish point of view. You will be impressed in reading this pamphilet with this fact, that the finest interpreter of the Scriptures is the converted Jew. The facts contained are positively startling and intensely interesting.

your children the pride of your declining years and an ornament to the nation

But some fathers say: "Let the boy go. He's just sowing his wild oats." There was never a more damnable doctrine used to excuse the conduct of bad children than that of "sowing wild oats." It would not be so serious if he could spend his youth in riotous pleasure and the remainder of his life in usefulness; but what a man does the first thirty years of his life, he is most likely to do until his death. That's the formative period of his life. That is the time when he is making habits. That is his sowing time.

To the Churches Scattered Abroad.

BY H. L. WALLING.

Peter taught the church at Jerusalem to be steadfast in the apostles' doctrine, fellowship, breaking bread, and in prayers. First, the teaching; second, the contribution; third, the Lord's Supper; then sing a hymn, then dismiss. There was no foot washing; that was done at Bethany, at Simon's house. Martha and Mary were there. I advise to make all appointments before the contribution and the Supper. We thank the Lord for bread, not a loaf. Unleavened bread is not a loaf. The dictionary says a loaf is a large lump of bread-baker's bread (it is leavened). We use unleavened bread and the fruit of the vine (grape). Why do some call unleavened bread a "loaf?"

Shall Olive Avenue Have a Church?

BY J. A. CULLUM.

Brethren, this question can only be answered by you. We are now between two fires. We are not able to build without more assistance. We have quite a little building fund on deposit now, drawing three per cent interest. The congregation here is adding forty dollars a month to this amount. We are not going to be extravagant, but must have a comfortable place of worship. Brother, sister, I appeal direct to you, send us one dollar on our building, that we may have our new house. We are now worshiping in an old, forsaken schoolhouse which is in bad repair. We cannot lease it, so cannot afford to spend money fixing it up. Our stay there is limited. We may be thrown out any time. Our congregation will then scatter, there being no other building in this part of the city to be had. Come to our rescue with any amount you can spare, from twenty-five cents to ten dollars. Let me hear from you at once. Address me at 264 Haynes Avenue, Memphis, Tenn.

GRANDMA NEVER LET HER HAIR GET GRAY

Kept Her Locks Youthful, Dark, and Glossy with Common Garden Sage and Sulphur.

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it is done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. For fifty cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy, and luxuriant.

Gray faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age; and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and look years younger. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful tollet requisite and not a medicine. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

Riordan.

Aneliza Riordan was born on November 23, 1896; was "born again" on November 6, 1917; and died on November 26, 1917. Three days before she died I called to see her, and by her request read the fourteenth chapter of the control of th ter of John. As I raised from bending knee, she smiled and said: "I am quite young yet; but if it is God's will for me to go, I am ready." It is diffi-cult to comprehend the circumstance "I am of life and the providence of God, but we rejoice to believe that God does all things well and that "all things work together for good to them that love God." A great number of friends from far and near, as well as relatives, gathered in order to pay their last respects at the funeral services, which were conducted by the writer.

EMMETT CREACY.

Helm.

Bettie Helm (formerly Miss Bettie Dillehay) died at her home near Comer, Ky., on January 11, 1918. She was born on August 19, 1861, and was fifty-six years of age. She obeyed the gospel in early days and lived a faithful, Christian life. She was mar ried to Robert Helm on May 12, 1895. She was a faithful and loving wife, kind and attentive to the sick, and her kind advice was always thrown around those who stood in need of it. She had a sunny, cheerful disposition, and endured her affliction with much patience. Although no little ones blessed her home, she possessed the ability to fill woman's God-given mission, and never failed to instill into young and tender minds of any she came in contact with good morals and true principles. She leaves a husband and many friends and relatives to mourn her death. Little Fireline.

Lewis.

Brother John Lewis, son of Brother and Sister Grant Lewis, of Tigrett, Tenn., was born on December 1, 1894, and departed this life, at Camp Jackson, on January 4, 1918. His body was brought back to Tigrett, and, after a short funeral service by the writer, in the presence of a large crowd of friends and loved ones, the body was laid away at Bowen's Chapel, there to await the resurrection. He was one of the best boys of our country; and while he had been in training as a soldier of the United States Army, he had been a soldier of the cross for several years. He was faithful and true to his duty as a Christian and was greatly loved by the whole church t Bethel, of which he was a member. He has gone from us; and we, too, will soon be called on to cross over the river of death. We should not weep when God's children are called from this land of sorrow, remembering that "precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." (Ps. 116: 15.) W. R. HASSELL.

Gammill.

Wilks Gammill was born on June 24, 1840, and died, at Waldo, Ark., on January 11, 1918. "A prince has fallen January 11, 1918. in Israel." Another of God's faithful children has been called home. "Uncle Wilks," as he was familiarly home. called, was beloved and respected by all who knew him. He was a pillar in the church of Christ, for which he labored and suffered for half a century. He leaves a wife, three daughters, and many kinfolks to mourn his departure. He was indeed a ripe sheaf, ready to be garnered. He sutfered much in his last illness, but made no complaint. He said he had been washed in the blood of the Lamb, and that, like Paul, he had fought a good fight, had finished his course and kept the faith, and was ready for the summons. He died, as he had lived, trusting in the promises of God. The wife and daughters have lost their dearest earthly friend; the church, a faithful member; and all of us, a dear friend and brother. May our God comfort and bless the dear ones left behind. We laid his body to rest in the city of the dead at Millville, Ark., on January 12, while the earth was mantled with snow. Burial services were conducted by the writer.

was made elder of the church in 1877. At old New Hope he joined by experience and baptism, December 2, 1877, and served until organization of the Hope Church in 1886. He was elder in that church until about twelve years ago, when he heard and accepted the present truth. He was afflicted with paralysis in his feet and legs for a number of years, yet he continued circulating his literature to his friends as long as he lived. He was a valiant soldier in the Civil War. He came home and was married on January 4, 1874, to Miss Matilda S. Arrington, six miles from Lebanon, Wilson County, Tenn., where she was reared. He was free to give to the church of God. He was a cheerful giver. He would give to the poor and preachers hundreds of dollars in one year. He was often singing and rejoicing in the Lord. He said, a few days before he died, he saw beautiful angels around him. How much better it is for a Christian to die than it is for a sinner! He was always warning sinners to do better and seek the Lord. He was honest and a lover of the truth. He had many friends. He was a good father and husband. He has gone on to meet our beloved ones over there, where we will be at rest with the children of God. Let us all try and be ready to meet our friends over there. His funeral was conducted by Brother L. B. Shannon, of Nashville, Tenn., as-sisted by Dr. Pritchard, of Lebanou and Brother Frank Coiwell. A host of relatives and friends were present. The pallbearers were six boys of J. C. Arrington-his nephews. His remains were conveyed to his last resting place at the home where he was reared.

Thin, brittle, colorless, and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff-that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life, eventually producing a feverish-ness and itching of the scalp, which, if not remedied, causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine to-night, now, any time, will surely save your hair.

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KID-NEYS ACT BADLY

Take Tablepoonful of Salts if Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers— Drink Lots of Water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork. They get sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog, and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back, or the urine is cloudy and full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach, or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning, and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

In Memory of David Lipscomb.

BY H. W. JONES.

I keenly feel the loss of our venerable brother and great helper in the Lord. I loved Brother Lipscomb for his "work's sake." (1 Thess. 5: 12, 13.) I esteemed him for his simplicity of manners, rugged honesty, and great abilities. D. Lipscomb, T. R. Burnett, and John T. Poe have long been three of my favorite preachers and writers. But-alas!-they are all gone! But, thank God, they leave good examples of noble lives behind them. Yes, in the language of the great American Big Events in Small Territory.

Perhaps it is because the maps from which children used to learn Bible geography were on a large scale that most of us have failed to realize how narrow were the limits within which took place all those great doings that fill the books of Samuel and Kings. Macon, February 12.-The work at Macon has been moving along fairly well, considering the many obstacles we have met with since moving here last November. One hundred and twenty-five dollars has been paid (by one brother) on the church property. This leaves only sixty dollars to be paid. Some improvements need to be made on the building soon. Brother S. H. Hall is to conduct a mission meeting in another part of the city this year, and we expect to try hard to start another congregation. Twelve boys who are members of the church have been found at Camp Wheeler, nine miles out from town. others whom relatives or friends have written about have been looked after and invited to church in Macon. Some are in at almost every service. I have made four trips to the camp on their behalf. I want to arrange for a service with them each Sunday afternoon, as they cannot get off to worship with us regularly. I have taken German measles, also mumps, from the soldiers, but expect to continue the work with them, for, as some one re-cently said, "they will soon be gone." If any one who reads this has a friend or relative in camp whom I should see, send me the address, and I will look him up and invite him to church and do whatever else I can for his good. A sister recently wrote me to see her son who is at the camp, and inclosed a dollar bill to pay the fare. This was not objectionable, as it always costs something to go there and back, and a dollar is the fare in an automobile. Train fare is cheaper. Do not fail to write me about your friends or acquaintances on account of the above suggestion. I make it because some do not think or know of the expense, besides other considerations. Stop, February 11.—Brother J. D. Wallen preached his farewell sermon here Saturday night for a while. He goes from here to Winchester. Brother Wallen has been in Wayne County for four years, and we regret that he is leaving us. There may be preachers that can make more disciples than Brother Wallen, but surely not better ones. When he makes a disciple, he is one whose tongue is never still and whom all sects dread. Brother Wallen leaves the disciples of Wayne County well organized. He is loved by all, but he thinks he has been with us long enough and that some one else can do more at present. We pray the Lord to bless him and his work for the kingdom, and that he may preach the good news to fallen men and women for many years.—W. C. Ramsey.

Former Health Commissioner Says Nuxated Iron

Should Be Used in Every Hospital and Prescribed by Every Physician—Attributes His own Great Physical Activity Today at Over 60 Years of Age Largely to His Personal Use of Nuxated Iron

WHAT FORMER HEALTH COMMISSIONER KERR SAYS

"As Health Commissioner of the City of Chicago, I was importuned many times to recommend different medicines, mineral waters, etc. Never yet have I gone on record as favoring any particular remedy, but I feel that in Nuxated Iron an exception should be made to the rule. I have taken Nuxated Iron myself and experienced its health-giring strength-building effect, and in the interest of the public welfare, I feel it my duty to make known the results of its nae. I am well past my three-score years and want to say that I believe that my own great physical activity is due largely today to my personal use of Nuxated Iron, and if my endorsement shall induce anaemic, nervous, run-down men and women to take Nuxated Iron, and receive the wonderful tonic benefits which I have received. I shall feel greatly gratified that I made an exception to my life-long rule in recommending it. From my own experience with Nuxated Iron, I feel that it is such a valuable remedy that it ought to be used in every hospital and prescribed by every physician in this country."

NOTE—Nuxated Iron, which has been used by Former Health Commissioner Kerr with such surprising results, and which is prescribed and recommended by physicians, is not a secret remedy, out one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

Former Health Commissioner Kerr has given years of his life fighting for public health in his own and other cities. It was he who introduced Anti-toxin ton Diphtheria in Chicago's Health Department. He purified the milk for the Consumers and thereby helped to save the lives of thousands of babies. He introduced the anti-spitting ordinance which has been copied all over the country and also took care of the sewers and garbage in the interest of public health. He is positive that the widespread use of Nuxated Iron would greatly lessen the worries and troubles of Health Commissioners in keeping up a high standard of public health.

Council Hill, February 10 .- I was with the faithful few here at home today and preached for them. We had a splendid service, with one confession. We are doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances. Brother J. B. Nelson will hold a meeting for us in the spring, at which time we expect to accomplish great things. I will preach at Muskogee next Sunday. We have a nice little congregation there, and the work is moving right along, regardless of the war and other hindering causes. I have done no singing-school work since the normal at Hoxie, Ark. I have been at home with my wife and babies during the severe winter weather. I appreciate the rest for my throat and voice. I have been doing manual labor in order to keep "the wolf from the door." I am working for the Oklahoma Pipe Line Company, digging ditches and laying pipe at three dollars and fifty cents per day. That is not much of a salary, but it is fine physical exercise. I have some singing schools to teach soon. I am only waiting for the winter to break and spring to come. My time is contracted for the summer; but if you need a singing school this spring or next fall, write me, and I will try to arrange to come. My terms are reasonable, considering the high cost of living.—Will W. Slater.

Dallas, February 4.—We had a spir itual feast at Pearl and Bryan Streets church of Christ yesterday. One sister who had strayed to the Baptists came back home confessing her errors, one who had fallen returned to his "first love," one from the "Christian Church" renounced such errors as are practiced by them, and one from Southside-Central Church, of Fort Worth, took fellowship. We are planning to evangelize the county. We have started a union effort of all congregations here in Dallas, and aim to enlist all the churches of the county before we quit, if possible. We will not form any new society for this work, but work through the one the Lord formed—his church—to reach every person in this city and county who has "a good and honest heart."

An Aged Father Passes Away.

BY HERBERT E. WINKLER

On Monday, December 3, 1917, at 9 A.M., my father, Peyton Herbert Winkler, of Nashville, Tenn., after six days of severe illness, the crisis of declining health of six months' duration, quit the walks of this life and entered into the beyond. He was in his eightieth year.

He was born near Carthage, Smith County, Tenn., on November 11, 1838. He was a Confederate Veteran, having served nearly four years in the Civil War. He was severely wounded and captured by the Federals in the battle of Atlanta, Ga.

After the war he settled in Nashville, and in 1869 he was married to Carrie Alice Lassiter, formerly of Goodlettsville, Tenn. To this union were born five girls and seven boys One boy and three girls died thirtyseven years ago, three of them dying at the same time of scarlet fever. Father's death was the first in the immediate family since that time.

Thirteen years of his life were spent in the United States mail service here, during which time he delivered all the mail east of the river.

He and mother were formerly Methodists. Sometime in the nineties they moved to Cheatham County, Tenn., where they later obeyed the gospel. The older he became, the stronger he grew in the faith.

About sixty years ago he entered the Odd Fellows fraternity, and there remained until his death, doing much work in that order that should have been done in the church through Christ. Paul says: "Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen." (Eph. 3; 21.) If all would learn to do all in the name of Christ, the church would do greater

He was a father indeed to his boys, who for the most part appreciated his counsel in the business of life after they were all married and had families of their own. The last service they did for him was to bear his remains to the cemetery.

Brethren J. E. Acuff and L. M. Jack son conducted the funeral services at the Charlotte Avenue church of Christ and the Odd Fellows held services at the grave. He was laid away in the family lot at Mount Olivet.

Again we are impressed with the fact that we, too, shall go the way of all the earth. Let us watch and be ready for that day.

Humors Come to the Surface in the spring as in no other season. They don't run themselves all off that way, however, but mostly remain in the system. Hood's Sarsaparilla removes them, wards off danger, makes good health sure.

SAVE ONE-THIRD THE GOST

On High Grade Pianos and Player-Pianos By Placing Your Order Through

Gospel Advocate Piano Club

The club is the greatest money saving plan ever devised for the distribution of pianos, but the big saving in price is only one of the many attractive features which has made the club so popular and successful

Main Features of the Club.

1. By uniting our orders in a big club of one hundred buyers, we secure the lowest possible factory price for each club member, thereby, saving fully one-third the cost of high grade pianos and player-pianos. As the management secures the other ninety-nine members, all you have to do is to place your order. The management finances the club and your piano is shipped at once.

2. We secure for each club member the most convenient terms of easy monthly, quarterly or annual payments based on the lowest cash price and without the customary overcharge for time payments.

3. We furnish the club members with "High Art Pianos" made of the best material the market affords, by skilled workmen, on the most approved patterns. The quality and durability of the instruments are unsurpassed and they are fully guaranteed by the Associated Piano Clubs, and the piano manufacturers, representing a combined capital of over two million dollars. Thus buying through the club avoids the disappointment which so often results from dealing with unknown firms. The club member has the privilege of returning the piano and getting back every dollar he has paid on it, if a thirty days trial in his own home does not prove it to be exactly as represented. The club member incurs no expense whatever in connection with the trial of the instrument, and assumes no obligation to keep it or pay for it unless he is thoroughly pleased. As yet no instruments have been returned; but in case any are returned, freight both ways is paid by the factory.

Permanent Guarantee

Each instrument is permanently guaranteed both by the manufacturers and by the Associated Piano Clubs against all imperfections, workmanship and material. Everything connected with each instrument is genuine and is so guaranteed.

Write for your copy of the beautifully illustrated catalogue and further information on the club plan. After making your selection from the catalogue fill out the "Approval Test Blank" which accompanies the catalogue, and let us send the instrument freight prepaid, for your approval. Do not send any money until you have tried the piano or player-piano and have decided to keep it. The factory will prepay the freight, and there will be no charge for the trial. You can return the instrument to the factory, at the factory's expense, if you don't like it after thirty days trial. All this means that we insure your perfect satisfaction. Address the managers,

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir: Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years, and have always had trouble with it till I got your appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits neat and saug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable Godsend to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it. My rupture is now all healed up, and nothing ever did it but your appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself, I will say a good word for your appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am,

Yours very sincerely,

The Writers of the Four Gospels.

TRIBUTE TO J. K. P. WILKINSON

The Bible is an inspired book. We should cherish that faith that recognizes God as the Author of every sentence and understand that every word is profitable unto us. The true prophets spoke from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit. The first four writers of the New Testament had the same inspiration and guidance. While God guided and overruled their labors, he did not take away their natural capabilities. He permitted each one to tell the story of the Christ after his own fashion, writing down that teaching or miracle or incident in Jesus' life that especially impressed him. God saw to it that all the Gospels taken together should make a perfect narrative, unmixed with human error and unmarred by human weakness. The writers, apparently perfectly oblivious of themselves, were utterly lost in the contemplation of Him whose story they tell. Their remarkable and beautiful humility will ever be a source of wonder and admiration to earnest students of the word.

In his book of twenty-eight chapters, Matthew, who was probably a kinsman of Jesus and wealthy, records literally nothing about himself, except his call and the farewell feast. There is no doubt, however, as to who Matthew was. He was a publican, a taxgatherer under the Roman kingdom and government. He knew more about kingly attributes, habits, and customs than did any of the other disciples. Therefore he was well suited to portray Jesus to the world as the King. Hence his book has been called a "gospel of the kingdom." When we give this Gospel a faithful reading, we may lose sight of Matthew, but we can but praise Jesus Christ, "who is the faithful witness, the firstborn of the dead, and the ruler of the kings of the earth," and who hath "made us to be a kingdom, to be priests unto his God and Father; to him be the glory and the dominion forever and ever. Amen."

Mark.

The writer of the second book in the New Testament conceals himself from view. Unless he was the young man mentioned in Mark 14: 51, 52, no clew is given as to his identity. From Acts we learn that he was the minister of Paul and Barnabas. "Minister" here means a servant. Thus himself occupying a servant's place and being largely under the influence of Simon Peter, who styles himself a "servant of Jesus Christ," he would certainly be a good man to write of Jesus in a life of service and portray him as the servant of God, doing the will of the Father. Mark, by his own humility, affords a fine example of Jesus' words: "If any man would be first, he shall be last of all, and servant of all." Only an all-wise God would have selected such a man to become a humble instrumentality for the revelation of his Son's life of service to humanity.

Luke. .

Some have thought that Luke was one of the seventy. Others contend that he was one of the two who walked with Jesus from Jerusalem to Emmaus. But we have no means, from his Gospel, by which to detect him. In the Colossian letter he is referred to as "Luke, the beloved physician." As a physician, he would be thoroughly acquainted with the make-up of the human body. He would know about bones and blood and nerves and physical appetite and ailments. Therefore it was becoming that Luke more than any other should present the man side of the God-man, thus enabling all to recognize in Him a brother, bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh. Just here Canon Farrar's question is apropos: "What Jewish forger would select a publican, a wavering servant, and a Gentile doctor as names under which to impose on the public?" There is no better or higher proof of the genuineness of the New Testament record than the character and standing of the first three evangelists. Only God could have used them in such a wonderful way.

And John.

It is thought that John was the youngest and most impressionable of all the apostles when they first came with Jesus. Within the circle of the twelve there was an inner circle of three-Peter, James, and John. Within the circle of three there was one man closer to Jesus than the other two. This was John, who leaned on Jesus' breast at supper. He saw Jesus transfigured, watched his agony in the garden, gazed upon him on the cross, apparently drank more deeply of his spirit and loved him with a more constant and controlling love than any one of his followers. He did not write his Gospel until old age had ripened and mellowed his experience and God had permitted him on the far-away isle of Patmos to catch wonderful visions of "the very same Jesus." Thus John was well chosen to especially portray Jesus to the world as the divine Christ. God used both his knowledge and experience to the highest advantage.

God's Hand In It All.

It is important to remember that "God's hand was in it all." He did not allow any one of the four writers to make a single mistake in setting down their conception of Jesus. Matthew's "gospel of the kingdom" must be true in word and fact; Mark's portrayal of the servant of all must not be lacking in any point, nor must it be overdone; Luke's picture of the human side must not be colored with any speculative view; John's delineation of the Son must be such as would please the Father. Every line must be just right. And it is. For God himself inspired the men who wrote these all-important records. But because these Gospels were intended for human eyes, God also saw to it that, in so far as consistent with the divine standard of truth and righteousness, they should reveal the result of human touch and observation. As John puts it: "That which was from the beginning, that which we have heard, that which we have seen with our eyes, that which we beheld, and our hands handled, concerning the Word of life (and the life was manifested, and we have seen, and bear witness, and declare unto you the life, the eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us); that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you also, that ye also may have fellowship with us: yea, and our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ: and these things we write, that our joy may be made full." (1 John 1: 1-4.)

What Shall We Do?

In the parable of the good Samaritan it is said of the priest: "And he passed by on the other side." It is further said that a Levite came where he was, "and looked on him, and passed by on the other side." A Samaritan came that way, "and went to him, and bound up his wounds. pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him." Christ then asked: "Who was neighbor to him that fell among thieves?" And the lawyer said: "He that did good to him." Theoretically, the priest and the Levite were more nearly right, religiously, than any other class of people of that day. They had the law; they were Israelites; they served the temple. It was their duty to help the helpless and administer to those in need and distress. The opportunity was before them. The test was to be made. "They passed by on the other side." The Samaritan was religlously wrong in his theory. He had not the law; he was not of the temple; but he "took care of him."

To-day we have a condition such as this generation has never known. The young men of our country have been called into the service of our nation. These young men have been placed in cantonments for training. They have been taken from father, mother, and childhood surroundings and placed in strange places under strange surroundings. Many of them are members of the church of Christ. Thousands of them are sons of Christian parents. They are now in the formative period of life. Temptation besets them upon every hand. They need our religious influence; they need our help; they need the pure gospel of Christ; they need some one to comfort them in sorrow and sickness; they need some one to exhort them to a clean, pure life; they need good, wholesome literature.

Now, what shall we do? Shall we, like the priest and the Levite, "pass by on the other side?" Or shall we, like the Samaritan, go to them, "pouring in oil and wine?"

Three months ago, while in Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas, I saw the need of much work among the soldier boys. I noted the great activity of the denominations in "doing their bit" for the boys there. I saw tabernacles erected to the memory of denominationalism. Protracted meetings were being held in these tabernacles. The boys were being helped. After some hours spent in the camps, I finally reached a peak from which I could get a fine view of the camp. The boys, by the thousands, were drilling upon every hand. Flying machines were speeding through the air. I lifted my heart to God and made an earnest prayer to him that in that camp there might be erected, in memory of Christ, a tabernacle large enough to seat six or eight hundred people, with reading and writing rooms attached thereto—a place to which we might invite the boys in camp to hear the pure gospel; a place where son could invite father or mother and say, "Meet me at the tabernacle of the church of Christ;" a place where the Christian boy could invite his comrade; a religious home for the boy in camp and the father and mother when visiting the camp.

I at once began an agitation for the erection of this building. I said that we must have a building, and a good one. We must have a good location. I wanted to begin the erection of the building by February 15. We must be ready for the spring drive. My home congregation, at Sherman, Texas, said: "You are the man for the work." Brethren and sisters began to respond to my appeal. I told them it must be a good tabernacle or none. I arranged with the Continental Bank and Trust Company, of Fort Worth, to care for the funds. I told the brethren that the money sent would be placed in the bank and held in trust for this purpose; and if, for any reason, we could not erect a tabernacle that would be an honor to the cause we love, the money would be returned. I placed the minimum at not less than three thousand dollars. We should have at least five thousand. Two thousand has been promised. I am anxious to start the building. I ask you to help me. I ask you to help these boys.

Now, shall we "do our bit," or shall we, like the priest and the Levite, pass by "on the other side?" If you, dear reader, are willing to help, go to the work at once. Head a subscription and go with it to the brethren and sisters of your community. If, for any reason, you cannot do this, will you please hand this article to some faithful sister who loves God and the boys of our country? Sister, will you help me help the boys? Brother, can you look your son or your neighbor's son in the face, after this cruel war is over, and ask him to accept the kind of religion you profess, if you have "passed by on the other side?"

Send all donations as follows: J. H. Lawson, Camp Bowie Fund, Continental Bank and Trust Company, Fort Worth, Texas. Do not delay if you intend to help, for we have already waited too long. O, if we could but only realize the need of "doing our bit!" God help us to do our best.

God's Universal Love.

BY V. I. STIRMAN.

"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.)

That two classes are represented in this verse of scripture seems quite clear to me-the one referring universally to the one class, while to the second class it is specific, which harmonizes with the general trend of scripture teaching. In offering salvation to a lost world, the call of God was universal; since then he has made many restricted calls as circumstances would arise. He called Moses and Aaron to go into Egypt and bring the children into the land of Palestine; he called Aaron and his sons to the priesthood; and in this verse we learn of another specific call, the first of the text being universal, the second being specific. Now, to whom does the specific call apply? To the apostles of Christ, as the sequel clearly shows. At verse 31 of this chapter the writer, Paul, uses the words "we" and "us," thus showing that he is, or was, one of this specific call. At verse 33 he calls them "God's elect," which is quite significant. Beginning at verse 29, to show a reason, he begins with the word "for"-"For whom he [God] did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." Verse 30: "Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified." Then, at the next verse, he uses the "we" and the "us," as previously noticed.

Now, that we be not tedious, we go to the Ephesian letter to show the connection between the "called" of our text and that of the Ephesian letter, which reads: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." (Eph. 1: 3.) Here we ask, who are the blessed of this verse? The apostles. What further does he say of them? "He hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world [Christian era]." What else does he say of them? "That we should be holy and without blame before him in love." Anything more? "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: that we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ." (Eph. 1: 1-12.) If, therefore, we have shown that those who first trusted in Christ, of Ephesians, are the apostles of Christ, then it follows that the called of Rom. 8: 28 are also apostles, and are the specific ones for whom the love of God works good for them all.

All of these blessings are applicable to the apostles and to none others. First we note that Herod the king apprehended Peter and kept him in prison, intending soon to bring him forth to the people; "and when Herod would have brought him forth, . . . behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands." (Acts 12: 6-8; read the balance of the chapter.)

If I know my own heart, I have no desire to detract in the least from the importance that belongs to that love that passeth all knowledge—that love that prompted the Holy One to send his only Son to this sin-cursed world, panoplied with power, love, and wisdom, to save rebellious man from sin and give him an eternal home with the just. O, no-not that. Only a love for heaven-born truth, and that only. Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar. My conclusion, if correct, does not do injustice to the fact that God loves all who profess and show a sincere love for the Holy One. God called and chose the twelve aposties to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature-to make known to all the race of fallen Adam that eternal redemption was in Christ Jesus. In order that this purpose be carried out, it was necessary that they be cared for until the end of that purpose be reached. Therefore, when Peter had been apprehended by King Herod, maltreated and put in prison, while sleeping between two soldiers, God sent an angel who awoke him out of his sleep, whereupon the chains fell from off his hands, and thus was he released from Herod's brutal treatment. So Paul, when shipwrecked and cast upon the isle of Miletus, and bitten by a poisonous reptile, shook the same from his hand, experiencing no harm. And thus it was by others of the apostles. But when they were turned loose to the usual fate of mankind, they suffered many privations, and finally all of them, one by one, were assassinated at the hands of wicked mobs. Sensationalism in the Pulpit.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The Daily Dinner Horn, of Paris, Texas, in its issue of January 12, 1918, has the following announcement:

LAMAR AVENUE METHODIST.

Heat! Heat! And to spare. New furnace—plenty hot. Sunday school, 9:30 A.M., prompt, please; Epworth League, 6 P.M., prompt, please. Pastor preaches morning and night. Subjects: Morning, "The Biggest Dammed Fool Preacher in Methodism;" night, "The Biggest Dammed Fool Farmer in Lamar County." Sounds like "cussin", but it isn't. Come and see. Everybody welcome. Don't criticize till you hear.

The pulpit has reached a very low ebb that will send forth such an announcement as the foregoing, and the members of a church that will tolerate or sanction such have acquired a very morbid appetite. The infidel world would long since have put the Bible out of existence if it could have found anywhere within its lids anything that would even distantly approximate this Methodist preacher's announcement. Such sensational claptrap methods as are here employed have done more to bring the religion of Christ into disrepute than all the attacks of all the infidels in all the ages. Of course this sensationalist made a play on the words "dammed" and "fool," but his congregation must have been both disappointed and disgusted at the deception. His effort at trying to excuse himself from a legitimate charge of "profanity" by saying "sounds like 'cussin,' but it isn't," does not help his case in the least. What he said is nothing short of old-fashioned "cussin," and every little boy-and big boy, too, as to that matterwho read his announcement knew that the "parson" was on a level with the street gamin when he uttered those words.

Sensible people recognize the fact that when a preacher has to resort to that sort of a thing in order to get an audience, he has missed his calling and has no business imposing himself on the people as a preacher of the gospel. Such methods as are here employed have done much to unfit the people for plain gospel preaching. The public has been educated by such men as this preacher to expect, hear, and relish startling themes and sensational preaching, and refuse to be attracted by any other kind. Hence the man that can succeed in getting up a lot of "hair-raising" themes and "side-splitting" sermons can take a community by storm, and, like a storm, the aftermath is pitiable.

But let no one think this Methodist preacher is the only sinner in this respect, for his kind can be found among all religious bodies. There is very little teaching of the word of God in modern pulpits. Preachers have discovered that it is infinitely easier to get up discourses on "current events" and fill up their time with blood-curdling tales than it is to study the word of God and fill their sermons with God's message to man. The writer was conducting a meeting in Fort Worth, Texas, a few years ago, and the most popular preacher in that city preached one Sunday night on "A Bottle of Blood." Did he get an audience? You better ask, could they find room for his audience? Thousands of people flocked to hear about the "bottle of blood," and it turned out that a beer bottle had been found with some blood in it where an automobile wreck occurred. From that circumstance the preacher seized upon the idea of giving the mayor and other city officials a round of abuse. He knew full well that if he announced simply that he would preach on the subject of enforcing the laws, his audience would be small, and, therefore, he fooled them with a "bottle of blood." Moreover, that preacher hid behind the pulpit to say things about the mayor and other officials that he would not have dared to say to their faces. There is no Christ in such preaching, and it is encouraging to know that a few, at least, will not tolerate it.

One of the best things that could have happened to that Paris preacher, and one that would have taught him a much-needed lesson, would have been for him to have faced empty benches with his "Biggest Dammed Fool Preacher in Methodism."

Some Reminiscences.

The editors appreciate the following letter from Brother H. R. Moore, of Huntland, Tenn.:

Dear Brethren: Let me hand you check for the Gospel Advocate for the ensuing year. In doing so, I will not say, as some do, that I cannot do without the Advocate, but I can say that I never have been without it. There may be subscribers who have known and read it as long as I have, but none longer, for I began with the first issue in 1855. During all these eventful intervening years I have missed an occasional number, but these have been few and far between.

The Advocate was edited by President Tolbert Fanning and Prof. William Lipscomb, who were aided by many able contributors, and printed by John T. S. Fall, until suspended for a time during the Civil War. From the beginning it made a bold and persistent fight for the restoration of apostolic Christianity and against sectarian substitutes. I have some of the first volumes in binding, also the Harbinger, that I occasionally peruse with pleasure and profit. I regret that I did not have President Fanning's "Religious Historian" bound.

The Advocate was a thirty-two-page monthly, printed pages some five or six inches by eight or ten inches. It took its present form under the management of David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell. It goes without saying that the Gospel Advocate from the beginning has been bold and aggressive in warning all concerned to shun Babylon and return to Jerusalem.

When a student at Franklin College, I was occasionally requested by Prof. F. M. Carmack or Professor Lipscomb to aid in preparing the Advocate for mailing. It left the college by a weekly horseback mail. I remember well the unswept room in the old college building, the long table, the pot of flour paste, the wrapping paper, the quill pens, and the brush used in the job indicated, also the book on which names and post offices of subscribers were enrolled.

But I am indulging in too much talk for a note to inclose a request for a renewal for wife. Pardon the digression, made in view of the fact that but few of your present readers can say what wife and I can. Each has read the Advocate from its far-off beginning in 1855, and the same copy since September, 1860.

A Striking Contrast.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

On November 26, 1917, there was witnessed one of the most striking contrasts that could be beheld by human eyes. Sad, yet joyous; impressive, yet delightful, were the acts that were staged on this long-to-be-remembered day.

With a light blanket of snow covering the surface of mother earth and the temperature reaching away down well toward the zero point, about 10 A.M., brethren, sisters, neighbors, friends, and relatives met at a country home; and very soon after the people began to arrive, some began to construct a box, others to draw water from the well; and when the box was constructed, it was placed on the front gallery and water poured into it of sufficient depth, after which the people were assembled in the house, a short service held, an invitation given, and an aged man, seventy-three years and more, confessed the name of Christ before men, and two others, one the wife of the man, who had wandered away, came back to the fold of Christ. A prayer being made, the writer, assisted by three other brethren, carried this aged friend on a sheet to the box and, in this rudely constructed baptistery, buried him in baptism. This friend has always been an active, industrious, thoroughgoing, honorable, upright citizen. served as a soldier during the unpleasantries of the sixties, and he made a good soldier, too; now he is afflicted, footsore, worn, weary, and broken down. This is one side of the contrast.

Within three hours after, and within as many miles distance, we met again, quite a concourse of people, upon the mossy banks of a beautiful stream, the waters, clear as crystal, pearling over the moss-covered rocks, then eddying over the white sandy bottom, making its way to a larger stream not far away. After pushing the ice away, twelve young people, seven young men and five young ladies, intelligent, bright, joyous, and happy, were baptized in this beautiful, dancing, sparkling water. This furnishes the other side of the contrast.

Question No. 1: Why did the aged man, after passing the seventy-third milepost on the road of life, now footsore, worn, weary, and broken down, with only a few more days to journey on—why did he make this change for so small a remnant of life? Why not finish the journey as he was? Answer: Salvation, the hope of heaven, and eternal life are all in Christ. No hope out of Christ. Now he is rich in the promises of God.

Question No. 2: Why did not these twelve young people, healthy, strong, buoyant, happy, and gay, stay out in the world and enjoy the pleasures of sin, heeding the siren song, "There is time enough yet?" Answer: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness."

Do not overlook the offering for the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Sunday in March.

The general recognition of the spiritual nature of man, and the growth of a spiritual consciousness in him, is the sovereign and only remedy for human ills, whether moral, political, social, or physical.—Henry Wood.

Spirit of the Press

Have You Done Your Bit?

Both the secular and religious press have frequently called attention to a bill that is now before Congress imposing upon publishers a postage increase of from fifty to nine hundred per cent. Of course any such increase on religious publications would not only be burdensome, but would put many, if not all of them, out of existence. If you have not already done so, will you not write or telegraph your Congressman at Washington urging him to enter a vigorous protest against this burdensome and unequal law? Those who are publishing religious papers are doing so at a sacrifice. Their hope is not earthly reward, but a reward in the future. Their work is a labor of love, and they are doing it cheerfully in the hope of elevating and uplifting their constituencies. "Do your bit." Do it to-day. . . .

Toll of Submarines.

Germany, by turning from the submarine to a drive on the western front, has virtually conceded that she no longer hopes to win the war by the submarine. The Literary Digest says "The admission of Germany's failure to win the war with U-boats after one year of effort 'comes from experts like Captain Persius; it comes from Schneide-London admits that new American devices, in a unique antisubmarine campaign, are having an important part in making the submersion of the submarines permanent." As Germany now says that she cannot win the war by her U-boats and is turning to a great drive on the western front, this should only make the allies become more thoroughly prepared and to see that this, it is to be hoped, Germany's last effort, shall also fail. I copy from the Christian Advocate, of this city, the following:

For the period of eleven months-March 4, 1917, to February 3, 1918—the number of British merchant ships sunk by submarines was 1,254. Of that number, 783 were above 1,600 tons each. The heaviest losses were during April, 1917, when during three weeks 185 ships were lost. During the last four weeks of the eleven-months' period only 54 ships were sunk, 31 of these ships of 1,600 tons and over. During one week in April there was a larger total than this. It is evident that the allied navies have been making progress in the fight against the submarine, Germany's most effective weapon; but the end is not yet.

The Crime at Estill Springs, Tenn.

There is absolutely no defense for the burning at the stake of the negro at Estill Springs. The people of this community, as a class, stand well and are usually lawabiding. Estill Springs is not far from Winchester, the county seat of Franklin County, where was located for years the Mary Sharp College for the education of young ladies, and where the Winchester Normal, under the presidency of James W. Terrell, did a great educational work. There are many churches not far from Estill Springs where the forces of righteousness generally have been active in the advancement of civilization and truth in that part of our State. When these facts are considered in the light of the crime, the crime appears all the more horrible and cruel. Such acts only make the good people of our country hang their heads in shame and set back the advancement of our progress a century or more.

This journal a few weeks ago offered some reasons for the great number of murders in our fair Southland. But it does seem that our people should have advanced far enough since the Civil War and the Ku-Klux Klan that followed upon the heels of the war not to be guilty of such brutal and outrageous crimes. Simply because the negro had been guilty of crime affords no excuse for the action of the mob. The burning appears even more dastardly and cowardly because it was perpetrated upon one of an inferior race, both in intellect and in numbers. It is very probable that if the negro race were not so tractable and submissive, it would not stand the outrages that have been perpetrated upon its people.

It is no extenuation of the crime to plead that such incidents occur in other parts of the country. The fact still stares us in the face that such crimes are ten to one more frequent in this part of the country than in other sections of the country. The law-abiding people of our country should see that the perpetrators of such crimes are punished for them. The good people of our country should see that lynching and burning at the stake are stopped. Simply because we have looked with a degree of allowance upon them in the past is no reason why they should be tolerated forever. Men guilty of mob violence should pay the penalty for murder and crime the same as other men do. If the men composing the mob at Estill Springs had fully realized that they would pay for such outrageous brutality with their own lives, who can doubt for one moment but that such knowledge would have deterred and prevented them from burning the negro at the stake?

Sinking of the Tuscania.

The sinking of the British liner Tuscania, carrying two thousand one hundred and seventy-nine officers and men of the United States army, brought alarm and terror to many American homes. Those who had sons going to France, or on their way, were naturally very much alarmed and solicitous for the welfare of their sons; and even when assured that their sons were safe, they were very much concerned about the safety of the sons of others. Our people should now be very much as the Spartan mothers and should realize that their own sons are no dearer to them than the sons of others are to them. Somebody's darling boy must make the sacrifice and must be lost in this terrible conflict. The sinking of the Tuscania drives home to the American people the fact that the submarine menace has not yet been entirely eliminated. American ingenuity must still devise something more effective in order to bring to an end this savage and brutal mode of warfare.

The Tuscania was convoyed by British destroyers and other craft. It is probably due to the vigilance and efficiency of the British navy that more lives were not lost. The exact number lost has not yet been ascertained, but it is probable that the full number, when it has been learned, will reach near three hundred. While the Americans have sent many soldiers across the ocean to Europe and this is the first loss suffered, they should not conclude that our army is not in great danger even when convoyed by the most efficient and vigilant navy. This government has a tremendous task before it in training. equipping, and landing a sufficient army in Europe to destroy the autocracy and Prussian militarism of Germany. While those three hundred have given their lives early in the struggle, this has cemented and united the American people more firmly together and has reënforced their determination to oppose tyranny and barbarism and to bring this war to a successful end, in the hope that wars will be no more. If we fail to do our duty, if we fail to give the very best that is within us, we prove ourselves unworthy of the sacrifices made by those who have given up their lives.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain Luke 12: 10, which reads: "And whosever shall speak a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven."

Mrs. R. A. Hogan.

It is not becoming to be dogmatic as to what is the sin against the Holy Spirit. There have always been differences on this subject. Some hold that those who charged Jesus with casting out devils by Beelzebub committed the sin against the Holy Spirit. The connection will bear that interpretation. However, it will bear another construction. Those who made this charge against Jesus sinned against him. People had sinned against John the Baptist in refusing to accept his teaching. He warns them: "You may sin now against me and find opportunities to repent; but when the Holy Spirit comes, if you reject him by rejecting his teaching, there will be no forgiveness, neither in this life nor in the life to come." When Christ was speaking, the Holy Spirit was not the lawgiving and directing power. The Spirit was not giving the law, so could not be sinned against; but after the Holy Spirit came on the day of Pentecost, if men turned away from his teaching and refused to be guided by it, there would be no forgiveness for such sin, as no other way of salvation will be provided.

Brother McQuiddy: Is it a sin for a Christian to dance? If so, should be be withdrawn from for disorderly walking? We have some members who think it is all right to dance. Give the scriptures against such and tell what it leads to.

Those who are living the Christian life and who glorify God both in body and in spirit keep as far away from temptation as possible. Those who dance are walking after the flesh and not after the Spirit. Christians are required to present their bodies as living sacrifices. Dancing makes one worldly and not spiritual. It leads to sin and wrong, and never lifts up a man to everlasting life. It is a work of the flesh, and those who walk after the flesh are carnalminded and cannot inherit the kingdom of God. The Holy Spirit says: "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, parties, envyings, drunkenness, revelings, and such like; of which I forewarn you, even as I did forewarn you, that they who practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." (Gal. 5: 19-21.) The Greek word from which we have "revelings" means dancing with music. Then it is clear that those who practice dancing have no promise of everlasting life. Before withdrawing from those guilty of dancing, it would be well to admonish them in the spirit of the Master. If they persist in dancing, with other worldliness, they will be worthless as Christians. The Bible teaches that dead branches should be cut off. However, churches to-day have ceased to withdraw from disorderly members. Very grievous sins are practiced, and still no discipline is exercised.

Brother McQuiddy: I have often puzzled over the passage where Christ says, "Resist not evil," and the passage in John where he drives the money lenders out of the temple with a thong. Would this justify force in religion? In other words, I should like to know your interpretation.

I do not see any conflict in the teaching of John 2: 13-17 with the teaching of Christ in the Sermon on the Mount.

The cords with which Christ drove the money lenders out of the temple were rushes, out of which beds were made for the cattle. These thongs were not formidable weapons. It is probable that Christ did not use violence at all in this case, because his action was more superhuman and miraculous than natural. If any one thinks he could drive out two thousand traffickers from a market where they are making money with a little cord, let him try it and find how soon he bites the earth. Christ asserted his authority in cleansing the temple, and it is generally believed that Christ cleansed the temple in the beginning of his ministry and at the close of his ministry. This shows his disapproval of mercenary motives in religious work and of making merchandise out of the gospel. There was something about Christ's appearance and demeanor that men could not resist. His very appearance on this occasion doubtless demanded obedience. This was one of the signs of miracles, doubtless, which Jesus performed while in Jerusalem at this time. John 2: 23 reads: "Now when he was in Jerusalem at the passover, during the feast, many believed on his name, beholding his signs which he did." Christ was not seeking to destroy, but to purify. Hence, "to them that sold the doves he said, Take these things hence; make not my Father's house a house of merchandise." He did not turn the doves out to fly away, but commanded them to take the doves out.

Brother McQuiddy: Please answer this question, as it seems to be raising trouble here: Is it right for a deacon to wait on the Lord's table? Some of our members contend that the elders only have the scriptural right to perform this service. Also, kindly explain what is meant by "feeding the flock."

MARY SMITH.

The Bible nowhere says who shall wait on, or officiate at, the Lord's table. All Christians are equal and enjoy the same rights and privileges in the church of God. Every disciple is under obligation to do all he can in the service of Christ. As every disciple must sip the fruit of the vine for himself, so every disciple should break the bread for himself. While one leads in giving thanks, all should follow the leader and give thanks at the same time. Christ every man is a priest unto God and should make sacrifices for himself. While Paul, in Acts 20: 28, admonishes the overseers, or bishops, to feed the church of God, Peter, in 1 Pet. 5: 2, says: "Tend the flock of God which is among you." "Tend" means more than feeding. It is the work of the bishop, the elder, to see that the flock of God is properly looked after, and he does this, not by doing all of the work himself, but by directing the members so that each member does the work for which he is best fitted. No good overseer does the work, but he directs those under him in a way that will best develop their talents and bring out their best service. So the bishops, the elders, are instructed to see that things are done decently and in order. Tending the flock of God means far more than leading in giving thanks at the Lord's table. The work of an elder is a very important work, but I regret to say that we have very few elders who are efficient as bishops. The best elder, or bishop, is not the one who does all the work himself, but the one who puts the other members of the church to work in the capacity for which they are best fitted; and thus the whole church progresses In God's service, every joint, every fiber, and every band doing its proper work.

The Method of Teaching the Truth.

BY J. C. M'Q.

We have been asked to write an article showing what method or methods should be used in teaching the word of God. We are informed by a sister that a brother takes the position that the whole church-men, women, and children-should be taught together-should sit in one body, called "the assembly of the saints," and be taught the Bible as a whole. The brother says that it is not the duty of the church to teach children; that they should be taught at home. He takes the position that Bible lesson helps and commentaries should not be used. At the request of the sister, her name is withheld.

As the Savior commanded the apostles to "go, . . teach all nations," and as the early church went everywhere teaching the word, we certainly should encourage people to teach the word of God. When we open the Bible, we find upon investigation that from the days of Abraham systematic instruction had its place in the plans of the chosen people of God. Gen. 14: 14 reads: "When Abraham heard that his brother was taken captive, he led forth his trained men, born in his house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued as far as Dan." The Hebrew word for "trained" includes in its meaning the idea of training in religion, as well as in the use of weapons; and its use in this place would presuppose a process of school instruction under Abraham's oversight. From the days of Moses the Jewish church had a measure of responsibility for the rellgious training of the young. We learn from 2 Chron. 17:

9 that when Jehoshaphat was working reforms in the land, the princes and the priests and the Levites "taught in Judah, having the book of the law of Jehovah with them; and they went about throughout all the cities of Judah. and taught among the people." We learn from Deut. 6: 7, 8 that Jehovah commanded the Jews in respect to teaching their offspring: "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thy house, and upon thy gates." From Neh. 8 we read of the actual methods of Bible instruction-in the main, an account of a great open-air Bible school. Ezra was the leader in this school. His assistants are mentioned by name. From the days of Ezra the Bible school was a recognized agency, among the Jewish people, for the study and teaching of God's word. In the days of Jesus of Nazareth there was, in the land of his birth and sojourn, a system of Bible schools corresponding very closely in their general features to the modern Bible schools. The elementary or primary schools in this system gave chief prominence to the study of the Bible text. The advanced schools were a department of the synagogue, and in them Bible commentaries, in addition to the Bible text, were a subject of familiar study. The elementary schools were for children only. The senior schools had a place for children as well as for adults. Trumbull says: "In all the schools the arrangement was that of scholars grouped under a special teacher; and the process of teaching was by form of question and answer. Our Lord seems to have been a scholar in schools of this character, and again he was a teacher in such schools. In founding his church, he made Bible-school work its basis. His disciples recognized the scope and the details of his plan, and they prosecuted his labors of evangelizing and of edifying accordingly. The Bible school was the starting point of the Christian church; and it was by means of Bible-school methods that the Christian church was first extended and upbuilded." While the Bible school, in the main, is of Jewish origin, we find its adoption by Christ and his apostles. As the method of teaching by questions and answers was very much the same method as is employed in the Bible school to-day and was used very effectively by Christ and his apostles, why should we turn away from it? Why should we abolish such methods now and refuse to teach as did Christ and the apostles, in the most effective manner?

It is true that we find the apostles teaching by public proclamation of the gospel. Hence we see that the catechetical method, as well as the public-proclamation method. was used in teaching the Bible. As both methods are clearly revealed in the Bible, what right has any man to say that one should be used to the exclusion of the other? Whoever does so, does it at his own peril. Whenever one attempts to bind upon the church of God one method, to the exclusion of the other, he is seeking to bind the church where God has not bound it. This is as grievous a sin as to add to or take from the word of God. We may go further and say that every man is under obligation to teach the truth in the most efficient manner. He that neglects or declines to do this is guilty of sin.

The Holy Spirit does not teach us that the learned and the unlearned, the ignorant and the wise, the young and the old, should be given the same food. Heb. 5: 12-14 declares: "For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ve have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food. For every one that partaketh of milk is without experience of the word of righteousness; for he is a babe. But solid food is for full-grown men, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern good from evil." Milk for babes and solid food for grown men. This is not our brother's order, but it is God's order and God's way of doing things. According to the reasoning of the brother referred to, when he feeds his cattle, he puts the food in a rack far above the heads of the calves so that they cannot get anything to eat. Just so he would have teachers teach in a way that the unlearned, the untaught, and the babe can learn nothing. Peter teaches us to adapt the teaching to the capacity of the hearer, in 1 Pet. 2: 2, when he says: "As newborn babes, long for the spiritual milk which is without guile, that ye may grow thereby unto salvation."

As the Bible is literature, the man who objects to the use of Bible lesson helps, to be consistent, must object to the study of the Bible. The first portions of scripture were given to us in a fragmentary manner-in lesson leavesand not in the form that we now have the Bible. The collation of the Bible as it is now presented to us was the work of man. Why does not the brother object to this? It is the duty of Christians who would serve, obey, and glorify God to press forward in the study of the Bible and in the teaching of the truth by any approved method that can be used most efficiently and successfully. The command is to teach; but no method, to the exclusion of other methods, is revealed. Hence we find our preachers using the blackboard, our teachers using the class method, and some using the written page in order to instruct and enlighten the people. Those who object to a Christian's teaching by the most effective method are few in number and must not be permitted to impede the growth and progress of the church of God. I have repeatedly called upon such objectors to show some plan of teaching revealed, to the exclusion of all other methods, and yet no one has ever attempted to do so. As Christians cannot serve God acceptably without knowledge, it is incumbent upon teachers of the Christian religion to study and to teach the truth at home, abroad, wherever they may be. While it is the duty of parents to teach their children at home, it is also their duty to teach children who have no Christian parents, and to teach their own children in any place and at any time an opportunity is presented.

Who Are the Friends of Christ?

BY E. G. S.

Jesus said to his disciples: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." (John 15: 14.)

There are thousands and millions of people on earth who claim to be friends of Christ that are rejecting some of his positive requirements. Jesus sent his apostles out to preach the gospel to the whole world, and gave this promise: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.) Now, Jesus meant exactly what he said: he meant that they must preach the gospel to every creature. Likewise, when he said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," he meant every word of it. But there are many thousands claiming this promise that have never been baptized at all. They have had a little water sprinkled on them, but that is not baptism. No man can prove that a little water sprinkled on one is baptism. The word "sprinkle" means "to scatter in drops." The word "baptize" means "to immerse." "Baptize" is a specific word with only one meaning-"to immerse"-and all the scholars on earth can never make it mean anything else. Hence to refuse immersion and accept sprinkling is to reject the word of God and put a word of human wisdom in its place. God never said, "He that believeth and is sprinkled shall be saved." Neither can any man find where any inspired preacher of the New Testament ever commanded any one to be sprinkled when the ordinance of baptism was meant. If the word of God had said in any passage where it was speaking of baptism that it was sprinkling, the question would be settled forever; but neither the word "sprinkle" nor any word that means "sprinkle" was ever used in the New Testament to indicate baptism. On the other hand, not a single instance can be found in the New Testament where the word "baptizo" was ever rendered "to sprinkle." It is positively certain, therefore, that there is no divine authority for sprinkling water upon one that is to be baptized. This is simply and only human and ought to be dropped out of use by religious people. If all teachers and students of the Bible would drop it out entirely, it would be a great triumph for truth.

The word of God is what we want in the whole matter of Christianity, and is what we must have, if we expect the Lord to receive our service. If we drop out the word "baptize" and substitute the word "sprinkle," we might just as well drop out the whole New Testament and go entirely by human wisdom in everything we do. Why not? We are dependent upon the word of God for all that we can know about the will of God. We ought, therefore, to be diligent and careful in our study of the Bible. If we do not read, study, and practice what the Bible teaches, we will have no divine light to guide us in the ways of righteousness and truth, but will be in total darkness in regard to the salvation of our souls. We cannot save ourselves, cannot save one another, and the Lord will not save us unless we do his will. Hence our highest duty is to learn and do the will of God. Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is This will stand till the day of judgment and in heaven." will be required of all till then.

Therefore, all who wish to be friends of Jesus must submit to what he requires. If we do not meekly submit to all that he requires of us, we have no scriptural right to claim to be his friends. None of those who reject baptism and substitute sprinkling are his friends; but those that believe, repent, and are baptized, and who go right on living the Christian life as taught in the New Testament, may be well assured that they are his friends, because he plainly says so. The friendship of Jesus is the greatest blessing that one can enjoy in this life. But how is it with those that have substituted sprinkling for baptism? It is plain that all that have made this change have repudiated the plain word of the Lord, hence cannot enjoy the blessings connected with the promise, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," because they have not been baptized.

Why will uninspired men venture to make such a change? Surely they do not realize the danger they assume for themselves when they do this. Let the word of the Lord remain as the Lord gave it and obey it as it stands in all such cases. This is certainly the safe course to pursue, and the safe way is always the best.

One trouble is that it is so hard for all men to see things alike. One man will put one construction on a certain thing, while another will give a very different meaning to the same thing. The main difficulty, however, is that people form opinions on every question that comes up, then stick to their opinions whether right or wrong. The masses of the people stick to their opinions on religion instead of taking the word of God at just what it says and as the end of the matter. Too many are ready to say the word of God is a dead letter and stand on their human opinions, although Inspiration says: "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." (Heb. 4: 12.)

The Right Motive.

Without multiplying quotations, let us, for a short while, go over some facts that all will admit to be true.

That religion-true religion-is the greatest thing on earth, we certainly must admit. There is nothing that so uplifts humanity. It has never brought anything but good to the souls that embrace it. It gives the soul a good conscience toward God and man. It enables one to look any one else squarely in the face without being abashed. There is nothing that puts more backbone in a man than that religion that is "pure and undefiled before God and man." Such religion forbids a man's being a sneak, a backbiter, and forever doing things with motives that actually cause a man to lose self-respect. You can look into the eyes of one who claims to be religious and tell the kind of religion he has. There are some preachers who cannot look their audiences squarely in the face. There are some men whom you can almost cause to run from you by looking them squarely in the eyes when you meet them. They are lacking in character. They are double-tongued-talk for you when with you, and against you when your back is turned. The religion of all such is vain, the outgrowth of a heart that is not sincere and a life whose acts are ever controlled with motives that are wholly wrong.

The motive that gives birth to the religion that, in keeping with the literal meaning of the word, actually "rebinds" us to God has God ever before the heart, and we do things because he wants them done, while we leave undone things because he wants us not to participate in them. I am perfectly sure that a man who happens to go wrong, when his motives are absolutely pure, cannot long stay in the wrong way. There is nothing that God loves more than sincerity, "Thou shalt be perfect [sincere] with the Lord thy God." (Deut. 18: 13.) And, remember, sincerity he wants us to have in all that we do. We must be sincere in our dealings directly with God. We must also be sincere in our dealings with our fellow man. To be insincere with man is to also be insincere with God. To be insincere with the public is to also be insincere with God. God hates deceit, insincerity, lying, hypocrisy, etc. Too often from the pulpit things come from lips, not because they love God and man, but simply to please themselves; they will say things to "knock" this person or thing, when the real good of the "knocked" is not in their heart. Such God despises. And too often in our papers men and papers are criticized, not because the one who offers the criticism really loves the paper or person criticized, but because he has a little grudge at the paper or person, and allows the devil, not God, to lead him to criticize. I very much enjoyed what Brother F. W. Smith had to say about "controversy" and "fussing" in our papers a few weeks ago. But there is one thing certain; if Christians would treat each other more nearly as God wants us to, there would be but little need of controversy among ourselves. I would be ashamed to believe and practice one thing that I am afraid to defend before any self-respecting man. But I do not know of a public discussion any of our brethren have had in the papers that resulted in their getting together. I know I have had kind discussions through the mail with brethren, and we have reached agreements. The reason is due to the motive that controlled. We know a tree by its fruits. The bad fruit that has come from our public discussions does not prove them bad trees, necessarily; but certainly it is a reflection on the motive that controlled the souls of the disputants. Two honest Christians will get together when they study the Bible together in the spirit of Christ; and if not together, they will have a better understanding and think more of each other. God give us motives in all that we do that will make us delighted to see him face to face in the judgment!

A hard-working brother, who asks that his name be withheld, sent two dollars to this fund, with this explanation: "I send this by doing without one meal a week and sending the price of it to these sufferers, which is no sacrifice at all and is the very least that we should do, I think." We were instantly reminded of the truth that "God loveth a cheerful giver;" and we love such a giver, too.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Precious Soldier Boy.

BY MATTIE HOLDER.

You are a bundle of neatness, A paragon of completeness, Soldier boy; The very essence of sweetness, Cream of all goodness, To your mother dear.

And I sometimes wonder
If you'll surely squander,
Soldier boy,
All your precious leisure hours,
Talking under shady bowers
To silly, silly girls.

Perhaps you'll want to ponder
A while over yonder,
Soldier boy;
Then return to us, purer, grander,
From old blood-stained Flanders,
To our fair land.

May the Lord ever bless you,
Shield, guide, and protect you,
Soldier boy;
Keep you "in the hollow of his hand,"
While you are in "No Man's Land,"
Precious soldier boy!

Let us be brave for the sake of the timid. Let us lead the way in for the sake of those who will never lead, but are ready at once to follow. If one speaks the word of truth that ought now to be spoken, there are many others waiting to speak it after him. Be first to stand for the right to-day, and you will be surprised how many others will then stand with you. Give up some habit that is bringing ill to others, and many will give it up after you who have not courage to be first in the effort.—Exchange.

"Even As I."

It is in the upper room, and the kingly Traveler is taking leave of those who have journeyed with him, for presently he must go alone over the darkest way that the foot of traveler ever trod. He will see them again, but he is thinking of the interval and of the other parting at Olivet. They will be missing him. The garish day will menace. The shadow and the deep darkness will assail. Burdens will be heavy, battles fierce, temptations subtle, conflicts sore; but they that are clad in white walk safely, and He is saying: "Ye are not of the world, even as I."

For the unloving the sun is chill, the garden has neither fragrance nor beauty, the fog blots out the stars. But they that love live in another land. He is saying: "Ye are to love, even as I."

They who come to each new hour and place to be ministered unto will find even the ministries offered them dull and tasteless. They who fare forth to minister shall see arid deserts blossom, shall find a path bright with the smile and song of those whom they have blessed, shall strive to lift the world and feel the thrill and wonder of it as little by little it moves into the light. He is saying: "Ye are to minister, even as I."

But if the way seems lonely and the night be long, if they that love them shall slumber, while those who plot against them keep watch, then let them know that the Father loves—loves and slumbers not, loves with that foursquare love that passes knowledge. He is saying: "Ye are loved of the Father, even as I."—Luther B. Wilson.

Do Not Borrow Trouble.

I saw a delicate flower had grown up two feet high between the horse's path and the wheel track. An inch more to the right or left would have sealed its fate, or an inch higher; and yet it lived to flourish as much as if it had a thousand acres of untrodden space around it. It never knew the danger it incurred. It did not borrow trouble nor invite an evil fate by apprehending it.—Thoreau.

The man of faith is the man who shapes his course by the stars rather than by the current, and who looks at the stars oftenest when the current runs swiftest. Smallminded men regard faith as a theory; large-minded men use it as a practical working power to get things not only done, but done right.—Arthur Hadley.

The Thankful Spirit.

It is eminently desirable that we should emphasize the moral obligation which rests upon every child of God to cultivate the spirit of thanksgiving and to manifest that spirit in its full beauty and power in all the relations of life. The thankful spirit reveals itself in a broad and true sympathy with others who are less fortunate than ourselves. It delights to remember the widow and the orphan and strives to carry the message of joy and gladness into the homes of the sick and the sorrowing on Thanksgiving Day. It looks unto God as the author of every good and perfect gift, and insists on sharing the blessings which he has bestowed with those who are needy and in want.—American Messenger.

On the shoulders of the luxury-loving, the pleasure-seeking, the unproductive, the pampered, the extravagant, the morally calloused, the spiritually dead, who make laws yet recognize no law, who declare war and wage it not, who preach platitudinously of great things and live pettily, who love themselves much and patronize God a great deal—on the shoulders of such as these shall rest the responsibility for the treason that sneers at truth, mocks goodness, and destroys nations.—Edward M. Cross.

Pigmy People of Mariveles.

High up on the slopes of Mount Mariveles, in the Philippine Islands, dwell the last remnants of an ancient and most mysterious race-the Negritos, or "little negroes." Scientists differ hopelessly as to their origin and history. but the traveler who is fortunate enough to penetrate into their carefully hidden villages finds the quaint little people extremely interesting. Though disinclined to work, the Negrito is indefatigable in the chase. He will hunt all day without eating anything but the mango or banana that he may seize as he rushes by. If the dogs are scarce for any reason, women are pressed into service, and these go loping through the brush, yelping in imitation of the canines for whom they are substituted. Sometimes a beater will emerge from the brush carrying a pig he has encountered and killed, or, more important still, bringing news of the sighting of a python. In this case the whole hunt is called in and its energies directed to the capture of the big snake, which, when killed, is carried in triumphal procession to the village, where it furnishes a feast for all who can be gathered together for the great occasion .-Lewis R. Freeman, in the World-Wide Magazine.

Missionary

Notes from Tokyo, Japan.

BY MISS LILLIE CYPERT.

The purpose of every missionary is, or should be, to help those in whose territory he is to reside; but never in my life did I feel more helpless, even for self-help, much less being able to help others, than I did when I came to Japan, and than I do still. One cannot realize what a great barrier there is between people of different tongues until he is placed among people of a different language with which he is not at all familiar.

When I arrived in Japan, the language school which I had hoped to enter had been in progress some time. I went to see if I might be admitted, and they refused to take me until I had taken lessons from a private teacher and caught up with the class, which had five weeks the start of me. I set to work to do this; but, to my glad surprise, in about two weeks I was notified that enough new pupils had arrived to make a new class and I could enter a beginning class at school. This I did, and have now been in school three weeks.

I find the language rather difficult, but interesting. The getting of it, however, is not so hard as the holding of it. Our class is said to be doing good work, and, by having our lessons six days in the week, we are to finish the same course the class will finish that started in September. I find what I have learned even now to be of great benefit, as I can at least be a little polite and can buy stamps and a few of the simplest kinds of groceries.

As I have not been here long enough to learn much about Japan and the customs of the Japanese, I shall just write about the things I do know. One item, and a thing I realize is of interest to the people of America just new, is the high cost of living. Not only in America do they feel this, but in Japan as well. Many things have already doubled in price. Dry goods and shoes are very high. Many groceries are high also, such as flour, sugar, and meats. Sugar is about equal in price to sugar there. Most fruits and vegetables, however, are very reasonable. Bananas cost just one-fourth as much as they did at home when I left in October. We can get all kinds of good, fresh fish very cheap. Fuel is our problem. We paid twenty-nine yen (equal to fourteen dollars and fifty cents) for a ton of coal recently, and it was a Japanese ton, too-only about sixteen hundred pounds in America.

Nevertheless, I am very thankful that I have had enough to supply my needs thus far; and I am not at all afraid to trust for my future needs to Him to whom the earth belongs, and the fullness thereof, for he has told us to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all the needs would be supplied. I recently received a sixty-dollar check from Brother Janes, a balance of that which had been contributed previous to my sailing. I wish to thank again all those who have contributed to my support, and hope to be able to use it to the best advantage to the Lord's cause.

About the Japan Work.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

Those interested in our work in Japan will be glad to learn that needs for the month of February were met; that I was able to forward enough to cover the expenses for the month named, besides taking care of most of the cost for repairs on buildings and fences damaged by the terrible cyclone that visited Japan some weeks ago. I ought to mail offerings on the first day of every month and thus allow enough time for my letter to reach its destination before the last day of the month. Offerings for March should be coming in now. You have intended to have a share in this work. Why not write that check now?

The church at the Nashville Bible School has decided to increase its missionary offering and to assume the full support of a native evangelist. They have decided on Brother Ishiguro, who labors in the Otsuka ward in Tokyo. His support is twenty-five yen, or, in our money, twelve dollars and fifty cents a month. The action of this missionary church is praiseworthy, and other congregations ought to follow their good example. I can supply the workers, if you want to assume their support. There is Brother Hiratsuka, than whom I know of no preacher more faithful and consecrated, whose allowance is, in our money, twenty-five dollars a month. He has a wife and five children to care for. There are many churches that could sustain him easily; or two churches might cooperate to support him. Then, there is Sister Togo, a splendid worker, that some person or church could claim as a Bible teacher for five dollars a month. There are such items as house rents, land rents, taxes, fire insurance, tracts, repairs, varying from one dollar to nine dollars a month, that could be taken care of by individuals or Since writing the above, Brother Earl M. Hodson, of Alabama, writes that he wants to support a native worker at five dollars a month. So I have turned Takashi to him. Takashi is a fine young man in high school. He is already teaching a large class of boys in our church, and promises to make a first-class preacher. For about two years we have helped him in his school. He stands second in his class of sixty boys, and deserves help.

A short quotation from Hiratsuka shows that the work started off well this year. He writes: "You remember Kizashi, Brother Yoko's oldest son? He was baptized on the first Sunday of the new year. His parents are so happy. Though they are not expressive of their feeling, yet they thanked God with tears in their eyes." We well remember this fine, strong, young man, and we rejoice to hear of his confession of faith. He has an advantage not many Japanese boys have—Christian parents. The Yoko family is certainly a great asset to our Kamitomizaka work. Brother Yoko has been a faithful elder for five years, having been appointed by the church and our lamented brother, William J. Bishop.

I feel confident that the brethren will see to it that on the first day of each month we have enough to send to Japan. Do not think or say: "Well, somebody else can and will take care of that work. I will use mine here." Suppose every one would reason that way! You can and ought to help. Why not?

My address is 137 East Third Street, Dayton, Ohio.

Examine your words well, and you will find that, even when you have no motive to be false, it is a very hard thing to say the exact truth, even about your own immediate feelings, much harder than to say something fine about them which is not the exact truth.—George Eliot.

If we had nothing wrong in ourselves, as a correspondence, we could never recognize the same quality in others; and if such a condition were general, the Christly law of nonresistance would have unlimited sway. "Thinketh no evil" is to give it no breathing space. Pessimism is unwholesome because it multiplies bad conditions and galvanizes them into life.—Henry Wood.

I think the Gospel Advocate is a fine paper.—A. Joslin, Almo, Ky.

The last issue of the Gospel Advocate is very fine.—J. D. Northcut, Tracy City, Tenn.

I can't do without the Gospel Advocate.—Mrs. R. C. Coleman, Lafayette Springs, Miss.

I love the paper and have always read it with interest.— W. D. Jones, Paradise, Texas.

Do not overlook the offering for the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Sunday in March.

- R. C. White, of Nashville, Tenn., reports successful meeting at Mims and Lagrange, Fla.
- H. S. Lipscomb preached at Belmont Avenue Church, this city, Sunday. Three Christians took membership with the congregation.

Jesse P. Sewell, of Abilene, Texas, delivered a very forceful sermon to a large audience at Russell Street Church, this city, last Sunday.

"I love the Gospel Advocate and all true lovers of Christ."-Mrs. Fount Finn, Franklin, Ky.

May the Lord keep us always within this classification.

The marriage of Mr. Floyd Stephenson and Miss Alice Anderson was quietly solemnized at the bride's home on Wednesday, February 20, at 2:30 P.M., by W. S. Morton, of Columbia, Tenn. Their many friends wish them much happiness.

Mrs. S. E. Hall, of Puxico, Mo., writes: "I am now in my seventy-fifth year, and have been reading your valuable paper half of my life and expect to continue for the remainder." May the Lord's richest blessings attend this good sister.

A. H. Lannom, of Dongola, Ill., is desirous of changing his location. He has had considerable experience in the schoolroom and in the evangelistic field and is highly recommended. If you are interested in having him move to your section, write him at once.

W. M. Oakley, superintendent of the Potter Orphan Home and School, Bowling Green, Ky., writes: "We had a fine service at the Home on February 17. Many of our neighbors were in attendance. One brave young mother confessed her Savior and was baptized; another confessed her sins and was restored. To the Lord be the praise."

The marriage of T. Q. Martin to Mrs. Carrie Lillie, of Franklin, Tenn., was quietly solemnized by F. W. Smith, at his residence in this city, on last Wednesday evening. Brother Martin had just concluded a series of helpful sermons at the Nashville Bible School. They are now "at home" at St. Marys, W. Va. The Gospel Advocate extends heartiest congratulations and best wishes.

From A. M. Tucker, Jackson, Tenn., February 14: "J. W. Fincher, a hat salesman, of Oklahoma, was with the church of Christ worshiping on Highland Avenue on the second Lord's day to break bread, and preached for us. He delivered a beautiful address on 'The Power to Resist Temptation to Sin.' This congregation appreciates Brother Fincher very much, and we were glad indeed to have him with us."

From J. H. Hines, Hopkinsville, Ky., February 22: "The work here is moving along nicely. Interest is growing in all the services. Our prayer meetings are well attended. The house is pretty well filled on Sunday. On last Lord's day four took membership with the congregation. We hope to do a great work here for the Lord. If any one who reads this knows of a Christian in Hopkinsville, please drop me a card."

The many friends of George H. Porch will be glad to learn that he is now connected with the George B. Farrar Company, 226 Fourth Avenue, North, this city. Brother Porch is greatly interested in the work of the Lord, as all who have seen and talked with him can testify. The same may be said of George Farrar, the head of the company with which he has assumed his new business relationship. If you need anything in the clothing line, you will do well to get in touch with these brethren.

J. H. Whisnant has gotten up a "totally different calendar," called the "Educational Calendar for 1918." Besides the usual information as to dates, it contains, on each page, appropriate scriptural quotations about the church of Christ. It will be a daily reminder and stimulus in each Christian home where it is placed. The price is twenty cents for a single copy, three copies for fifty cents, or $1.65 per dozen. Order from J. H. Whisnant, Atkins, Ark., or the McQuiddy, Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

From J. H. Murrell, Route 1, Dukes, Fla., February 20: "The meeting at Spring Head Church, near Fenholloway, closed last Thursday night. We were hindered much by an epidemic of measles, but the interest was fairly good and two were restored. I am now at Bluff Creek Church, near Dukes, with very good interest. I will probably be in this State for several weeks yet, though I have not definitely promised much of my time and would consider calls from anywhere, either for meetings any time this year or for a new location. My home address is Box 24, Tennessee City, Tenn."

From George A. Klingman, Abilene, Texas, February 19: "We had two confessions on Lord's day and fifteen members who placed themselves under the care and oversight of the elders. There were three more confessions on Monday night, and among them our youngest child. This completes our family circle, the Lord granting us the privilege and joy of seeing our nine children baptized into the 'one body.' Pray for us. Last week's report showed thirty-two daily Bible readers and thirteen hundred and one chapters read in the Bible. Greater interest than ever is also manifested in the Bible study of the Abilene Christian College."

L. A. Jackson writes from Marvell, Ark.: "We feel like we want to add a few words for publication in behalf of J. Will Henley. After reading Brother Henley's article in the Gospel Advocate, and knowing the man as we do, we feel that his needs, as a humble servant of God, should be looked after. If only one dollar from each one he has baptized and assisted in the Lord's work was sent him, he would be able to go on with the treatment at Hot Springs and have a few dollars left to start him out on his mission to preach the gospel to the many who are perishing for the truth. We have sent Brother Henley from the Cypert congregation three different offerings (about one hundred dollars) since he has been there. But for one at a place like Hot Springs, with baths to pay for, doctors' bills, hotel expenses, etc., it takes money, as we know from past experience. His family, also to be looked after, puts burdens heavy to be borne upon him, which we, as a people of God, should help him carry. Let us awake to righteousness and open our hearts and pocketbooks for God. 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.' Then, brother, how will you treat God?"

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life, has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair; besides, it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life; and if not overcome, it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store, and just try it.

The Master's Vineyard

Canada.

Meaford, Ontario, February 15.—This week has been a very busy one for me, notwithstanding the cold, stormy, snowy weather. I preached twice on Lord's day to good-sized crowds. On Monday we had a social gathering in the basement of the house, and tea was served at 6 P.M. by the ladies. After tea, while we were enjoying ourselves in a social way, the church surprised wife and me by showering us with an abundance of good things to eat, after which several short speeches were made. The Canadians are a fine, big-hearted people, and they have taken possession of our hearts already; for they do try to make us feel warm even though the weather is cold. On Wednesday I went to Collingwood to perform a marriage ceremony. The outlook for the year is fine. Pray for us.—J. L. Hines.

Mississippi.

Tupelo, February 17.—The interest for the cause of Christ among the brethren at Tupelo is medium. I do not know how to express our condition otherwise. Warm weather is near and I am ready to go to preaching. In this part of Mississippi the brethren are not bad about going to church on cold days. Any congregation in Mississippi or elsewhere that wishes my services in protracted meetings this year may write to me, and I will make arrangements to serve you. My address is 308 Jefferson Street, Tupelo, Miss.—David O. Griffith.

South Carolina.

Camp Sevier, Greenville, February 18.—If any one ever brought light into a dark place, Brother Dunn did so when he came to Camp Sevier. By th time one stays in a training camp for a while, he decides that he is in the devil's territory. Here and there, devil's territory. Here and there, however, there are to be found young men who have determined to serve God and not become contaminated by camp life. It is this class that is gathering around Brother Dunn. We are strengthened by his teachings and kindly admonitions to continue steadfast in the faith. What a blessing to attend church here, and get in an at-mosphere pervaded with the spirit of Christ! I have been a regular attendant at church for years, but I appreciate the opportunity of attending church services here more than I ever did before. Brother Dunn should be encouraged in his work by the brethren back home. His work is not easy by any means, but, on the other hand, it is quite arduous.-L. H. Wiseman, Company B, 117th Infantry.

Texas.

Kirbyville, February 18.—Despite the fact that it rained all day yesterday, we had two good-sized audiences at Votaw. One erring brother was restored and three splendid young ladies made the good confession and were baptized into Christ early Monday morning. Two of these were from the Baptists.—J. S. Daugherty.

Ennis, February 18.—Four glorious services yesterday. All the workers visited every home in the city in the afternoon and distributed cards inviting people to the services. The first Lord's day in March will be the anniversary of this minister's work with the church. The minister will sit in the audience on that day. The preaching and all details of the worship will be done by the boys and others. A fine program is expected. W. W. Stirman is director of boys work, and he has a fine crowd of willing helpers.—Ben West.

Mount Pleasant, February 18 .- Unless further engagements are made, my work with the church at Mount Pleasant will close the first of May. However, plans are being made to, if possible, contine the work. We have had a very pleasant work with the church here; and while we have felt that little has been accomplished, the brethren express themselves as being satisfied with the effort we have put forth. This is gratifying and makes us feel like doing more. The church us feel like doing more. here has been very faithful in its support of the Lord's work. The number of the faithful is small, but they see to it that the work is not neglected. They have met all their obligations to the home work and cared for the needy found in our midst, and have sent a liberal offering to the Bell Haven Orphans' Home at Luling. hope to do more this year. It is being planned to unite the efforts of the church here with those around us and thus to preach the word at destitute points in the county.—R. D. Smith.

What About the Song Service?

Are we using this as effectively as we should? Are we teaching as much gospel in it as we should? We study our music and bring out books which enable congregations to have the best.

"The Cross and Resurrection in Song" represents the fruits of the hardest and most careful work of our lives in striving to give to music lovers the best that can be produced. It contains the cream from our former productions, combined with the cream from plates owned by The Union Song Book Company, of this city, and about one hundred new songs that represent the best that can now be produced. The melody is of the sweetest and most soul-stirring quality. The words are deeply spiritual and present the fuliness of gospel teaching.

A more serviceable book you could not purchase. It has enough of the old music in it—the sweet old songs our grandparents loved to sing—to enable any congregation to use it at once. Too, it has enough new music to more than meet the demands of those who are looking for new music only.

Both Vegetable and Animal Fats.

Fertilize Your Soy Beans and Peanuts

THE world needs both vegetable and animal fats, and is paying big prices for them. Thousands of farmers are growing soy beans and peanuts—feeding them to hogs—or harvesting and selling to oil mills.

Den't think of growing these crops without fertilizer. If you 'hog down' the crop, V-C Fertilizers will greatly increase the yield—give you more pork from every acre. If you sell them as a money crop, you will find that every dollar invested in V-C Fertilizers yields rich returns.

Many think of these crops as legumes that help the soil. They do when you plow them up and turn them under. But nobody is burying soy beans and peanuts in this manner when they bring such excellent prices. They are invariably harvested, and when harvested they take away fertility, exhaust your soil—just as corn, cotton, and all other crops do. They must be fertilized. There are V-C Fertilizers made by formulas to suit these and every other Southern crop.

ORDER V-C NOW

Freight is congested — cars so scarce—that every farmer should give the dealer his orders now. V-C Crop Books tell how to make the most from every acre of soy beans, peanuts, or any other crop. They will be sent free upon request. Just write saying what crops you grow, and the books will be sent you free.

Florida Mission Fund.

BY J. O. BARNES.

To the members of the churches of Christ everywhere: I address you in behalf of the cause of Christ in my native State, Florida, where I have labored many years, and am still laboring, to plant the truth of God in its purity and simplicity and build up New Testament Christianity, and ask you to help me to do this. By reason of the favorable climatic conditions, the gospel can be preached in this great mission field every day and night in the year. We need more than a hundred preachers in Florida, but we cannot have them unless they are sufficiently supported to keep them and their families from absolute need.

Now, will you have fellowship with me in raising a fund by monthly contributions to support an evangelist in the field all of his time, that he may not be hindered by the cares of secular employment to support his family? I am raising a fund, to be known as the "Florida Mission Fund," and to be placed in the First National Bank of Lake City to the credit of that fund, to be drawn on from time to time for the support of the evangelist who labors in this field in answer to the call of the brethren who support him with their offerings (either direct or through this fund). When the fund is sufficiently subscribed to justify me in asking a man to do this work (without a stipulated price), and when such a man has been obtained, his name will be given to the Gospel Advocate, so all may know who is receiving their support.

I assure all that may have fellowship with me in this worthy cause that all funds intrusted to me will be prayerfully and judiciously expended, and the names of donors will be published in the Gospel Advocate from time to time as the occasion demands. All who will agree to send a definite amount for the above-stated purpose, each month, will please write me at once, with the amount they desire to give the first month accompanying the letter. Brethren, I am not asking this for myself. I am doing all I can to preach the gospel without charge (and without much remuneration). In addition to that, I want to help further the cause which every Christian loves by holding up the hand of some worthy brother to help us in this work. "Let us be workers together with God." My address is Lake City, Fla.

A Warning.—To feel tired before exertion is not laziness—it's a sign that the system lacks vitelity and needs the tonic effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sufferers should not delay. Get rid of that tired feeling by beginning to take Hood's Sarsaparilla to-day.

The Work in North Carolina. BY W. L. REEVES.

Our work in the "old North State" has not advanced in some ways during the long-continued cold, snow, and ice. For fifty-three days the ground has not been clear of snow. At times during this period the mercury registered from zero to twelve degrees below zero; so, of course, it was prudent for people to remain in comfortable quarters most of the time. Those of our number here in South Winston-Salem who were physically able and zealously affected have met regularly every Lord's day in spite of the cold and snow storms.

Since my marriage last October and return from a month's trip to Florida on November 27, I have spent almost all of my time with the work here in the city. My wife and I live near the church house; and being thus in the midst of the homes of the members, we can and do urge all to attend regularly and take part in the work; consequently there seems to be a bright prospect now for a fine lot of work accomplished during the year. At any rate, we are planning greater things for all the little congregations-better attendance, more Bible study, more charity work, and lots of missionary work in the near-by destitute places; for North Carolina certainly needs the true gospel. Why is it that this State has been neglected so badly by loyal congregations elsewhere? This question reminds me that an inquiry came to me from Nashville, Tenn., relative to the outlook for a lot of work in several places. A certain man is interested in building up the cause in waste places-cities and towns where we have no congregations. Both preachers and congregations to support them are needed to take hold of the work. I want to hear at once from brethren who will take hold and help this work in a substantial way. I am not asking for any financial aid for myself; but if other preachers could be sustained in other parts of this State, they could do great good. Any congregation will invest its money well when it gives to the right man to preach the gospel in North Carolina. I will give the proceeds from the sale of my tract to the work. Full-page size, forty-eight pages. Title of tract, "How to Identify the True Church." Price, ten cents per copy; one dollar a dozen. Brethren, let us work while it is day; the night of death will soon come. My address is 711 Devonshire Street, Winston-Salem, Teachers' Certificates Guaranteed at Thorp Spring.

BY C. R. NICHOL.

Some time ago Thorp Spring Christian College announced that it would be able to issue first-grade teachers' certificates at the end of the present session, because it was certain that it was meeting every requirement of the State Department of Education. I am glad to announce that I have recently received an official statement from Superintendent W. F. Doughty guaranteeing the school this privilege and placing the school in the list of firstclass schools of the State. It would probably be asking too much of the paper to publish the letter from Superintendent Doughty, but he assures me that Thorp Spring Christian College ranks as high as any junior college in the State.

Students who complete five college courses with us may receive a firstgrade State teachers' certificate, good for four years, at least. Many students are taking advantage of this opportunity. Several new students have recently entered. Those who fail to complete the five courses by June may remain for the summer school and secure the desired courses.

The attendance of the school has exceeded our expectations, in view of the fact that many young men who would have been with us have been called into the government's service. About two hundred and twelve regular students have enrolled. If the special students were included in this enrollment, it would amount to between three hundred and four hundred students. The two hundred or more students reported are the regular students from the eighth grade up.

The school is now as well equipped as any junior college in the State. We rejoice to know that the interest in Christian education is growing.

A Short Review of a Book.

BY H. W. JONES.

I have carefully perused Dr. J. E. Thompson's new book, "The History of the Pall and Dissolution of Christendom," and, concerning this part of Revelation, can still say: "I don't know." Neither do I believe Brother Thompson knows. He says many good things in his book; but he lays down some premises and draws some conclusions that he did not "prove" to my mind.

As I see it, there has been quite an "interregnum" or something else, if none of Revelation has yet come to pass, during nineteen centuries, when John said "the things must shortly come to pass." Brother Thompson makes the phrase, "shortly come to pass," mean come to pass quickly when it begins to come to pass, yet in the future; but this premise, upon which most of his arguments must depend, was not at all conclusive to my mind.

The "miry clay" may represent "the seed of men"—"I don't know;" and how he proved (?) "the seed of men" to mean the word of God was not satisfactory to me.

It may be so very sudden when "the stone smote the image"—I don't know. And "the woman," "the sun," and "the moon" of Rev. 12 may mean what he says, but I am still waiting for more proof.

He says the word "horn" means "a captain general"—it may; I don't know. And "Mystery Babylon" may mean a future federation of spiritual houses or denominational churches, and it may mean something else. I don't know.

His "miraculous age yet to come" and the universal kingdom to own all the property, etc., is rather visionary as I see it. To "come forth out of her" means to literally "leave her territory," he says. Why not a spiritual "coming forth?"

He locates "the place where our Lord was crucified" as the second universal kingdom (yet to come)—a democracy like the Roman government was, etc. Rather visionary again.

He says every Christian on earth will be in Judea at Christ's second coming—something new to me.

He says the "beast" of Rev. 13: 2 will have supernatural powers and will be over all things, etc.; but I don't know.

He further says "the requirements of the gospel plan of salvation" will cease at the beginning of this "miraculous age" and that, instead, there will be inspired men, heavenly angels, etc. This sounds far-fetched to me.

He says the "two witnesses" (Rev.

11) are two prophets, two men; that they are dead three and one-half days and then ascend to heaven, etc. This all may be; I don't know.

And "the woman" (church) will flee to a material wilderness, which is the land of Edom; and from thence the church goes to Jerusalem to meet Christ, etc. It may be that way, but he didn't "prove" it to me.

He says the "little horn" is a captain general (a man) with supernatural powers from Satan, etc.; but I doubt it. And that "they of the people" is the beast with ten horns is far from conclusive to my mind.

He says the miracles of Rev. 13.

13, 14 are not figurative, but literal, real. He speaks more advisedly on that than I could. All men may be forced to worship a material image or be killed. They may have to have a mark on their persons in the third universal kingdom; but I doubt it. A "horn" (man) may exist like Daniel, who can read dark sentences, etc., under the fourth kingdom; but I doubt that. He thinks "the falling away" of 2 Thess. 2 is at the end near the coming of Christ; and I doubt that.

He says no universal kingdom has been yet, and that the last reigns will be only about seven years' duration. I don't know. There may be a federation of the nations of earth, but I have not seen it taught clearly in Revelation. It may be a "literal war" at the end, and a day may not stand for a year. I don't know.

He avers that Christ will literally stand in the midst of the seven churches of Asia (in the miraculous age), and it will be on Mount Zion in Jerusalem; and that the seven letters to the seven churches are to people yet to live; but I don't believe it. He says Christ will not come till the earth is ablaze with the mightiest miracles ever seen for twenty-three hundred days, etc. This sounds flighty to me.

Yes, many ideas in this book are new to me, and I do not believe I could ever have found some of these ideas by reading Revelation itself! And the fact that the book contains "something new" will be its chief asset in the public mind. Anyway, read the book; it will not hurt you unless adopted as a creed. The book is interesting and well written.

Whenever you attempt a good work, you will find other men doing the same kind of work, and probably doing it better. Envy them not.—Drummond.

Melchisedec a Type of Christ.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

"Now consider how great this man was." (Heb. 7: 4.) There must be a similarity between the type and antitype. "Who was Melchisedec?" has been a great question in the minds of many. Some have declared him to be the Christ, others say that he was the eternal God, and some deny that there ever was such a man. All base their opinions upon Paul's statement in Heb. 7: 3, which says: "Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life." They fail to understand that this statement refers to the priesthood, and the name "Melchisedec" was the official name of the man who was priest, just as the word "Areopagite," in Acts 17: 34, means the "judge" of the supreme court of Athens. Now, let us note the similarities between Christ and Shem.

- 1. Christ lived in another world before the flood before he came into this world, where he became a priest for people in this world. Melchisedec must have lived in a world before the flood before he became a priest. Shem being the only one of Noah's family living when Melchisedec met Abraham, the great-grandson of Shem of the ninth generation, Shem was the only man on earth that was in the world before the flood who would typify Christ.
- Shem came into this world independent of the volition of man or the law of propagation. Christ came into this world independent of man.
- Shem would have been priest independent of the law of Moses. Christ was made priest without the law of Moses.
- 4. "Shem" might have been the surname of Melchisedec, as that was the official name of the priest. "Jesus" is the surname of Christ, which is his official name.
- 5. Shem was sealed inside of the ark. The tomb in which Jesus was buried was sealed.
- Shem was surrounded by the power of death while in the ark. Christ was in the valley and shadow of death while sealed in the tomb.
- 7. Shem came out of the ark and the surroundings of death alive. Jesus came out of death and the grave alive.
- Shem would have been made priest after passing through the flood. Christ was made priest after he passed through the waters of Jordan in baptism.
- 9. Shem would have been king of righteousness after the sacrifice which his father had prepared was offered. Christ is King of righteousness, and was crowned such after the sacrifice which his Father had prepared.

- 10. Shem being the oldest man in the world, he would have been king by inheritance, which was king of peace. Christ inherited his kingdom, which is one of peace.
- 11. Shem would have been a priest upon his throne. Christ is Priest upon his throne.
- 12. Shem could have been made a priest by appointment. Christ was made a priest by appointment.
- 13. Shem could have been a priest regardless of age. Christ was made a priest regardless of age required by the law of Moses.
- 14. Shem's priestly office could have been endless. Christ's priesthood is forever.
- 15. Shem never had a successor in anything. Christ has no successor.
- 16. Shem was not of the tribe of Levi. Christ was not of the tribe of Levi, for both existed before Levi was born.
- 17. Shem, or Melchisedec, could not have inherited the priestly office when no such law existed. Christ did not inherit the priesthood by a law controlling those of the tribe of Levi, he being of the tribe of Judah.
- 18. "Melchisedec" being the official name of the priest, he surely had a surname, and "Shem" is the only name in the Bible where what is said of Melchisedec can be said of Shem or his name be used. "Christ" is the official name of Jesus, the name "Jesus" being his surname, and whatever is said of Christ is said of Jesus.
- 19. As "Jesus" and "Christ" refer to the same man, so "Shem" and "Melchisedec" refer to the same person.
- 20. Shem lived longer in this world than any other man; and as the Lord's people here are kings and priests, and as their great High Priest lives forever, it is but fitting that the Melchisedec who was the type of our great High Priest should live longer than any other man in this world. Shem is the only man this side of the flood who outlived any other man in this world. The type of Christ is still living; so is Shem. Here the future conscious existence of man is established.
- 21. Abraham was met by Melchisedec by the side of the river Jordan and communed with him. As Shem lived in that country and province, it is reasonable to suppose that he was the one who brought the bread and wine, typical of our Lord's Supper, and communed with his great-grandson of the ninth generation. Christ meets his soldiers at the communion table and blesses them; but he is on one side of the death line and they on the other. When Shem died, we have no account of any funeral display or a gathering of the people to pay a tribute of respect due the greatest and oldest man on earth. So, when our greatest Man on earth died. there was no display or gathering of the people. Shem lived before Abraham and before this world; and Christ lived before Abraham, before Shem, and before this world. No other man typifies Christ in so many ways as does the great man, Shem. If he was the Melchisedec, then Shem is still living. (Heb. 7: 8.)

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat if Kidneys Feel Like Lead or Bladder Bothers You —Meat Forms Uric Acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness, and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean; and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders

Jad Salts is harmless, inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithta-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

The Prayer of Faith.

BY C. PETTY.

The prayer of faith is the only one that will be answered. We must believe that we will receive what we ask for, or it is not worth while to pray. The Savior said to his disciples: "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." (Mark 1: 24.) Now, while our country is in such great distress over the war, all Christians should be praying with a humble, trusting faith to have the right spirit and to be led in the right way, knowing that if they are thus guided "all things" will "work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.) While it may be hard for us to see it that way, yet it is that way to "them that love God" and walk in his way. All of our prayers should be like our Savior's prayer in Gethsemane, when he said: "Not my will, but thine, be (Matt. 26: 39.) The Lord knows what is best for us and what our needs are. Peter tells us to be "sober, and watch unto prayer." (1 Pet. 4: 7.) Like the little child that asks its father to bring it something when he comes. The child will watch for his coming, and will watch unto its fulfillment.

Could we be in thousands of homes in our land at the hour of prayer, we would hear the voices of many mothers going up to the gates of heaven for the boys that have answered their country's call and cross the briny deep, to return no more. These mothers, however, are praying for their safety and their return. They are praying, too, to be submissive in these trying hours of distress and sorrow. All Christians, whether they have loved ones gone or not, should humbly pray daily to be led and guided in the way that they can do the most good.

Our faith in prayer should never falter. Paul writes to Timothy: "I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting." (1 Tim. 2: 8.) If it is without wrath, it is in love; if it is without doubt, then it is in faith. Therefore, when we pray, it should be done in faith and love. This is hard to do at this time when our country and our liberty are threatened. But that Eye that never slumbers is watching. He has told us in what spirit we are to pray-a forgiving spirit. For aught we know, the prayers of faith that are going up to the gates of heaven daily may do as much to preserve and protect our country and our homes as shot and shell-yea, may do very much more.

Let us learn to lean on the everlasting arms. David said: "Hear my voice, O God, in my prayer: preserve my life from fear of the enemy." (Ps. 64: 1.) Again: "Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice." (Ps. 55: 17.) John saw "golden vials full of odors," or sweet incense, and these odors were "the prayers of the saints." (Rev. 5: 8.) It is sweet to know that our Father in heaven will hear the prayer of faith of his children in distress and will preserve them unto his heavenly kingdom.

Renwar Relieves Rheumatism.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of theumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. I am glad to add that I find the churches where I have gone in an improved state, both as to doing missionary work and as to godly living among the work and as to godly living among the membership. Of course, the future is not wholly bright; but, on the whole, I am very much encouraged over the outlook in gospel work for another year, especially in my own home field. -Price Billingsley.

Strange Vapor Drives Out Catarrh

A Novel Method and Very Effective -- Costs but Little to Try.

There is a way out of every difficulty, and those who suffer from catarrh can learn of a pleasant and novel method of relief if they will take the trouble to write a brief letter.

In Atlanta there is a respected physician who has been treating catarrh successfully by a unique plan, for over forty-three years, and yet a lot of catarrh sufferers don't know about him, He doosn't advise internal medicines, which may upset the stomach, nor sprays, salves and such things, which cannot reach far back enough. His is the smoke-vapor method, and is produced by a remedy made from such natural medicinal agents as herbs, flowers and herries.

By writing to Dr.J.W. Blosser, 881 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and enclosing tencents in coin or stamps, he will forward a trial outfit ready for you to use. Dr. ten Blosser's remedy has been found very effective, not only in chronic catarrh, but in catarrhal headaches, asthma, roaring and buzzing in the ears leading to loss of hearing.

Send ten cents for this trial outfit, and watch it clear up the breathing tubes so that you will feel you could have saved yourself a lot of suffering and trouble if you had heard of Dr. Blosser's Remedy before.

COMB SAGE TEA IN FADED OR GRAY HAIR

Look Young! Common Garden Sage and Sulphur Darkens So Natu-rally Nobody Can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy, and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded, or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about fifty cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied; it is so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft, and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

Floyd.

The largest audience, perhaps, that ever assembled at Center Point church of Christ was seen on June 24, 1917, when the relatives and friends of my father, A. R. Floyd, of Center Point, met to pay a last sad tribute to his memory and to lovingly and tenderly lay his dear body in the earth to await the resurrection. Father had spent his entire life within a radius of a few miles of the place that now marks the resting place of his mortal remains. The funeral services were conducted by Brother W. P. Dorsey, of Nashville, Ark. Our dear father leaves a wife and seven children, besides many other near relatives. His loss is keenly felt by the church at Center Point, which he so much loved and which he supported liberally with his presence and means. Father united with the body of Christ in his early life. He is safe in the arms of Jesus, sweetly sleeping on his gentle breast. He will never return to us, but we can go to him, if we will only do God's will, to be with him in the home of the soul, where there is no sickness and death, no sorrow or tears, and no sad farewells. MAMIE.

Bell.

The dark messenger has visited the home of S. M. Bell and called his dear wife, Jennie, from this earthly home into the unseen. Aunt Jennie Bell (née Lowrance) was born on April 14, 1861, and died on October 17, 1917. She was married to S. M. Bell on June 10, 1882. To this union were born six children, two of which preceded their mother. Another link in the family chain is broken; her chair around the fireside is vacant; her accustomed place at the table must be filled by another. But our loss is her gain. The dear, sweet soul whom we all loved so dearly is gone; the poor, tired, frail, weary body has lain itself down to rest; the heart that once beat so warm and true for her loved ones is stilled in death; the feet that once so actively trod the paths of life are stilled; the cheerful voice that always greeted us with happy words is forever hushed, and how deeply grieved we are to think we cannot hear it again on earth! Aunt Jennie was always kind and sweet to every one, and to know her was to love her. She always had a good word for every one, and she is sadly missed by all. Seldom has a death brought more sorrow to the writer, for she was a dear aunt of mine. Funeral services were conducted by Brother Reynolds, of Kenton, Tenn., at Lowrance's Chapel. The remains were then carried to Old Salem, where the body now rests and awaits the coming of the rest.

MAUDE.

Owens.

At his home, in Milburn, Ky., on November 28, 1917, Thomas Fillmore Owens, one of God's noble workmen, passed into that rest that remains to the people of God. Brother Owens was born on October 18, 1856. He was married to Miss Kate Sanford on May 9, 1879. To this union two daughters were born, who, with the wife and mother, are left to mourn the death of husband and father. Brother Owens obeyed the gospel in 1884 and was a faithful Christian till death. He was the leading member in the congregation at Milburn and will be greatly missed; indeed, it will be difficult to find another to take his place. Living near the meetinghouse, he was always on time to build fires, ring the bell, and wait for others to come. He was the leader in the song service, a teacher in the Sunday school, preached when necessary, and did anything to be done in either the work or worship of the church. Few congregations have such men in them; they are worth while; and though we have to give them up and the parting is sad, yet it is sweet to remember them for their work's sake. Surely his will be a crown beset with the diadems and jewels of an eternal world. The funeral service was in the home, conducted by the writer, in the presence of a large body of relatives, brethren, and friends, when we tried to comfort the sorrowing and admonish the liv-ing to accept his God and Savior as theirs, and so live as to meet him in the home of the soul, where there will be no more partings. To this end let us all labor and pray.

J. L. HOLLAND.

Graves.

On January 7, 1918, I was called by telephone to the Antioch neighborhood. Brother J. W. Graves was dead. Brother Graves came to Texas about 1872. He and Miss Bettle Passmore were married on March 4, 1872. She and four children are left to mourn their loss. Brother Graves obeyed the gospel, through the preaching of old Brother N. W. Ware, thirty-five years ago. He soon was appointed deacon of the Antioch church, which place he filled for several years; then he was set apart as elder, which place he was filling when he died. Brother Graves was always on hand at the church and did his best as far as his ability would permit. He had many friends, not only in the church, but on the outside, some of whom came twenty-five or thirty miles to his funeral. Some one said to the writer that he did not know what Antioch would do now that Brother Graves was gone, with no one to look after the church and cemetery. I want to say to the young brethren and sisters: Keep up the cemetery in memory of your friends and people who are laid to rest there. You should keep up the church and meet on Lord's days. If your fathers and mothers and friends who are sleeping so close by could speak, what rejoicing there would be at the old church! Brother Graves was taken sick about September 15 and died on January 7, 1918, at 6 A.M. Funeral services were held in the church at Antioch, where the writer tried to speak words of consolation to a large concourse of people. The remains were laid to rest in the Antioch cemetery. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Connell.

The sorrows and bereavements that always accompany warfare are being felt by our people. Grim Death is invading the army cantonments and claiming his toll of our young men. He has entered the home of Brother and Sister J. W. Connell, of Ro Ellen, Tenn., and left his icy footprints there. The noble youth that left this home in September to join his com-rades in the camp never returned. His body was brought back home for burial, but the spirit had taken its flight. Claud Wilson Connell, son of J. W. and Emma Connell, was born on November 2, 1893. He obeyed the November 2, 1893. He obeyed the gospel in August, 1911, and was bap-tized by Brother W. H. Trice. He was faithful and true to the principles of and devoted Christianity church. The writer labored with the congregation at his home for three years and found him always at his place and ready for any duty. He was drafted into the army on the first call and left home on September 21, 1917, for Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga. On October 16 he was removed to Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C. was a member of Company A, 113th M. G. B. N. On November 2, the day he was twenty-four years old, he took measles, which resulted in his lungs becoming involved, and he died at the Base Hospital on December 26. The funeral was conducted by the writer on December 30. He leaves a father, mother, and sister, who will feel keenly the loss of his presence and assistance. When called for military service, it was with reluctance that he left home and entered the training camp; not because he was lacking in devotion to his country's interests, but because he knew that his presence and assistance were much needed at home in sharing responsibilities and cares with his parents and sister, and also because carnal warfare was incompatible with his idea and conception of Christian duty and the Christian's life. But the country called him and he responded bravely, hoping that he would not be required to violate his conscience by engaging in combatant service. When the call from a higher Power came, he answered that without doubt or fears as to his fitness and preparation for the change. The general sentiment among his friends and associates seemed to be: "Claude was undoubtedly pre-pared to go." He told his mother during his last illness that amid all the temptations and vice incident to

MOST people foolishly seem to think they are going to to get renewed health and strength from some stimulating medicine, secret nostrum or narcotic drug, said Dr. E. Sauer, a Boston Physician who has studied widely, both in this country and in great European Medical Institutions, when, as a fact, real and true strength can only come from the food you eat. But people often fail to get the strength cut of their food because they haven't enough iron in their blood to enable it to change food into living matter. From their weakened, nervous condition they know something is wrong, but they can't tell what. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. New tike two five-grain tablets of ordinary that well into three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous, run-down people, who were ailing all the while, most astonishingly increase their strength and endurance simply by taking iron in the proper form and this after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. But don't take the old forms of reduced iron, iron acetate or tincture of iron simply to save a few cents. You must take iron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated, like nuxated iron, if you want it to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless. Many an athicte or prize fighter has won the day simply because he knew the secret of great strength and endurance which comes from having plenty of iron in the blood, while many another has gone down to inglorious defeat simply for the lack of iron.

NOTE—Nuxated Iron which is prescribed and recommended above by Dr. E. Sauer, and other physicians, is not a secret remety but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older increasic fron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is disjected by all good druggists.

Another Tribute.

BY L. STROTHER.

It was never my good pleasure to meet Brother David Lipscomb personally, but for many years I have been a regular subscriber and reader of the Gospel Advocate, and through his writings in that journal I have learned many lessons and truths which, perhaps, I never would have learned otherwise; hence I learned to love and hold him in high esteem. In his writings he was always plain and concise, making his subjects plain. He never made any display of his learning, but always wrote in plain and simple language so the common people could understand him. In the death of Brother Lipscomb the church has sustained a great loss; but our loss is his gain. He has gone to receive his reward. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Brother Lipscomb is not dead, but liveth. He will be spoken of in generations yet to come. Now my heart's desire and prayer to God is that the present editors and managers of the Gospel Advocate may always keep the paper on the high plane of journalism that Brother Lipscomb and Brother Sewell set it and where it now stands.

Tribute to J. K. P. Wilkinson. BY W. P. SIMS.

I first met Brother Polk Wilkinson fifty years ago. Three years later I became intimately associated with him for the most of his life. He and I, with two sisters, began the church work at Pleasant Plains in the spring of 1871. For several years the cause of Christ prospered there. The first preachers we had there were: Brethren John Smithson, J. H. Morton, J. M. Kidwill, J. L. Sewell, David Lipscomb, J. M. Barnes, J. D. Floyd-all gone to their reward, save two.

Brother Wilkinson was always on hand to take part in the Lord's work. He was a good farmer and soon developed into a good teacher. He was so calm and composed in debate that an opponent could not get him mad or flustered. We have preached in all the coves and on the mountains around where the gospel had never been preached. He lived to see good results from our labors of love. never knew him to engage in protracted meetings alone, but he was a willing helper. The first woman he ever baptized was his aunt. Four of us carried her into the water. This was an inspiration to him, as he had no relatives in the faith; but soon he was made to rejoice to see sisters and brothers and cousins and friends coming out on the Lord's side.

His wife was Miss Annie Crawford, from Rutherford County. She was a Presbyterian, but soon decided to be simply a Christian. She was a dellcate woman and died several years ago. After her death, Brother Wilkinson lived with his sisters. No brother was ever more interested in them than was he. He bought a home at Longwood, Fla., where he spent most of the winters with them. While there was no church there, they had the worship on Lord's day.

He made several trips to Denver, Col., and was greatly interested in Brother Evans' work there. He held Brother Evans in the highest esteem. He never met any one without finding out whether he was a Christian. He was always ready to preach the gospel at such times. He would send the Gospel Advocate to persons, and I have known several persons to obey the gospel as a result Thus he was helping the publishers of the paper and saving souls with his money. I never regarded him as a timid man, but rather that he was extremely modest. He was companionable and was a true yokefellow.

His presence tended to elevate those about him. The name "Polk Wilkinson" has an ameliorating influence wherever he was known. He lived in a way that people could not say that he was not a good man, no matter what their religious views were.

He was a man of strong convictions. In his travels, which were extensive, he would not worship where the organ and society were. He said he preferred to go where the denominations were, as he thought they did the best they knew, but that the others knew better. At the time of prayer he always was on his knees. In fact, he was on the safe side of all questions where there was room for a doubt. He never voted but one time in his life. He was one of the old subscribers of the Gospel Advocate.

Many times he has said good-by when he was going to Florida, expecting to return, but this time he has gone to the spirit land to be with the Lord until the judgment day. So, Brother Polk, farewell till we meet again. To his brother and sisters let me say: Be faithful until death, and you will have a crown of life.

Who Is Wrong?

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

In the strife of human life we often meet with those who see not as we do. Thus the question is, Who is wrong? To start with, almost all concede that self is right and the other is wrong. But where we often make a sad mistake is in never secing, or owning if we do see, that we are wrong. Some never are convinced they are in the wrong. But if is not possible for us to be in the right all the time; if so, we need no Advocate with the Father.

Great men often differ; but to decide which is correct, we must have a standard. Now, if I speak one way and the Book another, then I must give in and take the safe plan. But there is the trouble-to know what the Book says. We may differ as to that; but if we will to know of the doctrine, we shall know of it. I fear there is too much theory of men and not a willingness to practice. We can all learn from one another if we will. But if a man thinks that because one is younger or less educated than he, therefore no lessons worth while can be gleaned from his knowledge, then a grave mistake is made.

But how shall I go into an investigation? should say it is possible that I am wrong. It is not for us to be the true model; but Christ was, and we are to be his imitators. He is "the way," and no man is to be set up as such. We see only through our own glasses; if we could see the other one's side of the question, we might be of a different belief. But if all facts point to one in the wrong, we are to set ourselves for the right and condemn all others. There is too much egotism among the people to day. Let no one think that he is faultless, but let all confess their sins one to another and pray one for another. Let us deal with all by the Golden Rule and see our own faults as well as the faults of others.

There are moments when the flesh is nothing to me, when I feel and know the flesh to be the vision; God and the spiritual, the only real and true. Depend upon it, the spiritual is the real.-Tennyson.

What Does Your Money Cost You?

Emerson said: "The worst thing about money is that it so often costs so much." If we would take this truth seriously to heart, we would not worry so much over the lack of money. Nor would we envy those who seem to have so much of it. It is not really difficult to see just how much their money has cost them. In many cases it has cost the loss of the sense of honor and self-respect; it has cost the loss of health; it has cost the loss of the esteem of their neighbors; it has cost the sacrifice of their children by giving them over to worldly pleasures; it has cost their former interest in the work of the Lord and in the assembly of the saints; it has cost their neglect of the poor and the orphans; in brief, it has cost them their souls! And sometimes it does not take a great fortune to go to one's head at the expense of his heart. Money can make a fool of a man, changing the humble, self-sacrificing follower of the Lord Jesus Christ into a self-conceited snob, forgetful of the highest interests of his family and friends. It can give him a feeling of superiority over his poorer neighbors and blind his eyes to the fact that he has really lost the place of confidence he once enjoyed in their hearts. Money is either a power for good in a man's life and in the lives of others or a deceiver who will cheat him out of his best possessions. What is the meaning of your money? Have you taken the time to watch its effects upon your own heart, upon the other members of your family, upon the church and the community? Is your money lifting you and others up to heaven, or is it dragging you down to hell while you, blind to the truth of the Scriptures and deaf to the entreaties of your brothers, are going on with your selfish enjoyment of it? If you have any money to speak of, take an inventory this very day. Said Dr. Lorimer: "It's good to have money and the things that money can buy; but it's good, too, to check up once in a while, and make sure that you haven't lost the things that money won't buy."

A Much-Needed Spring Cleaning.

The stones of the temple on Mount Moriah were common stones until they were consecrated for God's house and worship. So, in the human temple of our bodies, the falents, capabilities, powers, and, above all, the affections, through regeneration and sanctification, become the holy dwelling place of God's Spirit. The Jewish rulers in Christ's time made God's house of prayer a den of thieves. Once it had been holy, but they permitted it to become corrupted by the introduction of forbidden things. The evil was not all done in a day. It crept in gradually from day to day. Many evil practices were introduced because they were "convenient" or because the world asked for their introduction. In like manner comes the desecration of our bodies. Selfishness, sensuality, covetousness, pride, love of money, these and many more, are the buyers and sellers which bring defilement. If Christ is to be Lord of our lives; if, indeed, we are to remain new creatures in him, the temple in which he is to reign must be cleansed. When William Cecil was Lord Treasurer of England, it is said that when he came to retire at night he would throw off his official gown and say: "Lie there, Lord Treasurer." He meant that all affairs of state must be dismissed from his mind in order that he might have rest. Every Christian should so wear the garments of necessary duty. He should be prepared to say: "Lie by, world: lie by, all secular cares; lie by, all pleasures; lie by, all thoughts of gain." As Paul put it: "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof."

The time for spring cleaning is upon us. The women folks are going to it with a vengeance, and the men folks are dodging as usual. But there is one kind of cleaning that should never be overlooked. It is the cleansing of God's spiritual temple. "If any man destroyeth the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, and such are ye."

When a Man Faces Death.

Some of the camp workers tell us that the fact that our boys are facing death makes them more susceptible to Christ's teaching than ever before. It is therefore easier to reach their hearts with the gospel message. Certainly we should lose no opportunity to teach those who are most teachable. The good ground is always more inviting than that which is hard or stony or choked with thorns. But is it not a sclemn fact that every man, whether in the army or out of it, is face to face with death? He knows by observation and by the divine record that it is "appointed unto man once to die." Other things may or may not come to pass, but this is the inevitable. In spite of medical skill and all modern methods of handling disease.

death will surely re ch us unless we be among those present when Josus comes. It should help us to remember how Jesus lived with the same knowledge of approaching death written deep in his heart. To him the cross was ever in view, but not in the sense of the inevitable, for he was the Lord of life. It was his voluntary choice, and through that choice the death of the cross was to bring life to the lost. Because it was the way for the Son of man, therefore it must become the way for every man. Each man is to take up his cross. "But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's suffering; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."

In the newspapers we find many an account of heroic conduct upon the part of our boys as they went down at sea or died at the battle front. But our chief inspiration should come from a study of Jesus' attitude as he faced the cross. There is nothing in the annals of men to compare with this perfect example of true heroism. And we, like his disciples of old, can see him going on bravely, "like the stars, not hasting, not tarrying," toward Calvary's hill.

Z. T. Sweeney Answers Questions Raised by the Gospel Advocate.

(From the Christian Standard.)

Nashville, Tenn., January 9, 1918.—Editors Gospel Advocate.—Dear Brethren: In the threshold of my letter I wish to express my regret that I have delayed so long in reply ing to your courteous editorial in your issue of November 29, 1917. regarding the constitution of International Convention, adopted October 26 at Kansas City. For a week or two after it appeared, I was ill, and during the holiday season I was occupied with many duties. This is the first time I have had opportunity to reply. The crucial point in your editorial is found in the following statement:

Will our brethren advocating this measure kindly answer this question: "If action taken by the convention as provided for by this constitution should be to uphold and continue in its service false teachers, would not the local churches be compelled to either support such action or to withdraw from the concern?" It is not sufficient to be reminded here that they would not be likely to take such action. The question is, Does the arrangement give them the power to do it? We should be glad to have this question squarely faced with a plain "yes" or "no." If we are mistaken in our induction and statement of facts, it can be answered "no;" but if we are not thus mistaken, it should be answered "yes," and this fact would confirm our contention.

There are two definite questions in the above contention.

- 1. Would not the local churches be compelled to either support such action or to withdraw from the concern? In reply to the above, I answer, unhesitatingly, "Yes."
- Does the arrangement give them power to do it? I answer, unhesitatingly, "No."

Now, having given as fair an answer to these questions as I can, I give herewith my reasons for the answers.

The convention is a purely human organization. It claims no divine authority for its constitution. It only claims a divine purpose or aim-viz., the preaching of the gospel to those who have it not. Membership in the convention is purely voluntary. It is composed of those who "attend and enroll." The membership in the convention is limited in time to the session of the convention. When it adjourns, membership expires by limitation. A person who was a member of this year's convention is not entitled to membership in next year's session, unless he "at tends and enrolls" again. If a brother finds himself out of sympathy with the convention for any reason, all he has to do is to let it alone. He is not bound in any way, He does not have to withdraw from the convention, but he can exercise his right by falling to "attend and enroll." The convention cannot force an individual member or a church to be represented in any future session.

In answering the second question, "No," I do so because there is nothing in the constitution of the convention which authorizes the convention to employ or continue teachers, either true or false. The employment of teachers is not a part of the work of the convention. It is not hinted at in the constitution. Its purpose is clearly stated: to obtain "a closer cooperation among their various missionary, educational, benevolent, and other agencies, and a more general fellowship in their common efforts for the extension of the kingdom of God."

It is a great convocation of all who "desire the extension of the kingdom of God." To it the various agencies may come and give an account of their stewardship. It provides for an intelligent business examination of their accounts, and claims the right to make recommendations for their guidance in future work. The employment of teachers and missionaries is the work of the societies; and the remedy for the employment of false teachers is to shut off our contributions to such societies. In my humble judgment, that remedy will prove effective.

In conclusion, I wish to present a few propositions that appear to me to be self-evident:

- 1. There is no reason why there should be any clash between the churches and the convention while each keeps within its sphere.
- "The church is clearly a divine institution. Its King, laws, constitution, terms of admission, are all divine." I most heartily indorse your statement.

"Matters which have been settled by the King and placed on record as a guide are not subject to change or modification by a vote of the people, but are fixed and final." Whenever any human organization attempts to modify matters "which have been settled by the King," the Gospel Advocate may have a more powerful ally, but it will have no more faithful ally than your humble servant in resisting such aggression. But does the convention arrogate to itself such powers? Does it not distinctly disavow such power? Its own words, as expressed in the constitution, are: "Reaffirming our steadfast adherence to the independence and autonomy of the local churches, and disavowing any control over our congregations," etc. This should be a sufficient guarantee that it has no desire to modify things that are "fixed and final." Are you not mistaken in your statement when you say: "Here, now, is a distinct and unmistakable provision for deciding matters for the local churches by a majority vote of the members of this general body?" Nowhere in the constitution is there a hint that matters are to be decided for the local churches by a vote of any kind, viva voce or ballot.

I understand Article III, to be an attempt simply to facilitate the counting of a vote, and to be limited to such questions as lie within the limits of the constitution. I opposed that article as bungling and unbusinesslike, but finally gave way to the judgment of my brethren, knowing, as I did, that it was impossible to ever put such a vote into operation.

There is room on the ocean for all the ships of the world to pass without collision if each keeps to its own course. There is plenty of room for collision if they steer contrary to maritime laws.

2. The peculiar natures of the church and conventions differentiate their labors. While each is animated by the same purpose—the establishment of the kingdom of God among men—yet they employ different methods for the accomplishment of their purpose.

To illustrate: Suppose four churches unite and contribute one thousand dollars and send a missionary to a heathen land. At the end of a year your missionary writes to the churches: "Brethren, I find that it is impossible for me to accomplish much here by merely preaching the gospel. If I had a hospital in which I could heal their diseased and crippled, or an orphanage where I could enlighten the minds of their young—in short, carry out the program of Christ, which he announced for himself at Nazareth in the beginning of his ministry—I think I could in time reach these people. But, brethren, in order to do this, I must have and invest a quarter of a million dollars."

What are these four churches to do? I will let your readers answer. Now, a foreign missionary society can build orphanages, hospitals, and schools, and, as a human business organization, can invest in real estate and hold large properties in each and do a work for Christ. Would any of your readers like to see the local churches come together into a corporate body endowed with such powers? That would be an ecclesiasticism that would shame the Roman Catholic Church.

3. There is nothing in the New Testament that will, forbid any number of Christ's followers from carrying out the commission. Nowhere in the Scriptures is it taught that it is the special prerogative of the churches to evangelize the world. Christ did not give the commission to the churches, but to individuals before the church was organized.

If there were but two Christians in the world to-day, the commission would be as binding on them as it was on those who heard it from the Lord's lips.

Followers of Christ, as well as churches of Christ, have a right to use forwarding agencies in carrying out the work of Christ. This was done when the editors of the Gospel Advocate used the Belgian Relief Commission and the Armenian Relief Commission in sending hundreds of dollars for the relief of those stricken peoples. You did exactly right, and showed your good sense in so doing. Those commissions can do this good work much more efficiently and economically than the brethren could do personally. They are purely human institutions and should be kept under close business scrutiny, but they should be used.

- 4. In conclusion, I wish to ask a question or two, which I should like to have faced with a plain "yes" or "no." I don't mean that you should say "yes" or "no" to me, but face your conscience with them.
- (1) Is there any scripture that forbids any number of Christians uniting together to carry out the commission of our Lord?
- (2) Is there any scripture that forbids these Christians using any good business methods or agencies in carrying out their Christ-commanded object?
- (3) Can I devise a better forwarding and superintending agency than is provided in the Foreign Christian Missionary Society?
- (4) Can I provide a better business method of looking into the accounts of said society than is provided in Article V., Section 2, of the constitution under consideration?

I may be wrong in all the foregoing, but my Master knows I am honest. I do not write to provoke discussion, and shall not enter into it. May the Heavenly Father bless all our efforts to serve him. Sincerely and fraternally,

Christ at the Grave of Lazarus.

BY F. W. SMITH.

There is nothing more helpful to a child of God than to dwell upon the humanity of our Lord. There are many clear and distinct statements in hely writ which present to us the fact that Christ was both human and divine. This was absolutely necessary in order for him to fulfill the mission of redeeming mankind, for the simple reason that he had to represent both God and man.

In order to present a few lessons from which it is hoped that some overburdened souls may derive comfort, I shall take one passage in which the human side of the Master stands out most clearly-viz.: "Jesus wept." (John 11: 35.) This is the shortest verse in the Bible, and it is also one of the most expressive. It is pregnant with meaning, and the circumstances under which the Son of man shed tears are touching in the extreme. His tears at this time were not expressive of a sorrow all his own, but were caused by the grief of others. Death had entered a home which must have been very dear to the Master. It was a home in which he, the homeless Wanderer, was always so welcome, and where he had so often refreshed his weary frame and satisfied his human hunger. Lazarus, Mary, and Martha were devoted to the Master, and every comfort of their humble home was freely bestowed upon him. There were ties of love and sympathy growing out of these relations of tenderest nature. Hence, when Death invaded this home and claimed as his victim the brother, two hearts were rent and two souls were plunged into the deepest shadows of grief. Is there no one who understands the nature of this grief and who can enter into fullest sympathy with these sorrowing sisters? To whom shall they turn, or to whom shall they go? Can they not in this darkest of hours recall a tender voice which they have so often heard beneath their own roof, and can they not remember the expression of those eyes in whose depths could be seen a well of human sympathy? O, yes, they remember; and they sent unto him, saying: "Lord, behold. he whom thou lovest is sick." This was while their brother was yet alive. He was only sick, but Mary and Martha must have been apprehensive. It must have impressed them as no ordinary matter, else they would not have troubled the Master with the message sent to him.

Mary and her sister knew the power of Jesus to heal the sick, and they evidently felt that if he were present their brother would not die. In fact, they expressed such a belief when Martha later said: "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Of course, Jesus knew the great anxiety of Mary and Martha as they watched by the bedside of their brother hovering between life and death, and how they longed for his presence, and yet he remains two days in the place where he received their message. Why this seeming indifference or this lack of sympathy for those whose hospitality he had so often enjoyed? Ah! Our Lord is an infinite giver. He is waiting until Lazarus dies, that he may bring to these sisters a twofold and far greater blessing than they had in mind. The death of Lazarus would furnish an occasion for Christ to glorify God and justify his claims by raising Lazarus from the dead. Thus not only would Mary and Martha be blessed by the restoration to life of their brother, but their faith in the divine Sonship of their Lord would be made doubly sure. For certainly one who could bring back to life a body which had lain in the grave four days must be what he claimed to be-viz., the Son of the living God. Our Father only permits the heavier burdens to fall upon us that he may bestow the greater blessings. In this instance the full measure of grief was permitted to come upon these sisters in order that the fullest measure of happiness might follow.

The humanity that had seemed stern and unfeeling was held in check while divinity wrought out a marvelous thing, but now the restraint was removed and the pent-up sympathy gives way in a flood of tears. "Jesus wept." Precious words! They come ringing down through the ages like sweet music to the soul. By faith we see him standing by that humble grave on the eve of speaking words that will call the dead back to life; but before such words leap from his immaculate lips his eyes rest upon the weeping sisters Divinity stays its hand while humanity whispers through its tears: "I know your sorrow, and my heart goes out to you." Because of his tears the Jews standing by said: "Behold how he loved him!" Was that the cause of those tears? He knew he was going to bring Lazarus back to life, and that he had purposely let him die for that end. Ah, no! Those tears sprang from a sympathy for the aching hearts of the living.

Now, what is the lesson? The children of God have One who can be touched with the feeling of their infirmities-One who not only knows, but can and does sympathize with them in all their trials and sorrows. When the heart is heavy and the sun seems gone out of our sky and there seems to be no hand to help, no ear to hear our wails of grief and no hand to lift the burden from our souls, let us not despair. There is One, thank God, who wept because of human sorrow, and who still feels for us in our midnight grief, and who, through his precious promises, can sooth our aching hearts. He who stilled the raging sea by saying, "Peace, be still," can calm the disturbed soul and cause a peace that passeth all understanding to reign within us. Again I say, thank God for tears. The tears of a pure, warm, and loyal heart are but the crystallization of a soul akin to God. I have seen more soul in the crystal drop rolling down the furrowed cheeks of the careworn than I have ever heard in the songs of the lighthearted. The tears of childhood begging for bread reaches the throne on high, but none the less so than the tears of true sympathy flowing out for the sad, sorrowful, suffering souls of earth. Cultivate a heart of sympathy, always remembering that "Jesus wept."

The Work at Camp Bowie.

A mass meeting of the brethren and sisters of the churches in Fort Worth, Texas, was held at the meetinghouse of the Southside-Central church of Christ on Sunday afternoon, February 24. In addition to representatives from the five congregations in the city, there was present a number of brethren from Dallas, Mansfield, and other places. Brother J. S. Dunn, Brother A. O. Colley, and Brother John Pummell, from Dallas, spoke; Brother Foy E. Wallace, Sr., also spoke; and a lengthy statement was made by Brother J. H. Lawson, giving information concerning the movement to build, equip, and maintain a tabernacle at Camp Bowle by the churches of Christ, from the beginning of this work until the present. He stated that about twenty-five hundred dollars was in sight, eighteen hundred of which was in the bank. A number of congregations have pledged themselves to support the work. About three thousand dollars will be needed to build the tabernacle, and it will have a seating capacity of five hundred. The work of building is to begin about the first of March and rushed to completion. A committee of brethren from different congregations in the city was appointed to act with Brother Lawson in the work of erecting the building and maintaining this work. This committee will report to the congregations in the city; and thus the work In every department will be under the immediate supervision of the brethren in Fort Worth. The committee will see that all funds contributed will be used for the work as intended, and that as economical use of funds as possible, to do the work right, shall be had. This committee was selected at Brother Lawson's request, and it was the judgment of the mass meeting that this was the wisest and best thing to do. A vote of confidence was given Brother Lawson, who has started and maintained this work up to the present without even the expense of postage to any one but himself, and it was decided that he should continue the work, devoting his whole time to it. It is the purpose to erect the tabernacle for religious work, a reading and rest room, with books, tracts, papers, and other conveniences for the soldier boys and their relatives and friends; to keep open house seven days in the week; and to do this work in the name of Christ. The possibilities for good are great, and it is urged that congregations and individual Christians who have not had a share in this work help in the erection and maintenance of this building. Brethren may rest assured that every dollar contributed to this work will be used wisely and well, and in some respects it is the greatest opportunity for good that has presented itself to us in recent years. By motion, the committee selected was empowered to increase their number as occasion or expediency might warrant. It was also decided at the meeting that we should prepare this statement for publication A. W. Young.

Brother S. W. Peebles asks that the contribution of $30.59 recently acknowledged be credited to the Smyrna congregation instead of to him individually. We are glad to make this correction.

A good sister among those named above sold the eggs that she collected on Sunday and in that way made her contribution. There is always a way to help if there is a will to do it. May the Lord bless her and all others who are sharing in this noble work.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

"For Christ's Sweet Sake, and Charity."

"A-r-m-e-n-i-a" spells tragedy, no less in life than in death. More than one million Armenians and Syrians in Turkey and Western Asia have perished during the past two years from exposure, starvation, disease, heartless deportation, and cruel massacre. These are past their sufferings and are beyond our help. There are still two and one-half millions of homeless and destitute people in Armenia and Syria who are experiencing a living death, who are enduring the horrors of hunger, the tortures of gnawing want—nay, even the loss of reason itself—through sufferings that have become too terrible to bear.

The young and the aged, without food and shelter—more than two millions of them—this is indeed a record to wring the heart and to open the purse strings of humanity. This is a tragedy among nations before which even the appalling tragedy of Belgium pales. Here is a great people upon which even Poland, deep in her own misery, can look with pity and compassion, as on a nation that is experiencing an agony of suffering greater even than her own.

Other martyr nations have had their hosts, their legions, of friends. Other stricken peoples have had bountiful, prodigal help. But Armenia has been virtually cut off from outside aid, isolated, left to bleed, to suffer, and to die. A little more and an entire Christian nation will have perished from the earth. These two million five hundred thousand Armenians can be saved from final starvation only as America appreciates their awful condition, extends them the helping hand of fellowship and sympathy, and multiplies a thousandfold her divinely inspired benefactions.

It was estimated last year that $30,000,000 would be needed to keep these more than two million homeless, destitute people from starvation during the winter now ending, and this allowed "but a pittance of seven cents a day for food, shelter, and all life's necessities." Think of that, you who live in homes of pienty, and see if you can close your hearts to this appeal of dying men, women, and children! Think of that, and see if you can spend a dollar as lightly and thoughtlessly as before!

Armenia, once happy, contented, and self-supporting, is now a land swept by death and filled with tragedies that are too deep for tears. "The mind grows numb," a writer testifies, "and the heart sick from a constant recital of tales of such horror as it is difficult to believe the twentieth century could hold. The poor, wizened, monkeylike babies that have been held up before my eyes are the worst spectacle of all."

One American consular agent reports that in his daily walk from his house to his consulate, he counted twelve persons who had died from starvation the preceding night. Many villages in Syria have been depopulated. In one of them an American passing through saw only one house open, and sitting in a doorway was one little girl, apparently alone in the world, saying over and over: "I'm hungry! I'm hungry!"

Can you not hear each one of these children repeating the same pitiful words: "I'm hungry! I'm hungry!" His ears are stopped who will not hear the children's cry for help. He would be a Pharisee, indeed, who could pass by on the other side.

Upon these children, or such as these, helped back to normal childhood, let us hope, by the generosity of American people, must depend the perpetuation of a race that early accepted Christianity—a race that has been most cruelly persecuted by the barbarous Turks and that now goes to Caivary for its belief. The Turk owes to Armenia all the best that he has achieved in commerce, in industry, in science, and in the arts, and the Turk repays his debt to Armenia by burning Armenian homes, ravishing Armenian womanhood, starving, mutilating, and brutally murdering Armenian childhood. And now comes an appeal from this prostrate, stricken people to the wealthiest and most blessed nation the sun ever shone upon. America will answer quickly, largely, generously—that we know.

It is especially easy to respond to such an appeal when we are assured that the work of relief is in capable hands. We know the splendid and great-hearted men on the Committee for Armenian and Syrian relief. We know Cleveland H. Dodge, the treasurer. He not only gives his time and his devoted energy to this and to many other merciful causes, but he has set a new standard of giving. He has by his own example shown that in these dark and terrible days, when a sum of human suffering is being written, greater perhaps than for all ages gone by, it is our duty to give not only from our income, but out of our principal itself, until not one human being on this earth shall die from hunger.

Remember, this is a one-hundred-per-cent charity. Not a cent will be deducted anywhere along the line for postage, or ciercal help, or advertising, or transportation, or administrative expenses.

We have satisfied ourselves as to these facts. We have satisfied ourselves as to the desperate need they represent. The suffering is so tragic, the want so pitiably urgent, the privation so immediate and pressing, that as this article goes to press The Literary Digest is sending its check for $2,000 to Cleveland H. Dodge, Treasurer, No. 1 Madison Avenue, New York City. This is an earnest of our faith. This is our mite. But the cause is great and needs not our help only, but the help of every reader whose heart can be touched by human misery. Of a surety, you have given to many causes. Without doubt you have given generously and often, but you could not look a starving Armenian man or woman in the face and say that you had given enough. If you could, with your own eyes, see the wizened baby faces-faces of those who once were plump and rosy-cheeked children; if you could hear with your ears the cries of the aged, you would sell all you had and give to these destitute and utterly wretched people. You would follow the example of a generous giver to our Belgian Children's Relief Fund of last year—a Mr. William M. Essick, of Reading, Pa., who wrote at that time: "I started my letter saying that I would throw the life line to ten Belgian kiddies, and the job seemed so good I want to extend it to one hundred. Therefore when I wrote the inclosed check for $120, I decided to add another cipher and make it $1,200!"

Give now, give to-day, and there will be childish lips in Armenia that will pray for you, there will be mother hearts that will bless you, there will be men who will remember your act of brotherhood and humanity to the end of their days. Help feed these people. Help bind up their wounds. It is little to do, and the reward is great.

Truly they who give to Armenia will be laying up treasure in heaven, and they, too, no less, will be laying up the richest and brightest treasure in their own hearts. "And the King will say unto them; Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat; . . . thirsty, and ye gave me drink; . . . naked, and ye clothed me." And they will say: "When saw we thee naked, or hungry, or sick, or in prison, and ministered unto thee?" And then will come that sublime and inexpressibly beautiful answer: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me."—Literary Digest.

Shall We Preach the Gospel in the Camps? BY J. C. M'Q.

I have received a number of suggestions that we urge the churches to preach the gospel in the camps. As the church is the "light of the world," the "salt of the earth," the "pillar and ground of the truth," the proper effort to arouse the churches to more zeal and enthusiasm in the great work of preaching the gospel to every creature should not be in vain. It is the purpose of this journal to arouse the churches to greater activity in service, as well as in the public proclamation of the gospel of Christ. A religion that does not bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God is worthless. The Holy Spirit, through John, declares: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; and so shall ye be my disciples."

Brother A. S. Steagall, of Dallas, Texas, writes as follows concerning erection of tabernacles at cantonments:

As a whole, we, as a religious body, have been very lax in assuming our place and duty as regards the work to be accomplished at the various government cantonments throughout the United States. I believe most of us realize we ought to be busy, but apparently each has waited for the other, the result being that very little or nothing has been accomplished.

Some of our brethren are working as individuals, trying stimulate the work, soliciting funds, to be disbursed through some local bank, for the erection of tabernacles at such places; but I do not believe this the best and proper way of handling the proposition. At the same time, I do not want these brethren to think me critical or wishing to discourage them in their good intentions and desire to further the work of the church.

My suggestion or solution of the proper handling of the work is this: That the local congregation or congregations located in cantenment centers select a representative body of elders and deacons (or business agents) for the local church or churches, and empower them with the authority to collect and disburse funds and supervise the erection of a tabernacle at their home cantonment; that they then arrive at a definite conclusion of cost, same to be built on a most conservative basis, exercising good judgment as to its future value and use; that they subscribe locally all they feel able within themselves, as a starter, then put the facts before the churches through our own press, asking their assistance, stipulating who shall receive funds, giving address and details in full, observing the motto, "Be sure you are right, then go ahead," and, "What thou doest, do quickly.

This, to my knowledge and belief, is the best and proper way to attain the results we so much desire. We should not lose sight of the fact that the local congregation is supreme, and that all work to be accomplished should be done by and through said body. We should also not lose sight of the fact that the church should exercise its full business functions, being well organized and systematized the same as any well-managed business institution in this respect. Let us heed the behest of our Savior to "go, preach and teach," and let us work "while it is day;" for "the night cometh, when no man can work."

The spirit of our brother's suggestions is good. He does not write in a carping, faultfinding spirit, but his article breathes a spirit of desire to work for the Master's cause. He is evidently right in claiming that the church has been lax in assuming its place and duty as regards the work that should be done in "the various government cantonments throughout the United States,"

While this journal has encouraged the church at Cookeville in supporting Brother John E. Dunn in the work that he is doing in the camp at Greenville and has not objected to his preaching the pure gospel of Christ simply because he is recommended by the Y. M. C. A., yet it is not its purpose to hinder the churches in putting forth all proper and scriptural effort for the advancement of the religion of Jesus Christ in these camps. The government presents an open door to those who are qualified and earnestly desire to cultivate this field. A fearful responsibility rests upon the churches; and if they fail to improve this opportunity, such neglect will be held against them and will doubtless result in the loss of souls. While Protestants do not accept the theories of Roman Catholics, they must admire the activity and aggressiveness of the Roman Catholics in pressing their views upon the people. The Literary Digest quotes from The Monitor, a Catholic journal at Newark, N. J., as stating that many Protestant soldiers at Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., attend mass. The Monitor further says: "This fact is said to be puzzling to onlookers not of the Catholic faith." Such statements should make Christians tremble for their neglect and indifference. It is not enough to know the truth and sit with folded hands, allowing people to accept error. As the government has permitted us to enter the camps and preach the gospel, we will stand condemned in the sight of God if we fail to do so.

Brother S. H. Hall gives us the information that it has developed that we can work men in these camps without the indorsement of the Y. M. C. A. Those who thus enter the camps and preach, he says, are called "camp pastors." They look entirely to the church that they represent for support, and they are under its jurisdiction and no one else's. This, he says, could not be done at the beginning of the war, but can be done now. While I have never objected to preaching the gospel in a Methodist church, provided the Methodists would give me sufficient indorsement to permit me to do so, so I would not object to preaching the gospel in the camps simply because the Y. M. C. A. indorsed me as a man fit for the work. Christians should not manifest a spirit of aloofness, but should get as close to others as possible without the sacrifice of any truth or principle. Magnifying our differences should cease. We should minify our differences, in as far as possible, and magnify our agreements. The controlling motive of every Christian should be to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit, through Paul, declares: "Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will: the one do it of love, knowing that I am set for the defense of the gospel; but the other proclaim Christ of faction, not sincerely, thinking to raise up affliction for me in my bonds. What then? only that in every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is proclaimed; and therein I rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." (Phil, 1: 15-18.)

As the life of these cantonments will not be long, it appears probable that it would not be wise to spend much money in buildings. Structures in which to preach should be temporary and at as little expense as possible. It is not scriptural to give one body of elders and deacons power to act for other local churches. So long as the local church is supreme, it must collect, manage, and disburse its own funds; and so long as this is done, there is no tendency to build up an ecclesiastical organization that exercises power over other local churches. I simply call attention to this in order that each church may realize its individual responsibility and do the work that God has designed that each should do. The suggestion is not offered in a spirit of criticism, but simply with a desire to maintain God's order in its purity and simplicity.

Now here is an opportunity for work and for a great work to be done by those who object to supporting and fellowshiping preachers who are doing such work as Brother Dunn is doing. If you have been declining to do the same work that the Red Cross is doing-which is the government's agent for doing such work-you certainly will not object to doing this work without any connection whatever with the Red Cross. It is the intention of this article to impress upon the churches their duty and to get them to realize that they have a positive, definite work to do, and that it is not enough to stop at criticism of those who are now engaged in such work. This journal will cheerfully give its support and encouragement to the churches in such work, and is anxious to see them do great things in preaching the gospel in the camps, in doing an efficient service, in feeding the starving, in dressing the wounds of the wounded, and in clothing those who are cold. In the terrible crisis that is now upon the world, with all of the hungering and suffering that millions are called upon to endure, it should not be necessary to appeal to the churches to work heartily, earnestly, and persistently for the protection and uplift of those who are suffering great agonies. The church that does neglect this work will not be owned and approved by the Savior, but he will say: "Depart, for I never knew you." To all such he will say: "I was hungry, and ye did not give me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not."

Is It "A Difference of Opinion Respecting the Method?"

BY M. C. K.

On page 218 the reader will find, reproduced from the essay department of the Christian Standard of February 9, 1918, Brother Z. T. Sweeney's reply to our editorial of November 29, 1917. From the same issue of the Standard we take the following editorial note:

No INTENTIONAL DISCOURTESY.

On page 6 will be found an editorial from the Gospel Advocate, entitled "The Christian Standard Ignores Our Response to the Missionary Convention Proceedings," also Z. T. Sweeney's reply thereto.

We attended the Kansas City convention and voted in favor of the new constitution. Also, in our report of the convention, we reproduced the Gospel Advocate's comment, and likewise expressed the hope that the thin partition which separates our brethren respecting methods of doing the Lord's work would soon disappear.

We did not, however, wish to precipitate a discussion in which we would be expected to participate. Nor do we now wish to do so. While we are cooperating with the convention, we are not in a position to become its defender in printed discussion.

Nevertheless, we are glad to lend essay space to the Advocate's editorials and Brother Sweeney's response, surmising, as we do, that the discussion will be copied by the Advocate.

We wish again to express a hope that the thin partition will disappear. We have a profound respect for the brethren represented by the Gospel Advocate—they stand four-square for the fundamentals of the Restoration message. And they believe in missionary endeavor. The "thin partition" consists of a difference of opinion respecting the method of obeying the great commission, and we believe this difference of opinion will eventually become thin air and be no more.

In conclusion, we assure the editors of the Gospel Advocate that we intended no discourtesy, and we trust they will not so construe our failure to enter into a discussion of the convention question.

Although, as it appears to us, there was ample ground for our expectation that the Standard would reply to the Gospel Advocate, we accept, of course, its disavowal of "intentional discourtesy" in falling to do so. It was not only the missionary society represented by the Standard which, through the Sweeney committee, had approached us with propositions looking to union and cooperation. but the Standard had published, with editorial comment, our reply to the committee, and "expressed the hope that the thin partition which separated" us "would soon disappear." We naturally expected that our response concerning the alleged "thin partition" would receive the Standard's attention; and while the logic of the situation, as matters appear to us, still places upon it the manifest obligation to accord such attention, we cheerfully accept its announcement that, though "cooperating with the convention," it is "not in a position to become its defender in printed discussion."

In the meantime, we gladly publish Brother Sweeney's courteous response and shall try to give it due attention. The reader will please give it a careful examination before reading our comments in reply.

To our question, "If action taken by the convention as provided for by this constitution should be to uphold and continue in its service false teachers, would not the local churches be compelled to either support such action or to withdraw from the concern?" he "unhesitatingly" answers, "Yes." Then, to the question, "Does the arrangement give" the convention "the power to do" such a thing? he "unhesitatingly" answers, "No;" and he informs us that he answers "no" here "because there is nothing in the constitution of the convention which authorizes the convention to employ or continue teachers." But that evades the point at issue. We merely used the employment of teachers as an illustration of the principle of determining things for the churches by a majority vote of the convention. If, as our brother now tells us, "the employment of teachers is not a part of the work of the convention," hence is a matter with which the convention has nothing to do and over which it, therefore, has no jurisdiction, then we drop the matter of employing teachers, but renew our question concerning matters with which the convention does have to do, and over which it does have jurisdiction, and ask: "If action taken by the convention as provided for by this constitution should be to" do any wrong thing whatsoever, "would not the local churches be compelled to either support such action or to withdraw from the concern?" The particular matter on which the convention might act has nothing whatever to do with the issue, provided it be a matter belonging to, or affecting, the local church at all; and hence, without the slightest reservation, we still insist that, in any and all cases, when a general body, empowered to decide matters for the local churches by a majority vote, takes action, no matter what the action may be, the said churches are compelled to pursue one or the other of these courses.

But our brother informs us that "the employment of teachers and missionaries is the work of the societies;" but here again he merely shifts the question and fails to meet the point at Issue. However, in the same breath, he tells us that the convention "is a great convocation of all who 'desire the extension of the kingdom of God.' To it the various agencies "-the societies-" may come and give an account of their stewardship," and "it claims the right to make recommendations for their guidance." According to this, it is a case of "a wheel within a wheel," the society, and not the convention, taking the initiative in any action. Suppose "action taken by the convention as provided for by this constitution should be to" recommend "and continue in" the society's "service false teachers," and suppose the societies carry out the recommendation, "would not the local churches be compelled." even in the matter of upholding false teachers, "to either support such action or to withdraw from the concern," including both the convention and the societies? We respectfully remind our brother that it does not meet the point here to tell us that "the remedy for the employment of false teachers is to shut off our contributions to such societies," because this of itself is a withdrawal from the concern and proves the point of our contention that the arrangement in question is empowered, to say the least of it, to interfere, if it wants to, with matters which belong exclusively to the local churches. We never once dreamed that it was the committee's intention to interfere with matters belonging to the local churches, and we not only cheerfully concede now that what the constitution says is "a sufficient guarantee that" the convention "has no desire to modify things that are 'fixed and final,'" but, in our first response, we were careful to point out its distinct disavowal of any such intention; but it has been, and is, our contention that, in spite of the good intentions of the committee, and, for that matter, of all the brethren who finally adopted the constitution, it, nevertheless, gave the convention the power for which we contend; and our brother here concedes it in principle when he concedes that the local churches, in order to maintain their autonomy and independence, would, in any case, be compelled to withdraw from the concern. Moreover, the fact that he himself, as he informs us, "opposed that article" at the start, "but finally gave way to the judgment of" his "brethren," shows that, in the deliberations of the committee and before the constitution was adopted, he himself anticipated the very defect which called forth our demurrer.

But, concerning the missionary sent by "four churches" on a one-thousand-dollar salary "to a heathen land," and who there discovers the need of a "hospital" or an "orphanage" which calls for "a quarter of a million dollars," our brother comes to "the milk in the coconut" when he asks the very proper and pertinent question: "What are these four churches to do?" After saying he will let our "readers answer," he then makes this appropriate comment: "A foreign missionary society can build orphanages, hospitals, and schools, and, as a human business organization, can invest in real estate and hold large properties in each and do a work for Christ. Would any of your readers like to see the local churches come together into a corporate body endowed with such power?" No, indeed, dear brother, that is the very thing our readers do not want to see and which, with all our might, we are opposing; and this brings us again to the one vital issue. Give us "a human business organization" which can "build orphanages, hospitals, and schools," with no power, whether vested in a convention" or a "foreign missionary society" or in anything else, to interfere in any way with the divinely constituted rights of the local churches, and we shall certainly not oppose it.

Hence, to the question at the head of this article, the Gospei Advocate gives the emphatic answer: No. no. It is not with us "a difference of opinion respecting the method of obeying the great commission;" and we again place ourselves on record in the clear and unequivocal statement of fact that, as to mere "methods" or "business organization," we stand ready at all times, all things else being equal, to defer to the judgment of our brethren of the societies; but when they project an arrangement which, under the name of a mere method, either interferes or is empowered to interfere to any extent with the independence and autonomy of the local churches, we must respectfully enter our caveat and decline to go with

Finally, to our brother's question No. 1, "Is there any scripture that forbids any number of Christians uniting together to carry out the commission of our Lord?" we reply, No; and to his question No. 2, "Is there any scripture that forbids these Christians using any good business methods or agencies in carrying out their Christ-commanded object?" we reply, No; and to his question No. 3, can we "devise a better forwarding and superintending agency than is provided in the Foreign Christian Missionary Society?" we reply that we do not, and would not, object to "the Foreign Christian Missionary Society" as a mere "forwarding and superintending agency," provided it were not empowered to "superintend" and control matters which God has placed under the supervision and control of the churches; and to his question No. 4, can we "provide a better business method of looking into the accounts of said society than is provided in Article V., Section 2, of the constitution under consideration?" we reply that quite likely we cannot, and we would have no objection to either the "said society" or the "convention," if they did not interfere, and were not empowered to interfere, with the rights of the local churches. If "the Belgian Relief Commission and the Armenian Relief Commission" had been thus empowered, "the editors of the Gospel Advocate" would not have used them. Here, dear brother, and here alone, so far as the Gospel Advocate and the present controversy are concerned, is the crux of the whole situation. In any realm where business methods are required, but where God has not spoken, and hence where there is no word of God to guide us, we are ready to defer to you and to accept your methods; but in a realm where God has spoken, as on the rights of the local churches, we must respect, and be guided by, his word.

God's Dreams.

Dreams are they-but they are God's dreams! Shall we decry them and scorn them? That men shall love one another, That white shall call black man brother, That greed shall pass from the market place. That lust shall yield to love for the race, That man shall meet with God face to face-Dreams are they all, But shall we despise them—

God's dreams?

Dreams are they-to become man's dreams! Can we say nay as they claim us? That men shall cease from their hating, That war shall soon be abating, That the glory of kings and lords shall pale, That the pride of dominion and powers shall fail, That the love of humanity shall prevail-Dreams are they all,

But shall we despise them-God's dreams? -Thomas Curtis Clark.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 1-Walks and Talks Afford Opportunities for Teaching Facts at First Hand and in Interesting Ways.

From about the age of three and extending indefinitely through childhood years, there is no more valuable aid for the mother who desires to promote the well-being of her children than walks and talks. It is usually most difficult for the home-keeping mother to find sufficient leisure-or, rather, uninterrupted leisure-to concentrate on work or play with her children. We are all only too familiar with the interruptions of the butcher, the baker, the telephone, the friendly neighbor, which break in repeatedly until one "gives up" in despair. But when you leave your home and its distractions behind you, you begin to realize that you have found a way in which you can say with Freebel: "Come, let us live with our children."

These walks and talks can be useful both to the city mother and the country mother, though it will be easily seen that the country mother has the advantage in this respect. The city mother will have to substitute, for the suggestions below, the city parks, the river or lake front, visits to the large factories, museums, and historic points of interest. You can make the walks as long or as short as your leisure permits; you can plan them for every day or every other day, morning or afternoon; and after a month's trial you will begin to realize their value for yourself as much as for the children. The blue sky and the great outdoors will take you away from the pettiness of the thousand and one trifles that continually intrude themselves upon your attention while you remain within four walls, and they will be equally uplifting in taking the little ones away-especially is this true in small townsfrom the petty small talk that emanates from the porches and the front stoops and passes along the sidewalks from house to house and from child to child.

It is well for you to decide upon your destination before you call the children with, "Let's go to the pond to-day;" or, "This is a great day for the woods!" A playmate or two taken along occasionally (and frequently if you have but one child) will lend additional zest to the walks and will enlarge your opportunities of getting better acquainted, not only with the playmates, but with your own children in relation to their playmates.

In the case of very young children, places very near home will serve as well as the more distant goals which are usually more attractive to the other children. The pond or the stream under the bridge, or the water front, the beach, or the rocky boulders that can be scaled, or the woods-seek them out in your vicinity. Try every road and see where it leads to. The adjoining town, if it be within two or three miles, makes a splendid objective point with older children, and a trolley ride will bring you back should time or fatigue make it necessary.

Try to forget all your grown-up dignity on these walks (especially if it be a country road) and have as much fun and laughter as the children are ready for. Wear only stout shoes and "roughing" clothes. Sometimes permit the children to take skates, or a bicycle, or a velocipede, a wagon or jaunting cart, or a sled, a hoop, or horse reins. All these will provide additional attractions when the children seem loath to leave their street play.

These walks will develop your children physically fully as much as any systematic exercises, and the variety of "stunts" that will be initiated along the road will astound you. In some of them you may join; others will teach you to have control of your nerves, while the children develop strength and independence thereby. So far as the physical activities are concerned, you need suggest very little; the children will initiate as much as there are time and energy for. There will be walking forward and backward, sometimes with eyes shut, sometimes on stone walls and in ditches; there will be running, skipping, hopping, jumping from different heights, whistling and singing, games of "follow master," racing, stone-throwing, and stick-throwing into pends and trees, and tree-climbing.

That the "walks and talks" are a great mental stimulus is readily apparent, when one reflects for a moment upon the opportunities for asking and answering questions that seldom arise in the schoolroom; the opportunities to observe public work that is going on away from one's immediate neighborhood; the road building, the digging of trenches and laying of mains, the setting and taking down of telegraph poles, the operation of the switch towers near the railroad bridge, the regulation of traffic, the construction of buildings. There is a deepening of sense impressions; there is training in the correct use of good English in conversations and story-telling by the wayside; there is reading and dramatization in the woods and in the shady nooks and on the rocky heights, that aid so much in creating a congenial atmosphere for the play of the imagination; and last, but not least-perhaps the most valuable feature—there is a tremendous field for developing a knowledge of nature's workshop.

Perhaps some concrete illustrations will serve to good purpose: SENSE TRAINING.

Stand still a few moments, with eyes shut; listen intently, then tell what was heard.

Look intently in all directions, close the eyes, and tell what was seen.

Name objects (seeds, flowers, twigs, etc.) by touch alone with eyes shut.

Point to every bird's nest observed on the walk.

Find all the maple trees along one road. By taking one tree at a time, you will soon be surprised to discover how many trees you and the children can name.

These walks will also contribute to spiritual growth in no small measure. They will afford a basis of companionship that with the older years is not readily outgrown, and many fond memories will cluster around these little trips. Perhaps the same walks, though less frequent in the adolescent years, may afford opportunity for the confidences, the ideals and ambitions that are so often poured into some one else's cars because the mother seems so busy in the home. At any rate, you will not stop the walks and talks when the kindergarten age has passed. You will keep it up from year to year, and each year will make them seem more worth while. You will have to increase your knowledge of nature's story as the years go by; but with your interest to spur you on, and the many books on the library shelves that are now ready to help you, this ought not to be difficult nor burdensome.

The Lord knows what they need; they know only what they want. They want ease; he knows they need purity. -George Macdonald.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. HALL

All At Work.

There is nothing that should be more firmly impressed upon the minds of those whom we convert to Christ than the fact that their ultimate and eternal salvation depends on their working out their "own salvation with fear and trembling," their being "faithful unto death," if they are to receive the crown. (See Phil. 2: 12; Rev. 2: 10.) Members who are in reach of a local congregation should be regular and faithful in attending all the meetings, in doing their part in giving, and in striving to get the unsaved to see their undone condition and obey the gospel. Every member should strive to keep the members in his or her immediate neighborhood interested in the work; and when a lack of interest is manifested on the part of any, those who recognize this should at once take steps to save the one who has begun to drift. Going to heaven is the most Important thing with which we have to do. We have but one time to do the going, and that is while we are living. How hard we should strive to get every soul to realize Be "fruitful in every good work" is the heavenly (Col. 1: 10.) Every member must supply his injunction. part to the cause of our Redeemer by "the effectual working" of each member. (See Eph. 4: 16.)

What would it mean if all who are able to be at the services would be at their places of worship next Lord's day? Think of it! Every child of God on earth, who is able, actually obeying God's command: "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together." How would our crowds be at all of our places of worship? Then each member giving as he has been prospered. How would our collections be? Why should this not be so? Certainly there is no reason why it should not be. Somebody has sinned when it is not so.

. A Splendid Example.

In connection with what is said above, I wish to call attention to anothe" class of members. I have in mind members who move where there is no congregation. What should such members do? Of course, they should set about at once to establish one. They should eat the Lord's Supper in their homes and lay by in store on the first day of the week as they are prospered. Brother and Sister H. J. Jones moved from Atlanta to South Carolina, and, notwithstanding the fact that they are not near a local congregation, they have their regular worship in their homes and keep up their regular contributions. They have been sending their offerings here once or twice a year-that is, what had accumulated. Some twenty-five dollars was sent last year. Arrangements are made for them to have a meeting this year. A letter has just come from Sister Massey, who recently moved out from Atlanta too far to come in for worship. She is asking for a meeting, and arrangements to this end are being made. They are what I call "live wires." God blesses such members, and they are, indeed, the "salt of the earth."

But why not all the members see the work this way? Why have "deadheads?" Awake, my brother, my sisters, and do your "bit" in the greatest of all wars—the fight to a finish against Satan and sin and for the salvation of souls.

The Atlanta Work.

Never has our work been more prosperous, never so much interest, never so much work being done, as we are doing now in this great city. West End Avenue Church was packed yesterday, and our regular offerings went above forty-two dollars. The night crowds are growing rapidly, and Brother Carter is doing a great work with his Bible drills. A large crowd was out to his Bible-story class, conducted in the afternoon, yesterday (February 24), for the benefit of the mothers. All were delighted with the way the children are learning. The South Pryor and Vassar Streets congregation is doing the best work of its history. The crowds are growing and the collections have more than doubled in the last few months. So is East Point. Then our members at Constitution, Ingleside, and Golden Hill seem to be more interested than usual. God is indeed blessing us these days.

At this writing Brother Flavil Hall is here developing us in our singing. He knows how to do such work, and our forces are taking hold as never before.

We have more calls for meetings than ever before—and, too, at places where it seems vitally important to go. We are hoping to meet every call, though we are in sore need of one more man, at least. This need we hope to soon have supplied. May I not ask our workers to work and pray harder than ever? "The harvest is great, but the reapers are few." We must "work while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work."

The Cause and the Remedy.

BY MORGAN II. CARTER.

The terrible conditions now existing in Belgium, Armenia, and some other countries of the war zone are hard to imagine. The slaughter of noncombatants, the cruel treatment of the innocent, and the utter disregard of every principle of righteousness call to our attention that sin in its worst form is still abroad in the land. All of the pain and sorrow, we and anguish, and even death and hell, exist as a result of sin.

Lawlessness and rebellion are sin. It is of the devil. (John 8: 44.) He is the father of it, and his chief business is to foster the interest of his offspring.

Many seem to think they can live in sin, deceiving the people and holding their position among men. But they deceive themselves. "Murder will out." Men will know some day, and God knows all the time. Achan stole the Babylonish mantle and the golden wedge and hid them beneath the stuff of his tent; but Jehovah's eye pierced through the cover and searched his heart. David sinned, and lied to cover his twofold transgression; but Nathan, the prophet of Jehovah, said unto him: "Thou art the man." To-day many are deceiving themselves. But God is not mocked. He knows us, and our sins are an abomination unto him.

Sin makes bond servants of its victims. We are largely the creatures of habit. Good or bad, they help to bind us. The repetition of a thought, word, or deed deepens the impression. Humiliation comes in the track of transgression. Conscience pricks us. We are ashamed of our sins.

The influence of sin not only hurts the one sinning, but injures society. "A rotten apple spoils the harrel." The consequences of sin are entailed upon the children. Much physical deformity and intellectual and moral weakness is due to hereditary influence. No man is free from sin. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way." (Isa. 53: 6.) "There is none right cous, no, not one." (Rom. 3: 10.)

Every person and thing has wages. It is paid in various coin. There are pleasures in sin. They appeal to the flesh. But sinful pleasures are only for a season; they are not the final hire. Men and women sell their integrity.

their purity, and their souls for a song. But in the end they find that "the wages of sin is death."

Sin excludes from heaven. Those who engage in it without repentance shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven. (Gal. 5: 19.) Its end is destruction. "But for the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and fornicators, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, their part shall be in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." (Rev. 21: 8.)

Finally, sin is a terrible rejection of God's love. "He came unto his own, and they that were his own received him not." "We will not have this man to rule over us." "Give us Barabbas, and crucify him!" To-day men are still rejecting the Christ. How strange, when the only hope of salvation is in him! "I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life; but he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." Jesus says: "Except ye repent, ye shall all in like manner perish." Turn now: come to Jesus; crown him King. Christ saves, and he alone.

"Keep Your Lantern By You."

BY FLAVIL HALL.

I copy the following from The Gospel Worker, which is edited and published by my friend, Barto McFarland, at Rossville, Ga.:

"Keep your lantern by you. If anything should happen, you may be at one end of the car and your lantern at the other." The words were spoken somewhat sharply by the conductor of an evening train to a new hand who had just come on duty.

We thought of others besides inexperienced brakemen who often put their lamps where they would be of little use in an emergency. They make a profession of religion, but do not take their religion with them in daily life.

There are many people, young and old, who go to places where they cannot take their religion with them. And then how can they be prepared to help others who are in danger? How shall they give them light to guide them or help them out of their trouble, if their light is away in some other place when the emergency arises? "Ye are the light of the world," said Jesus to his disciples.

In the spiritual kingdom the word of God is the Christian's light (Ps. 119: 105); and in this realm the only way he can heed the words, "Keep your lantern by you," is to do as David said he had done: "Thy word have I laid up in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee." The gospel of Christ is represented as "the glorious light" (2 Cor. 4: 4), and only he who keeps this light by him and walks accordingly is in contact with the blood of Jesus and cleansed from all sin (1 John 1: 7). He who walks otherwise is in darkness and is one to whom "something" must unceasingly "happen." He stumbles into the dark ravines of moral filth, and without his light he can never be rescued, but must go to the judgment in his foul garments of sin, to be cast away "into outer darkness" as the refuse and offal of the earth.

"But the path of the righteous is as the shining light. that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." We do not reach "the perfect day" here. There are nights of sorrow; our vision is sometimes dimmed by clouds of adversity; the eternal future is veiled by the robe of flesh; and the shadow of death stands between us and the city where the glory of God is the light. But as Christians let the word of Christ daily dwell in their hearts richly and walk in its light, their way grows brighter and the eternal day to which it leads will be perfect-perfect in peace, serenity, happiness and duration; clouds of serrow. sin, and death can be known nor feared no more. "Keep your lantern by you," that you may be safe in all the catastrophes of earth, and that you, and others seeing your light, may by and by bask in the fadeless rays of "the perfect day."

"Instrumental Music in the Worship."

In his review of "Instrumental Music in the Worship." by M. C. Kurfees, the editor of the Free Methodist, published at Chicago, Ill., writes: "We have read the book with much interest. The learned author has treated the subject exhaustively and his arguments would be very difficult to refute. He has dwelt largely upon the Greek word psallo' in the discussion, and draws this conclusion from its study: 'A careful survey of the field of evidence furnished by lexicographers of every grade has led the auther to the decided conviction that there is not a solltary fact in all history touching the meaning of psallo which, considered in the light of its proper connection and bearing, can be legitimately used to sustain the practice of instrumental music in the worship of God under Christ." Among other things, the author refers to the apostolic example, to the custom of the Jews, and gives at considerable length the testimony of specialists, encyclopedists, historians, commentators, and scholars connected with the religious restoration of the nineteenth century. The book evinces much research and study by the author, and much valuable matter has been brought within reach of the ordinary reader that he could not secure otherwise without great pains and much expense." We will send this book of 288 pages for $1.25, postpaid.

I do enjoy the weekly visits of the Gospel Advocate so much. I do not want to do without it any more.—Mrs. J. J. Coble, Coble, Tenn.

I so much enjoy reading the Gospel Advocate and get so much therefrom that, of course, I shall not do without it.

—Mrs. Walter Horsley, Hartsville, Tenn.

I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate for twenty-three years, and feel that I cannot miss a copy now.—Mrs. J. W. Tipton, Paint Rock, Ala.

Mrs. J. P. McMinn, of Martin, Tenn., writes: "I should not like to be without the Gospel Advocate. It helps to strengthen me in the Christian life."

The Gospel Advocate has been a visitor to my home for forty years. I cannot do without it, and want it to come long after I am gone.—J. K. P. South, Frankfort, Ky.

The Russell Street congregation, this city, will undertake an extensive evangelistic campaign in and around Nashville. Two persons were added to the membership Sunday.

James A. Allen preached for the Belmont Avenue congregation, this city, Sunday morning, and George R. Bethurum preached in the evening. One person made the good confession and was baptized.

F. B. Srygley has returned from the winter's sojourn in Florida, much improved in health. His last meeting, at Eagle Lake, resulted in five baptisms. This is the home of M. H. Northcross, who stood nobly by the meeting.

Sister W. D. Scoggan, of Louisville, Ky., writes: "I wish to speak a word of commendation in regard to the little paper, The Young People. It is full of good things from beginning to end, interesting and instructive to both young and old. The comments on the lessons are excellent."

From G. Dallas Smith, Murfreesboro, Tenn., March 1: "Beginning on the fifth Sunday in this month, we expect to conduct a fifteen-days' meeting, closing on the second Sunday in April. It will be a meeting by the home forces. After this I expect to go to Cleburne, Texas, to work with the Central church of Christ there. My work in Murfreesboro has certainly been a pleasant one, and I regret to leave my many friends among the brethren and sisters here,"

From William Rucker, Trenton, Fla., March 1: "I have just closed a good meeting at Midway Church, near Trenton. This was in many respects one of the best meetings I have held in Florida. This is the best country for farming and stock raising I have seen in the South. Land is cheap and every one is doing well. Brethren who want to locate in a good country, where climate and health and money can all be had, will do well to investigate this country."

From D. S. Ligon, Woodward, Okla., February 27: "The meeting at the Fairview Schoolhouse, near here, is moving along nicely. The interest seems to be growing. Five persons have been baptized. There are only a few brethren here, but they have a mind to do things. I think the meeting at Fairview will close on Sunday night. I shall then go into other fields to help as I may be able. I shall visit Mount Olive congregation next week and preach there on Sunday, and this will end my work in that country. The churches at Forgan and Mount Olive Schoolhouse are now in good working condition, and a better lot of brethren I do not expect to find. I am to begin a course of lectures at Hammon on the night of March 13. Any church wanting me for a meeting or to give a course of lectures may write me at Denton, Texas."

David Lipscomb College.

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Nashville Bible School held on Monday, March 4, the name was changed to "David Lipscomb College." There were some good reasons for this change. In the first place, in the scope of its work this institution has outgrown the province of a school. While maintaining a primary and preparatory course, it has for several years been doing collegiate work and beyond all question is entitled to the rank of a junior college. Since the year 1903 it has conferred the degrees of B.A., B.S., and B.L., and has a large number of graduates, many of whom are reflecting great credit upon their Alma Mater. As set forth in the catalogue: "Students' credentials are recognized by the University of Tennessee, the State Normals, and other State universities, and each pupil will be given the class standing in these institutions that his credentials justify." The trustees also felt that it was due the founder and chief benefactor of the school that it should bear his name. So long as he was with us, he objected to the change being made; but now that God has called him higher, it is the unanimous wish of the trustees, the faculty, and the students that this further mark of esteem should be paid to his memory. Some of us did not relish the idea of giving up the word "Bible" in the name of the school; but when we reflected that the character and life work of its founder had all been built upon the teachings of the Bible and considered how nobly he had stood by the grand old book, we gracefully yielded this objection, feeling that wherever the name of David Lipscomb was heard or seen in print it would immediately suggest the Bible.

The trustees are determined to do all within their power to keep David Lipscomb College true to the purposes for which it was founded. In the future, as in the past, the teaching of the Bible will be a prominent feature of its curriculum. At the same time, it is our purpose to see that its work along other educational lines shall be marked by such efficiency and progress as will best fit its students for useful and successful Christian lives. We wish both parents and children to know that we shall endeavor to give them the very best advantages that can be had within the province of our responsibility.

The college stands in need of some things that would enhance its usefulness. The most urgent necessity is a new girls' dormitory. For the past two years girls have been turned away for lack of boarding accommodations. There are some improvements that should be made in the further equipment of class rooms, libraries, and the boys' building. With a little more money available, the grounds could be made very attractive. The trustees have taken steps to raise a fund for these much-needed improvements and the matter will shortly be presented to the friends of the college. Brother Elam and the writer have volunteered to make an earnest effort to secure the necessary funds. We have set our mark at fifty thousand dollars; and if the whole sum is raised, it can be at once profitably employed. All gifts, great or small, will be gratefully received and promptly acknowledged. Somebody is going to have the honor of making the first contribution. If you act quickly, the honor may be yours.

More About the Work at the Training Camps.

BY FANNIE HURST.

Why is it, brethren, that we are so slow to take up the work at the training camps? Is it because we feel that it is of minor importance, or do we dread the sacrifice we would be called upon to make? That a sacrifice must be made in order to do this work, we are all aware. But no matter what we give up or do for our blessed Master, it "is not worthy to be compared" with what he has done for us; for we are told that he, though "existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross." (Phil. 2: 6, 8.) Until we learn to make sacrifices for Christ, we do not love and appreciate him as we should.

Brother John E. Dunn and a few other brethren have set noble examples which scores of us should follow -yes, scores, for we should have no less than ten workers busy in each

We do not seem to realize that, while we sit at home with folded hands, so far as this work is concerned, thousands and hundreds of thousands of boys are being sent right on across the sea, from whence the most optimistic of us expect many never to return, and a number of the boys who fall "over there" may go down without God for no other reason than that we were not sufficiently interested in them to send the message to them while the opportunity was ours. Let us not feel that this call is only to a few brethren. It is to every individual Christian; for, while some must go, others must send them and support the work. This is, indeed, a most wonderful opportunity to do good, and we should not hesitate any longer to take advantage of it. "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." (Matt. 9: 37, 38.)

Straight or Crooked Talk-Which Is Preferable?

BY F. P. FONNER.

Straight talk is that which comes from the heart without any effort to deceive any one. It is open, frank, and free; and, of course, it is without useless verbiage. This sort of talk is of necessity in perfect agreement with God's word. It does not seek to exalt the speaker and bemean and belittle others at the same time. Its constant aim seems to be the good of all men, including the speaker. Straight talkers are bold and fearless in reproving sin, and yet their words are "seasoned with salt." When they reprove and rebuke, they do it in kindness and love. They never talk in such a way as to create or prolong the life of a faction anywhere. When any point of doctrine comes up, they make a thorough investigation before they express themselves. They never talk two or three different ways about the same matter just to suit the crowd or to curry favor. To be sure, they are rather conservative and not inclined to multiply words about trifles; but these conservative talkers have been the means of preserving the life of the church of God until this day. Ne wicked Jezebel will ever wholly succeed in corrupting them and leading them away into spiritual fornication. There will be faith on the earth when the Lord comes again. But one thing must be remembered-namely, that this great army of straight talkers is made up of men and women who have the courage of their convictions. Many of them would die for a principle; and some of them are doing that very thing now. This is not mere talk. It is an actual fact. May God stir up others of like faith and courage to do and dare for the cause of the Master.

But what is crooked talk? Crooked talk is that coming from a deceitful and wicked heart with some effort to deceive and delude the unwary. The apostle said: "There are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers." As it was then, so it is now. These by fair words very often deceive the hearts of the simple. Thus the babes in Christ are led astray; and thus the blood-bought church is divided up into factions and sects, which "bite and devour one another." These very things have drowned many souls in perdition.

It may not be best to introduce names into an article like this; but Elder True testifies that Evangelist Two-Face is a very crooked talker. He says that he talks different ways to suit the crowd, and that sometimes he confers with Mrs. Jezebel in regard to the management of the church. "I Would Not Part with it for $10.000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer, "Worth more than a farm," says another. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it.

"Who Will Win This Battle?"

Much of your comfort depends upon knowing that your system will perform its functions properly.

Your kidneys are the filters of the body. If they become inactive and fall to eliminate the waste matter, they are apt to throw the whole mechanism of the body out of order, thus toxic poisons can accumulate in the system and be as deadly as snake yenom. as snake venom.

Besides causing the minor ailments of rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago and backache, neglect of the kidneys is apt to develop into more serious diseases, such as diabetes or stone in the bladder.

Rid the body of toxic poisons—clean the bladder and kidneys and cure the twinges of rheumatism with Anuric (double strength).

Anuric was first discovered by Dr. Pierce, and has benefited thousands of sufferers as well as appeased and eliminated the ravages of the more serious kidney diseases. Now procurable at any good drug store, or send direct to Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., for trial package. Enclose 10 cents.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a small bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless, and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff-that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life, eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which, if not remedied, causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine to-night, now, any time, will surely save your hair.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair. Try it!

You know that Mrs. Jezebel claims to be a prophetess, and that her business is to delude and deceive the servants of God; but her time will soon come. Brother and Sister Faithful also report that Brother Two-Face, when stopping with them, always talks straight in regard to human organizations, but that he has been known to talk differently in the presence of members of the Ladies' Aid Society. They also report that at one time he was present at a meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society and introduced the exercises by reading and prayer. Be this as it may, Evangelist Two-Face some times gathers up a vast amount of information (?) in regard to old Brother True. This he gets mainly from Mrs. Jezebel, for she is a very fluent talker. This he uses to the detriment of Brother True and the true cause of Christ. Two-Face is doing a vast amount of harm. There seems to be no hope for him, unless he repents of his evil deeds. Everybody knows Brother True. He lives in many places and has built up the cause of Christ at a sacrifice, and now he needs the fellowship of the saints. So Evangelist Two-Face desires to oust him, so that he can live off the old man's labors. But it is to be hoped that the brethren will take care of Brother True. He deserves it. He may not be here long.

But which is preferable, straight or crooked talk? Crooked talk, first used by the devil in Eden, has brought misery and unutterable woe upon the whole human race. It has caused bloodshed, carnage, and death. Then why prefer that? Words honestly spoken have always been a blessing to the world. Said one of old: "Words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Then straight talk is to be preferred by all Christians. Their conversation should be in harmony with God's word. Gossip should find no place in the conversation of any Christian. All should let up on that.

Why I Believe in Nuxated Iron

is a Tonic, Strength and Blood Builder

By E. Sauer, M. D.

Probably no remedy has ever met with such shenomenal success as has Nuxated Iron. It is conservatively estimated that over three milion people annually are taking it in this country alone. It has been highly endorsed and used by Former United States Senators and Members of Congress; Physicians who have been concected with well-known hospitals have prescribed and recommended it; Monselgneur Nandhi, a prominent Clergyman, recommends it to ill. Former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr, of Chicago, says it ought to be used in every pospital and prescribed by every physician.

Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago, and former House Surgeon Jefferson Park Hospital, Chicago, says Nuxated fron has proven through his own tests of it to excel any preparation he has ever used for creating red blood, building up the nerves, strengthening the muscles and correcting digestive disorders.

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor dep't.) New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says there are thousands of men and women who need a strength and blood builder but do not know what to take. In his opinion there is nothing better than organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for enriching the blood and helping to increase the strength and endurance of men and women who burn up too rapidly their nervous energy in the strength and endurance the strength and endurance of the strength and the s

If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Note:—Nuxated Iron, which has been used by former members of the United States Senate and House of Bepresentatives, and other prominent people, with such surprising results, and which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians, is not a secret remetry, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic from products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantes agreessful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refurd your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

Clanton, Route 8, February 26,-It has been so long since I made a re-port of my work through the papers that I hardly know how to begin. While I have been silent in the papers, have been constantly engaged in doing what I could to give the gospel to those who have never heard it in its simplicity. I have been preaching a little more than ten years. Since I I have been preaching left Texas, several years ago, I have been here in the heart of Alabama. This is my native State, and it is a great mission field. The harvest is ripe, but the laborers are few. seems to be impossible for me to do all I want to do for the Lord; but I preach all I can, and work with my hands for a living. In this work there seems to be the greatest interest of any with which I have ever had to do. In this I have Brother J. Thomas Daniel, one of the best men I ever knew, to help me. I wish to make special mention of the breth-Tuscumbia, Ala., who sent us a check for twenty-five dollars. This was carefully placed in the work and greatly aided in getting the work at Lomax started. May God bless them. Brother, if you wish to help in this work, send your contribution to Elder J. Thomas Daniel or to me.-Dr. A. B. Baxley.

Meaford, Ontario, February 25.—I drove eighteen miles yesterday in a cutter and preached twice—at Cape Rich at 11 A.M. and here at 7 P.M. We had good crowds at both services. Largo, February 23 .- After preaching in Jacksonville, I reached Plant City on January 30, and preached the next night and on till Sunday night, when the illustrated lectures began. A good interest was taken in this work. On the last night of the series the seats were filled; chairs were brought in; some sat on the floor and some stood up. There was a fairly good interest in the week's preaching which followed, and on last Sunday one poor brother acknowledged misconduct and a woman of a good family was haptized. One Sunday afternoon some of us went out to Antioch for a service, and the next we went to Mango. The church at Plant City has a good house which five families (with but a little help) have put in service without appealing through the papers. There is need for the right kind of an evangelist to locate in that section of Florida, and some disposition to have him come .- Don Carlos Janes.

While Winchester. ice at the Valley on Lord's day. the service was a happy one, it was also a sad one to me. To leave these faithful brethren is sorrowful in the extreme. Four years ago the Shearer Valley Church, the oldest one in the county, was only meeting when a preacher perchance came along. They had not a man that would take part in any public service. Now they meet on "the first day of the week," and have four or five young men who take any part they are called upon to take. and among them is one that goes out to other places and preaches as he has opportunity. The cause in the county is in a prosperous condition, with five congregations and three new church houses, and not two brethren in the county who are not on brotherly relations. There is no envy or strife. I leave them hoping that my field of service will be broadened and that a new man coming into this field will be able to do a greater work. I pray that God's richest grace will rest upon the churches in this county .- J. D. Walling.

We did that without calling on other churches for help With the beginning of this year we started out with a full determination to build a house in which to meet and worship in Senatobia. For nearly three years we have met at the courthouse or in a rented ball. Senatobia is the county seat of Tate County. The town has about two thousand inhabitants and is a center from which the gospel can and must be preached over a large territory. To buy a lot and build will cost us thirty-five hundred dollars. Four members of our congregation—Brethren J. T. Wilborn, C. A. Barber, H. T. Dixon, and R. W. Lock—have agreed to give five hundred dollars each, provided we can raise the balance. Two of these breth ren will have to borrow the money with which to meet this. Every mem-ber of the congregation will make a sacrifice to build this house. It must be built. After doing even more than some are able to do, we cannot raise the necessary amount, unless we get help from other churches. I realize that so many appeals are made that but little attention is paid to them. Therefore, I am very slow about making an appeal. I believe that every church should do all that it can before calling on others; and this we have done. I believe that if wealthy churches could realize what the building of a church house at Senatobia will mean for the cause of Christ in North

Time Will Prove It.

Regardless of the merits of the case, no statements in regard to the merit of any article can be so clearly proven as through time itself. If the article has no value, it cannot live. If it has merits, it will be everlastingly on demand. It is just so with Gray's Oint-ment, for ninety-seven years a family word in every household. Almost a century ago the same claims were made of its merits as to-day: that it is healing and antiseptic, the very best aid in cases of burns, scalds, bruises, cuts, sores, stings, and other skin in-fections. It has won on its merits. A ninety-seven-year record is ample proof. Write to W. F. Gray & Co., 818 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., for a sample.-Advt.

"The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom."

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says:

Dr. J. E. Thompson, who is not a preacher, publishes from Nashville, Tenn., "The History of the Fall and Dissolution of Christendom." He says in his Preface that it is not his purpose to promulgate any new theory on the Apocalypse, nor to support any of the many old theories, but rather to present a future history of the world and church by a translation of symbols and a transcription of the wonderful scriptures found in the Apocalypse.

It is possibly the first time any similar treatment of those scriptures has been undertaken, and the reader will find some very interesting pages in this book, different from all others on any part of the Bible—a difference largely apparent from its use of Bible definitions in arriving at the meaning definitions in arriving at the of its figurative words, and by this means translating and presenting a scenes. The author says he has been "unable to find a single scene or event in the Apocalypse, when properly translated, that he could prove had taken place in the past, has not seen the proof of this either in the Bible or in any book claiming that this is true." Summed up briefly, here are some of the things which he says will happen before the coming of Christ:

Democracy will be universal and supreme on the whole earth.

Democracy will be a paternal gov-ernment and own every dollar's worth of wealth on the whole earth.

The forms of governments or kingdoms introduced by Medo-Persia and Greece will have each a world-wide reign after a universal reign of democracy.

The Medo-Persian government will rule every tribe and nation and tongue of earth,

The kingdom introduced by Greece will be the last human kingdom to have a universal reign on earth.

During the reign of those kingdoms the earth will be ablaze with the most stupendous miracles.

Before the coming of Christ the Turk, the Japanese, the Chinese, and all other nonprofessors of the Christian faith will become Christians.

The above and much more he finds the Revelation of Saint John the pened, he adds, the people of God will be able to number the days and months which will intervene before Christ stands on Mount Zion "in the midst of seven golden candlesticks."

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Brush This Through Faded, Streak-ed Locks and They Become Dark, Glossy, Youthful.

Almost every one knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and luster to the hair when faded, streaked, or gray. Years ago the only streaked, or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make way to get this infective was to have it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about fifty cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair bebeautifully dark, glossy, and comes attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

Bible Lecture Week at Abilene Christian College.

BY A. R. HOLTON.

The week beginning January 7 was, a great week for Abilene Christian College. President Sewell in numer ous ways had called attention to this week, but no one realized what the week would mean. In fact, few knew the purpose of it.

The policy of the school has always been to bring just as many good things to the students as possible. Enough subjects, with some one to handle them, had been assigned to take up the time of the week, with three services a day. These subjects were selected solely on the ground of their helpfulness and the pressing need of their discussion. The men were chosen with a view to their special fitness.

The program began on Monday night, January 7, with a lecture on "Destructive Higher Criticism," by Brother George A. Klingman. Several ministers of Abilene churches were out for this lecture, and pronounced it one of the very best discussions they had ever heard on this difficult subject. Every one left the college that night with a stronger faith in God and more respect for his word. All were confident that they could never look on the Bible as a mere piece of literature, but as a supernatural revelation.

On Tuesday morning, at ten o'clock, Brother Klingman spoke on "The Verbal Inspiration of the Bible." In this attention was called to the various translations of the Bible. It was made clear that no one maintains that the men who have translated the Bible were divinely guided in the work of translating. Attention was called to the fact that all living language is subject to change; but Hebrew and Greek, being dead languages, have the same meaning to-day that they had while Christ was here, and will remain the same forever, and are of such construction that God could inspire the mechanical formation, thereby placing his word in a mold that does not change.

Tuesday afternoon was assigned to Brother A. B. Barret on the subject, "The Organization of the New Testament Church," but he was unable to be present. Brother Sewell, who is always ready, gave an excellent discussion on this important subject. It was shown that to be an elder in the church is to occupy the greatest office open to men in this life. Attention was also called to the work of the deacon and the evangelist. At the conclusion of the lecture the meeting was opened to general discussion. Several interesting talks, showing cough easily and quickly.

Get from any druggist "21/2 ounces of Pinex" (sixty cents worth), pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain, granulated sugar sirup. Begin taking it at once. Gradually but surely you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether, thus ending a cough that you never thought would end. It also promptly loosens a dry or tight cough, stops the troublesome throat tickle, soothes the irritated membranes that line the throat and bronchial tubes, and relief comes almost immediately. A day's use will usually break up an ordinary throat or chest cold, and for bronchitis, croup, whooping cough, and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better. It tastes pleasant and keeps perfectly.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and is used by millions of people every year for throat and chest colds with splendid results.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded goes with this preparation. The Pinex Company, Fort Wayne, Ind.

great interest, were made by visiting brethren.

On Tuesday night that great and good man, George W. Cypert, gave a lecture on "The Work of the Evangelist." The young preachers of the college determined to do more for God. It was a great pleasure to hear this big-hearted, humble man tell of his experience as an evangelist.

At ten o'clock Wednesday morning, T. W. Phillips spoke on "The Essentials of Public Worship," Brother Phillips gave some lessons that never will be forgotten. The school will be scattered in a few months, never to be together again, but every student in Abilene Christian College will remember the speech of T. W. Phillips. He told simply the elements of true worship. All were uplifted.

In the afternoon of the same day, that great man of God, Liff Sanders, gave an address on "Church Discipline." The outstanding points were that God's way is a safe way; many church troubles become unmanageable because some one is too hasty; God's way in matters of discipline brings the offended parties together at once, and no one else, and that all concerned take their time.

That night Brother O. E. Phillips, the evangelist for the Stephenville church, spoke on "Church Finance." All who heard this address pronounced it the best they had ever heard on the question. It was shown that God wants consecrated lives, and then finance will take care of itself.

On Thursday at ten o'clock Dean H. E. Speek threw more light on the field of "Christian Education." This address will be published, and we feel sure that it will be a great contribution to the literature on this subject.

The afternoon meeting of Thursday was an open meeting for the discussion of the plan of salvation.

At night came a splendid address on "Missions," by C. C. Klingman. When this speech is published, it will be a challenge to the brotherhood. Shall we continue forever in our slipshod method of doing missionary work? The discussion following this address lasted for some two hours. Many good things were said. Plans that we hope to see worked out were launched at this meeting.

On Friday morning we had the last address of the meeting, by J. H. Lawson, on the proposed new tabernacle at Camp Bowle, Fort Worth, Texas Something near three hundred dollars was subscribed for this work by the school and church.

This lecture week is to be made a permanent feature of our work. We want it to grow better each year.

During the entire week there was not one word to indicate a spirit of jealousy. No sectarian principles were advocated, not a low note was sounded. Every speech was constructive in purpose: In short, we have just had a spiritual revival. We think more of our preachers, more of each other, and more of God and his holy church.

Confession.

BY J. L. HINES.

This is a subject that has caused much trouble and confused the minds of many of our teachers and preachers of the modern type. The young preacher is unsettled on it because the older ones vary in their teaching upon it. Some claim it has no place in the plan of salvation, because it would involve them in inconsistencies should they claim otherwise. Some say it is left out of the commission, therefore it is not essential.

I do not wish to stir up a discussion. but I verily believe that confession has an important place in the scheme of redemption. "Because if thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord fruler), and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised him from the dead. thou shalt be saved: for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 9, 10.) The marginal note concerning verse 9 reads: "Some ancient authorities read confess the word with thy mouth, that Jesus is Lord." This corresponds to Acts 8: 37: "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." Upon this "rock," the fact that "Jesus Christ is the Son of God," the church must stand or fall. (Read Matt. 16; 15-18.)

Timothy made this confession: "Fight the good fight of the faith, lay hold on the life eternal, whereunto thou wast called, and didst confess the good confession in the sight of many witnesses." (1 Tim. 6: 12.)

Notice that confession is made with the mouth, and is voluntary on the part of the individual. A nod of the head or a forced confession is in no wise scriptural. There is a difference between confession and acknowledgment. I know that "confess" is a synonym of "acknowledgment;" nevertheless, there is a difference. To illustrate: A is convicted of a crime. He is brought into court and pleads guilty. That is acknowledgment. But B, who is also present, though not accused by any one, says: "I am guilty of the same crime." That is confession. It is with the mouth and is purely voluntary.

The fact that Jesus is the Christ is instilled in the heart by the word (Rom. 10: 13-16), which produces faith (verse 17). Faith changes the heart. (Acts 15: 9.) This change is called "repentance." (Matt. 21: 29.) This repentance makes the soul cry out the impulse of the heart: "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. (Acts 8: 37.) Then that believing, confessing penitent is a fit subject for baptism. (Acts 8: 38; 9:

One cannot reach salvation without confessing with the mouth that "Jesus Christ is the Son of God." Acts 4: 12 clearly states that salvation is in Christ; Rom. 10: 10 says, "believe unto righteousness;" Acts 11: 18, "repeutance unto life;" Rom. 10: 10, "confession unto salvation;" Rom. 6: 1-6, "baptized into Christ." From these scriptures any candid mind can see that faith cannot be without hearing. repentance without faith, confession without faith and repentance, and that baptism cannot be without hearing, believing, repentance, and confession. These constitute the plan of salvation. To leave out one of these is to stop short of the cleansing blood of Calvary's Lamb. May God help us to proclaim the full gospel.

Among the Colored Folks

The Work in Dallas, Texas. BY JOHN THOMAS RAMSEY.

I have been in Texas four years and four months, and my stay here has been a pleasure to me. I have been satisfied and have willingly done everything that was in my power to present the truth "as it is written." When I first came to Dallas, I failed to find a single colored member of the church of Christ. After laboring for about six months, I succeeded in getting about a dozen, and we now number about twenty. The thing that is most needed in Dallas now is a meetinghouse. If we can succeed in building a good, comfortable house, it will only be a matter of time until we will be able to do a great work among my people here.

Dallas is a splendid place to live, with about twenty-five hundred of my people among whom work needs to be done. Of course, that means a lifetime work for some one. Since the meeting at Pearl and Bryan Streets, conducted by Brother T. B. Larimore, I have a greater desire to continue the work in Dallas. I only want to stay in Dallas long enough to put the work in order as it should be. Though here in Texas, many miles away from dear friends and loved ones, I am absolutely satisfied. Brother and Sister Larimore have manifested an interest in my work here by sending a contribution of six dollars and twenty-five cents for this quarter. I quote from their letter as follows: "We feel a deep interest in your work in Dallas. . . . We hope and pray that the Dallas brethren may take hold of your work with a will to push it forward rapidly and that your labor there may meet with much success." All who are acquainted with Brother and Sister Larimore know they are always ready and willing to assist in every good work, and I give the foregoing words from them with the hope that the brethren, not only of Texas, but of the country at large, may be encouraged to have fellowship in this work. All contributions received for this work will be properly used and reported through the Gospel Advocate. The Dallas brethren have already promised to assist us in securing a place in which to meet.

It is my intention to spend a few weeks in Tennessee the latter part of March, the Lord willing; but those who desire to have fellowship in this work should send their contributions to my home address, 2317 North Hall Street, Dallas, Texas, and same will be forwarded to me.

Take a Class of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You Drink Lots of Water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up, and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or the kidneys are not acting right, or if the bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure any one. makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

Our First Senior College.

BY CARL A. GARDNER.

The ideal of many supporters of Christian education is about to be realized. The Board of Directors of Thorp Spring Christian College, in a recent meeting, decided that the crying need for a senior Christian college must be met, and that such a school should open in September, 1918. All unprejudiced friends of Christian education will hail with joy this timely decision.

Sometime ago Brother C. R. Nichol raised the question. "Do you want a senior college?" Many nonpartisan friends of Christian education responded by sending liberal donations to be applied toward building such a school. Hundreds of old-time friends of the school favorably responded in one way or other. To our happy surprise, there was comparatively no opposition voiced.

The Board of Directors did not reach this decision to build a senior college without mature deliberation. It carefully studied the following features: (1) The cost. It estimates that two hundred and fifty thousand dollars will build and equip a first-class senior college, and good men are now busy getting this amount from the brethren. (2) The location. The school should be near the center of population of the most important section of the State, and not too far from the brethren in Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, etc. (3) The demand. Since many nonpartisan friends of Christian schools expressed themselves favorably to a senior college, the Board of Directors felt obligated to do its part toward meeting this pressing need. It will not do to risk our junior-college graduates-at least, many of them-going to higher schools in which the word of God is not taught in its purity and simplicity, even if they do have the opportunity of reciting one lesson in the Bible each day to some Christian near the school. A student is usually influenced more by several teachers combined than by one teacher Therefore we should not fail to provide one school, at least, to which graduates of junior colleges may go with the assurance that the faculty with whom they associate is strictly Christian and will wield a positive Christian influence. It takes much longer to properly implant Christianity in the hearts of some individuals than in others; and the longer, therefore, a student is assoclated with a Christian faculty, the surer will be his Christian strength as the one now launched. PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir: Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years, and have always had trouble with it till I got your appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable Godsend to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it. My rupture is now all healed up, and nothing ever did it but your appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself, I will say a good word for your appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am,

Yours very sincerely,

CHILD CURED IN FOUR MONTHS.

21 Jansen Street, Dubuque, Ia. Brooks Rupture Appliance Company,

Gentlemen: The baby's rupture is altogether cured, thanks to your appliance, and we are so thankful to you. Why Reasons Ten

YOU SHOULD SEND FOR BROOKS RUPTURE APPLIANCE.

- It is absolutely the only appliance of the kind on the market today, and in it are embodied the principles that inventors have sought after for years.
- The appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of po-sition.
- Being an air cushion of soft rub-ber, it clings closely to the body, yet never histers or causes irritation.
- Unlike the ordinary so-called "pads" used in other trusses, it is not cumbersome or ungainly.
- It is small, soft, and pliable, and positively cannot be detected through the clothing.
- The soft, pliable bands holding the appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.
- 7. There is nothing about it to get foul; and when it becomes soiled, it can be washed without injuring it in the least.
- There are no metal springs in the appliance to torture one by cut-ting and bruising the flesh.
- All of the material of which the appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe appliance to wear.
- 10. My reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and my prices are so reasonable, my terms so fair, that there certainly should be no healtancy in sending free coupon to-day.

Parables in Action.

The miracles our Savior performed have been aptly called his "parables in action." We cannot study the account of any one of them but what we find several reasons why we should glory in its performance. Not only does the story strengthen our belief in the Savior's power and prove to us by unmistakable signs his love and sympathy for our race, but there is always a greater reason to rejoice because of the faith of his subjects; for if we know anything at all about the miracles of Jesus, surely we understand the fact that primarily and essentially some expression of faith was always required of the many beneficiaries who came within the circle of his love and power. This was not necessarily an act of humiliation, nor one of dumb obeisance, but some symbol of belief. If they did no more than speak his name or touch the hem of his garment or proclaim their own unworthiness in the presence of the Master, that was enough to attract his attention and to Insure his blessing. When this condition prevailed, the eyes of the blind were opened, the ears of the deaf became unstopped, the lame man leaped as a hart, the withered arm waxed strong, and even the dead were raised. All these received through the miracles of the Savior some direct benefit to their bodies, even as we ought to receive from the same source a great uplift to our spiritual minds in the teaching they involve.

"Borne of Four."

The healing of the paralytic, recorded in the second chapter of Mark, is a noteworthy example, for it presents to us in simple language the main conditions for prosperity and power in the church of God to-day. Let us recall the incident. The report that Jesus was in Capernaum had filled a certain house and packed the space outside with an eager and expectant crowd. While he was talking, a strange procession resembling most a funeral cortege was seen approaching. It was a pallet supported at each corner by one man who walked with gentle tread, and on the pallet the wasted, emaciated form of a man. The evangelist says he was "borne of four," and this expression in itself suggests to our hearts the importance of cooperation in Christian work. The pallet had four corners. No one person could possibly carry them all. In the family, the wife or the mother may be a perfect woman, yet we know she can not make an ideal home by herself. The husband and father must cooperate, and so must the children. In the State, the governor may be a man of high moral principle and of unquestioned ability, but he cannot rule and regulate the affairs of the people by himself. To have a model State, he must receive the hearty cooperation of the judges, the military authorities, and of every citizen. In municipal affairs, the mayor may be a man of sterling integrity, of great resourcefulness and untiring energy; but unless he receives the support of his executive boards, he cannot, single-handed and alone, put down vice and elevate the morals of the city. But these are enough for Illustration. The great lesson I would impress is that of cooperation in the church of the living God. The preacher may be a Peter and Paul and John rolled into one, but he cannot make an ideal church by himself. The elders, dea cons, every member, young and old, must work with him.

Each Must Carry His Corner.

In the church, as in every institution of any value in this world, cooperation is the prime condition of success. Take for an example a pile of enermous iron links. Singly and apart, they are of little worth; but combine them into a chain, and they can hold a ship at anchor and in the face of the wildest storm can save a thousand souls. Take for another example a handful of experienced soldiers. They can disperse an armed mob of twenty times their number, not because the soldier is physically stronger or braver than the civilian, but because through patient drill he has learned to cooperate and to obey when he hears the command. Some churches in their spirit and work show the inefficiency of a broken chain and the weakness of a mob while others have proved successful as the Atlantic cable and powerful as the American army. These latter are the churches where everybody works, everybody teaches, everybody prays, and everybody carries his corner.

We should not confuse the meaning and necessity of organization with that of cooperation. There are a great many religious enthusiasts who do not make the distinction, as a casual view of the modern church methods will show. Here we find the existence of multitudinous associations and societies, all of which claim to be cooperative with the church. Every kind of religious work under the sun must have some kind of human organization. Being a simple member of the church of Christ counts for nothing in the eyes of some men. But in apostolic times, when one became a member of the church, he was fully organized and ready in every way to cooperate with his brethren and sisters in every good word and work. He needed no further organization. And as this was true of one man, it was true of a thousand men. The greatest example of Christian cooperation ever known in this world is found, not in the annals of human organization, but back in those early days of the church, when "they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, in breaking of bread, and in prayers," when every man that was strong bore the infirmities of the weak and said to him: "Brother, he of good courage."

"To Every Man His Work."

We should note in our study of this lesson that every one of the four had a corner to carry. So it should be in the church of Christ. "To every man his work" should be the secret of growth and happiness in the assembly of the saints. It is time we were learning the lesson that a man who neglects his duty as a Christian is a loafer, an idler, and a drone in the church of the living God, and he is no more worthy of our respect than the man who neglects his family or his business. These are hard terms to use, I know, but they are the terms best calculated to awaken to a realizing sense of their neglect some of those careless, indifferent ones who have fallen by the wayside and have turned away from serving the living God.

Freedom from Sin.

BY JOHN E. DUNN.

(Synopsis of a sermon delivered by John E. Dunn to an audience of soldiers at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., Sunday, February 17, 11 A.M.)

Reading lesson before prayer, Rom. 1: 18-32.)

Text: "Thanks be to God, that, whereas ye were servants of sin, ye became obedient from the heart to that form of teaching whereunto ye were delivered; and being made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness." (Rom. 6: 17, 18.)

The latter half of the first chapter of Romans presents one of the darkest pictures of human beings in sin that has ever been written. These Romans had fallen as low into the depths of sin as it is possible for men and women to fall. Note carefully the awful condition they were in. They had changed the glory of the incorruptible God for the likeness of an image of corruptible man, and of birds. and four-footed beasts, and creeping things." They were "dishonoring" their bodies "among themselves," giving up themselves "unto vile passions." "God gave them up unto a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not fitting; being filled with all unrighteousness, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, strife, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, hateful to God. insolent, haughty, boastful, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant breakers, without natural affection, unmerciful: who, knowing the ordinance of God, that they that practice such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but also consent with them that practice them."

In this awful condition and lost in sin, God, in his great love and mercy for them, set forth Christ Jesus to be a propitiation for their sins. Christ died to save them. Christ died to save you, young men; he died to save all men and women from their sins. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." "Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost."

Paul thanked God that, whereas they had been lost in sin, the gospel had been preached unto them, they had obeyed from the heart, and now they were no longer slaves of sin, but through their obedience from the heart they had become servants of God, servants of righteousness. To illustrate: A few days ago we were shut up in this building under quarantine. We were not allowed to go out, and no one was allowed to come in. We are very thankful that, though we were in prison, we are now free. We are not glad we were in quarantine, but, since we were, we are glad we are free. Paul did not thank God that they were once in sin, but he did thank God that they had, through Christ, been delivered from sin.

In their sins they were lost. But they could be saved from all their sins. They were saved from all sin through their faith in Christ. What a glorious thought! Thank God!

Men and women are redeemed from sin by obedience from the heart to the form of teaching-the gospel of Christ-preached unto them. The doctrine is the life, death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Paul says he preached "Jesus Christ, and him crucified." The gospel Paul preached, and by which men and women are saved, is "that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried; and that he hath been raised on the third day according to the scriptures." cannot obey the doctrine, but you can obey a form of it. Paul says the Romans obeyed the form of doctrine. The doctrine is the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. The form is death to sin, a burial with Christ in baptism, and a resurrection unto a new life. Through faith you repent of your sins. You put sin out of your heart and away from your life. You are then buried with Christ in baptism. You are raised a new creature in Christ, By this process you have enlisted in the army of the Lord. You are a member of God's church.

People must obey God to be saved. "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life; he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." Christ "being made perfect, became the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him."

Young men, it is not enough to say you believe in Christ and not obey him. Such faith is a dead faith. The demons believed and shuddered. Faith apart from works is barren. "For as the body apart from the spirit is dead, even so faith apart from works is dead," I heard Dean Crane the other night ask the boys out there in that stockade how many of them believed Jesus Christ was the Son of God. Practically every boy—about two hundred—shot up his hand. The Dean then said: "Boys, get your New Testaments, read them, and do what the New Testament says. There is no use to decide in your minds to obey God or sign the War Roll card and stop there. You must put your decision into action. Your faith must take hold of you and move you to obey your Savior."

Suppose a young man back at home lacks but four months of being twenty-one years of age. He sees that when his twenty-first birthday comes he will have to register and be drafted into the army. He decides that he will volunteer. Is he in the army when he makes that decision? You say, no. He must comply with certain conditions in order to enter the army. Every organization has some process of initiation. When you enlist in this army, you are trained for service. You serve your country and you receive your pay. You enjoy the blessings of your country and share her glory.

Christ teaches that you must believe in him, repent of all your sins, and be baptized into his name. When you do this, you enlist in the Lord's army. When you become a soldier of the cross of Christ, you next are drilled and trained for his service. You are to fight battles against sin.

May God help every young man under the sound of my voice who is not a Christian to enlist in the army of the Lord Jesus Christ, to live the Christian life and finally be saved in heaven.

The Present War and the Prophecies. No. 1. BY LEE JACKSON.

At this present time there is a great deal of speculative theorizing relative to the fulfillment of Old and New Testament prophecies in the events which are now transpiring as the result of the great war. Sermons are being preached on prophetic themes; newspapers, magazines, and religious journals are speculating on the prophecies and the signs of the times; and books and pamphlets on the subject of the millennium and the second coming of Christ are being published and circulated. Strange as it may seem, yet it is true that all wars affecting countries where the Bible has been known have given rise to especial efforts to interpret the meaning of certain Bible prophecies. It is equally true, too, that all of these past interpretations have missed the mark at which they aimed, so far as we are able to determine in the light of history. It is true that there are some prophecies which we can understand fairly well in the light of their past fulfillment. Such are the prophecies relative to the ruin of Nineveh and the complete overthrow of the great Assyrian monarchy, the downfall and final desolation of Babylon, the destruction of Jerusalem, and other prophecies of like character, notably among them the prophecy concerning the dispersion of the race of Israel among all nations. But it is also true that there are fulfilled prophecies which Bible scholars and historians admit that they do not accurately know the exact time or the precise manner of their fulfillment. What they plainly see is that such prophecies have been fulfilled; the exact time is not determined, and the precise manner of the completion of fulfillment is questionable. We have our written history in many volumes, but there is a very large volume of the world's history-even of modern history-which is left unwritten.

To understand prophecies in the light of their historic fulfillment, it is very necessary for the Bible student to be acquainted with history. When any of us preachers or Bible readers know so little of history that we are unable to answer the simplest questions relative to countries, dates, and events of the past, it is a very risky business to make positive assertions as to the fulfillment of the prophecies. In the Old Testament, for instance, there are prophecies relative to the destruction of the city of Nineveh, the overthrow of the Assyrian empire, and the complete subjugation of the country of the Assyrians. The destruction of Nineveh occurred something more than twenty-five hundred years ago, or about the beginning of the sixth century before the birth of Christ, when the last Assyrian army that ever fought a battle was driven within the walls of the great city of Assyria, an army and people and city miserably perished from the records of time forever. But it is by no means clear that in all of their particulars these prophecies were completely fulfilled when Nineveh fell and Assyrian rule was overthrown. After the closing scene in Assyrian history, the territory of the Assyrian country was divided between the rulers of Babylon and Media; then, after a period of fifty years, this territory became embraced within the extensive empire founded by Cyrus the Great. Thus it may be seen that certain particulars found in the prophecies concerning the overthrow of Assyria may not have been fulfilled until a time later than the Assyrian overthrow, and fulfilled in causes and events belonging to the successive rulers and occupants of the Assyrian lands. But as these prophecies in all particulars were concerning the Assyrians and their land of abode, it is to the land of Assyria that we must look for their fulfillment. To take a prophetic statement relative to the country of the Assyrians and apply it to an event or a condition happening or belonging to some other part of the world, and this simply because the descriptive prophecy could be made to fit such event or condition, would certainly be a distortion of the Scriptures.

We are told that because of the greatness of the present world war we are compelled to consider it as coming in fulfillment of prophecy, and that as a means it will bring to pass results foretold by the Bible prophets. It may be true that the Bible contains predictions which are to find fulfillment in this present war, but this may be reasonably doubted. No uninspired man holds the key which enables him to unlock the meaning of all Bible prophecies, and this especially holds in regard to prophecies yet to be fulfilled. As a matter of personal belief, I hold that through the ages God is working out an all-wise and beneficent purpose in behalf of man, and I believe that this purpose is foreshown in the prophecies of both the Old and the New Testament Scriptures; but this does not mean that every important event in the world's history has been made the subject of any especial prophecy. There are prophecies that are general as respects their application to the accomplishment of the divine purpose to overthrow Satan's reign and ultimately redeem the world from the ruin of sin. Such prophecies, in the scope of their perspective, reach through the ages to the end of time.

As in the case of Assyria, so we find Old-Testament prophecies concerning the other leading countries and powers of Western Asia, of Europe, and of Africa as immediately bordering on the Mediterranean Sea. Examination of especial prophecies relative to countries, empires, and kingdoms shows that these special prophecies do not reach beyond the ruling powers and countries then known to the prophets. Ammon, Moab, Assyria, Syria, Egypt. Edom, Arabia, Persia, Media, Tyre, Siden, Babylon, Nineveh, the last four mentioned as cities, are all made the subjects of especial predictions, and the events and conditions predicted were all to take place within the borders of the countries and places referred to. Prophecies regarding the isles of the sea, in all probability, refer only to the Grecian isles, excepting those general prophecies which relate to the then coming kingdom of Christ. There are two or three especial predictions concerning the rising kingdom of Macedon, on the European side of the Great Sea, and of Alexander the Great, who, as king of Macedon, was to subdue and bring under his dominion the Asiatic territory which I have mentioned. Beyond this, the prophecies of the Old Testament do not apparently deal with conditions and events belonging to the countries on the European continent. There are a few predictions, apparently, which refer to the activities of the Romans as instrumental in the final overthrow of the eastern nations; one concerning the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and one which probably predicts the breaking up of the Roman empire and the ushering in of the great apostasy, or the reign of the "man of sin." But in these last-mentioned prophecies there is nothing specific, either as to precise dates or particular historical events. It requires a very great stretch of the imagination to find anything in the Old-Testament prophets which has even the remotest reference to events or conditions in France, England, Germany, or to any of the other present European countries. In the New Testament the prophecies are of a different character; these I will notice in a separate article.

The Scriptures contain many prophecies concerning the ruin of Jerusalem by Gentile powers, the desolation of the land of Palestine, and the dispersion and preservation of the Jews as the seed of Abraham. In the New Testament these prophecies are of a general character in their form and application, while in the Old Testament they are mostly specific. In the reading of these Old-Testament prophecies we find no difficulty in understanding that the prophet's reference is to Israel and Jerusalem, concerning things in the future. In such prophecies the reference to Gentile nations is always incidental and subordinate, these being spoken of only as being instrumental in bringing to pass God's judgments upon Jerusalem and Israel. It is Jerusalem and Israel, and not particular Gentile nations, that stand out clearly as the subject of these prophecies. And through the changing and shifting of the world's activities through a period of nearly nineteen centuries since the destruction of the temple by the Romans we see these prophetic predictions being fulfilled. There have been wars, long and bloody; pestilences and famines have visited the dwelling places of men at sundry times through all these centuries of Jerusalem's desolation; through the cruel and bloody wars of Saracens and Turks, of Europeans and Tartar tribes, it is Palestine "forsaken and desolate" and "Jerusalem trodden down of the Gentiles." Its recent capture by the British may be only a repetition of what has been in the past. "The end is not yet."

President Wilson's Behest.

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

Like heroic notes from a bugle blast, stirring the pulse and firing the heart, came a recent call from the President of this great nation to our soldier boys to read the word of God every day, to merge it into and make it a part of their daily thought. And not only this, but with the fervent admonition wherein Mr. Wilson gave new proof of the wisdom, the vision, and the goodness which make the great statesman, it also became known that through a happy arrangement a copy of the New Testament is put into the hands of every soldier boy.

And I ask: Can't all the preachers of our country catch up and recent this plea? For it is an admonition needed not only by these our splendid young men who have gone or are soon to go away to fight and perhaps to die in foreign lands, but also by all those who remain at home. Is there not the same great need for us, too, to remain in daily prayerful contact with the mighty fountain of life flowing to us through divine truth? Here may all souls be fed and refreshed. It is our meat and drink, on which we must feed every day, and bountifully, if we are to live and grow, and out of touch with which we must soon decay and die. Is it not the preacher's business so to put this matter before all people, whether church members or not, as to induce them to come constantly to God's wisdom as the supreme good of this earthly life?

The trouble is that, if we are not careful, we shall be possessed of a perverted taste which will crave something else instead, and that we shall come to the divine word, if at all, only when we are forced or when there seems nothing else to engage us. Many there are to-day who from a preacher would rather hear anything spoken than the Bible and who appreciate him in proportion, not as he is able to fill his sermons with copious and appropriate quotations from the precious word, which he should do, but rather as he speaks of and quotes other thingsthings which, though they may possess the virtue of being both pretty and true, are nevertheless not the gospel and cannot save the soul. I say this is a common weakness in auditors, of which the preacher must beware. (See 2 Tim. 4: 1-4.) Is it not a pity that preachers should cater to this vain appetite? The gospel is the power of God to save (Rom. 1: 16), and it is this alone which God sends his preachers to teach. What God wants in his preachers is simply that they be an unobstructed channel through which to pass his word on to men, and to God a preacher is acceptable and effective exactly in proportion as he fulfills this divine function. Pity, I say again, therefore, that a preacher, whose supreme and all-absorbing business in the world is to put the divine word into the hearts of men. should turn aside and stoop down to a mere tickling of people's ears by giving them something they are weak enough to crave instead of what God knows they imperatively need, and without which they must die! And he who does this, no matter how good and well-intentioned he may be, both misleads men and compromises himself and his great calling before them. I myself have erred in this matter and have a right to speak.

Paul declared that he would know nothing but Christ, and him crucified, lest those to whom he spoke should fix their faith in men instead of in God. (See I Cor. 2: 1-5.) And yet was there a man in all the world who could have out classed Paul on the lecture platform? But how unworthy of that great preacher to the Gentiles that he should have stooped to be engaged in making a sweet-scented little lecture on some piffling and subminor topic, catering to the vain fancy of the populace, the while his fellows perished for want of the bread of life! All, preachers of our fair and now sorely tried country, let us play no ignoble part! Jesus, your Lord and mine, bled and died that his unmixed word should reach and heal the souls of men. Nero fiddled while Rome was in flames; and shall you and I escape if we piddle while the world is being destroyed? Men are dying about us for want of this message. Let us, I pray you, put our whole energies into the blessed task of speaking it to them faithfully, and let us by no word or deed cause them to suppose that we think of our calling as other than the supremest thing of our existence; and, like our great President, let us urge people everywhere to read this word every day.

The church is passing through a trying period. Men's souls are being tried as by fire in these times. Some are becoming discouraged and are turning back, some follow they know not what, and even some churches have ceased entirely to function. The love of many waxes cold. But Christian life is at a low ebb and churches are losing their faith only because they are out of touch with God and his word. Folks do not do wrong because they so intend, but rather because they do not know what really is right, because they have no clear conception of duty, and this, in turn, is because they do not keep in daily prayerful touch with God's word. The gospel is the greatest known transforming power, but it is inoperative till men know and believe it and remain in daily touch with it. Therefore the crying need of our times, that which comes first in importance every way, is that people be led into daily humble contact with it, and also that preachers preach it faithfully, exalting it over all. And I join my feeble plea with the clarion call of President Wilson in begging that this word be now fixed in the understandings and affections of all.

Field Notes.

BY C. E. HOLT.

In my itinerary for the Gospel Advocate I visited the capital of Lincoln County, Tenn., a county noted for fine land, fine stock, and fine people. I do not like to make comparisons, for somebody always suffers from such pro cedure, and to them comparisons seem odious; yet I could wish that the people of other towns in the old Volunteer State could get a taste of the genuine Christian hospitality of the people of Fayetteville. The church in Fayetteville is strong in many ways. It has a very strong preacher, Brother C. E. Wooldridge, who stands foursquare to the world and denominationalism, and preaches the old Jerusalem gospel with a Pauline zeal and a Peterine boldness; and woe be unto the gospel perverter who gets in his way! Brother Wooldridge is a growing preacher, as all preachers ought to be. Some preachers get grown prematurely. To get a few sermons so that they can be delivered in Ben Franklin or Moses E. Lard style or in the style of a college president, and then quit studying, quit digging into the rich, inexhaustible mines of revelation, is a serious mistake. Old preachers should study, study, study; keep digging, keep learning. When a preacher quits growing, he begins to die; and some die "mighty" fast. In the town of Fayetteville there resides a great preacher who has done, and is still doing, a great work for the Master. He is doing this in a quiet, unostentations way. Thomas C. Little is the name of this most efficient preacher. A good man in Fayetteville told me that Brother Little preaches more funerals in Lincoln County than any other preacher in the county. This, of course, shows his great popularity. We have another preacher in that county, Brother Andy Largent, who is a growing man in protracted-meeting work. Of course, we call that "evangelistic work." Brother Largent is a good man and should be encouraged.

While in Fayetteville I made my home with my brother-in-law in the gospel, Brother V. C. Yearwood. Brother Yearwood is a fine, Christian gentleman, holding member-ship with a Baptist Church in Fayetteville. His most estimable wife is a member of the church for which Brother Wooldridge preaches. She helped me very materially with the paper, taking me around in her car. She is a genuine "Priscilla." Her mother, Sister Freeman, makes her home with Brother and Sister Yearwood, and is a great friend and admirer of the Gospel Advocate. The brethren of Fayetteville treated me well in supporting the Gospel Advocate. The paper circulates well in that city and throughout that county. It is easy to get subscriptions for the paper where it is well known. I find that the most active members of the church read the paper.

I made a short stop at Franklin on my way from Nashville to Fayetteville. There I met that very affable, Christian gentleman, Brother D. E. McCorkle. Brother McCorkle is one of the leading lawyers of Franklin. He manifested an interest in the paper, furnishing me with a list of names of the members, thus showing an unusually large acquaintance with the membership of the church at Franklin. Brother F. W. Smith, of Nashville, preaches for the Franklin church, and I could wish that all preachers were as greatly loved by the people as is Brother Smith by the people of that city.

Brethren, when I come among you, be ready to take the "Old Reliable,"

It was certainly a noble act of the faithful little band of soldier boys at Camp Sevier, S. C., to express their thoughtfulness for the suffering women and children across the seas by sending a substantial contribution to this fund. Do not fail to read the report of their Lord's-day meetings which you will find under "At Home and Abroad."

The generous givers at Lawrenceburg, Tenn., are extremely anxious that their contribution be sent "in Christ's name." We share this feeling with them and shall do our best to see that this wish is realized. A fervent prayer accompanies the gift of Brother S. E. Templeton, now located at Rogersville, Ala. It reads: "May our hearts go out to all the war sufferers in the necessities of life and love, and may we. God's humble children, be able to save them physically and spiritually." Referring to the terrible war, he adds: "May God through Jesus keep me from thinking, speaking, or doing one thing that will increase the unspeakable horrors of it."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Pray without ceasing and teach others to pray without ceasing. This is the fundamental principle. When a man really loves a human being, or an idea of his own mind, his secret thoughts are ever clinging to his love, while he is attending to the many various occupations of his life, be it the life of a servant or the life of a king; and this does not prevent his attending carefully to his work, for he has no need to speak many words to his love.—Selected.

The Christian's Field of Labor Not Limited. BY J. C. M'Q.

A few days ago I met a preacher who seemed very much discouraged. He said that the churches had quit work at home, were not supporting the preachers, and that the preachers would have to hunt other jobs if they made a living. Taken altogether, he seemed to be very much cast down, and was looking altogether to the wrong source for help. It is easy enough for us, like Elijah, to get under the juniper tree and to imagine that the whole world is going wrong. Our own feelings have much to do with our reaching such a conclusion. While we cannot explain why God permits the war any more than we can explain why he permits sin, yet we know that God can no more stop the war than he can stop sin. So long as man has the power of volition and free action, he must be permitted to think and act for himself. Christians should look to God for help while they devote their energies and their means to the preaching of the gospel as they have never done before. Whom he loves he chastises. Hence the Holy Spirit admonishes: "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your anxiety upon him, because he careth for you." (1 Pet. 5: 6, 7.) Christ spent his life in preaching the gospel to the poor, in healing the afflicted and binding up the wounds of the wounded.

There is no foreigner with God. The great commission. as recorded by Matthew, reads: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) Mark also declares: "He said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." Christians should be especially active now in proclaiming the gospel of Christ at home and abroad. The churches should be given to ceaseless activity in the great work of saving souls. The light that burns the brightest at home reaches the farthest away. Christians are commanded: "Even so let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 5: 16.)

The early Christians did not simply work at home; but while they worked at home and wherever they were, they went about "preaching the word." (See Acts 8: 4.) We learn also that Philip preached the gospel to all the cities until he came to Cesarea. (Acts 8: 40.) Paul was not content in preaching to the church at Corinth only, and was not willing to glory in other men's labors, but labored there in such a manner as to preach the gospel "even unto the parts beyond you, and not to glory in another's province in regard of things ready to our hand." (2 Cor. 10: 16.) The apostles preached the gospel, as we learn from Col. 1: 23 and Rom. 10: 18, to all of the habitable globe at that time.

Churches that are active at home do the most in preaching the gospel to those abroad. Churches that are inactive at home are inactive in preaching the gospel to the "whole creation." Accepting the principle that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," our preachers should stir the churches to doing their full duty in the work of preaching the gospel to every creature, to feeding the hungry, to clothing the cold, and to ministering to the afflicted. It should not be urged upon them to do this work only at home, for the man that has the spirit of Christ ministers to suffering humanity wherever it is found. He teaches the ignorant and lifts up the fallen in whatever place he comes in contact with them. Christ's spirit is broad enough and lasting enough to take in all the world for all ages. Preachers, however, who are doing nothing should not wait for the churches to prepare a soft place for them. The Holy Spirit teaches that the preacher who is so lazy and inactive that he will not work shall not eat. Simply because a man is a preacher is no reason why he should not make an honest living. He should not wait for the churches to hold up his hands in idleness. He must also have a spirit of sacrifice and such a spirit as Paul had when he said: "For wee is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" The man who has the spirit of Christ is not complaining that he cannot find work to do. There is a constant demand for workers. It is not difficult to find work. The truth is that labor is in demand in all walks of life. When a man complains that he is not being supported and can find nothing to do, he should examine his own heart carefully to see if the fault is not there.

I can hardly believe that the churches have ceased to work and that Christians do not realize the necessity of working at home and abroad. It is not because they are doing so much abroad in relieving the Armenian, Syrian, and Belgian sufferers that they are neglecting their work at home-if such be the case. In looking over the War Sufferers' Fund, I find that the amount contributed to this work during the months of January and February, as reported through the Gospel Advocate, is only $1,896.37. In our last issue we copied an article from the Literary Digest, in which it is stated that the Literary Digest was sending a check for two thousand dollars for the Armenians, and that a reader was sending a check for twelve hundred dollars to the Belgian sufferers. Our preachers should stir the churches to do more work in relieving suffering humanity. I can see no objection to using the Red Cross, an agency of the government, as a forwarding agent, for it in no way usurps the authority and functions of the church. It is simply a method of sending. As I have never found any method of teaching the word of God to the exclusion of other methods, so I find no specific method of sending money to the exclusion of other methods revealed in the New Testament. But if there are those who even object to using the government's agency, let them encourage the churches to do the work. Churches need fruit to abound to their account.

"What Saith the Scriptures?" BY E. A. E.

Brother Elam: Please answer the following questions with the Scriptures. John baptized and prepared a people for the Lord. (1) Were those who were baptized and prepared by him baptized again after the church was established in the church was established. lished, if they accepted the apostles' teaching? (2) were they in the church or foundation? (3) If yes, (2) If no, did John prepare them for, the Lord's personal ministry W. T. HINES. or church

This good brother requests me to answer his "questions with the scriptures." If I could, I would not answer any question pertaining to salvation "with" anything else In answer to a certain lawyer's question, Jesus says: "What is written in the law? how readest thou?" Paul asks: "For what saith the scriptures?" If the Scriptures do not answer a question, it is an untaught question.

There are many questions which the Scriptures say must be avoided, because they are unprofitable and vain and gender strife. Some questions feed upon the body of Christ as a gangrenous sore upon the human body and produce much evil every way. It would be a great blessing to the church if the different questions which God commands all to avoid would be really avoided. It would be another great blessing to the church if no preacher or teacher would avoid or shun any question which God commands to be studied and taught. When some studiously avoid some questions which God commands to be taught and others studiously take up and push questions which God commands to be avoided, confusion, strife, and division are sure to follow. In this case both these classes of preachers and teachers are responsible for the sad and shameful results.

Aside from Brother Hines' question and in a general way, he will please allow me to say here "to all whom it may concern," and for the sake of harmony and the truth, I would not give one statement of the scriptures for cart loads of dilemmas; one word from God for all the theories and speculations of men; for all the prudence of the prudent and the wisdom of the wise; for volumes of logic, glittering generalities, streams of eloquence, and an aurora borealis of rhetoric.

The most logical, convincing, eloquent, powerful, and the only consistent thing is the truth. The word of God is

The wisest, most learned, most logical, most eloquent men are weak when they espouse the cause of error and contend with the Almighty.

Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? (Job 38: 2.)

Shall he that eavileth contend with the Almighty? He that argueth with God, let him answer it. (Job 40: 2.)

Thus it has been throughout all generations. All depends upon of what spirit men are. We are forbidden to believe every spirit. (1 John 4: 1.) Some are not only captious, not only cavil and contend and argue with the Almighty, but exchange "the truth of God for a lie" and worship and serve "the creature rather than the Creator." (Rom. 1: 25.) "Be not wise in your own conceits" (Rom. 12: 16) is an admonition our Heavenly Father sees is necessary to give in a clear and strong way to all his children. (See Rom. 11: 25.) Again, God says "to every man" among his children "not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think" (Rom. 12: 3), and that "each" one should count the "other" one "better than himself."

Doing nothing through faction or through vainglory, but in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself; not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others. (Phil. 2: 3, 4.)

All are commanded to cultivate and to manifest the humility, gentleness, meekness, suffering, sacrifice, and submission of Christ, and to have his mind and spirit. (Phil. 2: 4-11.) As I write this-and at all other times-I wish all men were before God "of a broken heart" and "of a contrite spirit" and would "tremble at his word." (Ps. 34: 18; Isa. 66: 2, 5.) Then "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding," would guard all hearts and thoughts in Christ Jesus. (Phil. 4: 6, 7.)

Logic is cold and cruel, harsh and bitter, and the merest sophistry, when not controlled by the love of God and when used against the truth.

Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of the world? (1 Cor. 1: 20.)

God declares that he will destroy the wisdom of the wise and bring to naught the discernment of the discerning. (1 Cor. 1: 19.) There are two kinds of wisdom. These are contrasted in James 3: 13-18, which read.

That men are learned and logical and eloquent makes it the more grievous and destructive of the peace of the church and ruinous to the souls of men that they endeavor by their learning and logic and eloquence to maintain error, exalt worldly wisdom, and even to withhold parts of the truth.

The most dangerous of all teachers are the learned and logical and eloquent men who can come in a hair's breadth of preaching and teaching all the truth, and yet at some critical and vital point withhold it. The most beguiling preaching and teaching is that of the learned and logical and eloquent men who with smooth and fair speech plainly and boldly and with boasted courage preach much of the truth, which all persons receive, and all the truth on questions upon which all are agreed, leading many to believe they are the very conservators of the will of God, and yet with great speciousness avoiding vital issue and the very truth which cost sacrifice and suffering to preach.

Again I am constrained to call attention to the truth that columns after columns of many religious papers do not contain one direct quotation from the Scriptures. The writers record their logical deductions, conclusions, and theories with as much assurance and certainty as if they were holy writ itself. I read two long columns and a half not long since in a religious paper, written by a brother, who claims to speak where the Bible speaks and to be silent where it is slient, and there was not one single verse or full statement from the Bible in the whole article; but it was full of assertions and conclusions as far from the word of God as day is from night. Which is the safer and wiser course-to come at once to the will of God and to present it in full and direct on any given subject, or to reason and deduce conclusions and finally come to the point that the Almighty very wisely agrees with the writer or that the writer agrees with the Almighty in some things?

A young preacher in a distant country wrote me recently, saying in his letter that he had lately read Ben Franklin's books of sermons and was sorry to have to say he hears no such preaching now. And he does not in most places. Yet the God of heaven and earth is the same the Christ is the same, the Holy Spirit is the same, the gospel is the same, the church is the same, the Christian life is the same, the world is the same, the prince of this world is the same, heaven is the same, and perdition is the same—all these are the same now and will ever be the same as they were in the apostles' day. The church of the New Testament must be the church of to-day and forever. All now must preach the word.

THE MISSION OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.

What, then, do the Scriptures say about the work of John the Baptist? By studying all the Scriptures teach on this subject we will learn all that has been revealed and all that can be known. The following scriptures will give us a general view of John's life: In prophecy-Isa. 40: 3; Mal. 3: 1; 4: 5, 6. In promise-Luke 1: 1-25. His birth-Luke 1: 57-79. His growth and manner of life-Luke 1: 15, 80; Matt. 3: 4. His mission and work-Matt. 3: 1-10; Mark 1: 1-6; Luke 3: 1-14. He baptized Jesus-Matt. 3: 13-17; Mark 1: 9-11; Luke 3: 21, 22. His testi mony of Jesus-Matt. 3: 11, 12: Mark 1: 7, 8; Luke 3. 15-17; John 1: 6-34; 3: 25-36. Imprisoned by Herod-Matt. 4: 12; Mark 1: 14; Luke 3: 20. Sent his disciples to Christ-Matt, 11: 1-6; Luke 7: 18-23. Christ's testimony of John-Matt. 11: 7-14; 17: 10-13; Mark 9: 11-13; Luke 7: 24-30. Beheaded-Matt. 14: 1-12; Mark 6: 14-29; Luke 9; 7-9. The martyr's crown-Rev. 2: 10; 20: 4.

From these scriptures we see he was a child of prophecy and promise; we can learn of his parentage and the interesting events connected with his birth; of his mission and life, which life stands out before the world as pure and unsullied as the new fallen snow; of his character, which was as bold and unswerving as the rugged and unshaken mountains; of his tragic death, which was his greatest triumph and most glorious victory; and of the martyr's crown.

John was sent as a messenger before the face of the Lord, to make ready his way and his paths straight—to make ready "a people prepared for him." John prepared a people for the Lord by "preaching the baptism of repentance unto remission of sins," which resulted in the turning of the heart of the fathers to their children and the heart of the children to their fathers, and the walking of the disobedient in the wisdom of the just. He made the paths of the Lord straight by persuading people to quit their crooked ways. He taught different classes to live right as fruits of repentance.

John did not "baptize and prepare a people for the Lord;" he prepared them by persuading them to repent and be baptized unto the remission of sins and to live in all relationships of life in obedience to God. He preached that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand" and "the wrath to come" to induce people to repent and be baptized and to continue in obedience to God.

1. The answer to this question is, no. Since John prepared a people for the Lord, they were prepared for him. If not, John's work was a failure. If we go only by the word of God, we would never raise this question, because there is no command for any such person to be "baptized again" and no example of any such person's having been "baptized again." The twelve at Ephesus were commanded to be "baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus," because they had submitted to John's baptism after it had ended and after the command of Christ to be baptized "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," as the context shows. (Acts 18: 24 to 19: 7.) Jesus submitted to John's baptism in order to fulfill all righteousness. God was pleased with his doing this, and this was done that he might be made manifest unto Israel. (See John 1: 30-34.) Was God not well pleased with all others who thus obeyed him? (See Luke 7: 29, 30.) Jesus preached as John did: "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Matt. 4: 17.) He sent out the twelve apostles (Matt. 10; 7) and the seventy to preach the same. (Luke 10: 9.) He taught and through his disciples baptized more disciples than John. (John 4: 1-3.) Were those whom Jesus taught and baptized "baptized again?" Were the apostles and other disciples who did all this baptizing "baptized again?" They all were, if any were.

2. They were in this preparatory work of John and of Jesus as it developed more and more unto his ascension and the descent of the Holy Spirit—in the preparatory state of the kingdom, or church.

3. John prepared "a people" for the Lord—made "ready a people prepared for him." He did, or he did not. There is not one word said about John's preparing a people for Jesus' "personal ministry." People were prepared for his service and use for all time; and all filled their places or missions as they had ability. To Peter he gave the keys of the kingdom. Now, was Peter prepared for the Lord's "personal ministry" only, or for the Lord at all times? One cannot be prepared for the Lord and not for the church. The Lord and his church cannot be separated. Had he not intended to build his church, he would have had no need of disciples. God raised Jesus from the dead, took him up to his own right hand, and made him head over all things to the church. Could people be prepared for the head and not for the body?

Neither can we now work for the Lord out of the church—not through the church—during the week as individuals, and in the church on Sunday.

One of the Grand Sayings of Christ.

BY E. G. S.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7; 21.)

Jesus always knew what to say, when to say it, and to whom to say it. This passage, short as it is, expresses the destinies of the people of the whole world for all time, All those that really do the will of the Heavenly Father will be sure to enter heaven, while all that reject it will be sure to miss that happy home. The passage settles a principle that has never yet been changed, and never will be while time lasts. It has always been true, and always will be, that the faithful servants of God are safe in his hands, and those who refuse the will of God and go their own way through this life will be eternally lost. There is no second chance offered. Those that reject the gospel in this life will be rejected from heaven forever. Why, then, should any one reject it? Rejecting it can bring no good to any one in this life, but will certainly bring the loss of the soul in eternity. Obeying the gospel through life will not only be a source of happiness here, but will prepare one for eternal happiness in the heavenly home. All the powers of the world and Satan combined can never deprive one faithful soul of the eternal joys of heaven and drag it down to perdition. Faithful ones may be persecuted and put to great trouble in this life, but all such are sure of eternal life. The New Testament is very plain in its practical teaching, so that all may be sure as to whether they are on the narrow way toward the eternal home or on the broad way toward perdition. It is a wonderful blessing that the faithful can have full assurance that they are on the narrow way that leads to the glory home. This assurance is a source of great happiness.

Nevertheless, it requires great diligence and activity to be always sure that we are in the right way. The apostle Peter, after speaking of the great and precious promises that the Lord has given as an encouragement to be faithful. adds: "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." (2 Pet. 1: 5-7.) Then, as an encouragement, he further says: "For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (Verses 8-11.)

The promise that those who do the things named "shall never fall" is certainly a very precious one. Moreover, since this promise was made through an inspired man, we may fully rely upon it, if we will be faithful in doing the things he requires us to do. Especially is this true when doing the Lord's will is the only thing that will prepare one for a pure and happy life on earth and for a happy home in heaven. Why, then, should not all obey the Lord and form the character he requires? It seems strange that any one understanding these things should put off the important matter of striving to form the very character the Christian religion requires until death puts an end to his opportunities. The Lord will not change his decrees as to the eternal destinies of those that refuse to do his will till the close of their mortal lives. The trouble is, people can never know while they are in good health when the end may come. Even if they could tell the very day and hour when the end of life will come, that would not prepare them for future happiness. Hence there is no standpoint from which it would be safe to put off our service to God. On the other hand, it will always be safe and enjoyable to be found busy in the service of God.

No man can be truly happy when he knows he is neglecting and disregarding the will of God and is deprived of its great and precious promises. If death should suddenly come upon such a one, there would then be no possible relief. Eternal ruin would be inevitable. But God has provided that no one in Bible lands need ever be in such a predicament as that. The word of the Lord plainly teaches people what to do to be saved, to be always on safe ground. Therefore all that have access to the Bible and yet neglect it have nothing whatever to secure them from ruin. The grandest opportunity ever offered to man is the salvation of his soul through obedience to the gospel of Christ. There is no good reason for any man who has access to the word of the Lord disregarding it. Surely the great number of people in Bible lands that fail to become Christians have never thought seriously over the awful danger they are so carelessly stepping into by such neglect.

Do not let us lie at all. Do not think of one falsity as harmless, another as slight, and another as unintended. Cast them all aside. . . . Speaking truth is like writing fair, and comes only by practice; it is less a matter of will than of habit, and I doubt if any occasion can be trivial which permits the practice and formation of such a habit.—Ruskin.

A Two-Years' Stay in Japan.

BY SARAH SHEPHERD ANDREWS.

To-day (January 16) is the anniversary of my arrival in Japan, and I shall write a brief account of the work and events affecting my stay here.

My first work, of course, was to set about breaking down the barrier which makes men aliens to each other, and I find myself to-day still working away at this. In coming to Japan, as for the language, one has an especially difficult task before him. For the first few months, and even during the first few years, it often becomes necessary to resort to the aid of sundry gymnastics and pantomimic exhibitions in order to be understood. I am glad to say that I do not have to resort to this method so often now, nor do the Japanese in talking with me. I can usually understand about all that is said to me, and do not find it so trying to be understood, yet I realize there is still a long pull ahead; but, with God's grace, I hope to reach the top.

In connection with the language study, I have done some direct work among the English-speaking Japanese and some through an interpreter. I have not found this latter method very satisfactory, and have resolved henceforth, in so far as possible, to make all attempts in Japanese. For some time I have been able to do some direct work among the children in the way of entertaining, etc., and have enjoyed it. In making talks at the women's meetings and the Sunday school, it will be necessary for a while to translate and memorize what I have to say, and, of course, this will afford excellent practice in the language. I made the first Japanese speech at a woman's meeting a few days ago, and have a talk ready for the little folks next Sunday.

My work and also the language study has been considerably retarded on account of my health. In May after my arrival I began suffering from quite a severe nervous affection, and several doctors advised me to leave Japan; but I was determined not to let this discourage me, and, with God's grace, after about six months, I overcame this almost entirely. Then in March, 1917, I had an attack of appendicitis (this was the third, having had two in America) which resulted in an operation. Of course, this was a very trying ordeal for one not very strong in the beginning; but all things work together for good to those who love the Lord, and I gladly bore these afflictions, believing that they would work for me a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Through it all I realized the presence of Him who is omnipotent, and I consider it a blessing to be able to feel more than ever before my utter dependence upon him. I am glad that he saw fit to raise me up, and now that I am stronger I hope to do greater things for God.

As my strength for the past two years has been rather limited and as writing has always been a tedious work for me, I have slighted this duty, but I trust this summary may suffice for the past. The Lord willing, I hope to keep those interested better in touch with the work hereafter.

My First Christmas in Japan.

BY LILLIE CYPERT.

When we were released from school responsibilities on December 22 and it was announced that school would not be taken up again until January 8, I was happy, because I had many things planned to do in the holidays. However, I have begun to realize that in Japan you cannot do things as in rushing America. The Japanese take their time for everything. They take days, and even weeks, to do the same thing that we in America would do in only a few hours, or, at most, in a day or two.

The Yuletide was a very pleasant one, even though not regarded as it is at home. The Japanese people are regarding Christmas more and more all the time, but it is not at all universal yet. I was nicely remembered by friends on Christmas and invited to the home of the Messengers for a nice turkey dinner, for all of which I am very thankful.

The Sunday school at Zoshigaya was given a Christmas tree, which was very interesting, but quite different from one at home. The tree, a very small affair, was beautiful and nicely decorated; but it looked like a baby Christmas tree to me, as it was only four or five feet high. But even though it was small and took up but little space, it got in the way and some one picked it up and set it back in a corner. The house was beautifully decorated with festooning and holly. The seats were reserved for the grown-ups and the children sat on a big rug on the floor. Thus crouched down on their little feet, they were to sit and listen through a long program lasting about two and a half hours before receiving their presents. However, most of them seemed rather comfortable, as they are accustomed to sitting on the floor at home, and the program was real interesting. I enjoyed it myself, though I understood only a few words. After the program was over, one could not help but rejoice with them when seeing their little, sunny faces as they received their presents, also their extra presents for faithfulness in attendance at Sunday school.

The most celebrated of all their holidays is New Year's Day. At this time one is brought to the realization of the fact that he is in a heathen land and face to face with idolatry. Several days before Christmas the decorations for the new year began. They have many, many kinds of decorations, each of which has a significance. On almost every home little strips of white paper are hanging, signifying ancestor worship. Large rice cakes, in stacks in the house, and decorated with ferns, oranges, rice straw, and other things, rice-straw rope stretched along the fronts of homes and shops, pine and bamboo placed on each side of the entrance of homes and shops, and Japanese lanterns are among the other things used for decoration. All kinds of flags are flying, even to the Stars and Stripes.

On all other days, Sunday as well, the shops are open and the people very busy, but not so on New Year's. All, big and little, are dressed in their gayest kimonos and are out in the streets, many of them playing shuttlecock and battledore, which is quite a famous game among the Japanese. Kite flying is also very popular at this time among the boys.

I desire the prayers of all, that I may be useful in his cause.

There is always some one to smile at, somebody to give your chair to, somebody to whom a book, a flower, or a kind word would be a comfort. . . . A quiet, sympathetic look or smile many a time unbars a heart that needs help which you can give.—Josephine Pollard.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 2-Kindergarten Activities Afford Profitable Amusement to Little Folks at Home.

The mother of small children who does not live within reach of a kindergarten need not feel compelled to deprive her little ones of the pleasures and benefits of systematic training. It is true that the stimulus of cooperative work and play, so vital a feature of the kindergarten, is not so apt to be found in the smaller group at home and is entirely lacking in the case of the only child. Nevertheless, many of the activities provided in kindergarten can be carried on not only by the small group, but by the lonely child as well.

"Come, let us live with our children!" is the old, familiar Freebelian slogan. We might paraphrase it by saying: "Come, let us sing with our children!"

Why shouldn't children sing morning greetings to father and mother as well as to teacher? Even two-year-olds that I know can sing them and delight in doing so. The good-morning songs to various members of the family, to the new day, to sun or clouds, sung while dressing, do much to create a sunny morning atmosphere. There are songs to accompany many of the home duties, besides a wealth of nature songs. At bedtime the devotional spirit of the evening prayer may be enchanced by the singing of a child's hymn. Songs, such as these, can be found in "Games and Music of Freebel's Mother Play," and in other kindergarten song books. Any good library would have some of these, or it would be possible to buy copies through a bookstore.

A kindergarten calendar may easily be made at home, For this purpose a sheet of white cardboard is ruled off into a sufficient number of blank squares for the days of the month. The children mark the calendar each day with a suitable emblem. Yellow circles should be provided for sunny days and gray for cloudy. Tiny umbrellas denote rain; a gray circle partly covered with white indicates snow. Advertisements furnish pictures for special occasions-a little church, a toy, a birthday cake, a Christmas tree, etc. The particular emblem is less important to the children than the pleasure they take in attending to the calendar regularly, and the fact that they are being helped to a realization of divisions of time. The card should be large enough to allow for a suitable picture for the month to be mounted outside of the ruled portion. Landseer's "Squirrel and Pair of Nuterackers" may be used for the October sheet, Correggio's "Holy Night" for December, Washington's or Lincoln's portrait for February.

Games train the senses at the same time that they afford keen pleasure. A mother can play many games with her child without interrupting her work. Dramatization is a wonderful stimulus to the imagination, and numberless stories lend themselves to this form of reproduction.

The kindergarten, aiming as it does to relate the limited world of the small person to the larger world about him, to quicken his appreciation of parents and all world workers, to deepen his wonder and reverence for natural phenomena, is much more than a mere place of amusement. The home can be made more than this also.

Our eyes are holden that we cannot see the things that stare us in the face until the hour arrives that the mind is ripened; then we behold them, and the time we saw them not is like a dream.-Emerson.

Another Year.

The experiences of every year may be compared to those associated with ascending the wonderful canons of the mighty West. Those deep valleys-the Spanish word "canon" means "tube in the mountain"-penetrate the rugged wilderness of rocks and woodland and often afford the only route whereby the summit of some splendid peak may finally be reached. The brave traveler sets out for his destination just as we at the beginning of each twelvemonth with renewed courage consider the coming year.

These canons, like the succeeding weeks in the lives of many of us, afford an ever-shifting scene. Sometimes they are arid; no gushing waters are near to refresh the weary. Again, they may be the only outlets for the limpid springs of water that merge into living streams at the traveler's tired feet. Obstacles unexpectedly frustrate his intent. Huge bowlders may intervene. Sometimes a lovely spot of green mosses and dainty wild flowers allures to an hour's repose. Many a halt is necessary wherein to accumulate fresh strength for the upward march. Gigantic precipices tower on every side. Sometimes all view of the outer world is cut off. Only a blue ribbon of God's beautiful sky is above. There seems no way of escape; but just when the adamantine rocks crowd most relentlessly there opens out an unexpected turn. At last the summit is attained. The things that obstructed seem in retrospect very small. Heaven is above and the world lies below. In the quiet of the rare upper atmosphere the traveler is very close to God.

So to the Christian are the passing years. The incidents of life may crowd never so hard, the water springs may temporarily cease to flow, the flowerlets of joy may not be seen because we think of our feet bruised and torn. The cruel, hard walls of circumstances may at times seem to inclose it hopelessly. But we continue the material and spiritual struggle.

Every year takes the child of faith valorously upward toward his beautiful heaven. Each succeeding twelvemonth finds the child of God one year nearer to the celestial joy .- William C. Allen, in Exchange.

* * * Be Good to Mother.

BY L. P. C.

What poor mortal is so weak and mean As to mistreat the only mother true? What poor soul would dare be seen By the all-seeing Eye, if only he knew How awful his deed?

O thoughtless soul, think about it to-day! Are you obeying that mother dear, Who's always ready to watch and pray For your wayward soul that doesn't fear To sow evil seed?

Stop and think ere it be too late. And do a kindness for mother love. Give her flowers now; don't say, "I'll wait," Lest the Father take her to that home above And leave you below.

Many a time while you slept, Perhaps mother's tears fast fell; Countless times she has softly crept Through the cold and dark-you can't tell, For you don't know.

Lift her heavy burdens and brush the rocks From the pathway she treads by love; Bow down and worship those fading locks Before she leaves as a fleeting dove, And shall be no more.

Be Sure Your Sin Will Find You Out.

The minister who thinks he can violate every principle of the Christian religion and every law of ministerial ethics and "go on just the same" is badly mistaken. This writer, a few years ago, had an occasion to write a letter of reproof to a brother minister, about whose private life, domestic and financial affairs, there was much unfavorable comment. He replied by tearing from a paper a very much exaggerated account—which he most likely had written—of his great ability as a preacher, orator, and lecturer, and, writing across the margin, "He goes on just the same," and mailing it to us. But he does not go on just the same. For two years now he has been without a pastorate and no church calls him. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Western Recorder.

The above is well said and should be impressed upon the minds of all Christians. Preachers should practice a life of purity and holiness if they expect their preaching to have the desired effect upon their hearers. The churches have tolerated a laxity of morals among the preachers that should be most severely condemned. The elders of the different local congregations, before bidding a preacher Godspeed, should demand that his life be above reproach. Many preachers have an entirely too low a conception of the requirements of the Bible teaching. Their standards of right do not measure up to the Bible standard. Because from a human standpoint it sometimes appears hard to follow the Scriptures, they are ready to seek some excuse for not doing so. Let us be true to God and leave the results with him.

The Preacher's Salary.

No one can argue against the fact that the cost of living is very high. It requires much more money for the preacher to live and support his family than it did a few years ago, and yet the preacher's salary has not been advanced to any appreciable amount. I find a few people who think that the average preacher is amply paid for his services. Those who hold such a view doubtless do so on account of absolute ignorance of the facts in the case The average preacher in the United States receives considerably less than seven hundred dollars a year. This is not a large sum, especially when we consider the fact that the preacher is required to dress more neatly than most of his congregation, and that there are many demands made upon him in the way of entertaining people, in buying books, and in thoroughly fitting and qualifying himself for the work. The successful preacher of to-day must spend a number of years in preparation for his work. Christ gave about thirty years to preparation for a threeyears' ministry. The Lord prepared Moses eighty years for his work before he would permit him to undertake it.

The ordinary day laborer, who spends little time in equipping himself for his work, receives more than the average minister. A skilled laborer receives double and sometimes even quadruple the salary of the average preacher. The man who is a good carpenter receives more pay than he who "rightly divides the word of truth." No faithful minister of the gospel complains because the ordinary and the skilled laborer receives as much and even far more wages than does he, but the Holy Spirit says that "they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel." Then, there is the preacher's wife. She cooks, keeps house, endures hardships, sews, and looks after her children. She is frequently considered stupid and dull because she does not appear well among the educated and refined people. Even those of her sex criticize the hat that she wears, saying that it is "out of date" and "out of fashion." In spite of all such discouragements, however, she lives a faithful, godly life, prays morning and night, and asks the guidance of her Heavenly Father in the work that she i doing.

Churches are not asked to make preachers rich, but they should see that they have support sufficient to enable them to devote their time heartily and unreservedly to the great work of preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. The preacher, on the other hand, should not be cast down if such is not the case. He should think of the labors, the poverty, and the trials of the apostle Paul. He should go back to One even greater than Paul, who was so poor that he had not where to lay his head, exclaiming upon one occasion: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

A New Fuel Must Be Found.

The following, taken from the Christian-Evangelist, with the comment from The Literary Digest, furnishes food for serious thought:

An old proverb forged under the merciless hammer of experience says that necessity is the mother of invention. The winter to which we are just saying good-by brought us face to face with one of the gravest problems of human life—that of fuel. We have wasted our forests, we have ruthlessly burned up for nothing unfold millions of feet of wood that would have done for hearth and range, and our thoughtless havoc with our coal deposits has been little short of maniacal. Mr. Chester C. Gilbert's bulletin on "Coal Products" says: "We face the alarming conclusion that only about four per cent of the coal mined in the United States yields its full value to society." The Literary Digest comments as follows:

"That a new fuel must be found for heating our homes, and that we must begin to turn aside from the costly though luxurious anthracite and look more to our vast bituminous resources, which, owing to their wide distribution, cannot be so readily tied up by strikes or railroad congestion, is the belief of several scientific writers who have been studying the fuel crisis. But the natural objection is: 'Bituminous coal is dirty; and its widespread utilization as such would be a long step backward, retarding progress in civic betterment as well as involving a thirty-per-cent waste in commodity bulk.' The answer is that by proper methods a 'flaming coke' or 'artificial anthracite' may be manufactured from soft coal, and all the waste utilized to make valuable by-products. One variety of 'artificial anthracite' will, indeed, soon be on the market. The waste that blackens the skies over the cities using soft coal 'is in reality convertible into gas, tar, ammonia, benzol, and an endless number of other by-products, such as dyes, medicines, and explosives.'"

There is no excuse for the extravagance that is practiced by the American people. The people of this country have been extravagant so long that now it appears hard for them to make sacrifices and to economize as they should.

置

D. N. Barnett has located at Ravine, Miss. There is no congregation in that county, but he will endeavor to establish one.

The Bible Advocate, which was published by the churches of Christ in Great Britain and Ireland, has resumed publication. For several months it did not appear, owing to prevailing war conditions.

From E. P. Watson, Dugger, Ind., March 4: "The work moves on nicely here. Our audiences are increasing and a good interest is manifested. We had two hundred and ninety-six enrolled in the Bible classes last Sunday."

From A. O. Colley, Dallas, Texas: "We have accessions at many of our Sunday services. Last Sunday a soldier boy identified himself with us. He confessed he had been out of duty and wished to be restored to the fellowship of God's people. We are planning a great meeting."

Mrs. T. J. McRae writes from San Francisco, Cal. "Brother Trice preached to a large congregation March 3. We feel greatly encouraged to go on in the Master's work, and are very thankful to those who have helped our building fund, which is slowly increasing. We are still meeting in the hall, 149 Eddy Street."

From J. E. Thornberry, Lawrenceburg, Tenn.: "The work here, both church and school, is very encouraging. More than fifty per cent of the school are studying the Bible, and the last time I preached here eight persons came forward when the invitation was given—five for primary obedience and three reclaimed."

From T. B. Thompson, Murray, Ky.: "Jehovah willing, I will leave Murray for Avon Park, Fla., March 25, for a meeting. I am very glad to note an appreciable growth in interest along school and church lines, as indicated in the papers. I really think much progress is being made in the Lord's work. I am sure such is true in the locality where my work is, and reports seem to suggest as much from other fields."

From B. P. Odeneal, Pulaski, Tenn., March 4: "I am in debt and am seventy-three years old. I am, the Lord willing, going to Trion, Ga., and Arkansas to work at the carpenter's trade to try and do the best I can. I doubt whether I will ever be able to get out of debt without help. It is not my fault altogether that I am in debt. If the brethren and sisters will help me, it will certainly be appreciated and will make an old brother's heart glad."

From J. H. Murrell, Route 1, Lake Butler, Fla., March 7. "Since January 8 I have preached every night but one. I came expecting to stay a few weeks, but the calls keen coming, and I now have meetings arranged to keep me busy till about April 20, if nothing happens to prevent also several calls for summer meetings. Any one wishing to write me may address me at Lake City, Fla., or at my home address, Box 24, Tennessee City, Tenn. I am to begin at McKinley, eight miles from Lake City, next Lord's day."

The American Bible Society has just completed the furnishing of five hundred thousand copies of its Service Testaments bound in khaki to the American soldiers and saliors through the Young Men's Christian Association, being half of its promised gift of one million volumes. It appears as if the total amount will be ready for the army and navy before the time promised in spite of all the unprecedented delays due to the severe winter, fuel and transportation conditions. They are averaging ten thousand copies a day.

We had a fine service at Russell Street Church, this city, on Sunday. One young man made the good confession and three persons took membership with the congregation.

A. B. Lipscomb preached at David Lipscomb College in the evening, while Brother Lambert, one of the students, preached at Russell Street Church. James A. Allen reported one confession at Foster Street. There was one baptism at Twelfth Avenue on Sunday night. R. V. Cawthon is preaching this week at the Sixth Avenue mission, in North Nashville.

From Mrs. W. B. Morgan, Pine Bluff, Ark.: "I take great pleasure in reading the Gospel Advocate each week; but it seems that this week's edition (March 7) is just a little fuller, if possible, of work and love for the Master's cause. The many good lessons on the first page are a personal help to me; and this week the first page is full of new thoughts. No higher type of love can be told of than in the article, 'Christ at the Grave of Lazarus,' by F. W. Smith. May the dear Lord's richest blessings come to the writers of the Gospel Advocate."

From Mrs. Josephine Morris, Belvidere, Tenn.: "There is small need to ever write me, as the years come and go, whether I will send my renewal; for as long as I live and the Gospel Advocate keeps up its present high standard of morality and spirituality, just so long shall I continue to take it. The Advocate is so very helpful to me in more ways than one. It both guides me in my religious life, with its wholesome truths and good advice and illumines the dark passages so often met with in the Scriptures, which otherwise would remain incomprehensible to me. Again, the Advocate guards me against harboring any interest in the cults and teachings of those trying to pervent the gospel that they may give us a new system of religion."

From the soldier boys at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., February 28: "Our meetings are increasing in interest and we are finding more of the boys every week. Last Saturday afternoon, two Agee brothers, Battery F. 115th Field Artillery, were baptized by Brother Dunn. Only three other soldiers were present. It was a very simple but impressive scene, and all enjoyed the few words of advice and exhortation. Two other soldier boys will be baptized soon-next Saturday, perhaps. Brother Dunn is a faithful, untiring worker, and we have learned to love him as a true friend and brother. It will be a sad day for us when we must break camp and go oversea to France. because we will be scattered there and cannot meet as we have been doing here. But we are going with an abiding faith in God, believing that he will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able to bear. Kindly remember us in your prayers."

Louis Dasaro sends the following report of the Italian mission of Bellaire, Ohio, for the month of February: "Money received: From A. M. Burton, Nashville, Tenn., $5; West Nashville Church, Nashville, Tenn., $12.50; Belmont Avenue Church, Nashville, Tenn., $12.50; Lawrence Avenue Church, Nashville, Tenn., $5; Eleventh Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., $26.30; church at Flemington, Pa., $11.20; church at Bolivar, Pa., $3; church at Meffer, Ohio, $5; church at Summerville, Pa., $5; Brother Rowe, $1. Total, $86.50. I thank all for this fellowship. The number of scholars in attendance was: February 3, eleven at morning Bible school, thirty-two at night; February 10, sixteen at morning Bible school, forty at night; February 17, twelve at morning Bible school, forty-nine at night. I could not go to the mission on February 24. We had a new baby girl. On Sunday, February 17, I baptized one of our young ladies. This is the first baptism from mission meeting. My love be with you all in Christ Jesus."

Church Conditions in Craighead County, Ark.

BY W. T. RUFFALOE.

Church affairs in Craighead County are not so promising as they might be, yet we are glad and thankful that all is as well as it is. Teachers of the one body have been preaching in this part since about the time of the Civil War. But most of the pioneer preachers preached, it seems, on first principles and failed to stress the other points of importance. Hence few congregations existed until recently, and really few now, as a consequence of the neg lected subject of Christian duty.

Mangrum is possibly the oldest congregation in the county-at least, the oldest living one. It was started more than forty years ago, when bears, wolves, deer, panthers, and wildcats were plentiful at the very door of the meetinghouse. The present building has been standing at least thirty-five years, on the old Varner estate, which was bought from the Indians a little more than seventy-three years ago. "Uncle France," who was three years old when this transaction was made between his father, Dr. Varner, and the red men, is yet living on the same farm within three hundred yards of the meetinghouse and cemetery. While "Uncle France" does not know the English alphabet, he is the pillar of that congregation, and is in his "corner" every Lord's day. He is always placed as chairman of every committee for improvement of the church property and given the privilege of selecting the other members. While he cannot read, he has sense, and always "'pints" the best men to assist him; and he gets the work done. It is interesting to hear him tell of his adventures with "varmints"such, for instance, as when he shot a mother bear by ramming his "navysix" into her mouth and blowing a hole in her head as she was reaching for him to free her cub; or when one of two big traps which he had set in the leaves for a panther caught him by the big toe, which, however, did not keep him from getting the cat, which was nine feet and one inch long; or when another panther jumped at him from a tree, and he shot it to death before it reached him; or when he and a partner killed three bears from one den tree and let another one get away, The most interesting part, too, is that "Uncle France" always tells the truth. He has been a great man in his community and has not an enemy. The old brother is now feeble and must soon pass hence. But a am about to digress from the subject. I have just finished reading "Larimore and His Boys," also "Biographies and Sermons," both by F. D. Srygley, who relates so much of pioneer days that perhaps I have absorbed some of the inclination. However, this partially pictures the conditions under which social and church affairs began only a few years ago in this part of the commonwealth.

The Mangrum church seems to be rather at very low tide at present. A few years ago there were many promising young people there in the congregation. Their scriptural education was neglected while first principles and sectarian fighting were worn threadbare, and consequently these youngsters have quit their church affiliations, several have married out of the church, in some cases marrying persons who were enemies to the cause of Christ, some of them being avowed infidels. The folly is now seen, but it is not being cared for now as it should be. Brother Joe Netherland and a few other brethren have done some good preaching there, but, in the main, the essentials have been neglected. The Mangrum community is about five miles from Black Oak, the nearest railroad station.

The church at Stottsville was organized shortly after that at Mangrum, but on account of lack of attention to duties the church there never prospered until after a railroad was built and the place became the town of Monette. A man from Jonesboro took up the work there and built a fine interest. He got the old members to work and converted new ones. Finally, unawares, they were carried into digression, with hardly any protest from any one. A little loyal bunch has tried to meet from time to time, but they have made little headway. However, less than a dozen are now meeting in a rented building. The man who led the digressive movement won the confidence of every one, then went to the bad. There is a bill pending now against him for grand larceny. All this has caused the church there, both loyal and digressive, to lose its influence.

The church at Bay, about fifteen miles from Jonesboro toward Memphis, on the Frisco Railroad, seems to be just barely in existence. Some of their members are pretty well to do, financially, but they meet in the worst building for the Lord's worship I ever saw. I presume that holding tight to the "filthy lucre" is the cause of this.

The church at Cash, on the Bonnerville Southern, twenty-one miles from Jonesboro, is probably the most active congregation in the county. There is a great deal of debating with sectarians and wrangling with each other there. Still, much good has been This has been the home of Brother John H. Hamilton from the FREE TO organization of the work there till last fall. Brother Hamilton is a preacher of no mean ability, and as an elder of the flock there he has certainly given them the "bread of life." He has stood firm against sectarianism since he shook off his Baptist garments, also against all innovations. Nor has he ever said: "I must keep quiet, because I'm a merchant and must depend upon the public." No doubt he has lost many dollars in money, but he has an independent living and still stands firm. The man who allows his business to come between him and his moral and religious duty should, as one said to me recently, "go to the bushes and talk to God."

There is a little flock at Bono, eight miles from Jonesboro, on the Frisco I am not informed as to their condition, but I am sure they are meeting regularly. A fairly good congregation is at Egypt, about five miles from Cash. They are entirely away from a railroad. They are preparing to build a new house of worship soon. They are in a fine farming belt. The Egypt congregation prides itself on its good singers.

The Black Oak congregation is meeting in one room of the schoolhouse now, but I believe they have just let the contract for a house of worship. I believe they will do well. The Jonesboro church is doing about as usual. I have reported before that it is a "divided house." They continue to meet together, but are doing little. One thing, however, can be said of them: they are as punctual in their Lord's-day worship as any people I have ever seen. Some traveling brother told me recently that he was in Jonesboro on Sunday and could not find the place of worship. Should any one reading this be in that little city on Lord's day, he should go to the J. L. C. & E. station on North Main Street, thence four or five blocks east to Fisher Street, and he will find himself at the door of the meeting-

A general wave of unconcern seems to be prevalent in this part concerning church work. This is a cotton country, and the exceeding high price of the fleecy staple seems to have given the people more money than they can manage. Therefore the picture shows and automobiles are almost taking attention from everything else. As a teacher in the public schools, I have had an opportunity to see and understand a few things. There is no doubt in my mind that the modern picture show is the worst menace we have, both mentally and morally.

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink Lots of Water and Stop Eat-ing Meat for a While If Your Bladder Troubles You.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region, it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid, which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood, and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you must relieve them -like you relieve your bowels-re-moving all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds, and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your phar-macist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure, and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

Looking Backward.

BY J. R. ARMSTRONG.

I wish that I could say something that would remove the spirit of criticism that prevails among some of our writers. We do not at all times treat each other as brothers or as belonging to the one common faith. One of the great apostles admonishes us to be in love with one another, especially the household of faith.

I consider every loyal member of the church as one of my brethren, although we may have different ideas of church government. We have had too much wrangling in our ranks for the last thirty years. Some of our good and wise writers of late, if they cannot get up a wrangle with a neighbor, will fuss or wrangle with some brother, thereby disturbing the peace in our own family at home. Is this the spirit of Christ? In my judgment, such writings are read with little interest by any, and the reader with a peaceful mind is only filled with disgust.

I would enjoy reading articles from Brother F. W. Smith and others on the biography of some of our leading preachers in Alabama and Tennessee It seems to me, if the Gospel Advocate could secure the photographs and life work of some of our preachers, that it would be very interesting and inspiring to the readers of to-day.

From the best information I have, I think it was in the fifties that Tolbert Fanning held a meeting in Moulton, Ala. In this meeting the strong men and women of the country were converted-such men as Judge Mc-Donald, Judge Ligon, George Alexander, and Major J. W. Srygley. Why are we not having such meetings today? After the Civil War, in this (Lawrence) county came a short work of Brother J. M. Pickens, a very able man. Brother Jesse Wood about this time did a great deal of preaching in this county. Next Brother John W. Taylor helped to start the cause in this county and in Colbert County.

Later our beloved T. B. Larimore established a school at Mars' Hill.

About the year 1872 he came over to Lawrence County to hold a meeting. The whole country came out to these meetings, much interest was manifested, and many were converted to the one faith. I—being only a boy at the time—remember one of the leading points, and that was a plea for Christian union—that all should be one. Should we not have more of this to-day?

Next to come was Brother J. H. Halbrook, one of the first preachers from Brother Larimore's school to hold a meeting at old Prospect, where Brother Larimore held the meeting the summer before. Sister Halbrook was a great helper in this meeting. I shall never forget what she said to me: "Young man, where do you stand—with the goats or with the sheep?" This was a great meeting. Some forty odd souls obeyed the gospel. Brother Halbrook is still living in the hearts of some.

Next to come to old Prospect was the boy preacher. He came across the country on horseback from a meeting

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION he had just closed in Morgan County. His belongings consisted of a satchel, one suit, a linen duster, two or three shirts, collars, and one tie. The meeting was to begin on Sunday morning. Two sermons and dinner on the ground was the custom of that day. A large crowd had gathered to hear the boy preacher. As he went up into the stand, all eyes were fixed upon him. The house was filled to overflowing, the doors and windows were full. He was happy, and the people were happy with the thought of an opportunity to hear such a one. He was master of the situation, and he preached with all the power of his soul for more than an hour, delivering one of the sublimest and strongest exhortations that we had ever listened to. At the close of this sermon everybody was trying to shake hands with him and congratulate the boy preacher for such a spiritual uplift. The interest grew stronger from day to day. His logic was convincing, his oratory was sublime, ever pleading for a oneness. Many obeyed the gospel during that week. This "boy preacher," as he was called, was F. D. Srygley.

The next to come was Dr. A. C. Henry. After holding a meeting at old Prospect, arrangements were made for him to evangelize Morgan, Lawrence, and Franklin counties. No man ever did more for the churches he served for four years than Brother He held many successful Henry. meetings during the time. His home at the time was in Hartsell, He traveled on horseback to Russellville, a distance of about fifty miles. He had Brother E. G. Sewell to hold a meeting at one of his points, Landersville. This, too, was one of the greatest meetings the church ever had. It was a spiritual feast from start to finish. Eighteen were added to the church. The plea was union. Why are we not having such meetings to-day?

Shirey.

Emma Francis Shirey was born on September 29, 1861, and departed this life on January 8, 1918. Sister Shirey was sorely afflicted for five or six years, during which time she was attended by many physicians, apparently without any relief. She obeyed the gospel on August 28, 1884, and lived a faithful member of Whitefield congregation until her death. She leaves a broken-hearted husband and seven children-five girls and two boys-to mourn her departure. Two sisters and a brother are living. May God in his infinite wisdom comfort and bless the dear ones left behind, and may they live the Christian life, then they will be united after death, to part no more. The writer officiated at the funeral and tried to comfort and cheer the weeping family. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." J. A. COOK.

Bonner.

Maude Osmon Jenkins was born on June 16, 1896; was married to John W. Bonner on March 2, 1913; and fell asleep in Jesus on February 22, 1918. At the beginning of young woman-hood, when she was free from care and trouble was practically unknown to her, at the tender age of fourteen years, she was ready to cast all her little cares upon Him who had died for her, and she was buried with him by baptism on September 18, 1910. She leaves behind her a beautiful example of Christian life. All who knew her speak freely of her noble character. She leaves her husband and mother and a host of friends and relatives to remember her; and while they are all exceeding sorrowful, they "weep not as those who have no hope." Funeral services were conducted at the family ground, near Hermitage, burying Tenn., by the writer.

JOHN W. BEASLEY.

Willis.

Brother James Edward Willis was born on January 23, 1851, and died on August 6, 1917. He married Miss Elizabeth Short on January 26, 1871, and to them were born twelve children-eight boys and four girls-all living but one, and all members of the church but one. Brother Willis obeyed the gospel in the year 1885, being baptized by the writer. His wife, who survives him, was baptized two or three months later. He served as deacon in the church three or four years, and was then set apart as elder, which position he filled until his death. He loved the church and his Lord and was always ready to contend for the truth. He was true to what he thought was right. He had a sympathetic heart and was ever ready to respond to the call of those in distress. A year or more before his death his health began to fail, and he went to Beaumont to the hospital, where he died. His body was brought back to Brookeland, his old home, and laid to rest in Brookeland Cemetery in the presence of the largest concourse of people that ever assembled there. The writer tried to speak words of consolation to the sorrowing relatives and friends. E. A. LAKEY.

Fuller.

Ira Fuller was born on March 30. 1895; obeyed the gospel in 1910; and died on January 11, 1918. He was a young man, only twenty-two, of sterling qualities, genial and gentle in disposition, industrious, ambitious, and economical, and strong in the faith. With these splendid qualities he had drawn to him a host of friends, who lament their loss and sympathize with the parents and children whose hearts are the saddest. His hope of things material and his plans were frustrated in the spring of 1917, when he fell prey to the disease which proved fatal. He gave up his work, enlisted in the United States Army, hoping that from the tent sleeping and rigid training he would find relief; but he gave way under its pressure and was sent by loving parents to the West, to no avail. Conscious wholly of his condition, he returned to his home to await with patience and hope his summons home. I loved Ira much, for he was with me in church work at Moulton for two years, and this love was mutual. was my good friend. I went to him during his sickness, and, with his parents, we read and prayed. He talked freely and calmly of death, heaven, and heavenly things, upon which his mind seemed to be set, and expressed frequently and frankly no fear of death. A few days later he made disposition of his savings, gave instructions as to his burial and burial service, bade good-by to weeping loved ones, and fell asleep in the Lord, to rest from his labors, while his works follow after him. (Rev. 14: 13.) J. PETTEY EZELL.

Wilkinson.

After being in an enfeebled condition for several months, Brother J. K. P. Wilkinson, on January 17, 1918, passed peacefully away, at the home of his sister, Mrs. Harrison, at Winchester, Tenn. He was about seventysix years of age. He had no children, and his wife had preceded him to the future home sixteen years. He was born, grew to manhood, and lived many years near Pelham, Tenn. Like myself, he was reared under the influence of the Baptists of the Calvinistic type; but when a young man, under the teaching of that prince of preachers, Jesse L. Sewell, he accepted the simple New Testament teaching and became a member of the church of Christ. He was naturally of a good mind, had very good educational advantages for that day, and by close study became strong in the word of God; and while not posing as a preacher, he became a very effective teacher in the church. I had known him for over forty years, and much of this time was intimately associated with him, being much in his home, and became impressed with the idea that I have known few cleaner, better men. He was strong in the faith of the gospel; with him a "Thus saith the Lord" was the end of all controversy. On January 19 his body was carried to Manchester and, after funeral services in the church by Brother Clyde Gleaves, was laid to rest beside his wife in the cemetery there, to await the resurrection of the just. Farewell, brother: though dead, thou art not forgotten by many loved

Tevis.

J. D. FLOYD.

On November 15, 1917, I was asked to officiate at the services to be held the next day at Crandall church of Christ in memory of Brother Tevis, who had, on November 15, been called to his eternal haven of rest and joy. Just as I was about to write these few words in behalf of one of God's faithful servants I looked at the Gospel Advocate and saw that Sister Eliza Fields had already made mention therein of his death. A little further notice of the character and life of such a noble servant of God cannot be out of place, and will, I trust, be helpful to others of us in striving the harder to live right and be ready, as Brother Tevis was, to go when the summons comes. Until I was called to this service I knew nothing of Brother Tevis; but the voice of the people of Crandall and that of the church there were as the voice of one man in the praise of the life of this brother. His influence for good, therefore, will live, though he has gone from us. Brother Tevis was born on August 21, 1841, in what is now Trousdale Coun-Tenn. When only a boy he moved with his parents to Arkansas, where he volunteered his service in the Southern Confederacy, serving three and one-half years. After this war he went back to Tennessee and enlisted in the army of the Lord, Brother J. A. Harding being the recruiting officer. For more than fifty years he fought faithfully the many, many battles against the enemy of the Lord and of our salvation. He rose to distinction, locally, as a leader among the brethren. He was loved, respected, and honored by all who knew him. On May 21, 1866, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Scoggins. To this union four children were born— two boys and two girls—after which his wife died. Still later he was mar-ried to Miss Martha Scoggins, sister to his first wife. To this union there were eight children born-four boys and four girls. He was always found at his place of duty as the Lord's

The Lazy Muscles That Cause Constipation

BY R. H. SINCLAIR

It is now agreed by all of the great authorities that constipation is not a disorder of the stomach or even of the small intestine, but of the large intestine or colon.

Under normal conditions this large colon, which is about five feet long and shaped like a horseshoe, extracts the liquids from the waste matter intrusted to its care and promptly passes the residue on.

But, unfortunately, due to our sedentary lives, the colon has gradually become so lazy from lack of exercise that it is unable to perform its functions

If we were able to live outdoors and to exercise vigorously every day, our colons would handle their work properly, for exercise is the greatest and most satisfactory colon stimulant known.

To most of us sufficient daily exercise, however, is not possible. We have neither the time nor the inclination; instead, we dose ourselves with laxative drugs, mineral waters and other nostrums, with the result that, while we get temporary relief, we not only aggravate the condition, but find that repetitions of the same dose later fail to produce results.

But relief, even when obtained, is not sufficient. To maintain health and efficiency, it is absolutely of paramount importance to create and maintain day in and day out freedom from intestinal poisons, and this is impossible with laxatives.

There is a new way, however, to keep the colon sweet and clean—a way which has the same effect as vigorous exercise, yet without the inconvenience or time-consuming features of exercise, and the results are even better because the treatment is localized.

The principle upon which this new method is founded is the same as that used in massage. We all know that massage has the same effect as exercise; it stimulates the nerves and strengthens the muscles. Colon massage as practiced by osteopaths has proved wonderfully effective.

This new method of massaging the colon involves the use of a device called the "Kolon Motor"-a mechanical masseur, the face of which is shaped to fit over the colon when placed against the abdomen. You merely put the Kolon Motor on a door or wall, lean up against it, and turn the handle for a few moments. face rotates with a scientific waving motion which immediately stimulates the colon and causes proper functioning. A couple of minutes in the morning each day is all that is required; and unless your experience is different from the hundreds of other users, you will feel like a new person after the very first application.

Before the Kolon Motor was offered to the public, a number of well-known physicians were acquainted with its merits and used it in their practice. Without exception the results were most gratifying; in fact, every physician who has tested the Kolon Motor indorses it most highly.

Martin's Method, Incorporated, Department 5911, 105 East Thirtieth Street, New York, has prepared a booklet called "Colon Cleanliness," which they will be pleased to send gratis to all readers of this magazine. In this booklet the Kolon Motor is clearly illustrated and its application shown. It also contains a scientific discussion of auto-intoxication, and explains why and how the Kolon Motor produces such assured results. Letters from well-known physicians relating their experience with the Kolon Motor also form a part of the book.

There may be some who scoff at the idea of colon hygiene and its direct relation to health and efficiency, but the wiser ones will write for this free book and learn what this wonderful device is accomplishing for so many others.

servant, and this made a deep and lasting impression upon those who knew him. On September 19, 1832, with his family, he left his old home in Tennessee for Texas, where his home had been since that time till his death. His second and last wife died about eight years ago. May the Lord bless all his children and grandchildren to live and be faithful unto death as did he.

Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness, and tan, and is the ideal skin softener, whitener, and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of or chard white at any drug store and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms, and hands.

The Cause of Gray Hair.

Hair grows gray by reason of the same cause which produces dwarfed yellow stalks of corn instead of strong, dark-green, growthy stalks-lack of nutrition. Hair, like the crops of the field, must be fed, either naturally from the scalp as the stalk of corn is fed from the soil, or artificial hair food may be applied as fertilizer is applied to the soil to enrich it. Unless your hair is supplied with its natural oilthe food on which it subsists-you may expect it to cease its flourishing and lose its natural luster, color, and beauty. The hair must have food on which to live. Do not neglect it or it will lose its luster, become stiff and coarse and eventually gray. Begins now and prevent the appearance of age by using a natural hair oil, "La Creole." It will keep the hair soft, fluffy, and beautiful. Ask your dealer, and if he cannot supply you send one dollar to the Van Vleet-Mansfield Drug Company, Memphis, Tenn., for a trial bottle.

Take Pains.

Genius has been defined as an infinite capacity for taking pains; and talent, which is a sort of second cousin of genius, has the same characteristics. One who will take pains enough will meet with a measure of success; and no one who belittles the need of patient, plodding work is likely to succeed, no matter what his endowments.—Selected.

Required for Health and Beauty.

It is surprising that it is necessary to repeat again and again that the health and beauty of the skin require that the blood shall be pure. If the arteries of the skin receive impure blood, pimples and blotches appear, and the individual suffers from humors. Powders and other external applications are sometimes used for these affections, but will never have the desired effect while the causes of impure blood remain.

The indications are very clear that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most successful medicine for purifying the blood, removing pimples and blotches, and giving health and beauty to the skin. It gives tone to all the organs and builds up the whole system. In sist on having Hood's Sarsaparilla when you ask for it. Do not take anything else.—Advt.

How to Keep Your Friends.

It is almost impossible to be genuinely friendly with a person who insists on being too close to you, on knowing all your thoughts, feelings, and affairs, and on claiming your time and attention on the excuse of affection alone.

The bonds of true friendship must be easy and its demands must be for something real and vital. The woman who calls on you perpetually because she has taken a sudden fancy to you is a blind and selfish egotist in a mild way. Her calls may interrupt your work and bore you intensely; but if you are a polite and courteous person, you bear with her until she directs her attention elsewhere. She will probably tell the new friend that you are "very unresponsive." Some women clutch at every new acquaintance and then complain that they have so few friends. The reason is that friendship is not built on trivialities and whims, but by giving such valuable things a true consideration, real interest, and manifesting a decent reserve as to the other person's confidence and nonconfidings.-Woman's Home Companion.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a small bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life, has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair; besides, it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life; and if not overcome, it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store, and just try it.

Trenton, February 25 .- My week's work at Largo came to an end yesterday. These brethren have a good house which has been enlarged to meet their needs, and they have it well supplied with song books arranged in a good way, for they are put on shelves at each side of the vestibule, and when persons come in. if they want a book, they can get it as they go to their seats. We had good audiences from the start, and an extra supply of chairs was brought in from the town hall. Brethren from Tampa, thirty-six miles away, were present some, and on Lord's-day afternoon we had a meeting in which a number of speakers took part. Largo is the home of that good man, W. A. Tupelo, March 7.—The interest in the cause of Christ at Tupelo is good. We have some as zealous members here as I ever saw. We have met for worship every Lord's day during the winter, except one. We have to meet in the City Hall, and we got orders late in the week from the mayor not to have church services on Sunday. The order was for all the churches in town, in order to save fuel. It was too late to let all know. Even then a faithful few met at a private house and had the worship. Brother G. A. Dunn was with us ten days last Au-There were about seventeen additions. Brother Dunn is to be with us again this summer. We have had monthly preaching most of the time. We now have no one employed for preaching at stated times, yet we have preaching occasionally. I have been here as a citizen and member of the congregation since last August. I have appointments at various places three Lord's days in the month; but I am here enough to know the church en-joys the Bible lessons, the worship, and a sermon, even though it is not as good as would be expected from one of our strongest preachers. It is said there are some good, loyal con-gregations in the country around Tupelo. I have not had the opportunity of meeting them. My address is 612 Allen Street, Tapelo, Miss.—H. C.

The System of Redemption.

BY V. I. STIRMAN.

The book called "the Bible" reveals a system of human redemption covering all time from the fall of man to the day when the angel of God shall stand with one foot on the land and one upon the sea, proclaiming that "time shall be no more."

This system comprises two principles only-faith in God and obedience to his will.

This system reveals to man all the work of the Holy Ghost among men in order to man's entering the family of God here on earth, and how he must live here, that at death he may hear from the lips of the crucified One: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Two things, and only two, the Spirit of God does for man in this lifeteaches him God's will, and confirms the teaching by miraculous power. The power of God to convert and save man is in the gospel of Christ, not in the direct operation of the Holy Ghost. (See Rom. 1: 16.)

The Hardeman-Skinner Debate.

BY T. B. THOMPSON.

At the request of Brother W. E. Morgan, who moderated for Brother Hardeman in the above-named discussion, I am writing a report thereof. Brother N. B. Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn., stood in the defense "of those things which are most surely believed among us;" while Mr. J. E. Skinner, of Jackson, Tenn., labored faithfully in behalf of the Baptist religion. The propositions more generally discussed-establishment of the church, design of baptism, operation of the Spirit, and apostasy-engaged the attention of the disputants and their splendid audiences for four days -February 19-22. Both the speakers and moderators did their work well, As before stated, Brother W. E. Morgan, of Cottage Grove, Tenn., moderated for Brother Hardeman; while one Judge Mayhu, of Dresden, Tenn., acted in that capacity for Mr. Skinner. The conduct of the speakers and moderators was such as to prohibit any outbreak upon the part of the audiences at any time; hence a discussion that compelled the admiration and commendation of thinking, refined people. No discussions arose among the listeners either during sessions or intermissions, and a casual observer could not distinguish between Baptists and Christians. 1 feel sure the community feels that it has been honored by the opportunity to entertain such a high-toned exchange of religious ideas. Neither the speakers nor the audiences were objects of special reproof at any time. Good effects must follow such discussions in any community. The people are demanding a higher type of debates than they, in many instances, have had heretofore; and they have only to se lect the proper men to insure a high type of discussion.

The cause of truth could not have been more ably represented than by Brother Hardeman. He refuses to have anything to do with a low order of disputation, and refuses to meet the demagogues often indorsed by the denominations. While holding the debate on a high plane, he goes after his opponent with a precision and directness that is telling in its effect and savors of no tint of compromise. He not only exposes the fallacies and assumptions of his opponent's arguments, but, in addition thereto. teaches the truth upon them. Hardeman couples oratory and logic as few men can. He compels the attention, admiration, and esteem even of those who radically differ from him. An attempt of an opponent to drag the discussion down to a low plane is met with such a rebuke that a second attempt is severely forbidden. Brother Hardeman leaves no regrets or disappointments in the hearts of those who love the truth and makes the best of friends among his religious enemies.

Many expressions were forthcoming from visitors respecting the excellent entertainment shown by the Christian homes of the community.

About fifteen preachers of the gospel were in attendance, and most of these were bright young men-students ei ther at Henderson, Tenn., or Wingo. Ky. They presented a splendid prophecy as to the future of the work of spreading the gospel. As best I could ascertain, there were only five Baptist preachers present. Lack of space forbids the mentioning, by name, these preachers, although their names were handed in.

Let us continue to raise higher the standard of religious debating. A discussion is held, not for present time only, but for future time also-even eternity. Present victory over an opponent may mean future defeat. The religious spirit of communities partakes very largely of the tone of the debates they entertain. This debate was held at Bible Union meetinghouse, near Latham, Tenn.

Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about a much harm as good for their systems , bel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

(ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. I acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects, It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily bended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1914.

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little Inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—lis action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. "Why I Cannot Preach My Old Sermons Now."

In the current issue of the Ladies' Home Journal there is an article written by the "Rev. Joseph H. Odell, D.D.," bearing the caption, "Why I Cannot Preach My Old Sermons Now." The writer proceeds in a very interesting style to explain how he had prepared through a long period of time a series of about three hundred sermons, and how each one represented hours of careful study, serious thought, and painstaking research. And now they must all be thrown into the discard because of war-time conditions! Poor preacher! Only those who have worked hard to get up a sermon worth while know what a pitiable fix he is in. To give up one such sermon would be a distinct loss. To part with a lifetime collection would be nothing short of a calamity. One paragraph from the article will suffice to give an idea of why this eminent preacher cannot preach his old sermons now. Of his audience he says: "They do not care a snap of their fingers whether Abraham was justified by faith or works; if predestination can be reconciled with free will; how many Isaiahs wrote the book which bears that name; when and how the world will end. All they want is a spiritual interpretation of the world-rending and home-smashing events that are taking place. Everything else can wait." The purport of his article is to show why it is no longer timely to preach the "plain old gospel," nor to discuss things that relate to the history of the Bible.

Why I Can Preach My Old Sermons Now.

I cannot agree with the distinguished writer's position so long as I am confronted with Paul's statement in Rom. 1: 16: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." With this sublime statement before me, I can well afford to preach my old sermons now. To pursue a different course would put me in the attitude of being ashamed of Jesus and turning away from the power of God. By no process of reasoning can I figure that the gospel is God's power unto salvation in time of peace, but something else is needed in times of war. Therefore the old, old story must be told. Lessons concerning the atonement, obedience, faith, repentance, confession, baptism, the Christian graces, truth and righteousness, must not by any means be neglected in favor of so-called "war sermons." While, indeed, there is a great temptation for every preacher in these times to discourse at length and in a worldly-wise way on the "world-rending and home-smashing events that are taking place," employing both "excellency of speech" and tact so as not to offend the government, he must not forget that the main responsibility is to be able to say with Paul: "I determined not to know anything among you. save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." We owe this duty to every audience before whom we stand, "that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." =

A New Avenue of Illustration.

But while war conditions do not warrant a departure from the beaten paths of apostolic teaching, we should not close our eyes to the fact that such conditions do open up an avenue of illustration for impressing gospel truths more powerful than we have ever had before. Surely we do no injury to Jesus Christ, and him crucified, when we take advantage of this unparalleled opportunity to present the old truths of the Bible in a new dress. If there ever was a time to catch the ears of the people, to touch their hearts and call attention to their need of the gospel, by reminding them of the great tragedy of world-wide human suffering, that time is now.

Take, for example, Paul's statement in Heb. 12: 4: "Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin." It should not be difficult at all in the light of to-day's events to illustrate what Paul means. The text assumes the fact of sin and regards it as a malignant and deadly foe against which a warfare needs to be waged at the cost of blood. Surely, every American can appreciate now what it means to resist a thing to the extent of a blood sacrifice. The thought of such resistance which has been decreed by "the powers that be" has become a burden of anxiety to innumerable fathers and mothers whose sons are involved in the conflict. In his delineation of the heroic achievements of certain Old Testament characters, Paul writes of those who "waxed mighty in war" and turned to flight armies of allens." With all the strength and resources of the nation concentrated upon the one purpose of turning an allen enemy to flight, we can appreciate all the more Paul's graphic description of the Old Testament heroes.

Lessons from the Exigencles of the Hour.

Consider, too, another stirring exhortation found in 1 Pet. 5: 6.9: "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; easting all your anxiety upon him, because he careth for you. Be sober, be watchful: your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour: whom withstand steadfast in your faith, knowing that the same sufferings are accomplished in your brethren who are in the world." In the face of all that is happening to the world, was there ever a time more propitious for God's children to humble themselves in his presence, that they may be exalted in due time? Many of us have been compelled by the exigencies of the hour to humble ourselves. And do we not feel thankful now that we can cast all our anxiety upon Him, when there is no one else who can bear the burden for us? Passing events should intensify the thought that Christians have now, and have always had, an adversary in Satan, who acts like a roaring lion, walking about and seeking whom he may devour; and there is the supreme need of sobriety, watchfuness, and steadfastness in faith. We do not need to be reminded now of the devastating power of an aggressive and persistent foe. The civil government under which we live has such a foe. From this distance we cannot look out over the blasted towns of Belgium or the ruined fields of sunny France, but the story has been told and retold in such a graphic manner that the perspective is constantly before us. The cries of the women and children are in our ears. Nor do we suffer alone. Thousands of our brethren are face to face with the same temptations, dangers, and sorrows. Certainly "the same sufferings are accomplished in your brethren who are in the world." Our problems are the same as those of our brethren in Britain, in France, in Russia, or in Germany. for that matter. ==

Remission of the Soldier's Sins.

At the present writing it is estimated that twelve millions of men have been lost in the cruel war. Six million have been slain in battle and six million have been taken as prisoners. And yet it appears that millions more will be called to enter a resistance at the cost of blood. Paul gives us this figure, not to encourage Christians to engage in carnal warfare, but to remind them of what a tremendous struggle must be made in their own bodies in "striving against sin."

We are told that parents across the sea are comforting themselves with the hope that this wholesale shedding of blood will be accounted for the remission of sins. John Oxenham, one of Britain's writers, expresses this hope in two lines:

"For blood that is shed in the cause of right Has power of old to wash sins white."

This is a pretty sentiment which some preachers preach and which some people believe, but there is no intimation of such a plan in God's inspired word. It is certainly true that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." But the blood in question is the blood of Christ. If a soldier had a hundred lives and laid them all down "for the cause of right," there is no assurance that the sacrifice would be counted for the remission of sins. Jesus Christ alone could make, and did make, the one supreme and only necessary sacrifice. We have reason to praise

God that we "were redeemed, not with corruptible things with silver or gold," but "with precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of Christ."

The only way in which men and women may hope to have their souls washed white is by the blood of Christ. We do that by coming into his blood-washed and blood-sealed institution, the church of the Firstborn. The conditions of entrance into this blood-sealed institution are the same now as when the apostles preached. Therefore the one supreme message that God's servants must bear to this suffering world is the plain, simple, old-fashioned gospel that Paul was never ashamed to deliver. Borrowing the words of the man who lost his sermons, "everything clse can wait,"

Catechism on Societyism.

BY FRED SOMMER.

While the minds of the brethren are on Brother Dunn's work and the question is up as to whether or not Christians who are striving to live after the New Testament model may organize or work with or in any religious society other than a local church of Christ, I crave a little space in these columns that I may ask a few questions and make a few remarks relative to the subject in hand.

Question 1. What is a society?

Answer. Clearly, it is any association of individuals for cooperation in the accomplishing of any definite purpose or work. No two or more persons can work together to any definite end without some understanding, and that understanding, whether it be written or unwritten, long or short, between two persons or among two hundred or two thousand—that understanding, we say, is organization, and results in a society.

Question 2. What is the objection to Christians' organizing or working in or with such religious societies as the A. C. M. S. and Y. M. C. A.?

Answer. The objection usually made is that these societies are organized for the accomplishment of religious work for the doing of which God has amply equipped the church or local congregation, and that such societies for the doing of these good works are therefore superfluous, besides being an impeachment of the wisdom of God, who has implied that in the church we are thoroughly furnished unto every good work.

Question 3. But do we never employ for the accomplishment of religious work any other association of Christians than that which is had in the local church?

Answer. O, yes! For instance, it has happened in the past that whenever the feeding and caring for orphans was to be attended to, that two or more Christians have come together, agreed upon some plan, had some understanding (organized, if you please), and associated themselves into a society other than that of the local church, that this good work might be done. Again, when the gospel was to be preached by pen, two or more Christians have agreed together to edit, publish, and operate a religious paper, and have formed themselves into an association other than the local church for so doing. When a missionary goes to a foreign field, his cause is often championed and funds collected and forwarded by a religious newspaper corporation, which is a society other than the local church. When the Bible is to be taught in connection with secular learning, Christians sometimes form an association other than the local church for the founding of a Bible college where students can get "a lesson in the Bible every day." When Armenian, Syrian, and Greek refugees are to be cared for, fed, and rehabilitated, a committee, or society, other than the local church, is formed for relief, and Christians send money through this relief society. These are all examples of Christians' associating themselves together for religious work in relations other than those sustained in a local church. The individuals associated may even belong to different and distant churches, and may not be associated at all in any local church capacity, but are associated in a society capacity, and through that society they are specializing and cooperating in a work that presumably only belongs to the local church organization.

Question 4. Is it consistent for us to condemn others for using the A. C. M. S. and Y. M. C. A. on the ground that these societies are formed to do a work that belongs to the church, when we ourselves form and use other associations of Christians than the association in a local church to do work that God gave the church to do?

Answer. No, it is not consistent. If one association other than the local church, because it is an association other than the local church, is wrong, every other association is wrong also. The same process of reasoning that defends one defends the other, that condemns one condemns the other.

Question 5. Is there any respect in which the Y. M. C. A. and A. C. M. S. differ from the associations of Christians we have just mentioned?

Answer. Yes, a very important respect. The A. C. M. S. and Y. M. C. A. are general societies, formed by an aggregate of local societies, and thus tend to centralization of power, and often to ecclesiasticism.

Question 6. Is there any difference between the Y. M. C. A. and A. C. M. S. in respect to their tendency toward ecclesiasticism?

Answer. Yes, a great difference. The Y. M. C. A. is not connected with any sect, but is interdenominational, if not undenominational; and though it is constituted by an aggregate of represented societies, yet it does not tend toward the building up of any ecclesiasticism. The A. C. M. S. is connected with a sect, which, while disclaiming ecclesiasticism, or any corporate aggregation of congregations, is dominated more or less by the society, and is by the society being gradually formed into an ecclesiasticism, with the society itself as its ecclesiastical bond.

Question 7. Would the Y. M. C. A., then, be a more tolerable form of societyism than the A. C. M. S.?

Answer. Yes, taking it on prudential grounds alone, because it does not appear that the Y. M. C. A. attempts to dominate either the faith or discipline of any individual or congregation, but it has developed that the A. C. M. S. conspires to such domination.

Question 8. Does any other association of Christians besides the A. C. M. S. ever do things that tend toward and seem to require an ecclesiasticism?

Answer. Yes, an association of Christian editors, publishers, and owners of a religious paper sometimes seeks so to dictate the faith, the discipline, the preachers for local congregations, that only an aggregate of such congregations, with this religious publishing house as the ecclesiastical bond or head, would ever insure everywhere that unity of opinion that it desires.

Question 9. Does the fact that I differ from a man as to whether I will support an association of brethren other than the local congregation for doing missionary work, or as to whether I will support an association of brethren other than the local church for teaching the Bible in school or running a religious newspaper, or as to whether I will support no such institution at all, but simply the local church—does the fact that I differ from a man or church in regard to these societies furnish a sufficient reason for my withdrawing fellowship from such man or church in those acts of worship concerning which there is no difference between us as to methods?

Answer. No, it does not. A man may differ from me and be right, though I don't know it; or he may be wrong in that thing, but a very loyal and true Christian in other respects. Two men may differ as to the societies they shall use, or as to whether they shall use any at all, and yet worship the Lord together. A man may be very ignorant of fine distinctions made about societies and other things, and yet be a very loyal subject of Jesus Christ.

Question 10. Do the Scriptures condemu, in so many words, the use of societies, other than the local churches, to do good works?

Answer. No, they do not. The two passages mainly used are Eph. 3: 21 and 1 Tim. 3: 15; but these condemn societyism only by implication, if at all.

Question 11. Is there any other interpretation of these passages than the one given by those who oppose all societyism?

Answer. O, yes! Paul's point in Eph. 3: 21 seems to be entirely overlooked and disregarded by both the advocates and opposers of societyism. Paul's idea is not that the local church organization is the only avenue through which God can be honored when we do his work. Individuals privately do many good works without the local congregation or organization, and we think of God being honored thereby. Two or more members, either of one church or of different churches, often put their money, their labor, and their forces together in the doing of a work, which, nevertheless, honors God, though it does not directly touch the local church. The family and the church are ministers of God for good, sanctified of God by his use of them for the accomplishment of some of his highest purposes, and Christians often use them to work out things for God to-day, with never a thought that what Paul said about glorifying God "in the church" excluded the efforts of Christians in good works through the organized ministries of the family and the State. Whenever a local church appoints two or more men to do a work for that church, those two or more men cannot proceed without some understanding or organization, yet such organization does not dishonor God nor displace his church. So evident has this always been that churches have been doing this right along, and even individuals have been organizing ministries among themselves, such as those for circulating religious literature, building Bible colleges, caring for orphans, etc., without any compunctions of conscience whatever, and without ever a thought that by including these associations of brethren they excluded the church. Back of all their work was their church membership, from which came all their inspiration for all their individual and organized ministries. And we have been doing these things, too, without seeing, what seems to me to be an evident fact, that we have often condemned in others things that we have all the time been doing ourselves. What is true of Eph. 3; 21 is true of 1 Tim. 3; 15. The church's use of organized ministries does not make the church itself any less the "pillar and ground of the truth."

Question 12. What was Paul thinking of in Eph. 3: 21 when he said, "Unto him be glory in the church?"

Answer. He was thinking of the church as a fact of demonstrated brotherhood, and of the display of the manifold wisdom of God in his plan to bring together into one institution peoples out of every tribe, nation, kindred, and tongue. It was this unity of peoples found in the church that was to bring glory to God; and in the next chapter Paul exhorts the brethren to be careful and keep this unity, notwithstanding other differences. When society advocates set at naught their brethren because of difference about societies, they disregard this unity; and when brethren who oppose societies divide churches that they may give glory to God "in the church" alone, they attempt to honor him by the division of the church and not by its unity, as Paul exhorted and prayed.

Question 13. Does the congregation to which I belong and for which * preach have any missionary societies or contribute to the A. C. M. S.?

Answer. No. Our answer to the boards and agents of such societies is that, when our budget becomes so great and our official board so weak that our local organization is not able to administer its own resources, we shall then probably call on some of the big societies to help spend our money for us.

Question 14. What are my chief objections to the A. C. M. S.?

Answer. The A. C. M. S. has introduced the delegate convention, which is a long step toward an ecclesiasticism with "more authority," and with the society as the bond of ecclesiastical unity. The auxiliary societies of the A. C. M. S. breed faction and disorganization in the local churches by pushing their claims where no provision is made for them in the budget of the church, thus dividing the resources and weakening the hands of the local church in order that they may strengthen themselves.

Question 15. Need the differences over societies hinder the coming together of the two wings of disciples into one church?

Answer. Not in the least, if the brethren will love one another and agree not to set at naught or judge one another in regard to their differences, each practicing to himself the faith which he has in regard to societies and the church, while all are growing up together to a better understanding in the Lord.

What Shall We Do?

I am glad to say that the above heading will no longer be appropriate for the "doings" at Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas, as we are now "doing."

I have let the contract for a tabernacle forty-eight by one hundred feet, with two library rooms in front and two "preacher" rooms in the rear, and we hope to have it ready for the opening service at 3 P.M. the fifth Lord's day in this month, and I hereby request the brethren and sisters who contemplate a trip to Camp Bowie soon to arrange to be with us on that date.

I now have the money in the bank to pay for the tabernacle, and have paid one hundred dollars on the lot, and have agreed to pay one hundred per month until the balance of eight hundred has been paid, when I shall have deed made to Harvey M. Moore, Maurice D. Gano, Horace W. Busby, B. D. Dye, and T. A. Cambron, for the use and benefit of the church of Christ for use among the soldiers.

The rental on a lot at the best rate I could find was seventy-five dollars per month, and we could not then get the location desired; and by purchasing I could get one of the best lots in all Camp Bowie, and the money invested would continue to be used for work among the soldiers. So I felt that it would be a waste of the Lord's money to rent. I am now trying to raise enough money to pay off the lot by the fifth Lord's day, and I ask those who read this to place the matter before the members of the church at once, or, better still, start a subscription list and ask others to join you, and see all you can and urge them to assist you, and in that way the money can be raised and the tabernacle be opened free from debt on the fifth Lord's day in this month.

The expense of maintenance will necessarily be heavy; and if more money is sent in than is necessary to pay for the lot, it will be used in the work of maintenance. It is my hope to have a good song leader with me, if possible; for it is my desire to do a great work among these boys.

I have obtained permission from the government authorities to erect the tabernacle and to do the work of a camp minister, and render any assistance possible.

I am very thankful to all who have in any way helped me make this work a success, and shall greatly appreciate any further help, and would be glad to hear from churches and individuals who will bear a part of this burden once each month.

I am now at Fort Worth devoting all my time to this work, and all mail should be addressed to me here, Box 793, and all money may be sent to Continental Bank and Trust Company, Fort Worth, Texas, for Camp Bowie Fund, and the bank will send you a deposit slip. Brother Wilkerson, formerly of Tennessee, is president of this bank, and has agreed to care for the funds, and we hope to have sufficient on hands at all times to meet the needs of the work.

I will be glad to receive any good books or magazines for the use of our library, and will also be glad to have the names of any of the boys in camp, that I may hunt them up and get them interested in the work. Be sure to send correct addresses, as a name without proper address is worthless to me, as I could not locate the party. I hope to have my libraries well supplied with good, wholesome literature; so send it along at once.

When you come to Camp Bowie, tell the street-car conductor to put you off at Hill Crest, and you will then be within a few feet of the tabernacle.

I shall need your prayers and sympathy, for I shall live in the camp and devote my time both day and night to this great work. Let us possess the land.

The Present War and the Prophecies. No. 2.

BY LEE JACKSON.

When we come to examine prophecies in the New Testament, we find them in a different form and character to those belonging to the Old Testament. Excepting the book of Revelation, New Testament predictions are in a clearer form of statement than most of those of the Old Testament, and, as a rule, they are concerning conditions rather than countries or events. One of the notable exceptions to this general rule is our Savior's foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, which we will now notice, first calling attention to Daniel's prophecy relative to the same event.

After having foretold the coming of the Messiah at the end of the seventy prophetic weeks, meaning a period of four hundred and ninety years, Daniel (9: 26) says: "And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off. but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined." In his own foretelling of the destruction of the temple and of the downfall of Jerusalem our Savior refers to this prophecy of Daniel, applying it to the invasion of the city by Roman armies, comparing them to the eagles that are gathered together for devouring the carcass. (Matt. 24: 1-36.) When Jesus was leaving the temple and going on his way, his disciples called his attention to its buildings. Jesus said to them: "See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.'

When upon the mount of Olives, just eastward from the temple, where they had full view of its splendor, the disciples privately asked Jesus two questions: "Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" The first question is with reference to the destruction of the temple, and the second regards the sign of his coming and the end of the world. As a prelude to his answers to these ques tions. Jesus first warns his disciples against deceivers who should come in his name, telling them that such false leaders would come and that many would be led astray. Then he says: "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for these things must needs come to pass; but the end is not yet." He then tells them of the rising of nation against nation, that kingdom will rise against kingdom, that famines and earthquakes are to be in divers places, that his disciples are to be hated of all nations for his name's sake, and that because of abounding iniquity the love of many is to wax cold. Then he says: "But he that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations; and then shall the end come." This gives a clear answer to the second question. Of the two questions asked by the disciples, the one concerning the coming of Jesus and the end of the world is given the place of first consideration, probably beause of its paramount importance, and I have underscored the most direct part of the answer because it marks a distinct turning point in this deeply interesting discourse. It is not necessary to have any quibblings about any misunderstandings existing in the minds of the disciples, for there were many things indicated in the teachings of Jesus which they did not understand until after his resurrection, when they were endued with power from on high. The time came in their personal ministry as witnesses for Jesus that they were prepared to understand the essential things for men to know relative to the world-saving mission of Jesus as the Christ, but the time never did come when the Holy Spirit guided them into a knowledge of any signs indicating the time of Christ's coming to earth the second time, in the fullness of his majesty and glory, to judge the world; for of that day and hour knoweth no man, not even the angels of heaven; but Christians are admonished and warned to be always ready for his coming.

Turning his attention to the question as to when Jerusalem should fall and the temple be destroyed, Jesus says: "When therefore ye see the abomination of desolation. which was spoken of through Daniel the prophet, standing in the holy place (let him that readeth understand), then let them that are in Judea flee unto the mountains: let him that is on the housetop not go down to take out the things that are in his house: and let him that is in the field not return back to take his cloak. But woe unto them that are with child and to them that give suck in those days! And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on a Sabbath: for then shall be great tribulation, such as hath not been from the beginning of the world until now, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days had been shortened, no flesh would have been saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." All of this part of this remarkable prophecy has reference to the siege and destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in the year 70, or about forty years after our Savior's crucifixion. Nothing contained in this has reference to any especial signs which are to indicate the coming of Christ and the end of the world. To expect the appearance of such signs is contrary to the teaching of Jesus in this same discourse. When Jesus says, "Wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together" (verse 28), the immediate reference is to the invasion of Jerusalem by the Romans. Preceding this (in verse 27) he makes a transition in thought to his own coming at the end of the world, which is to be as sudden as the shining of lightning from east to west, but, like the coming of the lightning flash, there is no sign given that is to indicate his coming. The parable of the fig tree is applicable to the signs indicating the approach of Jerusalem's destruction, and not to any signs that are to precede his coming in such a manner that we can know that it is near. With reference to Jerusalem's destruction he says: "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away, till all these things be accomplished." By a quick transition (at verse 36) Jesus again turns the thoughts of his disciples to the suddenness of his coming and continues this part of his discourse to the end of this chapter, admonishing us with the words: "Therefore be ye also ready; for in an hour that ye think not the Son of man cometh."

Faith That Wins.

BY C. E. HOLT.

It is an element of our human nature to wish to succeed in everything in which we engage. The farmer wants to make his business a success. The merchant, the doctor, the lawyer, the teacher, and even the preacher, likes to succeed.

The human element essential to success in any business is one of which we should not be ignorant and to which we should give strict attention in all the affairs of life, even in its very details. Conservation of energy, strength, money, and of everything that enters into, and which is an essential part of, our business must be studied and reduced to a practical working system. Economy in the use of means and time must also be observed. All this is in perfect accord with the teaching of the New Testament writers.

The man who wrote, "A man of words and not of deeds is like a garden full of weeds," was a man of practical sense. He would agree perfectly with the apostle James, who, more than eighteen hundred years ago, wrote down the same idea, only in a different form. Of course there are different ways of telling the same story and of relating the same facts. This is the way James (2: 14-17) states it: "What doth it profit, my brethren, if a man say he hath faith, but have not works? Can that faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and in lack of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Go ye in peace, be ye warmed and filled; and yet ye give them not the things needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it have not works, is dead in itself." The apostle wrote this to persons who had been baptized; hence the works here mentioned are the good works mentioned by Paul in Eph. 2: 10. Good works were ordained for all baptized people to follow. Such good works may, in a sense, be performed by unbaptized people, but not a single sentence was ever written by an apostle to unbaptized people. The man who had faith without works was a baptized man; the man who had faith and works was a baptized man. Both characters had been baptized, but one class of disciples were making, or were liable to make, a grave mistake—that of sitting down, as it were, without doing the good works which were, and are, essential to the building up of a Christian character. Baptism is nowhere in the New Testament classed among "works." It is a part of the faith-that is, when faith is used in its broadest and most inclusive sense. It is in this sense the apostle James uses the word in his great lesson on faith and works.

Christianity is both theoretical and practical. It is well to know the theory of the Christian religion; but a full and correct knowledge of its theory without a proper application thereof is like having faith without works, or like a body without a spirit. It is the amount of the Christian religion that is put into practice that counts. Sound teaching is important, but sound practice is what, in the last analysis of the case, counts with both God and man. One of the chief defects of Pharisaism was words without deeds. Concerning them, in this respect, Jesus said: "For they say, and do not." This same trouble is often found among those who would stoutly resent the charge of pharisaism.

A lack of practical Christianity is killing more churches than all the innovations of ancient and modern times. To do nothing is as hurtful as doing too much. It is, of course, impossible to do too much of what we should do—that is, the things which go to make up practical Christianity—feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, administering to the sick, and doing good generally. Uneconomical or questionable methods may be used in doing Christian work; but we should not, on this account, cease to do the work. We should correct our methods when we find them unbusinesslike, uneconomical, and especially if we find them unscriptural. But let us do the good works. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto me," "Inasmuch as ye have not done it unto me," will be the rule, or standard, by which we shall be tried in the judgment, or when the final test is made.

"Hearing and doing, we build upon the Rock;
Hearing alone, we build upon the sand.
Both shall be tried by the storm and the flood,
Only the Rock the trial will stand."

"One By One."

BY JOHN D. EVANS.

"They are gathering homeward from every land, One by one, one by one."

How quickly events that bring their attendant joys and sorrows pass! How strangely intermingled in life's wine are the wormwood and the myrrh!

On last Lord's day at our regular morning service a young man made the "good confession," and was baptized in the afternoon. He had traveled a distance of about one hundred and fifty miles, as far as from "Dan to Beersheba, to attend to this important duty.

Expecting soon to be called into the service of his country, he was unwilling to go without the protection of the great Commander who in all his conflicts never lost a single battle. He believed in "preparedness," and will doubt less make a brave soldier wherever duty calls. On Monday following there came the sad announcement that one of our bravest soldiers had fallen upon the field of battle, "with his face to the foe." This aged veteran enlisted as a volunteer in his Master's service more than fifty years ago, and during his long period of service he never allowed the banner under which he fought to trail in the dust.

Brother J. K. P. Wilkinson, late of Hillsboro, Tenn., the subject of this sketch, was indeed blessed with "long life and good days"—three quarters of a century: and when the final summons came, he fell asleep as a child in its mother's arms.

I shall never cease to be thankful that it was my privilege to have known this man of God so intimately. Although it was for a short period, during his visits to Colorado, he came into my life as a benediction. Although several years my senior, we were "pals" together. The ties that bound us together were as those of father and We read the word of the Lord together, we visited the sick together, we prayed together, we advised together as to the work in Denver and Colorado; and, after his return to Tennessee, his letters, full of love, zeal, faith, and hope, were ever an inspiration to me. He was always ready to help by his words of cheer and in a material way where help was needed. We all loved him for his kindly nature, his clean life, and his unfaltering faith in God. His favorite song was: "I'm climbing the mountains of Sometimes when reference was made to the final "crossing of the Jordan," he would say: "There is one song I have never been able to sing with 'the spirit and understanding,' and that is: 'I am longing for the coming of the snow-white angel band." But," he always added, "I want to try to be ready whenever the summons comes, when my work is ended." The summons came. He heard his Master saying: "Servant of God, lay aside your armor. Your faith has won the victory. Come up higher. Receive the victor's crown. 'Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

To those who shall miss him most, those who are bound to him by the tenderest ties of nature, I extend my sincerest sympathy.

Brother Sommer's "Catechism on Societyism." BY M. C. K.

On page 267 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate we publish an article from Brother Fred Sommer, of West Gore, Nova Scotia, Canada, entitled "Catechism on Societyism." We ask for it a careful examination.

Brother Sommer, as we understand him, does not favor the missionary society, except in so far as he may be said to favor it by the conservative attitude maintained in the present article. At certain points in his reasoning, we think he fails to discriminate where there is a vital difference, and hence draws conclusions which are not deducible from the premises in hand; but we are glad to meet the issue from his present somewhat unusual, if not new. angle of vision. In fact, he furnishes a rare opportunity to clarify the issue and to show clearly and distinctly, as we shall now attempt to do, just what it is, and what it is not, that we oppose in the controversy over the society. Moreover, it is a fortunate circumstance that his article follows so closely upon the very courteous and brotherly effort of Brother Z. T. Sweeney which was published in these columns and received our attention two weeks ago.

Concerning the general drift of Brother Sommer's article, let it be clearly and distinctly understood, first of all, that the controversy is not over the question of cooperating or refusing to cooperate with men on any line at all merely because they do, in the society or anywhere else, that which we believe to be contrary to the word of God; and hence, to his question, in the note accompanying his article, " Is it possible for men who love and acknowledge a common Lord to work and worship together, notwithstanding differences as to the meaning of some things their Lord has said, or as to the application of some of the principles laid down for the conduct of the kingdom?" we reply, without the slightest reservation, yes. To be consistent in refusing cooperation for such a reason would necessitate the cessation of all cooperation with men in anything whatever and that each man should work in all things exclusively by himself. Any Christian, who understands the subject, can properly join with any other Christian in cooperation on any line so long as the joint action does not, at any point, involve one in doing or indorsing what one believes to be wrong.

Hence, coming directly to his article, when our brother implies in Question 3 and his answer that we oppose the missionary society merely because it is some "other association of Christians than that which is had in a local church," he hits wide of the mark; and we take pleasure in replying that when "two or more brethren have" merely "come together, agreed upon some plan, had some understanding," no matter whether it be for "the feeding and caring for orphans," to preach the gospel "by pen" through "a religious paper," to forward "funds" to "a missionary" who "goes to a foreign field," to teach "the Bible" in a school "in connection with secular learning," to help "Armenian, Syrian, and Greek refugees," or to do anything else which Christians may do at all, we shall make no objection. But when any one of these associations of individual Christians, whether it be a missionary society, a publishing company, an orphanage, an Armenian relief committee, a Bible school, or what not, becomes a centralized organization under which the local churches cooperate, with the supervision and control of religious affairs, which God has placed in the latter, transferred to the former, then we promptly enter our protest. But why so at this point? Simply because God has spoken and legislated at this point, and we must not set aside an order instituted by him for one instituted by man,

Of course, "if one association other than the local church," merely "because it is an association other than the local church, is wrong," then "every other association" of the same kind "is wrong also;" but this is not the "process of reasoning" by which we oppose the missionary society, and it is somewhat surprising that Brother Sommer, who is careful to note a difference between it and the other associations he mentions, does not also see the vital difference that exists at this point between if and them. Whenever and wherever "an association of Christian editors, publishers and owners of a religious paper," "a Bible college," an "Armenian, Syrian, and Greek" relief committee, or any other such association, shall assume and undertake to exercise the supervision and control which God has placed in the local churches, it will receive the same prompt and vigorous opposition, and for the same reason, which we urge against the missionary society. However, concerning the relative constitutional character of the Y. M. C. A. and the A. C. M. S., we agree with Brother Sommer that, though both "tend to centralization of power," yet there is "a great difference" between them "in respect to their tendency toward ecclesiasticism," and that this tendency is much greater in the latter than in the former, the difference growing out of the fact that "the Y. M. C. A. is not connected with any" one "sect" to the exclusion of others, while "the A. C. M. S. is" so "connected;" and hence, that the particular sect or people with which the latter is exclusively connected "is dominated more or less by the" said "society," and that they are "being gradually formed into an ecclesiasticism."

Moreover, we heartily agree that "two men may differ as to the societies they shall use, or as to whether they shall use any at all, and yet worship the Lord together." It is not merely entertaining different views that properly separates "two men," or any other number of men, that differ; but when either of them so puts his views into practice as to involve the other in what the other believes to be wrong, or attempts to propagate and use such views to the disturbance of the peace and unity of the church, then there must either be a separation or the other will be guilty of conscious wrong, one or the other. The Gospel Advocate has never contended that "the Scriptures condemu in so many words the use of societies," or committees, "other than the local churches, to do good works." It condemns interference with the matter of authority and control, or any other attempt to interfere, where God has spoken and legislated. We can heartily join in "organizing ministries for good works, "such as those for circulating religious literature, building Bible colleges. caring for orphans, etc., without any compunctions of conscience whatever, and without ever a thought that by including these associations of brethren they excluded the church," because, as our brother justly adds, "back of all" such work of individual Christians is "their church membership, from which come all their inspiration for all their individual and organized ministries;" but when any of these associations of individual Christians attempt to usurp the functions of the local churches or otherwise to interfere where God has spoken, we must respectfully enter our protest.

When our brother in his fifteenth and last question asks, "Need the differences over societies hinder the coming together of the two wings of disciples into one church?" he writes himself down, unconsciously, no doubt, as a defender of denominationalism, and uses the word "church" itself in the sense of a denomination. God established but one church; and hence, even if "the two wings of disciples" should come together, they would not constitute that "one church," although they would be a part of it; and hence, when our brother speaks of their coming together "into one church," his language is purely denominational and means "one" denomination. probably only meant to say that the differences in question need not "hinder the coming together of the two wings of disciples" in all lines of work or worship. Brethren should indeed "love one another and agree not to set at naught or judge one another in regard to their differences;" and the Gospel Advocate not only maintains this principle now, but has maintained it throughout its long history. Where mere circumstantials or incidentals in the conduct of religious work are involved, we have not a word of opposition. Method, organization, and system in the conduct of religious affairs, as well as in the conduct of all other affairs, are indispensable to the successful prosecution of any work; and it is only when we are convinced that brethren, in the attempt to achieve these praiseworthy and highly desirable ends, invade the sacred realm where God has spoken and interfere with the order which he has established, that our opposition begins.

Some of the Sayings of Jesus. BY E. G. S.

Jesus said to his disciples: "Ye are the salt of the earth." (Matt. 5: 13.) This is a very strong expression in regard to the saving power or influence expected to be exerted by the children of God. Every one knows something of the saving power of salt. In the fall of the year or early winter the farmer slaughters his hogs for the use of his family for the coming year. He puts plenty of salt on the meat, and that preserves it for a year to come. This shows something of the saving power of salt. When Jesus called the disciples "the salt of the earth," that meant they were having a saving power on the earth. Good men always have something of a saving power over other men. Men that are disposed to be tricky always try to keep it hid from good men. The influence of good men works much good on the earth, while the influence of bad men works much evil. It would be impossible to tell how much good was accomplished by such men as Abraham, David, and many others among the Jewish people. Abraham was an extraordinarily good man. He worked for the general good of the Jewish people, and not merely for his own advancement. Yet the unselfish course he pursued brought him far more personal good than he ever could have reached by a selfish life. No man ever reaches a true and noble life that works simply for the accomplishment of his own selfish and fleshly ends. The Lord's people that are truly faithful strive earnestly to live in such a manner as to glorify the Lord and to be prepared for a better home than this world affords. Any man that seeks to accomplish his own selfish and fleshly ends always remains a fleshly-minded man. Such a one can never be a spiritual-minded man. If Jesus' disciples had been a sordid, fleshly-minded people, he never would have said of them, "Ye are the salt of the earth." Men that cultivate only the fleshly side of life cannot be the salt of the earth. Only spiritual-minded men are the salt of the earth. Such men are as much the salt of the earth to-day as they were two thousand years ago, and so it will ever be. Purehearted, spiritual-minded men are the saving power of the earth. Many that are claiming to be the salt of the earth to-day are making a false claim, because their lives are earthly and fleshly. Such as these cannot be regarded as the salt of the earth, because they exert no saving power upon the world.

Jesus also said to his disciples: "Ye are the light of the world." This is just as true to-day of those who are faithfully living the Christian life as it was when Christ so highly complimented his faithful disciples. Christians are the light of the world when they are living faithfully the Christian life as the word of the Lord directs them to live. They cannot be the light of the world in any other way. Jesus also said: "But if the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" Christians must keep their light shining by faithfully living the Christian life. Those Christians who disregard the word of God and live after the lusts of the flesh are in gross darkness all the time. The wisdom of this world is not sufficient to guide men in the ways of righteousness and truth, and all who try to walk by the light of the flesh are certain to fall. Only those who walk in the light of God's truth can possibly be on safe ground. If all Christians would walk in this light, this world would not seem so dark. Human wisdom is too weak to walk alone in safety. The light of God's truth is sufficient to guide people in the right way, if they would read and study it so as to walk by it. But the trouble is, the masses prefer to walk by their own light and leave the word of God out. There are comparatively few that take time to read and study it. If all would study the word and walk in its light as Christ was in the light, there would not be so much falling in the dark paths of human wisdom. There is light enough in God's truth to lead all the world in the heavenly way, if men would only read it and walk in it; but so long as they neglect this precious source of light, they will be in utter darkness, spiritually,

Last week was a banner week for the War Sufferers' Fund. Contributions from churches and individual Christians came pouring in from all parts of the country. The response to the patriotic appeal in behalf of the warstricken sufferers was very gratifying. It is good to know that we have so many generous-hearted readers. It would be pleasing to print extracts from some of the letters that accompanied the contributions-letters that tell of loving sacrifice for the good of others, letters that breathe 2 fervent prayer for the quick relief of the suffering and an end of the terrible war. Lack of space prevents our printing these inspiring messages. Suffice it to say that the editor read and appreciates them all and that God will reward each one for the good he has done.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

That Day.

BY FANNIE HURST.

When the heav'ns are rent asunder, And the clouds roll back; When the sun and moon are darkened, And the earth is veiled in black; When the stars drop from their courses, And the saints immortal rise, Then we'll see the blessed count'nance Of our Savior in the skies.

He is coming in great glory, In a chariot of cloud, With the voice of the archangel, And the trumpet sounding loud. Then his children will be gathered, To reign with him in the air, While the angels round them hover, In their ceaseless praise to share.

Brother, sister, are you watching At your post upon the wall? Is your armor girded ready For that day that comes to all? O, the joy that must await us, If we'll only faithful be Till our blessed Jesus claims us For himself eternally!

"Commentary on Acts of the Apostles." By David Lipscomb. A commentary on the Acts of the Apostles, with questions suited for the use of families and schools. This commentary is especially adapted to the comprehension of the masses of the people. It also contains a chronology of the Acts, map showing Paul's missionary journeys, brief biographies of the apostles, and an introductory chapter on the Holy Spirit. Pages, 249, and Index. Cloth bound. Price, $1.

Missionary

What Shall We Do About Missions?

BY L. B. BRADLEY.

Among the last words the apostles heard from the Master were these: "Unto the uttermost parts of the earth." These words are recorded in the book of Acts, right in the first division. The New Testament is a book of missions; and the book of Acts is very largely composed of a record of the activities of the apostles in a missionary capacity, and demonstrates how the Lord desires the work of "world evangelization" carried on. The church is a missionary institution, and all its members, if truly Spirit-filled and loyal, are missionary to the core. When a church is zealous for missions, it is in the discharge of its obligations, and, therefore, fulfilling the duties enjoined upon it. The church that is not missionary in spirit and practice, to the extent of its ability, is to that extent not loyal to the Christ. If there is anything clearly taught in the word of God, it is the duty of missions. What is the church, as such, doing to carry out the Lord's injunction, "to the uttermost part of the earth?" If the church is careless and neglectful about the matter, "what will the recompense be?" As you read these lines, ask yourself the question: "Am I interested in sending the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth?"" If you are not, ask yourself another question: "Am I not too selfish to claim the spirit and promises of Him who came as a missionary to this earth, that I might have the light of life?" And again: "Can I expect to be saved, when I will not help send the gospel to those 'who sit in darkness and the shadow of death,' and allow them to die without the gospel, who might have been reached with my help?" Christian brother, sister, can you afford to take no interest in missions? You must do something for missions, if you expect to receive the approval of your Master when you meet him "face to face." Some one has truly said: "The church would cease to exist in a generation if it were not for missions." Another says: "We are the fruit of missions. Our forefathers were naked savages. The gospel has made us what we are, whether we admit it or not; and the gospel was brought to our forefathers by mis sionaries."

The church cannot exist long without missions. It is a part of the church, just as heat is a part of fire, or belongs to it. The Lord has given himself for the world, and he is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." (2 Pet. 3: 9.) Men cannot repent, or will not, until they believe; they cannot believe until they hear; they cannot hear without a preacher; and they cannot preach except they be sent. (See Rom. 10: 14-17.) How, then, can a church keep the word of God and not be missionary—do mission work? What are the churches going to do about it?

There are but few missionaries of the church of Christ to-day, compared with the denominational agents and considering our numerical forces. Shall we let them take the field for denominationalism, while we sit back, as it were, "under our own vine and fig tree," and take our ease, satisfied in the security of our own salvation and without a care for the salvation of others? What will the Master say to you and to me if we neglect this work?

There are about eight hundred millions of people on earth who have never heard of Christ—never heard the gospel, the power of God to save. There are about one and a quarter billions of people in the world that are recognized as being connected, in some way, with missionary enterprises. Only a very small portion of these have the truth in its purity. There is a stupendous work for the church to do. Why should we not take courage and do what we can? We have been negligent too long now. Let us awake and put on the beautiful garments of Jerusalem and go forth to the work. Then, at the end of the harvest, we shall hear the Master say: "Well done."

Again let me remind you, my dear brother, sister, that the missionaries now in the work must be supported. Their needs are constant, and they necessarily increase, as does everything else, in these strenuous times. I shall be glad for every one who reads these lines to also read the report of Sister Sarah Andrews which appears on this page. You may there find how scrupulous she is in the use of the Lord's money. I have sent her $150 so far this year. It will soon be time to send her another month's support. I have on hand to date, $27. I need immediately $23 to make out the next check. I send to her on the twenty-ninth of each month. Please try to get me your contribution by that time. Lest you forget it, sit down right now and send it to me.

I have on hand three dollars for Miss Cypert. I will also forward to her any money intrusted to my care. If you wish me to send yours, send it in right away, and I can forward both checks at the same time. I am sure that they both will appreciate your fellowship in their work. If they can give up so much to take the word of God to the Japanese, we certainly ought to give a little of our earnings to care for them while they teach them for us. We most surely want a part in that great work. Who will be among those who will say: "I will lay apart a portion of my earnings every month to this work, and have some fellowship in the salvation of the Japanese?"

November and December Report.

BY SARAH ANDREWS.

November—From T. M. Smith, Valdosta, Ga., $12.50; through Gospel Advocate, $13; sisters at Donelson, Tenn., $1; through L. B. Bradley, $50.

December—Through Brother Janes, $5; sisters at Donelson, Tenn., $6,55; Class No. 3, Russell Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., $10; through Brother Bradley, $75; Nashville Bible School congregation, $20; Miss M. Ehresman, $20.

Total receipts for the year 1917 were $935.50. Hospital and doctors' bills were $233.25. I have on deposit $150; in hand, $35. This leaves $517.25 for my current expenses for 1917, including about fifty dollars to the cause and thirty dollars for tuition. Hence expenses for house rent, food, fuel, clothing, and a few little extras needed about the housekeeping, etc., amounted to $437.25. I have been as faithful a steward as I knew how to be, and pray daily that the Lord will guide me in using the funds sent to his glory. I regret that so much of the contributions of 1917 had to be used to meet my hospital account, but the operation for appendicitis was very necessary, as was proved when the incision was made. I am very grateful and rejoice to know that this account has been liquidated. May the Lord bless all those who helped to make this possible.

Not the violent contest between parts of the truth, but the quiet suppression of half of it, is the formidable evil; there is always hope when people are forced to listen to both sides. It is when they attend only to one that errors harden into prejudices, and truth itself ceases to have the effect of truth, by being exaggerated into falsehood.—John Stuart Mill.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 3.

Modern ideas in regard to child training lay stress upon adhering from the beginning to certain set times for feeding, sleeping, bathing, and airing; for regular habits lay the foundation of moral teaching. They are also a boon to the mother, resting her nerves and giving her time to herself, which in turn again acts to the benefit of the child.

After physical needs have been provided for, all the average normal child needs is to be let alone. Many babies are constantly overstimulated by mothers who adore them. It takes a wise and unselfish mother to keep her baby quiet systematically and relegate him to a "warm, safe, happy background."

Physicians agree that infants under the age of six months should never be played with or needlessly handled or caressed; and though it may be the dearest delight to rock and coddle the new infant and to watch his sweet ways, the wise mother will place him comfortably in crib or carriage, and let him go to sleep by himself, preferably in the open air. Babies treated in this sane, unselfish fashion seldom cry, except for some good reason. Selfcontrol and self-reliance seem big words to apply to infant education, but these virtues have their foundation in earliest childhood. The child's wonderful mysterious little personality must have time to develop itself, and growth and strength come "in the silence."

One of the first problems which confronts the mother is the unceasing activity of her small children. From the moment they can creep, they are "doing something" every minute of the day. We simply cannot bid these restless creatures keep still, for activity is the law of growth. Instead, we must learn to keep them busily and happily employed, and to substitute right activities for wrong ones Constant repression makes a restless and unhappy child.

Bad and mischievous children are simply the results of negative methods. It is not enough to say, "Run away and play." but a definite occupation should be suggested. The positive upbuilding method is to say, "Do this," instead of "Don't do that;" and if one form of employment must be taken away, something else should be suggested.

A recent Italian educator has declared that unnecessary restriction in a child's life is a crime. There must be rules, of course, and children must learn to obey, but much friction can be eliminated by avoiding unnecessary commands. There should be few rules, but these should be firmly adhered to. It is infinitely better not to give a command than to let a child evade it. The habit of teasing for a thing will never develop, if this course is faithfully followed. Children brought up without rules or system are restless and unhappy; but, on the other hand, a blind obedience should not be insisted upon too long. The child can begin very early to reason for himself in small things. Later the moral fiber must be developed which will enable him to choose to do the right thing because it is right, and to recognize and obey the still small voice within himself. A desire for right conduct must be awakened. The will does not begin to grow until a definite choice can be made. Strong wills are good, and a parent has no more right to break a child's will than to break his arm or leg. Be sure that your request is just, and whenever possible avoid a clash of wills. Forced obedience, of obedience gained through fear, weakens the child's will power and fosters cowardice and deceit.

Kindly Deeds.

My thoughts go back to childhood when at the knee of a gentle-voiced mother I learned this childish verse:

"Whene'er I take my walks abroad, How many poor I see! What shall I render to my God For all his gifts to me?'

To many who walk or motor through the fashionable shopping districts of our cities, such simple rhyme may almost seem absurd. The men and women are expensively clad. Not a few of them live in a little world of their own. The shop windows are resplendent with beautiful things. The facades of the handsome buildings tell of material wealth and comfort. Who thinks of the poor? Where are they? Do they exist?

They are everywhere. Possibly only one block distant -up rickety steps, in dreary holes in the wall, or down in dirty cellars-can be found people who are literally without hope and without God in the world. Hungry mothers, starving babies, consumptive men, ill-clad children struggle for existence. They do not really live-they exist and cringe. Cruel economic and social conditions, possibly the mistakes or sins of others, maybe their own errors or vices. have condemned them to penury and tears. They have suffering bodies and stelid brains. Have we no duty toward them? Are they not God's children?

Most of us recline on comfortable beds every night and awake refreshed each morning because our bodies have been relaxed and warm. Do we remember the hundreds of millions of our fellow creatures in all the continents who every night lie down in chill and misery? Do we know that they are very often forced to be content with only enough cash in hand to purchase the coming meal? Do we fully appreciate that judicious and sympathetic application of money can bring great solace to despairing souls? Do we understand the rich blessing to ourselves when we make the widow's heart sing for joy? If giving to the poor means lending to the Lord, it unquestionably signifies that God is a superb debtor. Have we faith to believe this? How does he prove it?

Let us test the possibilities of human happiness by more generously depleting our bank accounts for the service of others. The heart that beats in harmony with the calls of God's needy children is the happy heart. It responds to the swing of the beautiful Song of Love that Jesus teaches.

"O brother man! Fold to thy heart thy brother; Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there; To worship rightly is to love each other, Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer."
—William C. Allen, in Exchange.

Be Not Afraid to Pray.

Be not afraid to pray-to pray is right. Pray, if thou canst, with hope; but ever pray, Though hope be weak, or sick with long delay: Pray in the darkness, if there be no light. Far is the time, remote from human sight, When war and discord on the earth shall cease: Yet every prayer for universal peace Avails the blessed time to expedite.

Whate'er is good to wish, that ask of heaven, Though it be that thou canst not hope to see: Pray to be perfect, though material leaven Forbid the spirit so on earth to be: But if for any wish thou darest not pray, Then pray to God to cast that wish away -Hartley Coleridge.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Herbert E. Winkler has changed his address from Nashville, Tenn., to Adairville, Ky., Box 87, for this year.

John E. Dunn, at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., writes: "The magnitude of this work is almost unbelievable."

We are glad to learn that J. Will Henley is much improved in health. His son, Raymond, is filling some appointments in Arkansas.

D. S. Ligon would like to learn the address of L. B. Pribble, who wrote him concerning a meeting. Brother Pribble failed to show address in his letter.

We have read the Gospel Advocate for half a century, and hope to be able to continue reading it the few remaining days left to us.—Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Bently, Stuart, Okla.

Mrs. James Jamieson, of Forest, Ontario, Canada, writes: "The Gospel Advocate is a very welcome visitor in our home. I would rather dispense with one of my meals each day than be without it. It sure is a stimulus along life's rugged way."

P. C. Key preached for the Belmont Avenue congregation, this city, Sunday. One person made the good confession and another took membership with the congregation, Ira Winterrowd preached at Rothchild Avenue, where there was another good confession. W. W. Bates preached at Twelfth Avenue and baptized one person at the evening service.

From E. M. Borden, Little Rock, Ark.: "A. U. Nunnery, a Baptist minister, and the writer have just held a debate at New Prospect Baptist Church, near Parsons, Tenn. The debate was well attended. Mr. Nunnery is an average debater in his class of Baptist ministers. The general church question was discussed. This was our second debate at the same place and on the same propositions. The debate closed with good feeling."

From T. M. Leslie, Tulsa, Okla.: "The work here is progressing as nicely as could be expected under existing circumstances. There are hundreds of families moving here each month, and in hopes that some may see this notice and look us up, we desire to make announcement of our services. The church meets each Lord's day in the Irving School, near Owen Park. Take Owen Park car and get off at the school. Bible study at 10 A.M.; preaching and communion at 11 A.M.; preaching at 7:30 P.M."

"How to Tithe, and Why," Free.—We hereby offer to send, postpaid, a little pamphlet with the above title, free, to all ministers, in sufficient quantities to supply one copy to every family represented in their churches and congregations. The questions and answers of which it is made up are condensed extracts from the larger pamphlet, "What We Owe, and How to Pay It." Please mention this paper; also do not fail to give your religious affiliation.—The Layman Company, 143 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

From D. S. Ligon, Hammon, Okla., March 15: "After closing the meeting at Fairview Schoolhouse, near Woodward, which resulted in seven baptized and five reclaimed, I went back to Mount Olive Schoolhouse and preached over Sunday. We had an all-day meeting of it. As I had been with these brethren all the past year, I was very glad to be with them. I am now at this place giving a course of lectures against materialism and other kinds of infidelity. Brethren, I am now in the field and am ready to arrange meetings for the summer or any time that I can assist in the Lord's work. The war's being on us should not cause us to hold up with the work of the Master. Brethren, I try to have no hobby, but I am determined to preach the gospel story in the same old way. If any church wants me, my home address is Denton, Texas."

From Tillit S. Teddlie, Henrietta, Texas, March 14: " I have been here at Henrietta, a town of twenty-five hundred people, for ten days, assisting Tice Elkins in a mission meeting, leading the song service for him. Several of the best people in the town are in regular attendance, deeply interested, and the gospel is going to do a good work under his management, if he is enabled to keep up the work. There never was a place that needed the gospel more, nor a more worthy cause to bestow our means upon than this. The brethren in some places have given their means to this work, but not enough. While I am getting all I had promised to me and all I expected, Brother Elkins is not getting the support he needs and ought to have. If one Lord's-day's contribution were sent from one-tenth of the congregations that are anxious to have part in building up the kingdom of God among men, it would keep the work going and sustain Brother Elkins until the work becomes self-sustaining. What congregation will lead in this work for God?"

Satan, the Author of Death,

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

Satan is known by several different names. The name "devil" appears to be the most common; and no difference what other name is used, it means the devil. He is spoken of in the Scriptures as "that old serpent, called the devil, and Satan." (Rev. 12: 9.) While the name "devil" is not in the Old Testament, it surely was in use, or Solomon never would have used it when he said: "God created man to be immortal, and made him to be an image of his own eternity; nevertheless through envy of the devil came death into the world." (Wisdom of Solomon 2: 23.) This passage also teaches that Satan, who made himself a devil by his sinful, rebellious act, through envy introduced death, and thus became the author. Solomon gave one reason why people should not commit suicide when he said: "For God made not death." (Wisdom of Solomon 1: 12, 13.) Jesus said of the devil, that "he was a murderer from the beginning." (John 8: 44.) At the very beginning of his work he sought the life of the human race when he deceived our mother Eve, which brought about the first sin and transgression, causing a separation from the garden, in which was the tree of life, and death was the result. Satan devised the plan of murder. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil," (1 John 3. 8.) As Jesus is to destroy his works. and death being one of his works. what will the result be but a resurrection and a restoration of every one in this world that ever lived and breathed the breath of life? The devil brought death upon Adam, who was the workmanship of God. That being true, unless God restores Adam and his posterity back to life, the devil will forever and eternally reign over the workmanship of God. The hope of the world to-day rests upon the resurrection of Jesus. If Christ rose from the dead, he was divine and can destroy death; but if he did not rise, our hope is blighted and we are forever lost in the dark valley and shadow of death in the devil's dominion. But the cheering language of the apostle, which stands unimpeached, says: "But now is Christ risen from the dead," (1 Cor. 15; 20.) It further declares: "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." (Verse 26.) When that is accomplished, all the dead will be released and live again. Then will be the judgment day, when the final destiny of man shall be decided, not according to man's judgment, but according to man's work in the light of God's word. The Power of Sincerity.

Though a man must be sincere in order to be great, he need not be great in order to be sincere. Whatever may be the size of our brain, the strength of our powers, the talents of any kind with which we are gifted, sincerity of heart, or belief, or life, is possible to us all. It is of itself a kind of greatness, which, in spite of many other drawbacks, will make itself felt. The honest, upright man, who lives openly, fearlessly, and truly, professing only what he feels, upholding only what he believes in, pretending nothing, disguising nothing, deceiving no one, claims unconsciously a respect and honor that we cannot give to any degree of power or ability wielded with duplicity or cunning. If we could correctly divide the world into the sincere and the insincere, we should have a much truer estimate of real worth than we generally obtain. It is the fashion to gauge people by what they believe, rather than how they believe it. Yet, important as is the former, the latter is much more so.-Exchange.

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

The reason this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, was so successful in Miss Kelly's case was because it went to the root of her trouble, restored her to a normal healthy condition and as a result her nervousness disappeared.

Hon. Park Marshall, of Franklin, Tenn., writes to me, as the author of the above-named book, as follows:

I must thank you for kindly sending me a copy of your book giving the interpretation of Revelation as to the destiny of the nations. The book is valuable, and shows above everything that you have certainly been burning the midnight oil. No one can read it without seeing that you have studied the Scriptures with great fidelity, assiduity, and devotion. To read it awakens a renewed interest and disposition to study prophecy, and you have called attention to what I may term the "apocalyptic vocabulary"—the mystic meaning attached to many of the words of the apocalypse. I have read the book entirely through with great in-terest and considerable profit. All of this I can truly say without implying that I can accept your theory of interpretation or the results which you have reached.

The following is an extract from a private letter from Mr. Marshall, which he authorizes me to use if I think best. I call especial attention to the last sentence in the third paragraph in this second criticism, which reads as follows: "Also, it is an extrinsic matter-namely, the lapse of time, not inhering in the book itself." 1 call especial attention to this paragraph because it is absolutely correct. but I had never myself noticed the fact, and yet I am convinced that the same is true of the apocalypse. Mr. Marshall says:

I notice that you argue various points with ability, citing all points needful to the argument; yet you assert two things of the very gravest import, and, as I must say, of the gravest nature, without any argument or citation whatever to sustain the as-sertion. Without the substantiation of both of these, your argument would fail, as they are the foundations of it.

One of these is the conception that the Revelation is inspired verbally in every detail and that it cannot contain any error or fault, and that there are no variations in its vocabulary; that the same word is always used to mean the same thing, and that the same thing is never expressed by the use of different words at different places. In other words, you have a lofty and implicit faith in every word, as if spoken by the Deity verbally. This, of course, is a worthy view to take, and for it no one can be blamed; and yet I myself have a somewhat different view of the nature of prophecy, especially as applied to this book of the Bible.

Secondly, there is a sentence in which, as you would say, there is no apocalyptic word—"the things which must shortly come to pass:" and another, "for the time is at hand;" and again, "Write the things which thou hast seen, the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter." In each of these places you insert the words, "after they begin." Now you seem to me to be "the helping hand" toward God. In other words, you think the word "shortly" means literally a very short time, and therefore the prophecy fails unless you insert three words which I infer you suppose should have been there, but were left out—may I say, by oversight? You note that over eighteen hundred years have passed and nothing happened. Now, if we add three words, then the credit of the prophecy will be made good. You can do any other book that way and bring it to a state of credit. Also, it is an extrinsic matter-namely, the lapse of time, not inhering in the book itself.

Now, do not think I discredit the book of Revelation. I do not think the last chapter allows us to insert anything; and I do not understand the book as you do.

Among the Colored Folks

On account of sickness in my family, I was kept in all the winter, so could not meet my appointments. On December 23 my wife departed this life, which brought sadness to me; but it pleased the Lord, who does all things well, to take her. But God be thanked that I can continue in the gospel of the Lord, as so many of my people do not know the gospel is God's power to save. The great burden is to get them to see and understand that God has but one way to save-that is, through his Son, our Lord, by obedience to the gospel.

I was at Tuscumbia, Ala., on the fourth Lord's day in February, preaching both morning and evening, with good attendance at both services.

I propose to visit Henderson, Tenn., the second Lord's day in each month. I find the gospel is badly needed among my people in Henderson. We have about eight or nine members there.

Any one desiring to write me for a meeting this summer should address me at Corinth, Miss., P. O. J. HANNON. Box 329.

I am now (February 6) in a meeting with the church at Sugar Grove, Ky. We had two good and well-attended services on Lord's day. I will remain here over the second Lord's day. Things are moving on fairly well here.

The weather was cold and bad during the months of January and February, but the attendance at the Jackson Street Church, in Nashville, was fairly good. With the hard times and war troubles on us, the progress of the work is slow; but we are looking to the Master for help.

I read with regret the notice of the death of Dr. J. W. McFarland, of Lebanon, Tenn. He was one of the men that aided me in the first mission meeting I held in that town. From the efforts that were then put forth the Lord, through my labors, has built up a good work there,

The church at Lewisburg, Tenn. (by Dr. Hardison), B. F. Hart, T. B. Larimore and wife, S. P. Pittman, T. W. Martin, W. T. Selley, Joe Hasty, sisters of the South College Street Church (by Brother H. T. King), Jackson Street Church, and others have my thanks for their aid in the work.

Brother M. Keeble is one of our promising and coming young preachers. I commend his writings and his work to the churches.

A Secret of the Great Endurance and Power of Athletes

Strength of Delicate, Nervous, Rundown People in Ten Days' in Many Cases.

MOST people foolishly seem to think they are going to to get renewed health and strength from some stimulating medicine, secret nostrum or narcotic drug, said Dr. E. Sauer, a Boston Physician who has studied widely, both in this country and in great European Medical Institutions, when, as a fact, real and true strength can only come from the food you eat. But people often fail to get the strength out of their food because they haven't enough iron in their blood to enable it to change food into living matter. From their weakened, nervous condition they know something is wrong, but they can't tell what. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary ated iron three times per day after meals

Ordinary Nuxated fron Will Increase the for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained, I have seen dozens of nervous, run-down people, who were alling all the while, most astonishingly increase their strength and endurance simply by taking iron in the proper form and this after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. But don't take the old forms of reduced iron, iron acetate or tincture of iron simply to save a few cents. For incurre of fron simply to save a few cents. You must take iron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated, like mixated iron. If you want it to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless. Many an athlete or prize fighter has won the day simply because he knew the secret of great strength and endurance which comes from having plenty of iron in the blood, while many another has gone down to inglorious defeat simply for the lack of iron.

NOTE—Nuxated Iron which is prescribed and recommended above by Dr. E. Saner, and other physicians, is not a secret remetly but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic fron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. Not Satisfied.

RY C. PETTY.

Man, the only being made in the image of his Creator, is not satisfiednever. He is not like the ox, which is satisfied with the grass of his pasture or the repose of his shade, but is always reaching beyond his present attainments. It does not matter what his avocation may be, he is ever grasping after something beyond the present. Visit any home that is tinted and polished with everything that is pleasing to the taste, and still there is constant change going on, all because man is not satisfied. This is commendable in man, to be going onward as the years fly away. Solomon says. "All things are full of labor; man cannot utter it: the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing." (Eccles. 1: 8.) He had tried everything that his great wisdom led him to search after, and looking over the days gone by, he says: "Therefore I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: for all is vanity and vexation of spirit." (Eccles. 2: 17.) Not satisfied with his great attainments.

Could the eye be satisfied with seeing or the ear be filled with hearing, man might be satisfied. But not so; it is not in man to satisfy himself; he must look to some other source. David tells us where to look. He said: "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men! For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness." (Ps. 107: 8, 9.) David was looking away from earth to a Being that could satisfy man. I see the same thought in David's heart, when his little child was taken from him. He said: "But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? can I bring him back again? shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." (2 Sam. 12: 23.) Still looking onward for something that could not be found here to satisfy. But he tells that it is after sleeping time is over. He says: "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness. I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." (Ps. 17: 15.)

Paul, the greatest hero of the Christian age, says: "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the

These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slighest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3; 13, 14,) Again, he says: "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better." (Phil. 1: 23.) So much better than to be in this world amid the toils and cares of this life, which could not satisfy the soldier whose Captain is waiting for him on the other shore. Speaking of the heroes in the ages long gone by, Paul says: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." (Heb. 11: 13.)

Thus in no age has the servant of the Lord been satisfied here. And so it is with the Christian; for he, too, is a pilgrim on the earth, just passing through, and knows the earth is not his home, and that life is sweeping on and on to the great crossing that Hes out before him. He is also looking to that country that is better than this. where his Savior has gone, and many of his loved ones have gone, whom he expects to see when the waiting time is over; for Hope whispers: "Be thou steadfast, for there is a better day coming." But it is not here we look for that day; but when life is over. and our work is ended and all things are completed that the Savior promised, he will gather all his own down by the jasper sea and make us into his likeness; and then we will be satisfied, for it will be home, home forever, with the Lord.

It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every linstance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantity as possible, for its properties are so happly blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

There is a trite saying that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business;" and this is true in a measure, perhaps, of that which we have under consideration at this time.

I have been of the opinion for some time that we need more men at the camps doing such work as our beloved Brethren Dunn and Lawson are doing I have also spoken to several other brethren privately about it, and they all seem to be of the same opinion.

If the truth, the whole truth, can be taught both publicly and privatelyand they say it can-then why should not we have one or more good men at every soldiers' camp? All other religious bodies, Catholics included, are availing themselves of the opportunities and are working mightily among the boys. Now, will the people who claim to be simply Christians, who have no church affiliation save that of which we can read in the New Testament, use their privilege and opportunity and do their plainly taught duty?

Some one who knows suggests that the congregations select, send out, and support suitable men for this work. Where one congregation does not feel able alone to support a man, then why not two or more congregations cooperate in selecting and supporting a man at a camp? If the congregations will do this, then certainly we can have one man at every camp, at least. and sometimes more than one. By doing this, the work can be done regularly and systematically; and that, it appears to me, is the only successful way of doing the work.

I suggest that each congregation begin at once to talk up and get ready for this great opportunity by which the gospel may be preached to many who never heard it, and who, when they get home (those who are so fortunate as to get home), will carry it to thousands of others who never heard it. What an opportunity of doing missionary work! Brethren, let us make no mistake here.

Red Blood and Courage!

(BY DR. W. C. LUCAS.)

What drives the men right up to the trenches in this war is courage, and it's red blood that "puts the heart" in the men. Did any one ever see a puny, thinblooded man ever rush into the fight with any chance of winning out? With rich, pure blood you can face any hardship, reach any goal. But you are handi-capped in the race of life without it. Every tissue, bone, muscle, should take from the blood certain materials and return to it certain others. When the poisons accumulate in the blood, perhaps the face breaks out in pimples, or boils appear on the neck, and we feel languid, tired, our vitality is at a low ebb, and we easily catch cold.

It's time to take an alterative extract It's time to take an alterative extract and blood-purifier, taken from Nature's forests. Such a one is made up of Golden Seal, Blood and Stone root, Oregon Grape and Queen's root—extracted with glycerine and made into sugar-coated tablets or liquid, and this has been sold by druggists for the past fifty years as Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Medical Discovery.

LENOIR, N. C.—" Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a great medicine for me in building me up when I feel run-down in health. It gives me strength and flesh. I have been using it at different times for thirty years or more. I began its use for catarrh, and it greatly relieved me. I can heartily recommend the 'Discovery' as a blood medicine."—Mrs. Lucy Beach.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—"This is to certify that I have been in bad health for a long time, suffering from stomach trouble. Had terrible spells of indigestion and sour stomach. A friend told me about Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I had l'atle faith at first but she persuaded me to try it. I have taken a little over four bottles of it and my stomach trouble has vanished. I can now eat everything and sleep like a lamb. I want to give all the credit to this great medicine, which I consider the best on earth for stomach trouble."—T. T. LAYTON, Route 2, Box 28 Berry Beulsvard

Thurman.

Mrs. M. Thurman departed this life on March 1, 1918. She was a faithful member of the one body at Red Hill and the loving mother of four little children who are left to mourn her loss. She was the daughter of Brother Frank Lester, a faithful minister of Christ. She was baptized some twelve years ago by D. C. Janes. We pray that her husband may obey the gospel and follow in her footsteps. Funeral services were conducted by the writer. G. S. Marse.

Anderson.

Travis W. Anderson, son of George W. Anderson and Webb Montague Anderson, was born near Whitewright, Texas, on September 22, 1891. He obeyed the gospel in 1910 and waged the Christian warfare till called to lay down arms at Camp Travis, on January 31, 1918. He did not volunteer for carnal warfare; but when his country called, he needs must answer. His illness was so brief (pneumonia and meningitis) that we only knew of it when a telegram announced his death. He was laid to rest near his home, in Cooke County, on February 2. It is so hard to know our cheerful, helpful son shall greet us here no more. But we know he is not dead; for, "he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

MOTHER.

Wilson.

Albert Oliver Wilson, son of H. L. and A. J. Wilson, was born on September 16, 1873. He obeyed the gospel in early life. About twelve years ago he was married to Miss Alice Hess, a devoted, Chistian girl. To this union were born two children, who, with their mother, are left to bear the great He also leaves an aged father, two sisters, and one brother. He died near Cave Spring, Ark., on January 7, 1918, after seven days' intense suf-fering from pneumonia. I have been acquainted with Brother Wilson about twenty years, and can truthfully say that he was one of our best men. He was a useful man, and one of our best school-teachers. Brother Wilson was a member of the church of Christ at Cave Spring. He very seldom missed being with us in the worship. He was a teacher in our Bible school and loved the work of the church.
After a short talk by the writer, we laid his body away in Hebron Cemetery to await the resurrection.
"Blessed are the dead which die in "Blessed are the dead which the in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do fol-low them." W. H. SEARS.

Shoffner.

Ethel Payne Shoffner, wife of Frank Shoffner and daughter of L. H. Payne and wife, of St. Elmo, Tenn., died, at her home, in Stevenson, Ala., on February 6, 1918. Funeral services were held at her home by Brother G. C. Brewer, of Winchester, Tenn., and she was laid to rest in the cemetery there. She had been a great sufferer for three years, but withal was one of the most patient, cheerful invalids I ever saw. She leaves three children—Bernard, Edith, and Alice May, aged thirteen. nine, and six years, respectively—be-reft of children's richest gift, a moth-In her girlhood days she gave herself in service to the Master, being baptized by Brother F. She was educated at Terrill College, Decherd, Tenn., being a graduate of that noted school. the first of Brother and Sister Payne's family to pass away. J. D. FLOYD.

Anderson.

The death angel silently treads the doorway and with his icy fingers touches our fondest treasures and takes them from our embrace, one by one. Again this home has been broken and darkened by the hand of death, has been robbed of one who brought much sunshine and happiness to the occupants. Another has gone to wear the glittering crown and bask in our Savior's love. Nora Anderson was born on July 4, 1888, and departed this life on January 19, 1918. She confessed faith early in life and lived a devoted Christian. She leaves a father, mother, four sisters, one brother, ther, mother, tour sisters, one brother, and a number of friends to mourn her departure. She had been sick over a year, but bore her sufferings with patience. Remembering her duty until death, she has the promise of Rev. 10: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. Again: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord: . . . that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14: 13.) So let us think of her as passing out of darkness and sickness of this world into light and happiness of the heavenly kingdom. Comforted by the assurance that she is at rest, let us press forward until we are reunited around the throne of God, where separations come no more. Services were conducted by Brother W. S. Morton, of Columbia, Tenn., at her request.

Sweeney.

Sister Laura J. Sweeney, wife of Brother R. L. Sweeney, died at their home, near Carpenter, Miss., on Decem-ber 23, 1917. In her death a husband is deprived of a devoted, Christian wife, one who was a real partner and helpmate; eight children lose a noble, God-fearing mother. The church and neighborhood will feel her loss deeply, for she was active and useful in good works. She was strong in the faith. She obeyed the gospel at the age of seventeen and continued faithful until death. She was forty-four years, two months, and sixteen days of age. Besides her husband and eight children, she leaves her father (J. T. Sweeney), two sisters, three brothers, and a host of friends to mourn her death; but they do not sorrow as those who have no hope, for we all firmly believe that she is one that is included in the sweet promise: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." The writer spent a week in her home last summer, also summer before last, while holding a meeting for them in a schoolhouse near by. On moving to Mississippi they found that the plea for primitive Christianity had not reached that part of the country, and, as all Christians should do, they set to work to establish a congregation. It was her desire to see a meeting-house built in or near Carpenter, and I believe her desire will be accom-plished, though she did not wait to phished, though she did not want to see it; for the faithful few, led by her noble, Christian husband, will con-tinue the work. All of her children who are old enough are Christians. I baptized a son, a daughter, and a son-in-law while there. May God bless, comfort, and sustain her husband in this sore loss and enable him to do much for the cause, and may her children all follow her as she followed the Christ.

M. C. CAYCE.

Gentry.

The angel of death visited the home of Brother E. R. Gentry on May 8, 1917, and claimed his companion, Sister Nora I. Gentry. She was born, at Ensor, Putnam County, Tenn., on October 16, 1882, and was maroff October 16, 1882, and was married to Brother Gentry on August 17, 1899. To this union seven children were born—two boys and five girls. Both boys died in infancy. Brother Gentry was left alone with the five small girls to care for; but all the neighbors did all they could to help and encourage them. Brother Gentry was born, at Byrene, Putnam County, Tenn., on July 30, 1879, and departed this life, at Mosquero, N. M., on August 25, 1917. Brother Gentry was a deputy sheriff and was shot by an outlaw while in the performance of his duty, death resulting in four hours. Brother and Sister Gentry both obeyed the gospel and were members of the church of Christ. Owing to the state of her health, Sister Gentry for some time falled to meet with the church for worship, which was her greatest pleasure here in this life; but while she was unable to meet to worship, she did not fail to teach and instruct her children in the way of life. Her two older girls have obeyed the gospel and are following in her footsteps, Being an officer and having much business to attend to, also having to care for his little girls, Brother Gentry did not have the opportunity to meet for

Grandma Used Sage Tea to Darken Hair

She Made Up a Mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to Bring Back Color, Gloss, and Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked, and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked, or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a fifty-cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractive-ness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft, and luxuriant.

This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

Some Personal Notes.

BY F. O. HOWELL.

Brother Joe Rateliff, of Bardwell, Ky., is rapidly recovering and will soon be ready to answer calls for service in every section of the country. He is in the very prime of his usefulness, and is one of the most capable preachers in this part of the country. If you have no preacher for a meeting, write him.

Brother A. H. Lannom, of Dongola, Ill., has been wanting to locate in some good field that will use him and support him. Unfortunately, the churches of Christ in Southern Illinois do not look after the hire of a laborer as they should. I desire to state, for the information of any congregation that needs a preacher, that Brother Lannom is one of the most loyal and faithful young preachers I ever knew.

Brother D. N. Barnett, of Paducah, Ky., has recently moved to Mississippi. Any church or mission point in the State will do well to secure the services of Brother Barnett. He is a middle-aged man and a sound, gospel preacher.

Brother W. L. Denton has changed his address from Henry, Tenn., to Martin, Tenn.

Brother Garvin Curd has accepted a call of the church at Mayfield, Ky., and has moved to that place. We feel that both the church and Brother Curd are fortunate in the get-together. Brother H. H. Handcock told me that their contribution on the fourth Sunday in February was one hundred and ten dollars. They are making wonderful sacrifice.

Brother J. L. Holland, of Greenfield, Tenn., is preaching monthly for the church at Milburn, Ky., this year.

Some of the brethren in Obion County, Tenn., are talking of buying Brother John R. Williams a "Ford." Brother Williams drives much over the country and holds many funerals. A car would be very useful to a preacher off of the railroad and situated as Brother Williams is.

The congregation at Fulton, Ky., continues to grow steadily. Two were added to the congregation on the first Sunday in March. Our protracted meeting will begin on the first Sunday in May. Brother F. W. Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., will do the preaching.

Brother J. P. Lowery, of Senatobia, Miss., is endeavoring to enlist twelve congregations in Tennessee, Kentucky. or anywhere else he can, to pay as much as one hundred dollars each during the year to support a missionary in Mississippi. He realizes that this great State has been much neglected, and we sincerely wish him success in this worthy undertaking.

"Gone to Heaven."

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

Often at funeral services and in obituaries it is stated that the deceased has "gone to heaven." I do not know for sure, but I have thought that we do not go to heaven when we die, but that that is to take place when Christ comes and raises the dead. Then I do not know that we can really be sure of the destiny of a deceased one. We may say that we think he is saved and will live with God forever, but to say that we know such a one to be saved and in heaven is a rather broad statement. To know a thing settles it as a fact. I would not say that such a person is not saved, but neither would I say he is. for I do not know. Some who speak and write such things are, of course, much wiser than I am, yet I fear they are really mistaken about it. I have read but few obituaries in which it was not directly stated or strongly implied that the departed one was saved, if anything at all was said on that particular subject. That leads me to think that if such is true, then surely falling from grace is not a very often occurrence, or, if it is, they climb back before death comes. So it seems to be a habit to brag on the dead and to speak of their salvation, otherwise it would be repulsive. But all habits are not good. One who does as the word teaches and dies in the Lord has the hope of life eternal. It is so promised in the Book. Now I feel sure that no man on carth is able to judge in this respect. know my own heart, and no one but God knows as much as I do about it. A man can act a hypocrite, and yet he cannot fool God, although he may fool man. I believe that when we die we fall into the hands of a just God.

"Sinner, Decide To-Night." BY MRS. R. H. ROGERS.

("Thyself hath decided it, so will thy judgment be.")

Jsus is calling now for thee. Turn from sin away; Yield ye to Christ and from Satan flee. Why wilt thou yet delay?

Sinner, decide, O come to-night-Full of trust in God,

Happy in heart, be made pure and white,

By Jesus' precious blood.

Lovingly still the Savior stands, Pleading with thy heart;

Patiently knocks with his bleeding hands

Unwilling to depart.

His name alone can save you from Darkness and despair;
All ye distressed, heavy laden, come,
And haste his love to share.

Sinner, salvation's precious day Soon will ended be:

And you, unsaved, will be lost for aye, Doomed through eternity.

REFRAIN.

Sinner, decide this very night, Say the path you'll choose; Come unto Christ, he's the way, the light.

O, canst thou still refuse?

The Gifts of God.

How blessed and marvelous are the gifts of God, dearly beloved! Life in immortality, splendor in righteousness, truth in boldness, faith in confidence, temperance in sanctification! And all these things fall under our apprehension. What, then, think ye, are the things preparing for them that patiently await him? The Creator and Father of the ages, the All-Holy One himself, knoweth their number and their beauty. Let us, therefore, contend, that we may be found in the number of those that patiently await him, to the end that we may be partakers of his promised gifts. But how shall this be, dearly beloved? If our mind be fixed through faith toward God; if we seek out those things which are well pleasing and acceptable unto him; if we accomplish such things as beseem his faultless will and follow the way of truth. casting off from ourselves all unrighteousness and iniquity, covetousness. strifes, malignties and deceits, whisperings and backbitings, hatred of God, pride and arrogance, vainglory, and inhospitality. For they that do these things are hateful to God; and not only they that do them, but they also that consent unto them .- Clemens Romanus Hope, March 10.—Brother Brooks Stell, of Delight, has recently been laboring for the cause of Christ at Henry's Chapel, near Hope. He preached several discourses and taught several good Bible lessons. The interest was good and much good was done. Brother Stell does his work well and is thought well of wherever he goes. -John M. Miami, March 11.—We had two splendid audiences yesterday. There was one baptism and one put in his membership. The work moves on slowly, but surely, and we expect to be able to do more as the strength comes.—H. M. Phillips.

Franklin, March 11 .- It may be of interest to some of the readers of the Gospel Advocate to know that I am located at Franklin, and will labor with the church in this town and surrounding country. I have been here two weeks, having but recently moved from Nashville, Tenn., where I labored with the South College Street Church almost four years. I have many warm friends in the College Street Church that I regret to leave, but it seemed best to me to undertake the work here. I find the church here interested and enthusiastic. This is the home of one of God's noblemen, M. L. Moore, who preached for the Franklin church eleven years. He now preaches each Sunday in Bowling Green, but his family attend the services here. and there is no more sympathetic supporter of the church and of my work here than Brother Moore. About forty members and friends of the church gave my family and me a "shower" of welcome and of substantial edibles last Friday evening. We are very grateful for everything received. At this informal meeting in our home, Brother Moore was the spokesman for the church, and in a very feeling manner made us welcome to the town and the congregation. We are anxious to do a great work for God here, and covet the prayers of our friends in the church everywhere. H. T. King.

Oklahoma.

Tulsa, March 11.-Brother W. M. Neece and wife, of Knoxville, Tenn., have been with us for several weeks. They have been a great help to us, as Brother Neece is "some singer." Brother J. G. Allen (formerly of Nashville, Tenn., but now of Muskogee, Okia.) and wife visited us on March 3. Brother Allen preached for us at the morning service. Brother Walter Witt, of Picher, was here yesterday. He will be with us regularly, nothing preventing. The church here has received a few donations from individuals and congregations who have seen fit to help us out in the fight we have to make here. These contributions were much appreciated and were used as requested. We have started a building fund, which is growing steadily, but slowly. We hope to have is growing a building of our own in another year. We appreciate all that has been done for us. These who are not here cannot even imagine the proposition we are up against here. A cosmopolitan city of seventy-five thousand population, and which has grown to this size in a very few years. There is almost every conceivable "denomination" here, and it is an extremely wicked place. Most persons are interested in making money, rather than saving My address is 415 South Houssouls. ton Street .- T. M. Leslie.

Chattanooga, March 11. - Brother Hoover reports good crowds and splendid interest and enthusiasm at Cen-Central is very mistral yesterday. sionary. Brother Hoover is often found teaching the men at workshops during the noon hour. Again he is at the other side of the city telling the sweet story in the hospital. Yesterday afternoon he preached at Patten's Chapel, a mission point, six miles out in the country. Brother Brooks was at Cowart Street. The writer was at St. Elmo; two confessions-one, a lad in the uniform. The St. Elmo breth-ren begin their revival the second Sunday in April, conducted by the writer. Several mission meetings will be held this summer in various sections of the city, for which we will use a tent.-F, L. Wallace.

Henrietta, March 8 .- The meeting which I began here on the fourth Lord's day in February still goes on, and I expect to continue it till the fourth Sunday in March. The attendance is growing better, but there is a concerted effort being made to keep people away. The sects are deter-mined that I shall not establish a church of Christ in this godless town, while I am determined that I will. I am receiving help and encouragement from the brethren at Bluegrove and Wichita Falls, with some support from other places; but if I succeed here, I must have more help. I want it un derstood that I am not going to stop till the work is firmly established, if we have to live on bread and water. I had to do my own singing, praying, and preaching, and it was fast proving too hard on me; but a noble brother from a distance came to my relief and said: "Get a singer, and I will give twenty-five dollars on his support." I got him, and now I must raise twenty-five dollars more for him. Will you help? Brother T. S. Teddlie, of Alba, is leading the songs, and he is super-fine. I wish preachers would keep him at it. But, brethren, you must help me to get this work on a sound basis, and you can if you will try. Do not wait for somebody else; put your check in a letter and send it. Every cent I receive will be reported in the papers at the close of the meeting .-Tice Elkins.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall. Mich.

Dear Sir: Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years, and have always had trouble with it till I got your appliance. It is very easy to wear, fit neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on: it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable Godsend to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it. My rupture is now all healed up, and nothing ever did it but your appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself, I will say a good word for your appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am.

Yours very sincerely.

CURED IN SIX MONTHS AFTER EIGHTEEN YEARS.

C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir: I never wore the appliance a minute over six months, and was cured sound and well; and I want to say no man ever did any harder work than I did while I was using it—I hauled forty perch of rock too big for any man to lift. I was ruptured eighteen years, and words cannot tell how thankful I am. Use my name if you like.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Sir: Your appliance did all you claim for the little boy, and more, for it cured him sound and well. We let him wear it for about a year in all, although it cured him three months after he had begun to wear it. We had tried several other remedies and got no relief; and I shall certainly recommend it to friends, for we surely owe it to you.

Yours respectfully,

CHILD CURED IN FOUR MONTHS.

21 Jansen Street, Dubuque, Ia. Brooks Rupture Appliance Company.

Gentlemen: The baby's rupture is altogether cured, thanks to your appliance, and we are so thankful to you. If we could only have known of it sconer, our little boy would not have had to suffer nearly as much as he did. He wore your brace a little over four months, and has not worn it now for six weeks.

Why Ten Reasons

YOU SHOULD SEND FOR BROOKS RUPTURE APPLIANCE.

- It is absolutely the only appliance of the kind on the market today, and in it are embodied the principles that inventors have sought after for years.
- 2. The appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of position.
- Being an air cushion of soft rub-ber, it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation.
- 4. Unlike the ordinary so-called "pads" used in other trusses, it is not cumbersome or ungainly.
- It is small, soft, and pilable, and positively cannot be detected through the clothing.
- The soft, pliable bands holding the appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a barness.
- 7. There is nothing about it to get foul; and when it becomes solled, it can be washed without injuring it in the least.
- There are no metal springs in the appliance to torture one by cut-ting and bruising the flesh.
- 3. All of the material of which the appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe appliance to wear.
- 18. My reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and my prices are so reasonable, my terms so fair, that there certainly should be no hesitancy in sending free coupon to-day.

The Day's Work.

I desire this week to present a scriptural lesson that has its foundation in the prayer which Eliezer offered when he was dispatched by his master, Abraham, in search of a wife for the patriarch's son. You will find the story of this prayer with all its charming Oriental setting in the twenty-fourth chapter of Genesis. When Eliezer, the eldest and most trustworthy of his master's house, came with his caravan of camels to the city of Nahor, he humbly knelt and prayed for the success of his mission. The gist of his prayer was this: "O Jehovah, the God of my master Abraham, send me, I pray thee, good speed this day." This petition suggests to our hearts the subject, "The Day's Work." Bishop Hall once said: "Every day is a little life, and our whole life is but a day repeated." With this thought in mind, to lose a day is prodigal, to misspend it is desperate. We could not adopt a better rule for Christian service than that of Charles Wesley, who used to measure his usefulness at the end of each day.

"At evening, to myself I say:
Soul, where hast thou gleaned to-day?
Thy labors how bestowed?
What hast thou rightly said or done?
What grace attained or knowledge won
In following after God?"

Begin With Prayer.

Each day's journey should be commenced with prayer. Like David, we should say: "In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up." (Ps. 5: 3.) Like Daniel, who prayed systematically, we should retain a prayerful spirit throughout the entire day, thus obeying the apostolic injunction to "pray without ceasing." A legend tells us that the stony Egyptian, Memnon, made music when the first rays of the sun kindled on his flinty brow. Surely the devout heart of a Christian should not be mute when God causes the outgoings of his mornings to rejoice!

Private devotions lead to household worship. No Christian government can be maintained, no healthy public conscience can be preserved, no true philosophy can be promoted, no wholesome church life can exist, without the strong foundation of family worship. Dr. Theodore Cuyler has expressed the importance of this duty in one pungent sentence: "No prelude to the day is so fitting, so impressive, and so potent in its influence as the union of household hearts round the throne of grace."

The Cheerful Note.

Devotions over, we should begin each day's work with cheerfulness. The success of the whole day depends a great deal upon a cheerful start. We have often tried to be cheerful in the matter of our contributions, because the saying, "God loveth a cheeful giver" (2 Cor. 9: 7) has been so many times repeated that it has become an axiom. The Scriptures not only enjoin cheerfulness in regard to giving, but they demand it as an accompaniment to all the duties of the Christian life. On several occasions did our Savior speak to his disciples and to the others the reassuring words: "Be of good cheer." (Matt. 9: 2; 14: 27; Mark 6: 50; John 16: 33.) "Wondrous," says the philosopher Addison, "is the strength of cheerfulness. Altogether past calculations are the powers of endurance." How fitly is this illustrated in the life of the apostle Paul! During the storm at sea, when even the chief captain feared lest he might be torn to pieces, the Lord stood by him in the night and said, as he had spoken to his other disciples: "Be of good cheer." (Acts 23: 11.) Five days later, in his speech before Felix, making a futile plea for his own life. we hear the apostle Paul say: "I cheerfully make my defense." (Acts 24: 10.) There has been vouchsafed to us the same helping hand, the same comforting message that created this fortitude in the life of the great apostle. Can we not, then, bring to the fulfillment of each duty, even though it be an ordeal, the same cheerful spirit?

The Mission of the Church.

(A missionary sermon preached by Isaac C. Hoskins, of Florence, Ala., on January 6.)

"The grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men, instructing us, to the intent that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world."

According to the great apostle, Christ "gave some [to be] apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ." (Eph. 4: 11, 12.)

The general work of "perfecting the saints" is divided into "the work of ministering" and "building up of the body of Christ." Thus is the work of every true church divided: there is the work it does for itself and the work it does for the world. It is exceedingly important that the individual members and the individual church be builded up, keep brightly burning the lamp of the spirit of service.

Every church needs to establish itself in the community as a living organism; as a pillar and support of the truth; as a light not to be obscured. But granted such a life in any church, it will go out seeking the work it was appointed to do. Never before has there been such a call on the church for work for the salvation of the race; and never has there been such an opportunity for the education of our great Commander's last command.

All the lines of providential opportunity are converging to the accomplishment of the world's redemption. The barriers of race prejudice are breaking down, sealed empires are opening, and the ends of the earth are being brought together that the door of faith may be opened to the nations. This horrible war is breaking down barriers, causing the soldiers in the trenches to study the New Testament as never before. Never before has there as many New Testaments been given away; never before have they been read as now. The claims of men may not be more pressing than they always have been, but they have grown more clamorous; the Macedonian cry, 'Come over and help us,' may not be more urgent than it has always been, but it has grown multitudinous as the voice of many waters. In the claims of humanity may the church recognize the claims of her Lord; and in the cry of humanity, the call of her Lord,"

The grace of God: what? A fact of history, a fact of history that transpired on this green earth that has to do with man's sin, a fact animated by a spirit that has life-giving power. (Luke 2: 11-14; John 3: 16; Rom. 1: 16, 17, Luke 19: 10.) The glad tidings "must be told;" and while of such tremendous and far-reaching importance, any child of God whose heart is filled with love and whose mind is filled with a knowledge of God and the teaching of his book may become a conveyancer of the grace of God to his fellow man. And this is a duty which should be regarded as a privilege. We should be imitators of those early disciples who went everywhere preaching the gospel. O wondrous thought, that God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, and angels are deeply interested in the salvation of men!

The grace of God: what it brings—"bringing salvation." It is God's power to save; all classes, in any clime and of every age. It saves the whole man—physical, moral, and spiritual; "soberly," with reference to self; "righteously," with reference to others; "godly," with reference to God. It makes better citizens, fathers, mothers, children, servants, masters, subjects, rulers.

The book of Acts may very properly be called the "book of conversions," for "the cases recorded represent all the different grades of human society, from idolatrous peasants up to priests, proconsuls, and kings. They represent all the degrees of intellectual and religious culture, all the common occupations of life, and all the countries and languages of the then known world, thus showing the adaptation of the one system of life and salvation to all the inhabitants of the earth."

For whom is this grace of God manifested? "To all men "-not the rich, the poor, or any class, but for "al! men." The universality of God's grace is comprehended, is set forth, in the words of inspiration by Luke. After speaking of the first fruits of the gospel as three thousand, he says "the number of the men came to be about five thousand." "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and soul." "And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." "And there also came together the multitude." "And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem exceedingly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." "And the multitudes gave heed with one accord unto the things that were spoken by Philip." "But when they believed Philip preaching good tidings concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." "So the church throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria had peace, being edified; and, walking in the fear of God and in the comfort of the Holy Spirit, was multiplied."

But why go further? Suffice it to say that Luke seems to rejoice in using such words as "number," "multitude," "multitudes," and "multiplied," showing the grace of God was manifested to all men.

Testimony of a noted lecturer as to the needs of Japan: "Japan needs the Christian religion; a nation must have some religion, and she has outgrown Buddhism. ideals presented by these two systems are in many respects diametrically opposed to each other. One looks forward, the other looks backward; one regards life as a blessing to be enjoyed and an opportunity to be improved, the other sees in it only evil from which escape should be sought; one crowns this life with immortality, the other adds to a gloomy existence the darker night of annihilation; one offers faith as the inspiration to noble deeds, the other presents a plan for the perfecting of self with no sense of responsibility to God to prompt it or promise of reward to encourage it; one enlarges the sympathies and links each individual life with all other human beings, the other turns the thought inward in search of perpetual calm."

Statement of a lawyer deduced from ample opportunity for observation, consequently wide of vision: "The quality and efficiency of the work of the church is very largely determined by the degree of interest it has manifested in extending the borders, in preaching the gospel to the regions beyond."

We are informed that in the sixteenth century the sudden and splendid promise of the Reformation was checked by its failure to understand the commission of the church. The counter Reformation and the Jesuits pressed in where the reformers ought to have trodden. In the seventeenth century Francke and Cromwell put the trumpet to their mouth, and the missionary thought was born amid signs of political and social regeneration. In the eighteenth century came a skeptical and deistical reaction; the missionary thought died away, except in Denmark and among the Moravians; but even in that humble form it was the spark that kindled the evangelical revival in England. The nineteenth century demonstrated the close connection and the exact ratio between religious work at home and the promotion of missions abroad.

Whenever the individual members of the church understand that this is the chief end for which the congregation exists-it is only when this truth masters them that they will give to missions their true place. As they see that every believer is called to witness to Christ's love and claim; how a healthy spiritual life depends on the share the believer takes in work for his Lord; when they see that the church is to make the extension of Christ's kingdom the highest object of its existence-it is then and thus that they will be missionary in spirit. "How long has this gospel been known in England?" asked a Buddhist priest, after he accepted the truth in Christ. He was told: "For some hundreds of years." "What!" said he, amazed. "Is it possible that for hundreds of years you have had the knowledge of these glad tidings in your possession, and yet have only now come to preach it to us? My father sought after the truth for more than twenty years, and died without finding it. O why did you not come sooner?" It is God's "Intent that now unto the principalities and the powers in the heavenly places might be made known through the church the manifold wisdom of God." (Eph. 3: 10; see, also, Matt. 28: 19, 20; Mark 16: 15, 16.)

As the Conqueror of death and the grave stood on Olivet ready for the triumphal entry into heaven and felt the burden of a world's sin weighing down humanity, holding his hands above the heads of the men who were to be the first leaders in his church, he issued the great commission, the marching orders of the church. The whole will of God concerning the duty of Christians to the unconverted world is crowded into that commission; and that order has never been canceled. What are you going to do about it? In 1796, when the Presbyterian body passed a resolution-"To spread abroad the knowledge of the gospel among the barbarous and heathen nations seems to be highly preposterous, in so far as the philosophy and learning must in the nature of things take the precedence, and that while there remains at home a single individual without the means of religious knowledge, to propagate it abroad would be improper and absurd "-then it was that Dr. Erskine called to the moderator of the assembly, "Rax me that Bible," and read to the assembly the great commission, which fell like a clap of thunder upon them. The trumpet call had come. "Rax me that Bible" awoke Scotland and produced Duff, Livingston, Moffett, and Chalmers. Captain Mahan, America's great authority on sea power, whose book has been used by Germany and England, is quoted as follows: "No war was ever yet won by mere defense, least of all a war of conquest, which that of Christianity is; the only thing which can cause the decadence of the church is the failure of Christians to present Jesus Christ as he is to those who are not Christians."

There is in the Southern Seas a little island where is the grave of a missionary, and the epitaph is: "When he came in 1848, there was not a Christian; when he left in 1872, there was not a single heathen." So may it be said of this island planet in the ocean of the universe: "When he (the divine missionary) came, there was not a Christian; when he comes back again, there will not be a heathen"

"Salvation from Sin." This book is composed of the editorials of David Lipscomb, collated by J. W. Shepherd, and contains many of the best and most profound thoughts of its author. It contains an index to subjects and an index to scriptures. Contains 440 large pages; printed in large, clear type. Price, $1.50.

"Where Is Your Faith?"

BY R. D. SMITH.

While crossing the Sea of Galilee one day, a storm swept down upon them, filling the vessel with water and the hearts of the apostles with fears. They awoke the Master, saying, "We perish;" and he arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water, and there was a calm. And he said unto them: "Where is your faith?"

As we behold to-day the awful tempest lowering over the world, we are likely to be filled with fears as were they; and yet in Him who stilled the raging storm on Galilee there is a refuge for every troubled soul.

"And a man shall be as a hiding place from the wind. and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." So wrote the prophet of the Man of Galilee, in whom the multitudes of tempest-tossed souls found a refuge while he lived among men, and in the faith of whom the millions, for almost two thousand years, have found a covert from the storms of life.

But, my brethren, I have wondered, if Jesus should suddenly appear in the midst of the world tempest, if he would not have just cause to inquire of us: "Where is your faith?"

A time of trial is this, and the man of faith is called upon to suffer for righteousness; but let us remember that the way of the cross is the only way to the crown, and that this example of patient suffering is the mightiest force in the universe to move men.

Take out of the Bible this sublime theme, and you rob the Book of its power. It is this thrilling story that has moved the word in all ages and nerved others to go forth and die for righteousness. It is said that when an ancient martyr fell, a multitude rose up to take his place. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

"By the light of burning heretics Christ's bleeding feet I track,

Toiling up new Calvaries ever with the cross that turns not back.

And these mounts of anguish number how each generation learned

One new word of that grand Credo which in prophet heart hath burned.

Since the first man stood God-conquered with his face to heaven upturned."

So it is when men are willing to die for righteousness; their unfaltering faith becomes a source of comfort and strength to others and nerves them to go forth with stronger zeal. Peter and John had been arrested, beaten, imprisoned, and threatened with death, for preaching in the name of Jesus; but their faith was unshaken, for "daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." By their unswerving faith they proved a powerful inspiration to the persecuted Christians of Jerusalem, and mightly the word grew.

What strength it must have imparted to the brethren at Lystra when, after being stoned and cast out of the city for dead, Paul, with the marks of the stones upon him, stood up and confirmed them and told them that "with much tribulation we must enter into the kingdom!" What zeal it must have stirred in the brethren at Philippi when Paul and Silas, fresh from their imprisonment, with the many stripes upon them, came speaking words of comfort!

The brethren at Cesarea must have been mightily moved at the unflinching faith of Paul. They tried to persuade him not to go to Jerusalem, fearing for him. And Paul said to them: "What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." "O for a faith that will not shrink!"

Such men as these were a mighty fortress to others in days of old, and their story thrills us now; but we feel the need of such sublime examples of faith in men to-day. The good and wise men in the church, by their unstaggering faith, are a strength to us weaker ones. How, like frightened lambs to their shepherds, we would flee to them for shelter in time of trouble! So fled the terror-stricken twelve to Jesus and found a covert from the tempest.

To him, indeed, we may come at all times and find a refuge of safety, but a firm stand upon the part of the abler brethren will help us to face the storm with a stronger courage. Paul himself, though he had weathered so many storms, and, like the Master, had become a refuge for the terror-stricken upon the sea, thanked God and took courage when met by the brethren from Rome as he journeyed there to a prison. And he tells us that many of the brethren of Rome, "waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear."

We need to hear it constantly—that story of a faith that "stopped the lions' mouths" and that "quenched the violence of fire"—yes, that faith of the apostles, which bonds and afflictions and death could not conquer; that story of the sublime faith of Polycarp, that neither the wild beast, the sword, nor the fire could shake. Tell often of Luther, that fearless man of faith, who would go to the pope of Rome's palace though every tile were a devil. Tell us the story of David Lipscomb, that modest unassuming man of God, who passed through the greatest crisis of our country, living in the midst of contending factions, and kept the faith inviolate.

But we need, too, the example of an unwavering faith in our great leaders of to-day; for, beholding their faith and courage in the face of danger, we, "waxing confident" by this, shall be more "bold to speak the word without fear." Stand, my brother! Stand! It will make us strong.

It is only by a faith that dares to die for the right that the cause of Christ has been brought to flood tide in every time; and only by such fearless faith shall Christianity yet conquer.

It is said that during a great persecution of the Christians at Rome the apostate Julian, beholding the fortitude with which they bore their punishment, was moved with admiration, and exclaimed: "There, Galilean, thou hast conquered!"

Christianity's fort has ever been suffering for righteousness. By this the kingdom of God proved too strong for prisons, fire, chains, and death, and by this shall yet triumph.

"Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record

One death grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the Word;

Truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne:

Yet that scaffold sways the future, and behind the dim unknown

Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own."

Hence, as we stand to-day looking into the future, and behold the awful tempest ever gathering blackness, may we not, seized with terror, cry, "Master, we perish," and hear his rebuke: "Where is your faith?" But may we, with an unfaltering faith in our Captain, stand unfilnchingly till he has calmed the storm.

> "O for a faith that will not shrink, Though pressed by every foe, That will not tremble on the brink Of any earthly wee."

"Master, the tempest is raging;
The billows are tossing high;
The sky is o'ershadowed with blackness;
No shelter or help is nigh."

The Dream of the Ages.

Though every day now bears a stain,
Though pride and greed are regnant still,
The dream abides: that right shall reign,
That good shall vanquish every ill.

The men of earth shall grieve at sin And beauteous shall their vision be; All souls shall trust the light within, In reverence and purity.

What though the years be long and dark, And men be found of little worth? Still glows the living, God-born spark In every God-made soul of earth;

A spark that through the distant years Shall grow unto a ruling sun: The kingdom day by day appears, The tasks of God are never done.

The dream, the dream! All else shall pass— The lust for gold, the pomp of kings, The pride of power, which fade as grass; The whole wide universe of things.

The dream of God—that dream of light
Which lit the prophet's sacred page—
To-day is vanquishing the night,
To bless the world from age to age.
—Thomas Curtis Clark.

He Beat Me Home.

When for a little walk we went,
On errand or on pleasure bent,
As we drew near our vine-clad gate,
My always-present walking mate
Would slip his chubby hand from mine
And, toddling on past shrub and vine,
Would turn and say, with baby wit:
"I beat 'oo home, a 'ittle bit!"

God was so good to him and me
As to permit our lives to be Like those of two frank, boyhood chums
Together solving life's hard sums.
I, as the elder, sometimes knew
Where in his path lay bog or slough,
So I might point it out in time
To save him from the fall and grime.

To-day some kind friends came and spoke Gently to me. And then awoke A slumbering memory of then: I dreamed he was a babe again; That he before my feet had sped To reach our door a step ahead—Through trembling lips I whisper it: "He beat me home—a little bit."

Our many contributors to the War Sufferers' Fund will doubtless be pleased to be informed that a large part of the money is now being expended to relieve the sufferings of people who live in and around Bethlehem and Jerusalem, in the very country where our Savior went about doing good. The following telegram sent to the headquarters of the American Committee by Secretary Lansing indicates the appalling condition that exists and some of the measures that have been taken for relief:

From Trowbridge, Jerusalem via Cairo, quote your first remittance bought two hundred tons of rice, wheat, medical supplies. Thousands thank America. Workers now in Jerusalem. Bethlehem clinic, Hebron hospital, Jerusalem dispensary and orphanage with one hundred children opened. Over two hundred and fifty in Jaffa orphanage. Food very scarce, also fuel and clothing. Furniture, clothing, everything being sold, sacrificed for food. Fifty thousand sufferers directly accessible, Jerusalem. Sixteen hundred destitute, Bethlehem. Refugees flocking to Jaffa. Relief came necessary. Sickness, destitution serious especially in cities. Funds in hand very inadequate. Refugee hospital Gaza crowded; more required. Seed, grain, clothing, medical supplies can be secured in Egypt for Palestine. British military authorities offer all possible transportation facilities and urge immedate action. Conditions in Syria appalling. Cabie decision unquote.

ROBERT LANSING, Secretary of State.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.
