Brother Smith admits the New Testament throws restrictions around the Lord's table, but it recognizes but two classes of people—children of God and children of this world. All right, what restrictions does the New Testament place around the Lord's table? I say it is for one who has repented of his sins, believed in Jesus Christ, been baptized into the body of Christ, and made a member of the same. All such have a divine and scriptural right to approach the Lord's table. What do you say, Brother Smith?

I know you think it is restricted to the children of God. I know again that you teach that one must believe, repent, confess, and be baptized, and then he is a member of the church of God, or body of Christ. You don't believe the Lord's Supper is for sinners; therefore you and I are agreed on the restrictions laid down in the New Testament around the Lord's table. We further agree it is not for sinners.

I will not violate these laws of approach to his Supper, neither will I encourage my neighbors who are not with me in faith to violate these laws.

There is but one way of life, and not one of these sects you have named has complied with that way you teach—not one. Do you commune with any or all of these when afforded an opportunity to do so? Do you invite such to commune with you? I do neither. I could not and be faithful to them and my Lord. Can you?

"Some kind of faith"—maybe I do not express it right; but why whip around on that? I asked you "if believing God is the same as believing in God?" This you dare not answer in the affirmative, and you will not answer in the negative. You just beat around the bush is all. You know, or should know, that Jesus Christ is the only true object of the Christian's faith. This is the faith I teach begins and follows repentance toward God. You may call it "kind" or "degree," it is what I am writing about.

Why did you introduce the chief rulers here to prove that faith precedes repentance? They could not have believed on him if they had not first turned from their sins, for no man can accept Christ by faith till he turns from his former master. Christ and the devil will not dwell together. "Repent ye, and be baptized in the name (trusting in the anointed One for, or unto) the remission of sins." If it means the actual remission of sins, then it means trusting in the One anointed to remit sins. To be sure, you do not believe one can have such without trust in Christ.

Christ did not reveal what he does to infants. He is all-wise and will save the dying infant. How do you know he does not teach it to believe in him? You don't, do you? How do you know the child is born holy? The Bible does not say so, but teaches the reverse. "By nature a child of wrath." (Eph. 2: 3.) Inasmuch as neither of us knows more than is revealed, had we not better discuss revealed things, that we may know how to do the words of this law, and let unrevealed and secret things, which belong to God alone, go? I have one text giving the infant's state by birth, and you have not one on your side of the argument.

On the question of communion Brother Moore has this to say: "I say it is for one who has repented of his sins, believed in Jesus Christ, been baptized into the body of Christ, and made a member of the same. All such have a divine and scriptural right to approach the Lord's table.

What do you say, Brother Smith?" Well, I have this to say: If Brother Moore has not, in this statement, made baptism essential to becoming a child of God, then language cannot be made to imply anything at all. Certainly he will not say the Lord's Supper is for any except God's children; and since he says only those who have been "baptized into the body of Christ" have a divine right to eat of it, he virtually says only those who have been baptized into the body of Christ are God's children. I knew he would have to take this position or else be in the ridiculous attitude of excluding some of God's children from their Father's table. He has chosen the only consistent ground, but in so doing he has been compelled to admit that baptism is essential to becoming a child of God, unless, indeed, he will now turn and repudiate the only logical deductions from the premises. But, in such a case, he would involve himself in worse confusion than ever. The matter stands thus: (1) Brother Moore places baptism between individuals and the Lord's Supper, and says only the baptized have a divine right to eat of it. (2) Since the Lord's Supper is for God's children, it follows that only the baptized are God's children. Now, my brother, if you go back on this, please give us the scriptures authorizing you to refuse some of God's children a place at the Father's table.

But again. Since it takes baptism to make one "a member of the body of Christ," as Brother Moore positively affirms that it does, then he makes baptism essential to becoming a child of God, unless he will contend that one is a child of God apart from the body of Christ. But to make such a claim would place my friend in rather an awkward situation, for these reasons: (1) There is only one body (Eph. 4: 4), and that is a spiritual body, over which Christ is Head (Col. 1: 18). (2) The only way to have a vital and living union with the Head of the body, which is Christ, is to be a member of his body. (3) The only way to become a member of Christ's body is to be baptized into it. I thank my friend for coming out so clearly on this point, because in so doing he goes to record as teaching the essentiality of baptism in order to be saved. I am also glad to note that in order to be scripturally baptized one must be baptized into the "body of Christ," and not into some denomination. With the statement from Brother Moore, "been baptized into the body of Christ," he must repudiate the baptism of those who were baptized into the Baptist Church, unless he claims the Baptist Church is the body of Christ. But this he will hardly attempt to do. Hence, in so far as he is concerned, those he baptizes must do something after being baptized in order to become members of the Baptist

He asks me some questions about those with whom he supposes I commune. There are four things necessary to scriptural communion: The proper person—a baptized believer; the proper elements—unleavened bread and fruit of the vine; the proper day—the first day of the week; the proper design—discerning the Lord's body and blood. I do not invite any one to the Lord's table, but frankly state what the Scriptures teach on the subject.

I knew when I introduced the case of the rulers (John 12: 42, 43) that it would completely upset my friend's doctrine of repentance before faith, but had no idea he would go to the extreme he has. Of course I knew he would have to take those miserable sinners to his bosom or else repudiate his doctrine, but had no idea he would do the former. Poor man! He has simply been driven to desperation in his efforts to defend a false doctrine. He asks: "Why did you introduce the chief rulers here to prove that faith precedes repentance?" Why, simply because it proves it-that is the reason. Note the attitude he assumes. Here are people he admits believed on Christ, but would not confess him because they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God, and yet he says they were penitent! Brother Moore, is that the kind of repentance the Baptists teach-a repentance that will not lead people to confess Christ, a repentance that leaves one loving the praise of men more than the praise of God! Is that Baptist doctrine? I thought you Baptists contended for a change of heart, but the position you now assume leads you to recognize and fellowship people whose hearts are far from the Lord. Take it back, my friend, before it gets cold, and apologize to the Baptist Church for thus representing it. And those chief rulers were penitent! Eh? I knew the case would be too big for you to handle with your doctrine of repentance before faith. I knew, also, that when I showed that salvation by grace involved faith, your doctrine of infant depravity was gone, and that you would have to admit that infants were safe or they could not be saved by grace, for the simple reason that they could not exercise faith. No faith, no grace, and your "totally depraved" infant must be doomed, world without end. And now see how he tries to evade the consequences of his doctrine: "How do you know he does not teach it to believe in him? You don't, do you?" Now, is not that fine? My friend, your position requires you to show that he does teach the infant to believe in him, and not be asking me such questions. I shall await your proof; and if you have any, let us have it. I wonder what position my friend will not take when he gets into a tight place!

Cain-His Punishment.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

Cain's punishment is expressed by Jehovah in no uncertain language. "And now cursed art thou from the ground, which hath opened its mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand; when thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee its strength; a fugitive and a wanderer shalt thou be in the earth." (Gen. 4: 11, 12.) He should be expelled from the presence of God and should go groaning and trembling upon the earth. The horrors of his crime should ever haunt him and the sting of his conscience should ever lash him, and the presence of God should never greet him. No state or condition out of hell could be more awful and torturing. No wonder Cain, from deep anguish of heart and gloomy despair of soul, should exclaim: "My punishment is greater than I can bear!"

He was driven out. How reluctantly and unwillingly he slowly obeys the flat of Jehovah! Some contend that he was driven from the altar that was erected by Abel; others claim that he was expelled from that particular place where God had manifested his presence. But the record states that "Cain went out from the presence of Jehovah, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden." This indicates that Jehovah hid his face from the murderer. How sad his condition!

The very presence of Jehovah is punishment to a sinner. Impurity, unrighteousness, and ungodliness cannot stand in the presence of purity, righteousness, and holiness; sin cannot stand in the presence of God without feeling guilt and rebuke. This has ever been true. A guilty conscience shrinks and cowers and wishes to dodge and hide while in the presence of innocence and purity. The sinner does not seek the company and society of the pious and godly. To confine them in the presence of those who are pure and holy is a punishment. There is an adage that we like our opposites, but this is not true in regard to character. The same thing that creates the pain of the punishment of the guilty provides the hope and happiness of the innocent. Adam and Eve, when they heard the voice of Jehovah, walking in the garden in the cool of the day, hid them selves from the presence of Jehovah among the trees of the garden. (Gen. 3: 8.) The presence of Jehovah is a rebuke and a punishment to everything that is out of harmony with his nature. The power and purity of Jehovah are keenly felt by all impure and unholy things. The presence of Christ in the midst of wicked men was a rebuke to them, and they did not seek his company for congenial association.

Not only is the presence of God a punishment to Cain, but, on the other hand, to be banished from his presence is also punishment. To be driven out from the presence of the Lord is the acme of punishment. "At the revelation of the Lord Jesus from heaven with the angels of his power in flaming fire, rendering vengeance to them that know not God, and to them that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus: who shall suffer punishment, even eternal destruction from the face of the Lord and from the glory of his might." (2 Thess. 1: 8, 9.) To be banished or to be driven out from the presence of God and to remain separated from the presence of God forever will be eternal punishment to a sinner. Cain was placed in a dilemma: to remain in the presence of God is punishment, and to be driven from his presence is punishment. It matters not what attitude the sinner may sustain toward God to-day. he is placed in the same dilemma; he stands condemned before God and all righteousness, and must be conscious of an ultimate punishment that must be brought upon him at the end. It matters not where the evildoer may go or what attitude he may be in-the presence of God at judgment or banished from his presence-he still rests under the condemnation of God. How sad is his lot! the world without God and without hope so long as he remains in sin. Cain was to be "a fugitive and a wanderer." Like Noah's dove, he could find no rest either for body or for conscience. What a vivid picture of punishment of sin! Those conscious of guilt to-day suffer if their conscience is not seared as with a hot iron. "The serpent of remorse" will forever hiss in memory's ear, causing the guilty to flee, shrink, dodge, and squirm, trying in every conceivable way to hide his sin and to hide himself from the presence of righteous men and God.

Cain's guilty conscience haunted him, and he thought that every one could see his guilt. He said: "I shall be a fugitive and a wanderer in the earth; and it will come to pass, that whosoever findeth me will slay me." (Gen. 4: 14.) He had a continual apprehension that he would be slain and that every man's hand would be against him. He also had the awful apprehension of God's judgments resting upon him. He had attempted to take revenge on Jehovah for rejecting his offering by destroying Jehovah's representative; but revenge, like "a devilish engine," recoils on him that employs it. His revenge is like the flame of Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace-catches hold of and destroys the ministers of vengeance instead of its object. O, the suffering and punishment that he must endure! He suffers far more by the tortures of his own conscience than he had caused Abel to suffer in his death. Soon after the fatal blow was received by Abel, death ensued and his suffering was over; but Cain's intense agony continues for an indefinite time. The murderer suffers more than the murdered. The awakened conscience gives ample vengeance upon the offender at length and amply vindicates the cause of both God and man. Cain feels himself excluded from the gracious presence of God and liable to fall by the hand of every assailant.

We are enabled to see in the punishment of Cain the mercy of God. God reveals himself in his attitude toward the sinner as much as he does toward the righteous; we learn as much about the character of God in the punishment of the wicked as we do in the blessings of the faithful. Mercy is one of the attributes of Jehovah, and it is revealed in all of the actions of Jehovah. All of the attributes of Jehovah are in consistent harmony. One attribute does not cease to exist while another attribute is being manifested, but all the attributes of Jehovah are operating in all of the works of Jehovah. So we may look for the mercy of Jehovah in the vengeance and punishment executed by Jehovah. God put a sign or mark on Cain which should be a warning to others. "Vengeance belongeth unto me: I will recompense, saith the Lord." (Rom. 12: 19.) There has been much discussion as to what this mark was. It matters but little to us. It served the purpose for which God intended it, and we should be satisfied to let it forever remain buried in the silence of the ages. I have no desire or inclination of wandering into the regions of speculation under a pretense of elucidating sacred history. Jehovah protected him by this mark, and in his mercy would not let another take Cain's life. Cain had forfeited his own life in taking the life of Abel, but Jehovah permitted him to live as a perpetual murderer among his fellow men as a monument upon earth of the sacredness of life. There was to be mercy in this to Cain, and mercy to all who should behold him as a warning.

This compassion of Jehovah, it appears to me, gives Cain an opportunity to repent. If he had been slain upon the spot, when the crime was committed, then, of course, no opportunities would have been given him to repent; but now, since he is permitted to live, there is given unto him the opportunity to repent. When Jehovah drove Adam and Eve out of the garden, and closed the gates of Eden. he opened the door of repentance; so, when he banished Cain from his presence, he seems to have opened the door of repentance to him. Some have thought that when Cain was banished from the presence of God, that he was forever shut out from any appeal to God and to the worship of Jehovah; but I do not hold to that view. The mark put upon Cain had a double significance: to Cain it signified God's mercy in letting him live; to others it became a warning from Jehovah to them to extend to Cain the same

The Christian Church—What of the Future? By J. D. WALLING.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., wrote an article upon the above subject, some weeks ago, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. It is quite encouraging to have the business men of the world take an interest in the future of the church, and especially so during these pestilent times; but the terrible warring condition of the world should cause the more thoughtful to stop and ponder. Mr. Rockefeller's idea is: "The church must have a new birth and be reorganized to meet this marvelous opportunity and great human need." Such statements are sad indeed. They show that this anxious and would-be reformer has yet to learn the import of the church of Christ. Could we have the ear of our earnest searcher after truth, I would speak into it, in thundering tones: The church of Christ has a head, and the head controls the body. I am sure that, from a business point of view, Mr. Rockefeller would know that his suggestions were all gratis. God said: "This is my beloved Son: hear him." (Luke 9: 35.) "Hear him"-Christ. Why, then, should Mr. Rockefeller or any other man say, "The church must have a new birth?" I wonder if he would suggest that the Head is inadequate? I would call his attention to the following statement of the great apostle: "Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 20-23.) In view of this scripture, what right has Mr. Rockefeller to suggest "a newborn church?"

Has Mr. Rockefeller suggested a single new feature for his "reborn church" that is good and that cannot be found in the body of Christ? If so, what is it? He says: "It would be called the Church of the Living God. Its terms of admission would be love for God, as he is revealed in Christ and his living Spirit, and the vital translation of this love into a Christlike life." But Paul called the church at Corinth "the church of God." (1 Cor. 1: 1, 2; 1 Cor. 10: 32.) So the name is not new. There is certainly nothing new in his "terms of admission." He need only to read his Bible to learn this. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment." (Matt. 22: 37, 38.) And the "love for God, as he is revealed in Christ and his living Spirit," is "that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous." (1 John 5: 3.) And this love so translates one into the Christlike life that he has an intense love for all the children of God. (1 John 5: 2.) All of God's commandments are righteousness. (Ps. 119: 172.) All of God's righteousness is revealed in the gospel. (Rom. 1: 17.) But the gospel is God's power to save. (Rom. 1: 16.) Men are saved by the gospel. (1 Cor. 15: 1, 2.) Then Mr. Rockefeller only needs to obey the gospel, insist that all preachers preach it and that every one obey it. He need not be concerned about what they will be or where they will go. If all preachers preach the gospel, all preachers will preach the same thing. If all people hear the gospel and accept the gospel, becoming obedient to it, then all people will believe and do the same thing and belong to the same church. Why not? There will be only one to belong to. There would never arise a controversy over such questions as, "Is baptism essential or nonessential?" or, "What is valid baptism?" All such questions are settled in the "love of God." There is only one question for him who loves God. That one question is: What is God's will? Having learned God's will, he who loves God will do it. It was God's will that Jesus should be baptized. Hence he said to John: "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." (Matt. 3: 15.)

Mr. Rockefeller says: "I plead not for the abolishing of ordinances, but for their voluntary rather than obligatory observance." But is not all this in the gospel? To be sure, there is nothing new in all this. I wonder if the beloved gentleman has never read this: "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." (1 Thess. 1: 5.) Again: "Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into." (1 Pet. 1: 12.)

Mr. Rockefeller says: "It would pronounce ordinance, ritual, creed, all nonessential for admission into the kingdom of God or his church." It is truly deplorable that, in this sunlight age of the world, one should be groping in darkness. With an open Bible before us, we can learn of Christ; that he, and he alone, is the creed of all Christians; that to preach him is to preach the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ." (Acts 8: 12.) And invariably when Jesus was preached "they were baptized, both men and women." They did not do this simply "for admission into the kingdom of God, or his church," but that, like our Savior, they might "learn obedience" (Heb. 5: 8)-do the will of God because it is his will, and enter the kingdom (Matt. 7: 21); because only those who do the will of God enter the kingdom. But all in the kingdom have been "born of water and of the Spirit." (John 3: 5.) Therefore all who "do the will of God" are "born of water and of the Spirit" and enter the kingdom. But all who love God do his will.

But Mr. Rockefeller shows a further lack of scriptural knowledge of the church of Christ, as revealed in the New Testament, in the following: "As its first concern, it would encourage Christian living seven days a week, fifty-two weeks in the year, rather than speculation about the hereafter. It would be the church of all the people, of every one who is fighting sin and trying to establish righteousness; the church of the rich and the poor, the wise and the ignorant, the high and the low-a true democracy." After all that he has said that would appeal to the hearts of the most sympathethic, I would kindly suggest that his new church would be as the atom to the universe in comparison with the New Testament church. Suppose, Mr. Rockefeller, that you train your thoughts with these for a while: "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savier Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." (Tit. 2: 11-15.) "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." (James 1: 27; see, also, Matt. 5; John 14: 1-5; 15: 1-15; Matt. 25: 34-36.)

No, Mr. Rockefeller, the world does not need a new church; it only needs to know the one that had its beginning on Mount Zion in Jerusalem on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of the Christ. I agree with you, sir, if you say it is seldom you hear of that church in the modern pulpit. That church, in government, is a kingdom. It is in no sense a democracy or republic as regards its organization. Christ is absolute Monarch.

O. I do wish Mr. Rockefeller would read his Bible! Just read this: "Its ministers would be trained, not only in the seminary, but quite as much in life, with the supreme emphasis on life; for it would be an important part of the preparation of each that he should spend months, years possibly, working with his hands in the fields or the shop, doing business in the store or the office, so that he might not have merely a laboratory acquaintance with the problems of human life, but the practical knowledge which alone comes from actual experience and contact with them. Yes, the ministry of this church would live in vital touch with humanity; it would understand and sympathize with human difficulties, and would exert its influence as much in living as in preaching." Then get your Bible and read Acts 18: 3; 1 Cor. 4: 9-16; 1 Thess. 2: 9; 2 Cor. 11: 9. There is nothing new in all of Mr. Rockefeller's ideas.

But here is Mr. Rockefeller's vision:

Would that I had the power to bring to your minds the vision as it unfolds before me!

I see all denominational emphasis set aside.

I see cooperation, not competition.

In the large cities I see great religious centers, wisely located, adequately equipped, strongly supported, and in-spiring their members to participation in all community matters.

In small places, instead of half a dozen dying churches. competing with each other, I see one or two strong churches, uniting the Christian life of the town; great economy in plant, in money, in service, in leadership; money enough saved in this way to support adequately home and foreign missions.

I see the church molding the thought of the world as it has never done before, leading in all great movements as it should.

I see it literally establishing the kingdom of God on earth.

Shall this vision be realized? The future of the Christian church depends on the answer Christian men and women give to that question.

The New Testament church has no "denominational emphasis," for the reason that it is the one body of Christ, and not a denomination. All of its members are in cooperation, and the only competition they are able to recognize is that prompted by the evil one. But Mr. Rockefeller's vision can be realized if he and all like him will "come out from among them, and be . . . separate." (2 Cor. 6: 174) "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." (1 Cor. 15: 58.) With the earnest gentleman, I say: "What an opportunity! What a privilege! What a duty! In God's name I ask, does any one dare let it pass?"

Are We Walking in the Light? No. 2.

BY JESSE L. BEARD.

In the very beginning God said: "Let there be light." Can we begin to imagine how things were when "the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep?" O, yes, everything was in darkness; but the God of heaven said, "Let there be light," and the record says "there was light." O, but how bright things must have looked then!

Then God began his great work. We can see how he created the many things-the grass, the trees, the herbs. the birds, the fishes; and, best of all kinds and last, he created man. He put all of the other creation in man's hands. He was to rule over them and use them to help sustain life. Men lived on the flesh of animals and the fruit of the soil. But by and by they got careless concerning God. I imagine they almost forgot that God created them, they were so wicked. God's wrath was kindled against man for his wickedness. "It repented the Lord that he had made man." "I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth "-with a great flood. And so he did. Only eight were saved. Yes, a "faithful few" were saved. Jesus said: "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

God said: "Let there be light." "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." Are we walking in this grand and glorious light? Are we holding up the blessed word so it may shine and give more light? Do we 'take the blessed light of the gospel there?" A word in a song I want to quote:

Many are waiting the gospel to hear, Many are living in sorrow and fear, Longing and sighing for comfort and cheer-O, let us lead them to Jesus!

Yes, I say, let us lead them to Jesus; let us "take the light of the gospel there;" and then let us teach them to walk orderly before all men, teach them to "abound more and more" in the work of the Lord.

"Take heed lest there shall be any one that maketh spoil of you through his philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men." (Col. 2: 8.) What? Yes, take heed. Be so you may know every one of these fellows when you see them. Some one may ask: "How may we be able to know them?" Paul says: "Study." What-all study?

Yes—a thousand times, yes; we must meditate in the law of the Lord.

What are we doing for the upbuilding of the cause of Christ? Are we selling what we possess and laying it at the apostles' feet? There are thousands that are not giving five cents to mission work. They want to "eat, drink, and be merry; for to-morrow we may die." Yes, they may die; and if they die in this condition, where will they go?

The devil is sharp; he knows how to reason with folks. He says: "When Jesus was here, one woman gave a penny and was blessed; so you can give a nickel, a dime, and will be just as good. No use to give five dollars. Save that and increase your land." Yes, we are being spoiled by "vain deceit, after the tradition of men." We must study in order to resist the devil's temptations, his smooth tongue.

We learn from the New Testament that we are to mark them that cause divisions, that we are to be of the same mind and the same judgment and all speak the same thing. Often we hear of congregations where discord is. One brother is mad at another; one sister said something about another; this one is mad, the other one turns his head, the other won't speak, etc. What is the matter? They have become careless concerning God's word, have thrown it aside, and have begun to satisfy the lust of the flesh. They are carnal-minded, and Paul says "to be carnal-minded is death." O that we may awake out of our sleep, feast on God's word, set our affections on things above, and lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven!

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Are we saying anything to that brother or sister who fails to attend the services on Lord's day? Are we inviting everybody we see out to take part in the Bible lesson on Lord's day? Are we doing this? Not in this country. No, "because 'Aunt Sallie' and 'Uncle Will' came, we will stay at home to-day-don't feel very well, anyway." Brethren, let us do something at home and abroad. In this county (Craighead County, Arkansas) we have only seven congregations, and some of these need raising from the dead. O that the gospel may be taken to the dark places in this county, that it may be spread in Northeast Arkansas! Let us "take the light of the gospel there." This is part of what it takes to be walking in the light. One brother said: "The brethren will do more missionary work when they are taught more." Yes, "when they are taught more." Let every member of the church of Christ who reads these few words resolve to do more mission work from this time forward. This is one way we may let our light shine; this is walking in the light.

Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas, August 30, 1918.—
Houston Street church of Christ, Sherman, Texas.—Dear Brethren and Sisters: Your communication of August 27 received and contents noted, and in reply will say that I fully concur in the spirit and letter of said communication, and, with you, feel that we should enter the "open door" that is before us, and to this end I accept your invitation to go to the expeditionary forces in the allied countries to do all I can, in the name of Christ, for the cause we all love and for which you have made so many sacrifices during the last seventy-five or more years of your history. I assure you that I appreciate the kind invitation to go under the direction of the Houston Street Church, for I know your faith and labor of love and your great anxiety for "our boys" who have gone "over there."

My work in Camp Bowie has thoroughly satisfied me that there is a great work to be done with the men in the army, and I have thought for some months that it is a shame that we, as a religious body, have not sent men to help these young men in a religious way. There are not only hundreds, but thousands of young men who have gone over, who are members of the church of Christ, and who need our care, sympathy, and love.

In Camp Bowie, in the Thirty-sixth Division (which is now "somewhere in France"), there were some three or four hundred who were members of the church of Christ, and I have never been associated with more faithful young brethren in life than were many of these young men. When they left Camp Bowie, many of them urged me to come to them, and I assured them that I would do so unless a more suitable man could be found who would go.

I realize that it will be a great sacrifice for me, and for my wife and children, for me to go away for so long a time; but Sister Lawson says that any sacrifice we can make for these young men we should gladly make, and that she is willing to bear her part of it that we may do "our bit" in this great crisis.

It will be necessary for me to arrange the work at the Camp Bowie Tabernacle, that the work here may go on; but I am sure this can be done in due time, and, as it will take some time to arrange matters incident to proper work in the foreign field, I shall continue with the work here until ready to go "over there." I think I can get everything ready to start by November 15, and shall begin at once to arrange to that end. I am anxious that the work here be well looked after, for there is a great opportunity for good here; and I shall do all within me to get it well shaped up by the time I leave, that the work may continue to grow and prosper.

As the work you ask me to do is a work for all the church, I suggest that there are many congregations and individuals who will gladly help you bear the burden of this work. Ordinarily, when the brotherhood is asked to help in a worthy work, they will respond; and knowing the great amount of work that you are doing both at home and abroad, I am sure that the brotherhood generally will gladly assist in a great undertaking like this. I suggest that the church select one of its faithful members to receive and disburse the funds necessary to carry this work to a success, and that the churches and individual members be given an opportunity to "show their faith by their works" by placing the matter before them through our religious papers, and asking those who desire a part in the work to correspond with the one you may select. I shall be glad to render any assistance necessary to place this matter before the faithful, and, as the time is short, what is done should be done quickly.

Assuring you of my appreciation of your confidence in me and that I shall be glad to do all that is within me to make the work "over there" a success, and praying God's blessings upon all the faithful in Christ Jesus, I am as ever,

Your brother,

J. H. Lawson.

In an accompanying note Brother Lawson says:

Brother N. Z. Crass, the clerk of the Houston Street Church, has agreed to act in the reception of all money and will look to the proper correspondence in reference to same, while Brother J. S. Legate, one of the deacons and the treasurer, will disburse the funds. Those who want a part in this work will please write N. Z. Crass. Sherman, Texas, stating the amount that will be given each month; and it is suggested that a contribution be made as early as possible to help bear the expenses of the voyage "over there," as it will take at least five hundred dollars to meet the requirements. It is hoped that the friends of Christ and humanity will respond quickly, as "the King's business demands haste."

Christian Education, No. 5.

BY H. E. SPECK.

V. WHAT SHALL WE DO?

Whatever you want a people to become, put that thing in the schools. Education was imposed as a divine obligation upon every Jewish parent. The dwellings of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were at once the home, the school, the state, and the church. It was especially the duty of every father to teach his children the significance of the Passover feast and other ceremonial observances. God made the teaching of the divine law compulsory upon every parent in the most imperative terms. We read: "Now these are the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments, which the Lord your God commanded to teach you, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go to possess it: that thou mightest fear the Lord thy God, to keep all his statutes and his commandments, which I command thee, thou, and thy son, and thy son's son, all the days of thy life; and that thy days may be prolonged. Hear therefore, O Israel, and observe to do it; that it may be well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath promised thee, in the land that floweth with milk and honey. Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates." They wore the word of God on their wrists as we wear our watches, and had a copy of it on the gateposts and door facings. No other people in all the world's history have been so completely immersed in an atmosphere of religious instruction as the Jews have been. The whole Mosaic economy was an educational enterprise of the most far-reaching character. The law was their schoolmaster, pedagogue, to lead them to Christ. Jewish institutions were to be preserved in no other way than through religious education.

Has God's method in the respect of having his people taught changed? Is the church of God to be built up in any other way than through teaching? Is there any imperative reason why the church as an institution should interest herself in education? Some one has said that there are three E's which stand for the promulgation of Christianity. They are: Evangelism, Education, Expansion. The latter seems to come as a consequence of the first two. Evangelism and Christian education are inseparable, and this fact may be more obvious the next generation.

There are many new obligations, responsibilities, and opportunities ushered in with every generation. The business of Christian education is to prepare us for their solution. Never has Christian civilization been confronted with such large and difficult problems as to-day. Among these are the liquor question, divorce, child labor, the white-slave traffic, increased criminality, political corruption, the relation of labor and capital, rampant materialism, education, the redemption of the segregated districts of the large cities, universal peace, and the salvation of the world.

With the solution of these problems comes a demand on Christian education for a trained ministry and for an intelligent laity. The solution calls for great preachers, well trained. Those of the past, though sometimes largely untrained, did their work heroically. The preachers of the next generation must have all the eloquence and evangelistic fervor of the pioneers, and they must add to these the learning, the social interest, the sympathy, and the teaching power that comes through college training. We all admit the need of a trained ministry. What we need more is a generation of trained elders, deacons, Christians. The greatest service that Christians can render in the immediate future lies in the training of a new type of laymen. I wonder what our vision would be if we could realize the tremendous power of a trained and consecrated body of laymen. Give us men of militant faith and deep piety, trained not only to feel that God has a mighty work for them to do, but able to do it. To how many places have you gone where you had to lead in everything? The church needs men and women trained to teach, to sing; men as leaders; men into whose hands the care of the church can be placed.

Whether in the church assembled, the Sunday school, some individual, the Christian college, or in whatever way it may come, Christian education must lead every member of the church of Christ to know that "religion is no mere matter of ceremony; no merely beautiful thing for esthetic admiration; no mere practice of self-mortification; no mere idle longing for heaven, or an awaiting of some miraculous deliverance from hell; no bare adoption either of abstract principles or anything arbitrarily laid upon him from without, external and foreign to him; no mere negative aim of any kind; but that positive will of God, laid down in the very structure of our being, that means the kindling of great and new enthusiasm, great devotions as great sacrifices." Christian education must teach the world to know that the prayer, "Thy will be done," is no slave's submission to superior strength; no plaintive wail; no outcry of an enfeebled, broken will, as we may be sometimes tempted to think. Rather, it is the highest reach of a will sublimely disciplined to a world task, enlightened by a reason that can think the thoughts of God, inspired by an imagination that sees the ultimate consummation. warmed by a heart that feels the needs of men and glows with the greatness of the Father's purpose for them."

Whatever attitude others may assume, or whatever course they may pursue with reference to Christian education, Father, give me a life full of opportunities to spend and be spent in thy church, growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, that I may be able to teach others also.

Love. No. 1.

BY S. W. BERRYMAN.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," (John 3: 16.) "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." (1 John 3: 1.)

Dear brother and sister, open your eyes and behold the love of God. It was manifested in the gift of "his only begotten Son." See the howling mob as they lead him to Golgotha. Hear the shouts of the vilest of men: "His blood be on us, and on our children." "Away with this man!" "Crucify him, crucify him!" Calvary is reached. Watch them as they drive the nails through his hands and feet. See his bleeding side with the spear thrust into it; behold the blood and water gush forth. Some one asks: "Why such a sacrifice?" God loves the human family. He desired to see their sins blotted out. But where could a sacrifice be found that was sufficient to do this? All the gold and silver of earth could not do it. The eattle on a thousand hills was not sufficient. Nothing but the blood of "his only begotten Son" could atone for the sins of man. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." (John 1: 29.) "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation [atonement, or sacrifice] for our sins." (1 John 4: 9, 10.)

It is impossible for us to know the greatness of God's love. Though man wanders far from him, corrupts his way on earth, goes deeper and deeper into sin every day, he is still a subject of God's love. God loves man and desires his salvation. "It is not the will of God that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." (2 Pet. 3: 9.) "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." (Isa. 55: 7.) God is ready and willing to "abundantly pardon" the sins of those who do his will. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." (1 Tim. 1: 15.) But Christ could not save sinners without giving himself a "ransom for all," and this he willingly did. "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him," (Rom. 5. 6-9.) When man was "without strength," utterly helpless, or void of power to do anything that would actually blot out or remit his sins, Christ died for him. God commended his love toward us, sent his Son into the world, made the great sin offering, and brought remission of sins within reach of all.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." (John 15: 13.) Man's love is considered great when it prompts him to die for his friends, but the love of Christ is greater than this: he died for his enemies. God's love is all inclusive. Not the favored, rich, mighty, or learned, but the whole world-"every creature." God's love is everlasting. "The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." (Jer. 31: 3.) It is a drawing love. "I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love: and I was to them as they that take off the yoke on their jaws, and I laid meat unto them." (Hos. 11: 4.) is a saving love. "Behold, for peace I had great bitterness: but thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back." (Isa. 38: 17.) It is a constraining love. "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead." (2 Cor. 5: 14.) God's love cannot be measured. "That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God." (Eph. 3: 16-19.)

Erring brother, God loves you, and he is pleading with you to return to the fold. He knows your destiny if you continue in unforbidden paths. How can you afford to remain in the cold, bleak world of sin, knowing that the close of each day brings you nearer the appalling scenes of hell? Halt, sinner friend! Accept the love and mercy of God, and eternity will crown you with blessings.

Put your faith where it will be safe, and the only place where a faith ever can be safe is in the shrine of an action.

PROCESS OF THE PROCES

The very liberal contribution of $50 accredited to the church at Jackson, Tenn., in a recent issue, should have been accredited to the Mars' Hill congregation. Brother W. S. Long called our attention to the mistake, which we gladly correct.

No man has done more than Brother S. W. Peebles to keep alive the interest in this fund. He has by his personal efforts secured many substantial offerings, both from churches and individuals. He sent in the large contribution from the church at Smyrna, Tenn., acknowledged in this issue.

In acknowledgment of the last check sent to the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, we have received the following letter:

New York City, September 3, 1918.—Dear Mr. Lipscomb: The children and women of Persia, Syria, Armenia, and the Greeks in Western Asia say "thank you" for the generous response by the readers of the Gospel Advocate. The treasurer's official receipt for $851.40 we are inclosing with this letter.

Recent reports by cablegram indicate that eighty thousand Christians have been driven out of Urumia, Western Persia, and are now dependent entirely upon American generosity and aid which must come from the Christians of America.

A commission of fifteen men are already upon the seas, and with the funds which are already in hand we are purchasing supplies, but additional funds must be continually forwarded to the field. Sincerely yours, H. C. JAQUITH.

Brother J. H. Arms writes from Celina, Tenn.:

I know you are a very busy man, but I beg enough of your time to tell you of a little incident at yesterday's service at above schoolhouse. I go there once a month, and at last month's service I made an appeal for the suffering ones, and mentioned the hungry little children. Now for the story: Shortly after this service and talk a little girl, less than four years old, received an orange as a gift, and offered it for sale, and sold it for a nickel, which she said she was going to give for these hungry little boys and girls; and yesterday, while the offering was being made, she came to me and gave her nickel. How is this for willing sacrifice and self-denial? Other little boys and girls also gave their nickels and dimes.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

We will be glad to welcome visitors to the State Fair in this office.

Sim Jones, of Toronto, Canada, is in a good meeting with the church at Nolensville, Tenn.

The meeting at Twelfth Avenue, this city, is increasing in interest. All who attend enjoy the good sermons of H. T. King.

An India news card from Brother Jelley: "Brother Wairaga reports five baptisms in June. Edward is recovering from pneumonia."

Charlie Taylor reports: "The meeting closed at Burnett's Chapel, with two baptisms. I am now at Lavergne, Tenn., with ten baptisms. I go next to Eagleville."

A. W. Young, of Fort Worth, Texas, cheers us with the following note: "The Gospel Advocate continues to be full of good things, and I-always appreciate its coming."

George A. Klingman writes from Stephenville, Texas: "The meeting at Anson Tabernacle closed with ten additions. I began here last Saturday, and have had three confessions so far."

From J. J. Horton, Elora, Tenn.: "I am having some fine meetings. I have been busy all the time in meetings since July 10. I will try and report my meetings after I hold two or three others."

From C. E. Holt, Florence, Ala., September 6: "The meeting at County Line was a success. This is a good congregation, with some fine material. The Gospel Advocate list will be increased there in the near future."

John W. Beasley writes: "On September 1 I closed an eight-days' meeting with the New Liberty congregation, in Williamson County, which resulted in eight baptisms. I shall conduct another meeting there next year, if the Lord wills"

From John W. Hedge, Sterling, Okla., September 5: "I closed at Rush Springs last Lord's-day night, with four baptized and one restored. We had fine crowds and attention throughout the meeting. I am now at Sterling to begin a meeting, and will be here indefinitely."

Brother Srygley is in a good meeting at Red Boiling Springs. Brother Elam's meeting at Murfreesboro increases in interest. The song leadership of Dr. L. K. Harding is a delightful feature of the meeting. F. W. Smith will begin a meeting at Martin, Tenn., next Sunday.

David Lipscomb, superintendent of the Fanning Orphan School, reports the largest opening in its history last week. There is room for a few more girls. One hundred dollars will take care of one girl. It would be a splendid deed for some good brother to make a contribution for this number.

From H. C. Denson, Hohenwald, Tenn., September 2: "For a few nights I attended the meeting conducted by James Leonard Jackson at Gordonsburg. Brother Jackson did some good preaching. The people there seemed to appreciate his efforts. At present I am in a meeting two miles west of Hohenwald."

J. R. Bradley writes: "I am seventy-two years young to-day. I have just closed a meeting near Elkwood, Ala., with two added. I will begin at Riversburg, Glies County, Tenn., next Sunday. I am in a good shape as to health. Wife got her foot sprained on our Elkwood trip. I preached seventeen sermons during the meeting."

From Morgan H. Carter, 200 Woolfolk Street, Macon, Ga., September 5: "I notice a number of Tennessee boys have arrived at Camp Wheeler. If any of the readers of the Gospel Advocate know of any of them who are members of the church of Christ or friends of theirs and will send me their addresses, I will gladly look them up and get them to meet with us at the church in East Macon, on the corner of St. John and Church Streets."

John B. Peden writes: "I am preaching all I can in this new territory. We have no congregation at Venus, Fla. I am preaching once a month in an old union church house here, and many seem interested in the plain truth. I notice that Brother Walker says I am the only preacher on this new line of railroad. Brother Walker is mistaken. We have a Brother Hinton at Avon Park, who is a preacher and teacher. But we need more preachers in Florida, and men that are willing to meet the hardships of a new field."

From W. S. Long, Jackson, Tenn.: "I have returned from a good meeting in Cottage Grove, Tenn. It resulted in three baptisms and negligent members promising to live better. The church in Brownsville will have a new house of worship ready for use by October 20, which, when completed, will cost about five thousand dollars. They have made a very great sacrifice. They want some congregation to send a good man to hold a meeting for them and get that church to send and support that man. I am to begin a meeting at Sharon on September 15."

From John Hayes, Mooresville, Ala., September 5: "The meeting at Ephesus Church, near Athens, closed last night, with twenty-two baptized and one restored. The last night of the meeting we had five confessions. From the first to the very last the interest was splendid and many could not get in the house. I leave to-morrow for Trion, Ga., for a meeting to last as long as the interest demands. The debate mentioned in my last report will be held in November. While the terrible war is raging, let us not forget our duty as children of God—to be busy all the time in the kingdom of Christ. Souls are going down to eternal night and despair. How can we be content to rest in these dark days?"

From W. P. Skaggs, Tom Bean, Texas, September 5: "Returning home from the meeting in Allen, Okla., preached a few days at home and baptized four. We had intended holding a more lengthy meeting at this time, but the great rush to save the cotton crop made it seem imprudent to do so at the present. I will go next week to Missouri for two meetings, and then home for the winter. I am more and more convinced that our meetings are too short and not enough attention given to a careful prepara-Prepare for a good song service; cultition for the work. vate a hearty zeal and enthusiasm in the work. Remember, the light of heaven is no brighter for us than the heavenly lights in our own hearts."

From A. A. Bunner, Cleveland, Ohio, September 4: "On account of the prohibition of the government on using automobiles on the Lord's day, the all-day meeting set for next Lord's day in old Brother Johnson's grove, near Medina, has been called off for the present; but, God willing. I shall begin a mission meeting at a place called 'Fairview,' in Dark County, in a United Brethren meetinghouse, on the third Lord's day in this month. We confidently look forward to glorious results from this effort. We ask the cooperation and prayers of the faithful in Christ Jesus in this meeting. I am certainly glad to be assured of the fact that our two talented and worthy young brethren, Porter and Beard, from Arkansas, are going to work and write for the Gospel Advocate. To the Lord be all the praise for his goodness."

From J. C. Estes, 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas, September 4: "I am at home a few days after another meeting. I had just closed a right good meeting at Locker, and came home to prepare to go to my meeting at Rector, Ark., where we hope for a most excellent meeting of two weeks or more, and then on to Bean's Creek, Tenn., to begin some time about October 1. I have been busy in meetings this year at Climax. Fostoria, Trenton, and Locker, all in Texas. I have not baptized many, but believe some good has been done at each place. The circumstances have been such that it has been hard to turn their minds away from the present events of the world war to things spiritual and eternal. That and conditions in the drought-stricken region seem to concern the people in a way that, in the main, the word is choked out, and not only have they of the world become deaf to God's word, but many members of the body of Christ have forgotten their 'first love.'"

From W. W. Slater, Council Hill, Okla., September 5: "I closed at Beedeville, Ark., Sunday night. I was there for three Sundays. One was baptized and four were restored. We had large crowds and good interest throughout the meeting. Several seemed to be almost persuaded. This is the home of Z. D. Barber, one of our strong preachers. He has lived there for several years and is loved by all who know him. The brethren supported me well, giving me the best support I have ever received. I am now at Morrillton, Ark., in a good meeting. Prospects are good for a fine meeting. I go from here to Van Buren County, then to Perry County, which will close my work for the summer. I desire to state that the Eureka Publishing Company has moved from Stigler, Okla., and is now located at Mena, Ark. So please address me at my home address, Council Hill, Okla., or else address me at Mena, Ark., care of Eureka Publishing Company. We are not at Stigler any more, and mail sent to Stigler may never reach me."

When Will God Stop the War?

BY E. A. E.

We have seen that earthly governments-republics, empires, kingdoms, monarchies-one as much as another, according to advancement and civilization and choice of men "are ordained of God" and have been equipped with "the sword" to restrain and punish and sometimes destroy evildoers, and to protect all who do good, enabling God's people to "lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity." All civil officers-constables, sheriffs, the police force, mayors, governors, and all "the powers that be "-fall short of their duty, "ordained of God," and violate their oath of office, if they do not stand for and uphold righteousness between men and nations, protect all law-abiding citizens and all who do good, and refuse to make themselves "a terror" to all lawbreakers and evil-

A few years ago many women and not a few men in sympathy and tears wanted the State of Tennessee to abolish capital punishment, and moved the State to do so. Now these same women and men want the government to destroy nations of evildoers. This inconsistency comes, it seems to this writer, from their not understanding the necessity for, and the mission of, civil government.

There are two things all know:

1. Every government on earth of every kind has been established by the sword and so far has been maintained by the sword. There is a time coming, however, when God, through "the Prince of Peace," will "judge between ["among"-margin] the nations, and will decide concerning many peoples; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Isa. 2: 2-4; read Isa. 11 and Mic. 4: 1.5.) This is sought as the determination of the world war. How wonderful and glorious would it be should the world war end in world peace! But in whatever way and at whatever time God brings universal peace, it must come. It must come if it has to come through the destruction of all unrighteous and wicked nations that have forgotten God. It will come when all nations as well as all individuals allow Christ to settle all their disputes. "He will judge between the nations, and will decide concerning many peoples," and when all submit to his arbitration wars will cease.

2. While all earthly governments "are ordained of God" for the purposes which he gives, he does not use the sword to establish religion-that is, Christianity-and to advance the kingdom of heaven in the hearts of men. The love of God and obedience to Christ are heart matters, and men cannot be made Christians by force. Jesus said to Peter:

Put up again thy sword into its place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword. Or thinkest thou that I cannot be eech my Father, and he shall even now send me more than twelve legions of angels? then should the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be? (Matt. 26: 52, 53.)

One kingdom or government is established and maintained by the sword, while another is destroyed by the sword. Every kingdom that has ever fallen has fallen by the sword. In his just judgment God uses one nation to destroy another.

Jesus said to Pilate:

My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants [subjects] fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence. (John 18: 36.)

To Pilate, Jesus said further that he was a King, that to this end he was born and came into the world, but that his kingdom was not to be established by the sword.

Paul declares that the subjects of Christ's kingdom "do not war according to the flesh" in their "readiness to avenge all disobedience" and to make the conquest of the world for Christ, because "the weapons" of their "warfare are not carnal, but mighty before God to the casting down of strongholds," (2 Cor. 10: 4-6.) The "weapons" of the Christian's warfare in withstanding all the wiles of Satan and in bringing all nations under the government of King Jesus are plainly and fully given in Eph. 6: 10-20.

It was a glorious day for the world when "the church and State" were separated, when the Inquisition and death penalty for heresy passed away, and every man was set free to worship God according to his own conscience as guided by God's revealed will.

God uses the church for one purpose and "the powers that be" for another. But the governments of earth are responsible to God, and he blesses or destroys them according to their courses of conduct.

Read Rom. 1: 18-32. In this passage God again states the principles upon which he deals with nations as well as individuals. "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hinder the truth in unrighteousness." Men who in their ungodliness and unrighteousness "hinder the truth," plunder, devastate, ravage, butcher old men and women and children, cannot go on in their satanic course forever. Note the charges God makes: They knew God. but did not glorify him as God, did not give thanks to him; they "became vain in their reasonings, and their senseless heart was darkened;" "professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God for the likeness of an image of corruptible man, and of birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things;" they "exchanged the truth of God for a lie, and worshiped and served the creature rather than the Creator;" the "lusts of their hearts" led them into uncleanness and the dishonoring of their bodies among themselves; and "they refused to have God in their knowledge." "For this cause God gave them up unto vile passions"-allowed them of their own choice to pursue their abominable and fearfully wicked course. "Their women changed the natural use into that which is against nature;" "the men, leaving the natural use of the women, burned in their lust one toward another, men with men working, unseemliness;" their minds became "reprobate, . . . to do those things which were not fitting;" they were "filled with all unrighteousness, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, . . envy, murder, strife, deceit, malignity;" they were "whisperers, backbiters, hateful to God, insolent, haughty, boastful, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant breakers, without natural affection, unmerciful."

This is a most fearful indictment. God declares that "a recompense" of these errors "was due," and all who "practice such things are worthy of death." Without repentance, all such must perish.

Which nations to-day of the contending nations are insolent, haughty, boastful, inventors even of evil things, malicious, deceitful, COVENANT BREAKERS, UNMERCI-FUL, GREEDY OF CONQUEST, FILLED WITH MURDER, and hateful to God? From which have come vain reasonings-"higher criticism" and infidelity? Which one has cut and carved the Bible to suit its own science and philosophy, cast aside certain portions of God's revelation, sowed this evil seed in the colleges and universities and churches of other nations, and rejected "the gentle Naza rene?" Which one has made a god-a tribal god-and a bible to serve its own wicked and murderous purposes? How can such a nation escape the righteous condemnation of "the King of heaven," whose "works are truth," whose "ways are justice," and who "is able to abase" those who "walk in pride?'

When does God preserve and lengthen the tranquility of nations? When they "break off" their "sin by right-eousness" and their "iniquities by showing mercy to the poor." (Dan. 4: 27.) When does he destroy them? When they refuse to do this and fill their cup of iniquity full.

Jehovah hath made everything for its own end; yea, even the wicked for the day of evil. (Prov. 16: 4.)

To serve his own purpose, God causes wicked nations to stand, and then overthrows them.

What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering vessels of wrath fitted unto destruction: and that he might make known the riches of his glory upon vessels of mercy? (Rom. 9: 22, 23.)

When God sent Nebuchadnezzar into Egypt, he said:

And he shall come, and shall smite the land of Egypt; such as are for death shall be given to death, and such as are for captivity to captivity, and such as are for the sword to the sword. (Jer. 43: 11; see verses 8-13 and chapter 15: 1-4.)

Whom the Lord loves, he chastens; on whom he will, he has mercy; and whom he will, he hardens and destroys. (Rom. 9: 14-18.)

Thus God deals with nations: the ones that need correction, he chastises; the ones that need punishment, he punishes; and the ones fitted for destruction, he destroys.

If Germany, Turkey, and nations associated with them are not guilty of all the sins named above, they are guilty of the most heinous of them and of others not mentioned in that list. How, then, can they escape the righteous condemnation of God?

But are the entente allies free from all sin, and are they altogether righteous? Do they need no correction? Does not the church even need purifying?

According to these principles, who can doubt that God upholds and advances the nations that contend for and practice mercy, righteousness, liberty, universal peace, and the greatest good of all peoples of the earth, and will, in the end, give them the victory? Who can doubt that God is using the entente allies to punish and correct Germany, and, if she does not repent and put violence out of her hands, as did the king and people of Nineveh, to destroy her? In order to live, Germany must accept "the gentle Nazarene," "the true and living God," the God of the Bible, and the Bible. But who can doubt that, at the same time, God is correcting and teaching the entente allies lessons much needed, which they would not learn otherwise, and also purifying the church? Who can doubt that when this has been done the war will stop? By doing this Nineveh stopped a war before it began.

Who Will Be Able to Stand?

BY E. G. S.

There is only one class that will be able to stand when the great and final day of judgment comes—those who shall be found faithful to the Lord. There is but one thing in all the world that can prepare people to be safe when that day comes, and that is to be faithful servants of the Lord to the end of life. It will not do to start and run a while and then turn back. Better not start in the service of God at all than to start and then turn back into sin again; for when people do this, they generally go deeper into sin than before they started out to do right. While there are many ways to do wrong, there is always one way to do right, and that is to follow the Lord's revealed will—read the word of God and go by its directions. All who do that are on the narrow way that leads to the heavenly home.

Not every one that starts out in the Christian life continues faithful to the end. Jesus knew what he was talking about when he said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." This, then, is the one class that is sure of the eternal home; and when that is gained, all trials and tribulations are at an end. But with the wicked, trials and troubles never end. When the great judgment day comes, they will be placed on the left hand and can never stand on the Lord's side. They will not be asked where they want to go, but will be cast into the lake of fire, never again to be invited to "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." Their doom will be at once and forever fixed.

It is certainly strange that people that live in Bible lands do not turn to the Lord and serve him faithfully to the end of life. There is nothing for people to lose by the faithful service of God while they live on earth, but there is everything to gain. They have the promise of God's care over them here on earth and the promise of eternal life in the heavenly home. Surely these things ought to lead all people in Bible lands to serve the Lord faithfully till death takes them away. If they do this, then they are safe for all eternity. But those that reject the gospel to the end of this life have nothing to help them either in this life or in eternity. The Lord makes no provision of good, either in this life or in the world to come, for those that will not serve him here. The promise of eternal life to those who serve the Lord faithfully on earth is the grandest promise ever made to mortal men. But it must be understood that these precious promises are not to those who do not obey the gospel. Their doom is already fixed when death comes, and there will be no further opportunity for them to obey. While people live is the time to prepare for eternity. Let all, therefore, be up and doing while the invitation is extended.

The Lord has made every needful preparation for the souls of men, and he promises eternal life to all that will believe and obey the gospel, and just as positively foretells eternal ruin to all that will not. But what good reason can be assigned why all should not believe and obey the gospel? It is all a matter of grace and mercy on the part of God to offer salvation to all that will yield heart and life to the demands of the gospel. It may seem to some a difficult task to give heart and life to the service of God; but this depends upon the estimate people place upon the value of their souls. Really nothing has ever been offered to man that can be compared to the value of the soul. Think seriously about losing the soul and of suffering eternal torment. Think of having to give up a happy home here and of dwelling in some sort of a little hut that has neitheir comfort nor beauty. There could be no comfort nor pleasure in such a change. Yet that would be as nothing compared with the idea of losing the soul and entering upon eternal torment. What a wonderful difference between eternal life and happiness and the loss of the soul and eternal misery! God knew all this, and that moved him to give his own Son to die and thus prepare a plan of salvation for the human race. They could not have saved themselves from ruin. So the love and mercy of God moved him to provide the gospel plan of salvation, by means of which their souls could be eternally saved. does seem that so great a gift ought to move all to obey the gospel and thus be saved from eternal ruin. Let all think seriously on these things and avail themselves of the wonderful salvation so freely provided for them and plainly made known in the New Testament.

The Bethlehem Church, Wilson County, Tenn., Endows a Hospital Bed in France.

BY E. A. E.

Brother W. H. Neal, one of the elders, informs me that the Bethlehem Church, in Wilson County, Tenn., has about completed arrangements to endow a hospital bed in France according to the conditions stated in this paper recently. This church will pay the cash—seven hundred dollars—necessary for this endowment for one year. This will go from the church directly to the hospital designated, and the bed in that hospital designated, and the church will receive due credit.

We can easily see what credit the church of Christ would receive, how its light would shine and its influence be felt, should the different congregations endow a thousand beds, for instance—or, better, had they already done so. Such a course would impress the world with the influence and power of the church.

In more respects than one, has not the church up to the present lost an opportunity of a lifetime in making itself felt by the world as the church?

Let other churches follow the example of the Bethlehem Church and the Antioch Church out from Franklin, Ky.

If one congregation is not able to endow a bed, let its elders visit and appeal to another to join it, and so on until the endowment is raised. The elders and members of one congregation must be willing and ready to work themselves and to visit other congregations in order to raise this amount.

I feel sure I could induce congregations by the dozens to join in this work if I could visit them and lay it before them. Will not some elder or elders of one congregation enlist other congregations adjacent, and on and on throughout the whole number of congregations?

In this way a great work can be done for the relief of the suffering and to the glory of God through the church.

A Trip to Texas.

BY F. C. SOWELL.

My first meeting in Texas began at Garrett on August 21 and continued fifteen days. The church took much interest in the meetings and was greatly revived and made much stronger spiritually. There were six baptized and two reclaimed during the meeting. In the last five years I have held three meetings in Garrett, and Brother John Dunn has held two. During these meetings about one hundred persons have been added to the church. They have a good house in which to meet and have a fine-working congregation. This is the home of our beloved V. I. Stirman, who is now eighty-eight years old. Brother Ben West invited me, while in our meeting at Garrett, to go down to Ennis to preach for them, and I did so, and found a good-working congregation there. My next meeting was at Ragers Spring, in the same county (Ellis), about eight miles from Garrett. This meeting continued ten days. The people gave us a fine hearing, but there were no additions to the church. This congregation has been weakened numerically on account of so many moving away. I visited Bynum, Hill County, where I have held a number of meetings, and preached for them one time, and they gave me a fine hearing. Brother Ledlow had just closed a good meeting there, with seventeen additions. I spent one night with relatives at Corsicana. Brother E. A. Elam began a meeting there, but had to give it up on account of sickness at home. Brother Colley, of Dallas, was called to finish the meeting. This meeting had fine results. I was invited to East Texas by O. T. Craig and had a pleasant visit there, preaching three times at West Mountain to large crowds. I had many kind invitations to visit them again. I had some invitations to hold meetings in Oklahoma, but could not this year, but hope to another year. I have held one meeting in Dickson County, Tenn., since my return-at Bellvue, Rock Church. Five were baptized and large crowds attended the meeting. My next is a mission meeting near Primm Springs, in Maury County.

Three thousand years ago pyramids could be built without immense cost, though it required the labor of a hundred thousand men for thirty years to complete one of them. What were a hundred thousand human lives in the eyes of a Pharaoh, a Rameses, a Ptolemy? What were they in the view of a Cæsar? When an old Roman philosopher said, "I am a man, and nothing human is alien to me," the high-water mark of paganism was reached. It required a lofty exercise of spirit to reach that height. So ample a soul as Aristotle had declared: "We cannot dispense with farmers and mechanics, but these have nothing to do with public affairs, and are not worthy of the name 'citizen.' They are incapable of greatness of soul, because they work for wages and, therefore, must be of a mercenary spirit." Into a world accustomed to such sentiments as these, Christ came with a totally different conception of the worth of humanity, teaching us that every one of us is potentially great because we are the children of the Heavenly Father. When that idea took root in human thought, it had within it the power and potency of all coming freedom.—Christian Herald.

Training Little Ch Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 24.

Sending a Child Away from the Family Group an Effective Punishment for Most Forms of Naughtiness.

If you should ask any kindergartner what punishment she relies on in all cases needing instant attention, she would probably answer, isolating a child from the group and excluding him from all work or play for a short time. Usually putting John to one side where he can see what he is missing will be sufficient; and the question, after a few minutes, as to whether he is now ready to join the class again will meet with a ready acquiescence.

Does this plan work as well in the home as in kindergarten? It certainly does, but it must be differently managed. Since there is not so much definite work or play going on in the home as in kindergarten, exclusion has to be more complete to be noticed by the child-that is to say, something more will be necessary than simply having him draw his chair to one side of the room. It must be: "Go away by yourself, John, until you are ready to be a pleasant companion again." Banishment must be complete, even to closing the door. Of course, cries will ensue, sometimes screams, but they are caused by no physical pain; and the mental shock of being entirely alone and cut off from the family is generally all that is needed to stop naughtiness. After the tempest is over, the mother should go to her little one, and say: "We want you when you are yourself again, John. Can we have you back now?"

Many of the minor naughtinesses, such as whining, teasing, mimicking, shoving, snatching, and stamping are easily managed in this simple way.

Just here let me say we mothers must be careful in our choice of words for wrong actions. Let us not call all of them bad or even naughty. If a child is disagreeable or unkind when he is tired, we should not tell him that he is bad. Save that worst word for real wrongs-like slapping, sneaking, or deceiving, and the like. Then it will carry weight and mean something. Real wrongs must be mer with severe punishments, such as depriving the child of some cherished possession.

Even a baby as young as a year old feels isolation. One of our little ones was forming a habit of throwing herself back in her high chair and screaming all during mealtime because she did not get things just as she wanted them. She was cured in less than a week by her father's taking her, chair and all, to the kitchen the minute she began and leaving her there behind a closed door until she stopped. How long did she cry? At the most, two or three minutes, and less and less each time, until she gave up the habit entirely.

Care must be taken to go to the child as soon as the storm passes or he will begin to cry again from a feeling of neglect. The isolation method of punishment takes time, but any kind of punishment takes time except the ever easy slap and shake, which do so little good and soon breed in a child the fear of physical violence.

By a little wise thinking and skillful management it is often possible to avoid punishments entirely. One method is to avoid the issue by diverting the attention. Another simple preventive is to explain actions and happenings to children without any note of irritation in the voice. Even those two and three years old can grasp much more than most people suppose if it is only told them in language they can understand. Explain what is going to happen and why they should act in such and such a way; explain what did happen and why you asked them to act as you did. Help to trace an action and establish a connection between effect and cause.

Of course, explanation may be carried to excess. Sometimes instant and unquestioning obedience is necessary for safety. Positive commands will always be obeyed if the children know that as soon as possible explanations will follow. When a grown-up obeys blind orders, he expects that the reason for them will be explained to him later. Why should not a child expect the same treatment? This method develops the intelligent side of a child's mind and helps much in good citizenship later on.

Mother at Eighty-One.

What does it mean to be eighty-one, with the most of life gone by?

It means a journey of many miles, sometimes 'neath a cloudy sky

Sometimes the path was rough and steep; sometimes the sun shone bright;

And in between were peaceful vales, and a place to rest at night.

It means alternate sun and shade, alternate smile and tear:

Sometimes to make a bridal wreath: sometimes to deck a bier.

But now, it means an eve of rest; the busy day is done; A time to think, to read, to pray, to watch the west'ring sun.

What are the thoughts of eighty-one, when sinking sun dips low:

The thoughts are dreams of other days, of friends of long

They dream of childhood's sunny hours; of youthful joys, so fleet:

Of wedded love and happiness; of motherhood, so sweet. And of the many dreams of age, the sweetest and the best Are dreams about the little ones who slept upon her breast. O, wondrous are the dreams of age! So clear, 'twould almost seem

That dreaming is the real life, and real life a dream.

Does Hope still live, at eighty-one? Ah, yes; but 'tis the truth

That hope in age is not the same as hope in restless youth. The aged hope that clouds will pass, the sun shine warm and bright:

For tidings of the absent ones; for restful sleep at night. They hope that love and tender care will fail not, till the light

Of earthly day shall fade away, and God shall send the

And, hope most sure and steadfast, as they near the "silent

Eternal life, a starry crown, a place at God's right hand. -Maribel Yates.

The law which since the fall has regulated the union of God with our nature is a law of suffering. It involved throughout all His earthly course the mortification of the flesh. It is a necessity of our probation, which even our Lord willed to bear that he might in all things be "made like unto his brethren." He learned obedience by the things which he suffered, and the same law regulates the purification and perfecting of his elect.-T. T. Carter.

For C. G. Vincent's work: South Side-Central Church, Fort Worth, Texas, $6; church at David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn., $12.50; by C. G. Vincent, $60. Total, $78.50.

For Zoshigaya Sunday-school workers: Miss Parks, $1.50; sisters of the church at Charleston, Miss., $6. Total, $7.50.

This shows a great falling off. Consequently I have had to draw on my reserve fund kept to bridge over the summer. Another month at this rate and I shall have but little left to bridge me over the summer months, when offerings are always short. The season seems to have set in earlier than usual this year.

JUNE,

Portland Avenue Church, Louisville, Ky., $15; Beech Grove, Tenn., $12.50; Cordell, Okla., $24; by Christian Leader, $3; C. H. Byrd, 50 cents; Roy Robinson, $3; George Davidson, $1; Mrs. Emma Glaus, $2; Mrs. Mabel Marks, $1. Total, $62. Earned in Japan, $17.15.

For literature: Two interested friends, $10.

For Sendagaya Church work: Mrs. B. F. Coulter, $5.

For C. G. Vincent's work: By C. G. Vincent, $60; Nashville church, $12.50. Total, $72.50.

For Zoshigaya Sunday-school teachers: Charleston, Miss., $8.65.

The month of June shows even a greater shortage than May. Yesterday (June 28) I drew a hundred dollars from the bank to meet the expenses of this month. There remains to my credit $65.36 to draw on in July. It takes a fraction over fifty dollars a month to support the three places of Sendagaya, Zoshigaya, and Shiujuku, and about a hundred dollars a month for myself and family. I have a six-months' deposit of fifty dollars which I had hoped to preserve to help buy my passage to America next year; but it may be necessary to use this and trust to Providence for the needs of next year. This I am perfectly willing to do if circumstances demand it, believing that when the time comes to buy tickets God will furnish the means.

There is nothing in the above remarks that even remotely borders on despondency, complaint, or criticism. It is only intended as a sort of financial thermometer for the information of those who are always interested in our work in Japan. I have nothing of which to complain, but much to be thankful for. Scores of churches and friends have been faithful in their fellowship through many years past, and they will continue to do so in the future.

Brother Hiratsuka baptized three young men at the Kamitomi Zaka Church on June 23. I baptized two young men here at Zoshigaya on June 30. The brethren at his native village have asked Brother Hiratsuka to visit them the first week in July, as there are several more there who wish to be baptized. Brother Ishiguro, of the Otsuka church, and Sister Okei Fujimori, the efficient Sunday-school worker at Sawara, are to get married on July 16. They have asked me to perform the ceremony and preach a sermon on the occasion. Brother Fujimori has asked Brother Yoshihara to take charge of the Sunday school at Sawara. Brother Ishiguro is to be complimented on securing such a good girl and such an efficient Sunday-school worker. Brother Ishii baptized also in June two men and two women in the slums of Shiujuku.

Brother Jelley's Return.

BY JOHN STRAITON.

I have received from Brother Jelley a long letter and some literature about the work in India. He has been in India now some seven or eight years, and has a very strong desire to return with his family to this country.

Brother Jelley reminds me that when his going out to India was under consideration I guaranteed to raise ten dollars for that purpose, and asks that I raise the same amount to help to bring him back here. That is a perfectly fair proposition. It is a proper and recognized custom that a missionary and his family, if he has one, should return home after a number of years, not only for health's sake, but to keep in touch with the people he represents in a foreign land.

I am responsible, at least, to the extent of my donation, for Brother Jelley's being in India. I am just as much responsible to bring him back. I am hoping this appeal will reach a large number of those who, like me, helped to send our brother out, and that they will feel it their duty to do as much for his return. But as we cannot reach all who gave for his trip out, there is not only room, but an imperative need, for many others to contribute to this necessary cause. Had Brother Jelley been sent out by some denominational board or society, there can be an doubt that the money would be now ready for his return.

It is not the wisest way that the large sum necessary for this purpose should be sent out to India in driblets. It ought to be kept here in one person's care till the full and proper amount is raised; and the steamship company could then authorize the issuance of tickets without the delay of sending the money by mail. As the Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., has already two or three hundred dollars accumulated for this purpose, it is fitting that this office should act as treasurer.

I am sending this notice to several of our papers, and would ask that those to whom it is not sent will please copy it. If we make a hearty and united effort, we can easily have the joy of seeing this necessary work done in a short time.

As most of the brethren know, there has been for some time past some very unsatisfactory circumstances about the work in India with which Brother Jelley is associated. It is perhaps impossible at this time and distance to determine justly the responsibility for the trouble. As Brother Jelly himself very truthfully writes: "Helping me to get home does not necessarily imply that you approve of my whole conduct or fitness to be a missionary." Whatever we may think of Brother Jelley as a brother or a missionary, it is our duty as a people to do the right thing and raise the money promptly for his return.

The Great Western Bean Tree.

BY C. G. SHUTT.

Now some of the boys and girls who read the Gospel Advocate may think of "Iack and the Bean Stalk" or some other fairy tale when they read my caption; but I am not writing a fairy story when I write about the Western bean tree, but I am writing of a well-known tree that sure enough grows by the millions in the West and bears beans. Looking at them from a distance, the beans look very much like the beans that grow in the garden, only they are much longer and hard and dry and not fit for table use. However, as a stock feed, they are excellent. Stockmen say that horses fatten quicker on them than they do on corn.

The bean tree is found in Texas between what is known as the great blackland belt of Central Texas and the foot of the Plains, covering a large number of the western-central counties. The bean-bearing tree is usually called the "mesquite tree." The tree generally grows about one to two feet in circumference, but sometimes they grow to an immense size, being as much as six feet around. There is a species of cactus known as the "prickly pear," which seems to be a providential arrangement for the cattleman during a drought, as thousands of cattle are carried over by feeding on the pears. Now the mesquite bean seems to be another providential arrangement with equal value to the prickly pear in time of drought. I am told that this bean tree bears more prolific in a dry season than it does in a wet season. This is a fine arrangement, too, as they come when needed most. Then they are more easily served than the prickly pear, as they fall to the ground when ripe and the stock help themselves. The stock will leave good grass to feed on the bean, just like a horse will leave his hay to go to a good feed of corn. Hogs also do well on these beans; chickens also eat them.

Eastern people going West for the first time have often been fooled by these bean trees. Looking out of the windows and seeing at one sweep of the eye thousands of acres covered with the bean tree, they exclaim: "My, my! What a peach orchard!" The bean tree does look at a distance something like a peach tree, so that people who never saw them before often take them for peach trees when looking at them from a distance.

Among the Colored Folks

Back to Texas.

At this writing (August 18) I am engaged in a good meeting in Beaumont, with fairly good attendance to date. The meeting at Murfreesboro, Tenn., was one of the best meetings ever held in that city. My reason for saying this is that we had the largest attendance ever had in the history of that congregation, and the crowd increased at each service till the close. A goodly number were added, and the church is now in better condition for work than ever before. I am very thankful to all that had fellowship in this good work. I have promised to visit them at another time. the Lord willing. At the close of the meeting Brother John Howland, of Arlington, Tenn., was called to preach for this church at this time. I hope the Tennessee preachers will visit this church and help keep up the work. I go from here to Dallas, my home. Brethren, let us be faithful always.

JOHN THOMAS RAMSEY.

Notes from the Field.

The meeting at Belfast, Tenn., closed with a growing interest. The preaching at night was done by Brother D. M. English and in the daytime by the writer. Four were added by baptism.

The meeting four miles from West Nashville closed with a good interest. The writer did the preaching the first week and Brother M. Keeble the second week. Two were added by baptism.

I preached for the Jackson Street Church, in Nashville, on the second and third Lord's days in August, and the services were encouraging.

The church at Capleville has invited the trustees of Christian College to meet there on October 17, the day before being gathering day. Let all come, and let us get together and give the school a grand push up the hill. For further information, write Brother Moses Allen, Capleville, Tenn.

Old Brother Jeff Nails and wife, of the old Center Hill Church, in Marshall County, have gone to their reward. They were lifelong friends of the writer, and, like many others, while here in this life they had their trials and troubles. When we look around and see how fast the old soldiers are dropping out, it makes us feel a little sad; but let us keep marching on until we reach the end.

On the first Lord's day in August I was to have begun a meeting below Nashville, Tenn., but because of such great interest at Henderson I had to remain a week longer, and during the last week many precious souls were brought to Christ-eighty-four in all, and all from the sects. So I sent word to Brother S. W. Womack to start the meeting for me. I came in on the last week and found Brother Womack holding the attention of the people and doing some excellent preaching. This meeting closed with the brethren and sisters much edified and two added by baptism.

I next went to Looxahoma, Miss., and began my third meeting at the New Zion Church on the third Lord's day in August. In this meeting the interest was good both night and day, and five were baptized and four were restored.

I am now in a mission field below Senatobia, Miss., conducting a week's meeting. We have no meetinghouse here, so I am preaching under a large walnut tree every night. This meeting is being supported by the New Zion Church. Two years ago the elder of this church moved here, and he is doing all he can to have the gospel preached in this section. I am praying that all who move into new fields may follow the example of this good man.

My next meeting will be at Bells, Tenn., beginning on the first Lord's day in September. This is a new field, and the meeting will be supported by the Beech Grove Church, near Brownsville.

My wife is with me, and she is a great help in leading the song service.

Florida.

BY W. A. CAMERON.

The season is drawing nigh when the people of the colder climates e thinking of going South for the winter, and their thoughts naturally turn to Florida. I have found that many members of the church of Christ spend their winters here; but, unfortunately for the cause, and especially so for them, they select some place that from "booster advertisement" appeals to them, and when located they find themselves so far removed from any congregation that they have no place t worship. This ought not to be. First, wherever you are, you always need the association and influence of fellow members. Second, the cause in this dest'tute field needs your moral and spiritual assistance while here.

If it is climate you want, you can do no better than to come to Florida. Our southern keys are less than one degree and the northern boundary less than eight degrees from the Tropic of Cancer, and, being almost surrounded by water, we have the most equable climate in the world.

Florida has an area of fifty-eight thousand six hundred and sixty-six square miles, fifty-four counties, one thousand and fifty-three post offices, and only about forty congregations, from which it can be seen how easy any stranger can get out of touch with a church. Now, if any one expecting to spend the winter in Florida will write me, I will do all I can to locate him or her in reach of a church, whether on the coast or inland, just as he or she prefers.

In the matter of church work, do not come expecting to find old, wellordered congregations; you will be disappointed. So far as primitive Christianity is concerned, this is a frontier country. We fight for every inch we gain, and then fight twice to hold it. Be sparing in your criticisms and liberal in your efforts to push the work and save a soul. My address is Large, Fla., Box 10.

Meetinghouse Needed at Buffalo. W. Va.

BY F. P. FONNER.

Our work is doing very well in this section, but much of the time we are obliged to meet in private houses and under trees. This is a great disadvantage to us; and winter is now coming on. We certainly must have that house of worship before winter sets in. We have selected a location and have collected some money. This is now in a safe place awaiting sufficient additions from outside sources to enable us to pay for the lumber and proceed with the building. We are asking for only a few hundred dollars to enable us to build a modest house of worship where it is badly needed. Surely the brethren will respond to this call with alacrity, since so much depends on it. Please make your checks payable to F. P. Fonner, treasurer, Box 81, Buffalo, W. Va. Not a dollar of your money will be wasted. Who will send us ten, twenty, or a hundred dollars upon reading this second appeal? By acting promptly, you can help us to establish the true cause of Christ upon a permanent basis at this point. Make your checks as large as you possibly can; but if you can only send a small amount, by all means send it, anyway. A full report of all receipts will be made låter. When we get this house, so that we can accommodate the people, we expect quite an ingathering.

The Second Crucifixion.

Loud mockers in the roaring street Say Christ is crucified again; Twice pierced his gospel-bearing feet, Twice broken his great heart in vain.

I hear, and to myself, I smile, For Christ talks with me all the while.

No angel now to roll the stone From off his unawaking sleep; In vain shall Mary watch alone, In vain the soldiers vigil keep.

Yet while they dream my Lord is dead. My eyes are on his shining head.

never more shall Mary hear That voice exceeding sweet and low Within the garden calling clear! Her Lord is gone, and she must go.

Yet all the while my Lord I meet In every London lane and street.

Poor Lazarus shall wait in vain, And Bartimeus still go blind; The healing hem shall ne'er again Be touched by suffering humankind.

Yet all the while I see them rest. The poor and outcast, on his breast.

No more unto the stubborn heart, With gentle knocking shall he plead; No more the mystic pity start, For Christ twice dead is dead indeed.

So in the street I hear men say. Yet Christ is with me all the way. -Richard Le Gallienne,

The Quiet Life.

Often we rebel at what looks to us like the narrowness and emptiness of our lives. There is so little variety, so little of the unexpected and the dashing. We forget the loveliness of a gray life-the delicacy, the subtle tints and shades that are only possible when experiences come sparsely or filtered through long periods of waiting. Quiet lives are more exquisite than crowded ones, just as quiet shadows are more exquisite than crude sunlight.-Exchange.

We have many needs in the Christian life, but the one need which includes all others is the need of Christ. Do we lack joy? It comes by having more of Christ. Have we need of power? It is only our need of Christ. Is peace absent from our heart? The presence of Christ alone gives peace. Do we want more love? We may have it by having more of him whose other name is Love. All the problems of religion, positively all, resolve themselves finally into this one supreme problem: How can more of Christ be brought into the believer's heart? We have everything when we have him .-Exchange.

The Master's Vineyard

Alabama.

Albany, September 6.—Brother John A. Klingman, of Lebanon, Tenn., began with us on August 25 and closed on September 4. We had splendid inter-est throughout the meeting, and four were baptized into Christ. This was Brother Klingman's first work in this part of Alabama. He came to us on the recommendation of Brother A. B. Lipscomb as a "thoroughly dependa-ble preacher," and we were not dis-appointed. All were impressed with his earnestness and deep devotion and piety. He made many friends while here, who will be glad to welcome him again.-J. Pettey Ezell.

Rogersville, September 2 .- On Saturday night and yesterday morning I preached at Pleasant Valley, with two fine services. One woman made the good confession on Saturday night and was baptized yesterday afternoon. The members there are certainly interested in the cause of Christ. Last night I was at this place, with a very good-sized crowd. The work here is improving some, we think, but not so much as it could. Brethren, why not do the things that we know to be God's will and good? "To him therefore that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." (James 4: 17.) -Silas E. Templeton.

Florida.

Avon Park, August 29 .- My last meeting for the summer was at Wilkinson, Miss. We were rained out three nights in succession and were discouraged, but, saddest of all, the meeting ended with the funeral of Brother T. Netterville's little boy, who died from burns. Just before the funeral I baptized a young man. I have just moved to Avon Park to be principal for the high school and to help the church here. We have a splendid chance to build up a strong congregation. Brother Thompson has been secured to do mission work in this part of the State, this church assuming his support. We are exp things.—J. G. Chaplin, September 3.-I am in a good meeting in Washington County. with fifteen confessions to date. I go from here to Cedar Springs, near Louisville.-R. A. Craig.

Benton, August 31.—Since last report I have held two meetings—one at Oak Valley, in Marshall County, with six baptisms, and the other at Pleasant Hill, three miles southeast of Trenton, Tenn., with nine baptisms,-W. N. Luton.

Hazel, September 2.-We had splendid service at Hazel yesterday, with one baptism at the evening service-a young man who is doing service for the United States as a soldier. I shall moderate for Brother H. E. Winkler in his debate with H. B. Taylor at Needmore the next four days .- T. B. Thompson.

Louisville, September 1.-Brother F. L. Paisley, a soldier boy of Camp Zachary Taylor, is in a meeting in a tent on Twenty-sixth and Dumesnil Street, this city, with good interest. Three have taken membership with the Parkland church from other congregations in the city. Brother Paisley is doing some excellent preaching. Brethren, pray for him. We are looking praying for a great ingathering for the Lord before this meeting comes to a close.-J. Oscar Paisley.

Hopkinsville, September 2.-I closed the meeting at Union Hill, in Trigg County, with five added. I preached at home yesterday. One was added to the membership. This makes twenty-three since January. The Lord is blessing us in many ways. The church is doing good work. The ladies meet on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons to sew for the poor in France. The church has agreed to become a regular contributor to the war work at Camp Taylor. My next meeting will be at Joiner Chapel, in Trigg County.-J. H. Hines.

Louisiana.

Turkey Creek, August 31.- I am engaged in preaching the gospel in the great missionary field of Louisiana. Our work here is among the Creoles and people of French descent. I have recently married and am here to stay. Will some brother who is willing and who has the funds kindly make me a present of a Ford? My field is not far from the fields of Brethren Ramsey and Hebert.—C. K. Mathews.

Forest Hill, September 2.-I married Brother C. K. Mathews and Sister Louise Johnson at Turkey Creek on July 21, and preached there the following two nights, with one confession. At the time of last report Brother Hebert had baptized one thousand and twenty-seven persons. The Estherwood congregation has given him an The Iota congregation automobile. has been speeding up some financially, having made a number of contributions to the war relief fund and to a number of mission points. Brethren Mathews and Ramsey are in a meeting at Pine Prairie this week .- A. K. Ramsey.

Mississippi.

Gulfport, August 30 .- I recently held a thirteen-days' meeting at Ridgeland, with one baptized. I have just closed a ten-days' meeting at Carpenter, with three baptized. Mississippi certainly needs the gospel, and the people seem anxious to hear. The Lord willing, I shall return to this field of labor. Jackson is a place of twenty-five or thirty thousand inhabitants, and there are a number of Christian families who want to establish a congregation there, and there are other congregations in convenient reach of Jackson. The brethren in that country would like to locate a preacher. Any who are interested should write Brother J. J. Vaughn, 1317 Central Avenue, Jackson, Miss., or Brother R. L. Missouri.

Poplar Bluff, September 2.—Since my last report I have held two meetings—one at Maple Grove, in Henry County, Tenn., and one at New Concord, Ky. The first resulted in three baptisms and was a most encouraging meeting from all standpoints; the other was a mission meeting. I am now in a meeting near Poplar Bluff.—David Thompson.

Oklahoma.

McAlester, September 3.—The meeting at Nida resulted in eighteen additions and a promise for another meeting next year. I am to begin at Alma, Ark., twenty miles from Fort Smith, on Thursday night. I will move my family from Memphis, Tenn., to New Mexico on October 1.—J. A. Cullum.

Hulen, August 28.—I am now in a meeting at Hulen, with good crowds and good attention. There are but few brethren here, but they are alive and seem to want to do all they can for the cause. I will close here on Sunday night. Next week I will be in a meeting at Muskogee. After that meeting I go to Springdale, Ark., for a meeting. Brethren, I am ready to arrange work, either for meetings or a course of lectures. Write me.—D. S. Ligon.

Tennessee.

Lebanon, September 4.—The meeting at Skeen's Corner, in Wilson County, closed last night. There were three baptisms. The congregation is small, but a more active and energetic one I have never seen. I am now at Millersburg, Rutherford County.—William P. Walker.

Decherd, September 3.—I have just closed a good tent meeting at Liberty Schoolhouse, in Sequatchie County. Twenty-seven were baptized and one confessed his wrongs. This is the home of Brother J. C. Mosley, who led the song service. He also baptized two young men who came from a distance. I preached four weeks on this trip and baptized forty-seven persons. I go next to Lea's Station, in Bledsoe County.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Whitwell, August 31.—I have been helping Brother Taylor in two meetings. Over forty-five have been baptized and many renewed their walk. One young man came down from Beaver Hill and one from Center Point and were baptized by the writer. I will preach to-morrow night at Red Hill (Pikeville). Then I go to Hickory Grove, in Cumberland County, a destitute field. I have been invited to preach for the State Farm people, and will try to get to them if I can.—J. C. Mosley.

Columbia, August 27.—Brother R. A. Largen closed an eight-days' meeting with the church of Christ at Arkland on August 16, with five additions, four of them members of my Sunday-school class. Brother Largen's preaching was fine and much good was accomplished. We are few in number, but strong in faith. We have about twenty-four members, with only two leading brethren. This is the second meeting we have had in our new meetinghouse, which was built last October. May the Lord give us more laborers and keep all of us busy striving to lead souls to Christ.—Mrs. Comer Kinzer.

Polk, September 2.—On July 21 I closed a ten-days' meeting at Pleasant Grove Church, Ky., Todd County, with one confession. We had large crowds and good attention. Brother H. R. Daniel, a splendid gospel preacher, lives there. On August 1 I closed an eight-days' meeting at Boyd, Texas. There were no additions, but we had a good meeting. OBITUARIES

Netterville.

A sad accident happened at the home of Brother C. T. Netterville, Wilkinson, Miss., on August 21, 1918, which resulted in the death of little Charles Netterville. While some children were playing in an automobile, one let the gasoline out and struck a match near the machine. Ignition followed, and little Charles, being in the machine, was burned so badly and swallowed so much of the gas or flames that he died the next day. He was of just such a nature to make a home happy, being very intelligent and of a sunny disposition. He was taken home just a few days after his second birthday.

His funeral was largely at-tended at the home, in Nashville, Tenn. The remains were taken to Shelbyville, Tenn., the home of his father, for burial. While I was not personally acquainted with him, I am assured he was a devoted, consecrated Christian, always willing and ready to meet and worship with the brethren when circumstances would permit. None of his relatives should mourn without hope. Though their loss is irreparable, his gain, we trust, is eternal. May his rest from the exacting labors of life be sweet. A noble soldier of the cross has gone to his reward.

Thompson.

John F. Thompson, of Bridgeport, Ala., was killed on the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway on August 30, 1918, at his post of duty. He was born on August 31, 1888, and was married to Elizabeth Crownover on September 14, 1909. Born to this union are three children-one brighteyed boy and two sweet little girls. Brother Thompson also leaves an aged father, mother, and four brothers (three of them in France) to mourn their loss. He was spoken of in the highest terms by his fellow servants and coworkers of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen as a brother and a Christian ger gentleman. She did more than the most of us would have done under similar circumstances. She was dutiful as a wife, patient and indulgent as a mother. Industry was one of the characteristics of her godly life. She has undoubtedly gone to be with her angel babe, which shortly preceded her to the grave. Another child had also died some years before. She leaves a husband, eight children, two sisters, two brothers, besides a host of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. May our Heavenly Father help us all to be made better by her noble life. She died on May 28, 1918, and was buried at the Leiper's Fork cemetery. Funeral services were held by the writer.

Sophia Cook, wife of T. W. Cook and daughter of B. F. and Orah Mansfield, was born on October 23, 1890. She obeyed the gospel in 1910, under the preaching of W. A. Bentley, at Fargo, Texas, and ever after, I believe, lived

To Stop Falling Hair:

The cause of baldness, hair falling out, loss of luster and color, is found in the roots of the hair itself. Our hair is but a portion of our body, and, like the other organs, cannot subsist without food. The hair finds its food in the fat layer of skin next to the skull. When this source of food is stopped or impeded, out comes the hair. The dreaded disease, dandruff, is a germ. It collects on the bottom of the hair and eats away its life. hair sack, from which the hair comes, is imbedded in the layer of under skin. When the scalp is diseased and the hair falls out, often this small hair sack closes. Eventually, as a result of the dandruff germs, baldness comes. The proper method of restoring the hair and stopping the falling out must necessarily he in the destruction of the dandruff germs and in the reopening of the little hair sacks. Furthermore, in order to rejuvenate the scalp and make the growth of new hair more vigorous, it is necessary that the system be able to furnish an abundance of hair food. Many artificial methods have been tried in restor-ing the hair which were only surface remedies, and, failing to reach the small hair sacks, were unsuccessful. Reopening the hair sack allows the new hair to grow. CALVACURA begins at the root of the trouble, and its use is, therefore, advised. Its mission is to feed the new hair as well as the old and rid the scalp of all dandruff germs. By thus cleansing and rejuvenating the entire scalp, a healthy growth of hair is assured. Falling of hair is stopped, new life and color to dead, gray hair is developed, and the hair becomes smooth and velvety. It is not an unpleasant treatment, and takes only a few minutes of time each day for about six weeks. The Union Labora-tory, 214 109th Street. Binghamton, N. Y., will send you a liberal sample of Calvacura No. 1 FREE, together with a booklet, "The Triumph of Science Over Baldness," if you will send your name and address, together with 10 cents in silver or postage stamps to help pay the distribution expenses.

That her companion and the little boys will live so that they will be reunited where partings will be no more is the sincere desire of her grandfather.

J. G. MILBURN.

Cobb.

On Monday, September 2, 1918, at 3:25 A.M., the angel of death visited the home of Mrs. W. R. Cobb and claimed as its victim our youngest brother, Chester Elmer Cobb. He was just twenty years of age. It seems so sad to give him up so young, but God doeth all things well. His death was not unexpected. He had been sick almost seven weeks, and suffered untold agony the last week of his illness. agony the last week of his limess, Everything that physicians and loving hands could do to relieve him was done, but it took a more powerful hand than ours to relieve his pain. He obeyed the gospel about five years ago. He was a member of the years ago. He was a member of the Hardie's Chapel congregation. He was buried at Hardie's Chapel. Breth-ren C. E. Coleman and B. C. Hawthorne conducted the funeral services in the presence of a large number of sorrowing relatives and friends. He leaves, to mourn their loss, his mother, W R. Cobb. also four brothers Mrs. W. R. Cobb, also four brothers and four sisters—namely: W. D. Cobb, A. A. Cobb, A. L. Cobb, L. P. Cobb, Mrs. Lilly Happoldt, Mrs. R. J. Hawthorne, Mrs. W. A. Kennington, and Mrs. W. W. Taylor. Chester was indeed a good boy, and we saddy miss him and are grieved over his departure, yet we grieve not as those who have no hope. May God watch, guide, and direct us in the way we should go, so that we may all meet him in that home where sorrow and separation can never come.

Hitson.

Sarah Hitson, wife of L. Hitson and daughter of Joseph Wagner, was born on April 9, 1839, and died on August 8, 1918. She was one of a large family who were instrumental in building up the church of Christ in the vicinity of Viola, Tenn. She obeyed the gospel while young and served faithfully her Savior till death called her home. Being the mother of a large family, the most of her time was spent in seeing to her household; but she delighted in the assembly of the saints, and when able she was in her place at the meetings of the church. She was truly a homekeeper, free from gossip, kind in disposition, and attentive to the welfare of her husband and children. Having lived so long where she grew up, she was known and loved by many people, and her influence as a faithful Christian will live on as the years pass. She leaves a husband, an aged sister, three sons; three daughters, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn her loss, but not without hope; for we believe she fell asleep in Jesus and will enter into the rest that remains for the people of God. Our sympathy goes out for Brother Hitson and family. They sustain a great loss. But we should be thankful that mother lived so long to be a companion and help and that she is now free from Cherish fondly the memory suffering. of such a friend and emulate her virtues. So live as to meet her and all the redeemed ones in the sweet by and by. J. R. STUBBLEFIELD.

Jones.

In obedience to the decree that mortals must return to dust whence they came, death has claimed as its victim Sister Tabitha Cliff Jones. Sister Jones was born on May 2, 1849, and died on May 15, 1918. She was permitted to dwell on earth for sixty-nine years and thirteen days, of which about fifty years were spent in the service of Christ. A large family of children and relatives left to realize what they have lost and to call her memory blessed. was the fond mother of sixteen children, fifteen of whom survive her. Of these, but three are members of the body of Christ. Two of the boys, John M. Jones and S. M. Jones, have done considerable work preaching the old story of Iesus and his love. The others are active members of the church, the oldest son, Frank Jones, a most faithful leader among the Russell Street brethren, Nashville, Tenn. The girls have all grown up to be "keepers at home;" taught "to love their husbands, to love their children," as Paul taught and as Sister Jones so well taught and practiced. I have known Sister Jones and her family intimately nearly twenty-five years. I was in the Nashville Bible years. I was in the Nashville Bible School with the two preacher sons; baptized and later married the baby girl to a worthy man I had also baptized. During all these years Sister Jones has bat-tled faithfully for the right. Since her faithful and devoted husband's death she had still been true and faithful. She was always at the Lord's-day meeting when possible; at meeting till the last, save one Lord's day. She would sit in her buggy at the window when too feeble to go inside. Of course she had her failings, as all have; but the packed meetinghouse on the day of her funeral, the tears and words of sympathy, the expressions of gratitude from the poor she was so mindful ofthese are a reminder of the truth: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their la-bors; for their works follow with them." After the funeral services by the writer, we laid her mortal remains to rest in beautiful Mount Hope Cemetery, Frank-lin, Tenn. R. C. WHITE. lin, Tenn.

When Work Is Play.

One of the best kinds of play is work. Many of the elements of play enter into work if it is performed in the right spirit. The most satisfying forms of play are those in which interest is excited; competition, with desire to succeed and accomplish some definite end, makes the game worth playing. Work is fatiguing and distasteful when it is lacking in these elements.—Exchange.

Women of Tennessee Prepare for Trouble!

When a girl becomes a woman, when a woman becomes a mother, and when a woman passes through the changes of middle life, are the three periods of life when health and strength are most needed to withstand the pain and distress often caused by severe organic disturbances. Many thousands in Temnessee would testify as do the following:

medicine for my

It is put up in both liquid and tablets and is to be found in almost any drug store. If not obtainable send 10 cts. to Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. I have also taken several bottles since and it always helps me. I can say it is a wonderful medicine. I recommend it to all broken-down women. It is the best medicine for nervousness and for prospective mothers that I ever saw."—MARY L. WALKER.

Calomel Dynamites A Sluggish Liver

Crashes into sour bile, making you sick, and you lose a day's work.

Calomel salivates! It is mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile, it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel billous, headachy, constipated, and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents, which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful, and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel to-day, you will be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you; while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. It is harmless, pleasant, and safe to give to children; they like it.

Lawrenceburg, September 4.—Our meeting at Odd Fellows' Hall, in Giles County, closed on September 3. Twelve were baptized, one was restored, and one came from the Baptists. My next meeting will be at Providence, near Pulaski.—Thomas Cr King.

Ethridge, September 2.—Our meeting at Pleasant Valley closed at the water last Monday. Four were baptized. My next meeting will be in Giles County, if I can get to it. I have a great deal of farm work to be done, and labor is scarce.—J. Clifford Murphy.

Hampshire, September 4.—I have just closed a good meeting at Macon. Seven were baptized. We had large crowds and good interest throughout the meeting. I am now in a good meeting at Hampshire. This is my last meeting this summer. I go next week to Henderson to begin school work.—I. A. Douthitt.

Nashville, September 2.—I leave tonight for my work in Paris, Texas. I preached at Lawrence Avenue, in Nashville, yesterday. I closed at Trezevant on Friday, at the water's edge, with sixteen baptisms and two restorations. Perhaps the greatest good was in reviving the congregation. It was very refreshing.—J. W. Dunn.

Huntingdon, August 31.—Brother D. D. Swar, of Hazel, Ky., began a meeting at Poplar Springs, near Clarksburg, in Carroll County, Tenn., on the first Sunday in August and closed it on Friday, with three baptisms. This was Brother Swar's first meeting. The congregation was well pleased with his work. We hope to have him with us again.—W. D. Roark.

Livingston, September 3.—Our meeting at Arcot closed last Sunday after continuing for eight days. Five were baptized and seven confessed their sins and promised to live better lives. I was assisted in this meeting by my brother, J. L. Hunter, who, having been drafted, left this morning for Camp Wheeler, Ga. Lebanon, August 28.—I have just closed a nine-days' meeting with the church near Kelso. This was a wonderful meeting, the attendance and interest growing from the beginning. At some of the evening services the house was packed and many people left standing at the doors and windows, not able to get seats. Fifteen persons were baptized, five were restored to the fellowship of the church, and three took membership with the congregation, to be Christians only. Among the baptized were three men, fifty-six, sixty-seven, and seventy-six years of age, respectively, and an afflicted young man whom we had to lift off of his bed and baptize in a box in his room. It is a wonderful thing to rea-son with men concerning "temperance, righteousness, and the judgment to come," who have so long resisted the gospel call and hardened themselves against it till almost over the "dead line," and see them yield to the call of God. No wonder angels re-joice. There was great rejoicing among their loved ones and friends. Brother J. R. Bradley, of Elora, was present for three or four days and rendered valuable assistance and encouragement. I begin next Lord's day with the Hopewell Church, near Castalian Springs.-George W. Farmer.

Belleview, September 1.-I began a meeting at Hearin's Chapel, in Henderson County, on the second Lord's day in July, which continued with good interest from start to finish and closed on Friday night. From here I went to Shiloh, in Humphreys County. and began a meeting on the fourth Lord's day in July, which continued until the following Friday night, closing at the water, with two baptized. From here I went to New Lasea, in Maury County, and began my third meeting with this congregation on the first Sunday in August. This meeting continued until the following Saturday night, with eleven additions-ten baptized and one from the Holiness denomination that had been baptized for the remission of sins. From this place I went to Sharp's Corner and began a meeting on the second Sunday in August, which continued with good interest until the following Friday night, with eight confessions and baptisms. From this place I went to Lanton, near Spring Hill, and began a meeting on the third Sunday in August, which continued until the following Friday night, with good interest. Brother W. C. Cook, of Lewisburg, led the song service. This is the home of Brother L. O. Green and Brother G. W. Blair, good men. From here I went to Cedar Dell, in Marshall County, and began a meeting on the fourth Sunday in August, which continued until the following Lord's-day night. Rain hindered the people from coming out. Four families are represented in the membership. The members meet regularly. There is some indifference. I next went to Parham's Chapel, in Hickman County, where I began on August 4 and continued till August 14. The meeting started off favorably, and good interest was manifested till its close. This was my sixth meeting at that place. Five were baptized. I preached at Dickson on the third Sunday in August, both morning and night. I enjoyed the trip there. I reported to them the work I had done, beginning the first of June. They know the necessity of mission work and are contributing to my support. This enables me to give my time mostly to the work this year. On Monday night, August 19, I began at Hilltown, in Maury County, and continued till August 26. Shamrock, August 30.-I arrived here this morning and will begin a meeting here to-night. Brother W. C. Scruggs, a faithful preacher, lives here. On last Sunday night I closed a good meeting at Itasca, with ten baptisms. Brother Tolbert F. Stovall led the singing, and did his work well. Brother L. E. Carpenter has located at Itasca to preach for the congregation there. Brother Carpenter was formerly with the Garrett Avenue Church, in Dallas. He attended school at Cordell before coming to Texas.-J. B. Nelson.

Ennis, September 2.-The "Feast of Tabernacles" was our experience here yesterday. Brother J. P. Sewell, president of Abilene Christian College, spoke at 11 A.M. on "Christian Education." Brethren White, W. T. Kidwill, and the writer spoke in the afternoon and night to great crowds. There were four additions, one baptized. Next Sunday is "Christian Education Day," when we shall try to be one of the ten churches to support the "Bible Chair" at the University in Austin. The church is launching out into the deep and letting down the net at the Master's word.-Ben West.

Tom Bean, August 29 .- In the meeting with the church at Allen, Okla., one was baptized, two were restored, and one was added by statement. The song service was led by Brother Leo Henley, of Atwood, Okla. in the midst of the great drought and is greatly handicapped at the present time, but there are loyal Christians there who will "keep the home fires burning." My home was with Brother John Case. Brother and Sister Case know how to make one feel that he is an appreciated guest in an appreciated home. I go next to Missouri, and then home for the winter.-W. P. Skaggs.

Mangum, September 2.-I began the meeting at Mangum yesterday, and, although somewhat sick on Saturday night and Sunday morning, I preached the best I could to large crowds. Brother Teddlie is leading the singing. A number of us went to-day to Jester to hear the debate between Brother N. L. Clark and a Mr. Rich, of the Church of God (Holiness). It was one of the cleanest debates I ever heard. Mr. Rich is a pretty good debater and did his best for his cause; but Brother Clark was too much for him, and everybody saw it, I think. Brother Clark is a good debater and a good Brother man. I have moved to Nocona, and after this meeting will do for the church there such work as they give me to do, and will try to help them forward as much as I can during the next year.—Tice Elkins.

Why I Believe in Nuxated Iron

As a Tonic, Strength and Blood Builder.

DR. KENNETH K. McALPINE A Prominent New York Surgeon, Mem ber New York State Medical Society and Former Adjunct Professor, New York Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital.

"The great strain of the present times should make the public generally realize the necessity of forthlying the blood and nerve cells by means of a strengthening, upbuilding tonic If people would only realize that from is just as indispensable to the blood as is air to the lungs and be just as particular about keeping up a sufficient supply at all times there would, in my opinion, be far less disease resulting from anaemic, weakened conditions. For years it was a problem with physicians how to administer from in a form that could be taken up by the system and increase the resulted corpuscies without upsetting the stomach blackening the teeth or producing other disorders almost as serious as the lack of from itself. But the introduction of Nuxated Iron has done away with all the objectionable features of the old mineral salts of from and gives to every careful, thinking physician a tried and valuable prescription which he can recommend nearly every day with henefit to his weakened and run-down patients.

I also held meetings in July at Spring Lake and Dimmitt, on the South Plains, with three baptisms and a congregation put to work at Dimmitt; also a meeting at Lefors, in Gray County, with good interest, but no additions.—O. M. Reynolds.

Worth, August 29.—Brother Austin Taylor and I closed an elevendays' meeting at Desoto, in Dallas County, this morning, with six bap-tisms the last service, making a total of seventy-five baptized and twenty restored or otherwise added to the congregation. There is no congregation better prepared to take care of ninetyfive new members than the Desoto church. The members are alive to Brother Taylor taught a singduty. ing class a while before the meeting, which contributed largely to the success of the meeting, as the singing was a great feature of the work. We were also well supported and shown every Christian courtesy possible while there, and they insisted that we return next We are now en route to Georgetown for a two-weeks' meeting. From there we go to Waco for the last two weeks of this month, then to Vernon, which will end our summer campaign, which has already resulted in more than two hundred additions to the churches where we have labored. Then I am to begin my regular work with the Glenwood Church, this city, which has been carrying on a great work through the summer in my absence. Since I began work with this congregation we have developed several young preachers who are now preaching at near-by points each Lord's day, and they are making their influence felt wherever they go. I am arranging now for some of them to preach for some of our good congregations this winter, and I am glad that I can recommend them without an apology. I am receiving enough calls to keep three men busy for a year ahead, for which I thank the brethren who remember me, but ask them to pardon me if I fail to answer their letters, as I am so busy through the summer that I sometimes fail to reply. But I pray that some honest la-borers will be called to these places and that a great work may be accomplished in the Master's name.—Horace W. Bushy.

Mrs. M. S. Davis, 1607 10th Ave., N. Nashville, Tenn., writes:

"After having been a constant sufferer from catarrh for more than twenty years and after trying almost every remedy advertised, and having lost all hope, I very reluctantly began the use of Peruna about two years ago. The Railroad Administration.

Director General McAdoo has issued a circular to all employees of the railway lines operated by the government in which he enjoins upon them in emphatic terms the policy of courtesy and efficiency. He announces that the policy of the Railroad Administration is exactly the reverse of the policy known as "the - public - be - damned ' policy.

He states that the fact that the United States is running the railroads is not an excuse or justification for the shortcoming of either the employees or the Railroad Administration. "The people have accepted cheerfully and patriotically the burden of increased railroad fares that war conditions have imposed upon them, part of which is due to the increased expenditures caused by the raise in the wages of the railroad employees," says the Director General, "and the least that the railroad employees can do in return is to serve the public faithfully, courteously, and efficiently."

Railroads are just as much public servants under government administration as under private control. The change of management was made for the purpose of making the railroads more efficient servants of the people, more especially in the great work of winning the war. The relation of the railroads and the railroad employees to the public, therefore, is unchanged, except that patriotism to their country as well as loyalty to their employer should actuate the railroad employee.

Think as well as you can of every one who is trying in these hard times to do his duty-to be brave, cheerful, and useful. Let us not be among those "who whet their tongue like a sword, and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words." Kindness helps where criticism cannot.-Exchange,

Joe McPherson, Preacher-Postman.

BY A. B. L.

Hundreds of hearts were saddened when they read in the daily papers that Brother Joe McPherson had died, on Wednesday, September 11. Hundreds attended the funeral services, which were held the following Friday, in the Russell Street auditorium, being conducted by Brethren E. A. Elam, J. C. McQuiddy, Matthew Cayce, and the writer.

I cannot think seriously of our lamented brother and his work and not be reminded of an expression that Paul used in the second Corinthian letter where he speaks of the "simplicity that is in Christ." I do not know of a man anywhere who had a stronger appreciation of the simple gospel or one who could preach it in a simpler way than Brother McPherson. This trait in him was generally rec-Whenever there was need for a man to go into a new mission field where the people for the most part were poor and Illiterate and the question arose, "Who is the best man to send?" it was not difficult for any of us here in Nashville to agree on the man-it was usually Joe Me-Pherson. Be it said to his credit, he was always willing to go, trusting in God and in his brethren for support. Nor did he always wait to be sent. Time and again he suggested places where the gospel was sorely needed and urged that he be sent to those places. He seemed to find great depths of meaning in those burning words of the apostle Paul: "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent? even as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of good things!" (Rom. 10: 14, 15.)

I would not for one moment convey the impression that Joe McPherson preached chiefly to the poor and the illiterate classes because he was unable to preach to welleducated people. That would be a wrong impression. For this good man numbered among his friends some of the most cultured people we have and held some meetings with fine results for old, established congregations. As a matter of fact, a man who is truly educated appreciates simplicity in speech and manner fully as much as his less fortunate brother who has no education. The reason why Brother McPherson labored for the most part among those in the humbler walks of life was because he felt that he could accomplish the greatest amount of good in this field. It was said of our Savior that "the common people heard him gladly;" and this may be truly said of our lamented brother. Therefore, when he elected to labor for the most part among the common people, he made a very wise decision. He threw his energies into the largest and most inviting field of human endeavor. "God must have loved the common people," said Abraham Lincoln, "because he made so many of them."

It is my belief that most of our great men have been men of plain speech. Mr. Wesley once preached to a large audience from the text, "But one thing is needful." When the congregation were retiring from the chapel, a lady who had listened to the venerable preacher expressed great disappointment. "Is this the great Mr. Wesley of whom we have heard so much?" she asked. "Why, the sermon was so plain the poorest person in the house could have understood him." I believe the same thing could be said of every sermon that Brother McPherson preached. His greatness lay in the fact that the poorest could understand him and the most learned were edified.

It matters not how humble the preacher may be, if he preaches God's word, he is God's ambassador and is entitled to a respectful hearing. He is engaged in the most important agency that has ever been established among men. It originated with the Son of God and bears the stamp of his authority. He pledged himself for its success and its perpetuity and closed the great commission with the words: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

No estimate of Brother McPherson's life would be complete did we not speak of how he proved the nobility of work. We usually consider the laborer or one who has a salaried position to be a man with limitations, so far as preaching the gospel is concerned. I have known thosewho made no effort and who excused themselves by saying: "If I did not have this job to hold down, I could do something for the Lord. If I could just escape the tyranny of the clock and the factory whistle or get away for a while from the watchful eyes of the boss, I might convert somebody." Be it said to Joe McPherson's credit that his job never spelled "limitation;" it spelled "opportunity." He could carry a heavy mail sack and walk many miles every day and then preach the gospel every night with all the fervor of his being. Some people have a great deal of money which they can use for the glory of God. Joe Mc-Pherson had very little money beyond his living expenses, but he had time which he freely consecrated to the Master's use. Do you speak of his limitation, his marrow environment for doing good? His life work repudiates any such thought. I am willing to place the record. including the number of sermons preached, the number of meetings held, the number of people baptized, alongside that of any pastor in the land, and you will find that he does not suffer by the comparison. All of this shows that If we have "a mind to work," God will provide the way. I would not say anything that may have the appearance of fulsome flattery, for I am conscious that this lamented brother had his faults. I have heard him severely criticized, and sometimes not without cause, but I have never heard a single intimation that he ever shirked his duties as a postman in order to have more time to preach. He has taken what time he had and has used it well. One of the highest encomiums of praise that I have heard upon his character was spoken by the postmaster.

Here in Nashville Brother Joe McPherson was generally referred to as "the postman-preacher," but I am going to change the order and call him the "preacher-postman;" for it is my honest belief that he placed the duty of preaching the gospel first and gave Jesus Christ the rightful place in his heart. He served God faithfully on his route and in the office as well as in the pulpit. He will be sadly missed. No one can do the work that he has done and depart without leaving a vacant place in the circle of his friends. I would remind those who are greatly bereaved of the Book that he studied above all others. I would point them to the exceeding great and precious promises in which he trusted and with which he comforted others in all their troubles. One special promise comes now with deeper meaning than ever before: "But we would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them that fall asleep; that ye serrow not, even as the rest, who have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him." (1 Thess. 4: 13, 14.)

O, how much the imperishable hope of the gospel means to the faithful in the dark hour of death! We peer into the impenetrable shadow, but we do not see; we listen in the infinite stience, and there is no sound; but the cable of human hope stretches from shore to shore. Over it we whisper our messages of love to those gone before, and with the ear of faith we await the answer of our prayers.

Let Us Hasten Brother Jelley's Return, BY J. C. M'Q.

Some time ago an appeal was made through the columns of the Gospel Advocate to raise funds to bring Brother E. S. Jelley home. Brother Jelley has some five or six children and his wife to bring home, so the amount must necessarily be large. I am glad to say that we are in about five hundred dollars of the amount required. As I have been selected to forward this money to Brother Jelley, I want to get it off my hands; so I request the churches to let us have the remaining five hundred dollars at the very earliest possible moment. The Christian Leader and the Firm Foundation will please also urge their readers to make contributions to this end and have them forwarded to me at Nashville, Tenn. So soon as the amount necessary to bring him home is received, I will forward to him, and will make the announcement public through the columns of the Christian Leader, Firm Foundation, and the Gospel Advocate. Brother A. B. Lipscomb, during my absence, received a letter from C. G. Vincent, who is now at Dayton, Ohio. In that letter he says: "We have just returned from old Sister Jelley's. We usually make it a point to visit her once a week. What to do with her and Brother Jelley's daughter, Travasnih, is a problem difficult of solution. If we could provide for the old lady, Travasnih should be sent to the Fanning Orphan School. We have consulted Brother David Lipscomb about this, and he writes that he is willing to take care of her. The easiest way out is to get Brother Jelley home. That would solve the matter. That is the thing to do, not only for his sake, but also for his invalid mother's sake."

As I said before, I now say again, that we should place ourselves in Brother Jelley's position and condition and do unto him as we would have others do unto us. He is not well, his mother is sick, he is short of funds, and wishes to come home in order to regain his health and to be with his mother. I feel confident that, when our readers read this further appeal, the remaining funds will be promptly forwarded to me. Let us attend to this promptly and go forward in the great work of saving souls. Every time that we help some poor, struggling soul, we bring ourselves nearer heaven.

Tennessee Orphans' Home.

BY J. C. M'Q.

We are glad to announce to our readers that the Home Is in good condition and is being well conducted by Sister Granville Lipscomb, as matron, and her assistants. The response to our last appeal for contributions was hearty and liberal. We must now provide for the winter; and as our expenses will be heavier than in summer, we have decided to ask the churches to make contributions for the Home on the first Lord's day in October. We know that many demands are made upon Christians now; but, while this is true, we cannot afford to neglect to make proper provisions for orphans. Many churches have contributed regularly to this work, and we believe that there are many others that will gladly contribute to it. We have no one who is devoting his time to raising funds for the Home, but we are depending on the generosity of the churches. and we find that they cheerfully and willingly respond to the needs of the Home. All contributions should be forwarded to the Tennessee Orphans' Home, Columbia, Tenn. Do not forget the day-the first Lord's day in October.

What Is Heaven?

"What is heaven?" I asked a little child. "All joy!" and in her innocence she smiled.

I asked the aged with care oppressed.
"All suffering o'er; O, heaven at last is rest!"

I asked a maiden meek and tender-eyed. "It must be love!" she modestly replied.

I asked the artist who adored his art. "Heaven is beauty!" spoke his raptured heart.

I asked the poet, with his soul afire.
"Tis glory—glory!" and he struck his lyre.

I asked the Christian, waiting her release, A halo round her, low she murmured: "Peace,"

So all may look with hopeful eyes above—
'Tis beauty, glory, joy, rest, peace, and love.

To be real, and yet trustful—sober, yet full of hope in our views and anticipations of life—is one secret means of conformity to the mind and will of God. And such a temper of soul has the further unspeakable blessing that it connects our life with the life of our Lord and forms a bond of sympathy and union with him.—T. T. Carter.

Who Erred, Paul or James?

BY A. M. GEORGE.

Both of these apostles had a great deal to say about "faith" and "works." In Rom. 4: 2, 4, Paul says than Abraham was not justified by works. James (2: 21, 22) says that Abraham was justified by works when he offered Isaac. Many seem to think that they contradict each other, but it can be only because they are carcless and superficial readers and reasoners; for it is an easy matter for an intelligent, honest person to read Romans, beginning at chapter 3: 19 and on to chapter 8: 4, and see plainly that Paul is talking about the law of Moses that came long after the death of Abraham, and which never justified anybody when it came, and so, of course, could not have justified Abraham, as Paul says. In verse 28, chapter 3, Paul says: "Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law [the law of Moses]." So he knocks out the law of Moses with its works. Now, in chapter 8: 1-4, having shown that no one is justified by the works of the law of Moses, not even Abraham, he turns to "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," that made him "free from the law of sin and death," the law of Moses, and shows that there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ and who walk after the Spirit. In verse 27, chapter 3, he calls this law of Christ "the law of faith;" and as these are one and the same, and as the law of Christ includes "walking after the Spirit," so does the law of faith, and this brings in the works of the law of faith, and so Paul stands for faith and works, as walking after the Spirit is working, just the same as following Christ is working.

James does not mention the law of Moses, but confines himself to the "perfect law of liberty," or "law of faith," and stands squarely for faith and works, just as Paul does.

If this be true, then where do people get the idea of justification by "faith only?" As all people may not have a clear conception of faith, let us look into it a little.

What is faith? Faith is what we believe; what we believe is what we think; and Solomon says: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Therefore what we think or believe is our faith, and it is the foundation of our aspirations and actions.

What we believe or think must rest upon something that we have read or heard, not what we have seen (that would be knowledge); and as what we read or hear may be true or false, so our faith may be, as any open-minded person ought to know; and as we are as our thoughts are, it stands us in hand to have our faith in agreement with the "law of faith."

Faith, like everything else, is under a law that shapes and controls it, and it must agree with its law. The sects seem to regard it as a completed thing miraculously handed down by God to sinners, and no law about it. However, Paul says: "Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith," (Rom. 3: 27.) Then there is a law connected with the "one faith" that Paul speaks of, and it, through faith, grows up in a man's mind in agreement with this law, and it is not handed down by God ready-made. According to this law, faith is worthless until it is proved and perfected by works.

The "one faith" is a good foundation to build on, but will be of no value if nothing is built on it. There are many faiths in the world, but only one that will measure up by this "law of faith," and that is the faith that Abel had, the faith that Abraham had. What was their faith? It was belief of what God told them. He told them to do certain things, and they believed what he told them and did those things. It is the same kind of faith that threw down the walls of Jericho.

The kind of faith that is preached now by miscalled "ministers of the gospel" is like the faith of Cain and devils. It would never have justified Abel or Abraham, nor would it have cracked the walls of Jericho. As Cain's faith, or lack of it, caused him to murder his brother, so the faith advocated by these "wolves in sheep's clothing "will lead to greater tragedies than Cain's. One evil paves the way for another. Bad trees grow had fruit.

Anybody who is not blinded by partisan bigotry and prejudice, who will read and study what James says in chapter 2 about Abraham's faith, will be driven to the conclusion that he would never have been justified if he had declined to offer Isaac on the altar. I pity the blind partisan who cannot see it. He is too blind to even find the way to heaven, if he remain so. You find such in Matt. 13: 15: "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them."

I suggest to every sectarian who may chance to see this that he or she make a close examination of himself or herself to see if he or she is in this class. See if you read and study scriptures that do not agree with the doctrines of your party with the same care and interest that you give to those that you imagine do.

Let me tell you, friend, and as you value your life and soul, do not forget it: The Bible is one grand galaxy of truths from lid to lid, and consistent in every part; and if your doctrine does not fit in with every statement in the Book, it will not fit any; for every truth agrees with every other truth, and there is no place for error in it. Introduce the least false doctrine, and confusion and friction quickly follow, and hence all this denominational confusion and evil.

Again 1 refer to Rom. 3: 28: "Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law"—without the deeds of the law of Moses, but not without the deeds of the law of Christ, or law of faith. The works of the law of faith consist in walking after the Spirit; and walking after the Spirit leads one to perfect his faith by doing what God tells him to do, as Abel and Abraham did.

There has been great contention over this matter of "justification by faith only," or by "faith and works" together, and it is in hope of giving a little light on this subject to those who have been misled by false teachers that this article is written. There are two faiths set forth in this contention, and any responsible person knows that if one is true, the other is false, and a believer knows that salvation can be found only in the one that is true. No one can be saved by a falsehood. Hence the unspeakable importance of knowing the truth.

Let your preachers rest for a season and go to these scriptures referred to and get the truth, or take the consequences of blindly following blind guides.

The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire.

In every crisis of national life the clergymen of America have stood in the forefront of patriotic endeavor; in every human crisis they have brought support, and guidance, and comfort to souls in desperate need. Now it is time to measure the work and the needs of the preacher and pastor as men in other departments of work to-day are being measured, that their value may be rightly appraised and their needs fairly met.

The cost of living has greatly increased. Clothing, food, fuel, and all the daily incidentals that go to make up American life have gone up from thirty to a hundred per cent; and the loans and taxes for Freedom's war are ever making deeper drives into the purse. Wage earners in every department of the nation's work have been demanding more income, and their demands have been recognized as just and necessary. Railroad men and miners, lumberjacks, and shipbuilders, munition workers, telegraph operators, automobile makers, and all the multitudes of skilled and unskilled laborers have been counted "worthy of their hire," and of higher hire. The United States goverament, very recently, has raised the wages of two million railroad workers alone, giving the poorest paid men an increase of forty-three per cent. Corporations and individual employers without number throughout the United States have taken similar action. Trade unions are standing back of their men and using pressure when necessary to gain for them the means to live their lives and do their work as Americans should.

Who stands back of the clergymen of America in these days of pressure? What great organization or compelling authority, what generous heart or spirit of fair play is winning for your minister, or pastor, or priest, or rabbi, the salary increase that will give him strength, courage, efficiency, and success in his vital and exalted work for the welfare of the nation and the kingdom of God?

Your pastor is not a cheap man nor an unskilled laborer. He has brought long, careful training to his task. He was chosen with scrutinizing care as to his qualifications, and he is being measured to-day by high and exacting requirements in the performance of his work. Carry that measurement to its just conclusion. What salary would you expect to pay to the trained man in business of whom such important work and expert ability were required? Set down on paper some of the qualities and duties you demand of your pastor, and then judge their value.

He must be a man among men; a man of force, tact, and agreeable personality; a good mixer; a man of knowledge, wisdom, and authority, whose presence commands respect and whose word carries conviction. He must be able to influence men and women, win their confidence, kindle their enthusiasm, direct their energies, and organize their working powers. He must be full of sympathy, ready with consolation, a strength in weakness, a bright light in times of darkness, and a never-failing source of inspiration to the souls of his people. You expect all this of him.

Your pastor, also, must be the successful head and center of your organized church activities, business, social, and spiritual. On occasion, or as a regular part of his task, he must be an expert money raiser. You engage him as your chief and leader, the general manager of your church, if not its actual creator, or savior from its difficulties. You put upon him a burden and a responsibility you would never dream of intrusting to any cheap man in business.

Nor are these his greatest tasks. He must read, and study, and meditate, and commune with the Infinite. He must understand men, and know their work, their trials, their problems, their temptations, their deep inner feelings and aspirations, and the avenues of helpful approach to their sympathies and convictions. He must know something of history, science, literature. He must be familiar with all social needs, and institutions, and methods. He must be able to interpret the word of God with true spiritual insight and practical human application. He must stand before you in the pulpit on Sunday and deliver messages that search the soul, feed the mind, bring courage to the heart, make plain the path of daily life, and lift you nearer to heaven, or bring heaven nearer to earth.

In these days, also, your preacher must proclaim the ideals and principles of America. He must stir the patriotism of his young men and send them with strong hearts and noble vision into the service of their country. He must pastor them in the camps and follow them with his letters and prayers as they go across the sea to fight. The government values him so highly that it has already called thousands of American clergymen into active service to shepherd the fighting men and help them win the war. At home the government calls him to be its mouthpiece in its appeals to its citizens for every form of patriotic service or economy prescribed as needful for victory. You expect your pastor to be equal to such demands and to do your church credit when called upon for public addresses or community action.

When you have listed all the qualities and services you ask of your pastor make out the bill for the amount your church ought to pay for such a man, and then move things to see that the church pays that bill. Never mind what has been done in the past, nor what long habit has accustomed the church to believe can be done. The standing record of clergymen's salaries throughout this great, rich nation is a pitiful shame, and belies the real heart and fairness of the American people. The average salary of clergymen in ten of the largest denominations is only seven hundred and ninety-three dollars a year. What trade or business would tolerate such a condition?

The minister of your church is a human being like the rest of us, and he is feeling the pressure of increased cost of living just as we do. But no government decree has raised his salary. No corporation or trades union stands back of him. He does not go on strike. He simply trusts his people, and works faithfully for them seven days a week, and many nights, and struggles to look respectable, and pay his bills, and perform the miracles expected of him, often for less than the salary of the young girl stenographer who teaches a class in his Sunday school or the wages of the man who lays the sidewalk in front of his church.

Among the more than two million readers of The Literary Digest are active and substantial members of thousands of churches throughout the United States. To them this frank appeal is made, in keeping with the urgent needs of the day, and the American spirit of justice and generosity. Give your minister a lift. Take the initiative now and have his salary increased to an amount which will come nearer to the real value of his services, and enable him to meet the increased cost of living. He is not demanding it, but he needs it none the less, and your own sense of right demands it for him. If his salary is $800, it ought to be made, at once, $1,200. If it is $1,000, it ought to be raised to $1,500. There is scarcely a church, large or small, anywhere in America that cannot increase its pastor's salary at least fifty per cent. Money never was so plentiful. More actual cash—gold, silver, and paper currency—is in circulation to-day than at any time in the nation's history, and there is a bigger share for every man, woman, and child. See that your pastor gets his fair share of your profits and those of every member in your church.

Back up the soldiers of America who follow the flag to France! Billions for them! Nothing is too much nor too good for our soldiers of liberty. But now remember that your minister is one of the bravest, worthiest soldiers of all. He is fighting for America, for the righteousness that "exalteth a nation." He is fighting for America as he puts his clean, valiant, patriotic spirit into the youth and into the men and women of his congregation and sends them out into the tasks of the week better fitted to answer America's call. He is fighting for the kingdom of heaven on earth, to help win its victories over the archenemy of the human race, the destroyer of bodies and souls. He is the soldier of mercy to those in distress, the ever-ready soldier of service to those who need help. Back him up with whole-hearted support and a quick, generous increase in salary.

We have taken this page to speak for the clergymen of America in this supreme crisis of the nation's readjustment, because we know that they are the one great devoted, indispensable body of faithful workers who have no spokesman. Only in this way has it seemed possible to reach the individual consciences and hearts of millions of men and women who, in all our experience, have never failed to respond to any just call.—Literary Digest.

Love. No. 2.

BY S. W. BERRYMAN.

In my last article I wrote concerning God's love to man, in this one I shall write concerning man's love to God. God manifested his love to man by sending "his only begotten Son" into the world to die for him. If man loves God, he will manifest his love in obedience.

Some reasons why we should love God are here given. God loves us, and we owe him our love. John says: "We love him, because he first loved us." (1 John 4: 19.)

It is a direct command. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment." (Matt. 22: 37, 38.) "Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man." (Eccles. 12: 13.)

All things work together for our good. "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.)

It furnishes peace and happiness. "But let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice: let them even shout for joy, because thou defendest them: let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee." (Ps. 5: 11.)

We are assured of the crown of life. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." (James 1: 12.)

Other reasons why we should love God could be given, but surely these are sufficient to inspire our hearts with a greater love for him.

What does it mean to love God? It means obedience to his commands. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," (John 14: 15.) "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will manifest my self to him." (Verse 21.) "If a man love me, he will keep my words." (Verse 23.) The foregoing language shows clearly what it means to love God. When man's love grows to the extent that it prompts him to do what God says, then it is recognized by the Father and the Son. The man that does not obey God does not love God, for obedience is the proof of love.

Instead of the love of many congregations growing stronger, I fear it is growing weaker, like that of the church at Ephesus. At one time this church had a strong love for God, was faithful and obedient; but they failed to remain so, and the Savior said unto them: "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." (Rev. 2: 4, 5.) Jude (21) says: "Keep yourselves in the love of God." The Savior tells us how this can be done. "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love." (John 15: 10.) Congregations everywhere should heed Jude's admonition: "Keep yourselves in the love of God." But it may be that many of them have left their "first love," like the church at Ephesus; and if they have, they should "repent" and do their "first works."

Man's love to God is not recognized until it causes his feet to run in glad and swift obedience to his divine commands. The man who loves God never calls in question his word, nor asks why God would have him do certain things, but, like faithful Abraham, he obeys, knowing that God loves him, and would not have him do anything detrimental to his well-being. God knows best and does everything to man's interest; and if man loves God, he will recognize his ways, his word. No man that challenges God's authority or sets aside his divine directions loves him.

The Greatest Code of Morals Ever Written.

The Sermon on the Mount is a code of morals which differs from every code which had been produced before it was declared, and is incomparably superior to any other code ever given to mankind. The word "morals" comes from the Latin "mores," the plural of "mos," which means custom, habit, or way of life. We have extended or, rather, limited this meaning by giving to it an idea of right—that is, a right way of living. But who is to judge what is the right way to live? The Hindu, the Chinese, and the Mohammedan each has a different conception of right living, and so each has a different moral standard; and their moral standards are very different from that of Christendom.

What we consider right they may consider wrong, and what we consider wrong to-day may have been thought to be morally right two centuries ago. Morality differs with racial traits, environment, the state of civilization, and the character of religion. Without a certain degree of intellectual development, there can be no such thing as morality in the modern sense. Among barbarous races the primitive conception prevails and customs take the place of morals. With such peoples disregard of customs is criminal, not because they are wrong, as we use the word, but because they are violations of religious or social customs.

Religion and morality are by no means the same thing. Religion pertains to man's relation to God; morality to man's relation to man. There is a tendency in these days to confuse these two and to make them synonymous. It is wrong to do so, and produces misunderstanding and error. A man's way of life may be right toward man, but wrong toward God. A man may be moral though frreligious. His sole motive for acts may be man, not God.

I think that we shall agree that the first duty of the church is to teach man's relation to God, and certainly one phase of such relation is that man should live rightly because God loves righteousness. But we must recognize this fact also: that a man, to please God, must be moral because he wants to be, not because he has to be. The laws and government compel morality, but that is not the morality God desires; and so it is not, it seems to me, the morality which the church should strive after. There is the higher type which is essentially religious. If a man is thoroughly grounded in his religious convictions and in his knowledge of the divine nature, his morality and, Indeed, his whole attitude toward society and its institutions will be sound. The province of the church, as I conceive it to be, is to give men the right attitude toward God and man by teaching them the great spiritual truths which God communicated to mankind by inspiration and through Jesus Christ.

It is a fact to be deplored that society to-day tends toward materialism, and even the church is drifting away from spirituality. The tendency is to materialize the church, to make of it a place for social meeting, of intellectual profit, and even of entertainment. Now the questions arise: Is not the church doing the very thing it ought to avoid? Is not morally supplanting religion as the chief purpose of the church? "What should we do for man?" is the question emphasized, rather than "What should we do for God?" The social meeting is taking the place of the prayer meeting: the popular lecture, the place of the gospel sermon; the whole tendency of the church seems to be away from the spiritual and toward the material, which we are apt to term the "practical"

But, although morality and religion are distinct, they are, nevertheless, closely akin, for the same motives should induce both. In that particular, therefore, all morality is a proper subject of religious effort. If the church inculcates right motives so that men's attitude toward God and toward their fellows is right, then the highest good will be accomplished for the community. The details of morality, men's acts, will need no watching, for men will look at laws in the right way. Motive always has been and always will be the great fundamental force in human life. It is that which must be directed, otherwise the outward act will be wrong. Morality, as generally understood, governs action, but there is a higher type than that—the morality which governs motive. Although there may be, as there are, many different standards of the morality of action, there can be but one standard of the morality of motive. It was the morality of motive that Jesus Christ taught, and his code of morals is universal.

To show this distinction between the precepts relating to action and those relating to motive, one need only compare the Ten Commandments of Moses with the Two Commandments of Christ. The first four of the Mosaic commandments are religious; the six others are moral. All have to do with human action. The first of Christ's commandments is religious, the second moral. Both have to do with motive. Commandments of action, both religious and moral, may be enacted into human laws and their violations punished by government. Commandments of motive deal with men's thoughts and cannot be incorporated in statutes or enforced by human authority. Only God in his own way can punish those who violate them, It is evident that the commandments of motive stand on a much higher plane than the commandments of action, and that, while constituted government may take care of the morality of action in a community or a nation, the morality of motive is especially the province of the Christian church. The former may be, and generally is, the law of man; the latter is always and solely the law of God.

With a comprehension of these two types of morality, we should be prepared for the assertion that the Sermon on the Mount is a code of morals of motive. This becomes very apparent when Christ's words are analyzed and we note the contrasts which he makes between his declarations and the Mosaic and rabbinical laws. After introducing his discourse with those wonderful declarations contained in the Beatitudes, Jesus first affirms that he has not come to overthrow the law of Moses, but to complete it. The morals of action and the morals of motive are not antagonistic. They supplement each other. Together they make a perfect whole, in which deed and thought harmonize, and man's attitude toward God and man are the same in his outward and inward life.

Very briefly to outline this remarkable code of the morals of motive: The sixth commandment of the Mosaic code, "Thou shalt not kill," is supplemented by forbidding man to cherish anger in his heart, since anger is the chief motive for murder. Of the seventh commandment, which has to do with impurity, Christ shows the motive, and declares that in itself is immoral. Concerning oaths, which were frequently used by the Jews in Christ's time, as a means of confirming an act of which the motive was wrong, the Lord points out their folly and condemns the wrong motive which induced their use.

The old Hebrew principle—a principle thousands of years older than Moses—was, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." It was the fundamental idea of the entire system of the Jewish criminal law. Christ does not deny that the application of the principle is legally just, but he attacks the motive—revenge—which induces a man to appeal to that law. He declares that the motive is utterly wrong and that the true attitude toward one who had injured you is that of forgiveness. That is, he leaves to society the punishment of crime as an impersonal expression of its sovereignty and justice, and takes away the idea of personal retaliation by the individual injured.

Christ thus builds up to the words which crown this portion of his discourse, "Love your enemies," which impress the great central precept of his code of morals: that in all man's relations with man, love should be the supreme and controlling motive of his every act and thought.

Charitable giving he places upon the motives of love and generosity, and he condemns public and ostentatious giving as based upon a wrong motive—namely, the desire to gain praise for generosity. The result of the act in both cases may be the same, but the motives differ.

In dealing with the subject of prayer, Christ declares that the motive for prayer should be personal communion with God, and he characterizes prayer in public places, as practiced by the Pharisees, as hypocrisy induced by the motive of seeking a reputation for plety and so gratifying self.

It is not appropriate in this analysis to consider the Lord's prayer, which requires a fuller treatment than can be given it here.

Fasting—the other form of what may be termed private worship—Christ shows, was frequently based upon a motive of pride in having the act known, and he declares that the true motive should be a desire to honor God alone; and that all publicity should be avoided, making a wrong motive impossible. Christ now points out that the motive which inspires human activity should not be the accumulation of wealth on earth, but of wealth in heaven; and that, with this motive, a man will have the right attitude toward his fellow men as well as a right attitude toward God. He emphasizes this thought by the assurance that, if a man will have this motive, he need not worry about the future, for God will care for him.

He charges his hearers to beware of forming hasty judgments as to the motives of others, when their own motives for judging may be even more unrighteous than those which they condemn.

Now we come to the very heart of this great code—the Golden Rule, which is essentially a law of motive. It is the exact opposite of the Mosaic law of action, which was, in fact, "Do unto others as they have done unto you." Yet Christ declares, in seeming paradox, that the Golden Rule "is the law and the prophets." Clearly he means that it is the rule of motive which should govern the application of the Mosaic law and the precepts of the prophets.

Life is shown to have two roads which a man may take: the broad way, in which man gives rein to the motives natural to his lower instincts; and the narrow way, where the natural inclinations are subdued by higher motives. The first leads to destruction; the other, to life eternal.

After warning his listeners against false teachers, Christ says that, in the final judgment, when these hypocrites stand before the bar of God, they will claim to have been openly his disciples, but the fact will not save them, for, though claiming to be such, their motives were utterly wrong. Motives, not actions, are to be the evidence of righteousness.

This wonderful address closes with the illustrations of the two houses—one built upon the rock, the other upon the sand. The house seems to represent moral character. The character built upon the rock of right motives will resist every storm of temptation. The other character, built upon the shifting sands of actions alone, will fall when put to the supreme test.

I think in this brief analysis of the Sermon on the Mount, the fundamental thought, its essential characteristic, is clear. It is a spiritual, not a legal, code. Christ was not attempting to change the laws of his day, but to change the attitude of men toward the laws. He recognized that right action was good, but that right motive was better; that action counted for nothing unless inspired by right motive. He taught a standard which could be applied to every standard of moral action the world over. No series of moral precepts ever equaled or approached this one, which is the foundation of Christian ethics, the source of Christian character, and the inspiring force in the civilization and progress of the Christian world of to-day.—Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, in the Ladies' Home Journal.

"That the Man of God May Be Perfect." No. 1. By A. W. YOUNG.

"Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.)

It has often occurred to me that many members of the church of Christ read more into this passage than is really in it. It is good, sometimes, to read between the lines, but it is not good to read the word of God in that fashion. The chief trouble in the interpretation of this passage seems to be that brethren and sisters get the idea that "completely furnished to every good work" means that all the details of order and arrangement in the work and worship of the church of Christ are specifically given in the "scripture inspired of God." That such is not the case, all are compelled to admit, in regard to some things. For instance, we are commanded to "do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith" (Gal. §: 10); but the specific acts of doing good are not all enumerated in the word of God. There are many acts of kindness, charity, good works, which lawfully come under the above heading, and it is not necessary that they be mentioned in detail in order that we be completely furnished with the instruction to do them. Parents are commanded to bring up their children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" (Eph. 6: 4); but who would take the position that every act of parental instruction, guidance, and control is specifically given in the word of God? If we have not learned that God has not given much specific instruction in regard to the temporal affairs of life, we have surely studied the word of God to but little purpose. When he told husbands to love their wives, he did not go into detail as to how this love was to be manifested. But while there are some who will readily agree with what I have said thus far, yet they will contend that in matters of worship the Lord has given us all the details, either by precept or commandment. Out of this error has grown a number of hurtful things. It produced the idea of the "order of worship" which wrecked and ruined a number of congregations a few years ago, as well as many other harmful hobbies.

In the first place, allow me to say that the word of God only gives man the things which are necessary for him to have. If God had given every detail, in specific form, of all the things which he desires his people to do, the Bible would have been a cumbersome book, indeed. When man has sufficient knowledge to arrange and carry out the details of a God-given work, God has always allowed him to use that knowledge or judgment in doing so. For instance, when God commanded Noah to build the ark, while he told him what kind of material to use, what size the ark should be, and what should go into it, yet he did not tell Noah where to get the timbers, how to prepare them: how to assemble them, how to join them together, what days to work and what days not to work, how much help to employ, what to have the children do; in fact, he did not give Noah any of the details. When Noah, arranging the details of the work, finally produced an ark, it was a building of "faith"-not because God had given the details, but because it was the kind of an ark that God told him to build, built of the right material and of the right dimensions. How much of the detail work of the erection of Solomon's temple was specifically given of God? When the Lord commissioned the apostles to go "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," he did not tell them what hour of the day they were to go, how they were to travel, what kind of a place to do their preaching in when they arrived there, whether to stand up or sit down when they were teaching, whether they should teach men and women in a mixed assembly or divide the sexes in order to teach them, what illustrations they were to use in teaching, how long to stay in one place, or anything like that. If God had not given us an example as to the proper day for the assembly of the saints. we would not know what day he desired us to assemble: but we have that example, and therefore we assemble for worship on the first day of the week. But he has not told us where to assemble; that is a matter which we must settle to suit our convenience and environment. We are not told what hour of the day to assemble, nor how long we shall remain assembled. We are not fold just how to teach when we are assembled—that is, we are not told in detail. We are not told just what songs to sing, or how many we shall sing. We are not told how many prayers should be offered, how long we should pray, or just who should lead the prayers. We are not told just what kind of container we shall use for the loaf, who shall prepare the loaf, or how large it shall be. We are not told who shall preside at the table, who shall pass the emblems, or whether they shall be passed at all or not. We are not told just what kind of wine to use, how much each person shall use, whether one shall partake at a time or whether several may partake at the same time. We are not told as to the containers for the wine. We are not even told specifically how much each Christian should give each Lord's day, or how much each congregation should give, or just what each congregation should do with the money contributed. We are not told when to have protracted meetings, how many to have each year, and how long they shall run; whether we shall have one, two, or three services a day; whether one preacher or a half dozen shall do the preaching, and how much they shall be paid; how the singing shall be conducted, or even that we shall or shall not have singing. We are not told to have an invitation song. There is neither specific command, precept, or example for the invitation song, and I have wondered why some brother did not start an anti-invitationsong congregation. It is an opportunity that all the hobbyists have overlooked thus far. But I will have to say the remainder in another article.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

The Stroud-White Wedding.

On August 30, 1918, in the home of Brother W. S. Stroud, 275 Oak Street, Atlanta, Ga., Brother Joe W. White, of Sherman, Texas, and Sister Dura Bell Stroud, niece of W. S. Stroud, were united in holy wedlock, in the midst of a group of friends who had assembled for the occasion, the writer officiating. From six till eight o'clock the same day the bride was given a shower by Sister Lucile Harwell, and from eight to twelve o'clock the bride and groom were joyfully entertained in the same home. On Sunday morning, September 1, the young couple left for Haddock, Ga., where Brother White is engaged, as principal of the high school, for this winter. The groom is the son of L. S. White, of Sherman, Texas, and the bride is one of Atlanta's sweetest and most beloved Christian girls. We wish for them a long, happy, and useful life together.

A Sad Mistake.

When Elijah found Ahab in Naboth's vineyard, Ahab exclaimed: "Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?" (See 1 Kings 21: 17-20.) Now the truth in the case was that Elijah was his very best friend. He desired only that Ahab would repent of all his evil ways and live as Jehovah would have him live. Of this there can be no doubt. Is it not a sad day for us when we come to look at those whose only desire is that we live right as our enemies? Would it not be well for us to go slow in applying the term "enemy" to some people? Ought we not first ascertain the real desire and purpose of their heart before we dub them as "enemies?" Is it not true that we have let Satan become, indeed, too much of us, when we are forced to feel that good people hate us and are striking at us. when they are hating and striking only at the sin that is in us? My brother, my sister, have you allowed yourself to feel that some good man or woman was your enemy just because he or she would not and could not indorse your evil course in life? Here is room for sober thinking. Whenever you come to feel that those whose every desire and prayer is that you ever walk in the good and right way-I say whenever you come to feel that they are your enemies, you are getting dangerously close to destruction. May God help us all to watch here and be sober.

Miscellaneous Items.

The final results of the meeting at Dasher, Ga., were fourteen baptisms and one from the Baptists. The meeting continued nine days and was a glorious success in every respect. Never have I enjoyed a meeting more than this one, and it was not hard for them to get my promise to be with them another year, the Lord willing.

Following the close of the meeting at the water's edge, August 28, we hurried to the home of Brother S. L. Dowling, at Twin Lakes, Fla., for a big fish fry; and to say we had the fish puts it mildly. If any one knows how to take a tired preacher and make him forget all about it. S. L. Dowling is the man. His only daughter entered the David Lipscomb College, at Nashville, Tenn., on September 10, and for this we are thankful.

R. R. Brooks preached at Buchanan on the second Lord's day in September, with one reclaimed.

Brethren Joe White and R. P. Cuff's short stay at Donalsonville, Ga., resulted in much good being done in the way of strengthening the faith of the "faithful few" at that place and laying plans for greater things next year.

There was one confession at the South Pryor Street Church, this city, on the second Lord's-day night, and one brother from whom the church had been forced to withdraw fellowship was reclaimed. We are delighted with the good that is being done in this congregation. Brother Hugh E. Garrett preached on this occasion, and it is always well done when Garrett does it. We are glad to say that he has four children in the David Lipscomb College this fall. His good wife went with them, and they, perhaps, will make the college their home till all the children are educated.

At this writing Brother Morgan H. Carter and I are in a good meeting at East Point. This is my ninth meeting at that place, and we have had no meeting here that has started better Nominal Christianity has failed terribly to make men brothers, to preserve world peace. We have seen the results of a civilization which has become marvelously efficient in material ways, but which has given up God as revealed in Christ, as the supreme Judge and Ruler of humanity, and it is an ugly and a hateful thing. Christians have largely failed to have real Christianity in their national and personal lives, and the remedy is not to give up what we have of the religion of Jesus Christ, but to deepen and strengthen those ideals and habits of devotion and life which we possess.—E. M. Parker.

Jesus Christ did not die upon the cross that we might lead a self-seeking life, whether by indulging our lower appetites or by wasting intellectual power upon subjects which, however gratifying to ourselves, achieve mothing for the honor of God or for the good of men.—H. P. Liddon.

Without and Within.

Without, the hurry and clash, the race and the rush: Within, the keeping in peace, the silence and hush Without, the love of the seen, the pomp and the show: Within, simplicity sweet, all quiet and low. Without, the labor and toil, the wave's frothy crest; Within, the working of God, the center of rest. Without, the grasp for the first, the anger and strife: Within, the waiting for God, the letting go life. Without, resentment and rage, hate, bitterness, death; Within, the sweetness of heart, the Spirit's calm breath. Without, the unyielding will, the love of one's way. Within, the listening for God his voice to obey Without, the stubbornness strong, the boast and the blow: Within, the meekness that yields, humility low. Without, the sunshine and rain, the night and the day; Within, the light of his love that shineth alway Without, the spot and the stain, the curse and the sins; Within, the cleansing divine, a new life begins. -Eugenie du Maurier.

Not a single man was ever sprinkled by divine authority, so far as the New Testament records. Hence every man and every woman that accepts sprinkling follows human wisdom instead of divine wisdom, and has no right to look to the Lord for any blessing. Thousands, and millions to-day are refusing immersion and accepting a human invention in its place. If they had any assurance that God would accept sprinkling in place of baptism, it would be a different thing; but there is not an intimation in all the New Testament that he will. But he will accept immersion. He has promised to save those that believe and are baptized, but he has not promised to save those that believe and are sprinkled. Only uninspired men say that. But Jesus says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," and there is full meaning in that. The word of the Lord is pledged for it, and all the world cannot pre-

No alien can be baptized into Christ till he truly believes and becomes truly penitent; but when one sincerely believes and repents, he is then scripturally ready to be baptized into Christ. When one considers that Christ died in order that sinners might be saved, that ought to move sinners to believe, repent, and be baptized. Then they have the full testimony of Christ that they are saved from past sins.

But one great trouble is that a great many people are taught to believe that baptism is a nonessential and can have nothing to do with salvation. This unauthorized human opinion turns thousands of people away from the divinely appointed ordinance of baptism, which is an immersion in water, to the sprinkling of a few drops of water upon the candidate for baptism, and thus the candidate is defrauded of the ordinance of baptism. The word "baptize" does not, and never did, mean to sprinkle. It is also true that the word "sprinkle" is never used in the Scriptures to express the action of baptism. Yet millions are doing it. People who had been baptized are represented by the inspired word of God as having been buried with Christ in their baptism, also raised with him to walk in a new life. If baptism were only the sprinkling of a few drops of water upon people, how could it be called a burial and a resurrection? In the New Testament baptism is never one time expressed by the pouring or sprinkling of a little water upon the one baptized. If anything like that was ever done, there was no record of it ever made; therefore it cannot be established by the New Testament.

Joe McPherson.

Joe McPherson was born in Indiana on February 9, 1862, and was thus fifty-six years old. Coming to Nashville in early life, he was appointed substitute mail carrier from the Nashville post office in 1887. He served with the office to his death—thirty-one years. He was married to Miss Bettie Temple Poyner, by whom, with eight children—five sons and three daughters—he is survived. The sons are: David Lipscomb McPherson, Jesse R. McPherson, Andrew P. McPherson, and Houston Borum McPherson; three daughters, Eddie Mai and Eudora McPherson and Mrs. Emma Poe Elkins. After his enlistment in the mail service Mr. McPherson saw his opportunity to do more, and he believed he could render further service by preaching the gospel to his fellow man as time permitted. While still attending to his official duties in the daytime, he adopted the habit of preaching at nights and on Sundays, reaching often out in mission points and far beyond the county Through Evangelist McPherson's efforts along this line twenty congregations were established in and around Nashville. He preached for twenty-odd years, up to his last days. A summary of the first fifteen years of his missionary and evangelistic work, while postman, as published some time back by Prof. Francis M. Turner, showed that during the time involved he had established fifteen congregations, baptized three thousand persons, and walked fifty-four thousand miles. During the past eight or ten years Evangelist McPherson's evangelistic work had been mainly, during the summer months, under the auspices of the Russell Street Church, most of this work being done under the "tent-meeting" plan. Joe McPherson made a study of men rather than books, excepting the one great Book. He was educated in the Scriptures and in human nature more than in current literature. He was rather self-confident and seldom pessimistic, but becomingly modest, and cared not a whit for notoriety. He believed in the all-sufficiency of the Scriptures and pleaded for a strict reliance thereon, and therein lies the greatest index to Joe McPherson.—Wayne Burton, in Nashville Banner.

David Lipscomb College.

With a registration of one hundred and fifty pupils. David Lipscomb College, formerly the Nashville Bible School, has entered upon its twenty-eighth year, the enrollment representing some of the Northern and Western States and nearly all of the Southern States. The president, H. Leo Boles, expresses gratification and states that all expectations have been met fully and even exceeded. A few faculty additions and changes from last year are made. S. Ward, professor of science in the institution for twenty-six years, but who resigned some months back to accept a responsible position with the Life and Casualty Insurance Company, is succeeded by Prof. Roy Graves, graduate of Burritt College and of Vanderbilt University. Miss Emma Greer, of Nashville, graduate of David Lips-comb College and special student in Peabody College, has been obtained for the chair of French and work in the intermediate department; and Miss Grace Hooper, of Ashland City, Tenn., will have charge of the primary de-partment. Mrs. Ida C. Noble, well-known art teacher and formerly connected with this institution, will again be in charge of this feature of the work. Other members of the faculty, most of whom have been connected with the college for a number of years, are as follows: President Boles, pro-fessor of Bible and philosophy; S. P. Pittman, Bible his-tory and sight singing; L. H. Elrod, Latin and modern literature; Charles R. Brewer, English and Greek; S. I. Jones, mathematics; Miss Marie Hille, instrumental music; Mrs. John Bell, voice culture; Miss Mary Creath Cato, expression; Mrs. L. H. Elrod, commercial department.

True love is no thin, disembodied sentiment. Love asserts its presence in a practical, visible way, when once it really lives. It is the very soul of all that earthly labor which, for Christ's sake, will be owned hereafter.—H. P. Liddon.

Some Interesting Facts.

BY SARAH SHEPHERD ANDREWS.

One of our nearest neighbors has a son, about fourteen years old, who is a sun worshiper. At sunrise the child may be seen facing the east with uplifted hands and bowed head, uttering his prayer of devotion. A few times we have talked together about God and his love, and he says be likes to hear about Jesus.

There is a house in construction near us. Instead of digging the earth up and laying the foundation, the Japanese beat the earth down and place the foundation stones on this beaten earth. The ground is packed down in this way: Tall poles are erected, to which a pulley is attached. A huge weight is fastened to a large rope which is run through the pulley. The loose end of this rope has six or eight smaller ropes attached, and it is usually women who are employed to do the work of beating down the earth. Songs or chants, which sometimes may be heard several blocks away, are sung to keep time. Each woman lifts her part of the load and the work is soon accomplished. Union gives strength; and I have the church in mind as I write this.

In conversation with a Japanese banker recently about God's work, I asked him if he had a Bible. He said: "Yes, my brother is a Christian, and several years ago he gave me a Bible, but I seldom read it. I keep it on my desk, however, for it makes such a nice ornament." I asked him to read it, assuring him that this Book is worth a great deal more to him than simply an ornament.

All the above donations have been receipted by letter, except those who contributed through Brother Bradley, and I wish to take this method of thanking them also. The above extra donations—that is, all except that sent through Brother Bradley—were used to aid a poor girl in paying her hospital and doctor's bill through a long spell of sickness. I have been helping her through school for some time, and she expects to be my native helper. She is a splendid student of the Bible, a good girl, and has recently become a Christian. I consider her a promising helper.

Moving Pictures.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

Brother Ishiguro, of the Otsuka church, in Tokyo, writes, under date of July 30, saying that "a few days ago four brothers and sisters were baptized,"

A card from Brother Hiratsuka this morning (August 7) says: "I am glad to write you that we had four baptisms yesterday (August 4). They were good young men. One of them is Brother Murai, who attends Miss Andrews' Bible class."

A sister, who has been an enthusiastic worker for the missionary cause in Japan for about eight years, says: "I have always been pleased that you told me where I could do missionary work in this satisfactory way, and it makes me so interested in the work there."

A sister from West Tennessee incloses a check for three dollars and fifty cents, "to be used as you think best," and adds: "The last Missionary Messenger was most excellent. I believe you are getting younger every day. The front page was just what our church wants to be informed on—giving."

Brother and Sister Yoshié are now on a visit to his people in the North. A card received on August 6 says: "We got home in Amarume last Friday, and we had a nice meeting last Sunday, though it was a very small crowd. On July 30 we had a great meeting at school, and we made many calls. We also went to Mr. Sato's, who lives a mile and a half away from Amarume. My sister-in-law and her husband, her brother-in-law and his wife, and we, six of us, came here, which is a hot spring. We are having such a nice time."

On August 7 I wrote my companion in Louisville, Ky, saying: "No doubt you find it hard to make ends meet. I am doing the best I can for you and Ruth. There are many demands on me here. Offerings have greatly dropped off during the last three months. It seems that the churches have forsaken the missionaries and turned to the war. But the Lord has stood by us these many years, and he will not forsake us now." The very next morning I received eight letters, every one containing a gift, and amounting to one hundred and forty-six dollars and five cents.

Brother Hiratsuka spent March 4-19 preaching in the country and around his native village. He had eight public meetings at eight different places; about one hundred and seventy-three people attended these meetings; he visited fifty-nine houses; had two meetings for children, with twenty-seven in attendance; and baptized one man. The people showed an eagerness to hear, and he preached in four new villages where they had not heard the gospel before. Scattered among these villages, which are two and three miles apart, are fourteen Christians already. They have promised to meet for Bible study.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 25.

There Should Be More Directed Handwork in the Home-This Supplies the Imperative Need Which the Child Feels for Self-Expression.

We often hear mothers lamenting the fact that there is no kindergarten in their neighborhood. They are intelligent enough to know what a benefit a kindergarten training would be to their children, but are not aware that many of the methods used in the kindergarten may also be employed in the home.

This is particularly true of kindergarten handwork, which composes a sort of elementary manual training course. For handwork in the home it is not necessary to expend much time, labor, or money for materials; indeed, they may nearly all be obtained in the home.

Plastic clay or equal portions of flour and salt worked into a plastic dough may be used to advantage. The child should begin by reproducing simple objects he sees about him, or he can create from his own imagination. Give the clay into the child's hands and let him do what he pleases with it. He will find plenty to do and greatly enjoy this occupation, besides unconsciously expressing some of his own ideas concerning which it will be valuable for the mother to know. Later on the child may be led to organize his ideas of form by being shown how to make a ball or other geometric form and with slight remolding change it into an apple, pear, or other similar shape. This should never become drill work, and the adding of bits of clay is more easily done than the pressing into shape of a mass of clay. But a perception of the geometric structure of all form is a part of the art world.

Paper folding is simple, and an occupation which the child can easily manipulate himself. Give him a small, square piece of colored wrapping paper, have him bring opposite edges together, and then fold through the center once. This will make a book which he can play he is reading or singing from, or he can call it a scrapbook and paste pictures in it. Folded twice, the piece of paper makes a nice, little square handkerchief, which has just been ironed, and is ready to put away. Next, the paper may be opened out, and it will be seen that the two folds cross at the center. The corners may be folded to this center, one at a time. When three corners are folded in, it looks like an open envelope; after the last corner is folded in, the envelope is closed, and the "letter" is ready to mail. With a little ingenuity many other objects may be made by folding paper in different ways.

Cutting pictures from old magazines is one of the joys of childhood. To be able to do this well, the child must learn to use his eyes and his hands skillfully. It is spleadid training, and cultivates patience and concentration as well as skill. If these are mounted in a scrapbook, it adds to the pleasure. Painting is also a joy to the boy or girl. Through this medium the different colors may be taught and appreciation of color can be developed.

Drawing becomes a source of great pleasure and profit to a child. Suggest that he begin by drawing something with which he is perfectly familiar. In the kindergarten the little child generally wants to draw a ball, which he can make with a simple rotary motion. It very soon occurs to him to make two balls on his piece of paper, perhaps two large balls, or one large and one small one. Because the ball he plays with has a string attached to it, he may next add a string to his drawing. Then some one discovers that it is possible to use different colors, one for the ball and one for the string; and, marvelous discovery, turned upside down, the balls with their strings are like flowers on stems. It is not surprising to see the next step quickly follow, of adding little leaves to the stems. After this perhaps a bird or butterfly may be included in the drawing, and so on. These are merely suggestions as to how to help his vague beginnings to become definite obiects.

Stringing beads, buttons, seeds, spools, or anything else which can be strung will always hold the child's interest and familiarize him with color, form, and number, separately and in combination. A long bodkin is a good needle for this purpose.

With a little time and ingenuity spent in getting these various occupations started, any mother can direct the activities of her child into many educational channels and supply the imperative need which the child feels for self-expression 0 0 0

Dead Letters.

Twice a year, in Washington, they hold a curious auction. It is called "the Dead-Letter Sale," but in reality it is the sale of packages that have been sent to the Dead Letter Office because of deficient postage or wrong direc-

After these packages have been held for a certain length of time, in order to give senders or owners an opportunity to claim them, they are sold at public auction.

It is often a strange and pathetic collection. Most of the articles are cheap enough, although valuable things are not lacking; but who can estimate the intrinsic value of some of those lost gifts-the time and sacrifice and love they represent? How many disappointed hearts must have watched in vain for them! How many lives were robbed of a happiness that rightfully belonged to them, because of the sender's carelessness or ignorance!

Is there not a parable lurking somewhere about this strange auction? How many lives are there to-day that hold the possibility of gifts for other lives, yet through carelessness or ignorance or indifference are robbing both themselves and others? The woman whose love is spent upon some valuable pet when there are little children all about her starving for that love; the girl whose taste and skill are spent in a score of useless ways when they might be putting so much beauty into beauty-starved lives; the men whose business ability is all spent on making money, and none of it on making men and women; the young people of quick minds and brilliant possibilities, who are unwilling to undergo the discipline necessary to develop their talents-these and scores of others every day are carelessly making "dead letters" of gifts for which eager eyes and hearts are longing.

There is no sale of these dead gifts; no one has any chance at them. They are doubly lost-lost to the one who should have used them and to the world that needs them. What a pitiful waste of power and joy!-Youth's Companion. 0 0 0

How to Save Electricity.

One way of helping to conserve coal, and also saving money, is by using the electric current carefully. Those of us who have electric irons, stoves, and vacuum cleaners should watch the operation of them to see that we get the most work for the least consumption of energy. A little at one time or another soon saves a pound of coal at the power house; and while small for the individual case, the total over the country will be in tons. This applies principally to people who obtain current from a steam-generating station; but even if the current is from a hydro-electric plant, there is often a steam auxiliary when the water supply is poor, so that saving is in order in every case.

A favorite way of wasting current is with electric lamps. We often leave lamps burning in rooms when there is no necessity for it: and considering the enormous number of lamps used in residences alone, careful use would start our saving of coal by tons. It is estimated that in this country in a year there are about $50,000,000 worth of lamps sold. At twenty-five cents per lamp, this would mean 200,000,000 lamps. Suppose that half of these are used in homes, or 100,000,000. Using the 40-watt lamp as the average, we have 4,000,000,000 watts. A kilowatt is equal to 1,000 watts; thus we again have 4,000,000 kilowatts. If these are burned for one hour overtime during the month, or two minute, a day, the total time in one year would be twelve hours. This would give a total of 48,000,000 kilowatt hours, found by multiplying the kilowatts by the hours. This means that approximately 96,000 tons of coal would be burned in the power houses merely to cover this wasteful use.

Another important point to mention is the carbon lamp. No doubt there are many used in this country in spite of more efficient lamps on the market. Consider the 16-candle-power carbon filament lamp compared with the 40-watt modern type. The former consumes fifty-five watts, and if two are necessary, the consumption for 32-candle-power would be 110 watts against 40 watts, which gives approximately the same light and of a better quality. Examine every lamp in your house to see if it is a modern type. If any carbon lamps are found, replace them at once with the modern type, for the necessary outlay will soon be paid for.

Watch your electric iron. You can see from the illustrations that the watts consumed are 550. To illustrate this, an enlargement of the instrument scale is made, that the arrow may show distinctly what current electric frons consume. Notice that it is about thirteen times the power required for a 40-watt lamp. If an iron is left on the circuit five minutes longer than necessary, we consume enough electricity to burn the lamp for almost sixty-nine minutes, or over one hour, or we could burn thirteen lamps for five minutes. We should not think of burning so many lamps wastefully for that time. The electric iron holds heat for a considerable time; thus you can "coast" by shutting off the current before you have finished and using the stored heat to finish the remainder. Not only will one waste current and, of course, coal, but the life of the heating element which is the heart of the iron will be shortened. While the electric iron is used in this illustration, we must not lose sight of the toaster, percolater, table stove, or room heater, for these consume the same amounts of energy and are capable of just as much waste.-J. C. Bank, in Good Housekeeping.

A Home in Jerusalem.

Major Theodore Waters, of the Christian Herald, who is organizing relief work in Palestine, gives this graphic picture of the destitution found in Jerusalem:

"We entered the Old City through the New Gate and took our way down the crooked alleys which are called 'streets' here. Some of these were covered ways, and on the roofs were stone hovels in which people lived out their lives. The stench of centuries was in the air of these tunnels. Strange people watched us curiouslyand, I thought, resentfully-as we stepped gingerly along in our endeavor to avoid the filth under foot. The place seemed to be one long lavatory. After a while, we came to an old door in the wall. Our woman worker, who had been there before, turned and pushed open the door and began mounting a flight of stone steps. They turned and curved and at last stumbled out upon an inclosure-or what might be called "an elevated yard "-around which was a collection of stone hovels. Everything is built of stone in this country. Faces appeared at the bleared windows of the hovels and then people began to come out of the doors. Evidently we were an event in the community. Going up to the closed door of one house, our worker pushed it open and peered within. A woman, with streeling hair and very little clothes, welcomed her and pointed to what I at first thought was a heap of rags on the floor. The woman touched it gently with her dirty bare foot. There was a convulsive movement of the heap. Some of the rags uplifted, and out peered the bearded face of an emaciated man. He looked curiously into the face of our woman worker, and then fearfully at the doctor, for the latter, being of the Red Cross, had on the uniform of a captain in the United States Army. and the people, driven as they have been by Turks in uniform ever on the lookout for extra taxes, look at all uniforms askance. Reassured, however, he told his symptoms and was prescribed for with as much dispatch as was consistent with an examination. There was but one room in this 'house,' and that room had probably been as it was for a thousand years. There was practically nothing in it as far as I could see: heaps of clothing in one corner, not a table, not a chair, but children, near naked, moving about under foot."-Exchange.

"Whose God Is the Belly."

In his letter to the church at Philippi, the apostle Paul refers to certain persons "whose god is the belly." We fear the members of this cult are still alive and that some of them are among us to-day. We are in the midst of a great struggle for our dearlybought liberties, the issue of which depends upon the endurance and selfsacrifice not only of our soldiers at the front, but of every man and woman in the nation. We have been assured by competent men who have made an expert study of the question that we are threatened with a world famine by reason of the great number of men in all the belligerent countries who have been withdrawn from production since the beginning of the war, and that unless we practice the strictest economy, especially in the use of certain food products, such as wheat, meat, and sugar, there is grave danger that our soldiers may not receive a sufficient supply to keep up their strength.

And yet in the face of this peril and the sacrifices being made for them by our brave boys at the front, there are those among us who are apparently unwilling to deny themselves any luxury in the food line which they once enjoyed. The deprivation involved in a meatless or a wheatless meal or in giving up rich cake for a while to conserve the supply of sugar is so paltry in comparison to the sacrifices and sufferings of the men at the front that it brings the blush of shame to be compelled to acknowledge that there are any among us bearing the name which has come into such world-wide honor who are not willing to deny themselves even to this small extent. Our boys lying out in the trenches in the cold and mud and rain, enduring the unspeakable horrors of shell and poison gas and liquid fire, in hourly peril of their lives, may go hungry, but these devotees of the belly-god must have their meat and wheat bread and cake as usual.-Canadian Bulletin.

Our Check Book.

"All things are yours; . . . and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." A prominent evangelist said that on the eve of starting out on a long journey a wealthy friend said to him; "You are going on a far trip. You may need more money than you have. Here is my check book-take it along with you. The checks are signed, and you can fill out as many as you need." The evangelist was astonished at such confidence, and as he went from city to city and mixed with well-to-do business men, he said to himself: "You may be rich, but I have more in my pocket than you have. I have at my disposal all that my friend is worth." Each one of us has a Friend, and he has placed at our disposal all the rich store of his promises. They provide for every contingency, every adversity, every difficulty that can happen to us. They are left at our disposal. They ar the "exceeding great and precious promises "-our hope and confidence. -Sunday Circle.

Preaching and Baptizing.

BY G. A. JOHNSON.

I have been engaged in the work in and around Lebanon, Tenn., this year, and preaching the word to the best of my ability. On May 13, in Lebanon, I baptized a woman; on the second Lord's day in August, at Beard's Mill, about nine miles from Lebanon, I baptized a man and his wife; and on the second Lord's day in September I baptized a man who was ninety years of age. There is much good to be done there yet. So Brother H. Clay is still very active in his old age. He and I have been working together. He is the one that baptized me. Lebanon is supporting the work, and I believe that Lebanon is doing a good part. I was at St. John on the fourth Lord's day in August. I desire the prayers of every Christian.

A sailor on an English warship tumbled out of the rigging, and in his fall he caught with both hands a rope. Observers said: "He is saved!" But the rope itself had no fastening, and he fell farther and faster, as the rope paid out, till he struck the deck a mangled mass. A man may attempt to save himself by will power. But what if the will itself have no hold on God?-Scriptural Anecdotes.

Northford, September 3.—Brother Stanly Jones conducted a mission meeting near R. D. Bawcum's place, in Decatur County, beginning on the fourth Sunday in August and closing on the first Sunday in September. Large crowds attended and gave good attention. This place is a regular hotbed of Holy Rollers, and they have about annihilated the sects. Brother Jones certainly did some good work, and, from what I hear from the meeting since it closed, I think there is much good to come from Brother Jones' work, if it is followed up with another meeting. This meeting was supported by brethren from different parts of the State. Two were added by baptism.—T. M. Baugus.

Pikeville, September 9.—After leaving David Lipscomb College in May, I visited home, and then came to Pikeville to work with the brethren here and throughout the county. The work was proving very interesting at the time when I had arranged for some meetings. On August 3 I began a meeting with the brethren at Craigfield, which has already been reported On August 10 I began a meeting at On August 10 1 began a meeting at Macedonia, a place sixteen miles west of Florence, Ala., which proved very interesting and during which there were thirteen baptisms. Immediately afterwards I went to Indiana and procured an assistant to help me in all my work. Thence I went to my home in Tennessee, where I helped in a meeting at Long Branch, with five baptisms and one restoration, also one at Leoma, with thirteen baptisms. I am now with the good people of Bledsoe County, and trust that much good may result in our labors in the Lord.—G. F. Gibbs.

Columbia, September 10.-We have just returned from a delightful trip to Chattanooga. A friend from Columbia accompanied me. We spent Saturday sight-seeing. After inquiring where I could worship on Lord's day, I was informed that Dr. Hill's church was at a certain place. I also discovered that Brother Hoover was preaching at another place. That was the place we went. The church of Christ at that place is what I call a model church. Before preaching a splendid sermon on "Service," Brother Hoover announced the meetings; who was sick, and told the members to visit them; who the needy were, and what they needed, and said they would be attended to. He said the sisters of that congregation met on Thursdays at the church house to sew for those that are needy. They sang with the spirit, led by a young Brother Brewer. When the collection was taken up, I noticed that the basket was full of bills, not nickels. Why does not every church of Christ do accordingly? Brethren, are we doing the Master's work his way?—Mrs. T. E. McLean.

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the South-land and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

"Psalms and Hymns and Spiritual Songs."

BY J. G. MALPHURS.

Some good brethren, who try to serve as elders, permit almost any kind of sectarian song book to enter the assembly of the saints. These brethren mean well, but they are asleep on the job; they are not taking the proper oversight of the flock. Not long ago I , was at a church where the singing had undergone a change; the "class" had gotten where they preferred the "jig" to the pure hymns. This congregation used to make fairly good church music; but now they change books so often, or the mourners'bench song must have the new "twist," that the visiting brother, who understands scriptural singing, is rather disgusted than edified. Why buy so many song books? Why require a new book every time the moon changes?

But how does this bountiful flow of sectarian song books reach the church of Christ? There are two ways to account for it. First, the leaders in the church never read a good religious paper, not much of the Bible, and they do not know where to get the right kind of books published by the brethren; they just take anything that happens their way. Second, singing teachers, who sometimes are in the employment of some publishing house, go into a community to teach a singing class, which is all right in itself and should be done; but they very often insist that the class needs a new book. Now the class may need a new book, but often the class does not need the book near so badly as the teacher wants to sell it. Consequently the elders permit the good hymnal, one that they have not had very long, or do not know all the songs in it, to be set aside, and the young people are taught the "jig" kind of songs and such tunes as "Good-by, My Lover, Good-by." These songs are void of spirituality and, as fleeting shadows, must soon pass away; but the young people have been taught the "jig," and "Nearer, My God, to Thee" has lost its charm. Before another summer this song-book company has another collection of these sectarian songs rehashed, with possibly enough of the old ones for a funeral. In this fine (?) new book may be found a song written by a new "hymn writer" of the community, and he is expected to unload a supply of this "stuff" somewhere, and the ignorant and unsuspecting elders "swallow the hook and the bait."

In this manner, brethren, the churches are imposed on, and the singing lacks that spirituality which our Lord deserves. Many songs in this book are adverse to the scriptures; many of them are for the mourners' bench and sectarian revivals. I do not advise against changing books occasionally; we ought to get new books sometimes; but why not use good judgment and get a good book published by our brethren and use it for two or three years, at least until nearly all the songs can be sung well? It is a waste of money to buy song books every year, if you have a good one. Let us all try to speak "one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs."

DOCTORS DISCOURAGE USE OF POULTICES

In Treatment of Boils and Carbuncles.

Doctors say that boil germs thrive on mussy linseed and similar poultices and plasters; they multiply and spread. That's why other boils appear near the affected parts of the body.

Carboil kills all boil germs. It is an antiseptic compound that quickly "softens," "cleans out," and heals boils and carbuncles. But the most remarkable quality is that Carboil stops the pain. This salve is also fine for abscesses, sores, piles, burns:

"Glass" in Bread.

When the use of wheat substitutes in bakers' bread became general, considerable agitation was aroused by reports that consumers were finding ground glass in bread. From time to time such reports are likely to persist, owing to the fact that the same conditions will probably continue. In view of this, it is of considerable interest to review the bulletin published by the Indiana State Council of Defense under the supervision of Dr. H. E. Barnard, explaining just why these erroneous reports were circulated. This bulletin says that almost without exception authorities have been unable to verify the rumors of glass in bread, and in endeavoring to explain this exhaustive investigations and experiments were made. The bulletin says:

"Corn flour under the microscope shows many hard, flinty pieces of the endosperm (germ), which have a very glassy appearance. When baked in a quick oven, some of these particles retain their glasslike appearance, though in the ordinary process of baking this appearance is lost. This is the explanation given by experts employed by the International Union of Bakers and Confectionery Workers.

"In bran flours, a nervous person might easily fancy that particles of the hard outer husk were glass; and dextrine sometimes solidifies into a hard, transparent mass, which might be mistaken for glass.

"The natural conclusion is that most of the people who reported having found glass in their bread were deceived by the appearance of the new materials."—Exchange.

How the Body Is Nourished.

The bodily process known as assimilation is well explained in these words: "As the blood, in its circulation, approaches any organ, the portions that are appropriate for this organ feel its attractive force, obey it, and, leaving the others, mingle with the substance of its tissue and are changed into its own true and proper nature."

How important it is that the blood should be pure and rich, not loaded with worn-out and useless matters! Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies and enriches the blood, and does all it is possible for medicine to do in the way of perfecting assimilation and building up the whole system. When you have made up your mind to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, insist on having it; do not accept a substitute, for no substitute acts like it.—Advt.

"I Believe God."

BY S. WHITFIELD:

This statement was made by the apostle Paul. To understand and appreciate it, we must remember the circumstances under which he made it. No one but a child of God, who had strong and abiding faith in God, could have made such a statement under the circumstances.

We must remember that Paul had been before the chief captain, Felix, Festus, and Agrippa for trial, and he was taken as a prisoner. He was on his way to Rome as a prisoner. He was in a terrible storm on the water. so that those in the boat ate nothing for fourteen days. Notwithstanding all this, his faith was not shaken in God. Many with such conditions would have complained, and possibly said that there is nothing in Christianity and there is no God, or he would not permit such things.

Some thought that the world was getting better; but since this awful war has come with all the trouble and suffering it has brought, they do not know what to think. Some are inclined to blame God, and the faith of some has been shaken. But instead of allowing these things to shake our faith in God, our faith should be strengthened. The world was not getting better, but growing worse all the time.

God promised to make of the Jews a great nation, if they would do his will; but many of them rebelled against God, and they were led into captivity, and finally destroyed as a nation. But instead of all this causing any one to doubt in the existence of God, it ought to increase our faith in God; for it turned out just as God said it would, and just as it must, When people go bad, they must reap just what they have sown.

"And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship. For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose 1 am, and whom I serve, saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee. Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me." (Acts 27: 22-25.) "And blessed is she that believed: for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord." (Luke 1: 45.) "He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform." (Rom. 4: 20, "When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also." (2 Tim. 1: 5.) All of these passages speak of persons who had abiding faith in God.

Paul has told us that without faith it is impossible for us to please God. We must believe that he is, and that he rewards all those who seek him with the whole heart. God and Christ are always pleased with those who have strong faith. To all such, all things work together for good.

The new Calotabs are sold only in original, sealed packages; price, thirty-five cents. Your druggist recommends them and guarantees them.

"Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure." (Heb. 11: 19.) God told Abraham to offer up Isaac. He believed in God, and believed that he ought to do just as God said, and that it would turn out all right, and it did; and it will to all of us, if we show the same faith and obedience.

"By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment." (Heb. 11: 23.) Moses was hid by his parents because they believed in God, and it all worked together for good.

"And as soon as we had heard these things, our hearts did melt, neither did there remain any more courage in any man, because of you: for the Lord your God, he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath." (Josh. 2: 11.) Rahab believed in God, and she was not destroyed.

"And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him." (Luke 7: 29, 30.) Those who were baptized by John believed in God; but the Pharisees and lawyers were not baptized. They did not believe God. Lots of people now do not believe what God says. They would rather believe the commandments of men.

Church News

Tennessee.

Chattanooga, September 10.-I have just returned from Soddy, where I preach twice a month. My first visit to that place was almost two years ago, when I found a few faithful ones meeting in a house that belonged to the We went to work at once Baptists. and bought that house, for which we agreed to pay five hundred dollars, and, by the help of brethren away and other congregations, they have paid four hundred dollars of this debt, and hope to be able to meet the last note when it shall come due. ren and sisters are poor in this world's goods, but rich in the one faith. We are not trying to boost the Lord's work by trying to do big things, but are doing many little things that will help to develop a strong congregation in the near future. As this work is in a rural district, a mining town, the development will be slow. If there are any brethren anywhere that would like to invest in the good work at this place, they should send their donations to Brother Charles Sparks, Soddy, Tenn., Route 2. He is an elder and the treasurer of the board of trus-I have some time that is not promised during October. If there is any place in the rural districts where you can use me for a meeting, I am at your service.-W. A. McCullough.

Braxton, September 9.-I closed a very interesting meeting at New Hope Church, near this place, last night, with a baptism at half past ten o'clock. There were three confessions and baptisms yesterday, four during the meeting. This was my fourth meeting here, and the best attended and the most interesting one of them all. They asked me to book a meeting for them in 1920, the Lord willing. is a fine community and has a fine lot of good people in it, and the brethren and sisters are, so far as I know, among the best anywhere. This is a pleasant place to hold a meeting, and they certainly know how to treat a preacher. Their homes are all open and a hearty welcome is given him everywhere. I made my home with the Thompsons, the preacher's home for years past. All the preaching brethren know who they are, and a better home no preacher ever had. There were others "who wanted to keep the preacher" this time, but my promise had been out two years and the invitation had been accepted.

May God bless this church. I go from here to Belgreen, Ala., for an eight-days' meeting with the Bradley's Chapel congregation; then home for a five-days' debate with C. H. Cayce at Burns, Tenn., beginning on September 23. After this I am due to begin at a point near Glasgow, Ky., and be in that section for six weeks.—I B. Bradley.

Texas.

Ennis, September 9.—We had good crowds yesterday, a happy fellowship, and five additions. Several talks were made by the brethren favoring the "Bible Chair" effort in Austin, and we will help.—Ben West.

Beaumont, September 6.—Brother John T. Ramsey (colored), of Dallas, is doing some fine preaching at the Forrest Avenue church of Christ, this city, with fine attendance and attention. Brother Ramsey preaches in a way that all who hear him can easily understand the truth. At the close of this meeting Brother Ramsey will go home to Dallas. Let us pray that he may continue in the good work—A.

Italy, September 10.—After an extended trip to the old States, I am now at home ready to begin school work After visiting my mother at Pulaski, Tenn., I held a short meeting at Delrose, with one addition. Brother Albert Dixon, an efficient song leader, was with me in this meeting and did his part well. My mother and three sisters were also with me. My next meeting was at Cunningham, Ky., with splendid interest and four added. I then went to Hollywood, Mo., and held my third meeting. There were thirty-two additions. Before return-ing home I held my third meeting with the church at Marietta, Miss. with three baptisms. I have just closed an excellent meeting at Files Valley, with seven baptized, eight restored, and two to take membership. I wish I could have gone on with the work, but now I must begin teaching school.-J. W. Brents.

Itasca, September 8.—Brother J. W. Brents, of Italy, has just closed a good meeting with the faithful few who meet at Files Valley, near here. There were nine baptisms, eight restorations, and two put in their membership with that congregation. Elders were selected and the work in general set in order. I think this meeting will result in much good for the Lord's cause at this place. The writer led the singing and assisted otherwise in the meeting. Brethren, let us not overlook and neglect the small congregations in the country and elsewhere who need our help. Too often we help those who can help us in re turn and neglect the ones who really need our help most. During these strenuous times, caused by the war and the great drought in many parts of the country, there are many small congregations who really need our help in various ways. There are many who are falling away and failing to meet for the worship because of these strenuous times. You say they are not the right kind of material or they would not fall away? But listen, my brother, you may take a child who is weak and sickly and just case it off by itself and it will probably dle; whereas, by the proper care and treatment, it might grow and become a strong man or woman. You take a plant that is nearly dead and begin to water and cultivate it, and behold how fast it will grow! Let us 'be nrgent in season and out of season."-L. E. Carpenter.

Spirit Demonstrations.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

Over fifty years ago I was engaged in a discussion with a man who said: "We have the same old Holy Ghost baptism that they had on Pentecost." Preaching then was in great demand to what it is now, and exposing error was important. I claimed that if his "Holy Ghost" baptism did not have the same demonstrations that the New Testament gave to the Holy Spirit baptism, that his assumed "Holy Ghost" baptism was not the Holy Spirit baptism of the New Testament.

Then I enumerated the physical demonstrations of that supernatural spiritual power. (1) Its divine presence was seen or heard by others upon whom it did not fall. (2) It came from heaven, while yours-you do not know where it came from or goes, (3) The sound the Spirit made filled the house where they were sitting. (4) Cloven tongues resembling fire appeared. (5) They sat upon each of them. (6) The apostles upon whom so that other men of a different language could understand. (7) This Spirit's power was to guide them into all truth. (8) It was to bring to their understanding what Jesus had said unto them. (9) It was to reveal to the apostles things to come in regard to man's redemption. (10) It enabled the apostles to perform miracles. (11) They could confer this power on others. (12) They could not be hurt by being compelled to drink deadly poison or handle poisonous serpents. (13) They could heal the sick and restore the dead to life. (14) They could discern the hearts of wicked, designing men, as in the case of Ananias (Acts 5: 1-5) and of Elymas (Acts 13: 7-11).

Thus we have fourteen plain physical demonstrations which never were manifest in any sectarian religious meeting since or before Christianity began. What is commonly called the "Holy Spirit baptism" on the day of Pentecost was a physical demonstration of supernatural spiritual power in confirmation of the fulfillment of God's promise to Abraham. It was not given to give the people faith, nor to remit sins, nor to purify the heart, all of which is now claimed by sectarian revivalists, and has become the most stupendous fraud ever perpetrated in the name of Christ, throwing the responsibility of all the unbelief in the world upon the Almighty, when even Satan knows that faith comes by hearing, or he would not take the word of God out of the heart, lest they should believe and be saved. (See Luke 8: 12.)

An Earnest Appeal.

BY TICE ELKINS.

I write this to the brotherhood without the knowledge of Brother and Sister J. O. Barnes, of Lake City, Fla., to beg you to send them immediate relief. Several hospital operations on the beloved boy of twelve years old has reduced them to where, without your help at once, they will lose their little home and all they have. Brother Barnes is a preacher, and you know preachers are not able to stand such a burden as that. Now, brethren, a little from all will fix this matter up all right at once; but for fear all will not send the little, you send all you can. "Sick, and ye visited me." "As ve have done it unto one of the least of these."

Hurry up, brethren, send the Lord'sday contribution, and let individuals help all they can. Mine is going through the church at Mangum, Okla., while I hold their meeting. Come on. and hurry!

I would rather be beaten in the right this power came were enabled to speak I than succeed in the wrong.—Garfield.

Teach me that sixty minutes make an hour, sixteen ounces one pound, and one hundred cents one dollar.

Help me to live so that I can lie down at night with a clear conscience, without a gun under my pillow, and unhaunted by the faces of those to whom I have brought pain.

Grant, I beseech Thee, that I may earn my meal ticket on the square, and that in doing this that 1 may not stick the gaff where it does not belong.

Deafen me to the jingl of tainted money and the rustle of unholy skirts. Blind me to the faults of the other fellow, but reveal to me my own.

Guide me so that each night, when T look across the dinner table at my wife, who has been a blessing to me, I shall have nothing to conceal.

Keep me young enough to laugh with my children and to lose myself in their play.

And then, when comes the smell of flowers and the tread of soft steps and the crushing of the hearse's wheels in the gravel out in front of my place, make the ceremony short and epitaph simple: "Here lies a man."-Selected.

Be Ready for a Bigger Job.

Show by what is in you that you are in a place too small for your talents and the way will open for your advance. It does not pay to keep a ten-dollar man doing a three-dollar job. But you must make the boss see that you are worth trusting with more important things before he dare take a risk with you. Besides, the fellow that is always looking around cannot give the proper attention to the task he is at. If he gets real busy with his present job, he will be more likely to see opportunity when it comes, and he is certainly better fitted to grasp it by the forelock.- Exchange.

Edifying as the Need May Be

A Radiant Epoch in Abraham's Career.

Our last article had to do with the promises of God as exemplified in the great sevenfold promise made to Abraham. This week we glean some other lessons from the life of the same patriarch—lessons that are brought forcibly to our minds by a study of his dealings with his nephew, Lot. It was Thoreau, a French writer, who said: "Unselfish and noble acts are the most radiant epochs in the biography of souls." In accord with this truism we shall consider, then, one of the most radiant epochs in Abraham's career; for in his dealings with his kinsman, Lot, the patriarch's spirit of unselfishness and loyalty rises to the high-water mark.

We have already noted that one of the promises vouchsafed to Abraham is couched in the words, "Thou shalt be a blessing," meaning that his devotion to God, his integrity, and his faith would be made a blessing to those who traveled with him and to those who crossed his path. We could ask for no better proof of the fulfillment of this promise than to note how wonderfully Lot was enriched by his association with his uncle, Abraham. Because of this alliance the younger man had flocks and herds and many temporal possessions, but, above all, he had the influence and the guidance and the prayers of a godly man. Lot was one of those characters who are easily influenced. Mr. Moody once said that "some men all through life have to be bolstered up by others." Lot was one of this kind. The great mistakes of his life were made after he left Abraham. The story of the separation of these two men marks a crisis in Lot's career. The cause of that separation is briefly related in Gen. 13: 6, 7, where we read: "The land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell together: for their substance was great, so that they could not dwell together. And there was a strife between the herdsmen of Abram's cattle and the herdsmen of Lot's cattle." This seems as real as though it had happened yesterday. How natural that the herdsmen of each sought the best pasturage for their cattle and quarreled over their rights and perhaps came to blows! Then the owners had to settle the trouble. It is always discouraging when strife appears in a community; and when strife appears in a congregation of Christians, it is worse than discouraging -it is positively disheartening. No one can read the New Testament and not be impressed with the fact that a church is in a terrible state that allows strife to exist among its members. In naming the works of the flesh, the apostle Paul puts strife in the same company with fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, and drunkenness. Usually where you find strife, you find these kindred evils. James says: "Where envyings and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." I do not suppose it is humanly possible for any congregation to exist for any great length of time without strife entering sooner or later, but I do know that if we follow the teachings of God's word we can get rid of it. Any lesson, therefore, that teaches how to subdue and put down strife is worthy of our notice, and along this line of teaching we are greatly indebted to Abraham. At the same time of that strife among their herdsmen we are told that "the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelt then in the land." You may depend upon it that these idolatrous neighbors were watching Abram and Lot to see just how they would settle the trouble, and were doubtless hoping in their hearts that they would have a serious clash. For they would profit by such a fight. Just so, when strife enters into the church, we need expect no sympathy from the world without. There are always Canaanites and Perizzites about to observe a church quarrel and cast a reproach upon those engaged in it. But this time enemies of true religion did not have occasion to clap their hands and gleefully exclaim: "I told you so! You see how those children of Abraham settled the matter God love each other!" quickly, and he settled it right. There is a legend that Hercules was once going along a narrow road when a strange-looking animal appeared threateningly before him: Hercules struck him with his club and passed on, and was greatly surprised soon afterwards to see the same animal approach yet more threateningly, and three times as large as before. Hercules struck it fast and furiously: but the harder and oftener he struck, the bigger and more frightful grew the monster, till it completely blocked the road. Then Pallas appeared to Hercules and warned him to stop. "The monster's name is Strife," she said. "Let it alone, and it will soon become as little as it was at first." From this we may learn that all quarreling and strife will certainly cease if one of the parties involved lets it alone. "A soft answer turneth away wrath; but a grievous word stirreth up anger." It was Abraham's decision not only to let strife alone, but to end it. Therefore he said: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdsmen and thy herdsmen; for we are brethren. Is not the whole land before thee? separate thyself, I pray thee, from me; if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou take the right hand, then I will go to the left." From this we not only learn that Abraham was the peacemaker in this affair, but it cost him something to act successfully in this capacity. He was more than willing to make the sacrifice demanded. As the older man and as the chief of the clan, he might naturally have dictated the terms of their separation, but, instead, he gave the first choice to Lot. Schiller said: "The true man thinks last of himself." "Magnanimous" is a Latin word composed of "magnus," great, and "animus," mind. Abraham was truly a magnanimous character. He was great of mind, raised above what is low, mean, or ungenerous.

Fulfilling the Texts of the Bible.

Sometimes when I am called upon to preach a funeral discourse, I select one great and beautiful text and endeavor to show how the life of the deceased fulfilled the meaning of that text. We are accustomed to think that a man has done well who lives up to one of the great texts of the Bible. But, as a fitting tribute to the glory of his name, I hold up before you the character of a man who, in one great decision that involved right and wrong, exemplified no less than ten important passages scattered through the word of God, including the words of the Wise Man, the Psalmist, Jesus Christ, and his apostles. Wise Man said: "A soft answer turneth away wrath; but a grievous word stirreth up anger." (Prov. 15: 1.) The Psalmist said: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" (Ps. 133: 1.) Jesus said: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." (John 13: 34.) He said again: "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called sons of God." (Matt. 5: 9.) He said again: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." (Matt. 6: 31.) Paul said: "Love suffereth long, and is kind." (1 Cor. 13; 4-8.) He said again: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." (Rom. 12: 18.) He said again: "Walk in love." (Eph. 5: 2.) And again: "Let brotherly love continue." (Heb. 13: 1.) And still again: "In honor preferring one another." (Rom. 12: 10.)

If this man Abraham, living far back in an age when his divine illumination was faint as compared with ours and surrounded by Canaanites and Perizzites with all their wicked and idolatrous practices, could present such a luminous illustration of the glory of right thinking and acting, what shall we say of ourselves, who are living under a dispensation where the fullness of Jesus Christ filleth all in all? Shall we not at least learn a lesson that at a time when nearly every one seems to be bent on getting all the money possible, that "true greatness is not in grasping, but in giving?" As our noble President expresses it: "The man who serves his country best in times of war and in times of peace is the man who serves it without thought of himself."

Pitching the Tent Toward Sodom.

When Lot was given the choice of all the land before him, his selfishness is portrayed by the fact that he chose all the Plain of Jordan, which was well watered everywhere. At this period in his life Lot was a look-out-fornumber-one man. In other words, he was like the average man. He had an eye to the main chance. He did not say to Abraham: "Now, uncle, you have been kind and good to me, and you are growing old. I therefore insist that you take the land over there, which has the best grass." No, this was not Lot's feeling. He "took in the whole situation;" but he had a very imperfect sight. He saw all the well-watered Plain of the Jordan, but he overlooked the city of Sodom and its exceedingly wicked and sinful people; and the thing he overlooked was the biggest thing in the outlook.

At the first Lot pitched his tent toward Sodom. A little later he made his home in the city itself. No one can pitch his tent toward Sodom without incurring a great risk. He will be tainted by his associations; he will/gradually grow worse and worse, till he dwells in Sodom itself and will suffer the fate of Sodom. The true principle is to keep as far from evil as possible. He who keeps bad company pitches his tent toward Sodom; he who takes his first drink pitches his tent toward Sodom; he who swears a little pitches his tent toward Sodom; she who indulges in doubtful pleasures pitches her tent toward Sodom; and they who desecrate the Lord's day and stay away from the Lord's Supper in order to make more money are certainly pitching their tents toward Sodom.

No doubt Lot made his decision quickly. It would require no more than two minutes for the average man to take the best in sight, from a worldly point of view. But that unfortunate decision brought great calamity upon him and his family, and Lot lived to see the day when he regretted his unfortunate course. The apostle Peter tells us that he was "sore distressed" by the lascivious ways of the wicked. But he brought that distress upon himself when he pitched his tent toward Sodom. There are many Christian parents who mean well by the children, but who make some fearful mistakes in selecting their environment. In their desire to get them into the best society they get them into the worst, and all unwittingly they set their children's feet on the paths that lead to ruin. Why is it so many of them do not realize their mistake until, like Lot, some great calamity like burning Sodom brings them to their senses?

Lot did not insure against evil. A stingy old farmer had been approached time and again by the representative of a fire-insurance company to protect his house against fire. "No, no," the old man would reply, with a wise shake of his head; "my house will never catch afire." One fateful day the unexpected happened. The neighbors were astonished to see the farmer racing up and down the village street instead of helping to put out the flames. As he ran he shouted: "Sandy, Sandy, where's the insurance chap? It's awful that you cannot find a body when ye're needin' him!" That was no time to take out fire insurance. "Seek ye Jehovah while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near."

To sinners I cannot say, like Abraham: "All the land is before you; take what you please." But I can say this: There are two ways. One is steep and rugged, but it leads to heaven, the goal of faithful Abraham, the city whose builder and maker is God; the other is smooth and easy and is filled with worldly pleasure, but it ends, like the slime pits of Sodom, in the ashes of a burning city.

And you must make the choice.

The vast majority of Christian people in America have not hitherto known what sacrifice means. If the present emergency, with its appeals that almost deafen the soul, does not bring home to us the need for self-denial, then insensibility is well-nigh an unforgivable sin. Never again, perhaps, in the history of the race will Christ speak so pleadingly to men as he does to-day. If we pass by on the other side, if we cannot see that it is he who is hungry and cold and wounded, then we are indeed a callous and insensible people.—D. M. Steele,

A Retrospect.

BY J. D. FLOYD.

I am in a retrospective mood this morning. By that wonderful endowment we call "memory" I have been in the home of my boyhood threescore and ten years ago; and as I have just had an hour's converse with a dear preaching brother, whom I had not met in a long time, who assured me he and many others, whose faces I have not seen, read with both pleasure and profit the fugitive sketches I furnish for the Gospel Advocate, I have decided to sketch some of the things that I have been viewing in that far-off period. In sight, to the south, of where I grew to manhood is an elevation called "Elk Ridge," extending from the rim land on the east across the "basin" to the rim land on the west. Bursting out from the foot of this ridge on the north side near its east end are a number of springs of clear, cold, and health-giving water. These, when united, formed a not very large, but beautiful, stream, called "Flat Creek," which made its way down the valley to the river. The valley was narrow, and to a considerable extent the virgin forest was uncut. Picking its way the best it could down the valley, the creek ran first on this side and then on that, making many crooks and turns. Consequent upon this serpentine course were many pools that formed an ideal home for the perch, the chub, the yellow cat, and the hornyhead, and an ideal place for another purpose, as we shall find further on.

On the point of one of the hills that jut out from the north side of the ridge and near one of the beautiful springs that form the creek, in the period that has been in my mind this morning, was a stand and seats for religious services. It was an ideal place for an outdoor gathering, stately oaks and beeches with their foliage furnishing ample shade both for man and beast. The stand and seats were prepared by two neighbors, brothers-in-law, that men called "schismatics" who occasionally visited the community might have a place to preach (the meetinghouse in the neighborhood was closed against them). While there were a few Methodists, who in zeal and in noise made up for lack of numbers, Baptists of the Calvinistic stripe dominated the community. Theirs was the only church in reach. There the faithful, on the fourth Sunday and Saturday before, in each month, resorted and were edified by listening to long sermons, as a rule in the sing-song style, on predestination, foreordination, etc. These preachers had much to say about a covenant away back in the past-as some expressed it, "before the dust of the highest hill was laid." These preachers in some way had found out that in this covenant the Father proposed to create man, and that as man would sin the Son agreed to become human and die to redeem the elect. It has always seemed queer to me that in this covenant the devil, who was not present and had no part in the council, should have been given the greater part of mankind. The many attended the services at the church; the few, those at the little stand in the woods. The things taught at the two places differed as much as day does from night. At the one it was taught that the Bible was a mystery and only to be understood by those who had been enlightened by the Spirit in an abstract way; that salvation was wholly of the Lord and only for those who from all eternity had been ordained to everlasting life, and that the saved knew it by their feelings. At the other it was taught that the Bible was a revelation adapted to man's understanding; that there had been different dispensations, and that God's law in each dispensation was adapted to those living in that age; that as the stalk and the blade are preparatory for the full corn in the ear, so the first and second dispensations prepared for the third, the gospel age, in which God reveals the perfect scheme of redemption for mankind; that Jesus "tasted death for every man;" that he "gave himself a ransom for all;" that the gospel was to be preached "to every creature;" that the conditions of salvation under the gospel were that man must believe on Christ with the whole heart, repent of his sins, and be baptized In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ; that this would bring him into the church, the spiritual body of which Jesus is the head, and that there he would receive "redemption through the blood of Christ, even the forgiveness of sins," and that there, and there alone, he could acceptably worship God and prepare himself for the heavenly home. This teaching, so plain and scriptural, was certainly in great contrast with the mystical deliverances at the other place.

Parenthetically, I will state that in my boyhood I heard Joshua Yates, who was a member of the Baptist Church in Kentucky where John ("Raccoon") Smith was ordained as a Baptist preacher and was present when it was done, preach in the house above alluded to, preaching as they all did-salvation independent of human cooperation. Calvin Curlee was the principal preacher at the stand in the woods. He was a farmer-preacher, whose living came principally from the fields he cultivated. His home was thirty-five or forty miles away. On Saturday preceding the Sunday appointment the plow was left idle in the furrow and he mounted his horse and made his way to the neighborhood, ready for the Sunday's work. His equipment was simple. Across the saddle was a well-worn pair of saddlebags, in one end of which was a Bible and a hymn book, while in the other was a clean shirt-yes, it was a "shirt" then, now it would be "linen." After two earnest discourses-one in the morning, the other in the afternoonand a night's rest, Monday found him on his way home, where the labors of the week were resumed. Occasionally a man or a woman, who had the courage of his or her convictions, unafraid of the odium such action would bring in that community, would confess faith in Christ, and in one of the beautiful pools in the clear, flowing stream near by would be baptized. I have always tried not to be eranky, and know that water is water; and while it makes no difference whether it is penned up by cement, brick, plank, or an earth bank so as to give sufficient depth for a burial in baptism, I still leve to see baptisms in the pools in the beautiful streams God has made.

While several obeyed the gospel, no effort was made to form a congregation, and after two or three years the work ceased and the stand and seats were taken away and used for other purposes. A question naturally arises: Were the long rides through the heat, the body-wearying work of the preacher, and the sacrifices of the two citizens who sustained the work, labor in vain, or has a time of reaping followed? Standing threescore and ten years since then and looking back, it is plainly seen that, as in all cases of "labor in the Lord," the work was not in vain.

Some of the fruit there associated themselves with the church at "New Hermon" and became factors in the work of that most excellent church. Some helped in the formation of the church at Lynchburg, which has a good record of more than a half century of work. One brother at his own expense built a good house of worship at "County Line," and was the real founder of the church there—a church, by the way, that has been faithful these many years, notwithstanding the adverse influences by which it is surrounded. There are good church workers and their families at Gadsden, Ala.; at Chattanooga, Tenn.; and there was, and is perhaps yet, at Rome, Ga., whose church affiliation is the result of the seed sown by Calvin Curlee at the "little stand in the woods." One man, a cousin of mine, a blacksmith by trade, and an independent thinker, set at naught his religious environment, obeyed, and became at once a strong advocate of the truth as it is in Jesus. Before his children were any of them grown he went West and became a worker with the church at Corinth, Ark. His numerous descendants to-day help to swell the number of disciples in Arkansas and Oklahoma. One man, of a clear head, humble and unassuming, chaste in speech, and as pure in life as any man I ever knew-Willis Bearden-attended the preaching one day, confessed his faith, was baptized, and, as I have been told, went home, several miles away, in his wet clothes. The example thus set was followed by most of a large family. Many representatives of this family are disciples to-day in Texas, Oklahoma, Alabama, and our own State-Tennessee. One sister, influenced by her brother, became a Christian. She married a man who was content to live an industrious life without ostentation. Him she led into the church with their several sons and daughters. The work of all these have been felt where they live. The two older sons are preachers, and it is safe to say that in the progressive wing of the disciples there are few stronger preachers than A. B. Philputt, who has for over twenty years been minister of the Central Christian Church, a church of two thousand members, in Indianapolis, Ind., and his brother, J. M. Philputt, who preaches for the church in Charlottesville, Va., where the University of Virginia is located. I might add to this article, already too long, other results, that have come to my mind since I have been writing, of the work done at the little stand; but enough has been given to enforce upon the mind of all preachers and church workers the admonition of Solomon: "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand: for thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that."

Drawing Near to God.

BY S. W. BERRYMAN.

James says: "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." (James 4: 8.)

The Supreme Being created man perfect, but on account of his sins he separated himself from his Maker. "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God." (Isa. 59: 2.) But man in this sad condition still has the promise of eternal life and a home beyond the grave.

As man separated himself from God by hearing, believing, and obeying a lie, so he must come back to God by hearing, believing, and obeying the truth. Man in his fallen state must be taught the truth before he comes back to God. The truth is revealed in the gospel; therefore the gospel must be preached or made known to the lost before they can draw near unto God.

Jesus says: "And they shall be all taught of God. Every one therefore that hath heard and learned of the Father cometh unto me." (John 6: 45.) Those of us who "have heard and learned of the Father" should make no delay in teaching the truth to others, or making known to them the way by which they, too, can draw nigh unto him. But James says that God will draw near to us if we will draw near unto him. And Jesus says: "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." (John 14: 23.) From this it is clear that God and Christ draw near to those who love them and keep their commandments. Then the only way for man to draw near to God is by obedience to his words. The stronger our knowledge of the truth becomes and the closer in obedience to this truth we live, the nearer we draw to God.

Then, dear brother, be not weary in obeying the commands of our Lord; for each act of obedience, each duty performed, brings us nearer to him. I know that as long as we are in the flesh we will have trials to overcome and battles to fight; but we should meet them bravely, knowing that each obstacle we overcome and that each battle we fight brings us nearer to God. Remember that we cannot be too good nor live too close to God in this life. If we spend every moment of our lives in his service, we will not draw any nearer to him than he desires that we should. We should all realize that if we obey every command, reverence every precept, and live humbly every day of our lives, we have only done that which was our duty to do. (See Luke 17: 10.) Yes, we must draw near to him by obedience in this life, if we hope to live with him in that beautiful life beyond.

Cain-Concluded.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

It is a pleasant task to study the life of a wise and a good man; to follow this life through the thorny maze of human experience is a joy. It is a blessing to draw nigh with the plous to the altar of God; to learn patience of the meek and learn kindness of the generous; to love and admire them in life and regret them in death is, indeed, pleasant. But to attend the footsteps of the wicked is painful; yet it is highly important to learn the lesson which God has taught us by their sins, sufferings, and final condemnation. The biography of a wicked man is a loud admonition to all to cease from sin and learn to do well.

Cain's firstborn was named "Enoch." This means "beginning," initiated, or dedicated; dedicated to God. Some have thought that his oldest son was born before he was driven from the presence of the Lord, but this supposition does not seem to have the support of the author of Genesis. The name that he gave his firstborn indicates that he had not forgotten Jehovah and desired to honor him even in his banished state. It also indicates that Cain could still approach the altar of Jehovah, and was not forever doomed to pursue his course without ever turning to God. At least, Cain had some thoughts of God after his separation. God is not the enemy of mankind. Man may be God's enemy; the world is the enemy of God; but God so loved the world that he gave Christ to redeem it. (John 3: 16.) God was not the enemy of Cain, nor is he the enemy of the sinner to-day. He is a friend and Savior; he points out the sin and also the way of escape from the condemnation of sin.

Cain became an exile from the presence of God; but as to how long Cain lived and in what manner he died, we have no information. It would give us little satisfaction even if we knew how he lived and died after his banishment; better for him had he never been born than to have lived a sorrow to the mother who gave him birth and bear the guilt of murder and suffer remorse of conscience to the end of a tragic life. We are told that he went into the land of Nod. The word "Nod" is translated "vagabond," "exile." Some think that he did not go into any specific country that was known as "Nod," but wandered as an exile on the face of the earth; shut off from the association of his fellow men with the mark of a murderer on his person. We are told that he knew his wife, and she conceived and bare him a son. We are not concerned about the old question as to where Cain got his wife. Why not ask where Seth or any of the other early patriarchs got their wives? No one's faith should be shaken in the inspiration of the Bible because there is no specific statement as to where the early men obtained their wives. All who have read the Bible have observed that the genealogy is always given through the male.

There are some sins that originated with the family of Cain which have cursed the human family for many generations. Noah had three sons-Shem, Ham, and Japheth. Noah and his wife and his three sons and their wives were all that were saved from the flood. Many scholars have expressed it as their judgment that Ham married a descendant of Cain. One of Ham's sons was named "Canaan." Upon this son Neah pronounced the curse, and said: "Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants shall be be unto his brethren." (Gen. 9: 25.) The Canaanites came from Canaan. They represented as wicked a race of people as have ever disgraced the earth. "Canaanite" is a synonym in biblical history for wickedness and corruption. Sin in every form, in its most gigantic proportions, has been found among the Canaanitish people. If the conjecture be true that they are descendants of Cain, then Cain becomes the father of the most wicked race of people that Again, the sin of polygamy seems to have originated in the family of Cain. Lamech was the great-great-great-grandson of Cain. We learn in Gen. 4: 19 that he took unto him two wives. This is the first mention of polygamy in the human family. We learned in the study of Adam and Eve that, when Eve was created and presented to Adam, he said: "She is bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh." The basis for union of husband and wife is emphasized in the fact that husband and wife are one flesh, one family, one. This fundamental principle is nullified in polygamy and polyandry. When the fundamental principle of the union is violated, the race becomes corrupt.

We have already learned that the institutions of sacrifice and worship were corrupted by Cain, and we now see that the institution of marriage has been perverted and corrupted by his descendants; the one represents our relationship to God, and the other represents the holy and sacred relationship to man. These relationships lie at the very foundation of all permanent good and biessings of the human family. When our relationship to God is perverted and the holy relationship of marriage corrupted, no people, race, or nation can stand and be successful. It is significant that so much wickedness should come from Cain and his family.

Not only was Cain cursed because of his sin, but also the ground was cursed on his account. Cain was an agriculturist, while Abel was a shepherd. The ground was cursed that it should not produce its full strength. Cain should till the soil, but should labor in vain, as it would not respond to his wicked hand with full production. We find in the history of Cain's family that he tries to dodge the consequences of his sin by changing his occupation. Some of his descendants engaged in manufacture. Jubal, a descendant of Cain, invented musical instruments; Tubalcain was the first smith. Cain is represented in the Bible as being the first man to build a city: and a probable descendant of his, Nimrod, was the first to found a kingdom. It seems that human government, man's effort to govern himself independent of God, originated with the family of Cain. Better for Cain had his name never been mentioned among the posterity of earth than to have had it transmitted to the present generation stained with a brother's blood and associated with sin of vain worship, unholy marriage, and the rebellion of human government. The mutual fears and lusts of the flesh drive his descendants into a common society, cultivating the arts which afford the means of defense against the attacks that are without and amuse and entertain the propensities of the flesh. May the lessons learned in the history of Cain be an admonition unto us to-day.

The Taylor-Winkler Debate.

BY T. B. THOMPSON.

The above-named discussion was held near Needmore, out from Cumberland City, Tenn. The design of baptism and apostasy were discussed, Brother H. E. Winkler, of Adairville, Ky., affirming on both propositions. Two days each (September 3-6) were devoted to each question.

Brother Winkler is only twenty-nine years old, while his opponent is a man more than twice his age, I suppose. Not only is Mr. Taylor twice his age, but he is regarded as one of the most skilled debaters the Missionary Baptists have. Putting a man of Taylor's age and experience up against Winkler is a confession upon the part of the Baptists that they thought such a man was needed to rally their cause in such a contest. Brother Winkler has a most pleasing address, commanding both the respect and attention of his audience. His scripture quotations were accurate and pointed, and he impressed his hearers as being familiar with the New Testament. One amusing feature of the discussion was the ability of young Winkler to keep his experienced opponent so very busy, especially at times.

The deportment of the debaters was all any community could ask, which, in turn, was fully complimented by as good deportment upon the part of the audience; in fact, I have never witnessed better behavior in either debaters or audiences anywhere or upon any occasion. This speaks well for both. I feel sure that much prejudice and hard feeling were actually eliminated in this community by this discussion. Mr. Taylor never referred to Brother Winkler as a "Campbellite" one time. The more informed debaters among the denominations are leaving off such reflections.

It was my privilege to moderate in this debate, practically, for both sides, and, it seemed, to the entire satisfaction of the Baptists. I was entertained in the home of Brother A. S. Landis, whose hospitality I shall not soon forget. Brother Winkler remained for a meeting at Allen's Chapel, the congregation that supported the debate.

Training.

The call for service has come. We have heard it and gladly have answered: "Here am I!" Yet, in our eagerness to do all we can in the service of our King, our country, our fellow men, we are, like children, full of self-reliance. "Ready!" we cry, but—are we ready? Are our soldiers ready just because they have answered the call, no matter how willingly, how eagerly? Ask the officers in the training camps, ask the soldiers themselves after three or six months or more of training—yes, ask the men back from the trenches, and see their smile of compassion for the raw recruit; hear the story of the hard, daily drills which were needed to make them ready to meet a cruel foe and his fiendish inventions.

And shall we, then, soldiers of Christ, escape the drill, the hard lessons of God's own training camp for us—our daily life, in whatever surroundings it has pleased him to set us? Surely, we shall not, nor do we wish to; for, if we have learned anything, we know that our great Captain is all-wise, and that, in his wisdom and love, he will give us the very training each of us needs, hard though it may be.

Let our prayer then be: Here I am; teach me to do thy will, that I may serve and please thee, for thou art my God. And to those who give themselves unreservedly, unconditionally, to his service, seeking not theirs, but his own glory, wonderful opportunities will be granted. But first—and O, the wonder of it!—the strength and the grace to learn, to do, to bear, will be given to them. His precious body and blood will strengthen and inspire them, they will know the truth of his warning: "Without me ye can do nothing." Yet they will answer: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—Selected.

Crusaders.

He grasped his cross-begennoned lance in hand, And cased his muscles in cold shining steel; With sword and shield of temper tried and leal He fared him forth to face the paynim band.

No doubt; for just his cause, his purpose grand: No fear; Faith went unrivaled save by Zeal: Nor Pain nor Death could make him terror feel Could he but deal one stroke for Tomb or Land.

Alas! the paynims are not vanquished yet;
No dead Christ's tomb in danger fires the world,
But furious hosts have risen keen to get
The living Christ's ideals downward huried.
Crusaders, rise! shall Victory be set
On banners in an unjust cause unfurled?

"That the Man of God May Be Perfect." No. 2. BY A. W. YOUNG.

No small part of the misunderstanding of 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17 has grown out of the idea that there is "an hour of worship" specifically commanded, and that "worship" is the only thing for which the church can assemble. Where such an idea originated, it is difficult to determine, when we consider that the church is the "pillar and ground of the truth" and that the duties of the church are varied, from helping the weak members and administering discipline to the work of teaching the world the gospel. In the matter of administering discipline we are without specific instruction. We have the instruction to withdraw ourselves "from every brother that walketh disorderly" (2 Thess. 3: 6), yet we have no specific instruction as to how this withdrawing shall be done. Who shall prefer charges in the church against a disorderly member, how these charges shall be preferred (whether orally or in writing). what time they shall be considered, what method of investigation shall be used, whether it shall be public or private, who shall question witnesses if any are called, whether the fact of the withdrawal shall be published or not, and what shall be required for restoration-all these things are left to our own arrangement, and we are only under the general rules of doing things decently and in order and doing good to all men, doing our duty. When brethren are withdrawn from, they invariably say that they were not scripturally withdrawn from, and cite the way in which it was done as proof. There is no unscriptural way, or manner, to withdraw from a brother, provided it be done decently and orderly. It might be that some have been withdrawn from when they should have been retained in the fellowship, and that fact of their withdrawal was unscriptural, but not the manner of it. It is a poor defense for a brother who has been withdrawn from to say that "they didn't do it scripturally." The question is one of guilt or innocence, one of willingness or unwillingness to make right the wrong, and not one of methods of withdrawal or who was present when it took place.

This brings me to the methods in the work of the church. Because of the fact that the New Testament deals with the establishment of congregations in new fields and the development of congregations in the childhood period of the church, under inspired instruction, and does not give us much as to the working of the church in a specific way, are we to conclude that the activities of the church of Jesus Christ to-day are to be confined to the channels of the environment of that age? While it is true that the gospel of Christ is God's power to save men, and that it will be the same until the end of time, yet it is not true that we are limited to the means used by the early church in teaching the gospel to the world or in edifying the church, or that, in this respect, we are completely furnished in detail as to how this work shall be done. Some brethren think that 1 Cor. 14 is a model for the conduct of the church of to-day. This is a serious mistake. It was instruction as to the conduct of the church in the childhood period of the church; instruction as to conduct in a church where Paul said, "I would have you all speak with tongues." (1 Cor. 14: 5.) If any church professes to speak with tongues now, we call them "Holy Rollers" or something else, but certainly not a church of Christ. But when brethren think that 1 Cor. 14 is a model, it is strange to me that they make such a poor effort to live up to it. Usually where this idea obtains we find that the brethren decide that it would be wrong just to have one man do the talking at "the hour of worship," and so they provide that several shall talk, and then seem to think that they have followed 1 Cor. 14. As a matter of fact, no man, elders or any one else, had the least right or privilege in determining who should talk in the days of inspiration. Paul said, "For ye may all prophesy one by one" (1 Cor. 14: 31), and then said, "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets." Does that look like the elders or any one else made selection of some one to do the talking in the assembly? Certainly not. The Lord made the selection of the ones whom he wished to speak, gave them what he wanted them to say, and they said it. There was no order or arrangement, except such as he gave them. He might reveal much to one and a little to another one. To-day we have the church in the manhood stage, with the completed revelation of God. We may adopt any method to teach that word which may seem best. We can preach it; write it on a blackboard; put it into tracts, booklets, quarterlies, weekly papers, or monthly journals; write it in letters to our friends or even to our enemies. We may teach any number of persons at one time, and any number of teachers may be teaching at the same time, provided we have no confusion in so doing. But there are some folks who would limit our public teaching to the assembly of the saints, especially on Lord's day, and then they must have all the saints in one class, or they think it unscriptural. If all the saints at Corinth were in one class, and the example is worth anything, then all the saints in Fort Worth must be in one class, and we have six separate congregations; all the saints in Nashville must be in one class, and there are more than thirty congregations. I wonder if the church at Jerusalem, when it had grown to where "the number of the men was five thousand," which it did in a short time after Pentecost, had only one class, and used only one loaf and two or three cups in the communion? If it had been a matter of importance as to just how they arranged themselves in teaching, how many loaves they used in the communion or how many cups were so used, the Lord would have told us; and inasmuch as he has not done so, let us not become creed makers and fix it for him. When God did not desire to leave a thing to the wisdom of man in regard to its order and arrangement, he always told him the details.

Humility is but the sincere acknowledgment in thought, in language, in action, of the first and most commanding of all facts—it is the sincere acknowledgment of God; and as long as the gospel revelation unveils God, in his awfulness and in his beauty, to the soul of man, so long Jesus Christ will be followed to heaven by generations of the humble.—H. P. Liddon.

Whatever may be Christ's silence to those who deserve them, he is never really silent to those who desire his salvation, and bear his cross, and trust his love. It is easier for the sun to fall out of the sky than for him to be hard, or cold, or indifferent to the humblest soul that seeks his face.—Bishop Thoroid.

I am so sorry because this month the total amount forwarded is only half of the amount I forwarded last month, and our missionaries need funds every month. May I appeal to every brother and sister reading this to please send in a remittance now, if you have not already sent one in this month? There are a number of brothers and sisters and several churches who send a contribution for our missionaries every month without fail. This is the very best plan of all for supporting our missionaries. I wish I could enlist twice as many in this work. If you will answer this appeal, you will help toward that end. Do you hope for the evangelization of the whole wide world-the whole wide world for Jesus? There is only one way to attain this end, and that is for every one of us to do our very utmost. To the extent that you, brother or sister, do not help, to that extent are you retarding the spread of the glorious gospel of the Son of God. Has Jesus' love meant anything to you? It may mean a great deal to some one else. Will you help them to know of Jesus? Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas.

"Consistency, Thou Art a Jewel."

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

A crucial test of the scripturalness of a church is as much its work as its worship. Constituted, as it is, the only institution through which the Spirit is to propagate the "power of God" unto the salvation of a lost world. its right to be termed "Christian" depends upon its exemplifying and being the exponent of the living Christ. Like the church at Sardis, many congregations to-day are but animated corpses, mistaking mechanical repetition for a guaranty of existing spiritual life. When we think that of nine thousand local congregations in this country calling themselves "churches of Christ" only about five hundred give anything toward the furtherance of the gospel in foreign fields, and less than one hundred give regularly, we are tempted to ask whether our faith is a mere "creed" rather than an actuating principle. Do we have a religion of the hand or of the heart? In all the writings addressed to local bodies in apostolic times the expressions of commendation were always more because of their spiritual conception than their ritualistic perfection; rather because of service rendered than of wealth, numbers, or equipment possessed; and to-day, if we are to meet the crying need of the race and be true to the name we wear, we must honor that name by "presenting our bodies a living sacrifice" in an effort to carry the message of salvation to the uttermost part of the earth.

It is not sufficient that we advocate the gospel alone as God's power unto salvation and the church the only institution through which it shall be proclaimed; but we must demonstrate the overwhelming power of churches after the apostolic pattern, fired by a well-grounded faith in the irresistible force of the great message. What we need is action-regular, consistent, sustained effort. Without it, our blows against the archenemy will lack force and be easily parried; with it, our offensive will gain in effectiveness and victory be within our grasp. The work at Forest Vale Mission, South Africa, has been sustained by one lone man, who is obliged to add to his other handicaps the necessity of supporting his family by the labor of his hands while he tries to further the Lord's cause. He needs help. A young, active man must be found to go to his assistance. Higher education is not absolutely essential. A graduate of one of our junior colleges would make an ideal colaborer and could raise the standard of the mission work, thereby securing a larger government grant. Of course provision will have to be made for his financial support. Can such a man be found, or, failing that, can I enlist some church or churches to assume the support of a native teacher? All donations will be acknowledged through the press of the brotherhood and will be forwarded on the fifteenth of each month. How much are you interested? Address F. B. Shepherd, Lometa, Texas. 0 0 0

Moving Pictures.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

During the last three months there has been a great drop in the offerings for this work. Some churches, like Portland Avenue, Donelson, Oakland, Beech Grove, Scott's Hill, Florence, and others that could be mentioned, are as regular as the clock. If those who give occasionally would only become as constant as these, there would be no lack. The brethren in India are suffering from this same irregularity. Brother McHenry, in a letter from Aurangabad, British India, lately received, says: "A considerable falling off in receipts for workers suggests that some few good brethren should volunteer to become regulars with at least five dollars per month." Will you be one? He adds: "The work here grows in interest. Four were immersed on the 19th. Others expected soon."

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Wilbur White is in a good meeting with the Foster Street congregation, this city.

A. L. Dixon, a good song leader, has some open time. If you need him, address him at Route 1, Dellrose, Tenn.

From J. B. Nelson, Frederick, Okla., September 12: "I commenced a meeting here two days ago and will run over the fourth Sunday."

Make a liberal contribution for the Tennessee Orphans' Home on the first Lord's day in October. It is thought the churches will make a hearty response.

From M. A. Creel, Hanceville, Ala., September 17: "I have just closed a good meeting at Addison, in which there were thirteen additions to the church."

From E. V. Cowan, Marmaduke, Ark.: "Please mention in your paper that I am desiring a location at some place where a preacher is needed to spend his entire time in word and doctrine."

From F. W. Smith, Martin, Tenn.: "Audiences fine, singing splendid, attention superb, and preaching par excellence. Four confessions and one restoration. I think there will be more confessions and that we will have a good meeting."

Among our visitors last week were C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas; R. L. Whiteside, of Denton, Texas; Charles L. Talley, of Howell, Tenn.; J. T. Harris, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn.; and C. E. Wooldridge, of Fayetteville, Tenn. All of these preachers are busy in the Master's service.

From Eph P. Smith, Martin, Tenn., September 20: "F. W. Smith's coming to us must have been of God. He is certainly giving us some very much-needed lessons from the Book. Five have been baptized to date, and a splendid young lady made the confession at our last service. We are looking for more."

From W. F. Mathis, Vienna, Ill., September 17: "The meeting with the Crawford congregation, near Buckner; closed on Sunday, after continuing sixteen days; thirteen were added—eleven by baptism and two from the Christian Church. There is a fine congregation there. I will labor with them next year, having been with them two years already."

From Hatton B. Gist, Argenta, Texas, September 18: "My protracted meetings during the past summer were as follows: At Lawn, Taylor County, with one baptism; Yellow Mound. Eastland County, nine baptisms; Union, Eastland County, three baptisms; and Flatwoods, Eastland County, twenty baptisms. Vernon McCasland assisted me in the last-named meeting."

From W. S. Long, Sharon, Tenn., September 20: "I am now in a meeting with the church at Sharon. The brethren are standing noby to their post of duty. The interest is good. On October I I will leave for Washington, D. C., where I am to labor with the church of Christ for a year. All important communications may be addressed to 2536 Eleventh Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., care of T. F. Colvin."

From J. C. Mosley, Newton, Tenn., September 21: "Our meeting here is fine. Two have been baptized. Two fathers of families say they are going with me to Beaver Hill, Sunday, and be baptized. Their children here are faithful to Christ. We baptized four Mormons while at Luminary. I may go to Clifty before I go back home. I preached a few sermons in the head of the valley as I came here. There are some good people there. I will go home and preach at New Liberty on the first Sunday in October."

One of the very great advantages of being busy and tremendously in earnest over the worth-while tasks and enterprises of life is that, when we are thus engaged, we haven't too much time and thought to give to ourselves. When we come to sift it to the bottom, it is the man who hasn't much to do or who isn't devoting himself to what he has to do with anything like enthusiasm, who has the time and the mind to give to those most wearisome and afflicting occupations, nursing imagined wrongs and grieving over fancied troubles and tribulations.

From L. Meade Williams, Tulare, Cal., September 18: "The work at this place is moving along very nicely. L.D. Perkins was with us last Lord's day and preached a fine sermon. Two confessed their faith in Christ, and we went to Mooney's Park, and attended to the ordinance of baptism. C. A. Norred, of Riverside, will begin a series of evangelistic meetings at this place on the first Lord's day in October, to continue for an indefinite time. We are looking forward for a great meeting, hoping that both saint and sinner may be awakened to a sense of duty. Pray for us, that we may have a great spiritual revival."

From Eugene Pearson, Monticello, Ky., September 17: "Next Lord's day I am to close my summer's work with the congregations of Wayne County. I made promise for only four months' work here, as I intended to return to school this fall. I believe that I can truthfully say that this has been the most pleasant and profitable summer's work in which I have ever engaged. If any of our preaching brethren are looking for a good permanent location, it will be difficult to find a more desirable one than Wayne County. Brother, if you are interested in the work here, please write to O. F. Shearer, Monticello, Ky."

From Tice Elkins, Nocona, Texas, September 18: "Meeting at Mangum, Okla., is over, and it was a good one. Six were baptized and one was restored. The brethren treated us well and gave us good homes to stay in and a good support. T. S. Teddlie led the singing, and that is saying the last word in having a good song service. There is absolutely no better than he. He never selected a 'ragtime' piece, never made a display, kept his arms and legs in their places, broke no noses, crushed no toes, cracked no jokes during the service, nor ever tried to make the work cheap. I am at home now, and will take up the work here this week and do what I can to push it along. The brethren are planning for great things, and I hope we can accomplish them. My address is Nocona, Texas."

From Will W. Slater, Council Hill, Okla., September 16: "I closed a meeting at Morrillton, Ark., last night. The meeting was considered a success, all things considered. I found the church just about dead when I arrived there. The church has been injured by so much debating, wrangling, etc. I believe in debating when it is necessary, but nine out of every ten debates could be avoided if we would try, and I am sure that nine out of ten do more harm than good. Let us quit debating, brethren, and preach the gospel. The faithful few took right hold and did lots of personal work, which was a great help toward making the meeting a success. One was baptized and new life was put into the church. They supported me well for my work. This is the home of J. Allen Eades. Brother Eades is a lawyer, but has about decided to give up his law practice and devote his time to the ministry. He is a strong man, an able defender of the truth, having been a Mormon priest and debater for nine years before entering the church of Christ. You will make no mistake in calling him. Call him out and keep him busy and let others practice law. I will begin a meeting on Culpepper Mountain, near Formosa, Ark., to-night. I go from there to Casa, in Perry County, Ark., and then home. I have not been at home since June 22, and am very anxious to get home. May God bless the faithful in Christ."

But Can God Really Stop the War?

BY E. A. E.

Read again 2 Tim. 3: 1-5. Remember the comments on this passage made last week.

A volume needs to be written against "the love of money," "which is a root of all kinds of evil." Paul sums up the evils as follows:

But they that are minded to be rich fall into a temptation and a snare and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil: which some reaching after have been led astray from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows. (1 Tim. 6: 9, 10.)

Nothing can be worse than these evils or stronger than this language and this condemnation. Note it: "fall into a temptation and a snare;" "many foolish and hurtful lusts "-not one, not two, not a few, but many; "led astray from the faith;" pierced "through with many sorrows;" drowned "in destruction and perdition."

One of the most appalling evils of "the love of money" is war-ravaging, ravishing, pillaging, devastating, murderous war; outraging innocent and helpless maidens and committing the most dastardly deeds upon old women and children. Every story which comes from Germany confirms the truth that the nation, equal in science, art, efficiency, and all learning to the most advanced nations of earth, and superior by far to many, is the most conscienceless, the most brutal, the most savage, and the most heathen of all barbarians. An educated (in the ordinary meaning of "educate") vandal, incendiary, brigand, plunderer, bloodthirsty and ambitious and inhuman autocrat, is the better equipped for the perpetration of his satanic deeds. Ignorance can never accomplish so much evil as proficiency unsanctified by the love of God and men.

Savoyard says one cause of the world war is Germany's "determination to dominate the commerce of the world." But a greater than Savoyard says:

Whence come wars and whence come fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your pleasures that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not: ye kill, and covet, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war; ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may spend it in your pleasures. (James

Space allows the mention only of great and national evils. But to mention the whisky traffic is sufficient to call up all its associate evils and fearful consequences. Men make and sell whisky through the love of money. Why has the government so long permitted its manufacture and sale? Its doom has been sealed and it must soon go. But must nations be scourged by Jehovah through war into doing away with the whisky traffic and all its consequent evils? Lincoln called the Civil War a scourge and connected it with slavery. Quoting again from "Collapse of Christless Civilizations," Lincoln said:

Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondmen's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toll shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn by the lash shall be paid for by one drawn by the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said: "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteons altogether.

This shows that Lincoln believed nations are scourged with war by the Lord for sin, and the scourge will not pass until great sins have been removed.

Again, he says that it is "proven by all history" and by the law of God that "nations, like individuals, are subject to punishment and chastisement in this world."

What about all the money piled up, all the human wee. and the multiplied thousands of souls hurled into perdition through the whisky traffic? Must the awful scourge be used-the war continued-until this money be turned into proper channels, or "be sunk," as Lincoln said about the wealth piled by the toil of slaves? Worse still, will not the scourge be used-the war go on-until the bloodthirsty ambition of autocracy and militarism to dominate the commerce of all nations and to rule the world has been destroyed?

Why should not Germany and her allies see this at once and turn away from their most ungodly ambitions, and put all this violence and butchery, savagery and bloodshed, away and cry mightily unto God for salvation? Then, why do not other nations put away lesser evils, and all together as human beings, as professed Christian nations should, usher in the day of world peace and cause the angels to sing once more:

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased?

The day must come when, as God says, and as surely as he reigns, that,

He will judge between the nations, and will decide concerning many peoples; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. (Isa. 2: 4.)

God's purposes are immutable, his righteousness endures forever, and he through the reign of "the Prince of Peace" will bring this glorious state into existence. HOW and WHEN are other questions; but that time must come.

Returning to the whisky traffic, I would emphasize the fact that God has ordained that all people of sound mind and able bodies shall have useful employment-employment helpful and not destructive to others. Thousands, not a few of whom claim to be Christians, seem not to know this, or, knowing it, worse still, not to regard it. It has been relegated by preachers to what they please to call "secular matters," with which the majority of them think they have no connection. How far short many of us fall of teaching "the whole counsel of God"-"all things that pertain unto life and godliness"-God alone knows and the judgment alone can reveal. But God has ordained useful employment for the good of the race, giving the following reasons, at least, for so doing: (1) that every one may honestly and in the fear of God supply his own wants, and even "have need of nothing;" (2) may supply the wants of his family and care for the afflicted and aged ones dependent upon him; (3) may "not be unfruitful," but profitable wherever he may live; (4) may have something to give to the needy, including those who need the gospel. (See 1 Thess. 4: 11, 12; Tit. 3: 8, 14-margin; 1 Tim. 5: 4-16; Eph. 4: 28.) None who can work, but will not work, must be supported by those who do work; while idlers, busybodies, and meddlers in other men's matters must be withdrawn from, as disorderly. (2 Thess. 3: 6-15.) All can see that making and selling whisky are not useful and essential employments. In Eph. 4: 28 God specifies the kind of work to be done-"the thing that is good." God forbids working at anything which does not bring good to others. There are hundreds of useful employments, which not only supply the comforts of life, but make all who follow them profitable and bring good to others. Making and selling whisky are not good; they bring no good to others. The ones who make and sell whisky make money, and the government which licenses that traffic derives large revenue from it; but this employment brings evil, and only evil, to others. The suffering, poverty, want, sin, and destruction of homes and souls it produces beggars description.

It is neither Christian nor patriotic to make and sell whisky. Patriotism is the love of country-that is, seeking in self-sacrifice and heroism the welfare, peace, and greatest good to the greatest number and to all classes of citizens. Patriotism is the purest and greatest thing on earth, except Christianity. The "ward politician" is not a patriot, and cannot be, until he has been born again. There is not a more useless character. I will venture the assertion that the men who are responsible for the failure to bring to trial the one thousand cases of violation of the prohibition laws and the escape from penalty of the ones who have been convicted in Nashville, Tenn., brought recently to light through the Nashville Banner, have all been before the people making patriotic speeches. Such a course is to patriotism as pharisaism is to Christianity. Patriotism is not violation of law; not fraud and corruption; not seeking place and power and wealth; not stealing from the government and making all that can be made for self out of the war. The men-if there can be such men-who want the war to continue in order to make for themselves more wealth are robbers and murderers for money.

Those who make and sell whisky seek their own and not their country's good and their neighbors' happiness; seek money at the destruction of the property and even homes, the welfare and peace, the lives and the souls of others. Hence, we are forced to the conclusion that making and selling whisky can be neither patriotic nor Christian.

Another widespread sin and unchristian and unpatriotic thing, licensed by the government, is the divorce evil. Marriage is an institution of God. He created woman of man and for man, a help suited to him. He declares that for this cause man shall leave father and mother and cleave unto his wife, and the two shall become one flesh (Gen. 2: 24; Eph. 5: 31), and that whatsoever he has joined together no man-no earthly government or authority-can put asunder (Matt. 19: 6). God alone can give the cause for divorce, and he does give it, and gives the only cause, which is fornication. (Matt. 19: 9.) No human government can know better than God knows what is best for the sanctity of the home, the purity and greatest good of society, and the progress and salvation of the race. But the government grants divorces for about twenty-five causes in the aggregate; and the last report on marriage and divorce prepared by the authority of the government shows that divorces are on the increase.

Christian homes are the salvation of a nation. Destroy them, and the foundation of purity and the safeguard of the nation have been destroyed. The sanctity and peace and power of the home have been invaded and destroyed in ratio to the alarming and increasing number of divorces. Just as the divine standard of marriage is lowered, the manhood and woman, the virtue and life-physical and moral and spiritual-of the nation are destroyed. God declares that all wives and mothers who, in the practical and true sense is given in the Bible, do not love their husbands and children, or who are not discreet and chaste, or who are not workers at home, or who are not submissive to their own husbands, blaspheme the word of God. (Tit. 2: 4.) God's rule is for younger women to marry, bear children, guide the house, and give no occasion to the adversary for reviling. (1 Tim. 5: 14.) He allows no exceptions to this rule.

Keep the fountain—the home—pure, if you would have the stream—the individual life and society—pure and the church clean and strong.

Restore her place to woman, and woman to her place.

Immodesty, impurity, and unfaithfulness of woman have been connected with the downfall of not a few nations. Isaiah (3: 16-24; 4: 4) writes of the haughtiness, extravagant apparel, "outstretched necks," and "filth of the daughters of Zion." When the kingdom of Israel was at the height of its great worldly prosperity and reveled in ease and luxury, there was "no truth, nor goodness, nor knowledge of God in the land;" its daughters and brides committed adultery, its men ran after harlots and sacrificed with prostitutes, its priests were drunkards and fornicators, and wine and whoredom took away the understanding. (See Hos. 4; Amos 2: 6-8; 6.)

The New Testament teaches that women must be modest and meek, and must "adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefastness and sobriety; not with braided hair, and gold or pearls or costly raiment; but (which becometh women professing godliness) through good works" (1 Tim. 2: 9-11); and that the proper and godly adornment for women is "the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price." This "meek and quiet spirit," of such great price in the eyes of God, is destroyed by the ways and spirit, fashions and sins, of the world. Women cannot have both spirits at the same time. Which shall it be?

Immodest dress shows the lack of modesty in the heart. A woman in immodest dress, it matters not where she may be, whether at church or in the dance hall, has already lost her modesty—woman's chiefest charm—and has already forgotten her God. Woman must come to her own (shall I say return to it?) before the home, the nation, and the church can be what God has ordained them to be. Conversely, when women become first immodest, then unwomanly, and finally corrupt, the foundation of the home and the nation becomes rotten and the whole fabric falls.

Another great evil is disrespect in many places for the law and downright lawlessness. I am thinking now of the great number of homicides in many States. But the lawless spirit—disregard for law in smaller things, speeding and otherwise violating the law in running automobiles, disobeying the laws of conservation, and evasion of the law in different ways—leads to greater and to more serious and hurtful lawless acts—bootlegging and its encouragement and a failure to convict and to punish the guilty, buying and selling votes, perjury, murder, and mobs.

We plead for a clean, law-abiding, and strong nation to be used by Jehovah for the noblest purposes and to fill the grandest mission of nations, and we pray and work according to the will of God to this end. We plead and pray for a church unspotted from the world to fill the divine mission of the church—the church built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone; the church bought with the blood of the Lamb; the church of which Jesus, and Jesus alone, is the head, and head over all things to it; the church whose history is written in the New Testament and whose mission is given by its Founder; the church which alone is the body of Christ, and the church which will stand forever.

I read with much interest and encouragement the article of John Temple Graves, of Washington, D. C., copied in this paper, August 15, by Brother S. H. Hall, and also Brother Hall's comments upon it. I turned at once, as Brother Hall requested, and read Daniel's prayer (Dan. 9: 3-19); and I have just read it again. I have read also that God sent Gabriel at once to give the answer to Daniel. This prayer acknowledges that Jerusalem was desolate and the people were in captivity because of their sins, and asks God to restore them because of their penitence and determination to worship him truly.

John Temple Graves says:

How many thousands and millions of people have asked a thousand times, "Why does God permit this awful war?"

If it be true that he could at his will send ten legions [Jesus said "twelve legions" (Matt. 26: 53)—Entrow] of angels with flaming and invincible swords to cut off and destroy these murderers of the world's peace, why does not the bugle of Gabriel sound and the sword of the archangel flash in the shadow and gloom of the world's travail?

There is purpose in war; otherwise it were devilish. The whole Christian creed is repudiated if we do not believe in some great purpose, corrective or uplifting—in the consent of Omnipotence to the blood and the frightfulness of this awful time.

Confession and repentance is the old, old way to the smile of God—old as the Pentateuch, clear as the New Testament of his will. Is it likely that God will hear a purely selfish prayer for victory if it carries no penitence for personal and national sins?

Satan trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees; and well may the Kaiser, mouthing the great name of God Almighty in the midst of the mad maelstrom of murder his devilish ambitions have evoked—well may the German devil tremble when he sees an allied nation on its knees.

When this nation gets right before God, then, and not until then, say the law and the prophets, will God lift up his hand upon the nations that fight against the Israel of humanity and democracy and Christianity.

Attention is called to the fact that Mr. Graves teaches the truth when he says "there is purpose in war;" that "confession and repentance" are God's way of stopping wars; that God does not hear "selfish prayers" which carry "no penitence for personal and national sin;" and that "when the nation gets right with God," then will God give the victory and stop the war.

But the purpose of the Kaiser in bringing on this war and the purpose for which God is overruling it are as different as heaven and perdition.

There can be no doubt that this nation is right with God in desiring the freedom and highest good of all oppressed nations and that God is using the entente allies to accomplish this purpose and, we trust, to bring universal peace. Yet there are personal and national sins to suffer for, to repent of, and to put away. The awful war came through man's choice and lust, but God overrules it for chastisement and peace.

The majority of preachers and religious teachers should quit trying to adapt Christianity, the Holy Spirit, Christ, and God to the spirit, ways, and wisdom of the world and passions and lusts of men. This can never be done. By this sin has fallen the Kaiser. The only Bible and, therefore, righteous solution of war is that God makes the wrath of men to praise him and overrules all to the uplift of mankind and for his glory. All things-wars, pestilences, and all calamities-work together for good to all who love God, who are the called according to his purpose. God declares, and it will always be true, that his thoughts and ways are not man's thoughts and ways, but that his thoughts and ways are as far above the thoughts and ways of men "as the heavens are higher than the earth." (Isa. 55: 8, 9.) God most clearly tells all preachers what to preach. Shall they preach to please God or to please men? They must still study to show themselves workmen who need not to be ashamed, approved unto God, handling aright, or holding a straight course in, the word of truth. (2 Tim. 2: 15-margin.) Paul declares that if he were still pleasing men, he would not be a servant of Christ. (Gal. 1: 10.)

All preachers who have run after German philosophy and higher criticism should repent, beg the pardon of all their audiences, in sackcloth and ashes, pray God's forgiveness, and devote the remnant of their days to preaching "Christ, and him crucified," in an earnest effort to build up that which they have helped to tear down—faith in the Bible.

Yet there are many faithful preachers of the everlasting gospel and many true servants of God who still love the truth and endeavor to keep humble, modest, pure, and unspotted from the world. In Elijah's discouragement, God told him there were yet seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal. God will take care of his church. I do not doubt that in the least; but will I be faithful to him, that he may take care of and save me? Woe unto the man who falls on this stone, for he "shall be broken to pieces;" or upon whom it falls, for he shall be scattered as dust! (Matt. 21: 44.)

The questions, "Why does God permit this awful war?" and, "Why does God not stop the war?" are similar to the ones, "Why does God not kill the devil?" or, "Why should the devil exist?" God allows men to choose whom they will serve and the course in life they will pursue. He declares that he places before them good and life and evil and death, and when they choose the former they will be blessed, and when they choose the latter they must suffer the fearful consequences. God allows Satan to exist and to tempt people and to persecute his church that people may show their choice of whom they will serve and that the church may be chastened and purified and saved forever. Whom the Lord loves he chastens, and scourges every one whom he receives. (Heb. 12: 5, 6.) The chastisement, when laid to heart, yields the peaceable "fruits of righteousness." When God has accomplished his purpose with the devil, the devil will be "cast into the lake of fire and brimstone" to "be tormented day and night forever and ever." (Rev. 20: 10.) When God has served his purpose through the war, it will end.

Sin is a far greater and more destructive enemy than hosts of well-equipped and well-trained foes. We should be far more afraid of sin—personal sins and national evil—than any army of men from without.

Briefly, I have mentioned our very great extravagance; the idleness of many; corruption in politics in many places; the pleasures of sin, or nation-wide desire for fleshly entertainment, enjoyment; the love of money; the whisky traffic; the divorce evil, and other social sins invading the sanctity of the home and undermining the purity of the nation; the turning away of women-not all, however-from their God-ordained work and to the blasphemy of his word; the immodest dress of women in shameful contrast with the modest apparel prescribed by the Lord; the desecration of the Lord's day; and, as the cause of all, forgetfulness of God. Also attention has been called to the fact that God is using the government to enforce lessons which people will not learn directly from his word-namely, the government is enforcing economy, useful employment, is cutting off some useless and extravagant pleasures, has doomed the liquor traffic, has adjourned politics, and the nation will thrive as it has never done when political corruptions have adjourned forever. The nation must come to the rescue of the home and its sanctity from the divorce evil. If the church and Christian homes cannot teach women to dress in modest apparel, maybe the government will forbid their appearing in public places in immodest dress. Men lose respect for all women who dress immodestly.

Many homes and schools of all kinds must change and teach clearly all the principles which build up the children in integrity, uprightness, justice and truth, the fear of God and the service of men, and in Christian manhood and beauteous womanhood. Let homes and schools and the pulpit teach against the divorce evil as against the whisky traffic; teach the sphere and mission of woman, as set forth by her Creator; teach modesty, a meek and quiet spirit, and all womanly virtues and manly qualities; and teach that

Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people. (Prov. 14: 34.)

Consider the following passages:

For the scepter of wickedness shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous; that the righteous put not forth their hands unto iniquity. (Ps. 125; 3.)

When a man's ways please Jehovah, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him. (Prov. 16: 7.)

Come, behold the works of Jehovah, what desolations he bath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariots in the fire. Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the nations, I will be exalted in the earth. Jehovah of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. (Ps. 46: 8-11.)

God makes "wars to cease!"

Let us believe in God, meet our obligations to him and to men, and know that the Bible is his only revelation of himself and his will to men.

I have felt that I could not meet my obligations to God and the church and all men and go to the judgment with a clear conscience without writing these articles.

The Christian Life an Active One.

BY E. G. S.

Let no one think that the Christian life is to be one of idleness. On the other hand, it should be one of great earnestness and activity. The word of the Lord says: "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall." (2 Pet. 1: 10.) This passage plainly shows that much is required of the Christian to give him assurance of a heavenly home at the end of his earthly life. Many of these things are given in connection with the passage above quoted, where we, as the children of God, are directed to add to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brötherly kindness, and charity. A life that cultivates and practices all these principles must of necessity be a busy one. These things are said in laying down the principles upon which the Christian is to live. He must carry out these principles in the daily activities of life. If he faithfully carries them out in his daily life, he will not have much time to be idle. A Christian, as a rule, can always find something useful to do if he will try.

Activity on the part of a Christian helps in many ways. Men that are known to be industrious in labor can nearly always find something useful and profitable to do. As a rule, it is the man that does not want to work that cannot find work to do. Some men do not like to work; and when that is known, men that are carrying on work do not like to employ them as helpers. Men of that sort sometimes find it difficult to secure positions and are often without employment and generally behind in finances. But when men are known to be willing and faithful workers, they nearly always find plenty of work to do and are promptly paid for their labor. Faithful industry is a grand helper to such in finding and securing jobs and keeps men from feeling lonely and neglected. Lazy people that will not work, save as stern necessity drives them to it, always have trouble to find useful and profitable employment, and such are always complaining of "hard times"-not because there is not much work to be done, but because they do not want to do much. Such as these are not pitied much and generally do not get much help if they suffer, because people do not have much sympathy for them, knowing that it is their own fault. But when a man that is known to be active and industrious meets with misfortune, he has but little trouble to find help. Plenty of help is generally volunteered to help such along till they can again help themselves. The masses of the people have no sympathy for pure idleness and are slow to help those who suffer on that account; but those that are helpless from disease or accident nearly always find help from their neighbors without asking for it. Those that are in need and not able to help themselves ought to be helped, and they generally are; but there is not much sympathy to be exercised for public beggars that could help themselves if they would.

Therefore active industry should be cultivated by all. People that are idle are the very ones that have the hardest time to get along through their earthly lives. Hence there is much in the practical teaching of the New Testament to lead people along the paths of industry. The people that are active and industrious in the daily pursuits of life are generally the happiest people to be found, especially if they are faithful in the service of the Lord; but if the service of the Lord is left out, there is no real happiness for man either in this life or the world to come. When such begin to think about the future life, when they are making no preparation for the future, they are bound to feel gloomy and sad. Hence, for those that believe the Bible, there can be no full and real happiness outside of a faithful devotion to the Christian religion as taught in the New Testament. Everything connected with time and eternity demands a faithful devotion to the Christian religion. Let those, therefore, that want to be really happy in time and eternity give themselves, heart and life, to Christianity, and the Lord will attend to the final outcome of our existence. But those that disregard the Christian religion have nothing to cheer them when they look at the solemn realities of death and eternity. Why not be faithful Christians in this life and thus be entitled to enjoy the blessings that are promised both for time and the eternal home?

The Fatherless.

BY J. C. M'Q.

It is a great loss for a child to be without father or mother. God made provisions and required the Jews to deal justly and mercifully with the fatherless. His wrath waxed hot against the Jews. Many were killed with the sword and their wives were made widows and their children fatherless because they would not be loyal and obedient to him. He executes justice for the fatherless, as we learn by reading Deut. 10: 17, 18: "For Jehovah, your God, he is God of gods, and Lord of lords, the great God, the mighty, and the terrible, who regardeth not persons, nor taketh reward. He doth execute justice for the fatherless and widow, and loveth the sojourner, in giving him food and raiment." We learn also that he made provision for the fatherless and widow along with the Levite, who had no portion or inheritance. Deut. 14: 29 declares: "And the Levite, because he hath no portion nor inheritance with thee, and the sojourner, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that Jehovah thy God may bless thee in all the work of thy hand which thou doest." He also charges the Jews that they shall not wrongfully take dues from the fatherless. Deut. 24: 17 declares: "Thou shalt not wrest the justice due to the sojourner, or to the fatherless, nor take the widow's raiment to pledge." Furthermore, when the Jew had made an end of tithing of the tithe of his increase in the third year, which was the year of tithing, then he should give unto the Levite, to the sojourner, to the fatherless, and to the widow, in order that he might eat within his gates and be filled.

Thus it is seen that God would curse the man who would wrest justice from the fatherless. Those who enjoy greater opportunities and blessings than did the Jews will not be held less responsible if they neglect to care for and look after the fatherless and widows. Fathers and mothers, above all others, should take care of their children; but when children have the misfortune to lose fathers and mothers, then Christians should cheerfully and wisely make provisions for the orphans.

The object of those in charge of the Tennessee Orphans' Home is to do this. The directors of this Home, the matrons and all connected with it, realize that no work is of more importance than is that of feeding, clothing, and educating orphans. The love of God doth not dwell in the man who does not delight to do such work. As has already been announced, the first Lord's day in October, or October 6, is the day on which a liberal contribution is asked from the churches for the purpose of enlarging the usefulness of the Home. The directors, of necessity, must turn away many orphans because they lack funds with which to make proper provisions for them. This will not be taken as a note of complaint, for the churches have been liberal. The only reason for stating this is to seek to arouse Christians generally to a greater sense of their responsibility. It is believed that when all fully realize how responsible is this work they will cheerfully contribute to its support without being urged. How blessed and glorious it will be at the judgment to hear the Savior say: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me!" If we would have the pearly gates swing open to us when we knock for admission into the city of God, we must be active in housing, feeding, and clothing orphans. All contributions should be forwarded to the Tennessee Orphans' Home, Columbia, Tenn. It is to be hoped that the next contribution will be by far the most liberal that has ever been made to this work.

One of the sweetest and best sacrifices was that made by Andy T. Ritchie and Fulton Ritchie, the two little sons of our very useful evangelist, Andy T. Ritchie, of Madison, Tenn. We are moved to write, "Bless their hearts!"-not "little hearts," but big.

Since the readers of the Gospel Advocate have been so generous in their contributions for the relief of the suffering in Poland, they will be interested in the following official statement of the workings of the American Committee:

1. The National American Committee of the Polish Victims' Relief Fund is an organization founded in New York City on May 15, 1915, by L. J. Paderewski, for the purpose of collecting money in the United States for the immediate relief of Polish war victims. The offices of the organization occupy a spacious room in the Æolian Building, which the Æolian Company has kindly placed at the disposal of

Mr. Paderewski, free of rent.
2. All the officers of the organization, including the present executive secretary, having spontaneously volunteered their services, are honorary members of the Polish Victims' Relief Fund; in other words, are not drawing any salaries.

3. From May 7, 1915, to July 1, 1918, the National Amer-can Committee of the Polish Victims' Relief Fund, by means of circulars, advertisements, concerts, addresses, bazaars, sale of photographs and Polish Relief Stamps, etc., addresses. has collected $1,011,592.96 at a total expense of $43,592.42, which represents an average of 4.3 per cent on the money On July 1, 1918, the balance on hand was collected. $21,643, which shows conclusively that a sum of $946,357.54 had actually been sent by the Committee to Poland for the relief of war victims, to England and Switzerland for the support of Polish children's colonies, and to Siberia, Russia, and France for the relief of Polish war refugees, in the shape of cash, knitted garments, clothing, and hospital

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Training Little Children

By MISS HARRIET FRANCES CARPENTER.

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 26.

The Real Mother is as Careful to Train Her Child's Character as to Provide for His Physical Wants.

A young mother recently related an occurrence which had repeated itself on several occasions in her home and which she had found most trying. She said: "My children go and get their clean stockings and tie knots in them in connection with a game they play; and often when I start to dress the children, I cannot find a single stocking that has not been tied tight several times. One hot summer afternoon I lost patience. 'Anne,' I exclaimed to the eldest, 'why do you cause me such annoyance day after day?' 'What are mothers for?' she asked; and I saw that she was right."

I gravely asked this thoughtless mother if it would not have been better for Anne to aid in the task of untying the stockings, being led, by sharing the toil, to feel grateful for the many times her mother's patient hands had done it for her.

"O, she couldn't untie them," she answered, with a shake of her head.

"Had she tried and found it impossible, she might, of her own accord, have stopped knotting the stockings," I replied.

"But I wanted to take the children to pay a visit, and there wasn't time enough to let her try."

"Then oughtn't she to have forfeited the pleasure of going with you?"

She stared aghast, then, with a pitying look, burst out: "It's easy to see that you are not a mother! No mother could do that; her mother heart would not let her."

I was silent for a moment; then, remembering that physical and spiritual motherhood are not necessarily embodied in the same person, I explained without impatience the effect such indulgence would have on the child, and pointed out that the most loving mother takes as great pains to train her children's characters as to provide for their bodily wants, and that the greatest love is that which is most farseeing. But to the end the mother stoutly held to her conception of the "mother heart."

A scene observed at a later hour in the day revealed this mother, regardless of her "mother heart," in a fit of ill temper administering a violent shaking to the said Anne.

"Nora," complained a mother to her sister, "your namesake spoils all of our rides in the new car. She just will go, and then she wants to come home immediately, and kicks and screams all the way. Sometimes we set her out on the road and ride on; but she knows that we will have to come back, so that doesn't do any good. You're a kindergartner, Nora; you must break her of it."

"Leave her at home until she shows that she understands that she should not spoil the enjoyment of others," advised the aunt. But this the mother flatly refused to do, and the miserable rides continued.

Some time later the mother went on a visit and the aunt was left in charge of her refractory niece. I saw her riding in the automobile several times without the offender. Then one day the small figure sat in its usual place, and in the aunt's arms was the two-year-old brother. They called at the door. "Are you having a pleasant outing?" I asked little Nora. "Yes," she beamed. "I used to spoil our rides; now I'm showing little brother how to make everybody have a good time."

"We had to go without Nora for a few days," remarked the aunt, quietly, "but now she is trying to think of others as well as of herself."

In this case the aunt was more truly the mother than the child's own parent; for she understood that mother love should be something more than the gratification of a passion, and this insight gave her the courage to face the child's passing disappointment for the benefit of her future welfare.

What seems of slight importance at the moment assumes a quite different aspect when considered in the light of its future results.

The Thing Unpardonable.

It is not enough to have great wrongs perpetrated and to keep from having a hand in them. Christian men and women must labor and suffer loss in restraining and curing evils and redressing wrongs. Sometimes it is very easy to see what we ought to do, sometimes it is almost impossible to avoid mistakes in correcting deeply intrenched evils, sometimes it is very difficult to puzzle out just how to act; but the one unpardonable thing in the face of great wrongs is to sit down quietly and to do nothing, to give up study and action, to take no share in solving by thought and word and deed, and personal loss and self-sacrifice, the awful problems of the evils which afflict our race.—E. M. Parker.

God's Indwelling Presence.

Consider what our lives would be if, through an active cooperation with our Lord, we were faithful to our mysterious possession of him. What an unfolding of wondrous light in thought, in word, in deed, in aspiration, in design, would characterize our inward nature! What an upholding strength would sustain us, what a companionship be left within, what communing with our unseen Guest, if only we could always bear in mind what it is to receive God—could think and feel and act in conformity with the conviction of his indwelling presence, possessing and possessed, though hidden under an inscrutable veil, screened from all mortal sense!—T. T. Carter.

Compensation.

On a lower plane of action, it is the reluctant, not the eager, whom we urge by promises of reward. Who would think of paying a man to do what he was yearning to do already? For instance, no one would hire a hungry man to eat, or a thirsty man to drink, or a mother to nurse her own child. Who would think of bribing a farmer to dress his own vineyard, or to dig about his orchard, or to rebuild his house? So, all the more, one who loves God truly asks no other compensation than God himself; for if he should demand something else, it would be the prize that he loved, and not God.—Bernard of Clairvaux.

The clouds of life bring the bow of God's promise, if the dark ways in which we are called to walk are the ways in which he has set us, and not those into which we wander through our own perversity and folly.—Waterbury American.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

"That Elder Brother."

The following timely words I clip from the Gospel Worker, published at Rossville, Ga. The editor I have never met; but Brother Flavil Hall has, and he takes him to be a man of sincerity, to say the least. If any one will turn to the fifteenth chapter of Luke and read it carefully, he will be convinced that the "elder brother" represents the Pharisees and scribes, against whom the three parables of that chapter were directed. Let me ask the reader to give this clipping a careful reading and to strive to be, indeed, one who loves to lead the lost to Christ, rather than an objector, as was the "elder brother."

We want to register our conviction that it is time to call a halt on the manner of presenting that wonderful parable of the prodigal son given by our Savior and recorded in the fifteenth chapter of Luke. We have heard it presented all our life by every young preacher we ever heard preach, we think, and by every evangelist of any note, and generally in the most dramatic and striking manner possible. Poor misguided boy, like our dear old grandparents, Adam and Eve, he has been dragged around and lambasted in a most merciless manner; and if anybody ever deserved a rest spell, he certainly does. Let me beg you, dear spell-binders, do let the boy rest a while, at least as long as the war lasts, and let us begin to devote our attention to one that has been sadly neglected and who very sorely needs attending to—the elder brother. Strange to say, speakers and writers generally do not seem to have discerned that he, after all, is the main character in the parable, our Savior using him to represent the scribes and Pharisees, who were almost the only opponents of his good works on earth, and who just here had been reproaching him for receiving publicans and sinners and eating with them-a charge he did not deny, but defended and explained in the parables of this wonderful chapter.

And just as it was then, so it is to-day; it is the proud, boastful, self-righteous elder brother (or sister) that is standing in the door of the kingdom, refusing to go in himself (or herself) and preventing those from entering who otherwise would. If people would know why the cause of Christ has well-nigh lost its influence over the mass of the people and why well-paid pastors are vainly pleading to almost empty benches in crowded communities to serve the Lord, they have not far to go for the answer. When those whose influence dominates and controls these worldly ambittons, and no longer say by their actions, "I am better than you and cannot afford to associate with you," and, like the father, run to meet the prodigal and give him (or her) a welcome home, and bestow upon him the best they have, while they rejoice and make merry because the lost is found and the dead is alive again, then will commence such a transformation throughout this land and country as it has not known for this many a day past; and the "glory of the Lord" will begin to cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Yes, friends, the trouble is with the older brother. If you do not believe it, you just get him right, and I will stand good that the younger brother will come home and stay, and give his elder brother broadeforth the man of his life trained to have the life trained to have t henceforth the race of his life trying to keep up with him in righteous living and noble endeavor.

"Noticing the Good."

In the same paper from which I get the clipping on "That Elder Brother" I find the following timely words (quoted from Onward) in behalf of our noticing the good in others instead of ever looking for and speaking of the bad:

"She is doing a splendid work for my boy," declared the pleasant-faced little woman. "He always detested mathematics before this term. Now the teacher has made it all so plain and interesting that he never says a word against his former pet aversion."

The friendly afternoon chat went on other things, and a few minutes later she was speaking of some one else.
"I am sure he is doing a wonderful amount of work for good," she said, with the little note of sincere earnestness that caught and held the attention. "I know of more than that caught and held the attention. one person who has been greatly helped by him; not only by the splendid, helpful sermons that he delivers, but by the real personal interest that he takes in them, and the way he enters into their lives and needs with counsel and good cheer.

"Isn't she just fine?" laughingly asked one of the group, after the pleasant-faced little woman had gone. ever notice how she always has a good word for the absent one, at the very first hint of criticism by any one else? She told me one time that she could find good in every one she met, and that she thought the good was so much pleasanter to hunt for and speak about than any faults they might have.'

The plan was one that we can none of us learn too soon to follow. Faults—of course we all have lots of them. But if we cultivate the habit of noticing only the good in each other, who can tell but that in the bright sunshine of approval and good will our virtues will flourish so vigorously that they will fairly smother and crowd out the most of the faults?

Commenting on the above, I would say that there is nothing that has a greater tendency to sweeten our disposition and make our face shine for the glory of God than to do as the "pleasant-faced little woman" had established the habit of doing. But there is too much "buzzard" in some people to do this; they live continually on what they think is the unsavory things in others, because it is their nature to crave these things.

It Couldn't Be Done-So He Did It.

Somebody said that it couldn't be done; But he, with a chuckle, replied That "maybe it couldn't," but he would be one Who wouldn't say so till he tried.

So he buckled right in, with a trace of a grin On his face. If he worried, he hid it. He started to sing as he tackled the thing.
That couldn't be done—and he did it.

Somebody scoffed: "O, you'll never do that; At least, no one ever has done it." But he took off his coat, and he took off his hat, And the first thing we knew he'd begun it.

With the lift of his chin and a bit of a grin, Without any doubting or quiddit, He started to sing as he tackled the thing That couldn't be done—and he did it.

There are thousands to tell you it cannot be done: There are thousands to prophesy failure; There are thousands to point out to you, one by one, The dangers that wait to assail you.

But just buckle in with a bit of a grin, Then take off your coat and go to it; Just start in to sing as you tackle the thing That "cannot be done"—and you'll do it. -Selected.

Faithful Sayings.

BY AX.

The gospel is to be sent to the unsaved through individual Christians or combinations of individual Christians. Many are perishing in their sins. Christians must hurry in their work. Soon the summer will end.

Scriptural things should be spoken of in scriptural language, and not in the language of Ashdod or sectarianism. Paul enjoined the disciples to speak the same things and to be joined together in the same mind.

"Small service is true service while it lasts:

Of friends, however humble, scorn not one;

The daisy, by the shadow that it casts.

Protects the lingering dewdrop from the sun."

God's cause is not extended by supernatural means, but by the labors and sacrifices of his people. Keep on reading the Bible in the home, keep up Bible schools, attend the Lord's house on the Lord's day, and observe the Lord's Supper.

Jonah tried to run away from the Almighty. After calamity overtook him, he repented. Many people in these times are either standing, walking, or running from the Almighty. Calamity will sooner or later overtake them unless they repent and turn to the Lord.

I believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God; I confess him before men; I repent of all my sins and break away from them; I have been baptized on the profession of my faith, and God's word assures me that my past sins are forgiven; I try to walk blameless in all the instruction of the Holy Spirit, given in the New Testament, and so my resurrection is assured by that of Christ; I hope for eternal life.

Gospel faith centers in Jesus Christ as the Son of God. At this time all matters of authority in religion emanates from Christ. No one can show his faith in Christ outside of submitting to his authority. God did not acknowledge his Son till he was baptized. Can any person now show from the Scriptures that he is a child of God outside of his obedience of faith his baptism by the authority of Christ?

The kingdom of God extends over all worlds. The kingdom of the heavens, used by Matthew, is supposed to be the same as the kingdom of God. When Christ was coming to this world, it was at hand: when Christ came, it was among the people; so Christ was the embodiment of the kingdom. When he went away, he planted his church, and for the time being it is the same as the kingdom. It is the body of Christ. When Christ shall have accomplished certain things, the church will cease to exist: but the kingdom will then be fully established or set up in its everlasting form. It is believed by many that the time for setting up the kingdom in its fullness. with Christ personally directing its affairs, is at hand. The fullness of the Gentiles has come, and the little stone of Daniel must soon crush and grind the kingdoms of this world and make them as "chaff of the threshingfloor." So may it be.

Holding Another Sector.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

Having completed my work at Olathe, Colo., I have taken up a new "sector" here, where I hope to be as successful as at Olathe. My address now is Box 177, Fort Collins, Colo. Let correspondents please notice.

I lacked three months of spending three years at Olathe, and a congregation of about one hundred members is the result of the effort there. I started with some six or seven members, and, counting some who moved into the community from other States, I left about one hundred, almost every one of whom is faithful to the Lord.

While beset with many difficulties, including a persecution never before encountered in my work, yet my work was pleasant because profitable to Christ. I believe no more loyal and faithful Christians exist than those at Olathe. With me, they have boldly waded through every manner of opposition, until they are tried and found pure gold before God. They deserve the highest credit for their courage: they have gone through their lions' den and have come out unharmed. I daily thank God for the church at Olathe.

My work in Colorado is to build new congregations and establish them upon the immovable rock of revealed truth; and when I have done what appears to be all that I could do in a community—after the congregation is fully set in order and grounded in the faith and service of the Lord Jesus Christ, able to take care of themselves and to strengthen and assist others—then I feel it my duty to leave them and begin another like effort in another community. This course I new follow exclusively.

I left Olathe with a well-taught congregation of zealous members, under the oversight of three efficient elders and the service of two excellent deacons. They are well able to take care of themselves, and they will. But a preacher will be appreciated by them and will be able to do much good there, if one can be had.

My work is that of a missionary, not that of a "pastor." I must, therefore, keep in new fields, as rapidly as I form and ground congregations. O that I might live long enough to plant a loyal congregation "in every city" in Colorado!

Fort Collins is a city of twelve thousand souls, and, so far as I can learn, only two here profess to belong to the only church revealed in the New Testament, and they are exceedingly weak in the faith. So you see what is before me and the Lord whom I serve in my weakness. I have settled here with the firm faith that he will enable me to rescue many and teach them how to serve him and reach his blessed abode. Bellvue is nine miles from here, and I shall also labor to better teach and discipline that little congregation while I labor to bring a new one into being here.

Since coming here, two weeks ago, I have had calls for meetings at Bennett, Colo., and at Recluse, Wyo., besides other work in surrounding communities here. The harvest truly is ripe in this locality, and I am eager to reap the golden grain.

Let my friends please take note of my new location; and if they desire *9 know more of the character of this new field before fellowshiping me here, I will gladly answer any questions propounded. As to the work I did at Olathe, if more about that is desired, a letter to any of the elders there will be answered gladly. Address a letter there to J. I. Foster; he is one of the Olathe elders and will answer any inquiry. I am trying to be faithful in what I regard to be pure New Testament mission work in Colorado. I am dependent upon the freewill contributions of the brethren "scattered abroad" to enable me to hold up this work; and I have faith in them, and am striving to so labor that they may have faith in me and the work in my hands. I enter my new field in good health and in splendid hope of success. But pray for me and for those whom I am seeking to rescue.

Please remember my new address-P. O. Box 177, Fort Collins, Colo.

What About Missions?

BY I. B. BRADLEY.

Shall we let our interests in the work being done by our missionaries die, or shall we keep it alive? This is a question that demands our attention right at this time. The reports coming from our workers all indicate that the zgal of some, the interest of some, is growing less and is likely to die-if, indeed, it is not already dead.

Brother McCaleb has fallen short very greatly of late in the receipts for his work, and he has had to draw on the fund he is trying to build up for his passage home on furlough next year. The support of Miss Lillie Cypert has been very meager-yes, insufficient-almost all the time since she has been in Japan. The contributions for Miss Sarah Andrews' work get pretty short at times, although I have never failed to send her the "aforepromised" amount each month she has been in Japan. Sherriff, in South Africa, needs help; and Jelley is asking for passage home again.

Lend me your ears, brethren and sisters, you who have sent these workers to these fields, and have had a part in their support. Is there not, deep down in your heart, the conviction that you owe them something, since they are there on a mission for all of us-for our Lord? Does not each one who helped to send them there owe them a part of their support? And when it is necessary to return for rest and recuperation, do not those who sent them owe it to them to bring them back? Put yourself in the missionary's place and ask yourself how you would feel about it. Then turn the question about and say: "What do I owe this worker? I have helped send him to the field, and have, perhaps, helped to support him. Now, shall I stop my support, or shall I continue; and ought I not help to bring him back to his home again, that he may rest and gain strength for another season of work?"

Lay this matter upon your conscience and pray over it; then get out your check book and send me a contribution for Miss Andrews, or send to some one else who cares for the support of your worker-the one you helped send and to whom you owe a part of the necessary support. Do not put it off until to-morrow; do it today-now. "The King's business requireth haste."

While we are helping "Uncle Sam" by investing in war stamps and Liberty bonds and contributing to other agencies of his appointment, let us not forget the church and our missionaries those on "the firing line." Let us "back them up" with our prayers and contributions. Let not their appeal go up into the ears of Jehovah unheeded. The need is urgent. The assistance should be cheerfully given. I am looking for your contribution. Shall I look in vain? I am looking especially after the support of Sister Sarah Andrews, but I will send your contribution to the worker you select. Let it come right along. "Now is the accepted time "-to-day.

I go to Florida the first of November, and I am busily engaged getting things shaped up to leave. I shall be here for Brother Elam's meeting, beginning the first Lord's day in October. We are ex-pecting a feast of good things then.— T. B. Thompson.

Fulton, September 16.-My meeting Fulton, September 16.—My meeting at Portageville, Mo., closed with five added to the one body and several restored, who promised to live better lives in the service of the Master. This was purely a mission meeting and was well attended. I made my home with the Mitchell family, and it is a splendid home for the prescher. is a splendid home for the preacher. The meeting excited much interest, and we were never able to seat the crowds after the first two services. Portageville is a town of from fifteen hundred to two thousand people. This is the greatest mission field I have ever seen, I think. We started to work a congregation of thirty mem-bers. They will meet in the city hall until they can make other arrange-ments. This is the only congregation in the county, so far as I have any knowledge. The people of New Mad-rid County are ready to receive the truth, and the preachers and churches should certainly see to it that missionaries are sent into this much-neglected field.-F. O. Howell.

Rich Pond, September 18.—We are having good attendance in our meeting here, which is now in its second week. The Lord has graciously blessed my humble efforts this summer. mer. During the past two months he has used me in holding six meetings and in baptizing sixty-seven persons. What a blessed privilege to be under the hand of our Lord, to be used by him every day, all for his glory! I spent the summer in Monroe County, Ky., and in Clay and Jackson counties, Tenn. This was the home of my boyhood days, and I saw many people that I learned to love long ago. in the meeting on Jennings Creek we had a most delightful visit by Brother T. J. Bonner. He was then in a meeting at Willette, Tenn., a place not more than six miles from Beech Grove, where our meeting was held. This was our first meeting, and I am glad to know such a humble, godly man as he seems to be from the day we spent together so pleasantly. He is held in high esteem by the people there, with whom he has labored before. May the Lord bless him. I am asking for the prayers of all the children in our Father's family, that I may be faithful and true to the end, and that I may not preach myself, but Christ Jesus our Lord, and myself a servant for his sake.—M. L. Moore.

Camp Taylor, Base Hospital, Medical Detachment, September 17.—Since I wrote last for these columns many changes have taken place. It has been reported that I had assisted in a meeting in Louisville since coming to this camp. I write to mention a few things of interest about the meeting mentioned. It began on August 26 and closed on September 10. The Park-The Parkland congregation held the meeting, having pitched a tent in a section of the city where the truth is not known. The people responded readily as to the hearing. Four were baptized, all of whom had been taught the truth by having attended services at the Parkland Church, This congregation is wide awake, and it is really a pleasure to work with them. Brother R. A. Zahn is laboring with them and is a great worker. He led the singing and did the baptizing. A number of preaching brethren visited the meeting and assisted no little. Because Brother Zahn has a name peculiar to the times, some brethren decided not to use him in some work previously engaged. This is a mistake. There happened to be "nothing in a name" this time, for he is as true an American and Christian, so far as I have been able to learn, as is in the land. It is to be hoped that when it is all over "over there" I can return to some of the places that expected me this year and continue in the work that I love above all else in the world. The prayers of Christians will be appreciated. I should not forget to say that my wife and one of my brothers were with me during the whole of the meeting and gave me much encouragement. Truly, one feels more like preaching with loved ones after long separation.-F. L. Paisley.

Cleveland, September 17 .-- I am in the mission meeting in the United Brethren meetinghouse, called "Fair-view," in Dark County, having begun here on last Lord's-day night. Up until to-day it has been raining, a constant, cold rain, which has worked mightily against the interest of our meeting; but this morning the rain seems to be over with and the sun is beginning to shine out through the rifted clouds, and we hope that our meeting will take on new life and that much and lasting good will crown our efforts here. Brother Washington Snyder, with whom I am lodging, lives seven miles from the place of meeting, and he and I travel to and from the meeting each evening-a distance of fourteen miles. Brother Snyder is a man of about my age, and he is full of faith and godly zeal for the cause of Christ. He has raised a large family of intelligent boys and girls (two of his boys are now in the army), all of whom are active members of the church of Christ. All such men with their families are the blessed of the Lord. Brother Snyder is an elder of the hurch of Christ, and one, too, of fine bility; and as he is a fine singer, he eads the song services in our meeting t Fairview. We ask the brethren and sisters in Christ everywhere to pray for the success of the Lord's cause at this place, and especially would we ask your prayers in behalf of our present effort. We need your prayers. I now call upon all brethren and friends who are receiving the Gospel Advocate in lieu of the Primitive Gospel Proclaimer to at once send two dollars to the Gospel Advocate office and have the Gospel Advocate continued to their address. Brethren, you cannot afford to do without the Gospel Advocate. It comes to you each week with its columns laden with the kind of spiritual food that is good for the spiritual man. Again I say, send in your subscription to the Gospel Advocate, and send it in at once. These are perilous times, and you need just such a live, religious journal, and one, too, that is fully awake to the great needs of the cause of the Master in these days of coldness and general indifference toward all that is good.—A. A. Bunner Muskogee, September 16 .- The meeting in this city continues with much interest in every way. We had a large crowd last night. The brethren tell me that we are having the best hearing in this meeting that ever attended any meeting in the city. I am doing my best in preaching the word of the Lord to them. To date we have had some seven or eight to come and identify themselves with the church as members of the one body, and two made the good confession last night. The meeting will continue all this month. I go next to Springdale, Ark., for my next meeting. Brethren, this is the very time every Christian should put on the whole armor of God and fight the good fight of faith to a finish. I am ready to do my part. If you need me, call me.—D. S. Ligon.

Among the Colored Folks

Alexander Campbell's Report.

On the third Lord's day in July I began my first protracted meeting at Henry, Tenn., under my tent. This meeting continued one week. people, both colored and white, gave us a fine hearing, but there were no additions to the church. Brethren J. O. Rushing and B. W. Rushing, elders of the church of Christ among the white people at Henry, said the meeting was a good one. They also did all they could to assist us in the meeting. The white Christians gave liberally to the work, and I heartily appreciate what they did. I have agreed to spend thirty days in a tent meeting at that place next year, the Lord willing.

I began a meeting at Ashley's Chapel, five miles above Beech Grove, Tenn., on the first Lord's day in August and continued it one week. Interest was good. Four were baptized and one was reclaimed.

I began a meeting at Flat Rock, near Middleton, Tenn., under my tent, on the second Lord's day in August and continued it one week. Interest was good and three were baptized.

I began a meeting at Scott's Chapel, ten miles out from Columbia, Tenn, on the third Lord's day in August and continued it one week. Interest was very good indeed. The meetinghouse at this place was not large enough to hold the people. The white and colored people both come in large numbers. In order that all of the white and colored people might hear me preach the gospel of Christ, Brother Lynn Cheek, one of the elders of the Antioch church of Christ (white), saw Brother C. B. Fox and got him to let our friends fix a nice place near his house under the shade trees to seat four or five hundred people. So I preached out there on Friday evening to a large crowd. The white people gave me a nice contribution and invited me to come again. Three were baptized.

I began a meeting near Petway, across the Cumberland River from Ashland City, Tenn., about twelve miles, on the fourth Lord's day in August. When I went there two years ago, there was not one colored Christian there. Brother O. E. Williams, a white brother, wrote to me and had me come there to preach to my people. I have baptized sixteen since my first visit there. This meeting continued one week with great interest, but there were no additions to the church. I am very thankful to Brother and Sister Williams and all of the white Christians for their help to get the gospel to the colored people.

I began at Mount Savannah, near Lasea, a white church of Christ, about eight miles from Columbia, and where some of the oldest colored people of that community tell me they heard Brother David Lipscomb preach forty years ago, on the first Lord's day in September and continued it one week. Seven were baptized and two were reclaimed. One of the persons baptized was ninety-five years old, and came from the Baptists.

I began a meeting at Viola, Tenn., on the second Lord's day in September and continued it one week. Interest was very good, but there were no additions.

I began another meeting at Scott's Chapel on the third Lord's day in September and continued it one week. Three were baptized, one of them seventy-two years old.

My next meeting will be at Caney Springs, in Marshall County, Tenn.

Preacher Wanted at Norfolk, Va.

BY A. M. SCOTT.

There are a few members of the church of Christ permanently located at Norfolk, Va. Not until about a year ago has there ever been any attempt made to maintain the worship in this city. Even now it is necessary to have the worship in a private home.

Norfolk has a permanent population of about one hundred thousand and a floating population of about seventy-five thousand. The government war activities of the Fifth Naval District center here. Thousands of industrial workers are brought from all over the country. Millions of dollars are being spent in this vicinity by the government. The Navy Yard, Army Base, and Naval Training Station are permanent government works. There will be always thousands of civilians employed in these places, besides the fifteen thousand sailors continually in training, even after the war is over. Ships come to this port from all quarters of the globe, making Norfolk constantly in touch with the whole world. Yet there has never been a church of Christ established in this field. Almost daily there are dozens of nationalities on the streets. Every other man one meets is in uniform. Thousands of our own boys are here in training for duty on land or on sea. Some of them come from Christian homes; all should have opportunity, like the eunuch, to be taught " of whom the prophet speaketh this." Scarely is there a city anywhere in the world with opportunities greater for doing good. They are too great to be neglected.

Is there not a preacher somewhere who will come to Norfolk to help the few that have already started the work? They will cooperate in every way and make any sacrifice possible. Wages are good, and any man, whether he has a trade or not, may find ready employment. A preacher could, if it were necessary, make himself partly self-sustaining. There is opportunity for personal work besides public preaching and teaching. With any one to whom this opportunity appeals correspondence is earnestly requested. A definite proposition with full details will be given.

Wonderful Egg Producer.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs. So if you wish to try this great profit maker, write to E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert, 9256 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1, prepaid. So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day, or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

Too Many Restorations.

BY F. P. FONNER.

In this article it is not intended to convey the idea that we are really having too many restorations, and especially so when there are so many backsliders in the world. But the real idea is that the number of restorations reported is out of proportion to the number of penitent believers baptized; and it could hardly be otherwise in some localities, since in some instances the backsliders outnumber the alien sinners two to one. Some of these backsliders have been restored over and over again, and these cases have been reported many times as restorations. Well, if they have been restored, why do they not remain in that condition? This they should do, since Jesus has said: "But he that endureth to the end shall be saved." (Matt. 10: 22.) Perhaps this principle of endurance has not been sufficiently emphasized by some religious teachers. This lack of practical teaching has made millions of backsliders; and, of course, when a meeting is held, the restorations outnumber the conversions sometimes two to one. When this is reported, it makes a greater show of success; but, somehow, it does not seem like real success. It is fleeting and transitory; but it serves to swell reports. But unless persons thus restored are really enlisted in the true cause of Christ and taught to worship God, there seems to be no hope for them. The command to 'worship God" is applicable to all such restored persons, since none but regular worshipers of God can possibly secure the great reward, because it is promised only to the faithful ones. But backsliders may be restored to the favor of God by confessing their sins and by asking forgiveness of God and the brethren; and they may do this without waiting for a new preacher or a protracted meeting. This they should do at once, and then the new preacher can do some good when he comes. Furthermore, when men and women of the world see a real reformation in these restored persons, then they, too, will obey God, and then some solid material will be added to the churches everywhere. The numher of restorations will no longer be out of proportion to the number of actual conversions; but the Lord will add to the church daily such as are being saved, as he did anciently. "And the Lord added to the church daily such as were being saved." (Acts 2: 47.) This was a result of faithfulness upon the part of the early Christians; and nothing short of faithfulness upon the part of evangelists, fulnops, deacons, and the entire church bisany given locality will ever again produce such results. Protracted meetings alone will never bring about a steady growth in numbers; an occasional visit by a strange preacher will never do it; but faithfulness upon the part of every Christian in connection with these helps and others of like character will do it, when we all get down to the Lord's work in real earnest. This would prevent much backsliding, and consequently there would not be so many restorations to report. This would be rather hard on some who delight in padded reports; but, since real success does not depend upon padded reports, it would be better for the entire church of God everywhere. While the number of restorations would decrease steadily all the time, the number of real, genuine conversions would increase just as steadily, because every member of the church would be a real mission worker every day in the year. Even personal contact would increase the confidence of the people in the religion of Christ. Public preaching would then result in many conversions, as it did in apostolic times; and may God speed the day. In these times of apostasy and sin, gospel success cannot be measured by padded reports; but in many cases it must be measured by the influence we exert over careless and indifferent church members. The success of the gospel minister does not depend so much upon himself as it does upon a faithful, earnest, and devoted membership. That kind of a membership will train and develop the right kind of preachers, and the right sort of preachers will train and develop the right kind of churches. Thus we may reduce backsliding to a minimum and, at the same time, bring about a change in the character of some reports. There will not be so many restorations reported as actual additions to the church, but the reports will more nearly reflect the real condition of things.

I have a Friend so precious, So very dear to me; He loves me with such tender love, He loves so faithfully; I could not live apart from him, I love to feel him nigh; And so we dwell together-My Lord and L.

He knows how much I love him, He knows I love him well; But with what love he loveth me My tongue can never tell; It is an everlasting love In ever rich supply; And so we love each other-My Lord and I.

Letters That Inspire Confidence.

I wish very much that every reader of this paper could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a booklet; but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like to have you realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, persistent headache, rheumatism, kidney, bladder, and liver diseases, uric-acid poisoning, and other curable conditions due to impure blood.

Before my own health was restored by Shivar Mineral Water and I pur-chased this spring, and before I received all these letters from sufferers, I did not take very much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt; but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced that the Shivar Spring is the greatest restorative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous spas of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the United States, and they almost invariably report either permanent restoration or beneficial results. That is why I make the offer contained in the following letter. Sign It now and mail it.

Shivar Spring, Box 21L, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if I report no benefit, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

The Master's Vineyard

Tennessee.

Decherd, September 18.—We closed the meeting at Huntland yesterday with nineteen baptized and two reclaimed. Representatives of six congregations got together and decided to locate a preacher in this country.— J. D. Northent.

Lawrenceburg, September 16.—I am just home from a nice meeting at Providence, in Giles County. Five were baptized. The brethren were good to the preacher. I am home for two tent meetings in this (Lawrence) county.—Thomas C. King.

Nashville, September 18.—The meeting at Pegram closed on Monday night, September 9, with two baptisms. I preached at night only, working during the day. I am wanted for another meeting there next year. I am now in a meeting at Kingston Springs, preaching only at night, going back and forth each day.—M. C. Cayce.

Nolensville, September 17 .- On the fourth Sunday in August I began an eight-days' meeting at Gordonsburg. It was a pleasure to have Brother H. Denson, of Winchester, with most of the time. The church at Gordonsburg has a very bright future, with very little opposition from the denominations. I promised to return the last of October for another meeting, if I should have the time. On the second Sunday in September I began at Ostella, near Lewisburg. The meeting continued over the third Sunday, with six baptisms.-J. Leonard Jack-

Beardstown, September 16.-Since my last writing I have held several meetings. The first was at Keltonsburg, in Dekalb County, from July 20 to August 2, two services a day, with three additions. This was my third three additions. This was my third annual meeting for these brethren. The saints there are accomplishing much. During the meeting the message came that our son, Dewey, had been operated on for an abscess around the kidney. Many thanks to the Lord and much praise to our family physician, Dr. Hartong, of Bridgeport, and Dr. Ed Newell, of Chattanooga, for his recovery. I shall never forget the sympathy of the brethren at Keltonsburg. They know how to "weep with them that weep" and "rejoice with them that do rejoice." My wife writes that Brother Charles Holder has baptized Dewey since he came from the hospital. From August 2 to August 10 was at Stewart's Schoolhouse, Warren County. This is a new place with a good band of workers, and they have bright prospects before them. There were three additions here. next meeting, from August 11 to August 23, was at Curlee's, in Cannon County, near my boyhood home. This was my third annual meeting for them. This is one of the oldest congregations in the country. Here is where my father and mother obeyed the gospel, and where, too, when a boy, I heard Brethren Elam, Sewell, Kidwill, Srygley, and others preach. The brethren there are a noble set and are doing good work. This meeting resulted in six additions. My next meeting, at Coble, in Hickman County, began en August 25 and continued till September 7, with seven additions. church there is composed of five people and a large membership. Brother John Lancaster, who carries the mail and preaches on Lord's days, lives there. He is doing much for the cause and was worth much to the meeting. This was my third meeting with these The meeting at Only, in brethren. Hickman County, continued from September 8 to September 13. Here we have a small band of about twenty members, with a good house and a great field of labor. I began at Beardstown, in Perry County, yesterday, with a fine crowd. We are expecting a great a fine crowd. We are expecting a great meeting. While at Coble I received word that Willis, our preacher boy, had been called to the army, at Camp Travis. Brethren, pray for us.-R. W. Jernigan.

Franklin, September 15 .- On Friday night, June 14, I began my eleventh successive annual meeting with the church in Esto, Fla. This meeting continued until the second Sunday night following. There were no additions, yet we have reason to believe that some good was accomplished. This is a small congregation, but some good brethren constitute the membership of this church. From this place I went to a mission field near Castleberry, Ala. Local conditions were such that I remained there only five days. I preached four sermons for the congregation at Lowery, beginning on June 30. I then went to a place near Geneva and preached twice in a Baptist meetinghouse. This is an inviting mission point, and I hope sometime to hold a meeting here with the hope of planting a congregation. On the night of July 4 I began a meeting with the church at Liberty, in Coffee County, and continued it eight days. This meeting resulted in two baptisms. then went to Bethel congregation, in Geneva County, and spent eight days. There were two restorations here. Brother H. T. Dowling, of Remerton, Ga., was with us during this meeting and preached two good sermons. My work in the South closed with a week's meeting with the Gum Head congregation, in Florida, just over the line from Geneva. Two young men were baptized during this meeting. On the second Sunday in August I began a meeting with the Five Points congregation, in Hickman County, Tenn., and continued it until the following Friday morning. This is a good congregation and will accomplish much good in the community. I have had charge of the Grassland high school, in Williamson County, during the past two years, and last year preached for the Fairview congregation, on the Hills-boro pike, monthly. There are a number of fine brethren working there, and it is a pleasure indeed to work with them. I have been worshiping with them. with the Franklin congregation for five or six weeks, and, in the absence of Brother Smith, have preached twice for the church here. Brother Smith is greatly loved by this congregation and has done a lot of good work he re. I am now leaving for Tuskegee, Are. la., where I am to work next year as principal of the city schools. There is no congregation in Tuskegee, and, so far as I know, not a member of the church of Christ, yet the worship on the Lord's day will begin at once. I expect to preach whenever and wherever I can.-Van A. Bradley.

Texas.

Ennis, September 16.—Yesterday was a fine day here, with four additions. The minister spoke on "The Two Laws of Pardon" and "After Baptism, What?" The sick were visited in the afternoon. We also had a farewell service for the young people leaving for college, and letters of commendation were presented to each one by the church.-Ben West, Wichita Falls, September 12.-Our meeting began on the night of August 31 and closed on September 9. Brother Claud McClung was with us nine days, and ten were baptized and five were restored. Brother McClung was with us last year in a meeting, and we have invited him to be with us again next year. Husband and I have Hved here twenty-eight years, and although we are in a droughty country and are poor in this world's goods, we have managed, by the help of our preaching brethren, to have a meeting every year since we have been here. The members of our congregation are at peace with each other. While we all do not see everything alike, we are willing to sacrifice our little differences for the sake of peace and har-mony. We meet in the Bowman Schoolhouse now, but are thinking of trying to build a house to worship in, for the gospel is what this people need. We have always tried to have the very best teachers. Brethren, pray for us, that we may never falter or grow weary in our work for our dear Re-deemer.—Mrs. R. A. Crowell.

The Mammon of Unrighteousness. BY A. W. YOUNG.

"Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." (Luke 16: 9.)

I am sure that "the mammon of unrighteousness" may be so used in the ordinary affairs of life that we may make friends. This is accomplished by our honesty, integrity, and ability in the handling of money. We may so use it as to make enemies of those with whom we have dealings. Christians should so use money as to make friends of their business associates, and even impress the fact of their Christianity upon such associates. But when the Master said that his disciples should so use the mammon of unrighteousness that they might make friends who could receive them "into the eternal tabernacles" when money failed, what did he mean? To my mind, he meant the very same thing that he did when he said: "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." (Matt. 6: 20.) I reach this conclusion because the divine power alone can receive us "into the eternal tabernacles." If this is the lesson, then it teaches us that we should use money to please God. Are we doing this when we get all that we can, keep all we get, and covet more? Have we used even a small part of our means for the honor and glory of God? It might be well for us to pray over this matter, get a little closer to God, and mend our ways.

"Home-Mending."

Perhaps there may be something worth working out in the "homemending" plan suggested by a Chicago minister, who finds that we have an abundance of homes, asylums, and societies devoted to the care of persons variously in need, "but we have no association whose duty it is to conserve the most sacred of all institutions-the family."

If a husband and wife, for instance, disagree and are in danger of separation, one of the "home-menders" may call, talk things over with an outsider's dispassion, and perhaps save the household from disruption.

In theory this is fine, but in practice it would require tactfulness that is rarely to be found. It would have to be clearly recognized, in the first place, that husband and wife reserve the right to fall out, if they see fit, as one of their most precious privileges. People marry "for weal or woe;" and if they want the woe, it is in the contract and is their right.

The outsider who interferes might as well realize this important fact at the start. He will have to realize it before the end. It would be better for him and all concerned that he should take some good sense in with him at the door than bring experience out with him through a window,

Of what great importance the loaf, which before 1200 was the name of bread, was a daily food can be inferred from its relation with the word "lord." For "lord" (A.S. hlaford-hlaf, bread, loaf; weard, a keeper) is probably a contraction of "hlaf-weard," literally "loaf-ward" and, therefore, originally signified the keeper or dispenser of bread; in short, the breadfather, to whom the members of the family had to apply for their daily bread.- Exchange.

Summa Cum Laude.

Naturalists tell us that mountain ranges record great convulsions in nature; so great characters are inseparable from great crises in the experiences of life. When we read in Gen. 22: 1, "And it came to pass after these things that God did prove Abraham," we come to the great crisis in his life, a shock that he withstood successfully and from which time he towers as a mountain peak of faithfulness to God.

The story of Abraham's giving Isaac unreservedly to God is the story of his supreme test. When diplomas are written in Latin, they often contain the phrase, summa cum lande, which means "with the highest praise and honor." The grand old patriarch up to this point in his life had stood many searching examinations, and, as a result, had grown better, wiser, and stronger, in service, in courtesy, in faith, and in all the virtues. But now he comes to take his final examination. When this is finished he is to receive a diploma that should be known and read of all men, because it was to be earned "with the highest praise and honor."

God's Purpose in Trials.

The American Revision shows a great improvement when it uses the word "prove" in the place of "tempt" as found in the Old Version. The latter word is commonly used in the sense of solicitation to evil. But God never tempts any one in this sense. He tests them to show what their character is, and to develop the good in them into something better and larger. It is Satan who tempts a person to do something wrong with the purpose of leading him to yield and to do wrong. In the New Testament, James (1: 13, 14) is very clear and explicit on this point: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, and he himself tempteth no man: but each man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own lust, and enticed."

In Abraham's trial we find, too, a very lofty illustration of another teaching along this line by the apostle Paul: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as man can bear: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it." (1 Cor. 10: 13.)

When Abraham was about to slay his son, God stayed his hand and said: "For now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, from me." In this verse God speaks after the manner of men. As a matter of fact, he knew before what Abraham was and what he was able to bear. The test was not for God's benefit, but for Abraham's benefit and for the benefit of succeeding ages.

If we are truly God's children, we should never look upon great trials as tokens of his displeasure. The greater the trial, the greater is the confidence of our God in us. F. B. Meyer said: "Some men pass through life without much trial, because their natures are light and trivial, and incapable of bearing much, or of profiting by the sever-discipline which, in the case of others, is all needed, and will yield a rich recompense after it has had its perfect work." It will greatly help us, then, when we are facing a great trial, to remember three things in relation to our Father's purpose: (1) It is God's vote of confidence in us; (2) we are able to bear it; (3) it is for our good. It is when we remember these things and profit by them that the trial of our faith becomes "more precious than gold."

Abraham's Response.

We have explained God's relation to this supreme test in Abraham's life. What was the patriarch's attitude? We could not find a better answer to this question than to read the text. It is a case where "actions speak louder than words." Strangely enough, the narrative records everything without the slightest hint of the feelings of Abraham and Isaac. Yet we know that every act in the series must have wrung the father's heart. It is likely that even an inspired writer felt himself at a loss to describe the feelings of a man who was called upon to give up the son in whom all the promises of God were to be fulfilled. But while his feelings are hidden from the narrative, his course from the beginning to the end of this excruciatingly painful ordeal is plainly revealed.

Once the command is given, we find that "Abraham rose early in the morning," and, having made the necessary preparation, "went unto the place of which God had told him." Thus he teaches us the importance of promptness in obedience to God and incidentally reminds us of the adage: "An unpleasant duty never becomes less unpleasant by putting it off." If Abraham could begin to perform with alacrity such a terrible task, why should any one hesitate and dillydally about doing things for God where no such ordeal is involved? I have known people to wait for years before making a public confession of their Savior, and every year they waited they knew it was the right thing to do. I have known them to quibble and quarrel over baptism and to finally submit to the Lord Jesus Christ in this matter when they felt that they had nearly reached the end of their earthly journey. The story of righteous Abraham puts to shame such a trifling disposition. How different is the spirit of the man who "took the wood of the burnt offering, and laid it upon Isaac his son; and he took in his hand the fire and the knife; and they went both of them together!"

"The Lord Will Provide."

While they were climbing the mountain side and as they drew near to the place of sacrifice, Isaac asked a question that has in it a tender and affectionate appeal. He said: "My father." Abraham replied: "Here am I, my son." Isaac continued: "Behold, the fire and the wood: but where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" The father's heart must have melted and failed had it not been for his faith that God was able to fulfill his word. Abraham's answer to this very natural question is terse and beautiful: "God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering, my son." His answer was complete enough for truthfulness and guarded enough for the occasion. It expressed the great faith of his heart and really went far beyond his knowledge. Moreover, it gives us a better understanding of the tribute to Abraham written hundreds of years later in the letter to the Hebrews: "By faith Abraham, being tried, offered up Isaac: yea, he that had gladly received the promises was offering up his only begotten son; even he to whom it was said, In Isaac shall thy seed be called: accounting that God is able to raise up, even from the dead." (Heb. 11: 17-19.)

This commentary reveals the fact that Abraham fully expected to make the sacrifice, and was ready to make it, with the belief and in the hope that God would raise his son to life again. Abraham's attitude was summed up by the Lord himself when he said: "Thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, from me." He gave to God the inheritor of the promises, the most precious of his possessions.

Abraham's Message to Us.

So much for God's purpose in this trial and for Abraham's attitude toward it. What should be our attitude toward the great trials which have come recently into our lives? What is Abraham's message to modern times? The first message is that which should teach us a higher conception of sacrifice. It is that obedience which consents to the death of the Isaac of our lives. First, there is the sacrifice of the Isaac of self. We have our darling sins; we have our Isaacs of lust and desire; we have our cherished plans full of ambition for the future; but to know the power and sweetness of friendship with God, there must be a sacrificial altar on which self and sin and lust and desire must die. We must be ready for that double crucifixion of which Paul writes, "through which the world hath been crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

Then there must be the sacrifice of service. As Christ pleased not himself, so must we consent to the fullest possible sacrifice of our own cherished plans for those which Christ has for us. Hannah dedicated Samuel to the Lord. He was not slain upon the altar, but his life was dedicated to divine service. In that sense the beloved John says that "we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." We must give God the best. We must always remember that "the love that lives is the love that gives."

Trust and Submission.

Again, Abraham's message is one of trust and submission. He gave to the place where the altar stood the name "Jehovah-jireh"—" the Lord will provide." The wonderful way in which God provided the sacrifice in the hour of his greatest extremity was the source of a proverb which would comfort God's people in all ages. The nearest equivalent in English is, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." When the difficulties and dangers seem insurmountable, God is at his best in showing how to deliver. If you are God's child, he will "never leave thee nor forsake thee." George Eliot said: "It makes the mind very free when we give up wishing and only think of bearing what is laid upon us and doing what he gives us to do." We can have this freedom if we will only remember that—

"In some way or other the Lord will provide.
It may not be my way,
It may not be thy way,
And yet in his own way
The Lord will provide."

Our Dearest Possessions.

Abraham's messages of faith and trust and submission were never needed more than they are needed now. This is true because we have never been asked before to give so many of our dearest possessions. The trials of life are so often a great mystery to the one who suffers the trials. We are often tempted to ask: "If God is so rich, why does he let us be so poor? If God is so good, why does he let us have so much pain and sorrow? If God is so strong, why should he permit our boys to be taken from us?" "He is only eighteen," said a father with a trembling voice as he pointed to a young man clad in khaki. "He's my only son. I never knew before the meaning of 'God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son;' but I know now." In a similar mood an American mother tells of her "crucible" in pathetic verse:

I kissed my boy good-by to-day
(God only gave me one)
And proudly watched him march away,
My life, my all, my own.
I stilled the throbbing of my heart,
And calmed my heaving breast,
And prayed for strength to do my part—
My country needs my best.

How Christ Was Typified.

Before closing the lesson we should not overlook the fact that we have in this narrative a beautiful type of our Savior. When we read that the wood for the burnt offering was laid upon Isaac, we are reminded of Jesus' carrying his cross up the hill of Calvary. When Isaac with plaintive voice asks his father, "Where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" it brings to mind that heart-rending scene in Gethsemane when the Savior said: "My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass away from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." But when we come to the climax of the story on Mount Moriah, where a voice from heaven speaks, "Abraham, Abraham, lay not thine hand upon the lad," the type is lost. There is no voice like that on Calvary. There is no heavenly edict which says, "Spare thy Son." He gave him up freely for us all, "the Innocent for the guilty, the Just for the unjust."

And all of this transpired that you might hear and accept his precious invitation.

> "Come to Calvary's holy mountain, Sinners ruined by the fall; Here a pure and healing fountain Flows to you, to me, to all, In a full, perpetual tide, Opened when our Savior died."

Voting On Candidates for Baptism.

BY F. W. SMITH.

It will be remembered that the writer called upon the editor of the Baptist Flag to produce Bible authority for the practice of requiring candidates for baptism to relate an experience of grace and having the church to vote as to whether or not the candidate should be baptized. Well, my friend has tried his hand twice in an effort to justify his practice, and, instead of getting better, he gets worse. Hear him:

I did not in said article give a scriptural instance directly, but will offer a few New Testament examples of an experience of grace before baptism.

"And they of the circumcision that believed were amazed, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Spirit. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid the water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Spirit as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. (Acts 10: 45-48.) Not only Peter, but those brethren who accompanied him from Joppa, heard these Cesareans magnify or laud the name of God, then Peter commanded them to be baptized. Did not these have an experience of grace, also the gift of tongues, before they were baptized? You know this is true, for they had both spirit and the joy of salvation before they were baptized. And their conversion was not an exceptional one.

The Philip and eunuch case that Luke gives is another good one. The eunuch believed before his baptism and repentance and faith being inner graces inwrought in them most certainly were such an experience, and such candidates are qualified and ready for the ordinance. Have all such not had an experience within, and, of course, felt in soul that they had repented and believed? You admit this, and still persist in saying that Baptists make an ironclad rule like it. The Book makes the law, and Bap-tists try to keep it. Strange that a man of your ability would try to charge the Baptists with a tradition when they read it right out of the Book, and at the same time claim to be keeping the word in all you say. Yes, Brother Smith, Baptists require an experience of grace from all they baptize, and then allow the membership to pass on one's fitness for baptism and fellowship in the body of Christ. But you won't allow Baptists to do the things you do, neither will you allow your own membership to say by voice of the body who shall take membership and be in fellowship with them.

Don't you know that you would not baptize a man unless he satisfies you that he is a fit subject for baptism? Yet you are not willing that your own members should say anything. Then where do you find the scripture that authorizes you to baptize any one? Was the ordinance of baptism left in the hands of the ministry or the church?

Saul of Tarsus' baptism was just like all the others. Paul had changed lords, also changed wills, and said: "Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." (Acts 26: 19.) "And when I could not see for the glory of that light," etc. (Acts 22: 11.) Saul could not see for the glory of that light, and was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. All this precedes his baptism. Did Paul have an experience of grace? Show why say more. If you have no such experience before your baptism, I am afraid you have no such now.

With reference to his first effort he now says: "I did not in said article give a scriptural instance directly." Why did you not, if you had at hand such an instance? Well, he has taken about three weeks to work on the case, and now says he "will offer a few New Testament examples of an experience of grace before baptism." Need I remind Brother Moore that he has not been called upon to do any such thing? Of course every candidate for baptism who is sincere has the experience arising from faith and repentance before baptism, but that is not the issue. It devolves upon my friend to show a New Testament example of a candidate for baptism being required by a church to say, "I believe that God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins," and then the church voting as to whether or not such a one should be baptized. I know it is imposing an impossible task on Brother Moore, but he invited it by precipitating this discussion. Now he is regarded a representative man among the Baptists, is editor of a religious journal, and we have the right to assume that the best has been done in defense of the doctrine under consideration.

One of his examples is the case of Cornelius and family (Acts 10: 45-48), but this most clearly disproves his contention. Let us examine the case. (1) The demonstration here was outward, miraculous, and physical, without one word from Cornelius or any member of his family in the way of an inward experience of grace that "God, for Christ's sake, had pardoned their sins." Brother Moore, in all of his life, never saw anything like that which transpired at the house of Cornelius. (2) There was no church there to sit in judgment on those to be baptized. There were six Jewish Christians who came with Peter from Joppa, and what they saw and heard was the physical power of God in miraculous form. (3) This miraculous demonstration was for the purpose of convincing the Jews that the Gentile world had a right to the gospel and the kingdom of God. It stood as a witness for them against the previous objections of the Jewish element. (See Acts 15: 8.) Nothing like this miraculous demonstration had occurred since the day of Pentecost. (Acts 2: 1-4.) (4) Instead of those six Jewish Christians being called upon to vote on the case, Peter boldly challenges the right of any man to forbid the baptism of Cornelius and family. Is that the way Brother Moore proceeds when one demands baptism at his hands? Does he challenge the church to interfere? Not much, but he demands of the candidate to say, "I believe that God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins," and then he says to the church: "Brethren, take the case and tell me whether or not I can baptize this candidate." Anything with even a shadow of resemblance to that at the house of Cornelius?

See how my friend wabbies on the case of Philip and the eunuch! (1) He knows there was no church down there in the wilderness to sit on the eunuch's case. In so far as the record goes, none were present save Philip and the eunuch, and certainly my friend will not claim that Philip was a church. (2) All he could get out of this case is: "The eunuch believed before his baptism, and repentance and faith being inner graces inwrought in them most certainly were such an experience, and such candidates are qualified and ready for the ordinance." Of course those who believe and repent have the inner experience that they have done those things, and of course all "such candidates are qualified and ready for the ordinance;" but Brother Moore and his church are not willing to let it go at that. In addition to the experience arising from the inner consciousness of believing and repenting, he and his church demand another and quite a different experience upon the part of the candidate-viz: "I feel that God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven my sins." This is the thing I am objecting to, and this is the thing for which I have demanded Bible authority, and this is the thing for which my friend can find no authority within the lids of the Bible. Quit it, Brother Moore, and be content to follow the inspired record. He says: "The Book makes the law, and Baptists try to keep it." Well, show us the law, "I believe that God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven my sins," which you place between the candidate and baptism, and I will keep it, too. But he continues: "Yes, Brother Smith, Baptists require an experience of grace from all they baptize, and then allow the membership to pass on one's fitness for baptism and fellowship in the body of Christ." I know you do these things, but I want your authority for doing them, but it is very evident you have none from God's word.

Brother Moore tries to make it appear that I am as guilty as the Baptists in this matter of experience. If he will content himself to simply let the candidate confess Jesus as Lord, and tell the church hands off, I have not a word to say; but when he puts the confession of faith on a par with "I believe that God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins," I protest with all my soul. No, I am not willing that any one shall say a word as to whether or not one who makes the good confession shall be baptized, for the simple reason that the word of God gives them no right to do so. He cites the case of Saul of Tarsus, but this utterly destroys my friend's doctrine. (1) No church was present to sit in judgment on Saul, and not one word about the preacher's demanding an "experience of grace" before he would baptize the candidate. (2) Saul had an experience, but it was entirely different from that required by the Baptists. He had been in deep penitence for three days and nights, so much so that he neither ate food nor drank water. Now, instead of feeling and believing that God had, for Christ's sake, pardoned his sins, he was in a greatly distressed state of mind. If Saul had the joy of salvation before he was baptized, why did he go on in this deep sorrow, refusing to eat or drink for three days and nights? If he "believed that God, for Christ's sake, had pardoned his sins," why did he make such haste to be baptized? He did not stop to eat or drink, although without food for three days and nights. I will tell my friend why. Listen: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22; 16.)

"Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver." BY LEE JACKSON.

Solomon says that "a word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." When John Huss, of Bohemia, was to be burned at the stake because of his efforts to give to the common people the word of God, his executioners were binding him with a rusty chain. Huss exclaimed: "My Lord Jesus Christ was bound with a harder chain than this for my sake! Why, then, should I be ashamed of this old rusty one?" While fire was being kindled in the fagots which were piled around him, Huss was called upon to renounce his teaching. "No," said he, "I never preached any doctrine of an evil tendency; and what I taught with my lips I now seal with my blood." Huss was one of the morning stars of Luther's Reformation.

Not long since my good wife told me that as I have grown in years I have formed the habit of talking too much. In pleading guilty to this charge, I told her that I was not in the boat by myself. It was down in Texas, so I am told, that a certain Methodist preacher had in his congregation a good sister who was charged with talking too much. The brethren told the preacher that this sister was a good woman in every other respect; but needed to be severely rebuked for her wrong use of the tongue. So they requested him to prepare a sermon on the subject and preach it for her especial benefit. A good sermon on the had effects of the wrong sort of talking was prepared, and on the day appointed it was preached with great fervor and force. After the sermon the sister for whose benefit it was preached came forward and congratulated the preacher, telling him that his sermon was just what she had been wanting to hear; "for," said she, "I know at least twenty men in this congregation who ought to be made ashamed of themselves for the way they talk. Their ungodly talking is having a ruinous effect upon the morals of our young people." Would it not be well to have these words of this talking woman printed in large letters of gold and put in a frame of garlanded silver, to be hung in full view of the auditors in every meetinghouse? For it is most certainly true that if we were called before the judgment bar of God, without the mediation of Christ, and held strictly to account for our misuse of words, we would all be condemned.

If nobody ever talked, we would never have had any apples of gold in pictures of silver—of that kind mentioned by Solomon.

On Thursday evening, September 3, 1908—just ten years ago-Dr. John Clifford, a Baptist preacher, of London, stood before a large audience in the city of Berlin and said: "The war of man upon man is totally alien to the spirit and genius of the religion of Christ. His teaching condemns it. His example is against it. His cross forbids it. Christianity is the religion of love and peace and brotherhood, of suffering for the sake of right and justice, and of conquest through meekness and patience and passive resistance." Within less than eight years after this was said, if Dr. Clifford had been in Berlin, he could have seen that for the most powerful nations of Europe his words were without meaning; yet in the light of scripture teaching these words are golden. On the same occasion, and in the same city of Berlin, a German preacher, of Hamburg, said: "Our Savior did not, while on earth, witness the actual birth of his church; but he ordained the hour and the manner of it when he said, 'Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church.' That church is made up of men and women who have accepted the power of Christ unto salvation, who have been baptized in the manner enjoined by the Bible, who worship God in spirit and in truth, and who are indissolubly united to one another by the fervent bond of love," At this present time, since the enforcement of the rule against talking too much, is it permissible to ask the question: Is it probable that such a church as here described by this German preacher ever had much weight among the ruling classes of Europe? Of religion, one of these European teachers says: "It pulls down and it builds up according to its content and spirit, its ideals and controlling personality. There is no escaping that fact. History is full of it. Corrupt, cripple, weaken, or poison the religion of the people, and you corrupt, cripple, weaken, destroy, or poison the nation. Give to a people a religion that is true in itself and which resists all compromise with error; that faces the realities of life and deals honestly and frankly with them; that gives light and peace to the conscience, strength to the will, and solace to the heart in its troubles; that insists on purity of soul and right conduct to others; that promotes justice and peace between man and man, and feeds brotherhood at home and abroad; and you supply that people with a vital and conquering force. They will endure and advance from strength to strength and from joy to joy. Now, Christianity has proven itself to be such a religion, and thorough-going fidelity to the teaching and spirit of its Founder will prove to be a sure guarantee of national stability, national happiness, and national progress." As coming to us from a continent across the sea, from a country, where the gloss of ecclesiasticism has overshadowed all simple, practical piety, these words are worthy of a serious study. I quote from these European preachers and teachers because there is such a very remarkable contrast between the sentiments expressed and the conditions now prevailing in Europe. These words of pious men are made to shine more brilliantly because of the dark background of carnage and death, of hatred and misery, which is now curbing the countries which have so long boasted of being under the influence of the gospel of Christ.

One day last spring I was in one of our own great American cities. I went into an auditorium to listen to some addresses that were being delivered by leading men from different parts of our country. One ordinary-looking man came upon the rostrum. They told me that he was from somewhere in Michigan. He was courageous in his manner, and in making his address he talked to this effect: "As I look out over this great city I see elegant and costly homes, homes that are blessed with every comfort and luxury. Across the way, and not so very far distant from these costly homes of the rich, I see hovels that are abodes of sin, squalor, and misery. I look upon your well-paved streets, and see your rest rooms, your theaters, your assembly halls, and other public places of recreation. I see your costly church edifices, with their comfortable pews; these churches in which you meet for worship, in which you sing your songs of praise and offer your petitions to God; these churches in which you listen to eloquent sermons and in which you are charmed with swelling strains of soul-stirring music. This that we have been taught to call our worship, as well as that which we do as service in the name of religion, has long received the sanction and the praises of men. But in view of the poverty and suffering so near our own doors, in view of the heart agonies, the misery, the carnage of death, and the bereavements that prevail in the world as the result of cruel wars which are fostered by our commercial greed, I am ready to ask: Is that which we call worship and service really a worship and service that is well-pleasing to God? In chasing the vain butterflies of pomp and show, have we not missed altogether the spirit of the religion of Christ?" Somebody whispered that the little man might be talking too much. Probably he was talking too much to please some people, but his speech sounded well to me. John Bunyan, the author of "Pilgrim's Progress," has now been dead about two hundred and thirty years. Bunyan was a great talker, and a bold talker. He was put in jail and kept there about twelve years for talking too much. While in prison he wrote "Pilgrim's Progress," and during its existence the book has never lost its popularity, nor failed in its mission of cheering the hearts of weary, careworn pilgrims. All of the martyrs of the middle centuries in Europe-those who boldly resisted the sinful assumptions of the Catholic Church-were great talkers, and often they talked indiscreetly; but we should remember that it is to these heroes of tongue and pen that we owe the light and liberties of our present day.

From the River's Edge.

The sightless rocks behind me, and before The dumb and busy river on its way To find the secret of the universe; And now and then a swift glance from the sun, That smiles like a pale woman who has lost Her lover, and knows not laughter any more.

The rock, the river, and the sun—these three. Strength, work, and, suddenly, the light of love in a cold place. We cannot be the rock, We may not ever learn the river's trade; But we can smile a little in our pain, To show men why they labor and are strong.

In sending in her contribution one good sister lays her broken heart upon the altar with her gift and asks for the prayers of God's people. The editor suggests that you write a letter of encouragement to Sister Mabel Cagle, 742 North Second Street, Paragould, Ark. She tells of her grief in the following extract:

Brother Lipscomb: I need your prayers, and my dear old mother and father also need them. We received a message Saturday that my dear brother in the flesh was killed in action in France—and the worst of it all, unprepared. Onmy God! Sometimes I feel like I can't stand it, but then I remember my Savior says he won't put more on us than we can bear. May God help us all to live better and come closer to him each day. I feel that I have not lived as humble as I should have, but from now on I intend to live closer to my Savior. My brother's name was Isaac Andrew Stover. He volunteered on April 13, 1917, and we had not seen him for about seven years before. He lived almost as long as our Savior, and if he had lived the life he lived, I would not grieve; but, poor boy, he failed to accept Christ as his Savior, and it is too late now. Brother Lipscomb, have the church to pray for us.

This letter suggests that there are some things we can give which money cannot buy. (Read 2 Cor. 1: 3, 4.)

We print herewith another letter of grateful appreciation from Mr. W. O. Gorski in behalf of the Polish sufferers:

New York City, 33 West Forty-second Street, September 27, 1918.—Mr. A. B. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Str: Acknowledging your check for $1,138.07, we are again in receipt of an evident proof of your kind interest in the cause of Poland. Your coöperation is appreciated by us most cordially and sincerely. The money which you have so generously sent to us and which has been collected through your efforts will be the means of saving many a life in that desolate country of Poland.

We beg of your readers to accept our most heartfelt thanks and the expressions of our deepest gratitude for all they have done for us. Most gratefully yours,

W. O. Gorski, Honorary Executive Secretary.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

"Tribute."

Not unto Cæsar pay we tribute now
With the base copper coin of earthly mint:
For the fine gold of souls shows God's imprint.
We bear his superscription on our brow
And in his image we were made: then how Should our return be measured? Without stint
Our service should be rendered, and no hint
Of bargaining with him deface our vow.

"Show me the tribute money." Lord, our souls
Are in thy hand to do with as thou wilt;
Take all we have, for thou hast given all.
And when at length the long account unrolls
When Thy Great Price shall have redeemed our guilt,
All we have given thee shall be too small.

Righteousness.

BY JAMES E. SCOBEY,

There may be many opinions and theories set forth by men in reference to who will be saved, or have eternal life. But those who are willing to receive the testimony of Jesus of Nazareth can be, and must be, assured of the fact that only one class is promised life eternal. In the last verse of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, Jesus says: "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." Since the righteous only are to be sayed, it will be well for us to understand in what righteousness consists. When we use the term "righteousness," it must be understood that we refer to that which is necessary to man's redemption from the condemnation for his past sins, and also from the consequences of sin in the eternity.

There are two kinds of righteousness being propagated and preached among men. (1) There is God's righteousness; (2) there is man's righteousness. In reference to God's righteousness, it may be truthfully said that it is perfect and complete; that it admits of no modification, substitution for, or change in, its conditions on the part of man. No principle may be eliminated, no condition modified, with safety. Man's righteousness embraces what men have thought to be essential; or absolutely necessary, to salvation. There are many varieties of man's righteousness, founded on the different thoughts and opinions of men. But to do right, what is right, at all times, under all conditions, presents the highest type of manhood; and the discharge of all obligations is the true measure of worth.

There may be said to be three theories of life, or three conditions inducing our actions. There is (1) the pleasurable theory, (2) the perfection theory, (3) the rectitude theory. Whether we are conscious of the fact or not, these three conditions are the mainsprings of our actions in this life. The pleasurable theory appeals to the senses—the eye, the ear, the sense of smell, the taste, and the touch; the animal appetites and propensities. The perfection theory appeals to the vanity of the mind and heart. The rectitude theory appeals to the whole man—his senses, sensibilities, and his will; indeed, to the entire man—soul, body, and spirit.

If our lives were entirely governed by the pleasurable theory of life, we would be little, if any, above the plane of brutes. We would be wholly selfish, striving only for our own comfort without thought for the welfare of others; caring little who sank, so we swam; who failed, so we succeeded; who died, so we lived. If moved to action by the perfection theory, we would simply manifest the characteristics of the Pharisees, the better-than-thou, self-righteous hypocrites. The rectitude theory calls into action all the best powers of the man—soul, body, and spirit. No one, however, of a sane mind is governed, or controlled, or acts entirely from the force of either the one or the other of these theories; but every one is predominated by one, being modified to a greater or less degree by the others.

He who would act in harmony with the rectitude theory must do that which is right: right toward himself; right toward his fellow man; and last, but not least, right toward God. This implies the discharge of all the responsibilities of life, and harmonizes with the teaching of the apostle Paul in his letter to Titus, where he said: "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world." To be able to see and understand what is right, religiously, and then resolve to do it, putting forth the effort to accomplish the purpose, would be the highest manifestation of Christianity. Such a character could truly be said to be righteous.

The rule of life with children, the ignorant, debased, and the savage, is the pleasurable. They are satisfied with what pleases the eye and ear, gratifies the taste and gives comfort to the body.

The perfectionist is controlled in his actions mainly by the desire to be thought by others to be righteous. He prays standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets to be seen of men. He would have the uppermost seats at the feasts and the chief seats in the synagogues, and to be called of men "rabbi"—master. These things would please his vanity. But Jesus said: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchers, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness."

To live in harmony with the rectitude theory—that is, to do right—should be the aim and effort of every one who would enjoy the blessings of God for time and eternity. But what is right? When one thinks God's thoughts, speaks in harmony with God's words, and engages in the works which God has ordained for him to do, then he will always do right. Religiously to antagonize God's thoughts, words, or work is absolutely wrong.

Two elements enter into every righteous act. (1) It must be materially right. (2) It must be formally right. If wanting in either the one or the other of these elements, the act could not be righteous. An act, to be materially right, must proceed from a proper motive, or design. To be formally right, it must be done in obedience to proper authority. If any one do a religious act for a different purpose than that for which it was intended, then the act is materially wrong and void. If one substitute a different act than that authorized, in this case the act would be formally wrong, and therefore void. It is right to pray; but to pray simply to be heard or seen of men would fail to be materially right. If one be baptized for a purpose other than that intended by its Author, then the baptism would be materially wrong. If one have water sprinkled or poured upon him and call it "baptism," when, indeed, it may not be, then the act is formally wrong and void. What, then, must be said of a baptism which is neither materially nor formally right?

The rectitude theory is based neither upon the wisdom nor the works of man. Paul, in Eph. 2: 8, 9, says: "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." The wisdom of man, so far as the rectitude theory of life is concerned, is foolishness with God. No one need now be deceived. Jesus is the way, the truth, and the life. He is Prophet, Priest, and King; the mediator between God and man. He who follows him will walk in the light, and he who obeys his gospel will be saved; for he has become the author of eternal salvation to all who obey him.

Africa As a Mission Field.

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

Once again I come before the brotherhood with the needs of the African field; and that I may perhaps impress all with the necessity for haste, I copy part of the "Findings of the Conference on Missionary Work in Africa." This will show that the sectarian world realizes the possibilities of this virgin soil and is making plans for its cultivation.

THE MOMENT OF OPPORTUNITY.

t. This conference would impress upon the Christian world, and especially upon the Protestant churches of America, the remarkable significance of the present moment in the history of African missions and the responsibility resting upon the Christian church to provide now the resources of men and money, the strategy in the dis-posal of the Christian forces, and the outpouring of prayer that shall make it possible to use to the full the God-given opportunity to take Africa now for Christ; and the conference points to the following facts as indicating the critical importance of immediate action:

(a) The far-reaching psychological and spiritual effects of the war, which is changing profoundly the mental horizon of every race and tribe in the African continent.

(b) The political readjustments that must follow the war, which will affect the destinies of Africa's peoples more profoundly than any political event since the Berlin conference of 1884.

(c) The Mohammedan menace, which threatens to become more serious as a religious propaganda as Mohammedan political power wanes.

(d) The sudden impinging upon the native in many parts of the continent of a European civilization, before whose moral temptations and economic pressure he must go down to racial ruin, unless that civilization be interpreted to him in terms of its highest sanctions, which are found only in the religion of Jesus Christ.

MOHAMMEDANISM.

1. That the permanent committee of this conference be requested to present to the next annual meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America the urgency for arousing the churches of North America to the Mohammedan peril in Africa and to the unique opportunity which exists at this time for dealing with the prob-

2. That this conference record its profound conviction that the evangelization of Africa calls for the quadrupling within the next five years of the missionary forces in Africa, so distributed as to occupy the strategic lines of trade, the chief centers of Mohammedan influence and propagandism, and the unoccupied areas generally.

Our mission is at Bulawayo, which is the capital of Rhodesia, a town of five thousand one hundred and ninetynine; the most important commercial center of the province, and from which five railway lines radiate. Truly a strategic point. Who will undertake to go there?

A Missionary to South Africa.

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

Twenty-two years ago Brother John Sherriff arrived at Capetown, South Africa, from New Zealand; the following year he moved to Bulawayo and started a work for the Lord that has resulted in the establishment of a congregation in Bulawayo and the starting of an industrial mission on a 424-acre farm five miles from town. Brother Sherriff has spent the best years of his life in pulling this little nucleus to the top of the hill, and now feels the need of a younger man to assist him. Where shall he look for this much-needed help, if not to America with its nine thousand churches and their thousands of well-equipped young men? The path through the forest has been blazed and the clearing made by this pioneer who is now beginning to feel the handicap of his fifty-four years. It now remains to find some one more youthful who is willing to assume the task of planting and watering the seed in this fertile soil. There are already several isolated points that are dependent upon this mission for oversight and support. From the standpoint of prospect, no field offers greater inducement to the ambitious young man who has the desire for foreign service. The fatherly advice and greater experience of the older man will provide the necessary balance, while the greater educational advantages and enthusiasm of youth are needed to give impetus to the work.

Young man, some one must be found to take charge of this work or it will retrogress and all the years of unselfish labor perhaps be lost. Can I interest you? Write Brother Sherriff at Forest Vale Mission, Rhodesia, Africa, or the writer at Lometa, Texas.

Missionary Report.

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

The following is from a native to Brother Sherriff. I give it as it was received by me without making any corrections as to spelling, etc.:

Dear Sir: I received your letter and glad to know that you are back, and all well health and strength. I did receive Mr. H. letter and I take it to Native Commissioner office and he asked me are you sented here to teach, no I said to him, and then he says no I dont want you to have a church for yourself, so we are doing nothing, the people here are only crying for you not N.C. but you. The Christian here are 21 and the 7 confest, 47 scholars. So you see all these people are all anxious to learn, they want sent me there again to speak to you face to face so please let me know what to do.

So dear Sir come and arrange the place for us. We are all well sir wishing to hear the same from you.

J. MZILA.

The government will not allow native teachers and preachers to work alone. They must be supported and superintended by white missionaries. This shows the necessity of supporting white brethren to oversee the work and travel about attending to erection of suitable buildings, etc. We do not have a white missionary in this country that is devoting all his time to the work. Brother Sherriff is compelled to work at his trade while he does what he can for the Lord and these poor earnest fellows. Why cannot we find and send a man to enter this open field before it is almost monopolized by the sectarian world?

I have received and forwarded to Brother Sherriff, from August 1 to September 16, contributions as follows: Lometa Bible school, $5; by Christian Leader, $12; Beauchamp, $5; E. Gaston Collins, $1.25; Miss Luia Gammill, $1; C. W. Sewell, $2; William T. Fierbaugh, $2; Miss Mae Haggerty, $1; Lometa Bible school, $5; Beauchamp, $10. Total, $44.25. Brother Sherriff and 1 can only thank. God will reward.

God Is Not Far.

God is not far from any one of us: The wild flower by the wayside speaks his love; Each blithsome bird bears tidings from above; Sunshine and shower his tender mercies prove, And men know not his voice!

God is not far from any one of us: He speaks to us in every glad sunrise; His glory floods us from the noonday skies; The stars declare his love when daylight dies. And men know not his voice!

God is not far from any one of us: He watches o'er his children day and night; On every darkened soul he sheds his light; Each burdened heart he cheers, and lends his might To all who know his voice

AT HOME AND ABROAD

W

John T. Smith, of Sparta, Tenn., preached at Dickson, Tenn., Sunday.

Brother Elam is in a good meeting with the Worthington congregation, near Louisville, Ky.

William P. Walker has moved from Burns, Tenn., and is now a student in David Lipscomb College.

F. W. Smith reports a very good meeting at Martin, Tenn. Twelve were added to the congregation.

J. W. Brents writes: "I have held five meetings this summer, with about sixty additions from all sources."

W. R. Hassell, of Trenton, Tenn., will begin a meeting with the church at Edenwold, Tenn., next Sunday. This church is easily reached by the Gallatin interurban.

From I. L. Boles, Atmore, Ala., September 25: "Samuel Jordan, of Highland Home, Ala., will begin a meeting with us here next Lord's day. We hope to plant the cause here firmly."

From J. Paul Kimbrell, Whitewright, Texas, September 25: "On the first Lord's day in October I am to begin work with the church at Whitewright. Correspondents will please take notice of the change of address."

From M. C. Bucy, Murray, Ky., September 26: "E. A. Elam is booked to begin a meeting here on the first Lord's day in October. We are expecting a good meeting, The song service will be conducted by T. B. Thompson."

From John H. Hines, Parkertown, Tenn., September 25: "I closed a good meeting at Joiner Chapel last Friday. Four were baptized and thirteen were restored. I am at Parkertown in a tent meeting, with a good hearing and fine interest."

"Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Edmondson, announce the marriage of their daughter, Bess Bethel, to Mr. T. B. Clark, on Tuesday evening, September ten, pineteen hundred and eighteen, Pearl, Texas." The Gospel Advocate extends heartiest congratulations.

From G. S. Marsh, Pikeville, Tenn., September 24: "I closed an eight-days' meeting at High Point, with two added to the one body. This is in a Baptist community where I set up a church of thirteen members to keep house for the Lord in the spring."

From H. M. Phillips, Oneco, Fla., September 24: "I have just closed a good meeting here, with four baptisms and one by membership. This is a fine country and excellent people. Our crowds were large and attentive. Some came out that had not done so before."

From J. B. Nelson, Shady Point, Okla., September 28: "I am in a meeting at this place. Last Sunday night I closed at Frederick, with three baptisms, one to take fellowship, and one restored. Two from the 'digressives' were restored to the true faith. I go next to Gould."

We sincerely hope that the churches will not overlook the offering for the Tennessee Orphans' Home next Sunday. The Home is now filled with children who are dependent to a large extent upon the generosity of Christians for their support. Send your gift to the Tennessee Orphans' Home, Columbia, Tenn. It will be promptly and thankfully acknowledged.

A. W. Young, Box 464, Fort Worth, Texas, writes: "We had a fine day at the South Side-Central church of Christ on September 22. Eight additions to the congregation, splendid audiences, good singing, good regular contribution, and fifty dollars for Camp Bowie and ten dollars for charity in addition. The Camp Bowie work will go on without interruption under the direction of the congregations of this city."

From A. O. Colley, Dallas, Texas, September 25: "We had a very enjoyable day at Pearl and Bryan Streets church of Christ, this city, last Sunday. Our attendance was all that we could accommodate in our house. We are at peace among ourselves, but are trying to fight sin. We have had a goodly number to come into our fellowship during this month, seven at one service. We are planning to do more mission work and work in all parts of the Lord's vineyard."

We join in with H. R. Moore in expressing gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the consecrated, Christian life of our cousin, Mrs. Sallie Woods Smith, who died at her home at Bean's Creek, Tenn., on August 26. You will find a fitting tribute to her work on page 956 of this issue. Only the God of all comfort can fill the aching void left in the family and in the community occasioned by a loss of this kind. He can fill every gap in our lives and make the graves of our loved ones blossom with the flowers of eternal peace.

From W. E. Daugherty, Rockwood, Tenn., September 26: "I closed a three-weeks' meeting at Crab Orchard last Sunday night. Eight were added—five by baptism, one from the Baptists, one from the Methodists, and one from the Nazarenes. Nearly three hundred dollars was piedged for monthly preaching. The 'Holy Rollers' used the question box freely when it was first put up, but they soon decided that I was a good fellow to let alone. The 'Rollers' have done much harm in Crab Orchard, as they do everywhere they go."

From E. M. Borden, Little Rock, Ark., September 25: "The meeting at Sidonia, near Sharon, Tenn., resulted in nine additions. Eight were baptized during the meeting and one was left to be baptized by Brother Long the Sunday following. I have just closed a meeting at Christian Chapel, near Wildersville, Tenn. Five were baptized and one brother was restored. My next meeting is at Atkins, Ark., and then to Romance, Ark. I have promised to hold a meeting at Charlotte, Tenn., beginning on the fourth Sunday in October."

From Will W. Slater, Carden Bottom, Ark., September 24: "I closed a week's meeting last Sunday night on Culpepper Mountain, near Formosa. We had large attendance and good interest manifested, but no visible results. The brethren supported me well for the meeting. John Bowling led the singing. I am now in a meeting at Stubbs Chapel, in Carden Bottom, with good attendance, and we hope to do much good. This closes my work for the summer. I go home from here. I have had calls for other work, but I have turned it over to other preachers."

From Mrs. J. W. White, Glendale, Tenn., Route 1, September 27; "Our meeting at Philadelphia Church began on the third Sunday in September and closed on Friday night following. Five souls were added to the one body—three by primary obedience and two reclaimed. The church was greatly strengthened, and I am confident that the seed sown in this meeting will bring forth fruit to the glory of God. J. M. Gainer, of Scottsboro, Ala., did the preaching, and it was well done. W. C. Cook conducted the singing and assisted otherwise in the meeting. Brother Gainer and Brother Cook both are fearless proclaimers of the gospel, shunning not to declare the whole counsel of God in its simplicity and fruth. The Lord willing, we are to have them with us in our meeting next year."

From L. K. Harding, Henning, Tenn., September 28: "I closed a meeting at Obion on Thursday night. Audiences were fine, even when raining. On one occasion a week-day audience filled the house. There were fifteen additions during the twelve-days' meeting. Eleven were baptized. F. O. Howell, who gives one-half of his time to the Obion church, rendered valuable assistance. I cannot say too much in praise of his hearty support. The church as a whole appeared enthusiastic and at work to accomplish great things for God and the upbuilding of his kingdom. If you visit Obion, you will want to go back and do it again. The Obion people will tell you that they live on Tennessee's fairest garden spot. Do not contradict till you have a look. You may decide they are in very close-proximity to the truth."

A. S. Landis writes: "H. E. Winkler began a meeting for the Allen's Chapel church of Christ, Needmore, Cumberland City, Tenn., Route 3, on September 8, and closed 10 on September 19, with three additions. Brother Winkler is a very forceful and instructive preacher. He compromises on no ground but the truth. He also rides no hobbies. There was one thing lacking in our meeting that we all regretted very much; that was our old brother, W. M. Oakley, to lead the singing. We wished for him so many times, but he was busy in the Master's cause. It seems to me that if there ever was a time when the church should be up and doing, it is now. 'The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few.' Things are so high every individual should make every necessary sacrifice to keep the work going on and pay the preachers a little more. They have to wear clothes and eat, as well as the farmer. banker, or merchant. If one should come to you to hold a meeting dressed as a tramp, I dare say you would not let him preach. Why? 'O. we were simply ashamed of his clothes!' But would you stop to think why he came to you dressed that way? We are to give 'as the Lord hath prospered' us. But how few they are that do that! Let us work together and make the church seem what it really is—the greatest institution on earth."

Brother McQuiddy: Please tell me why Christ was twelve years old in A.D. 8. A. I. CHANCELLOR.

Brother McQuiddy: Can a man scripturally be an elder when he refuses to take any part because the church complains of him?

WILLIAM CARPENTER.

Certainly not. A scriptural elder must be apt to teach, must feed the church of God, and must be able to exhort and convince the gainsayers. While there are other qualifications necessary for an elder, yet if he lacks these he cannot be a scriptural elder.

Brother McQuiddy: If a brother in the church finds that he is in sin or committed sin, what steps are necessary to be taken that he may be saved if he repents? INQUIRER.

When a man repents, he turns away from sin. This puts him in position where God saves him, and it is not necessary for him to do anything else. When Simon, the sorcerer, had sinned, the Holy Spirit commanded him to "repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray the Lord, if perhaps the thought of thy heart shall be forgiven thee." The Holy Spirit, through John, declares: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (1 John 1: 9.)

Brother McQuiddy: Give the meaning or application of the word "twain" in Eph. 2: 15. E. B. Curb.

Eph. 2: 15 reads: "Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; that he might create in himself of the two one new man, so making peace." Christ on the cross broke down the middle wall of partition between the Jew and the Gentile. Of the twain he made one new man, or church. Christ nailed the law to the cross. (Col. 2: 14.) Hence the law, which was the wall between Jew and Gentile, was taken away. This difference between the Jew and Gentile being destroyed, both are made in the church one new race, "a royal priesthood," "a holy nation," "a peculiar people," at peace among themselves.

Brother McQuiddy: We had a negro woman to come to preaching one Sunday. After preaching was over, she came with her little cup and wanted to partake of the emblems. One of the brethren waited on her. Now, did we do right or wrong? There is no church for negroes with which she can meet.

The gospel contains a blessing for all alike. When all authority had been given unto Christ, he said to his apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Christ died for all and offers salvation to every creature. It was hard for the Jews, on account of their prejudice, to realize that the gospel contained a blessing for "every nation under heaven." It took the vision on the housetop to convince Peter that he should not call any man common or unclean. After this vision, "Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him." (Acts 10: 34, 35.) When the church was founded on the day of Pentecost, "there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men; from every nation under heaven." Paul declares: "Through whom we received grace and apostleship, unto obedience of faith among all the nations, for his name's sake." (Rom. 1: 5.) the Spirit declares: "And he made no distinction between us and them, cleansing their hearts by faith." (Acts 15: 9.) In Christ all enjoy the same rights, blessings, and privileges. "There can be neither Jew nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, there can be no male and female; for ye all are one man in Christ Jesus." All should be living the Christ life and contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. All enjoy salvation from sin and the hope of everlasting life. The word of God teaches Christians to deny no creature the right of enjoying the Lord's worship simply on account of color. We have servants in our home and permit them to eat at our tables after we have eaten. Why can't we allow them to do the same in the Lord's house? We should not permit our prejudice to shut us out of heaven.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain Rev. 20: 5, which reads: "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." Explain to me Satan bound for a thousand years; the first resurrection; the last. Mrs. R. A. Hogan.

Rev. 20: 4, 5 reads: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that had been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God, and such as worshiped not the beast, neither his image, and received not the mark upon their forehead and upon their hand; and they lived, and reigned with Christ a thousand years. The rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years should be finished. This is the first resurrection." It should be noted that John saw the souls and not the bodies of the martyrs. These martyrs had been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus Christ. It does not intimate, and there is no warrant for such a view, that the bodies of these martyrs were resurrected. John saw that those who sat on thrones reigned with Christ a thousand years; but how did these reign? Just as Christ reigns over each saint now. All those who hear and obey the gospel are ruled by the Lord Jesus Christ. The souls of them that had been beheaded are those who lived and reigned with Christ for a thousand years. Clearly this is not a literal resurrection from the grave. Not one word, I emphasize, is said about the resurrection of the bodies of the martyrs. While they had been put to death in the body, there is no intimation in the Scriptures that their souls had ever ceased to exist. They were alive with Christ, but now they live in some different sense from that existence in which they had been. It cannot mean that their souls came to life, for they never ceased to exist. The thought is this: that as Christ reigns upon the earth during the millennial period by his truth, so the spirit of the martyrs is revived and lives in the church. It was predicted by the prophets that Elijah must come again before the Messiah. He did come in the spirit and power of John the Baptist. the stern, fearless reformer of the wilderness of Jordan. "The rest of the dead lived not" applies to other men, wicked and less noble, who sleep on in silence, unseen and unknown, without influence upon the earth, until the millennial period is ended. These have no part in the first resurrection, the resurrection of the spirits of the martyrs during the thousand years of the millennial age. Satan would be bound, bound by the influence and power of the truth. After this thousand years Satan is to be loosed for a period-that is, Satan shall in part regain his influence over the race. It is good to know that the triumph is to be

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 27.

Don't Let the Little Every-Day Wrongdoings Go Uncorrected— The Careful Mother Will Constantly Ponder the Effects of Her Child's Actions Upon Himself and Others

It was suggested to a charming mother that the companionship of other children would help to prevent selfishness in her only son. "O," she said, "I won't allow him to become selfish; that I will prevent above everything else!" A few days later this boy was asked to give up the front seat in the automobile to a little cousin who was visiting him. With a look of sullen determination, he refused. Tears filled the eyes of the other little fellow, who stood waiting in the road; but when the mother started the car, as if to leave him, he jumped in, glad to take the back seat rather than have no ride at all. This was good training for him; but what of the first boy, sitting in selfish enjoyment of the prized place? His mother's naturally kind heart caused her to question what she had done.

"I must see that he takes the back seat sometimes," she said, under her breath, with a serious look. But the time to give him power over himself was then. She had let the opportunity pass, and with each postponement the struggle for unselfish surrender would become more diffi-

"I want my child to love me," protested a father, refusing to check wrongdoing in his son. And later, when the test of love came, the child failed because of a weak, selfish will.

A mother, feeling the necessity of teaching her child to take care of his toys, was very severe when she found that a playmate had broken some of them. "You should not have allowed him to play with your toys!" she said reprovingly, not realizing that she was missing a splendid opportunity to encourage the love that forgives freely, and could have emphasized care of toys at some other time.

Could such an attitude be adhered to without marring a child's character? If it had been the other child's mother who had acted in such a manner, would she not have been considered unkind? And if a great many mothers were like that, would it be well for the social whole?

These and many other questions a mother must ponder. Some things children do she must forbid altogether as unproductive of good; other activities she will permit because of their value as steps in growth, even though they annoy her. Yet she should not permit them simply because the child likes to do them. "Because little boys like to act like monkeys is no reason that they should act like monkeys. Monkeys are only beasts; they are boys," remarked Kingsley.

The wise mother carefully eliminates the coarse and debasing in pictures, choosing to set before her child ideals commensurate with the serious matter of living. An unwise mother gave her children a book illustrated with grotesque caricatures of a little colored boy. She also told them the story, which was offensive to good taste.

"They like it," was her comment. "I wouldn't be without it for anything! Whenever they misbehave, I can always control them with this book."

"I control my children with pictures of chivalry," said another mother. "They like them better than anything else; and no matter how restless they may be, they soon become manageable, 'trying to be knights.'

It has been pointed out by Froebel in his "Mother Play Book" that children grow along lines that are made attractive to them. The first mother was encouraging buffoonery and ridicule; the second, self-control and thoughtfulness for others. The first had failed to rise, as did the second, to spiritual motherhood; for the device of the moment satisfied her, simply because it was an easy form of entertainment. "What we imitate we learn to like," is an axiom in the kindergarten. This is why Froebel's suggestion of mother plays is so valuable and why kindergartners study so seriously the play of children, and also why playground leaders are being introduced into our best schools.

Common Sense and Business in Methods of Mission Work. No. 2.

BY M. C. K.

The article on this subject in our issue of September 19. 1918, closed with the promise to attempt in another to indicate the "golden mean" by which hurtful extremes in methods of missionary work can be avoided on all sides. To this task attention is now invited.

First of all, let the fact be distinctly understood and carefully remembered that no method at all is prescribed in the New Testament. Of course, if God had prescribed some particular method and placed it on record in that volume, the only proper course left us would be to accept and adopt that method without controversy; but on this point, precisely as on the manner or method by which the different acts of divine worship shall be performed, no particular manner or method is given by Inspiration. Hence, since nothing which God commands can be done without being done in some way or by some method, it follows, of course, that, in all cases of divine commands, where God has given no method of doing them, we must follow some method devised by human judgment. But for our guidance in all such cases we have the general divine injunction, "Let all things be done decently and in order" (1 Cor. 14: 40), and both in the conduct of worship and in the conduct of mission work this general injunction applies, and should be respected in both.

Now, we maintain that, whether the effort be made in the home field or in foreign lands, the loose and slipshod way of mission work, pointed out in our other article, does things neither "decently" nor "in order." When one or two or any other number of missionaries go to the foreign field, not only with no understanding on the part of any one of them with any church or churches about what his support shall be, or from what church or churches it shall come, but with a sort of general idea and expectation on the part of each one of them that contributions will come, in a general way, from the churches, what have we but confusion? And we are distinctly informed (1 Cor. 14: 33) that "God is not a God of confusion," and we may rest assured that he is not the author of any such a slipshod plan of work and the confusion which necessarily attends it.

But what particular plan may we adopt? That point, in and of itself considered, is wholly immaterial so long as some plan is adopted that will do the work "decently and in order," and at the same time not interfere with or contravene the divine order. We have often told the society brethren that, with these two points properly guarded, we are quite as ready to adopt a plan of their devising as to adopt one of our own. When they inaugurated the "living link" plan under which a church is in direct communicacation with those whom it supports in the work-that is, where a church has its own missionary or missionariesthey not only fell upon a plan which does the work "decently and in order," but a plan that in no way contravenes or interferes with the divine order. Why not all the churches follow some such plan? Let us note still further how they could, in this way, work efficiently and successfully without the ponderous and intricate machinery of the modern missionary society with its central board of supervision and control in direct contravention of God's order. To begin with, in all cases where a single church is financially able to sustain a missionary, it should do so. Some are able to sustain two or more missionaries; but where a church is not thus able, two or three of them could arrange to send to the support of the same man. See in Phil. 4: 15 where Paul distinctly provides for this: "No church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only "-thus showing that of er churches could and should have been in communica on with him, as was the Philippian church. In case of extreme poverty, which sometimes prevails among he churches, not only two or three, but any other neces ary number of them could arrange to thus act together. is where comes in the apostolic use of church "me engers." By means of messengers from one church to another, any necessary number of them could arrange to send to the support of the same missionary. They could thus come to an understanding about whom they are to support, each church assuming a definite obligation in the matter and each sending directly to the missionary in the field, as the Philippian church did with Paul.

Now, if all the churches in the Restoration movement were at work on some such plan, see what a magnificent showing they would make. We would not minify, but rather magnify, the noble work itself done by the missionary society, and in some instances the brethren thus working have made a most commendable showing; but, with all due respect for what they have done, if all their churches were at work in some such way of direct communication with the missionaries as here pointed out, each and every single church, where able, sustaining one and sometimes many more missionaries, and others grouping together by twos or more as might be necessary, our judgment is that they would be sustaining possibly a dozen times more missionaries than they are now sustaining. In this way, not only would every church, as in the apostolic age, be in direct communication with the workers in the field, but would know whom it supports and would have the supervision and control of the work in its own hands, and not in the hands of a general board of control, which, so far as supervision and control are concerned, completely sets aside the New Testament order.

Finally, if some one should ask, "Where does the New Testament recognize the plan here suggested as the Lord's plan?" we reply, nowhere. This plan is neither given in the New Testament, nor do we give it here as the Lord's plan. The Lord has given no plan. He has set the churches in order and commanded them to do the work, merely giving them the general instruction to do it "decently and in order." but he has given no specific plan of procedure. They must adopt their own plan, being careful not to adopt one that will anywhere contravene God's order. The one here suggested, it is confidently believed, both meets this demand and will efficiently do the work. and do it "decently and in order." Much time has been wasted in trying to show "the Lord's plan" of mission work. The Lord has given no plan of mission work. He has founded the churches to do the work, and has given them general orders as to how they should proceed; but he leaves them to work out the details here, as in the case of every other command which he ever gave to man. Let the churches wake up and go at the work with common sense and business in their methods and with proper regard and reverence for God's order, and the missionary cause will spread in a wave of glory and gladness over the earth.

Who Are Walking in the Narrow Way?

BY E. G. S.

There are just two ways that lead into eternity. One is the straight and narrow way, which leads to eternal life; the other is the broad way, which leads to eternal death. All the people of this world are on one or the other of these roads; but, according to the testimony of Jesus, the masses are on the broad way that leads to eternal death. He said: "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." (Matt. 7: 13, 14.) Jesus knew precisely what he was talking about. He knew that what he said would come to pass. So it is a matter of certainty that the masses of the people of this world are traveling the broad way, and are, therefore, on their way to eternal ruin, toward the loss of their souls. Jesus knew it and foretold it nearly two thousand years ago.

It is strange that so many that claim to believe the New Testament take such little interest about the loss of their souls. They press right along the broad road as though they were on their way to Paradise. It certainly indicates very little interest for the welfare of the soul; for if they felt any true interest for their souls, they would at once break off from the broad way and travel the narrow way, which leads with certainty to the happy home. By reading and studying the New Testament, all can quickly tell that they are on the broad way as long as they put off their obedience to the gospel of Christ; for there is nothing that will take an alien sinner out of the broad way but to obey the gospel of Christ. When Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," he also said, "He that believeth not shall be damned." Hence there is no alternative for those that reject the gospel but to lose their souls forever. Why, then, should so many people be so careless and indifferent about the salvation of their souls? There is no middle ground between heaven and hell for any soul to stand upon. Hence all the disobedient are eternally doomed. This life is the only time given to sinners to prepare for safety in eternity; and if neglected now, the soul will be forever lost.

It is a matter of great love and mercy that the Lord gives such a wonderful plan of salvation by which the salvation of the soul can be secured for eternity. Is it not passing strange, therefore, that so many people should float along through this mortal life without any preparation for eternity, when the Lord has offered it without money and without price? It does look like no sane man would allow the precious opportunities of the gospel to pass him by unaccepted, yet untold numbers of every generation have done that very thing. It is not because there is something good in the outcome of the rejection of the gospel. There can no real good come from such rejection, either in this life or in the world to come, but an almost inexpressible amount of evil may result from it. This is one matter that all mortals of earth ought to think about. They ought to be sure to make preparation for eternal life while passing through this mortal life. This is what the gospel was provided for, and nothing else can possibly fill its place.

The word of the Lord tells us how to make the necessary preparation for eternity. If we make it as the Lord directs, he will be certain to take us to the eternal glory home; but if we fail to make that preparation by becoming Christians and living the Christian life until death, there can be no safety for us in eternity. God has provided the plan of salvation for us, but he requires us to embrace it and live out its requirements in life in order to be taken to heaven when we die. The plan of salvation is plainly revealed in the New Testament, and in that same book we are told what to do in order to be saved. So it is wholly the fault of the people if they are not saved. Let all, therefore, be sure to obey the gospel and live by the teaching of the New Testament, and the Lord will see that they are cared for in the long ages of eternity.

God's Promises.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Under sunny skies it is easy for people to trust. It is different, however, when the clouds are dark and threatening and the whole world appears to be wrong. As storms and tempests purify the atmosphere, so Christians must have threatening clouds and severe adversities in order to bring out their true characters. Instead of relaxing our hold upon God because we are passing through the most terrible war the world has ever known, we should be more watchful, more prayerful, and more devoted to righteousness than ever before. We are admonished by the Spirit: "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial among you, which cometh upon you to prove you, as though a strange thing happened unto you: but insomuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, rejoice; that at the revelation of his glory also ye may rejoice with exceeding joy." (1 Pet. 4: 12, 13.) Instead of pining and giving up all as lost when such fiery trials come upon us, we should heed the admonition of the Spirit, which is: "Count it all joy, my brethren, when ye fall into manifold temptations; knowing that the proving of your faith worketh patience. And let patience have its perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, lacking in nothing." (James 1: 2-4.)

While trials, tribulations, and persecutions come to all God's people, they should be looked upon as God's messengers to develop, strengthen, and purify our characters. Christian mothers should not bewait their fate and imagine that the trial is greater than they can bear because their sons are conscripted by the government and taken overseas to fight for their country and nation. When Lot had been made captive and Abram went out with his three hundred and eighteen trained men and slaughtered Chedorlaomer and the kings that were with him, after he had done so valiantly, the word of the Lord came to him, saving: "Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." (Gen. 15: 1.) So long as we are faithful and true to God, though our earthly surroundings may appear dark and dreary, we should find encouragement and comfort in the assurance that God gives us through the Holy Spirit when he says: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as man can bear: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it." (1 Cor. 10: 13.)

Instead of imagining evil and thinking that the church is a failure, Christians should find refuge under the many sweet and precious promises which God gives them. The church cannot and will not fail. Only those who have the Spirit of Christ are in the church of God, for the man who has not the Spirit of Christ is none of his. A man must belong to Christ in order to be in the church. It is freely granted that there are many pretenders and hypocrites who have their names recorded in the church registers, but still their names are not written in the Lamb's book of life. These do not constitute the church of God. The thought that the church has failed should not be encouraged for one moment, for Christ has assured us that the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. Men fail, and the learning and wisdom of the world passeth away, but the blood-bought church of the Lord Jesus Christ shall never fail. Men may philosophize, speculate, and seek to invent institutions that will improve upon the church, but this they can never do. God's works are perfect, while man's works are imperfect. If we have the faith and trust in God that we should, we will find strength in his promises and not falter. The Spirit assures us: "For the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears unto their supplication: but the face of the Lord is upon them that do evil." (1 Pet. 3: 12.) We read again: "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to keep the unrighteous under punishment unto the day of judgment." (2 Pet. 2: 9.) In the midst of burdens, trials, and responsibilities, Christians should be able to find strength and solace in the following admonition: "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your anxiety upon him, because he careth for you." (1 Pet. 5: 6, 7.)

Christians are not able to explain mysteries. They are not able to tell just why God permits certain things to exist. While this is true, by faith they can accept the assurances which God gives all his children when he says: "And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.)

Paul enjoyed revelations given him, and in order that he might not be exalted overmuch a thorn in the flesh was also given to him, a messenger of Satan to buffet him; and while he besought the Lord thrice that it might depart from him, the Lord, instead of removing the thorn, assured him: "My grace is sufficient for thee: for my power is made perfect in weakness." Hear Paul's triumphant response: "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my weaknesses, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Wherefore I take pleasure in weaknesses, in injuries, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong." (2 Cor. 12: 9, 10.) This fearful world war that is being waged should bring us all to a realization of our own helplessness and weakness. It should teach us not to glory in our own strength, but to rely upon the strength of the Lord Jesus Christ for our salvation. God is able and doubtless will bring good out of this fearful carnage to his faithful children. "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Rom. 8: 38, 39.)

Correction of an Article.

BY E. A. E.

I wish to correct a mistake or two in my last article in what I say in regard to women, because I want all that is said about them just right. Where I say, "God declares that all wives and mothers who, in the practical and true sense is given in the Bible," It should be "as given in the Bible," I mean by this that the Bible tells in what way—the only way—wives and mothers really love husbands and homes and children.

Again, I say: "God's rule is for younger women to marry, bear children, guide the house, and give no occasion to the adversary for reviling. (1 Tim. 5: 14.) He allows no exception to this rule." I did not intend for the "no" to be in the last sentence; but I meant to say that God allows a young woman to remain unmarried as an exception to the general rule, when by so doing she can accomplish the greater good and the better serve him.

Show Your Patriotism.

To help in the present war crisis, the United States Government has advised us against "continuing subscriptions after date of expiration, unless subscriptions are renewed and paid for." News paper is scarce and must be used economically. The government is demanding that all pay in advance for their paper. During the war you should not forget the publisher of a religious journal who is making a heavy sacrifice in order to furnish you a journal that is edifying and helpful. Show your interest in religion and your patriotism to the government by a prompt renewal and also by sending us one new paid-up subscriber. The date on the little yellow slip on your paper shows the time to which your subscription is paid. Your prompt renewal will be helpful and appreciated, as our expenses are enormous.

The Preachers' Year Book.

The time of year has come to revise the list of preachers of the churches of Christ for the book for 1919. Every preacher who has changed his address during the year or who will change in a short time should give us his correct address for the new book. If there are names of preachers who are dead, who have been withdrawn from, or from any other cause, which should not be in the book, please advise us, giving the necessary information. It is best to attend to this matter while you think of it, lest you forget. Every year we get a number of corrections after it is too late to use them. Do it now. Address J. W. Dan. 7: 13, 14.

We make room on this page for the timely comments on Dan. 7: 13, 14, by Brother E. M. Borden, which recently appeared in the Firm Foundation:

"I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

It will not be questioned that "one like the Son of man" has reference to Christ. Christ "came with the clouds of heaven to the Ancient of days." The text itself shows that "the Ancient of days" refers to God. Then Christ came to God (not from) in or with the clouds of heaven. There is record of only one time that Christ ascended in a cloud. (Acts 1: 9.) "And a cloud received him out of their sight." Christ ascended after his resurrection and just about days before Pentecost. Did he have the kingdom before he ascended? Listen. "And there was given him do-minion, and glory, and a kingdom." Sometimes, to evade the force of the argument, some people contend that this has reference to the end of time. But the expression, "That all neotle, nations, and languages should serve him," shows all people, nations, and languages should serve him, that it does not refer to the end of time, for all have a right to serve him now. It shows, like many other passages, that the kingdom is to all nations, and the enmity between the Jews and Gentiles was destroyed by the death of Christ. This settles the question forever that the church or kingdom was not established before Christ died. passage settles another question in my mind, and that is that the church or kingdom has not been destroyed. It is true that it has gone through great trials and was in the wilderness for twelve hundred and sixty years, but it has come out now. It is for the spirit part of man and will exist when all earthly things have come to an end. It is the greatest institution on earth. It will not end with Connecting with the above Paul's statement in Heb. 12: 22-28, where he tells the brethren that they, in coming unto mount Zion, the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem and church of the first-born, received a kingdom that cannot be moved, we have double assurance that we to-day are in that everlasting kingdom that God gave to his Son when he returned to him in the clouds of the heaven. The very fact that Paul says in Gal. 1: 8, "Though we [the apostles], or an angel from heaven, preach any other gespel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed," is strong presumptive evidence that God foresaw the coming of angels or people claiming inspiration who would teach another gospel that the kingdom is not yet established and lead the people from the "old paths."

A No-Other-Such Mother in Israel.

BY FLAVIL HALL.

I am now in a meeting with the West Hill Church, in Pensacola, Fla. Grandma Nelson, of this congregation, is, in some respects, the most remarkable woman I have ever seen. Her sons and daughters, grandsons and granddaughters, great-grandsons and great-granddaughters, who belong to the West Hill Church, number forty-eight. All signs of unfaithfulness in any of them distress her. If any of them are finally lost, it will not be because she did not plead with them and pray for them. When she rests from her labors, her works will follow her. Though she is eightytwo years old, she will not miss a service if she can possibly help it. How sad is the contrast of many lives with hers! They are seeking this world's pleasures, riches, and honors, which pass away like the frost of the morning before the rising of the sun. They care but little for their own spiritual welfare or that of their posterity. Can it be that it can be said to them, "Well done," in that great day?

Brother W. T. Tracy lives in Pensacola and preaches for the West Hill Church. He has made an honorable record for goodness and successful preaching. The first one to confess Christ under his preaching was in Grandma Nelson's home, the first marriage ceremony he performed was in her home, and the first funeral service he conducted was in her home. The ties that bind the Nelson family to him and his devoted wife can never be broken. After he began preaching, he felt the need of educational advantages, and, to acquire these, he determined to attend the Nashville (Tenn.) Bible School. Mr. Joseph Strickland, of this city, helped in meeting the expenses-a very wise investment. But how well does Brother Tracy realize that to no one does he owe so much for his usefulness as to his good wife, who worked hard at sewing to help meet his expenses in school!

The West Hill house of worship, built five years ago, has been cleared of all indebtedness, though every family makes its living by working for daily wages. It is worthy of note, too, that Brother Tracy and his wife have made their living by working in a store, and have helped most liberally in paying for said house of worship.

Brother J. F. Love lives in Pensacola and is one of the most learned, most zealous and able preachers and debaters in the church. He has held some fine meetings for the West Hill Church. He keeps busy doing mission work and holding meetings for congregations who call him.

Field Reports.

Brother J. H. Murrell, of Tennessee City, Tenn., has been spending some days with the brethren at Dalton, Ga., preaching and visiting the brethren in their homes. He delights to keep busy in the vineyard of our Lord.

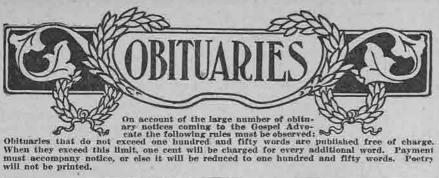

The West End Avenue congregation was delighted to have Brother N. A. Hunter and wife, son, and daughter east their lot with us on the third Lord's day in August. Brother Hunter is superintendent of the Life and Casualty Insurance Company, of this city, which company has just recently entered our State with its splendid work. The moving to this city of Dr. R. L. Eaton and wife, from Nashville, Tenn., has been a source of no little encouragement to those who are striving for primitive Christianity in this city.

We are glad to give on this page the following interesting report from Brother Flavil Hall's work:

On the second Lord's day in August I began a meeting with the Fairfield church of Christ, near Moulton, Ala., and continued it fifteen days, with twenty-one baptized, from the Baptists, and one reclaimed. On the fourth Lord's day in August I began a meeting with the Awin church, near Pineapple, Ala., and continued it thirteen days, with six baptized, three from the Baptists, and one restored.

If we can learn how to control our thoughts by trying to reflect God's thoughts, then our whole life will become a prayer, and by degrees the same mind will be in us that was also in Christ Jesus.-Selected.

One who believes firmly in another, despite all apparent failures and idle gossip, is an enormous power for good .-Horatio W. Dresser.

Hamilton.

Thomas Hamilton passed away from earth on August 13, 1918, in his seventy-fourth year. He was born in South Carolina on November 26, 1844. While a small boy his parents moved to White County, Tenn., where he lived the greater part of his life. In September, 1863, he enlisted in the Union Army and served until the close of the Civil War. Soon after return-ing home from the war he obeyed the gospel and became a soldier in a far better army, the army of the Lord. He put on the whole armor of God He put on the whole armor of country and fought a good fight. He finished his course. He kept the faith, and has gone to his reward. His hand was always ready to help the sick and needy and gave freely of his means to help support the Lord's work. "They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." ONE WHO KNEW HIM.

Warrington.

James H. Warrington died on September 12, 1918, of typhoid fever. He made his home with his son. He was born in Kentucky on December 6, 1864. He moved to Arkansas with his mother about the year 1880, and made his home with her until she died. In about his twenty-eighth year he married Miss Kate Vauner. She died about 1899, leaving him two children and a niece to care for. On April 6, 1904, he married my mother. He lived with her until December 4, 1907. Then I was without mother or father, but Brother Warrington has been a mother and father to me for eleven years. His life was full of trouble, but he struggled through and saw all his children married. He leaves two children, a stepchild, a sister, a half-brother, other relatives, and a host of friends, to mourn his departure. He was a man that just had time to attend to his own JESSE L. BEARD. business.

Welch.

Effic Pearl Welch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Welch, was born on September 12, 1899, and died on May 23, 1918. She was baptized by Brother David O. Griffith at the age of fifteen. It was Sister Effie's good fortune to be brought up in a good, Christian home, her parents both being earnest, zealous Christians, This lovable girl, the only girl in the home, was obedient and kind and helpful and cheerful in the home, and a general favorite in the community. She had no taste for the frivolities of the world. On Lord's day her greatest pleasure was to go with her parents to the Lord's-day worship, or to preaching. She read her Bible daily. "Effie was a good girl" was the verdict of all who mentioned her to me. She is greatly missed. She leaves a father, mother, and one brother to mourn their loss. But their loss is her gain. Then grieve not for her. Fight the battles of life a little longer and meet her where there will be no more sad partings and no more sorrow. H. C. HARRIS.

Hill.

On July 6, 1918, Andrew Sims Hill, infant son of A. P. and Frankie Hill, died in New Market, Ala. He was born in Warren County, Tenn., on Septem-ber 9, 1916. His short life was filled with ways and sayings that will ever be fresh in fond memory. We buried him in our family graveyard ten weeks ago to-day (September 15). Brother W. P. Willis conducted the funeral at our home. Andrew Sims was our only grandchild. Although I was seventy years his senior, he was companionable for me, and seemed to be one of the smartest children I ever knew. It was hard to give him up, but now it would be selfish to wish him here. Brother Hill and dear Frankie, no doubt your home is the better by his living there. Jesus took such as he in his arms and said: "To them belong-eth the kingdom of heaven." Had you kept him, at young manhood he might have been called into carnal war, as our dear boys are now. We can weep over his grave, but the Christian hope goes beyond. Your pleasant home in New Market will never be what it has With longing, tearful eyes we been. follow his little footsteps. The Lord calls for the best we have. He knows what is best for his children. So we can look on death as a blessing, as all must die before they enter heaven.

Let us be resigned to our Father's will.

Rone.

Miss Carrie Virginia Smithson was born on July 14, 1849; obeyed the gospel in her fourteenth year, under the preaching of Brother Frank Davis, at old Licera; was married to Henry A. Rone on March 7, 1872; and died on July 10, 1918. To this union were July 10, 1918. To this union were born two daughters—Garther Patterson, of Nashville, Tenn., and M. B. Ring, of Chapel Hill. She leaves a heartbroken husband, two daughters, grandchildren, and many friends to We cannot bring her mourn her loss. back, but by following Jesus faithfully we can go to her, where sadness, sor-row, and death never come, but all is peace, joy, and happiness. Brister.

Brother J. C. Brister was born in Tate County, Miss., on October 1876, and died on June 17, 19 Brother Brister was a self-made man, but, being a man of more than ordinary natural ability, he had acquired considerable efficiency as a preacher of the gospel. At the time of his death, which occurred at the family home near Glenville, Miss., he had been preaching in the country tricts adjacent to his home for about twelve years. About a year before he became confined to his home as the result of a lingering disease, Brother Brister received a government appointment as mail carrier, which position he held when stricken down. He was held in good esteem by all brethren where he preached, and as a servant of the public he rapidly rose in the esteem and confidence of the people. The early years of his life as a preacher were rugged years of adversity, but he has now passed to that rest where poverty and cares can never again disturb him. Like all the rest of us, he had his faults, but Christ as his Savior, in whom his faith was firm unto the end; and he is our merciful Redeemer, on whom we can all rely for the forgiveness of our many mistakes. He will make all things right for us when we meet Brother Brister in heaven, where there will no more be any memory of cold-hearted neglect of merciful ministrations to one another. In 1895 Brother Brister was married to Miss Mary Moore, by whom he leaves several children to mourn their loss. His wife and mother survive him.

Bates.

Brother James A. Bates was born in Ashley County, Ark., on May 27, 1859, and died on August 3, 1918, being fiftynine years, two months, and six days Brother Bates spent his entire life in Ashley County. He was a man of strong character, positive convictions, and spoke his convictions freely, sometimes almost bluntly; but he was ever honest and sincere, and was kind and courteous to all. He was a lawabiding citizen and consistent Christian, having obeyed the gospel in his early manhood. Frugal and industrious, he established a good home and provided well for his family. Brother Bates was married three times. First, he married Miss Matilda E. Garrett, on January 1, 1880. Seven children were born to them. She passed away on March 22, 1892. On April 21, 1894, he married Miss Virginia A. High. Six children were born to them. She children were born to them. She passed away on July 7, 1906, leaving his home once more disconsolate. He married Mrs. Laura Gregory, an excellent Christian woman, on October 11, 1908. She still lives, and faithfully, tenderly cared for him during the many long, weary hours of his last illness, and, since his departure, is faithfully filling a mother's place to his children left with her in the old home, especially to his sweet little daughter, Clara, who so much needs a mother's love and care just now. May the Heavenly Father sustain and keep them unto the end. With Brother Bates the struggle is over, the battle has been fought, the victory won. The victor has laid his armor down and gone to rest with God at home. We shall meet again. Precious thought! W. T. BREEDLOVE.

Thy Will Be Done.

We see not, know not; all our way Is night. With Thee alone is day. From out the torrent's trouble drift Above the storm our prayers we lift, Thy will be done!

The flesh may fail, the heart may faint, But who are we to make complaint Or dare to plead in times like these The weakness of our love of ease?
Thy will be done!

We take with solemn thankfulness Our burden up, nor ask it less, And count it joy that even we May suffer, serve, or wait for Thee.
Thy will be done!

Though dim as yet in tint and line, We trace Thy picture's wise design, And thank Thee that our age supplies Its dark relief of sacrifice.
Thy will be done!

And if, in our unworthiness, Thy sacrificial wine we press: If from Thy ordeal's heated bars Our feet are seamed with crimson scars, Thy will be done!

If, for the age to come, this hour Of trial hath vicarious power, And, blest by Thee, our present pain Be Liberty's eternal gain. Thy will be done!

Strike, Thou the Master, we Thy keys, The anthem of the destinies! The minor of Thy loftier strain Our hearts shall breathe the old refrain. Thy will be done! John Greenleaf Whittier.

1. Registered Soldier Boys. If you can present twelve high-school credits or pass some examinations to such standing, you may enter the Students' Army Training Corps here, if you have registered in the recent 18-to-20 draft. Such boys are under military discipline all the time, and receive army equipment, board, and thirty dollars a month. In addition to the required military study and practice, three courses in English, French, German, mathematics, history, and government are offered to these students in our school. Tuition in these is paid by the government. From time to time, as the needs and the qualifications of the men permit, students here will be sent (a) to an officers' training camp, (b) a noncommissioned officers' training camp (e) depot brigade, or (d) allowed to continue in training in certain technical courses. Such students are at once under the discipline of the school and the military commanding officer. Boys of twenty may be called after January 1; those of nineteen, after March 1; and those of eighteen will be sure of work in residence until June. Here is a chance to continue college work or prepare for special field or military service, and yet serve in the recent draft call. Physician Says Nuxated Iron Quickly Puts Astonishing Strength and Energy Into the Veins of Men and Brings Roses to the Cheeks of Nervous, Run-Down Women.

Ask the first hundred strong, healthy people you meet to what they owe their strength and see how many reply "Nuxated Iron." Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital, (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says: "Thousands of people suffer from iron deficiency but do not know that the property of what to take. There is nothing like organic iron—Nuxated Iron, to enrich the blood, make beautiful, healthy women, and strong, vigorous men. To make absolutely sure that my patients get real organic iron and not some form of the metallic variety. I always prescribe Nuxated Iron in its original packages. Nuxated Iron will increase the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time in many instances."

2. Prospective Soldier Boys, Those not eighteen may enroll here as a regular student and get military instruction free. We have about thirty of this kind already. They must bear their own expenses until they are able to meet the age and other qualifications and are inducted into the regular Students' Army Training Corps. The school offers courses in stenography, bookkeeping, and typewriting. A regular seminary department (Bible school) is maintained, and bona fide students in it are exempt as "theological students" on their becoming of draft age. Our school is for genuine ministerial students and not for slackers. Our Bible department is a regular school of standard rank. Its courses are the equivalent to the courses given in the highest schools of the country and are additional to the common Bible courses given in grade and highschool work and most junior colleges. Exempted students and mature men are invited to read the outlines of our Bible department and to enroll at the first opportunity.

3. Our Opening. On September 17 we opened with fifty per cent more students than we had at the opening last year, which was the best thus far. Our new dormitories are full and running over; but we hope to make special provisions for the soldier boys that will give more room for other students that may come yet. Already we classes in several seminary courses, including three Bible courses above those heretofore offered. propose to give the students the best to be had. The spirit of the Master is in our whole work. Considering the remarkable service the Lord is leading us into for soldier boys, preacher boys, and regular students, we smile at the drought of three years and pray for a larger service in the sight of Him who doeth all things well. After this I have one more meeting and will be back at home-401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texaswhere I shall be ready to answer calls for regular work through the winter and spring months again. If you write me now and send it to my home address, I will get it and shall answer at once, telling you when I can be at your place, if at all. May the Lord bless the Gospel Advocate, its editors, writers, and readers.-J. C. Estes.

Enderby, September 2.-The meeting in Deep Creek School, which began on August 11, has proved a source of encouragement to the few brethren here. Four were baptized on August 27 in a lake here. Several others are convinced and almost persuaded to en-I began a meeting in Hulcar Hall last night, which seems to have good prospects. Mrs. John Mallory (my sister) and I went to Vancouver last Wednesday. We were Vancouver last Wednesday. met at the depot by Brother J. L. Saunders, and went with him to his home, where we were treated with kindness. Brother Saunders daughter, Mildred, escorted us around the city on Thursday, when we beheld some of the sights of the city and had a short ride on the Pacific. Thursday evening Mrs. Mallory went to the general hospital, where on Friday morning she underwent a very serious operation for internal troubles. I saw her on Friday evening, when she was able to smile a little. The doctor said prospects were all right, so far as he could then tell. It was through Brother and Sister Mallory and Brother Johnson that I came here to hold meetings. I had to leave Vancouver on Saturday morning to get here and begin a meeting at Hulcar, as I had promised a week previous. I have had some good letters from Southern Saskatchewan reporting fine meetings and one baptism since I left there. I had a good letter a few days ago from Sister Isabel Williams, who is now at Punmicky, Sask., with an urgent request for me to go there this fall for a meeting. I am planning to go there this fall. Vancouver is badly in need of a good meeting. I had the pleasure of meeting two of the Johnson sisters, of Omaugh Church, Ontario, at the church gathering in Vancouver last Thursday and Friday evenings, which I had the pleasure of addressing. I expect to be here for at least two weeks yet. Brother F. A. Clark, of Kootenay Bay, wishes me to go there for a short meeting, but time will not permit it now. There is an endless amount of work to be done in all these provinces, brethren. The field is large and ripe, but so few to reap. Are there not some good, loyal brethren in the South that some church or churches could send out into this country to sow the good seed? It would be useless, however, for you to send a man unless he is willing to get after the people and show them he has their interest at heart. Everywhere I have labored my efforts have met with some success, some more than others. I feel sure that so long as I continue I can win souls to the cross, and my purpose is to continue as long as I have ability to do so; but, brethren, it seems hard to have to do without more cooperation. For nearly two years my assistance from brethren and churches has exceeded my expenses by one hundred and fifty dollars. This is not much to support or help to support a family on. We have thirty acres of land at home, on which my family has to depend for a living. While I am absent nearly all the time, we cannot realize from our place nearly so much as if I was there, and I have had to borrow money to pay my way. year we did not realize nearly as much from our place as some other years, but I have kept doing, as above mentioned. We have some heavy obligations to meet this fall, and as yet do not know how they will be met. We often hear brethren say, "We must do something and spread the gospel;" but, brethren, saying it never does it. I feel sure I can continue to establish and build up churches, but it takes money to do it. So far I have had very few definite sources on which I could count for anything. It has been from here and there, now and then. If some churches could agree to send help monthly, though it might be small, yet if it was regular, one could count on something. One might naturally think that the churches I have established should support the work; but when old churches will not do much, how can we expect the young churches, just babes, to do all? In Southern Saskatchewan crops have not been good for the last two years; and while this year's crop is better, yet it will take most people to task to catch up what they have got behind. These people, no doubt, could have done more than they have, but I think they have not been able to do very much. No doubt they will do more as they be-come able. It is so easy to say some one else should do this or that. This is where the church has failed in the past and will fail in the future unless it changes its way. I will report all I receive, and, as of old, if contributions get too large, will ask to have a recess. If you cannot send material assistance, I will be glad to hear from you, anyway.—H. A. Rogers.

Austell, September 22.—Brother M. H. Carter will begin an eight-days' meeting at the church of Christ here on the second Lord's day in October; so we ask the Atlanta and East Point brethren to come and help us to make a drive on Satan and his host, not with carnal weapons, but with the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of the living God. Brother L. B. Waters has sent us six dollars for the meeting. May God bless us in our attempt in this drive.—W. P. Johnson.

Kentucky.

Bowling Green, September 23.—I was at our regular appointment at Three Forks, this county, yesterday. We had fine services, the church showing much interest. One noble young lady made the good confession at the morning hour and was buried with her Lord in baptism in the afternoon. The Lord willing, I shall be with the church at Gilstrap next Lord's day.—W. M. Oakley.

Tompkinsville, September 18.-It is probably true that evangelists, like poets, are born and not made. At any rate, a new evangelist has just made his appearance on the religious arena in the person of Brother Chester Crabtree, of Tompkinsville, Monroe County. Brother Crabtree has just closed meeting, lasting only one week, with forty additions, four of whom were from the Baptists and two from the Methodists, all by the old method of confession and baptism. Brother Crabtree is a young man, not thirty yet, and is simply irresistible as a preacher and evangelist. He began his career as a lawyer and made a success at the bar for about three years, but gave up the law about two years ago, and since that time has devoted himself exclusively to the ministry. His experience as a lawyer has given him a peculiar forcefulness as a preacher, enabling him to systematize his ser-mons in the most effective way and to present them with a force that is irresistible. He is a man of rare gifts naturally and splendid attainments naturally and splendid attainments educationally. Any church wanting an evangelist who preaches the pure gospel would be fortunate to secure his services.—H. B. Ray.

Muskogee, September 24.—The meeting at this place continues with some interest. The brethren say that more people of the world have attended this meeting than any meeting they have held here. There have been three baptisms so far, and there is one to be baptized to-day. The meeting, I judge, will continue over Lord's day. Brethren Foster and Allen live here and have assisted much in building up the cause here. They are both good men, and, as. I have no preacher jealousy in my heart, I am certainly glad to have these brethren with me here. Brethren, let us all work while it is day; for the night will come, when no man can work.—D. S. We are not financially able to do the work alone, but, with your help and prayers and God's pure gospel in our mind and heart, we will press the truth with all the ability, energy, and strength of a devoted follower of the one faith, one Lord, one baptism. Gray's Ointment bears a name that for ninety-seven years has been on the minds, if not the hearts, of thousands of families, Its use began in 1820, when a North Carolina physician compounded an ointment for treating skin infections. It has been received on its merits, and its constant use for nearly a century has made it a family word in every household. Its instantaneous healing effect and its soothing relief to skin infections make it almost indispensable in the home. Gray's Ointment is the first thought in all cases of burns, scalds, bruises, cuts, and stings. Telephone your druggist for it, or write to W. F. GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Look at the tongue, mother! If it is coated, your little one's stomach, liver, and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless; doesn't sleep, eat, or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

Health

THE MAN WHO SUSPECTS that he has kidney trouble and neglects to take measures promptly for his relief is taking a dangerously unwise risk. If the kidneys are not properly performing their function of purifying the blood stream, waste products and poisonous acids remain in the system and cause nervousness, theumatic pains, backache, languidness, sore muscles, swollenjoints, stiffness, puffiness under eyes and other weakening symptoms.

A Tribute to a Good Woman.

Mrs. Sallie Woods Smith died at her home at Bean's Creek, Tenn., August 26, 1918. The illness that caused death, said to be blood poison, was of only a few days' duration. Its fatal ravages were a surprise to her family and many friends.

Mrs. Smith was born July 27, 1878, and reared near where her happy married life was spent and near where she breathed her last. She was educated at Fanning School, near Nashville, where she graduated, June, 1898. She was baptized by F. B. Srygley when a student at Fanning School, 1894. She was married to G. T. Smith, a promising young man, October 22, 1899.

Mrs. Smith is a descendant of pioneer stock—Woods and Lipscomb—that located near Bean's Creek in the first settling of Franklin County, who, by their well-directed activities, favorably improved their environments. She was strong and active, physically, mentally, and morally; specially noted for her persistent work in her home and her devotions to her family and church.

She leaves a sorrow-stricken husband and four bright children to mourn her loss—two sons and two daughters; also an aged father and mother and several brothers and sisters who are widely scattered.

Funeral services were conducted by Elder L. B. Jones in the Huntland Christian Church and solemnly engaged in by a large audience consisting of her kindred, neighbors, and friends, after which her body was tenderly laid to rest in the Huntland cemetery.

Her death was premature, not anticipated, a surprise in view of her age, good health, and active life. It is natural for ripe fruit to fall, for the aged and infirm to cross over the river, but a sad surprise for one in the noonday of an active, useful life, like that of our departed sister.

When the like unto this takes place, condolence on the part of sympathizing friends is becoming and right, but fails to heal wounds. Time, only the passing of years, can elininate the sorrow that death brings to the heart's of kindred and friends. Couple this with the God-given idea that our Savior brought life and immortality to light, then comes reconciliation and That change we call submission. death is not the dreary end of life; it is only the gateway from terrestrial to celestial conditions; is simply the putting off of the mortal and the putting on of the immortal.

There is no death;

What seems so is transition; This life of mortal breath

Is but a suburb of the life Elysian, Whose portals we call death.

It breaks and ends preparatory work here for better and more permanent conditions over there.

The domestic, social, and religious characteristics of our departed sister were remarkably prominent. But her race here has been run, her noble work finished; peace to her slumbering remains, becoming gratitude to her memory.

Such a wife, such a mother, such a neighbor will be missed, as the days, weeks, and years come and go, by the many who loved her and who will fondly remember her till the happy reunion that awaits the faithful.

Man in the Making.

We are all sculptors of life. From the anthropoid ape stage clear up through the ages, in the slow process of evolution, man has been at work chiseling himself. Always on the whole bettering himself a little, eliminating the animal, the brute qualities more and more, in spite of setbacks, he has persistently struggled toward the realization of his ideals—the higher man, the ideal man.

Our sculpturing is mental; our thought is the chisel that traces the ideal in life's marble. Angel and demon, beauty and ugliness, success and failure lie side by side in the marble of life.—Orison Swet Marden.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat if Kidneys Feel Like Lead or Bladder Bothers You —Meat Forms Uric Acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness, and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean; and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless, inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Practical Joker Seldom Popular.

The adept at the practical joke, being himself nervously insensate and afflicted with a perverted idea of humor, is almost invariably the person who cannot, as we say, "take his own medicine," turning sulky and sullen under reprisals in kind, and belongs with the people who are not desirable as friends. Even acquaintance is often a trial.—Detroit Free Press.

The Work at Camp Bowie.

BY JOHN STRAITON.

The following letter has been referred to me:

September 14, 1918.—Dear Brother: Will you kindly write me regarding the disposition that will be made of the tabernacle at Camp Bowie after Brother Lawson leaves for overseas work. I would like, also, to know when he expects to depart. I have heard that the work will be discontinued and that the government will take over the building for its own use. This church has been sending a small contribution each month to help sustain Brother Lawson in his work there, and, for this reason, desires to learn of the condition of affairs there, S. C. R.

As there are many more brethren and churches who wish the same information, I desire to reply to the letter through the columns of our papers.

Brother Lawson expects to leave for France about the middle of November. It is necessary that he should have a month's special training before leaving, and he desires to have about two weeks at home with his family and to attend to personal business, and this means that his active supervision of the work at the camp will terminate at the end of September.

The work there will not be discontinued, but, on the centrary, will be carried on, if possible, with even greater vigor than before. The brotherhood is greatly indebted to Brother Lawson for the building of the tabernacle and the inauguration of the work at Camp Bowie. He has been left without as much cooperation as he should have had from the brethren in Fort Worth. But now that he is leaving, a committee of nine brethren, chiefly elders and preachers, has been selected to see that the work is not only continued, but pushed with increasing enthusiasm. With these nine brethren a still larger number from churches outside of Fort Worth will be associated in an advisory capacity. As soon as possible a strong and able preacher will be selected to take charge of the work. A number of names are being considered, and the best man possible will be secured for the work. Until he arrives the preaching brethren in Fort Worth will carry on the services at the camp.

The tabernacle is paid for in full, but there is an indebtedness of four hundred dollars on the lot. The churches in Fort Worth and Dallas (with one donation from Dickens County) are raising the money to pay this off, and will have it done before this notice appears in print. A deed, without any vendor's lien or other obligation, will then be made to the following trustees: M. H. Moore, superintendent of Fort Worth city schools and elder of the North Side Church; T. H. Cambron, elder of the Southside-Central Church; Horace W. Busby, our well-known evangelist and minister of the Glenwood Church; all of this city. Then M. D. Gano, attorney, and of the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church, of Dallas; and Brother Dye, county officer, of the Sherman Church. The property is amply secured to the brotherhood; so should the time ever come when it will not be needed for its present purpose, it will not be lost to the cause of Christ.

Brother Foy E. Wallace, Jr., preacher of the North Fort Worth Church, is acting correspondent for the committee. His address is 1423 Gould Avenue, Fort Worth, Texas. Brother Ira D. Brister, who has been acting as treasurer for Brother Lawson, will continue to serve in the same capacity. His address is 2700 Avenue A. Polytechnic, Texas.

We wish to assure the new worker of an adequate support in his work at the camp, and will be glad if brethren and churches who have contributed in the past will continue their generous support.

No man minds, or ought to mind, work's being hard, if only it comes to something.—Ruskin.

Go to your druggist; ask him for a HYOMEI Outfit (pronounce it High-o-me). The Master's Vineyard

Missouri.

Arcola, September 24.—Evangelist Edward Chetter has just closed a very successful meeting at Arcola. Brother Chetter is one of the most logical preachers that has preached in this part of the State, and the seed sown here will bear abundant fruit. Brother Chetter is a godly man, and any church in need of an evangelist will be fortunate in securing him. Our association with these godly people has been pleasant and profitable.—L. O. Holman.

Tennessee.

Nashville, September 25.—I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Pinedale last Lord's-day night, with fourteen baptized and one restored. My next meeting will begin on the first Lord's day in October, at Craigfield.—J. S. Trotter.

Lawrenceburg, September 24.—Since I made my last report I have held three meetings at the following places with the following results: Marcella Falls, Giles County, five additions; Big Creek, Giles County, thirteen additions; Antioch, Ala., forty-two additions. My meetings this year, in point of additions, have been better than any former year.—E. O. Coffman.

Etna, September 24.—The meeting at Leeville closed last Sunday night. One Mr. Draper and wife were baptized. Two of his daughters were baptized last year. There are some good people at Leeville who have labored earnestly to build up the Master's cause there. I pray that they may live to see much fruit of their labor.—J. A. Sisco.

Nashville, September 26.—The meeting at Red Boiling Springs resulted in eleven additions to the congregation. I began a meeting at Whitleyville on the third Sunday in September and closed it on the fourth Sunday night. In all, there were eighteen added to the congregation. In the number were two older brethren who renewed their allegiance to the Lord's cause. It was a great encouragement to the congregation to welcome them back into their fellowship.—F. B. Srygley.

Monterey, September 24.—Since my last report I have labored with the following congregations in meetings: White's Bend and Free State, in Jackson County, Tenn.; Hestand and Vernon, in Monroe County, Ky.; and Corinth, in White County, Tenn. There were thirty-nine additions during these meetings. The earnestness and kindness of the brethren and sisters of these congregations made my work with them very pleasant. I am now in a meeting with the church at Monterey.—Thomas D. Rose.

Lebanon, September 24.—I closed an eight-days' meeting, with sixteen discourses preached, at Lois, last Lord's-day evening. This was the writer's fourth meeting with the church at that place—three for three years in succession, skipping three years, then coming in with the last one. There were eight baptisms. The audiences were the largest, they claim, they had ever had there. The house was very nearly full every day and more than could get seats in the house for the evening services. To express the truth in few words, the interest was fine. We are gratified to find the church getting to be very strong at Lois. The meeting should have continued a few days longer, but, yielding to conditions, we reluctantly closed with an eight-days' meeting. This is a mistake so often made. I shall begin a meeting with the church at Ethridge next Lord's day.-George W. Farmer.

Newbern, September 23 .- As there is nothing in the Gospel Advocate from these parts, I just thought it good to say a few words about this (Dyer) county. We are having some good meetings in these parts this season. Bogota has had two good meetings this summer, one conducted by Brother John R. Williams and one conducted by Brother Holloway, of Texas. There were several added to the congregation there, and I am sure a great deal of good was done, because these are noble men of God. I am in the work all the time, and I find more people who are so much unconcerned. Their zeal seems to have given way. A great many times such little things get in the way of the congregations. The most hurtful thing I find is the moon. It is "dark moon" now, and we cannot have our meeting, for it is "too dark." Brethren, there will be a darker time than these nights. Paul says: "Let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober. For they that sleep sleep in the night; and they that be drunken are drunken in the night." The night here represents darkness; and we should not be in darkness, but in the light. When people become so intoxicated with the things of the world, we should each ask ourselves: "Am I in the spiritual government or in the government of darkness?" Let us be loyal to our spiritual government and try to get people to enlist or volunteer their services to our King, who is Lord of lords and King of kings."-W. A. Burke.

Nashville, September 21.—Brother J. W. Shepherd, of Detroit, Mich., was re-cently in a meeting with the congregation at Science Hill, near Readyville. The meeting closed on September 17, with a "come-back-home" day, when a number of those who had formerly worshiped there came back to the spiritual feast and hearty welcome which awaited them. Twenty-five years ago Brother Shepherd went to Science Hill for his first meeting. At that time the little band was rather discouraged over a number of things, but as the meeting progressed there came about a great spiritual awakening, and the congregation has been alive ever since. the twenty-three who gave their young lives to Christ during that meeting, only three were present last Tuesday: James Abernathy, who still worships there; Frank Batey, of the Walter Hill congregation; and the writer. It makes us sad to know that, of the other twenty, some have gone back to the world and some into the great beyond, though a few continue faithful. Only about twelve or fifteen were present who were members twenty-five years ago. Scarcely a family represented there but had gone with loved ones through "the valley of the shadow of death," and hence felt most keenly their absence as their places were filled that day with new faces. But so many blessings have come along with the sorrows that we could but lift our voices in thanks-giving to the Father, who doeth all things well. In the forenoon we were given a brief sketch of the efforts made and the sacrifices undergone to restore apostolic Christianity. This was an especially helpful and interesting service. There is worshiping there some of the descendants of those brave, self-sacrificing men who in that vicinity, as early as 1804 or 1806, decided to reject everything save the Bible and its simple teachings. After a splendid lunch and a social hour or two at noon, our service was of a reminiscent nature, combined with that admonition which Brother Shepherd has so faithfully kept before the church in all of his teaching all these years-the line of demarcation between the church and the world. Five young lives were given to Christ during the meeting. Brother Shepherd has promised to return two years hence.—Flora Travis.

COMB SAGE TEA IN FADED OR GRAY HAIR

Look Young! Common Garden Sage and Sulphur Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy, and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded, or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about fifty cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Compound now because it Sulphur darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied; it is so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft, and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

Tennessee.

Stiversville, September 19.-With services at 11 A.M. and 2 P.M. on the second Lord's day in September, we began our mission meeting in a tent at Oak Grove Schoolhouse, in Giles County. This community had been the object of some of the missionary efforts of the Cool Springs church of Christ, and is centrally located between the churches at Cool Springs, Minor Hill, Shoal Bluff, and New Zion, making an ideal place for the establishing of a new congregation. In due time twenty-five or thirty men, some of whom were not members of the church, met to erect and equip the tent, which was within itself the best preparation I have ever seen. This work had been kept on the minds and hearts of the people of the community and of the surrounding congregations for several weeks, so that at the first service there were present four or five service there were present tour of hydrodynamics hundred people. It was an inspiration to observe the faith and zeal of the brethren in this work, The meeting continued until Friday night, when five were baptized into Christ. At the last service we had our best night audiences, and had it been possible the work should have been continued into the next week. The aforementioned churches gave the meeting splendid moral and financial support, for which they are to be commended. I am to return to this community on the third Lord's day in October, and it is hoped that many whose interest was en-listed may then obey the gospel. The churches will continue the work here, with the planting of a church and the erection of a house of worship as their objective. We have Hannah Schoolhouse on our program as our next mission point, where we hope to do a similar work. In all my years of labor in this field, I have never seen the interest so great in New Testament Christianity. 1 am now in a good meeting with the church at Stiversville, in Maury County, with one confession to date.—J. According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the South-land and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.-Advt.

From Mountain Torrent to Peaceful Pool.

In our fourth lesson from the lives of the patriarchs we pass from Abraham to Isaac. In pursuing our character study, it may seem like passing from a mountain torrent to a peaceful pool. In Abraham we found great ruggedness of character, but in Isaac we see this ruggedness softened and mellowed into harmony and beauty. A group of educated Indians in British Columbia were talking about the patriarchs. One of them said: "It is plain that Abraham showed his faith by his works all his life. So also did Jacob and Joseph. But I am doubtful about Isaac; it seems to me that Isaac was a sitting-down man all his But another Indian took issue. "You are mistaken," he said. "Do you suppose Isaac was only a little boy when he packed all that cordwood to the mountain of sacrifice? Only a strong, growing young man could have done that; he could have knocked the old man over easily or run away, if he had wished. The old man did not have to overpower him in order to bind him-he submitted himself: nor did he have to be lifted to be placed on the altar -he laid himself on it. What work of faith did he leave undone?" 0 0 0

The Goodness of Quietude.

True enough, Isaac's career is not a story of conquest full of exciting deeds, but nevertheless he was rich in character. In the daily round and in the common task he was falthful to God and helpful to men. We do not find in him those active elements which men gather into the word "energy" and then bow down and worship. We find rather those refined, sensitive, pleasant, passive virtues which make the home relations tender and ennoble all good society. Phillips Brooks must have been thinking of such a character when he wrote: "It seems very certain that the world is to grow better and richer in the future, not by the magnificent achievements of the highly gifted few, but by the patient faithfulness of the one-talented men." There is great temptation just now to deify those who perform valiant deeds on the field of battle, and overlook the goodness of peaceful and quiet nations. Our young girls are not alone in becoming "crazy" over the man with shoulder straps or medals on his uniform. It is time for all of us to remember that the hardest battles that men and women must wage are struggles in their own hearts. The victory, whether won or lost, is not proclaimed in the public prints. Let us not forget the "best portion of a good man's life, his little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and love."

But when we come to study the marriage of Isaac and Rebekah, it does seem that the groom was a sitting-down man in so far as the selection of the bride and the arrangements for the wedding were concerned. It is true that Isaac acquiesced in his father's wishes, but he did not take the initiative. Abraham selected the country and the family from which he wished the bride to be secured, and Eliezer with a train of ten camels went after her. Isaac, it appears, sat still and waited developments.

The Impress of Kindness.

It is a very charming story of Oriental life and customs. Rebekah filling her pitcher at the well little knew that her character was being put to the test by the way in which she treated a stranger, nor that her whole future depended upon the test. How often momentous events hinge upon trifling events! "Give me to drink, I pray thee, a little water from thy pitcher," were the words she heard from the servant sitting beside the fountain. "Drink, my lord," she said: "and she hasted, and let down her pitcher upon her hand." And then she added another service: "I will draw for thy camels also, until they have done drinking." Nor was this all. She offered the lonely stranger lodging in her father's house and feed for the camels. And Eliezer knew that the sign was fulfilled and she was Isaac's destined bride.

Even if she had not fulfilled the sign, I am sure Rebekah wou'l have made a good impression upon Abraham's the ightful and prayerful servant. Kindness is a very attractive virtue in older people, but it is doubly so in youth. A great man once said: "I sometimes think that nothing in the world is worth while except kindness. It is my creed." I would not make a creed of kindness, nor of any single virtue, for God's word is creed enough and contains them all. Study and apply its lessons, and you will become both kind and hospitable. Here we read the admonition, "Be ye kind one to another;" and here, too, we read, "Forget not to show love unto strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." It is a splendld commentary upon Rebekah's youth that she was kind to man and beast. There is enough in her thoughtful action to remind us of Henry Drummond's motto: "I shall pass through this world but once. Any good thing, therefore, that I can do, or any kindness that I can show to any human being, let me do it now. Let me not defer it nor neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

Kindness is no less becoming in a man than it is in the gentler sex. Some time ago the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal propounded the question, "How may a girl know she is marrying the right man?" Here is the answer of a woman who had been happily wedded: "When nineteen I met a young doctor. We soon became good friends, and in almost a year he asked me to marry him. While I admired him greatly, I felt I did not love him. He was much disappointed, but asked that we still remain friends. Sometime afterwards I was visiting in the country, and this young doctor was to call on Sunday and take me home. Hearing the 'honk-honk' of his automobile, I went down the road to meet him. On my way I saw him get out of the car and pick up a small squirrel that had been injured. The tender way he handled it soon convinced me that he was the man I should want my children to call 'father?'"

Kindness changed admiration into love.

The Girl Who Can Do Things.

Another thing that doubtless impressed Eliezer in this first interview, and which Isaac learned to appreciate in his wife more and more, was that she knew how to do things that are practical and useful. I have never watered a camel, but I have heard no little of the drinking capacity of this beast. Think what it must have been to water ten thirsty camels. But Rebekah was equal to the task. She did it quickly and, I might add, gracefully. A girl like that was worth wooing and winning. After all, the thing in a woman that appeals to the best of the marriageable men is her capability of doing something worth while. Have you never read of the "Bait that Caught?"

"He used to dance with Annie;
She waltzed with fairy grace.
He used to drive with Fannie;
She had such a pretty face.
He used to call on Clara;
She always praised his book.
But he finally married Mary,
For she knew how to cook."

Choosing a Life Partner.

The matter of choosing a husband or wife has more to do with the happiness of the individual than any other event in life except one, and that is choosing Christ. It is deserving of the most careful thought, deliberation, and prayer. The average person goes wooing in his best attire and wearing his best manners. He is received in the same way. The whole process is artificial and covered with the veneer of the best behavior. As a result, the honeymoon is scarcely over before the real character of each comes to the surface, and far too frequently reveals the sorrowful fact of a mismated couple. When a man desires to buy a farm, he examines the soil and such conditions as relate to successful and profitable farming. If he desires to stock it, the animals are selected with reference to breeding and utility. When a woman buys an expensive garment, she satisfies herself as to the wearing quality, its adaptability and fitness for the purpose for which it is to be used. Why should there be any less care shown by either in selecting a life companion, especially when it is not a question of dollars and cents, but of happiness for life? Why leave so momentous a question to impulse, blind sentiment, or mercenary motives? Long before the marriage ceremony is pronounced the contracting parties should appreciate that part of it which reads: "Marriage is an institution of the Almighty, a provision made by God himself for the happiness and well-being of the human race. It was our loving Father who first opened the fountain of affection and wove from its silver spray the mysterious, but tenacious, cord of love that binds two willing hearts together." It was our loving Father to whom Eliezer prayed for guidance in this important matter. It was he who brought the two willing hearts together. The lesson for every marriageable person to learn is simply stated in the words, "Take it to the Lord in prayer."

"And He Loved Her."

We hear so much of unhappy marriages and the rapidly increasing divorce evil that it ought to be refreshing to turn back and read this story of how Isaac and Rebekah "lived faithfully together all the days of their lives." I like that beautiful statement concerning Isaac's reception of the bride where it is said, "And he loved her." The contract already entered into between Abraham's servant, on the one part, and Rebekah and her kindred, on the other, was not only sanctioned by Isaac, but he loved her. This was the foundation of a true family. If love is lacking, there will be a homeless home. As the editor of The Outlook puts it: "There are houses full of conveniences and luxuries in which no one is at home; the men and women who live in them are homeless. To such men and women as to whom marriage is a mere social contract and a family a mere social arrangement, there is no going home, no refuge of spirit, no place of understanding and vision."

Billy Sunday once said: "Home is the place where we love the best and where we grumble the most." But it is my candid belief that if the love is there strong as God intended it to be, we can have a happy home without the grumbling. It has been well said that the ideal family consists of three divisions bound together by the closest of ties—the husband, the wife, the children. The New Testament brings a special message to each of these three divisions. The gist of the message to the husband is: "Love your wife." The gist of the message to the wife is: "Love your husband." The gist of the message to children is: "Love your parents." When each division receives and heeds the message, a happy home is the inevitable result.

"The corner stone in Truth is laid,
The guardian walls of Honor made,
The roof of Faith is built above,
The fire upon the hearth is Love;
Though rains descend and loud winds call,
This happy home shall never fall."

If Half We Say Were Left Unsaid.

If all that we say in a single day, "
With never a word left out,
Were printed each night in clear black and white,
'Twould prove queer reading, no doubt.
And then just suppose ere one's eyelids close,
He must read the day's record through,
Then wouldn't one sigh and wouldn't one try
A great deal less talking to do?
And I more than half think that many a kink
Would be smoothed in life's tangled thread,
If one-half we say in a single day
Were left forever unsaid. —Selected.

The Advocate's Challenge and the Highland Church.

BY E. L. JORGENSON.

Being challenged by the Gospel Advocate, under threat of being "further exposed" in its columns and of having to "take the consequences" for "failure to do so," to "produce at once" certain "startling and unpublished disclosures," of which in a private letter to an inquirer I had spoken, I gladly accept. The language of the Advocate further is as follows: "We demand of you to give us for publication the damaging things which you say you have;" and, "that you specify the particular statement or statements in our columns that are a 'slander and misrepresentation'" (terms I had used in perhaps two or three private letters with reference to the Advocate's report on the disciplinary action of the Highland Church, May 16, 1918). In the same letter the Advocate adds: "You will not be permitted to run around and introduce a new matter not bearing specifically on what we have said, and thus attempt to whitewash your case." This limitation I accept; but, of course, it is plain that no man can make "startling and unpublished disclosures" without bringing in "new matter," which, however, comes strictly within the demands of the Advocate's challenge. Here, then, is my field as mapped out and limited by them:

- 1. The "startling and unpublished disclosures" which I have to make.
 - 2. The "damaging things" which I have,
- 3. Specification of "the particular statement or statements" in the columns of the Advocate "that are a slander and misrepresentation."

Perhaps the easiest way to avoid hairsplitting differences on the term "slander" is to say that in the two or three letters referred to I used the term in the same generally accepted sense in which Brother C. A. Taylor-whom the Advocate now defends-used it four times in his article which they published with editorial indorsement on June 8, 1916, and entitled "A False and Slanderous Charge Refuted;" a letter, by the way, from which the reader may judge whether Brother Taylor is "far from being factious" in his "disposition," but "just the opposite," as the Advocate declares. Webster's first definition of slander is "defamation, whether oral or written;" and the Standard Dictionary, discussing its legal meaning, says: "To escape the charge of slander the defendant must prove the truth of the words spoken, or that they form a part of a privileged communication."

This present article is not my statement alone, but, having been carefully read, passed upon, and indorsed by the church in business session assembled, represents also the church's testimony. "Gray-haired men and women," of whom Brother Kurfees speaks, who, he says, "ought to be in control," and who, he says, "owe it" to bring the "instigators of the crime to strict account," are with me in this, and the brethren's names are attached hereto.

The Advocate's strange method was to publish first the statement of the two involved and disciplined men (the long Rubel-Taylor letter of June 20), sending it forth with editorial comment as if every word were necessarily true! Every one knows that a justly disciplined member would not be likely to tell a full, fair story; and whether a man has been unjustly disciplined cannot be settled by his own word about the matter. Except for references to it under other heads, I pass this letter by, with the remark that if space permitted I would undertake to show that more than half of its sentences are either absolutely false or misleading.

In the same issue appeared Brother A. B. Lipscomb's statement, which also I pass over, at least for the present.

My chief reply is to the charges of Brother M. C. Kurfees, whom I consider to blame more than any other man for this present trouble, local or general. These charges and misrepresentations I take up in the following order:

 That speculative opinions have been pressed in the Highland congregation to the point of alienation and division.

More than five years ago I began my labors with the Highland church of Christ. Within the first two years I taught freely along the lines afterwards controverted by the Gospel Advocate, presenting in the Highland Church practically every point that was afterwards challenged, absolutely without a ripple. Spring of 1914 I preached fourteen sermons through Revelation, and, before the year closed, seven other sermons on prophetic subjects. Later, when the local relatives and sympathizers of the Advocate attacked me as a speculator, a brother took the notes and outlines of these sermons, lodged them for future evidence on this decisive point in his safety deposit box without the change of a single sentence, and to this day they are the proof that I had presented in the Highland pulpit those doctrines afterwards termed "speculative" and "divisive" without the least friction or opposition on the part of a single member of the congregation. Friendly discussion in our classes, on these and other themes we had had; but it seemed never to occur to any one that I was a dangerous or divisive teacher-until something happened. After all this teaching, on July 4, 1915, Brother Rubel said publicly (and admits the statement); "We have no complaint with Brother Jorgenson. He has been preaching the word to us. If I had heard any criticism against you [turning to me], I would have been frank enough to come to you and tell you. I can say that as long as you have been here, I have not heard one single criticism passed upon you, Brother Jorgenson." The notes which I have mentioned are the abundant proof that this "bill of health" came after practically every dectrine which was afterwards challenged had been advanced.

On top of this teaching came Brother Boll's Armageddon lecture in the Highland Church early in 1915, just a month or two before that "something" happened. Not a single ripple of dissatisfaction was heard following it. In fact, on February 7 following, the church (present objectors being in attendance) placed the following minute on its records: "Business meeting unanimously in favor of Brother Boll speaking to us every Thursday evening for a while." (Page 91, Minutes.)

Then that "something" happened. Not in the Highland Church. O, no, but at Nashville! The Advocate launched its attack on Brother Boll. The "ill feeling and alienation among brethren," of which Brother Lipscomb speaks, began to spread-but only where the Advocate went! Let the publishers produce one case of it if they can, where their paper or its agents did not go with the divisive attack. They said that Boll's teaching would cause division -and they saw to it that it did! They caused it to cause trouble, as the chief priests of old "stirred up the multitude." December 20, 1915, Brother Taylor said: "I am going to fight that thing [the Boll case] to the bitter end." October 12, 1915, Brother Armstrong published in the Gospel Herald the following challenge: "There is not a congregation in Kentucky, Tennessee, or any other place. in which confusion has been caused by R. H. Boll's teaching on prophecy. I deny that he has ever disturbed the peace and harmony of any congregation of disciples by persisting in pushing his ideas onto the brethren.' There are hundreds of brethren who believe that Boll has done this very thing. I deny that it is so and ask for proof." That challenge Boll's opposers were unable to meet. New Orleans and Horse Cave were cited as such cases; but the evidence shows that in New Orleans the trouble grew out of a financial matter, and in the Horse Cave church Brother Friend continues his good work and peace prevails.

But in the Highland Church were Advocate relatives and former Campbell Street members. The "five charter members "who opposed me are all from Campbell Street, and three of the five are related to the personnel of the With but one or two exceptions, the seventeen members who opposed my recall in 1916 were all from Campbell Street or related to the Advocate, or both. Hitherto this element had controlled; and older members say it was about the same circle that once before had brought about the removal of a faithful preacher over the protest of a part of the church. They would have succeeded in this case also had the complaint been personal instead of doctrinal, for I would quickly have left. In fact, if the church had thought more of "the man" than they did of the truth, they would have let me go long ago, for that would have been the easiest course for me; but they urged me to remain "as a duty to God and the church" as Paul stood by Antioch, Corinth, and the Galatian churches, and wherever his teachings were called in question. The opposers themselves placed the issue purely on doctrinal grounds. On November 13, 1916, Brother Taylor said publicly: "I disclaim any personal feeling in the matter. I do not object to Brother Jorgenson's recall on personality. Brother Jorgenson is a most excellent man." At the same meeting Brother Rubel said: "Personally I love him, but I object to some things he stands for. Not that he has said them from the pulpit, but he is identified with people who practice and advocate the doctrine he speaks of." As late as May 15, 1918, Brother Taylor said: "The personal element should have never entered into it." Therefore to say the church is divided on a man is false.

The issue being purely doctrinal, the church saw that not even "for unity's sake" could they yield to the opposers; for on that principle one man, with or without a following, right or wrong, could control the teaching and faith of the church; for whatever doctrine he dislikedbe it ever so important-he could suppress by an appeal to "change preachers for unity's sake!" Now it was felt that there was one man in our city, not even a member of our congregation, who was thus seeking to control our faith-"to whom we gave place in the way of subjection, no, not for an hour, that the truth of the gospel might continue with you." For to his "policy," his interpretation of Rom. 14: 22, this human conclusion, this uninspired opinion which he has pressed "to the point of alienation and division," we have never subscribed. While the word clearly points out the essential steps, it nowhere undertakes to mark off from others essential scriptures. Whatever it takes to move a man to take the essential steps is just as necessary as the steps themselves. Not on the specious plea of "changing preachers for unity's sake," therefore (and how could a church with doctrinal differences which the opposers had practically made tests of fellowship ever agree on any preacher?), nor on any other ground, did the church propose to be drawn into a combine to suppress the preaching of any truth and to crush numbers of faithful men who have dared to proclaim, as much as in them lieth, "the whole counsel of God." The brethren had contended for the faith once for all delivered; for true and sacred principles; for the preaching of the whole word, and not simply the generally "known truths"-which one of my opposers advocated; for the independence of the congregation as distinguished from outside rule; for nonsectarian Christianity as against the spirit of sectism, ecclesiasticism, and centralized domination. And if this paper also should be used of God "to the casting down of strongholds," "imaginations and every high thing that is exalted against the knowledge of God," I should be pleased.

As to the criticized teachings, they are easily stated in the very words of scripture without addition, subtraction, or interpretation. When, in 1916, my recall was opposed on doctrinal grounds, the church invited me into their meeting "to defend my doctrine." The defense I then prepared consisted of nothing but clippings from the Bible which I intended to read without comment. This invitation, however, I decided not to accept, lest some one should say I had influenced the choice. Since then, as Brother Lipscomb shows, I have offered as a unity basis to take no position and to advance no proposition along the controverted lines, except such as I could state in scripture words without interpretation, being careful to introduce no side conclusions of my own. This offer, made both before and after the discipline, has met with no favor; for it is the strange peculiarity of this movement that those who can thus state their faith in Bible words are the "speculators" and those who interpret freely are "safe and sound!" Brother Taylor even contends that one speculates when he says that Jesus may come to-day!--from which the reader can see how "competent to judge" my chief opposer has been.

Another thing that makes this opposition inexcusable is that our differences do not directly affect congregational practice. We have advocated neither organ nor society, but stand squarely for the "old paths," whether measured from New Testament times or from the Restoration dayswilling to "speak where the Bible speaks" and, as I have shown, to be "silent where the Bible is silent;" and urging as Paul did (and Campbell, too) that we should "receive," love, and fellowship each other in spite of differences which do not involve our brethren in wrong acts. As Brother Kurfees did well say in the Advocate of August 13, 1914: "We conclude, therefore, that while even 'exact agreement' in all things is desirable as far as it can possibly be had. yet the point at which to draw the line between having and not having union and cooperation is not whether the proposed cooperants are agreed in everything, but whether any of them are or are not by the said union and cooperation involved in any wrong act or in any act which they believe to be wrong. If any of them are so involved, they cannot consistently enter such union and cooperation; but if they are not so involved, they can."

Brother Kurfees says: "Until Brother Jorgenson's ministerial administration came there was the sweetest friendship and fellowship between the two congregations. That happy condition is now destroyed." The impression made by that limiting "until"—that this friendship and fellowship (between Campbell Street and Highlands) ceased when my "ministerial administration" began-is false. What on earth possessed him to pen such things? For it was not in 1913, when I came to the Highlands, nor yet in 1914, when I advanced the doctrines afterwards challenged, but in 1915, after the Advocate's attack on Boll, that trouble began; for until then "friendship and fellowship" continued. By invitation I led singing in a protracted meeting at Campbell Street, and very much enjoyed Brother Kurfees' preaching, after I went to the Highlands -as I had led for them once before; and three or four months before the Advocate's attack on Boll, I "exchanged pulpits" with Brother Kurfees.

Throughout the year 1917 we gave in and gave up to the opposers. Brother Taylor admits that the pulpit teaching along the challenged lines was cut down materially. Yet, November, 1917, instead of meeting us halfway, they demanded my dismissal—a demand which they should have known the church could not conscientiously grant under the circumstances. Having failed to remove me on the doctrinal complaint the year before, Brother Rubel introduced a personal complaint—which, however, proved insignificant, had never been brought up according to Matt. 18, and antedated the "bill of health" which he himself gave me July 4, 1915 (see above). Clearly, then, the issue was doctrinal still, and so I remained with the church for the ensuing year.

2. That the Highland Church has trampled under foot the sacred principle of hearing a man in his own defense, and has refused two of its accused members time to answer charges that are made against them.

At the regular business meeting May 5, 1918, the church authorized "four or five special meetings during the following week, during all of which the church would be in executive session." Again, May 9, "upon motion made and carried in the regular manner, the membership committee was authorized to call one or two more special meetings for next week in order to complete, if possible, the restorational and disciplinary work which had been progressing with such excellent results." (Quoted from the Minutes.) These meetings and their purpose were announced Sunday morning, May 12, and on Tuesday night, Brother Rubel being present, it was announced that on Thursday we would hear final reports so far as they were ready on our restorational and disciplinary work. Accordingly, on Thursday night, all the preliminary steps over, fifty or more persons (a large and representative business meeting) being in attendance, our disciplinary step was taken, for reasons shown later.

Brother Kurfees' charge that scriptural defense was denied the accused is false, damaging, slanderous. Brother Janes, known as a most careful and scrupulous man (who, by the way, acted, as did some others, without having decided on the merits of some of the doctrines involved), advised the process of Matt. 18 with both brethren so as to be on the safe side, though their main offense was against the whole church from the outset. (Tit. 3: 10.) Accordingly each man was visited alone and then with one or two witnesses. Tuesday, May 14, the cases were told "unto the church," and the question being raised as to how "the church" should go to them in its effort to restore, Brother Rubel himself, being present, selected the committee which should represent the church to them-Bagby. Davidson, and Logsdon-and set the date. This arrangement was common ground with us, for Brother Rubel took part in I was then added to the committee because, having taken the steps in our personal difference of Matt. 18: 15, 16, the count of the witnesses in verse 16 (it was pointed out) required my presence in the church hearing. This is the reason I was "on every committee," as they call it, "visiting R.O. Rubel." Then followed the hearing of more than four hours before these representatives of the church -a hearing which they themselves call a defense, for they say that only brethren of that committee "had ever heard one word of our defense." The main part of the committee's report on May 16 was, that "neither in regard to the 'personal difference' involved nor in regard to the principal trouble did we arrive at any good understanding or fellowship basis. These brethren did not acknowledge a single error in the whole period of three years in which we have borne with them. Their final word was that they had no acknowledgment nor a single correction to make; and they would not promise to desist from their course. We have fulfilled our mission; we have held with them the last session required by the word of God." This they all signed, Brother Bagby adding to the note: "I left at 11:28 P.M., before the final decision was reached." will Brother Kurfees kindly give us chapter and verse that requires any further hearing before the church acts as commanded in the last half of Matt. 18: 17? The church was convinced that they were factious. They now needed to know only one thing from them in order to act intelligently-namely, whether or not they repent. This information they had.

Suppose, then, Brethren Rubel and Taylor had not even been present when we formally "turned away" from them? What of it? Must an offender necessarily be present, and speak, before the church can take that step? Of course not; for then to avoid discipline it would be necessary only to stay away! Moreover, the requirement of Matt. 18: 17 is not that the church shall hear the offender, but that the offender shall hear the church. But they were present; and they were invited to speak for themselves. As the evangelist of a church which had no elders at the time (Tit. 1:-5). I occupied the chair that night as I had in all the meetings during the preceding week-when we were dealing one way and another with about seventy persons, a few of whom were in line for discipline when they withdrew; but I call God to witness whether I was not fair toward them; and action was not taken until time had been given for defense. They said they were not prepared; but they had defended themselves for hours before the committee the night before. They requested a later meeting in which Brother Taylor wished to defend Brother Rubel (for he desired no defense for himself, stating that he could not get the consent of his self-respect to beg us to fellowship him). This request was overruled only because the brethren saw how they proposed to dictate everything and yield nothing: when they would make their defense, and how they would make it, and who should make it. We went so far as to suggest that Brother Taylor might write Brother Rubel's defense if he would read it himself, but not even this would satisfy. The inquiry if they would submit a copy of the defense to the committee beforehand was made, but that was not required as a condition of postponement. Brother Malcomson himself shows that so far from the request being "coldly refused," there was first "much discussion" in regard to it; and when the church saw they would not yield one single point, having borne with them patiently for nearly three years, having heard them anyhow in many meetings, they resolved to act at once.

Nor was this all. I had publicly spoken in favor of the later meeting, and so had Brother Janes. Not because we thought scripture required it, but as another concession; and I went the next day to Brother Taylor and said: "H' I can yet bring about the hearing which you wanted [I was not sure that I could, as the church had overruled me on this point the night before], will you accept it?" To this he replied, as he quotes himself in a letter to me: "I do not care to discuss the matter with you at all." now says that was not a refusal; but the meeting which he desired required his presence, his defense, etc.; therefore not to accept when asked if he would was to reject. For surely he did not expect me to labor to bring the church together to hear him, without some assurance that he would attend! This step of mine I at once communicated to Brother Malcomson, and he heartily approved of it; but for some reason he does not mention it in his testimony.

Just here I may say that Brother Malcomson was not, as Brother Kurfees states, a "disinterested person," a "wholly disinterested witness." I did not know him when he was asked to speak, and supposed him to be such. He had remained after the announcement had been made that the business in hand was of such a nature that it concerned members of the congregation—whereupon the only other visiting brother left. He had learned that day from Brother Taylor himself of the meeting, and insisted on coming. G. G. Taylor's "History of Plum Street Church" shows that an acquaintance of more than thirty years has existed between the Taylor-Malcomson families; and there is evidence that there had been an intimate friendship between C. A. Taylor and A. Y. Malcomson for years—as he himself says in his testimony, "I did know Brother Taylor."

3. That our disciplinary action was an unholy proceeding, an unmitigated outrage, cruel injustice, gross injustice, high-handed wickedness, a great wrong, a crime, a most unwise and unchristian course; and that in the meeting for Brother Kurfees undertakes to state our inward determinations—we "were determined not to be just."

These charges are automatically answered under other heads.

4. That the meeting "broke up in disorder" (Taylor and Rubel say "utter confusion").

This report is absolutely and unqualifiedly false. I hasten, however, to excuse Brother Malcomson, who, not knowing our customs, may have thought that, because there was no "prayer of dismissal;" but in the case of others who know that we uniformly close our business meetings, not with prayer, but by adjournment-as we did that night-the statement is an inexcusable slander. It is safe to say that Brother Taylor and Brother Rubel have attended scores of business meetings when there was no prayer of dismissal." They themselves say, "There was no prayer meeting, but a business meeting was in session;" and this business meeting closed as usual. The secretary's record has been examined for eight years back, including a good part of Brother Lipscomb's ministry, and reveals but three occasions in the eight years-and we have business meetings monthly-in which dismissal was by prayer; uniformly otherwise by "adjournment."

Moreover, there was a period of calm just before that adjournment. Brother Taylor made some remarks and Brother Rubel made a quiet, little speech, during which a number of brethren spoke up tenderly, "Come back," meaning come back by repentance. After that I made a few quiet remarks on 2 Thess. 3: 16, expressing gladness for the provision that we were not to hold these men as enemies, but to admonish them as brethren. The adjournment followed.

5. The Advocate, in what it omits, has inexcusably—the reader may say willfully-misrepresented the L. T. Logsdon action. This godly man had at first a reaction in feeling and made the visit to Brother Taylor which the Advocate reports. But on May 27 he was the first of twenty-two male members (all heads of houses and including the other three now acting elders) to sign the following statement: "We, the undersigned, members of the Highland church of Christ, are standing by the action of the congregation in exercising discipline on two members on May 16, 1918." This statement the Advocate had in their hands, their special attention having been called to the Logsdon signature, three weeks before they published their report! They published Brother Logsdon's oral statement, but they omit his later written statement! Is that their idea of fairness? Truly by this time those who saw their report ought to know how to discount it! When Brother Logsdon saw their treatment of his testimony, he said to me on his own initiative: "When you publish your defense, give first my oral statement, then my written one, and follow that with my address-1328 Bardstown Road.'

REASONS FOR DISCIPLINE.

First, a short unanswerable argument. The church was divided before we disciplined. This is common ground, an admitted premise. In fact, it was the Advocate party that first said so and took pains to circulate it. Months went on and there was no repentance or change of course. Now what does God command in such a case (Rom. 16: 17)? It was the very expression of that verse, "turn away," that we used in our formal action. For months there had been a general cry in the church: "Something must be done;" "The brethren must do something." The situation had become unbearable and some were stumbling on account of it. But what is that "something" according to the Book?

In the Rubel case one item alone compelled action. Last, November he told the church that he had a personal complaint against me. He had never come to me about it, so I went to him; but we made no settlement. The main complaint was that in the spring of 1915 I had read a part of a letter from Brother Lipscomb to him and his wife, had not read it all, and so left them under the wrong impression! He charged that I had done this with the premeditated intention to deceive. Next I went with a witness (J. K. Davidson) and said in effect: "Brother Rubel, I grant that I read just that part of the letter which you say; I take your word for it that I misled you by it; will you take my word for it that I did not do so premeditatedly and intentionally?" He became very angry and would not settle. (Indeed, it seemed that the opposers wanted us to discipline, hoping perhaps to win by sympathy what they had failed to bring about by aggression).

I then told the matter to the church (Matt. 18: 17), and he, being present, named the committee to visit him (and Brother Taylor)—to which I was added, as explained elsewhere. We went over the ground again, the brethren with me pleading with him to settle; but though he had never come to me according to scripture about it, and though the matter antedated that unqualified indorsement he himself gave me July 4, 1915, he refused. This refusal alone forced the next and last step of Matt. 18: 17 in his case—aside from the fact that all along he had been Brother Taylor's second in his factious course, even asking to be listed as a "principal," not a second in the movement.

When Brother Lipscomb came up unexpectedly and asked for a conference, we again went over this difference, and after Brother Lipscomb had said that, with him, that (Jorgenson's words to Rubel) "would have settled it," Brother Taylor took Brother Rubel out of the room, and when they returned Brother Rubel said it was settled—which shows he should have settled it before discipline, even from Brother Lipscomb's viewpoint. I mention the matter here only for defense. Settlement of this one item does not, of course, settle the others.

I next record their first public factious act, our very first ripple. In meetings July 4 (the day Brother Rubel indorsed me) and August 5, 1915, they demanded the cancellation of the invitation which had been unanimously extended to Brother Chambers-whom the Advocate had now attacked. We asked for an investigation, not wishing to set the precedent of acting without investigation. They flatly refused. We promised to cancel the invitation at the proposed investigation meeting, if they still desired. They refused. We then offered to cancel the invitation then and there, in advance, if they would meet us to discuss the merits of the case in a brotherly way later. We then gave into them only "for unity's sake" and canceled the invitation. The Advocate misrepresented our action. Though only a small minority objected to Brother Chambers, Brother Kurfees represented us as having "marked" and "turned away from" Chambers according to Rom. 16: 17, and that our "action was against upholding a teacher . . . who had needlessly caused division in the body of Christ!"

Space will not permit discussion of the various intervening acts and outbursts of a similar character. The factious spirit can be better seen than described, anyhow. But having related the first, I will record also the last of these acts. January 4, 1918, Brother Rubel, who was in Mobile for the winter, wrote Brother Taylor: "His decision [that is, my decision on the church's invitation to continue with them] will have important bearing on the immediate course of quite a number of our members." Brother Taylor sent this on to me and added: "I am one of those mentioned in his letter whose course is involved in your decision." Now, Brother Taylor's "immediate course" was to leave our assembly, going almost regularly to church elsewhere. Two months later, not knowing whether they wished to worship with us longer, a courteous form letter (which had been passed upon by the membership committee) was sent to those of my opposers who were absenting themselves-as it was also to fifty or sixty others-some negligent, some nonresident, etc .- who were not my opposers. The letter was an inquiry whether they wished to be enrolled in our new directory, which had been authorized, but delayed. Of this letter Brother Lipscomb said in our last conference, "I grant you that that statement gave you some occasion for the inquiry"-meaning Brother Rubel's "immediate course" statement. I thought so, too; but the objectors made much ado over it, called the older brethren into conferences in an effort to eliminate me, and on April 7 undertook to answer the inquiry publicly. Instead of coming to me with their complaint, though they say I alone was responsible for the inquiry (Matt. 18: 15); instead of coming to the committee which had been intrusted by the church with that business; instead of coming into the ordinary business meeting (where trouble is less likely to cause stumbling), they went by all these, called the whole church into the meeting, and undertook to air their grievances there in the presence of "babes" and even outsiders! No wonder they were ruled out of order.

Then followed their circular, "Autocracy vs. Christianity," sent not only to members of the congregation, but to others in the city, outside the city, and even outside the State, and containing about twenty misleading statements—a factious act. It was after they refused to make any "correction whatsoever" that discipline followed; whereupon, with their sympathizers, they started meetings in the same block. Quite a number of those who left us had been lax for an extended period.

Lord's day after Brother Lipscomb's conference with us I resigned, if by any means the step might lead them to repentance and protect the church, in what seemed to me the best way to do it, against the false charge of thinking more of a man than they did of the cause. The issue was not whether I would leave, but whether they would repent; and I knew that the church, with or without me, would ask that of them. For five weeks my resignation was pending, but before the church acted upon it the Advocate came out with its slanderous report. Then the church recalled me, and I saw I ought to stay. Since then unprecedented blessings have been upon us. My adult-class enrollment soon passed the hundred mark, the treasurer's report went beyond all previous records, and we have had more additions this year already than in any previous year of my ministry-more by considerable than we have lost.

Unanimously ratified by the Highland church of Christ, in business session assembled, on September 8, 1918.

Another Statement from R. O. Rubel and C. A. Taylor.

We have read with mingled feelings of satisfaction and regret Brother E. L. Jorgenson's long article: with satisfaction, because Brother Jorgenson has candidly admitted many of those autocratic acts to which we called attention; with regret, because, instead of facing squarely the facts presented by us, he has resorted to the politician's method of attempting to divert attention from himself and his own unwise course by numerous and tedious references to the Gospel Advocate, Brother M. C. Kurfees, the Campbell Street Church, Brother R. H. Boll, Brother J. N. Armstrong, and Brother Stanford Chambers.

As given in our former statement, in 1915 Brother Jorgenson began publicly to feature and press the speculative and hurtful doctrines that many of the older members of the Highland congregation could not conscientiously accept. For about three years we, with many other members of the Highland congregation, stood unfalteringly opposed to these doctrines, and because he resolutely persisted in pressing those teachings, sometimes publicly and always privately when he had the opportunity, we were also opposed to supporting him, since in that case we would have been compelled to support the doctrine also. Therefore, when Brother Jorgenson says that the opposition was "inexcusable" because his course did not involve us in any wrong act, he says the very reverse of what is true. To have acceded to his course would have been to be involved, in this case, in the very act of supporting a dectrine that . we could not conscientiously support. This is the "act" in which we refused to permit him to involve us.

We charged and still charge that Brother Jorgenson adopted an autocratic course toward his opposers; that he secured the appointment of himself as chairman of important business meetings and as a member of important committees so that he could carry out his determination, by means of having control of the majority, to force himself on the church over the conscientious objections of most of the older, and at that time the most active, members of the congregation.

We charged and still charge that he used the same autocratic, political methods to carry out his scheme to get rid of the two members most prominent in the public expressions of opposition to his theories, and that he and Brother Don Carlos Janes alone are almost wholly responsible for the discord in the Highland congregation, for the false charges brought against us, for the unjust withdrawal proceedings, and for the sad division in the church that his self-willed course has brought about.

Brother Jorgenson attempts to shift responsibility, but a close inspection of his own statements, with all irrelevant matter eliminated, will themselves confirm our charges.

Space forbids mention of all of his details, but we shall notice the following:

First, we wish to deny most emphatically Brother Jorgenson's charge about Brother Kurfees. We have both been in close touch with "this present trouble," and we unhesitatingly state that Brother Kurfees has never intruded himself into the Highland trouble. Proof of this may be seen in the fact that he has never gone to a single member about our trouble until we first went to him and sought his counsel and advice. He has stood at all times, as is well known, opposed to the speculative teachings in question, which have been espoused by Brother Jorgenson, and this, no doubt, has led the latter to make his unbrotherly attack on Brother Kurfees.

As to his reference to "the L. T. Logsdon action," the facts are as follows: A few days after our statements published in the Advocate appeared, Brother Logsdon, whom C. A. Taylor met on the street, voluntarily brought up the matter himself, and thanked him for our having so correctly represented his actions, and for having quoted him so correctly, saying in effect that we had been so accurate that we "had quoted him almost word for word." C. A. Taylor then informed him that he had heard that he signed a statement to the contrary, though he had never seen it, which had been sent to Nashville, and in which, as C. A. Taylor had been informed, he had said he was standing by and supporting the church in its action of withdrawal from us. Brother Logsdon promptly replied that he understood that statement to mean, and all he had meant by signing it was, that he merely proposed to continue his membership in the Highland Church, and not to leave it on account of its action against us. We have unwavering confidence in the integrity and veracity of Brother Logsdon, and evidently Brother Jorgenson or Brother Janes or some one else misled him as to what he signed, for on no other grounds can we understand his course. At any rate, these are absolute facts; and if Brother Logsdon will deny saying to C. A. Taylor in effect what is here stated, it will then be proper to consider the publication of such denial.

Brother Jorgenson's attempted explanation of the Rubel "personal complaint against" him, in what it omits and otherwise, is by no means in harmony with all the facts, which are as follows: In 1915, when Brother Jorgenson was anxious to make it appear that certain persons were in agreement with him in the disputed teachings, he stated to R. O. Rubel and wife that Brother Lipscomb was teaching the same thing. This dumfounded them, and Mrs. Rubel promptly asked why he made such a statement, and he then drew forth a letter from Brother Lipscomb and read a statement from it, which carried his point and silenced Mrs. Rubel. Utterly amazed that Brother Lipscomb had accepted that position, she at once wrote him a letter of inquiry. Brother Lipscomb promptly wrote Mrs. Rubel, denying that he had ever, either in Louisville or anywhere else, taught these things, and said he never expected to, inclosing a copy of his letter to Brother Jorgenson, and then all became plain. In that letter of Brother Lipscomb's is a statement, one part of which taken without the other will make the impression that Brother Lipscomb was in agreement with Brother Jorgenson on the teachings; but taken with the other part of the statement, will make the very opposite impression. Now, Brother Jorgenson himself admits that he cut the statement in two when he read it to R. O. Rubel and wife, but says he did not do it "premeditatedly and intentionally." But it is a fact that he wanted to make the impression, and did make the impression, that Lipscomb was in agreement with him; while if he had read to them both parts of the statement, he could not have made that impression. Of course he had previously read all the letter and knew what it said. Now, since the first part of that statement taken without the other makes the very impression that he wanted to make, but taken with the other part of it makes the very impression that he did not want to make, does he expect anybody to believe that he read the first part and left the other part out by mere accident? And is it any wonder, in view of such dealings with a letter, that R. O. Rubel finds it difficult to accept Brother Jorgenson's statements?

Brother Jorgenson's statement that "Brother Taylor even contends that one speculates when he says that Jesus may come to-day" is not only false, but C. A. Taylor has repeatedly, both publicly and privately in Brother Jorgenson's presence, contended for this very distinction, making the point that it is always proper to teach that Jesus may come at any time, and only objected to Brother Jorgenson's speculation as to when he will come.

Brother Jorgenson says: "Brother Taylor said: 'I am going to fight that thing [the Boll case] to the bitter end." C. A. Taylor says that he never in his life, anywhere or at any time, made the above statement, and that in referring to the Boll case he has never said anything that could possibly be so understood.

As to Brother Jorgenson's statement, "There is evidence that there has been an intimate friendship between C. A. Taylor and A. Y. Malcomson for years," the fact is, that about thirty days before Brother Malcomson attended the withdrawal meeting, he was in Louisville and called on C. A. Taylor. So slight was their acquaintance that Brother Malcomson had to introduce himself to C. A. Taylor. This should satisfy any reasonable man that Brother Malcomson was entirely qualified to present unprejudiced testimony about the disorderly withdrawal meeting and that he was also qualified to give impartial advice when he was called on in said meeting.

And now we again wish to state that though fully conscious of our many faults, to which we on all proper occasions willingly confess, we still most emphatically deny that we have at any time been conscious of having done or said anything to justify the charge that we have been either "factious" or "disorderly" or that makes us unworthy of Christian fellowship.

If disposed to do such a thing, we might, like Brother Jorgenson, get this statement unanimously certified to by the brethren worshiping with us, and we might make favorable mention of contributions and additions; but we do not consider these things to be an argument where a right principle is involved, and we prefer to speak for ourselves.

We certainly appreciate the fine spirit of noble sacrifice manifested by Sister W. J. Hogan and her little ten-yearold daughter, of Speigner, Ala. Their contribution is a part of their earnings from picking cotton. Here we find both patriotism and sympathy.

Our last acknowledgment from the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief is dated October 3. Mr. H. C. Jaquith, Assistant Secretary, writes: "We are inclosing our official receipt for the recent contribution of $699.44. It is a most generous one, and our committee is most grateful for the interest and coöperation which it shows. It is a source of much gratification that we are able to alleviate much of this suffering because of the backing of our loyal friends."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Tent Wanted.

The church at Albany, Ala., wants to buy a good, large tent, forty by fifty feet or forty by sixty feet. Must be new, or practically new and in good shape. Let any one having one for sale write to J. Pettey Ezell, Albany, Ala.

God smiled in light upon a barren world; Quick ran the gleam o'er land, and billows curled. Fain to respond, Earth yearned with all her powers, Then, fair, exulting, smiled on God in flowers.

E. L. Jorgenson's Charge With the Facts Submitted in Reply.

BY M. C. K.

'Men of sound judgment and sincere purpose think that, in addition to replying, as one of its editors, to his attack on the Gospel Advocate, I should make Brother Jorgenson's use of my name and his groundless and ugly charge against me the occasion of a personal statement with facts not hitherto given to the public. To this judgment I yield, not because I think his unbrotherly attack will injure me, for I do not think so, and even if it did, "the Judge of all the earth" would attend to that; but, with Paul, "I am set for the defense of the gospel" (Phil. 1: 16), for the "things which make for peace, and things whereby we may edify one another" (Rom. 14: 19), and for "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" in all the churches everywhere (Eph. 4: 3), and it is only in defense of these priceless things and because of my "anxiety for all the churches" (2 Cor. 11: 28) that I now speak.

To teach false and absurd doctrines, such as are some of the doctrines which he and his clique of Advent propagandists have taught, and persistently pressed not only to the division of his own congregation, but to the utter destruction of peace and harmony between it and some other churches in our city, is surely bad enough; but to attempt to defend this ugly work by downright misrepresentation, as he and others have done, is wicked in the extreme. Moreover, his undermining scheme to smirch the reputation of Rubel and Taylor by sending private letters over the country, in which, thanks to the recipients of some of the letters, he was caught by the publishers of the Gospel Advocate and promptly called to account, is also bad; but, being thus caught, he now, as if in revenge, caps the climax of his scheming by the preparation of his prolix, longdrawn and tedious article published elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate, with the preposterous and absurd attempt to make the Gospel Advocate responsible for the sad condition to which his unwise course has led in the Highland Church, and in the further attempt to divide and distribute that responsibility by making the charge that he "considers" me "to blame more than any other man for this present trouble, local and general." This is the identical charge made against me by the organ and society adherents twenty-five years ago when, with similar zeal, but with less misrepresentation and machination, they, too, pressed their opinions to the point of division in the church. I was the only regular preacher among them in the city to oppose their movement and the trouble it made; and when I did oppose it, they, too, said in substance that they "considered" me "to blame more than any other man for this present trouble;" and the charge then, as it is now, was true in the same sense that Ahab's charge was true that Elijah was a "troubler of Israel:" and Elijah's reply then, "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house," is my reply now.

Brother Jorgenson so signally failed to produce one solitary "startling disclosure" in the conduct of Rubel and Taylor, or one solitary specification in proof of his charge against the Advocate, which he was challenged to produce, that the publishers promptly decided to return it with a reminder of its utter failure and of his ignoble attempt, instead of meeting the challenge, to take advantage of it merely to get more of the little sect's propaganda before our readers; but Brethren Rubel, Taylor, and myself, against whom, next to the Gospel Advocate, his screed is most directly aimed, and all the others of the King's Hall congregation who saw the article, insisted with the publishers that they allow it to appear in our columns. Since he had made the charges, we were not only willing, but anxious, to meet them before the public, and equally willing and anxious that the public should see his rare logic and method of handling the word of God. The proverb of John Heywood, subsequently modified and used by Shakaspeare, applies here: "It is an ill wind that blows no man to good."

Now, I distinctly deny, and challenge the production of any word or deed of mine to the contrary, that I ever said or did, either in public or in private, a single word or deed to justify his charge against me; and it is a most significant and telling fact that he does not accompany it with a solitary specification in proof. Why? Any sane man knows that, if he could have produced even one such specification, he would have done so. His charge is false in toto. Instead of doing what he charges, I did the very reverse, and I will now give the facts in proof of my state-

Several years ago, as if the salvation of immortal souls depended on it, he and his patron saint on unfulfilled prophecy, Brother R. H. Boll, began publicly their work of stirring up and confusing the people over the teaching that Christ is coming in a body of flesh and bones without blood glorified, to sit on David's literal throne over in literal Jerusalem in the land of Palestine, where he will set up his kingdom; that the kingdom of God has not yet come and will not come till Christ comes in the aforementioned way; that after he does thus come, there will be another chance for salvation and that every Jew then living will be saved; that Christ is a ruler now, not over the kingdom of God, but over the universe as God rules over all creation. but will not rule over the kingdom of God till he shall return; and, with the cocksureness of infallibility, they proclaimed the opinion that his coming was "just at hand." Previously to this and in a way unexcelled by German propagandists, they had taught these things, unknown to the public, in private classes for a year or two and had a few young preachers filled with them and ready to begin their work of inoculating the churches with the teaching before the masses of the people knew anything about it. I am in fairly close touch with the current of public religious affairs in our city, and I knew nothing of it till the seeds of discord and strife were already sown in parts of the city.

But from the very beginning of their public agitation of these speculative teachings, or as soon as I discovered the movement that had been set on foot and the discord and strife that had already been started by it, I tried, wherever I found an opportunity, by personal appeal, by entreaty, and by persuasion, to prevent the pressing of these things, being careful to make the point that, even if these views of unfulfilled prophecy were correct, which neither they nor anybody else could know, they were not essential to anybody's salvation; and that, as they had already started strife and confusion, it would be both wise and Christian to refrain from pressing them. I was also equally careful to make the point that the mere holding of such views, even though many persons could not accept them. would not interfere with our fellowship and cooperation, but that it would thus interfere if they continued to press these things with increasing strife and division among us; and, for the very purpose of preserving harmony and cooperation among us, I urged them to refrain. Early in the summer of 1915, in a long interview of nearly three hours with Brother R. H. Boll on the situation, I made as strong an appeal to him, to stand with me and help me preserve the peace of the churches of Louisville and elsewhere, as I ever made to any man for any purpose. I carefully assured him that the mere holding of any one or all of the disputed views would not interfere with fellowship and cooperation between him and me, nor between him and any of the other editors of the Gospel Advocate; and I asked him if he would not agree, for the sake of peace and cooperation, to hold such views as private property, that we might continue uninterruptedly our work both as preachers in the city and as editors of the Gospel Advocate on the common ground on which we had so long worked in harmony; but, with a stolid and ironclad determination which plainly showed his intention, he refused to hear my appeal.

Again, it was after the Highland Church canceled its engagement with Brother Stanford Chambers for a protracted meeting on the ground that some of the members objected to him, not for personal reasons, but because of the character of his teaching and work in New Orleans, that the Boll-Advocate agreement was made in which, as a condition of being taken back on the editorial staff of the Gospel Advocate, he distinctly agreed, in my hearing and in the hearing of at least four other preachersnamely, J. C. McQuiddy, A. B. Lipscomb, F. W. Smith, and G. Dallas Smith-who have solemnly so declared, to refrain from teaching his "peculiar views on unfulfilled prophecy"-an agreement which, it makes me sad to record, he afterwards denied; and hearing, to my great astonishment, that Brother Boll, following the Highland cancellation of engagement with Brother Chambers and his own solemn agreement with the Advocate, was going to have Brother Chambers in a protracted meeting that same fall with the Portland Avenue Church, I went to Brother Boll, in the interest of harmony and cooperation among our city churches, to talk over the matter with him. Personally I did not know either Brother Chambers or his teaching and had no reason on either ground, based on my own knowledge, to object to him; but I had the peace and harmony of our Louisville churches at heart and knew that such a step by the Portland Avenue Church, in the face of the Highland Church's action, would create more friction and widen the breach. Hence, in behalf of peace and harmony in our churches, I appealed to Brother Boll to write Brother Chambers a kind and brotherly letter and to tell him, if he wished, that I had suggested it, and to further tell him that there was no personal objection to him on the part of any of us, but that it was exclusively on the ground of expediency that we felt it would be unwise at this particular time and under existing circumstances for him to hold a meeting for us, but that later on, when we should, as I then hoped, have passed over a temporary ripple in our waters, he could come and hold a meeting, when we would all be glad to see him and could all cooperate with him. But again, with the same stolid determination and positive refusal, my appeal was turned down with the excuse that it would not be just to Brother Chambers to not let him come on then! Of course, this was to say that it is important to guard against hurting a preacher's feelings, but all right, in order to protect them, to rend the body of Christ! But, so far from its hurting Brother Chambers' feelings, he, being the right kind of a preacher, would have indorsed the decision and been thankful for the letter apprising him of the situation. Why not? Are not the peace and harmony of the church of God, even in a good preacher's own estimation, more than his mere feelings? The right sort of a preacher would have been glad, under such circumstances, to stay away; and I have not a doubt, if the suggestion had been accepted, that Brother Chambers could have held a meeting with us by this time with all the churches in cooperation with him. But it was coldly rejected, and Brother Chambers came and held a meeting with the faction in cooperation with him.

I come now to Brother Jorgenson's groundless charge that the Gospel Advocate caused the trouble in the Highland Church and elsewhere. Here is the charge: "The 'ill feeling and alienation among brethren,' of which Brother Lipscomb speaks, began to spread, but only where the Gospel Advocate went! Let the publishers produce one case of it if they can where their paper or its agents did not go with the divisive attack." But, suppose the Advocate does go, and very likely it does, to every place where there has been trouble over this teaching. Would that prove that the Advocate caused the trouble? Shades of Socrates, Hamilton, and Whateley! As a complete refutation of this inconclusive and absurd argument, it would be quite sufficient to reply with this ad hominem: "The 'ill feeling and alienation among brethren, of which Brother Lipscomb speaks, began to spread, but only where" Brother Jorgenson "went! Let" him "produce one case of it if" he "can where" he or his "agents" and sympathizers "did not go;" therefore he and they caused "the ill feeling and alienation!!" For it is a fact that either he or his sympathizers have, without a solitary exception, gone to every place where there have been "ill feeling and alienation" over the absurd teaching; therefore they caused it! This is not my logic, for I have no faith in it, but it is Brother Jorgenson's.

But now, as a double refutation of his abortive and groundless attempt to shift responsibility from himself and his fellow speculators to the Gospel Advocate, its publishers authorize me to state the fact that "Brother Armstrong's" challenge, "published in the Gospel Herald," as Brother Jorgenson states, was promptly accepted and the proof immediately furnished him, but that Brother Armstrong never allowed it to see the light! In a subsequent personal letter to Brother Armstrong, one of the publishers said: "You issued a challenge for any, one to show where his (Boll's) speculative teachings ever caused trouble anywhere. We thought you were sincere in this and at considerable pains furnished you the proof from leading brethren in a number of churches where his teachings had caused trouble, and that, too, long before the Gospel Advocate printed its protest. The documents we sent you never saw the light."

There you have it! The proof was promptly furnished Brother Armstrong, but he suppressed it and never allowed it to see the light. Shame on him or anybody else who has the temerity, under such circumstances, to be boasting about his challenge. No wonder he has agreed to hold a meeting for the Jorgenson congregation. It is at least consistent with his past course in standing by the sowers of discord and strife.

Furthermore, the publishers authorize me to state the fact, referred to in their letter to Brother Armstrong, and the files of the Gospel Advocate are proof of the statement, that "Brother Boll's teaching had caused division, and that, too, long before anything was printed on the subject in the Gospel Advocate." What, then, becomes of his charge that the Gospel Advocate is responsible for this inexcusable disturbance in the churches? It merely falls to the ground under the weight of facts, that is all. But even after the Advocate printed its protest, what did it do that constitutes the head and front of its offending? Its own files give the answer, and we challenge the production of a single paragraph from them to the contrary, that it merely opposed, in a courteous and dignified way, what it sincerely believed, and still believes, to be erroneous and hurtful teaching. Hence, his unbrotherly statement that "they said that Boll's teaching would cause division, and they saw to it that it did," is, in the light of facts, a positive misrepresentation; and hence his repeated insinnation that "something happened," not in his congregation, "but at Nashville," that caused this trouble and commotion, is, in view of all the facts, unworthy of a Christian man. Moreover, his very pitiful charge that the trouble in the Highland Church was because certain persons there were related to the personnel of the Gospel Advocate is too little and contemptible to call for anything in the way of refutation, except to refer to its character. Rightthinking persons who know the high character of the persons to whom he here refers will look upon his resort with mingled pity and contempt,

As to his point that most of those "who opposed" his "recall in 1916 were all from Campbell Street," it is sufficient to state three facts as a refutation: First, the whole Highland Church at the beginning, nearly twenty-five years ago, was made up almost entirely of Campbell Street members. Second, those from Campbell Street who opposed him are men and women with such Bible knowledge and Christian character that they would not follow either Brother Jorgenson or "Brother Kurfees" in teaching such doctrines as those now in question. Third, some of his strongest supporters in this very trouble, and who are still standing by him, were also from Campbell Street. Another such logician as Brother Jorgenson could prove, by his logic, that being from Campbell Street caused persons to stand by him and support him in his course!

His statement that "the criticized teachings are easily stated in the very words of Scripture without addition, subtraction, or interpretation," is not only radically contrary to fact, but it is utterly preposterous and absurd. Not a solitary person can be found among his opposers (and, aside from the facts as to his "teachings" in this particular case, common sense suggests this to every right-thinking mind) who ever objected to any doctrine which he or anybody else ever taught which can be expressed "in the very words of Scripture." But his statement is plainly contradicted by the facts; for anybody, who has read the Scriptures one time, knows that the absurd "criticized teaching" that Jesus is coming in a body of flesh and bones without blood glorified, as well as some of the other tenets before noted, cannot be "stated in the very, words of Scripture," for the simple reason that there are no such words of Scripture from Genesis to Revelation.

Again, he says that the "opposition" to him in the Highlands was "inexcusable" because "our differences do not directly affect congregational practice," and he attempts to defend his case by quoting from an editorial of mine; but, in order to carry his point, he makes a complete perversion of my language. I did say, and do still say, that "the point at which to draw the line between having and not having union and cooperation is not whether the proposed cooperants are agreed in everything, but whether any of them are or are not involved in any wrong act or in any act which they believe to be wrong. If any of them are so involved, they cannot consistently enter such union and cooperation; but if they are not so involved, they can." Now, I not only still say this, but I indorse Brother Jorgenson's statement that "we should 'receive,' love, and fellowship each other in spite of differences which do not involve our brethren in wrong acts." But the course he pursued in the Highlands did involve his brethren in acts which they believed to be wrong, and this was their one and only reason for opposing him at the start. If he had consented, as they pleaded with him, to hold his objectionable views as private property, which, in all such cases, Paul distinctly requires us to do, his opposers would have gladly said to him: "We will 'receive,' love, and fellowship each other in spite of differences." But, instead of magnanimously doing this, he put his opposers in the attitude of being compelled to either support and uphold, by supporting and upholding him as the preacher of the church, the very views they believed it wrong to uphold, or leave the church, one or the other. He assumed and stubbornly maintained, and for the very same reason, the identical attitude which the professors of destructive criticism in the College of the Bible of Transylvania University at Lexington, Ky., have assumed, and which, with equal stubbornness and inconsistency, they maintain. They say they have a right to their views, and, like Brother Jorgenson, are saying to the churches that "we should 'receive,' love, and fellowship each other in spite of differences, since we are not involving you in any wrong aet;" but the churches, through the venerable Brother Briney and others, are saying: "That is exactly what you are doing. We do not question your right to found a college to teach destructive criticism or anything else, if you want to, but you have no right to enter the college founded and supported with our money for a different purpose and prostitute it to the base end of teaching and upholding views which we believe to be wrong." The unreasonable and indefensible attitude of these professors is saying to the churches: "You must either uphold destructive criticism or leave the College of the Bible, one or the other." The opposers of Brother Jorgenson were placed by him in that identical attitude. It stubbornly said to them: "You must either uphold these views, which you believe it wrong to uphold, by upholding and supporting me with your money as the preacher of the Highland Church, or leave the Highland Church, one or the other." Thus, not only in plain violation of the Pauline precept, but diametrically contrary to the quotation from my editorial, he persistently pursued a course which "involved his opposers in what they believed to be a wrong act." Then, having forced his opposers into a situation which said to them, "You must uphold the views you believe to be wrong if you uphold the Highland Church," when they went occasionally elsewhere to worship that they might avoid doing what they believed to be wrong, he caps the climax of his autocratic procedure by adopting a course which said to them: "You must either come here and hear me preach and uphold with your money views you believe it wrong to uphold, or be withdrawn from, one or the other!" In all my observation of the doings of preachers and churches, I have never seen a case equal to this in the way of highhanded wickedness.

See again how he perverts my language. I never said that the "friendship and fellowship (between Campbell Street and Highlands) ceased when his 'ministerial administration' began;" and yet, after representing me as putting that false thing in my article, he asks with a flourish: "What on earth possesses him to pen such things?" Well, I never "penned" such a thing, never said it orally, and never thought such a thing, but I here pen my regrets that Brother Jorgenson will thus juggle with facts. Referring to the establishment of the Highland Church with aid from Campbell Street, I said: "From that bright and auspicious day on without a break until Brother Jorgenson's ministerial administration came, there was the sweetest friendship and fellowship between the two congregations," and that "that happy condition is now destroyed." But I did not say, for it is not true, that there was a "break" when his administration "began." There were indeed sweet "friendship and fellowship" between the two churches for more than a year after he came, and it was then that he "led the singing in a protracted meeting at Campbell Street," and I am sure that I enjoyed his singing quite as much as he enjoyed my preaching; and the same happy condition continued "until something happened," but it was not "at Nashville," but in Louisville, and "that something" was a "break" over the introduction by himself and others of the speculative doctrines now in question. Under the administration of no preacher preceding him was there a "break," and my statement is strictly true in every word. Does he expect to escape at the judgment of God with such juggling with facts?

"Brother Kurfees' charge that scriptural defense was denied the accused is" not only not "false, damaging, slanderous," but it is strictly true, and the reader shall now see the facts which show it to be true. Please note that "Brother Janes," who has been a stanch friend and supporter of this whole factious movement in the church, advised the process of Matt. 18." Exactly. Thanks to Brother Jorgenson for the information, which tallies with all the appearances and suspicions concerning this "most careful" Brother Janes. In the testimony of Rubel and Taylor our readers already have before them the nice little stratagem adopted by him in the scheme to get rid of the two leading men who stood in the way of the speculative teaching in the Highland Church. Here it is in the alluring garb of adroit diplomacy: "He (Brother Janes) has been particularly active in encouraging the scheme to bring about our excommunication, a part of his course being to call us 'disorderly' and then turn to the Scriptures and read where we are commanded to withdraw from the 'disorderly!!'" Could Bismarck, the man of "blood and iron," beat it? The best man in the church of God on earth where, as in this case, the godless and sinful method of withdrawal by vote is adopted, could thus be withdrawn from, provided a majority of votes could be secured! Only three main steps in the process-namely, "call" him "disorderly," turn to the Scriptures, and take the vote! Come, all ye ministerial strategists, and sit at the feet of this modern prince of the craft who, according to Brother Jorgenson, was in the lead as adviser of this ecclesiastical imperium in imperio! Hence, acting on his advice, we are told that "each man was visited alone and then with one or two witnesses." But "visited" about what? Not a solitary act has he pointed out in his long article of assertions that either Rubel or Taylor had done except that they opposed what they believed to be false teaching. He says the "cry" was made that "something must be done," "the brethren must do something." Of course! Taylor and Rubel stood in the way of pressing his speculations, and "something must be done!" Well, they did it; but I challenge the production of a single thing even among his own established facts, except such things in the way of friction as would unavoidably appear in connection with any proper effort to oppose false teaching advocated by a party in a church, and most especially so when that party is led by the preacher. I can find in the New Testament occasions where just such things could have been truthfully charged against Paul, and on identically the same ground he could have been withdrawn from. Then he says they sent to Rubel and Taylor "the committee which should represent the church." Well, why didn't that "committee" withdraw from them for the church, if it was to "represent the church," and if hearing or not hearing it was hearing or not hearing the church? If, in listening to that "committee," Rubel and Taylor were listening to the church, why should the committee go back to the church at all? But if it was proper and demanded for any reason that the said committee go back to the church to present its side of the "hearing" or not hearing, why was it not proper and demanded, for the very same reason, that Rubel and Taylor go back to the church also and present their side of it? Why was it necessary for the whole church to hear the committee's side of the case in which the committee was to "represent the church," but not necessary for the whole church to hear the side of those to whom the representation was made? If that committee was properly the church's representative and it had withdrawn from the accused brethren for the church, the course adopted in this wicked procedure would at least have been consistent; but to give away the fact, as Brother Jorgenson and his church have here ingloriously done, that it was necessary for the whole church to hear the committee's side, but not necessary for it to hear the other side, is a travesty and an outrage upon every principle of justice and even common sense in the case, and in the unbrotherly proceeding its perpetrators wrote their own condemnation. Hence, in response to Brother Jorgenson's request, "Will Brother Kurfees kindly give us chapter and verse that requires any further hearing before the church acts as commanded in the last half of Matt. 18: 17?" I promptly refer him to Matt. 18: 17 itself, which, as now indisputably shown by his own clear statement, he violated. outraged, and trampled underfoot in that unholy procedure! And from such sage and perspicuous handling of God's holy word, the reader is prepared to appreciate from the same source the following hermeneutical flash of light: "The requirement of Matt. 18: 17 is not that the church shall hear the offender, but that the offender shall hear the church." In point of absurdity, this caps the climax. No wonder there is trouble in a church with a man in its pulpit who, to carry his point at all hazards, will put upon a passage of God's holy word a construction which not only violates the passage itself, but every other biblical passage that speaks on the subject. Of course the word "hear" in this passage, like most all words in all languages, has different senses, and in this passage it means, not merely "to perceive by the ear," one of its very common and true meanings, but "to accede to," an equally common and true meaning; but, as any schoolboy ought to know, this fact, in all cases which come under Matt. 18, carries with it the obligation that the case on both sides shall be heard in the sense of perceiving by the ear, before just action, either retaining or withdrawing from the accused, can be taken. But if it be true, according to Brother Jorgenson's interpretation, that "the requirement of Matt. 18: 17 is not that the church shall hear the effender, but that the offender shall hear the church," then it is also true that "the requirement of Matt. 18: 15 is not that the offended shall hear the offender, but that the offender shall hear the offended;" and "the requirement of Matt. 18: 16 is not that the two or three witnesses and the offended shall hear the offender, but that the offender shall hear the two or three witnesses and the offended;" and thus, according to Brother Jorgenson's twisting of the passage, the offender is silent, not being allowed to be heard in a single word throughout the whole of the three steps that must be taken before the church is to withdraw from him!!! Was there ever perpetrated a greater absurdity in the name of interpretation? No wonder a church has been thrown into confusion and finally divided when its leader, for purely selfish purposes to support himself in the effort to defend and maintain his pet hobbies, will twist the word of God as his own clear statements here show that he has done.

His attempt to justify the "disorder" and "utter confusion" with which that unbrotherly withdrawal meeting "broke up" by saying it was a "business meeting," and hence, according to their custom, was not improperly without a "prayer of dismissal," is an utter failure, because, no matter what he may think to the contrary, it would be improper and sinful to close even a "business meeting" with "disorder" and "utter confusion;" and Brother Malcomson, whom he "hastens, however, to excuse" because he "may have thought that" it was not a business meeting, is too high-toned a Christian gentleman to countenance such "disorder and confusion" even in a "business meeting;" and the main defect about that meeting, in his estimation, was not by any means its lack of a "prayer of dismissal," but, as he distinctly said to me with marked sadness and regret in a subsequent conversation about it, was the "political atmosphere," "injustice," "unfairness," and "disorder" that pervaded it.

In view of the array of facts now brought to light, the conclusion is inevitable that one of the chief methods of propagandism employed by this factious movement, led in Louisville by Brothers Boll and Jorgenson, is misrepresentation. On the principle that, as the Psalmist declares, God makes "the wrath of man to praise him," the publication of the long and tedious Jorgenson article is brought about, as I believe, by the overruling providence of God as an opportunity to verify with facts this conclusion and to thus make the whole situation known in its true character; and I shall use the opportunity to correct another glaring misrepresentation by Brother R. H. Boll, which correction will furnish another proof that, instead of being responsible for "this present trouble, local and general," as charged, I have used every available opportunity to prevent it and to heal it when it did come.

Not content with denying that he made an agreement with the Gospel Advocate which, as before stated, five preachers, of whom I am one, solemnly declare that they all, at the same time, heard him make, Brother Boll has misrepresented an effort at the adjustment of the question of veracity between him and myself over that agreement. He has told that he wanted to take the second step with me in the process of adjustment laid down in Matt. 18: 16 and that I refused to let him do so. I have been informed that a few good men and women, who do not understand all of his methods of propagandism, have believed that I am guilty of the unchristian and ugly conduct thus ascribed to me. I shall now state the facts precisely as they transpired.

In March, 1917, Brother Boll came to me in person and handed me a written document with the request that I read it. It proposed a basis of adjustment which, as I at once pointed out to him, would be no adjustment at all, but would leave him free to say that he had not made the agreement, and leave me free to say that he had; yet, by the shrewd scheme, if I had accepted it, he would have had my signature to such a transaction! Of course I peremptorily refused to subscribe to such a basis of adjustment. Subsequently, he requested me to put in writing my reply with the reasons for my refusal, to which I promptly and gladly consented. I then not only put before him, in my written reply, the facts which he knew and knows to be facts, but closed with these words:

"I beg of you, on the vital and serious ground of your own present and eternal welfare, to think seriously before proceeding a step further in your unfortunate course. What I am now urging upon you to do is a solemn duty which you should have done long ago, though you are not to be reprimanded for this omission, because we all make mistakes and often delay what should be done at once. If another interview with me would, in your judgment, be of any possible help to you, I am not only at your service, but as stated in our former interview, I shall be glad to see you for that purpose at any time. While I deeply regret your course and have been greatly pained at some things, I am, nevertheless, glad to assure you, and trust you will clearly understand, that nothing has occurred that lessens my interest in your welfare or which would prevent me from doing anything within my power to help you."

This is the way I treated Brother Boll; but what did he do? Brought face to face with the facts in that letterfacts, too, which he himself knew to be facts-and placed by them in a predicament which he could not honorably meet without acknowledging that he had made the agreement, he chose to ignore them and thus attempted to evade the responsibility which he had brought upon himself by his written document and request for a written reply by adroitly proposing to take the "second step" with me "according to Matt. 18: 15, 16." I promptly informed him that he was "a little ahead of the demands of Matt. 18: 15, 16, and must now wait till" his action "in coming at me with a written document demanding a written reply" had "taken final form," and that to his latest "move indicated by the letter just received, I" would "make a written reply." In that reply, I not only brought him again face to face with the facts, but, among other things, I said:

"I myself not only distinctly heard you make the agreement and subsequently assent to it in reply to questions in the conference, but you substantially repeated it in a conversation with me immediately after the conference and before we left the Advocate office. Because it throws light on the matter between us, I will here give the substance of that conversation and of the interview which you and I had about it a few weeks ago. In order to encourage you by showing you my desire and readiness to stand by you, I approached you immediately following the conference, and said, in substance: 'I don't want you, Brother Boll, to go back to Louisville feeling that you have humiliated yourself, for you have not. It is true, you have yielded, but only where it was noble to yield.' And you replied: 'I thank you, Brother Kurfees.' Ever since your denial of the agreement, I had wondered how explain this conversation; and when I reminded you of it in our recent interview, and asked you what you understood me to refer to in my address to you, and what you referred to in your response, you said you did not know! Asked if you did not remember that I approached and addressed you, and that you responded as reported by me, you acknowledged that you did. I then pressed the question why you did not, at the time, ask me what I meant by reminding you that you had yielded where it was noble to yield, and again you said you did not know!

Thus, faced again with the serious facts of the situation, including the very significant and damaging one just quoted concerning that conversation between him and me, all of which, of course, called loudly for a reply, he remained silent for nearly a whole year, neither replying to my letter nor approaching me in any way. Hence, after the treatment of myself and my letter to nearly a year's silent contempt, when he proposed, after that long silence—ignoring again the facts—to take the "second step" of Matt. 18, I promptly replied that, as soon as he was ready to show "proper respect for the serious facts confronting" him "and carefully placed before" him in writing "in response to" his "own arrangement," that I should "be glad to consider any other suggestions from him. To this day he has made no reply.

I have on file the correspondence between Brother Boll and myself, which any one, who cares to do so, may examine, and which confirms the facts here stated.

In addition to the facts already stated about Brother Boll's agreement, it is also a fact that, immediately after that conference, he asked Brother G. Dallas Smith if it would be a violation of his agreement with the Advocate to teach Ezekiel in his classes at Louisville, and Brother Smith very properly replied that it would not be a violation of it to teach Ezekiel or any other of the prophets, provided he did not teach "his peculiar views on unfulfilled prophecy." The Advocate has never said, nor any other faithful teacher of the Bible, that it is wrong to teach any of the prophets. It is wrong rather not to teach them. Teaching what the prophets say is a very different thing from teaching some man's views of it. Teaching that Christ is coming again, which the Bible plainly says, is one thing; but teaching that he is coming again "in a body of flesh and bones without blood glorified," which the Bible does not say, is quite another thing.

Finally, I take pleasure in adding that, not only have I striven at all times in all available and honorable ways to prevent trouble over the needless pressing of this unholy speculative movement which, in some of its vital features, is nothing but a revamp of Russellism pure and simple, but I am still ready to do the same thing, both in behalf of the Highland Church and in behalf of Brothers Boll and Jorgenson. I should have been glad at any time to counsel with them, but not one person on the Jorgenson side in his congregation has ever given me an opportunity for it; and I now appeal to that church, in this public way, to correct, as far as it can be corrected, its unfortunate mistake in its withdrawal proceedings; and I appeal, in the same way, to Brothers Boll and Jorgenson, to cease their work of sowing seeds of discord and strife in the churches; to repent of the sad course they have pursued in connection with this thing; and to come back to the safe ground on which they once stood and on which alone the people of God can ever be brought to work in union, peace, and harmony. God grant that they may yet be led to this wise course.

What Respect Was Shown for the Church in the Highland Trouble?

BY E. A. E.

In the interests of peace and harmony the following correspondence between Brother R. H. Boll and myself is given to the public. Brother Boll's letter reads as follows:

Louisville, Ky., August 10, 1918.—E. A. Elam, Lebanon, Tenn.—Dear Brother Elam: In a recent number of the Advocate I saw what you said about the Highland trouble; and if things were according to your information, your remarks would be just. But have you at all investigated and got direct information from the church as to the course they pursued, and why? I think the elders of the Highland Church and the minutes of the proceedings will be at your command if you want to look into this matter.

As I understand it, the church simply followed out the Lord's directions in Matt. 18, patiently and kindly, and that concerning the matter of personal conduct and not of doctrinal differences. The disciplined members (two in number) thereupon gathered a faction round themselves, and I take it that they are not only guilty of factionism in the sight of God by this latest move, but also those who aid and abet these disfellowshiped ones are fighting against God, dishonoring his church, and are disfellowshiping themselves. For God backs up a congregation when they faithfully follow his instructions. (Matt. 18: 18.)

Now all this applies if my representation of the case is true. I do not ask you to take my word for that, nor yet

Jorgenson's, nor yet the word of A. B. Lipscomb and M. C. Kurfees, but to find out for yourself what the church has done. I think that the church of God is worthy of some respect. I am writing you these things because I have confidence in your desire to be fair and just in all things, and further than that, I have no connection with this matter.

Yours fraternally, R. H. Boll.

Notwithstanding Brother Boll rushed to the defense of the Jorgenson church in withdrawing from Rubel and Taylor, yet, when the Cincinnati church withdrew from Patmont, he rushed into print in defense of Patmont in his own paper, Word and Work, an inconsistency referred to in the following letter:

Smyrna, Tenn., August 25, 1918.—My Dear Brother Boll: Your letter of August 10 came duly to hand.

My "anxiety for all the churches"—"the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" within them all, and the salvation of the souls of all who disturb and destroy this unity and peace—has caused my manifestation of interest in the Highland Church, Louisville, Ky.; and because parties on either side of the trouble have expressed confidence in my sense of justice and righteousness and knowledge of the Scriptures to know what is right, I wrote what I did.

I say not only "that the church of God is worthy of some respect," but that it is worthy of all respect. Jesus is "the head of the church" and "head over all things to the church," and it must be treated with reverence. One cannot use the church, the body of Christ, the kingdom of heaven, the house of God, to serve his own personal endsto furnish himself a comfortable job, to gratify his own ambitions, and to satisfy his own vainglory.

"Doing nothing through faction or through valinglory, but in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself; not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you to the things of others." (Phil. 2: 3, 4.)

All are commanded to have in them the mind which was in Christ—to suffer, to empty himself of the great glory of being in heaven on an equality with God, and to die for sinners.

Paul's instructions to Timothy and Titus and his treatment of the church at Corinth with all its sins, including its divisions over preachers, should be more seriously studied, and especially more carefully heeded, by not a few of the present time. He never advised the church to pull apart and have different places of worship. He was criticized most harshly and cruelly and unjustly, and his apostolic authority denied by some, but he never ordered the church to withdraw from his critics, or directed his supporters, if they could not do that, "to pull out" and form another congregation.

Consistency is a jewel. Some men preach on giving "diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" and on Christ's prayer that all his disciples may be one; but they never apply this to themselves, but think it means the denominational world, while at the same time, through their own personal preference for men, or their own temporal interest, or their ambition to carry their point and to rule, or to maintain their own theories, they divide the church. No wonder the sectarian world says: "Physician, heal thyself." Look at Beamsville, Ontario; Winchester, Ky.; Flat Rock, Nashville, Tenn.; the Highland Church, Louisville, Ky.; a little church in a village in Tennessee, which a "leading brother" is trying to tear apart by persuading three or four to meet with him in the afternoon; and more to follow, unless some men repent and pray God, if perhaps the thought of their hearts may be forgiven them.

Why does a preacher or any other man wish to go to the judgment with a divided church—divided over himself or his theories—on his shoulders?

The spirit of personal preference, personal aggrandizement, a partisan spirit, the spirit of rivalry and envy, the spirit of contention and strife and of seeking the chief seats, etc., is abroad in the land. Preachers of the gospel—preachers of "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace"—and all elders, editors, and other teachers should preach and write against such an evil spirit and its fearful fruit with all the power of meckness, lowliness, humility, and the example and spirit of the Son of God.

When a respectable number of grown men and women, when a respectable number of grown men and women, and thoughtful, Christian men and women, who have the good of the church at heart and who have done as much, or more, for the church as any others, think it best to change preachers, "the preacher in charge" should fold his tent like the Arabs and as silently steal away. Even if their objections are not well founded, he cannot accomplish further good with them, and his own self-respect, his love of unity and peace, and his profound respect for the church of God ought to cause him to go so far away, if necessary, that that church would never see him again.

I agree with you again that when members who are walking disorderly and, therefore, contrary to the teaching of Christ, and who have been properly taught and admonished and warned in all long-suffering and gentleness, have been scripturally withdrawn from, they should be so treated by all others, and "those who aid and abet these disfellowshiped ones are fighting against God, dishonoring the church, and are disfellowshiping themselves." I thought that when the church in Cincinnati withdrew from Patmont. But some one [this one was Brother Boll—E. A. E.], not a member there, said withhold judgment until further investigation, or words to that effect.

Certainly, "God backs up a church when they faithfully follow his instructions." But "there's the rub." You do not think the church in Cincinnati "faithfully followed his instructions," or you would not have given the advice you did. All goodness and purity, humility and meekness, fairness and innocence, justice and righteousness, forbearance and mercy, were hardly on one side—on the Patmont side and perfected in him—and all injustice and unrighteousness, partiality and prejudice, retaliations and vengeance, on the other. I cannot think Jorgenson and his faction made no mistakes, committed no sin, and went wholly by the Scriptures. Of course, Patmont did. He had nothing but the purity and peace of the church at heart; he kept himself above repreach; he sought no occasion of complaint against his brother when he watched—spied—Rowe on the sleeper all night; he was not desirous of taking up an evil report against his neighbor; and he had no desire to continue when it was thought best for him to "resign." He went at all this according to Matt. 18: 15-18. He is perfectly scriptural in suing Rowe and in not suffering wrong in preference to doing wrong. Of course, too, the ones withdrawn from in Louisville are sinners above all sinners.

You ask if I have "at all investigated and got direct information from the church as to the course they pursued, and why?" Of course you investigated Patmont's case, "got direct information from the church" In Cincinnati, and wrote and acted according thereto. In regard to the Highland Church, Louisville, I do not know how much or what direct information you have; you say you write me "these things because" you "have confidence in" my "desire to be fair and just in all things, and further than that" you "have no connection with the matter." I assure you, you are right in this, if I know my own heart. I wrote what I did about what you said about the church in Cincinnati and Patmont because I seek the peace and good of all the churches and would hate to see another disturbed.

And you say as you "understand it, the church [the Highland Church] simply followed out the Lord's directions in Matt. 18: 18, patiently and kindly, and that concerning the matter of personal conduct and not of doctrinal differences." But as I "understand it," the Scriptures were not followed out, and I have as much "connection with the matter" as you say you have. I got my understanding from the facts as stated by Jorgenson and others.

Where is the scripture for withdrawing from a brother by vote—a majority vote? A child's vote or the vote of a partisan kills the vote of the most devoted and just and the full-grown man of God. Voting is partisan itself division. Where is the scripture for withdrawing from a brother when many earnest and good people in the church think the cause for doing so is not sufficient, or, even being sufficient, the church should be more patient and put forth still other efforts to reclaim the wrongdoer? I knew a church some years ago to withdraw from a member when one good and true man said publicly he could not be a party to the withdrawal, and I told the preacher and the elders they made a mistake and did wrong not to wait. The church as such do not withdraw themselves, when good and faithful men and women do not do so, for what to them are scriptural reasons for not doing so. Those who then withdraw force division.

Not only did some good and true and faithful men and

Not only did some good and true and faithful men and women in the Highland Church—men and women of age and godliness—advise against this withdrawal; but a wise and impartial and godly man, Brother Malcomson, connected with neither side of the trouble and not a member there, when requested to say something, advised a post-ponement of action. It was unscriptural and partisan and factious not to respect the feelings and wisdom of these members and not to heed the advice of this brother. There was nothing to lose for mercy and truth and all to gain by waiting.

Was it scriptural and according to justice or even decency for the main and leading party of one side to the trouble to act as chairman on the occasion? Every just man says, "No." I repeat, the procedure was a travesty of justice, an outrage on the church, a playing of politics, and a sin against "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Always the same, E. A. ELAM.

Since sending this letter to Brother Boll and since receiving the request to allow its publication, I wish to add:

- 1. I have no objection to its publication. I never want to write in private about men and things that which I am unwilling to see in print.
- 2. We must not deceive ourselves or allow Satan to deceive us to think we are desirous of doing God's will when we fail to give diligence-to study and to do all God commands-" to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Disobedience to God here is as fatal as anywhere else. We cannot pray for God's will to be done on earth as in heaven when we fail to give diligence to keep this unity and peace. All who strive to obey God will make all necessary effort to live up to Phil. 2: 1-8 (which see.) There cannot be too much said, when properly said, on the necessity of unity and peace and love and against strife and hatred and division. Many who should be teachers of others are yet babes, must be fed on milk, are carnal, and walk after the manner of men, because there are jealousy and strife and division among them. (See 1 Cor. 3: 1-9.) Men who are well educated, learned, and competent to accomplish great good allow themselves to be filled with a partisan and bitter spirit and to become carnal whenever they become parties to strife and division. No just and righteous and Christian man will allow himself to take sides in any unholy strife and division and to be used to build up any faction among the people of God. It is shameful and ruinous to the peace of any congregation to do this. It is a great sin to tear into pieces the body of Christ. Every true and honest, just and righteous, Christian man will stand always for right and justice and the peace of the church. We cannot be governed by prejudices, preferences, a partisan spirit, and personal aggrandizement. We cannot be "of Paul," "of Apollos," "of Peter," or against James, John, or Thomas; we must be "of Christ" in the true meaning of this expression and against all strife and bitterness and division. In all strife, bitterness, and division there are some who are not in obedience to God. "Is it I, Lord?"
- 3. I did not make myself explicit in the letter on the espionage of Brother Rowe, knowing that a mere reference to it would suggest the whole affair and the unrighteousness of it to Brother Boll. It may become the duty of some one other than myself to explain this detective episode to the public. While Patmont was not in person on the sleeper the night of the espionage, he was a party to the deed, as a letter from Brother Boll to him shows. The associates in the spying episode so arranged that different ones of their number were to watch over different sections of the railroad from Nashville to Cincinnati. Brother Boll was one of those assigned to the section from Louisville to Cincinnati, and he says in a letter to Patmont, which fell into the hands of Brother Rowe: "We got on the same sleeper and by the aid of the conductor were placed in a favorable position for observation." In justice to Brother Rowe, I am glad to add that in the same letter its author admits that he failed to find the evil that he was hunting for. Notwithstanding he was compelled to exonerate Brother Rowe, yet in the same letter to Patment he wrote, "Urge him for God's sake to repent," and at another place enjoins Patmont to "call no names." For preachers of righteousness, purity, mercy, justice, and truth to be parties to and engaged in such a plot is most disheartening and grievous.

4. As stated, Brother Jorgenson, the principal man involved in the trouble on one side, acted as chairman in the meeting for settling these differences. This is contrary to all rules of justice even in the courts of our country. No man who has formed and expressed an opinion in any given case in which he has no interest and to which he is not a party is allowed to sit on the jury to try the case. Certainly no man can be allowed to sit on the jury to try his own case. No judge is competent to try any case with which he has any direct or even remote connection in any way whatever, and most certainly he could not try a case in which he was the principal party on one side. Brother Jorgenson was chairman and juror, too, in his own case.

5. What does the Bible mean by the command to "withdraw yourselves?" (2 Thess. 3: 6.) It certainly cannot mean for a part of the church to do the withdrawing, while another part cannot conscientiously do so. This is both division and strife. The command is for the church as a whole to withdraw themselves from a disorderly brother. One part of the church as well as another part of the church must "have no company with him, to the end that he may be ashamed." (2 Thess. 3: 14.) When only a part of the church is convinced that a brother or brethren should be withdrawn from, while another part as wise and good thinks otherwise, the church cannot withdraw themselves, ALL must be "of one accord, of one mind;" "having the same love;" "doing nothing through faction or through vainglory, but in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself; not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others." God must be obeyed in all this. A withdrawal before all the church have "the same love," are "of one accord" and "one mind," and can act not "through faction or vainglory," is to cause strife and force division, and is not to "withdraw yourselves," It is unprecedented to withdraw from brethren by a majority vote. In this case the members do not withdraw themselves. A few or a majority cannot withdraw the whole church. Men must not play politics in the church of God. "The temple of God is holy."

6. Since this matter has been reopened, it should be sifted to the bottom; the wrong should be dug up by the roots; the brotherhood at large should know all the facts; the guilty parties, on whatever side of the troubles they may be found, should be exposed; the papers and the churches should no longer be burdened with it; and all churches and individual Christians, elders and preachers, faithful to the Bible, should take a firm stand for the truth against wrong and wrongdoers. So it seems to me.

Our Challenge and Brother Jorgenson's Failure to Meet It.

Some time ago Brother E. L. Jorgenson, of Louisville, Ky., asked for space in the Gospel Advocate to make a defense of his recent course in connection with the division in the Highland Church. We informed him that if he would let the readers of his own paper, Word and Work (of which he is an editor), see what the Advocate said, we would cheerfully allow him the space, but he refused. Of course, this fact alone shows that he is willing and wishes to get his defense before the Advocate readers, but does not wish and is not willing for his readers to see the facts.

In the meantime the information reached us in reliable and undeniable form that he was engaged in the ugly work of attempting to malign the characters of Brethren Rubel and Taylor with charges which he was circulating over the country in private letters; and, withdrawing the condition formerly stipulated of admitting him into our columns, we promptly wrote him the following challenge:

Dear Brother: The Gospel Advocate is in no way responsible for your withdrawal from Brethren Rubel and Taylor, and it carefully avoided saying anything either for or against your action until, by a prolonged conference with both sides extending over two evenings, it ascertained the incontestable fact that you had not only committed an outrage against two good men and done them gross injustice, but that, in doing so, you adopted the unchristian and uncivilized course of actually refusing them a hearing in their own defense before the church. So far as consistency is concerned, you are one of the last men who should talk about injustice even if you fail to get a hearing before anybody.

For the express purpose of informing ourselves before saying anything on the case, Brother A. B. Lipscomb, one of our editors, took the time and went to the expense of a personal visit to Louisville, where, in the long conference referred to with both sides, he repeatedly called on you and others to name some word or deed in the conduct of these brethren that makes them unworthy of Christian fellowship and justifies you in withdrawing it from them; but you utterly failed to name a solitary word or deed of the kind, and anybody with a grain of intelligence knows that you would have done so if you could.

These brethren, having been denied a hearing before the church—a right recognized and granted by all civilized people who even make no pretensions to Christianity—and having no medium through which to defend themselves, requested a hearing before the public in our columns, and the simplest principles of justice and fairness even among men of the world led us to grant the request. Hence, up to the time of our last letter and with the facts in the case so manifestly against you, we felt that, if it be wrong, or not best, for you to make your defense in the Word and Work, then it is wrong, or not best, for you to ask to make it in the Gospel Advocate; that, if you are preaching for the truth and your course has been a righteous one, you should be glad to let the facts be known to your readers; and hence the conditions stipulated.

But since our last letter certain other developments have come to light. We have been duly apprised of at least one of the recent turns in your tactics, and we now not only promptly withdraw the second item in our last letter, named as a condition of publishing in the Gospel Advocate anything further from you, but we demand of you to give us for publication the damaging things which you say you have. You are writing private letters over the country attempting to create the impression that Brethren Rubel and Taylor are guilty of bad conduct not reported in our columns, saying that you "have startling and unpublished disclosures to make," and, touching our defense of the good name and character of these men, that, when the people "see the facts," they "will be startled and amazed that the Advocate could stoop to such slander and misrepresentation."

Now, we promptly meet this unbrotherly and underhand work of yours in attempting privately to injure two good men by challenging you to produce at once the alleged "startling and unpublished disclosures" which you have "to make." Moreover, we demand that you specify the which you have Moreover, we demand that you specify the particular statement or statements in our columns that are a "slander and misrepresentation." You will not be permitted to run around and introduce new matter not bearing specifically on what we have said, and thus to attempt to whitewash your case. We squarely deny that we have made any statement that is a "slander and mis-representation," and you must now either specify somerepresentation," and you must now either specify some-thing of the kind or take the consequences of your failure to do so. You shall not, in our knowledge, attempt to smirch the reputation of these good men, whose characters are known by us to be above reproach, without being held strictly responsible for your acts. We have not attempted to shield them from exposure for any bad conduct, and we would not knowingly do so; but we do not hesitate to tell you that we look upon your private attempt as nothing more than a part of the questionable and underhand method which has marked your career in the Highland Church and led to its division, and we do not believe for one moment that you have anything against them that can be properly thus described; but you say that you have, and that we are guilty of "slander and misrepresentation," and we demand that you at once either produce specifications in both cases in confirmation of your charges or be further exposed in our columns yourself. Please let us hear from you at once. Yours very truly,

PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

And, sure enough, Brother Jorgenson had nothing! It is indeed a shameful procedure to write such letters in such a case. If the reader will read his lengthy article, he will see that our brother does not specify one solitary act against Rubel and Taylor, except just such acts and such a course as any godly man would be compelled to pursue or some equivalent to it in opposing his false teaching. Yet he had circulated the statement in private letters that he had "startling and unpublished disclosures" to make and that the Advocate had stooped to "slander and misrepresentation." Since he had not only not given a solitary specification to make good his unbrotherly attack, but had merely taken advantage of our challenge to get more of the Boll propaganda before our readers, we wish here to say, in defense of our judgment and sense of propriety as publishers of the Gospel Advocate, that we promptly decided to return his article with the refusal to publish in our paper such a thing in reply to such a challenge, and it is only in deference to the very vigorous and earnest insistence of Brethren Kurfees, Rubel, and Taylor, and other brethren in Louisville, their reasons for which are given in their reply to the document, that we gave our consent at all, and even then reluctantly, to let it appear in our columns. The correspondence which followed our first decision not to publish his article caused delay in its publication.

It will be a tax upon their patience, but we earnestly request that our readers pay attention to all the articles bearing upon this unfortunate division. We feel that Brother Kurfees in his article and Brethren Rubel and Taylor in their response cover fully and unequivocally every charge against the Gospel Advocate and themselves, and there is no need for us to add anything further than to say they have stated the facts as we know them. Moreover, the correspondence between Brother Boll and Brother Elam, which is submitted in the interests of peace and harmony, has an important bearing upon the case. Brother Jorgenson's failure to produce anything new is further emphasized in the Elam article wherein there do appear some "startling disclosures." These refer to some things that call, and call loudly, for repentance and cor-PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

The Spanish "flu" is interfering seriously with our worship. But it should teach us how to be more patient and sympathetic.

J. W. Boyd writes: "Porter Norris held five meetings in Tipton County, Tenn., with from two to sixteen additions at each meeting. Brother Norris is a fine preacher, and we were pleased with his work."

The church at Flat Creek, Tenn., will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary on Sunday, October 20. The venerable and beloved J. D. Floyd, who now resides at Tullahoma, will preach. All friends are invited.

Any young man desiring to learn the printing business would do well to write the McQuiddy Printing Company. We would be glad to train one or two young men sixteen or seventeen years old. Christians preferred.

From J. W. Dunn, 169 East Austin Street, Paris, Texas, October 3: "There have been twelve additions to the church in Paris within the past month, the majority from the denominations. We hope for more zeal, purer lives, and then results."

From J. A. Cullum, Hamburg, Okla., September 23: "The meeting at this place is progressing nicely. We had large crowds yesterday; three services and dinner and supper on the ground; two confessions following the night service. What few members we have here are not very well taught, and have, therefore, accepted some digressive and sectarian views, which, of course, render them incapable of teaching the gospel to their neighbors."

From R. A. Craig, Chaplin, Ky., October 2: "I have just closed a very successful meeting at Cedar Springs, with twenty-seven additions. Of these, three were from the Baptists and one from the Methodists. This is one of the best meetings I have been in for some time. Interest was fine every evening. W. W. Freeman labored there for five years, and all the brethren esteem him very highly. My meeting at Fairmount will begin next Sunday. I go from there to Parksville."

From Lucas North, Ethridge, Tenn., October 5: "Brother Farmer, of Lebanon, began a meeting here on last Sunday, but by Wednesday he became so sick he had to give it up and go home. He had never been with us before, but we were well pleased with his manner of presenting the truth; and to know him is to love him. We were very sorry of his attack of sickness for his sake, and also sorry the meeting could not continue. But we trust that he can return and hold a meeting here at another time."

J. C. Estes, of Dallas, Texas, came to see us last week. He gave us the following report: "Our meeting at Rector, Ark., was by no means a failure, after all the hindrance from rain and mud and some little opposition. I was told by some of the elders that the church had been left in better condition for future work and worship by this meeting than any they then called to memory. This was in addition to the five who were baptized. One elderly lady and four young people were baptized. May the Lord bless the church at Rector to the greatest good possible. They all have my love and prayers to this end. I begin at Bean's Creek, Tenn., on Sunday, October 6."

I am now in a meeting near Tuscumbia, a mission point, and will go next to Moulton.—A. D. Dies.

Munford, September 30 .- I have recently assisted in the following meetings: Including the first Lord's day in August, at Valley Grove, in Clay County, with one restored; at Hopeful, Tal-ladega County, the fourth Lord's day and week following, with eleven confessions and baptisms; at Horse Creek, in Clay County, the third Lord's day, with six baptisms; at Munford, in Talladega County, including the fourth Lord's day in August and the first Lord's day in September, with thirteen confessions and baptisms. Brother Baxley, of Chilton County, preached for us at Hopeful yesterday. He has just closed a meeting at Valley Grove, with six baptisms.-W. J. Camp.

Albany, October 1.—I closed a good meeting of eight days' duration at Stiversville, in Maury County, Tenn., on the fourth Lord's-day night in September, which resulted in three bap-tisms. This was my first meeting in that county. I found some very splendid people in that section, who seem to have the cause of Christ at heart. They were pleased to have me preach the greater part of my time to the church, and we hope the lessons we studied together may through us bring forth much fruit unto the Lord. Brother H. N. Rutherford, of Lynnville, formerly my schoolmate and roommate at Potter Bible College, a better boy than whom I have never known, labors with this church and is held in high esteem by all -J. Pettey Ezell.

Arkansas.

Pennington, September 29.—From August 11 to September 15, I held three meetings in Tennessee. The first meeting, at Willette, resulted in nine baptisms and two restorations. At Pleasant Shade we finally succeeded in getting a fair hearing. This is a difficult place to get a hearing on account of good people allowing their personal feelings to be the deciding factor in religion. The Lord, we hope, added eleven precious souls to his royal family at Shady Grove; at least, eleven were baptized. I was treated with the Riverside, September 28.-Brother C. A. Norred, of Riverside, is to begin a meeting at Tulare on the first Lord's day in October. Brother G. W. Riggs, of Los Angeles, is planning a meeting in Bakersfield in the near future. We have no congregation there, so far as I know; but if there is a chance to establish one, Brother Riggs will succeed, for he is a man that has great success in starting new churches. I was in Fresno on September 8, and preached morning and evening to good audiences. That congregation promises to be one of much influence and good. Brother W. Halliday Trice is the regular minister there. Reports from Southern California are gratifying, as well as from the northern part. while in the central part the churches are getting along fine. I was at Tulare last Lord's day, and after the sermon two made the good confession and were baptized in a stream near there. One of these is a lady who was one of the school-teachers in Southern California, and who is now the good wife of Professor West, of Delano; the other, Professor West's daughter. He is a good, Christian man, and the conversions were largely the work of Brother West. To-day I preached at Hanford, and a high-school girl made the good confession and was baptized this afternoon. We feel encouraged on account of these conversions and feel that our "work is not in vain in the Lord." Brother John Plummer is Trion, October 1.—The writer began a meeting here on the second Lord's day in September and closed it on the fifth Lord's day. The interest grew from the first and never failed, with the exception of being rained out one night. There was much prejudice removed that had been caused by a little moved that had been caused by a little Baptist preacher; but after this preacher showed these folks just how much he lacked in sticking qualities, they turned out to hear the truth. Four were baptized and two were restored. Of the number baptized, three were Baptists and one a soldier boy, who left for camp to-day. This is a mill town, and all the men folks and many of the sisters work hard and are poor of the sisters work hard and are poor, so far as money matters go; but I have never visited a more willing and self-sacrificing people in my life. They are not as able to give to the support of the gospel as some other churches, but their support in this meeting would put to shame stronger churches. It made this preacher rejoice when they told him this was the best meet-ing held here in years. They will have a midweek Bible and prayer service, and are discussing the proposition of securing a preacher to locate here and give this place half of his time. I next begin a mission meeting out in a country schoolhouse where about six members of the church live. Who among those that know me and my sacrifices to preach will have a part in this meeting? Address me at Trion, Ga., Lock Box 5.—John Hayes.

Kentucky.

Milburn, September 26.—The church at this place has just closed a two-weeks' meeting, which resulted in eleven additions—nine by confession and baptism and two by restoration. Brother J. L. Holland, of Greenfield, Tenn., did the preaching. Brother Holland is one of the finest men I have ever met. He presents the old Jerusalem gospel in its purity and simplicity and in such plainness that "wayfaring men, though they be simple, need not err therein." Special emphasis was placed upon faith, repentance, confession, baptism, and Christian development, through study, prayer, and service, as a means to salvation. His practical and forceful presentation of the claims of the gospel, together with his indefatigable personal efforts, resulted not only in the saving of souls. sulted not only in the saving of souls, but in the renewing of the zeal and fellowship of the congregation. Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out; to feel clean inside-no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism, or gassy, acid stomach—you must bathe on the in-side like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels, drink before breakfast each day a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify, and freshen the entire all-mentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel-like you felt before your blood, nerves, and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons—begin this treatment, and, above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening, and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast act on the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels.

gretted to close the meeting, as interest was growing every day, but Brother Holland felt that he was under obligations to go to Bardwell, Ky. Brother Romie Black, of Westport, Tenn., was our leader of song. Brethren, do you need a good man in a meeting? Write Brother Holland. May the Lord bless him in his work among the children of men.—H. Ernest Sutton.

Parsons, September 30.—Brother S. Jones, of Clarksburg, recently held a week's meeting at Bunch's Chapel (Baptist), four miles below Perryville, with fair attendance and good interest. I moved to this settlement last winter. My wife and two children, two neighbor women, and I are the only members in this country.—C. S. Akins.

Southside, October 1.—The meeting at Kingston Springs continued through two Sundays, preaching only at night through the week. It was during State Fair week, and a number of the members were sick, yet it was an enjoyable and interesting meeting. One man past middle life and a working member of the Methodist Church was baptized and intends to be a Christian only. I am now in a meeting at Southside, well pleased with prospects.—M. C. Cayce.

Livingston, September 30.—My meeting at Haydenburg, in Jackson County, closed on the fourth Sunday in this month, with six additions—five baptized and one reclaimed. The brethren there seem to be pressing onward and are strong in the faith. They certainly know how to treat the preacher and make things pleasant for him. I went from Haydenburg to East Fork, a small church three miles distant, where I preached one week. There were several hindrances to this meeting—work, measles, rain, and a lot of prejudice. One was reclaimed.—Willie Hunter.

Booth's Point, October 1.—I write to report the good work the church at Obion did in sending Brother A. H. Lannom here to hold a meeting for us. He began here of September 14 and continued until September 25. He did some excellent preaching. There were Wonderful Egg Producer.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs," will double this year's production of eggs. So if you wish to try this great profit maker, write to E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert, 9257 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1, prepaid. So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day, or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Advt.

This is the first time lots of people here ever heard a Christian preacher. The meeting was held at a place called "Ayers."—Mrs. T. A. Arnold.

Decherd, September 28.-I have just closed a two-weeks' meeting at Lee's Station, in Bledsoe County, with forty additions. Five confessed their wrongs. This was one of the best and most interesting meetings I have ever held. We just had standing room most of the time; could not get all of the people into the house. Among the number added were eight Baptists, two Latter-Day Saints (Mormons), and two Methodists. I made my home with Brother J. V. Rankin's family and with Brother Terry Humble and wife. Brother Harwood conducted the song service. I am now at Smyrna Church, in Bled-soe County, for a short stay. We have had one confession and baptism. I go to Rutherford County on the first Lord's day in October.-R. E. L. Taylor.

Union City, October 1.—I have just closed a tent meeting in this county near Spout Spring. Large audiences greeted us at each service. This was one of the most enjoyable meetings I have ever held. There were no additions, but we trust to future efforts for reaping the fruits of that which has been sown Brother Lewis Jones, of Troy, has held two meetings in the same community, with good results in the way of a hearing. I shall hold another meeting there next year if not providentially hindered. All of the above-named meetings were held under the direction of Exchange Street church of Christ, at Union City.

—T. M. Carney.

Centerville, October 1.—Brother L. L. Brigance, of Henderson, began his fifth successive annual meeting in Centerville on the second Lord's day in September and continued to preach for ten days. There were nine additions, all by baptism. This was one of the best-attended and most successful meetings of the five, and Brother Brigance will come back again in September, 1919. An effort was made to get Brother Brigance to locate in Centerville, but he had agreed to go to Murray, Ky. Brother John Campbell, a farmer-preacher, of Pleasantville, began a meeting at Sulphur, in Hickman County, on the second Lord's day in September and continued it five days. There were seven baptisms.

Faith, Belief, and Works.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

Belief in the truthfulness of testimony is called "faith." Testimony may be oral or written. There can be no faith without testimony. The action of the mind in believing testimony is called "faith," while the rejection of testimony is called "unbelief." If the testimony is divine (such as the New Testament Scriptures), then the unbelief in their truthfulness would be called "infidelity." Divine things require divine testimony; while human, earthly affairs only require human testimony. Remission of sins is a divine proposition and requires divine testimony, bec use remission of sins is something granted on the part of the Almighty, and you must have his testimony in regard to it, and not that of human origin. Hence, human feelings, being earthly, must not be relied upon in place of divine testimony. True faith is always demonstrated by works. Abraham was justified by works when his faith in God's word was demonstrated by the offering of his son, Isaac, upon the altar. That offering was made about four hundred and thirty years before the law of Moses was given. Paul referred to the works of the law of Moses when he spoke of Abraham's being justified without works. How could Abraham be justied by a law that did not exist? Paul's reasoning was to show that as God justified Abraham by his faith in God's word and his obedience to it before the law of Moses existed, that he would now justify men, even Gentiles, if they believed the gospel and obeyed it, without any of the works or requirements of the law of Moses. Here was Martin Luther's mistake, he having been trained in early life that people had to comply with some act of punishment in order to obtain forgiveness; so, on these premises, he rejected the writings of James. CHURCH NEWS

Canada.

Meaford, Ontario, October 1.—On Sunday, September 22, the church of Christ at Meaford had an all-day meeting. Although the day had a rainy. gloomy appearance, God's light broke forth and dispelled the gloom. Brother George Deagon, of Meaford, presided at the Lord's table at 11 A.M., and in his pleasing manner he ex-horted us to be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord." He also impressed upon the congregation the necessity of meeting upon the first day of the week to break bread. Brother O. H. Tallman, of Owen Sound, Ontario, preached for us at 11:45 A.M. from Rev. 1, and in his usual earnest manner of presenting his theme he sent to the hearts of his hearers the fact that Christ is still in the midst of the golden candlesticks (churches) and that if any lost Christ they could find him where they lost him-namely, in the temple (amidst the candlesticks). His sermon was full of inspiration and encouragement for us all. After this we retired to the basement of the meetinghouse, where the ladies furnished us many good things to eat. At three o'clock Brother W. F. Cox, of Selkirk, On-tario, spoke to us from Matt. 6: 10: "Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth." The conditions of salvation were made plain and the Christian's duty was emphasized in a telling manner. Between four and five o'clock short talks were made by brethren from other points. E. J. Purcell, of Wardsville, Ontario, said in part: "We at Wardsville are not as strong in numbers as in former years, but as strong in faith." Also: "This meet-ing and this association is ideal and should have a telling effect on our spiritual man." Herbert Juniper, of spiritual man." Herbert Juniper, of Cape Rich, said in part: "We are few in number, but are trying to do what we can for the Lord, and have been assisted by Brethren Tallman and Hines. This meeting has done me good." Philip White, of Griersville, Ontario, said: "The congregation at Griersville is not as large as the congregation here, but we are doing our

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

Strong, Forceful Men With Plenty of Iron In Their Blood—

These Are the Ones With the Power and Energy To Win

"Many a capable man or woman falls just short of winning because they don't back up their mentality with the physical strength and energy which come from having plenty of Iron in the blood," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. "Lack of Iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force, that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life. It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable. To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time." Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Vice-Presidential nominee Charles A. Towne; General John L. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only twelve years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others.

bit. I wish to say to those who are from small churches, to not be discouraged, for the smallest in number are many times the strongest." Also: "The fellowship and association of such meetings is beyond question a spiritual uplift, and I assure you it has helped me." W. F. Cox, O. H. Tallman, J. L. Hines, and Charles Petch, of Crab Orchard, Ontario, all gave their approval of such meetings, declaring that there is fellowship and association in these Christian gatherings that cannot be in any other. Tea was served at about six o'clock, after which we proceeded with the exercises. Short talks were made by the different brethren in behalf of the Christian Quarterly. The good or the control of the christian Quarterly. Christian Quarterly. The speakers spoke words of commendation for the paper, promised to do all they could for it in the future, and urged the brethren to get behind it and make a weekly out of it in a short time. Brother Petch spoke at seven o'clock from Heb. 10: 26: "Not forsaking the of ourselves together." Brother Petch has a way of touching the hearts of his hearers with his earnest presentation of the truth. Brother Hines acted as chairman throughout the meeting. We believe that much good was done by the meeting and that it will continue to stimulate us to fight with renewed faith and strength.—Mrs. J. L. Hines.

We are very grateful for this fellowship in the building of the new house here and pray God's blessings on all. I will say that there was a house here about thirty years ago, but it went down. A small band has been meeting in the courthouse for the last five years, but last year bought a nice lot and started a nice house this summer and hope to be able to worship in it by cold weather, and will try and finish it as we get able. The brethren who can will do a great work by assisting the cause at this place. I would like to correspond with some congregation that is putting in new seats and has some good old ones to Remember, "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." Renwar Relieves Rheumatism.

Renwar Relieves Rheumatism.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Saits. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve, or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says: "One 50-cent bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatment; and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." For sale by druggists; price, 50 cents; or by mail on receipt of price from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.—Advt.

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To relieve rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uric-acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

FROM THE FIELD

Tennessee.

Winchester, September 25.—I will now make a report of my protracted-meeting work for 1918. On the first Lord's day in July I began a meeting with the brethren at Woodville, Ala., and continued it over the second Sunday. The meeting closed without any additions, but the congregation was pleased with my labor among them and called me back in 1919 for another meeting. From there I went to Jackson's Hill, where we began on the third Sunday and continued until the following Friday night, with five baptisms. I went from there to Hickman County, near Brother W. A. Sisco's home, where I began preaching on the fourth Sunday in July and continued until Friday night. There were no additions. I went from there to New Antioch, in the same county, and began a meeting on the first Sunday in August and continued it over the second Sunday, with twelve baptisms. I went next to Parrie Plains, where I began a meeting on the third Sunday in August, continuing over the fourth Sunday and closing with two baptisms. I went from there to New Zion, near Fosterville, and began a meeting on the second Sunday in September, and continued it over the third Sunday, and closed with eleven baptisms. -E. L. Cambron.

Texas.

Wichita Falls, October 1.-The work at Nocona is moving in good shape, my ministry being only three weeks old there. Last week I baptized a lady about eighty-five years old, who had never professed any religion before. She seemed very happy in her new possession. The Wichita Falls church called me to hold a meeting for them, and the brethren at Nocona graciously loaned me to them, and I am here now. Brother Cabe, of Vernon, began the meeting Sunday and I began last night. Brother Ira Rice is leading the singing for us, and it is fine. pect to have a good meeting. preached last Lord's day at Nocona at eleven and at night, and eight miles out in the country at 3:30 P.M. The church will try to make some improvements by putting in a baptistery, needed as badly as anywhere in Texas. I believe; and while there is some little objection to it on the ground that

"More Eggs" Paid the Pastor.

I sold forty-two and one-half dozen eggs last week, set four dozen, ate some, and I have one and one-half dozen left."—Mrs. Lena Mc-Broom, Woodbury, Tenn.

E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, discovered the wonderful tonic, "More Eggs," that revitalizes the flock and makes the hens work all the time. This remarkable egg producer means big poultry profits for you. Do not delay. Send a dollar to-day to E. J. Reefer, 3257 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package of "More Eggs." Or, better yet, send him $2.25, and he will send you three packages of "More Eggs" tonic, prepaid. This is a season's full supply. A million-dollar bank guarantees that if you are not absolutely satisfied, your money will be returned on request without question. So send either a dollar or $2.25 to-day for this wonderful egg producer. Red Blood and Courage!

(BY DR. W. C. LUCAS.)

What drives the men right up to the trenches in this war is courage, and it's red blood that "puts the heart" in the men. Did any one ever see a puny, thin-blooded man ever rush into the fight with any chance of winning out? With rich, pure blood you can face any hardship, reach any goal. But you are handicapped in the race of life without it. Every tissue, bone, muscle, should take from the blood certain materials and return to it certain others. When the poisons accumulate in the blood, perhaps the face breaks out in pimples, or boils appear on the neck, and we feel languid, tired, our vitality is at a low ebb, and we easily catch cold.

It's time to take an alterative extract and blood-purifier, taken from Nature's forests. Such a one is made up of Golden Seal, Blood and Stone root, Oregon Grape and Queen's root—extracted with glycerine and made into sugar-coated tablets or liquid, and this has been sold by druggists for the past fifty years as Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

LENOIR, N. C.—" Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a great medicine for me in building me up when I feel run-down in health. It gives me strength and flesh. I have been using it at different times for thirty years or more. I began its use for catarrh, and it greatly relieved me. I can heartily recommend the 'Discovery' as a blood medicine."—Mrs. Lucy Beach.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—"This is to certify that I have been in bad health for a long sime, suffering from stomach trouble. Had terrible spells of indigestion and sour stomach. A friend told me about Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I had I'ttle faith at first but she persuaded me to try it. I have taken a little over four bottles of it and my stomach trouble has vanished. I can now eat everything and sleep like a lamb. I want to give all the credit to this great medicine, which I consider the best on earth for stomach trouble."—T. T. LAYTON, Route 2, Box 28 Berry Boulevard it is unscriptural, I believe the objectors love the cause of Christ well enough to not hinder the work, since they can offer no reason on earth for their opinion.—Tice Elkins.

Man Cuts His Hand! Dies of Blood Poison

You see something of this kind in the papers every now and then. A neglected wound, blood poisoning sets in; then it is too late. We all neglect these seeming trivial hurts—will take a chance.

Carboil prevents blood poison. It draws out the inflammation and heals. And it stops the pain, too—almost as soon as applied.

A box of carboil should be kept handy for such emergencies as burns, cuts, bruises, and sores. It is the best treatment for boils.

Edifying as the Need May Be

W

In Behalf of the Sick.

The epidemic which is raging over the country has interfered greatly with public services, but it has opened up a way for the enlargement of the sympathies of Christian people. Here in Nashville the hospitals are turning people away for lack of room, and many poor people afflicted with the influenza are homeless and friendless with no physician, no nurse, no food, no medicine. The Russell Street Church has converted its Sunday-school rooms into a temporary hospital. Beds have been equipped and the good sisters of the congregation are nursing several patients back to health. This answers the need in part, but it does not begin to cover the relief work that needs to be done in the name of Christ. The Russell Street congregation feels able to take care of the expense for its hospital, but contributions from our readers will be welcomed for the relief of many sick families who cannot be moved and others who are anxious to reach their homes in distant States. The need is urgent, and what is done must be done quickly. If your heart is moved to do something, send your contribution to A. B. Lipscomb, stating that it is for the relief of the sick. Prompt acknowledgment will be made and the money used to the greatest advantage. Let me humbly suggest that other churches in the cities use their meetinghouses for relief work so long as the epidemic prevails.

The Divorce Evil.

Two little girls from the families of the upper social crust of New York City were playing together. One of them said boastfully: "I have a new baby brother at my house." The other, not to be outdone, replied in tones of scornful superiority: "That's nothing. I've got a brandnew papa." Her mother had just secured a divorce. When the divorce evil gets so common that even the children treat it lightly, it is time to stop and consider and act. Careful students of sociology assert that at the beginning of the twentieth-century family life is in a more unstable condition than at any time since the beginning of the Christian era. This is strikingly evident in the growth of the divorce evil. According to the last United States census bulletin, there was one divorce in Kansas City, Mo., to every four marriages, and one divorce in San Francisco to every three marriages. From 1887 to 1906 the number of divorces in the United States increased one hundred and sixty per cent, while the population increased only slightly over fifty per cent. Prof. Willcox has estimated that if this increasing divorce rate continues, by 1950 one-fourth of all marriages in the United States will be terminated by divorce, and in 1990 one-half of all marriages. The same authority has found that ninety-seven per cent of divorces are for the following causes: Adultery, desertion, cruelty, imprisonment for crime, habitual drunkenness, neglect of family. Over sixty per cent were for the first two causes. Divorce is but a symptom of more serious evils, and it is these evils which are undermining the foundation of the modern home. It is time for the country to awaken to the turpitude of her sins, and, while the chastening rod of war is upon us, to repent before God, else in the decadence of our homes will be written the same degradation which came to Rome.

Henry Ward Beecher on "Little Lies."

"Little lies" deteriorate conscience. You can by a blow crush and destroy the conscience, or you can quibble and gnaw it to pieces. There is one way in which a lion strikes down his prey, and there is another way in which a rat comes at its prey; and in time the gnawing of vermin is as fatal to beauty and life itself as the stroke of the lion's paw. These little infidelities to duty, truth, rectitude, lower the moral tone, limit its range, destroy its sensibility-in short, they put out its light. It is recorded of a lighthouse erected on a tropical shore that it once like to have failed for the most unlooked-for reason. When first kindled, the brilliant light drew about it such clouds of insects which populate the evening and night of equatorial lands that they covered and fairly darkened the glass. There was a noble light that shone out into the darkness and vanquished night, that all the winds could not disturb, nor all the clouds and storms hide; but the gauzy wings and soft bodies of myriads of insects, each one of which was insignificant, effectually veiled the light, and came near defeating the proposed gift to mariners. And so it is in respect to the conscience.-Henry Ward Beecher.

T. F. Moore's Definition of "Campbellite."

BY F. W. SMITH.

I said in a previous reply, this:

Editor Moore charges me with defending "Campbellism," and I will now call upon him to do the following: (1) Give a clear and succinct definition of "Campbellism." Do not content yourself by saying, "It is the doctrine originated by Alexander Campbell," as is your custom. Nevermind now who originated the thing you call "Campbellism," I demand a clearly defined statement of the thing itself, item by item. (2) If you succeed in showing that I believe, teach, and practice one thing in religion that Alexander Campbell or any other uninspired man originated, I promise you here and now to give it up. Here is work for you, and I insist that you go to it.

In answer to the foregoing request, here is what my friend gives us:

Brother Smith calls on me to give a clear and succinct definition of Campbellism. I will try to make it plain enough for the common people to understand, but may not be plain enough for Brother Smith's folks.

1. It consists of a people who are covenanted together in church capacity, accepting the system of doctrine as held by Alexander Campbell. Not that Campbell originated said system of doctrine, but gathered from other faiths antedating his ministry. Mr. Campbell got his act of baptism from the Baptists; his design, subject, and administration, from Catholics, or those coming from Catholicism. Possibility of apostasy may have come directly from Methodism, but this, too, came from Catholicism through Methodism. Their church government came from Presbyterians. If they have a single doctrine not advocated by some sect before them, I am not able to name it. If they will return to others the doctrine taught by them before the rise of Campbellism, they would not have any doctrine left.

They are a people who advocate a salvation by works, and seem not to know the salvation by grace taught in the word.

3. Alexander Campbell, the one man who put together the system of doctrine they hold, was truly an educated man, born in Ireland, educated at Glasgow University, and came to the United States in 1809 as a Presbyterian preacher, but soon departed from that faith and organized a society whose doctrine was that the Bible should be the sole creed of the church, from which has come what is now the Campbellite Church and various other names, such as "Disciple," or "Christian Church." Mr. Campbell being the founder of said society, he held the prominent place to have his people make him a leader among them, therefore other people called them "Campbellites," because they followed with him in faith and practice.

Baptists have worn the name of their leaders, such as Petrobrussians, Lollards, etc., after these leaders. Campbellites have never accepted this name, but most generally called themselves "Christian," "church of Christ," "church of God," etc. This is a rough definition of it, but no one has or can give the definition that my friend asks, as it is an undefinable sect, continually changing. One tenet of Campbellism has stayed with it, and that is, "Do and live," not do and die.

2. Alexander Campbell did teach baptism as a condition of salvation, though he did not originate it. It was taught as far back as A.D. 250, and even some antedate this date. This design of baptism split the church in Rome in the year 250 A.D., when Cornelius and Novatus were before the church as candidates for pastor. Cornelius led, and that church eeased to be recognized as a true church of Christ from that date. Infant sprinkling originated after this when this design of baptism was more generally taught. All of them then believed in native depravity, and they conceived the idea if the child died in infancy it was hopelessly lost, therefore the discovery was made that if it was baptized it would be saved. This design of baptism is one doctrine you teach that the Scriptures de not teach, hence some uninspired man originated it.

2. One other doctrine you teach is that the Holy Spirit himself does not come in actual contact with the sinner's heart in being saved. This doctrine is not taught in the Scriptures, therefore was originated by some uninspired man.

3. The doctrine of the possibility of apostasy is not taught in the Scriptures, and was originated by some uninspired man.

4. The doctrine of unrestricted, or open, communion is not taught in the Book, hence is a doctrine originated by some uninspired man.

I am persuaded that you believe the affirmative of the four doctrines named above, and not one of them is taught in the Scriptures.

It will be observed that Editor Moore freely and unreservedly admits that Alexander Campbell did not originate anything in the way of religious teaching or doctrine. This admission should, for decency's sake, impel Brother Moore to cease calling any one a "Campbellite," no matter if he should prove that some believe and teach the same things religiously that Campbell believed and taught. The Mormons believe, teach, and practice that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and that immersion only is scriptural baptism. The Baptists believe, teach, and practice the same things, and it would be just as legitimate to call T. F. Moore a "Mormon" as it is for him to call me a "Campbellite." If not, why not? But he says: "Not that Campbell originated said system of doctrine, but gathered from other faiths antedating his ministry." Suppose it could be shown that Campbell did survey the religious field and that he gathered from the different ecclesiastical establishments what truth each held and proceeded to teach and practice those truths? Then what? Would those who accepted the truths Campbell taught be followers of Campbell or followers of Him who is the Author of those truths? To answer the question is simply to ask It—a thing which even Brother Moore can see.

All that now remains for my friend Moore to do is to show that what Campbell "gathered from other faiths antedating his ministry" did not come from the word of God. But when he begins this work, he will have to mark the "action" of baptism as coming from "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" (Jude 3), or else repudiate his own practice, for he holds to immersion. He is, however, mistaken in saying that Campbell "got his act of baptism from the Baptists." There were some people who taught and practiced immersion that antedated the Baptist sect several centuries-viz., those mentioned in the New Testament. There is not a Baptist preacher in all this Southland that would baptize a candidate like Campbell was baptized. He positively refused to relate any experience before baptism, nothing more than to confess his faith in Christ. Again, Campbell taught that none were fit subjects for baptism except believers. Hence, as my friend holds that none save believers are fit subjects for baptism, he will have to mark Campbell's teaching on this point genuine. Before Brother Moore can deny Campbell the right to immerse people, he must repudiate the Baptist Church and every Baptist preacher in the land as having such right, for Campbell was baptized by aBaptist preacher. But, again, he will have to show that none save a regularly ordained Baptist preacher has the right to baptize people; and when he undertakes that, I will show that Baptists at one time sprinkled for baptism, and that they got their baptism from a man who baptized himself.

On the question of the "possibility of apostasy," no matter from whom Campbell got it, it originally came from the word of God. The word of God not only teaches the "possibility" of apostasy and warns against it, but actually gives examples of some who did apostatize. Most certainly when one's faith in the resurrection is overthrown, that one has apostatized, and that is exactly what was

"And their word will eat as doth gangrene: of whom is Hymenæus and Philetus; men who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is passed already, and overthrow the faith of some," (2 Tim. 2: 17, 18.) This should be sufficient, but more will be given if required.

As to church government, I am surprised at friend Moore's lack of information. Campbell taught congregational independence with a plurality of elders, bishops, or overseers, in each congregation, with no jurisdiction beyond their respective congregations. Is that in the New Testament? "And when they had appointed for them elders in every church," etc. (Acts 14: 22.) "Paul and Timothy, servants of Christ Jesus, to all the saints in Christ Jesus, that are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons." (Phil. 1: 1.)

On the "design" of baptism, my friend says Campbell got his teaching from the Catholics. Well, suppose he could establish this fact, could he rest the case there? By no means, for he would be compelled to show that the New Testament does not teach baptism in order to the remission of sins. But if he means that Campbell taught that the water of baptism washes away sins, as Catholics are said to teach, I most emphatically deny it, and call for his proof. But what saith the word of God? "And Peter said, Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 38.) That is what Campbell taught, but T. F. Moore will not teach it. If Brother Moore will produce one passage that teaches people to be baptized "because of remission of sins," I will quit this investigation.

He says: "They are a people who advocate salvation by works." Let him explain what he means by this statement. Does he mean that Campbell taught salvation by "meritorious" works upon the part of man? If so, I deny it and call for the proof. In the meantime I ask my friend to explain Phil. 2: 12 and Matt. 25: 34-40 in the light of his no-work salvation. One of these passages says, "Work out your own salvation," and the other declares that the right to inherit the eternal kingdom is based upon feeding, giving to drink, clothing, and visiting the disciples of Christ. Come, my friend, tell us if there is any promise of salvation to those who do not engage in good works.

Love. No. 3.

BY S. W. BERRYMAN.

In this article I shall write concerning man's love to each other. The heart of every Christian should be filled with a strong love for humanity; and, indeed, the true Christian does have a deep interest in the welfare of every person. It is impossible for us to be true Christians and not have a fervent love for the human family, especially those who are of the household of faith.

1. Why should Christians love one another?

We are members of the same family, and, as such, we should have a fervent love for our brothers and sisters. "That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." (1 Cor. 12: 25, 26.)

We prove to the world that we are the disciples of Christ. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." (John 13: 34, 35.)

Love is a fruit of the Spirit. "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no (Gal. 5: 22, 23.)

Love is a direct commandment. "These things I command you, that ye love one another." (John 15: 17.) "But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another." (1 Thess. 4: 9.) "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you." John 15: 12.)

God dwells in us. "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us." (1 John 4: 12.)

We pass from death unto life. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." (1 John 3: 14.)

Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, and is the fulfilling of the law. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." (Rom. 13: 10.)

It is impossible for us to love God and not love the brethren. "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment we have from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also," (1 John 4: 20, 21.)

We abide in the light. "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him." (1 John 2: 10.)

There is sufficient proof in the above scriptures to inspire the heart of every Christian with a greater love for others. Love should be the controlling principle of every heart. To my mind, the happiest hours of human life are spent in worship with brethren who truly love each other. Just think what a joy it is to meet in worship with a congregation where true love abounds! No envy, no strife, no divisions; but love, peace, and happiness prevail. Discord cannot come where true love is. Congregations that are divided do not love each other as they should. Christians must manifest the spirit of love to each other to meet the approval of Jehovah.

2. What is our condition if we do not love brethren?

We are not of God. "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." (1 John 3: 10.)

We are in darkness. "He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now." (1 John 2: 9.)

We are murderers. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." (1 John 3: 15.)

We abide in death. "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." (1 John 3: 14.)

These scriptures clearly reveal the sad condition of Christians who do not love each other. Dear brother, have you any hatred in your heart toward your brother? If you have, you had better get rid of it and manifest the spirit of love; if you do not, eternal woe will be your destiny.

3. How should we love each other?

Without hypocrisy. "Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good." (Rom. 12: 9.)

With a pure heart. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently," (2 Pet. 1: 22.)

In deed and in truth. "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth." (1 John 3: 18.)

With a continual love. "Let brotherly love continue." (Heb. 13: 1.)

Only One.

Hundreds of stars in the pretty sky;

Hundreds of shells on the shore together;

Hundreds of birds that go singing by;

Hundreds of bees in the sunny weather;

Hundreds of dewdrops to greet the dawn;

Hundreds of lambs in the purple clover;

Hundreds of butterflies out on the lawn—

But only one mother the wide world over.

Old Testament Characters-Abel. No. 1.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

Abel is the fourth Old Testament character that we wish to study. It will be well for the reader to review the following scriptures: Gen. 4: 2, 4, 8, 9, 25; Matt. 23: 35; Luke 11: 51; Heb. 11: 4; 12: 24; 1 John 3: 12. These are all the scriptures that have a direct bearing upon Abel. It seems that God, in giving the history of the human family, just mentions such characters along down the line as are best for us to know. He has not mentioned all who come in the lineage of the human family; only those whose example will teach, admonish, encourage, and warn us. We may expect, then, to find in Abel, since he is mentioned, some lesson of instruction, encouragement, warning, and hope.

The history of the human family is the history of sin; the history of sin is also the history of redemption. The events of human redemption are so closely interwoven with the history of sin that it is impossible to give one without treating the other. In this history, no two persons could be mentioned which so aptly bring out the wide contrast between the true and false, between the spirit of Satan and the Spirit of God, than can be brought out in the contrast between Cain and Abel. Some things appear best by way of contrast; the contrast seems to emphasize the dominant traits of each and give us a clearer vision of the things contrasted. We do not see Abel as such an outstanding character, so much as we see him in contrast with Cain. In nearly all of the references made of him in the Bible, we find his name associated with that of Cain. Cain's wickedness and sin, selfishness and unbelief, are put in strong contrast with the righteousness. consecration, and faithfulness of Abel. When we recall the sinful character of Cain, we are reminded of the loyalty and piety of Abel. Whatever we may have learned to have entered into the character of Cain, we may take as the opposite traits of character for Abel.

Man, as we have learned in the study of Adam, is composed of two parts, at least. In the creation of Adam, we learned that Adam was made of the dust of the earth and was earthy; then God breathed into him, into his nostrils, the breath of life, and the man became a living soul. Man may give special attention to either part of his being. Some give more attention to the material part; a few give attention to the immaterial, spiritual part. In this contrast, Cain represents the dust, earthy or material part; while Abel represents the immortal, spiritual, or eternal part of man. Such a divine contrast between the fleshly or carnal side of human nature and the spiritual and eternal part must impress us with the important lesson that God places the emphasis upon the eternal part, as represented by Abel. Jehovah stamps his approval upon the immortal and spiritual side of our being. Our bodies are made by Jehovah, are a part of his handiwork; our spirits are a part of himself, hence receive his highest approba-

We wish now to study Abel's sacrifice. This is the first instance of acceptable worship on record. Adam and Eve may have worshiped, but we have no record of it in the whole book of God. Cain may have worshiped before the events of his unfaithful sacrifice, but we do not know, as the record is silent on that. Also, Abel may have worshiped Jehovah before this instance; if he did, there is no record of it. We do know that Abel's offering was acceptable, his worship pleasing to Jehovah, and his sacrifice was stamped with the approval of Jehovah. We are not so much interested in the particular form of worship, but the worship itself. What are the elements that enter into this acceptable worship? Upon what basis or principle did Abel act to become so pleasing unto Jehovah? We wish to answer these inquiries before we have concluded our study on Abel.

We have already learned in the study of Cain that the essential difference between the offering of Cain and Abel was that of faith. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more acceptable sacrifice than Cain." Abel had the faith which enabled him to believe that "God is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." His life was a diligent seeking to please God, and from all such persons God gladly receives their offerings. When an offering is the true expression of the soul's gratitude, love, devotion, and faith, it is acceptable unto God. Faith is one of the essential characteristics of the soul that commends it to God. "Without faith it is impossible to be well pleasing unto him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." (Heb. 11: 6.)

When one has faith in God with all the fullness that that ' means, he is well pleasing to God. Faith in him enables one to seek diligently after him, to inquire of Jehovah's ways and fulfill every requirement of Jehovah's will. This Abel did in his worship and sacrifice. Abel had faith and acted upon that faith in his service to God; Cain did not have faith, but acted upon human judgment. This is the great difference between the two worshipers. lashed the sea, as did Moses; but the sea did not part for Xerxes as it did for Moses. Moses smote it in obedience to God, Xerxes did not; Moses did it by faith, Xerxes did not; hence the difference. Hercules is represented as rending the jaws of lions, as did Samson; Samson did it by the power of God, and Hercules by human skill. Samson performed his feats by faith: Hercules did not. Hence the difference between the real and the imaginary performances. It was upon the ground or basis of faith that Abel stood approved of God, and it is upon the ground or basis of faith that we to-day stand approved of God.

Division in the Fairfax Church of Christ, Winchester, Ky.

(Published by request.)

After spending three days listening to the story of the division in the church of Christ worshiping at Fairfax Avenue, Winchester, Ky., as told by those meeting at Fairfax and at the courthouse, we found the following:

On the last Sunday in July, 1917, Brother H. C. Shoulders handed in his resignation as evangelist of the Fairfax congregation, stating that he had decided that he could do better work elsewhere and that some one else could do better work at Fairfax than he. Two of the elders (M. P. Lowry and W. M. Harding), not calling in question Brother Shoulders' sincerity, accepted his resignation; one (Wallace Hukle) refused to accept the resignation; and the fourth (J. W. Harding) suggested that Brother Shoulders be requested to remain with the congregation till December 31, 1917, and then decide whether it would be best to accept or reject the resignation, which suggestion was accepted. In the meantime Brother Shoulders received a letter signed by one hundred and eighty-five of the three hundred and twenty-eight members, requesting him to remain, but the two elders who accepted the resignation did not deem it wise to reconsider their acceptance of the resignation. Brother Shoulders severed his connection with the congregation at the time designated and entered another field of labor. The two elders who accepted the resignation are accused of "lording it over God's heritage" for so doing.

On one occasion after the resignation was tendered, at a meeting of the congregation, when there was much confusion and excitement, some one cried out: "Let all the friends of Brother Shoulders meet in the afternoon." From this it appears that the whole trouble grew out of the question as to whether Brother Shoulders' resignation should be accepted or rejected. The division is in direct violation of the instruction given by the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 1: 10-13), and those who are fostering such division are carnal (1 Cor. 3: 1-9); and to be carnally-minded is death (Rom. 8: 6).

When these facts were stated at a meeting called at our request on Friday morning, June 20, when representatives were present from those meeting at the courthouse and at Fairfax, Brother Shoulders, with deep emotion, rose and said: "Brethren, without any if's in it, I say that I have sinned, and ask you to forgive me," This produced a deep emotion in the meeting, and those present, who had taken part in the division, confessed their sins in the matter. When the meeting closed that day, we felt that things were in such a shape that harmony would soon be restored and that peace and love would prevail. Brother Shoulders and Brother J. L. Jackson (who had been preaching for those meeting at the courthouse) were then requested to do all in their power, both publicly and privately, to make all see the importance of all uniting in the Lord's work and working together as they had formerly done. Brother Shoulders was requested to remain over the following Lord's day to preach to those meeting at the courthouse, so that he might the more effectually use his influence to that end. Sunday evening an appointment was made by those meeting at the courthouse for the following Wednesday evening to consider the matter. At the Wednesday-night meeting Brother Jackson summed up the situation as he saw it, and concluded by saying: "The courthouse congregation did wrong in leaving Fairfax as they did; and as this was an unscriptural act, it made the organization of the congregation unscriptural, and I cannot preach for an unscriptural congregation." He then spent two days visiting from house to house, endeavoring to get them to return to the congregation which they had left, and, failing in this, he severed his connection with them. This we believe was the scriptural course left for him to follow, for no faithful preacher of the gospel can encourage such a division without sinning against God and his church.

We make this statement of facts in the fear of God, believing that those who have separated themselves from the Fairfax congregation and are meeting as a separate congregation have no scriptural grounds for so doing and are incurring the wrath of God.

The Church at Cincinnati.

BY J. D. WALLING.

It was my pleasure to spend eight days with the church at Cincinnati, Ohio, beginning on the eve of September 15. I have always had a deep interest in this congregation. Its possibilities are great. In a city of four hundred thousand people of every nationality, with its suburbs of Newport, Covington, Belivue, Ludlow, Bromley, and Fort Thomas, all in Kentucky, and with Norwood, Anderson Ferry, and many others on the north side of the river, and only one struggling congregation in the midst of them all, and very few of the members living in the city proper, but their faith is encouraging.

I must tell you of one family. They have five children, all small. Yet this good mother attends almost every service, bringing all of these five children, and they all look neat, sweet, and clean, and are an inspiration to any Christian. More than that, it costs them forty cents, and they must come over two car lines, every time they go to church; that would be eighty cents on Lord's day; but they go. Wake up, "slackers!"

The church at Cincinnati has had many reverses and hard obstacles to overcome. After the Russell-White debate it grew and had an enthusiastic membership. Then one of their leaders, and beloved for his zeal and service, Brother Rooch, was taken from them by death. Then came the Patmont mistake, the most severe of them all. But they will not give up; they have learned that "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and are renewed in zeal. they have now adopted the right course, that of community service—that is, to have meeting each week in some one of the suburbs, aside from their regular services at the church house in the midweek prayer meeting and Lord'sday services. Because of the reverses they have had, and especially their Patmont mistake, they have had no minister giving his time to the work; and all outside help which they had received, and which had enabled them to support an evangelist, has stopped and the work has fallen altogether on the few faithful members there, who have determined to "stand, and having done all, to stand" to just keep fighting, and stand-hold, and stand! But, beloved, is it right to neglect so great an opportunity for doing good? Should we now, in their sore time of need, forsake them? Where could a missionary do a greater work? What is more valuable than the souls of men? Food and clothing are needful; but the souls of men are hungry, and they need to be clothed with righteousness. Men and women, these are perilous times. "Where will you spend eternity?" What have you in your hands? I am asking that you again take up this work in Cincinnati; that you send your contribution to the Christian Leader as before. Let's put the gospel in each one of the suburbs. By putting a good man in that field, it can be done. The elders of the church in Cincinnati are good, true, self-sacrificing men, and are above the average for ability. We can, therefore, expect, and we are expecting, great things from them. While Brother F. L. Rowe has been, and is now, much interested in this work, his membership has never been with this congregation. He meets with them often and does what he can for their good; but his membership is at Withamsville, where he is doing a good work. Beloved, please do not neglect this open door.

Article 28.

Every Child Needs the Influence and Inspiration of Spiritual Motherbood as Much as Plants Require Water and Sunshine-Rightly Trained, the Nurture Power of Mothers Would Help to Solve the Moral Problems of the Race.

Woman's power to nurture the good has been a theme for the poets of all times. Dante saw Beatrice but once, yet it was she who sent him on his way singing the greatest song of Christendom-the anthem of redemption from pride and selfishness. Wagner's Brunnehilde suffered her goddess nature to give place to the lowly limitations of human weakness that she might save the heroic Walsungs. Gethe's phrase, "The eternally womanly, leading men upward and on," is familiar to all.

Froebel also not only pointed out the spiritual nature of womanhood, but upon it he built his world of hope for the advancement of humanity. In the nurture power of woman he sees the means of solving the moral problems of the race, of strengthening its spiritual life. It is his aim to lift motherhood to its highest plane; to see that chance plays a comparatively small part in the educative processes of humanity, that certainty encompasses the life of the children. He sounds the call to women for a higher unselfishness, courage, and insight. Because of their universal love for things weak and helpless, he claims that all women are called into the fostering care of children, whether their own or others.

"I wish I belonged somewhere," pouted the hotel-bred child of wealth and luxury, yearning for a real home and a real mother. To cure his ennui, his physical mother sent him to a kindergarten around the corner. "I'd like to stay here," he said to the kindergartner one day at parting. "all the time-eat and sleep-all day and all night-I wish you were my mother!" he finished in a climax of aspiration. He evidently felt the lack of real mothering in his own mother.

No child, however rich or poor, should be deprived of the spiritual influence of real motherhood by means of which alone his powers may be developed and without which lives have often been blighted.

What fitter task could Froebel realize for woman than for her to follow the path which she has more or less instinctively chosen throughout the ages? Yet it is with some fear and much instruction that he urges her on her way. Not lightly does he send her forth, but weighted with the greatest burden of responsibility that woman has ever borne. Why not trust her to do her work uninstructed, unconscious of the part she is playing? Her sympathy is undoubtedly great and spontaneous; but sympathy is not enough to insure wise discipline of the unruly tendencies of the human child. Misguided, sympathy fosters dependence and encourages weakness and self-indulgence; untrained, it deals but vaguely with the practical problems of life. Moreover, even in woman sympathy is often undeveloped. "Did your father whip you, as I wrote him?" asked a cross-looking teacher of a small, cringing Italian in the second year of public school. The same child came under observation in a fourth-year class some time later. He was listening with rapt attention to the immortal story of the "King's Children," told by a normal-school practice student. The comment, "How alive Pedro is to the story!" brought out the irritable response from the teacher in charge: "O, yes, he'll listen to stories, because he likes them; but he's a bad boy." Feeling that there must be something worth finding behind a face lit with enthusiasm for a tale so noble, the observer visited the home (socalled) of the unfortunate Pedro: a drunken father and mother, a girl of twelve earning the living, the boy hungry for food and comradeship-it was all comprehensible in a moment. Pedro was transferred to an instructor possessing insight and spiritual power. Like a dog he followed her everywhere, until she transformed his love into acts of service, and he became the most useful member of the class.

Even when the intentions are of the best, many are the pitfalls that surround the unenlightened experimentalist. I have to whip him," a father gravely asserted of his sensitive, highly imaginative boy, "because then he stops doing the thing. He does something else, though," he added lamely, feeling, but not understanding, that he was not reaching the cause, but only the particular act. Had the child been less strong and buoyant in temperament, he might, no doubt, have crushed him into submission; as it was, he only confused him; whereas firm, but sympathetic, comradeship might have cleared his path and helped him on to the higher manhood of which he was capable.

The Shining Virtue of Generosity.

Comparatively few, even among the kindest and most helpful, estimate at its full value the worth of a generous heart. There are some who regard the generous person as an easy mark for covetous schemers, and others see in him a half-brother to the spendthrift. Those who so judge have not learned to distinguish between the generosity which scatters wealth for amusement or for vanity or sheer love of notoriety, and the sort that gives with gladness, yet unostentatiously, though not without discrimination, and always with a worthy object in view. Of the many millions of Americans who within the last few weeks have given so splendidly to the great causes for which this nation stands, the public will probably never know the names of more than a few hundred. They were not selfseeking, nor playing for the world's applause. They know, too, that a virtue practiced in the limelight loses half its value, if not all.

Hear what the wise king in Scripture says of the generous-hearted: "There is that scattereth and increaseth yet more; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth only to want. The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."

These words from the eleventh chapter of Proverbs are worth remembering. It shows that generosity is, in the highest sense, a good investment, yet only where it is practiced without expectation of return, while the niggardly soul which clutches its wealth tighter at every call finds it dwindling in his grasp.—Christian Herald.

The Church and Christ's Second Coming.

In the course of the summer we have given space to eleven contributed articles dealing with Scripture interpretation in its relation to that visible return of Christ, which is looked for by a great section of his people. The writers of these articles have been men well known for biblical scholarship, to a great extent teachers in our theological seminaries. We have added from time to time extracts from letters of criticism and commendation which have come to us unsolicited.

In drawing this discussion to a close, it may be well to state once more something of our own point of view and the conclusions which seem to us to be indicated by the papers which we have published. We desire to emphasize once more the fact that this is an open question. While we ourselves are entirely unconvinced by the premillennial argument as derived from Scripture interpretation, that the visible return of our Lord is imminent—much more that its date may be calculated—we are glad to acknowledge that our brethren who hold this view have an equal right with us to the common Christian life and to the opinions which they and we have formed each by their own study of Scripture and of the world. The questions whether Christ is to return in bodily form and whether he is to come speedily are matters for open debate among breth-But we are concerned lest that debate may prove distracting for the church in its great duty of representing Christ to men.

In the second place, we wish to reassert our complete faith in the divine purpose in history. We have not been able to envisage to ourselves such a return of our Lord as our premilienarian brethren expect; nor can we find in the present experiences of the world any real portents of such a catastrophic change in human history as they are looking for. Yet in case we find ourselves mistaken, we welcome our Lord's coming in any form of manifestation which he himself may choose. He cannot reveal himself in any form or manner for which, just so soon as it becomes evident it is he, our hearts will not find a wel-

We think it right and wise to warn our readers against some extremes of premillenarian belief, assertion, and methods of propaganda which have shocked and repelled so many of our correspondents. We are not, however, so so many of our correspondents. We are not, nowever, so uncharitable as to accuse the whole body of premillenarian believers of such withdrawals from active Christian work and such excesses of uncharitable judgment as have been complained of. The expectation of the speedy, visible return of our Lord has often been a high incentive for faithful testimony and steadfast continuance in work. The real emphasis for character, the real test of faith, is not a man's belief upon this special point, but his enthusiasm for serv-We think, indeed, that our readers should be warned against the extremes of passionate theorizing at both extremes of this argument. Unfavorable judgments as to the Christian character of all who hold a theory with which we personally disagree on that ground alone is wholly contrary to the spirit of Christ.

Some of these excesses on the side of those who believe that the end of human history is just at hand and that all who are not ready to sit down and wait for Christ to declare himself are guilty of unfaithfulness seem to us to stand in the way of needed efforts toward the uplifting of humanity. In those efforts Christ's followers must lead. It is our business, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, In those efforts Christ's followers must lead. to do what we can with a deep sense of our responsibility to make the world over into the image of the thought of Christ, in justice, freedom, peace, and good will. To bring men into those personal relations with Christ which make for a Christlike character is and must always be the first business of Christ's followers. The world is not, in our opinion, a vessel drifting toward the sands of final shipwreck, nor can our hearts and consciences be satisfied with a scheme which provides sudden rescue for a few while it leaves the great majority to destruction. What God will do to-morrow or hereafter is for him to determine. Our business is to transform the brotherhood of men, up to the limit of our powers, into the image of the kingdom of Christ.-Congregationalist and Advance.

The New Testament teaching is that the second coming of Christ would be as a thief in the night, and hence Christians are urged to be watchful and ready. Paul did not teach the Thessalonians that the second coming of Christ was imminent, neither do the words "we who are alive" in the first letter to the Thessalonians indicate that he expected to be alive at the Parousia, for years afterwards he wrote: "He that raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also with Jesus, and shall present us with you." A patient and watchful waiting is the proper attitude for a Christian. "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patience of Christ." All Christians as well as the Thessalonians are urged to wait in patience for Christ's second coming.

Woman Suffrage.

The woman-suffrage amendment was defeated by two votes in the Senate. The editor of this page is of firm conviction that it is not best for the women of this country to enter politics. Women cannot be homemakers and active in politics. The Spirit admonishes "the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, to be soberminded, chaste, workers at home." I shall rejoice to see God's will prevail. 0 0 0

Whither?

Nothing can benefit the man with no purpose. We must aim high if we would reach high. Without an aim in life, there is no opportunity, no advantage, no condition that can lead to a happy destiny. An old proverb is: "No wind can do him good who steers for no port." We must try for heaven, we must be fit for heaven to inherit it. But we should mean more by our lives than simply reaching heaven. We should use our lives in doing good, in making the world better. To-day is vocal with calls to use our influence for good. o o

Obedience.

The people of the nation are coming up at the draft call most patriotically. A young lawyer, who has held positions of large responsibility, said the other day: "I am ready for whatever I am called on to do. They may give me a commission, or set me to teaching French or mathematics, or order me to run errands. I am ready for any sort of service." That is the spirit of the vast body of our men.-Herald and Presbyter.

Are we as loyal to Christ's commands? Are we ready for his service? He set us an example of perfect obedience. We should follow in his steps. Let us answer all the Lord's calls. If so, victory is sure.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain the meaning of having an answer to a good conscience. W. A. Adams.

The passage in its connection in the Revised Version reads: "Which also after a true likeness doth now save you, even baptism, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the interrogation of a good conscience toward God." (1 Pet. 3: 21.) The meaning as I understand it is that the soul seeking the forgiveness of sins inquires: "What shall I do to remove the sense of unforgiven sins and to make my conscience clear?" The answer is: "Repent, and be baptized." (Acts 2: 38.) The Lord has the inquiry, or interrogation, answered in baptism. Baptism would be meaningless were it not for the resurrection of Christ.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain Mark 3: 25. Does this mean a home where the father is of one belief and the mother is of another? X.

Mark 3: 25 reads: "If a house be divided against itself, that house will not be able to stand." This states the general truth. Most states and kingdoms crumble not by the power of foreign enemies, but by the weakness due to divisions. The Pharisees charged Christ with casting out devils by Beelzebub. Christ quotes this passage to show them this is not possible. If he were working with Satan and yet seeking to destroy his power, then he could not exist. No particular reference was made to the father having one belief and the mother having another, only in a general way. There should be unity of sentiment between father and mother, if they expect to prosper and to enjoy the Lord's blessings.

Brother McQuiddy: (1) I am unable to understand James 5: 14, 15. I want to know if this applies to the church to-day. If not, why not? And if so, to what extent? (2) Please explain Mark 16: 15-18. Does this mean that the signs would follow the baptized believers, or does it refer to the apostles? I am confronted with these questions very often, and I would be glad to have you give me whatever light you can on both of these passages.

J. C. Boyp.

(1) The passage referred to in James reads: "Is any among you sick? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save him that is sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, it shall be forgiven him." Some hold the view that this passage refers to the early church, when miraculous gifts were imparted by the laying on of apostolic hands as a sign to unbelievers. One of these was the gift of healing. It is held that in many of the early churches there were elders who had this gift. I am not able to accept this view, but believe that the passage is to be applied to the church now. The anointing of oil in ancient times was a very common remedy in sickness. If the passage simply refers to miraculous healing, there could be no reason for the Holy Spirit's directing the use of oil, which is a natural means and not miraculous. If a miracle was intended, it could have been wrought as well without the oil as with it. It is not intimated that even this unction is to save the sick man, but the prayer of faith. What is here recommended is to be done as a natural means of restoring health, which, while they used prayer and supplication to God, they were not to neglect. We learn that the anointing with oil was freely used in the times of Christ. Mark 6: 13 declares: "And they cast out many demons, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." Furthermore, that it was the custom of the Jews to apply it as the means of healing, and that James refers to this custom, is evident from the case of the wounded man ministered unto by the good Samaritan. (Luke 10: 34.) The anointing with oil is for the cure of the body and not of the soul. It is the prayer of faith that saves the sick. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. God uses the prayer of faith as the means of a sick man's recovery. However, it does not mean that the prayer of faith shall always save the sick. There are often cases where faith and prayer are both ineffectual, because God sees it would be prejudicial to the patient's salvation to be restored; hence all faith and prayer should be offered on this ground: "If it be for thy glory and eternal good for the man's soul, let him be restored; if otherwise, Lord, pardon and purify him and receive him to thyself in glory." (2) Mark 16: 15-18 reads: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned. And these signs shall accompany them that believe; in my name shall they cast out demons; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall in no wise hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." By reference to Acts 2: 4-12 it will be found that the apostles actually spoke with new tongues. We find also that Paul actually took up a serpent (Acts 28: 5) and was not harmed. While the deadly viper fastened itself on the hand of Paul, the Holy Spirit tells us: "Howbeit he shook off the creature into the fire, and took no harm." (Acts 28: 5.) I am inclined to the view that this passage is to be limited to the apostolic and miraculous age of the church. It appears to me that "them" refers back to "them" in verse 14 for its antecedent. The grammatical construction requires us to look to verse 14 for the antecedent of "them" in verse 17. In the apostolic and miraculous age of the church the disciples did just what the Savior said should be done.

How to Become an Imitator of God.

If you desire this faith, you likewise shall receive first of all the knowledge of the Father. For God loved mankind, on whose account he made the world, to whom he rendered subject all things on earth, to whom he gave reason and understanding, to whom alone he imparted the privilege of looking upwards to himself, whom he formed after his own image, to whom he sent his only begotten Son, to whom he promised the heavenly kingdom, and he will give it to them that love him. And when you have attained this knowledge, with what joy do you think you will be filled? Or, how will you love him who has first so loved you? And if you love him you will be an imitator of his kindness; and do not wonder that a man may become an imitator of God. He can, if he is willing; for it is not by ruling over his neighbors or by seeking to get the better of those that are weaker or by being rich and behaving roughly to one's inferiors, that happiness is found; nor can any one by these things become an imitator of God; but these things are alien to his majesty. On the contrary, he who takes upon himself the burden of his neighbor; he who, in whatsoever respect he may be superior, is ready to benefit another who is deficient; he who, whatsoever things he has received from God, by distributing these to the needy, becomes a god to those who receivehe is an imitator of God .- Selected.

E. P. Watson reports a good meeting at Purdin, Ind., in which there were sixteen baptisms and two restorations.

From E. P. Watson, Browning, Mo., October 10: "I am at this place in a good meeting, with good crowds and splendid interest."

J. C. Estes is in a good meeting at Bean's Creek, Tenn. He has time for another meeting before returning to his home at Dallas, Texas. Address Brother Estes in care of this office.

The influenza patients at David Lipscomb College, Fanning Orphan School, and the Tennessee Orphans' Home are doing nicely. A great deal of additional expense has been incurred at the two orphans' homes, and contributions should be increased to meet this emergency.

From I. B. Bradley, Dickson, Tenn.: "The meeting at Finney, Ky., was poorly attended, occasioned partly by the busy season and partly by the scare from the influenza. There are some good brethren and sisters there, and they stood nobly by the work; and they know how to treat a preacher, too."

From George W. Farmer, Lebanon, Tenn., October 11: "I have been at home very sick for the last ten days. I was taken sick the day the Ethridge meeting began. I tried to stay with it, but was forced to give it up and come home. I am doing my best to improve so that I can resume my work. I expect, the Lord willing, to begin at Rome, Tenn., on the third Lord's day."

Let us remember Brother Farmer before the throne of grace.

From Emmett Creacy, Horse Cave, Ky., October 11: "I closed a good meeting of one week's duration at Coral Hill on Wednesday night. Fifteen were baptized and two were restored to the church. The brethren seemed to appreciate my efforts. They are building a new meetinghouse, and meet every Lord's day in the schoolhouse to break bread. The Baptist people let us use their house for the meeting. Brethren, do more for the Lord each day you live, and he will bless and help to keep you pure."

From J. H. Murrell, Box 24, Tennessee City, Tenn., October 11: "From September 18 to September 30 I was at Dalton, Ga. Rainy weather and a busy time hindered, but we trust some good was done. I preached at Tunnel Hill, Ga., the first night in October. Some of my work has been postponed indefinitely, if not entirely canceled, on account of the influenza epidemic. I am considering a trip to Colorado and other Western States, and will be glad to hear from brethren anywhere in the West who wish me to visit them on the way or assist them in meetings. Mail sent to my home address any time should reach me."

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., October 7: "Please state through the Gospel Advocate that my address has been changed from Jackson, Tenn., to 325 Seventh Street, N. E., Washington, D. C. I urge the elders of all the congregations and parents who have relatives or friends here who are members to write me at once and send me their addresses. Please state also that the church of Christ meets at 10 A.M. for Bible school and at 11 A.M. for communion and preaching, in the Masonic Temple, corner of Eighth and F Streets. By making inquiry it will be easily found. I have made a sacrifice to come here to build up the 'one faith' we all love, and I want the prayers and services of every child of God. In any way you see you can help, let me hear from you. Why should not the church of Christ be a burning light in the Capitol City? Then let me have letters at once with the addresses of friends who are here."

A. H. Lannom writes from Ridgely, Tenn.: "I am sure that there are many readers of the Gospel Advocate who, if they knew the situation at Ridgely as I do, would send at least one dollar to aid them. There are no brethren more worthy than these. They have sacrificed and built a forty-five-hundred-dollar house of worship and have bought seats costing eight hundred dollars to seat it. Their house is a nice, modest edifice in the best section of this modern little city. The restrictive clause is in the deed. Now their seats are ready for delivery and their treasury is not sufficient, by more than one hundred dollars, to meet the bill; and, further, they have not had their annual meeting, which will take nearly one hundred dollars to support the preacher as he should be. There are but four families at this place, and all are renters but one. Now, brethren, they must have help or be very much embarrassed. Our religious neighbors will mock. If I have a friend who reads this, will you, for the sake of the cause of Christ in Ridgely and for my sake, send just one dollar to S. H. Gore, Ridgely, Tenn.? I pray that you may give this due consideration."

In reference to the Bible Chair at Austin, Texas, G. H. P. Showalter writes in the Firm Foundation: "Quite a number of others have written and pledged their moral support to the work. The services of A. B. Barret have been secured, and Brother Barret will be associated with me in the prosecution of the work. All pledges for the first month should be paid by October 25. All others who have promised donations should send in remittances as early as convenient. We want to have a good report to make at the close of the first month. There has already been received at the office twenty-eight dollars, and parties have been duly receipted. This will appear in itemized report early in November. The work is a great work, and to most of us it appears that our means could hardly be invested in a more effectual way for the cause of Christ. We want several more congregations and individuals who will make a regular monthly donation to the work. If more than sufficient to maintain the work through the winter is contributed, the excess will be applied either on the new building, which we hope to erect next year, or in such way as the committee may choose."

From J. H. McBroom, Perryopolis, Pa., October 10: "Since last report 1 have conducted meetings at the following places: Flat Creek, Hilham, Willow Grove, and Livingston, Tenn. The meetings were good. I have promised to return to all these places, except Livingston, next year. On the fourth Sunday in September I closed my second year's work with the church of Christ at Tompkinsville, Ky. The work was very pleasing, and I think much good was accomplished. There are many good people in that congregation. I hope the church will continue to grow and become a great power for good in that part of the State. I left B. C. Goodpasture and J. M. Patterson in a good meeting in that town. If you know these brethren, you realize I left the work in good hands. I had planned to be with them in the meeting, but they were one week late getting there, and I had to leave according to my plans. I have decided to evangelize for about twelve months, perhaps longer. I am ready to answer calls anywhere at any time. I desire to preach in Florida this winter. I am now in a meeting at Perryopolis, Pa. I go from here to Fayette City, Pa., and will be there till November 1. If other congregations in this part of the country desire my services, I suggest that they write me at once, and I shall be glad to serve them. Address me at P. O. Box 275, Fayette City, Pa."

Who Will Decide?

Along with the talk of a "league of nations" there is some talk of a "league of churches"-that is, the different denominations getting together by eliminating from their teaching all that is nonessential and preach only the essentials. I frankly admit that if the different denominations should, indeed, do this, they would get together, because in leaving off the nonessentials they would leave off all the doctrines and commandments of men, they would leave off all that is peculiar to each sect as such, and only the pure word of God would be preached, for only this is essential to salvation; but the trouble with this talk of leaving off nonessentials and preaching only the essentials is, they mean to leave off a part of God's word as nonessential and retain that which they claim is essential. Now, who is to decide, taking all that God says to us through his Son (see Heb. 1: 12), what is essential and what is nonessential, since Christ himself has said absolutely nothing about such a thing as a part of his teaching being essential and a part nonessential? Instead of his having said any such thing, he has said the very opposite-viz .: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," (See Matt. 4: 4.) Since Christ declares that we shall live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, how can any man or set of men proceed to divide God's word into essentials and nonessentials without doing it to his or their own condemnation? Shall we look at God's word as we do the thousands of eggs that come into Atlanta that have to be "candled" to see which are suitable to eat and which are not? If so, who, then, is to do the "candling?" And If it be true that in God's word we have the essentials and the nonessentials, and these nonessentials are the whole cause of the religious world's not being united and must be eliminated from our teaching and practice before the union God wants can be had, then is not God responsible for the division that now exists? And could he not have avoided it all by not allowing himself to speak all these nonessential commands? Shame on the man or set of men who allow themselves to be deceived by the devil in thus casting reflection on the character of God! Better be a downright infidel than join any such shameful proceeding in the name of religion.

That such a union may come would not surprise me, but that it will come from the underworld is a certainty. Union, indeed, God's people must love, long for, and work to obtain; but the only way to its realization is to get all religious bodies to believe the all-important truth that man lives by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God. He has commanded us to hear Christ. (See Matt. 17: 5.) He has not only commanded us to hear Christ, but to hear him "in all things whatsoever" he says unto us. (See Acts 3: 22, 23.) When any word or teaching is before us to decide whether it is essential or nonessential, there is but one thing to decide—viz.: Did Christ say it? Is it his teaching? If so, its essentiality is established, and to eliminate it is to perish.

In conclusion, let me say it would be fine if all religious bodies should come whole-heartedly to the determination to unite by eliminating all nonessentials and holding on to only the essentials; but when they do this, it will bring them to God's teaching—every word of it—and will cause them to cease teaching anything God has not spoken, hence to "speak where the Bible speaks and to be silent where it is silent," a thing, I am happy to say, the church of Christ is pleading for, in spite of the fact that many who claim to be members live not up to this plea.

Georgia, a Field White Unto the Harvest.

We ask the attention of our readers to the following letter from Brother Morgan H. Carter:

Four years ago last July I went to Georgia at the request of Brother S. H. Hall, who had been laboring in that splendid field for a number of years. God had greatly blessed Brother Hall's excellent work in Atlanta, and I gladly worked as his neighbor in the city of Macon for three years. The Lord was with us there, and we enjoyed a substantial growth from a small beginning to a firmly established church. During these years we were assisted by the prayers and fellowship of various individuals and congregations, whose splendid interest and earnest co-operation we deeply appreciate. Besides quite a number of protracted meetings and engagements for short visits, I had the privilege of doing some regular work at Hardie's Chapel, Albany, New Hope, and Columbus, all of which I enjoyed. Macon is adjacent to Camp Wheeler, and all who have friends or relatives there will do a good work by sending their addresses to C. E. Coleman, 200 Woolfork He was selected to fill the vacancy in evangelistic Street. work in Macon when I resigned to move to Atlanta last He is a fine man and the Lord's work prospers in vear.

Beginning last autumn, I enjoyed an excellent year of ork in Atlanta. To God be all the glory for any good work in Atlanta. work done. Brother Hall and the elders and members of the three congregations there are certainly splendid people to work with. I shall never forget the pleasant associations and joyous fellowship of the many friends I leave behind in Atlanta, East Point, Camp Gordon, Macon, and other Georgia cities and towns too numerous to name here. I have resigned my work in Atlanta to be back in university for a season. I leave as I came in Christian love, and shall always remember the friends and brethren and sisters who have made my stay in Georgia during these four years so pleasant. From time to time I shall write notes in the Gospel Advocate on the Georgia page, and shall always be very glad to hear from any friend and be of every service possible to the people of Georgia whom I have learned to love. When I have a vacation, I shall accept some of the numerous invitations to return to Georgia for a few days, and in the interim I shall pray for the success of the glorious work of our Master's kingdom. address is Vanderbilt University, Wesley Hall, Nashville, Tenn. Letters and visitors always welcome. May God Sincerely and fraternally. bless you as he sees good. MORGAN H. CARTER,

In connection with this statement of Brother Carter about his work in Georgia and his leaving us, to say the least, for a season, I wish to submit the following:

1. He is right in saying, "Georgia, a field white unto the harvest," and he has done much to give the people of this State the pure word of God. His work at Macon was monumental; no one, it seems to me, could have made more sacrifices for it, work for it harder and more persistently than he did the three years he was there. He did not stay with us as long as expected and desired, but in leaving he had our prayers and well-wishes in his new work in the university at Nashville, Tenn., and as a token of our love and esteem he was presented with a solid gold watch fob and locket suitably engraved, to keep through life in memory of our good days together in this great field.

2. The Lord has ever blessed us with all we need, hence is giving us more laborers for this field. Brother John Klingman will move to Marietta, out twenty miles from us, the last of this month, and another worker will be here to take Brother Carter's place the first of next month, and more are expected to follow.

The Support of Preachers.

BY J. C. M'Q.

The preacher who preaches the gospel simply to make a living or to make money is not worthy of the high calling. While preachers must live, the motive that prompts them in preaching the gospel should be the salvation of souls. The man who is not willing to endure hardness as a good soldier should not enter the ministry. He will do more harm to the cause of Christ than he will do good. A man should have the spirit of the apostle Paul, who endured stripes, imprisonment, hunger, shipwrecks, and fastings, in order that he might win people to the Lord Jesus Christ. I man who loves money more than he loves souls will lever be a success in preaching the gospel of Christ. Like hul, every true preacher should be able to say: "For if I peach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of; for necessity Islaid upon me; for woe is unto me, if I preach not the gopel." (1 Cor. 9: 16.) For it matters not how ready thefaithful preacher is to make sacrifices, he cannot devote his time and talents to the preaching of the gospel if it is necessary for him to encumber himself with the things of this life in order to make a living. The Holy Spirit says: "No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life; that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier." (2 Tim. 2: 4.) The soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ should be as free as possible to devote his energies to the preaching of the gospel of Christ.

> THEY THAT PREACH THE GOSPEL SHOULD LIVE OF THE GOSPEL.

No one who believes the word of God will question for one moment that Christians should support those who labor in word and doctrine. The Bible is so clear upon this subject that it seems almost superfluous to emphasize it here. Provision was made in the law of Moses for the support of those who devoted their time to ministering in sacred things. We read: "For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. Is it for the oxen that God careth, or saith he it assuredly for our sake? Yea, for our sake it was written: because he that ploweth ought to plow in hope, and he that thresheth, to thresh in hope of partaking. If we sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we shall reap your carnal things? If others partake of this right over you, do not we yet more? Nevertheless we did not use this right; but we bear all things, that we may cause no hindrance to the gospel of Christ. Know ye not that they that minister about sacred things eat of the things of the temple, and they that wait upon the altar have their portion with the altar? Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 9-14.) This makes it clear that it is the duty of Christians to support those who proclaim the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is as much the duty of the church to make sacrifices in order to do this as it is the duty of the preacher to make sacrifices in order to preach. Paul says: "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." If Christians had a ready mind, it would not be difficult for them to give sufficient support to all faithful ministers of the gospel of Jesus Christ. This they would do, and do it cheerfully. The Lord is ready and abundantly able to bless the man who gives liberally to the support of the gospel of Christ. "He that gathered much had nothing over; and he that gathered little had no lack."

LIVING IS HIGH.

I need not make any argument to convince any one of the truth of the statement that living is high. We have all experienced the high cost of the things that we eat and wear for so long a time that we need not be told of the high cost of living. Sometimes, however, I think that some of us are prone to imagine that the preacher can live on the same small sum that he has been doing for ages past. Some churches that have been paying a preacher ten dollars for preaching on Sunday and Sunday night are still paying the same amount. The churches that have been giving from thirty-five to fifty dollars for a ten-days' meeting are not giving any more now. Churches that do this are not showing proper appreciation for those who preach the gospel to them. There are Christians who are receiving much more for their produce than formerly, yet they are not giving any more for the spreading of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The sister who in times past sold eggs for ten and fifteen cents per dozen and is getting from thirty to fifty cents per dozen now certainly should be able to give more in dollars and cents to the preaching of the gospel. The preacher must pay the high price for his marketing. His meal, flour, potatoes, butter, and eggs are costing him almost a hundred per cent more than they did formerly. Churches are under obligations to do more in supporting the ministry than they have been doing.

I have been thinking of calling attention to this for some time, but on account of other pressing duties I have neglected to do so until now. I have heard faithful preachers say that they were not receiving any more in dollars and cents for preaching the gospel than they were receiving before the war. Let the churches be just with their preachers.

"Come Thou With Us, and We Will Do Thee Good."

BY E. A. E.

Hobab was the son of Reuel and Moses' brother-in-law.

Moses' father-in-law visited Moses at Sinai. Hobab must have gone with his father on this visit and must have remained after his father had returned home.

Moses generously invited Hobab to go with the Israelites on their journey through the wilderness and into the land of promise, saying: "We are journeying unto the place of which Jehovah said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good; for Jehovah hath spoken good concerning Israel."

This "good" was contained in God's many promises, which Moses believed. Hobab, if he would go, could feed with the Israelites in the wilderness upon the manna, could follow with them the cloud by day and pillar of fire by night, could learn the will of God, and could go with them finally into the land of promise.

This same invitation should be offered by every Christian to every sinner. Christians should realize that they are going somewhere, and that God has spoken good concerning them; and they should invite all sinners to go with them. The place to which Moses and the Israelites were journeying was only a type of the heavenly country to which Christians are traveling; the many good things which Moses and the Israelites enjoyed were only types of the richer, deeper, fuller, and more enduring spiritual blessings which Christians have. How urgent, then, should all Christians be in saying to every sinner: "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good; for Jehovah hath spoken good concerning [spiritual] Israel!"

But do Christians really believe the "precious and exceeding great promises" which God has made to them as Moses believed the promises which God made to Israel? These promises stimulate action. When Christians do not act, it is because they do not really believe these promises. To say nothing just here of their own indifferent and careless course, do they really believe that sinners, frequently their own dear ones, are doomed to destruction forever without submission to the gospel, and yet never seek their salvation? Why are some parents so ready and so apt to teach their children everything else but the word of God, If they really believe the word of God?

Hobab at first declined Moses' invitation. Moses became still more urgent, saying: "Leave us not, I pray thee; . . . and thou shalt be unto us instead of eyes." Hobab knew the wilderness well and could guide the Israelites about in it; for this reason Moses urged him to go, promising again that Hobab should enjoy whatever God would do for Israel, saying: "The same will we do unto thee."

Every one who has been really saved from old sins and enjoys Christianity wants every other one saved and urges all to turn from sin and to accept salvation through Christ.

But since God led the Israelites by the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, why did Moses urge Hobab to go that he might be to them "instead of eyes?" God never does for men what they can do for themselves. The cloud led their general journey, and they must follow it; but they were constantly looking after fuel, water, and pasture for their flocks and herds while encamped. Hobab could guide them in finding these. God fed them on manna so long as they could not produce food for themselves; but "the manna ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the produce of the land"—the land of promise.

God helps men by placing ways and means in their hands by which they may so far help themselves.

Did Hobab go? From different references it seems clear that he did. The Midianites, to which tribe Hobab belonged, were also called "Kenites;" some of the Kenites did go with the Israelites, and "the children of Hobab" are mentioned among them. (See Num. 24: 21, 22; Judg. 1: 16; 4: 11.)

If sinners—friends, neighbors, children of Christians—do not accept and actually decline the first invitation to turn to God and to follow Christ, they should be urged to do so, and different ways should be used to induce them to do so.

And they that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever. (Dan. 12; 3.)

How fearful the thought of not only not leading any into the good way, but of influencing some to be lost! But, kind reader, you are doing one or the other.

I know when we set our hearts to work at and to accomplish any certain purpose, we can succeed more or less. All who set their hearts to seek God as the Bible states find him. All who set their hearts to save others will succeed in many cases. To do nothing is failure—failure and destruction to the one who does nothing. Get right with God, and TRY.

What the Word of God Says.

BY E. G. S.

We need a safe guide in the matter of salvation. We cannot afford to intrust the salvation of our souls to the opinions of men. The religious world is full of human opinions, but it is not safe to trust any of these.

Thousands of people have the opinion that they must get religion in order to be saved. But the New Testament does not say a word about getting religion. The whole idea of getting religion is of human origin. If the New Testament required people to get religion, it would tell them how to get it; but it does not say one word about it in any shape or form. Hence the whole matter is of human origin. When the apostles were sent out to preach the gospel to the whole world, their commission was: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Not one word was said in this entire connection about getting religion. If, therefore, getting religion was necessary in order for people to be saved, then the most important item in the whole matter of conversion was left cut during the apostolic age and was never one time mentioned in the entire New Testament. Is it not strange that so important a matter should be entirely ignored in the New Testament? If there was even one case of getting religion in the entire apostolic age, it was overlooked in the divine record. We are told what was preached and what was done in the days of the apostles in the matter of conversion; but not one word is said about getting religion, either by Christ or the apostles. If anything that in any sense resembled getting religion was practiced in the days of the apostles, it was entirely ignored in getting up the New Testament. Can we believe that such a blunder could have been made by inspired men, if such a thing was of divine origin? Most certainly not. Fortunately, we have the record of the conversion of thousands in the New Testament and of the preaching that was done, but there u not one word about getting religion. Peter was an ir spired man, and he preached a sermon on the day of Pentcost that resulted in the conversion of about three thosand souls, but the New Testament says not one word that would intimate that any of them got religion. Now, if all those thousands of people that became Christians on that day, and many thousands of others at other times, got religion, is it not strange that not one word is said about it? The gospel was preached to them, and they heard, believed, repented, and were baptized. All this is plainly given in the New Testament. Why, then, should any one assume that any of those thousands of people, who believed, repented, and were baptized, got religion?

Therefore the only wise thing for us to do is to take what the New Testament says on the subject of conversion -neither add to nor diminish from the inspired record. The New Testament is the grandest book in the world regarding the great matter of the salvation of our souls. What would we know regarding conversion and salvation, if all the light of the New Testament were taken from us? Simply nothing at all. Let us, therefore, thank the Lord for the New Testament, read it, and follow its divine directions. If we will do this, we will be the best and happiest people on earth and will certainly be on the narrow way that leads to the eternal home. Besides, this course will give us more happiness in this life than any other course we can possibly pursue and will fit us for an entrance into the home eternal when we come to the close of this life; but if we reject the Christian religion in this life, we reject the whole matter of salvation here and prepare our souls for rejection from God and Christ in the ceaseless ages of eternity. This is a destiny too awful for us to choose in this short life.

Funds Cabled Brother Jelley.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Some time ago Brother Jelley requested that we send him twelve hundred dollars for bringing him and family home. Christians were very liberal in raising funds to send Brother Jelley to India. When he made his request for this money, it was with the understanding that his support after reaching India had already been provided, a good brother of Vancouver, B. C., agreeing to furnish him so much per month.

While the subscribers of our religious papers have not felt that they were obligated to furnish him the money to return home, yet, as a Christian act, they have cheerfully contributed for this purpose. It is understood that their responsibility in the matter ceases with their contributions and that whatever else they may do will be an act of devotion to a good cause.

On July 12, 1918, we cabled him one hundred dollars; on October 5, 1918, we cabled him thirteen hundred dollars.

I am sending a copy of this for publication in both the Christian Leader and the Firm Foundation, which have been interested in seeing that Brother Jelley and family were furnished funds to return home. We all rejoice in the work that Brother Jelley has done in India and are glad to have fellowship in it. We are grieved that his health is not good and that he must return home on account of the sickness of his mother and his own physical condition.

Whoever is confident and boastful because he has great skill, cleverness, power, favor, friendship, and honor, he has a god, but not the one true God. Here thou mayest see how confident, secure, and proud men feel when they have these things, and how timid and despairing if they have them not, or if they lose them. Therefore I say that to have a God means to have something in which the heart puts all its trust. Hence thou canst easily understand what and how much the first commandment demands—namely, the whole heart of man and perfect confidence in God alone, and in no one else.—Martin Luther.

The following from an authentic source gives a graphic description of conditions in Persia:

In Teheran, a city of probably three hundred and fifty thousand, two-thirds of the people are practically starving, day by day, hour by hour-yes, moment by moment almost, our investigators meet the dead and the dying lying on the Dr. Scott saw a dead man who had lain all day by the English Legation, just like a dead dog, and no one seemed to care or to think anything about it. church members came running in a few days ago crying: O, give me a little money! A woman has abandoned her child in the street, saying she cannot feed it, and another child is holding on to her veil crying bitterly and saying, 'O, don't leave little sister; don't leave little sister!'" People are eating the heads and bodies of dead animals which have died of starvation. Men are turning out their animals on the desert to die, because they have no food for them. Now that the grain is springing up, people are cut-ting and eating the green blades of the wheat and barley. Dysentery and all kinds of stomach trouble are the result.

Sellersburg, October 5.—On the third Lord's day in August Brother J. K. P. South began a meeting for the Cesarea congregation, near Stamping Ground, Ky. I joined him on Monday night and continued the meeting until the night in September. first Sunday Brother South preaches for this congregation one Sunday in each month and is held in high esteem by all the brethren. He was with me a good portion of the time and rendered much assistance. The interest was fairly good, and during the time there were six baptisms, six took membership from the Christian membership from the Christian Church, and one who had wandered away in sin returned to the fold. On Monday night after the first Sunday Monday night after the hist children in September I began a meeting for the church at Van Buren, Ky., which continued for twelve days. The interest was very good. During this meeting sixteen persons were baptized into Christ. Brother R. A. Craig, of Chaplin, Ky., preaches for the congregation at Van Buren one Lord's day in each month. Brother Craig is a very fine, Christian man and is held in high esteem by all the brethren. In addition to my regular work here at Sellersburg, I preached every night for two weeks for the church of Christ on Silver Street, in New Albany, Ind. Brother E. A. Rhodes preaches for this congregation and is doing a good work. During the meeting two persons took membership with the congregation.-H. C. Shoulders.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kid-neys if Bladder Bothers You —Drink Lots of Water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up, and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or the kidneys are not acting right, or if the bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure any one. makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

About Our Overseas Work.

BY N. Z. CRASS.

Some time ago the Houston Street Church, at Sherman, Texas, asked Brother J. H. Lawson to go overseas to help our boys in foreign fields. Brother Lawson agreed to go under the auspices of the churches of Christ, and we then published the correspondence in our religious journals and asked those who desired to assist us in this great undertaking to write at an early date just what they were willing to do, that the matter might be arranged at the earliest possible date and that Brother Lawson might reach the foreign field as early as possible.

To date only two congregations and six individual Christians have responded, and the combined help promised amounts to but seventeen dollars per month, aside from what the Houston Street Church will do. We feel sure that brethren and sisters will gladly assist in this great undertaking when it is fully placed before them; for surely we are not unmindful of our duty to those boys who are in foreign fields, and who are looking to the people of God to help them in a religious way.

It is necessary that we have at least five hundred dollars to begin with for necessary expenses to the foreign field, and we must have regular contributions to support the work. If Brother Lawson is willing to leave home and country and give his time and labor in such a needed work, surely the people of God will gladly and readily furnish the means to support him.

I ask those who read this to bring the matter before the congregations in their respective communities and see what the congregations will do each month. We also ask that each congregation and individual who will help us in this work send a contribution to help bear the expenses of the trip "over there," and what is done should be done at an early date, to the end that all arrangements may be perfected as quickly as possible.

The Houston Street Church is willing to do what it can and to assume responsibility for the proper use of the means necessary to make the work a success, but the effort is too great for one congregation to bear all the financial responsibility of the undertaking. We think that others will be glad to help us, for it is a work for all the churches, and for this reason we ask all who are interested to let us know at once what they will do.

The writer has been selected to receive the funds and place same in the bank for the use of this work, and I ask that the brethren make the burden as light as possible by coming to our help at once.

At proper time full reports will be made. Please do not expect personal replies from donations.

Opening of Abilene Christian College.

BY GEORGE A. KLINGMAN.

On Tuesday morning, September 17, Abilene Christian College had the greatest opening in its history. The enrollment was more than fifty per cent in excess of last year; it has reached the two-hundred mark and students are coming in every day; about forty military students have entered and are hard at work with their books "speeding up;" more of this class are being entered nearly every day, and by October 15 we expect to have one hundred or more S. A. T. C. students; but whether we have few or many of this class, all arrangements for their military training are completed, and by October 1 Major Hare, who is here, will take charge of their military interests. It is a great privilege to have these boys with us every day in the week under Bible influence and in Bible classes, as well as giving them the very literary work outlined by our government.

Our new building has reached the second story and is to be ready by Thanksgiving Day, when we expect to have our first meeting in the new chapel. Rejoice with us and pray for us, that we may discharge our responsibilities in the sight of God and that we may faithfully serve the precious lives committed for a time to our care.

by Dr. Cooper, of Simmons College, and Brother Webb Freeman (one of our new teachers); short talks were made by different members of the faculty, including our much-beloved president, ⁷. P. Sewell.

Time Will Prove It.

Regardless of the merits of the case, no statements in regard to the merit of any article can be so clearly proven as through time itself. If the article has no value, it cannot live. If it has merits, it will be everlastingly on demand. It is just so with Gray's Ointment, for ninety-seven years a family word in every household. Almost a century ago the same claims were made of its merits as to-day: that it is healing and antiseptic, the very best aid in cases of burns, scalds, bruises, cuts, sores, stings, and other skin infections. It has won on its merits. A ninety-seven-year record is ample proof. Write to W. F. Gray & Co., 818 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., for a sample,—Adyt.

HOW TO AVOID BACKACHE AI NERVOUSNESS

Told by Mrs. Lynch From Own Experience.

Providence, R. I.—"I was all run down in health, was nervous, had headaches, my back ached all the time. I was tired and had no ambition for anything. I had taken a number of medi-cines which did me no good. One day I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for women, so I tried it. My nervousness and backache and headaches disappeared. I gained in weight and feel fine, so I can honestly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman who is suffering as I was."—Mrs. ADELINE B. LYNCH, 100 Plain St., Providence, R. I.

Crowley.

W. W. Crowley was born on September 7, 1891; obeyed the gospel, in Fayetteville, Tenn., in 1908; joined the United States Navy on July 21, 1912; lost his life while bathing, near Norfolk, Va., on June 23, 1918. His remains were brought to his former home, at Fayetteville, and buried in Rose Hill Cemetery on June 29. He made a fine soldier and was rapidly forging to the front. He was gunner a long while on the Minnesota, and had just been transferred to the Pennsylvania, with promotion. His letters to his mother, Mrs. Belle Crow-ley Vickers, show that his faith in God and the power of his word never lessened. "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends." T. C. LITTLE.

Brady.

Mrs. Flossie Brady, wife of J. A. Brady, of Montgomery, Ala., was born on March 18, 1888, and died on September 3, 1918. She leaves, to mourn her death, her husband, her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Sellers, of Fort Deposit, Ala.; and three sisters and two brothers. The sisters and brothers are: Mrs. E. A. Woodruff, Mrs. C. E. Harris, and C. P. Sellers, of Montgomery, Ala.; Mrs. F. P. Green, of Florida; and W. C. Sellers, of Atmore, Ala. She obeyed the gospel at the age of fifteen and was married to Mr. Brady when eighteen. She was a devoted Christian woman. Her selfsacrificing spirit and unselfish heart won the love and friendship of all her acquaintances. No task was too heavy when any one needed her to help bear their burdens, and especially would I emphasize her thoughtfulness of her mother. It is not so hard for us to give up our loved ones when they have made the preparation that our de-parted sister had made. The inter-ment was at Little Sandy Ridge, near Fort Deposit. Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

Perkins.

Mrs. Martha Perkins was born in Lottie, Baldwin County, Ala., on December 6, 1835. She was eighty-two years and nine months old to a day. She died on September 6, 1918. She was married to H. F. Perkins in 1859. She had been a member of the church of Christ since the year 1895. came into the church under the preaching of T. R. Burnett. She was the mother of six children-four boys and two girls-four living and two dead. She and her daughter lived alone. Her daughter and one son, from Fort Cobb, Okla., were with her when she died.

Another son was at Bell, Fla., and another at Cloverdale, Ala. She lived to see all of her children come into the church. She was known and loved by everybody. She was buried at Wilson Valley Cemetery. Funeral services were held by Brother Will-iams, of Belton. She had been sick four months. She bore her afflictions with Christian fortitude. She was a dear lover of the Gospel Advocate. She is safe in the arms of Jesus, sweetly sleeping on his gentle breast. She will never return to us. But we can go to her, if we will only do God's will, to be with her in the home of the soul, where there is no sickness or death, no sorrows or tears, and no sad farewells. She was loved as a mother LENA SMITH.

Allbritten.

James C. Allbritten was born on May 16, 1846, and departed this life on September 19, 1918, aged seventy-two years, four months, and three days. He was married to Virginia Burton on December 25, 1864. To this union two children were born, one of which died in infancy; the other one, a daughter, survives him. He was one of five brothers and five sisters who have lived to a mature age, being the oldest, and also the first to meet the summons of death. "Uncle Jim," as summons of death. "Uncle Jim," as he was lovingly and familiarly known, had been a member of the church of Christ for some fifty years, or almost from time out of mind, of which he was a loyal member till he peacefully fell asleep in the Lord. His life was a ministry of service. Many were his deeds of charity, and many the fe-vered brows that his faithful hand had soothed. He was not only a kind hus-band and loving father to his own family, but he willingly and cheerfully took upon himself the care and protection of others. He was a father to the fatherless, a gracious benefactor to the motherless, and an unselfish helper to all in time of sorrow and need. He leaves a host of friends and relatives to mourn his departure. His life was an open book, known and read of all men, and his fidelity and labor of love shall live on and on and shed its influence long after his frail body is consigned to the tomb.

R. T. HART.

Brown.

W. H. Brown was born on July 31, 1873; was married on December 2, 1891, to Miss Emily Alice Kimbrough: obeyed the gospel in 1901, being bap-tized by Brother M. H. Northcross, and died on August 18, 1918, aged forty-five years and eighteen days. On the morning of August 18 Brother Coffman, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., began a meeting with the congregation worshiping at Big Creek, in Giles County, Tenn. At the conclusion of the morning services Brother Brown, who was one of the elders, a man in robust health and the very prime of his activities, arose and began speaking to the congregation with regard to their having fellowship with other congregations of the county in sending and supporting a preacher to work among the boys in one of the military camps of our country. A heavy rain was falling at the time, and while he was speaking a bolt of lightning struck the building and seemingly descended a metal rod suspended from the ceiling and struck Brother Brown, killing him instantly. Thus he fell at the post of duty, surrounded by his family and friends who loved him so well and had the utmost confidence in him. The scene in the church building at that time cannot be described by eyewitnesses. Parts of the interior of the building were torn off and scattered over the terror-stricken audience. Several persons were more or less shocked and Brother Brown killed outright. The writer was called to attend the funeral, but was in a meeting in Alabama at that time and could not go. Brother Coffman conducted the funeral in the presence of a very large throng of sorrowing relatives and friends, after which he was buried in Lynnwood Cemetery at Lynnville. An aged father and mother, a faithful wife, two sons and four grandchildren are left to mourn their loss. May the Lord comfort them. J. T. CLARK. Lord comfort them.

Walker.

Mrs. Kate Walker, widow of Will Walker, of Lebanon, Tenn., is dead. She became acquainted with him and on June 2, 1870, she was united to him in matrimony. Her maiden name was Vinson. She was known as "Aunt Kate." was familiarly She has many friends everywhere she lived. She lived in different localities. was born and reared in Wilson Coun-Tenn. To this happy union eight children were born, all of whom survive her. She was left a widow thirty years ago. She had the responsibility of the family all resting on her, and as a jewel lived by her work. She has reared as nice a family of children as any one in the community. These are all in good circumstances, both financial and spiritual. They are all in the Christian Church in union with their mother. She often spoke of her suffering; that she would be willing to go to get clear of her pains. Her disease was heart trouble. Yet she bore her sickness with Christian patience. She was a good Christian mother, a good neighbor. The tree is judged by its fruits, and their works do follow after them. Train a child in the way it should go, and when it is old it will not depart from it. On Thursday morning, September 12, 1918, the death angel came as a thief in the night and her spirit took its flight and went back to God who gave it. She will be missed from her accustomed place; but God saw fit in his infinite wisdom to take her from her suffering to that eternal home that awaits the children of God. She has only gone on to meet her loved ones who have gone on be-fore, and it will not be long before we as Christians will meet our loved ones there. She will only be watching and waiting for loved ones back here to meet her over there, for your dear old mother is at rest. She leaves an aged brother, James Vinson, and eight children to mourn their loss. O, how sad it is to see the casket come rolling in and take from our embrace our loved The funeral services were conducted by Brother Carnes at her residence, after which her remains were laid to rest to await the resurrection morn. I extend my deepest sympathy to the bereaved ones.

Do not keep a list of your children's faults constantly before you, and do not, if you would be happy and at the same time make these little ones happy, elaborate upon their failings before company; on the other hand, if you must speak of the day's events, emphasize their good deeds, tell of the splendid work done during school hours, and admit in the right spirit that these small members of the household save you many weary steps .- Exchange.

True Achievement.

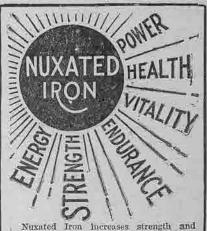

Achievement is not always success. while reputed failure often is. The most successful men are not necessarily the ones hoisily attracting public attention. The best and most useful women are not the bright butterflies of fashion or the stage, whose press agents incessantly flaunt their pictures and their doings before the public.

No, no!

The unlauded men and women who are quietly attending to their own little duties, every day contributing something substantial to industry, prosperity, and progress, rearing children in habits of work and right living, and supplying examples that elevate the moral and intellectual level of their little communities-these are the men and women of real influence and power.

Success is theirs in the fullest meas-

It is not given us all to have success as gorgeous as the rainbow. But, no matter. Success consists in doing one's best. Indeed, the real success is more in the trying than in the achievement. We may achieve by accident, by help of others, by chance conditions, or by other forces that are not

How shrunken and pitiful a thing, how hollow a delusion, is the shining so-called success of self-absorbed men and women! They have only the husks of life's golden grain. A Visit to Belle Haven Orphans' Home.

I had the pleasure last week of visiting the Belle Haven Orphans' Home, at Luling, Texas. This was my first visit to the Home since the cyclone, and I had a particular interest in observing personally and as a trustee the progress of the work. I found Sister Clarke in good health and manifesting the deep interest in the orphans which she has always shown. Sister Annie Peters, her secretary, an orphan girl who has been in the Home since she was six months of age, and who is now past seventeen, was on hand to entertain and show in every way the interest she has in their Home. All the children were happy, playful, and contented. There are forty-nine children now in the Home, Five grown girls have recently been sent out from the Home to fill places where they can earn a living for themselves. Practically all that are now in the Home are under fourteen years of age. Five children were entered last week, among them an infant four months of age. If any loyal Christian family that can give proper references desires a boy babe of this age, they should communicate with Sister Clarke. She will place none of the children in sectarian homes or in homes where there is not proper assurance for their support.

The brotherhood is to be commended for the liberal response they have given to the call for funds to replace the damage done by the cyclone. About six thousand dollars was the amount contributed to this special fund. This will go far to replace the damage, but is not enough. church building, which was entirely demolished, is being replaced by a brick and hollow-tile structure, much better and more commodious and attractive. It is now in process of construction. Sister Clarke states that she has saved at least eight hundred dollars in securing net figures on materials and work of construction. When completed, the building will be the neatest church building in Luling. The brethren should greatly appreciate this. Really, do not the orphan children deserve as much? The church building will be used to accommodate the school during the coming winter, as it is not thought best to undertake the erection of a school building during the period of the war. The work of reconstruction and repairing the dormitory is proceeding nicely. The water works are entirely out of order, and a windmill should be erected at once. As the church building is costing forty-four hundred dollars, it is clear that the cyclone fund will be exhausted before all the repair work is done. Brethren and sisters who are friends of the Home, and who will make a donation during the next two or three months, would do well in sending donations to include also a special contribution for the cyclone fund, as there is need for more than two thousand dollars yet to put everything in proper shape for the Home. When this work of repair is accomplished and the church building is done, all will be in much better shape than before the cyclone. A very neat and pretty modern church building will appear on the grounds, and the entire Home will appear better and will be better in every way than it has ever been before.

Sister Clarke is careful to teach the children the Bible. Each Lord's day they have a regular Bible school, in which they are all taught the Bible. All the older children feel very grateful for contributions sent them, and talk as though they feel that the church of Christ is decidedly the greatest institution on earth, and, to them, it verily is. The work being done in this Home is altogether a creditable one for the churches of Christ. It should be well supported. When the war is over, a school building should be erected. There is no doubt that brethren will be ready to give this matter favorable consideration at the proper time.-G. H. P. Showalter, in Firm Foundation.

Among the Colored Folks

M. Keeble's Report.

When I sent in my last report, I was engaged in a meeting at Senatobia, Miss. From there I went to Bells, Tenn., where, on the first Lord's day in September, I began a meeting which continued one week. Interest was good, but there were no additions. This was at a place where the colored people had never heard a Christian preacher. The Beech Grove congregation, near Brownsville, Tenn., supported this meeting, and I hope they will continue to work in this I went next to Patton, Ala., where I began a two-weeks' meeting on the second Lord's day in September. This was my second meeting at that place. Eight obeyed the gospel and one was restored. Among those baptized was an old gentleman who came to the church of Christ over forty years ago, but was never baptized, although he has been a faithful worker and preacher in this section for years and is highly respected by all. I next came to Smithville, Miss., where I am now engaged in a very interesting meeting, which is being largely attended by the white people every night. Up to date (September 26) four young men have obeyed the gospel of Jesus Christ, and prospects are bright for others. On my way here I stopped over at Glenallen, Ala., where I found a wide-awake little band of Christians. I promised to visit them in the near future and remain longer with them. 1 will leave on Saturday for Tuscumbia, Ala., where I am to assist Brother J. Hannon in a meeting which is to begin on the first Lord's day in October. En route to Tuscumbia I will visit Capleville, Tenn., and Corinth, Miss., the Lord willing. I am still blessed with the privilege of having with me my wife. She is a great help to me in my work.

J. Hannon's Report.

On the third Lord's day in July I began a meeting at Old Farmington, which continued six nights and closed with five baptisms. I then went to Spring Hill and conducted a meeting for five nights. We had a good crowd each night, but no additions. I next went to Fulton, Ky., and began a meeting. They closed the schoolhouse -nailed the door and windows-to keep us out, but the brethren built a brush arbor and we carried on the meeting eight nights. We had a good meeting all the way through, with a large hearing of both white and col-

In Behalf of the Schools.

At the request of the Secretary of the Interior, we are glad to give the following letter from President Wilson due publicity:

The White House, Washington, July 31, 1918.-My Dear Mr. Secretary: I am pleased to know that despite the unusual burdens imposed upon our people by the war they have maintained their schools and other agencies of education so nearly at their normal That this should be conefficiency. tinued throughout the war and that, in so far as the draft law will permit, there should be no falling off in attendance in elementary schools, high schools, or colleges, is a matter of the greatest importance, affecting both our strength in war and our national welfare and efficiency when the war is over. So long as the war continues there will be constant need of very large numbers of men and women the highest and most thorough training for war service in many lines. After the war there will be urgent need not only for trained leadership in all lines of industrial, commercial, social, and civic life, but for a very high average of intelligence and preparation on the part of all the people. would therefore urge that the people continue to give generous support to their schools of all grades and that the schools adjust themselves as wisely as possible to the new conditions, to the end that no boy or girl shall have less opportunity for education because of the war and that the nation may be strengthened as it can only be through the right education of all its people. I approve most heartily your plans for making through the Bureau of Education a comprehensive campaign for the support of the schools and for the maintenance of attendance upon them, and trust that you may have the cooperation in this work of the American Council of Education.

Cordially and sincerely yours, WOODROW WILSON.

The Minister as a Y. M. C. A. Secretary.

BY J. S. CHADWICK.

There are those at home, ministers and laymen, who are asking whether the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. really offers a minister such opportunities for religious work as would justify his leaving a pastorate to serve as a Religious Work Secretary in a camp or overseas. I do not attempt to argue the question whether the minister's first duty in time of war is at home or in the army: that question must be settled by each man before the bar of his own conscience and before God. It is understood that the larger number of ministers must stay by the work at home. The church at home must be kept ready for the return of the men who are now fighting our battles, and the church that will hold them in the days of peace is one that in life and service shows forth One who found his chief joy in giving himself for humanity's freedom.

To hold the church to the high ideal of sacrificial living and service, we must have in our pulpits men who preach that truth in deeds as well as in words. These men are needed at home as well as in army camps and overseas, and with many of them it would be easier to go than to stay. While I would not attempt to decide for any minister whether he should give his service at home, in the ranks as a soldier, or in religious work in the army or navy, I am persuaded that he cannot find anywhere larger opportunities than in the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. And I give this as my conviction after some months of service in an army camp as a Religious Work Secretary in a Y. M. C. A. building.

There is an idea abroad that the "Y" worker finds little time for distinctively religious work, since the "Y" program has in it so much of detail work and so much attention is given to athletics, sports, and amusements of various kinds. It is true that these have a large place in the program, and it ought so to be. These men of the army and navy have come into a new world, and with hosts of them they come for the first time under a discipline that regulates their modes of living, that keeps them from the things that bring physical and moral wreck. Any organization that helps them to become adjusted to the new order of things is rendering a useful service, even though it had no other mission than this.

The Religious Work Secretary comes to see, if he did not understand it before he entered the work, that all of this detail work which is offering needed service to the men, and even the amusements and sports bring opportunities of approach to men that otherwise would not offer. But these are by no means his only opportunities. He will have, for instance, the following program of religious services in his building: On Sunday, the Bible classes, or Sunday school; two preaching services, morning and evening; the Men's League, during the hour preceding the evening preaching service. During the week there is one evening preaching service and Bible classes one to three evenings. Comparing this program of services with that of the average church at home, it will be seen that the "Y" Religious Work Secretary has abundant opportunities for "the work of the ministry." The average man in the army camp is attending more religious services weekly than was his habit at home; and the results of this work bear out the statement that the "Y" workers find the men responsive to the gospel appeal. Take the figures of the Southeastern Department alone, this department including the army and navy camps and stations in seven Southern States. During the twelve months ending July 1, last, there were reported 72,693 signers of the War Roll and 43,093 Christian decisions. In the Southeastern Department are approximately two hundred Religious Work Secretaries, an average of more than two hundred Christian decisions per worker. But it is not fair to give these ministers all the credit for this work, for practically every "Y" Secretary, minister and layman, has part in this service to the spiritual needs of the men. If we give those figures as the result of the work of one thousand men, approximately the force of workers in the department, it is a splendid showing as compared with results secured at home.

The "Y" workers know that the minister at home is doing as faithful and efficient work as the man in the camp. The latter has the advantage in that he has a larger field and the men usually more responsive to the gospel appeal. One Religious Work Secretary says: "I have been able to report more definite Christian decisions during the past thirty days than during any year of my ministry as a pastor." Another says: "I have led more men to Christ during the three months I have been in an army camp than during any previous five years of my ministry." And while every worker may not be able to say as much, these are by no means exceptional cases.

While the men in the service are more responsive to the gospel appeals than was true at home, this is not the only explanation of larger results for the minister in the camp. The Religious Work Secretary does his share of the detail work of a "Y" buildinghe is "on the desk" a certain number of hours each day. That means that he not only sells stamps, hands out writing materials, and handles letter mail, parcel post, and express, but is a "bureau of information and service," with emphasis on the "service." The men feel free to call on the "Y" Secretary for any needed service; and when within the territory of a building there are from two thousand to five thousand men, it needs not to be said that their wants are many and varied. The minister through his service at the desk has won the confidence of many a man who otherwise would not have been reached. Every man in his heart believes in a religion of service. The minister at home is preaching in word and deed such a gospel, but there are so many men who never let him know that they need help. The man in the army, with that feeling of loneliness he never before knew, needs a friend and helper, and somehow he gets the idea that the Red Triangle carries a message of offered help. It may be a small service, even as the "Y" man views it-such a service as those of his parish back home would not think of asking of him, but to the soldier who needed help it loomed large. And when later he heard that same "Y" man speak as the messenger of the Christ of Service, the appeal gripped his soul. Or, when in conversation with the man who had served him he was brought, ere he realized it, to talk of the things that oftentimes had engaged his thoughts and had not been spoken of to other men, he gave response to the personal appeal with the pledge of a better life.

In practically all of the experiences of daily life in an army camp the Religious Work Secretary is in close touch with the men, a closer and more intimate association than he could have at home. They come to this building, the building where he works, where he sleeps, and where he holds the religious services. This is the one place in the camp where the soldier can read and write and rest and enjoy fellowship with his comrades. The Secretary is free to visit them in their barracks, he eats with them in their mess halls, and he is the welcome visitor at the hospitals at any hour. If he is a man with even a reasonable amount of the spirit of true brotherhood and endowed with just a fair share of common sense and the ability to "get along" with men, they take him into their circle. And what a chance he There are hosts of splendid has! young fellows in that circle-men worthy of the best the ministry of America can give them. And there are hosts of others who either have not had a chance or have thrown away the best things that life offered them. They, also, are worth the saving, even if it calls for the giving by the church at home of the best of American manhood now in our pulpits.

Home.

In the middle Atlantic, about halfway on a straight line between Capetown and Montevideo, there was heaved up in remote times by volcanic action a huge rock, the little island of Tristan da Cunha, bleak and barren, the vortex of fierce storms, the center of almost incessant rains, always enveloped by cloud, and shunned by ships, and yet for the last hundred years inhabited by a strange race made up of English, Dutch, Irish, Italians, Americans, cast ashore from time to time in shipwreck, or driven there by weariness of the busy world, and living on fish and the spoils of the wrecks that strew its coast.

These people, now about eighty in number-men, women, and childrensuffer hardships and deprivations almost inconceivable to residents of more favored lands.

Having no useful timber, their huts are unmortared piles of rough stones, thatched with grass.

The isle is so infested with rats from wrecked ships that any grain planted is eaten in the ground; and the only source of flour is passing vessels, which may be intercepted only by rowing many miles to sea.

There is no government of any sort, no school, no church.

The island has no future; the people have no prospect but of entombment

One would suppose that these unfortunates, intelligent, industrious, thrifty, and temperate, as they are described to be, would gladly leave their rude huts, their terrible hardships, their barren fields, their pitiable poverty, and hopelessness, to rejoin the comfortable world.

But no!

The British government has renewed its offers to remove them and their few possessions from the bleak island to any British soil they may choose and to give them means to start life anew.

Not one will consent to go.

There on the bleak island are their homes, and there they will stay.

Maybe, after all, one lot in life is not much better or worse than another, so far as real happiness goes; but there are some things that seem very necessary to us, and that little corner in God's creation we call home is one of them .- Charles Grant Miller. in Christian Herald.

Life is made up, not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, in which smiles and kindnesses and small obligations, given habitually, are what win and preserve the heart, and secure comfort.-Sir Humphrey Davy.

The Cross and the Crown. BY MARTON HERBERT.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.)

He who would wear the crown must first bear the cross. We should experience anguish on account of our sins. We should feel lost. If we do not feel the need of a Savior, he can do us no good. "All the fitness he requireth is to feel your need of him."

No use to pray at this stage; it is a time for action. (John 9: 31; Acts 2: 38.) We should repent of our sins, confess Christ as the Son of God and our only Savior; go forward in our obedience to him, be buried with him in baptism (Rom. 6: 4), and die to sin (Rom. 6: 3; 1 Pet. 1: 22, 23; 3: 21).

But some one asks: Would you baptize a sinner? Yes, a penitent sinner; a believer that had been taught. I would not baptize a Christian, for that would be superfluous.

A person is not a Christian (in Christ) until he completes his obedience. (Gal. 3: 27.) It takes the blood of Christ to cleanse us from sin. (Col. 1: 14; 1 Pet. 1: 22.) And baptism is the only way in which we can come in contact (typically) with the blood of Christ.

Having completed our obedience, we are now in Christ, new creatures, saved from past sins. But we will not be saved at last unless we remain in Christ. To do this, we first should learn his will, by constant, diligent, prayerful study of his word. (2 Tim. 2: 15; John 5: 39; 20: 31.) We should obey his commandments (John 14: 15)-all of the commands. There are no big and little commands; all must be obeyed. When our Master speaks, it is our duty, and should be our pleasure, to obey. (Heb. 5: 8, 9.) We should show our love for him by our living and working for the upbuilding of his kingdom.

It means something to be a Christian. There is no room in the church of Christ for idlers and slackers. God wants righteous, manly men and righteous, womanly women to serve him zealously, earnestly, faithfully in this life, of their own free will and accord. To do this, we must feed on spiritual food; do those things that will cause us to grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord; forsake not the assembling of ourselves together (Heb. 10: 25); work, watch, prav.

The church is the body of Christ; the saved are members of that body. We should be able to teach the word to others. We as Christians are responsible for the teaching of his word to this and the rising generation. We should shun not to declare the whole counsel of God.

The Christian has a work to do that no one else can do for him. We must bear the cross. This does not merely mean attending church occasionally, giving a small amount to support the work, etc. It means striving to live close to Christ each day of our life, no matter what the cost or how heavy the burden-study God's word, be humble, be forgiving, be prayerful, be workers in the vineyard.

We sing with a great deal of gusto, "I'll go where you want me to go," and: "Nearer, my God, to thee, e'en though it be a cross that raiseth me." We should be willing to go and work and bear the cross. We also sing, "Will there be any stars in my crown?" There will be just as many stars in our crown as we place there by our deeds and life while here below, and no more. We should produce the fruits of the Spirit. (Gal. 5: 22.) If we would wear a crown in the realm of bliss above, we must be crucified with Christ, die to sin, be raised with him, be fruitful, bear the cross, and be faithful to the end. Then, and only then, will we be able to die in the triumph of a living faith and wear a crown eternally in heaven.

Here is a home-made syrup which millions of people have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up stubborn coughs. It is cheap and simple, but very prompt in action. Under its healing, soothing influence, chest soreness goes, phlegm loosens, breathing becomes easier, tickling in throat stops and you get a good night's restful sleep. The usual throat and chest colds are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, hoarseness, croup, whooping cough, bronchial asthma or winter coughs.

To make this splendid cough syrup, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup and shake thoroughly. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you get a full pint—a family supply—of much better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for three times the money. Keeps perfectly and children love its pleasant taste.

Ages should be from twenty-five to thirty-five, Full volunteers of suitable quality are heartily welcomed; but where unable to pay expenses, transportation, uniform, and maintenance will be paid for exceptionally qualified candidates, in whole or in part, as individual circumstances require.

Social workers are needed for relief among refugees from the invaded districts and for other forms of social and reconstruction work among the French civilians. They should speak French.

Stenographers must be between the ages of twenty-five and forty, and are paid a salary of six hundred to seven hundred and fifty francs per month, out of which they are to pay their own expenses. They are also furnished with transportation and uniform. Knowledge of French not necessary.

No woman can be accepted whose husband or son is serving under the colors abroad or in this country.

Well-Expanded Lungs Not Enough.

Pure blood is indispensable to the health and strength of the lungs. The delicate structure of these organs makes it necessary. When the blood is impure, the lungs lose their tone, and even if they are permitted to expand freely, they have not the power fully to perform their important work. The fact is, there is nothing more necessary in our physical economy than pure blood, the kind of blood that Hood's Sarsaparilla makes. This medicine is the good old reliable family remedy for diseases of the blood, scrofula, rheumatism, catarrh, and low or run-down conditions of the system. At this time, when coughs and colds are so prevalent, Hood's Sarsaparilla is an invaluable tonic. Get it to-day, and begin to take it at once. Accept no substitute.-Advt.

Royal Road to Happiness.

Upon the use we make of what we have depends in large measure not only our success in life, but, what is more to the point, our happiness. It is because we do not appreciate the blessings that we possess that so many of us fail, because common sense tells us that if we have the ability to understand and appreciate the gifts and favors that are showered upon us we would, at the same time, possess the ability to make the right use of them. Of course, there are cases where circumstances for the time being at least prevent us from applying our talents to the best possible use; but such circumstances do not stand in our way all the time, and if we have sufficient determination and perseverance the chances are that we will in the end make good use of what we have, provided we thoroughly appreciate the latter. Our talents, fortunately, do not

Edifying as the Need May Be

Selling the Birthright.

Esau is not accounted among the patriarchs. The best that we can say of him along this line is that he "might have been." Esau's failure to become a patriarch was not because his destiny was eternally and irrevocably fixed by the prophecy spoken at his birth, which reads: "And the elder shall serve the younger." We must distinguish between God's omniscience and God's will. It is true that God knew Esau would fail, but that is far from saying that God made him to fail. Why, then, did Esau not obtain his heritage? Why do we not find his name in the patriarchal succession with the names of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? The answer is plain enough when we read the Old Testament narrative. It is because he sold his birthright.

Jacob and Esau were twins. Whether boys or girls or one of each sex, twins are always interesting. The twins I have known were very much alike both as to features and disposition. A boy once said that it was "awful good fun" to be so much like his twin brother that few people could tell them apart. Perhaps you have heard the story about the boy whose mother asked what he was laughing about, and he said he was laughing because she had washed him twice and had not washed his twin brother at all. But Jacob and Esau missed the "awful good fun" of being alike. They were not at all alike either in looks or ways.

Two Brothers Compared.

When we place the two brothers side by side in the days of their youth, Jacob suffers by the comparison. Esau was endowed at birth with almost every desirable quality. Jacob by nature was far less attractive. Esau was big and strong and rugged; Jacob was small and weak. Esau was devoted to manly pursuits. He loved the great out-of-doors and laughed at any kind of danger. Jacob found delight in prosaic occupations. He stayed at home, and cooked and served. Esau was generous, warm-hearted, and forgiving; Jacob was mean and resentful and selfish. Esau was frank and open; Jacob was furtive and deceptive. One writer says Esau must have been a "prime favorite both with men, women, and children;" another says that Jacob was "probably unpopular, effeminate, and contemptible." Esau was "his father's pride;" Jacob was "mammy's lamb." Any one would have said at this period in their lives that Esau would be the one that men would remember gratefully and that Jacob when he died would quickly be forgotten. Why, then, with all of these superior advantages, did Esau turn out to be such a dismal failure? I repeat: Because he sold his birthright.

A Thing Despised.

Coming in from the field one day and being well-nigh exhausted with the chase, the big, reckless, jovial-hearted Esau found his apron-strings brother helping his mother in the kitchen. He was boiling pottage. "Esau said to Jacob, Feed me, I pray thee, with that same red pottage; for I am faint. . . . And Jacob said, Sell me first thy birthright. And Esau said, Behold, I am about to die: and what profit shall the birthright do to me? And Jacob said, Swear to me first; and he sware unto him: and he sold his birthright unto Jacob." We must not think that Esau was condemned because of the one fact that he sold his birthright. The full import and flagrancy of his misconduct are brought out at the end of the story where it is said, "Thus Esau despised his birthright." Nor must we condemn the young man because he made a quick decision. The world is so constituted that we are forced to act upon impulse a great deal of the time. Many of the real and many of the best decisions are speedily made. You can tell pretty nearly what a man will do under given circumstances, if you know the man. Esau despised his birthright when as a boy he failed to learn the worth of an honorable position in life. Alexander Whyte remarks: "Everybody knew that Eau's birthright was for sale. Isaac knew, Rebekah knew, Jacob knew, and Jacob had for a long time been eyeing his brother for a fit opportunity" to rob him. There is always some way for a fool to lose, and he can be depended upon to find it. 0 0 0

The Appetite That Ruins.

The thing that ruined Esau was his appetite. I would not convey the impression that the possession of a big appetite is sinful in itself or that one shall be lost because of it. If that were true, I am afraid that I am a "goner." An appetite under proper control is one of the finest assets in the world. We never know how to appreciate a good appetite until we lose it. I heard of a man once who got a reputation of always having "something to thank God for."

One day he slipped and fell with some meat he was carrying home for dinner. Some dogs pounced on the meat and carried it off. A bystander sneeringly asked: "What is there to thank God for now?" The man of grateful habit answered: "Well, my dinner is gone, but thank God I have my appetite yet." Yes, appetite is something to be thankful for, and it is capable of more than one definition. Physically, it is hunger for food; mentally, it is that curiosity of mind that drives after knowledge; spiritually, it is a zest to know God and his ways. Let us be "giving thanks always for all things in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

It was not a healthful appetite fulfilling its rightful functions that injured Esau. It was an appetite unrestrained and uncontrolled. For one morsel he sold his birthright, forfeited the paternal and patriarchal blessing, renounced the headship of the house, and placed himself outside the chosen family and the lineage of blessing. Later, Paul tells us, "when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected" and "found no place for repentance." He stands as a permanent type of the folly and danger of those who sacrifice spiritual and future interests for the momentary and sensual delights of the present.

Catching Condors and Men.

The fact that Esau had so many admirable qualities to start with makes the story of his fall all the more impressive and should teach us what ravages are wrought by an uncontrolled appetite. Perhaps you have seen in some zoölogical garden that immense bird known as the South American condor. I used to wonder how he was ever captured, and recently I read the explanation. A native of Peru slays an animal for food. He leaves upon the skin some pieces of raw flesh and goes with it far up the mountain side of the rugged Andes. He finds a crevice in the rock, lies down in it, and covers himself up with the skin, with the raw side exposed. The giant condor, seated on the cliff or soaring far above the clouds, scents the flesh, He drops upon the pelt and pulls the flesh off with his beak. But the native underneath seizes him by the feet, and, wrapping the skin around him, sells him at the nearest port, to decorate some city park a thousand miles away.

So many a promising man, capable of lofty flight, is caught and carried captive by his appetites. If there was no other reason why a man should embrace the Christian religion, the fact that it teaches self-control is reason enough. The inclusive rule of this religion is: "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." There is no higher purpose, and any lower dishonors God and degrades the creature. Even the great apostle declares: "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest . . . I myself should be a castaway." This means that an uncontrolled appetite brings abject slavery. The rightful place of the body is as the submissive and obedient servant of the soul. It rules but to ruin. As Augustine put it: "Let thy spirit obey God, that thy flesh may obey thy spirit."

As the will learns to wait on any indication of the divine Will—as it acquires a listening, attentive attitude, without losing its natural force, becoming pliant, molded and directed by the superior power which more and more overrules it—so in such proportion the will becomes capable of union with the mind of God, carrying out his purposes, acting out on earth the eternal law which rules the heavens. T. T. Carter.

No good action will hinder thee, if thou be inwardly free from inordinate affection. If thou intend and seek nothing else but the will of God and the good of thy neighbor, thou shalt thoroughly enjoy inward liberty.—Selected.

Old Testament Characters-Abel. No. 2.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

It cannot be emphasized too often that Abel's sacrifice was of faith. By faith Abel was accepted of the Lord and his sacrifice was pleasing to Jehovah; by faith he suffered a martyr's death. The Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering because of the strong faith that Abel had in him. There was no other way of approach to God except by faith for the early patriarch; there was no other way of approach to God under the law except by faith; and there is no other way now for people to approach Jehovah save through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. One may read the Bible, pray, and sit at the Lord's table, but this does not count for anything if it is not done in faith.

Faith brings one into touch with God and links our weakness to God's omnipotence; it purifies our hearts and makes us fit associates with the angels; faith is the mainspring of all our actions which are pleasing to God. Some think that Cain's offering was rejected because it was not a' bloody sacrifice and that Abel's was accepted because his was a bloody sacrifice. You are famililar with the fact that there must in every sin offering be blood. The writer of Hebrews says that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission." In the types of sin offerings which were incorporated there was blood; since there is blood in the type, we must look for blood in the antitype. Christ is our sin offering. Some scholars seem to think that the offering made by Cain and Abel, mentioned in Genesis, was a sin offering. We have no way of determining this point. It was a sacrifice based upon faith, and its excellency was estimated by its degree of faith which the worshiper had. The difference was not between gift and gift, sacrifice and sacrifice, the fruit of the field and the increase of the flock; the difference was between soul and soul, heart and heart, faith and unbelief. Abel obeyed God, and Cain did not. Samuel announced a principle to King Saul which was true while these brothers were worshiping at the altar, and was true under the law of Moses, and is true to-day. He said to Saul: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. . . . Because theu hast rejected the word of Jehovah, he hath also rejected thee from being king." (1 Sam. 15: 22, 23.)

While studying the history of Cain, we had occasion to point out the fact that the sacrifice represented the one who was making the sacrifice. There must be a diligent seeking to please God. "And without faith it is impossible to be well pleasing unto him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." (Heb. 11: 6.) Since Abel was pleasing to God, we may conclude that Abel was earnestly and diligently seeking to know what was pleasing to God. Not only was he seeking to know what was pleasing to God, but he was carefully and prayerfully doing that which he had learned was pleasing to God, or was God's will. In this he becomes an example to those who would please God to-day.

Paul tells us that faith comes by hearing the word of God. (Rom. 10: 17.) We are led to believe that faith necessarily rests on the word of God. God must have instructed Cain and Abel in regard to his will about sacrificing. Abel with piety and devotion followed God's instructions and met the approval of Jehovah; Cain turned aside from Jehovah's will and followed human judgment. Abel acted by faith; Cain, in unbelief. Abel did all that he could as a consequence of his firm and unwavering faith in the wisdom of heaven. Abel stands out as the first monument down the long lineage of the human family of a strong and abiding faith in God. Paul gives a long catalogue of the heroes of faith. Abel stands at the head. He is the first of the memorable heroes in God's catalogue.

Christ, the Son of God, speaking of this hero of faith, calls him "Abel the righteous." (Matt. 23: 35.) When the Son of God calls one righteous, then we have proof positive that he was righteous. This means that not only was he righteous in this act of worship, but that he was a righteous man, lived a righteous life. "He had witness borne to him that he was righteous, God bearing witness in respect of his gifts." (Heb. 11: 4.) Also 1 John 3: 12 states that Cain hated him because his works were righteous. It is pleasing to note that at the very fountain of human history Abel started out to live a righteous life and is called, centuries afterwards, by the Son of God, "Abel the righteous." Cain deviated, forsook the path of righteousness; while his brother, with courage and faith, walked it alone with God by faith.

As we study more closely the sacrifice of Abel, we discover principles which must enter into all acceptable worship to Jehovah. "Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof." God has always called for the very best that we have. He will not accept an inferior offering from any one. God is not pleased with our sacrifice if we put him second or last; he must be put first in our lives and we must render unto him our best at all times. Since Abel was righteous, since Abel was faithful, since Abel was well pleasing unto God, we may know that he gave unto Jehovah his very best.

If we sing Jehovah's praises, we should do our very best; if we give of our means, we must give to him our best; if we give unto him service, it must be an unselfish, liberal service. He must have the first and the best of our affections; we must give unto him the first and the best of our time and talent; our all belongeth unto him. "For ye were bought with a price: glorify God therefore in your body." (1 Cor. 6: 20.) We are pledged to promote, by every means within our power, the honor and the glory of our God. Abel gave his life, and we must give ours.

Brother Moore's Efforts Are Futile.

BY F. W. SMITH.

I was apprehensive of Brother Moore's willingness to remain hitched when he realized the attitude in which he had placed himself on the communion question, and, sure enough, he is trying to slip the bridle; but I drew the throatlatch so tight that all of his efforts to get loose will avail him naught. He dare not take the position that the Lord's Supper is not for all of God's children; hence, when he places baptism between the individual and the Lord's table, he makes baptism essential to becoming a child of God. If not, why not? In his reply, which follows, he does not even intimate that any of God's children have no right to the Supper. Hear him:

It's funny when one speaks truth as it is in the Word that the one opposing this truth accepts without a criticism and then goes right on to shift the truth in dispute and raises another issue, and then finally denies the agreemen which he claims to exist between us. After agreeing with me on the law of approach to the Lord's table, he then raises the question of church salvation. No church membership, no salvation, is one of his own tenets, and he must make me to adopt it before he can make his argument. No, I do not say, virtually, neither do I even imply, that only the baptized are saved. The Scriptures teach right the reverse is true. Instead of saying that baptism is essential to salvation, I say, in harmony with the Book, that salvation is essential to baptism. Children of God, or Christians, are the only ones that can be scripturally baptized.

"For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 26, 27.) Now, will Brother Smith kindly name the antecedent of "you" in the twenty-seventh verse? This, to my mind, is conclusive.

The trouble with my friend Smith is, he fails to see the way of life. Jesus and all the apostles taught faith in Christ alone, not faith in Christ and baptism, not faith in Christ plus anything else, but faith in Christ and nothing else. Brother Smith claims faith in Jesus and baptism. "Thou shalt have no other gods beside me" is a scriptural truth. "There is only one body." (Eph. 4: 4.) That is true for Ephesus. Do you contend that all the saved at that time were in the body of Christ, which was the church of Christ, at Ephesus? Or was it only a part of the body of Christ located at Ephesus? Please answer these questions in your next article.

Paul tells us what the body of Christ is in 1 Cor. 12: 27: "Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." To whom was Paul writing? 1 Cor. 1: 2: "Unto the church of God which is at Corinth"—the church is his body. "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) What kind of material do you, as instrument, initiate into the body of Christ? If saved, the initiation does not save him. If unsaved, you are bound to say that his entrance into the body of Christ saves him.

You cannot find any law in nature that will justify such a doctrine, much less any spiritual law—will by changing a man's place will change the condition of said man. A candlestick is a place for a light, in scripture. A candle must be lighted before it can shine or give light. Do you honestly believe that you can light a candle by putting it into a candlestick? Suppose you try it. You know you cannot, neither can you by initiating a man into the body of Christ make him alive.

Yes, I admit that there must be a scriptural subject, design, elements, etc. And then you teach that this class has a right at the Lord's table, then you virtually invite this class to your table and refuse to invite any other than said class. To be sure, you will not be so inconsistent as to eat with that man that is not of the above-described class, when you know he has not obeyed the gospel. "With such as these no not to eat," says Paul. Can't you see that you and Paul are not in harmony?

My friend seeks to make it appear that I accept his position on the communion question—viz.: "'I say it is for one who has repented of his sins, believed in Jesus Christ, been baptized into the body of Christ, and made a member of the same. All such have a divine and scriptural right to approach the Lord's table,' and then deny this argument." What proof does he submit for that statement? Hear him:

After agreeing with me on the law of approach to the Lord's table, he then raises the question of church salvation. No church membership, no salvation, is one of his own tenets, and he must make me to adopt it before he can make his argument.

Ah, indeed! Brother Moore raised that issue himself when he said, "been baptized into the body of Christ." I have simply shown the only logical conclusion to be drawn from the premises he himself laid down.

Paul declares that the body of Christ and the church are one and the same. "And he is the head of the body, the church." (Col. 1: 18.) I showed that in order to have spiritual life there must exist a vital union with the head of the body, which is Christ, and in order to have union with the head one must be a member of the body. Is there a single organism in nature where a member of it can have life apart from the body of said organism? Can the limb have life apart from the tree? If Brother Moore separates the body or church from Christ, its head, will he not have a dead body? How does our friend seek to extricate himself from the position in which his "been baptized into the body of Christ" placed him? He does this by running two lines, so if one fails him, maybe the other one will get him out of his difficulty. Unfortunately, however, neither line relieves him, but, on the other hand, both of them draw the cords more closely about him.

He quotes Gal. 3: 26, 27, and then asks me to name the antecedent of "you" in verse 27. Why, it is "ye" in verse 26, of course, and in his own language I will say: "This, to my mind, is conclusive," too. But conclusive of what? One becomes a child of God by faith when that faith leads one to be baptized into Christ. That is exactly what verse 27 says. That verse gives a reason for the statement in verse 26—viz.: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." The reason for that affirmation follows—viz.: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Brother Moore is trying to have people saved "out of Christ" by his "faith-alone" doctrine, when the record plainly says we are baptized into Christ. He says, "Christ and the apostles taught faith in Christ alone;" but if his life depended on it, he could not produce one passage that says so.

His next line consists in an effort to show that people are baptized into a local congregation, and he cites Eph. 4: 4 to show that the "one body" in that text referred simply to the church in Ephesus. He then asks: "Do you contend that all the saved at that time were in the body of Christ, which was the church of Christ, at Ephesus?" O, no, but I do contend that all the saved were in the body of Christ wherever the body of Christ was. The congregation or church at Ephesus represented only the body of Christ in the territory specified, but did not comprise all the body of Christ. It took all of the congregations and individual members in the world at that time to constitute the body of Christ, just as it does now. Brother Moore's position makes Christ have as many bodies as there are congregations of disciples on the earth. One head with a multiplicity of bodies would indeed be a monstrosity in nature. and no less so in grace. The Baptist idea that being baptized into the body of Christ simply means to be baptized into a local organization is not to be found in the Bible. Paul declares most explicitly that all are baptized into one body. "For in one Spirit were we all baptized into one body," etc. (1 Cor. 12: 13.) Now, Paul tells those who were baptized in Corinth that they were baptized into the same body that he was, and yet he was baptized in Damascus. How could this be, unless the body of Christ was general? Say, my beloved, into what was the eunuch baptized? There was no congregation or church present when he was baptized, and yet he was baptized into the body of Christ.

He says my position forces me to say that one's "entrance into the body of Christ saves him." I assume the responsibility of saying that no one has the promise of salvation out of the body of Christ. My friend teaches the same thing-unless he can show that some who are God's children have no right to sit at their Father's table.

He wants to know what kind of material I baptize. That is easy. I baptize those who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, repent of their sins, and confess him before men. Will not changing one's place from the world, translating him into the kingdom of God's Son, change his condition? If baptism does not change one's condition, why do you baptize? You will not let one eat the Lord's Supper until he is baptized; hence you must have regarded his condition before baptism different from his condition after baptism, else why baptize him? His condition was one of unfitness to partake of the Supper before baptism, and since his baptism he is entirely fit for that service, and yet T. F. Moore says this changing of places makes no change in the man's condition! "Can't you see that you and Paul are not in harmony?"

The Bradley-Cayce Debate.

BY T. B. THOMPSON.

On September 23-27, near Burns, Tenn., Brother I. B. Bradley engaged C. H. Cayce (Primitive Baptist) in debate upon three propositions, as follows: On the first day, establishment of the church or kingdom, Brother Bradley affirming; second and third days, unconditional salvation,

Cayce affirming: fourth and fifth days, the conditions of salvation Brother Bradley affirming. The discussion was held under a tent belonging to Brother Oscar Parham. Plenty of good things to eat were served on the ground each day, and the very best of feeling seemed to characterize every one. As to the deportment of both the speakers and the people, there is no necessity of its being better than at this discussion. Be it said to the credit of debaters that, generally speaking, they are conducting themselves upon a higher plane than once they did. The day of the "mud-slinging" debater is fast drawing to a close and religious discussion is coming back to that high plane it so richly deserves. Some of the people of the vicinity of Burns were greatly prejudiced against debates on account of one of a degrading character that was held there some years ago. I think this one will alleviate much of the feeling against religious discussions in that part of the coun-

The disputants were evenly matched in many respects. They are both about the same size physically—small of stature. Both are skilled in debate. Both are rapid speakers. While they both seemed to enjoy debating, it was not hard to see that Bradley exhibited more enthusiastic delight than his opponent. In fact, I think I have seen no one who enjoys a good discussion more than Brother Bradley. He is one of the best debaters it has been my pleasure to hear, being generally informed so that his opponent cannot introduce anything, whether history, science, etc., but that he is able to cope with it. In fact, wherever Brother Bradley has debated, the best of results have followed his efforts.

As in former debates, Mr. Cayce introduced outside persons in order to prejudice the hearers against the position of his opponent. In this debate he introduced one young lady who had been forbidden the privilege of baptism by her father, and asked what would become of her. Bradley quoted Matt. 10: 37 with telling effect, even adding in support a case which came up in his experience, where the young lady was baptized against the threat of her father to disinherit her, and to whom were opened many homes in fulfillment of Christ's promise that he will give a hundredfold in this life to those who leave father, mother, home, etc., to follow him. Cayce refused to answer Bradley, yet continued to ask his question. Mr. Cayce brought up another good old woman who had died in the community without baptism. Bradley quoted Luke 7: 29, 30, and asked whether this lady was in the class of the people and publicans or the lawyers and Pharisees, to which Cayce refused an answer. Brother Bradley further showed that, according to Old Baptists' songs, they did not know whether they were saved or not, but knew all about whether others were whom they could use to advantage. On John 1: 11, 12, Bradley showed that if birth precedes faith, that since only the believer has power to become God's children. then one must still be a child of the devil, though born of God. He further showed that since the unbeliever is condemned, that therefore one was a condemned child of God if, indeed, born before faith. Bradley, on the last day, produced a blackboard diagram showing the links in the chain of connection between man and God, and asked Cayce to rub out the one he deemed unnecessary. This he would not do. Mr. Cayce had his "goat" chart on the ground, but did not expose it. In the Stubblefield-Cayce and the Thompson-Scott debates this chart was so completely turned against them that it will not likely be used again where the same thing may happen.

I had the pleasure of moderating for Brother Bradley in this debate, while one Mr. Phillips moderated for Mr. Cayce. I do not remember more than one visiting preacher among the Baptists. Our visiting preachers were: Brethren Mann, Phillips, Ezell, Luton, Parham, Sisco, and Cayce.

Wherever the Old Baptists are making any boasts, brethren could do no better than get in touch with I. B. Bradley, Dickson, Tenn., who has a good supply of antidotes for every evil doctrine they propagate.

A Visitor's Impression of the Disciples of Christ. []

For some weeks a thoughtful writer, who styles himself "Visitor," has been making a round of the various churches in Toronto, Canada, with the view of giving to the public candid, unbiased impressions of what he saw and heard. Brother Fred Cowin is not the only brother who should be pleased with the report of what "Visitor" saw and heard and felt when he happened in at Bathurst Street, as printed in the Toronto Evening Star:

As the war, with all its tragedies, has led us back to the more simple, less complicated lives of our forefathers, has it not also made us more ready to strip our religious worship of many of its complex ceremonies, and to return to the plain first principles of the doctrine of Christ?

We ask ourselves if the chaplains, in that field of death and horror, advise those brave heroes to become Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Anglicans, or Catholics, that they may be given greater strength to endure; greater comfort in sorrow and defeat; greater courage in temptation; greater faith in the blessings awaiting the redeemed. Do they not rather urge them to become simply Christians? is no time, no inclination for the intricacies of creeds. the world at home not making religion too difficult, too obscure? Is it ready for the return of the multitude of men in khaki, restless, and perhaps yearning for the mere Bread of Life? They should not be offered cold substitutes. The writer was much impressed by the simplicity and wholesomeness of the service of a church on Bathurst Street a few doors north of College. The members apparently attended, not attracted by any special music, for there was neither organ nor choir, nor were they attracted by any startling text, but by their earnest desire to hear God's word as presented to them by their minister, Mr. Cowin, who we believe, prefers not to wear the title "Reverend." It has seldom been our privilege to listen to a erend." It has seldom been our privilege to listen to a more graceful, interesting, convincing speaker. Possibly the strong Scotch flavor made us more receptive. This church is called the "church of Christ," and its members call themselves "Christians" or "disciples of Christ," with the idea of showing their allegiance to the Supreme Head of the church, and not to the founder of any sect. The observe the Lord's Supper every Sunday on "Lord's day as they designate the seventh day. No mention of "Sab-bath" did we hear. One felt that a "Thus saith the Lord" prompted all their observances and that the gospel message was a reality to them. We were told there are several such churches in the city of Toronto. It might be well to learn more about the practices and doctrines of a church to which the members seem to hold fast without the popular methods of entertainment adopted by so many congre-As we visit the different churches, all sincere in their different forms of worship, we realize that the only solution to the ever-growing problem of meeting the spiritual needs of our returned men is to honestly search the Scriptures and discover the principles which guided that first great apostolic church.

Funerals.

BY TICE ELKINS.

The conduct and actions of some good people when they have a funeral among their loved ones is perfectly reprehensible and out of all harmony with the spirit of Christianity. For instance, the wearing of black, especially of back crape; it seems to deny even the existence of a Christian hope. Why adorn yourself in sable robes in respect to one who has gone to realms of endless light? Why wear black for one who is or will be robed in snowy white? If we believe our loved ones are at rest, we should deport ourselves in harmony with that belief and not inconsistently wear black and thus deny that we believe it. But why mourn at all? If they were Christians, they are the guests of God, feasting with heavenly hierarchies; and if they were sinners when they died, do they deserve mourning? We cannot help it, you say! Well, we cannot, it is true. But if we wear black at all, why not for the lost, and white for the saved? Why not be consistent?

Then the expense of some funerals is awful to think about, and good people will contract debts in order to give their departed loved one a "nice" funeral, when they made no great effort to give them a "nice" time while they lived. More inconsistency. We ought to keep within our means and within common sense. I have seen the undertaker cheated and swindled by people calling for an outlay they could not pay for. I have heard of a man who has owed the undertaker for the decent putting away of one of his family for more than six years. Some men get married the second time before they pay the undertaker for putting away the first wife.

Another thing. I have seen the people gather at the church house to hear the funeral address of a bad man, one who scoffed at religion, hated the church, blasphemed God! Why hold such a funeral in the church house at all? If a man will not go to church while he lives, is it fair to him to force him to go when he is dead? Do not compel a man to attend church when he cannot help himself, when he would not go as long as he could help it. I do not believe it is right to try to do for his body that which he would not do for his own soul while he lived.

And another thing. It is not right to have funerals on the Lord's day when it can be avoided. If one depart this life on Friday, bury him on Saturday; and if on Saturday, wait till Monday; or, if it must be on Sunday, arrange for another hour than the one at which the church assembles for worship, that you may not neglect your duty in worshiping God in order to bestow honor on the dead. Let God be first.

Our loved dead are entitled to all we can do for the poor body; but if they could arrange their own funeral, and loved God, they would not have us to do wrong, or make display, or cheat the undertaker, or wear a "hopeless" garb.

Training Little Children By MISS HARRIET FRANCES CARPENTER.

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 29.

Wise Motherhood with Patience and Assurance Guides the True Self of the Child-Such Motherhood is Joy, Not Drudgery.

A mother who had taken a course in kindergarten work made a call at the school where she had studied. "I cannot tell you of what value my training has been, but I wish I could have more," she cried, wistfully. "The problems a mother has to meet are so many. For instance, my little girl has long, curly hair; and when I take her to the shops, the clerks comment upon it before her. I fear she is becoming very vain. Only the other day she said, as she posed before the mirror: 'I have pretty hair, mamma!'"

"What did you say?" asked the kindergarten training teacher.

"I replied as calmly as I could: 'It looks very well when you keep it neatly combed."

This answer showed that the mother had grasped the core of Froebel's idea when he wrote: "Mother, let your behavior be such that your child may early learn to realize that your approval is given not to his small, visible person, but to his true self. . . . Whether the child strives for being or appearance, for what is temporal or eternal. rests upon the power of the mother to guide his aspiration. . . That the bond between mother and child may not be merely a physical one, she must be a mother not only in feeling, but with insight which assures deliberate deeds."

Such a mother finds no drudgery in her task. Rather has she the feeling of the artist, for joy is her ruling motive-not joy in selfish possession, but joy in perceiving growth and attaining desirable achievements. She is ready to pause for a song on the way, is not impatient at the length of the journey, and, cheerfully following the long zigzags of the steps hewed by Nature's own slowly unfolding methods, she guides the child up the path of the mountain of life.

Wise is the patient care of this mother guide, knowing no fear, even when the child errs; for has not the great Goethe told us that although man has aspiration he cannot but err? Has not the newer poet-dramatist. Ibsen, for all his grave sense of human culpability, shown us Solveig, the mother, waiting at the crossroads till Peer Gynt learns that he has chosen the wrong path, patient through all the years for him to come to her in this old age to purge his soul of dross and fill it with the truth?

"Where was I?" he asks, as he kneels before her, dazed by his sense of failure—this man rich in world's success. but barren in things of the soul. "Where was I as myself-the whole man, the true man?"

"In my faith, in my hope, in my love," answered the eternal woman, undaunted in her belief in the final outcome.

"The boy has been resting on his mother's lap; They two have been playing all the life day long. The boy has been lying close to my breast All the life day long. The boy has been lying close to my hart All the life day long. I will cradle you. I will watch over you."

"Wife, mother, sister art thou," answered the newly inspired Peer, seeing her for the first time as she was-the woman not of flesh alone, nor of intellect, nor of this world, but the spiritual mother of the race.

What mother is there who does not long for this high rôle of motherhood to her child's soul?

Grass Enough for All.

Charles Dana Gibson, the artist, was on a visit to the cottage of a friend at Dark Harbor last summer. The cottage was built on the top of a hill, and from it was got a superb view downward over grasslands and gray rocks and thence out across the broad, silvery bay.

"Whenever I have a spacious view like this," said Mr. Gibson, "I think of a little slum urchin whom I accompanied on his first visit to the country.

"It was years ago. A newspaper was sending the children of the poor to the country for a week. I went with one of the bands in order to make sketches.

"When the train drew up, I helped out a pale, slender lad of about six years. I lifted him into the waiting farm wagon, and we jogged off through beautiful rolling pastures-miles on miles of green velvet. The little fellow was much excited by the scene.

"'My,' he exclaimed, 'they must need a lot of cops here!' "Why so?' said I.

"'There's so much grass to keep off of,' replied the child."

Imagine to yourselves, country boys and girls, and city boys and girls whose parents can send you to the country, what a pitiful thing it would be if you had never been where there was a grass plat large enough to serve as a playground. Many large cities are trying to remedy this state of affairs by creating small parks near the crowded districts so that the urchins from the slums may have lawns for playgrounds.-Selected.

Trouble and Sorrow Sure to Come.

Prepare thyself to bear many adversities and divers kinds of troubles in this life; for so it will be with thee, wheresoever thou art, and so surely thou shalt find it, wheresoever thou hide thyself. So it must be: nor is there any remedy nor means to escape from tribulation and sorrow, but only to endure them. Drink of the Lord's cup with hearty affection, if thou desire to be his friend and to have part with him.-Thomas à Kempis.

Hearing the Word of God.

Dear children, you ought not to cease from hearing or declaring the word of God because you do not always live according to it nor keep it in mind; for inasmuch as you love it and crave after it, it will assuredly be given unto you, and you shall enjoy it forever with God according to the measure of your desire after it. Do not relinquish your desire, though it be not fulfilled immediately or though you may swerve from your aspirations or even forget them for a time. It were a hard case if this were to cut you off forever from the end of your being. But when you hear the word of God, surrender yourselves wholly to it as if for eternity, with a full purpose of will to retain it in your mind and to order your life according to it, and let it sink down right deep into your heart as into an eternity. If afterwards it should come to pass that you let it slip and never think of it again, yet the love and aspiration which once really existed live forever before God, and in him you shall find the fruit thereof-that is, to all eternity it shall be better for you than if you had never felt them .-John Tauler.

The Duty of Elders.

As on all other questions upon which God has spoken to man, what he says to the elders of the different congregations as to their duty is as plain as day. "Feed the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood" is the command in Acts 20: 28. It would be well to read the whole sentence: "Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, in which the Holy Spirit hath made you bishops, to feed the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood." They were made bishops for the specific purpose of feeding the church over which they were made bishops. In 1 Pet. 5: 2-4 we have these words: "Tend the flock of God which is among you, exercising the oversight, not of constraint, but willingly, according to the will of God; nor yet for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as lording it over the charge allotted to you, but making yourselves ensamples to the flock. And when the chief Shepherd shall be manifested, ye shall receive the crown of glory that fadeth not away." It is well to give here the Spirit's declaration in Tit, 1: 7-11: "For the bishop must be blameless, as God's steward; not self-willed, not soon angry, no brawler, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but given to hospitality, a lover of good, sober-minded, just, holy, self-controlled; holding to the faithful word which is according to the teaching, that he may be able both to exhort in the sound doctrine, and to convict the gainsayers. For there are many unruly men, vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision, whose mouths must be stopped; men who overthrow whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake." With such reading before us, can we be otherwise impressed than that the work and duty of elders is of superlative importance in the churches? 0 0 0

The Sad Neglect of Elders.

While it is certainly true that the duty and work of elders is of paramount importance in the congregations, do you know of any work more neglected, as a rule, than the work of elders? Is it not true that there is a need of an absolute restoration in some places, putting elders in where they have been supplanted by the devices of men; and a reformation at other places, getting elders to really live as they should and to do the God-ordained work where it is sadly neglected to the death of the church and to their own condemnation? To me this seems to be one of the crying needs in the churches to-day. Now, may I not have a heart-to-heart talk to those of you who claim to be elders? How much time do you give to "overseeing and feeding the church?" Honestly, if every one who claims to be an elder should do as you do, what would become of our churches? Paul says he had daily "anxiety for all the churches." How much anxiety do you have for the congregation over which you have been appointed as elder? Did you know that the relationship you sustain to the congregation is much that of a father to the child, the head of the house to the household? When the orders, recently, in many of our cities, went forth for all churches to close their places of worship to prevent the spread of the "Spanish flu," how many who claimed to be elders were equal to the occasion? How many rushed to the defense of their flock and made the needed arrangements for the regular worship on the first day of the week to the end that God's law should not be broken and the request of our rulers be respected? Suppose the order had been that all of our homes must be vacated and we live in the open air till further instructed, would you have tried to make provision for your own family? I am sure you would. But did you know your duty to the congregation over which you have been appointed is just as sacred and binding-and, if any difference, more so-as that you sustain to the members of your own family?

How much are you reading and praying each day, anyhow, that you may be indeed and in truth just what an elder should be? Are you prepared to "exhort in sound doctrine and to convict the gainsayers" if they should arise among you? Are you prepared to "stop the mouths of vain talkers and deceivers?" These are important questions, and every elder should see to it that he can answer them in the affirmative. To drive the important duty of elders closer to our own hearts, may I ask, if you should put no more thought, work, and dead-earnestness in your business that you follow for a livelihood here than you do to your work as an elder, how long would that business continue? Have you learned to look at your duty as an elder as a business proposition, and to push it as such, as though your life depended upon it? For is it not true that your real life-eternal life-does depend upon it, as much so as your physical life here depends upon your making the business you follow a success?

If every local congregation were, indeed, just what God would have it be, what a work could be done! If every local congregation were all God would have it be, how many of the jars and discords, how much of the strife and confusion would be driven from the churches! Nothing would go further in bringing about this happy state than for all the elders everywhere to be just what God would have them be and to do what God would have them do. May God hasten the day when it will be so.

Every worrying person is a split self. He does not bring his entire personality into what he is doing now, but allows detachments of his thoughts to wonder what will happen to him next. The Spanish Influenza.

The reports from all parts of the country concerning the inroads of this disease are really fearful to contemplate. The number of deaths in our army camps is truly frightful. This common danger behooves us all to exercise special vigilance in protecting our own health and that of our families. In every community there is a scarcity of doctors, due to the demands of the government, and we have even learned of deaths that have resulted from neglect through inability to secure a physician. It will be well for the brethren and people everywhere to observe strictly all the regulations urged by our State Boards of Health and coöperate in every way to help combat and drive out this unwelcome scourge.

As a result of this condition, many preachers over the country will be unable to fill their appointments. We are sure the churches in such cases will remember the preacher and send the usual allowance to him during the period of his enforced idleness.—Christian Leader.

A large part of the population is afflicted with Spanish influenza. Many people are dying of the disease. Here in Nashville our friends and our neighbors are dying, some, it appears, for the want of attention.

The Russell Street church of Christ opened its doors to the afflicted and are using the Sunday-school rooms for a hospital, as was announced in our columns last week. The church was fortunate in securing a trained nurse, a member of the church of Christ, to direct and help the sisters of the church in caring for the patients. Many of the patients had contracted pneumonia, and evidently without careful nursing and attention could not have recovered. It is encouraging to note how faithfully and efficiently a number of the Christian women have nursed the sick back to health. No sacrifice was too great for them to make. The church has been open day and night. Dr. Haley kindly proffered his services as physician and has given careful attention to all the patients. Through the untiring efforts of the doctor, the sisters, and others, we are gratified to be able to announce that all the patients are convalescing, Some have been sent to their homes.

Here is a practical demonstration of what the church can do. The church is a power for good in any community. The members of the body of Christ have a great work to do. Members of the Russell Street church of Christ left their places of business, got into their automobiles and went into the homes of the poor and afflicted, and carried the sick to the church hospital. The Eleventh Street and Chapel Avenue churches of Christ did much to advance the work. Members of the church not only gave their time and money, but they fed and nursed all who came under their care. The good work goes on and will doubtless continue until conditions are much improved. If we would walk in the steps of the Master, we must do such work. Christ gave his life in relieving the sick, feeding the hungry, and casting out demons. How inexpressibly sweet will it be when the righteous appear at the judgment to hear Christ say: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me."

Is There Any Reason Why God Should Answer Our Prayers?

Do we wonder and complain that our prayers are not answered? It seems, indeed, an excusable thing to do so when we note the large promises made to those who pray—if we have really prayed.

So many things enter into the question of unanswered prayers. It would seem fundamental and fair to settle it whether we have really prayed before we complain that our prayers are not answered. We often confuse prayer with simply expressing a desire in an easy, light way while we are kneeling with our eyes shut. But real prayer comes out of the great deep, and it is of the heart, will, and mind, and sometimes it costs blood, like Gethsemane. It is often the cause of excruciating inner struggle. After Jacob had struggled all night with the angel, at daybreak he went over from the loneliness and quiet by the brook Jabbok, limp and hait. The struggle had left a permanent physical effect. It was prayer with its tremendous cost. And so prayer is no easy, light thing, and before we complain that our prayers are unanswered it would be well to know whether we have really prayed.

And when we have prayed, do we always recognize the answer when it comes? The answer to Paul's prayer for the removing of the ugly, stinging thorn was not its removal, but grace to endure it—the power to work on and be glad in spite of it. That was the larger answer to the prayer. It would have been so easy to remove the thorn, but the result would have been only a negative one—just the loss of the thorn and not any gain of power. But when Paul got so he could work and be happy in spite of this thorn, it was a positive contribution to his life and the world. He became an example of a man who could live victoriously, gladly, usefully, even though he had a stinging, tormenting affliction.

We can imagine a child, unacquainted with the ways of nature, praying for a favorite flower to grow and be beautiful. A terrible rainstorm comes and seems to annihilate the flower. The child feels mocked, yet the storm is the answer to her prayer: it gives the freshness, beauty, and growth of the flower, as after days would prove, for which she prayed.

But likely many of us prayed for little things when we should pray for big ones. We ask for crumbs when we should ask for loaves. We want individuals when we should want communities, and communities when we might have continents. "Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

When our prayers are so small, so trivial, and often so selfish, is there any reason why they should be answered? We do not ask a penny from a millionaire—why should we ask a trifle from God? —Christian-Evangelist.

God wants his children to cry unto him, and to cry unto him mightily. If he is displeased with us, it is because we cry unto him so feebly that he must strain his omnipotent ear to hear our appeal. We should pray always and not faint. We should pray everywhere and without ceasing. To encourage us to pray, God assures us that he hears and answers our prayers. He heard and answered Paul and Silas in the Philippian jail; he heard and answered the church when it prayed for Peter. "The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working." "For the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears unto their supplication." The same journal says further concerning prayer:

If there be one lack above all others in our brotherhood life and cooperation in the work of our Lord, it is the lack of such unceasing and prevailing prayer, personal and intercessory, as will bring us into complete union with God through his Son, as will make us sharers of his almighty power in carrying out his will. It is the lack of every branch of our divided Christendom. Not without the power that comes from union with Christ and with his Father can we ever have a united Christendom. It is not formal or selfish praying that makes us one with Christ and with each other, but the praying that involves the complete sur-render of our wills to his will. We must pray for each render of our wills to his will. We must pray for each other, too, and especially those that are bearing heavy bur-But too many neglect the dens for Christ's sake. dens for Christ's sake. . . . But too many neglect the early morning hour of prayer. Why not have an hour for prayer in the midst of business sessions? God wants to use us in a large way in this crucial period of his church, f we are willing to be used by him and put away everything that hinders such use.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

From Alexander Campbell, Caney Springs, Tenn., October 13: "I have just closed a good meeting at this place. Four were baptized and two were restored. My next meeting will be at Bryant Station, Tenn."

Some brother in Arkansas wrote to Brother Elam about conducting a meeting some time next year. Unfortunately, the letter was lost; but if the brother sees this notice and will supply his name and address, Brother Elam thinks the meeting can be arranged for.

From J. B. Nelson, Dallas, Texas, October 9: "I closed at Shady Point, Okla., last Sunday night, with eight baptisms and four restored. I was called there through Will W. Slater, one of Oklahoma's best preachers, and, above all, a good man. I found a good church there."

In the death of Miss Lucy Owen the church in Nashville lost a lovable Christian character who will be sadly missed. She was a daughter of Brother and Sister J. W. Owen, who are members of the Lawrence Avenue congregation. The funeral service was conducted Monday by James A. Allen and A. B. Lipscomb.

Brother Elam had a fine prospect for a good meeting at Murray, Ky., but the meeting came to an abrupt close on account of the influenza epidemic. This is the brief story of many other meetings started under auspicious circumstances. Let us pray for another opportunity and be submissive to our Father's will.

From Ben West, Ennis, Texas, October 15: "Sunday was the first day for twelve years that I have failed to attend service. All churches, schools, and public gatherings closed on account of influenza epidemic. We had three funerals here Sunday. Most of the membership have escaped the influenza. Busy attending the sick."

From Willie Hunter, Livingston, Tenn., October 16: "Our meeting at Athens, in White County, closed last Lord's day, after eight days' duration. Fine interest was manifested and the brethren seemed to take on new life. There were five additions to the church, all by baptism. Two of this number came from the Baptists. I promised to go back next year for a ten-days' meeting."

From W. M. Oakley, superintendent of the Potter Orphans' Home and School, Bowling Green, Ky., October 13; "All public meetings having been prohibited by the State Board of Health on account of the Spanish influenza, I remained at home to-day with the children. Our congregation being already together, we had our regular church services as usual. Two bright boys made the good confession and were baptized this afternoon. Our work at the Home is progressing nicely. We have thirty-six children, all well, happy, and in school every day."

From A. W. Young, Box 464, Fort Worth, Texas: "Eight additions to the South Side-Central Church since last report. All lines of work getting along nicely. Camp Bowie Tabernacle has been under quarantine for some time, and now we have a ban on all public gatherings on account of the influenza. Beginning on October 4, I held a fournights' discussion with J. F. Curtis, of Independence, Mo., one of the apostles of the so-called 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints,' commonly called 'Mormons,' at Elreno, Okla. The debate was closed by quarantine, and we agreed to resume it on November 20."

From J. H. Lawson, Sherman, Texas, October 16: "I am ordered to San Antonio on November 1 for my training for overseas duty, after which I expect to sail at an early date. I shall work in Camp Travis while taking my training. We lack much of the necessary funds for the trip, but hope that this will be supplied by the time I am ready. I want the names and proper addresses of 'our boys,' that I may locate as many of them as possible when I get 'over there.' The work at Camp Bowie will continue under the directions of the Fort Worth churches. Send all communications to me at Sherman, Texas, and same will be forwarded."

From F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va., October 15: "I have received help in my work as follows: From the church of Christ at Milford, Ohio, $3; church of Christ at Taft, N. M., $5; church of Christ at Cortez, Fla., $5; church of Christ at Blythedale, Mo., $5; Ed Percell, $1; Enoch McIntyre, $2; S. C. T., $5. This help is very much appreciated. May God bless and prosper all the donors, and at the same time may he increase their number. Our meetings have been doing very well, especially the Lord's-day meetings, until Spanish influenza struck this section. Almost everything is closed now. This is pretty hard on me, with nothing coming in from any source. If any one who reads this note is thinking of helping our work this fall, please do it now."

From J. C. Estes, Memphis, Tenn., October 18: "I am waiting for my home-bound train from here. I rushed through Nashville on my hurried trip home this time because of the influenza in my home. It was because of this epidemic that our meeting at Bean's Creek, Tenn., closed at least one week before it should have closed. It just got started good. One was reclaimed, nine were baptized, and the church was much encouraged and edified. While there, I made my home with John Lipscomb and his good wife, who know how to take of and appreciate those who are giving their time in the ministry of the word of God. There are many others there who know the same art. I am now ready for work anywhere within a radius of one hundred miles of Dallas."

Following are extracts from a letter addressed to the members of the Campbell Street Church, Louisville, Ky., by its faithful minister, M. C. Kurfees:

This letter is to inform you that, on account of such a rapid spread of influenza as to endanger the health and lives of the entire population of our country, the Kentucky State Board of Health, acting upon the advice of our national government at Washington, has issued a proclamation closing all churches as long as this order may be in force.

While it is to be regretted that not only our protracted meeting, so auspiciously begun, had to be abandoned, but that also our regular meetings for divine worship have to be temporarily suspended, it behooves us, nevertheless, to cheerfully submit to this order and to exert all our energies in an earnest and sympathetic effort to coöperate with the benevolent purpose of our government to check the deplorable disease.

I earnestly request, therefore, that every member of our congregation join heartily in this praiseworthy effort, and let us hope and pray that the sudden interruption of our regular program may not only serve to remind us that the Supreme Ruler of the universe has a hand in present world affairs, but that, under his benign and overruling providence, it may work for good to our entire congregation. Under the government's order each family, as was sometimes done in the days of the apostles, has the liberty and is hereby urged to conduct worship in its own home.

Furthermore, let every member carefully note the fact that the current expenses of the church go right on, and that on the first day that our meetings are resumed we should double, treble, or otherwise increase our contributions according to the number of Lord's days our meetings shall have been suspended; or, as would be better still, send your contribution promptly to Henry Craft, treasurer, care of J. F. Kurfees Paint Company, Brook and Market Streets, each week. Let us all, in the fear of God, do everything within our power to meet every demand of duty upon us precisely as if there were no suspension of our meetings.

You will be notified through the daily papers when our meetings may be resumed.

MISSIONARY

The Conquest of a Continent.

BY F. L. HADFIELD, BULAWAYO, AFRICA.

Land of the Pharaohs, of Jacob, and of Joseph; land of the institution of the passover and of the mighty deliverance; land of millions of Mohammedans and countless multitudes of Negroes and Abantu; land of the Silent Sahara and of the Nile, the Niger, the Congo, and the Zambesi; land of Moffatt, of Livingstone, and of Stanley! Where is there a land that so awakens the imagination and challenges the enterprise of the herald of Christ as does the still "Dark Continent?"

Africa has several gateways, but there is much reason to believe that the two principal ones will for long be the opposite ends of the Cape-to-Cairo Railway. To-day there is not one of greater importance than the southern end of this railway, which opens at Capetown, in the Union of South Africa, and runs already two thousand miles up to Elizabethville, in the Congo.

Having lived for twelve years at Bulawayo, in Southern Rhodesia, a junction one thousand miles up from the Cape, the writer can testify that there is a constant stream of Europeans from the Union to Elizabethville, whence it spreads over the great but darkened part of Africa.

Along this line are various great branches running out to the coast, passing as they go through the centers of European and native population. It will, therefore, be apparent to any one who will take a modern map of South and Central' Africa and will follow this great railroad from its beginning to its terminus, following out also the various branch lines, what wonderful possibilities there are in the Union of South Africa as a base of operations for the conquest of the continent for Christ. Other bodies are widely awake to its strategic importance and are using it to the full. What are we doing?

The Union of South Africa had at the last census (1911) 1,276,000 whites, 678,000 colored and mixed races, and 4,019,-000 natives. Here in itself is a great field; here is the gate to the five million more in other parts of South Africa not included in the Union; here, too, the gate to the great "up North." What are the people doing in this field who claim to teach only the primitive gospel in its attractiveness and power? Listen: We have not one evangelist propagating our plea among the million and a quarter Europeans, not one missionary working among the four million natives. We have on the greatest gold-mining center in the world, the Rand mines, one solitary but heroic worker, assisted by one or two white brethren in their spare time. This brother, George Khosa, has won from the millions about one hundred and seventy native members, while in the Union our European membership does not exceed twenty-five.

This state of things is as great a mystery to the writer to-day as when he came here twelve years ago; for not only has this great field never been evangelized with the New Testament plea, but it has never been seriously attempted. Three visits of British evangelists have been made, but they are now ancient history, and for the last ten years or more no effort of any kind has been made in the Union by the disciples of Christ overseas. In all those great countries where our cause is well established and our membership is counted by thousands, where they have the message, the money, and the men, the Union of South Africa has been forgotten.

I beseech you, brethren, in the name of Christ, to rectify this great want in the war we are waging for the Lord.

The proposal to send out this plea was submitted to the few remaining brethren in the South, but they felt that the time was not opportune. From this view the writer dif-War conditions are, of course, unfavorable to the fers. work. On the other hand, we learn from many sources that at the front old sectarian notions are being shattered. When the men come back, they will have but little patience with sectarian differences; established practices and beliefs will go into the melting pot and thousands will give fresh consideration to the whole question of religion. It is at such a time that the powerfully attractive and convincing plea of the churches of Christ will, if properly presented by Spirit-filled men, have an opportunity that has never before been equaled. But if we are to secure our proper position in the Union of South Africa, a country where we are not yet known-a position, as I have shown, pregnant with possibilities-then our plans must be laid now. Once that period of flux passes and men's minds crystallize in favor of other positions than that for which we plead, our task must be enormously increased.

The difficulties are not a few, but are not greater than in other countries. The racial difficulty is, of course, here in all its strength; but no more so than in America, where our cause has made greater progress than in any other land.

The men who come must be sent, for there is no one here to support them. They must come with their courage gripped in both hands, or rather gripped in the hand of God, for it is virgin ground in most places, the plea of a purely New Testament Christianity having been rarely heard and our name being unknown. They must come, not with the intention of remaining "if successful," but determined to stay until, by the grace of God, their work is a success.

The writer himself is earnestly desirous of making a start. We cannot appeal to New Zealand to undertake the work, for their finances are taxed to the utmost to keep up with the calls in Southern Rhodesia. With the salary of the writer set at liberty, the New Zealand churches will be able to engage another man, and thus at least a beginning can be made.

While unwilling to commit themselves, at least at present, to the larger scheme, the few faithful brethren who have done a lot to help George Khosa are very willing for me to go down to Johannesburg, and also to hire a suitable hall to hold gospel services in. They cannot possibly do more than this. The male members there number now only five.

As Johannesburg is a very large European center, the writer's personal preaching would be confined principally to the English-speaking population, the preaching to the natives would be carried on by the native teachers, the writer helping in an advisory and supervisory capacity in this work. This course is not uncommonly followed now in town areas, though it is better, as a general rule, for a man's time to be devoted entirely to one phase or the other.

In conclusion, let me say that this work should appeal to all. We want you to send men both for European and native work, but you must send good men. In the former cause they will have to compete with strongly established causes of the denominations. In the native sphere we can secure fields, some in the Union and some farther north, where we shall interfere very little with anybody. But this condition is passing rapidly, and soon there will be no native territory that we can enter without trampling on the work of other people—a condition to be by all means avoided in missionary effort.

I earnestly impress upon you as individuals and as churches to consider the Union of South Africa as a field in itself and as a great gate to a greater continent.

Some can come; many can give; all can pray. Do your part now.

· Declaring All the Counsel of God.

BY M. C. K.

On account of a false rumor started in connection with current speculations on unfulfilled prophecy and the opposition they have encountered, as well as the vital and serious importance of the theme itself, we wish to direct special attention to the divine obligation upon preachers and all other religious teachers to declare all the counsel of

From the time of Jesus and Paul to the present time, the fact seems to have uniformly appeared that, when men are bent on propagating their peculiar views of certain biblical passages or any other form of religious error, it is a foregone conclusion that they will misrepresent any opposition to their particular hobbies; and so in the present case it is necessary to record the fact that, against the very proper and timely opposition to pressing men's views of unfulfilled prophecy to the point of disturbing the peace and harmony of the churches, the charge has been made that this opposition is attempting to curtail the preacher's liberty to declare all the counsel of God and to put upon him such limitations as will actually require the suppression of a part of the word of God.

The Gospel Advocate cannot speak for everybody in answer to this charge, but in this case, as on all other proper occasions, it can speak for itself. Its readers already know that, so far as its own policy and principles are concerned. the charge falls flat without a solitary paragraph from its columns in proof; but we are glad, nevertheless, to reemphasize and to magnify a theme of such transcendent importance. Let us, therefore, take a calm view of the facts in the present situation.

First of all, we mention the fact, and call particular attention to it, that all preachers and all other religious teachers are, of course, sometimes dependent on human judgment as to what particular part of God's word is applicable at a given time and to a given person. For example, God commands persons to be baptized, and commands preachers to tell them so, yet there are times and persons when and to whom that command is not applicable, and in that case and for that time that command must be held in reserve and another part of God's word must be preached; but is this limiting the preacher and asking him to suppress a part of the word of God? No, it is simply strict adherence to that word.

Moreover, even after men have been baptized and have thus entered upon the Christian life, the apostle, referring to their meager growth in grace and knowledge, which is so often the lamentable condition of Christians, says they "are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food." (Heb. 5: 12.) Now, if they "have need of milk," of course the preacher must not give them "solid food," but must give them "milk" till they are "full-grown men." Again, we ask, does this mean that the apostle, by such teaching, is limiting the preacher and requiring him to suppress a part of God's word? And again we reply, no, it is strict adherence to the word of God. To the church of God at Corinth the apostle distinctly says: "I fed you with milk, not with meat: for ye were not able to bear it: nay, not even now are ye able." (1 Cor. 3: 2.) Here it is as clear as a sunbeam that sometimes a part of God's word is applicable to a given case when another part is not.

The same principle applies even in the matter of selecting the particular theme of discourse for a particular occasion. Some things in God's word are appropriate for that occasion, and some things are not. All the counsel of God on all subjects cannot be properly declared on that particular occasion, even if all of it were applicable, but sometimes, in the case of some persons, some parts of that counsel are clearly inapplicable and inappropriate, and these, of course, it would be improper to present at that particular time; but when this point is very properly made, does it mean that we are attempting to limit the preacher and to require of him that he suppress a part of the counsel of God? Again the answer is an emphatic no, except in the identical sense in which the inspired apostle says the "need" at one time is for one part of the word of God, and at another time it is for another part of that word.

We come now to the main matter involved in the false charge in question. The speculators on unfulfilled prophecy, after advancing certain "views" of certain prophecies which neither they nor anybody else can know are correct till the time of fulfillment comes, and hence, which other Christians in some instances cannot conscientiously accept and whose advocacy they must therefore oppose, come back with the signally irrelevant reply that "the prophecies are a part of the word of God, and we have the right to preach them as well as any other part of that word." Indeed! But who has ever called this in question? Of course "the prophecies are a part of the word of God, and we" not only "have the right to preach them," but it is our solemn, Godimposed duty to preach them; but this is a very different thing from preaching somebody's "views" of them which may or may not be correct, and on which, therefore, nobody's salvation, and nothing else of any importance, depends. Hence, those who press and push such views to the point of discord and strife and the disruption of peace and harmony in the churches are factious and guilty of creating schism in the body of Christ, No matter what one's mere "views" of an unfulfilled prophecy may be, common sense teaches us that such a view might be incorrect, and therefore neither it nor the preaching of it can be essential to anybody's salvation. Sometimes such a view is either of such a nature as not to be harmful in the estimation of those who do not accept it, or it is advanced under circumstances when it does no harm; and although even then the preaching of such views is a wholly useless thing, yet the occasion and results are not the same as when such views are regarded by others as harmful and when, therefore, they cannot be preached without encountering very proper and just and timely opposition from those who thus regard them. The only scriptural and proper thing to do with such views under such circumstances is to hold them as private property and never preach them. The peace and harmony of the church of God are more than one's mere "views" of an unfulfilled prophecy; and hence, for the advocates of such views, under such circumstances, to come back at the opposition with the very true, but, nevertheless, irrelevant claim that "the prophecies are a part of the word of God and it is our duty to preach and teach them," is the height of absurdity. So far as our knowledge goes, nobody objects to preaching and teaching the prophecies, even the unfulfilled prophecies, as well as those which have been fulfilled. Preach and teach the prophecies, of course; preach what they say and preach all that they say; but that is a very different thing from preaching the preacher's view of it. Preach Isaiah, Daniel, Ezekiel, and all the rest, even the book of Revelation-every word of it; preach what it says, and all that it says, but not the preacher's view of it, and most especially when the latter produces discord and strife. Of course the prophecies are a part of the word of God, and God distinctly commands us to "preach the word" (2 Tim, 4: 1, 2), but he nowhere commands us to preach the preacher's view of the word. Preach every prophecy of God's word, and preach it with God's warning, but leave its fulfillment to him. He will attend to that at the proper time and in the proper way. "Therefore be ye also ready; for in an hour that ye think not the Son of man cometh." (Matt. 24: 44.) There is a prophecy. Let us preach it, and preach it earnestly, faithfully, and constantly, and it will make the very impression which God wants it to make.

Certainly, let us, with Paul, declare "all the counsel of God;" but when it comes to our "views" of some of that counsel, and preëminently when the proclamation of such views causes strife, let us again follow Paul's specific instruction on this identical point when he says: "The faith which thou hast, have thou to thyself before God." (Rom. 14: 22.)

Closing Churches.

BY J. C. M'Q.

On account of such rapid spread of influenza as to endanger the lives of many people of our country, the national government at Washington has advised the different State governments to issue a proclamation closing all churches so long as this great danger to the health and lives of the people exists.

I do not understand that the government intends by this proclamation to interfere with Christians' worshiping God as they understand the New Testament requires them to do. Churches of Christ have taught and do teach that the early Christians met upon each first day of the week in order to break bread. It is urged and contended by them that Christians should meet in order to worship God upon each first day of the week. They support this position by such passages as Acts 20: 7: "And upon the first day of the week, when we were gathered together to break bread, Paul discoursed with them, intending to depart on the morrow; and prolonged his speech until midnight." We also read in Acts 2: 42 that the early church continued in the breaking of bread: "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." Also, in Heb. 10: 23-25, Christians are admonished to not forsake the assembling of themselves together on the first day of the week: "Let us hold fast the confession of our hope that it waver not; for he is faithful that promised; and let us consider one another to provoke unto leve and good works; not forsaking our own assembling together, as the custom of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day drawing nigh." Christians also are admonished to contribute on the first day of the week as the Lord has prospered them. This privilege should not be neglected now, for the expenses of the church are continuous and perhaps greater than they were formerly. We read in 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I gave order to the churches of Galatia, so also do ye. Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper, that no collections be made when I come." Christians should contribute on the first day of the week as well as break bread. There is no warrant in the Scriptures for neglecting the contribution any more than there is for neglecting the prayers and the breaking of bread.

It is to be hoped that as the government enjoins upon all churches to close, that some Christians who have been derelict and have not assembled upon the first day of the week will now see their mistake and appreciate this privilege as they have never done before. It certainly is a blessing and a privilege to the faithful child of God to be permitted to enjoy sweet communion with Christ upon each first day of the week. It is a privilege that should not be esteemed lightly. I have often thought that when the king commanded Daniel not to pray to any other god for thirty days, that Daniel appreciated the privilege of prayer more than ever before. Doubtless he realized its necessity to the child of God and saw what a blessing it was and esteemed the privilege of carrying all his troubles to God as he had not done before. May we not trust that the government's proclamation will have the same effect upon many derelict disciples? But Christians have not felt that God required them to meet upon the first day of the week when any of their family or loved ones were seriously sick. Especially they have not felt called upon to leave them and meet with the disciples on the first day of the week if thereby they would jeopardize the lives of members of their families. Even so Christians now should feel that God does not call upon them to meet in a way that will jeopardize and endanger the health and lives of not only their own families, but the families also of many other people. With this view of it, which is in harmony with the practice of Christians, I have suggested to the brethren who asked me about observing the command of the government that they should do so, suggesting, however, that they could meet in their homes or simply a few in some place and thereby obey the government, which we should always do, provided such obedience is not disobedience to God. The government's order gives each family an opportunity to show its loyalty to the government and also to God. Evidently sometimes in the days of the apostles each family worshiped God in its own home.

The New Testament nowhere intimates that we must have a large crowd assembled in order to worship God in the breaking of bread. Heretofore I have urged isolated Christians to worship God in their own families. I hold that one man with Christ would make a meeting and that therefore he could worship God; for we are taught that where two or three have met together in his name, that he will be in their midst to bless. For Christians to urge that we should now assemble in large crowds to break bread in the face of the proclamation of the government is not warranted by the Scriptures, but is a direct violation of the command of the Holy Spirit which says: "Let every soul be in subjection to the higher powers: for there is no power but of God; and the powers that be are ordained of God. Therefore he that resisteth the power, with standeth the ordinance of God: and they that withstand shall receive to themselves judgment." (Rom. 13: 1, 2.)

It will not be questioned that the intent of the government is to protect and care for the lives of its subjects. As the observance of the command does not interfere with Christians' meeting a few together and observing the Lord's Supper, Christians should observe the command cheerfully, seeking to lead quiet, holy, and unblamable lives. Wisdom is justified of God's children, and they should act in a way that their good may not be evil spoken of.

The Word of the Lord Is True.

BY E. G. S.

When the word of the Lord says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," he will see to it that there will not be a single failure on that line; and when he says, "He that believeth not shall be damned," that will be carried out with equal certainty. A great many reason this way: "Well, I am not a very bad man and he will not punish me much, and so I will not be in a great hurry about being baptized." Thus a very large part of that class sin away their day of grace and are lost at last. Putting off obedience to the gospel of Christ after we understand it and have opportunity to obey it is an exceedingly dangerous thing and a risk that should never be taken.

When we come to look at it seriously, God has been wondrously kind in arranging the plan of salvation so thoroughly to man's convenience. God demands nothing at the hands of men that will do them any harm to obey. On the other hand, it will always do them good if they obey with a humble and earnest heart. To become a Christian and lead a Christian life will ennoble, elevate, and purify the life and prepare one for eternity. Why, then, should any one fail to become a Christian or to lead a Christian life? There is everything to gain and nothing to lose by becoming a Christian and faithfully leading a Christian life.

It is fully worth while to be a Christian even if there were nothing in it to extend beyond this life. The consolation it affords here on earth much more than compensates for all the self-denial demanded of one in leading a Christian life. But when we come to consider the precious promise of eternal life as the result of a devoted Christian life, there is more in it than we could ever find words to express if God had not expressed it for us. The promise of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord is something wonderful to contemplate. We should never cease to praise and adore our Heavenly Father for what he has done and promised through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Furthermore, we should not only be willing to do what God has required, but should esteem it as a most wonderful privilege to obey all that is required of us through the gospel of Christ in order to reach such wonderful blessings as are promised. The promise of eternal life to the faithful ought to stimulate them to be always busy in learning and doing God's holy will. Really these promises are based upon the principle that we do his will as expressed in his word. Our responsibility, therefore, is deeply involved in the matter of salvation as taught in the New Testament, and we can only reach the promises by doing the things commanded. If all would be as anxious to do the things commanded as they are to reach the promises made to the faithful, there would not be many lost souls in eternity from Bible lands. But, in spite of all the plainness of God's requirements, many people are trying to excuse themselves from any effort to obey the gospel by claiming that the New Testament is a mystery that they cannot understand. That is really an accusation against God-that he has given us a book that we cannot understand, and then threatens us with eternal ruin if we do not obey its requirements. God has done no such thing. The plan of salvation is plain enough for people to understand and obey it if they give attention to it; and that is why God threatens eternal punishment upon all who obey not the gospel. This he would not do if it were something men could not understand. Therefore we should not only be willing to obey the gospel in this life, but should continually thank and praise the Lord that he has made salvation possible to us through a humble and earnest obedience to the gospel of Christ. So all men and women should see to it that they do not neglect or reject the gospel of Christ. The very thought of eternal life coming to us upon such conditions ought to make us happy here and prepare us for a happy eternity-ought to make us happy while we live and thus prepare us for eternal happiness in the heavenly home. It is strange, therefore, that any one with the Bible at hand should fail to become a Christian or fail to lead a humble, earnest, and faithful Christian life on earth.

The Russell Street Hospital.

BY A. B. L.

As stated last week, the Russell Street church of Christ has converted a part of its large and commodious building into a temperary hospital for the relief of the poor and friendless sufferers in Nashville who are unable to secure accommodations in the regular hospitals. This humane work has been conducted with splendid results. We have had as many as twenty patients at one time. At the present writing there are fourteen persons in the hospital. Several of the influenza cases developed pneumonia, but all have been tenderly cared for by the sisters of the congregation, who were nobly assisted by others from Chapel Avenue and Eleventh Street. It is hardly an exaggeration to state that this work has saved the lives of several who would have died for lack of attention. The majority of the patients are quick to express their gratitude for what has been done in the name of Jesus. A sick soldier boy, who had been honorably discharged from the army, said: "You ladies have been as good to me as my mother and sisters would have been. This is just like home." Another patient was a Mexican, who could not do any better than speak "pigeon English," but he did know enough to say "God bless you" when he went away convalescent to his home in far-off New Mexico. Not a single death has occurred and at this time all the patients are convalescent. When one leaves the hospital, we give him a well-bound New Testament as a little token of love and sympathy.

In undertaking this labor of love, we are greatly indebted to Dr. Y. W. Haley, one of the leading physicians of the State, who proffered his services free of charge on the day the hospital was opened and has attended daily since. We were very fortunate in having an experienced nurse who is a member of the congregation, Sister T. J. Biggers. She has performed her duties with rare devotion and will accept no remuneration. To all who have had fellowship with us our Savior says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

To do one's best work and to be one's best self involves the quiet but final acceptance of such tools as have been put into one's hands and such materials as lie about one. To be happy and useful and to contribute to the joy of life, one must take up the work at hand and do it as best he may, without envy, jealousy, or strife.—The Outlook.

BY JOHN D. EVANS.

A series of gospel meetings running into the fourth week, conducted by Brother L. S. White, of Sherman. Texas, has just closed. The church had arranged about a year ago to have Brother White visit us in August, but, on account of his wife's illness, he was unable to come until the first of Sep-We had looked forward to this gospel campaign with a great deal of interest in the hope of greatly reviving the work in this destitute field. Printer's ink was used liberally; and while no overflow crowds were present, the meetings grew in interest from the beginning. It had been planned and announced that the closing services would be on the morning of the third Lord's day; but that was the greatest day of all in point of interest and crowds, so the meetings continued until Tuesday night, when Brother and Sister White had to leave for their home in Texas.

While we have never been disposed to measure the success of a meeting by the visible results, we were much gratified at the showing in this respect. From all sources nineteen new names were enrolled, four of the number by primary obedience.

It is not necessary that the writer should indulge in fulsome eulogies upon the preacher. His work in Texas and many other States speaks for itself. Suffice it to say that his able and earnest presentation of the old-fash-foned gospel and his godly walk and conversation while among us commended him as "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

It is impossible to estimate the good accomplished during this series of meetings, but influences were put in motion which we believe will result in a greater missionary zeal and enlargement of the work both in Denver and the State of Colorado. Ever since the writer has been associated with the work in Denver it has been his "heart's desire and prayer to God" that the State of Colorado should be thoroughly evangelized and the cause of Christ firmly planted even unto its utmost borders. The door of opportunity now stands wide open. Shall we enter in and "possess the land?" Volunteers are wanted.

We were very much pleased to have Brother E. E. Shoulders, of Corsicana, Texas, with us during the closing days of the meeting. He rendered valuable assistance as leader in the song service. He is to be with the brethren at Olathe in a series of meetings, and later at Boulder. We hope to be able to keep him in the Colorado field. Brother James H. Bailey, of Boulder, visited us during our meeting, and

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a small bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless, and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life, eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which, if not remedied, causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight, now, any time, will surely save your hair.

Get a small bottle of Knowiton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair. Try it!

also Brother and Sister Fuqua, of Fort Collins. Brethren J. F. Tomson and W. W. Still, of Alabama, are now residing in Englewood, a suburb of Denver, and worship with our congregation.

It has been a long time since the writer had the privilege of being associated with so many preachers in one meeting. Their visit was a source of genuine pleasure and a stimulus to greater zeal in the work that lies out before us. We thank God and take fresh courage.

SPANISH INFLUENZA—WHAT IT IS AND HOW IT SHOULD BE TREATED

Nothing New—Simply the Old Grip, or La Grippe, That Was Epidemic in 1889-90—Only Then It Came from Russia by Way of France and This Time by Way of Spain.

Go to Bed and Stay Quiet—Take a Laxative—Eat Plenty of Nourishing Food—Keep Up Your Strength— Nature Is The Only "Cure."

ALWAYS CALL A DOCTOR

NO OCCASION FOR PANIC.

Spanish Influenza, which appeared in Spain in May, has all the appearance of grip or la grippe, which has swept over the world in numerous epidemies as far back as history runs. Hippocrates refers to an epidemic in 412 B.C., which is regarded by many to have been influenza. Every century has had its arracks. Beginning with 1831, this country has had five epidemics, the last in 1832-1896.

There is no occasion for panic. Influenza itself has a very low percentage of fatalities—not over one death aut of every four hunared cases, according to the North Carolina Board of Health. The chief danger lies in complications arising, attacking principally patients in a run-down condition—those who don't go to bed soon enough or those who get up too early.

THE SYMPTOMS.

Grippe, or "influenza," as it is now called, usually begins with a chill, followed by aching, feverishness, and sometimes nausea and dizziness, and a general feeling of weakness and depression. The temperature is from 100 to 104, and the fever usually lasts from three to five days. The germs attack the mucous membrane, or lining of the air passages—nose, throat, and bronchial tubes; there is usually a hard cough, especially bad at night; oftentimes a sore throat or tonsillitis, and frequenty all the appearances of a severe head cold.

THE TREATMENT.

Go to bed at the first symptoms-not only for your own sake, but to avoid spreading the disease to others; take a purgative, eat plenty of nourishing food, remain perfectly quiet, and don't worry. Quinine, aspirin, or Dover's powder, etc., may be administered by the physician's directions to relieve the aching; but there is no cure or specific for influenza-the disease must run its course. Nature herself will throw off the attack if only you keep up your strength. The chief danger ties in the complications which may arise. Influenza so weakens the bodlly resistance that there is danger of pneumonia or bronchitis developing, and sometimes inflammation of the middle ear or heart affections. For these reasons it is very important that the patient remain in bed until his strength returns; stay in bed at least two days or more after the fever has left you; or if you are over fifty or not strong, stay in hed four days or more, according to the severity of the attack.

EXTERNAL APPLICATIONS.

In order to silmulate the lining of the air passages to throw off the grippe germs, to aid in loosening the phiegm and keeping the air passages open, thus making the breathing easier, Vick's VapoRub will be found effective. Hot, wet towels should be applied over the throat chest, and back between the shoulder blades to open the pores. Then VapoRub should be rubbed in over the parts until the skin is red, spread on thickly and covered with two thicknesses of hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck, as the heat of the body liberates the ingredients in the form of vapors. These vapors, inhaled with each breath, carry the medication directly to the parts affected. At the same time, VapoRub is absorbed through and stimulates the skin, attracting the blood to the surface, and thus aids in relieving the congestion within.

HOW TO AVOID THE DISEASE.

Evidence seems to prove that this is a germ disease, spread principally by human contact, chiefly through coughing, sneezing, or spitting. So avoid persons having colds (which means avoiding crowds), common drinking cups, roller towels, etc. Keep up your bodlly strength by planty of exercise in the open air and good food. Above all, keep free from colds, as colds irritate the lining of the air passages and render them much better breeding places for the germs.

Use Vick's VapoRub at the very first sign of a cold. For a head cold, melt a little VapoRub in a spoon and inhale the vapors; or, better still, use VapoRub in a benzoin steam kettle. If this is not available, use an ordinary teakettle. Fill half full of boiling water; put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time; keep the kettle just slowly boiling and inhale the steam arising.

Note.—Vick's VapoRub is the discovery of a North Carolina druggist, who found how to combine, in salve ferm, Menthol and Camphor with such volatile oils as Eucalyptus, Thyme, Cubebs, etc., so that when the salve is applied to the body heat, these ingredients are liberated in the form of vapors.

VapoRub is comparatively new in New York State and New England and a few Western States, where it is just now being introduced; but in other sections of the country it is the standard home remedy in more than a million homes for all forms of cold troubles. Over six million jars were sold last year. It is particularly recommended for children's croup or colds, since it is externally applied, and, therefore, can be used as freely as desired without the slightest harmful effects. VapoRub can be had in three sizes at all druggists'.

TO WARD OFF PNEUMONIA Rub vigorously with GOWAN'S—the pleasant, effective, external application for colds, croup, pleurisy, pneumonia, etc. Soothing and healing, Ask your druggist. If he can't supply you, write GOWAN MEDICAL COMPANY, Concord. N. C.

Church News

Alabama.

Belgreen, October 14.—Brother I. B. Bradley, of Dickson, Tenn., began a meeting, on September 12, at Bradley's Chapel, and continued it seven days. Fourteen persons were baptized as a result of his teaching the word of God in such a plain way that all could see what it takes to make Christians. Some of the best members of the Baptist Church attended the meeting and expressed themselves as being well pleased with his teaching. He preached the word, and people who read the Bible to know what they must do like to help such teachers as Brother Bradley.-John A. Benson.

Arkansas.

Rector, October 11.—The meeting at Rector, conducted by Brother J. C. Estes, closed on September 29, with increasing interest to the close. Five were baptized and much good otherwise done. Brother Estes tells "the old, old story" in a plain and modest way. Any church desiring a man who is a humble Christian as well as a great preacher will made no mistake in selecting Brother Estes. In addi-tion to holding our annual meeting, the church is sending Brother G. W. Tiller to a mission point east of Rector once a month, where much prejudice is being broken down and good seed sown which in due time shall be gathered in if we faint not. Brethren, pray for us .- Fred Davidson.

California.

Fresno, October 14.-Notwithstanding the fact that there is a good deal of sickness among our members and quite a number of them also went to Tulare to attend Brother Norred's meeting yesterday, we had two good services at the Nevada Avenue Church. Brother S. E. Witty, of Ontario, was math us on Sunday October 6, and with us on Sunday, October 6, and gave us a fine sermon at the morning hour. He was en route to Stanford University, where he will spend three weeks preparing himself for Y. M. C. A. war work. Brother Witty is an ideal man for such work, and I am delighted to see him entering it. There is a great need for spiritual workers among the soldiers and sailors both over here and "over there," and, in my judg-ment, the best available way to reach these boys is through the Y. M. C. A. I spent two days in Tulare last week and heard Brother C. A. Norred preach two excellent discourses. I have heard few preachers that could present the gospel in as pleasing and impressive way as he can, and it was a treat to hear him. He does not shrick or rant, but in a well-modulated voice and a dignified manner he presents his thoughts logically and clothes them with elegant English. It was also a great pleasure to visit with Brother Norred and the good people of Tulare. Brother and Sister L. M. Williams certainly know how to entertain visitors. I also had the pleasure of visiting in the homes of Brethren Comer and La-than and Sister Todd. All of us were agreeably surprised on the second day of my stay when Brother G. W. Riggs, of Los Angeles, and Brother and Sister Elmore, of Downing, appeared on the scene. They had been in a meeting at Bakersfield.-W. Halliday Trice.

Florida.

Venus, October 14.—About one year age I asked the brotherhood for a contribution to help build a house of worship at Moore Haven. In answer to this request, I received letters from about three hundred brethren agreeing to send from twenty-five cents to eighty-three dollars and fifty cents, bringing the total amount up to five hundred and fifty-three dollars and forty cents promised; three dollars in cash received. I am sorry to say we have not been able to even begin to build; and owing to the high cost of labor and all classes of material, I do not think it wise to try to build until our national trouble is over. Our present need is not houses in which to worship, but more earnest, God-fearing men and women to worship "as it is written." In my judgment, there has never been a time when earnest, honest, self-sacrificing preachers were needed more than at this time. My brother, are you a friend to the cause of Christ? If so, are you proving it by your life, and your support? Poor men cannot carry the message of glad tidings without the support of the brotherhood. Wealthy men, as a rule, will not do it without support; we cannot ask them to work for nothing. Now is the time to work I have been over a good part of Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and Florida, and am sure South Florida is the most neglected field in all our South. Who will help? Who will South. Who will help? Who will come down and preach this winter? The local church could not give a more appreciated gift than to furnish the means to a good man to come down and spend the winter and preach in destitute places. Pleasure seekers only not wanted, but men that have proved by their lives that they are friends to the cause of Christ.—John B. Peden.

Kentucky.

Bardwell, October 14.—On October 1 Brother J. L. Holland closed a tendays' meeting in Bardwell. He did some fine preaching. There were no additions. I baptized a young married additions. I baptized a young matrix lady at Glass, Tenn., on the first Sunday in October, at my regular appointment. The Lord willing, I will begin a meeting at Lone Oak, Ky., on October 23. From there I go to Mayfield for a meeting.-Joe Ratcliffe.

Eubank, October 14.-I came here last Saturday. We met on Sunday at a private house and broke bread. I I will preached last night at Cuba. stay here a few days till we see further what the influenza does. Kentucky has stopped the assembling of disciples together while this disease is in the State. They are wanting me to stay here three or four weeks, if possible.—J. C. Mosley.

Bowling Green, September 23 .- On the first Lord's-day in August I began a meeting with the congregation worshiping at Wysox, in Ohio County. This meeting continued over three Lord's days and resulted in sixteen additions—twelve by baptism and additions—twelve by baptism and four by reclamation. Brother Charles W. Hays, of Bowling Green, conducted the song service and was a great help in the work. We had two church meetings and some church troubles were pleasantly adjusted, but I am very sorry that a few of the erring brethren did not confess their wrongs and come back with those who are determined to live a consecrated Christian life. However, the church was strengthened and much encouraged. I am assured of the fact that some of the very best people in the world live in and around Wysox. love the brethren there very much; their hearts were in the meeting, and it was a pleasure to be with them. This was my first meeting there, and I am preaching for them once a month. On the first Lord's day in September I was to begin a meeting at Price's Chapel, near Bowling Green, but, on account of some church work, was unable to be there at that time; but Brother Oakley, of the Potter Or-phans' Home, filled my appointment, preaching morning and evening on the first Lord's day. I then took up the work, and the meeting continued over the third Lord's day. The result was the third Lord's day. The result was sixteen additions—twelve baptized and four reclaimed. The church was much encouraged and promised to do greater things for the Lord in the future. Brother Robert Alexander, a former student of the Nashville Bible School, now in the Normal at Bowling Green, conducted the song service and assisted much in the meeting. members were very loyal in their at-tendance, and people came for miles around until the house was filled every service. I never enjoyed a meeting more in my life. Truly they are the Lord's people; they have the spirit of Christ, they love each other, and they did not forget to be kind and encouraging to the preacher. I love these good brethren and hope to hold another meeting for them at some future time. I preach once a month for this congregation .- W. A. Warren.

Missouri.

Eagleville, October 10.-I closed at Jerusalem, near Dexter, Stoddard County, September 16, with three additions, one from the General Baptists. I closed at Antioch, near Zalma, Bollinger County, on September 25, without additions. I began at Flint Hill, Dade County, on September 29, continued one week, and closed till influenza epidemic abates. I cannot tell when I shall return to the work.— M. S. Mason.

Texas.

Nocona, October 10 .- The Wichita Falls meeting is past, and not much to say for it. Brother Rice was called to say for it. Brother Rice was called home in the first of the meeting on account of the severe illness of his wife and baby, also the fact that his father-in-law was about to die. Then the Spanish influenza broke out; the schools, theaters, and picture shows closed, and we were requested to close the meeting, the authorities stating that they thought we would have to later. At the same time I received word from home that my wife was very sick, and she had been, being unconscious and doing herself bodily injury. With all these things, a man would have to be a better preacher than I ever was to make a success of his work; so I quit and came home. I am going to be compelled to take my wife to Mineral Wells for a while, as there is nothing else I can find to help her, and her health is ruined. Hard work and privations have done it, and now it is time for her to rest. One brother at Wichita Falls offered to help me liberally on the expense of the trip, and when enough of help is in sight we will try that last resort to restore her to health again, and I hope the brethren I have labored for will not forget me now. I am at home now, and will do what I can while I am getting means to send my wife away. The work goes on here when I am gone, thanks to good men who know what to do. Wife is very poorly at this writing. Pray for us in trouat this writing. Pray for bie, brethren.—Tice Elkins.

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Wash the poisons and toxins from system before putting more food into stomach.

Says Inside-bathing makes anyone look and feel clean, sweet and refreshed.

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do on the outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness, while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food and drink taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste material is not eliminated day by day, it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases, and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into the blood stream through the lymph ducts, which should suck only nourishment to sustain the body.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons, gases, and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening, and freshening the entire alimentary canal be-fore putting more food into the stomach.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make any one an enthusiast on inside bathing. Men and women who are accustomed to wake up with a dull, aching head, or have furred tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, sallow complexion, and others who have billous attacks, acid stomach, or constipation, are assured of pronounced improvement in both health and appearance shortly.

Among the Colored Folks

Brother Womack's Report.

My last writing left me in a meeting with Brother D. M. English at Richmond, Bedford County, Tenn. The meeting was largely attended day and night. One was reclaimed. The two-weeks' meeting in Lebanon, conducted by Brother D. J. Bynam and the writer, was well attended, but there were no additions. At the Harris Chapel meeting, near Bellwood, Wilson County, we had good attention, but no additions.

Our services at the Jackson Street Church, in Nashville, are very encouraging. Brother Johnson, of Cookeville, preached for us on the first Lord's day in this month. Evangelistic services will begin at the Jackson Street Church on the fourth Lord's day in this month. All are invited.

When the news reached our ears of the death of our good brother, Joe Mc-Pherson, we were struck with great sadness of heart and regretted very much that we were out of the city and could not be present at his funeral services. Brother McPherson's preaching for us at the Jackson Street Church was of great and lasting good, and we will never forget him. The family have our prayers and sympathy. The old soldiers are going on to meet their reward. May the good Lord help us to be ready.

God Changeth Not.

BY S. WHITFIELD.

We can always put confidence in God. He has assured us that if we will do his will he will never leave or forsake us. He has always been as good as his word; he still is; and he always will be. So if we are obeying his commandments and are trying to please him day by day, we may always be sure that God is our Friend. If we draw near to him, he will draw near to us; but we may be just as sure that if we forsake him he will forsake us. He has always stood by his people; he is standing by them now; and he always will stand by them. God has promised this, and he cannot lie. What a blessed thing it is to have, at least, one Friend that we can always depend on! "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly; and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother." (Prov. 18: 24.)

"For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." (Mal. 3: 6.) God does not change. He is always the same. Whatever he says, he will do. He is not like people who change as often and as quickly as the wind does.

If man had been dealing with Israel, they would have been all consumed. Israel sinned; then they were punished and led back to God, and God would forgive them. Time after time they did this. Man would have grown tired and discouraged in forgiving them, but God did not, and this is the only thing that saved them, God's goodness and mercy outstrip that of man. His love and mercy endureth forever. The same is true of us. It is only through the love and forbearance of God that we are permitted to continue as the children of God.

"God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?" (Num. 23: 19.) Men may and do lie, but God cannot. Men change from what they say, but God sticks to his word. He cannot change. What he says or speaks, he abides by. He is always the same.

But what has God said? He has always said that he would bless, prosper, and save those who believe on him, do his will, and put their trust in him. He has also said that he would curse, punish, and destroy those who do not believe on him, do not trust him, or do not do his will. God has never changed from this; he will not, and cannot. When the children of Israel did the will of God, they were blessed and made to prosper; but when they turned from God's way, they suffered for it, and those who continue to go in their own way to the end will be destroyed. God deals in the same way with us, and will with all people to the end.

But did not God say that he would destroy the Ninevites in forty days? Yes. But he did not do it. Then he must change. No. When he said he would destroy them, they were wicked and belonged to that class of people on whom his curse rested; but when he spared them, they had turned from their wickedness and belonged to the character of people upon whom the blessing of God rested. They changed by turning away from their sins, but God did not change. The world is divided into two classes-those who are doing the will of God and those who are not. On the first the blessing of God rests, but on the other the curse of God rests. Man changes from one class to the other, and brings a change from a curse to a blessing or from a blessing to a curse from God to him; but God changes not. His decree is always the same.

"Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness: otherwise thou also shalt be cut off." (Rom. 11: 22.)

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." (James 1: 17.) God does not vary, nor does he change from his word. He abides the same always. Nothing can turn him from what he says. Everything in this world is changing; we are changing day by day; but God does not change,

We are told by the word of God that a thousand years is as a day and a day as a thousand years with the Time leads us to forget, and we fail to do what we would have done at the moment; but time has no effect on God. He will punish or reward at the end of a thousand years even as he would at the time. Time is one eternal present with God.

Well may we sing:

Christianity's Debt to the World.

It is a startling fact that one-half of the world is without scientific medical knowledge; that one-half of the world is poor, under the burden of economic conditions which promise no improvement until and unless civilization rests upon a Christian basis. Millions of people in Egypt, Arabia, China, India, and Africa suffer from preventable and curable diseases. We have the best medical and surgical science of the world. We send our manufactured goods to the world; shall we send mere chattels and not send the very best we have? There is an economic basis for foreign missions, and the world is rapidly coming to a knowledge of it. But underneath and superior to all economic reasons for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts is the apostolic reason of personal and inalienable obligation. Enlightened Christians are debtors to the unenlightened world .- C. C. Albertson, in the Christian Herald.

Patriotism consists not in waving a flag, but in striving that our country shall be righteous as well as strong .-James Bryce.

Notes from Minneapolis, Minn.

BY IRA B. HENTHORN.

We continue our meetings at the home of Brother and Sister Polsen. Brother Polsen was baptized during Brother O. D. Maple's short meeting with us in the spring. We had two sailors from the Dunwoody Institute with us in several of these little services. One of them is now gone, and the other may be gone, as we have not seen him for two or three weeks. Our meeting last Sunday (October 13) was prevented by influenza.

Brother Hainline, of Fulton, Ky., is in North Dakota now, and may stop here over at least one Sunday on his way South this month.

Brother Maple may return here for some months the first of the year. A Brother Lawyer, of near Bismarck, N. D., was here a day or so ago and gave us the address of his father and mother here. The mother is a Christian, we understand, and two of our sisters are to call on her to-morrow.

We have been anxious to get all names of brethren here that we can get. There may be soldiers from some of the churches in our Overland or University Aviation Stations, or there may be sailors in the Dunwoody Naval Training Station, either in the seaman or aviation sections. If any one knows of such, please send their names and complete addresses.

Once more we appeal to the established churches to enlist in this Northwest mission effort. A number of small but regular gifts weekly or monthly, but on a definite basis so we can plan ahead, will be appreciated and properly used. It ought to be a simple matter to insure a hundred dollars a month to make it safe to invite an evangelist to come and work here and to help us meet the other needs, but it seems a real problem. Who will help solve it?

Rapid Growth at Baldwyn, Miss.

BY BEN WEST.

The following is an extract from a personal letter by Brother W. M. B. Cox to Brother G. A. Dunn: "Our hearts were made to rejoice the last two Sundays. We are now having the largest Bible classes in town. Ten or twelve have joined us in the Lord's work since the meeting. Much good was accomplished and much favorable comment is heard from the outside."

Two years ago Brother Dunn went to Baldwyn in response to a call. There was only one member in the town, and he was worshiping with the "digressives." Now they have a good congregation, the best-located lot in town, and a brick building, I mention this as a stimulant to other brethren. And, too, it might be quite suggestive to able congregations who rush to our papers with appeals to help build when it could be done without sacrifice by local brethren.

I hope the example set by Baldwyn may be a lead and that many places may take it to heart and work faithfully to win souls, build good meetinghouses, and preach the gospel in simplicity and worship God humbly.

KILLS CATARRH

Famous Hyomei-Mr. Booth's Wonderful Discovery.

Some years ago, the noted Richard T. Booth, founder of the blue ribbon movement and tem-perance orator and leader of international fame who induced over a million men to sign the pledge, developed a very serious catarrhal trouble. Seeking to regain health, he went to inland Austrails where he breathed day and night the antiseptic balsams as given off by the Eucalyptus forests.

This experience led Mr. Booth to the discovery of the most wonderful catarrhal treatment. known to medical science-Hyomei, which is formed from the purest oil of Eucalyptus com-bined with other healing and antiseptic ingredieats. Hyomei is a germ killing vapor, absolutely harmless but wonderfully effective in the treatment of Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever.

The treatment is simple but most scientific, You breathe Hyomei. It is pronounced the only method of treatment that sends by direct inhalation to the most remote part of the air passages, a balsamic air that destroys germs and bacilli of bronchial catarrh in the breathing organs, sooths and allays irritation and enriches and purifies the blood. A Letter from France.

The following letter from Elam Srygley, son of Brother and Sister F. B. Srygley, of this city, written to his mother from "somewhere in France," will doubtless be read with genuine interest by the readers of the Gospel Advocate:

Fourth Machine Gun Battalion, A. P. O. 710, A. E. F., September 17, 1918.

—My Dear Mamma: In my last letter I told you we were expecting to go in the line, and so we did; in fact, we went straight through. Of course, we had an idea we were going in for an offensive, but, of course, I was unable to write about it. Now, since it is all over, I guess you have read about it all in the papers.

If you remember, in my letters I stated we had made a long trip from the Soissons sector down below Verdun, as far down as Nancy. We were around in that sector when I took my We were leave of absence; and when I got back, I could see that something was com-The American troops were ing off. everywhere. The last distance was covered beginning at dark of the night before. The big-gun barrage began at one o'clock in the morning, and it sounded like one big gun, so well was every-thing timed. From then on until the infantry went over the top and all during the next day they kept up. It was really a big thing. The troops moved over, just keeping behind where the shells from the big guns were So confident were we of success, the big guns almost went over the top with the infantry. Our particular division met with practically no resistance. In my battalion we had no casualties. We went so fast that my first-aid station was on the move all of the time. In fact, I practically went over the top with them. I had a chance to see some wonderful sights. The Germans just ran off, leaving lots behind, even personal property. In one woods we passed through there was fixed up in the middle of a big woods have up in the infinite of a long woods what must have been an officers' club. We were relieved shortly and in a short time were back out of range of all guns. I am in good barracks now and feeling fine. Much was captured that they never expected us to get—horses, wagons, ambulances, one hospital equipped and many nurses, X-ray apparatus and all. Our battalion got a wagon with the band, horn, drum, and flute, and you should have seen them practicing the next morning. My hospital men got a victrola and records, and it was put in an ambulance, and we have had music galore.

What Do We Have In India?

BY NOLA HILER M'HENRY,

So often we receive letters making such inquiries as these: "What sort of crops do they raise in India?" "How do the people look?" "How do they live?" I shall tell you a little about some of the things over here.

A number of the fruits here are the same as we have in America and a number are quite different. there are oranges of several kinds. Some are very small and sour; some are large with very loose peelings, which really seem to be a mixture of orange and pamalos. They are rather sour and not very good. There are small, sweet ones, and those of ordinary size which are sweet and more like the American orange than any of the others, still they are not like the American. All of these have loose peeling, which can be readily pulled off without having to scrape the white covering off. The pulps usually come apart very easily. There is the sweet lime about the size of the ordinary orange. It is more like a lemon than an orange, only a dainty sweet, and when just right is very good. In this part of the country we do not often see any real lemons, but limes of various sizes. However, I have seen some very large lemons here. And in other parts of the country they are plentiful.

We have several kinds of bananas, but none that taste like the American banana. Some are very small, called "breakfast bananas;" others, medium and large, which all have about the same taste. In the Aurangabad section the most common banana is large, with a very tough peeling that can hardly be broken without cutting. The inside is soft and different in taste from the others. In other parts of the country there are large, red ba-

We also have the pineapple, which is one of my favorite fruits. There are many of them at certain seasons, and some are very nice, large, juicy ones. They cost from four to ten cents aniece.

There are figs, strawberries, gooseberries, and other berries and grapes. These have special seasons and sometimes are very scarce. There are some pamalos, many guavas, mangoes, and papayas. These latter grow on a tall tree and are about the shape and size of a muskmelon, some round and some oblong. Some are green in color and some are yellow. Inside they are a good deal like muskmelons, only of a darker color and have round black seeds. They are real sweet. Some eat them so, and some put salt and pepper on them. In the colder parts of the country there are peaches, plums, pears, and apples. We hardly ever see any of them, and they are expensive when we do. They all seem to be of an inferior quality to the American fruits. We have many dried Also there is a small fruit dates something like the plum, only the meat is harder and more mealy.

There are many small watermelons which are hardly worthy of the name. I have not seen any real big ones, but some of the larger ones are real good. We have of late had some very large and very good muskmelons. There is another sort of a melon which looks a good deal like the muskmelon, but is rather gourdy. Then there is a round, hard melon, something like the smell melon. It has a pleasant smell at a distance, but we have not learned to eat it. The custard apple we have in abundance, but we do not care for

This is a monkey and cocoanut land. The price of small cocoanuts is about two cents each; large ones, about five or six cents each. The eocoanuts are put to various uses. From it they make a hair oil, and the natives think they cannot comb their hair unless they have it soaked with this oil. Fresh, it is ground and used in their cooking, and in a dry state it is very much used. It is taken from the shell and dried, then beaten and mashed to put in curries. But what are the curries? They are something very hot. The principal ingredients are peppers and spices of many sorts, all mashed up together and cooked with a little meat, potatoes, onions, beans, peas, greens, or pulse. It is cooked with a good deal of water and sopped up with bread.

In parts of the country there are almonds-that is, a native almond. If one has the wherewith, almost all kinds of imported nuts are to be had. There are peanuts in abundance. The peanut oil and the oil cakes are the principal uses of the peanut. The ox is used in grinding them. This is done by means of a round stone wheel run over the peanuts in a deep curiousshaped native machine. It seems that the women and children do most of the peanut digging, and in the evening one can see them coming home in crowds with their baskets on their heads. The beetle nut is very hard. something like a piece of wood. Many people chew it; and it is claimed that it is fine to hold in the mouth when in need of a drink, as it keeps the mouth moist.

TREMENDOUS VALUE FOR 15e.

Washington, D. C .- (Special.) - An unusual offer is being made by the editor of the Pathfinder, to send the paper to new readers thirteen weeks for fifteen cents. The fifteen cents does not repay the editor, but he is glad to invest in new friends.

I believe there are almost all kinds of vegetables that we have in America, except the frijole (Mexican pink bean). We surely do wish for them, and hope that the next missionary who comes out will bring us a supply with him. And, too, I have seen no mustard except some which I tried to raise from a few seed sent from home. There are many sorts of greens, which look like weeds, but some of them are real good. The radishes are mostly long, white ones, and not very good. The knoh-kohl is something like the turnip, especially in taste. The top is more like cabbage leaves in color; the root, like a turnip, only with a hard, woody, green peeling. There are many beans and peas which have a wild look about them as well as a wild flavor. They are cheap, and the Indians use them for their curries. There are black-eyed peas, English peas, snap beans, and butter beans. All such things as tomatoes, cucumbers, beets, lettuce, parsley, cauliflower, cabbage, turnips, shallots, eggplants, pumpkins, squashes, etc., they have in abundance.

In this country grain is the chief living of the people, as they often eat nothing but a piece of bread or bread and pepper. So these hard times we do not hear any complaint about the food being dear, except the grain. It has doubled or more than doubled in price since last year. Those who can afford it eat wheat bread-whole-wheat flour made into flat cakes something like the pancake. It is made up of water, sometimes with salt, but more often without. Sometimes they use a little oil in cooking. The oil is usually peanut oil or oil made from the little seed of a plant which looks like a weed. We use one or the other nearly altogether. Sometimes ghee is used, but it is fearfully expensive, so can be used only on special occasions or by the wealthy people. Sometimes the wheat flour is made up with brown sugar or with pepper and spices and fried, and sometimes pods of pepper are rolled in batter and fried. Too, they make some very good things like jelly rolls, only filled with some kind of sweet seed and spices or with ground cocoanuts, spices, and sugar. Poor people use the jewari bread. which is made up with water into flat cakes. Jewari is a small grain something like the kafir corn. Also, they use the bajari bread in the same way as the jewari. Bajari is a small grain, smaller than the kafir corn and real sweet. Corn is scarce and usually only nubbins. We get very hungry for roasting ears and good corn bread. We have had a few roasting ears and some corn bread, but we wish we had some of the corn the American people are having to eat. There are many other grains which I do not know the names of. Some they grind and use for bread; others they boil and eat so. Some they use in feeding stock. The bajari boiled is good cow food. Cotton seed and oil cake are used for feeding cattle.

The grain is ground on a hand mill, which is two heavy stones together, with a stick in one side of the top stone, the handle for turning the mill, and a hole in the middle for putting in the grain. It is turned by two women, one sitting on each side of the mill. ("Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left.") They usually sing all the time they grind, and in the villages almost any time of the night one can hear the song at the mill, as where there is a large family it takes most of the women's time to grind enough grain for their bread. In the cities they have the large mills run by water or by gasoline engines. It costs only a few cents to get a dollar's worth of grain ground. Here in Aurangabad it seems that most of the people get their grain ground, and this leaves time for the women to go out and do work to help make a living. From the mill or from the merchants can be purchased white flour as well as brown.

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution .- Advt.

You Will Write a Letter Like This.

I wish I knew which one of the thousands of letters I receive would have the most weight with you, my friend. I cannot quote all of them here, but I am going to ask you to read these carefully and then give me a chance to renew your health and make you write me one very much like them:

Barnard Street, Savannah, Ga.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.

Dear Sir: I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders, and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft-boiled eggs, shredded wheat—a very insufficient diet for an active working man—and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every lin stance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantity as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

A. L. R. AVANT, M.D. Leeds, S. C.

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find it has acred micely in each case; and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

These are not salested assets.

These are not selected cases, nor are the results unusual. I receive thousands like them from physicians, ministers, lawyers, merchants, farmers, manufacturers, and every conceivable profession. I want the satisfaction of receiving such a letter from you. No matter what your complaint may bedyspepsia, indigestion, nervous headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, or any curable ailment that has not responded to drugs. I invite you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If the water fails to benefit you, say so, return the empty demijohns, and I will promptly and willingly refund your money-every cent. Sign below.

Shivar Spring, Box 21C, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if it fails to benefit my case, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Dear Sir:

Enclosed is a picture of my children, and the little man you see seated on the chair is the one who was cured by your Appliance.

RUPTURE HEALED AT THE AGE Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich. Dear Sir:—

Less than a year ago I sent to you for an appliance which came promptly. I at once put it on and it fitted perfectly. I have worn the appliance not quite ten and a half months. It has cured my rupture. I tried the other day while the appliance, was off, to see if I could force anything out of the opening to make a break there but I could not though I tried hard.

Now I think this remarkable, as I am in my eighty-first year. I am an old veteran of the Civil War, born and raised in the town of New Boston, State of New Hampshire, from which place I onlisted in the 10th N. H. Vol. Inft. in Co. C. commanded by Col. M. T. Donabue.

I cannot feel but that I owe you this testimony for I had never expected to be cured. However, thanks be to God I found a cure through the valuable appliance you made for me.

Dear Sir;—Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years and have always had trouble with till I got your Appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits nest and enug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a

It would be a veritable God-send to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it.

My rupture is now all healed up and nothing ever did it will say a good word for your Appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself I will say a good word for your Appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. Modern Esaus.

Oliver Wendell Holmes in one of his books refers to Dr. Samuel Johnson as "my dear and honored contemporary, who died a hundred years ago this day." We do not usually call that man a contemporary who died a hundred years before our day. But Holmes only meant that Dr. Johnson was very much like himself in thought and temper and disposition. Just so we may speak of Esau as a contemporary with us. His great mistake was typical of the mistake that thousands are making to-day. The world is full of Esaus in that respect. Wherever you find a man who loves the things of this world more than he loves God, there you find an Esau. Keble said:

We barter life for pottage! Sell true bliss
For wealth or power, for pleasures or renown!
Thus, Esaulike, our Father's blessing miss,
Then wash with fruitless tears our faded crown.

A large number of our boys have been called away to the camps and many have crossed the sea. Thousands more are being called. We are reminded of Ruskin's words: "Every hour of youth trembles with destiny." These boys need the lesson that I am trying to teach. As they go out from us, they need to be forcibly reminded of their birthright. In Esau's case the birthright included the succession to the earthly inheritance in Canaan, the larger portion of the paternal estate, lordship over the rest of the family, the functions of the domestic priesthood, and the possession of the covenant blessing. It was a terrible loss to lose these things, and yet we know that the boy in a Christian land who misses his birthright loses infinitely more.

What Is Your Birthright?

A few passages will suffice to answer. Jesus said: "I came that they may have life, and may have it abundantly." (John 10: 10.) What is Jesus talking about? Your birthright. He said again: "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth on me, though he die, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die." (John 11: 25.) What is he talking about? Your birthright. Simon Peter in his first epistle tells of an "inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. reserved in heaven for you." (1 Pet. 1: 4.) What is he writing about? Your birthright. The apostle Paul wrote: "All are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." (1 Cor. 3: 22, 23.) What is he writing about? Your birthright. He wrote again: "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ," (Rom. 8: 16, 17.) What is he writing about? Your birthright. In the closing chapter of the book of Revelation the beloved John says: "Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may have the right to come to the tree of life, and may enter in by the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.) What is he writing about? Your birthright. These things are coming to you, if you will but receive them. And these things which constitute your eternal birthright may be lost as Esau lost his through giving away to the lusts of the flesh. Paul refers to Esau as a "profane person." o o

A Profane Person.

The etymology of the word in this connection deserves consideration. "Profane" means before the fane, or temple, and refers to the ground which was common and public, trod upon by the feet of every one. Esau was a profane person in that sense. It is possible that he did not swear, but his nature was open to every passing influence; nothing to him was sacred. Just so, boys, when you go away to the camps, there will be the temptation to forget your father's counsel, your mother's prayers, and the earnest solicitation of your Christian friends. Though the government may try hard to protect you by throwing around you every safeguard possible, you will meet a great many Esaus who are fine fellows in a way, with spirit, generosity, and carelessness, but at the bottom "governed by animal impulses, and incapable of estimating any good which does not appeal to sense, and that at once." It is our hope and prayers that you may not forget this lesson, but that you may come back from service as Jacob came back from Peniel to see and to hear something that led him on to greater heights. Remember that self-conquest is the prelude to victory. "Fight the good fight of the faith; lay hold on the life eternal."

Why Does God Permit Evil? No. 1.

BY C. NETTERVILLE.

This troublesome question is pressing for an answer now with a persistence that has never been known in the annals of time. A casual glance at the miseries of mankind is sufficient to raise this question in one's mind. But when is added to this the wholesale massacre of the unfortunate Armenian Christians by the "unspeakable Turk," which has horrified the civilized world for a number of years, the question demands consideration with importunate insistence. But that our God, a God of justice, of mercy, and of love, should permit such a holocaust of death and destruction as is produced by the present world war to sweep over so large a portion of this fair world staggers the faith of thousands of suffering humans who believe that God really permits the evils that afflict the human race.

To those who have a correct conception of God's purpose in the creation of all things terrestrial and celestial the answer is easy, simple, and satisfactory; but to the minds of those who think of God only as a loving Heavenly Father, whose sole object in dealing with man is to secure his happiness and who is abundantly able to do any and all things pertaining thereto, the question assumes a different aspect. The only question with them is: Why is not God willing to exert his infinite power to the accomplishment of this so very desirable object? To this class the question at the head of this article, unless satisfactorily answered, is a staggering blow which threatens to make shipwreck of their faith in the God of heaven.

Before attempting to answer this question, it may be well to look at a few fundamental facts concerning God and his manner of exercising control over the universe. The first that I would suggest is that there is a power existent in this world which, while it is not coequal, probably is coexistent with, and certainly antagonistic to, that exercised by the Maker and Ruler of the universe. This power is exercised by a personage called sometimes "the devil" and sometimes "Satan," The idea of an impersonal devil did not come from God's revelation, but emanated from the fertile brain of His Satanic Majesty, who is the great adversary of God and enemy of mankind. That he is not only a personality, but a very powerful one, is clearly shown by the record of the sacred historians. That he was able to contend successfully with the Lord for the fealty of the first pair in the garden of Eden, and that he offered the Lord Jesus all the kingdoms of this world if he would fall down and worship him, clearly demonstrates the fact that he was the possessor of a power second only, perhaps, to that of the Lord Omnipotent himself. That he is still very powerful is too plain a proposition to need demonstration. That the mission of the Lord Jesus into this world was to destroy that power is indicated by the language used in Heb. 2: 14 and 1 John 3: 8. That this power shall not be destroyed till the end "cometh," "when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power," is asserted by the apostle Paul in 1 Cor. 15: 24.

The next fundamental fact to be considered is that God works through agents and uses means or instrumentalities in the accomplishment of all his purposes. Do you say he does it by the exercise of his omnipotent power? I grant you this. But what is your conception of the manner in which he exercises this power? Do you think that without the exercise of any force, or the use of any instrumentality, the great I Am simply wills a thing to be done, or speaks the word, and events transpire or material things take shape of their own volition? Do you think that in the beginning, when God created the heavens and the earth and all things therein contained, he simply said, "Let it be done," and all things in this vast material universe took shape and being without the exercise of any extraneous force? When the sacred historian says, "And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light," do you suppose that he meant to imply that there was nothing done but an aimless moving of the Spirit over the surface of the deep waters—that simply the expression of the will of the Lord was all the force that was exerted, and that the great luminary that rules the world by day hung himself in the heavens and the "Queen of Night" took her place in heaven's blue vault, all of their own accord and by the exercise of powers inherent in themselves? And when the apostle John says that in the beginning the Word was with God and that without him was not anything made that was made, do you think he had reference to the articulate utterance of the great Jehovah? Do you think the Word here spoken of was not a Personality that exerted force and helped the great Creator to fashion and control all the material things that came into existence by their combined efforts? Have you the idea that things can be made and fashioned without the use of extraneous forces? Is it your idea that when the sacred historian says God made things, he meant to convey the idea that he simply spoke the word and in some incomprehensible way things came into existence? If so, I would suggest that perhaps you are laboring under a mistaken conception of how the great Creator of all things works, and that perhaps it is more in consonance with what we see and know of his workings that the things we cannot see nor comprehend are manipulated in a manner analagous to that which our eyes see and our ears hear; that whereas in all the workings of this omnipotent power of which our minds can take cognizance force is exerted and means or instrumentalities are used in the operation of that force, it is in accord with sound reasoning and common sense that we conclude that the same things are done to produce results in the accomplishment of things we cannot see nor our minds take cognizance of. Hence the rational conclusion is that an extraneous force is used in God's management of all things, which force is applied by the use of means or instrumentalities directed by an intelligence that is unerring in its wisdom. Consequently there are well-established rules by which the great Ruler does all things, and from the observance of which he does not deviate, except it be for some extraordinary circumstance which calls for a suspension of these rules and the adoption of other and more cogent forces for the accomplishment of his purpose. And this exercise of power accomplished by the operation of forces that are governed by laws of which the finite mind cannot take cognizance we call a "miracle." Some of us talk glibly of the "laws of nature" as though they were self-existent, self-created, or evoluted from nothing and were self-executing; whereas it seems to me that the existence of law implies a lawmaker, and the existence of a lawmaker implies the authority to make laws, and the authority to make laws implies the power to execute, and the execution of law requires the application of force. Is not this self-evident? And is it not equally self-evident that the enforcement of any law requires the office of an intelligent agent who must possess the power to use the means necessary for the application of the requisite force.

Not Satisfied With His Efforts.

BY F. W. SMITH,

It seems that Brother Moore is not satisfied with his efforts on "repentance before faith;" for, after doing his best on that phase of our friendly investigation, he comes back to it again. He says:

Some few things I did not get in last issue for lack of space.

1. The case of the rulers in John 12; 42, 43 cuts no figure in it whatever, as you only wanted something else to talk about. This case will come in at the proper time and place. I do not fear it, the least, and will use it when we reach the place for it. Had you noted that my friend Smith did not dare to explain the four scriptural citations given in my article on the order of mention of repentance and faith? This is so characteristic of this faith; when there are plain scriptures cited directly on the subject in dispute, they ignore them and try to prove their point by the introduction of other scriptures contradictory, they think, and give no explanation of the ones given. All these four scriptures give it the same: "Repent and believe." (Matt. 21: 32; Mark 1: 15; Acts 20: 21; Heb. 6: 1.) Where can you, my brother, find the passage that reverses this order—faith and repentance, or, believe and repent? I don't like to leave a subject till it is fully settled. If you are not familiar with one single scripture that reverses the order as named in the four citations given above, how can you believe that your order is scriptural? I don't care to fill space with ramblings-just find the verse that teaches your order, then we will know that the order of mention is changeable and may be either way. Now, if you can't find it, will you not, like a man, confess it and agree that Baptists are right for once?

2. As to that communion question, I am truly glad that you confess that you believe in restricted communion, but not so close as Baptists. And yet you very nearly do that, if you don't fully. Let's try your law of approach once more. You say it is for children of God only, and not for the world. All right, Brother Smith, one must believe, repent, confess, and be baptized, before he is a child of God. Now let's get your own statement in your last article before me, "(2) The only way to have a vital and living union with the head of the body, which is Christ, is to be a memwith the head of the body, which is Christ, is to be a member of his body. (3) The only way to become a member of Christ's body is to be baptized into it." Now, Paul says the church is his body. (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) Faith, repentance, confession, baptism, church membership, is your law of approach. No Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, or Catholic holds fellowship with you in your ideal of a church, and will you knowingly allow one of these to eat and drink condemnation to himself, just in order to make the others believe that you are not close or restricted in your communion service? Your law of approach contains the same as Baptists, with the exception of the first two, which you reverse, and thus pervert the truth. You are the last man to offer to criticize Baptists for placing a barrier around the Lord's table; you lay up the same rails, but camouflage them before others to hide that cloven foot that you stick out just before you enter the water of baptism. I am glad you stand with Baptists in not giving an invitation to any one to your communion service. No doubt you learned this from Baptists, or their book of discipline—the New Testament. Baptists cannot afford to act the hypocrite before Christendom to court favor with them. They tell them plainly there is but one Lord, one faith, and one baptism, and they claim the right to the com-munion from their Lord and have descended through ages from the days of the Son of man to the present day.

Baptists can see no use in dissembling before men that they have favor with them. If I have misrepresented your law of approach to the Lord's table, I will stand correction. So tell us in your next if I correctly represented you in this article.

The case of the chief rulers (John 12: 42, 43) seems to be a "thorn in his rose," and he now reverts to it with a "promise" concerning it. The promise is that it "will come in at the proper time and place" and that he does not "fear it, the least." It must be evident to our readers that Brother Moore is a very "promising" man—long on promise, but short on fulfillment. It would seem that my friend could have found no better time and place for clearing up the case of the rulers than when he afirmed they were penitent and I called for the proof of his affirmation. I made the following comment on his position:

I knew when I introduced the case of the rulers (John 12: 42, 43) that it would completely upset my friend's doctrine of repentance before faith, but had no idea he would go to the extreme he has. Of course I knew he would have to take those miserable sinners to his bosom or else repudiate his doctrine, but had no idea he would do the former. Poor man! He has simply been driven to desperation in his efforts to defend a false doctrine. He asks: "Why did you introduce the chief rulers here to prove that faith precedes repentance?" Why, simply because it proves it—that is the reason. Note the attitude he assumes. Here are people he admits believed on Christ, but would not confess him because they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God, and yet he says they were penitent! Brother Moore, is that the kind of re-pentance the Baptists teach—a repentance that will not lead people to confess Christ, a repentance that leaves one loving the praise of men more than the praise of God? Is that Baptist doctrine? I thought you Baptists contended for a change of heart, but the position you now assume leads you to recognize and fellowship people whose hearts are far from the Lord. Take it back, my friend, before it gets cold, and apologize to the Baptist Church for thus representing it. And those chief rulers were peni-Eh? I knew the case would be too big for you to handle with your doctrine of repentance before faith.

Instead of meeting this, he now gives us his "promise" that at the "proper time and place" he will attend to it! Very well, I shall patiently wait, and we shall see what we shall see. He says I "did not dare to explain the four scriptural citations given in my [his] article on the order of mention of repentance and faith." I can account for this statement only on one of two grounds—viz.: Brother Moore is so confused he forgets the ground over which we have traveled, or else he does not read my replies. I said this:

Our friend tries to support his contention with Matt. 3: 1, 2. He should know that John was talking to people who already believed in God, but who, because of their sins, were in no condition to accept the message regarding the coming Messiah until they had set themselves right with God. They were the "lost sheep of the house of Israel," and sustained the same relation to God that an erring child does now. He thinks Acts 20: 21 helps his cause, but it avails him nothing. The "order" in which historic events are recorded does not always prove that such things occurred in the order given. Note this: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." (Rom. 10: 9.) Here we have dead, thou shalt be saved." (Rom. 10: 9.) Here we have confession before faith; and I ask, will our brother contend, because of the order recorded, that confession comes before faith? To be consistent, he must, or else abandon his claim from Acts 20: 21. All that can be claimed from that passage is that it simply shows toward whom repentance and faith are directed. Faith is a principle of growth (2 Thess. 1: 3) with different degrees of development. There is a degree of faith leading to repentance which is the very cause of repentance, and still another degree leading to obedience in baptism. But the growth of faith does not end here; it leads to every act of worship and service, growing continually so long as we live.

He knows or should know that the word translated "repented" in Matt. 21: 32 means "regret," from "metamelomai," and is not the word "metanoeo," which means repentance. He demands of me to show where faith precedes repentance. Well, I can show this by Brother Moore's own concession. He has said that "some kind of faith precedes repentance," and I shall now repeat my request which he has persistently ignored—viz.: What relation does that faith you admit precedes repentance sustain to the Lord Jesus Christ? Will my friend refuse again to attend to this request? Moreover, he has absolutely paid no attention to the following:

My friend challenges me to find a passage where faith precedes repentance. Well, that is easy, Brother Moore, and I am surprised that in all of your Bible reading you have overlooked such plain passages. Listen: "And without faith it is impossible to be well pleasing unto him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." Now, Brother Moore, will you tell us that you did not believe in the existence of God when you were seeking after him through repentance? Will you tell us that you did not believe the testimony God gave concerning Jesus Christ as the Savior of man when you were seeking after God through repentance? If not, please tell us uhat led you to repent. Here is our brother's predicament: He was deeply impressed that he was a sinner, lost and without hope in the world, became overwhelmed with a "godly sorrow," repenting toward God, and yet all this without faith! The passage says it is impossible to please God without faith; hence, if it were possible for one to repent without faith, that act would be displeasing to God. "And the people of Nineveh believed God; and But again: they proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them.' (Jon. 3: 5.) Any one who cannot see that believing in God preceded the repentance of the Ninevites is safe without either faith or repentance. Once more: "Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Brethren, what (Acts 2: 36, 37.) Now I want you to tell us this: If the people did not believe Peter's testimony concerning Jesus Christ, then what caused them to be pricked in their hearts? Again, if they did not have faith, what caused them to ask the question: "Brethren, what shall we do?" Mark you, up to this time they had not "Brethren, what repented, for in answer to their question they were told to repent. Come square up to the issue, my brother, and let us have no beating around the bush. Either you or Peter is wrong in this matter, and I frankly say I prefer let us have no beating around the bush. to stand with Peter.

Instead of attending to such pertinent questions, he comes at this late date and demands a passage that teaches faith before repentance! Brother Moore tries to make it appear that I have "a law of approach" to the Lord's table, but he is mistaken. The difference between us on this point is this: He believes and teaches that unimmersed Methodists and Presbyterians are in the kingdom-children of God with their names written in the Lamb's book of life-and yet he will not let such eat at the Father's table. I do not believe that any one is in the kingdom or in covenant relation with God who has not been immersed into Christ, and I frankly preach it. I neither inv te people to the Lord's table, whether immersed or unimmersed, nor try to keep them from it. It is the Lord's table, not mine. My friend is guilty of a gross inconsistency, and is lording it over what he himself contends is the Lord's heritage. When he admits one is a child of God and yet refuses that one a place at the Lord's table. he sits in judgment on the souls of men. He stoutly repudiates baptism as being essential to salvation, and yet puts water between a child of God and one of the nearest approaches a child of God can make to him in this life. I would tremble at the very thought of assuming such authority as that. Come, my friend, and meet the issue like a man. Give us Bible authority for your practice in this matter or abandon it.

The Power of True Conception.

BY S. H. HALL.

There is nothing that would help the follower of Christ more to withstand temptation, to never grow weary in well-doing, but to be forever pushing the glorious work before us onward and upward, than the proper conception of the greatness of the work. In the days of Nehemiah and Ezra there was a great work the Lord wanted done—viz., the rebuilding of the wall, the rebuilding of the temple, and the restoration of the law that had been in disuse for years. The enemy of the "faithful" then, as now, did not want this work done; hence every conceivable thing, from ridicule to the threats of a mighty army, was resorted to, to keep the work from being done. But when the wall had been rebuilt, to the chagrin of the enemy, the devil resorted to his last trick-viz,, a compromise. Here are the words of the sacred penman: "Now it came to pass, when it was reported to Sanballat and Tobiah, and to Geshem the Arabian, and unto the rest of our enemies, that I had builded the wall, and that there was no breach left therein; (though even unto that time I had not set up the doors in the gates;) that Sanballat and Geshem sent unto me, saying, Come, let us meet together in one of the villages in the plain of Ono. But they thought to do me mischief. And I sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?" Thus the enemy fails in this last and subtle effort to hinder the work. And why? Was it not because of the fact that the builders had the true conception of its greatness? They stood shielded against every effort of Satan to lead them from the work so long as there existed in their hearts the realization that it was a great work-yes, indeed, the greatest work in which they could have been engaged at that time.

And we all appreciate the greatness of that work; it was great, but not so great as the work that lies out before the church of our Lord to-day. We are under a better covenant, established upon better promises (Heb. 8: 6); hence to give it back to the people is a greater work than restoring the law of Moses to the people of that day. "The church of the living God," "the Jerusalem that is above" (see 1 Tim. 3: 15; Gal. 4: 26), is greater than the ancient city of Jerusalem around which the faithful then rebuilt the wall; hence restoring the church to the people to-day, in its fullness and completeness, by giving back to the people all the teaching, all the words of the new covenant, is a greater work than that in which Nehemiah and Ezra were engaged.

Honestly, do we, kind reader, have that conception that we should have of the greatness of the work before us? If so, how is it that almost any little thing will hinder us and cause us to tire of the work? I have my doubts about even the Spanish "flu" being a sufficient scare to have caused those workers to cease in Nehemiah's day. And I not only doubt this, but I doubt that the Spanish "flu," with all of its danger multiplied by infinity, could have caused our Lord to cease the work he came to do for you and me while he was on the earth. This you know.

Is there one thing more needed to-day? Is there one thing from which the disciples of our Lord are more dangerously drifting than a full and clear conception of the greatness of the work our Lord has placed in our hands? May the Father, so tender, so patient, so kind, have mercy upon us, forgive us of all our neglect, create within us a new heart, renew a right spirit within us, and make us work as never before. That this may be done, I ask that we read more, pray more, give more, and work more. This will cause the scales to fall from our eyes and enable us to see with a clearer vision that there is nothing under the sun so great as the work God wants us to be continually engaged in for his glory and honor and the salvation of men and women.

Principles of right and justice were never determined by war. Strength of numbers, equipment, and resources may be tested by war; trade supremacy may be won by war; domain may be extended and maintained by war; thrones may be seized and held by it—such issues as these may be settled by force of skill, of energy, or of arms. But principles of right and justice are above and beyond the contending forces of battling nations, as the serene sunshine ever beams above and beyond the storm clouds. War obscures these principles and blinds us to them. Only the calm of peace can let the clear sunshine through to us.—Christian Herald.

Do You Care?

BY G. F. GIBBS.

If I should care what man may say
And shrink from the finger of scorn,
While I walk in the narrow way
And await the beautiful morn,
To me would the words surely come:
"Depart, my will you have not done."

If I care not what man may say,
But take the aged's good advice
And work on, rejoicing alway,
And gladly make the sacrifice,
To me will the words surely come:
"Well done, thou faithful one, well done!"

So, then, in fear of God above,
Who reigns forever and alway,
Who gave the Son of his own love
To die on the cross of Calv'ry,
Let us be faithful in the strife
And win the blessed "crown of life."

Old Testament Characters-Abel. No. 3.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

Abel, the second son of Adam, is the first member of the human family that acted upon the basis of faith. There is nothing said in the Bible concerning Adam's faith, Eve's trust in God, or Cain's confidence in Jehovah. Abel begins, or is at the head of, the list of the long catalogue of faithful servants of God. The contrast between his faith and Cain's disobedience is refreshing. It has been observed that by faith the weakness of man is linked to the omnipotence of God and man becomes powerful even in his weakness; the ignorance of man is supplemented with the wisdom of Heaven by faith. When one begins to look at himself and to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, thinking himself to be something when he is nothing, he blunders sadly; when he thinks that he can accomplish wonders by his own power and skill independent of God, he makes a fatal mistake; when a man thinks that by his own might and main he can accomplish his mission in this life, he knows not himself and his limitations as he should know them; but when a man can look at his own weakness, ignorance, insignificance, and frailty, and at the same time get a clear vision of the omnipotent power of God and wisdom of Heaven and by faith link his weakness to the power of God, then a mighty force has been created which God can use for the blessing of the human family and the salvation of the race.

There is a stronger union between weak, frail man, on one side, and the omnipotence of Jehovah, on the other, when linked by faith, than there is between soul and body. Note the union between soul and body. The body is lifeless, dead, without the spirit to animate it; so man is weak, frail, and insignificant until linked with the wisdom and the power of God. There is nothing that he can do that is pleasing to God without faith; but with strong faith, man becomes godlike in power and in influence. There is no truth more often emphasized in the Bible than the one that God has used men who were weak and despised in the light of life's common standard for the accomplishment of his purpose upon earth. God wants men of the best mental strength, of the finest mental training, and he uses such when they are prepared to be used; but men of fine mental traits and intellectual giants are so often tempted to rely upon native ability and thus render themselves unfit to be used by Jehovah. God never seems to be in a hurry; he can wait; he does wait until man is prepared by faith and obedience to be used for the glory of God and the service of his kingdom. God asks that we bring the best we have in native ability with the best possible training, and let him use us absolutely as he may wish. "For it is God who worketh in you both to will and to work, for his good pleasure." (Phil. 2: 13.) This is the example that is given us in Abel. We do not see so much of the traits of character in Abel; we see him as a representative of God, by faith doing Jehovah's will.

While Abel stands at the top of the list of God's heroes of faith, he also stands as the first of that innumerable host of the race to die. He was the first, it seems, to receive the final and ultimate sting of sin, which is death. It seems strange that Abel, the righteous and faithful servant of God, should be the first to succumb to physical death. He is not only the first to die and experience the full power of sin, which is death, but he also stands as the first martyr. He has the honor of being the first of a long list of martyrs that reach even down to the present time. We do not know how many constitute the "Honor Roll" of the martyrs of faith. The Savior makes mention of this list of martyrs and says: "That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed on the earth, from the blood of Abel the righteous unto the blood of Zachariah son of Barachiah, whom ye slew between the sanctuary and the altar." (Matt. 23: 35.) Mention is made without enumerating all that came between Abel, the righteous, down to Zachariah. There have been added many precious souls to this list of martyrs since the earthly life of our Savior. Stephen, the first Christian martyr, and nearly all of the apostles have been added to the Honor Roll since this language was spoken by the Son of God. Let him who doubts read John Foxe's "Book of Martyrs" and there see how the enemies of righteousness have stained their hands with the innocent blood of the heroes of faith and drenched the streets of their cities with the blood of the pious; or let him visit the catacombs of Rome and there read the inscriptions written by the bloody hand of persecution and be convinced.

A martyr means one who dies for his convictions. His convictions may not always be based upon the truth, yet that one is to be admired for his courage and conviction. Abel's convictions were in harmony with God's will; they were based upon the truth of our God, and were maintained by all of the energy of his soul, and were contended for by the life that he lived and the death that he died. He is the first of this long list of martyrs who gave his life in behalf of God's will. Not only was Abel well pleasing to God, righteous and faithful in his life, but he was also well pleasing to God in his death, and has the approval of God in his death as much as he had God's approval in his life. This teaches us that we must live a life consistent with God's will; and when such a life has been lived, its end or death is blessed of Jehovah. Jehovah caused wicked Baalam, when he was trying to curse Israel, to bless Jehovah's people and say: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!" (Num. 23: 10.) Again, we are instructed by the voice of heaven speaking to John: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them." (Rev. 14: 13.) This is an encouragement to the people of God; whether living or dying, we can be pleasing unto the Lord.

By faith he offered a more excellent sacrifice than Cain; by faith he was accounted worthier to die. It seems strange to us that righteous Abel should die and leave wicked, murderous Cain to live. We may gain the lesson that the righteous are prepared to meet God and live with him forever, while in mercy the wicked are left to linger on earth and thus given time to prepare by faith to meet him. Jehovah distinctly and clearly identifies himself with Abel's position and espouses the cause of his martyred representative on earth. This within itself is a severe rebuke and condemnation of evil and shows that the ascendency of evil over righteousness is only temporary.

Training Little Children

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 30.

The Child Is Not a Possession—He Is an Individual Needing Care, Nurture, and Love to Help Him Express Himself.

Many parents fail to realize that the child born to them is not a personal possession, is not a thing to mold according to their own desires, their own ambitions, or their own social aspirations. From the very start we must rid ourselves of this sense of ownership and begin from the cradle days to look upon the child as an individual being, whose sacred right it is to unfold his own self with the help, care, nurture, and love which are due him.

What definite means can the home adopt for the best development of the child in the first six years of his life? First, with regard to the things which surround himfurniture, pictures, books, toys, clothes, and ornaments. In how far may these lend themselves to his development?

In the room in which the child spends most of his time indoors, the furniture ought to be plain enough so that he can do no great harm in playing freely about. A small, substantial kindergarten chair and table to work on are almost indispensable in the child's room. Kindergarten materials can be obtained from Milton Bradley Company, Springfield, Mass., or E. Steiger & Co., 49 Murray Street, New York. Both companies send free catalogues upon request. A good blackboard should be hung securely on the wall, care being taken that it hangs low enough for the child to use easily; for from the hour he can toddle he will delight in chalk markings, and these even then will have value because of the muscular development afforded the arm and hand.

The pictures on the wall in the child's room ought to be distinctly for him and hung low enough so that he may take them down and handle them whenever he chooses. Every child likes color and delights in the "story picture," the picture which has a story connected with it. Pictures of animals, of family life, of other children's activities, of the simple trade world such as sustain family life, are excellent for the nursery.

The child may be taught to discriminate between his own things and those belonging to others by being allowed to visit the family living room where mother's and father's books and their pictures and furniture are used with caution and care. This will also lead him gradually into an appreciation of the adult's standard of art in pictures, music, and literature.

The value of good music in the home cannot be overestimated. Fortunate the child whose ear is accustomed from the cradle to beautiful sound and melody; and yet even more fortunate the child who is accustomed to hearing the singing voices of those about him. Children love to hear songs-children's songs, big people's songs, and folk songs. They love to hear the songs of long ago when mother was a child and the lullaby grandmother sang. The child loves especially a bedtime song, sung beside his crib before the final "good night."

As to books, there are the standard ones: "The Mother Goose Nursery Rhymes," the simple animal storybooks, and the fairy tales in simple form. A helpful list of modern books, picture and storybooks, has been carefully reviewed and listed by the Federation for Child Study and may be had upon application to the secretary, Mrs. Thomas Seltzer, 219 West One Hundredth Street, New York City, N. Y., for thirty cents. The Bureau of Education also has suitable lists of children's books.

Story-telling is a great art, and the mothers or fathers who have this gift can give their children unbounded joy and fill them with fond memories of the story hour that will never be forgotten.

As for moral influences in the home, it is the words the child hears us speak, the things he sees us do, which will have the greatest effect on his attitude toward those about him, such as respectful care and tender affection toward the grandmother, the grandfather, the aunt, the uncleour treatment of those in our employ, etc. Family festivals, such as birthday celebrations, Christmas Day, special excursions, or picnics, in which the whole family join, make glorious impressions on the child's mind.

The spirit of charity should permeate the home. The little child is too young to know how to help the less fortunate, but he will imbibe the home spirit and with his growing understanding he will adopt the ideals by which he is surrounded.

Above all other influences, the most telling is that which the parents create by means of their relationship to each other. If peace reigns supreme and father and mother live as one, having a deep, true, and earnest affection for each other, facing together the joys and sorrows and supplementing each other's strength at every turn, there is no greater legacy they can leave their children than the influence and memory of such a home.

Searchers After Riches.

These impious ones wander in a circle, longing after something to gratify their yearnings, yet madly rejecting that which alone can bring them to their desired end-not by exhaustion, but by attainment. They weary themselves out in vain travail without reaching their blessed consummation, because they delight in creatures, not in the Creator. They want to traverse creation, trying all things one by one rather than think of coming to Him who is Lord of all; and if their utmost longing were realized, so that they should have all the world for their own, yet without possessing Him who is the Author of all being, then the same law of their desire would make them contemn what they had, and restlessly seek Him whom they still lacked-that is, God himself. Rest is in him alone. Man knows no peace in the world; but he has no disturbance when he is with God.—Bernard of Clairvaux.

Take Courage.

Take courage! The legions of darkness are strong, it may be, And Satan holds forth on land and on sea: But right is of God, and undaunted is he. Take courage!

Take courage! The world has long dwelt in the shadow of night; But the earth is the Lord's, and the Lord is our light. All evil must pass with the conquering Right.

Take courage!

Take courage! Though millions of men are arrayed for the wrong, More millions for God and his conquest are strong. Up, up to the battle, and sing ye his song. Take courage!

Christians Should Not Grow Lukewarm.

BY J. C. M'Q.

The Spirit said to the church in Laodicea: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spew thee out of my mouth." (Rev. 3: 15, 16.)

Recently I heard a reliable gentleman say of parents whose sons had gone to the war: "Before the war they went to church regularly, but since the war they have neglected the worship almost entirely." Christians who are guilty of such conduct have not imbibed the spirit of Christ. It does not require much devotion or much courage to be brave under sunny skies, but to be faithful under threatening clouds develops the best that is within us.

God never created us to be hothouse plants. While we should shun the very appearance of evil and should never willfully or deliberately go into temptation, yet in the discharge of our Christian duty we will be sorely tried and tempted. When tempted, however, the Holy Spirit assures us: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as man can bear: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it." (1 Cor. 10: 13.) Every Christian should find much encouragement in this passage. No matter how fierce and fiery the trial, no matter how dark the clouds and how terrible the bereavement that may overtake us, still the Lord assures us that he tempers the wind to the shorn lamb and that no temptation shall come upon us that we shall not be able to bear. The flower that grows nearest our heart may be plucked, the children that God has given to cherish and brighten our lives may be prematurely taken from us, and the whole world may be dark and dreary; still we should be comforted by the thought that, if faithful, God has given us the strength and the ability to overcome such trying ordeals. In the darkness we need light; in the cold we need fire; and so during the terrible crisis that is upon the world we need consistent Christian lives, perhaps as never before.

In the very beginning, when Adam and Eve were placed in the garden and were permitted to enjoy its beauty and fragrance, it was necessary for them to overcome evil. They could not yield to sinful appetite without suffering the terrible consequences. We read: "And Jehovah God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." (Gen. 2: 16, 17.) Even in the garden of Eden they were not free from the tempter, for in an evil hour the tempter came in the form of a serpent and seduced the woman to disobey God. The temptation was not a weak one, but was as strong as could be presented by the archfiend of the human family. Eve did not yield to his seductive voice until she "saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was to be desired to make one wise." Thus we see that this temptation was as strong as can be presented to any one. No stronger temptation has ever been presented to us, for the Holy Spirit, speaking through the beloved John, says: "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the vainglory of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." (1 John 2: 16.) In the temptation that was presented to Eve we find all of the world embodied in "the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the vainglory of life." It is the essence of folly for us to contend now that, if we had been in Eve's place, we would not have fallen. Thousands of multiplied thousands are yielding daily to the same temptation that she did. To-day "each man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own lust, and enticed."

While the cruel war that is being waged is terrible, the trial of our faith is no greater than was the trial of Abraham's faith and the faith of many other of the patriarchs. We read: "By faith Abraham, being tried, offered up Isaac: yea, he that had gladly received the promises was offering up his only begotten son; even he to whom it was said, In Isaac shall thy seed be called." (Heb. 11: 17, 18.) The trial of our faith in the crisis through which we are passing is no greater than was the trial of Moses' faith. We learn: "By faith Moses, when he was grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to share ill treatment with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; accounting the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he looked unto the recompense of reward." (Heb. 11: 24-26.) Before complaining and concluding that all is lost and that we cannot endure the fiery trials through which we are now passing, every child of God should read prayerfully the following: "And what shall I more say? for the time will fail me if I tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah; of David and Samuel and the prophets: who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, from weakness were made strong, waxed mighty in war, turned to flight armies of aliens. Women received their dead by a resurrection: and others were tortured, not accepting their deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection: and others had trial of mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword: they went about in sheepskins, in goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, illtreated (of whom the world was not worthy), wandering in deserts and mountains and caves, and the holes of the earth. And these all, having had witness borne to them through their faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing concerning us, that apart from us they should not be made perfect." (Heb. 11: 32-40.)

When we see Abraham offering up Isaac, his only son of promise, upon the altar, we are constrained to believe that man can overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil, and at last enter through the pearly gates into the city of God. Abraham's obedience proves man capable of salvation, and even a greater than Abraham was "in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." In that superhuman conflict between Christ and the archfiend of the human family, Christ took "it is written" and with the word of God, "which is the sword of the Spirit," overcame Satan. The Evil One cannot endure and stand before the word of God. If Christ, who had the whole world from which to select his weapons-he who could have called twelve legions of angels to his support, he who could have unveiled his own glory and before it the archfiend of night would have paled as owls and bats before the splendors of the noonday sun-if he could do no better than fight the battle with "it is written," surely his subjects should gird on the whole armor of God and with that overcome the Wicked One. Christ has shown us the way; he has left us an example that we should walk in his steps. The devil tempted Christ in order to destroy him; his motive was evil, and only evil. God proved Abraham in order to develop and save him; his motive was good, and only good. God tries man for his own good; the devil tempts him for his destruction. Christ's victory over Satan shows man's capability of salvation.

With these examples before us, and many others that might be given, it is cowardly and wicked for God's children to draw back during the terrible war that is now being waged almost world-wide. We need Christian soldiers to fight the battles of life. In the midst of the terrible clouds that are now enveloping the whole country, we should be able to say, in the language of the Holy Spirit: "We are not of them that shrink back unto perdition; but of them that have faith unto the saving of the soul." Those parents who have sons engaged in the bloody war that is being waged on the western front in France should be ashamed of their conduct when they neglect to serve and worship the Lord Jesus Christ. Our lives are given us in order that we may fit ourselves for the life to come. This world is the scene of our conflict, in which we must overcome the devil in order to be crowned in heaven. If in the midst of perils, in the midst of cruel wars, we shrink back and fail to do our duty, we will never hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done." Life is a conflict from the cradle to the grave. We must fight the good fight of faith. We must be true if we would reign with Christ throughout the countless ages of eternity.

Warfare.

BY E. G. S.

Are we in a warfare now? Most certainly; Christians are in a warfare from the time they begin to be Christians. To be a Christian is to be a follower of Christ, and to be a follower of Christ is to be a follower of his teaching as given in the New Testament. None have the right to claim to be Christians, save those who obey Christ; and we obey him as we do the very things he requires us to do. We have no right to make any changes on what he says, When he says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," we must say that as he says it. If we change baptism into spvinkling, we set God and his authority aside and put human wisdom in its place.

God knew what we ought to do to make us just what we cught to be. If we do what the word of God says do, it will certainly make us just what we ought to be, and what we will want to be when the close of life comes; but if we fix in our own minds what we want to do and lay the word of God aside and go our own way, we will be eternally rejected by the Lord. We must never under any circumstances leave off what the word of God says and follow the opinions of men. Even Christ himself says: "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." The will of the Lord must be done just as he has commanded. Therefore we must always and in everything conform our will to God's will, forming our lives after the pattern he has laid down for us in the New Testament.

The New Testament was given to point out to us the narrow way which Jesus ordained for us to walk in, in order to reach the heavenly home; and there is no other pathway that can lead us home but the one that Jesus has pointed out to us. If we walk in that, we have the certain promise of the heavenly home in eternity; if we do not walk in it, there is not an intimation that we will ever reach heaven. When Jesus said, "He that believeth not shall be damned," he knew what he was talking about and that the destiny of man in eternity would be just what he said. There are just two pathways laid out for men through this life and two places of abode in eternity. Into one of these two places all the world is doomed to go. People are permitted to make their choice as to which place they want to dwell in after death. If they want to dwell in heaven, where God, Christ, the holy angels, and all the righteous will be throughout eternity, they must walk the narrow way; but if they are careless and indifferent as to their dwelling place in eternity and fail to become Christians, they will be sure to be cast into hell. If we want to be happy in eternity, we must make the good choice here and walk in the narrow way while we live. If we continue to walk in the broad way until death comes, it will then be too late to make that choice.

The Lord has been wonderfully kind to the human race and has taught them plainly how to walk, promising eternal life to all that will be faithful until death. Why, then, should any be lost in a Bible land? It will be altogether their own fault and by their own choice. Not a particle of blame can they lay upon the Lord. He has established the plan of salvation and plainly revealed it to man, and he urgently invites him to accept it before it becomes too late. When people neglect their obedience to the gospel till too late, their fate is then sealed for eternity. Their time for repentance is then passed and there is no way to escape the consequences of a disobedient life. Down to the grave they must go unprepared. Such a fate is sad indeed.

Any honest task is capable of being so largely conceived that he who enters into it may see, stretching before him, the promise of things to do and be, that will stir his enthusiasm and satisfy his best desires.—Phillips Brooks.

Abnormal Costs.

Costs in the printing business are abnormal when compared with the costs of a few years ago. They are not abnormal when we consider the high prices of materials entering into printing. In all probability the price of paper will soon be even higher.

Considering the price of paper and materials, the Gospel Advocate at three dollars a year would be cheap. Take the price of paper, for instance. A mill in Cincinnati in 1913 sold a sulphite bond for six cents a pound. To-day the same paper is selling for fifteen cents a pound—an increase of one hundred and fifty per cent. Other materials have advanced proportionately. Labor is costing more. Some journals that were charging $1.50 per annum in 1913 are now charging $3 per annum. The Gospel Advocate has advanced only fifty cents per year.

Now is the time to renew your subscription and also to send new subscribers. You should cooperate with the publishers of religious journals as you have not done formerly, for they are furnishing your papers at a great sacrifice.

Have you sent us a new subscriber? Have you renewed your own subscription? If you want your religious journal to live and be efficient in advocating the gospel, now is the time to show your interest by a practical demonstration. We appeal to every reader to interest himself in behalf of this journal.

A Contribution Box for the Tennessee Orphans' Home for a Christmas Present.

BY F. C. SOWELL.

At this date there are forty-two children in the Tennessee Orphans' Home. Thirty-six of this number have been sick with the influenza, but we are glad to say that they are all practically well and are getting along nicely under the management of Sister Lipscomb. During the last twelve months, under the new management of the Home, there have been eighty-six children in the Home, and forty-four of this number have been placed in homes. There are some nice boys and girls in the number we have now that should have good homes in some nice, Christian families. But I make this appeal to each family wherever the Gospel Advocate goes for a little contribution for the Home of these dear children.

I will suggest a very simple arrangement, or plan, for this offering. Let each family have a little box on the mantle or some convenient place in the room, and each member of the family put in a little offering every week from now until Christmas, and you will have a dollar or two. This is a little thing for one family; but when all of the offerings of all these boxes are put together, it will make a nice, big offering. Little things make big things when they continue to grow. To illustrate: We have lost, by death, in Maury County, Tenn., twelve of our boys in actual service of the great war. Now multiply this by the ninety-six counties in the State, and we have one thousand one hundred and fifty-two; then multiply this by the forty-eight States in the United States, and we have fiftytwo thousand two hundred and ninety-six dead. This would make a big number to sacrifice for our country, aside from the great number that have died from disease.

In like manner multiply our contribution boxes by the many families who read the Advocate, and we will have thousands of them to come to the Tennessee Orphans' Home Christmas. Send the contents of your box, by check, to the Home, and then address a postal card to me at Columbia, Tenn., naming the family who sent it and the amount you send, and I will make a report through the Advocate.

Put your box up at once and begin to put your pennies, nickels, and dimes into it, so you will be ready to send when the time is up.

We appreciate the thoughtfulness of a little five-year-old boy who lives in Kentucky's capital city. Read why he missed the fair:

Brother Lipscomb: I am a little boy five years old, and mother gave me one dollar to go to the fair; but grand-mother told me about the starving little girls and boys, so I told her I would send my dollar to them. So you will find it inclosed in this letter. Please add it to your fund.

CLARENCE HUNT THOMAS, Frankfort, Ky.

The reports of increased need, death by starvation, suffering from famine and pestilence, has led to a new survey of conditions in Western Asia.

The present situation has been summarized by a committee of which James L. Barton, Ambassador Elkus, Henry Morgenthau, Charles E. Hughes, William Howard Taft, Cleveland H. Dodge, Samuel T. Dutton, W. W. Peet, and many other prominent men are members, from the reports of returned missionaries, physicians, teachers, business men, and the files of the Department of State.

In asking for thirty million dollars, the committee states: "We include only those refugees who are reported to be immediately accessible, multitudes of them perishing daily and all of whom might be saved were resources adequate. In making this estimate, we have fixed the smallest sum that can be considered as approximately sufficient to keep the breath of life in the bodies of these homeless, helpless, starving masses, who are dependent upon the American Committee for Relief in the Near East to save from inevitable death. We place this amount at five dollars a month, seventeen cents a day, for each person."

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

The Greatest Loan in History.

The Philadelphia Bulletin gives some interesting and inspiring information about loans. It says:

The greatest Ioan that the German government has raised at one time is $3,600,000,000. The greatest loan that the British government has raised is $5,100,000,000. The loan which the United States is now raising is $6,000,000,000the greatest amount for such a purpose in the history of any nation the world has ever known. Not only is it virtually certain, but it is highly probable, that when the sub-scriptions shall all be in, it will be found that the total will be nearer seven billion than six billion. Yet, colossal as the amount is, it will not represent much more than one thirty-fifth part of the estimated wealth of the United States.

The United States is a great nation with great resources and is capable of doing great good. We would rejoice to see so much money used for the conversion of all nations to Christ. The demands of the war should not abate our interest in the spread of the gospel of Christ. The church has a great work to do now and will have as long as time shall last. 0 0 0

A Peace Should Be Declared in Accordance With the Bible.

No one doubts that a terrible and cruel war is being waged almost world-wide, but that is no justification for Christians' losing sight of the principles of truth and righteousness. We should never pervert the Scriptures in order to justify our intensified and inflamed passions. The Bible does not encourage or allow a Christian to take revenge. "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." To refuse to take vengeance is Christian and not pagan. We should not deceive ourselves. Evil passions should be crucified. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch writes forcefully and truly on "Justice, Not Revenge." It says:

We will give all the blood necessary to win victory, but not one drop for revenge.

Those who criticize the President for asking Prince Maximilian the exact meaning of his peace plea before rejecting it and who insist that no peace shall be made with Germany until her armies are actually destroyed, her soil invaded, and her cities devastated, are false to American ideals and to American aims in the war. We are fighting for justice and liberty, nothing more. When we are assured we have gained these ends, we have nothing to fight for. We have pledged our power and influence to a program of justice to all-friend and foe, great and smalland we must keep our pledge.

All we ask is that our enemies submit to our terms. When they yield and give guarantees of good faith by surrendering the spoils of war and laying down their arms, the work of war is done and the work of peace begins.

When we can make peace on fair and reasonable termsthe terms the President has clearly defined—we must make it whole-heartedly and not half-heartedly, with hitterness in our minds and knives up our sleeves. The half-hearted peace is the truce of the coward and the savage.

The demand that we take an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, that we bomb German hospitals, wantonly destroy German cities and kill German women and children, because the Germans do these things, disgraces Americans. Shall we become savages because our enemies are savage? Shall we do the barbarous acts which we condemn in the Hun and thus become worse than Huns? If we fought with cannibals, would we imitate their savage example by eating their bodies? In a war for humanity and civilization, shall we abandon both? Never! We must be true to our own principles and ideals, whatever happens.

The way the President has chosen is the way of honor and fair dealing. It is the way of reason and justice. When our enemies meet us on this ground, the war will be over

If we do not lead as God directs, we will soon lose our position of leadership. If this nation is superior to others, it is because, as a nation, it is more in harmony with the Bible than others. To depart from the Bible is to invite our own downfall. If Germany atones for her wrongs by restoration as the Bible requires, she will suffer enough and should not be expected to do more. Such a settlement will meet all the demands of justice and righteousness.

Biblical Terms.

The following list of biblical terms translated into present-day meaning is inserted for the guidance of our readers:

A day's journey was about twenty-three and one-fifth miles

A Sabbath-day's journey was about an English mile.

A shekel of silver is about fifty cents.

The ratio of a shekel of silver to a shekel of gold was apparently sixteen to one.

A talent of silver was five hundred and thirty-eight dollars and thirty cents.

A talent of gold was thirteen thousand eight hundred and nine dollars.

A piece of silver, or a penny, was thirteen cents.

Nobody to Suggest It.

In thousands of cases the salaries of pastors are the same they were in 1914, while the prices of the necessities of life in most cases have doubled. Compare the prices of meal, flour, meat, lard, sugar, chickens, eggs, milk, butter, and clothing of all sorts with the prices of these same commodities in 1914, and observe the difference. Most of them are twice as high now as they were then. We do not know of a preacher whose salary has been doubled. The increases made have been small, but in most cases there has been no increase at all. We cannot believe that the churches are unwilling to do the square thing by their pastors in these times of high cost of living. The trouble has been, and is now, there is no one to suggest an increase in salary, We plead with the deacons to take this matter up with their churches at once, and if the deacons fail to do it, let some other members of the church look after it. It is em-barrassing for pastors to be forced to ask for better sup-Already many of them feel that they are not appreciated because their churches have not offered them an increase in salary. "A hint to the wise is sufficient."— Christian Index.

This journal has suggested that the churches should increase the amounts that they pay preachers. No one should expect the preacher to do the impossible, and no Christian is willing to put him in the attitude of a beggar. Faithful ministers are not complaining, but are doing their duty, trusting the churches to do theirs also.

Woman Suffrage.

The Journal and Messenger says:

When President Wilson went before the Senate of the United States and pleaded for woman suffrage, on the ground that it should be adopted "as a war measure to win the war"-he excited laughter over the whole country. We have seen no intimation that any one, even the suffragettes themselves, agrees with him. Among others, The Catholic Telegraph says: "How any one can advocate woman suffrage as a war measure, as a reward, recognition, or encouragement of the splendid war activities of the women of our country, is altogether beyond our comprehension. We have had excellent opportunities of learning the sentiment of thousands of members of the most active units of the Red Cross, and we have yet to hear of a single worker who is favorable to the 'votes-for-women' movement. We would not be so rash as to assert We would not be so rash as to assert that there may not be some suffragettes among these units. There may be, but, up to date, they have not manifested any symptoms of the disease. This one fact is indisputable: among Catholic women war workers—and their num-ber is legion—the number of suffragettes is so small as to be entirely negligible."

Missionary

Homeward Bound.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

On February 8, 1912, I left Louisville, Ky., for my field of labor in Japan. I have been continuously at it ever since. In these seven years I have passed through more trials, and more intense, than any other seven years of my life, and I can say from bitter experience that "many are the afflictions of the righteous;" but with triumph I can add, "the Lord delivereth him out of them all."

In twenty-seven years I have been back to the homeland just twice. I have not seen my wife and children in seven years (nearly). My baby, who is now nineteen, was a little girl of twelve the last time I saw her. I took a picture of her as she passed out of the gate to school that morning and glanced back at me, which was so deeply imprinted that it has not faded even unto this day. She graduates next June, and I have promised her, if God wills, to be on hand. I also have a little grandbaby over two years old that I have never seen, whom they call "Anne," and the like of which was never seen among babykind before, as letters both from her mother and grandmother clearly go to show. I also want to meet old friends and renew acquaintances, form new acquaintances, and keep in touch with the coming generation, so that in years to come, when I begin to think of getting old, if ever I do, I may still be in touch with the people around me and not have to feel that I am a back number. I still have three brothers living in Hickman County, in Middle Tennessee, plain, honest, upright sons of the soil, whom I want to visit again before any more of us go hence, and with them walk over the old farm of our boyhood days.

These are some of the earthly ties that bind and that make me want to visit the homeland again. Above all, there is still the great commission urging every true child of God onward and yet onward, wherever man is found, till the message is proclaimed the whole world around. I hope to create a still greater interest in the missionary cause. Nothing does this so effectually as the personal touch.

It may be that I need a rest, or at least a change, but one thing for which I am not coming home is because of failing health. So far as I can judge, I was never more physically fit than now. I am coming home because I feel I have been away long enough for one time and that it is my duty to return.

Yesterday (September 12) I went to Yokohama and engaged passage on the steamer "Korea," due to sail for San Francisco the latter part of January. Ship service is short now, and one must engage ahead. I have paid fifty dollars on the ticket to close the agreement. After November 1 no more reductions are to be made to missionaries, so I must pay full fare-two hundred dollars. As I have only enough in hand to meet current expenses, it will be necessary to ask for the two hundred dollars extra. rates also have gone up, so that, even at reduced rates, the fare from San Francisco to Kentucky is about sixty dollars. A total, then, of two hundred and sixty dollars will be needed to get me to my destination. Where is it to come from? From where it has always come-from God through his people. Judging from past experience, I am confident that when the time comes the needed amount will be in hand.

It will be a convenience to me if those sending for this purpose will so state it in their letters.

For some months I have been in correspondence with Brother J. H. Bowman, Box 1174, Honolulu, Hawaii, and he has arranged for me to spend one month there in the hope that a church may be started in that beautiful island. I can get a thirty-days' stop-over between ships. It is also hoped that other missionaries, as they pass to and fro, will stop off and aid the work. My stay in Hawaii will probably cost me forty or fifty dollars more.

All friends will continue to address me in Japan—68 Zoshigaya, Tokyo, Japan—till the end of the year. That is, if you start your letter any time in this year, send to me here as usual. During January and February send in care of Brother Bowman as given above.

"Commit thy way unto Jehovah; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass."

Brother or sister, can you not do equally as well as our soldiers? Besides the funds from those who contribute regularly, I would like to hear from at least twenty-five new names. Will you be one? Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas.

The annual meeting of the directors of the Tennessee Orphans' Home will be held at Columbia on Thursday, October 31. Visitors are welcome.

We are glad to learn that A. J. Veteto, one of the sweet singers in Israel, contemplates moving to Nashville. He will teach a singing class for the Charlotte Avenue Church at an early date.

J. H. McBroom wishes two or three young ladies to board with his wife at the Normal School in Murfreesboro, Tenn. He is away from home in meetings much of the time, and such an arrangement will be mutually helpful.

G. E. Claus writes: "Kindly say through your paper that I am now located at Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Ala., as Religious Secretary. I would be glad to have the names and addresses of any men to whom I can be of any assistance."

From M. S. Mason, Rogersville, Mo., October 25: "I came in three weeks ago because of influenza and probably will not resume work till November 1. I shall resume at Flint Hill, in Dade County, where I closed, and will go to Sedalia from there."

Hold, enough! The influenza epidemic has abated in Nashville. We have all the funds necessary for paying the expenses of the Russell Street Church hospital. God bless the donors, to each of whom we have written a letter of acknowledgment.

Brother Kurfees has suffered a renewal of the attack he had two years ago and is now taking treatment at Norton Infirmary, in Louisville, Ky. We are glad to report that he is convalescent at this writing. Correspondents will please exercise patience pending his recovery and pray for the Lord's blessing.

From J. J. Vanhoutin, Paris, Ill., October 22: "I greatly appreciate the Gospel Advocate. As all of my articles have appeared in good time, I inclose another. The influenza is quite severe here in this city of near eight thousand. All public places for assemblies are closed for the present, except graveyards and pool rooms!"

"Death loves a shining mark." Among those who fell victims to the dreadful influenza were W. L. Hicks, a member of the Russell Street congregation, and W. W. Montgomery, a member of the Belmont Avenue congregation. Both were comparatively young men and will be sorely missed. The Gospel Advocate extends sympathy to the bereaved.

From Joseph A. Shires, Denver, Col., 212 Twenty-fourth Street, October 19: "I should like to announce to many friends and relatives who are readers of the Gospel Advocate that my wife, Mary, was caught by the terrible epidemic, influenza, that is sweeping the country, and very recently passed away. By the grace of God, we have faith and hope." Let us pray for our bereaved brother.

Willis G. Jernigan writes: "Just a word of explanation as to my whereabouts to those who may be concerned. I was inducted into the United States Army on September 6, this year. Nevertheless, my efforts to spread the gospel have not stopped. I am asking the brethren to pray for me. My address is: Willis G. Jernigan, 7th Company, 2nd (Dev.) Battalion, 165th Depot Brigade, Camp Travis, San Antonio, Texas."

P. L. Copeland writes from Camp Wadsworth, S. C., October 27: "In view of the fact that many Tennessee boys are coming to this camp at this time, I would be glad to have the address of any boy who is a member of the church of Christ or any other one interested. I have not been able to find any brethren here yet. My address is: Private P. L. Copeland, Medical Detachment, Base Hospital, Barracks 62, Camp Wadsworth, S. C."

Our beloved brother, J. D. Floyd, writes feelingly of a fiftieth anniversary recently celebrated: "The church of Christ at Flat Creek, Tenn., was formed in the house of worship just completed on the third Lord's day in October, 1868. In the absence of Dr. T. W. Brents, who was expected to be present and preach, Joseph Ramsey conducted the services. On the third Lord's day in October, 1893, it being the twenty-fifth anniversary of the church, I preached a historical discourse, which was published in the Gospel Advocate of November 9, 1893. In that I gave an account of the causes that led a few brethren to determine to build a house and also an account of its construction. I also gave a history of the twenty-five years' work of the church. Among other things, I stated that on every Lord's day in the twenty-five years brethren had assembled in the house and partaken of the Lord's Supper. I concluded the discourse with these words: 'I wish to say that while I and the eight remaining founders will have passed away, I trust some of these younger brethren can stand where I stand to-day, at the end of the next quarter of a century, and say that for fifty years not a Lord's day has passed but what the children of God have met here to keep the ordinances of the Lord.' Instead of its being some of the younger brethren, it was my very great privilege to stand in the same place on the fiftieth anniversary (the third Lord's day in October, 1918) and preach to the church, and also to say that not a single Lord's day in a half century had passed but what brethren had partaken of the Lord's Supper in the house. By the way, is not this a remarkable record for a village and country church? Of the nine founders who were living in 1893, six are still living, but, of course, are near the border line. Myself and five sisters make the number. Two of these sisters, Bettie Evans and Mary Floyd, were present. As I stood in the pulpit and mingled among the brethren and sisters who are endeared to me by so many ties, my heart was stirred with mingled emotions of joy and sorrow: joy to see the constancy and devotion of the new generation that has come on and to hear again the sweet singing as of old; sadness to see so many vacant seats that once were filled by dear ones whose life work is ended. My heart goes up in gratitude to the Heavenly Father for having given me health and strength for this visit to my home church."

Calomel salivates! It is mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a slug-gish liver. When calomel comes into gish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile, it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel bilious, headachy, constipated, and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents, which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. spoonful, and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel to-day, you will be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you; while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. It is harmless, pleasant, and safe to give to children; they like it.

Substitute, Proxy.

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

Many years ago it was very common to see a substitute serving in the United States Army. But the government of Jesus has no substitutes, neither is the Almighty worshiped by proxy. Jesus never drafts soldiers for his kingdom, neither does he permit any one to serve in the place of his volunteer soldiers. Some churches recruit their ranks by drafting babies and mustering them in by baptism, without any faith, without any confession, without any repentance, without any prayer, and without any knowledge or any desire to join that church. If that washes away original sin (if it had any) and saves that baby which weighs eighteen pounds. that is surely "water salvation;" and if it works so well on the baby, why not try the same upon an infidel who weighs two hundred pounds, seeing he has neither faith, confession, repentance, prayer, knowledge of the gospel, nor any desire to join that church? If it is good for the baby, it would surely be good for the infidel; and if substitutes are acceptable, why not hire some one to take the place of both, as neither one has any desire to be baptized? And if it is desired to worship the Lord by proxy (if it is acceptable), it can be very easily done. Just get a machine with song and prayer records, set the thing to grinding, and sit back, look on, and smile. But hold a moment! Which will be saved, the proxy machine or the man who bought it? And how about hiring singers who are not members of the church to do the singing? That is proxy work, and hired persons get their reward here; so the Lord will neither reward them hereafter nor accept their praise. And as the persons who should have done the singing in the worship failed to do their part of the worship and hired it done, which one will the Lord save, the one that hired his part of the worship done or the hired hand? I have known of very radical preachers who at their own meetings have called upon unimmersed persons to lead in prayer, but they would not have used a talking machine! I am inclined to the "opinion" that they might as well use an organ to lead the singing, as neither one are members of the church! Once I was very much abused by a vicious, ungodly member because I did not invite an unimmersed, unconverted sinner to "introduce" the meeting. I told him that the meeting was not a stranger and did not need an introduction, and that his man was welcome to the first seat in the house, and that when he obeyed the gospel, then he could pray publicly if he desired to do so; that I did not uphold abominations. Then I quoted: "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination. (Prov. 28: 9.) In the sacred communion a substitute for the fruit of the vine was often used in places; but since so much pure grape juice is kept on the market, it is easier to secure it now than to get a substitute. In over fifty years' time I have seen where they used such substitutes for the fruit of the vine as blackberry cordial, cherry juice, wine-plant wine, raspberry juice, alder-berry wine, currant wine, vinegar whisky and water, whisky and water colored with logwood. I am free to admit that the above substitutes do not look very commendable in print. I have seen where they used light bread, cake, and once where they used oyster crackers for the loaf, and old Brother Thomas Goodman many years ago told me of a place where they used corn bread to represent the body of our Lord. I am glad that our people have about done away with substitutes for the Lord's Supper, and also oppose all worship by proxy.

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink Lots of Water and Stop Eating Meat for a While if Your Bladder Troubles You.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region, it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid, which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood, and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you must relieve them —like you relieve your bowels—removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds. and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure, and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink, Persecution.

BY TICE ELKINS.

The apostle Paul said, "He that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit," referring to wicked Cain and his ungodly persecution of his brother, Abel. But because that happened far away in the dim past, has the habit died out? O my soul, no! On every hand you can hear the groans and see the bitter tears of some one who is persecuted, and in every case it is the same-the one born after the flesh (Cain) tormenting the one born after the Spirit (Abel). No reference is here made to things outside the kingdom of Christ, but to the way church members treat each other. You will note that I did not say "the way Christians treat each other," but "church members." Nominally one may be a member of a local congregation and not be a Christian, not born of the Spirit. But why do church members persecute each other? Sometimes it is one thing and sometimes another. But envy is the greatest cause.

And this is not confined to the "small fry," either; but preachers get it, and it breaks out and causes them to go out of their heads and sav evil of each other and lie on each other. I have seen the jealous preacher try to dig up something on another in order to drive him out of the field, and, failing in that, even quit speaking to him, although he could not establish one thing against the other. That same preacher would tell you he was "born of the Spirit" if you asked him-yea, that he was a child of God. "He that leveth is born of God," said John; while Paul said, "Love envieth not." How can you make men believe you love God, whom you have not seen, while you hate your brother whom you have seen? I well remember several years ago that I had to wade through a fire of persecution while two brethren tried to ruin me. They claimed that the cause of Christ was at stake, as I was an impostor, and that they were duty bound to protect it against me and my like. Failing to drive me from the church and country, they both "joined" the digressive church and rendered themselves harmless.

I know good, sound, and loyal preachers, who were not strong enough to stand the fire, who have been driven out and are gone. Sleepless nights and sorrowing days, teardimmed eyes and aching hearts, fire of ambition quenched, usefulness destroyed, and at last the soul lostthese are the legitimate fruits of envy. Sisters get jealous of each other's clothing, envy a hat, or even a feather in a hat. Brethren become jealous of each other as speakers, and you dare not say to one in the presence of another: "I liked your talk." No, no, there will be hard feelings if you brag on one of us before another. O Shame! Mantle thy face, for thou art shamed!

Where is the cure? Well, it is love -"love," the magic word that Paul had in mind when he allowed that miraculous gifts, sacrifices, and all else were not to be compared to love. Love envies not. It never brags on itself, nor is it ever puffed up. It is the panacea for every spiritual ill. and those who truly love one another are so like the divine Master that no envy ever enters their hearts and persecutions are never heard of. Again true children of God never persecute each other; and when one suffers, all suffer with him; and when he rejoices, instead of envy at his prosperity, all rejoice together. God speed the day when we will love one another with true hearts fervently, being born again of incorruptible seed.

Special Call for Belle Haven Orphans' Home.

BY JENNIE CLARKE.

Our new church house will soon be completed, and we will have a more substantial building than the one we lost by the cyclone. When the contractor completes his work, the building will not be ready for use, as painting should be done, and lights, stoves, and seats must be added. It will take several hundred dollars to meet these expenses.

Owing to the fact that the building is so much needed for worship and school purposes, we sincerely trust the brotherhood will respond at their very earliest convenience.

We have been meeting each Lord's day since the cyclone in our large dining hall, which makes the work harder. I have been conducting this Home for twenty years, and the extra work and losses sustained by the terrible cyclone has marked this year as being one of the hardest of my experience. In remembrance of these facts, we hope to be able, by the help of God's people, to meet in our pretty new church house soon, and that we may have the pleasure of having Brother Showalter to preach the first sermon for us, as he kindly offered, and later we hope to have Brother Rance, of San Antonio, who labored with us before the cyclone.

We hope to receive some liberal contributions for this purpose at an early date, as we desire to see our way clear so we can order our seats at once, as it will take several weeks for them to be delivered.

The Best Cough Syrup Is Home-made

Here's an easy way to save $2, and yet have the best cough remedy you ever tried.

You've probably heard of this well-known plan of making cough syrup at home. But have you ever used it? When you do, you will understand why thousands of families, the world over, feel that they could hardly keep house without it. It's simple and cheap, but the way it takes hold of a cough will quickly earn it a permanent place in your home. Into a pint bottle, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to fill up the pint. Or, if desired, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, never spoils, and gives you a full pint of better cough remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times its cost.

It is really wonderful how quickly this home-made remedy conquers a cough—

It is really wonderful how quickly this home-made remedy cooquers a cough—usually in 24 hours or less. It seems to penetrate through every air passage, losens a dry, hoarse or tight cough, lifts the phlegm, heals the membranes, and gives almost immediate relief. SPANISH INFLUENZA

What It Is and How It Should Be Treated

This disease, authorities now agree, is simply the old-fashioned Grip that was epidemic in 1889-90. Then it came from Russia by way of France and was given the French name La Grippe. This time it comes by way of Spain.

Spanish influenza, which appeared in Spain in May, has swept over the world in numerous epidemics as far back as history runs. Hippocrates refers to an epidemic in 412 B.C., which is regarded by many to have been influenza. Every century has had its attacks. Beginning with 1831, this country has had five epidemics, the last in 1889-1890.

THE SYMPTOMS.

Grip, or "infuenza," as it is now called, usually begins with a chill, followed by aching, feverishness, and sometimes nausea and dizziness, and a general feeling of weakness and depression. The temperature is from 100 to 104, and the fever usually lasts from three to five days. The germs attack the mucous membrane, or lining of the air passages—nose, throat, and bronchial tubes; there is usually a hard cough, especially bad at night; oftentimes a sore throat or tonsillitis; and frequently all the appearances of a severe head cold.

THE TREATMENT.

Go to bed at the first symptoms, take a purgative, eat plenty of nourishing food, remain perfectly quiet, and don't worry. Nature herself is the only "cure" for influenza, and will throw off the attack if only you conserve your strength. A little quinine, aspirin, or Dover's powders may be given by the physician's directions to allay the aching. Always call a doctor, since the chief danger of grip is in its weakening effect on the system, which allows complications to develop. These are chiefly pneumonia and bronchitis, sometimes inflammation of the middle ear, or heart affections. For these reasons it is very important that the patient remain in bed until his strength returns-stay in bed at least two days or more after the fever has left you; or if you are over fifty or not strong, stay in bed four days or more, according to the severity of the attack.

EXTERNAL APPLICATIONS.

In order to stimulate the lining of the air passages to throw off the grip germs, to aid in loosening the phlegm and keeping the air passages open, thus making the breathing easier, Vick's VapoRub will be found effective. Hot, wet towels should be applied over the throat, chest, and back between the shoulder blades to open the pores Then VapoRub should be rubbed in over the parts until the skin is red, spread on thickly, and covered with two thicknesses of hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck, as the heat of the body liberates the ingredients in the form of vapors. These vapors, inhaled with each breath, carry the medication directly to the parts affected. At the same time, VapoRub is absorbed through and stimuiates the skin, attracting the blood to the surface, and thus aids in relieving the congestion within.

NO OCCASION FOR PANIC.

There is no occasion for panic; influenza, or grip, has a very low percentage of fatalities—not over one death out of every four hundred cases, according to the North Carolina Board of Health. The chief danger lies in complications arising, attacking principally patients in a rundown condition—those who don't go to bed soon anough or those who get up too early.

HOW TO AVOID THE DISEASE.

Evidence seems to prove that this is a germ disease, spread principally by human contact, chiefly through coughing, sneezing, or spitting. So avoid persons having colds, which means avoiding crowds, common drinking cups, roller towels, etc.; keep up your bodily strength by pienty of exercise in the open air and good food.

KEEP FREE FROM COLDS.

Above all, avoid colds, as colds irritate the lining of the air passages and render them much better breeding places for the germs.

Use Vick's VapoRub at the very first sign of a cold. For a head cold, melt a little VapoRub in a spoon and tuhale the vapors, or, better still, use VapoRub in a benzoin steam kettle. If this is not available, use an ordinary teakettle. Fill half full of boiling water, put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time, keep the kettle just slowly boiling, and inhale the steam arising.

Note.-Vick's VapoRub is the discovery of a North Carolina druggist, who found how to combine, in salve form, menthol and camphor with such volatile oils as eucalyptus, thyme, cubebs, etc., so that when the salve is applied to the body heat, these ingredients are liberated in the form of vapors. VapoRub can be had in three sizes at all druggists'. While comparatively new in certain parts of the North, it is the standard home remedy in the South and West for all forms of cold troubles. Over six million jars were sold last year. VapoRub is particularly recommended for children's croup or colds, as it is externally applied and can, therefore, be used freely and often without the slightest harmful effects.

Atmore, October 23.-Brother Samuel Jordan, of Highland Home, came to Atmore, accompanied by his wife, Sister Jordan, on Saturday, September 28, and began a series of sermons on Sunday, which continued till Thursday night of the same week. He was compelled to close the meeting to carry Sister Jordan home. Sister Jordan was in bed with fever the entire week. This, with the influenza fright, the Liberty-Loan campaign, and other things, kept the meeting from accom-plishing what it would have accomplished under more favorable condi-tions. However, those who attended drank deep at the fountain of knowledge and wisdom accumulated through the long years of Brother Jordan's faithful study and meditation. One brother remarked on the last day of the meeting: "Brother Jordan, I think I should be content to die if I had as much to my credit as you have." This brother had in mind the many years of service Brother Jordan gave to Highland Home College in the different capacities of teacher, president, and trustee from the time he, Brother J. M. Barnes, and Colonel Kirkpatrick founded it, about a half century ago, till it was deeded to the State and became Crenshaw County High School, two years ago. By the By the way, friends of the college, which did a great deal of good every day for its existence, regret that it could not continue. Dugger, October 22.—In my last report in the Gospel Advocate it was stated that there were sixteen additions in the meeting at Purdon, Mo., with two reclaimed. It should have read, "ten additions, with two re-claimed." Our meeting at Browning closed on the fourth night on account of influenza. Most likely we will resume the meeting again in December. These two congregations, Browning and Purdon, are most excellent congregations to work with in every respect. I learned of several other congregations in the same section of country, and, so far as I was able to find out, all are without preachers. This is a splendid field for some good preacher.-E. P. Comanche, October 21.-On account of the epidemic of influenza, I had to close my work in Missouri and Arkansas, with two months ahead. For this reason I returned to my home, where I am now engaged in fighting an attack of influenza. I hope to soon recover. In the meantime I desire to say that I have no present work arranged, so that if any one needs my services for meetings, debates, lec-tures, or Bible schools for the fall and winter months, I will be glad to arrange for them. I will be pleased to answer calls anywhere in the Mississippi Valley or elsewhere, but for the present Oklahoma and Texas pre-ferred. Preachers can preach as well and people will listen as well to the gospel in winter as summer. While the crowds may not be so large, the results are often even better, especially to keep the churches alive and at work. Always address me at Comanche, Okla.—U. G. Wilkinson, Muskogee, October 25 .- I closed my summer's work on October 1 and came home; was sick ten days with the "flu," but am up and at work at this writing. I have had a good year's work, more than I could do. I certainly appreciate the assistance that has been given me this year, both spiritually and financially. Brethren and friends will please note that I have changed my address from Council Hill to Lock Box 510, Muskogee. I believe we young preachers ought to give way to the older preaching brethren and let them have what work there is to do through the fall and winter; therefore I have moved to Muskogee and have accepted a position with the American Railway Express Company, and will be here until spring. I wish to say to those who have solicited my services for next year that I am now ready to arrange dates for the spring and summer. I have one normal music school and two meetings promised for Arkansas. I will be glad to arrange other work for Arkansas, Oklahoma, or Texas. Will W. Slater.

Tennessee City, October 22.-Each Lord's day this month a few of us have worshiped here in my home town. We have not had preaching, as so few were able to come. All of the work I had arranged has had to be postponed on account of the epidemic of influenza, even the proposed Western trip mentioned in my last report; so I am now ready to consider other calls for meetings or to consider work for a year or more. Other things being year or more. Other things being equal, I had rather not move farther than to some place in Tennessee or other near-by State; but if I can do more good by it, I am ready to go anywhere. Let us all do what we can and pray that the Lord's will may be done. J. H. Murrell.

Elora, October 21.—During the summer I held meetings as follows: Beginning on the second Lord's day in July and continuing over the third Lord's day, at Bean's Creek, in Coffee County, with one believing penitent baptized and one restored to fellowship; at Paint Rock Church, in Jackson County, Ala., nine days, three bap-tisms; at Hurricane Church, Gurley, Ala., nine days, seven baptized and one restored; at Bell Factory Church, eight days, six baptized and nine by membership; at Big Cave Church, eight days, two baptized and two restored; at Cedar Grove Church, Grand, Ala., closing on the fifth Lord's day in September, eleven baptized and two by membership .- J. Riumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is sub-stantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due, in whole or in part, to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

In this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there; and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. I amentirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wite has been a sufferer from rheumatism, and, after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water, was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

Satterfield.

On Saturday, October 12, 1918, a gloom was cast over the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bunch Satterfield by the death of their infant daughter, Sarah. She was only two months and ten days old. She was buried on Sunday aftold. She was buried on Sunday afternoon at Allen's Chapel burying ground, at Needmore. Funeral services were conducted by the writer. We should not weep, for Christ has said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." I would be the writer of the burney o say to the bereaved ones that there is a great divide between them and little Sarah and that she cannot come back to them, but there is a way, a God-given way, that they can go to Sarah. Christ says: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."

A. S. LANDIS.

Prevatt.

The writer was called to Alachua, Fla., on October 15, 1918, to preach the funeral of Brother Lewis Prevatt, who died of pneumonia at Mussel Shoals. Ala., where he was working for the government, having left his home at Trenton, Fla., a week before. leaves a devoted Christian Prevatt wife, a five-year-old boy, a large num-ber of relatives, and a host of brethren and sisters in Christ to mourn his death. Brother Prevatt was a con-sistent member of the church of Christ at Trenton, where he had lived for several years. He was baptized about ten years ago, near Valdosta, Ga., by Brother H. C. Shoulders. I would comfort the bereaved ones with the words of the apostle Paul, "All things work together for good to them that love God," and exhort them to press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ J. O. BARNES.

Wright.

It is with a feeling of deepest sorrow that I report the death of Sister Pearl Wright, wife of R. E. Wright, bookkeeper for the Gulf States Steel Company, of Gadsden, Ala. She died on Wednesday, October 16, of pneumonia following an attack of Spanish influenza. She leaves a husband and three children-one boy and two girls. She was a faithful Christian, and the little band of loyal disciples in Gadsden feel most keenly their loss of a valuable colaborer. I have known very few persons about whom more good things could be truthfully said. Her life was a faithful exhibition of the principles of the religion of Jesus Christ, and these words of the Master seem to have been her motto: "Even so let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven." On account of the serious illness of the husband and two children, the funeral services, which were held from the residence on Third Avenue, were necessarily very brief. The remains were laid to rest in Forest ARUNA CLARK.

Trail.

Jimmie, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Trail, was born on October 16, 1905, and died on October 13, 1918. Jimmie was with us but a short time, and the dear Lord saw fit to take her from us. She was laid to rest by the side of her baby sister that preceded her to the grave eight years ago. How sad it is to give her up! Nevertheless, His will, not ours, be Jimmie was a bright child, done. loved by all, both old and young. Her sister, Floy, is so lonely without her, for never were two sisters more de-voted to each other. She will be missed at home, at Sunday school, and her little schoolmates will miss her day by day, for she had a kind word for everybody. The whole community at Una mourns her death. Little Jimmie is at rest with Jesus and his angels. We cannot call her back, but we can go to her. Besides a host of friends and relatives, Jimmie leaves a father, mother, sister, grandparents (Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Trail), and other relatives to mourn their loss. But their loss is her gain; then grieve not for her. Fight the battle a little longer and meet her where there will be no more sad partings and no more sorrow. Funeral services were conducted by Brother L. L. Yeagley.

Reneau.

On September 23, 1918, the death angel came to the home of Elder J. W. Reneau, of Eighty-Eight, Ky., claimed for its victim his devoted wife. Sister Reneau, before her marriage, was Miss Nancy Arimathea Smith, a granddaughter of the pioneer, "Rac-coon" John Smith. She was born on May 29, 1851. She became a member of the one body on October 10, 1873. being baptized by Elder Isaac T. Re-Sister Reneau was the wife of the well-known J. W. Reneau, who for over thirty years has been proclaiming the gospel of Jesus Christ in its purity and simplicity. She was a faithful member of the church of Christ that worships at Eighty-Eight, and will be missed, for her kind and pleasant conversation always showed the spirit of Christ. It is difficult to comprehend the circumstances of life and the providence of God, but we rejoice to believe that God does all things well and that "all things work together for good to them that love the A great number of friends from far and near, as well as relatives, attended the funeral services, which were conducted by the writer at Refuge church of Christ, Eighty-Eight. Her body was laid to rest in the beautiful little cemetery there.

Grubbs.

On October 16, 1918, at the risk of being exposed to the "flu" epidemic which was raging in the community, quite a large audience of kindred and friends gathered at the Macedonia burial ground, in an open-air service, to pay their genuine, deep-felt respect to all that remained mortal of Sister Shellie Grubbs. Our sister was born on January 3, 1878, and lived to be almost forty-one, dying on October 15, 1918. She was married to Dr. William F. Grubbs on December 20, 1903. To Look around at the men and women you meet in a single day. One glance is enough to tell the ones with plenty of rich, red blood, strength and physical energy to back up their mental power and make them a success in whatever they undertake.

Dr James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.). New York and the Westchester County Hospital, says that to help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in his experience which he has found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, rundown people in two weeks time. It is conservatively estimated that Nuxated Iron is conservatively estimated that Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three milition people annually and it has been used and endorsed by such men as Hon, Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury and ex-Governor of Iowa; General John L. Clem (retired), the drummer boy of Shitoh, who was Sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson, of the Court of Cloims of Washington, and others, Nuzated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

this union were born two children, one of whom died in infancy; the other, John Brent, is a splendid Christian boy, having obeyed the gospel about twelve days before his mother's death. Sister Grubbs leaves, besides husband and son, five sisters and four brothers, to which is added a great host of kindred and friends, to follow after her. This good woman obeyed the gospel twenty-three years ago at Providence, near Hazel, Ky. She enjoyed as wide a circle of friends in the church and out as any one might covet. Her going will mean a great loss to church, family, and community. Those who knew her have no doubts as to her sincere Christian life, and can only feel that a failure upon their part to live the Christian life is the from her in eternity.

Keeping Up the Work.

BY JOHN T. RAMSEY.

Since the influenza and smallpox are raging over our city, our schools and churches and most of our public places have been closed, but, thank the Lord, I have had the pleasure of meeting small crowds each day as well as Sunday. On Sunday I preach from four to six times to small crowds, and much good is being done in that way. I teach daily from house to house. We will go back to the meeting as soon as we can possibly get back. Brethren, let us keep busy and be faithful in all things. I will go from here (Beaumont) to my home, Dallas, the Lord willing, and back to Dixie for a while. I hope to do more for the cause of the Master as the days go by! It is my aim to be what God would have me be, always working for his cause, keeping up the work as the needs may be.

A HOME CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rhenmatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this maryelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address, and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar; but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Red Boiling Springs, October 20 .-I have been busy almost all the summer and fall, singing and preaching. I have been in two meetings with Brother J. H. McBroom, a very able preacher. He has been at Tompkinsville, Ky., for two years. The brethren there say he is a splendid organizer and worker. I am sure any congregation would do well to secure I was in a short meeting at Tompkinsville, Ky., with Brother B. C. Dallas, October 23.-I arrived home last Saturday afternoon and found the sick in my home better, I am glad to say. A young lady Mrs. Estes is boarding had the influenza, and I rushed home to help wife, and, of course, was somewhat afraid she and little niece might take it. Brother Starnes, of the Oak Cliff congregation, and some of his children have it. He was not able to be out to the open-air meeting last Lord's day and one of the elders asked me to speak in his stead. I made a short talk and we had a right nice little service, with about fifty-five or sixty members present. They had such a service at Pearl and Bryan Streets also. Authorities have asked that we have no services in the house. I am at home now to arrange work for the winter and spring. Write me at 401 Montreal Avenue.—J. C. Estes.

Tom Bean, October 24 .- On Thursday, September 12, I started to Missouri to assist in some revival work. At Hickory I stopped over one night to visit my uncles, whom I had not seen for ten years, and preached that night to a very fair audience. They seemed to appreciate my effort and insisted that I return at the earliest convenience to assist them in a protracted meeting. Next morning the ticket agent came to the office about ten minutes before train time to sell tickets. There must have been more calls for tickets and longer ones than common, and, as he must sell all the tickets called for and check all the baggage, he became very much worried and vexed at his inability to do all things at once. It made me think of the way some of us do when engaging in protracted-meeting work. We wait till the last minute and then worry ourselves down trying to sweep the house, arrange the lights, secure song books, all in just a few minutes, when it should have been done weeks be-When will we learn to take time by the forelock and do things on time? Arriving at Richland, I was met by Brother Roscoe Simpson and taken to Brother W. J. Traw's, where I was to make my home during our meeting. This meeting was held at Glover Chapel, about fifteen miles from town. No one ever needs a better home than at Brother Traw's. This church has some excellent Christian workers, but, with all the work we all could do, not one was baptized during the whole meeting. However, I believe the meeting was a success, as the seeds of divine truth were sown that must bear fruit after a while. My next meeting was with the Free-This was my dom Church. meeting with them, and all seemed so glad to have me back with them that it made me rejoice much. My meeting with these brethren continued till October 10 and resulted in six baptisms and two restorations. meeting closed prematurely on account of the influenza epidemic in Missouri and at home. The interest was becoming more intense time, and could we have continued I feel sure many more would have accepted Christ. The Freedom Church is blessed in having one of the very best song leaders, Brother Jim Foster; and he is not only a good song leader, but a good preacher. I left them with the promise that I would visit them again sometime. Arriving at home, I found wife in bed with a severe attack of indigestion. As the church at home has asked me to labor with them another year, my address will remain Tom Bean, Texas.—W. P. Skaggs.

Baptists vs. Campbellites. No. 1. BY M. S. MASON.

The succeeding series of articles will be a review of a little pamphlet with the above title, written by J. M. Bandy, a Baptist debater of some note. More in detail the title is expressed thus: "Twelve Reasons Why Baptist Churches Are the Churches of Christ; Also Twelve Reasons Why Campbellite Churches Are Not the Churches of Christ."

In the Introduction, on page 2, by Elder C. D. Bittick, we find a reference to the Catholic dogma of church salvation. I wonder why Elder Bittick did not go farther back and accuse Paul of preaching that dogma? We read in Acts 20: 28 that the church was purchased with Christ's blood. Inasmuch as we cannot be saved without the blood of Christ, and the blood bought the church, we must be a member of the church to be bought by it. In Eph. 5: 25 we read that Christ became the Savior of the body. Inasmuch as the body is the church, and he saves the body, we must be a member of that body, or church, to be saved. In Eph. 2: 6 we read that we are reconciled in one body, or church. We cannot be saved without being reconciled. We are reconciled in the church. Therefore we are saved in the

Also, on the same page, he states the Baptist doctrine of church succession. Just some questions about this succession. If Baptist churches have come down in an unbroken line from the days of the New Testament, why are they not in this age like they were then? Again, what is the necessity of a proof of succession if they cannot show identity? But if they cannot show identity, what is the succession worth? If there were Baptist churches from the days of the New Testament, why cannot we read of at least one in the New Testament record? If Baptist succession is a real fact, why does Dr. Armitage eschew it? Why does Dr. Vedder say we have no solid Baptist ground till the seventeenth century? Why does Mr. Benedict say: "The first regularly organized Baptist Church began in 1607, in London, England?"

On page 3 Elder Bittick says a denomination founded by Alexander Campbell in 1827, known as "the Christian Church," will have its claims examined. Of course, we know who Elder Bittick means. And he is asked to tell us a single thing we preach or practice that originated with A. Campbell or any other human, and also a single thing we preach or practice that we do not find authorized in the New Testament or was not preached and practiced seventeen hundred and fiftyfive years before A. Campbell was ever born.

Also, the church we belong to was never scripturally called "the Christian Church." There is no more about a "Christian Church" in the Bible than there is a Baptist Church. Paul called it "the church of Christ" (Rom. 16: 6), and that is the name we own and wear.

Further, on page 3, Elder Bittick says: "Cheap literature is in demand." That, I suppose, is the reason why this little pamphlet has been circulated enough to demand a reply.

On page 4 Mr. Bandy says he begins his task with "serious apprehension." The task he has assumed is certainly enough to cause any one serious apprehension.

Further, on this page, Mr. Bandy says: "It amounts to something to be a member of the church of Jesus Christ, else why should Jesus organize it and declare with authority and power that upon a rock he should build it and the gates of hell should not prevail against it?" Amen. But though that is true about the church of Christ, it would exclude the Baptist Church from being the church of Christ: for the Baptists do not claim that the Baptist Church amounts to anything. According to Baptists themselves, there is not a spiritual blessing you cannot get outside of the Baptist Church. If the Baptist Church is no account, according to their own teaching, and according to Mr. Bandy the church of Christ is so noble, why not ouit the Baptist Church and come in with us and be a member of the church of Jesus Christ?

On page 5 Mr. Bandy says: "A large per cent of Baptists would not know the church of Christ if they should meet it in the road." I do not blame them. By the principle of apperception we identify things we have already seen. Why should a Baptist recognize the church of Christ, when he has been brought up and nurtured in another institution not in any way akin to the church we read about in the New Testament?

Further, on page 5, Mr. Bandy presents his definition of "church," saying in substance that it means the "local congregation." Before I reason some to show Mr. Bandy's error on this point, I want to quote from "Pendleton's Manual," a standard Baptist publication. In the opening lines of chapter 1 of his manual Mr. Pendleton has this to say regarding the church: "In its application to the followers of Christ it refers either to a particular congregation of saints or to the redeemed in the aggregate. It is employed in the latter sense in Eph. 1: 22; 3; 21; 5: 25-27." That is sufficient. The word "church" is used in two senses in the New Testamentthat shown by Mr. Pendleton, the redeemed in the aggregate, and as shown by Mr. Bandy, the local congregation. Mr. Bandy confines it to the local congregation and is thus in error.

According to that, there could not be just one body. (Eph. 4: 4.) There must be several. Christ would be an adulterer, for there would be several brides, not one. There is no place for the expression, "the church," as there is more than one.

Feeding the Children During War Times.

"A well-balanced ration for a child should contain at least one food every day from each of the following groups," states the Food Administration. They are essential to health.

An Inviting Prospect at Senatobia, Miss.

I wish to call attention to a very inviting mission field at Senatobia, Miss. In the spirit of self-sacrifice a little band has paid twelve hundred and fifty dollars for a suitable lot and has a little money on hand for building a house of worship, but not enough to complete it. If those who are really anxious to extend the Master's kingdom would assist these brethren to the extent of one thousand dollars, they could start to build at an early date. It is indeed fortunate for the cause that Brother J. P. Lowrey, a wideawake preacher of the gospel, is located with them. He has recently been made principal of a consolidated school in his county. In a private letter he tells me that it was necessary to teach or to abandon the field. I have made some trips to Mississippi, and the impression gained was that we have no more promising State in which to spend the Lord's money. Brother Lowrey has labored for four years, giving the very best that was in him, enduring hardships, persecutions, and all manner of opposition, with very little encouragement from Christians out of the State. A man of this type deserves our unqualified support. Perhaps one reason why we have not helped him and those laboring with him at Senatobia is because we have not been brought face to face with their needs. I am writing this brief statement that all may understand the situation and may rally to the support of this work. A good start has been made, and with the proper effort we can build the house in a short time. The readers of the Gospel Advocate are, to my mind, the most liberal and warm-hearted people in the world. Heretofore I have made no appeal that did not meet with an appreciable response. Let there be no exception in Senatobia, Miss. The census shows it is one of the most promising cities on the map, commercially speaking. Let us make the church of Christ the most attractive asset in the town. If it is desired, I will receive and forward the contributions; or, if you prefer, send them to Brother Lowrey.

Jacob's Ladder and Ours.

The story of Jacob's life extends through twenty-six chapters in the book of Genesis. His life has six periods. The first is at Beersheba, in his father's home, where he is his mother's favorite, and a poor creature at best, tricky and mean. The second is at Bethel, where he is alone on the hillside; it is only one night in duration, yet it is a turning point in his career, for there he learns to know the nearness of God and the comfort of his protecting care. The third is at Paddan-aram, where the trickster is himself tricked, where through not unclouded prosperity he becomes more of a man. The fourth period is at the brook Jabbok, where he learns to give up all compromise, to choose between self-trust and trust in God, and becomes "a prince with God." The fifth period is spent in Canaan, and the sixth and last in Egypt. It seems to me that the two most important spots in Jacob's journey of life were Bethel and Peniel.

We may learn some fine lessons from a thoughtful consideration of Jacob's ladder. The base of the ladder was upon the earth. There is a way in which we are concerned with earthly things. Our bodies must be cared for We must eat, work, do business. That is a false idea that would separate religious experience from the earth and hide it from earthly care. God's saints are found in the marts of business, amid the hum of machinery, in the activities of life, and not in hermits' huts or within convent walls. At the same time, this earthly life is a failure unless it is permeated with the spirit and principles of heaven.

But the top of Jacob's ladder reached to heaven. Every step in a Christian's life should be a step toward heaven and God. Beecher asks: "Shall your ladder, standing on the earth, reach to heaven, or is your ladder in its full length flat upon the ground? I mean your plans in life. Do they really go up and consciously take hold of the future and the spiritual?" Jacob's ladder was a ladder all the way. The rising is step by step. No one gets the victory once for all over his sins and faults. No one rises to sainthood at a bound. We must climb step by step.

We Must Also Come to Peniel.

The story of how Jacob won Esau reminds us of the adage, both trite and true, that "nothing is ever settled until it is settled right." A wrong may be set aside, but it is bound to reappear at the most inopportune moment. Jacob was returning with his sin still on his soul. God was directing him to the scenes of transgression as the place of settlement. At Mahanaim there was given renewed encouragement and assurance, but at Peniel he was brought face to face with the unsettled issue of his life. The unconfessed and unforgiven sin confronted him with startling clearness and insistent demand. The determining moment of his life had come, and he emerged from its experiences a changed man. The whole sad story was out at last. In this experience Jacob touched the true center of prayer for the first time, so far as the record reveals. His prolonged and agonizing struggle was with himself, rather than with his angel antagonist. The conquest was not over a divine, but a human, unwillingness. Himself conquered, his brother was won. Self-conquest is the prelude to outward victory. Peniel lies somewhere along the path of every victorious Christian life.

Hastening the End of the War.

When often told that we must do this or that to end the war, it reminds us that men are usually forgetful of the divine purpose. Whatever we may attempt to do, one thing is certain; we cannot thwart the working out of His will. God's plans embrace both ends and agencies. Jacob's life the designed end would have been attained without the unworthy methods adopted by the chief actors. Jacob was a destined man, and had prophetic knowledge of his appointed destiny. His wrong was in taking it prematurely into his own hands, thus forestalling the divine purpose. God's ways are always best. The appointed hour on the dial of eternal purposes is always the best. "When the fullness of time" is come, God will do all he promises. Earlier would be premature; later would be delay. Faith abides God's time and awaits his workings. Confusion and destruction always follow attempts to hasten divine purposes. God has a path to every purpose, and righteousness never needs subterfuges. Let Christians do their full duty and serve God faithfully, and he will take care of the end of the war.

"God's plans like lilies pure and white unfold. We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart; Time will reveal the calyxes of gold."

Destruction and Reconstruction.

The costly civilizations built by man are being demolished. There is a crash of human institutions, laws, customs, and social orders. Reconstruction following the world war will be false and temporary, if founded upon the material expediencies and the mere human cohesions of the past.

The law of Jesus Christ must be the foundation. His precepts must bind the superstructure; otherwise, the reconstructed world will fall again in desolation. A preparation of spirit now is essential that there may be such assured reconstruction when the war shall end; and that, as we build anew our institutions, they may be built to Jesus Christ, appointed by God the Father Almighty to the rulership of the world.

No nation ever fell while it was right with God. This is the day for choosing by the nations: to get right with God and live, or to stumble on through more centuries of failure.—From Declaration of Principles, National Reform Association.

Every new sympathy, according to its fullness, makes us richer by more or less of a neighbor's life.—Phillips Brooks.

Considering the Things That Should Make for Peace.

BY LEE JACKSON,

Is it true that human nature is such that some men naturally love factionalism? Factionalism is classed as being among the works of the flesh. (Gal. 5: 20.) In Eph. 2: 3, Paul tells us that by nature men are children of wrath. The meaning is that we make ourselves children of wrath by following the natural inclinations of the flesh and doing the things which are contrary to the will of God. It frequently happens that men are conscientious in following their natural inclinations, for they act under the delusion that these fleshly promptings are divine impressions. It is said that a man can tell a falsehood until he comes to believe it to be the truth, and it may be that we sometimes mistake our own willfulness for conscientiousness.

The motto adopted by the originators of our plea for scriptural unity was: "In essentials, unity; in nonessentials, liberty; in all things, charity." We are not now in the habit of quoting this motto very often. We still demand unity; but some of us are not only demanding unity in essentials, but in nonessentials also; and in some quarters this unity in nonessentials is demanded upon condition that others yield all of their personal ideas to our own especial way of thinking along the line of untaught questions. In this growing disposition to take away from others the right to think for themselves on nonessential matters, we have, in a large measure, forgotten our plea for charity altogether. Apparently it is our younger generation of preachers and the congregations brought into existence under their preaching that are most addicted to the disposition to fence themselves in by adopting unrevealed standards of fellowship. Some years ago, as I was getting ready to baptize some persons upon a confession of their faith, a brother came to me and asked me to specifically state in my baptismal formula that the persons were being baptized "for the remission of their sins." Upon being asked to state his reason for wanting this done, he replied that it was the only scriptural way to administer baptism, and that it was scripturally necessary in order that the persons baptized might understand what they were being baptized for. I did not see proper to use the formula as suggested by this brother, and, for some reason, I was never again called upon to hold services in the meetinghouse of that congregation. I afterwards learned that the elders of the congregation decided against my teaching on the qualifications for baptism, and that some who had come in under my preaching were afterwards rebaptized. I have simply called attention to this incident for the purpose of stating some objections to the formula which I was requested to use.

Since the above-mentioned occurrence I have given attention to this formula as used by some preachers among us. Just how extensively it has been adopted, I do not know. The following is the usual form of this baptismal ceremony: "For the remission of your sins, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." In some instances the wording of this is somewhat changed, but the clause, "for the remission of your sins," is invariably used. As I have always considered the formula used in baptizing believers as a matter of non-essential importance, provided that the baptizing is done in the name of the Christ, I am not disposed to raise contentious objections to the one which I have just stated.

All I ask is that those who use it refrain from making it a test of loyalty. My own conscientious objections to the use of this formula can be briefly stated, but these objections need not apply to those who can conscientiously use it. My first objection is that the wording of this formula is unscriptural. What I mean by this is that the New Testament Scriptures do not authorize the use of this formula, either by precept or example. In giving the commission, as recorded by Matthew, Jesus said: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." This is according to the Revised Version. The reading of the King James Version is, "baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," but the accepted meaning is "into," this preposition implying that in the act of baptism penitent believers are brought into relationship to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. This is all indicated by virtue of the fact that we are baptized into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. This baptism is in the name, or by the authority, of Christ. As one of our older preachers and writers expressed it: "The immersion of the believing and repentant sinner in the name or upon the authority of Jesus Christ, and 'into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit,' equally with faith in God and in Christ, and repentance, is an element of the organic law of the kingdom of heaven, and as such necessary to the enjoyment of the blessings of that kingdom." The meaning of this old preacher is clear, and it is to the effect that penitent believers are baptized into the kingdom, and that in the kingdom they enjoy all the blessings procured for them by the blood of Christ. The blessing of first importance in this kingdom is that of remission of sins; but to add "for the remission of your sins" to any formula used in baptizing a believing sinner has nothing whatever to do with securing to him this promised blessing. The words of the recorded commission most certainly furnish us with an authorized scriptural wording for a baptismal formula, and this is done in the name of Christ. To add anything to this is going beyond what the Scriptures require.

Another objection to the addition of the clause, "for the remission of your sins," to the baptismal formula is that it directs the attention of the person baptized to the act of baptism rather than to Christ as the meritorious cause of the remission of sins; and this same wrong impression is very likely to be made upon the minds of untaught persons who witness the baptism. Those who use the formula mentioned may make the contention that all intelligent people, who have their Bibles to read, ought to know what is meant by "baptism for remission;" but the truth is that the vast majority of the ordinary people do not understand what is meant by it. They misunderstand the meaning of it. For instance, some well-educated people say that "baptism for the remission of sins" means that in the act of baptism there is an "impartation of regenerating grace," as one writer has expressed himself. This means baptismal regeneration, as taught by Catholics and Episcopalians. Again, there are some who are not so well educated who say that the Mormons teach "baptism for the remission of sins" in the same sense that Peter taught it on the day of Pentecost. This is a very gross misconception. No man who is well informed in the Scriptures wants to be understood as teaching baptism for remission in the sense that the Mormons teach it, for they hold baptism for remission as an item of faith in a system of doctrine inculcated by the authority of Joseph Smith, while Peter's teaching on Pentecost embraced the promise of remission to those who were baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. As there can be no danger of making any such wrong impressions by using the wording authorized in the commission, we make no mistake by adopting this as our formula. The ideas conveyed by the terms used in the commission cannot harmfully mislead the understanding, even though their full purport be not understood. Any reasoning based upon any conception of being baptized into relationship to the name of the Father, Son, and the Holy Spirit will aid toward obtaining a better understanding of the true ground of remission of sins. In this form of expression the Holy Spirit directs the mind away from the idea of merit being either in the water or in the sinner's own powers of comprehension.

A Month In Colorado.

BY L. S. WHITE.

It was my pleasure recently to spend a month in a meeting in Denver, the capital of Colorado. This is a beautiful city of two hundred and seventy thousand inhabitants, and is a fine business center. The altitude is one mile above sea level. The great Rocky Mountains are just west of the city. They have some peaks near Denver over fourteen thousand feet high. Snow remains on these peaks most of the time. The city is supplied with water from the mountains. The entire country seems to be in a high state of cultivation and very prosperous.

Denver is one of the finest health resorts in America. Many great hospitals have been built there. Tens of thousands of sick people go there, get well, or seemingly so, and stay. This keeps an influx of people and money all the time. Thousands of tourists go there every summer either for health or pleasure, and this makes it more important as a religious center.

This leads me to speak of religious conditions. About eight years ago Brother John D. Evans, a faithful preacher in Tennessee, went to Denver in search of health. He was distressed because he found no congregation of the church of Christ in that great city, and at once set about to establish one. He advertised in the papers and succeeded in finding about as many as Christ selected for apostles who were willing to follow the simplicity of the word of the Lord. They began at once to assemble regularly for worship and to study the word of the Lord. Brother Evans has been their leader ever since, and to his untiring efforts more than any one else is due the success of the work. He still preaches there; but his health is not very good, and he only preaches once a week. I have never met a more consecrated man or one truer to the word of the Lord. He is also a very practical man and has fine ideas both of business and church work. He is connected with a large furniture store, and makes his living by working in this store.

The church had prepared for the meeting-in fact, had been arranging for it for a year. The singing was very fine. The members worked for the meeting and attended it. There were only about forty of them at the beginning. The interest grew to the close, and the meeting should have continued longer, but I could not stay. There were nineteen additions to the congregation. Four of these were baptized and the others were persons who had moved there. The church gave me fine support for the size of the congregation. The church meets in a rented house on the corner of Eighth and Ogdon Streets. They have a beautiful lot and two thousand dollars toward building, which they want to do in the near future. They will need some assistance to build the kind of house they should have. There seems to be a great future before the cause of Christ in Denver.

Brother E. C. Fuqua spent two or three days in the meeting. He has done a great work in Colorado, especially in the way of establishing new congregations. He is a strong man, and is doing purely missionary work. So far as I know, he is the only man we have in Colorado who is devoting all his time to preaching the gospel. I met several other preachers who preach some on Sundays. I preached one discourse at Boulder, where Brother James H. Bailey is doing a good work.

Some of the brethren got me to wire Brother E. E. Shoulders, of Corsicana, Texas. He reached Denver before I left, and will hold meetings at Boulder and Olathe. The brethren want him to locate there, and I am in hopes he will do so, for he is a fine young man.

And here I may add that if some of the strong churches would send a few strong preachers to Colorado for some meetings or for all the time, a good work could be done; besides, it would be great encouragement to Brethren Evans and Fuqua and others who are trying to build up the cause of Christ. I assure you that Colorado is a great field to work in and a fine place to live.

It was my pleasure to have my wife with me on this trip. She had been sick for many months, and the trip was very helpful to her.

The Law Does Not Change.

BY C. R. NICHOL.

Movement is the law of life. Exercise is necessary to health. If I should break my clavicle, the surgeon would place my arm in a sling, and inactivity is bound on the arm for a few weeks. When the bandages are removed, the muscles seem atrophied and the joints calloused. It is the result of inactivity. "Exercise or perish" is a law of the natural world. Lifeless things remain unchanged.

Have you been thinking of the church as an institution or organization as contrasted with a living organism? If yes, may I insist that you review carefully the ground for your conclusions?

Should I converse with you for any length of time about the church, you would surely declare it to be the "Lord's body." Such, indeed, it is. May I suggest, though, that you remember that the church is not the Lord's monument? The church is composed of living members; and, as such, it must show some of the characteristics of all living things. It is composed of many members. As such, it must, will, integrate; and, too, it will disintegrate. Dead and worn-out matter will drop from it; and, too, there must be the addition of fit material. This is seen in the material which is necessarily withdrawn from and the addition of new material by the spiritual law of the new birth.

Remembering that the church is a body plastic with life, it must, while maintaining its unbroken continuity, become modified in time and place to fit the changing environment. Though this is true, let it be remembered that the law of life of which it is the creature and on which it is dependent for its perpetuity remains the same. A failure to correspond to the law will result in the body being marred, its nature will be changed, and ultimately it will become useless, or worse than useless, in the work of the Lord.

Who will say that because the church in America in the twentieth century is not exactly like the church in Asia Minor in the first century, that it is not the same church? There is a wonderful difference in the appearance of the babe and the full-grown man; but who will say it is not the same person? I am told there is a marked difference in the routine followed by disciples in England and America in the regular services on Lord's day; but who will affirm that they are not the same people—that they are not the church of God, whether in America or England?

In the early days we are told that it was often true that disciples were forced to meet in dens and caves of the earth, that they might conduct the worship without being disturbed. They were not supplied with the Bible, in the form we have it; they did not have comfortable houses with the modern conveniences many of the congregations of the present have. The order in which they observed the items of worship may have been quite different from that as observed by the disciples of this day; but who will say that because of the change in the external appearance of the congregation it is not the church of God?

We should not lose sight of the fact that through the ages, with the many changes, the progress man has made, the new demands which are being made on humanity, the church should be as active as the needs of man for spiritual life and guidance demand, and in doing this work, the work of the Master, there will be changes in the external appearance of the congregation and its modus operandi.

We are prone, many of us, to think of the church—the congregation—we united with years ago as the model; that any departure from the method they followed in doing the work of the Master is a departure from the law of the body. Remember the law of life for the body of Christ—the church—does not change, cannot be changed. Please remember, also, that there has not been given a set of rules, or a ritual, in which is revealed the way, the manner, in which each activity of the body, church, must be manifested, nor a method of procedure which is to be followed in minute detailed order in the work of the church as she manifests her life as a potent factor in blessing the world.

Obeying God Under Difficulties.

BY A. O. COLLEY.

Many Christians do not seem to know just what to do when an unexpected difficulty arises. Others, for lack of teaching, have no special and definite thought on what obeying God is, even when there is no difficulty before them. For the good of these two classes and for the general good of all the lovers of the Lord, I am writing this short article, in which I shall set forth some of our experiences in Dallas, Texas, during the time the city government, by a proclamation of the mayor, had closed the churches and other places of public gatherings. This proclamation was published in the Saturday-afternoon papers, which gave but little time to plan for Sunday. The elders and I held a brief consultation, partly by telephone. We decided that we, as teachers, had no right to abandon "the assembling of ourselves together" even under these circumstances. I went to the mayor's office, asked and obtained a conference with him, in which I set forth what we thought we must do. He first said he could make no exceptions, must treat all alike. I told him I did not blame him for doing so, but to us it was a very serious question, as we did not want to disobey either God or man. I further asked him what he would do if he thought the Lord commanded him to do a thing and there was some law of man in the way. He, being a religious man, promptly said: "I would obey the Lord." I asked him if he was going to have a policeman at the church to prevent us from opening. He very pleasantly replied that he would not. He suggested that an "open-air" meeting would be all right. This gave us the idea that we could do our duty in worshiping God, and at the same time not disobey our city government. We have met each Lord's day since, to "remember the Lord's death till he come," out on the lawn by the side of the church house. We are trying to help the city relieve the suffering, care for the sick, and bury the dead. This is a time for sober thinking and faithful acting.

Fortune, good or ill, as I take it, does not change men and women. It but develops their character. As there are a thousand thoughts lying within a man that he does not know till he takes up the pen to write, so the heart is a secret to him (or her) who has it in his own breast.—Thackeray.

Along with his contribution, Brother H. E. Winkler, of Adairville, Ky., sends us this encouraging letter:

For the last three Lord's days wife and I, on account of the influenza epidemic, have worshiped in our home, and I am sending you two dollars, our contribution for said days, to be applied on the war sufferers' fund. Apply this to the fund that you deem to be in the greater need.

My wife and three oldest children have been down with the "flu" for over a week, and I, with no help whatever, have been quite busy. Patients better now.

May God bless the good work at the Russell Street Church hospital and through such benevolent work lead souls thus benefited to the eternal benefits in Christ.

Here are some startling facts about Poland

The rate of army casualties resulting in death on the western front averages 1.1 per cent; in Poland the death rate is 9.8 per cent.

The number of Poles who have perished from starvation, disease, and exposure since the beginning of the war surpasses the total losses in killed of the belligerent armies combined.

The cities of Poland are bankrupt and cannot even support the asylums.

In a cablegram to the American Red Cross, received on November 18, 1917, Prince Adam Sapieha, Bishop of Cracow, states what follows: "The Polish people are threatened with extermination. That word is none too strong. We have practically exhausted our own resources. For three years Poland has been struggling, paying the bills for three-fourths of the charities, only one-fourth of the money coming from outside, but this winter it cannot be done. We pray that the winter will be mild. Our only hope is in America."

In Poland twenty-two thousand villages have been wiped out of existence—two hundred towns razed to the ground—sixteen hundred churches are in ruins; the loss in property destroyed exceeds nine billion dollars; five hundred thousand Polish women have had their lives shattered by the greatest tragedy that can come to a woman.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Go where thou wilt, seek whatsoever thou wilt, thou shalt not find a higher way above, nor a safer way below, than the way of the holy cross.—Thomas a Kempis.

Burden Bearers.

We all are in some way or other bearers of burdens that at times seem too heavy to be borne. Some of us are weighed down with poverty, others with riches; some have the daily nagging duties that distress them; some endure ill health; many suffer from temptations or loneliness. Burden bearing is the common lot. The more conspicuous the position, the heavier are the burdens often imposed upon men.

Even that marvelous and courageous leader, Moses, in a time of despair, desired that God would take him out of life because of the burdens he had to carry. Listen to his prayer: "Wherefore have I not found favor in thy sight, that thou layest the burden of all this people upon me? . . . If thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand . . . and let me not see my wretchedness." If Moses, who conversed with God, thus suffered, we must expect that others will have many similar hard experiences.

Materially favored Americans little understand how men and women of other lands carry huge weights on their backs while engaged in daily toil. These great loads are sustained for the most part uncomplainingly. The workers bear them alone, but sometimes divide with one another their crushing burdens. In non-Christian lands such pathetic sights are very common. There are, however, for most of us, spiritual embarrassments as well as physical burdens to be endured.

Those who love Christ, the Savior, and God, the pitying Father of all, frequently bear spiritual or material burdens to the very limit of human endurance. If we play the man's or woman's part, we cannot escape them; but why should we desire to cast them aside too easily? Did not our Lord bear the heavy cross of wood to Calvary and almost sink beneath it? Did not his spiritual agony prove the most terrible of all? He cried: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" He participated in the toil of the workingmen and the sorrows of the rich. He invited all to come to himself as the one source of strength and rest to all who labor or are heavy laden. "Come unto me," he cried, "and I will give you rest." Do we thus go to him?

Let us take him at his word. Let us for a few minutes every day take our Bibles and commune with God and in prayer lay our burdens at his feet. This is one practical way of casting them upon him. John Oxenham has beautifully written:

Burden bearers are we all,
Great and small.
Burden sharers be ye all,
Great and small!
Where another shares the load,
Two draw nearer God.
Yet there are burdens we can share with none
Save God:
And paths remote where we must walk alone
With God;
For lonely burdens and for path apart,
Thank God!
If these but serve to bring the burdened heart
To God!

There is no creature so small and abject that it representeth not the goodness of God. If thou wert inwardly good and pure, then wouldest thou be able to see and understand all things well without impediment. A pure heart penetrateth heaven and hell.—Thomas à Kempis.

That good and sweet affection which thou sometimes feelest is the effect of grace present, and is a foretaste of thy heavenly home; but hereon thou must not lean too much, for it cometh and goeth.—Thomas à Kempis.

Dark, and Jesus Had Not Come.

Dark on the stormy lake.

He tarries on the Gilead shore,
While in the boat they quake,
They twelve, and bend the useless oar.
Dark, a lonely dark,
And Jesus had not come.

Dark in the human soul
In dens of vice, in haunts of crime,
Where self and greed hold sway,
In heathen lands of every clime.
Dark, a hideous dark,
And Jesus had not come.

Dark in the human soul
That's barred from God, great longings crushed,
Set on its own control,
Till e'en the still small voice is hushed.
Dark, a willful dark,
And Jesus had not come.

Light of the world, He came.

Let none in darkness walk, and death
Become a shadowy name.

"I am with you to the end," he saith.

Light, universal light,

And Jesus has now come.

Shall 1 Cor. 14 Stand or Go?

BY A. M. GEORGE.

In the Gospel Advocate of September 26, Brother A. W. Young takes up the much-used, but none the less important, subject of church work and worship. He thinks that there is no hour for meeting specifically commanded; that worship is not the only thing for which the church can assemble, and that all the details connected with the church work and worship are not given; and that consequently we are left to our own judgment, or "sanctified common sense," to guide us in these things—that is, we are not "thoroughly furnished unto every good work," and the observance of order and decency fulfills the requirements of the law.

I want to notice a few things that the brother says In regard to not being "thoroughly furnished," I will just say that Paul and Peter both say that we are. Brother Young says we are not, and I will leave them to work it out. In this, and more that he has said that I have not quoted; he is preparing to make an assault on 1 Cor. 14, which contains about all the instruction that we have in the New Testament in regard to the conduct of the public assemblies of the church. This chapter has given the brethren who advocate the "Sunday school" much trouble, and others besides Brother Young have made strenuous efforts to get it out of their way.

Before going farther, I will say that in considering these church questions we should never lose sight of the important fact that, when the church is spoken of in the Book, it sometimes refers to the church scattered abroad and again to the church assembled together in one place for work or worship, or both; and while it is the church in both cases, the same rules do not apply to both alike. The members can do some things in the church when not assembled together that they cannot do when assembled. Nearly all of the New Testament concerning the life and duties of the church is addressed primarily to the church not assembled together, and nearly all the work and worship of the church is done by the unassembled body. Joel prophesied that handmaidens should prophesy in the church; and they did (for instance, Philip's daughters), but not in the church assembled together. Again, words and sentences are sometimes used in connection with the work or worship of the church in a generic sense, and when so used it will apply to the unassembled church, and maybe to the assembly also; but the generic statement may be, and often is, modified by a specific statement.

For instance, in this prophecy of Joel's, men and women shall prophesy in the church (a generic statement), and if nothing more is said, men and women alike may teach in and out of the assembly; but this is followed by Paul's specific statement (1 Cor. 14: 34, 35): "Let your women keep silence in the churches." Here are the generic and the specific; both permit the woman to speak or teach in church, but one limits her right to teach to the church not assembled. The "specific" bars her from asking a question merely for information in the assembly. This is made plain in 1 Cor. 14: 31, 35: "For ye may all prophesy one by one"-generic. "And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church "-specific. Here the word "all" includes women, unless it be modified later, which is done in verse 35, which specifically excludes the women teachers and confines the teaching to one man at a time, which is another specific requirement.

Brother Young has said a good deal about unmentioned details in the activities of the church, to prepare the way for his main objective, which is to get rid of this troublesome chapter; but I will notice only a few. Others have tried this before him, but it is there to stay. He asks the question, "Is the church to-day, in its manhood, to be tied down to the restrictions of I Cor. 14, which were only for the church in its babyhood?"-the primitive churchand answers that to suppose this is "a serious mistake." That may be so, but it will take more than any man's mere affirmation to make me believe it. Why, Brother Young, in the beginning of this book (verses 1-5) Paul addresses the letter to "the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ;" and he thanks God "that in everything ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: so that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Then he beseeches them to be of the same mind and the same judgment, etc. All this, in connection with the fact that those "baby Christians," led by the Holy Spirit working miraculously in them and producing such consuming conviction or faith that they dared to face lions' dens, burning stakes, and other cruel deaths for Christ's sake, leads me to believe that in faith, in knowledge, and in spirituality the baby church (Brother Young uses the word "childhood" instead of "baby," but I write it "baby" for short) was extremely ahead of our "manhood church," and there was not near so much division and contention among the babies as there is now among the men; and more, the baby church had exactly the same teaching that we men have now, only they got theirs from the Spirit directly, and we get ours from them indirectly.

In view of all of this, I will say to Brother Young, as I have said to his predecessors, on this line: As Paul addresses the things contained in this letter to all in every place who call on the name of the Lord, that if he can work out the instructions contained in this fourteenth chapter for the guidance of the churches as not applying to the church of the present day, that he will be forced to repudiate the entire letter, and then, as all the instructions to churches and Christians contained in the New Testament were written by this same Paul or his inspired contemporaries to the same kind of churches and Christians, that he may as well continue his offensive until he eliminates the entire Testament. Why not, please?

Continuing, the brother has a good deal to say about the inconsistencies of those who regard 1 Cor. 14 as applicable to the church now. He seems to think that, to be consistent, they should be like "Holy Rollers" and speak with tongues; and as we contend that only one should teach at a time, that we ought not to allow more than one teacher to speak in any one assembly; and that because we contend for all being taught in one class, that though there might be fifty thousand members in a certain city. we should get them all into one class and have one teacher to teach them. I think it a waste of time to consider them, as any intelligent Bible reader ought to see the shallowness of this reasoning. He thinks that Paul's rules there, for that infant church, do not apply to the church in its manhood; but, as a rule, it is a fact that the character of men depends upon the character of their teaching in childhood. Can Brother Young suggest a better kind of teaching for the children than Paul gave in this chapter? It is a fact that an individual Christian or a church of God is an outgrowth or evolution from an infantile state-all at first are "babes in Christ" and must begin with milk. Paul says: "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ, . . . and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you."

Why Does God Permit Evil? No. 2. BY C. NETTERVILLE.

The next fundamental fact to be considered is, God had a purpose in creating man. It would seem superfluous to argue this question. I presume no one will deny it, yet it may be pertinent to inquire what that purpose was. We have seen that God rules by well-established laws the enforcement of which requires the office of intelligent agents endowed with the power to apply the force necessary to secure desired results. The question naturally arises. Who are these agents? The supposition that God uses the angelic hosts of heaven to execute his will, or enforce his laws, I think, is amply sustained by the following scriptures: Dan. 3: 28; 6: 22; Matt. 4: 11; 24: 31; 26: 53; John 5: 4; Acts 7: 53; Gal. 3: 19; Luke 16: 22; 2 Thess. 1: 7; Ps. 103: 20. That the faithful followers of the Lord Jesus upon this earth are to be members of that heavenly host is generally, if not universally, admitted. That man was placed here to be trained, fitted, and tested for that work is another fact called in question by no Bible student known to me. Then we must conclude that God's object in the creation of man was to prepare recruits for that heavenly host of workers.

The next question to be considered is, what are the prerequisite qualifications which will fit one for the performance of this work? In order to get at this, it may be well to ascertain, as nearly as we can, the nature of this work, that we may have a correct conception of what qualifies one for its performance.

Take into consideration, if you please, the fact that all this vast universe, occupying space with dimensions so great as to be incomprehensible to the finite mind, is composed of solar systems innumerable revolving in space that is limitless, each system composed of a sum around which revolves its satellites, and all these solar systems revolving around a central solar system, creating a system of revolving bodies innumerable whirling through space illimitable. and think, if you can, what would be the consequence if a directing and controlling power should not be constantly and persistently exercised to guide and control them in their ceaseless flight through endless space. Now, if just one of these untold millions of directing agents should fail to follow instructions, even in the very smallest minutia, and just one of these solar systems should swerve in just a very small degree from the course necessary for it to pursue in traveling its unalterable course through space, the dire consequences that would result from the collision of such vast bodies of solid matter whirling through space at such a velocity would make mortal man shudder to even contemplate. Surely there would be a "crash of worlds and a wreck of matter."

Does not the conclusion force itself upon us that those upon whom this duty devolves must have an abiding faith in their Lord, the Ruler of this vast domain, and must be willing to yield to his wishes with an implicit obedience that permits of no deviation from, addition to, or subtraction from their instructions from Him by whose omnipotent power and infinite wisdom all material things are made and controlled?

That intelligent agencies for conducting such tremen dous operations as are involved in the manipulation of all this vast universe might be mere machines, devoid of all freedom of action, will be admitted. But that they are not thus constituted is made certain by the fact that, through the exercise of this free agency, they rebelled and lost their first estate. But if it were true that they were not free moral agents, it would not necessarily involve the conclusion that man was devoid of it. But the fact that he exercised the privilege of choosing whom he would serve in the very first recorded transaction in which he had the opportunity of exercising this free moral agency, that he renounced allegiance to the God who made him and yielded obedience to his adversary, proves it. This act precipitated the conflict now raging, which is the only one wherein Satan has been able to manifest the ability to oppose the Lord of all the earth.

And right here is the crux of this matter. Men ask: Why does not God, by the exercise of his omnipotent power, wrest man from the domination of Satan and thus put an end to the evils that afflict humanity? My answer is that God will do it, but will do it only through his established agencies, by the enforcement of laws formulated from the beginning, and that he can do it in no other way, because the only other way involves the deprivation of man of his free moral agency; and should he do this, he would thwart his own purpose in the creation of man by destroying the very material designed for this specific purpose and for which no other material could be substituted.

That Jesus, the Christ, is the agent through whom God works to destroy Satan's power is asserted by the apostle John in 1 John 3: 8. That the gospel is the power to be used in this work is asserted by the apostle Paul in 1 Cor. 1: 18. That it is the only means that will be used to secure man's redemption is certainly implied by the language of the apostle Paul in Acts 4: 12. Thus we see that a "battle royal" is on between the "hosts of the devil," led by Satan himself, and the heavenly hosts, led by the Lord Jesus Christ; that it is a battle to the finish, admitting of no compromise, and in which the scene of conflict is the heart of every man, and it will be ended only when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is Lord. (Phil. 2: 10, 11.) When that time comes, and not till then, will evil be banished from the face of the earth.

Then my answer to the question at the head of this article is that man, and not God, permits evil in the world; that it exists in spite of what can be done in accordance with God's purposes and designs. It exists because man refuses to throw off his yoke of bondage to Satan and yield that allegiance and obedience to his Creator necessary to the fulfillment of the purpose God had in view when he made man.

He is in the thick of the strife Himself, smiting down the foe, and making His victory ours in its wonderful results. Our secret of triumph is to be close to Him, the Conqueror, and wholly on his side. The more we call God in, the more surely and wholly shall we cast the tempter out.—Bishop of Durham.

Each one must work out his own salvation in conquering the habit of idle thought, and to-day is a good time to start the work.—Agnes Greene Foster.

Are We Growing Profane?

(From the Literary Digest.)

The "Lost Battalion" furnishes us one of the famous stories of the war, and its leader, Major Whittlesey, one of its striking mots. When the Germans called on him to surrender, though his force was lost in the depths of the Argonne forest and entirely surrounded, though his men were famished and many of them wounded, with no prospect that relief could reach them, he shouted, "Go to hell!" And his men, despite their weariness and hunger, cheered so loudly that the Germans heard them from their observation post. "The bit of profanity in the story," says the New York Times, "not even the most pious American would have deleted." Major Whittlesey's landlady maintains to an interviewer from the New York Globe that the officer "never was a swearing man." "Not a single oath have I heard from him in the seven years he lived here," she declares, "and I've seen him looking for a collar button at that. But you wouldn't call his remark to the Germans swearing exactly-would you, now? It was just what I would call very good advice." The gentle forbearance of the Irish landlady is not shared by all observers of our army's habit, though much that is reported as profanity may belong in the category of what The Globe calls "the young major's classic reply," which, it avers, "will go down into history as one of the most picturesque incidents of the war." Mildly by the lay press, but alarmedly by the religious, the question is asked if we are "to be forced into a state of mind that will make profanity Mr. Charles M. Schwab is reported to have used the word "damn" three times within twenty-four hours in addresses and interviews in Philadelphia, and "used it quite frankly for the tang and meaning it gave his sentence," says that city's Evening Public Ledger. It turns the matter over:

"The word has an appeal of its own. It has music and force. One can hardly talk of the Kaiser without seizing on it. Vide Briggs. There are in legitimate English terms adequate for any shade of meaning, for any degree of force. But they aren't profane. And it is for the suggestion of profanity that the average speaker aches when he has to discuss the Hun. Nothing less will do."

The Ohio State Journal (Columbus) notes also the plentifulness of the words "hell" and "damn," during these days of war, and hopes "they will not grow in size and terror." For-

"In fact, anything worse actually weakens the impressiveness of the language. It is going to be hard to get rid of the 'hell' and 'damn' even when the war is over, but it is hoped a less provocation will do away with these expletives. . . . These words are war expletives, and so when peace returns the avoidance of them will come with it, for the purity of language is one of the conditions of peace. He who swears, even mildly, is at war wit manity. Any first-class psychology will tell you this. is at war with hu-

The practice does not even find justification in good war psychology, says the Universalist Leader (Boston), though it confesses to the "pretty generally accepted notion that the soldier has a special commission to swear." "In Shakespeare's day he 'swore a prayer or two' on waking, and since then he has the reputation of swearing about all the time." But-

"This war is a revelation of an evolution; it has been discovered that a man physically and morally healthy makes a much better soldier, and the leader of our armies in France, General Pershing, insists that one of the big-gest factors in warfare is the spiritual development of the men. General Pershing does not swear; he used to in moderation, but he quit it, as he said, 'because it is useless and it shows lack of self-control, and the perfect soldier must have perfect control of himself.' We are wondering if the soldier has not defined this habit for those outside as well as those inside the ranks! Swearing reveals the lack of self-control, and self-control is essential to success anywhere."

The Watchman Examiner (Boston) seems to move in a whole world of blue smoke, for it feels that "if the overthrow of Germany and the Kaiser could be brought about by the volume of vociferousness, of verbal damning, the war would have been at an end long before this and the boys at home again," for-

"Such a flood of profanity, such exuberance of imagination in the devising of new forms of cursing, such abandon even on the part of good people to the delicious thrill of being able to say naughty words without censure or re-buke, the world has never before seen. And the Kaiser is at the center of the maelstrom, the target of the universal execration. Newspapers carry cartoons showing various disagreeable conditions resulting from the war, ending with a picture in which the victim of these conditions is represented as shouting vehemently, Damn the Kalser! Automobiles go about the streets with red labels on their windshields bearing the startling words, To hell with the Kaiser!' The movies feature shows with the same lurid title. In ordinary conversation mild-tempered menand gracious women startle you with expressions concerning the war that barely, if at all, escape the profane. It would almost seem that as a people we are coming to regard profanity and patriotism as practically synonymous, and to gage the depth and sincerity of a man's love of country by the fluency and force with which he swears at Germany and the Kaiser.

Perhaps the most singular—certainly from a religious and Christian point of view the most deplorable—feature of the situation is the way in which and the degree to which this delirium of thought and speech is entering into and taking control of the church. The war seems for some of us to have jostled oid ideas and demolished established standards, and to justify some things that we formerly considered wrong, and that in our innermost souls we still know to be wrong, terribly wrong. Hatred seems to be glorified when its object is the Hun.

"The church and the ministry have to-day an unparalleled opportunity to demonstrate the fact that there is a difference between the spirit of Christ and the spirit of the world, but they can do it only by exhibiting the one in contrast to the other, not by bringing it down in conformity thereto. Let the speech of Christians in these terrible times be Christian. Let the message of the pulpit be pitched in higher key than the shoutings of the street. Nowhere should the note of patriotism, the love of the flag, the passion of sacrificial service of country and right and honor, be more strongly struck and persistently empha-sized than in church and pulpit. But we need to remember that the supreme urge is the setting forth in clear vision of vital principle, and not the clamor of hot and angry words. Swearing at the Kaiser is not the ultimate exemplification of loyalty, and profanity is not a synonym for The wide prevalence of this vicious habit may reveal commendable intensity of conviction, but it also reveals a reprehensible forgetfulness of fundamental religious principles. Let us do more and swear less.

Righteous Wrath.

There are many kinds of hate, as many kinds of fire; And some are fierce and fatal with murderous desire; And some are mean and craven, revengeful, selfish, slow, They hurt the man that holds them more than they hurt his foe.

And yet there is a hatred that purifies the heart, The anger of the better against the baser part, Against the false and wicked, against the tyrant's sword, Against the enemies of Love, and all that hate the Lord.

O cleansing indignation, O flame of righteous wrath, Give me a soul to see thee and follow in thy path! Save me from selfish virtue, arm me for fearless fight, And give me strength to carry on, a soldier of the Right! Henry Van Dyke. not like, and said: "That's a lie." The brethren wanted to take him out; but Brother Lipscomb said, "No, he has as much right to condemn as to approve," and asked him to be a gentleman and keep quiet, which he did. The theory that contends that a Christian, or a Christian editor, has not the right to criticize and condemn error wherever found is entirely out of joint with the New Testament teaching. Whenever a Christian objects to criticism given for his good, he may know that he has not the spirit of Christ.

Fatalism Challenged.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Since almost the whole world has been drawn into this terrible war, many people have become discouraged and have given up hope. Many people in business life work with an indifference and inefficiency which has been hitherto unknown. They act as though they believed that their lives would be either a failure or success regardless of what they do. Those who employ help have found it more difficult than hitherto to get efficient service from their help. Laborers act as though their efficiency had nothing to do with the amount of pay received. As a rule, labor has been less efficient on a high wage.

Among Christians, many have become indifferent and have ceased to render faithful service to God. They act as though their destiny was sealed and as if the world was lost beyond redemption. It is said that boys in khaki are going to the war with a belief something like this:

I was born in the year which makes me a draftee in this war. I must go because I am of proper age, I will be in certain battles; bullets and shrapnel will fly all about me, and I will be in constant danger of wounds and death. I cannot help the danger. No use. I am fated either to escape the death or to be killed. Cause and effect determine all things.

This formulation of doctrine is made by Vernon Wagar in the Western Christian Advocate, Cincinnati, Ohio. He also wonders if Christianity has no other belief for the brave people in this war. He asks:

Is every event so predetermined that it must happen inevitably? Are we to be resigned to an Omnipotence without a character? The Chaldeans believed the stars were a book of destiny. Born in a certain relation of certain stars, your life must turn out in a certain determined way. The Stoics also took faith in this absolute necessity which controls every life. Mohammedanism is a fatalistic religion—no accidents are possible; any defense or provision against possible danger is futile. Against Mohammedanism, our heaviest competitor, and the war fatalism, Christianity is having a struggle to the last ditch.

God pity the soldier lad or the parent of such a lad who resigns himself to such a deadly thought. This is the hour of living hope. Imagine the psalmist becoming a fatalist in peace or war. We would never have heard of his song of despair. But because of his hope in God he still sings to us of his needy day. Hear him: "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless he Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits; who brgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy disesse; who redeemeth thy life from destruction. . . Fe that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall all de under the shadow of the Almighty."

'resent day experiences demand a surety other than the ordnary thinking will bring—the surety of Christian hope.

The soldier or parent who constantly trusts God and live the life of prayer to God and believes in God's persons care can do more for this hour of the world's Gethsemae than he who loses hope and says: "Things must go as thy go, and no one can help." Hope helps with God, and here is a wonderful safety in this great expectation that I rooted in the promises of God.

Thefatalism that is expected by most thinking men in no wa encourages foolhardiness, but it leads men to stay clear c danger. While General Foch won a great victory in breaing through the Hindenburg line and while God forekne that he would do this, that foreknowledge of God did not ompel the allies to cease fighting valiantly. Not a soldier on the western front ceased to do his best because it was predestined that the allies should win the victory. The man who runs a useless and purposeless risk of catching and probably spreading an infectious disease is not a fatalist, but is a criminal. No hour can be so dark in the world's history that God will justify a man in sitting down and failing to do his best. When all was dark and apparently against Noah, the preacher of righteousness, he was the one faithful man in the midst of a faithless generation. The wise man acts wisely, no matter what may be his condition in life. It is the height of folly for a man to despair and give up all as lost. The command to every child of God is to work out his own salvation with fear and trembling. Doubtless during the terrible temptation through which Christ passed all looked dark and gloomy; yet, after the superhuman conflict was over, angels came and ministered unto Jesus. After the night comes the morning; after the darkness, the light.

Timeservers will not endure hardness as good soldiers in the midst of the conflicts of life, but they will despair. They will flock with the multitudes when all is bright, and, like some of old, will follow Jesus for the loaves and fishes. To all such Jesus says: "Work not for the food which perisheth, but for the food which abideth unto eternal life, which the Son of man shall give unto you: for him the Father, even God, hath sealed." (John 6: 27.) Butalas!-how many turn again to the fleshpots of Egypt when something real hard must be endured! When Jesus said to his disciples, "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6: 54), many of them said: "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" (Verse 60.) We learn, moreover, that "upon this many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him. Jesus said therefore unto the twelve, Would ye also go away? Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." (John 6: 66-68.)

With the dark and threatening clouds hanging over us, to whom shall we go but Jesus? For he is "the way, the truth, and the life." Without the Christian's hope, the world is indeed dark and dreary. Like a world without a sun, a desert without an oasis, so is the world if not illuminated by the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. If we would be wise, if we would be useful, if we would be happy, we must have the spirit of the meek and lowly Christ. The millionaire, the statesman, and the king are all alike wretched and miserable, if they have not the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ.

It is worse than folly to despair; it is vicious. The man who quits and sits down will never hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done." It is only those that persevere to the end that shall be saved. The joys of heaven are sweet and enduring enough to stimulate every child of God to press forward until his efforts are crowned with victory. "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." (Luke 9: 62.)

What Is It to Walk With the Lord?

BY E. G. S.

To walk with the Lord is to walk by the directions of his will as given in the New Testament. To do this requires that we read the New Testament regularly and live in harmony with its teaching. It is not enough to simply read a chapter occasionally. We should make it a dally business to read one or more chapters. It should be a lifetime business to read a chapter or more every day—not as a mere form, but to study it and try to understand it.

The New Testament is the grandest book in all the world. It teaches us how to live to gain eternal life, and eternal life is the goal that all should try to reach; for if we miss that, then eternal torment will be our doom. There is no halfway ground to be occupied. There are but two places of abode prepared for eternity-heaven and hell. To one of these places we are certain to go, depending upon how we live. All who become Christians and faithfully live the Christian life will be taken home to heaven, but all the wicked will be cast into hell. These two places are prepared for the two classes of people, the righteous and the wicked. All people should read and study these things and strive to live the life that will prepare them for heaven. Whichever place they prepare for in life, they will be certain to reach in eternity. Those who reject the Lord in life may be perfectly certain that hell will be their portion forever and ever. They need not imagine that their sufferings in hell will soon be over. On the other hand, heaven will never cease to be the home of the righteous.

In view of what has been said, all should strive to realize the importance of becoming Christians and of faithfully living the Christian life. God is not going to do for us what he has commanded us to do; and as he requires all Christians to lead a faithful life in the service of God in order to reach heaven, we need not expect to reach it in any other way. The thing for us to do is to be faithful in living the Christian life to the end, and God will be certain to take care of us in eternity; but if we refuse the required obedience, God will be equally certain to send us down to eternal perdition. But many people seem to regard the Christian life as a dull, dragging, burdensome sort of life that affords no pleasure. This is a great mistake. The thought of eternal life in heaven and of being cared for in that home that will never come to an end is certainly an exceedingly precious and cheering one. But we should realize that this is only promised to the righteous. Therefore we must lead righteous lives on earth if we would enjoy that heavenly home throughout eternity. But the beauty of the whole matter is that a faithful, Christian life is the happiest life that can be lived on earth, and the only life that will prepare us for eternal life.

With these considerations, surely all Christians should be faithful in this life until death comes to free them from mortality and land them safely in the eternal home. I am sure that only a few keep these things in mind and practice them as they should. But why should any one fail to think on these things and thus fail to make preparation for happiness in eternity? It is an awful neglect of the most important things in all the world. Such a course is an awful neglect of the soul. Moreover, if the interests of eternity are neglected in this life, they can never be secured after death. Let us be careful, then, to walk with the Lord in life, and that will prepare us to dwell with him in eternity. It is an awful thing to neglect the service of the Lord in this life. People that neglect the soul through this life simply prepare to go down to perdition and throw away all chance for heaven. I know of nothing so terrible as to neglect the interests of the soul through this life. When death comes, it will be too late to make any change; all chances to make any change will then be forever gone. Therefore we should be very careful to make arrangements in this life for an eternal home in heaven.

If thou cast away one cross, without doubt thou shalt find another, and that, perhaps, a more heavy one. Set thyself, therefore, like a good and faithful servant of Christ, to bear manfully the cross of thy Lord, who out of love was crucified for thee.—Thomas à Kempis.

Only those who are lifted up from the earth draw men unto them. The world is possessed by those who are not possessed by it. The momentum of love is the source of power.—Francis G. Peabody.

Condensed Statement of the Tennessee Orphans' Home.

BY J. C. M'Q.

The directors of the Tennessee Orphans' Home met at the call of the president on October 31. More than a quorum were present, while some of the directors were not able to attend on account of sickness.

The meeting was very harmonious and satisfactory. It was the general consensus of opinion that the Home was in better condition than it had been, but all felt that a greater diligence should be manifested in order to still increase the usefulness and improve the facilities of the Home. There are changes that could be made with very decided advantage, and it is hoped that the funds will be placed at the disposition of the Board of Directors for this purpose. Many more children could be cared for if funds were available. It was the sense of the board, unanimously expressed, that the churches and individuals who have contributed to the Home so liberally should be thanked for their donations. The treasurer has always acknowledged contributions with thanks, privately; and if one has been overlooked, it was unintentional. The churches have been very hearty in their response to the needs of the Home, and it is to be hoped that their liberality will increase rather than decrease. While the statement shows cash on hand $3,372.62, the fact should not be overlooked that it will require close economy to get through this winter without the use of more money. The directors hope, however, by judicious management, not to be forced to borrow funds to take care of the winter ex-

I would be derelict if I were not to publicly commend the services of Sister Granville Lipscomb and her associates. Sister Lipscomb is the woman for the place and is doing her work admirably. She was unanimously elected superintendent. Her associates have ably supported her and should also be congratulated for the efficient and faithful services rendered.

Brother John W. Fry, treasurer, is devoting much thought, time, and labor to the interest of the Home without compensation. The Home is fortunate in securing his services.

We are glad to be able to present a clear, condensed statement of the affairs of the Home, which embraces the period from October 31, 1917, to October 28, 1918. We would have rejoiced even more if we had been able to give a statement of the affairs of the institution from the beginning; but, as we have been wholly unable to secure an audit, we must forego this pleasure. Believing that this work is now in its incipiency and that it will grow to much greater proportions and usefulness, I herewith submit statement of the last year's work:

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain 1 Cor. 14; Mark 16: 17, 18. There is a sect of people here called "Apostolics," and they claim to be baptized as were the apostles on Pentecost and to have the speaking of tongues and working of miracles, and rely upon those scriptures to prove their doctrine.

Tongues were given during the formative period of the church. During that period a man might be able to speak with tongues and yet not edify his hearers. He might not have the ability to properly interpret his own language. Men did not understand those who spoke with tongues, hence it was necessary to have interpreters to interpret the meaning. During this formative period of the church it was needful that there be inspired guides in the churches. The man who prophesied spoke to the edification of the church, and hence served the church better than the one who spoke with tongues. As we now have the inspired word of God, we no longer need interpreters, as the Bible is its own interpreter, and no longer have any necessity for inspired guides in the church. The language of Mark 16: 17, 18, belongs to the miraculous age. The apostles and a few of the disciples of that age had the power to heal the sick and cast out devils in the name of Jesus Christ. In proof of this, I quote Acts 2: 4: "And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Also, Acts 5: 16: "And there also came together the multitude from the cities round about Jerusalem, bringing sick folk, and them that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one." Also, Acts 8: 7: "For from many of those that had unclean spirits, they came out, crying with a loud voice: and many that were palsied, and that were lame, were healed. Also, Acts 16: 18: "And this she did for many days. But Paul, being sore troubled, turned and said to the spirit, I charge thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And it came out that very hour." Also, Acts 28: 3: "But when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks and laid them on the fire, a viper came out by reason of the heat, and fastened on his hand." Verse 5 of the same chapter tells us that "he shook off the creature into the fire, and took no harm." People who now claim to be baptized in the Holy Spirit as were the apostles should be able to heal the sick, raise the dead, speak with tengues, and cast out devils. Until they can do this their pretensions are not worthy of consideration or credence. * * *

Brother McQuiddy: We will appreciate it if you will answer the following questions, not using our names: (1) The Baptists and Methodists have regular choirs with instrumental music and insist that we go in the choir. They seem hurt that we have not done so, but we have always answered that we preferred singing with the audience. Now, are we taking the right course? (2) We went to hear the Baptist minister one night, and he preached a fiery discourse against the belief that baptism is essential to remission of sins. Could you donate money for the support of such doctrine? We refused to do so, because we thought it encouraging false doctrine. However, we will appreciate your discussion of these questions. X.

(1) I know of no authority in the word of God for choir singing. As singing is a part of the worship, it is the duty of all Christians to sing in so far as possible. This would lead to congregational singing. With this view of it, which is the scriptural view, it is certainly right to not sing in the choir. (2) The word of God clearly condemns us in encouraging or upholding anything that we believe is error. The Holy Spirit declares: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.) For instance, as the Bible teaches that immersion in water by the authority of Christ, into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, is Christian baptism, it would be sinful for a person who so believes the word of God in any way to encourage and uphold sprinkling for Christian baptism. If one believes that the Bible teaches immersion for Christian baptism, if it should turn out that he is mistaken, he could not do right in upholding sprinkling for baptism. A man may be sincerely wrong, but never insincerely right. The apostle Paul in writing about things that were not simful within themselves, says: "I know, and am persuaded in the Lord Jesus, that nothing is unclean of itself: save that to him who accounteth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean," (Rom, 14: 14.) The man who deliberately upholds error in order to gain the plaudits of men occupies a dangerous position. "For am I now seeking the favor of men, or of God? or am I striving to please men? if I were still pleasing men, I should not be a servant of Christ." (Gal. 1: 10.) Those who are loyal to God and who love the praise of God more than the praise of men and who "delight in the law of Jehovah" will be true to the Bible as they understand it in the face of the scoffs and sneers of the multitude. Whenever Christians compromise the truth, the church of Christ always suffers from such compromises. The injury done to the church is measured by the circulation that is given to the wrongdoing. Jesus said: "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments, . . . He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that leveth me. . . . If a man love me, he will keep my word." (John 14: 15-23.) Again, Christ says: "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6: 46.) Men may be religious and may profess great devotion, yet they may worship God in vain. Christ says of such, quoting from the prophecy of Isaiah: "But in vain do they worship me, teaching as their doctrines the precepts of men." (Matt. 15: 9.) Again, he declares: "Every plant which my heavenly Father planted not, shall be rooted up." (Verse 13.) Whenever a man sacrifices his conscience in order to please his fellow beings, he loses his own manhood and also the approval of God. Paul, the chief of sinners, subsequently the hero of the ages, was never untrue to his conscience. He says: "I have lived before God in all good conscience until this day." (Acts 23: 1.) Christians should to-day imitate Paul's example. I would rather that my right hand should lose its cunning and that my tongue should cleave to the roof of my mouth than that I should compromise my convictions of the truth in order to please any human being. Every time we sacrifice the truth of the Lord Jesus Christ, we not only jeopardize our own eternal interest, but we endanger the welfare of others. As we are our brother's keeper, we have no right to sacrifice the truth. When we thus sin against the brethren, we also sin against Christ. The Holy Spirit says in 2 John 9: 10: "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son. If any one cometh unto you, and bringeth not this teaching, receive him not into your house, and give him no greeting: for he that giveth him greeting partaketh in his evil works." The Spirit again admonishes: "Be not partakers in other men's sins." It is impossible to uphold error or in any way encourage it without becoming responsible for the false teaching.

"An Unconditional Surrender."

By "unconditional surrender" do I mean what Dr. Lyons, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of this city, meant in his address, under the above heading, last Lord's day, in which he declared that the allies should demand of Germany an "unconditional surrender?" Not hardly. It may be that preachers have the right to "butt in" and tell our rulers what to do and what to not do, but I hardly feel equal to the occasion. I am quite sure that the President of the United States and those associated with him in the war against Germany and her allies will take care of this question, even if it kills Teddy Roosevelt If Wilson does not listen to even his dictation.

The "unconditional surrender" of which I wish to speak is that the sinner must make to Christ if he is ever saved; is that surrender that those of us who claim to be Christians must continually make, if, indeed, we are to be the church of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. If Mr. Lyons himself would make this surrender and get his church to do so, there would be quite a "house cleaning" in his own church home; for certain it is he would find things in his work and worship that God did not put there, and in his teaching to the alien sinner he would find things that Christ requires that he has taken out. By an "unconditional surrender" I understand that the party who makes it leaves the one to whom he surrenders the right to dictate the terms of peace. That Christ is the only one who has the right to give to man the terms of peace goes without discussion, and that this absolute right of his demands of us an unconditional surrender must also be admitted. Do the preachers and the churches recognize this all-important truth as they should? Are not the larger number of the churches reserving the right to do some dictating also? Christ says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16; 16.) The same Christ, through the Holy Spirit, said to the people on the day of Pentecost: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 38.) These three thousand souls who had cried out, "Brethren, what shall we do?" made an absolute, unconditional surrender; hence, gladly received the word and were baptized. (See verse 41.) We have another case of unconditional surrender in the case of Saul. (See Acts 9: 6-18; 22: 16.) "Trembling and astonished," he cried out, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He surrendered unconditionally. Christ told him to go into the city and it should be told him what to do. Read the scriptures cited above and you will get the answer. The jailer made the same unconditional surrender. (See Acts 16: 27-34.)

Now, do you know of any cases of conversion in the days of the apostles where this unconditional surrender was not made? Do you know of any time or place where the apostles, Christ's ambassadors (see 2 Cor. 5: 19, 20), ever dared to change the conditions? That it may be right and just for Germany to make an unconditional surrender to the allies, I admit; but that we, the fallen races of the earth, must make an unconditional surrender to Christ in order to be saved, I know. Are we driving this home to the hearts of the people as we should? Those who are rampant for the allies to allow not Germany a seat at the peace table, to let her have nothing to say about conditions of peace, doubtless would feel provoked at our President if he should be lenient with Germany and insist that she, too, must dictate terms of peace; but what do they say about the man who has sinned against Jehovah without a shadow of cause for such rebellion, and yet as he comes to God for pardon, comes dictating terms or asking to eliminate some of the terms Jehovah has dictated? Can you conceive of anything so audacious, so unreasonably presumptuous?

Now, the facts are, the alien, as a rule, would not think of wanting to dictate terms, if he is brought to full conviction of his sins. He would gladly submit to the idea of God's dictating the terms; he could easily be shown that nothing short of an unconditional surrender could meet the demands of the government against which he had rebelled; but the trouble is encountered in the man-made churches, the human organizations on the earth that stand between God and the alien, who would be saved, with a modified form of Jehovah's terms of pardon. Tell me not that this is not true, for nothing is more patent than this very fact. A multiplicity of denominations, with their various contradictory doctrines, could not be, if all the churches were going before the world with the doctrine of an unconditional surrender to Jehovah. If this they did, the one law of pardon, without addition or subtraction, would be preached to the people, and the doctrine of our Lord and Savior, nothing more nor less, would be presented to the churches as their discipline, prayer book, and confession of faith. Isn't it so? I know of nothing that could mean more to the churches than to get them to receive this doctrine of unconditional surrender to God.

And it would be well to say a word to our own before closing. Troubles come up in the churches. Why do they come? Do we, as preachers, as teachers, as elders, as deacons, not need the doctrine of unconditional surrender? How could such troubles as they have recently had at Winchester, Ky., and in the Highland congregation of Louisville, Ky., have ever come, if unconditional surrender to God had existed in each congregation? How could it continue to be, if only this doctrine now would be embraced? We think so strange of our religious neighbors for wanting to take baptism out of God's dictated terms to aliens who ask for peace, and sometimes flay them for it; but do we not quite often meddle with God's terms of pardon when dealing with an erring brother? Do we not sometimes demand more than God demands? Do we not sometimes allow ourselves to be more lenient than God's terms will allow? Do we not sometimes just "whitewash" the matter? Do we not sometimes not even do this, but just let it alone and let it wear out, so far as the minds of the people are concerned, forgetting the fact that Jehovah has but one way of forgetting, and that is for the wrong to be righted and full confessions made? When this is done, he can and will forget; when this is not done, he remembers it till the judgment, to our eternal condemnation.

Brethren, think on these things, and pray that that body known as the "church of Christ" may, if others will not, see to it that they do practice the doctrine of absolute, unconditional surrender.

A Good Day.

Last Lord's day (October 27) was a good day with the Atlanta forces. It was our first day back in our houses after the closing order on account of the "flu." The writer spoke at West End in the forenoon, with one added by letter, and at East Point at night. Brother J. Clyde Shacklett spoke at East Point in the forenoon and meant to speak at West End at night; but his pass from the camp required his return by three o'clock in the afternoon, so he returned and conducted the services at the camp for the boys who could not come into the city for the services. Brother Carl Burcham, who is now at Camp Gordon, was with us at West End Avenue, took dinner with us, and spoke at the evening service.

Missionary

Through the Gates of an Indian City.

From Leh the laden traders go Who seek the lands of northern snow; With measured step of tireless feet They come beyond the mountain seat Whence flows the sacred Ganges down Past Purniah and Bampur town.

In Leh the passive faces throng At call of summer sunset gong; Unsmiling lips and straining thigh Like wraiths of silence flicker by, An endless stream, day after day, Year after year, toward Cathay.

Till down that frowning basalt height Where God reveals his awful light, Where star to star is but a span Of some lone marching Caravan, Those looming shapes, where silence fell, Seem but the treadmill souls of hell.

In Leh the summer dusk—ah, me—Shall flow through all eternity,
As flow the human tides that go
Beyond the lands of northern snow,
Like wraiths along the mountain crest,
To seek the vales of endless rest.

African Missions.

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

I here submit a report of the church of Christ mission in Roodepoort, and at the mines along the Reef, also at Gazaland:

Membership.—The total number of members of this mission, including those that went home, is one hundred and seventy-four. It is hard to know how many are on the Rand, as some, after returning from home, go to work on different parts of the Reef and seldom report themselves. The majority of these members belong to Gazaland (Portuguese East Africa).

Roodepoort Compound Missions.—In these places schools are held on every week day by our church members who are a bit advanced. On Wednesday nights they come to the Central Mission to attend the prayer gathering.

Compound Missions Along the Reef.—Notwithstanding the lack of means and workers, the Lord helped us to establish compound missions at about eight different mines. These places are run just in the same way as those in the Roodepoort Compounds. Naturally they have their own Lord's-day meetings at their different places and at the time convenient to them. They have no buildings of their own, but mine managements do allow them partial or exclusive use of rooms for religious purposes.

Gazaland Missions.—As many of our members are Gazaland natives, I am compelled to visit the aforementioned country at least for two or three months every year till the churches see fit to send missionaries there. I have already done so twice. My going there is not because there is little to do in Johannesburg; but the reason is, if I do not, I have to lose the majority of our church people. Portuguese laws are not like English laws. There are many causes that make me feel anxious about our members in Gazaland. At least three stations have been started by our men in the Portuguese East, and they want our help very much. It is about a year or more since I gave myself to studying Portuguese. One gets difficulties if one does not understand the official language of the country. The Portuguese people are very particular on this point.

What is Required for the Progress of the Work.—I know that it will do very little good for me to point out here all that is necessary for the good of the mission. I said a lot when I first came from Bulawayo about a year ago. A place like Johannesburg needed that the work should have been started on a large scale. There is no one among us like Mr. Baker, the man that built missions all over the Rand. As the work now stands, we need more teachers to be placed in different parts of the Rand. That was my motive in sending Brother Isaac to Bulawayo to be trained. As to the European superintendent, I needed one mostly when I first came, but my limbs have been so strengthened that I need very little leaning on anybody but God. There are occasions when I do need a European helper, such as in getting permission for building, etc. The present European supervisors did very well in many things; but as they are engaged in something else and do not devote their whole lives to the mission, there were many other things which they could not do according to the laws of the country. Taking the above reasons in view, I came to the conclusion that a missionary devoting his time to the white church, partially assisting on the native mission when required, will do a great deal in promoting the advance of the church of Christ in South Africa, to the honor and glory of God.

G. S. Khosa.

The above article speaks for itself and emphasizes the necessity of sending a white missionary to take charge of the work, at the same time illustrating the splendid opportunity before us, if we will only "buy up the opportunity." The work is already started and the pioneering done in many places. It remains now for some one to offer himself as a laborer to build upon the foundation already excavated a superstructure that shall redound to the honor and glory of God. Can that man be found? He can.

The "Latin Quarter" of Tokyo.

Tokyo, considered the educational center of the country, vibrates with student life. In addition to its Imperial University, there are two large private universities with over twelve thousand students, various technical schools, commercial schools, normal colleges, high schools, middle schools, a foreign-language school, Buddhist and missionary schools, and two hundred and thirty-four primary schools.

The presence of thousands of young students from distant parts of the country who have answered the lure of the capital has brought about a curious housing problem. Many schools provide their own dormitories; most of the provinces support one, and certain philanthropic persons make contributions. The greatest number of these Tokyo dormitories and boarding houses are located in the quarter of Kanda, or the "Latin Quarter," as the students themselves euphemistically call it. Jimbo Cho, the principal thoroughfare, with its rows and rows of little open-faced, second-hand bookshops catering to the promiscuous student taste, almost rivals the Quais of Paris. A tour of inspection will throw an interesting side light on Young Japan's mental furniture. There is invariably a section devoted to foreign books, mostly English translations of such writers as Maupassant, Zola. Baudelaire, Maeterlinck, and the Russians; Ibsen, Oscar Wilde, Shaw, and, by the way of showing the open-mindedness of the age, Schopenhauer and Conan Doyle very frequently side by side on the same shelf. Then there are volumes of theology and innumerable "Self-Helps to Practical English." It is a curious, indigestible, ill-assorted mass of literary materialthis that the Japanese student avidly swallows, like a prescribed dose, convinced that with one gulp he will become master of all Western wisdom.-Gertrude Emerson, in "Asia" Magazine for October.

District of Columbia.

Washington, October 27 .- Churches Washington have been closed against public services for a month, but the faithful few have been true to Book and have met in private homes in the different parts of the This we could do without violating the city ordinance. Between eight and sixteen met in four homes. Brethren T. F. Colvin and J. W. Gibson are our elders, than whom two more faithful men never served in such a responsible place. The churches are now open and all the members can now return and meet for sweet communion with God. Some, of course, will not return, for they have passed over the river of death. How thankful we should be that we are still spared to serve God, and then how faithful we ought to be to his words! Brethren, do not forget to write me, if you have friends here whom you desire that I call on. Address W. S. Long, 325 Seventh Street, N. E., Washington, D. C. Winchester, October 28 .- We have had now three Lord's days in which our worship has been peculiar. On account of the orders of the Board of Health, we could not have services at our church house; so we have so divided up our congregation that we could meet in the homes of the brethcould meet in the nomes of the preth-ren. In this way we have not failed in our duty. To be sure, some have not done their duty in the matter, and the church has not been able to do its full duty to man. The church is "the pillar and ground of the truth," and "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe,' and Paul urged that we forsake not the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." The day when the church assembled was the "first day of the week." It is God's command, then, that the disciples should assemble on the first day of the week for worship. This they can do and should not fail to do. Board of Health has made no effort to stop the work of the church. It has no desire to stop the preaching of the gospel or to hinder the worship. All Christians can keep up their worship and at the same time aid the Council of Defense in its efforts to conserve the health of the nation. I hope none will fail to do his duty to both God and man. These are perilous times; let us not fail in our efforts. If the task is harder, let us only increase our zeal, and God will prosper the work.—J. D. Walling.

have remained longer, but the Mussel Shoals Sanitary District, in which I live, had arranged for the testing of all cattle above six months old for tuberculosis, and I had to be at home when the test was made. I held a tent meeting near Arkdell, Ala., the last of September, which continued eight days, with five additions. There are some fine people there. The older people have been trained in denominational errors, and it will require hard work to accomplish much with them; but I am sure the young generations will, if we continue to hold the truth before them, obey the gospel, and thus a congregation can be planted there. I have not been able, on account of the influenza in my family, to hold any meetings for the last few weeks. This I regret. Thanks to our Heavenly Father, my family is better now, though my little granddaughter succumbed to the disease. I held a meeting of eight days' duration at Kilburn Schoolhouse, in Alabama, with two Denton, October 24 .- On account of the influenza, the meeting at Springdale, Ark., came to a close very abrupt-We had just begun when we were informed that everything in the town must close. This was bad on the church and bad on me, but no one was to blame. The brethren there had counted on much good being done during the meeting, and so had I. I went over to Wesley to preach on the third Sunday; and when I returned to Springdale, I found that we could not resume our meeting. I told the brethren good-by and came home. I have an earnest call to come to Deming, N. M., to do some work among the boys in the camp there and all I can in building up the cause in that part. I have agreed to go soon .- D. S. Ligon.

Important Announcement.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

I have been accepted for Y. M. C. A. relief work in France and am to report in New York on November 5. After a week's training will sail for France.

During my absence Brother W. W. Freeman, of Abilene, Texas, has consented to receive and forward funds for my part of the Japan work. There are two funds-the current expense and the lot and building funds. Brother Freeman is deeply interested in this kind of work and is well informed on missionary needs and opportunities. Those who are supporting the Japan work will please, from now on, send all offerings to W. W. Freeman, specifying the purpose of their offering. It will hardly be possible for me to write those contributing to this work, as time does not permit. I request them, therefore, to let this notice serve the purpose of a direct message from me.

I most earnestly urge the brotherhood to stand by these able and faithful Japanese workers and the good work they are doing. Let us help them to secure that suitable lot and to build a house of worship as soon as possible, so the cause may be made permanent.

Recent offerings and those on the way to me will be turned over to Brother Freeman. Mail will be forwarded from Dayton, Ohio, to my wife, at 29 Avenue B. Bayonne, N. J., where she will live with her sister.

I want to request brethren to send me the names of soldiers "over there" whom I might help in one way or another. Write me in care of Y. M. C. A. Headquarters, New York City, until further notice.

Your prayers requested.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

A False Step.

BY J. D. WALLING.

"And there was a famine in the land: and Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there; for the famine was sore in the land." (Gen 12: 10.) Does a famine in the land give a reason why one should forsake God? You answer, "No." But Abram did. God had not only promised to bless him and make his name great, but God had led him from "Ur of the Chaldees . . . into the land of Canaan." God brought him into Canaan, to give him "this land to inherit it." But when the famine came in the land, Abram, without any direction from God, arose and went into Egypt. For this occasion, at least, he took his affairs in his own hands, forsook God's leadership, and went into Egypt. And this, too, after "by faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed to go out into a place which he was to receive for an inherifance; and he went out, not knowing whither he went." But he left Canaan and went down into Egypt because there was a famine in Canaan. But was not God in Canaan? And if he would call out of Ur of the Chaldees into Canaan, would he not protect those who did his will, even though there was a famine in the land?

This false step of Abram's led to another: he was moved to lie to Pharach. This teaches the great importance of remaining in the teaching of the Father. Paul said: "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." John says: "Upon this many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him." (John 6: 66.) But David said: "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? . . . How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! How great is the sum of them! If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with thee." (Ps. 139: 7-18.) One never has to do wrong to protect his temporal interests. If he does, his interests are wrong and should not be protected. No Christian should take advantage of these perilous times to fatten his bank account. This is a time when all Christians should look well that they do not forget God and go down into Egypt. One thing is while Abram noticeable: Egypt, there is no record that he ever spoke God's name or that he made any effort to worship him. When one must do wrong to hold his position in society, then the society is wrong and he should get away from it.

Going down into Egypt was not wrong in itself, but was wrong for Abram. God was his leader, and he

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Cirls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful-Get a small bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life, has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair; besides, it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life; and if not overcome, it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store, and just How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To relieve rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uric-acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

should have gone only where God led. This only shows how dangerous it is to take the first evil step, no matter what the conditions are. This, doubtless, was a trial of Abram's faith, and at this test he was not strong. One step leads to another. Let God lead. Paul said: "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Rom. 8: 38, 39.) God said to Abram: "Walk before me, and be thou perfect." God will not bless the imperfect. Abram must return to Canaan; and as soon as he was returned there, "unto the place of the altar, which he had made there at the first: . . . there Abram called on the name of Jeho-

Christians should be ver, careful at this time that they are not led away into sin. These are very perilous times, and should cause every one to draw closer to God and "let patience have her perfect work." No sin can enter heaven; only the perfect can enter there. "Wherefore take up the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand." This we can do. No one must do wrong. All can stand. If there is famine, "stand;" if sickness, "stand;" in war, "stand;" having done all, to stand."

Nature does not bear fruit for herself, but for man. The branch does not bear the rich clusters for its own selfish appetite. Our fruitage must be for mankind. Your aim is a mistaken one if you are seeking spiritual comfort, quiet satisfaction, joy here and hereafter, just for your own little self.—Christian Herald.

DRUGGISTS PLEASE NOTE!! VICK'S VAPORUB OVERSOLD DUE TO PRESENT EPIDEMIC

Tremendous Demand Last Few Days Has Wiped Out Excess Stock That We Had Estimated Would Last Until Next January. Last Week's Orders Called For One and Three-Quarter Million Jars—To-Day's Orders Alone Amount to 932,459 Jars.

Big Shipments Are En Route to Jobbers. Until These Arrive There May Be a Temporary Shortage. All Deals Postponed—Buy in Small Lots Only.

RETAILERS CAN GET IMME-DIATE SHIPMENTS DIRECT BY PARCEL POST.

This advertisement is written on Monday. October 21. It is directed to the attention of all distributors of Vick's VapoRub, both wholesale and retall. In an emergency such as the present epidemic, our duty—and your duty—is to distribute VapoRub in the quickest possible manner to those sections stricken by influenza. We, therefore, call your careful attention to the following:

DANGER OF SHORTAGE IF SUPPLY IS NOT CONSERVED.

On October 1 we had on hand, at our factory and in twenty warehouses scattered over the country, sufficient VapoRub to last us, we thought, until January 1, allowing for a 50 per cent increase over last year's sales and not counting our daily output. This big excess stock had been accumulated during the summer months.

Then this epidemic of Spanish influenza hit us, and in the last ten days this stock has vanished. At first we thought this tremendous demand would last only a few days, but the orders have run:

 Wednesday, October 16.
 .18,504 dozen

 Thursday, October 17.
 .25,323 dozen

 Friday, October 18.
 .39,256 dozen

 Saturday, October 19.
 .45,833 dozen

 Monday, October 21.
 .77,705 dozen

Up to Saturday, October 19, we have actually shipped for this month $400,284.10, or over two million jars of VapoRub.

THE PROBLEM NOW IS TO DISTRIBUTE VAPORUB QUICKLY,

Most of this tremendous quantity is still en route to the jobbers; but freight and express are both congested nowadays, and it may be some time before this supply reaches the jobbers. In the meantime, therefore, it is necessary that we distribute, as widely as possible, the stock that we are manufacturing daily, together with that now on the jobbers' and retuilers' shelves, in order that it may get to the influenza districts quickly. Our normal output is about 4,000 dozen per day. We are putting on a night shift, but it will be a little while before that is producing.

WHAT WE ASK THE WHOLESALE DRUGGIST TO DO.

Last Saturday we notified all of our jobbers, by special delivery, as follows;

 Deals and quantity shipments of all kinds are canceled. Fill no quantity orders of any kind, whether taken by our salesmen or by your own. Sell in small lots only.

2. Order from us in as small quantities as possible. If you are out, we will try to ship a limited amount by parcel post or express and pay the charges ourselves.

3. In order to make distribution still quicker, we will ship direct to your retail customers quantities not more than three (3) dozen 30-cent size at any one shipment. 4. We are now out of the 60-cent size and will be for the next ten days.

WHAT WE ASK THE RETAIL DRUGGIST TO DO.

Buy in as small quantities as possible. If you have any quantity orders, given to the jobber's salesmen or given to our salesmen. don't bother about them; no need to write us; it is absolutely impossible to fill these orders at this time. If the jobbers in your territory are out of Vick's VapoRub, we will ship you by parcel post, prepaid, quantities not more than three (3) dozen 30-cent size in any one order. Naturally, we cannot open accounts at this time; so your check or money order for this amount must accompany order. Don't write us stating to ship through your jobber, as we then have to wait until we write this jebber and get his O.K. If you wish the goods to come through your jobber, have him order them for you.

God's Will.

BY S. W. BERRYMAN.

In all ages of the world God has made his will plain to man. He has not left man to guess at his will, but has revealed it to him in plain and unmistakable terms.

God made his will plain to Adam and Eve respecting the "tree of the knowledge of good and evil." In language adapted to their understanding he said to them: "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." (Gen. 2: 16, 17.) They thoroughly understood God's will in this matter; for when the tempter came to Eve, she quoted the will of God in almost the exact words in which it was revealed to them. (Gen. 3: 1-3.)

God made his will plain to Noah respecting the building of the ark. Noah was not left in darkness as to the kind of ark God wanted built. God was very careful, went into the details, and gave Noah the full specifications in plain and unmistakable terms. Had not God specified his will respecting the material wanted, Noah would not have known what kind of wood to use. But God said: "Make thee an ark of gopher wood." This was sufficient, and Noah knew that it excluded all other wood except "gopher wood." If God had not told Noah how many rooms he wanted in the ark, then he would have been at a loss as to the number of rooms to build. But when God said, "With lower, second, and third stories shalt thou make it," his will was clearly revealed and Noah understood it. Had not God stated the length, breadth, and height of the ark, Noah would not have known how large to make it. But God specified his will in this matter. "The length of the ark shall be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits." God told Noah to make one door in the side of the ark and one window in the top of the ark. So Noah did not have to guess at anything, but all was clearly revealed. So it is with man to-day; he is not left to guess at God's will, but it is revealed to him in terms that he can understand.

God did not just impress the apostles how they ought to act and what they ought to preach, but told them in plain and unmistakable terms: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even un'to the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 18-20.) "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved: but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Language could not be plainer than this. The apostles are told what to preach, and people are told what to do to be saved. Luke, in recording what the Savior said about the commission, said: "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." (Luke 24: 46, 47.) The apostles are told to preach the gospel to "every creature"-" all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Not many days after the ascension of Christ we find the twelve in the city of Jerusalem preaching God's will, the gospel. Three thousand heard, believed, and obeyed the will of God and obtained remission of past sins. (Acts 2: 1-42.)

Not only has God's will been made plain in every age of the world, but God has demanded that man do his will. He demanded obedience of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden; of Noah, Abraham, and of all others in past ages; and he demands obedience of us to-day. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.) Man can do God's will, for his entrance into heaven depends upon it. (Rev. 22: 14.) This reveals the fact that God's will is reasonable; that he demands nothing of man that he cannot do. (Rom. 12: 1.) Since God's will has been made plain and is reasonable, we are without excuse if we do not obey. (Rom. 1: 20.)

The blessings that await those who do God's will are beyond human comprehension. (Matt. 25: 20-23.) Human language is inadequate to reveal their coming glory. We are told that we shall be crowned with an incorruptible crown (1 Cor. 9: 24-27), a crown of life (James 1: 12), a crown of righteousness (2 Tim. 4: 6-8), a crown of glory (1 Pet. 5: 4). We shall have (Matt. 11: 28; Heb. 4: 9, 10.) We shall see and know each other. (1 Cor. 13: 12; Matt. 8: 11.) Our transformation shall be complete. (Rom. 7: 27; Dan. 12: 2, 3; 2 Cor. 3: 18; Phil. 3: 20, 21; Col. 3: 3, 4; 1 John 3: 2; 1 Cor. 15: 51-57.) shall have eternal life. (John 10: 10; 11: 25, 26; 2 Cor. 5: 1-6.) There shall be no more tears of sorrow. (Isa. 25: 8; Rev. 21: 4.) We shall never be hungry or thirsty again. (Rev. 7: 13-17; Rev. 21; 5, 6; 22; 17.) We shall be readmitted to the tree of life. (Gen. 3: 22-24; Rev. 2: 7; 22: 1, 2.) We shall be beyond the reach of the second death. (Rev. 2: 11.) We shall eat of the hidden manna and have a new name. (John 6: 27, 33, 35; Rev. 2: 17.) We shall have the morning star. (Rev. 2: 8: 22: 16.) We shall be clothed in white and confessed in the presence of God and the angels. (Rev. 3: 4, 5.) We shall be pillars in God's eternal temple. (Rev. 3: 12.) We shall sit down with Jesus in his throne. (Rev. 3: 20, 21.) We shall never see night or death again. (Rev. 21: 4; 22: 5.) Everything about us shall be forever new. (Rev. 21: 5,#6.) We shall be forever free from the defilements of sin. (Rev. 21: 23-27.) We shall inherit all things. (1 Cor. 3: 21-23; Rev. 21: 7.) We shall be forever satisfied. (2 Cor. 5: 1-4; Ps. 17: 15.) May the God of peace bless us to do his will, that we may inherit these blessings beyond this veil of

Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert-vigorous and vivacious-a good, clear skin; a natural, rosy complexion, and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood. If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place!

Instead of the thousands of sickly, anæmic-looking men, women, and girls with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "run-downs," "brain fags," and pessimists, we should see a optimistic throng of rosycheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking, each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water, with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys, and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening, and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds, and particularly those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarka-ble change in both health and appearance awaiting those who practice in-ternal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood, while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.

Brother Nichol's Meeting at McMinnville.

BY ALBERT SEITZ.

On October 6, the first Lord's day in the month, Brother C. R. Nichol, of Denton, Texas, began a protracted meeting with the church at McMinnville, Tenn. He continued until Friday night, October 11, when the meeting, together with the schools and all other institutions and places where crowds are accustomed to collect, was closed by order of the City Council on account of the prevailing epidemic of influenza.

It is to be regretted that Brother Nichol could not continue this meeting indefinitely, and, personally, I am very sorry he had to stop so soon, for his discourses were doing me good. I have heard similar statements from numbers of others, with the hope expressed that he might return at a future date.

His general theme while here was "Discipline in the Church," presenting the Bible teaching on the subject of clean living by those calling themselves "Christians," and the absolute necessity of the church's dealing with all cases of departure from duty on the part of members, reclaiming those who would repent and withdrawing from those who would not, if we would have the approval of God, and showing from the Scriptures that dead material, if allowed to remain, would infect and destroy the whole body. "Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump," asks Paul of the Corinthians.

Man is so constituted that he naturally rebels at adverse criticism of himself; yet nothing else is so salutary as this, if given and received in the proper spirit. One who is beyond the reach of admonition is beyond the reach of help. His case is hopeless. He is lost already. Admonition is to be given in the spirit of meekness and love. The best definition of the kind of leve God has for his children, and that they are to have for each other. is that given by our lamented brother, David Lipscomb: "Love is that principle which causes one to seek the greatest ultimate good of the object loved." It is in perfect keeping with this love to give pain and cause suffering where necessary in order to heal and save.

The stretcher bearer on the battlefield, as he looks down upon the mangled, bleeding body of a dear comrade and friend, knows it will add temporarily to his anguish to be removed from where his crumpled form lies to the hospital behind the firing line; but he does not on this account say, "I love him so I cannot endure the thought of increasing his pain and suffering by moving him." and proceed to compose his limbs as best he can, stanch as best he may the hemorrhage fast draining his life away, give him an anodyne, and go away and leave him to sink promptly into the arms of Death. That would not be love. No, he does not leave his friend to perish there from ghastly wounds, from shock and loss of blood, but because he loves him he helps to place his tortured body on a stretcher, after administering what present aid he can, and bears him to a place where his life may be saved.

Of course, all this is done with the greatest gentleness and tenderness compatible with the circumstances. So with the spiritually wounded. The man with the love of God in his heart and the spirit of God in his soul does not leave a wounded brother to perish in the darkness and the horror of No Man's Land, but strives to save him by bearing him back to the safety and security of the great spiritual hospital where the Supreme Surgeon and Physician mends and heals the broken hearts and wounded souls of men.

Such a man I believe Brother Nichol to be. I do not believe he seeks to wound because he likes to give pain; but where it is necessary to wound in order to heal, he does not shrink. In delivering God's hortatory and minatory messages where they are applicable, he is but doing the duty imposed upon him by God. He cannot afford to do less.

I thank Brother Nichol for my part of these messages. Were I to kick against them, I would not be kicking against the preacher, but against God himself, a thought to make the blood run cold and shake the soul with terror.

Baptists vs. Campbellites. No. 2. BY M. S. MASON.

On page 5 of the pamphlet Mr. Bandy defines the church as follows: "A church of Christ is an assembly of baptized believers associated together in the doctrine and fellowship of the gospel." We accept this definition, but wonder if he can sustain his definition with his ante-Pentecost establishment.

On page 6 he gives several definitions of the term "kingdom of heaven," all of which are correct for all practical purposes. He does this to approach the term as used in the prophecy of origin of the church. He says in this connection it is used to mean God's organized spiritual commonwealth. He quotes Isa. 9: 6, 7; Dan. 2: 44; and Luke 16: 16. He uses these properly at this time, with the exception of Luke 16: 16, by the use of which is forecast an ante-Pentecost argument. He makes several statements regarding the relation of the church and kingdom, all of which are true as far as we are concerned. On page 7, however, his argument for the term "ekklesia," meaning the church as a whole, is wrong. The real use of the term as set forth by Mr. Pendleton in his "Manual" was given in the last article. So we notice Mr. Bandy's interpretation, which is also that of Ben M. Bogard, perhaps the leading debater among the Baptists to-day. He says when the term "church" is used as not referring to the local congregation, the term is used in a "figurative sense"-that is, it is referred to as a class. His illustration is this: We speak of "a lion" as an individual; then we speak of "the lion," not as composed of several individual lions, but as the name of the species to which all lions belong. So the term "church," when not referring to the individual congregations, means the class of which these individual bodies are members. Now, I wish to file three objections to this. First, it is against scholarship. Mr. Pendleton, author of "Pendleton's Baptist Manual," opposes it, as I quoted in full in last article. Mr. Crudens, author of "Crudens' Complete Concordance," recognizes no such definition, but, instead, gives as his second definition: "All the elect of God, of what nation soever, from the beginning to the end of the world, who make but one body, whereof Jesus Christ is the Head." (Col. 1: 18.) This upholds the identity of the covenants, but it approves Mr. Pendleton's idea of the church, meaning the "aggregate of the redeemed." Mr. Young, his "Analytical Concordance," makes no distinction, simply giving the one definition: "That which is called out." Of course it may apply to the local congregation, or that part of the "called out," or the entire membership in Christ, or all the "called out." Second, there is no need of assigning a figurative meaning to the term "ekklesia" in any capacity. As a gathering, the church is literal in the aggregate the same as in a congregational sense. Third, it makes Christ a polygamist. The real bride of Jesus Christ is the local congregation, according to this theory. One congregation is as much a definite entity as another. Therefore there are as many brides as there are local congregations. Since there are a plurality of congregations, there are a plurality of wives. A plurality of wives means a state of polygamy. So Christ is a polygamist. As to a unit, according to this theory, Christ is only married to one bride, or church, as a class. This would be his only defense against the charge of polygamy. I could marry a dozen women and make the same defense, saying I had only married one as a class-that is, I married "woman" as a species.

He has done very well on the relation of church and kingdom, but he kept on till he spoiled it in a further discussion on page 7. He was not content to confine his error on "ekkle-sia" to the New Testament. He must make the same on the Old Testament. In showing the relation of church and kingdom, he illustrates it with the twelve tribes of Israel, stating that "there were twelve tribes, but one kingdom, each tribe separate and distinct from the other, occupying its own territory independently, without infringing upon the rights and privileges of another." In this Mr. Bandy wants to further impress the idea of the local congregation's being "the church." Its occupying its own territory and not infringing on rights of others is illustrative of congregational independence. But if each tribe were an independent unit, why did they not each have a high priest, a king, a temple, a tabernacle, etc.? Were there twelve nations or one nation? If Mr. Bandy had searched every form of government, civil and divine, he could not have found a poorer illustration. The Jews had one king; we have one King. They had one nation; we have one spiritual nation. They had one law; we have one law. They had one temple; we have one temple. For geographical purposes, they were located as tribes in tribal boundaries, each looking after his common religious interest as we look after ours, and not interfering with each other, as we as congregations do not interfere with each other, each keeping the common demands in its own geographic sphere. Mr. Bandy submits Matt. 18: 17; 1 Cor. 1; 2; and 1 Cor. 16: 19 as additional evidence to substantiate his proposition. These only refer to the use of "ekklesia" in a congregational sense. Why didn't he quote Matt. 16: 18; Acts 20: 28; or Eph. 5: 25? He submits this "ekklesia" argument as his first reason for being a Baptist. All there is in it is independent congregational government and close communion. The former is not exclusively Baptist, and the latter he spoiled by his illustration. The Jewish tribes did not stay at home and eat, but ate at the temple; but he eats at home and nowhere else, and expects each member of every other congregation to do the same.

His first reason is no reason at all. Mount Hermon Holy Ground.

Mount Hermon, sacred mountain of Syria, rises, a silent sentinel, above the fruitful fields and vineyards of Lebanon and Damascus. Cut off from its range of the Anti-Libanus by the deep valley of Barada, it has kept its lonely vigil through the ages. The Hebrews called it "Hermit." According to legend, the wicked angels in their fall from Paradise landed on Hermon and gave it its name.

Like a gray-haired giant the old mountain holds its white-crowned head above the clouds. At sunset these clouds turn to rose and gold, the mountain top flaming like a torch against the sky. As the sunlight fades the evening mists wrap old Hermon's head in veils of gray and white. "The white-haired old man of the mountain has donned his nightcap for the night," the people of the surrounding plains tell you.

The mountain's foot is covered with the green of oaks, poplars, and dense brush, with an occasional luxuriant vineyard. The wines of Damascus are famous throughout the Orient. The mountain springs keep the valleys well supplied with water. Higher up are the ruins of former temples, built centuries ago, their entrances facing the rising sun. In the old days the pious folks of the valley climbed the mountain side to worship on their holy ground. The temples are of various nations, including Greek, Roman, and Hebrew.

David sang of Hermon and the cooling breath of the winds blowing from its icy summits. As the giver of all good things, of wine and cool water, of timber and olives and breezes in summer days, of tales of wonder and angels for the winter nights, the people of old looked to Hermon as a storehouse of treasure set up by a benficent Deity.-Exchange.

What Is Nuxated Iron?

Physician Explains-Says Public Ought to Know What They Are Taking—Practical Advice on What To Do To Build Up Your Strength, Power and Endurance and Increase the Red Blood Corpuscles.

The fact that Nuxated Iron is today being used by over three million people annually and that so many physicians are prescribing it as a tonic, strength and blood builder in weak, nervous, run-down conditions has led to an investigation of its merits by designated physicians and others whose reports should be of great importance to the public generally. Among these is the statement made by Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.) New York, and Westchester County Hospital, who says: "When one patient after another began asking my opinion of Nuxated Iron, I resolved to go thoroughly into the subject and find out for myself whether or not it possessed the real value claimed by its manufacturers and attested to by so many prominent people. find out for misen whether or has a product restand attested to by so many prominent people. This is exactly what I believe every honest, conscientious physician should do before prescribing or lending his endorsement to any product whatsoever. If an article is worthless we practitioners ought to be the first to know of it and if it is efficacious we are in duty bound to recommend it for the welfare of our patients. A study of the composition of the Nuxated from formula so impressed me with the therapeutic efficacy of the product that I immediately tested it in a number of obstinate cases. So quickly did it increase the strength, energy and endurance of the patients to whom it was administered that I became firmly convinced of its remarkable value as a tonic and blood builder. I have since taken it vinced of its remarkable value as a tonic and blood builder. I have since taken it myself with excellent results. There are thousands of delicate, nervous, run-down folks who need just such a preparation as this but do not know what to take. Therefore I have urgently suggested the wide-spread publication of the sworn statement of the composition of its formula so that the public may know what they are taking. This complete formula is now to be found in newspapers throughout the country. It is composed principally of organic iron in the form of iron peptonate of a special specific standard and glycerophosphates which is one of the most costly tonic ingredients cific standard and glycerophosphates which is one of the most costly tonic ingredients known. To the credit of the manufacturers it may be said that they use the most expensive form of iron peptonate, whereas by employing other makes they could have put the same quantity of actual iron in the tablets at less than one-fourth the cost and by using metallic iron they could have reduced the cost to less than one-twelfth, but by thus cheapening the product they would undenotedly have impaired its therapeutic efficacy. In my opinion a careful examination of this formula by any physician or pharmacist should mula by any physician or pharmacist should convince him that Nuxated Iron is to be placed among the very highest class and most strictly ethical preparations known to medical science. It excels anything I have ever used for building up the system and increasing the red blood corpuscles thereby enriching and fortifying the blood against the ravages of

Messages from Behind the Storm.

That God has spoken to the world during the past four years of bitter carnal warfare is admitted by every thoughtful student of the times. As in days of old, his messages have been accompanied by the whirlwind, by the lightning of human fury, by the thunder of human fear. From behind the awful storm of strife, destruction, and death have come lessons of far-reaching importance to both saved and unsaved. Surely both classes should have learned that life is more than play; that there is no time nor place for frivolity, but there is great need for seriousness of purpose and for work "while it is called to-day." Before the war the paramount question in many a heart was, "How much ean I get out of the world?" God's message to us from behind the storm is that we should reverse the question and ask, "How much can I give to the world?" It is to be hoped that we have learned this lesson even through pain and tears. Now more than ever we should understand that no one can take the possession of temporal blessings for granted. Our spirit of self-complacency should be broken up. Mighty nations no less than individuals should appreciate the fact that not one of them can live to or for itself. There are common interests that must be recognized and protected. God's messages during the war have inveighed heavily against the spirit of sloth and indifference. "Thou fool" has been spoken with a new and startling emphasis against the man who dares to claim, "I have much goods laid up for many years." The man given to waste and extravagance is no longer a loyal citizen of Christ's kingdom or of any other. Let us hope that these high-heaven lessons have not been given in vain, but that multitudes will bow to the will of the Lord, who is "slow to anger, and great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked." We should not forget that "the Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet."

When "Joy Cometh in the Morning."

It does not require a prophet to tell that peace is near. We can feel it in the atmosphere. As we write we cherish the glad hope that the end of cruel warfare is now a matter of days, if not of hours. When peace comes, what shall be the attitude of God's children? That we shall be happy and grateful is assured. But what about the performance of our duties when "joy cometh in the morning?" Will we suffer a relapse into that same old spirit of indifference and indulge again in the frivolous pleasures of this life, forgetting the things that are unseen and eternal? I cherish a brighter thought. Surely God's chastening rod has not been felt for naught. We shall profit by this discipline. "After the storm comes the calm," we say; but let us not forget the debris. There will be floating across the sea of our lives a great mass of human wreckage that must not only be patched up, but completely restored wherever possible. Bruised bodies and broken hearts must be healed. The power of the gospel without addition or subtraction must be felt. Christians must pray and work for the greatest victory of the war, the victory over Satan in the hearts of the people. To do this work, we need no agency but the church, which is "the pillar and ground of the truth." But the church cannot go "over the top" without an earnest, consecrated effort upon the part of all its members. And that is what we plead for. My voice is only one of thousands. There are other minds filled with the same thought and other hearts charged with the same sense of responsibility. There are so many fine thoughts and timely suggestions in an article submitted to this paper by John R. Gunn that we give it to our readers. Without indorsing every sentiment in it, we can but appreciate its aggressive spirit and well-meaning purpose.

Call for a Post-War Revival.

Brother Gunn, who is pastor of the First Baptist Church at Fort Wayne, Ind., makes a plea for a nation-wide revival in the following article:

Thoughtful people everywhere realize that the return to peace will bring us face to face with conditions, needs, opportunities, and responsibilities not less serious than those we have been facing during the war. In recent months there has been much talk about post-war problems—political, industrial, social, and religious. The governments of the nations at war have for many months had specially appointed commissions considering ways and means for economic and industrial reconstruction following the war. With deep concern and high hopes the leaders in all the great religious denominations are making plans on a large scale for their after-war activities. There is a profound consciousness everywhere that the world will never be again what it was before the war; that we are passing through the gravest crisis ever experienced by the human race; that this is the most potential hour of all history.

In view of these things, the writer has for some time felt that in some way the Christian people of America should be led to turn their prayers and hopes unitedly toward a great nation-wide post-war revival of religion. As I have thought and prayed about the matter, I have experienced a deepening conviction as to the need of such a revival. Let me set forth in brief outline some of the reasons and considerations that have led me to this conviction.

1. More than anything else such a revival would serve to clear up the atmosphere for the right kind of thinking about the new conditions and problems we are now facing, especially with reference to the revision of the creeds and policies of the church. It would safeguard us against the danger of being turned away from "the old Book and the old paths." It would bring about a certitude of faith, a balance of mind and conviction that would give us great fortitude and steadfastness in the presence of the chaos and confusion brought on by the present world upheaval.

2. Such a revival would renew and strengthen our devotion and attachment to the church. During the war the church has freely given of its strength and means to foster the war programs of outside agencies. Many have failed to recognize this, and consequently they have magnified these agencies and minimized the church. Besides, these agencies have necessarily been made most conspicuous before the minds of our young men in the army, and in such a way as to lessen their former regard for church affiliations and distinctions. Along with all this there has been much talk about merging all denominations into one or turning over their control to some sort of federated body. These things, all taken together, have undoubtedly had a tendency to detach, if not to allenate, many people from the church. I have no fear that the church is going to be forsaken or that it is going to be superseded by other agencies; but this confidence does not blind my eyes to the danger suggested by the above considerations. If the church maintains its place of primacy in the hearts and affections of the people, it must not stand aside in this hour of opportunity. If the church is to conserve its forces and continue its great missionary program, local and foreign, it must hold and strengthen the allegiance and devotion of its constituency. Nothing would enable the church to do this so fully and completely as an old-fashioned revival of religion.

3. Such a revival would help in a great way to prepare the church for its post-war opportunities. These are coming upon us faster than we realize and in ways which we have not suspected. It would, therefore, be difficult at this time to catalogue them. But of one we are sure, and that is the one with which the church is most directly and deeply concerned—namely, the immediate and speedy evangelization of the world. To carry forward this great program of world evangelization in a way commensurate with the need and opportunity is going to call for tremendous effort and unprecedented sacrifice. Our best preparation for this mighty task would be a revival of spiritual religion. Revivals always foster the evangelistic and missionary spirit and always create an atmosphere favorable

4. A post-war revival would do more than anything else to restore us to our normal feelings and soberness of mind. We have all been more or less excited by the war. In this state of excitement many have become reckless in their thought and speech. It has caused them to "loose wild tongues that have not God in awe." The country has been flooded with profanity and the clamor of hot and angry words. To some the war has seemed to justify the setting aside of old ideas and standards of right and wrong. Some glory in their hatred of the enemy. The war seems to have engendered in them a spirit of bitterness and vindictiveness. As a remedy for all this, I can think of nothing that would be more effective than a revival of religion.

5. A post-war revival would furnish a balm of healing for the wounds and sorrows caused by the war. This is a day of multiplied sorrows throughout the whole world. The countries of Europe and Asia are overwhelmed with unspeakable sorrow. Devastation, tragedies, horrors, indescribable sufferings, and death are on every hand. Thousands of our own boys have fallen on the battle field, and this has brought grief and gloom to thousands of American homes. Along with all this has come the influenza epidemic which has ravaged the whole country, spreading sorrow and desolation everywhere. Religion is the only thing that can heal all these wounds; and that being true, a revival of religion following the war would be most opportune.

6. Not least among the benefits of such a revival would be the creation of a warm spiritual atmosphere in which to receive our boys when they return from the war. Religious influences have been deeply impressed upon our boys In the army. Most of them have thought more seriously about religion than ever before. Their hearts have been made warm and tender toward religion. Religion has become real to them, and has been the one vital, sustaining force in their lives as they have faced the perils of war. Coming out from the warm, wide-awake, and stirring atmosphere to which they have become accustomed in the camps and trenches, it would be a spiritual calamity to have them come back into a formal, dull, and cold atmosphere in the home churches. Besides, upon their return home, our boys will need as never before the right kind of religious influences during that period when they are becoming readjusted to their normal life and when at the same time they will be facing the new ideas, conditions, and problems of the new era that will follow the war. Here is a most urgent reason why we should plan for a revival of old-fashioned religion—to provide the right kind of atmosphere for the home-coming of our boys.

These are some of the reasons why I believe we should turn our thoughts and prayers toward a nation-wide revival following the war. I believe we should in some way plan for a series of revival services to be held simultaneously in the churches of all denominations throughout the whole country. Simultaneous meetings have been successfully carried on in local communities, and I see no reason why the plan could not be broadened out to take in the whole nation. It would be a fine thing if every church would observe a week of prayer and thanksgiving as soon as peace is declared. A simultaneous series of evangelistic services might be held immediately following the week of prayer or at some future time. It would probably be better to set the date for these services several months in the future. If the idea meets with general favor, I am sure some practical plan can be devised for bringing about such a united nation-wide effort. I am suggesting this idea with the hope that it will call forth some discussion by others which will lead on to the formulation of whatever plan may be necessary.

In the meantime, whether a general organized effort is made in this direction or not, let me ask all who read this to join in earnest prayer to God that he may open the windows of heaven and pour out a revival blessing upon our beloved nation. May I suggest that you form a private prayer circle among your friends and urge them to pray to this end? I am confident there are many earnest Christians throughout the country already praying to this end. If you are, or if you will now join in such a prayer, I should like to have your name and some word from you concerning the things set forth above. Let it be remembered that revivals come only through prayer. The history of all revivals clearly reveals this fact. All history touching God's people and his work confirms the statement that prayer is fundamental and essential to real success in all God-saving effort.

Whatever conclusion our readers may draw from this well-written article, it is to be hoped that each Christian will be inspired to start a revival in his own heart and among his own people. "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

It is not yourself only you will serve by the formation of hopeful views and habits; you will be a perpetual cordial and tonic to all those among whom your lot is cast.—Disraeli.

The End.

I have fared far. Into the early dawn,
In the fair hours of youth, with sword in hand,
I set forth on my journey. Land on land
I sought—now hither and now thither drawn—
And lo! the sun is setting; and anon
The dark will come. But not as I had planned
The ending of my day is. For I stand
With shattered sword and banner soiled and torn.
Not as a conquerer, not as hero, I Return at last. See, I have turned aside
Into a wind-swept way, a place unknown,
Battling with foes unseen of mortal eye.
Lord, only thou wilt know I bravely died;

Thou, too, wert in a desert place alone.

BY S. H. HALL.

Dark, dark, indeed, would life's weary way here be, were it not for the voice of our Heavenly Father gently speaking to us through the one Book he has left with us-viz... the Bible! The facts are, if you take this light from us, life, I care not from what angle viewed, is a most miserable tragedy; for man is wholly unable, with the combined strength of money and intellect, to so situate himself here that his whole castle does not, sooner or later, go down in wreck and ruin and soon he is forgotten. Let the home be ever so lovely; let love's ties there be ever so tender; let love meet love in the gentle look of love's light beaming from every eye, in the touch of every hand, and in the cooling caress of every lip; yet this all must end. It lasts for only a moment's time, comparatively speaking, and the yearnings of man's inner nature is left unmet-life ends painfully incomplete. As stated before, if only to this life we have to look, I care not what home you consider, life here is an awful tragedy.

This thought has been driven home to me as never before in the last few days, due to the sorrows through which one of our members, with her splendid husband and devoted mother, has had to go.

Quite a number of our readers are acquainted with our Sister Sewell, the widowed daughter-in-law of Brother E. G. Sewell, the senior editor of the Gospel Advocate, whose only daughter, Edith, married William Cole Jones, the leading editorial writer for the Atlanta Journal, to which union there was born, May 17, 1909, their only child, Emily Sewell Jones, who suddenly was taken from them on October 30, 1918. Sister Sewell has been making her home with her daughter since moving to this city several years ago.

Hundreds of homes I have visited, but none have I entered in whose atmosphere love's gentle breezes were more continually felt than in this home, and in the joys of which home a child played a larger part. Emily was such a bright, sweet child. So bright and sparkling were her eyes, so sweet every expression on her face, that, without any effort on her part, she got a hold of those whom she met with an impression they could not forget. A light was she, indeed, that was seen and felt, in her Sunday school, in her literary school, on the playgrounds, and in the home, in an unusual way. How her father will miss her in his strolls now in the woods after quitting his desk and seeking rest and diversion from his daily duties! For, in these glad retreats, Emily was his almost constant companion, and greatly did she interest him because of the interest she took in nature-the birds, the flowers, the trees, and, above all, nature's God. Then there is the grandmother, into whose life Emily came just at a time when she needed her most because of the loss of her devoted husband. I doubt if ever a grandchild meant more to a grandmother than Emily meant to Sister Sewell. And what this death meant to the mother, all true mothers who have had a similar experience know; but I doubt if other earthly beings know-we can only wonder. To say my heart goes out for them all is putting it mildly. How I wish I could take some of the serrow, some of the grief, and bear it for them! And weak and helpless we feel when called upon to speak words of comfort to our friends under such circumstances.

But thus far I have spoken only from the temporal side of life; thus far I have thought of Emily only as the brighteyed, sweet, attractive idol in the home and in the community. This Emily is with us no more. This Emily can be to us now only a child of memory. We must now turn to the brighter side and think of the Emily we did not and could not see with our natural eyes. And may it not be true that we thought of the former Emily too much and of the latter too little while she was with us, and that one of the blessings that comes to us in this sore trial is that we are now forced to think of her in a truer and larger sense? Paul says: "Wherefore we faint not; but though our outward man is decaying, yet our inward man is renewed day by day; . . . while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen [the body, or outward man] are temporal; but the things which are not seen [the soul, the inner man] are eternal." (2 Cor. 4: 16-18.) The real Emily we saw not while she was here, though she walked and talked with us; we saw only the body of clay in which she lived. See 2 Cor. 5: 1, 2 in connection with the verses cited in the closing words of the preceding chapter. Angels took full possession of her so soon as she left the body, and, consciously, she is with them right now, perfectly happy and contented. "See that ye despise not one of these little ones," says Christ; "for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 18: 10.) In death the "spirit returneth unto God who gave it," says Solomon in Eccles. 12: 7, and the angels are the ones who bear this spirit to God. (Luke 16: 22.)

Indeed, we must stop thinking of death in the way we are inclined to think of it while here in the flesh. Children and saints pass, by way of death, into a state by far better than this world in which we live; hence, for them we should not allow ourselves to be swallowed up with sorrow. That sorrow we cannot help, under such circumstances, our Father in heaven knows, but he earnestly entreats us not to let it be like the sorrow of hopeless souls. "But we would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them that fall asleep; that ye sorrow not, even as the rest, who have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him." (See 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14.) In speaking of children, Christ says: "For to such belongeth the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 19: 13.) May God help us to comprehend, with a living faith, Emily's real condition just now. Death is precious in Jehovah's sight, says David, to those fitted for it. (Ps. 116: 15.) "To depart and be with Christ," says Paul, "is very far better" than living here. (See Phil. 1: 23.) Will we not, then, stop thinking of her as dead, but rather as having ceased to die and really beginning to live? How true it is that "She had guessed not of the darkness

Till she saw the breaking day;
Caught no glimpse of death's dark shadows
Till they changed and fled away!"

How much we need just now the grace that enables us to keep our thoughts from things impossible and ever fixed on the things we can do! When we think of her as in almost perfect health, the thought of her being taken from us in an instant, almost, is hard to bear. But why stay with this? It is beyond our power to undo what has been done. To call her back is beyond our power, but go to her we can unmistakably do. (2 Sam. 12: 23.) And are we to get no good from such trials? Is it not true that sometimes "every leaf of earthly joy must drop before a new and divine blossom visits the soul?" It were possible for us, if she had remained with us, to have continued to think of her merely as the Emily we saw and not in this larger way. Now, would we call her back if we could? Here let us think soberly. I hardly think I would. I would be afraid. This old world is abnormal since sin came into it. Man here, at best, cannot be surrounded with true nature's conditions; but where she is now is a perfect state. No, I could not say, "Emily, come back," unless I absolutely knew what the future, if she had continued here, had in store for her. I am forced to say to the loved ones whose hearts are sore:

"Weep not for her-in her springtime she flew To the land where the wings of the soul are unfurled; And now, like a star beyond evening's cold dew, Looks radiantly down on the tears of the world."

We will know her when we meet her; of this there cannot be a doubt. The facts are, she is now conscious of the fact that father, mother, and grandmother are still here. She thinks of you every day; and if she could only speak to us now, the one thing, above all others, she would impress upon our hearts would be to be certain to prepare to go, when our journey ends, where she now is.

To bury ourselves in the love-light of God's eternal truth, there is nothing so natural as for us, with James Whitcomb Riley, to say;

> I cannot say—and will not say That she is dead. She is just away! With a cheery smile And a wave of the hand She has wandered into an unknown land, And left us dreaming how very fair It needs must be since she lingers there. And you—O you, who the wildest pain For the old-time step and the glad return, Think of her faring on, as dear In the love of There as the love of Here. Think of her still as the same, I say, She is not dead-she is just away.

May God help us in embracing "the hope set before us: which we have as an anchor of the soul, a hope both sure and steadfast and entering into that which is within the veil; whither as a forerunner Jesus entered for us." 6: 18-20.) Let us see Christ at his Father's right hand, to continually think of us and tell his Father all about our needs and sore trials here. (See Heb. 9: 24.) Earthly friends could forget us, but never could he forget us! And with just such a Savior, remember, Emily now is; and if an angel with a message to mother she should send, that angel, when it entered the home, would say:

> "Tell her how filled and thrilled I am, Tell her how wrapped in boundless calm; Tell her I soar, I sing, I shine— Tell her the heaven of heavens is mine."

The Dividing Line.

BY F. W. SMITH.

As a substitute for Bible authority for the practice of demanding candidates to relate "an experience of grace" and calling on the church to vote as to whether or not they can be baptized, here is what Brother Moore gives us:

I am real glad to see Brother Smith narrow down to just two principles advocated by Baptists-an experience of grace and voting on a candidate before baptism. I will have to tell Brother Smith again the condition or state of a believer in God. Faith is the dividing line between the child of God and the alien sinner. On the one side he is condemned; on the other, he is justified.

One quotation would satisfy most people, but to put it beyond cavil I will give two or three. "He that believeth beyond cavil I will give two or three. "He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." (John 3: 18.) You elaim that one must believe in Christ before he is baptized, and if so, you must acknowledge him justified, and not This is in harmony with Paul's answer to the jailer when he asked the question, "What must I do to be saved?" "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." (Acts 16: 31.) If children of God, then you certainly would baptize them if they should come demanding baptism at your hands. If children of Satan, would you baptize them? Whose child do you baptize, anyway? Brother Smith, you cannot answer this question by yes or no, can you?

Anyway, you will not baptize either one till he makes known to you his evidence of repentance and faith. Both these are graces of the Spirit wrought in his soul by the Holy Spirit.

You, by your questions, will ascertain whether he is qualified for baptism. Upon his testimony to you, if favorable, you get your consent, and you determine to baptize him. In other words, you pass on his fitness for baptism. Now, do you do right, or according to the Scriptures, in deciding on the fitness of your candidate for baptism? That is your plan or way.

Now, if a Baptist church passes on the fitness of a candidate for baptism, would it not be a safer plan than yours?

Prov. 24: 6 says: "In multitude of counselors there is safety." In Prov. 15: 22 it says "it is established." To vote on a measure is to determine, or express, choice in the matter. You do this with every candidate you baptize. If you are scriptural, so are we; for that is what Baptist churches do before they baptize a candidate—the church by voice giving their consent to his fitness. If scriptural for one, it must be scriptural for one hundred to do so.

The example that Brother Smith makes fun of is still in the Book and stands as good testimony to this voting. Did not Peter put the question of his acceptance for baptism in the negative? Peter said: To be sure he did. "Who can [you six Jewish Christians] forbid water," etc. It has the same meaning as to say: "All who favor the measure, say I.

Smith does know this, but to acknowledge it would be the yielding of his position on the design of baptism.

This one case will prove both propositions. heard them speak with tongues, and magnity God." Following this, Peter put the question of their fitness for baptism before those believing ones with him. No one objected. Peter, therefore, commanded them to be baptized.

First, the Holy Spirit came on them, and they spake with tongues and magnified God. You say no one but You say no one but Christians can have the Holy Spirit, and we both say that none but children of God can magnify God. Then Peter said: "Seeing these have received the Holy Spirit, as well as we, who can forbid [or object to] water," etc.

I rest my case on this scripture.

I know God changeth not.

These Cesareans received the Holy Spirit.

3. They magnified God.

4. All this preceded their baptism.

5. All other New Testament conversions will harmonize with these.

It is funny to hear my friend talk about a physical miracle; in fact, it appears they only have a physical religion and cannot comprehend spiritual things, for they are spiritually discerned.

Friend Smith claims there was no church at Cesarea to hear Cornelius' experience. Well, grant it, who commanded Peter to go? The Lord, the head of the church But Peter had six Baptists with him, and they approved Peter's act: that was five more than you ever asked to do so in any of your bantisms.

Peter had a direct commission from the head of the church. The same is true of every New Testament baptism in the absence of a church. The head of the church church. is yet its head. The issue between you and the Bible is on is yet its head. The issue petween you and the Bible is on the design of baptism as held by you and your people. Baptism or no salvation with you, while Baptists treat baptism as all ordinances. Ordinances declare something. All orders are declarative; they were never designed to save men, neither to help save, as conditions of pardon. Jesus Christ is the only name given under heaven to save not Jesus Christ and baptism, nor anything else.

Instead of addressing himself to the issue before him, he starts out with the following:

I will have to tell Brother Smith again the condition or state of a believer in God. Faith is the dividing line between the child of God and the alien sinner. On the one side he is condemned; on the other, he is justified.

With reference to the first sentence of this information, I must say it is too indefinite to be information at all. There are two kinds of believers-viz., the obedient believer and the faith-alone man; and until our brother informs us to which he refers, it will be impossible to determine the condition or state of his believer. For his consideration, I will specify the two classes of believers and ask him to designate which kind he had in mind. "Nevertheless even of the rulers many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess it, lest they should be put out of the synagogue; for they love the glory that is of men more than the glory that is of God." (John 12: 42, 43.) "But thanks be to God, that, whereas ye were servants of sin, ye became obedient from the heart to that form of teaching whereunto ye were delivered; and being made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness." (Rom. 6: 17, 18.) Take your choice, my brother, designate your believer, and I, as well as yourself, will know his "condition or state." While on this point I will ask my friend this question: Would you baptize such believers as those mentioned in John 12: 42, 43? If you would not, please tell us why you would not.

Now we will come to my friend's "dividing line." He says: "Faith is the dividing line between the child of God and the alien sinner." Is that so? Whence cometh this information? Not from the word of God, I am sure. The dividing line between the child of God and the alien sinner is the line between the world and the kingdom of God. Faith is the thing that takes one across that line. On one side of that line the individual is in a state of condemnation, and on the other he is in a state of justification. Faith is progressive, a principle of growth, and a child of God, so long as he holds on to his faith, cannot get on one side of it. He begins in faith, lives in faith, and dies in faith. Our brother's effort here is to have one justified before and without an obedient faith, but the word of God is in his way. His one quotation-viz., John 3: 18-does not, by any means, prove his doctrine of justification by "faith alone." The word "believeth" here must be given its comprehensive use, including obedience, in order to harmonize with the general teachings of the Bible on the subject. If Brother Moore had cited us to verse 36 of this same chapter (John 3: 36, A. R. V.), it would have destroyed his position. It reads as follows: "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life; but he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life." Any one who wishes to deal fairly with the word of God cannot fail to see that the faith that leads to salvation is an obedient faith. Only those who are in Christ are without condemnation. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." (Rom. 8: 1.) The word of God teaches that we are baptized into Christ (Gal. 3: 27); and it is in this act of the obedience of faith that one crosses the line between the world and the kingdom of God, between condemnation and justification.

We come now to what my friend evidently considers a hard proposition for me-viz.: "Whose child do you baptize, anyway?" He thinks to make it the harder by saying: "You cannot answer this question by yes or no, can you?" Brother Moore, have you quit whipping your wife? You cannot answer this question by "yes" or "no," can you? Of course, Brother Moore is not guilty of such conduct as whipping his wife; but, on the other hand, he is a kind and good husband. I merely use this to show that some questions cannot be answered with a "yes" or "no." If he were to answer my question, he would say: "I never whipped my wife, and I deny your allegation." I will answer his question by saying: I baptize the same kind of people that you do-viz., those who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and who whole-heartedly repent of their sins, the difference being in the purpose for which we baptize. You baptize them because of remission of sins, and I baptize them in order to the remission of sins.

His efforts to show that my asking a candidate, "Do you believe with all of your heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God?" is on a par with the demands he and his church make of a candidate before baptism must be amusing to our readers. I do not pass on the "fitness" of one for baptism; the Lord did that himself in making faith a prerequisite to baptism. I am authorized to baptize only believers; and in order to ascertain the fact, I simply ask the question. There is the width of the heavens between this and the practice of my friend, and every intelligent Baptist should be able to see it.

The case of Cornelius and family is giving Brother Moore much trouble, as I knew it would before he got through with it. He says: "Did not Peter put the question of his acceptance for baptism in the negative?" He put it as a challenge in the form of a question, which, according to logic, is one of the strongest ways of laying down a challenge. He did not ask those six Jewish Christians as to whether or not Cornelius and his household should be baptized, but challenged them or any one clse to interfere by interposing objections. This he did upon the ground that God had borne the Gentiles witness that they had a right to the gospel. (See Acts 15: 8.) This was an exceptional case for the specific purpose of convincing the apostles and all the Jewish Christians that the Gentiles were included in the commission. (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) Nothing like it has ever occurred since, and, I repeat, Brother Moore never witnessed anything like it in all of his life. Yes, I say that none but Christians can have the Spirit as an indwelling Guest: but this is quite different from that outward, miraculous manifestation of the Spirit as seen in the case of Cornelius and family. This case is made parallel to that of Pentecost. (See Acts 2: 1-4, 7-13.)

My friend says that none but children of God can magnify God. This is certainly news to Bible readers. It is said: "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee." (Ps. Again: "And Jehovah opened the mouth of the 76: 10.) ass, and she said unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times?' (Num. 22: 28.) Peter says of Balaam: "But he was rebuked for his own transgression; a dumb ass spoke with a man's voice and stayed the madness of the prophet." (2 Pet. 2: 16.) Once more, the wicked Caiaphas prophesied by the Spirit of God. (John 11: 49-51.) Was not God magnified in all this? The fact that Cornelius and family spoke with tongues, thus magnifying God, no more proves they were saved than the miraculous manifestations by the ass and Caiaphas prove they were saved.

My brother needs a little information. He says: "It's funny to hear my friend talk about a physical miracle." I said that miraculous power was always a physical power. There are only two kinds of power in the universe—moral, or spiritual, and physical. All miracles are but the manifestation of God's physical power, and I challenge my friend to disprove it. Was it a physical or moral power that caused the ass to speak with a man's voice? My friend's theory of conversion from start to finish is purely and simply a physical thing, because he contends for the miraculous.

Let all the intervals or void spaces of time be employed in prayers, reading, meditating, works of nature, recreation, charity, friendliness, and neighborhood, and means of spiritual and corporal health, ever remembering so to work in our calling as not to neglect the work of our high calling; but to begin and end the day with God.—Selected.

Men may cavil at revelation, fight over doctrine, but there is one thing they dare not malign, and that is holiness. Over and above the four Gospels there is a fifth, each chapter a century of Christian lives and Christian deaths. I believe that is practically the evidence that weighs most with this age.—Dean Vaughn.

Work is only done well when it is done with a will; and no man has a thoroughly sound will unless he knows he is doing what he should—and is in his place.—Ruskin.

Continuing in the Work of the Lord.

BY S. W. BERRYMAN.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." (1 Cor. 15: 58.) This verse of scripture was written by the apostle Paul to the church at Corinth. In Acts 18: 1-11 we learn that Paul went to Corinth and began preaching the "word of the Lord" in the synagogue of the Jews. On account of persecution, he was forced to leave the synagogue; but he entered the house of one Justus and taught the people. He continued his work there a year and six months, during which time he succeeded in establishing the church there.

It was necessary for Paul to teach those led to Christ under his preaching the importance of living a Christian life. Hence he wrote two letters to them adapted to this end. He labored at length in the first letter to correct certain errors that had come up in the church there, such as divisions, the marriage question, and the resurrection of the dead. Especially did he labor at length in chapter 15 to correct the error taught by the Judaizing teachers concerning the resurrection. These false teachers had connected themselves with the church there and were teaching that there would be no resurrection from the dead. Paul first proves that Christ arose, and then proves that there will be a general resurrection. He reaches the climax in verses 55-58: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." If the infidel's position be true, that there is no hereafter, no eternity, no life beyond the grave, then our "labor in the Lord" would be "in vain;" but since this is untrue and there is a hereafter, an eternity, a life to be lived beyond the grave, then our "labor in the Lord" cannot possibly be in vain. Paul reasons that if there be no resurrection of the dead, a faithful Christian life is in vain-useless, worth nothing at all; but as there will be a resurrection, and man must live beyond the grave, a faithful Christian life is not in vain. So "be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

The importance of continuing "in the work of the Lord," or a faithful Christian life, is also taught by Christ. "But he that endureth unto the end, the same shall be saved." (Matt. 24: 13.) "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.) "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his eross daily, and follow me." (Luke 9: 23.) "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord." (Matt. 25: 21.) Those of us who hope to gain an entrance into the haven of rest must prove ourselves diligent and faithful servants while in this life. Christ demands that we follow him "daily," being "steadfast, unmovable," "in the work of Paul says we are the house of Christ, "if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end," (Heb. 3: 6.) He says that "we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end," (Heb. 3: 14.) Every person who obeys the gospel has the hope and confidence that in heaven they have "a better and an enduring substance," and Paul exhorts us not to cast this hope and confidence away. (Heb. 10: 34, 35.) It is strange indeed that many "cast away" their hope and confidence of heaven with joy untold for a few worldly pleasures. Jesus says a man must "deny himself [of worldly pleasures, of fleshly desires], and take up his cross daily, and follow me." (Luke 9: 23.) Paul says that the "grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world." (Tit. 2: 11, 12.)

We are pointed to Bible examples of faithfulness in the services of the Lord and told to follow them. "And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end: that ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises." (Heb. 6: 11, 12.) These examples are found in the life of Noah, Abraham, Moses, Daniel, the three Hebrew children, and others. These men continued; were faithful, obedient. So must we, too, be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." There are many who start out in the Christian life, but ere they travel very far they "draw back" and give up. Paul says he has no pleasure in those who draw back. "Now the just shall live by faith: but If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul." (Heb. 10; 38, 39.) There is no side track, no middle ground. no stop-overs, in the Christian life. We must go forward continually, or we will not meet the approval of Jehovah. Paul went the second time to the places where he had led people to Christ and taught them "to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." (Acts 14: 22.) Dear reader, there is no need of your becoming a Christian if you do not continue in the faith, for only those who are faithful to the end will attain the haven of rest. Erring brother, your obedience to the first principles of the gospel only saved you from past sins; you must continue in the faith in order to obtain the crown that fades not away. If you fail to do your duty as a Christian, you will lament your folly where lamentation will not avail. While time and opportunity is offered, why not forsake your evil ways and march forward with the people of God to the city of rest. Christian life cannot possibly be in vain in the Lord. the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ bless us all, that we may continue in the faith till this life shall end.

To sum up all in one word-what the soul is in the body. that are Christians in the world. The soul is dispersed through all the members of the body, and Christians are scattered through all the cities of the world. The soul dwells in the body, yet is not of the body; and Christians dwell in the world, yet are not of the world. The invisible soul is shut up in the visible body, and Christians are known indeed to be in the world, but their religion remains invisible. The flesh hates the soul and wars against it, though itself suffering no injury, because it is prevented from enjoying its pleasures; the world also hates the Christians, though in no wise injured, because they are opposed to its pleasures. The soul loves the flesh that hates it and loves also the members; Christians likewise love those that hate them. The soul is imprisoned in the body, yet it holds that very body together; and Christians are confined in the world as in a prison, and yet it is they who hold the world together. The immertal soul dwells in a mortal tabernacle; and Christians dwell as sojourners in corruptible bodies, looking for an incorruptible dwelling in the heavens. The soul, when but ill-provided with food and drink, becomes better; in like manner, the Christians, though subjected day by day to punishment, increase the more in number. God has assigned them this illustrious position, which it were unlawful for them to forsake. -Epistle to Diognetus.

To what signifies wishing and hoping for better times? We may make these times better if we bestir ourselves.—Franklin.

The Tokyo Lot.

BY C. G. VINCENT.

They have been praying for it! They have spent time and efforts to find it! They have found it! Who? Our loyal Japanese brethren. What? A suitable lot. But they need about eight hundred dollars more at once to complete the sale and secure a deed. They themselves have given and are giving, I believe, considering their resources, more than we. The lot is in a splendid locality in the great city of Tokyo, with a population of more than two millions, the seat of the government and the largest educational center in the world. We are fortunate in being able to find a suitable place, as land is dear in that densely populated city and country. Let us, therefore, as individuals and churches, do our part and raise this money in the next thirty days. What do you say? Are you "in" for it? Already, this year, nineteen have been baptized at the Kamitomizaka mission, and more are expected. Can you say this much for your local church? Let us not fail these devoted brethren and discourage their hearts. Let this need be brought before the churches for action. Send offerings to any of our papers, or to W. W. Freeman, Abilene, Texas, stating that it is for the Tokyo lot. Do it now. "Let's go over the top."

"Rhodesia."

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

Rhodesia owes its name to the Rt. Hon. Cecil Rhodes, whose foresight secured this rich and important State to the British Empire. It is administered by the "British South Africa Company" under royal charter. The executive powers vested in this company are exercised by administrators appointed by it with the approval of the Secretary of State for the British Colonies. The original charter of this company gave right of administration of about 750,000 square miles, but the area now administered is only about 400,000 square miles.

Southern Rhodesia comprises the provinces of Mashonaland and Matabeleland and has for its capital Salisbury (Mashonaland), while the chief town of Matabeleland (Bulawayo) also has had a municipality since the close of 1897.

Bulawayo (4,469 feet, and thirteen hundred miles from Capetown), the location of Forest Vale Mission, is a town of about six thousand and is the largest and, from an industrial and commercial point of view, the most important center in Rhodesia. It is headquarters of the Rhodesian railway system and is the point from which five railway lines radiate, one going to Gwelo, Salisbury, and Beira, one to Victoria Falls and the Congo, one to the Matopos. and one to Kimberly and Capetown. The town is on an open, undulating down of country on the plateau separating the Zambesi and Limpopo watersheds. It is well drained and consequently perfectly healthy at all times of the year. In 1909 the town covered an area of 1,400 acres and is surrounded with a commonage of 22,734 acres, the boundaries of which are from three to four miles away. The thoroughfares are wide and well kept and consist of avenues and streets which intersect each other at right angles; the streets run from south-southeast to northnorthwest. In the center stands a fine market hall, surrounded by an open space called the "Market Square." On the east of the town lies the main residential quarter, known as the "suburbs," and connected with town by splendid motor roads. Between the suburbs and town runs the Matiesumhlope River, on the suburban side of which are laid out parks and botanical and zoological gardens; above the west bank stand the government high schools and boarding houses, each in some sixteen acres of ground. At the juncture of Main Street and Eighth Avenue is the extremely impressive statue of the late Cecil John Rhodes, "ever looking to the North." The statue, which is of bronze and twelve feet high, mounted on a ten-foot-six-inch pedestal of Matopo granite, is the work of Mr. John Tweed, of Chelsea, and is the only statue existing for which Mr. Rhodes actually sat as model. Immediately to the left (facing north) is the Bulawayo Club, with the Rhodesia Museum and also the Public Library a few yards away. Ahead of the club are the new municipal offices and post, telegraph, and customs offices of the British South Africa Company. At the juncture of Main Street with Selbourne Avenue stands the 1896 rebellion monument erected "to the memory of those two hundred and fifty-nine pioneers of civilization who lost their lives during the Matabele rebellion, A.D. 1896." A Gardner gun which was used in quelling the rebellion is mounted at the top of the monument. (Brother John Sherriff was the contractor for this monument.) The town is administered by a mayor and municipal council. The ratable value is about $9,203,000. New buildings to the value of over $500,000 are now being erected yearly. Town and suburbs are lighted by electricity and water is laid on. Some points of general interest may be mentioned. Municipal zoölogical gardens are situated in the North Park just beyond the greenhouses and overlooking the bowling greens. Though inaugurated only in 1910, very fair progress has been made and a great deal done in the way of providing suitable permanent accommodation. For specimens, the zoo is entirely dependent upon presentations.

For parks, altogether there are about three hundred acres available for cultivation purposes, split up into three portions of about one hundred acres each and known as the North, Central, and South Parks.

The Rhodesia Museum was founded in 1910. The present building forms what will be a wing of the main building, which will be erected when funds permit. The collections embrace some fine mounted specimens of Rhodesian animals, birds, reptiles, etc., and a comprehensive exhibition of rocks and minerals of the country; the ethnological section includes specimens of native industry and relies found at Great Zimbabwe and other prehistoric ruins.

The reading room of the Public Library (which contains all the latest issues of the principal papers and magazines of South Africa and the United Kingdom) is free to all and open daily. In the library are over eight thousand volumes.

The Memorial Hospital was founded in 1894 in commemoration of the pioneers and early settlers who fell in the Matabele War, 1893. There are seven wards, and the hospital is maintained by public subscription and government grant. Paying patients are admitted under the care of any private medical practitioner; free patients are under the care of the medical superintendent. Wards are fitted with the latest hospital equipment; operating theater and X-ray rooms compare most favorably with any in South Africa.

The purpose of this description is to show that Bulawayo, from the standpoint of location, will compare favorably with even our towns in the beloved United States. The English language is spoken. This territory being under the crown of Great Britain, pecuniary inducements are offered to missionaries who will maintain schools for the native, half-caste, and white children. The soil is virgin, only awaiting the "tiller" and "harvester." I believe I do not exaggerate when I say no field offers such immediate opportunities for mission work as does this one. The church at Blackman, Tenn., mourns the loss of Tom Richardson, one of its oldest and most valued members. He was held in high esteem in the community and will be greatly missed.

On October 31, at his home, near Lebanon, Tenn., J. D. Glenn passed into the beyond. His death was due to uræmia, superinduced by grave complications. The Gospel Advocate extends sympathy.

We were very much grieved to read in one of our monthly exchanges the news of the death of Tom Dunagan, of Horse Cave, Ky. This was our first knowledge of this sad event. We hope it is not too late to extend sympathy to the family and to the community that he served so faithfully.

From H. J. Sudbury, 1525 Highland Avenue, Knoxville, Tenn., November 7: "If parents or friends will send me the names of young men now in the Students' Army Training Corps or mechanical work at the University of Tennessee, who are members of the church of Christ or who would likely attend our Bible study on Sunday mornings, I shall be glad to look them up and help them in locating the church of Christ,"

From J. W. Dunn, 169 East Austin Street, Paris, Texas, November 5: "There have been services at our meetinghouse ever since the influenza has been raging. While public gatherings were prohibited by the city authorities, one of our faithful ones approached the mayor and explained to him our convictions of duty on Lord's-day services, and he freely granted the privilege to meet and worship, but asked that only a few go at a time, which has been done. While many have been unable to go on account of being sick, well ones have gone and worshiped with them. Thus honoring the Lord each Lord's day has been our privilege. The quarantine is still on, with no signs of abatement of the epidemic. Paris has had a heavy toll."

From Carl Burcham, Camp Gordon, Ga., November 3: "For the benefit of the young men in Camp Gordon who are members of the church of Christ, and for all who may come soon, I am glad to state that we boys here meet for worship in the reading room of the Y. M. C. A. building 152, at three o'clock Lord's-day afternoon. All here are urged to come for every service. New men coming in will be given a hearty welcome. Any boy or any parents who wish to write to me should address me: Company G, Second Development Battalion, Camp Gordon, Ga. Three of us boys have been given work as teachers in the development battalions. Very few who have firmly, but humbly, stood out for noncombatant service have been forced to bear arms. I am not able to give much information on this point, but I know all who seek such service must be both humble and firm. Lack of either firmness or humility brings a man into disfavor with his officers and makes it very difficult for him to gain his plea. Let us all live more godly lives and let us pray for a speedy and permanent peace."

From Brother and Sister J. U. Yarbrough, Austin, Texas, October 31: "Because we believe in the power of a good word and encouragement, we wish to take enough of your time to tell you how heartily we approve of the things you are doing and attempting to do in your-our-paper. We heartily indorse your recent war articles and your general attitude toward the war; we commend most highly your stand for common sense and reason in the church, as averse to the pettiness and hobby-riding which so often prevail. May your teaching prosper. These are specific. To generalize, we indorse the general sanity of your policies and teachings. It seems to us to touch the very core of our greatest church need. Furthermore, the spirituality of the Advocate grows deeper and finer. We should like to thank in person the man who selects and inserts the short excerpts and poems with which the paper abounds and which unfailingly leave a thought of kindness or cheer. To save the world from the rule of hate is the Christian's mission now as, perhaps, never before. Continue to help us and receive our thanks and prayers."

We are glad to receive from R. E. L. Taylor, of Decherd, Tenn., some facts about the life and death of the lamented J. D. Northeut. He writes: "On Saturday morning, November 2, I received a telephone message telling me of J. D. Northeut's death. It came to me as a shock. I loved him. He was my friend. He has been a father to me in preaching the gospel. I have never been to him in my life for scriptural advice but what he always gave it to me. He always recommended me when he was asked about a preacher to hold a meeting when he was promised. I always did the same for him. I knew when I recommended him I would never be criticized by the brethren. Let us that are living never forget the good advice he gave us. Brethren, let us pray for his dear wife and children, that she, as a wife, as a mother, may continue to follow him as he followed Christ, and that she may bring his children up 'in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.' He has done much in this life for sinful people. He has been sounding out the gospel of Jesus Christ for about twenty-five years. He will be missed by all that knew him. He had many friends that paid the last tribute of respect by attending his funeral. The funeral services were conducted by Jim Stubblefield, of Viola, Tenn. He was assisted by Bailey Brooks, of Tracy City, Tenn.; J. L. Long, of Sewance, Tenn.; and the writer. The grave was completely covered with beautiful flowers. His last word was for his work to be kept up. Brethren, let us press forward in the discharge of our duties. 'Jesus saith unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he die, yet shall he live.' (John 11: 25.) 'She is not dead, but sleepeth.' (Matt. 9: 24.) Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.' (Rev. 14: 13.) Brother Northeut is not dead, 'but sleepeth.' 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.' (Ps. 23: 4.)"

Mother.

BY J. C. M'Q.

We may give ourselves much concern about politics, the government, and the church; we may be anxious about our industries, our manufactories, and our institutions of learning; but far more important to us than all these are our homes. As the church is "the light of the world," so the family is the salt of the church. The church and the government cannot and will not go very far wrong so long as our families are properly regulated and conducted. The ideal home, with each member of the family doing his or her duty, will give us the ideal community.

The mother and wife, who is the center of the family, must be willing and able to perform the first and greatest duty of womanhood. It must be her constant aim to bring up children sound in body, mind, and character, children who will grow into a useful manhood and noble womanhood. The mother must be ready to obey the admonition of Solomon: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it." It cannot be successfully denied that in the responsible work of rearing and training children the mother has far the greater part. While man is regarded as the home-maker and breadwinner, yet the mother or wife must be the helpmate and must take care of her children, although the supply with which to do it may be very scant. Oftentimes she must work through the livelong day and devote the weary hours of the night in nursing and caring for her sick children. The faithful mother, however, would not exchange her life of toil and hardship for a cold life of selfishness, for joy comes to her from the realization of the fact that she has done her duty.

The early recollections of my life are associated with my mother. I remember her as the faithful mother and housewife. She arose early in the morning, prepared the morning meal, put her house in order, and then devoted the whole day to weaving, spinning, and looking after other household duties. Her hands produced most of the clothing that her sons and daughters were. After working hard all day, she would knit until bedtime. No sacrifice or labor was too great for her to make for the happiness and comfort of her children. She sought not only to train the bodies, but also the minds and souls of her children. I must say that her work was very important and very difficult. No one with the right conception of life can fail to respect and honor the faithful mother.

I have often thought that my mother must have been a very obedient child, as the Lord permitted her to live ninety-five years, six months, and twenty-six days. She departed this life on August 2 of this year. We learn from the Holy Spirit that one of the promises attached to such obedience is long life. The spirit declares in Eph. 6: 2, 3: "Honor thy father and mother (which is the first commandment with promise), that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth." As she lived almost a century, I was anxious to see her reach the century mark. While permitted to live long upon the earth, the Lord was good to her in preserving her faculties intact. Up until her last sickness, and even until within a few days before she died, her mind was perfectly clear. I may say that at times it was even vigorous and that her ideas of what should be done were usually correct. Her mind did not seem to grow weak with her body. Some of the family thought she would not be willing to have a trained nurse during her last illness; but when, by their request, I asked her about this, she replied that I knew better than she and to do just as I thought best to do. While mother was a woman of a strong mind and much determination, when she thought it was best, she was ready to submit gracefully to the judgment of others. Some years ago, when she had a cancer, she came to Nashville, and I took her to Dr. King for treatment. I met her at the train to take her to my house. Calling me by my name, she said: "I have come down to put myself in your hands." I appreciated the compliment that she thus bestowed upon me, showing that she was willing to risk my judgment and that she fully realized that I would procure for her the very best medical aid and give her every possible attention.

Mother in some respects was very much like the women of old-the women of whom we read in the Bible. She was not ashamed of motherhood. She did not think that it was humiliating to rear a large family. She gave birth to eleven children, nine of whom grew to manhood and womanhood. Eight of the number survive her. While many and arduous were the duties imposed upon her in order to rear her children, her reward for such work will certainly be great. The work of such mothers has much to do with molding and shaping the character of the nation. In bringing up her children, while mother was tender and loving, she realized also that it was no less essential to be wise and firm. Whenever necessity demanded, she exercised proper discipline. While loving her children, she did not treat them with foolish indulgence that would lead them to failure in this life and in the life to come. While it may be truly said that some children will go wrong in spite of the best training, and some will go right even when their surroundings are very unfortunate, nevertheless a great deal depends upon the family training. The Lord in his goodness permitted mother to live to see all of her children grown and to spend many years of usefulness in their own homes. As is to be expected, the sons are following different callings and the daughters are making faithful home-makers. While she has left us, her influence is with us and her deeds follow after her.

Ex-President Roosevelt has well said: "If mothers through weakness bring up their sons to be selfish and to think only of themselves, they will be responsible for much sadness among the women who are to be their wives in the future. If you let your daughters grow up idle, you are preparing them to be useless to others and burdens to themselves. Teach boys and girls alike that they are not to look forward to lives spent in avoiding difficulties, but to lives spent in overcoming difficulties. Teach them that work, for themselves and also for others, is not a curse, but a blessing; seek to make them happy, make them enjoy life, but seek also to make them face life with a steadfast resolution to wrest success from labor and adversity and to do their whole duty before God and man. Surely she who can thus train her sons and daughters is thrice fortunate among women." Father and mother gave such training to their children, and whatever failure their sons and daughters have made is not due to bad training. The Holy Spirit shows the high estimate that should be put upon mothers and homes when he admonishes: "That aged women likewise be reverent in demeanor, not slanderers nor enslaved to much wine, teachers of that which is good; that they may train the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, to be sober-minded, chaste, workers at home, kind, being in subjection to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed."

Mother discouraged the idea of women leaving their homes in order to enter politics. She knew too well the value of a home and the importance of having a mother in that home. My heart grows sad as I pen these lines. With mother gone to her reward, I cannot but feel that the old home is a thing of the past; for there can be no home without a mother. The last time I went to the old home place, mother was sleeping beneath the sod. My interest in the home was gone. And when I saw so few familiar faces and realized so many of my childhood playmates had passed to the other shore, I could not but grow sad, realizing how brief is life, how certain is death, and how worthless are all things below the skies. Then I found joy in the fact that this life is not our home, but that when man dies he passes out of the sorrows and heartaches of this world into that house of many mansions where there is no sickness, where we shall never grow old, and where there is no death, but where all is joy and gladness in the presence of God, Christ, and the angels.

"Does Not Sound Very Good."

BY E. A. E.

From Morriston, Ark., comes the following note, dated October 30, 1918:

Brethren: Inclosed please find check for $1.33. Please stop my paper at once. Yours truly, Joe H. Blue.

There is no objection to stopping a brother's paper when he wants it stopped.

The government, which carries the mail, advises against "continuing subscriptions after date of expiration, unless subscriptions are renewed and paid for." I have received the Sunday School Times for about twenty years as an exchange for the Gospel Advocate, but was informed last week that, according to government regulations, it could no longer be sent as an exchange. To this I raise no objection whatever, but cheerfully submit.

Now, would a brother rather be informed of what the government requires, kindly advised that the time of his subscription has expired, and be given the opportunity to renew his subscription, or have his paper stopped without notification? It seems just and brotherly to inform him that his time has expired and offer him the opportunity of renewing.

But Brother Blue's note inclosed the following article, which appeared in "the Pacific Christian," September 6, 1918, over the initials "E. C. L."

DOES NOT SOUND VERY GOOD.

In the Gospel Advocate of October 11, 1917, Brother J. C. McQuiddy had a nice, long eulogy on the life of John Cheatham, a colored porter of the McQuiddy Printing Company, who recently passed away. Following are a few quotations:

"John Cheatham was the faithful porter of the McQuiddy Printing Company for almost a decade."

"We could always rely on him to be at his post of duty."
"Having a floor space of 41x160 feet, and four floors, it will be readily seen that his job was not an easy one."

"If the fireman was sick and not able to be on his job, we could depend on the faithful porter to start a fire in the boiler and have the house cozy and comfortable when the workmen arrived for their day's work,"

"If the gas under the typesetting machines was to be lighted, we had no fears that he would not attend to this in ample time for the typesetters to be at work at the appointed hour of 7:30 A.M. [Note.—This means that John had to be there at 5:30 or 5:45 A.M.]

"He was held in high esteem by the entire force of the Gospel Advocate and McQuiddy Printing Company."

"During the fire that burned up a large portion of East Nashville last year, his home, which was freed from debt, was consumed by the withering flames. He lost everything he had. He did not, however, appeal to the public for charity, and, so far as I know, he received nothing but one suit of clothes given him by a young man and twenty dollars."

The part that does not look right is that this faithful old negro, who served the company for over eight years, early and late, in cold and heat, doing extra heavy work, should receive only twenty dollars from the entire "force of the Gospel Advocate and McQuiddy Printing Company." It is not certain that they gave him the twenty dollars, but we will give them credit for that much.

Now, one more quotation: "When the end came, on September 21, it was suggested that the house wished to present to the wife and children a floral design. I suggested that if any one were entitled to a crown, he was, and that, therefore, a crown would be appropriate for him."

Just a year before he lost everything he had. He needed food and shelter, but all he got was twenty dollars. We might have expected better things from the Gospel Advocate force. They certainly ought to know that it does not profit the destitute any to say: "Depart in peace: be ye warmed and filled." (James 2: 16.) It does not help a dead man, nor his widowed wife and orphaned children, to put a floral crown on his coffin.

It may not affect all as it does me, but I will say this: if our house should burn and leave us penniless, and my brethren should give me only a "suit of clothes and twenty dollars," and then when I die place a floral crown on my casket, I hope some of my friends will kick it off. It stime the brethren were learning the difference between Christian service and tomfoolery.

E. C. L.

I agree with the author of this article that this "DOES NOT SOUND VERY GOOD"—not for the McQuiddy Printing Company, but for "the Pacific Christian." It not only does not sound good, but it is not good to so misrepresent and even to slander any one.

It makes the heart of Christians sick to see so much criticism, faultfinding, and misrepresentation in the papers.

Brother McQuiddy wrote the obituary of his old and faithful porter and emphasized his characteristics of industry, economy, and independence, and not the deeds of kindness and charity of the McQuiddy Printing Company. He was not letting the left hand know what the right hand did in this case. Brother McQuiddy was seeking to impress others with the fact that although John Cheatham lost his home by fire, which he had paid for by his own honest efforts, he did not pose as a pauper and sit down upon its ruins and beg, but picked his flint and with cheerful heart went more industriously and economically to work. This every able-bodied man, white or black, should do. This was very commendable in John. I have known white men to do not half so well.

There are a few things the author of the above article does not know, and without such knowledge he should not have spoken. I am glad to call his attention to the following:

Brother McQuiddy paid this porter higher wages than any porter in the city of Nashville received. No one should complain that the porter was economical, industrious, independent, and faithful, thus making good use of his money.

His wages went on during his six or eight weeks' sickness just as promptly and regularly as when at work. Before his last sickness, when unable to work, his wages went on just the same.

Brother McQuiddy took his own family physician to see John, went with the physician, requested the physician to do all in his power for him, and paid the bill for him. Besides, Brother McQuiddy furnished necessary medicine, and he and his family visited and looked after John's comfort.

Brother McQuiddy, furthermore, ordered his bookkeeper to furnish John with all necessary money and to spare no pains in supplying his wants.

John had a home of his own and lived in it. Without instituting comparison, I say, let the rest of us do as well.

It was a token of respect and love that his fellow workers and friends placed a modest crown of flowers on his casket and grave, and I am glad that not a soul who attended his burial service wanted to "kick it off." That crown of flowers withered and died, but the esteem and affection which placed it there will never die, and the bravery and heroism and faithfulness which they were designed to commemorate will never die.

The ones who helped and encouraged John while Jiving are the ones who placed the flowers on his grave.

Just so, the ones who strew our paths with flowers are the ones who place them on our graves.

There are doubtless display and extravagance manifested at times in floral offerings; but Mary anointed the body of Jesus with the costly and precious ointment for his burial, and it was the traitor who raised the question, "Why this waste?"

I have hastily written this, not only in Brother Mc-Quiddy's behalf and of my own accord, but deery this spirit of faultfinding, unjust criticism, and, to put it mildly, misrepresentation.

"The Pacific Christian," with all the rest of us, should "study the things which make for peace." It should gladly correct this flagrant misrepresentation and obey Christ, to judge not.

How will all this and a hundred other things of like nature appear before God in the judgment? Have we lost sight of the fact that God sees us, knows our lives, and will judge us accordingly?

By two wings a man is lifted up from things earthly—namely, by simplicity and purity. Simplicity ought to be in the intention; purity, in the affection. Simplicity doth tend toward God; purity doth apprehend and taste him.—Thomas à Kempis.

Who Is It That Loves the Lord?

BY E. G. S.

Jesus hunself answers this question in these words: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." (John 14: 21.) This is a wonderful statement that tells in great plainness who it is that loves the Lord. There are thousands to-day claiming that they love the Lord, and yet they are not keeping his word. One very important item in the word of the Lord is this: 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." This passage forever kills one of the popular doctrines of the religious world of to-day-that is, that sinners are converted and saved before they are baptized. This claim openly and boldly contradicts the word of God. This plain passage just quoted forever kills the idea of remission of sins before baptism. If it does not put the promise of pardon after baptism, it does not put it anywhere at all. Now, this is what the word of the Lord plainly says, and all the world combined has no right to change it. In fact, eternal ruin is to be the doom of all who dare to change God's word. The word of God as given in the New Testament was given to stand forever. The man, therefore, that changes that word imperils his eternal interest. Hence the only safety for man is to accept and obey the word of God just as he gave it. There must be no adding to it and no subtracting from it. We must obey the commands just as they stand on record and believe in and trust the promises just as the Lord gave them. If we go to changing the word of the Lord as given by him, we humanize it, turn it into the wisdom of men, and thus destroy the pure word of God. When we do this, we defeat our own salvation. But if we preserve the word of the Lord as he gave it, if we obey it and make it the rule of our lives, it will make us useful and faithful here and prepare us for the heavenly home.

The word "baptizo" does not mean either "to sprinkle" or "to pour" and is never one time so translated, and it is purely a matter of human wisdom to so translate it. The worst feature in the matter is that it is an entire change in the teaching of the word of God and substitutes the opinions of men in its place. Christians should be very careful how they deal with the word of God and be sure not to add to nor take from the divine record.

Many religious people say the word of God is a dead letter, with no saving power about it. If that be true, what use have we for the New Testament? It can do us no possible good, if we obey all it requires, if it be true that it is a dead letter. But it is not a dead letter. It is a slander upon the word of God to say it is dead. The Bible itself says: "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword." (Heb. 4: 12.) Therefore every one that says the word of God is a dead letter positively contradicts the plain word of God. The word "quick" means "living," just the very opposite of "dead."

It is a great shame that men who claim to teach the Bible should palpably deny what it so plainly says. The safe thing, therefore, is to believe and obey the word of God as given to us in the New Testament and cast the opinions of men aside. The word of God is able to save those that obey it, while the words of uninspired men never can save any one. Those that depend upon getting religion to save them are depending entirely upon what uninspired men say; but if we believe what the word of God says and obey its divine injunctions, we will be saved beyond a peradventure. Let all, therefore, that want the salvation of the Lord be sure that they believe and obey what the word of God says. If we go by what that says, we will be safe in time and eternity.

Help Us Keep the Paper at the Present Price.

Had you noticed that nearly all the daily papers have advanced in price from fifty to one hundred per cent? For example, those that formerly sold for two cents are now three cents per copy, and the three-cent class have been raised to five cents. Let no one suppose that this raise in price is indicative of meanness on the part of the pullishers of the dailies. They are compelled to do it in order to continue business. It is an open secret in the business world that the subscription price of such papers does not cover the actual cost of production. They rely upon the advertisements to cover the loss sustained and to make a reasonable profit. They are willing to lose money on the subscription list to keep it up to the standard and to insure a circulation to their advertising friends. But they cannot afford to lose too much on the cost of production without charging exorbitant advertising rates. This would be unfair. Therefore, when the price of paper and other printing material was advanced far beyond the normal price, nothing remained to do but to advance the subscription price accordingly. The public should appreciate their present position and refrain from grumbling about the raise in price. Most papers are worth what we pay per copy, and some are worth a great deal more. Without this raise in price, they could not exist.

The Gospel Advocate is a religious journal, and, like others of its class, does not have the space for advertising found in the dailies. We cannot depend upon our good friends, the advertisers, to meet the chief expense of conducting the paper. They do their share, but it is a case where each subscriber must help. On account of the enormous advance of the cost of material, our subscription price was advanced from $1.50 to $2. Other religious journals were compelled to do the same thing. Since that time printing material has been advanced in price again and again. White paper is exceedingly scarce at any price. We do not wish to charge any more than two dollars for the Gospel Advocate. To help us keep the paper at the present price, we ask the friendly cooperation of all our readers. By being prompt in the matter of sending in renewals and by sending us new subscribers from time to time, you can have real fellowship in the work we endeavor to do in Jesus' name. While prices are high, money is more plentiful than in many years. Please bear this intimate revelation of our present status in mind and be quick to respond. Remember, we are depending upon you. Peace will not mean the abatement of poverty and suffering for the people of the war-stricken countries. Conditions will be bettered, of course, but the forwarding committees believe that it will require at least two years for rehabilitation of these countries. The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief is planning for a nation-wide campaign to be inaugurated about January 1.

To those who have made inquiries about the adoption of orphans in Bible lands, the following will be of interest:

Dear Mr. Lipscomb: We have just received a report from Mr. William J. Shalleross, one of our field secretaries, and he indicated that you had inquired regarding the adoption of orphans in Bible lands.

We have appreciated the full cooperation which has come from the Gospel Advocate in times past, and wish it were possible now to give you the names and even photographs of the children whom we are aiding in the Near East.

Most of our correspondence, of course, is carried on by cable. Furthermore, the staff of relief workers is so limited that at present it is impossible to carry on individual correspondence with individual children. We are expecting to have somewhar of a detailed report from four or five of our orphanages, giving the names and telling something of their past history.

Such information as this we will be glad to place in your hands, although it will be difficult, until the pressure is released upon our relief workers, to assign individual children to individual contributors.

H. C. JAQUITH,

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

The Disciplined.

Discipline is being one's own schoolmaster.

Discipline means the difference between success and failure. With it, you come to contentment; without it, you arrive at peevishness, petulance, and pessimism.

Love, disciplined, means love loyal and continuing; means the family; means not only love's flamboyant spring-time, but its fruitful summer and its peaceful autumn, its golden year.

Thought, disciplined, is constructive, clear, forceful; undisciplined, it becomes muddy, hot, septic. The disciplined body is healthy; it is cleansed of pains; we have no consciousness of it because it is a perfect servant; we approach the beauty of disembodied souls. The disciplined hand is the craftsman's hand, the master's; the undisciplined, the slave's. The disciplined rule over the undisciplined.

The tongue, disciplined, speaks words as sharp weapons, as cut jewels, as "apples of gold in pictures of silver," Only the disciplined eye can see the abiding beauty, only the disciplined ear can hear the highest music, only the disciplined soul can "see the kingdom." Only the disciplined enjoy the classic. Only the disciplined can tell the truth or listen to it.

To the disciplined, success is easier than failure. The disciplined rise from the ranks. The disciplined do not lean; they are leaped upon. The touch of the disciplined is sure, their step is firm, their vision is sharp, their memory concise, their word strong, their silence wise.

Politeness is nothing but self-discipline. The undisciplined are rude, ugly, and disagreeable. Discipline is civilization. Lack of it makes the barbarian. Discipline builds cities, runs railroads, sails fleets; the savages live as wild beasts because they are undisciplined.

By discipline comes beauty, both of face and of spirit. The disciplined always get the best of things; for they love without lust, drink without drunkenness, eat without gluttony, play without excess, work without impatience, get money without greed, and spend it without hurt. The disciplined are the thoroughbreds; the undisciplined are the scrubs.—Dr. Frank Crane, in Physical Culture.

"Over Against the Treasury."

One by one, they brought their offerings, Jesus sitting looking on.

Vaunting Pharisee, content if he the praise of men had

Each humble Galilean, fearing God, before him passed. Rich and poor, both great and small, into the treasury

At length there came a widow, dependent, lonely, sad; Grief had been her portion; half penny all she had; Afraid that, mingling with the rich, thronging the temple space.

In contrast with the gifts they brought, her "all" would find no place.

None greeted her. None gave to her a single cheering word:

She hoped for consolation though in waiting on her God. The Master watched her closely, observed her humble mien. The gift became twice blest because she knew not it was seen

Her sacrifice grew richer as he saw her wealth of love, Empty her hand, but rich her soul in pledge of wealth above.

The story proves the vanity of every selfish quest; Religion, to prove genuine, must bear the crucial test. Every duty is vexatious that love makes not delight; All service is made holy if done as in his sight. Sacrifice and offering into his courts we bring. Upon us rests the watchful eve of Christ our Lord.

Jpon us rests the watchful eye of Christ our Lord and King.

The man who gives cheerfully as prospered is sure to tap a rich reward. The people have been taught to give to the demands of the war. They have cheerfully respinded to one call to be met by another. Christians shuld profit by the lesson. The demands of the church at urgent and imperative. Christians should grow in the gree of giving by giving constantly, cheerfully, as God ha prospered them. Like the widow, Christians should will devoted hearts bring their all to the Christ. Those wh thus worship him will be useful in this life and blight in the life to come.

The Church After the War.

Chplain Gilbert Newland makes some pertinent remarks abouthe church after the war, among others the following: Some people think the church will fall away after the vr. I do not think so. The church will not go out of faion when the war is over any more than beefsteak will gout of style. It will be the same old beefsteak, but it made served up in a different style. The war times will it change the nature of cotton and wool; however, the soter's uniform may influence fashion enough so that militar styles will be popular for some time. So the churchyill change, but will not die. There will always be the unger for God. The church that will satisfy the people ter the war will be similar to the church that is able to eet the needs of the people during the war."

Christ church will abundantly satisfy the desire of all who con to him. The church was not founded for a few fleeting ars, but for all time. The blood-bought church of Christs perfect and perfectly meets the demands of all peoples call ages. The word of God will safely guide us away om the terrible breakers if we will only accept it as our uide. Those who are wise in their own conceits may hange their views with the changing multitude, but the inciples of right and truth are eternal and change no "The gates of Hades shall not prevail against" t church.

Independence for Editors.

The day will come, perhaps, when it will be impossible for the owners of newspapers to hire competent men to print news and to purvey opinions which help to determine the popular attitude toward public questions without full publicity as to names and method of organization and without guaranteeing to the editorial staff independence of position. Competent publicists will not consent to give their labor and their brains to any publication about whose editorial policy they are not fully consulted. Sensible readers will reject or ignore publications which pretend to give impartial and disinterested expressions of opinion about public questions, but which, in their working organization, do not explicitly provide against the intrusion of irresponsibility, servility, and personal or class bias. The editorial writer exercises a function at least as much affected with a public interest as that of a college pro-fessor. There always have been on the staff of American newspapers many editorial writers who have been as scrupulous about the honor of their work as any college professor could be, but such a scrupulous attitude has not generally prevailed. Conditions have worked against such men. Newspapers for the most part either reflected or actually emphasized partisan, sectional, or class prejudices. There have been no recognized professional standards among editorial writers which express the neglected fact that editorial opinions pretend to have a scientific value. New Republic.

No man is fit to be an editorial writer who is not scrupulously honest in all that he writes. A dishonest writer should not be in a position to mold public sentiment. As editors deal with the body, the mind, and the soul, too much attention cannot be given to their work.

Is Christ Speaking Through Me?

The question which was uppermost in my mind as I passed out from the playhouse, and which made me very serious-much more so than many a sermon I have heardwas this: To what extent, if any, is Jesus Christ speaking to men through me—my life and personality? The question is stated here for the benefit of the readers of the "Easy Chair," who may wish to consider it along with us. That it was Christ's purpose and plan to continue to speak to the world through his disciples after his ascension, there is no doubt. There has been a strong disposition to limit Christ's message to the world to the acts and the writings of his apostles. That they have a special message of personal testimony concerning their Master is self-evident. But that by no means relieves the rest of us, who profess to have found in Christ the answer to our soul's deepest needs, of the responsibility of bearing our testimony. This letting of our light so shine before men that they may be constrained to glorify God, our Heavenly Father, is a universal obligation the discharge of which should be our highest joy. It is not simply what we do, vital as that is, that makes this light shine, but what we are. Have you not seen people whose very faces were a sermon that made you want to be better? You took notice of them that they had been with Jesus. But that is the privilege of all of us, for the Master said: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." But many of us do not recognize his companionship, because unseen with mortal eyes. Nevertheless, he seeks to walk and talk with us, as he did with the two disciples on their way to Emmaus. If we availed ourselves of this privilege much more than we do, we should become more like him, our faces reflect more of his glory, and our influence in our homes, our boarding houses, and our places of business would be like that of the mysterious guest of "the third floor back."-Christian-Evangelist.

Christ speaks through the faithful, active Christian. Christians should not give up in despair on account of the awful war that is now being waged. Christians should hold high the banner of Christ. Our boys who have gone to the war cannot be victorious if we at home fail. They will want to come back home to active, living churches, and not to dead ones. Some have the idea and express it that we cannot do much to advance the religion of Christ during the war. Such a thought should not be entertained. Now is the time to serve the Lord. To-morrow may be too late. Christians should hold on to every righteous principle, should stand straight up for the truth, and should not falter.

Training Little Children

Article 31.

How the Children Keep a Weather Calendar-When Children See All Nature Doing and Making Something They Long to Join in the Work of This Busy World.

If nature study is to be begun for the first time, either in school or in the home, the easiest introduction is by the time-honored topic of the weather in conjunction with the day. A weather calendar naturally follows, the days being marked with appropriate colors and symbols—yellow for the sunshine, gray for cloudy, kite for windy, umbrella for rainy, etc. The calendar may be decorated to represent the main nature-study idea for the month—a snow scene for January, skating for February, etc.

Daddy has a newspaper every morning. Why should not the children have one of their very own? Theirs can be a sheet of drawing paper hung beside the calendar, on which one of the children may draw a flower, etc. These drawings may not be works of art from the grown-up standpoint, but they aid the child to observe and to tell, as well as he is able, what he has seen. He should be shown where he can mprove his work, but the original sketch should never be interfered with or criticized. A more accurate representation can be given in a separate lesson after the child has had a chance for further observation, but in no way connecting this with his first drawing on the calendar, lest he become discouraged or self-conscious and try to express something which he has not really seen.

To adopt a tree in springtime is another good plan. Have the children give the tree a name and so make of it a companion. Always include the family name of the tree. Frequent visits must be made to the tree, because it cannot come to the children. Notice how the buds are arranged on the branches, which of them grow most rapidly, and what they turn into—leaves, flowers, or branches. Try to discover if the tree has any other visitors; bright eyes will soon discover many. Play a game around the tree, and sing to it some such rhyme as the following:

"Time is never wasted listening to the trees; If to heaven we arose as grandly as these, Holding to each other half their kindly grace, Haply we were worther our human place."

Because the child, after making mud pies, is told that his face is dirty, he naturally concludes that all soil is dirt. Point out to him that it is only when out of place that it is dirt, for in its right place it is the home of miracles, the matrix from which comes that wonderful force we call life. Let the children make experiments with different kinds of soil—clay, sand, loam. In this way they will become familiar with the names and textures as well as the best uses of each.

Have the children notice the changes in the air: that it is hot in summer, cold in winter, dry in sunny weather, damp in rainy weather, calm, breezy, or very windy. Explain why we should be careful to breathe only good air, to breathe deeply and expand our lungs; that we live in the air as the fish live in the water; that birds fly up and down in the air as fish swim up and down in the water; that air is all above us just as the water is above the little water animals that crawl on the bottom of ocean or river.

Every child is familiar with water in many forms, but perhaps the wonders of its forms are so common that he has not noticed how miraculous they are. "We cultivate the imagination of our children by tales of the prince who became invisible when he put on his cap of darkness and who made far journeys through the air on his magic carpet, and yet no cap of darkness ever wrought more astonishing disappearances than occur when this most common of our earth's elements disappears from under our very eyes, dissolving into thin air." What child has not noticed the steam rising from the damp pavement when the sun comes out after a shower? The drops of water are donning their magic caps and flying off into the atmosphere to become invisible to our eyes. The next time we see them, it may be as part of the white cloud sailing across the blue sky. Then there is the magic power which brings back the vapor spirit to sight and touch. This magician's name is "Cold," or "Jack Frost," who transforms our water drops again and gives them many fancy shapes, such as may be seen on frosted windowpanes, or shallow ice, or in the snowflakes

When the child sees so many things smaller and weaker than he, all doing something and making something, he, too, longs to join this busy world. He may well use such occupation as cutting, pasting, weaving, and modeling; for the birds, trees, and spiders, in their way, do all these things, while the flowers are painted with colors taken from the sunbeams and from the earth.

Stories of animals and insects may be appropriately told to emphasize the nicety and exactness of work done by creatures so much more helpless, than we, and in this was a desire to do good and accurate work will be stimulated.

Two Kinds.

There are two kinds of people on earth to-day; Just two kinds of people—no more, I say. Not the sinner and saint, for 'tis well understood The good are half bad and the bad are half good.

Not the rich and the poor, for, to count a man's with, You must first know the state of his conscience and ealth; Not the humble and proud, for, in life's little span Who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.

Not the happy and sad, for the swift-flying years Bring each man his laughter and each man his tes. No, the two kinds of people on earth that I mean Are the people who lift and the people who lean.

Wherever you go, you will find the world's mass Are always divided in just these two classes; And, oddly enough, you will find, too, I ween. There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.

In which class are you? Are you easing the lo Of overtaxed lifters who toll down the road? Or are you a leaner, who lets others bear Your portion of labor and worry and care?

—Henry P. Lyman-Wheaton, in the Christil Herald.

Try It! Substitute For Nasty Calomel

Starts your liver without making you sick, and cannot salivate.

Every druggist in town-your druggist and everybody's druggist—has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it, while Dodson's Liver Tone is perfectly safe and gives better resaid a prominent local drugsults," gist. Dedson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs but a few cents; and if it fails to give easy re-lief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasantvegetable remedy, tasting, purely harmless to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick head-ache, acid stomach, or constipated bowels. It does not gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel to-day, and to-morrow you will feel weak, sick, and nauseated. Do not lose a day's work. Take Dodson's Liver Tone instead and feel fine, full of vigor and ambition.

"Speak Not Evil One of Another." BY C. PETTY.

This admonition of the anostle James (4: 11) does not amount to much with a great many that claim to be Christians, or, I might say, church members, for I notice of late that a distinction is made between them. Some will tell you they are members of the church that won't claim they are Christians, and a person knows his own heart better than any one else. I am almo t persuaded to believe that Christians will not speak evil of each other, for such speaking is from an evil spirit. Now, there are only two spirits in the world, the good spirit and the evil spirit.

I am persuaded, from what I hear in my travels, that the disciples are not as good to each other as they were in the long ago when they were not as popular as they are now. I notice, too, that where there is a little band of brethren in a new place, trying to build up the cause in the midst of persecution, that they do not speak evil of each other. So it may be that persecution helps some members to hold their tongues. There can b nothing more distressing and ruinous to the church than for members to talk about each other in an unbecoming way. They injure themselves as much as others, if not more. Paul said: "If ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another." (Gal. 5: 15.) That is, you can by evil speaking drive a weak member away from the church and destroy all idea in him of ever trying to live right again, and thus he is consumed by your bitter, slanderous, backbiting tongue.

Listen! Are you not afraid you will grieve the Holy Spirit by such talk? Paul said to the Ephesians: "Grieve not the holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice." (Eph. 4: 30, 31.) Now, if you grieve the Holy Spirit by your evil speaking, is there any chance for you to pass through the gates into the city, seeing that you are driving away from you the Holy Spirit that is to dwell in you, to comfort and console you in your trials and sweeten the sorrows of life and make that spirit of yours a gentle spirit before it leaves its temple here to go to the better world?

Paul tells us this: "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." (Eph. 4: 32.) How pleasant and consoling it is to be in a circle where kindness rules in the hearts of all and where we can see that we "love each other with pure hearts fervently!" What a joyous thing it would be if we would all be kind one to another and love each other! Then no one would be brokenhearted as he travels through life by an evil tongue, and there would be no stain on the church put there by cruel hands, neither would the Holy Spirit be grieved, and all would rejoice greatly in the church, and we could sing, in spirit and truth:

I am clinging, clinging close to thee." "Savior, more than life to me,

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the South-land and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. The Quick Way to Stop a Cough

This home-made syrup does the work in a hurry. Easily pre-pared, and saves about $2.

You might be surprised to know that

You might be surprised to know that the best thing you can use for a severe cough, is a remedy which is easily prepared at home in just a few moments. It's cheap, but for prompt results it beats anything else you ever tried. Usually stops the ordinary cough or chest cold in 24 hours. Tastes pleasant, too—children like it—and it is pure and good.

Pour 2½ ounces of Pinex in a pint bottle; then fill it up with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desifed. Thus you make a full pint—a family supply—but costing no more than a small bottle of ready-made cough syrup.

And as a cough medicine, there is really nothing better to be had at any price. It goes right to the spot and gives quick, lasting relief. It promptly heals the inflamed membranes that line the throat and air passages, stops the annoying throat tickle, loosens the phlegm, and soon your cough stops entirely. Splendid for bronchitis, croup, whooping cough and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, famous for its healing effect on the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

New System for Collegiate Section of the War Department."

At the request of F. R. Lang, Colonel, United States Army, District Military Inspector, and Bruce R. Payne, District Educational Inspector, we print the following notice:

Nashville, Tenn., November 2, 1918. -The War Department has issued instructions defining its policy in regard to the change in educational requirements for admission to the collegiate section, Students' Army Training Corps. An effort is being made to keep these units up to authorized strength. Due to the pressing need for officers in all branches of the service, men are continually being transferred to Officers' Training Camps. A new system of recruiting these sections is being worked out, and pending its completion the War Department directs that institutions where present number of inducted men is less than its authorized quota may certify for induction such students who do not have the prescribed number of units, but whom the head of the institution and the commanding officer of the unit, jointly, believe to be competent to pursue one of the programs prescribed. Due consideration will be given to such high-school training as applicants have had, also to voca-tional and business experience, to previous military training, and to such personal qualifications as are relevant to the making of an officer. The purpose of the foregoing arrangement is not to abolish educational standards, but to permit such relaxation as is necessary to bring the strength of the corps to its total authorization.

An applicant for admission to the Students' Army Training Corps should apply by mail immediately to the educational institution of his choice for detailed information.

To Whom It May Concern.

Report from North Carolina.

BY W. L. REEVES.

Our North Carolina work is to continue next year, with some minor changes in our plans. More fields of labor were opened this year, and they will call for more attention as time comes and goes. One more preacher has been added to our number-a Baptist whom I baptized last June. Laborers are few in this part, but we now have more preachers than are supported sufficiently to enable them to devote all of their time to the great needs of this field of labor. We have a very able man here in the city of Winston-Salem who labors every day through the week and preaches on Lord's day. The Lord's vineyard needs his services, but the lack of liberality among the brethren turns his energies to secular work. There are many men who pay much more tax to support civil governments than they pay to support the kingdom of God. This is proof that they serve the kingdoms of men better than that of God. War conditions, money-making, and the influenza have hindered our work very After all, we have lots for much. which to be thankful. My wife and I feel that we have been greatly blessed. We have been married just one year and our temporal needs have been furnished in abundance; so we divide with those who need.

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a Glass of Salts Before Break fast if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You.

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid, which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from over work, become sluggish, the elimina tive tissues clog, and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness, and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead, your back hurts, or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

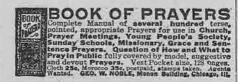

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

How-ever, I hope to be back at work soon. hindered in the Lord's work here on account of the influenza epidemic. How-I would like to communicate with some good preacher who would like to labor in this country next I made a sacrifice to come to Chaplin to keep the churches in the straight way. I feel that I have done a good work in the Master's name. I must make preparation to finish my education, for I believe a man should strive to reach the highest degree of efficiency possible, especially when so many new and strange doctrines are being propagated. I expect to continue my work here until September next; then I will try to leave the cause in the hands of some good, conscientious preacher. I believe this is the greatest field for sowing the seed I ever saw. We have about twelve hundred members in the five churches where I preach, all good, earnest, plain people, and they look to the preacher's need. Brother, if you preach the gospel and live the Christian life, and if you are an untiring worker in the Master's vineyard, kindly write me a letter at Chaplin, Ky., and I feel that I can place you in a field where you will be supported and where you can do much good .- R. President Wilson, Orator.

President Wilson is a highly trained and effective speaker. We have heard him address great audiences, speaking without manuscript; yet his address was so thoroughly constructed, so logical and complete at all points, and wholly free from the faults and blemishes that usually mark extemporaneous speaking, that it may be said to have borne internal evidence of careful study and preparation. There may be occasions on which he uses manuscript when he delivers his official messages in Congress; it is quite expected that he should read them.-Christian

How Doctors Treat Colds and Grippe

Ask any physician or druggist and he will tell you that the best and only effective remedy for a bad cold, sore throat, infinenza, or la grippe is what he calls "a brisk calomel purge," which means a hig dose of calomel at bedtime. But as the old-style calomel has some very unpleasant and dangerous qualities, physicians and druggists are now recommending the improved nau-sealess calomel, called "Calotabs," which is purified and refined from the sickening and dangerous effects and whose medicinal virtues are vastly improved.

One Calotab on the tongue at bedtime, with a swallow of water-that's all. No salts, no nausea, nor the slightest interfer-ence with your diet, pleasures, or work. Next morning your cold has vanished and your entire system is purified and refreshed. Calotabs are sold only in original scaled packages; price, thirty-five cents. An Incident of the War.

They had returned to the trenches. An English officer was missing. Some one had seen him fall. Learning of the spot, his brother, also a member of the company, begged the privilege to attempt to find and bring him in. Permission was granted. The brother crept out into No Man's Land as best he could. He found him lying at the bottom of a shell hole. He managed to lift him out and finally bore him back within the lines. But when he laid him down the life had fled. "Are you not sorry now," said the commanding officer, "that you ventured all this?" "No," was the reply, "because when I looked down into that shell hole he looked up into my face and smiled, and said: 'I knew you would come," "-Our Dumb Animals.

More About India.

MAG

BY NOLA HILER M'HENRY.

The Indians are of a dark complexion, some almost as black as the negro, but not having the same features as the negro. The features are more like the European. Among the higher eastes, where the women are compelled to stay in the house or to keep themselves shrouded, they are almost as white as the European, if not whiter; also, in the colder climates they are lighter. So it seems the race was formerly light and has become dark only because of the terrible heat.

As to customs, I shall not try to tell about all of them or about all the castes, but about some customs of the lower castes, among whom most of our work now is. These people live in mud houses, or, where they are not stationary, their houses are built of reeds. The floors are covered with cowdung, which makes a smooth, hard surface; and as the people do not wear shoes, or, if they do, pull them off before coming into the house, this covering stays nice for some time, as there is no furniture to tear up the floors. Most of the people have only one small room in which they live, sleep, and cook. For a cooking place they have a small, low furnace, built of mud or rooks covered with mud. The houses are very dark, usually having no opening but a small door. The smoke in them is terrible. Most of their dishes are of brass, which they keep bright and shining. The poor people have a very scanty supply, perhaps one or two basins in which to cook, a cup or pot from which to drink, a large earthen jar in which to carry water, and one large plate about two inches deep and twelve inches in diameter, from which they eat. There are no knives, forks, or spoons with which to eat; but, placing the plate on the floor, the people gather around it and eat from the same dish with their hands. (See Matt. 26: 23; John 13: 26.) Their food is a hot curry, which is mostly peppers and spices mixed with a little meat, potatoes, beans, etc. This they sop up with bread or pour on rice and eat. They can even drink milk with their fingers with the same skill that a Chinaman can eat rice with a chopstick. The men folks eat first, while the women wait upon them; then, if there is anything left, the women eat.

Woman comes last and is of very little notice, except in ways of service. If a man's wife is with him, it is a disgrace for him to carry the burden. When they come from the market, the grain or other luggage is bound in a cloth or put into a basket and placed on the woman's head, while the man walks along free or carries a small bundle. Besides the big load on their heads, the women often carry a large child in their arms or a babe on their backs. In carrying the child on their backs, they lay it in a cloth and tie it around their shoulders. When the child cries, they give it a shift to change its position, I suppose. Poor little things! I shall never forget the first one I saw so carried and how it made me feel; and although I have been here three and one-half years, whenever I see a dear, helpless babe so carried, it fills me with a feeling I cannot express. It seems very cruel. But the mothers do hard field work or other work with their babes just so.

It is the custom to have the daughters married when only babes, often to grown men. To show that the girls are married, an ugly mark is placed on their forehead. These marks are black, red, and other colors, and made in different designs representing caste, gods, etc. These ugly marks mar their beauty. So I do not see very many Hindu girls which I think are pretty. Some of the Christian girls, however, who do not have these marks, are real pretty. Also, most of the women have their arm or arms from elbow down covered with these ugly designs. The dress of the women consists of a waist, very low-necked and coming about halfway to the waist line, and a long cloth from eight to nine yards in length and wide enough to come from the waist to the feet, which is wrapped about them and brought over the shoulders and head. So in all it is a rather decent dress. Most of the Christian girls wear the full waist, and I very much like their costumes. The smaller girls wear skirts with the half waist. The children, both boys and girls up to about four years of age, go naked most of the time. Little boys wear long shirts and sometimes trousers or a small cloth tied about their loins. The men wear shirts which hang loose over their trousers, which are nothing more than a long cloth tied about them in somewhat the shape of trousers. They wear turbans instead of hats. Some of those who have been educated in the missions wear round caps. If they can afford it, they wear coats, and very much like to sport shoes and socks; but as very few can afford these huxuries, they wear only the sandals. Some of the women also wear sandals. I like the native dress, and yet have my first Indian whom I think looks better in European dress.

Instead of the horse, we see the donkey and the ox. The donkey is used a great deal for working roads, as the dirt is thrown into two sacks and thrown over their backs. The ox is the most important beast of burden. I have seen huge bundles of hay

LAXATIVE Aged People

THE BANE of old age is constipation. The bowels become weak and unable to perform their functions without aid. For this purpose only the mildest and gentlest laxative should be used. The use of harsh cathartics aggravates the trouble and makes the constipation worse. Chamberlain's Tablets are a favorite with people of middle age and older on account of their gentle action.

moving along the road when one might wonder what made it move, for the ox is almost completely covered by the hay. For watering the trees along the highways, they carry water in large skins placed on the ox. Instead of wagons, they use the ox cart. The buffaloes are also used for hauling purposes. Most of the carriages are two-wheeled, called "tongas." They are drawn by one or two horses and carry two or three passengers besides the driver.

The majority of mothers nowadays overdo, there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, nervous condition with headaches, back-ache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develop. It is at such periods in life that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore a normal healthy condition, as did to Mrs. Worthline.

A HOME CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mall your name and address; and I will send it free to try. After you have fised it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar; but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer, when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't dolay. Write to-day.

Mrs. Richard Mobley, of Springfield, Mo., writes as follows:

Editors Gospel Advocate.-Dear Brethren in Christ: Perhaps it will interest you to know that Lawrence Mobley is a member of the church of Christ; was baptized at the age of fourteen years and has lived a faithful and consistent Christian life to the present time. He is now twenty-three years old. He enlisted in the Aviation Corps last December, and is now in France, stationed near the ancient city of Tours. It was his request that his subscription to the Gospel Advocate be renewed, but, owing to so many war activities and other expenses, coupled with limited means, we have failed to do so, though we appreciate the Gospel Advocate and would miss the weekly feast of good things we receive from it. Nashville is my sainted mother's birthplace and home till she was sixteen years old. Her father, Harvey Reese, was a Christian preacher, her mother was a Murphy, all of Maury County. I seem to know the country as described by Brother Larimore in his "Letters and Sermons," as my mother told us children years ago. They left Tennessee long before the Civil War, and mother passed away five years ago at the ripe old age of seventy-nine, bearing her courageous. Christian spirit to the last.

I wish the Gospel Advocate all success in the worthy work and thank you for the strength and comfort obtained by the perusal of its pages.

Brings the Best Into Cooperation.

It is no wonder that many are finding the new medicinal combination-Hood's Sarsaparilla before eating: Peptiron, a real iron tonic, after eating; and Hood's Pills as needed-remarkably effective as a course of treatment for giving vitality, vigor, and vim, and increasing strength and endurance.

Among the medicinal substances that this combination brings into cooperation are such cleansers, tonies, and digestives as sarsaparilla, nux, iron, and pepsin, whose great merit has been fully established.

Good results from such a combination, in cases amenable to treatment, seem to be among the "inevitables." The combination is especially recommended for those who are run down, whose blood is poor because of impurity or lack of Iron, whose nerves are weak or unstrung, livers torpid or sluggish. Try it.

FIRST AID TO DIGESTION

In eases of indigestion or dyspepsia, the contents of the stomach, for lack of a proper supply of digestive juices, first ferment, forming gases, and later decompose. This process is attended with more or less discomfort and reacts to the injury of all the digestive organs, with the result of poisoning the entire system, a condition known as auto-intoxication. Three prime considerations arise in treatment of such conditions:

First, the process of decomposition must be arrested, by neutralizing the acid condition of the stomach, thus giving prompt relief from pain.

Second, the salivary glands and other glands which produce the various digestive juices must be stimulated into active secretion in order that the food may be properly digested.

Third, the stomach nerves must be toned up into a healthy state and inflammatory conditions of the membranous lining allayed. Mi-o-na tablets do this work

Florida.

BY T. B. THOMPSON.

I write this to apprise my friends that we are now located in our home, Avon Park, in the most beautiful and fruitful part of the great State of Florida. To read of the beauties and advantages of this land of flowers and fruit is to know nothing of it compared to a personal helping one's self to its bounties. Even now I can look down into one of its most beautiful lakes. And as for health, just think of a town of a thousand where there was not a death from influenza, even though its only doctor was so sick he could not practice during the time the epidemic was on. A man, who has lately moved with his family to this town, said to me: "I just feel that if I had not moved here we'd have lost our daughter in this epidemic." Training camps are ordering our citrus fruit by the carloads, before it is ripe, for their "flu" patients.

The church here is planning great things for the future. Though few in number, they believe in doing things, which is attested by the fact they have assumed my entire support (a good support, too) for the next two years. Some Christian families have already moved in and are established in business, and there are others to come. We are anxious to get in touch with Christian people who would like to move to Avon Park, where they can be a help to the church, make a good living, and live in the best climate in America. I am to hold a meeting here as soon as the "flu" trouble is entirely over: then I go over near Tampa for a meeting.

A good barber who is also a member of the church of Christ is herewith presented an opportunity to locate in the scenic highlands of Southern Florida, which for scenery, fruit, climate, and good health is unexcelled. The town of Avon Park is in the fruit belt and offers some wonderful incentives to those who are tired of the winters of the North. Space forbids my telling here all about this beautiful country; to see it is to be convinced. Following is the proposition: A barber with a good shop splendidly located wants to move to a near-by town where he owns property. He has a shop and a home for sale. The shop is equipped with pressing-club arrangements and has three good chairs. Price, six hundred dollars alone. The home has five rooms on a lot sixty by one hundred and thirty-five feet, well located. It has eight bearing grapefruit trees and eight young orange trees. Price, one thousand dollars. Both together will sell for fifteen hundred dollars. Onehalf interest in the shop will cost three hundred dollars. If neither of the above propositions suit, arangements might be made to work in the shop. If there is a barber who is a consistent member of the church and wants a place where he can make good money and help build up the cause, here is your opportunity, and the church of Christ holds out a welcome to you. I am located with the church, and it is moving along nicely. We believe in doing things; if you do, come on. Correspondents will please address me from now on at Avon Park, Fla.

Grandma Used Sage Tea to Darken Hair

She Made Up a Mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to Bring Back Color, Gloss, and Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked, and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked, or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a fifty-cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft, and luxuriant.

This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease.

Rhumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medi-cal writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rhenmatism. This view is sub-stantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due, in whole or in part, to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I be lieve that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent releft. It will purify the blood, releave debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, alding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there; and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginis, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Origin of the Submarine.

It is unknown who built the first submarine boat, but it is said that Alexander the Great was interested in submarine navigation. There is no doubt that types of submarine vessels were studied during the thirteenth and fourteen centuries. Early in the seventeenth century submarine boats were numerous, and in 1624 Cornelius Dræbel exhibited a submarine of his own design on the Thames. By 1724 fourteen types had been patented in England alone. In 1775 David Bushnell built his first submarine boat, with which Sergeant Lee attacked H. M. S. Eagle in New York Harbor. Fulton began his experiments in France and America in 1795, and from that time numerous forms of submarines were devised with more or less success. In 1863, larger boats, propelled by engines, were commenced in Europe, and the navies of the various countries began experimenting with submarines. The United States Navy had the submarine boat under consideration for several years. The first boat was ordered about 1895, but was never completed, and seven of the Holland type were ordered in 1900, and one purchased when nearly complete early in that year.-Christian Herald.

A Young Preacher's Death.

BY ROBERT ALEXANDER.

Brother William Norman Luton, who was born on March 17, 1895, passed to his reward on the morning of October 25, 1918. Brother Luton obeyed the gospel at the age of eleven. and to those who knew him it is useless for me to say that he grew in faith and zeal for God. Nearly half of his Christian life was spent in the public proclamation of the gospel of the Son of God. Brother Luton was a graduate of the Nashville Bible School. Since finishing his course in the Bible School he refused several flattering business offers and chose to spend his time in spreading "the good news" in Western Kentucky. Brother Luton had spent the past summer in evangelistic work with great results. With the conclusion of his last meeting he took to his bed with influenza. Although he was carefully watched by a skilled physician and by his anxious parents, he developed a severe case of pneumonia, which resulted in death. Because of restrictions by the State Board of Health, only short open-air services were permitted. The funeral services were conducted by Brother Coleman Overby, of Murray, Ky., assisted by the writer. This death has removed from us one of the most consecrated and useful young men in Western Kentucky.

Irritable and Exhausted. Nuxated Iron, increases the Red Blood Corpuscles and builds up the strength, energy and endurance of delicate, run-down people in two weeks' time in many instances.

Thousands of men and women are impairing their constitutions, laying themselves open to illness and literally losing their grip on health, simply because their blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says: "Lack of Iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force, that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life. It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable. To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron— Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous' run-down people in two weeks' time.'' Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Keep the Children in School.

Clearly one of the things America must guard most carefully is the maintenance of standards of education and of labor in industry and agriculture. The President, Secretary of War, and many other officials and organizations are urging this. All Europe's experience proves the necessity of careful planning at this point. Let us help the nation's boys to distinguish between jingoism and true patriotism. We do not want another "Children's Crusade." For the sake of the future let us see that children remain in school as long as possible. This is all the more important in as much as the new Child Labor Law has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. It is to be hoped that this decision may be reversed or that at least some even better law may be passed at an early date, in spite of the continued obstacles which seem to be in the way.—Christian Herald.

Edifying as the Need May Be

The Christians' Stock Company.

Money well invested grows. Even a very small capital for a beginning may make one rich if it is well invested. The problem of life, from the financial viewpoint, is the problem of investment. The key of success is the happy solution of how to invest. I should like to present to the readers of the Gospel Advocate the claims of a joint stock company of which Jesus Christ is the Head—not a mere figurehead, but, as Paul says, the "head over all things to the church." This body of which all Christians are members is a financial body, as well as a spiritual body. Christ has not only shown his love for us by giving us places of equal partnership with himself, but he has also demonstrated his confidence in us by placing the finances, to a great extent, in our hand.

The regular meeting of this joint stock company occurs, not once a year, but upon the first day of every week. At these meetings we are expected to teach and preach the word, pray, sing praises, partake of the Lord's Supper, and attend to the offering.

Ø Ø Ø

The More Excellent Way.

Paul lays down the rule of giving for these regular meetings: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I gave order to the churches of Galatia, so also do ye. Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper, that no collections be made when I come." (1 Cor. 16: 1, 2.) This rule is divine, and, for that reason, the best ever given for its purpose. No man can improve upon it, and to attempt to do it is folly. The church that gives this rule a fair trial never goes into bankruptcy. The Mormons cling to the rule of the Old Testament and not only prescribe, but require, a tenth. As a result, they never seem to lack money for their various undertakings. But this is a better rule. It is admitted that we are living under the new covenant. By what process of reasoning can one figure that a coverant which is superior in every respect is inferior in point of giving? Is it possible that a perfect plan of salvation, bought "with precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of Christ," calls for a lesser sacrifice than an imperfect plan sealed by the blood of bulls and goats? Perish the thought! The church that follows this rule has money to give to missions, to the poor, to every good work. The beauty of the plan is found in the fact that the funds are ready. There is no need for a "special offering." The church that departs from this rule is compelled to resort to claptrap methods which bring reproach, leaving the impression upon worldly minds that God is a pauper, Christ is begging, and the church is bankrupt. We witness the spectacle of persons selling this thing and that thing "for the benefit of the church." People patronize these schemes because they are led to believe that the church is in dire straits. Gifts obtained in such a way are imperfect and are doubtless an abomination unto the Lord, such as those against which Malachi proclaimed: "Present it now unto thy governor; will he be pleased with thee? or will he accept thy person? saith Jehovah of hosts." The best way to prevent such humiliating schemes is to follow the teaching of Paul's rule.

Some Distinct Advantages.

Let us consider some of its distinct advantages. 1. The church is honored above any individual. At the same time, every faithful member shares in the honor. The principles of giving taught by the Savior in the Sermon on the Mount are safeguarded. One does not give openly, thus attracting much attention to himself through his gift; but he gives through the common treasury, his gift mingling with the gifts of his fellow members, rich and poor alike. It is possible even in the public assembly to make one's gift in a manner so free from ostentation that the left hand does not "know what the right hand doeth." Jesus said: "When therefore thou doest alms, sound not a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do." The Pharisees, as a sect, have passed away, but the pharisaical spirit is very much alive. The Savior's ears often catch the screech of the brazen trumpet in a good many of the ways of raising and giving money which find favor today. Men have improved somewhat upon the methods of the Pharisees. It is no longer necessary for one to blow a trumpet before him when he does his alms. If he is tactful and "turns loose the cash," the newspapers will do it for him. Certainly one of the distinct temptations to a Christian is to give where it will attract the most attention. A faithful observance of Paul's rule is the way of escape.

2. This rule encourages all to give, "Let every one of you" leaves no doubt on this point, provides for no exception. The poor must give, as well as the rich; boys and girls, as well as their parents. It is not a thing to be done by proxy. You can no more give for me than you can believe, pray, and partake of the Lord's Supper for me. Wives should not be content to allow their husbands to do the giving for them, if they have any money at their command. It is not a case of the same thing "because it's all in the family, anyway." Giving should create happiness in our own lives, as well as in the lives of others. What right, then, has a husband to deprive his wife of the happiness of giving, or parents their children?

3. The part given is proportioned to the income. Each must give "as God hath prospered him." If one's income varies from week to week, it is easy to see that the contribution will vary. It is the percentage, not the gross amount, that counts with God. That is why the poor widow who gave less than half a cent gave more than all the rest. She gave one hundred per cent of principal and income. This proportionate amount should be stored in a separate fund. Each must "lay by him in store." The reason is, "that no collections be made when I come." The blessing of the stored fund is found in the fact that the energy of the church is not taxed to the point of desperation trying to raise money; but the question is, how can we spend the money we have to the best advantage? The Lord wants us to be exceedingly careful, but never close-fisted, in the expenditure of his money.

Remember, you are going to get out of the church or the Christian religion just what you put into it. "He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." If you are willing-hearted and follow the rules of the New Testament, you will soon discover that the church of Christ is a spiritual stock company that pays the greatest dividends. In fact, it is the only safe and sure investment.

Does Death End All? BY F. W. SMITH.

Perhaps no question has ever been fraught with such interest and anxiety as this, which receives no answer from those who have passed from this mode of existence. Some things we know, among which is self-existence. Here I am, but whence I came and whither I shall go are not matters that can be determined through the medium of knowledge. If I appeal to the universe about me, I am mocked by the echo of my own voice, and the very stars which gleam above me seem to look down upon me in helpless pity. Nature, draped in the gloom of winter or robed in the gorgeous splendors of spring, moves on in the cycles of time with hushed voice and sealed lips regarding the origin or the destiny of man. The beautifully tinted rose bursting from the grave of winter is no prophccy of a resurrection and a future life. Such changes and transformations as are continually taking place about us do not shed light on the momentous question: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Man is not a flower, but a sentient being with attributes different from all created things about him. He reasons, loves, hates, and wills-attributes not predicable of a flower that blooms in one short summer and whose leaves crumble into dreamless dust, never to be awakened by sun and shower. True, the principle we call "life," which clothed the flower with such marvelous beauty, symmetry, and fragrance, argues the existence of an infinite wisdom and power; but, with all of its delicately fashioned petals and its seeds of reproduction, it fails to reveal the nature and attributes of its Maker. Hence, with the scalpel of the scientist we may dissect every living, moving creature, and with the aid of the most powerful telescope sweep the fields of infinite space, without a gleam of light on the origin and destiny of man. What, then? Shall man give up in despair and weep without hope for his loved ones who slip through the shadows we call " death?" A thousand times no; for he can stand on the golden sunlit mount of Faith, from whose lofty peak he can see beyond the veil, with hope gleaming like a star between two clouds, illuminating his pathway through these low grounds of sorrow.

KNOWLEDGE AND FAITH.

Man is governed in all of his actions by either one of two principles—viz., knowledge or faith. He acts with the same degree of certainty upon faith as he does upon knowledge, and this fact proves that faith may assume the same degree of strength and certainty as if it were absolute knowledge. Some things we believe to exist as strongly and as certainly as if we had absolute knowledge of their existence. For example: I believe as firmly that George Washington lived, and that he lived in the time and country claimed by history, as if I had known him personally; and yet I have never seen nor talked with a single human being that ever saw or talked with any one who had seen Washington. Man, then, moves, lives, and has his being in what may be termed two spheres or realms of activity. This grows out of the fact that man is limited in his attributes and that, if he acted only upon knowledge, all the relationships of life would become so circumscribed as to dwarf his very being. Destroy the faith of the husband in the wife or that of the wife in the husband, and you at once remove that domestic felicity which makes home a paradise and crowns holy wedlock with conjugal bliss.

MAN'S ENDOWMENTS.

Man is known to possess five senses, corporeal in their nature, and through which he takes cognizance of his surroundings. Thus, within certain limitations, he apprehends things whose nature and existence become matters of absolute knowledge. He possesses the sense of seeing, hearing, feeling, tasting, and smelling. Through these man is enabled to distinguish and classify the objects with which he comes in contact. But there is another realm to which man is related by social and business intercourse, into which neither of his corporeal senses can enter and which calls for the exercise of faith. Hence, much of what is called life exists in the realm of faith, and it may be truly said that we partly live by faith. Man-normal man -does not court death. Why? Because he desires to live. He craves continued existence, whether in this state of being or not, and his very soul grows sick and recoils at the thought of extinction or annihilation.

WHENCE CAME THE DESIRE TO LIVE?

We have seen that in his corporeal being man is endowed with five senses, and that these are a part of his very being in this state of existence. Now, the desire for continued existence cannot be predicated of the pleasures growing out of the gratification of these senses; for the aged and infirm, within whom the fires of lust no longer burn, have the same desire to live as do the young. The desire, then, for continued existence is in no way related to the flesh, but is above and independent of every fleshly impulse. Is the desire to live on beyond the crumbling and disintegration of the body of man's creation? No more than are his five senses, but is innate and as natural as it is for man to breathe. The inevitable conclusion, then, is that the same power that brought man into existence and endowed him with his corporeal senses implanted within him another sense—viz., a soul sense—from which springs the desire to live.

GRATIFICATION OF MAN'S SENSES.

Has man the sense of vision? Behold the beauties and glories of earth and sky upon which he can feast his eyes! The odors of fruits and flowers regale his olfactory nerves, while the blending harmonies of nature's orchestra play upon his auditory sensibilities. His sense of taste is appealed to by the rich flavor of his daily food, and the delicate sense of touch is made to thrill his being with pleasant sensations because of contact with corporeal objects. How wonderfully complete is the provision for meeting and satisfying man's corporeal senses! Must that other, inner sense, with its longings and cravings, go unfed and unsatisfied and left to perish? No—a thousand times no! Its food is faith, upon which it feeds from morn till night, and which enables the soul to look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen.

WHAT IS FAITH?

Man's own experience constitutes indubitable evidence of the power of faith over his actions in the affairs and concerns of life; hence, no proof is needed to establish the existence of faith. What, then, is that which we call "faith?" Nothing more nor less than the simple belief of testimony, and the strength of faith is in proportion to the strength of evidence on which it is based. The stronger the evidence, the deeper will be our conviction concerning the truthfulness of that which is affirmed. Moreover, belief is not a thing to be invited or rejected at the will or discretion of the individual; for when the evidence is conclusive, belief, or conviction, forces itself upon man. He counct help believing, no matter whether that faith causes pain or pleasure. A man is on trial for his life, and the jury makes up its verdict on the testimony of witnesses, and that verdict is simply the faith of twelve men. That is what they believe concerning the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and that faith, or belief of testimony, determines his destiny. Now, the all-important question as related to the subject of this dissertation-viz., "Does death end all?"-is this: Is there any testimony from an adequate and reliable source of a future life on which man can base a hope? I maintain that there is, and that faith in that promise meets the desire of the sixth or "soul sense" in man, and that nothing else beneath the sun can satisfy that longing within. But has man a soul? He possesses something besides flesh and blood which causes him to desire a continuation of being, and we know of no better term by which to designate it than that of "soul,"

MAN IS BY NATURE RELIGIOUS.

Man has within him a natural desire to worship some thing or being. As proof of this, no tribe or nation has ever been found without its objects of worship. The untutored and savage Indian worships the "Great Spirit" and dreams of the "happy hunting ground" beyond the gloom and darkness of the tomb. Man will worship or enshrine within the affections of his heart some object despite his disavowal of all religious feelings and sentiments. The classic scholar and matchless orator, R. G. Ingersoll, was a consummate idolater, notwithstanding his denial of a divine revelation and the truthfulness of Christianity. He toured the country lecturing on the genius of Shakespeare, and all the time that "genius" was his idol, before which he bowed with slavish worship and upon which he poured forth the adoration of his soul. Moreover, despite Mr. Ingersoll's professed antipathy to revealed religion, at times a pent-up faith in a future existence would leap from its prison walls and whisper to the world in a beauty of elegance and richness of rhetoric unequaled by mortal tongue. It whispered o'er the flower-bedecked casket of a loved one: "In the night of death, Hope sees a star and listening Love hears the rustle of a wing." This was the spontaneous outburst of an innate desire to survive the wreck of time and speed through the aisles of infinite space on the pinions of a bright-winged messenger to a world of unending bliss.

WHAT IS THAT PROMISE?

It has been affirmed that we have a promise from an adequate and reliable source that man may live again, and I now submit that promise: "For bodily exercise is profitable for a little; but godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come." (1 Tim. 4: 8.) This is the testimony of the book called "the Bible," in contradistinction to all other books. That such a promise has been made cannot be doubted, but some may question the credibility of the witness. The supreme question to be settled, then, is this:

IS THE BIBLE WHAT IT CLAIMS TO BE?

The Bible claims to be of divine origin, revealing the origin, duty, and destiny of man. As the sun is the center of the great solar system around which revolve the planets, so is Jesus Christ, in whom is life everlasting, the grand center of revelation around whom revolve the prophecy and history of the Bible. His claims to be the Savior of men stand or fall with the Bible, for it was all written to develop and substantiate that one great fundamenal proposition. How far back, then, can justice and fairness demand that I shall go to begin the development of my proof that the Bible is a divine revelation?

THE POSSIBILITY OF A DIVINE REVELATION.

I am not permitted to assume anything to begin with; hence, I have only raised the question of possibility, which can have no element of assumption in it. Now, from this premise I argue that the Bible is true.

- 1. The creation of matter presupposes a creative mind-There is all about us a material universe which constitutes the most perfect building that ever emenated from the brain of an architect. Beauty of symmetry and purpose of design are written in letters of gold upon every page of the book of nature. Common sense tells us there cannot be a building without first a builder, and neither can there be such a thing as design without a designer. Without a planner, there can be no plan such as is manifested in all created things with a degree of perfection beyond the skill of any mortal mind. I would not insult the common sense of the reader with even an intimation that the world about us, including man himself, was just a "happen so" or "mere chance." The evidence from the world about us forces upon us the conviction that there was behind it all a Master Mechanic with an infinite skill.
- 2. The adaptation of things. There is a complete fitness of means for the accomplishment of ends in all the workings of nature. Each life has a sphere suited to its existence—the fish for the water, the bird for the air, beasts for the forest, and man lord over all.
- 3. Man need not look away from himself to be convinced of a supreme and infinite Creator. He did not bring himself into existence, but is a dependent being; and a dependent being argues an independent Being. Now, is it not within the range of possibilities that the Being who created man and all things else could give a revelation of himself? Could not such a Being disclose to man—intelligent, thinking, reasoning man—a knowledge of his origin, duty, and destiny? To deny such a possibility is to belittle and degrade man in his own estimation.

Songs of Thanksgiving.

BY CARL F. PRICE.

(An Authority on Religious Hymnology.)

Our forefathers in Plymouth Colony, who founded the festival of Thanksgiving Day, were hymn singers. And their hymn singing was none the less hearty because the haughty Cavaliers back in old England with high scorn taunted the Puritans with being "hymn singers," as though it were a term of reproach. Those sturdy pioneers, despite the tempests of the sea, the "stern and rock-bound coast," the inhospitable wilderness, the biting climate, and the savagery of the natives, gave thanks to their Heavenly Father in full measure for all his blessings to them, and much of their thanks was expressed in song.

THE FIRST SONG BOOKS.

In those days the Puritans regarded as sacrilege the use in divine worship of any hymns, save those translated in metrical form from the word of God, and more particularly "the Psalms of David." And so it came to pass that the first songs of thanksgiving sung in that sturdy colony were metrical versions of the Psalms, first in old Henry Ainsworth's "The Book of Psalms-Englished both in prose and meter," later in the famous Sternhold and Hopkins psalm book, and still later in "The Bay Psalm Book" (1640). The first two of these praise books were brought with the colonists in their little ships from England. The Sternhold and Hopkins book, however, won the odious nickname of "Hopkins his Jigges," because it was felt to be a too free translation from the original Hebrew text of the Psalms. Accordingly, a new and more literal version of the Psalms was demanded, and "the chief Divines in the Country, took each of them a Portion to be Translated." The result of their versifying was the "Bay Psalm Book," the first hymn book ever published on American soil. A Cambridge poet of that day, as Cotton Mather tells us, gave to the metrical translators this muchneeded advice:

"You Roxb'ry Poets, keep clear of the Crime
Of missing to give us very good Rhime.
And you of Dorchester, your Verses lengthen;
But with the Text's own Words, you will them strengthen."

How poetically these writers succeeded, the gentle reader may decide for himself from this average sample of their work, the One Hundredth Psalm, taken from this same "Bay Psalm Book"—one of the first of the songs of thanksgiving ever penned in America:

> "Make yee a joyful noise unto Iehovah all the earth: Serve yee Iehovah with gladness: before him come with mirth, Know that Iehovah he is God, not wee our selves, but hee hath made us, his people & sheep of his pasture are wee.

O enter yee into his gates with prayse, & thankfullnesse into his Courts: confesse to him,
& his Name doe yee blesse,
Because Iehovah he is good,
his bounteous mercy is everlasting; & his truth is to eternity."

Such was the song of thanksgiving on the Day of Thanks nearly three hundred years ago.

HYMNS AFTER WAR.

While Plymouth Colony was being established, Europe was distraught with the turmoil of the Thirty-Years' War (1618-48). Germany, bowed in head, but chastened in spirit, came to that deeper spiritual consciousness often produced by the vicissitudes and sorrows of war. When at last the Peace of Westphalia brought the long-yearned-for peace with victory, German Protestantism broke forth into a pean of thanksgiving in Martin Rinkart's

"Now thank we all our God
With heart and hands and voices,
Who wondrous things hath done,
In whom the world rejoices."

The horrors of pestilence, famine, and military onslaught were suffered by Paster Rinkart in the walled town of Ellenburg. Whether or not tradition is accurate in affixing the writing of this hymn upon the date of the Peace of Westphalia, it is certain that his sufferings and his intense joy and thanksgiving when those sufferings came to an end inspired this hymn, which voiced the thanks of God of all the German people. Throughout the years this hymn has been known as the German Te Deum.

Hymns of praise, of which Christian hymnody has a rich abundance, are in a certain sense often songs of thanksgiving. The essential motive for the praise and worship of God in these hymns is gratitude to the Divine Father for all "his goodness and his wonderful works to the children of men." The long-meter Doxology is the most instinctive, hymnic idiom of thanks. Just as the exclamation, "Thank God!" rushes to the lips of a devout man when his heart suddenly wells up with gratitude, so a congregation, moved by the same emotion, almost spontaneously bursts into singing: "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!"

PRAISING GOD.

On the eve of the Fourth of July, 1876, which marked the one hundredth anniversary of the independence of this nation, a great multitude were gathered before the old Statehouse in Philadelphia, where the Declaration of Independence was signed. Just as the clock struck midnight, that vast throng, thrilled with the memories of a marvelous century of God's blessings since that historic event, sang with great emotion, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!" and those who were present declared it to be the most fervent song of thanksgiving they had ever heard.

Sankey used to tell the story of a little girl who accompanied her father to the top of Mount Washington. Owing to a thunderstorm below them, their view was limited to the rocks at the very summit and to the blue vault of the heavens, bathed in sunshine. "Well, Lucy," said her father, "there is nothing to be seen here, is there?" But the child, whose heart was filled with thanks to the Creator for the strangely wonderful vision, exclaimed: "O papa! I see the Doxology! All around seems to say: 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!'"

In the dark days of the Civil War, a group of prisoners brought to Libby Prison one night were giving way to the bitterest feelings of depression. One of their number, a Baptist minister, sat down, covered his face with his hands, and wept. Suddenly a voice from an upper window started the long-meter Doxology, a dozen joined in the second line, and soon the whole company of prisoners were singing the hymn of praise. At once the depression dissolved, and the song of thanksgiving spread the spirit of thanksgiving throughout the forlorn company and there was no more weeping.

Some of our more modern hymns not only breathe a spirit of thankfulness for all of God's blessings in general, but also specify certain definite blessings for which the soul returns thanks to God in song. Folliott S. Pierpoint's children's hymn, "For the beauty of the earth," renders "grateful praise" to Christ our God for the beauties of nature; for the love of parents, family, and friends; for "the mystic harmony Linking sense to sound and sigh;"

for the church of God; and for

"Thyself, best Gift Divine."

In her book of "Legends and Lyrics," published in 1858,

Adelaide A. Procter gave to the world a stirring song of thanksgiving that has passed into common use:

> "My God, I thank thee, who hast made The earth so bright. So full of splendor and of joy, Beauty and light. So many glorious things are here, Noble and right."

In the verses that follow she has offered thanks for the abundance of joy and gentleness and love, for pain and its ministry (a difficult verse, perhaps, for some to sing with sincerity), for the good things the Lord has in store for us, and even for the imperfectness of these lives of ours that can never find perfect satisfaction

"until they lean On Jesus' breast."

HARVEST-TIME SONGS.

Harvest time and the abundance of the earth's fruitage naturally turn the hearts of the people toward thankfulness, of which in our own land Thanksgiving Day is the appropriate expression. Matthias Claudius, a poet dear to the German people, nearly a hundred and fifty years ago, caught up the spirit of this season in a sketch, "Paul Erdmann's Fest," published in his famous yearbook, "Wandsbecker Bote." Herein the people at harvest time are represented as coming to Paul's home and singing their Peasant's Song, from which has been translated by Jane M Campbell our song of thanksgiving:

"We plow the fields and scatter
The good seed on the land,
But it is fed and watered
By God's Almighty hand."

Dean Henry Alford has given to us a harvest hymn of even greater and wider spiritual application in the lines beginning:

"Come, ye thankful people, come, Raise the song of harvest home; All is safely gathered in Ere the winter storms begin;"

and, next to our national hymn, this hymn is used more frequently than any other in worship on Thanksgiving Day.

The most heart-deep song of thanksgiving is that cry of joy that is uttered by the human soul upon realizing its full redemption from the curse of sin. David has uttered for the world the loftiest songs of gratitude for the salvation that comes from God alone; and these have been echoed in the metrical translations of the Psalms in successive centuries. Charles Wesley, that lyric hymnist of the very first order, never sang with deeper conviction than in his reminiscent hymn of praise—for this hymn was written upon the first anniversary of his conversion from sin, and bears within its lines many intimate references to that great event in his life. Indeed, many of our most inspiring hymns have derived their inspiration from that strange experience of the human soul, the new birth that banishes sinfulness and enshrines holiness in the heart. How inadequate are our songs of thanksgiving in the light of that greatest of miracles that God hath wrought! Some great day, when we shall come to a fuller realization of the eternal meaning of it all, earth's songs of thanksgiving shall be lost in the one great song of the redeemed of all the ages: "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing."

"O for a thousand tongues to sing My great Redeemer's praise;"

All successful men have agreed in one thing: they were causationists. They believed that things went not by luck, but by law. Belief in compensation—or, that nothing is got for nothing—characterizes all valuable minds.—Emerson.

Thanksgiving Felicitations.

The last Thursday in this month should be a memorable Thanksgiving Day. The nation has more cause to be thankful than ever before. The prayers of thousands have been answered. Peace covers the world. Gratitude should live in every heart. The publishers of the Gospel Advocate extend their heartiest felicitations to all their readers, and we ask in turn that you felicitate your paper by sending in a new subscriber. It's a big problem for us to keep the paper going and in line with the high standard always maintained.

Let us hear from you before Thanksgiving.

Our subscription list is picking up considerably. Many whose subscriptions were due have sent us their renewals. Along with the money have come brief messages of encouragement which have assured us that they would "stand by" the paper so long as it is kept up to the present standard. We look forward and not backward in our plans for increasing the usefulness of the Gospel Advocate. Despite the fact that peace has been declared, the cost of printing is unprecedented, and it requires both faith and courage to keep things moving. These qualities must live, not only in the hearts of the publishers, but also in the hearts of our readers. We are glad to note the number of brave-hearted "backers" on our list. We wish you to know that your messages are appreciated, and we pray the Lord to make us more and more worthy of your confidence.

What we need especially at this time is new names on our list. If each reader would only influence one other person to subscribe, that would be a tremendous help.

To keep the paper at the present price, we must all pull together. Our government requires us to discontinue all in arrears. Patriotism will prompt our readers not to delay sending in their renewals. We have also been requested to discontinue all premium offers for the present. But we believe that the love of the truth and an earnest desire to spread the gospel will cause them to help this year without any extra inducement.

Let us hear from you before Thanksgiving.

PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE,

How About Thanksgiving?

One day especially precious in American history is Thanksgiving. With it are associated many of our finest traditions, and on this day in the year 1918 we have a special opportunity to make it significant. To quote Good Housekeeping for November: "Those of us who are fortunate enough to have our homes near an army cantonment or a naval base have a golden opportunity to show our patriotism by opening our homes on that day to soldiers and sailors who are too far away from their own homes to spend the day there. More than anything else, the boys like to be invited to a real home. So this year there is every reason for continuing the festival custom of a Thanksgiving dinner, but let the spirit of the day come to the front to make it truly festive. Plan the feasting on a sane, simple, and truly war-time basis. This can easily be accomplished without losing the real flavor of the old-time observance. It certainly is not a time for overloading the table with all the meats and goodies which precedent has heretofore demanded; nor is it at a time for overeating, a deplorable custom to which we have long been heir. Plan a dinner of only three courses; but have each one prepared with thoughtfulness and care, mingled with loyalty and patriotism."

We are fickle and uncertain, ever falling, ever liable to be disappointed and dissatisfied, often only because we have not realized our appointed mission and its necessities.—T. T. Carter.

It is not our wishes, but our needs, that God will eternally satisfy.—Lucy Larcom.

Professional Robbery.

That the medical profession is a good thing and that it means much in the way of alleviating pain, prolonging life, and gladdening the hearts who anxiously administer to their loved ones, we must admit; but that many use it as a means of robbing the people is just as certain.

I have just got in from visiting a brother who has reached his seventy-second birthday. His wife has been dead for a number of years and all the children have married and left him, except one daughter, who is a most excellent Christian. They live alone, using two rooms to make rent cheap. She works six days in the week for their living, and he keeps house as best he can. He was cooking his dinner when I went in to-day (November 12), and he seemed so glad to see me.

About six or eight weeks ago, while at church, he called my attention to a cancer on his neck. I had heard of his trouble before, of course. It was some larger than the end of my thumb and looked very angry. It made my heart sick to think of this good old soul's having to have his last days spent with such suffering. He was already on our special prayer list.

To-day he told all about the cure and his experience in getting medical assistance. He went to one doctor, who is at the head of a sanitarium that bears his name, and was told that it was a cancer, and that he would have to stay four weeks, at least, in his institution, and that the best he could do for him was to take the case for one hundred and seventy-five dollars. This was out of the question. He then went to one of our office buildings and consulted another physician, who told him that it was a cancer, that it could be cured in about four weeks time, and that it would cost him only five dollars. The first treatment was taken on that day, and to-day the place is as smooth as the skin on my hand and he is a happy old soul. How we all rejoice with this good brother!

But what about that first doctor? You say: "Well, he thought it was worse than it really was." It is not so. Some of the biggest humbugs on this earth you find in the medical profession, and "robbery" is hardly strong enough to apply to some of their acts in their profession. They are, indeed, professional robbers, protected by the laws of the land. I certainly think that more rigid laws should be made for this class of people—such laws, indeed, as would put all such out of business. I have seen too much to be mistaken here. The charges that some doctors make should be looked into. Along with this, some of the blunders they make in diagnosing cases should be considered.

The Good Work Goes On.

The first Lord's day in this month was a very happy day with us all. Brother R. R. Brooks filled the pulpit at l'ast Point for the beginning of his work with those good brethren. I do not think I have ever known a preacher and congregation to be so thoroughly satisfied with each other. We are expecting brighter days than ever before experienced by the East Point brethren. On the same day Brother John Klingman filled, for the first time, the pulpit at South Pryor and Vassar Streets. The brethren were delighted with him. He has moved to Marietta, Ga., out twenty miles from Atlanta, but can run in on the interurban car and help us on Lord's days. This he will do, as a rule, this winter; but we are looking forward to organizing the work in Marietta by the early spring, and then he will give his undivided attention to it and Pleasant Grove, out about four miles from Marietta.

In the afternoon of the first Lord's day a meeting of welcome was called to convene at the East Point house of worship for Brethren Klingman and Brooks. This was, indeed, an enjoyable occasion. In connection with our songs and prayers, short speeches were made by Brethren C. H. Paine, J. F. Bell, Brooks, and Klingman, and the writer.

On the second Lord's day in this month the crowds at all of our places of worship were considerably increased. We had some difficulty seating the audience at West End, which has spurred the brethren up in the movement for larger quarters. There was one confession and baptism. In the afternoon the writer and wife, accompanied by the Eaton and Hunter families in their cars, went to the country, to the home of Sister Lacy, with the Lord's Supper. She is one of our oldest members. She is now living in a house built before the Civil War, and in which she has lived for sixty odd years. She and here husband were baptized about ten years ago. Brother Lacy continued with us, after his baptism, for about six years, passing from us at the age of eighty. There is nothing that thrills me more than to look into the faces of those whom I have helped to lead to Christ, for whom I have not one doubt about their safety and security in Christ, and, with these, to think of the ones gone on before and who now await

After the enjoyable service in the home of Sister Lacy, our big-hearted brother, Frank Swinney, made us stop at his home, and he showed us his "pig"-he called it a "pig," but it looked very much like a "hog" to me-that he expects to kill about Christmas time, and his mountain of potatoes, corn, pumpkins, hot pepper, sweet pepper, and I know not what all. You should have seen the crowd as we returned to our cars-Hunter, Eaton, and the writer with a big pumpkin in each of our arms, Sister Eaton and Sister Hunter with big stalks of hot pepper in their hands, others with flowers, and Brother Swinney with two pecks of potatoes to place in our cars. It was certainly a big day for us all. I fear, though, it spoiled Hunter and Eaton; for they will be wanting to go to the country every Sunday afternoon, and we have a trip already arranged for next Lord's day.

Well, we have "lots" of good days like these here, and we enjoy them so much. It would be such a mistake to have such without embracing them and enjoying them in the name of Christ, "giving thanks to his name." "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." (1 Cor. 10: 31.) Such is a foretaste of heaven. If it means so much for a few of us to thus be together here, what will it mean when we are all together up there? The Lord help us to be appreciative for all his goodness here and to ever look forward longingly for the greater things above.

Pity and need
Make all flesh kin. There is no caste in blood,
Which runneth of one hue, nor caste in tears,
Which trickle salt with all; neither comes man
To birth with tilka-mark stamped on the brow,
Nor sacred thread on neck. —Edwin Arnold,

Silence a voice that doth the midnight dare—
Make fresh hopes spring from grave sod of despair—
Set free a tortured soul from memory's rack?
Though we repent, can any God give back
The dear, lost days we might have made so fair?

Pathetic Poverty.

A Japanese educator told the story of two brothers in the agricultural college of Sapporo, in the northern island of Hokkaido. One day one of these boys appeared wearing a woman's yellow and black striped padded coat, with a velvet neckband showing that the garment was ordinarily worn to support a baby carried Japanese fashion on the back. There was much tittering among the other students at this strange garb, and the instructors found their classes somewhat demoralized. At noon the young man was called into the faculty room for an explanation. His father was dead; his mother made a bare subsistence out of a small farm; she had managed to save enough to send her boys to school with clothes for the summer session, and nothing more. When winter came, the mother wrote that in vain she had tried to save enough extra money to buy them the necessary winter kimono, that in spite of every economy she had been unable to manage it-such was the story.

"So I am sending you my own kimono and coat," she wrote. "You must have your thin cotton ones washed and mended, though I knew they must be nearly worn out by this time. Wear my heavy kimono underneath, and as soon as I can I will send you some money to buy new ones."

"But though I have mended my old kimono," the boy went on, "it is too ragged. There was only one thing to do—wear this one on the outside."

He was asked why, at least, he had not removed the telltale black velvet band.

"Last night," he replied, "I took the scissors and began to rip, but suddenly I remembered how my mother's hands had sewed those stitches, and how she had taken off her warm coat to send me, and how she was always working for us and thinking of us here, lonely for the sight of our faces, and I could not rip out the stitches of my mother's hands. I am sorry, sensei, but I had to wear it as it was."

Those same boys were later invited to live free of expense in a small dormitory donated by an American lady. The younger boy came to thank her, but to explain that acceptance would be out of the question.

"My brother is very proud," he said. "Besides, you do not understand. It is true that the paper shutters are torn and that sometimes it is cold, but we like our poor room. It is true that our lamp is small and the light is dim, but we study very well that way. It is for our education that we suffer. We are quite happy."—Gertrude Emerson, in "Asia" Magazine for October.

For Zoshigaya Sunday school: Charleston, Miss., $5.

Though short in some points, the above figures are encouraging. The church at Florence, Ala., gives quarterly. The last offering came within sixty-seven cents of forty dollars. In each of their three gifts this year there has been a decided increase. Also the church at Waterford, Ky., a church not strong in numbers nor wealthy, sends $20.91. Portland Avenue, Louisville, Ky., is giving fifteen dollars a month this year instead of ten as formerly. In view of the numerous other lines of work they do, I can truly say that this is one of the most liberal churches I have ever known; yet there is not a wealthy member in it.

There were four more baptisms at the Kamitomi Zaka Church, Sunday, September 29. Our Bible classes at Zoshigaya are well attended. Fifteen were present last night (October 1). We have twenty-seven students in the Gakuin. The Zoshigaya Church is passing through a period of discipline. The attendance at Sendagaya is growing.

As stated already, I am preparing to sail for America by way of Honolulu on January 25. It will take two hundred dollars to land me in San Francisco. I have already paid fifty dollars on my ticket. I will need about two hundred and sixty dollars to reach my home in Louisville, Ky. "The Lord will provide."

Gethsemane.

The paschal meon hung in an April sky,
Bathing with silver light an olive tree
That grew apart where deepest shadows lie
In a walled-in garden named "Gethsemane."

Its rays fell gently, tenderly, upon
A slender, white-robed Figure, kneeling there,
Whose brow with drops of bloody sweat was wrung,
Whose hands were clasped in agony of prayer.

The near approach of many hurrying feet;
A clamoring mob, with priests, and armed men
Whose hands bore twinkling lanterns, swords, and staves;
A hush; two words; the traitor's kiss—and then—

The paschal moon waned in the midnight sky.

Its dying light fell on the olive tree,
And long in benediction rested there,
Henceforth a sacred place—Gethsemane.—M. T. W.

U AT HOME AND ABROAD

QQ.

Brother and Sister Larimore will leave this week for Los Angeles, Cal., where they will spend the winter.

J. B. Nelson, of Dallas, Texas, was called home from his meeting at Belle Plain, Kan., on account of sickness in his family.

From W. E. Starnes, Dallas, Texas, November 9: "Fine work here. Several have taken their stand with us. One baptized last night."

A preacher, who lives at Tasmania, Fla., sent us a very interesting report, but neglected to sign his name. We will be glad to print the report when the writer's name is furnished.

A sister at McMinnville, Tenn., sent us a contribution for the work at Senatobia, Miss. We also received one from H. W. Jones, of Hardin, Ky. These funds have been forwarded.

F. B. Shepherd changes his address from Lometa to Amarillo, Texas. In addition to his regular evangelistic labors, he is serving a useful part in raising and forwarding funds for South African missions.

We are grieved to learn of the death of H. C. Kitchin, one of the elders of the Pearl and Bryan Streets congregation, at Dallas, Texas. He died at a result of hydrophobia. The Gospel Advocate extends sympathy.

J. O. Shannon, of Hiawatha, Kan., writes: "I have taken the Gospel Advocate for thirty years, and admire the bold, scriptural stand it has taken against the innovations practiced in the church and for its able presentation of the truth as taught in the Bible."

From T. B. Thompson, Avon Park, Fla., November 6: "If you know some brother who is a newspaper man and a practical printer, who would like to come South, please put him in touch with me at Avon Park, Fla. Everything looks good here. No shortage of oranges, grapefruit, etc. Plenty of the finest fish in the world; just had a mess for dinner. Some cases of 'flu' here, but no fatalities."

From W. S. Long, 46 R Street, N. E., Washington, D. C., October 10: "In my feeble way I have tried to present the need in Washington as it now stands and to set forth a plan by which the church might become a burning light in our national capital. I feel more like a missionary than I have ever felt before, as there are millions of people in this part of the United States that do not know what you mean when you tell them you are a member of the church of Christ."

From Mrs. Bettie Paine, Star, Texas, November 12: "I write to let you know how much I enjoy the dear old Gospel Advocate's weekly visits. I look forward each week for its coming as I would a dear friend, and I drink deeply of the truths expressed therein. I think it one of the very best papers published by the brotherhood. I am an old woman, nearly seventy-six years old, and my father took it long years ago when it was published by Fanning and Lipscomb."

One of our colored friends sent us an invitation to attend the "great Nashville debate" between "the Rev. J. W. Terry, S.T.D., D.D., from Huntington, W. Va., Baptist Church," and "the Rev. W. A. Dinkins, A.M., D.D., President Florida Industrial College Bible Training School, editor Christian Union Herald, presiding elder Jacksonville District, and a thirty-second-degree Mason. Admission, ten cents, with moving pictures each night." It should be worth a dime of anybody's money to attend this bout Just to see the theologs in action would be moving pictures enough.

From C. D. Crouch, Wellington, Texas, November 13:

"We are now settled in our new location, and we are very well pleased with the situation here. I preached at Quail last Sunday, and shall visit that place each second Lord's day. I will be here at Wellington the remainder of the time through the winter and spring. I shall engage in evangelistic work at mission points in this county next summer and fall. Brethren living in this county near schoolhouses available for protracted meetings will please communicate with me, or the elders here or at Quail, about the work. These two congregations will coöperate with me in the work."

From F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va., November 18: "I have received help in my work as follows: From Mrs. Sarah Drummond, $1; Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Smith, $5; L. H. Bretz, $1; John F. Kemp, Sr., $1; Miss DeLaine Ferguson, $4; church of Christ, Kemp, Iil., $10. This help is highly appreciated. May God bless and prosper all the donors. At present I am cut off from everything on account of Spanish influenza. People are dying all around us. Many are perishing in their sins. This is awful. I can hardly stand it. Personally, I have reached the limit of human endurance both as to means and strength, unless I can get liberal help in my work now. Please do help me with your means, so that I can resume work as soon as the ban is lifted, if my own strength does not fail."

From A. W. Young, Box 464, Fort Worth, Texas: "I have given up the work with the South Side-Central church of Christ, this city. I have had a pleasant and successful year with these brethren, and gave up the work in order to have more time to attend to some affairs of my own during the week. They were good to me in every way, paid me all they promised and one hundred dollars more. I hope they will get a good preacher to take my place and that he may do more good than I have been able to do. I shall continue to make my home at this place for the present, and am open to preach on Sundays at near-by places and to hold meetings at a few places during the year. I expect to be in Tennessee in the fall, and have time for one or two more meetings in that State."

From G. S. Marsh, Pikeville, Tenn., November 12: "I have just returned from a trip through Cumberland County. visiting the churches which J. C. Mosley set in order last year. They are all in good working order. Now, brethren, as the 'flu' is checked and peace has come at last, let us get busy and win the victory for our Master. Just think, a soul won means a star for our crown, and I fear we will need all that we can send up. I met up with the young preacher, E. A. Simmons, and heard him. He is up to date. The churches ought to see that a young man like him stays in the field all the time. The church at Red Hill will help all we can to do this. We have had a load to carry for the last year in paying for our new house. Brethren, let us all consider this matter. Brother Simmons has not asked me to write this, but I do it for the good of the cause."

From R. E. L. Taylor, Decherd, Tenn., November 13: "I visited the congregation at Tracy City last Lord's day. The 'flu' ban had not been lifted. The brethren did not meet at the church house, but met in private homes. 1" met with some of them at Dr. C. B. Finney's and made a short talk. One man made the good confession. Bailey Brooks met with some of them at George Thorogood's and made a talk, and one man made the confession. Brother Brooks did the baptizing. Brother Brooks is a young preacher. J. D. Northcut took a great deal of interest in training him up to preach the gospel. Any one wanting a good young preacher would not make a mistake to call him. His home is at Tracy City. Some one will have to fill Brother Northcut's place. Who will it be? Brethren, let's encourage young preachers. Think of the older brethren who have died in the last year or two."

Those who believe in ecclesiastical authority and power often criticize the church of Christ for its simplicity and lack of vested authority. It is sometimes contended that when one goes wrong there is no one in the church who has the authority to deal with him. Those who make such criticisms lose sight of the fact that the church of Christ has the authority to withdraw from all disorderly walking persons. The local church is expected to see that members who walk disorderly are handled as the word of God directs. If a local church fails to do its duty, the sentiment for the right usually becomes so strong and powerful that evildoers are placed in their true position before the public. A correct practice of the truth condemns evil.

The man who accepts and practices the truth becomes a great power for good. His natural ability may not be great, yet a rigid adherence to the truth makes him strong with all who are disposed to obey God. On the other hand, a man may have great natural abilities; yet, if he ignores the truth, his influence is very little with all lovers of God's word. The little man who faithfully practices the word becomes great, while the great man who is unfaithful in handling the word of God becomes insignificant and of little consequence. Preachers sometimes attract great attention. Like as the blazing meteor flashes through the heavens, so for a time they are admired and applauded by the multitude; but whenever such cease to be loyal and true to God's word, they lose their prestige and power. The reason is self-evident. The man who is weak in his own estimation is strong in the strength of Jehovah.

Men in their weakness do not ascribe their downfall to the right source. No man can bring ruin upon another man. A man's lack of influence and downfall is wrought by his own hands. Yet, after men have made failures and have made most grievous mistakes and, like Sampson, are shorn of their locks, they charge that others are responsible for their failures. They ascribe to others a power that God has never given them. Those who become wise in their cwn conceits and who unduly exalt their own wisdom and cpinions grow weak and worthless because they do not reckon that the gospel is God's power unto salvation. The Holy Spirit, to encourage us to be faithful, assures us that all things work together for good to those who love the Lord and that nothing is able to separate us from the love

The Evil Effects of Divisions Among Christians. BY J. C. M'Q.

The religious press is discussing the evil effects of competing missions. It is contended that the old order must he perpetuated and strengthened or each nation be encouraged to express its Christian faith in ways most congenial to itself. William T. Ellis, as quoted by the Literary Digest, states the question in its simplest form by reference to China and America. He asks: "Shall all the various American denominations now conducting missions in China continue to propagate their own forms and faith among the Chinese, so that the converts to Christianity in China may soon have almost as many creeds as the United States; or shall the Chinese Christians amalgamate into one national Chinese church, irrespective of their original relationship to various denominational missions?" The general trend of religionists is toward union among the denominations. That union among Christians is scriptural and that for which Christ prayed will not be questioned. However, union among Christians and that union for which Christ prayed should be founded on the truth and not on error. Christ prayed, as recorded in John 17: 20, 21: "Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us: that the world may believe that thou didst send me." The unity for which Christ prayed must come through a belief in God's word. Hence the great necessity of being guided by "it is written" in all that we do in the service of God.

While the religious press is discussing denominationalism and pointing out its evil effects, when we turn to the Bible we learn nothing of denominationalism or of different churches. The Holy Spirit declares in Col. 1: 18: "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preëminence. Also in Eph. 1: 22, 23 we read: "And he put all things in subjection under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." Thus we learn that Christ is the head of the body, which is the church, and is the head of the church, which is the body, clearly showing that the church and the body mean one and the same thing. Now, if we can learn that there is but one body, we learn at the same time that there is but one church. 1 Cor. 12: 20 states emphatically: "But now they are many members, but one body." So it goes without argument that there is but one church. All who obey the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and live as the Holy Spirit directs are in that one church. It is not the purpose of this article to discuss denominationalism or to say who is right and who is wrong, further than to emphasize that the man who obeys Christ becomes a member of the one body, or church, of the Lord Jesus Christ. As we have but one head, it is as preposterous to talk about different bodies being guided by that head as it is to talk about one body having different heads. Protestants are as inconsistent along this line as are the Roman Catholics.

The work of all Christians should be to bring the world to an agreement in harmony with the teaching of God's holy word. Christians certainly can agree with the Jew or with any other religionist in feeding the hungry, in warming the cold, and in visiting strangers; but Christians cannot agree with the Jew when he denies that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. The Holy Spirit plainly declares: "He that believeth on him is not judged: he that believeth not hath been judged already, because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God." (John 3: 18.) While Christians may unite with Jews, Romanists, and even Mohammedans in doing the good works ordained of God, they cannot unite with them in denying that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, or in anything else that reflects unfavorably on his mission to the world. The prophet asks: "Shall two walk together, except they have agreed?" (Amos 3: 3.) The man is dishonest with himself who upholds that which he believes to be error. The Holy Spirit declares: "I know, and am persuaded in the Lord Jesus, that nothing is unclean of itself: save that to him who accounteth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." (Rom. 14: 14.) While the Holy Spirit is here considering things that are not wrong within themselves, yet he condemns a man who, believing them sinful and vicious, engages in them. In verse 20 of the same chapter, speaking of things that are indifferent in themselves, the Holy Spirit says: "All things indeed are clean; howbeit it is evil for that man who eateth with offense." But the man who disbelieves in Christ is already condemned and the anathemas of high heaven rest upon him.

That Christians be united in the truth is a consummation to be most devoutly wished; but for them to be united in error would prove a curse and not a blessing. When the kingdom was divided under Rehoboam, he came to Jerusalem and assembled a hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men that were warriors from the tribes of Judah and Benjamin to fight against the house of Israel to bring again the kingdom to himself. The people were living in error, having departed from God. So the word of God came to Shemaiah, the man of God, saying: "Speak unto Rehoboam the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and unto all the house of Judah and Benjamin, and to the rest of the people, saying, Thus saith Jehovah, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel; return every man to his house: for this thing is of me. So they hearkened unto the word of Jehovah, and returned and went their way, according to the word of Jehovah." (1 Kings 12: 23, 24.) Thus it is evident that God prefers division in error rather than unity in wrongdoing. Unity in evil gives strength as well as unity in righteousness gives strength. God forbid that Christians should unite with all sorts of evil and wrongdoing in a way that will uphold pernicious and vicious doctrines. Christ wants his people united in the truth, but divided in error, as Jehovah clearly showed in the case of Rehoboam. Paul pleads: "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you to walk worthily of the calling wherewith ye were called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all." (Eph. 4: 1-6.)

The teaching of all religionists should be to lead the world up to the belief that as there is one God, one body, one Spirit, one Lord, one faith, and one baptism, so there is but one church. Our constant endeavor should be to lead people to know the truth in its simplicity and to do just what God commands to be done. We are not called upon to sacrifice any part of the truth in order to unite with those in error. The world should be encouraged to believe that all who know and do the will of the Lord Jesus Christ, no matter of what nationality, are members of the church of God. To be a member of the church of God is to be useful in this life and blissful throughout the never-dying ages of eternity.

Did God Appoint Vocal Music*in the Worship of Christians?

BY M. C. K.

On page 1116 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate will be found a courteous and brotherly communication from the pen of Brother Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind. It is in response to an editorial, entitled "Music in the Apostolic Age," which appeared in our issue of July 25, 1918, in review of an article by Brother Sweeney on that subject in the Christian Standard of April 27, 1918. After stating that God had legislated in the realm of music in Christian worship and had appointed vocal, and not instrumental, music to be used therein, we attempted to show, in a parathrase of Brother Sweeney's language, as our readers may recall, that the use of instrumental music in that worship rests exclusively on the same authority on which infant baptism rests, and our review, challenging Brother Sweeney to show a flaw in either the logic or the doctrine of our position, closed with these words: "We gladly tender to him the use of our columns for the effort, the only condition that we feel it proper to stipulate being that both sides shall appear in the Christian Standard as well as in the Gospel Advocate."

Brother Sweeney, as explained in his article, was unavoidably delayed in his reply and did not send it to us until about the middle of October, and our illness immediately following caused still further delay in its publication. We regret, too, that the Christian Standard, owing to its crowded condition and the limitation placed by the government upon its space, does not think it best to admit the discussion into its columns. In reply to his request for its admission, Brother Sweeney received from the Standard editor the following explanation:

The office editor has carefully gone over your letter and the one to Brother Kurfees, as well as the Gospel Advocate editorial, and he advises me that he does not think it would be possible for us to handle a discussion of this kind in our essay pages at the present time. The government has cut down our space from thirty-two pages to twenty-four to conserve paper, and we are finding it extremely difficult to handle current matters. I am sorry for this, as I feel sure that the discussion would be interesting. It may be that at some future time this discussion can be arranged for.

Forwarding to us the Standard's explanation, Brother Sweeney accompanied it with this generous comment: "Under the circumstances, you are under no obligation whatever to carry on the correspondence unless you see fit to waive the action of the Standard or accept the Christian-Evangelist as a substitute for the Standard. I think I can induce them to print the discussion if it meets with your approbation." Duly appreciating, though regretting the necessity for, the Standard's explanation, we sent the following reply to Brother Sweeney:

Although, as you generously concede, we are under no obligation according to stipulations to publish your article in the Gospel Advocate, since the stipulated condition has not been met, nevertheless, the issue, as defined by me and accepted by you, has assumed such a unique and, as I think, interesting form that I am disposed to publish your article with editorial comment in the Gospel Advocate, whether the Christian Standard publishes it or not.

In the meantime, as you suggest, you can arrange, if practicable, to get it into the Christian-Evangelist.

Brother Sweeney's candor and fairness in accepting the issue as defined by the Gospel Advocate are so marked and commendable in the field of religious controversy, where they are often lacking, and the issue thus formed is so unique and unusual, that we were indisposed to decline its publication even if the stipulated condition had not been met.

Hence, we are now to discuss, not the question of instrumental music in the worship of God, but the question or vocal music in that worship. Just as the Gospel Advocate has denied that there is any divine legislation authorizing instrumental music in Christian worship, so Brother Sweeney now denies that there is any divine legislation authorizing vocal music in that worship. On the contrary, we respectfully affirm that there is divine legislation authorizing vocal music in Christian worship, and thus the issue is clearly and sharply defined. The reader will, therefore, see that Brother Sweeney and the Gospel Advocate are to discuss the music question; but, please pass the word all along the line of the organ and the antiorgan hosts, not the hackneyed theme of instrumental music, but the theme of vocal music in the worship of God. In the arena of religious debate, sometimes suggestive of the gladiatorial combats of ancient Rome, a thousand battles have been waged over the former and multiplied thousands of people have grown weary of the long-drawn contest; but in the present discussion there is not to be, directly and specifically, either defense of or opposition to instrumental music. Vocal music, and vocal music alone, is now the issue; and we believe such a discussion will do good. Our knowledge of the high character, unquestioned ability, and eminent Christian spirit of our opponent in this instance helps us to this belief; and hence, in a recent private note to him, we said: "Whether either of us convinces the other, or convinces anybody else, I am sure that our little exchange will be conducted as becomes Christian men, and that it will do good."

Hence, to a discussion of the Issue that has been formed we now invite the reader's most careful and serious attention. Based on Brother Sweeney's candid and clear-cut denial, let us bring the issue distinctly before us by asking the question, has "God legislated upon, provided for, and appointed vocal music in the worship of Christians?" affirm that he has, and Brother Sweeney denies. Responding, therefore, to the obligation which we have clearly assumed, we shall submit at once what we deem incontestable proof of this affirmative proposition. Concerning the institution of the Lord's Supper, Matthew and Mark both testify as follows: "And when they had sung a hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives." (Matt. 26: 30: Mark 14: 26.) The persons joining in this worship were Jesus and those disciples assembled with him; but he distinctly says: "I can of myself do nothing; as I hear, I judge; and my judgment is righteous, because I seek not mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." (John 5: 30.) It was, therefore, the will of Him that sent him that he should do this, which shows that the Father was in it all and authorized what was done. Therefore, the Father authorized the singing or vocal music that was used in that worship.

But was this kind of music used by divine authority in the worship of Christians after the establishment of the church? Inspired apostles shall give the answer. To the Ephesian church, Paul says: "Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 19.) This was vocal music. It was to be rendered by the Christians at Ephesus. It was to be rendered by them "to the Lord," which shows that it was to be a part of their worship of God. The instruction thus recorded is from a man "inspired of God," which means that he was guided by God through the Holy Spirit in what he taught and did, and hence the music thus specified by him was appointed by God as a part of the worship of Christians. This conclusion, as it appears to us from every conceivable point of view, is inevitable. If not, why not? Again, to the Colossian church he said: "In all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God." (Col. 3: 16.) Here again is the worship with vocal music which Christians were specifically directed to render unto God." But the instruction given was again from the apostle "inspired of God," which shows that God appointed the music that was specified and to be rendered to him in the worship of Christians.

Again, after their incarceration in the Philippian jail, we are distinctly told that "about midnight Paul and Silas were praying and singing hymns unto God." (Acts 16: 25.) Here were two Christian men who we are distinctly informed were worshiping God with vocal music. That it was done by God's authority and appointment is again shown by the fact that it was under the direction and guidance of a man "inspired of God."

We have now shown, from clear and explicit statements in the New Testament, not only that vocal music was sanctioned by Jesus in the worship of God at the institution of the Lord's Supper, but that, through inspired apostles, it was appointed by God for the worship of Christians after the establishment of the church.

What Should Be Our Purpose in Doing the Lord's Will?

BY E. G. S.

First, we will consider briefly what should not be our purpose. The word of the Lord plainly tells us what should not be our purpose. It says: "Take heed that we do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 6: 1.) This does not mean that it is wrong to give in the presence of men, but that it is wrong to give that we may be praised of them. If we do it simply to get the praise of men, we will get no reward from our Father who is in heaven. We must do what the Lord says do in obedience to his will, that we may be his faithful servants and thus place ourselves in harmony with his divine will. Nothing else will put us in harmony with the divine will. If we faithfully do what the Lord bids us do, then we may with full purpose of heart trust his divine promises. If we yield submission to the will of God simply to secure the praise of men, it will not be any real service to God and will not be so regarded by him; but if we do what the Lord says do with the pure purpose to obey and honor him, then we may be assured that we will receive the promised blessings.

We need never be uneasy about any failure in the promises of God if we faithfully obey him. We have no account of any failure in any of God's promises to those who faithfully obeyed him. When the ancient Jews obeyed him, they were abundantly blessed by him; but when they disobeyed him, they were punished for their disobedience. His promises never failed while they were faithfully doing what he commanded them to do; but when they disobeyed him, the punishments threatened were sent upon them, This is the same principle upon which God will deal with us under the Christian dispensation. If we faithfully obey the commands given us, we may be sure we will receive and enjoy the promised blessings of the gospel; but if we reject and disobey the gospel, salvation will never be extended to us. There is no instance on record where people who faithfully obeyed the Lord were disregarded by him. Hence, we need have no fears of being rejected by the Lord under Christianity, if we continue to be faithful to him. But all that want to be blessed by the Lord past be careful to do the whole will of the Lord. If we are careful to obey and honor him, we may be perfectly sure of his precious blessings to rest upon us both in time and eternity. When God called the Jewish people into the land of Canaan, he blessed and prospered them as long as they were faithful to him; but when they turned away from him, he turned away from blessing and prospering them. If we live close to him, he will stay near to us; but if we forsake him, he will certainly forsake us. The only safety for the children of God is to continually live as the word of God directs, and then all will be well with them. When Christians begin to disregard the word of God, they begin to enter the danger line; and the further they go in that direction, the further they get from Christ, and the closer to the danger that they will be eter-

Hence it is worth everything to the Christian to always cling to the plain teaching of God's holy word. When people begin to make short steps from the word of God, they begin to pave their way toward eternal ruin. They do not do this intentionally, of course; but these steps of departure gradually increase till they become so pleasant to them that they never cease to walk in them, and the outcome is the loss of their souls. It will not do, therefore, to begin to make departures with the idea that we will not go far that way. But to cling close to the word of God is always safe and will ultimately take all such to the glory land.

Brother Sweeney Accepts Our Challenge.

Dear Brother Kurfees: I have been absent for three months and have only been at home for three days. I find your letter in the Gospel Advocate of July 25 and embrace my first opportunity to reply. I said in my letter to the Standard which you reviewed: "That instruments were used in the early church is clear from the fact that some of the fathers opposed the use of them. They could not oppose such usage if such usage was not in existence." I stand by that statement, and I am sure you will not deny it. I also accept your counter illustration: "That infant baptism and sprinkling and pouring for baptism were used in the early church is clear from the fact that some of the fathers opposed the use of them. They could not oppose such usage if such usage was not in existence." I accept both of these statements as equally true, and am sure you do also. But that commits neither of us to the advocacy of them. I said in my article: "Instrumental music is not authorized in the New Testament." I am glad also that you present a clean-cut and sharply defined issue in your review of my article-in your elegant and expressive English. It is in the following language: "In the realm of music there are two kinds-vocal and instrumental. We maintain that God legislated in this realm, and in that legislation provided for and appointed vocal music, but did not provide for and did not appoint instrumental music. This, and this alone, is the issue." I accept the issue. I deny that God legislated upon, provided for, and appointed vocal music in the worship of Christians. Now let us to the law and the testimony on that issue. I do not own the Christian Standard, but I have some influence with it and feel safe in saying they will publish the correspondence.

Yours in the love of the truth, Z. T. Sweeney.

"While we are rejoicing over peace," writes Brother Presley, of Bono, Ark., "we should never forget the dear ones that are suffering from hunger and the necessities of life."

The very generous contributions from the churches at Oakland, Montgomery County, Tenn.; Dasher, Ga.; Berea. Vienna, Ill.; and Corinth, near Germantown, N. C., deserve special mention. They reflect the mind of Christ in doing good. In fact, this is true of every contributor on our list.

"The most helpless victims of the war are the children. and their preservation in health is one of the most vital as well as the most appealing problems of the times, since on their conservation depends largely the failure of the Belgian nation. Among the many organizations for the care of children, The Little Bees, of Brussels, occupy a prominent place. The task of this organization, which might better be called 'The Busy Bees,' is no light one, since they assume the care of practically all the needy children of the city. Their principal activity is the conduct of canteens or dining rooms for more than twenty-five thousand children and nursing mothers, which provide a nourishing meal each morning. Some sixty canvide a nourishing meal each morning. are established in the congested districts in any available place—in shops, private houses, garages, even cellars. Each has its allotted store of rice, beans, sugar, bacon, and other foodstuffs provided by the Commission for Relief in Belgium; but, in addition, it must purchase in the open market, and at prices almost prohibitive, the other foodstuffs necessary to the preparation of the mealpotatoes, fresh vegetables, meat. For these it must depend on financial aid from local and outside sources.

"The meals are prepared with constant regard to food values and the needs of the individuals are determined by medical examination. Within the narrow range of material available the menus are ingeniously varied to appeal to little palates. Potatoes are alternated with macaroni as the chief ingredient in the savory stew, and rice with phosphatine or biscuit for the dessert. All the labor of preparation and distribution is performed by volunteer Belgian women who have cheerfully carried on this work without interruption since the beginning of the war."

This interesting bit of information will give the readers of the Gospel Adocate an intimate idea of how the money contributed for the Belgians is distributed.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

How Get More Ministers?

The easy answer would seem to be: "Pray ye the Lord of he harvest, that he sent forth laborers into his vine-yart." So far as I know, that promise has never yet been repealed. Is it then fair to infer that we do not pray? Why doesn't the church pray for our "laborers?"

The years now past appreciated neither the ministry nor the church. The rediscovered immanence of God, with the consequent insistence on the sacredness of all life and the divine vocation of every man in every business, has very nearly eliminated the divine altogether. Universal affirmation has a trick of becoming universal denial. God-in-all so easily becomes God-is-all, which is ony another way of saying nothing is God. Insisting correctly that every Christian is "called" to serve God in all hs life, we have forgotten that for this world the churci and the ministry belong to the more sacred. have juite forgotten the New Testament viewpoint that the "minstry" is a "gift" to the church, a "unique" office, a distinct work to which men are called by Christ and equipped by his Spirit. So we have ruled out the "uniqueness," we have made light of the "call," we have made ness," we have made light of the "call," we have made it one of the "professions to be chosen." Then we have been anazed at the logicalness of young men who have taken is at our word and have chosen other professions in accord with the spirit of the age.

We lave pared down the whole conception of the church. Gone is its "supernatural" founding; it is a "society" among other societies. Gone is its special work as the "body" of Christ; hence, joining the church rather than some other society is a matter of taste. The church has simply to take its chance with other organizations bidding for the service of young men; and within the church nistaken believers have insisted on limiting it to purely spiritual." They have narrowed religion down to the "spiritual," the spiritual down to the "emotional, or to the nere repetition of doctrines we dare not rethink. So we have robbed the church of its mission and the We are no longer led by the prophet o' His message. vision of he church as the representative of Jesus, as in his stead prophet, priest, and king of redeemed humanity. We have list the conception of the "church of the living the chosen instrument of the Master, touching in his name at of life to bring in the "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven."

Measured by our own valuation of the church, the gospel, the work of redemption; measured by the part we let the church play in our real life, how much does the church amount to? Why should we be surprised that choice young men often fall even to think of the ministry? To hold the pulpit of some of our churches is a job for a nincompoop, not for a live man. Young men still insist on being called to something yorth while.

How, then, jet more ministers?

Let's lay the blame on everybody except God. Our fathers and motiers are not "calling unto God night and day" to send their sons into the ministry. Where they do this, the sons ome. But if the whole tone of the home life says that the church and its services count for little and the good things of life count for much, let us depend on it, the young men are shrewd enough to choose as their parents live. When the brother of Mary Slessor, who had been dedicated to the ministry, died, Mary knew she would have to take his place; she knew what her mother really wanted. In our lomes we need to ask ourselves whether we believe in the hurch and the ministry. If we believe, we shall pray. We may well pray that we shall believe.

Let's tell our ministers that they should glorify their office. Jacob Riis iad one ambition—to be the best police reporter in New Yok. Theodore Roosevelt, seated at his desk in the Presidential office, smiled over piled-up papers he had to wade through, and said: "I like my job." When a minister glories in his big job, when he shows what a man can do in such 1 job, he somehow gets and prays his own sons into the succession. And other people's sons.

But parents and mhisters together have a hard time to pray men into the mhistry in a dead church. Their success will be the exception, not the rule. We have made the whole business of getting ministers too much a matter of individual responsibility. The "office" of minister is of individual responsibility. The "office" of minister is given to the church; it is the consecrated form of what the church is. Let the church stand for its unique mission, its divine founding, its big enterprise in the name of Christ, its ringing message to every aspect of life; then, as the pulse beats evenly and strongly in a vigorous body, so will the supply of ministers, steady, sure, abundant, show the vigorous life in the church. The new campaign puts the responsibility back where it belongs-on the individual church. The ministry is given to build up the church, to lead the church; what if the church does not want building up? What if the church does not want leading? churches kill the ministers we now have and steer thinking young men into other lines. Artists grow up in communi-ties that give them a setting; culture of all kinds is not a guerilla business, but a community enterprise. So is religious culture. Live churches produce ministers. church can realize its great work, the imperative call today, it will pray for ministers, and God will give them. But if the church cannot realize its responsibility, there is only one hope left us. Let those who do feel the need pray God that these dead bones may live, because God breathes on them through prophets called as in the dispensation before the church by the miraculous supernatural call that was then the rule.—John E. Kuizenga, in Christian Intelligencer.

The foregoing article contains some most excellent suggestions, but should be read with a grain of salt. In the days of Christ the harvest was indeed plenteous, but the laborers were few. It is even so now. There are comparatively few who realize with Paul that "wee is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." With a devoted ministry, a rich harvest of souls would soon be garnered. Without Christian parents who love God and reflect the religion of Christ in their lives, we will never have sufficient laborers to gather in the sheaves ready for the sickle. The harvest still waits for laborers.

On Filling the Pews.

It was a favorite saying of the celebrated London clergy-man, Charles H. Spurgeon, that "it is the business of the preacher to fill the pulpit; it is the business of the people Of course, Mr. Spurgeon did not mean to fill the pews." that poor preaching will attract as many people as good preaching, although he understood that homiletical ability does not rank quite as high in the long run as character and charm of personality. But what Mr. Spurgeon meant to emphasize was the patent fact that even mediocre preachers have had comparatively good-sized congrega-tions when they enjoyed the active coöperation and spiritual sympathy of a consecrated membership; while, on the other hand, some of the most brilliant preachers of every generation have been doomed to small audiences, sometimes during a part of their ministry, sometimes during all of it, because they did not get what they had a right to expect—the spiritual cooperation of a people who had a mind to work. Wherever you find large and growing congregations for a long continuing period, you may be sure that the efforts of the preacher are backed by prayers and definite personal work on the part of the peo-This is the Christian way to fill the pews. It is not Christian to allow a consecrated man of God to give his message in a "lumber yard."-Reformed Church Messenger.

The way in which the preacher fills the pulpit has much to do with the pews being filled. If the preacher gives little thought to the preparation of his message, those who fill the pews will give little heed to it. I heard a very able preacher say that "any one who could, had his permission to go to sleep while he was preaching." He had given so much thought, time, and preparation to his sermon that he believed no normal person would sleep during its delivery. The minister who sleeps instead of preparing his message may expect many to sleep during its delivery. When a minister who is devoted to the truth and who delights to tell the story after most thorough preparation is called upon to speak to empty pews, then he should seek other fields of labor. Either he has missed his calling or he is laboring with an unconverted people who do not appreciate his efforts.

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise-splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, lame back—can, instead, both look and feel as fresh as a daisy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water, with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kidneys, and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile, and poisonous toxins, thus cleansing, sweetening, and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste, and acidity, and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast, and it is said to be but a little while until the roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make any one who is bothered with biliousness, constipation, stomach trouble, or rheumatism, a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation. Try it, and you are assured that you will look better and feel better in every way shortly.

Preaching and the "Flu."

BY J. B. NELSON.

I have read with joy and admiration the acts of one of the Nashville churches that Brother A. B. Lipscomb has told the readers about. I am sure that church contains some of the "salt of the earth." Such acts ought to be published, as this case has been; it becomes an inspiration and an awakening to others.

I want to speak of another matter. During this epidemic many preachers, especially those dependent solely on preaching for a support, have suffered greatly, financially, on account of appointments for Sundays and meetings being canceled. I am able to speak from the preacher's side of the ques-

I am glad to say that many churches went right on with their support and paid the preachers as though they filled the appointments. I think all the congregations of Christ in Dallas paid their ministers. The Oak Cliff Church, Dallas, Texas, paid its preacher, Brother Warren E. Starnes, regularly, though he had not yet moved to Dallas, but was at home with the "flu" (also two members of his family had it) and missed three appointments. I was to have held a meeting at Gould. The firm for which this man worked sent a day nurse and a night nurse to wait on him and paid the bill. When the man died, this same house kept the day nurse with the boy. Who Will Bear the Burden?

BY J. L. PUMMILL.

During the epidemic of influenza some of the churches were closed. During that time the expenses of the churches went on just the same, especially in the cities, where they have a regular preacher, and also where they have preaching once each month. People are so forgetful, no doubt they will forget these things and hinder the work of the Lord's work to a great extent. Shall the preacher and the poor and needy bear the burden? Very few churches have any money in their treasury to take care of the expenses at such times, and our preachers are seldom ever paid enough to have a very large bank account to fall back on. Who is going to pay his bills for the Lord's work (and that is much like other people; they eat, wear out clothing, use fuel, and have other expenses. These must be paid. Shall we ask him to guit preaching for a time until we can catch up with our finance? No, we would all say at once that people will not come if we do not have preaching; and that is true to some extent. Then, what is the remedy? Let each one who reads this article get his Bible down off of the shelf, brush the dust off, and read 2 Cor. 9; then let him go into his secret chamber and talk the matter over with the Lord, and say: "By the grace of God. I will do my best." Let us lay by in store as the Lord has prospered us; so, if one give one dollar each week for the Lord's work (and that that is a very small sum compared to what the Lord gave that we might have eternal life), but misses three Lord's days and attends on the fourth, he is due the Lord four dollars instead of one. If we keep back that which belongs to the Lord, we may have to pay in the judgment; but if we give heartily as unto the Lord, the Lord's work will go on, the man who gives will prosper, the gospel will be preached, sinners will be saved, saints will be built up, and God's name will be glorified.

A Story With a Moral.

Once there was a man who had done a great wrong to another man-a very great wrong, indeed. But he was quite heartless about it, and never bothered much about the suffering he had caused until his victim suddenly died: and then, all at once, he found that he was conscious of a presence-a haunting, reproachful presence—that was with him at all times.

At first, being a typically story-book villain, he did not mind the presence that obtruded itself upon him. But as time were on and he found himself waking from sleep with a start, and looking nervously into dark corners, and seeing curious resemblances to his victim on strange faces, he began to grow thin and worried. He began to wear a furtive look, a hunted expression; and then, finally, he became weak and ill; and at last, raving deliriously of eyes that kept following him,

It was not a pleasant story. But one could not fail to see the moral that it pointed. For it was an allegory, and the villain in reality haunted by nothing but the knowledge of his wrong deed.-Margaret E. Sangster, in the Christian Herald.

What Canals May Accomplish.

It is possible that by the construction of canals we may yet see the day when there will be great fleets away up in the country where once upon a time the highland clans held sway, where Rob Roy Macgregor raided for cattle and fought with the Clan Macfarlane, and where there is still the glamor that was thrown over it by the genius of Sir Walter Scott. According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

Dillard.

On March 31, 1843, Nancy C. Swain was born into this world, lived in it seventy-five years and four months, and her spirit has gone to the God that gave it and her body to the dust. She was married to William H. Dillard, with whom she lived for twenty years. She was the mother of seven girls; four are living. She obeyed the gospel at Watertown, Tenn., at which place she was buried after living a Christian life thirty years.

West.

Sister Lizzle West, wife of Brother W. T. West, departed this life on November 5, 1918. She was a faithful member of the church which meets at Morgan Chapel and will be greatly missed by her many friends and loved ones. She left a lovely little boy (six years old), a devoted husband, an aged mother, two sisters, four brothers, and a host of friends to mourn her death. She was laid to rest in the family burial ground at Wesley Chapel on November 6. Brother Y. B. Rags-dale conducted the funeral services.

On October 16, 1918, the angel of death kissed the baby son of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Baker, of Napier, Tenn., and he fell asleep in Jesus. Baby Eu-gene was born on August 11, 1918; and though his stay here was short, he was loved by all. It is hard to give him up; but we should remember the words of Jesus when he said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." He was laid to rest in Napier cemetery. To the bereaved father and mother I would say: Weep not; for though he cannot return to you, you can go to him.

He came to Alvord, Texas, thirty years ago, and resided there until his death, which occurred on October 5, 1918. He obeyed the gospel about thirty-five years ago, and lived a consistent Christian life all the time from the time he became a Christian. He was a quiet, unassuming man, but a man of strong convictions. His faith and loyalty saved the church at Alverd from serious error. He was widely known and generally loved by all who knew him, regardless of their religious or political faith. He reared an excellent family, and he and his good wife, who preceded him through the valley of death about five years, the valley of death about five years, always had a home for the gospel preacher. Glaus.

On Friday, November 1, 1918, the news went forth that Brother Gottlieb Glaus had passed away. From the scenes of life's probation into the realms of endless day, our brother has entered that rest awaiting the people of God. Gottlieb Glaus was born, in Switzerland, on December 14, 1853, and departed this life on Friday, November 1, 1918, in his sixty-fifth year. He was married to Miss Emma Eberhardt on December 8, 1884, to which union was born one son, Cleveland Glaus. He obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Elder David Lipscomb about forty years ago, and has, through the major part of that time, been an active, faithful worker in the vineyard of the Master. About twenty years ago I was privileged to meet this faithful soldier of the cross and his good wife, and have shared the hospitality of their home many times, and personally know of the ministrations of loving-kindness of their holy lives that have gladdened the hearts of others and led them toward Christ. Our brother has left us, and we shall miss him, because his was an example of helpfulness; his was a wise counsel, reflected from the life of Him who is our Redeemer, and his walk was "humbly before our God." He leaves to his family and friends a priceless heritage, "more precious than gold." On Sunday afternoon, November 2, at two o'clock, at the Cedar Grove Church, of which he had been an elder for many years, probably five hundred people gathered to pay a last loving tribute to the memory of their friend and neighbor, after which the remains were placed in a vault at Spring Hill Services were conducted er. Smallest Farms In the World.

On the islands of Re and Oleron, near La Rochelle, France, are found the smallest farms in the world. Some of them are only one or two square yards in area, yet these tiny domains are carefully planted with a variety of crops, even including vineyards. The soil is extremely fertile. The repeated subdivision of estates among heirs and the dense population of the islands explain the existence of these Lilliputian properties.—Popular Science Monthly.

As to whether one should walk alone or in company, authorities differ. For instance, Robert Louis Stevenson said that the only way to enjoy a walk is to take it alone. A Boy's School Luncheon.

Mash the yolks of hard-boiled eggs to a powder and moisten with salad oil and a few drops of vinegar. Work this to a paste and season with salt and pepper and, if you like, a drop or two of tabasco sauce. The boy would probably prefer his sandwich without this piquant dash of flavoring. Now chop the whites of the eggs until they, too, are a coarse powder and mix them with the yolk paste. Spread between slices of buttered Graham or other brown bread.

Instead of soiling a napkin daily in preparing the boy's luncheon, provide yourself with an abundance of sheets of firm tissue paper and wrap the sandwiches in these, putting in an extra sheet to serve as a finger napkin when the meal is concluded .- Marion Harland, in the Christian Herald.

Easy to Increase Acreage.

Not only can we greatly increase our acreage of useful food crops by such impressive and expensive methods as draining swamps and irrigating deserts and the homely one of plowing up pastures and brush patches; but the experts have also been faithfully telling us such unpalatable, but now hopeful and promising, truths as that our acreage yield of any of the great staples-wheat, oats, barley, potatoes-is barely half that of the average yield of any of the countries of Western Europe, so that we have plenty of room to grow and improve.

This inferior yield from our matchless American soil is due partly to less labor applied per acre, partly to less fertilizer. Here our experts come forward with another even more encouraging statement, and that is that there is now, in the light of modern agricultural science, practically no such thing as a poor soil, or as an exhausted soil.-Exchange.

How Is It the Advocate Shall Remain Forever?

BY S. O. MARTIN.

Our Lord Jesus Christ came to earth and suffered the hardships of this world to save us from sin. Having overcome the world and the temptations offered to him, he appeared in heaven as our Advocate. After his life's work had been finished, and the time was approaching for him to be offered up on the cross, he foretold his passion, which made his disciples sorrowful and caused Peter to say: "Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall never be unto thee." However, Jesus knew for what purpose he had come into the world, and he allowed nothing to swerve him from his duty, knowing full well that the Jews would crucify him. Said he: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter [Advocate], that he may be with you forever, even the Spirit of truth: whom the world cannot receive." (John 14: 16, 17.) I have had the impression always from my brethren and religious teachers that in this instance Jesus meant to teach his disciples that the world could not be partakers of the Holy Spirit. That, of course, is taught throughout the Bible. as, for instance, in Rom. 8 and elsewhere; but since giving the passage in John 14: 17 a close examination, with the help of the Greek verb "lambano," which means to receive, snatch away by force, seize, etc., I have come to the conclusion that Jesus meant to comfort his disciples by telling them that neither the Jews nor the world could seize the Paraclete (Advocate, as the same word is translated in one of John's Epistles), but that it should abide forever. Jesus comforts his disciples by telling them that there is no chance for the world to receive (seize) the Comforter. Why? "For it beholdeth him not, neither knoweth him; for he abideth with you, and shall be in you." For that reason the world cannot seize him by force and crucify him as they did Jesus. Please read the context and see if you cannot, by laying aside your preconceived idea about this passage, find it clearer when understood as comforting the disciples on the ground that no one could take the Comforter from them. Then, always remember to speak of the Holy Spirit as "he" instead of "it." In verse 19 we have it made plain that the world beheld Jesus, but soon would be able to behold him no more; and, too, him whom Jesus would send could not be beheld by the world. It seemed necessary for the church to have an Advocate (Mediator, Comforter) on earth; for Jesus said: "If I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I go, I will send him unto you." member, too, that he was not sending him unto the world, but "unto him." It seemed necessary for Jesus to tell his disciples what work the Holy Spirit would do, so that they would be even comforted in looking for the Comforter, and that they should be able to "try the spirits, whether they be of God." Please bear in mind that John has more to say about the Spirit, love, God, and God's side of the plan of salvation than any other apostle or writer of the New Testament, the others dealing more with the human side, proving from the Jewish standpoint that Jesus came into the world to save. In view of this, we might consider that John left the genealogy of Christ out of his gospel, except that he said he was (is) the Son of God.

Pitying Ourselves.

Have you heard of the man carrying a load of sticks, who, when he became tired, threw his sticks down on the bank of a river and, seating himself by them, said: "I am sick and tired of this. I wish death would come to relieve me?" Instantly Death slipped up and said: "Here I am, what do you want of me?" "I want you to help me put this bundle of sticks on my back again," said the surprised man. Pitying ourselves is cheating ourselves. Fewer Sea Eagles Seen.

That the monarch of the air, the sea eagle, has disappeared from Caithness, as well as from the Orkneys and Shetlands, is a well-authenticated fact. The sea eagle is not very uncommon in the Fest Highlands, and still builds its nests on various hills abutting on the cliffy coast. The sites of the nests are on the edge of some large and well-stocked sheep farms. The birds have always been accused of killing lambs, as well as hares and winged game, but the charge would be difficult to substantiate.—Exchange.

Letters From Rheumatics.

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter; but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of rheumatism, you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including indigestion, gout, uric-acid poisoning, and liver and kidney diseases; but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their rheumatism.

Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and biadder troubles, and in nervous and sick headsches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baitmore and consulted specialists there; and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Snivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved?"

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shiyar Spring Water quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Edifying as the Need May Be

Modern Oppression.

A span of two thousand five hundred years separates us from the oppression against the children of Israel. Yet who will say that these modern times do not know the meaning of oppression and starvation? There has been many a modern ruler who knew not Joseph nor Joseph's Early in 1918 conservative estimates made by American consuls and missionaries reveal some startling facts: 1,000,000 Armenians and Syrians in Turkey have perished during the past two years from massacre, deportation, exposure, starvation, and disease; over 2,000,000 are homeless and starving; 400,000 of these are orphans; 75,000 children under twelve years of age are starving in Syria and Lebanon alone; sufferers in the Lebanon district recently were dying at the rate of one thousand per day. As an instance of the terrible conditions, we are told how an American doctor coming down from the mountain of Lebanon noticed in the distance a throng of children and wondered why so many were gathered in one place. Upon coming nearer, he discovered that a camel had died by the roadside, and these famished children were in desperation picking the last shreds of flesh from the skeleton of the fallen beast. We cannot like Moses lead these children of oppression out of the land of bondage, but we can send them succor. This we can do without delay. The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief has asked this paper to join with others in making a special campaign for funds to be forwarded before the Christmas holidays. Our readers have done a noble part already, and w feel sure that they are ready to respond again. It's a big proposition when one is told to pitch in and help to raise $30,000,000 before January 19. But I do not forget that the readers of our paper have big hearts.

Discipline.

The hardest lesson for Christians to learn is that discipline is good for them. Though old in service, we are often like fretful school children in our attitude toward the great Teacher. Thousands have just been given a lesson in adversity; but how many are ready to exclaim, "Blessed is night, for it reveals to us the stars?" It has been a terrible strain, we admit. But the very best lessons we learn are the hard lessons. The worst thing that can happen to a scholar is to give him easy lessons. Truly remarked "that nine people out of ten, when they speak of discipline, mean something disagreeable." The word "disciple" has an attractive and winning sound. Yet how can one become a real disciple without real discipline? Ponder this question. Then, in order to feel good toward God and everybody else, turn and read what the writer of the letter to the Hebrews has to say on the subject: "It is for chastening that ye endure; God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is there whom his father chasteneth not? But if ye are without chastening, whereof all have been made partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. Furthermore, we had the fathers of our flesh to chasten us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits; and live? For they indeed for a few days chastened us as seemed good to them; but he for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holiness. All chastening seemeth for the present to be not joyous but grievous; yet afterwards it yieldeth peaceable fruits unto them that have been exercised thereby, even the fruit of righteousness. Wherefore lift up the hands that hang down, and the palsied knees; and make straight paths for your feet, that that which is lame be not turned out of the way, but rather be healed." (Heb. 12: 7-13.)

God Picks the Busy Man.

Many have raised the question as to whether President Wilson is a man called of God to do a great work for the world. We do not attempt to analyze or set forth God's plans in regard to this matter. We believe, however, that he has acquitted himself with rare distinction in the fulfillment of some very trying duties. Certainly it is true that God called Abraham and Moses and Elijah and John the Baptist and many others named in the Bible to execute his divine wishes, and it is wonderful to consider how admirably they fitted in their respective spheres. God certainly knows how to pick a man. History shows that he invariably selected a busy man to execute his bidding. Moses was busy with his flocks at Horeb; Gideon was threshing when the call came; David was caring for his father's sheep; Elisha was plowing with twelve yoke of oxen; Peter and Andrew were busy at their nets; Matthew was at the seat of customs; Paul was busy persecuting the saints. The reason why God prefers busy men is apparent. Jesus explained it when he spoke of a man's becoming a ruler over many things because he had been faithful in a few things.

Should not such examples encourage us to be faithful in the performance of our duties, however humble they may appear to be? Let us never forget that God can make them great. "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men."

Monuments.

Some one has said that "God accomplishes his miracles by means and trains his instruments with diligence." We know that history focuses itself in great names, the prophets and the patriots of the written page. Abraham, Moses, John the Baptist, Paul, Luther, Wesley, Alexander Campbell, Washington, Lincoln, and Wilson are synonyms of religious and civil epochs. Every great reform is first born in some man's heart, and truth, burning in his soul, thrusts him forth as its fiery advocate. The same is true of a great evil that spreads over the world or a false teaching that mars the peace and unity of the churches. It first starts as an unholy ambition in the breast of some misguided man, capable of leading into error. When the reformation or the evil thing begins to flourish, then there stands some kind of a monument to the man's life work. In the language of John Ruskin, let us so learn the lesson of service "that we also, careless of the monument by the grave, may build it in the world-a monument by which men may be taught to remember, not where we died, but where we lived." There is no better motto than Paul's: "For me to live is Christ; to die is gain."

On Distinguishing Between Good and Evil.

Man has received the knowledge of good and evil. It is good to obey God and to believe in him and to keep his commandment, and this is the life of man; as not to obey God is evil, and this is his death. Since God, therefore, gave to man such mental power, man knew both the good of obedience and the evil of disobedience, that the eye of the mind, receiving experience of both, may with judgment make choice of the better things; and that he may never become indolent or neglectful of God's command; and learning by experience that it is an evil thing which deprives him of life-that is, disobedience to God-may never attempt it at all, but that, knowing that what preserves his life-namely, obedience to God-is good, he may diligently keep it with all earnestness. Wherefore he has also had a twofold experience, possessing knowledge of both kinds, that, with training, he may make choice of the better things. But how could he have had any training in goodness if he had no knowledge of the contrary? For there is a surer and an undoubted comprehension of matters submitted to us than the conjecture that comes of mere surmise. For just as the tongue receives experience of sweet and bitter by means of tasting, and the eye discriminates between black and white by means of vision, and the ear recognizes the distinctions of sounds by hearing; so also does the mind, receiving through the experience of both kinds its training in what is good, become more tenacious of its preservation, acting in obedience to God; in the first place, casting away, by means of repentance, disobedience, as being something disagresable and nauseous; and afterwards coming to understand what it really is, that is contrary to goodness and sweetness, so that the mind may never even attempt to taste disobedience to God. But if any one do shun the knowledge of both kinds and the twofold experiences of knowledge, he unawares destroys the man in him.-Irenæus.

Does Death End Ali?

BY F. W. SMITH.

Having demonstrated the "possibility" of a revelation such as the Bible purports to be, based upon the fact of creation—its existence, purpose, plan, design, and adaptation of means to ends—I propose another proposition—viz.:

THE PROBABILITY OF SUCH A REVELATION.

While the "possibility" of a thing's existence does not, within itself, prove the existence of that thing, it does, nevertheless, under certain conditions, open the way for the "probable" existence of it. Now the question resolves itself into this: Were there no existing circumstances following the creation of man upon which we can rest the conclusion of the probability of a revelation having been given to him? I think this can be clearly reasoned out upon the following grounds:

- 1. The moral structure of man. He is preëminently a social being, and that, too, of such a high order that nothing in the material universe could meet the demands of this social nature. There could be no intellectual communion between man and the lower orders of creation. These could, indeed, afford man a variety of pleasures and amusements, but further than this they could not go. With all of the animate and inanimate objects about him, man would still be thinking and reasoning, striving to know something of the Power or Being that brought them, with himself, into existence. This desire was not of his own creation, but was innate-implanted within him by the Author of his existence. 'Tis true that woman, man's complement, was created and placed at his side to be his earthly companion; but with all of her lovely charms, beauty of face, faultless form, and grace of manners, the demand for a higher communion has not been met. For woman, too, possessed of the same innate desire to know the whence and the where, could impart no information to her noble companion upon the subject.
- 2. A second reason for supposing the "probability" of a revelation is based upon that which we call "benevolence." This virtue runs, like a thread of gold, throughout creation, and the manifestations of its presence are seen and felt in every department of life. All fleshly desires manifesting themselves in the lower orders of creation have been met and satisfied by the Power that brought them into existence; and, as we have seen, man's corporeal desires, his natural appetites and passions, have been provided for. Shall a Benevolence capable of attending to the desire of sheep and oxen leave man to grope his way in darkness and ignorance of that which springs from the greatest desire implanted within the human soul? It does not stand to reason, but demonstrates most clearly the probability that a revelation has been given.
- 3. But a still more plausible reason to suppose that man received and enjoyed that higher communion is found in the fact of human speech. I shall not ask, "How came man with the 'power' of speech?" but, "How came man to talk at all?" A man may have the "power" to do a thing, and never do that thing because of the undeveloped power. Some extraneous power taught—yes, taught—man to speak, giving him a language, and to know the meaning of words. I knew a deaf and dumb husband and wife who were blessed with a child, and the child had to be placed with people who could talk in order to learn to talk itself. While with its parents it heard no one talk enough to learn, and it did nothing but make signs. While a child possesses the power of speech, unless it is taught to use this power, it will never talk. Adam was no exception to this rule. A Being who could talk as certainly taught Adam to speak as any mother ever taught her babe to say "mother." How reasonable the statement with which the history of man begins—viz.: "And Jehovah God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." (Gen. 2: 16, 17.)

THE CERTAINTY OF A REVELATION.

If we can establish the "probability" of a thing's having been done, it will encourage us to seek for still greater proof that it is an accomplished fact. As a witness regarding the certainty of a revelation having been given to man, the Bible itself is brought forward.

1. Its "composition" stands out clearly and distinctly over and beyond any other writings in the wide world. With all of the world's boasted learning, its wonderful achievements in art and literature, nothing has evolved from the brain and pen of man that remotely resembles the composition of the Bible. The artlessness with which its scenes are depicted, the general style of its narrations. and its seeming contradictions all go to show that it did not originate with man. In no human composition can be found anything approaching the parables of the Bible. Because of this and many other reasons, this most unique and strangest of all writings has challenged the profound admiration of philosophers, statesmen, sculptors, and artists in every age of the world. The sayings of the Bible are interwoven with the literature of every civilized nation on earth; and wherever a quotation from that Book appears, it is easily distinguishable from its settings because of its very style.

2. Its condemnation of sin and its exaltation of right-eousness go to show that it was not the work of man. Such a book with no higher origin than man would be exceedingly unpopular and would soon have perished from the earth. Here is a book that condemns, exposes, and lays bare the sins and wrongdoings of its best and most noted characters. Its heroes and heroines are criticized, exposed, and punished for their sins. No human production would thus deal with its best characters. The men who wrote the Bible exposed and recorded the sins and crimes of those they loved almost to the point of worship, a thing that no uninspired man has ever done.

3. The Bible proposes nothing but good to man. All of its mandates are benevolent; it requires man to do nothing but what is for his good even in this life, and asks him to refrain from no course in life but will tend to make him a better man. It sanctifies, regulates, and adjusts every relation in life, enforcing a rule by which justice and equity come to all—viz.: "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." This principle runs from Genesis throughout the Bible—amplified, exemplified, and emphasized from page to page.

4. Its prophetic fulfillment is among the most marvelous things the world has ever known, and will forever stand against the battering-rams of skeptics and infidels. This one feature of the Bible should be sufficient to commend it to every age and every individual. It would have been absolutely impossible for uninspired men to have guessed with such correctness of future events. Time, place, persons, and things were predicted hundreds and thousands of years beforehand, which came to pass without the omission of the slightest detail.

5. The testimony of its witnesses furnishes an indubitable evidence of a divine revelation. These sealed their testimony with sufferings, hungerings, imprisonments, stripes, and their heart's blood. Men do not pay such a high price for propagating what they know to be false. Men may lie for human glory, power, or wealth; but none of these things were offered the witnesses of the resurrection and preachers of the gospel. It must be conceded, then, that those witnesses told the truth or else were the most woefully deceived men that ever lived. But what man would be willing to die for a thing about which there could be even the shadow of a doubt? The thought is preposterous, and the conviction of the truthfulness of their testimony sweeps down upon us like a mighty avalanche.

"What glory guilds the sacred page,
Majestic like the sun!
It gives a light to every age;
It gives, but borrows none.
The hand that gave it still supplies
Its gracious light and heat.
Its truths upon the nations rest;
They rise, but never set."

An Appreciation of J. D. Northeut.

BY H. R. MOORE.

Our friend and brother, J. D. Northcut, died at his home, in Tracy City, Tenn., on November 2, 1918. His illness, influenza followed by pneumonia, was short and painful, caused by giving almost continual attention to sufferers near him. He was cut down in the prime of an active and most useful life.

He was of Warren County pioneer stock, born on January 14, 1875, and reared on his father's farm, in Northeut's Cove. He was baptized when about fourteen years old by J. R. Stubblefield. He took a course of study at Terrill College, and was a great admirer of President James W. Terrill and a favorite of teachers and students. He taught as principal of Shook College at Tracy City for several terms. His faithful and efficient work was recognized and appreciated. While teaching he began to preach, when about nineteen years old. At the time of his untimely death he stood high as a popular and successful evangelist throughout Grundy and several adjacent counties, but only claimed to be a crossroads, school-house, mountain preacher. Much of his first work was, as indicated, in the rough, mountainous country at and adjacent to Tracy City. Often he went from ten to twenty miles on horseback, and would preach twice and sometimes oftener, and would then find his way back in the night, so as to be at school on Monday morning.

He was happily married to Miss Minnie Simpson in December, 1897, to whom he was very much devoted.

His faithful and efficient work as an evangelist in the mountain region where he labored appealed to the brotherhood, and his field of labor gradually widened. His services were in great demand, so much so that he gave up teaching, which he liked, for preaching, which he liked better. At the time of his death his services for protracted meetings had been engaged up to 1920. His manner of conducting a protracted meeting-say, of two weeks' duration-appealed most favorably to all concerned. Only an occasional sectarian thoroughly imbued with deep-seated prejudice could refuse to hear and approve his pulpit demeanor. He at all times had the courage of his convictions. He presented the whole truth without fear or favor. Never at any time would be evade, dodge, or compromise the Bible with the traditions of men; but his sermons were invariably delivered in such a plain, lucid, and respectful style as to offend no one, except some chronic kicker.

He held four annual protracted meetings for the Hunt-land congregation. Twenty were added by obedience to the terms of the gospel at his recent meeting. He had large and attentive audiences, although the air was full of the world-wide war news. His exhortations were forcible and impressive. Often he would hold the New Testament up and say: "I present nothing to you except what I can read in this little book. I beg you to accept it, to go where it goes and stop where it stops. I beg you to stand with me on this God-given creed. If you cannot come to me on these terms, will you accept this book as your only guide and be only a Christian and let me go to you? Can't we be united as the Savior prayed we should be? If not, why not?" Immediately after the benediction he would hasten to the door and cordially greet all as they passed out.

Our departed friend and brother was eminently possessed by nature and by practice of prominent and distinct qualities well calculated to appeal to the masses and to the classes. He was a potent force for good among all with whom he touched elbows. He was well equipped for the active doings and busy scenes incident to the responsible relations of a useful life.

He was, as a husband, affectionate and companionable; as a father, he was tender, kind, and discreet; as a neighbor, he was social and accommodating; as a teacher, active, patient, and capable; as a friend, sincere and trustworthy; as a citizen, he was law-abiding and stood for the greatest good to the greatest number; as a Christian, he was considerate, zealous, and consistent; as a preacher, he was able, prudent, conscientious, untiring, and uncompromising. His memory will be fondly cherished for his faithfulness and efficiency in these different relations as the years come and go.

His premature death was a shock to all who knew him. The funeral services were conducted by Brother J. R. Stubblefield, aided by Brother Taylor, and attended by a large number of sorrowing relatives, friends, and brethren. Sweet music thrilled sorrowing hearts. His mortal remains were tenderly and solemnly consigned to the grave in a near-by cemetery, which was profusely adorned with rare flowers as tokens of love from various localities.

There comes a voice from the sad and unexpected departure of our brother that says that this thing called death is not the dreary end of our existence; it is the gateway to another and better state. All extend heartfelt sympathy and condolence to the bereaved widow, the four bright children, to the only brother and the aged mother.

The Future of the Church of Christ in Washington. BY W. S. LONG.

The brotherhood of the church of Christ throughout the United States and Canada will rejoice over the statement that the church in Washington has determined to secure a centrally located lot and erect a house of worship. But the congregation is young and small, and in order to carry forth this determination we must have the fellowship of the true church of God everywhere.

In a business meeting, November 3, plans were made to start a building fund and put forth every effort to make it grow daily until the work has been accomplished. Five hundred dollars has been placed in the treasury, and we are going to do our best to add two hundred dollars to this amount every month. The next step is to buy a lot on Maryland Avenue, within walking distance of the Capitol and the Union Station, and, just as soon as a lot can be paid for and money collected, to begin the erection of the building. A lot in the best part of the city, such as the location just mentioned, will cost about forty-five hundred dollars. We are aware of the fact that it is a great undertaking to plant the cause in the city of Washington and to erect such a building as the cause demands, and yet, by the hearty cooperation of the congregations throughout the United States, it can be accomplished without delay. We owe this much to the young people who are leaving the quiet little cities and country towns to come here to make it their home and to serve their country. What a reflection on the church of Christ that we have no house of worship in our national capital, so the congregation has to assemble in a rented hall which cannot accommodate very many people! We have raised millions of dollars for temporal matters; then why should we neglect spiritual matters? Is not the cause of Christ the greatest work in the world? Does it not demand your first fruit and your best? "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." God's people ought to have begun this work forty years ago and must not put it off any longer. We believe that every congregation in the land will cheerfully respond to this call and have full fellowship in this work.

We are going to pray daily, and sacrifice, and work in harmony with our prayers; and now we throw the door open to the church throughout the world and beseech every congregation to make a liberal contribution to this work, either monthly or quarterly. There are one-half million people in the District of Columbia, and this is truly a mission field. May you take this matter to God in prayer and then say, as Nehemiah of old: "We will rise up and build."

The contribution of Brother S. T. Anderson represents the proceeds of a load of corn. He writes us this: "We have tried to meet our obligations to our government. Let us likewise meet our greater one to our God and our fellow man." This is a fine sentiment that deserves passing along. The gift of a few members at Schochoh, Ky., is indeed generous. Stewart's Creek congregation always does things well for the Master. No doubt there are smaller gifts acknowledged above which represent great sacrifice. For example, the contribution from the church at Bardwell, Texas, seems small; but when we know what distressing conditions its members have had to contend with, we can appreciate it all the more. It is delightful to note how many husbands and wives send their contributions in as one gift. "These twain shall be one," Jesus says.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Would You Give Two Dollars to Save a Soul?

If you knew that some friend of yours, or even somebody whom you have never seen, would be turned from the path of sin into the ways of truth and righteousness through reading some timely article in the Gospel Advocate, would you hesitate one moment to expend this small amount for a year's subscription? We know you would not. Well, it is our good pleasure to inform you that not once or twice, but time and again, this very thing has happened. We do not doubt it, because we could not without doubting the character of the good men and women who have written us letters of appreciation in which they testified to the splendid influence of their favorite religious journal. Not only have people been greatly helped to a better understanding of the plain and simple conditions of salvation as set forth in the New Testament and contradistinguished from sectarian teachings, but many have been taught to worship God more acceptably through reading the paper. Our readers tell us that where the Gospel Advocate is extensively read there is a deeper spirituality, a higher appreciation of the Bible, and a greater interest in missionary work. They also tell us that when the subscriptions lapse, interest in these important things decreases in proportion.

Solomon says: "He that winneth souls is wise." We win them first of all by teaching them the Bible. But there are other honorable and expedient ways that attract men to the Bible and make them feel the need of salvation. We know of none better than the circulation of a good religious paper. We have backed up this belief by years of struggle and sacrifice in an effort to improve the Gospel Advocate, that it may become more useful every year. Did we not know that the Gospel Advocate is doing this good work, we certainly would not continue it in the face of the tremendous cost of publication. Candidly, if we did not feel sure of the support of our readers, many of whom have stood nobly by us in past years, we could not assume the burden. Thus you see a great deal depends upon your continuous interest in the paper.

Who Did Sin?

One of the things which is coming to be understood, in these days of enlightenment regarding the science of health, is that God does not send pain and suffering upon the children of men arbitrarily, as a punishment, in the sense that many earthly parents punish their children for wrongdoing. God has made man subject to certain welldefined laws, which, if observed, insure his physical, mental, and spiritual well-being; if broken, they bring their own penalty, which may fall upon the innocent as well as upon the guilty. Salvation is given from sin itself, not from its consequences. These temporal consequences must be suffered. Christ is giving to the world, to-day, knowledge that averts or mitigates physical suffering; he is teaching the world that by keeping the divine laws man may gain health and happiness. Man is learning that the sins of fathers are, physically and mentally, visited upon the children; that many are handicapped all through life by some weakness that renders them especially susceptible to temptations of various kinds; and that each generation has its own responsibility for the generations that are yet to come.

A clean, sound body makes for a clean, sound mind and soul; and one of the lessons of this war, with its military discipline brought to such a standard of perfection, is that it is possible to keep the laws that are the well-being of mankind and insure for coming years a generation that shall be fitted to perform the taxes of regeneration and renewal that shall come upon it.—Waterbury American.

"He Steadfastly Set His Face to Go to Jerusalem."

Comes there not a time in every Christian's life when these words acquire a deeper, a more personal meaning, when he, too, is called to set his face steadfastly toward Jerusalem, when, leaving those things that are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, he, like the apostle, presses toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus? It may be that the first half of his century has been reached-fifty years have gone-and surely, if such be the case, he cannot but realize that the end of his journey is drawing near-yea, may be nearer than he even dreams of. What then? Shall he stop at this milepost and wail and lament? God forbid. Let him look over the way that lies behind him, and remember the innumerable mercies God has showered upon him. Let him think of the deepest sorrow and of the sharpest pains he has been called to bear, and of the unfailing help which, in these dark hours, his loving Father has ever granted him. Let him acknowledge the wonderful love which sought, led, and blessed him up to this very day. And then, without a glance of regret at the receding past, with humble, yet bold confidence in God's unfailing love, he will steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem; and quietly await, in a busy life of service (if such be granted to him), the final summons of the Master: "Come, ye blessed of my Father."-Marie J. Bois, in Exchange.

I Know He Will.

I may not know the hour, nor yet the day,
But my dear Lord will come again some day—
I know he will, I know he will.
I know that he will come out from the skies,
And that the dead in Christ will then arise;
I know that with a shout he will descend,
While saints and mighty angels him attend—
I know he will, I know he will.

I know that Christ will come a second time
In flaming fire and majesty sublime—
I know he will, I know he will.
The trump of God will sound with sudden blast,
And that great day of triumph come at last;
Just as he said, just as he went away,
The dear Lord Christ will come again some day—
I know he will, I know he will.

I know that Christ will come to earth again
And glorify the ransomed sons of men—
I know he will, I know he will.
With power and glory he will come again,
And every eye shall surely see him then;
In love and mercy he will judge his own,
And crown them kings and priests through him alone—
I know he will, I know he will.

I know my Lord doth hear me when I pray;
I know that he will keep me till that day—
I know he will, I know he will.
Then he will come and banish tears and pain,
And in my heart forevermore will reign;
From endless death he will deliver me,
And set my quickened soul forever free—
I know he will, I know he will.

I know that Christ will keep me to the end,
And my unworthy soul he will defend—
I know he will, I know he will.
I know my Lord will keep his word with me,
I know that true and faithful he will be;
And when at last his blessed face I see,
I know that he will intercede for me—
I know he will, I know he will.

O precious soul, what he will do for me,
The Lord of life will surely do for thee—
I know he will, I know he will.
He loved and loves thee even unto death,
He cares for thee and marks thy every breath;
O ask him now thine own dear Lord to be,
And when he comes he will deliver thee—
I know he will, I know he will.

Brother McQuiddy: If a brother has been selected by a congregation for the office of elder and appointed by fasting, prayer, and laying on of hands, and should change his location and thereby change his membership, or move his membership, does he also move his eldership, or does it stop on account of his changing his location? Can an elder resign his office at his will? Please give some light on this and you will help one who desires to know the truth.

W. J. Johns.

I know of no scripture, taken singly, that answers the above question; but taking the general tenor and spirit of the truth, the answer from the word of God is clear. A man must be fitted for an elder before he can do the work of an elder. The appointment, or the ordination by fasting, prayer, and laying on of hands, does not make him an elder. The man who is fitted for the work of an elder is fitted for that work regardless of his location. If a man is an elder and is so recognized in one community because he has the qualifications of a bishop, the change of locality does not alter his fitness, so he should be recognized as an elder in the changed relation. Neither the elder nor any other Christian can resign a duty. The man who is qualified to do the work of an elder will be held responsible if he ceases to do this work. The fitness to do the work makes it his duty to do it.

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain what is meant in Rev. 1: 4 by "the seven Spirits." Mrs. B. A. Goad.

Rev. 1: 4 reads: "John to the seven churches that are in Asia: Grace to you and peace, from him who is and who was and who is to come; and from the seven Spirits that are before his throne." Our querist wishes to know the meaning of "the seven Spirits." I really am unable to answer the question and am afraid to guess, for 1 find that those who attempt to answer it give no proof for their answer and give one that is contradictory to that given by others. I will give the querist, however, the advantage of what B. W. Johnson says, and also of what Adam Clarke says. In commenting on "the seven Spirits," B. W. Johnson says: "'The seven Spirits.' The Holy Spirit. The numeral seven indicates fullness, perfection; it is the sacred number. The sevens are constantly repeated through Revelation. There are seven churches, seven Spirits, seven seals, seven trumpets, seven thunders, seven vials, etc." Adam Clarke says: "That seven angels are here meant, and not the Holy Spirit, is most evident from the place, the number, and the tradition. Those who imagine the Holy Ghost to be intended suppose the number seven is used to denote his manifold gifts and graces. That these seven Spirits are angels, see chapter 3: 1; 4: 5: and particularly 5: 6, where they are called 'the seven Spirits of God, sent forth into all the earth." Thus it will be seen that the commentators do not agree. I am unable to give any Bible information that shows definitely what is meant by "the seven Spirits."

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Please give the meaning of 2 Cor. 12: 2. What does Paul mean by the "third heaven?" (2) How do we harmonize Prov. 26: 4, 5? M. D. Crews.

(1) This passage (2 Cor. 12: 2) reads: "I know a man in Christ, fourteen years ago (whether in the body, I know not; or whether out of the body, I know not; God knoweth), such a one caught up even to the third heaven." The Jews talk of seven heavens, but the Bible does not warrant any such claim. The claim that there are seven heavens is absurd. In the Bible three heavens only are mentioned. The first is the atmosphere or the firmament or expansion above us. We find reference to this in Gen-1: 6: "And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters." The second is the starry heaven where are the sun, moon, planets, and stars; but these two are often expressed under the one term, the two heavens or expansions, and in Gen. 1: 17 they appear to be both expressed by "the firmament of heaven." The third heaven is the place of the blessed, or the throne of the Divine Glory. The Scriptures, however, afford us but little light on these subjects and the reader should not rely especially on this distinction. The thought of the passage, to my mind, is that the apostle meant to teach that he was favored with the nearest intimacy with God and the highest revelation relative to his will. It was his desire to impress on his readers that he spoke as one who knew and with the highest authority, as he had been so favored by Jehovah. (2) Prov. 26: 4, 5 read: "Answer not a fool according to his folly, lest thou also be like unto him. Answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in his own conceit." The answerer should not partake of the mannerism or the modes of disputation, buffoonery and scurrility; for if he were to do so, he would become like unto the fool. When advised to answer the fool according to his folly, the thought is that the answerer should confute the fool upon his own false principles by showing that they lead to conclusions very wide from, very opposite to, those impieties he would deduce from them. Such an answer would allay the fool's vanity and prevent his being wise in his own conceit. Thus the fool would be dishonored by having his own principles turned against himself and shown to be destructive of his own conclusions.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

A Beautiful Description of a Great Man and a Momentous Occasion.

Our readers, I am sure, will appreciate the following description of President Wilson and of the occasion of his address to Congress announcing the signing of the armistice, by John Temple Graves, editorial representative of the Hearst newspapers in Washington;

Washington, November 11.—Promptly at one o'clock today Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States and foremost citizen and official of the world, read to a vast assemblage in the hall of the House of Representatives the terms of the armistice, stipulated by the allied nations and presented by General Foch. He also announced their acceptance by Germany.

At the same hour precisely Georges Clemenceau, beloved Prime Minister and "Lion of France," said the terms and announced their acceptance to the French Chamber of Deputies in Paris. The second greatest event in the world's history was proclaimed in a simple formal ceremony consuming just thirty minutes of time.

Nineteen hundred and eighteen years ago there was staged in a lowly manger in Bethlehem of old Judea an event which has pulsed in human betterment through nearly twenty centuries of the human race; and the celebrants were the choir of angels chanting on the starlit plains of Bethlehem the never-dying song of "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men."

STAGED IN STATELY HALL.

The event of to-day was staged in the stately hall of the greatest popular government on earth. The celebrants were the Representatives and the 110,000,000 freemen of the greatest world republic, joined in chorus, and the glad rejoicings of 150,000,000 of allied peoples across the seas and the collateral rejoicings of 1,500,000,000 people throughout the world to whom it established liberty, freedom, justice, and enduring peace

Between the two looms a great occasion, staged in wellnamed Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love, on July 4, 1776, which interpretated to a new nation the meaning of Bethlehem and Calvary.

To-day comes the world's mighty trinity of events. It was the sequel to the Crucifixion and the Resurrection.

WALKS TO THE DESK.

To-day, exactly at the appointed hour, a slender, sinewy man, garbed in the attire of an American gentleman, walked with quiet, unassuming modesty of demeanor along the lobby of the people's Congress, and with unpretentious dignity mounted the platform beneath the desk at which sat the Vice President and the Speaker of the House.

The Senate and the House were in front of him. The Supreme Court, with its majestic Chief Justice, sat directly at his feet. The galleries were thronged and swarming with a great audience of the people gathered upon the hour's notice of his coming.

The diplomatic galleries held the highest representatives of every allied and neutral nation of the earth. The first lady of the land and her chosen friends, the ladies of the Vice President and Speaker and the wives of Cabinet officers and dignitaries, all quietly clad, filled their accustomed places, and the galleries were full.

LONG BURST OF APPLAUSE.

There was one long, deep, universal burst of applause, through whose heaviest note there was evident a hush and reverence that spoke the soul of a people in their mightlest and noblest hour.

The chosen representative of the most important nation in the universe, spokesman here of the mightiest and most important drama in all the world's history, spoke to this great assembly in the tone of "wisdom, justice, and moderation," which is the emblem of their government. There was not the smallest effort at oratorical effect.

There was no flourish of the theatric, not a dramatic pose or gesture nor any garish note, as in clear, even tone the President read the terms of armistice one by one, each one an international judicial sentence which condemned to death the purpose which had plunged a world in blood in the mad ambition to rule a world by force, and the acceptance of those terms which vindicated and forecast the triumph of a statesmanship founded upon the beatitudes of the New Testament, rather than upon the revenge of the Mosaic laws.

NOTED DREAM REALIZED.

Idealist, "scholar in politics," and constitutional pacifist—the idealist has realized his noblest dreams, the scholar has vindicated his learning in surpassing diplomacy, the great peace President has materialized into the greatest of war Presidents, and now again the greatest of peace Presidents facing the millennium in which "wars will be no more."

After 1,565 days of war, the great day of peace has come, and the President's manner was as lowly as the Nazarene's when he spoke the beatitudes.

For fifteen minutes of hushed and reverent hearing the illustrious speaker held this illustrious audience, and then amid the liberated thunder of the people's enthusiasm Woodrow Wilson quietly, as he came, walked down the aisle into God's pure air to take his place in history with the immortals,

"And Wars Shall Be No More."

In the foregoing beautiful description of our President by Mr. Graves, you notice he thinks we now face the "millennium in which 'wars shall be no more." Just how true this is, of course, I dare not say, for the very good reason that I do not know; but that before us there is an age that will be devoted to the study of agriculture, the manufacturing industries, and the moral and physical development of man, and not so much to the stud of how to kill each other, I have not a doubt. Whether the prophecy of Isa. 2: 4, where it is declared, "They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks," shall now have its fulfillment, that this prophecy points directly to the age ahead of us, I do not know; but that the time is at hand when swords shall be beaten into plowshares, and spears into pruning hooks, I have not one doubt; for most of the steel, etc., that is needed for such implements of agriculture is tied up in weapons of warfare, hence will have to be drawn upon to meet the demands.

I was talking to one of our best preachers recently about this prophecy, and he said he thought it was fulfilled when the "house of the Lord" was established as mentioned in the preceding verses. He said that when people enter the church of God, the house of God (1 Tim. 3: 15), their swords, if they have any, must be turned into instruments of peace and industry; that war, if they had ever learned it, must be taught to them no more; that the prophecy has not so much reference to a reign of peace between the nations as it does to the reign of peace between the subjects of the different nations called out of the kingdoms of the world into the "house of God," the kingdom of the Prince of Peace. When we think of this position in connection with Christ's teaching to Peter in the garden of Gethsemane, when he told Peter to put up the sword into its place, that all they that take the sword shall perish with it, it makes us give it a favorable consideration, to say the least. Of one thing I am perfectly sure-viz, that no man who claims to be a minister of the gospel of Christ can produce one scintilla of authority from God upon which to justify himself in teaching people the art of war or even any interest in any such art. Now, if we have any minister in the brotherhood who thinks he can produce the authority, we call for it, with the promise of giving It the most unprejudiced consideration.

But if this wonderful prophecy in Isa. 2: 4 does refer to a condition that shall certainly be established between the nations of the earth, and these nations have reached such peaceful conditions through the influence of the "house of the Lord," "the church of God" that has been established among them and has been working as a little leaven upon them, then, where is this "house of God?" Who constitutes its membership? If 1 am not mistaken, one of the theories is that nations would ultimately come to "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks," because of the leavening influence of the church. If this be true, and the nations are now seeking peace because of the gentle influence of the church, what is this church that has been doing this work, and where is it? Will some one point it out, indentify it for us? Some of the bodies that call themselves "churches" have been rampant for war. That body of people who call themselves "the house of God," "the church of God" (with which body I claim to be identified), could hardly say they have done it; they appear to me as a very negligible quantity just now. This is the way I feel and see things; and if it hits hard, let's take the medicine though the dose be bitter. It occurs to me that the Bible, unused to a painful degree by God's people, has had its influence upon the hearts of men, in spite of our neglect, and that God has had to step in and beat the love of peace into the hearts of men with a slaughter of more than ten million souls, thus sickening and disgusting man with war, blood, and carnage, and forcing him to cry out for peace, and now to desire to use differently the iron and steel tied up in weapons of carnage.

Of course, kind reader, you notice I am taking no position; I am meditating and wondering, hoping to get all the light there is on these questions, and am passing my meditations on, hoping it will result in getting more capable minds to thinking and writing along these lines.

Each of us has some special talent. As we make the best use of the talent we already possess, we shall gain more talents. God is our unfailing source of supply, and by living his life we shall develop all our talents to the utmost.—Selected.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

E. E. Shoulders has moved from Corsicana, Texas, to Montrose, Colo.

L. L. Yeagley has closed an interesting meeting with the Green Street congregation, this city.

James A. Allen reports the baptism of a very fine young man at Lawrence Avenue, this city, on Sunday.

T. B. Larimore's trip was delayed a week. His address will be 2645 Pasedena Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

We enjoyed a visit last week from A. G. Freed. He reports the school at Henderson, Tenn., to be in excellent condition.

Mrs. W. P. Hunter, of Ravenscroft, Tenn., cannot keep house without the Gospel Advocate. She has ordered it sent to her new home.

B. C. Goodpasture, of Shelbyville, Tenn., was in the office Monday. He is well pleased with the growth of the work in his section of the State.

L. L. Brigance, Henderson, Tenn., has moved to Murray, Ky. He will preach for the churches at Murray, Hazel, Green Plains, and Hardin. These churches are reported to be in fine condition.

F. B. Shepherd changes his address from Lometa to Amarillo, Texas. He is doing a fine work in stirring up interest in South African mission work. Brother Shepherd is worthy of our confidence.

Our good friend, J. B. Nelson, of Dallas, Texas, calls attention to the fact that the Lord made the first submarine and Jonah took the first voyage. This is in accord with Webster's definition. We believe every word of it.

From J. Y. Lowe, Burns, Tenn.: "I here state that fiftyone years ago this month Isaac Sewell baptized me into Christ, so I have been fighting the battle of faith ever since. I hope this will find you well and hearty. May the good Lord ever abundantly bless you." Brother Lowe is loved and esteemed by all who know him.

From Miss Sarah Andrews, 17 Nakatomizaka, Koishikawa, Tokyo: "The literature received. Thank you very much indeed. The class is well attended and interest is manifested. I trust others will soon become obedient to the faith. I also wish to thank you here for sending the Gospel Advocate. I do enjoy it so much. May God bless you."

The president of a bank, when asked by a young clerk how he could distinguish the bad bills from the good, said: "Get familiar with the good bills, and you will recognize the bad bills at sight." Here is a vast volume of wisdom summed up in a simple sentence. This homely advice applies not only to the detection of counterfeit money, but with equal force to the detection of the counterfeit in all departments of life.

We are grieved to learn of the serious illness of G. A. Dunn. A brother from Houston, Texas, writes, under date of November 20: "G. A. Dunn is now confined in the Baptist Sanitarium, Room 617. He did well from the operation, but complications have set up, which have kept him in the hospital seventeen days with an unbroken fever. We are hoping for a change to the better daily. Friends and brethren in Houston are rendering every kindness and assistance possible. He asks the prayers of friends and brethren."

A man asked Jacob Riis to find a poor widow with five children the ages of his own children, that the two families might be mutually helpful to each other. He wished each of his children to be interested in another child that was growing up along with him. Mr. Riis searched long for the right family, and at last found it in an East Side tenement. The brave mother was supporting her large family by scrubbing in an office building, and it was the very building where this business man had his office, and it was his own floor where she worked.

From A. O. Colley, 2018 Bennett Avenue, Dallas, Texas, November 16: "We have to-day buried H. C. Kitchen, the oldest elder of Pearl and Bryan Streets Church. L. S. White, of Sherman, Texas, was called to assist me in the funeral services. He had labored with Brother Kitchen so long that the family and the church were glad to have his assistance in this sad hour. His death was a peaceful going to sleep. He was in his seventy-fifth year. He was one of the most useful men of the church, and we shall miss his wise counsel and Christian example very much. We are confident that he rests in the home of the soul."

Married, at the home of the bride's father, Samuel Wilson, at 749 North Stephenson Street, Pasadena, Cal., Mr. Gowan E. Evans and Miss Amy L. Wilson. The beautiful ceremony, double ring, was performed by G. W. Riggs, of Los Angeles. The groom is a native of Williamson County, Tenn., and both young people are members of the church of Christ, Their new life began under auspicious omens. They were married on November 11, a grandly beautiful day in Southern California, the day of peace when the whole world was happy, also the birthday of each, being of the same age. The groom's only brother is in France, serving in the artillery."

From J. G. Allen, 1412 Baltimore Avenue, Muskogee, Okla., November 19: "Thank God, the world war has come to an end! The 'flu' has also subsided so as to give us all more time to think and plan for greater things along church-work lines. Please tell the brotherhood through the Gospel Advocate that we are still needing help to build a house. The 'flu' and war both have hindered us in the work to a very great extent, but we start out with thankful hearts to the Giver of all good to man, believing that all things works together for good. We are anxious to get in a house of our own, so we can use our energy in holding tent meetings in and around this city."

From J. G. Malphurs, Avon Park, Fla.: "The church in Avon Park has many things to be thankful for: not a member has died with the influenza, not a death in town; many members coming here from the States north; not a crank in the whole congregation. Our hearts are set on 'greater things for God.' Brother Thomson is with us now, and is doing some excellent preaching on Lord's days, but expects to hold a meeting as soon as all danger of influenza is over. Watch us grow. If you are interested in finding a warm climate where school and church advantages are excellent, we invite you to come to Avon Park, if you love the Lord and have a mind to serve; but if you are a grank, please do not come here."

From R. E. Wright, Wartrace, Tenn., November 23; "1 will be at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., after November 25, and will be interested in all our young men in that camp. If you know of any one there who is a member of the church, please write me, giving me his name and address, and I will be glad to look him up. Do not let any one think that this kind of work is over yet. Our men in camp will have to be kept there some time yet, and the next few months will be the hardest months of the war on them. We truly have the hardest work of the war ahead of us now, and to forsake them is to be in every sense of the word a slacker of the worst type. We were told last week in the Y. M. C. A. Training School, Blue Ridge, N. C., that the War Board of the Y. M. C. A. needed now five thousand more men for Europe. Brethren, our hardest work is ahead of us and will not be over until every man in Europe and America is at home. Address me at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., in care of the Y. M. C. A."

Do We Need More! Preachers or More Consecrated Preachers?

BY J. C. M'Q.

In last week's Gospel Advocate, on the "Spirit of the Press" page, we published a good article from the Christian Intelligencer, entitled "How Get More Ministers?" When we see so many preachers advertising for positions, we conclude that there are more preachers than there are places for them. There are many churches that have not preachers and are wholly unable to secure the services of a minister. This suggests that there is something wrong either with the preachers or with the churches, perhaps both. I think the latter conclusion is more likely correct and that there is something wrong with both the preachers and the churches. If the churches were as active and consecrated as they should be, and if all preachers had the spirit of self-denial and sacrifice that should characterize all faithful ministers, we would find religion more flourishing everywhere. There can be hardly a doubt on this subject. But from the days of Christ until now "the harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." (Matt. 9: 37, 38.) The people are more ready to be saved than the laborers are to make the sacrifices necessary for their salvation. The preacher is not always ready to give and proclaim the unsearchable riches of the Lord Jesus Christ. It took the miracle on the housetop to convince the apostle Peter that he should go and preach the gospel to the Gentiles. Many preachers to-day, as there are no miracles on the housetop, remain unconvinced and do not realize that it is their duty to preach the gospel to the poor and illiterate who are perishing for the bread of life. As it was in the time of Christ, so now the problem is to get laborers to reap the harvest. Many reasons may be assigned why it is so hard to secure laborers, a few of which are here given.

1. A lack of consecration and devotion on the part of all who profess to be followers of the Christ. There are so many who claim righteousness, yet so poorly practice its principles. It is so much easier to preach than it is to practice in harmony with the preaching. There is such a dearth of practical religion in the homes of our country. Many children do not know what it is for the head of the family to conduct family worship. There is little Bible reading and apparently little prayer in the home. It does not take the young mind long to be impressed with the truth that parents are more interested in temporal things than in eternal things. So long as father and mother put such a high estimate upon the world and so low an estimate upon the church of the Lord Jesus Christ, it should not be a matter of surprise that we have so few young men who are willing to enter the ministry. I was reading in the Literary Digest a few days ago that in German universities they required medicine to be studied first and theology last. It was said that there were very few who were studying theology. This brings to mind the teaching of Isaiah when he said: "And it shall be, as with the people, so with the priest; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the creditor, so with the debtor: as with the taker of interest, so with the giver of interest to him." (Isa. 24: 2.) Christians who fail to pray and who fail to comply with the Christian religion, who fail to make sacrifices in order to advance the kingdom of Jesus Christ, will produce an indifferent ministry. We can produce a better crop of preachers by creating more devout and godly homes. If those in our homes had the spirit of Job and were ready to cling to God as did he when he said, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him," the preachers that would go out from such homes would exhibit the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Christians must honor Christ more than they honor the world. They must by their deeds of sacrifice and devotion lead the world up to a purer life before we have any right to expect the consecration and devotion which should characterize a minister. So long as every man seeks his own and not his neighbor's good, it is not possible to lead the world up to the lofty ideals and noble living required by the religion of Jesus Christ. Christian parents and Christians generally must learn and must be able to practice as did Paul when he said: "Even as I also please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many." (1 Cor. 10: 33.) As "like people, like priests," we should get the thought that in order to have consecrated preachers we must have devout and godly homes. If we had in our homes more men like Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and more women like Sarah, Rebekah, and Hannah, we would have more preachers after the Pauline type.

2. Parents should teach their children the superiority of spiritual good over temporal good. Moses should be held up to them as an example. "By faith Moses, when he was grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to share ill treatment with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; accounting the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he looked unto the recompense of reward." (Heb. 11: 24-26.) His faith and his conception of right led him to give up the palace of the king in order to endure affliction with the people of God. So those who will wear the crown over there must bear the cross in this world. The Savior says: "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." (Matt. 16: 24.) The man who is not ready to practice self-denial and who esteems the pleasures of sin and the treasures of this world of greater value than reproach for Christ's sake will be a curse to the ministry. The church is far better off with him out of the pulpit than with him in it. The man who is not willing to endure hardness, who is not willing to pass through trials and tribulations, should not consider entering the ministry. Paul admonished Timothy: "Suffer hardship with me, as a good soldier of Christ Jesus. No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life; that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier." Tim. 2: 3, 4.)

3. Those who enter the ministry should love the truth, and should be so much in love with the truth that they are ready to make great sacrifices in order to advance it in the world. Without this, no man can succeed as a minister of the gospel of Christ. Those who proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ should, like Paul, realize that woe is unto them, if they preach not the gospel. Like Paul, they should rejoice in infirmities, in weaknesses, and in stripes for Christ's sake. When the church by godly living shows that it appreciates these truths, then, and not till then, will we have consecrated preachers, and far more consecrated preachers than we now have. When all shall have been brought to a full realization of the truth and to the practice of its principles, then, and not till then, will we have sufficient laborers to gather in the sheaves.

The Mission of the Church After the War.

BY E. A. E.

Now that the war has ended, what is the mission or work of the church?

I mean by "the church" just what the New Testament means by "the church;" just what it means by "the church of God," "the body of Christ."

Our readers know that Christ built his church; they know the foundation on which it was built (Matt. 16: 18; 1 Cor. 3: 11; Eph. 2: 19-22); they know that Christ bought It with his own blood, having loved it, and having given himself up for it, "that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word, that he might present the church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish" (Acts 20: 28: Eph. 5: 25-27); they all know that it is the house, the building, the temple, and habitation of God through the Spirit (1 Cor. 3: 16, 17; Eph. 2: 19-22; 1 Tim. 3: 15; 1 Pet. 2: 4, 5; 1 Cor. 3: 9); they all know that in it Christians are to offer all their spiritual sacrifices and render all their spiritual services (1 Pet. 2: 4, 5); they all know that it is "the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3: 15); and they all know that in it God is to be glorified "unto all generations forever and ever" (Eph. 3: 21).

In the light of these facts, the above question is as foolish as would be this question: Now that the war has ended, what is the mission of water, or of the air, or of the sun? The war has not changed the mission of the sun, the properties of water, the elements of the air, or the nature of the law of gravitation. But it has changed these just as much as it has changed the mission of the church.

The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one who believes it now, as it was before the war, as it has been since Christ established it, and as it will be unto the end of time. Obedience to the gospel remains the same. The conditions of entrance into Christ's kingdom remain the same. (John 3: 3-8; Mark 16: 15, 16; Matt. 28: 19, 20; Acts 16: 31-34; Acts 2: 37, 38; Acts 22: 16.) The Christian life and the worship of God in spirit and truth remain the same.

God set the church in order "at the beginning" (Tit. 1: 5) with scripturally qualified elders, deacons, and other members; made it his habitation; made Christ head over all things to it; and made it "the pillar and ground of the truth." Thus it must remain and work forever.

God's word is truth. (John 17: 17.) One word of God is as much the truth as another; all the words of God are the truth. The church is the pillar and support, not of a part of the church, not of some words of God, but of all the truth—of all the will of God. It is not the pillar and support of anything else. It is not the pillar and support of political theories and platforms, of the prejudices and ambitions and passions of men, and of various conflicting religious dogmas.

When the church refuses to support "the whole counsel of God," "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," it fails in its mission, turns back from following God, and rebels against him as much so as the children of Israel did in wanting a king.

To set the church aside, to make it secondary even to anything, to attempt to turn it from its God-appointed work, is to set the gospel, Christ, the Holy Spirit, and God aside, and to count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing.

No upheavals of nations, wars, pestilences, or other calamities or conditions of the inhabitants of the earth can change the necessary and specific remedy for sin and means of growth in the grace of God—the gospel; the church with its divine construction, the true worship of God, and Christian life entire—"a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity."

The church of God is not a human construction that it must change with human conditions to suit the ways and thoughts of men; it has not the spirit of the world; and it cannot be subject to the wisdom of the world. Its mission is to change the conditions of the world until "the kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ: and he shall reign forever and ever." (Rev. 11: 15.) God "would have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2: 4); it is not the will of God that the truth be changed or even modified to fit the conditions of the unchristian world or adapted to the ways and wisdom of any age. Christianity—the pure and true worship of God and implicit submission to his will—goes on the same forever.

Religious people like to have a semblance of authority from God for that which they do; hence, they make a most inconsistent effort and egregious blunder in trying to adapt the gospel of the gentle Nazarene and the true worship of God to the ways and passions and bloodshed of the world. For instance, it has always been right and a part of Christianity to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to relieve the burdened, to comfort the distressed. to nurse the sick, to visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, to care for the dying regardless of how they came to death, and to even feed and give drink to enemies; but it is inconsistent to first starve and kill enemies and make widows and orphans and afterwards to quote the Scriptures to feed and clothe them. Everybody knows that the command to feed enemies and to give them to drink is the opposite, as the Bible so plainly uses it. to taking vengeance; and everybody knows that that is one way of overcoming evil with good. The church of God is ever ready to feed enemies and all hungry people and to help the helpless, but never to destroy life and to make widows and orphans.

Religion is not necessarily Christianity. (See Acts 25: 19; 26: 5; Gal. 1: 14; James 1: 26, 27.) The work of the church is to practice and to teach Christianity-" pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father," one element of which is to keep "unspotted from the world." The world and the governments of the earth are not the authors of Christianity and cannot set the pace for the church. Christ is the author of Christianity; and to be a Christian, one must deny self and follow Christ. Christ is the light of the world, the water of life, the bread of heaven, the head of the church, the King of his kingdom. He is the author of eternal salvation unto all who obey him. (Heb. 5: 7-9.) He has all authority in heaven and on earth. (Matt. 28: 18.) No one can speak concerning the salvation of the race, except him. No one who studies the New Testament can doubt that the world, many church members, and not a few preachers need to learn the difference between religion and Christianity, and "religious services" and the worship of God in spirit and truth. On this side the war this lesson will be more difficult to teach. Different things conspire to make this so. One thing is the course some have pursued who know the mission of the church and the worship of God "as it is written."

The failure to obey God in giving "diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" the failure to obey God in being of one mind, of one accord, of "one heart and soul;" the failure to obey him in placing this unity and peace above all things and in presenting an unbroken front to the world-the church has lost an opportunity of a generation. Instead of the church's humbly and solemnly consulting together as to the wise and safe stand it should take and the course it should pursue which would be well pleasing to God; instead of studying the Bible as never before in order to know the will of God in regard to matters so grave and issues of such far-reaching results; instead of devoutly and constantly praying together "with one accord" that all may have the Spirit of Christ and may speak the same thing and be perfected together in the same mind and the same judgment (1 Cor. 1: 10); instead of seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and making the church supreme, to a great extent, the church was placed in the background, the spirit of the world predominated, and the institutions and ways and wisdom of the world were more preached than the gospel. Never has "the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace" been less regarded or the consciences of others more trampled upon. Conscientious convictions against the use of instrumental music in worship is a small matter compared with this.

The war may have done much toward obliterating denominational lines and denominationalism itself, and for this God be praised; but at the same time it may have done more toward wiping out the line of demarcation between the church and the world. We thank God most sincerely for all chastisement and for every other means which serves to purify the church, deepen and widen the difference between the church and the world, and to draw the church closer to God and nearer together in Christian love and fellowship.

Another lesson now to be taught and emphasized is that denominationalism is not Christianity. And another is that merging or uniting all denominations of the earth in one huge federation or organization under some general management after the wisdom of men is not "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" for which Jesus prayed—God in Christ, Christ in them, and all one in Christ and

God, just as God and Christ are one. (John 17: 21-23.) The desire now to wipe out denominational dogmas and creeds and to work and worship together may lead to great good and even now furnishes a propitious opportunity to the prudent and wise and faithful in Christ for presenting the one foundation of the unity of the gospel. Here it is as stated by Paul:

There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all. (Eph. 4: 4-6.)

There can be no union with Christ and God and "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" in Christ in disobedience to God and in disregard of any of his appointments.

A fearful responsibility rests upon the church, especially upon the teachers and public preachers, and this responsibility will have to be met at the judgment. Seemingly this fearful fact has been overlooked by many. The issues of this war will not be settled finally until God settles them at the judgment, when HE will decide the eternal destiny of each individual actor. It will be an unutterably awful thing to have to meet the souls of millions of slaughtered innocent and helpless boys before the just and righteous Judge of all the earth.

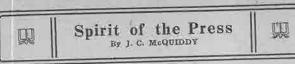

Thoughtful men are studying these matters in the light of the word of God and for God's glory and the salvation of the souls of men, and not for the justification of the wisdom of the world and the passions and glory of men. Brother A. B. Lipscomb copied in the issue of this paper of November 14 a very earnest and thoughtful and well-written article from John R. Gunn, a Baptist preacher, of Fort Wayne, Ind. In this article Brother Gunn truly says:

During the war the church has freely given of its strength and means to foster the war programs of outside agencies. Many have failed to recognize this, and consequently they have magnified these agencies and minimized the church.

This quotation is repeated in order to emphasize the fact that others see that the church has been minimized as "outside agencies" have been magnified. Brother Gunn speaks truly of the church's maintaining "its place of primacy in the hearts and affections of the people" and of its making good use of "this hour of opportunity." The church, as such, pure and simple, as a "working agency," is less appreciated generally than ever before by the present generation.

What now is the wise and proper course to pursue? It is this: Regretting our mistakes; repenting of our sins; confessing our faults; showing all kindness and forbearance and love; putting away "all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and railing, . . . with all malice;" and being "kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave" us" (Eph. 4: 30-32), "let us follow after things which make for peace, and things whereby we may edify one another" (Rom, 14: 19), give "all diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," preach nothing but the gospel, seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and make all possible effort to place the church before the world in its full strength, its all-sufficiency, and power. Also, let us rejoice with exceeding great joy with all parents whose children, and with all young wives whose husbands, will soon be returned to them, and pray for these children and husbands a safe journey home, and let us in deepest sympathy weep with all who must walk in grief for evermore. Let us thank God for peace, and let us devoutly pray that the nations of earth, in submission to "the Prince of Peace," may turn their weapons of war into agricultural and other useful implements and learn war no

The Hand of God.

I.

The sun stood still upon Gibeon, and the moon was stayed, five kings fled and hid themselves in the cave of Makedah, and the Amorites were delivered unto Joshua.

There came also another time when the sea was divided and the children of Israel passed dry-shod between the walls of the parted waters. And, when the hosts of Pharaoh followed, the waters closed in upon them, engulfed their chariots and swallowed up the armies of the Egyptians, foot, horse, and dragoon, to the last man.

And upon still a time again, amidst the revelry and the drunken feast, the doom of Babylon was written against the candlestick on the plaster of the wall in the palace of Belshazzar.

It was all very long ago, in the days of old, and the hand of God was on the world.

And things like unto these have happened now, and in every thoughtful mind the question arises: Is the hand of God upon the world again?

We have the facts above related from history. They are chronicled in the Bible, which, among other things, is the best authenticated history in existence. The statements must be true. No scholar now disputes the statements set down in the Bible, irrespective of his religious beliefs, or whether he have religious beliefs at all,

It being a perfectly authenticated fact that there were times in the past when God interfered with or directed the affairs of men in this world, is It not logical to suppose that he may well do so again?

It is the same old world that God flung out of the hollow of his hand. Man is the same being of soul and body now that he was before the pyramids were builded or Noah set out in the ark on the vast adventure of the deluge.

Surely there is as much reason to suppose that the hand of God is, therefore, upon the world now as in any other time of the past.

And, if it be true, the least thoughtful man that breathes the breath of life to-day may well be sobered to the most serious contemplation of this manifestation.

If it be true, then it must also be true that there is a God and that he still rules the world; and, this being true, every other fact of which we have possession sinks into trifling insignificance.

Without attempting anything far-fetched, is it possible for one who has knowledge of both old times and new to find parallels in Bible history with the events of the past four years?

Not only is this possible, but the parallels are so sharp and so striking as to leave one almost breathless with astonishment.

Is it far-fetched to liken the heroic stand of Belgium against Germany in this war to the day the sun stood still on Gibeon in order that Joshua might have more time?

The war would have ended with victory for Germany in less than three months after it began had not Belgium barred the path of the Hun as he rushed with his mighty armies to Paris. Neither France nor England was ready. It all depended on Belgium to make the sun stand still until they could be ready.

And that is just what Belgium did. In all the annals of wars there has never been a stand so heroic. Albert of Belgium is the Joshua of our times.

And again, even as the sea was parted for the children of Israel, and they passed safely between the parted walls of the waters, so have the great ships passed with two million Americans through mine-sown billows and shoals of deadly submarines, reaching the shores of France almost unharmed and with scarcely the loss of a man.

It was the boast of Germany that we could not land an army in Europe to fight against her, and she was well prepared to carry out her boast. But, our army was landed. Its flag unfurled its stars of glory on Flanders' fields; its arms turned the tides of battle to victory on the Marne.

There will be explanations of the wonder of this by those who make maps and diagrams and who deal in the chemistry of depth bombs and the machinery of engines. But, will their explanations wholly satisfy? Will there not still be something miraculous about it?

And, lastly, are not the kings seeking again the shelter of the caves? Has not the writing been seen on the walls of the palace of the Huns' All-highest King, playing like forked lightnings amidst the battle lusts of his reborn Babylon?

TII.

Now that we know the stupendous scheme on which Germany planned this war, and, knowing also how thoroughly prepared she was to carry her plans to a successful conclusion, and knowing also how ill prepared the rest of the world was to withstand the onslaught, how shall we explain Germany's utter defeat?

It was the hand of God that defeated Germany. There is no other explanation that can ever hope to satisfy the mind of any sane man.

With her allies armed to the teeth and trained down to the last minute, Prussia would have crushed the world had only man opposed her.

Say what you will, you cannot escape this conclusion when all the facts are before you. The power of man in all the rest of the world stood futile to bar the path of Prussia and the Central Powers when they set forth, four years ago, to lay the whole earth subject at their feet.

But, there is a greater power than man. And that is all that could or did save the world. The hand of God reached down from the high heavens and barred the Prussian's path. And it has sent him now reeling, bloody and broken, back to the waters of the Rhine.

Is it not all very plain and easy to see? Go back upon the fiery pathway of the past four years and you will have no trouble to find an answer to every doubt.

You will come upon that hour when the nations of the heroic and forever immortal Entente were at their last gasp. And then America stepped in:

America had voted to stay out of the war. Her people, with one voice and one mind, had determined to keep hands off. It was in no way a quarrel of ours.

And yet, what happened? Day by day we saw ourselves being drawn in. Incident after incident occurred to force us into the fight. Germany, egged on by what can be explained only as fatality, acting against her own reason and every element of common sense, flung one insult and injury after another in our very faces till we simply had to fight.

What was that but the hand of God directing and ordering the affairs of men?

For, from the very moment that America declared war against Germany, the unholy cause for which Germany contended was irretrievably and forever lost.

Yet, Germany did not fear us. Her allies did not fear t. They knew we had no army. And they knew we had no ships to carry an army to Europe, though we would raise an army up. And those were the facts.

But, in less than one year we had both the army and the In less than a year the brood of the bald eagle had broken Germany across its knees.

Wherefore, shall we ask the engineers and the map makers and the chemists to explain to us how was done this thing that the greatest engineers and map makers and chemists in the world said could not be done?

They cannot give the answer. We must instead look up to the mystery of the stars and try to see the hand of God reaching down through their majestic and infinite traceries.

TV

In this wonderful hour-the most wonderful that the world has ever known, save one-even the most elemental intelligence must bow humbly down in acknowledgment of the Lord God of the Ages.

When we think of Armenia, safe after more than a thousand years from the incessant butchery of the filthy and unspeakable Turks; when we think of Poland freed at last from the nameless and indescribable torture of Prussia and the awful curse that Bismarck put upon her; when we think of one enslaved people after another shaking now the shackles from their limbs and standing once more radiant and glad in the loving and all-embracing sun, we behold miracles not less than any told in holy writ.

Therefore, the inevitable conclusion must be that God is still in his heavens. His hand is still upon us.

And, this being plainly the case, it is for the peoples of the world to vow themselves to God for all time to come. They must never again surrender their liberties to kings or to groups of statesmen or soldiers. They must have no king but God.

Out of the ashes of this blackened and broken world that lies under our feet to-day, there must be made a new world in which there shall be no more hatreds, no more wars.

Under the banner of the Prince of Peace, all men must be as brothers, else the hand of God has come again upon the world for naught.-Los Angeles Times.

The Churches and the "Flu." BY E. C. FUOUA.

Christians are sometimes, in the providence of God, so placed that it calls for both diligence and wisdom to "obey God rather than men," while at the same time also to "be subject to the higher powers." This is one of those times. The so-called "Spanish influenza" has so overrun the West that stringent steps have been taken to counteract it. These steps included the unconditional closing of all churches throughout the State-the "unconditional surrender" of the kingdom of Christ to the civil government for the time being, so it would

Aside from desiring to cooperate in the work of checking the malady, the church of Christ desires also to "be in subjection to the higher powers" in the matter; and yet the church must be loyal to Him who has said: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together." Just how to be loyal to all was rather perplexing, but it was solved in my mind for this community thus: The authorities have not forbidden all intercourse. We are allowed, under certain restrictions, to visit in the homes. Carefully observing these restrictions, we feel free to meet a few brethren in a private home and worship according to the New Testament teaching. The assembly thus formed is not unlawful, and the worship rendered is lawful to God; hence in this we combine loyalty to both. We meet in one private home one Lord's day, and in another on the next. Only those meet with us who are determined to "obey God rather than men." While "men" are not disobeyed, this, nevertheless, requires the same courage that one would be compelled to exercise in a case where such were the result.

One of the hardest things to teach this generation is the authority of Christ. They seem to think that, where the civil law speaks in such a manner as to make obedience to Christ unhandy and inconvenient, we should seize the occasion as a good excuse for forsaking obedience to Christ. But in all matters where the State has spoken, in my experience I have yet to find a case where the State enjoins anything that really leads to hostility to Christ in any matter. This is true of the present "flu" situation, and it was true of the draft into military service. In neither case has the State demanded disloyalty to Christ. "Where there is a will, there is a way" to obey the Lord under all circumstances, which, of course, involves also the obedience to "the higher powers."

But the first lesson Christians need, with respect to such matters, is to learn to first remember to obey Christ -that he must be obeyed-and then cast about for a way also to obey the "powers that be." Under no circumstances must Christ be ignored. where his will seems to be in conflict with the State; but where conflict seems to thus exist, it is well to remember that in every temptation there exists "the way of escape" to God's trusting child. (1 Cor. 10: 13.) It is there, but it must be discovered, and this is the Christian's duty under such circumsances. He who seeks for this "way of escape" will certainly find it; and it will be found also to be both logical and honorable.

Another Tribute to a Noble Preacher.

BY J. L. HINES.

It was with a sad heart that I read of the death of our estimable brother, J. D. Northeut, of Tracy City, Tenn. As I read that sad message the tears poured out from my aching, burning soul, for I knew that a good man had fallen in Israel. I had known Brother Northeut only a short time, but it was my privilege to be associated with him in two meetings last year-namely, at Pikeville and Dunlap, Tenn. We talked often and freely of the cause and of things that pertain to life and godliness. I loved him as a man and as a God-fearing preacher of the gospel, and I know that he fought a clean fight, and by the eye of faith I can behold him over there among the redeemed of the Lord. The brotherhood has lost a good, pure man; but he has won the crown. To his loved ones I would say: Trust in God, and sorrow not as those who have no hope, but through the burning, bitter tears look to Jesus and take refuge in his cause.

Words.

"For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." (Matthew.)

Pure waters do not flow from an impure fountain.

In some respects, words are a surer indication of character than deeds. In the very economy of things it is necessary that one must do some good, honest deeds in order that he may earn his living and maintain at least a residence among his fellows. 't is true that he must give voice to some pure words also for the same reason; but he may come nearer making all his utterances vile, or at least impure, and still be called "respectable," than he can his deeds, for the reason that were he who is given to impure thoughts to be guilty of as many wicked deeds in proportion as he is of wicked words, those about him would soon make it necessary that he find another place of habitation.

"Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," said One who knew utterly the hearts of men; and he said also: "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man." This is why one's conversation is a sure index to his character. People do not talk about those things concerning which they are not interested; therefore, if "the abundance of the heart" consists of good, one's speech will be good; if evil, his conversation will be evil. There is no gainsaying this statement. If the fountain of thought be impure, the words which flow from it will be vulgar and vile.

The person who is guilty of obscene conversation has in proportion a mind which is a reservoir of impurity.

The teller of dirty stories is a mental and moral vulture.

The mind, like the palate, feeds on that which it likes, and the mind which carries about a collection of vulgar yarns will poison the mental atmosphere in which it exists. Not only are his stories and conversation repulsive to those who think purely. but the fact that he presumes that those about him like his stock in trade just as he does is an insult to every one to whom he undertakes to impart his putrid mental pabulum.

He assumes that the ear of his listener is a moral garbage can into which he may dump all the filth he has on hand. "An ungodly man diggeth up evil: and in his lips there is as a burning fire."

One of the most subtle, most insidious, and, therefore, most mischievous of these foul birds is the one who is guilty of sugar-coating his impure thoughts by putting them in the form of insinuations and suggestions which are capable of a double construction, but with the leaning toward the vulgar just a little stronger than toward the wholesome. Then, if accused, he will say that he had no idea of such a construction being placed on his words, thus adding a lie to his other offense. "A wicked doer giveth heed to false lips; and a liar giveth par to a naughty tongue."

But the teller of dirty stories, the utterer of impure conversation is not the only guilty one. He who gives ear to such things is also culpable; for if there were no one to listen, there would soon be no one to tell, and the purveyor of moral filth would soon find his occupation gone. He who listens to him is, as the lawyers say, particeps criminis in the offense. "He that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile."

The apostle James pays a splendid-tribute to the man who is pure in his conversation when he says, " If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body;" and the same apostle says: "The tongue is a fire, a world of Iniquity; so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body."

The psalmist had a full apprehension of the necessity for purity of thought, as evidenced by many of his beautiful expressions in regard thereto. For example, he says: "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me." As much as to say, the prayers of the impure cannot be heard, for they are the prayers of the wicked; and we are told that "the prayers of the wicked availeth nothing"-not just a little, but nothing.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If Your Back is Aching or Bladder Bothers, Drink Lots of Water and Eat Less Meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In twenty-four hours they strain from it five hundred grains of acid and waste; so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water; you can't drink too much. Also get from any pharma-cist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which every one should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Again he pleads: "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer." Also, he exclaims: "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me." But the foulest, the vilest, the most thoroughly mischievous and despicable of impure talkers is he who is given to repeating scandal, to echoing gossip, particularly such as involves the good name of his victim in immorality or suggests that he might be capable of immoral practices. Only a breath or so of this kind of infamous conversation, even from one who is known to be a scandalmonger, has oftentimes ruined the reputation of one who was pure and good. It is pretty safe to assume that one who will peddle scandal will indulge in things that are scandalous. How necessary it is to heed the admonition of the apostle to "abstain from all appearance of

He who is really pure in mind and thought will flee from such moral vultures as the dirty story-teller, the scandalmonger, the gossip purveyor, the singer of suggestive songs, and the reader of salacious literature as he would from one afflicted with the plague, for moral contagion is worse for his eternal welfare than is physical affliction. The peddler of scandal and gossip is a host for all sorts of immoral germs; and unless those with whom he associates are well provided with mental and spiritual prophylactics, they are liable to infection.

What to Preach.

BY D. P. CRAIG.

"And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." (1 Cor. 2: 1, 2.)

I have often wondered why these profound words of the inspired apostle have not been faithfully lived up to by the modern teachers of the way of salvation. We rejoice to know that a few faithful preachers of the word are seeking with all their might and zeal to cause the world to see the importance of ever keeping in view the passage quoted above. But there are still hosts of men and so-called "ambassadors of Christ" who seem bent and determined on following the world in all classes and divers innovations. All the Bible reading and warnings in the world seem powerless to constrain men to narrow their preaching down to the simple story of the cross. Paul came not unto the Corinthian brethren with a vain display of oratory, of excellency of speech, of the wisdom of man, in order to make clear and open the testimony of God. but determined to forget all human knowledge and the hosts of man-made creeds and oracles and simply know and commit himself only to a crucifled, risen, and glorified Lord.

Now, what other information need to be given to any man as to what he must know in order to make known the way of eternal life? We have no instance in the divine record of the apostles and early inspired teachers preaching anything, save "Christ, and him crucified." To forever eradicate all the vain speculations of men and magnify the glory and power of the gospel was the aim and purpose of all the apostles. Peter says: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty." (2 Pet. 1: 16.) It is implied, as the same apostle continues to reason, that the word of God is inspired, and was thus a demonstration that all the cunning fables of man's devising were inadequate to effect what the gospel does actually cause and effect. If any man preach or receive any other gospel than that of Christ, let him be accursed, says Paul. In anything that man commits himself to teach as the power of God to life and salvation, he must have the divine approval of the one best Book. That Book is the word of God, and dwells upon Jesus Christ as its one and peculiar theme. It would be a curious book, indeed, telling us, as it does, that Jesus was its only and I

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

Grandma Kept Her Locks Dark, Glossy, and Youthful With Sage Tea and Sulphur.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked, and faded hair is grand-mother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," for about fifty cents a bottle. It is very popular, be-cause nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft luster and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of dis-

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION solitary theme, if it should turn aside to such foolish jestings as all the cavilings of uninspired man have during ages and ages. But in it there is no such inconsistency. Then, I say our theme should be Jesus Christ, and him crucified, and we should determine daily to know him only as he is revealed to us in and through the written revelations of the Spirit.

A systematic and intelligent reader perceives the analogy existing between our text and a large portion of Paul's letter to Timothy. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." The preaching of the gospel must not be corrupted with the foolish reasonings of man, but presented simply as the truth is in Christ and the gospel. Paul seems persistent in warning Timothy of things that withstand the word of God. He opposes all word and authority, save that of Jesus. No doctrine is able to free man from the guilt and pollution of sin, save the one that speaks of a crucified Christ. False and sectarian teachers have demonstrated the inability of human creeds to do so. The gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." The preaching of the cross is the power of God. God forbid that any man "should glory, save in the cross of Jesus Christ." Paul rejoiced in his last days that he had kept the faith. He recognized that all the teachings of man must be condemned and showed openly in order for the word of life to have free and unhindered course. His sole purpose in instructing Timothy to remain at Ephesus was to charge some that they teach Christ only, and that no other doctrine be permitted to enter. No fables and endless genealogies were to be tolerated. All such only led to questions and destroyed all faith in Christ and godly edifying. All experience has shown us, since the days of Jesus and the apostles, that even devout men have given heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, and thus rob the gospel of its power to save on certain prospective Christians. When preachers learn to give themselves wholly and without reserve to God's word, meditating upon its teaching as he is commanded to meditate upon them, taking heed to all the gospel of Christ, then we will have men of the true Pauline example. The record informs us that Philip "preached unto him [the eunuch] Jesus." Paul preached unto the Philippian jailer "the word of the Lord." Peter preached unto the centurion and his household that word which began to be propagated from the very beginning. Lydia earnestly attended unto the things which were spoken by Paul, and we know it was "Jesus Christ, and him crucified." Preachers, as well as other men, must be mindful of the words of the inspired apostles long since written for our salvation. It is possible for us to let the divine words slip from us and find ourselves involved in the maze of sectarianism. We must ever go back to the divine testimony and let the facts of the gospel be the basic foundation of all our sermons; to know Him only is enough. Paul was indignant when he learned that men were honoring their spiritual leaders rather than Him in whom we have obtained redemption and forgiveness of sin. It was Apollos, Cephas, or Paul, rather than the name of our blessed and adorable Redeemer. There is salvation in none but him, for his name is the only name in heaven or among men whereby we must be The longer I serve in the harvest of the Lord and the nearer I approach my home eternal, the conviction grows more forcible that men have failed to know Jesus, and him crucified. Many talk much about the story of Jesus and his boundless love, but have failed to preach and teach the real truth as it is in Jesus and as it was first given by the primitive heralds of the cross.

A word to those who are members of the church of Christ. While you seek to show to the world the contrast between the law and the gospel, pray, brother, see that your mind is made free of misconceptions that would hinder the gospel of Christ.

The Right to Be Well Born.

With problems of construction and reconstruction absorbing the minds of those who are conscious of society's ills, the various aspects of childbirth are becoming increasingly important. Good Housekeeping publishes in the November issue a timely article by Olivia Howard Dunbar. She says:

"Prenatal care does not merely mean healthier babies. It means more of them. By actual proof it has been shown greatly to reduce the sum of tragedies known as infant mortality. It means also a very considerable lifesaving among mothers of unborn babies; and at present the United States, among the sixteen leading nations of the world, ranks fourteenth in this important particular. The case is that, as Dr. Ralph Lobenstine has put it: "Thirty-five per cent of the deaths that occur during the first year. sixty per cent of those occurring the first three months, and a larger proportion of the deaths during the first month result from conditions arising before birth or accidents at birth." The time may not be far distant when cities, in making out their budgets, will not only include what they owe to the unborn child, but will place that first of all; and the truth is, of course, that if every condition, sanitary, economic, legal, whatever you please, were adjusted with scrupulous reference to the interests of the unborn, the well-being of the entire population would thereby be assured, so fundamental and comprehensive is this matter of prenatal welfare. The trouble with civilization may be that we began at the wrong end of life."

The New Hope in Palestine.

Few events in the course of the war have made a deeper impression upon the public mind than the pledge given to restore Palestine to the Jewish nation and establish the ancient land as a national Jewish home. But it now appears that the program includes much more. It carries with it the restoration of those nations and lands over which the infidel Moslem power has ruled rough-shod for many centuries-the Jews, the Arabians, and the Armenians. With the progress of the war men's views have broadened of the value of nationality, and the right of the ancient races, equally with the modern, not only to exist, but to govern themselves, and their right also to be aided by all civilized peoples in working out their own destiny.

The eyes of the world are centered. however, upon Palestine, where the dawn of a new freedom has risen. Palestine's agricultural colonies, its industries, its sanitation, its water supply, its transportation problem, its reforestation, will be among the constructive tasks of the immediate future. To its development the wealth and influence of the nations will be tributary, in the great hope of a rejuvenated Israel.-Christian Herald.

Rheumatism

A HOME CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of theumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address, and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar; but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer, when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To relieve rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uric-acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring, Box 21B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if it fails to benefit my case, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

KILLS CATARRH GERMS

Famous Hyomei-Mr. Booth's Wonderful Discovery.

Some years ago, the noted Richard T. Booth, founder of the blue ribbon movement and temperance orator and leader of international fame who induced over a million men to sign the pledge, developed a very serious catarrhal trouble. Seeking to regain health, he went to inland Australia where he breathed day and night the antiseptic balsams as given off by the Eucalyptus forests.

This experience led Mr. Booth to the discovery of the most wonderful catarrhal treatment known to medical science—Hyomei, which is formed from the purest oil of Eucalyptus combined with other healing and antiseptic ingredients. Hyomei is a germ killing vapor, absolutely harmless but wonderfully effective in the treatment of Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever.

The treatment is simple but most scientific. You breathe Hyomei. It is pronounced the only method of treatment that sends by direct inhalation to the most remote part of the air passages, a balsamic air that destroys germs and bacilli of bronchial catarrh in the breathing organs, sooths and allays irritation and enriches and purifies the blood. All druggists. Booth's Hyomei Co., Ithaca, N. Y.

Land Beautiful in Summer.

Political exiles, the severe winter (fifty degrees below zero), and the immense stretches of snow have done much to give a bad impression of Siberia. Siberia is thought of by many as the most dismal and Godforsaken wilderness, where bears and cut throats parade in the placid moonlight. Nothing is unfairer than that.

It is a most beautiful place, the parallel of which you can scarcely find elsewhere. In winter the groves of white birches on the wide stretch of pure snow lit by moonlight is a scene most holy and sublime. And the lake of Baikal, with its depth of six thousand feet, the severest of winters can never deprive of warmth. The River Selenga that flows out of it never freezes and the water is pure as crystal.

But the most glorious season is certainly summer, says a writer in the New East. Summer is early in Siberia. In late June the whole verdure blooms out in wild luxury, and for thousands of miles the plain is covered with a glorious carpet of wild flowers—yellow, crimson, purple, and what not. I have never seen the equal in the world. The tropics cannot beat it; the cherries of Yoshino, never!

What "Old Glory" Means.

When you hang out the colors, spare a minute to think of it-of the places it has been, of the things it means. It has given new hope to the proud and to the poor everywhere in this world. It is the symbol and the achievement of the two noblest human attributes-strength and compassion. It springs from the enduring good that is in the heart of humanity. It stands for the liberation of all men. And it can never fail, it can never be humbled, because that motive lies deep in every human consciousness as permanent, as sure, as inevitable, as tears or laughter or hope or faith in God .-Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger.

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution .- Advt.

A Jogger from Muskogee, Okla.

BY J. G. ALLEN.

To churches of Christ in the United States: It is with a thankful heart to God that we send this little jogger to you through the Gospel Advocate. We have a loyal band of sixty-one members in this thriving town of about sixty-five thousand people, with no house in which to meet. Some brethren have responded nobly thus far, but we are still in need of help, and pray God that he will put it in the hearts of his children to answer this call for help and respond at once. I have been here since March, 1917, doing mission work at my own charge, and God has been most gracious to me. I have a splendid home, with all that makes life happy here, and have given of my time and money to build up the cause that is so badly needed. Please encourage the work with a small contribution, and it will be acknowledged through the Gospel Advocate, Christian Leader, and the Firm Foundation. Send money to C. L. Hanan, 320 West Okmulgee Avenue, or to the writer, 1412 Baltimore Street

160 Hens-1,500 Eggs.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed two boxes of 'More Eggs' to my hens and broke the egg record. I got 1,500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly twenty-one days." You can do as well. In fact, any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hers. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs; so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultryman, 6258 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

The "flu" is better here and things are getting back to normal again. My wife is still very sick, hardly able to sit up, and I am tied at home closely to attend her; yet I am busy all the time for the church It is wonderful what a man can find time to do when he tries hard or has to do it .- Tice Elkins.

Penalty of Disuse.

Nature has a way of insisting that her gifts must be prized. "When she finds that we really do not care to use a thing, she usually takes it away from us," says a scientific writer. The unused muscular strength dwindles; the skill acquired by the fingers departs with disuse; a singer who sought to save her voice by refusing to sing, except upon very rare and notable occasions, found, to her surprise, that through lack of exercise it was losing its power and sweetness.

This law of nature holds good in the world of the spirit. The generosity we put aside as too costly, the faithfulness and goodness we are going to put into life some other day, when we are not so busy, fade away. The faith and reverence that we fondly dream will flower into beauty sometimes are shriveling into nothingness while we wait.-Selected.

The Inward Effects of humors are worse than the outward. They endanger the whole system. Hood's Sarsaparilla eradicates all humors, cures all their inward and outward effects. It is the great alterative and tonic, whose merit has been everywhere established.

DO YOU KNOW that indigestion can be cured, permanently cured, so that you can eat any kind of food that you crave? Happiness Through Kindness.

Life for some is a hard and weary journey. From the cradle to the grave many must grapple with overwhelming odds. Those of us blessed with health and vigor should occasionally think about this truth; and if we know that it lies within our power to make lighter such a person's burden, we certainly should do so and we would realize a deep happiness through our little act of kindness. Whatever efforts we make to give somebody else happiness and good cheer will come back to us in boomerang fashion a hundredfold.-Selected.

Famous Old Recipe of for Cough Syrup of the form of the fo

Thousands of housewires have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap to make, but it really has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a pint bottle, and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, whooping cough or bronchial asthma.

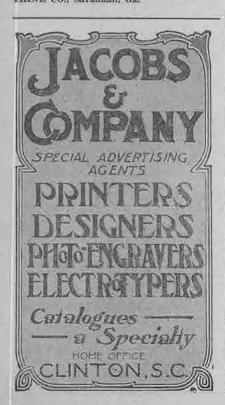

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Dugger, November 18.-I have accepted work in Missouri for next year and will move there the first of the year. My address will be Browning, Mo. There is a splendid opening here at Dugger for the right man. We have been here for two years, and our stay here has been very pleasant. While the church here is not perfect, yet it has many true and loyal brethren. We shall always remember them with love and best wishes, and our stay here will always be remembered with Any one interested in the work here should write to E. O. Choning or Pleas Jones, Dugger, Ind.-E. P. Watson.

Chaplin, November 20,-The gospel work in this community is beginning to move along nicely since the "flu" ban has been lifted. Many cases of the disease have been reported lately; however, we hope and pray that the work will be in full sway soon. Now that peace has come, I feel that brethren everywhere should bow their faces to the earth and thank God for his care and protection during the dark and gloomy days that we have passed through. Instead of wrangling and fussing as we have been doing, we should rid our hearts of all malice and try to love as Christian brethren should. This war has taught us a great lesson of sacrifice. Men have died unflinchingly for the good of mankind. I appreciate the love of these soldier boys, and I fall to find words that will adequately express that appreciation. But the great lesson. that appreciation. But the great lesson of sacrifice was given by our Savfor when he died for the world, and it is that sacrifice that encourages me every day to live closer to God. By sacrificing himself, Christ purchased the church, the only institution through which we can glorify God. institution To work in or through some other institution for the good of mankind only lowers one's estimation of the church. How brethren who have contended for the "old paths" in the past can be influenced by these temporal organizations to give them their influence is more than I can understand. I do not for one moment question the motive of these brethren; I believe they are honest and sincere; but the all-wise God has chosen one, and only one, organization through which we are to give him the glory. God expects every man who has named the name of Christ to defend this great institution. Much is being written about the new religion of the future. Loyal brethren should be afraid of these new things. A new religion means a new church. Satan is ever conniving and scheming and putting forth new propaganda, but God is the same yesterday, to-day, Brethren, let us not and forever. wrest and twist the Scriptures, but let us abide in its plain, simple teach-I want the prayers of every loval disciple to ascend to God to-day and ask him to bring us closer to him and to each other .- R. A. Craig.

Mississippi.

Senatobia, November 14.-My fourth year in this field closes this month. We had a fine service at old Thyatira last Sunday. At the close of the service one of the elders, T. C. House, arose and said: "Brother Lowrey, in behalf of Thyatira Church, I want to assure you that we appreciate your labors with us during the past four years, and I want to announce to you that it is the wish of the church, without one dissenting voice, that you continue your work with us for another year." This I take as a compliment. I will send a report of our work for publication as soon as time will permit, I was never more busy. A full school to look after, Lady Grace (our daughter) in hospital in Memphis with the "flu" and pneumonia, wife away from home with Lady Gracewell, I am just some busy .- J. P. Lowrey.

Texas.

Dallas, November 19 .- The brief announcement in the last issue of the Gospel Advocate of the death of Brother J. D. Northeut came to me like a keen clap of thunder in a clear sky. I never was more surprised, and, of course, was much grieved that such is so. I thought he was yet young, stout, and healthy, and bid fair for many, many more years in the service of the Lord here, doing as he has been doing, a most wonderful work in pointing the lost, ruined, and recreant to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of those who call on him out of a pure heart. May God bless his wife and children. I never met Brother Northcut but two or three times, but these were enough to love him for his work's sake. I most gladly arranged for a little part of his trip through Texas last year-1917. He recommended me for one meeting in Tennessee in 1917. I know the church where I arranged for him to go in 1917 was well pleased. I cannot say so much for the church to which he recommended me. The church seemed to be pleased, but I did not know for sure.—J. C. Estes.

Edifying as the Need May Be

Symbols.

In the first Corinthian letter the apostle Paul describes the atonement by saying: "For our passover also hath been sacrificed, even Christ." In this passage he encourages us to study the Jewish passover as a type of what Christ means to us and what we must do to render acceptable service to him. We must understand, of course, that it is the study of a symbol. It requires research and patience and prayer to get very much out of the symbols of the Bible. A person who skims over its pages in a thoughtless way will never see very much of their fitness and beauty. Even to the devoted mind of the student some of the symbols will seem at first to be vague and indistinct, but perseverance will bring them out in their true light.

You have heard, perhaps, of Prang's famous pictures and art work. For illustration, let me describe a visit to his lithographic plant. The visitor is first shown a stone on which is laid the color for the making of the first impression toward producing the portrait of a great public man-let us say, President Wilson. But on this first stone you can see only the faintest possible line of tinting. The next stone deepens the color a little, but still no trace of the man's face is visible. Again and again the sheet is passed over successive stones. At last, after some twenty impressions have been made from as many stones, the portrait of the distinguished man stands forth so perfect that it seems only to lack the power of speech to make it living. Thus it is that Christ is revealed from the pages of the Bible. We read one passage, and his face seems to be in deep shadow, marred more than the face of any man: we read another passage, and he appears "as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." But patient study of all the symbols taken in connection with the correlated accounts of the New Testament will bring out the likeness until at length he will be seen fair as the lily of the valley and bright as the morning sun, in the "fullness of him that filleth all in all."

Our Passover.

What is the meaning of our passover? The best way to answer that question is to discover what the passover meant to Israel and then apply the type to Christ, and not too literally, but in perfect harmony with the teachings of the New Testament. It is plain enough that the passover was a type of Christ in his atoning work. The sacrificial offering of the passover was a lamb; Christ is the Lamb of God. Jesus bore this name before he came into the world, while he lived in the world, and after he ascended to the Father. Isaiah (53: 7) said of him: "He was oppressed, yet when he was afflicted he opened not his mouth; as a lamb that is led to the slaughter, and as a sheep that before its shearers is dumb." When John the Baptist saw him coming in the distance, he exclaimed: "Behold, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!" (John 1: 29.) Twenty-seven times this title is applied to Christ in the book of Revelation. If we reach heaven at last, it shall be after we have washed our robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Every created thing, we are told, shall join in the saying: "Unto him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb, be the blessing, and the honor, and the glory, and the dominion, forever and ever." (Rev. 5: 13.)

The passover lamb must be a lamb without blemish. We can readily understand this provision and appreciate its application. If it bore the mark of the slightest deformity or even deficiency, it would have been unfit to represent Him of whom Peter said: "Ye were redeemed... with precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of Christ." (1 Pet. 1: 18, 19.) The passover lamb was physically perfect; Christ was morally and spiritually perfect. He "did no sin, nor was guile found in his mouth." (1 Pet. 2: 22.) God's ordinance provided that the Israelites might select either a lamb from the sheep or a kid from the goats; but there is no trace anywhere of the use of a kid. The selection of a lamb for a sacrifice became universal.

In preparation for the Passover, the lamb was set apart four days before the feast began; Christ entered Jerusalem four days before the day for the offering of the paschal lamb.

The passover lamb was to be slain and roasted with fire; Christ was crucified for us and received the fire of God's wrath for sin in our stead. Paul says: "Him who knew no sin he made to be sin on our behalf; that we might become the righteousness of God in him." (2 Cor. 5: 21.)

No Pone Broken.

A (ain, the lamb was reasted whole, and no bone was to be troken. In John's account of the crucifixion, he takes par icular pains to explain that while the Roman soldier to the legs of the two malefactors between whom Jesus are crucified, yet they did not break the legs of Jesus.

"For these things came to pass, that the scripture might be fulfilled. A bone of him shall not be broken." (John 19: 36.) Thus we see how the passover lamb preserves its fitness on the day of crucifixion. It is a custom among many of the older brethren, when they preside at the Lord's table, to break the communion bread into pieces before giving thanks and to preface their prayer with the quotation: "This is my body broken for you." (1 Cor. 11: 24.) May I not suggest without being presumptuous that John solemnly bore witness to the important fact that Jesus' body was not broken? The Revision translates this passage differently. It reads: "This is my body which is for you." His side was pierced, but his body was not broken. Had Jesus' bones been broken, we would have lost a beautiful type. His physical body unbroken suggests to a thoughtful mind the oneness of his spiritual body, the church. There are many people who would like to split and divide that body into various segments, each bearing a different name, but God never intended for any such division to be made. The Holy Spirit speaks plainly on this point, saying: "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling." (Eph.

While we are on the subject of the Lord's Supper, let me point out another thing that is portrayed by the passover type. No one was to celebrate the feast alone. If a family was too small to eat a whole lamb, their neighbor was to join in with them. Sometimes we are asked whether or not it is possible for a Christian to celebrate the Lord's Supper by himself in his own home. I do not think so. This type makes no such provision. Jesus said: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." (Matt. 18: 20.) I can conceive of three persons celebrating the Lord's Supper, or even two, but there is no provision for one. He may pray alone, may read the Bible alone, but the Lord's Supper requires a company of at least two persons.

Unleavened Bread. O O

It was required that they eat the passover lamb with unleavened bread and with bitter herbs. The unleavened bread symbolized three things. First, the haste in which they fled, not waiting for the bread to rise. (See Ex. 12: 34, 39.) We know that when a good housewife leaves the house before the bread rises, there is something terribly exciting to take her away. So it was with the Israelites, Second, the unleavened bread symbolized their sufferings in Egypt, for such trial is called the "bread of affliction." (See Deut. 16: 3.) Third, and chiefly, the unleavened bread stood for their purity as a consecrated nation, intended to show the Israelites that they were to leave behind them in Egypt all the wicked and idolatrous practices with which they had been implicated. Israel Zangwill, in his "Children of the Ghetto," tells how the stricter Jews even yet sweep under their beds, and comb their beards, lest a crumb should lurk somewhere. It is because the leaven stands for sin.

It is easy to find the parallel to these thoughts in the New Testament. Jesus spoke of the leaven of the Pharisees and of Herod. (Mark 8: 15.) The kingdom of heaven is likened in one of his parables to leaven. (Matt. 13: 33.) Paul said: "A little leaven leaveneth the, whole lump." This occurs in the very passage where we are told that Christ is our passover. We are exhorted to "purge out the old leaven." "Wherefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and (1 Cor. 5: 6-8.) As God intended and made provision for Israel to become a consecrated nation, so he purposes that Christians shall be a peculiar and consecrated people. "Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing: and I will receive you, and will be to you a Father, and ye hall be to me sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." (2 Cor. 6: 17, 18.)

The passover was to be eaten with bitter herbs as a reminder of the bitterness of Egyptian bondage; we must feed upon Christ's words with humiliation and sorrow for our days of sin and rebellion.

Pilgrims.

The passover must be eaten in the posture and garb of travelers. On this point the directions were very explicit. "And thus shall ye eat: with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand." (Ex. 12: 11.) Each one of these directions indicates preparation for a long journey. I wonder how many Christians feel this way about their stay in the world, and how many are ready to take their departure for the heavenly Canaan. Is it not true that the most of us have set our affections upon things below, and not upon the things above? Is it not true that the most of us are striving for the things that perish? If we are not ready, it is not because we failed to receive warning. Time and again we are exhorted to gird up our loins and be ready. Jesus solemnly reminds us that no man knoweth the day nor the hour of his coming, no, not even the angels in heaven. In such an hour as ye think not he will come. Paul says: "For we have not here an abiding city, but we seek after the city which is to come." (Heb. 13: 14.)

It is hard for us to imagine at this distance just what were the feelings of the children of Israel when the death angel passed over the land scrutinizing the doorposts of every home. It is harder still to think what must have been the grief and lamentation of those Egyptians on the morning after, when they found their first-born dead. Thus two homes were set before us. In one there would be life and joyful expectancy, but in the other there would be death and mourning. "The wages of sin is death; but the free gift of God is eternal life." It is a beautiful commentary upon Israel that not a single home was left unprotected. Every one of them went out of the land of bondage. Not a hoof was left behind. This goes to show that a whole nation of people can obey God when it wants to do it.

Be Sure of the Blood.

There is an old legend that on the night of the exodus a Jewish maiden, the firstborn of the family, was so troubled on her sick bed that she could not sleep. "Father," she said, "are you sure the blood is on the doorpost?" He replied that he had ordered it put there. But she was not satisfied till she was carried out to see for herself, when—lo!—the blood was not there. Immediately it was placed there. Then she was safe, and she fell asleep.

It would not have been sufficient for an Israelite to say: "I belong to the people of Israel, and God intends to slay only the Egyptians. There is no need of my troubling myself to put blood on my doorpost. My home is safe." God stated his condition of deliverance, and it must be fulfilled. "When I see the blood, I will pass over you." No Israelite dared to trifle with that command. We learn from the eleventh chapter of Hebrews that they kept the passover as an act of faith.

The beloved John assures us that "the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.) The only way that any man can receive and apply the blood of Jesus is to obey his blood-sealed commands and enter into his blood-sealed institution, the church of the Firstborn. If you have not applied the blood of Jesus to your heart and to your home according to the terms of the gospel, then you are not ready for the death angel to pass. Longfellow says:

Angels of Life and Death alike are his; Without his leave they pass no threshold o'er. Who, then, would wish or dare, believing this, Against his messenger to shut the door?

Jesus Christ, the Generalissimo.

BY J. D. WALLING.

By the above heading I mean that Jesus Christ is the Supreme Commander in the army of the Lord. The Literary Digest of November 9 has an article on the "Evil Effects of Competitive Missions," which also shows the evil effects of denominationalism. It begins:

Shall denominations be nationalized or nations be denominationalized? Such a question puts in somewhat cryptic form the impending transformation in missionary fields. Either the old order must be perpetuated and strengthened or each nation be encouraged to express its Christian faith in ways most congenial to itself. Mr. William T. Ellis poses the question in its simplest form by reference to China and America. "Shall all the various American denominations now conducting missions in China continue to propagate their own forms and faith among the Chinese, so that the converts to Christianity in China may soon have almost as many creeds as the United States; or shall the Chinese Christians amalagamate into one national Chinese Church, irrespective of their original relationship to various denominational missions?"

If Mr. Ellis and all other denominationalists would spend just a little of their time in trying to find just "where we are at," they would soon learn that all denominations, whether they be national or international, are evil; that Jesus Christ is "the head over all things to the church, which is his body" (Eph. 1: 22); that Jesus Christ is not the head of denominationalism, therefore denominations are not Christian. Instead, therefore, of "perpetuating and strengthening" the "old order" of denominationalism, let us go to the Christ and learn his will, and let us encourage the Chinese and all others to do the same. Encourage all nations to make Christ their creed, and all such questions as "amalgamation" of Christians will be relegated to the bats and owls. But Mr. Ellis continues:

Chinese Christians are getting together in a Chinese Church, and the missionaries are abetting them in it. Already something like ten separate Presbyterian denominations from the United States, Canada, and Great Britain have organized themselves into one ecclesiastical body without the word "Presbyterian" in its name, and both the British and American Congregationalists are asking to be taken in also. Property and pride and prestige are all deemed insufficient to prevent this great merger, which is avowedly only the forerunner of still greater consolidations. Indian and Japanese Christians had already effected notable unions.

As a matter of common sense, the Chinese Christian does not care a copper cash for the distinctive names and forms of the American denominations. Why should he? His sense of humor long ago pointed out the absurdity of perpetuating in China Northern and Southern Presbyterian denominations, Northern and Southern Methodist denominations, and Northern and Southern Baptist denominations, the only difference being a war in America half a century ago between Northern and Southern States!

It would take a rare Chinese scholar indeed to find an ideograph to express "Old-Two-Seed-in-the-Spirit Baptist Church"—for there really is such a denomination listed by the United States census, though, I believe, it has no missions in China. The "Holy Rollers" have missions in China, as have others of the newest and most eccentric type of American denominations. Shall we, therefore, have Chinese Dowleites and "Holy Rollers?"

There are in China at the present time seventy-eight denominational missionary societies at work, and, as Dr. James L. Barton points out, "under their leadership seventy-eight different kinds of Protestant churches have been created and are being perpetuated. To many of the Chinese, this array represents seventy-eight different kinds of Christians. Few, indeed, of the Chinese Christians have any conception of the real reason why they bear a name which to them has no significance and which none of them can accurately pronounce."

It is just right for all Chinese Christians to get together in a Chinese Church, and for all missionaries to abet them in it. Now, if the missionaries and the Chinese can learn that Jesus Christ is Marshal and that Peter and Paul are generals, it may yet be possible for them to conduct a great gospel campaign in which they may force all denominations to ask for an armistice. Dr. Barton "laid down a barrage" when he said: "The vital question is, are we justified in perpetuating a custom that is manifestly divisive, often destructively competitive, and for which there is no warrant in scripture?" Just so, there is no warrant in scripture for anything that is "divisive," "destructive," or "competitive." The strange thing is that Drs. Barton, Ellis, and all other denominationalists had not long ago learned this. The Scriptures are not contradictory, are not the author of confusion, or division. While the army of the Lord may be in various sectors, it is one and the same army, under the one Supreme Commander. The one command is: "That ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) The strange thing is that men like Dr. Barton can see that denominations are "manifestly divisive, often destructively competitive, and for which there is no warrant in scripture." and yet encourage, perpetuate, and foster denominations. But Dr. Barton is striking at the right trail in the following:

I do not believe the rank and file of our churches and the intelligent supporters of our foreign missionary enterprises, if they understood the facts, would favor our continuing to propagate divisions abroad in order that they may have the satisfaction of knowing that their gifts are aiding in making Christians who bear the same denominational label as that borne by the contributor.

The conduct of the war in France, for the first three years and more, when each one of the allies acted separately under its own leaders, in coöperation, but as independent units, shows the wastefulness and inefficiency of that line of action. This mistaken method of conducting a great military campaign has now been corrected by the most revolutionary military readjustment history records. If governments can bring about this unprecedented and even revolutionary change in order to overcome a common enemy, cannot the church do as much in order to create a single agency for the spiritual conquest of the world?

Now, if we can just get the Doctor to see that the church of Christ has only had "a single agency for the spiritual conquest of the world, and that Jesus Christ is the agent and the gospel is the means, there is yet hope of a successful "spiritual conquest of the world." Jesus said: "I am the Alpha and the Omega, he who is, and who was, and who is to come, the Almighty." Peter, at one time, had something of a worldly idea of the church, when, under the impulse of the moment, he wanted to "make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elijah;" but the record says he did this, "not knowing what he said." (Luke 9: 33.) I fear that too many of our learned friends, under a like impulse, are moved to say and do much, "not knowing what they say" and do. But God said to Peter: "This is my Son, my chosen; hear ye him." That is to say: "You need not build any tabernacles to Moses or Elijah, but this my Son will build his church; he will be the head over it; hear him." Paul says that Christ is the author and perpetrater of our faith." Peter says that Jesus was that "prophet" of whom "Moses indeed said, A prophet shall the Lord God raise up unto you from among your brethren, like unto me; to him shall ye hearken in all things whatsoever he shall speak unto you. And it shall be, that every soul that shall not hearken to that prophet, shall be utterly destroyed from among the people." (Acts 3: 20-24.) May I not, therefore, refer Doctors Barton, Ellis, and all others to the fact that, while Pershing, Haig, Diaz, Petain, and other officers looked to Foch as the supreme commander of the allied governments, long centuries before this did Peter, Paul, and the other apostles look to Jesus as the Supreme Head of the church? So much so that they said: "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son." (2 John 9.) What the world needs now is not a union of denominations, but that all men should honor the Head. And as all subordinate officers were loyal to Pershing, Haig, Petain, and Diaz, so should all missionaries and ministers be faithful in preaching only that which the apostles preached. The denominations, with their sectarian ideas and habits, have so cheapened the church that the world has little respect for it. As long as preachers look to Calvin, Wesley, Luther, and others as anything more than men, and teach their peculiar doctrines, there will continue to be denominational divisions. These were great and good men. Coming from under the "Dark Ages," they only saw a glimmer of the truth. There is no reason now for any one to grope his way in darkness. The gospel is God's power to save, and preachers are instructed to "preach the word." Yea, Paul said: "Wee is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." When all preachers now learn this lesson and follow it as did all subordinate officers follow the commands of Pershing, Haig, and others, then will all questions of denominationalism be silenced, and the Chinese and all others can be brought to the Christ; and no one will ask what they are, for the good reason that they will all be the same thing. Christians, and nothing but Christians, preaching of Christ, and him only, will make only Christians. Why not?

"Alexander Campbell's Errors."

BY F. W. SMITH,

It was a foregone conclusion with me that when my friend Moore undertook to define "Campbellism," he would find himself at sea without chart or compass. He was compelled to admit that A. Campbell originated absolutely nothing in the way of religious teaching and practice, but gave what he terms "four errors that he got from other sects antedating his day." I took up these so-called "errors," and showed that the Baptists themselves practiced at least two of them, and challenged my friend to show that the others did not come from the word of God. As a reply, here is what he says:

Alexander Campbell got no truth that he could not have gotten with the Baptists.

Alexander Campbell got error galore from other sects Such errors as I named in my reply in the around him. Advocate of October 17. I named four errors that he got from other sects antedating his day, and Smith admits that he believes them.

No, no, Friend Smith, if Campbell had gathered only truth, he would have been a Baptist.

Yes, if you had just held a few nonessentials with Campbell, it would not entitle you to the name, but you have affirmed all the cardinal tenets of Campbell. commissioned but one system of faith, and that he committed to his church, and Alexander Campbell says that was with the Baptists up to his day, eighteen centuries before Campbell, and I know the Baptists never did commission his kind. Who commissioned Campbell to start his sect, when the Baptists were here and had been here all these past centuries, so Campbell says? I believe Campbell told the truth when he said the kingdom was with the Baptists up to his call. I am unable to say what Campbell told Mr. Luce before he baptized him. I suppose he thought he was a Christian, as Baptist churches had no commission to baptize any one else.

It matters not with me whether you show me that Baptists sprinkled for baptism or not-for thousands of lies have been told on Baptists as to what they have doneyou have the Baptist faith now confronting you, and you must attend to it. You affirm that the word of God not only teaches the possibility of apostasy and warns against it, but actually gives examples of some who did apostatize. (F. W. Smith affirms, T. F. Moore denies.)

The case of apostasy given is found in 2 Tim. 2: 17, 18. The charge Paul alleges against these was an error in faith.

They thought the resurrection had passed.

I will not enlarge on the magnitude of this error, but use it as an example. Brother Smith virtually either believes this was a sin against the Holy Ghost, or all Christians believing an error do apostatize. Which position do you assume, Brother Smith?

If you affirm the former, that Hymenæus and Philetus committed the sin against the Holy Spirit, or the unpardonable sin, then you enlightened the world on a most difficult topic, and if you can prove it, you will have set-tled one question—"What is the sin against the Holy Ghost?"that has been asked for many hundreds of years. Do you know any further revelations concerning the lives of these two men? If not, how can you prove that they committed the unpardonable sin? So far as revelation is concerned, these two men may have prayed and been for-given and died in the triumphs of a living faith. If the latter be true, then perfection must take place at salvation, or the whole Christian race is hopelessly lost. That is, if to err in our beliefs causes us to apostatize, we are all gone.

In the first place, not one of us knows all truth, and no one can believe truth until said truth is made known to us; therefore all of us believe some error for lack of the knowledge of all truth.

Brother Moore says: "Alexander Campbell got no truth he could not have gotten with the Baptists." What a sweeping claim! The Baptist sect in Campbell's day was the repository of all known truth! If that assertion could be demonstrated as the truth, we are driven to the conclusion that the Baptist Church has drifted far from shore, for it has about as much error as any sect in the land. For my friend's information, I will state that Alexander Campbell never was a member of the Baptist Church. If he thinks so, let him prove it.

Brother Moore makes one statement to which I can most heartily subscribe-viz.: "Jesus Christ commissioned but one system of faith, and that he committed to his church." I feel sure that he will agree with me, also, that the church to which that "system of faith" was committed is the one mentioned in the New Testament; but when he undertakes to prove by Alexander Campbell that it was the Baptist Church of his day, I reject the testimony of his witness. My friend must prove the identity of his church with that of the New Testament with documentary evidence of an inspired nature, instead of by weak and fallible man.

On the matter of Baptists sprinkling for baptism he says; "Thousands of lies have been told on Baptists as to what Baptists have done." Well, if this be a lie, one of the most scholarly and most noted Baptists in the South told it-viz., Dr. Whitsitt, once president of the Baptist Theological Seminary, of Louisville, Ky. If my friend denies this, I will furnish him the proof.

On the question of the "possibility of apostasy," I submitted one passage that so clearly taught an actual case of apostasy that I felt sure none others were needed, and in this I have not been disappointed. My friend has demonstrated his inability to do anything with it. He talks about "sin against the Holy Spirit, or the unpardonable sin," with the assumption that one must commit that sin before he can apostatize and be lost. He seems not to know that sin of any nature, unforgiven, will result in the loss of the soul. He says: "The charge Paul alleges against these [2 Tim. 2: 17, 18] was an error in faith," and then tries to minimize this error by saying: "If to err in our beliefs causes us to apostatize, we are all gone."

In his commentary on the Epistles, James Macknight, Presbyterian, says, in his translation of 2 Tim. 2: 17, 18, this: "And this dectrine will eat, will destroy the souls of men, as a gangrene destroys the body. Of this sort of ungodly talkers are Hymenæus and Philetus, who from the true Christian doctrine have wandered, affirming that the resurrection hath already happened; and by this impious babbling have overturned the faith of some concerning the resurrection of the body, and a future life." To deny the resurrection was to deny a part of the gospel-namely. the resurrection of Christ-the very thing the apostle says renders their preaching vain, the faith of men vain, leaving them in their sins. (1 Cor. 15: 13-18.) Our resurrection is predicated upon the resurrection of Christ, and to deny our resurrection is to deny his. Now, in the face of all this, my friend denies that such characters have apostatized! He tries to save his sinking ship with this: "So far as revelation is concerned, these two men [Hymeneus and Philetus] may have prayed and been forgiven and died in the triumphs of a living faith." This is the very thing my friend's doctrine demands him to prove; but he has no way of doing it, except with the exceedingly uncertain "may have." Since there is no evidence from God's word that they did "pray and receive forgiveness and die in the triumphs of a living faith," my friend has no right to entertain a hope of their final salvation. I have shown that they apostatized from "the faith," and now let him show that they "prayed and were forgiven and died in the triumphs of a living faith.":

Brother Moore says, "You have the Baptist faith now confronting you, and you must attend to it." I think our readers have had no trouble in seeing that I have been doing that very thing, and that, too, in a way that has given Editor Moore much worry. They have no trouble in seeing his persistent refusal to answer many very plain and pertinent questions.

Brother Moore says with reference to Elder Luce baptizing Campbell: "I suppose he thought he was a Christian, as Baptist churches had no commission to baptize any one else." I remark, first, what evidence did he have that he was a Christian, in the absence of the Baptist test, "I believe that God for Christ's sake has pardoned my sins?" Second, while Brother Moore repudiates baptism in order to the remission of sins, let no one conclude that he repudiates any efficacy attaching to that ordinance, for he tells us it converts a Christian into a Baptist. He says one is a Christian before a Baptist preacher baptizes him, but after that performance he is a Baptist. Mark you, if a Methodist preacher should immerse one of these Christians, it would not make him a Baptist. The thing must be done by a Baptist preacher to bring about this transformation, thereby demonstrating the great efficacy of water in the Baptist system! I will ask my friend the same question again that was in the reply to which he claims he has replied-viz.: Produce one passage in the word of God that teaches one to be baptized because of the remission of sins.

Attention, Sunday-School Teachers!

The conscientious teacher of the Bible is anxious to secure the best help available in the preparation of the lesson. Patient research not only improves and enriches the mind of the teacher, but makes the class work doubly interesting to the scholars. In addition to our quarterlies, we carry two excellent books that cover the International Sunday-school Lessons. The publishers of "Peloubet's Select Notes" claim that it is the "most valuable commentary in the world," because it is "scholarly, comprehensive, condensed, and practical." It covers every phase of the lesson, from treatment and explanation of text, with notes from the best commentators, to list of special books for further study along the lines of thought suggested.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" is edited by Miss Martha Tarbell, Ph.D., and has been a general favorite for many years. The author has covered everything in the field of research and investigation that the enterprising teacher or scholar would like to know. Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior, and Bible-class teachers find in it full explanation of Bible texts, light upon difficult passages by the best biblical scholars and discussion of present-day problems in teaching.

We will send either one of these valuable books for $1.35, postpaid. Teachers would do well to have them both. They are beautifully bound and will fit well in the library.

The Young People, edited by A. B. Lipscomb, is a highclass illustrated weekly of four pages. The editor's comments upon the lessons occupy one page. The price is fifty cents per single copy for a year, or five or more copies to one address for forty cents each.

Sin may talk loud and bluster, but at heart it is a coward; it skulks away at the show of a strong resistance. There may be hard work at first; but, in the event, purity, and straightforwardness, and charitableness, and reverence will win the battle; opposition will melt away into silence, silence into respect, respect into sympathy, sympathy into imitation.—H. Missionary

A Christian Wedding in India.

BY E. S. JELLEY.

July 18 was my fortieth birthday. It found me in the Deccan (I was compelled to go down at the workers' expense, although they could ill afford it), in Ghogargaon, where the preachers and bishops set to study the word of God and to discuss the future of the work, it being understood that I am about to return to America.

On the same date there was a marriage in Ghogargaon. Nothing strange about that, as marriages are common among the Mangs at all times, except when there is a famine. The remarkable thing was that the marriage should be a Christian affair; for, as Kipling says, "The West is the West and the East is the East," or something to that effect. Certain it is that Western forms of marriage do not please the East, and sectarian Mangs regu-(and disciples-alas!-too often) have heathen marriages. Perhaps Dr. Hume's interference with the first Christian marriage at Vambori, April 8, 1914, when be lodged false information that an unauthorized person was about to perform a ceremony of marriage, has had something to do with discouraging Christian marriages. At any rate, here was a Christian marriage insisted upon by the Mangs of Ghogargaon because the woman (a Congregationalist) has a disciple father. The bridegroom expressed no objection, although the disciples of his village had celebrated several heathen marriages; and to show that they had reverted to heathenism in revenge for my refusing to interfere when they were sent to jail, most of them (but not the groom) wore heathen marks.

About 3 P.M. a toot or two of an instrument announced that the bridegroom's party had arrived. I expected more music, as heathen weddings are heralded by a lot of it; but there was no more. The groom then went to the river, had a bath, donned new clothing, and all was ready. Brother Paulas Thokal performed the ceremony, after which I made a brief address on the uplifting character of Christian faith and practice. I referred to the heathen custom of marrying children with no choice in the matter and of their designating widow marriages by another name than marriage, and the expression that red lead (married women put it on the forehead) belongs to marriage and cow dung to widow marriage, whereas the Christian faith makes no distinction, pronouncing every marriage holy.

Soon all sat down to a marriage feast (there were about eighty persons present), at which there was considerable wrangling about the food, which consisted of unleavened bread, melted butter, and raw sugar. The wrangling was because the Ghogargaon people tried to feed the guests more sugar than they wished (sugar is cheaper than bread), while the guests were inclined to want unreasonable quantities of butter, of which nearly three dollars' worth had been purchased.

There occurred at the supper an incident which was quite novel to me. Different persons arose and recited poetry every now and then. Paulas Thokal recited in English:

"Dance, little baby, dance up high; Do not fear, for mamma is nigh."

At the close of each recitation, instead of shouting, "Hari, and Vithoba!" (names of demons) the reciter said, "Let everybody shout, 'The triumph of the Lord Jesus Christ;'" and everybody joined in the shout with a will, just as they formerly shouted, "Hari and Vithoba!"

After the ceremony a slight difficulty arose about the marriage fee (about forty-two cents), the groom saying his people had never paid fees. He paid it, however.

After the supper, I had a talk with the people of the bridegreom's town. They reproached me with paying no heed to their difficulties when they were arrested for theft. I replied, "I understand you were really prosecuted because you refused to carry out a corpse of a plague victim," and reminded them that, being poor, they must obey the authorities unless they seek trouble. They replied that my surmise was correct, and humorously added: "Just tell the townspeople to allow Mangs to touch their corpses (At present there is no plague; Mangs are untouchables.) The corpse was in the townspeople's temple; they do not allow us to set foot in it; how could we enter?" I also explained to them that I received their telegram, but that their town Mange had a reputation for gambling which extended as far as Yeola (a long distance), and that those who gamble indulge in highwaymanry or burglaries to secure money to gamble with. I also reminded them that when I was there I had seen a fist fight between two sections of the Mangs and had been advised to go away, as murder was imminent. I said: "Therefore, when I got your telegram that six Christians were in jail, I thought this: It is probably an echo of the old quarreleither D-'s enemies have given information against him for robbing or he has given information against them." This mollified them and they made up with me.

July and August Report.

BY SARAH SHEPHERD ANDREWS.

July.—Mrs. A. W. Bowman, $5; Class No. 3, Russell Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., $10; church at Belzoni, Miss., $14.75; through I. B. Bradley, $50. Total, $79.75.

August.—David Lipscomb College congregation, Nashville, Tenn., $45; sisters at Donelson, Tenn., $2; through I. B. Bradley, $50; church at Belzoni, Miss., $8.60. Total, $105.60.

This report shows liberality, for which I am very grateful. "My God shall supply all your needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." It is gratifying to note that as our needs and the needs of the work increase, the hearts of God's people are moved to contribute accordingly. My continual prayer is that I may be a faithful stewardess, using what is sent just as God would have me. May each of the above donors be blessed.

The work at the Kamitomizaka Church is moving on nicely. There are to be several baptisms next Lord's day. Brother Hiratsuka is a consecrated man and a splendid worker. I am glad to note that the McMinnville church has assumed his support. Oiki San, the young Christian girl who expects to help me in the work and who was ill for several months, has recovered and has assumed her study in school. We were very glad that she was admitted after having been absent almost a whole term. She expects to finish her school work next April and will then be able to give her entire time to Christian work among her people. Please pray for us, that God's purpose may be fulfilled in us.

The purity which will fit us to grow into the full likeness of the adorable Vision we shall then behold is prepared here, is growing onward even now in the true elect; and their future more matured growth into his perfected life will be the consequence of their earthly discipline, the crowning glory of the incipient sanctity slowly and painfully nurtured while on earth.—T. T. Carter.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

By S. H. Hall

Are You Sure You Are Right With God?

There is a thought that has been continually on my mind of late; so I will write it off, if I can. It is this: I am strongly persuaded that many people think they are right with God when they are not—not our religious neighbors just now, if you please, but you, my brother, my sister, who claim to be identified with the church of Christ.

It makes me shudder at the idea of forgetting my wrongs when God has not forgotten them! Is there not such a thing as this? Can I not just drop from my mind my wrongdoing, my neglect, my mistreatment of others, and actually do right from now on, till all these wrongs get out of my mind and I will come to think I am a pretty good fellow, enjoy hope, look forward to the coming of my Lord, when all that past record of wrongdoing has never been forgiven? Is it not possible? Have not thousands of souls made this colossal mistake? If I read the Bible aright, in order for God to forget, there must be whole-hearted repentance of the sins we have committed, a confession of these sins, and atonement made for the wrongs we have done, as far as we are able. Is this not correct? But here is a person that has continually misrepresented his brethren in Christ, has even tried to pull down his brother in the estimation of others by telling untruths about himand you, too, sister. Well, the backbiter decider he will stop this, the slanderer decides he will stop slandering. He may have noticed that the ones he has tried to slander were so well liked that it only made others 'hink less of him to be continually saying ugly things about him. Anyway, he quits, and a more commendable course in this respect you could not desire than his record from then on. He comes to be well thought of; he establishes a character that is free from such iniquity and sins and comes to enjoy really living right; but he never really repented of the evils he did his fellow man, never one time confessed his wrongdoing to God or man; he just grew out of the habit and forgot, practically, all about it. But has God forgotten? And is there not such a thing as this brother who thinks he is right with God being undeceived to his eternal condemnation at the judgment? I fear there is too much "whitewashing the sins" that we ourselves commit and that others commit and becoming satisfied when God has not been satisfied. Brother F. L. Rowe was lamenting conditions, sometime ago, in one of his articles in the Christian Leader, and suggested that we just forget the past, bury it, and start anew. His article was commended by many, and, as a whole, it was very good: but I wanted to "butt" right into the middle of his statement and insist that God only can bury the past, and woe to us if we allow ourselves to bury it when God has not done so!

I will tell you, my kind reader, that going to heaven is the thing that we must let stand mountain high above everything else; and remember that if at the end of life's journey we have missed the way, it is missed forever. May God help us to burn the thought into the hearts of every one we try to teach.

A Most Worthy Example.

The following letter is submitted, upon which we wish to make a few timely suggestions:

Brother Hall: I am inclosing you herewith check for forty dollars, which is the amount of our Lord's-day contributions on hand for 1918 to date. It was our purpose, in the beginning of the year, to give one dollar each Lord's day, and, if nothing serious happens to prevent it, we will be able to accomplish our purpose; so there will be a balance of twelve dollars, which I hope to send to you sometime in December. You may apply this as you see fit, and may the Lord bless the progress of the West End Church. I love that church as I do none other.

Yours in Christ, H. J. Jones and Wife.

This is given to our readers for the purpose of calling the attention of every child of God to the fact that it is our duty to give, and that under no circumstances are we relieved from this duty, except not having money to give after we have made a faithful effort to make it. "Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper," is the command. (See 1 Cor. 16: 2.) "For if the readiness is there, it is acceptable according as a man hath, not according as he hath not." (2 Cor. 8: 12.) So there is but one thing that exempts us-viz., the fact that we do not have it to give, if this be, indeed, a fact. "But this I say, He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Let each man de according as he hath purposed in his heart; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." (2 Cor. 9: 6, 7.) "Will a man rob God? yet ye rob me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with the curse; for ye rob me, even this whole nation. Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there may be food in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not ope you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." (Mal. 3: 8-10.)

Could language be plainer than the above scriptures? I am glad to say that, notwithstanding the fact that Brother and Sister Jones have been in South Carolina for a number of years, with no congregation with which to meet, they have had the Lord's Supper in their home and their regular offerings have come to the treasury here. This is exactly as it should be. How can it be right for God's children to eat the Lord's Supper and lay by in store on the first day of the week, regularly, when privileged to meet with a regularly organized congregation, but this cease to be a duty so soon as we move to where there is no congregation? Here is where so many of our elders have failed to properly teach the members over which they have been appointed as overseers; hence, when their members move from them into a community where there is no congregation, they seem not to know what to do. Our large tent and chairs that we have been using for three years in our summer campaigns are the gifts of Sister Oliver Maxwell, who has not been situated so she could attend the regular meetings of the church. But she remembered to keep in mind her duty to God on giving to extend his cause; hence, she wrote me a few lines more than three years ago and told me that she had quite a bit on hand that she had been laying by in store. I suggested that she put it into a tent and chairs. She mailed me a check for above two hundred dollars, the most of it to be used for tent and chairs, and the balance to send "The Friendly Visitor" and other literature into the waste places of this State. I am glad to say I could name dozens of such souls among the Atlanta and Georgia saints.

It does my soul good to think of such soldiers of the cross. They are, indeed, the salt of the earth and the light of the world. Why every member cannot see duty that so plainly looks them in the face is strange to me.

The Lord willing, Brother Silas E. Templeton will join our forces by the middle of next month.

On the night of November 22, Brother N. A. Hunter threw open the doors of his spacious home for our young people to give our soldier boys an entertainment. It was a glorious success. We are so glad the war is over, it seems, but we are sorry that our boys here have to leave us.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

贝

X. W. Morgan, of Paul's Valley, Okla., is visiting in our city.

H. C. Clark, Bagdad, Tenn., writes: "I think the paper is just fine."

J. H. Murrell, of Tennessee City, Tenn., was among our callers last week.

T. C. Hoskins reports several additions at the regular services at Florence, Ala.

Change of address: W. E. Daugherty, from Harlan, Ky., to Box 391, Rockwood, Tenn.

Mrs. Mattie Setliff, of Lynchburg, Tenn., thinks the Gospel Advocate is too good to miss a copy.

J. T. Harris came to see us last week. He has moved from Florence, Ala., to Lawrenceburg, Tenn.

We were very much grieved to learn that J. W. Chism, of Hillsboro, Texas, had lost a son, who died in the service of his country. A suitable notice will appear later.

Ben West, of Ennis, Texas, says: "Of course, I want the Gospel Advocate all the time. It brings refreshing news and the gospel message in love. It's a great paper."

From Carl A. Gardner, Bardwell, Texas: "I appreciate the spirit of the Master which is so fitly exemplified in the many able articles which continue to grace the pages of your excellent weekly."

Married, at the bride's residence, at Hohenwald, Tenn., Friday, November 29, at noon, Miss Lemma Peery and Mr. C. C. Boles. H. Leo Boles, the father of the bridegroom, officiated. The Gospel Advocate extends congratulations.

From G. W. Jarrett, Box 37, Fort Towson, Okla.: "Any congregation in Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, or Kentucky that wants a sound, gospel preacher to locate or evangelize should write me. I have written recommendations."

Ira L. Winterrowd, who is kindly remembered as one of the teachers at David Lipscomb College, now lives at Norman, Okla. He writes: "I am always glad for the Gospel Advocate to come. I hope it will continue as good as it has been and now is."

P. W. Carter, of Stanford, Ky., writes us that he has been a subscriber to the Gospel Advocate for many years, but is "now nearing the journey's end." Then he adds: "I love to read good, sound doctrine yet." We feel sure that the time will never come when our beloved brother will not be able to endure sound doctrine.

From Clementine Ivie, Des Moines, N. M.: "I had not seen a copy of the Gospel Advocate since coming to New Mexico till a few weeks ago. As I once lived in Tennessee and know so many of the places and preachers, it is like reading a letter from home to read the Advocate, aside from the scriptural teaching it contains."

S. A. Carman, of Fountain Head, Tenn., writes: "I appreciate the Gospel Advocate more than any paper we have, and it is a great comfort and help to me because it is true to the Book, and it grows more instructive and interesting as it grows older. I have been reading it ever since its publication, and a subscriber most of the time."

From Oscar Mason, Decherd, Tenn., November 25: "On the third Lord's day in this month the church here had the pleasure of having R. E. L. Taylor with us. He preached morning and evening. At the close of the morning service one young lady made the noble confession and was baptized in the afternoon. Brother Taylor has developed into a good preacher and is doing much good for the church."

F. O. Howell, of Fulton, Ky., writes: "I will engage in a debate with S. C. Swinney, Missionary Baptist, at Stephens, Ark., beginning on December 10 and continuing four days. We shall discuss propositions setting forth the differences between Baptists of the missionary branch and Christians. Those expecting to attend from a distance should write J. N. Hudiburg, at Stephens, Ark. Mr. Swinney is said to be a preacher of some ability. We are expecting a great time."

The Belmont Church, corner Sixteenth and Grand Avenues, Nashville, announces a special series of lectures and discussions on the life and teaching of Christ. The studies will be directed by Morgan H. Carter and will be conducted each Friday evening at eight o'clock. A number of short, interesting addresses will be delivered by different preaching brethren. The course is especially planned to meet the needs of Sunday-school teachers and others interested in a deeper knowledge of the person and message of Jesus. A real welcome awaits you. Come, and bring your friends.

From J. A. Klingman, Marietta, Ga., November 27: "It was a trying day for me and my family when we said farewell to the brethren and sisters of the church of Christ at Lebanon, Tenn. We spent three happy years with the good people at that place, and shall ever think of them with fond recollections. I began preaching for the South Pryor Street church of Christ, of Atlanta, on the first Lord's day in November. J. A. Harding and family are members of that congregation. I rejoice greatly in having fellowship in the work of the Lord with these tried and true disciples of Christ. There are only a few disciples of Christ's body at Marietta. S. H. Hall, of Atlanta, and I are contemplating holding a tent meeting here next spring with the view of establishing a congregation. Pray for us, that we may accomplish a great and glorious work, with the help of the Lord."

The following report from William Rucker was delayed because he omitted his name. He writes to say: "I have said but little about my work this year, although it has been the busiest and, I believe, the best year of my life. I have held eighteen meetings, and started one and had to close on account of sickness in town. That was at Bell. The last meeting I tried to hold, I came home from there and have been resting some. I believe there were additions in all but one of the meetings. In all, it was a very pleasant year, all spent in Florida and Georgia. I had an attack of fever, also had a bad case of Spanish influenza, but am well and enjoying the sunshine here now. There were nine meetings waiting when I came home. I will be out again when matters settle a little. Those expecting to use me in 1919 should write me at once. My address is Tasmania, Fla."

From J. L. Newman, Flint, Mich., November 27: "Please allow me space in your valuable paper for a worthy appeal to the brethren in Christ for aid in building a church in Flint, Mich. We have it started, but are out of funds and are needing help very much. We are meeting in a dwelling house at present, but cannot hope to get it very much longer. There are restrictions in the deed. The congregation is small in number and weak financially, but strong spiritually. This is my first time to appeal for aid. I came here from Tennessee, and any one wishing information regarding myself can get it from the church of Christ at Sale Creek. Brethren, please consider this call, for it is very much needed. Any amount will be greatly received, and I will acknowledge all donations through the Gospel Advocate if permitted to do so. Send all donations to J. L. Newman, 822 Conover Street, Flint, Mich."

From John T. Smith, Dickson, Tenn., November 25: "You will kindly note that my address has been changed from Sparta to Dickson, Tenn. We came here about a month ago, and are beginning to get settled down to our new work. We deeply regretted that it was necessary to leave our good friends of Sparta and White County, but conditions indicated that it was best now. We are firmly convinced that some of the best people we have ever known -indeed, some of the best in all the world—live in White County. But good friends sometimes have to part; and since we had to leave the good people of Sparta, we are fortunate and happy in finding such an excellent band of brethren and sisters here. They have treated us kindly since we came and we are beginning to feel at home. This is the home of the princely and magnanimous I. B. Bradley, who has labored with and for this congregation for thirteen or fourteen years. That he has not labord in vain is attested by the fact that the congregation of disciples is the largest congregation worshiping in this little city. They number about four hundred members. Brother Bradley and his good wife are held in the very highest esteem by the entire church, as well as by the entire town. Though he is not laboring with the congregation here directly now, yet while here he is willing and ready to do whatever his hands find to do for the cause of our Master. He is small of stature, but great in soul. Instead of manifesting a spirit of jealousy, when I came, he gave me a warm, hearty welcome before the church. It is a pleasure to work with a man who has such a spirit, the spirit of Christ.'

EDITORIAL

Is a General Missionary Society on a Par in Principle With a Committee in a Local Church?

This question is suggested by a communication called out by the two editorials, entitled "Common Sense and Business in Methods of Mission Work," in our issues of September 19 and October 3, 1918. The writer, whose name is withheld at his own request, says:

Now, as to the indictment of the so-called missionary society on the grounds that it exclusively assumes control over the disbursement of funds and the sending, control, and recall of the missionary, thus contravening the individual control belonging to the local churches in these matters, is not the fundamental issue involved that of the direct control by churches, on the one hand, and their indirect control, on the other? And as there is no objection to the church in a local sense controlling her work through special committees, why should there be any objection to the church at large controlling her work in the same way? Is not the convention of delegates a committee of the church at large? And does not the Board of Control work in harmony with this convention-committee always? And is not the "control" exercised by this board thus advisory in spirit, subject at all times to the "control" of the control of the co vention-committee, which is, in turn, subject to the "control" of the churches from which its representatives come? To use a well-known figure, we have in the local committee a wheel within a wheel-the local church, and in the convention-committee a wheel within a wheel-the church at But are not both inner wheels the same in princilarge. ple and spirit of action?

And as to the voice of the churches on certain matters being expressed through the majority vote, is there any principle of the divine order contravened so long as the convention-committee votes on matters of mutual advisement merely? And what are such matters as the sending, recall and paying of an evangelist, but matters of mutual advisement, when a number of churches are working together?

And suppose that some decision of this convention-committee (in harmony with which the official board must necessarily act) were deemed by some particular church as inexpedient in the extreme or even as a perversion of some matter of faith, so that said church feels justified in withdrawing its fellowship for the time being from such cooperation, is the principle of voting in convention thereby incriminated? Must we not distinguish between the agent and the work that it does?

And finally, as to the line of communication to be maintained between the churches and the evangelist whom they support, since there is no method specified, why may it not be of an indirect nature? Why not through the convention-committee as it is in substance done by the missionary society in question?

To those who are familiar with all the facts in the case, these questions suggest at once their own complete answer; but, for the benefit of those who have not studied the point at issue in all its bearings, we shall carefully examine them one by one.

1. "Is not the fundamental issue involved that of direct control by churches, on the one hand, and their indirect control on the other?" No, emphatically no, for the simple reason that in the one case there is full control by the local church, and in the other it has no control at all. Two situations could not be more diametrically adverse the one to the other. The question assumes, without proof, the very point in dispute, thus reasoning on a thing as a fact which is not a fact at all. In the case of the missionary society, as the term is used in this discussion, the local church has no control at all, either direct or indirect. It surrenders to the society all centrol, and, in this particular respect, is left itself utterly powerless, with no control at all over the work or the workers, or even over its own missionary funds.

2. "As there is no objection to the local church controlling through special committees, why should there be any objection to the church at large controlling her work in the same way?" Simply because, for some reason satisfactory to himself, God provided for and appointed the local control and steered clear of the other. If God had appointed general or centralized control at all, there could be no consistent objection to exercising it through a committee; but this is precisely the point at issue and at which the whole assumption breaks down. There is no such thing, in all the New Testament, as general or centralized control in church affairs. In the most pronounced sense, such control is a departure from, and an addition to, the divine order. In all our discussions and devising of plans, we may as well make up our minds to face this stubborn fact, for like a Gibraltar it stands out in vivid outline everywhere in the New Testament. Moreover, as a matter of fact, in the society, neither "the local church" nor "the church at large" has any control over the work, the workers, or the funds in missionary work, for the simple reason that entire control in these matters has been transferred from the churches to the general board.

3. "Is not the convention of delegates a committee of the church at large?" Suppose it be granted that it is such a committee, that fact does not change the one radically wrong feature about it-namely, the establishment of general or centralized control in church affairs where God, for reasons satisfactory to himself, as just observed, confined all control to the local churches with a board of supervision and management appointed in each local church for that specific purpose. Hence, no matter whether it be called "a wheel within a wheel" or what not, whenever and wherever general or centralized control is established over the churches for any purpose whatever, whether it be in a province, a State, a nation, or the world, there is a plain contravention of the ecclesiastic order clearly and distinctly revealed in the New Testament.

4. On the matter of committing the churches to certain measures by a majority vote of the convention, he asks: "Is there any principle of the divine order contravened so long as the convention-committee votes on matters of mutual advisement?" It is the very fact of committing the churches to the principle of being controlled by centralized authority and power instead of the authority and power divinely vested in each local church that is wrong. When the churches of a province, a state, or a nation are once committed to that principle, then the way is open to fasten upon them, not "matters of mutual advisement merely," but any other matters which a majority of those holding such authority and power may decide to fasten upon them. To curb man's inclination and to limit even the possibility of his exercise of power seems to have been a wise thing in all the ages. In both church and state, history discloses a thousand illustrations of man's weakness to abuse power when it is placed in his hands; and, for aught we can know to the contrary, this may have been the divine reason for establishing an ecclesiastic order in Christianity which precludes this possibility. At any rate, the order revealed in the New Testament not only does preclude this possibility, but reduces the possibility of evil in all directions and on all lines to a minimum.

5. On communication between churches and missionaries he says: "Since there is no method specified, why may it not be of an indirect nature?" No matter how "indirect" it may be, so long as no intervening agency usurps the power which God has placed in the churches and which, therefore, rightfully and exclusively belongs to them. So far as the mere matter of the communication between churches and workers is concerned, if, for any reason, money contributed by a church to a missionary should even pass through the hands of a half dozen intervening agencies, no principle, so far as we can see, would be violated so long as the said agencies are shorn of such power.

Finally, it is our clear and firm conviction that, if our society brethren could see their way to properly consider the one great and vital principle involved in the matter of authority and control which, as we solemnly believe and have herein respectfully attempted to show, is essential to the ecclesiastic polity of the New Testament, we believe the way would be open to find a common ground on which all could work in harmony in the great field of missionary endeavor. We devoutly hope and pray that they will give it such consideration.

As men have different standards of right, so they have different ideals. All men desire happiness, but all do not look to the Source from which true happiness comes. Some look to wealth for happiness, only to be disappointed. Ahab was wealthy, but coveted Naboth's vineyard and was wretched and miserable. Some rely on wisdom for happiness. Ahithophel was wise and counseled Absalom wisely; but when his counsel was rejected by Absalom, he despaired of success, and, returning to his own home, "put his household in order, and hanged himself." Some lust for power; but Naaman was a mighty man of valor, yet unhappy because he was afflicted with leprosy. Some look to the pleasures of sin for happiness; but not so with Moses. "By faith Moses, when he was grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to share ill treatment with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; accounting the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he looked unto the recompense of reward." (Heb. 11: 24, 26.) In the midst of the bitter disappointments of the world, how inexpressibly sweet is the assurance, "Godliness with contentment is great gain!" (1 Tim. 6: 6.) Christians, like Paul, should "press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," (Phil. 3; 14.) Contentment comes only through doing the will of the Lord. With right ideals and faithfully doing God's will, one may say with Paul: "Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content. I know how to be abased, and I know also how to abound: in everything and in all things have I learned the secret both to be filled and to be hungry, both to abound and to be in want." (Phil. 4: 11, 12.)

"Some build their hopes on the ever-drifting sand; Some on their fame, or their treasure, or their land; Mine on the Rock that forever shall stand— Jesus, the Rock of Ages!" A contented spirit will extract honey from a rock and will make the wilderness bloom like the rose. A sour, restless, discontented spirit will lend its curse to fame and wealth and will transform an earthly paradise into a hell. But when one acknowledges God in all his ways and his steps are directed by Jehovah, he finds much joy in reading such comforting assurances as these: "The Lord is full of pity, and merciful." "Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but Jehovah delivereth him out of them all!" "Weeping may tarry for the night, but joy cometh in the morning." When Christ conquered Satan, angels ministered unto him. So when we conquer self and a" lust for temporal gain and power, God will guide our feet and will use us in the great work of the redemption of the world.

A GREAT RESPONSIBILITY.

Those who have been intrusted with the management of the Home have undertaken a noble work and are cheerfully performing their duties as to the Lord and not to men. God forbid that any one connected with this institution should serve it with the hope of temporal reward. Such a motive would be as sordid and base as was that of Gehazi when he took two talents of silver and two changes of raiment from Naaman when Elisha had healed him by the power of God. I firmly believe that all the directors, matrons, and workers at the Home are moved by aspirations far nobler and purer than a monetary reward. Numbers of the directors give thought, labor, and money without any hope of earthly reward. They believe that the laying up of treasure in heaven will bring them a far nobler and more enduring reward. It is to be hoped that those who serve at the Home will always be inspired and guided by such pure and heavenly considerations. If all connected with the Home will continue so unselfish and faithful, we are safe in saying that the Home is in the incipiency of its usefulness. In the ages yet unborn thousands will rise up to call the laborers and servants blessed. Indeed, the directors have a priceless trust, and may God forbid that any one of them shall ever be recreant to that trust! With a faithful and united service, eternity alone can reveal the good that the Home will have accomplished.

THE FARM WAS DONATED TO THE HOME.

The farm was given by Brother W. W. Gant, of Shelbyville, Tenn. It is distant a little over five miles from the Home. Brother Gant had money that he determined to use while living for the honor and glory of God. He chose to glorify God by feeding, clothing, and fitting orphan children for life. To be "the helper of the fatherless" is a noble work that cannot be in vain. I dare say that Brother Gant has never reaped as much happiness from the same amount of money spent in any other way. He will never regret helping the motherless and fatherless. It is when we lose sight of our own selfish interests that we begin to live as God wants us to live. This is applied Christianity. When one warms and feeds the orphan child. angels rejoice and Christ approves. To stimulate us in the doing of such work, the Spirit declares: "In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus. that he himself said. It is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20: 35.) While it is a pleasure to receive a gift, it is far more inexpressibly sweet to be the donor. To make others useful and happy fills one with unspeakable joy. If God has endowed us with money, with the endowment comes the responsibility of its right use. It is a fearful thing to hoard money while souls are starving for the bread of life and while the bodies are starving for food and freezing for lack of clothing. "If a brother or sister be naked and in lack of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled; and yet ye give them not the things needful to the body; what doth it profit?" (James 2: 15, 16.) "But whose hath the world's goods, and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him?" (1 John 3: 17.) "For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, cannot love God whom he hath not seen." (1 John 4: 20.)

WHY THE FARM WAS SOLD.

When the farm was donated to the Home, the expectation was to have it cultivated by the boys in the Home. Future developments demonstrated that it is not prudent and wise to keep boys in the Home over twelve years old. Having no one to cultivate the farm, it became necessary to secure a tenant. The rental price was less than six per cent on the price which the directors believed the farm would bring. The sale proved the correctness of their judgment, for the farm sold for $15,750, six per cent of which is $945, whereas the rental for one year was only $750. The farm needs improving, which would not be done so long as it was rented. It is the decision of the directors to keep this amount intact, to loan it at six per cent with a lien on real estate, holding the first-mortgage notes. The purpose of all is to make the farm or the proceeds bring as much revenue as possible to the Home. The principal is not to be drawn on for the running expenses of the Home.

THE FIRST LORD'S DAY IN JANUARY, 1919.

On the first Lord's day in October of this year the contribution was lighter than usual on account of the influenza. Many churches closed on that day. The churches have been liberal in the support of the Home. They have acted cheerfully and heartily. It would be well to begin the new year right by making a liberal contribution to the Home on the first Sunday in January, 1919. If you do not wish to contribute to the Home on that day, by all means, contribute as the Lord has prospered you. There is much that should be done. Don't wait until it is too late. Think of the souls that may be lost through our negligence. "For what shall a man be profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and forfeit his life? or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?" (Matt. 16: 26.) Must Be Born Again.

BY E. G. S.

Jesus said: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." (John 3: 3.) When Jesus uttered these words, the people did not understand just what he meant and were astonished at him. He then explained further by saying: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." With all the light that is given in the New Testament, it is easy enough now to understand the passage. When people obey the gospel as given in the New Testament, they are thereby "born again," "born of water," as taught by the Holy Spirit. This passage, therefore, shows beyond a doubt that any one that leaves out water baptism is not in the kingdom of God, and, therefore, not saved. These facts put an importance on water baptism that all the wisdom of this world cannot take away.

Men may say that water baptism is a nonessential as much as they please; but still this passage stands in force in the New Testament, and is, therefore, the word of God, and uninspired men have no right to change it. If they do leave it out in their obedience to the gospel, they are not in the kingdom of God, and, therefore, not saved, and cannot be saved, if this passage be true; for there is no other way of entering given in the New Testament. What an awfully dangerous thing it is, therefore, to thus tamper with the inspired word of God—to leave out baptism and put sprinkling in its place! And yet many thousands and millions are doing that very thing to-day. Those that leave out immersion and put sprinkling in its place leave themselves outside of the church, for the New Testament shows are plainly told that we are baptized into Christ, but we no way of getting into Christ if baptism is left out. We are not told of any other way to get into him. Why not, then, accept the New Testament way of being baptized into him?

We do not mean, however, that baptism alone will put people into Christ, and it must not be so understood. Baptism must be preceded by faith and repentance. There is nothing that will save sinners if repentance is left out. Repentance comes in before baptism; and if repentance be left out, no sinner can get ready to be baptized. The New Testament way of becoming Christians includes faith, repentance, and baptism. All three are necessary in becoming Christians. Faith cannot be left out, because Jesus says: "He that believeth not shall be damned." Neither can repentance be left out, for Jesus also says: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Hence faith, repentance, and baptism are all joined together in the conversion of the sinner, and he has not the shadow of a promise of being saved if he leaves any one of them out. We need not trouble ourselves about which is the most important of the three, since all are necessary. We must do all that God commands us to do before we can claim the promise of pardon; but when we yield obedience, the promise is sure. Jesus says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" and what he says ought to be enough for all.

As a matter of fact, men are to be directed only by the word of God in the matter of becoming Christians. What uninspired men say amounts to nothing, because they have no power to save. They claim that men can "get religion" by going through a process of mourning and prayer without having been baptized. What they mean by "getting religion" is that the Lord gives pardon by direct power worked in their hearts. But this is only what uninspired men say; the Lord does not say so. If we could find anything of that sort in the New Testament, we could safely rely on it; but we cannot find it there. One great trouble is that many people entertain and express opinions as to the meaning of certain passages, and that they and others seem to rely upon those opinions as if they were actually expressed in so many words in the Bible; but their opinions are worth nothing at all. Many people have the opinion that sprinkling a few drops of water upon a person is baptism, and they follow that opinion instead of the Bible. This is the cause of many of the divisions in the religious world. If all would drop their opinions and go by the word of the Lord, these divisions could be avoided and all would be perfectly safe. The Jewish people were always safe under his care as long as they obeyed his word; but whenever they departed from his word and begun to walk in their own ways, then troubles and chastisements began to overtake them, and never let up so long as they continued to reject his word. When Jesus gave his commands, he promised blessings to those that would obey and punishments upon those that refused to obey. When he said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," he also said, "but he that believeth not shall be damned." There is nothing more dangerous for our eternal welfare than to drop out what God says and put in what uninspired men say, and yet that is just what men do when they drop out the positive command to be baptized and put sprinkling in its place. No man can tell by his own wisdom what he needs to do to be saved, but we can easily learn by reading the word of God. Hence, all ought to read the New Testament and follow what it says, and then they will be perfectly safe both in time and in eternity.

OBITUARIES

Allen.

Brother Harvey Reagan Allen died at Berkeley, Cal., on October 25, 1918, aged nineteen years. He was the oldest child of Brother and Sister Chyrus Allen, of Madera, Cal., and a grand-nephew of Brother E. G. Sewell, of Nashville, Tenn. Brother Harvey enlisted in the army of the Lord about three years ago, and a few months ago he enlisted in the Students' Army Training Corps of the University of California. He was a victim of Spanish influenza, a relapse causing his death. He leaves a sorrowing father, mother, two sisters, and one brother, besides many friends, to mourn their loss. Their loss is his gain, for "blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Our dear brother was the possessor of a fine character, a steadfastness and earnestness of purpose which promised to bring him into prominence in the busy "workshop of this he being "not slothful in busiworld." ness, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." His body was laid in Madera cemetery to await the resurrection.

MRS. C. A. MARSHALL.

Grigsby.

On Sunday, October 13, 1918, at 5:40 A.M., the same day of the week and near the same hour of the day that our Savior arose from the grave, bringing life and immortality to light through the gospel," the soul of Archer L. Grigsby left his mortal body and went into the hands of God who gave it. Archer was born on November 25, 1889, lacking a few days being twenty-nine years of age at his death. At the age of nine, while his father and mother were sick, he gathered his clothing in his arms and went unto Brother Wooten, who baptized him into Christ, thus remembering his Creator in the days of his youth. Few there are who have lived his length of years on earth who have given so much time and service as he to the Lord. There is a reason for this: his father and mother had taught him the word from his youth. His mother, the sister of Brother E. A. Elam, was a true and faithful mother to him, a home builder and keeper. To know and associate with Archer was to be convinced that he was blessed with one of the best mothers of earth. He was not simply in the church, but an ardent supporter of it with all he had in his power. He never had any "wild oats" and with him there was no halting between two opinions; but, fixed and settled in his heart, he said: "God will I serve." He had been the regular leader of song service in the church at Paris, Texas, for years. Archer was always on time to the minute and out his whole soul in everything he did. In his business he was a genius. Everybody who knew him respected him, had confidence in him, and considered him a Christian in the true sense every day. His employer for nearly ten years made the simple, but impressive, statement at his death: "Archer was every inch a man." On account of his pure life and his faithfulness to duty, others have said that no one-man or woman, young or old -would be missed so much as Archer Grigsby. In this work, Archer's death is like taking my right arm from me. Never did he fail us; always ready and always so useful. Hence, Paris churches realize their loss and mourn over it. But no one doubts his preparedness. His mother is dead; his father, two sisters, one brother, his Aunt Minnie Elam and one uncle live here, and all are Christians and very true. Perhaps saddest of all is the parting from his faithful wife and three little children; but I am sure if any here can raise these children as Archer was raised, it is his faithful wife, Sister Nina Grubbs Grigsby. Brethren Garrett and Carlton conducted the funeral services.

J. W. Dunn.

Northeut.

The subject of this sketch was born on June 14, 1875, and died on November 2, 1918. On November 4, at the Tracy City cemetery, the writer, with the assistance of Brethren Brooks, Taylor, and Long, conducted the funeral in the presence of a large crowd of relatives and friends who had assembled to do him honor and mingle their tears in sorrow and sympathy for the dear wife and children, bereft of a father's care and companionship. J. D. Northcut grew up to young manhood on his father's farm in Northcut's Cove, Grundy County, Tenn. I have known him from childhood, and our relationships have been very intimate and pleasant, for he was my pupil in the public school of his community for six years, and my son in the gospel, being the firstfruits of my preaching, and in touch with me either by association or correspondence during his life. During the period of my school work, which began in 1885 and ended in 1891, and often during the ensuing years, Brother Northcut's home was my home, and his father and mother treated me as one of their own. I began to preach in 1886, and baptized Brother Northcut when he was eleven years old. He was among my best pupils and made rapid progress in his studies. During my school work he developed quite a talent for public speaking, composing his own orations, and debating successfully with those many years his senior. He attended Terrell College at Decherd three or four years, then went to the Nashville Bible School the year 1895-1896. At intervals he taught successfully in the public schools of Grundy and Warren counties. In 1903 he be-came a member of the faculty of Shook School, at Tracy City, and remained there nine years, being principal of said school for four years. He began to preach at nineteen years of age, and did much good sowing the seed of the kingdom in the territory near his school work; but in 1911 he gave up the principalship of Shook School that he might give his entire time to the proclamation of the gospel of Jesus Christ, During all these years a more earnest, consecrated, conscientious man I have never known. On December 23, 1897, I was called to Tracy City by Brother Northcut and joined him in holy wedlock to Sister Minnie Simpson, a most excellent young woman, who has been his worthy companion and help all these years. To this union were born five sweet children, four of whom still survive their dear father. Working together, like two mated birds, D. and Minnie had, by economy and thrift, built them a nice home, a pleasant place to visit, where the law of love reigned supreme. Brother Northcut's success is, no doubt, largely due to the faithfulness and devotion of his companion. It gives me great pleasure to review the life of such a man and meditate upon such a character. He was an obedient child, a devoted husband and father, a good citizen, and a faithful servant of God. The last conversation I had with him was in Mc-Minnville a few weeks before his death. On this occasion he talked of home and loved ones, and spoke regretfully of his necessary absence and the hardships entailed upon his dear wife. He spent much of his time looking after the welfare of others, visiting the sick and comforting the distressed. His was the spirit of sacrifice. Unselfishness characterized the man. His life, though short, has been progressive. His efficiency increased with the years. He has been instrumental in building up churches in destitute places and making weak churches stronger. Working from Tracy City as a center, he has broadened his field of work till he was in demand in regions beyond, having all his time taken up for over a year ahead. Socially, Brother Northeut was rather jolly, a good mixer, gentle toward all, and a great lover of children. Chaste in conversation and careful in deportment, he was respected and loved by all he associated with. Truly, "a prince and a great man is fallen in Israel." He has been faithful until He has been faithful until

One in Four of Our Men Called for Draft Examination Was Physically Deficient

CITY PHYSICIAN STRONGLY ADVISES ALL PERSONS TO HAVE BLOOD EXAMINATIONS MADE BY FAMILY DOCTOR SAYS THOUSANDS SUFFER FROM IRON DEFICIENCY

And think its "overwork," "too much worry," "a case of nerves," or some other trouble. Ordinary Nuxated Iron will increase the strength and endurance of such folks in two weeks' time in many instances.

In General Crowder's report to Congress, he stated that twenty-nine per cent, of the men called for physical ex-amination were found physically deficient; that is, more than one out of four of the flower of our land was sick and many of them perhaps did not

In commenting on this serious condition of affairs, Dr. James Francis Sulitivan, for-merly Physician of Bellevue Hospital, New York, and the Westmerly Physician of Bellevue Hospital, New York, and the West-chester County Hospital, said: "The probability is that many of these cases were due solely to lack of sufficient from in the red blood corpuscles. When the iron goes from the blood, you can have most any kind of symptoms varying from a weak, nervous, run-down state, to those of most serious maladies; the volume of blood often increases, thereby imposing an extra heavy burden on the heart. Contrary to general opinion, lack of iron in the blood does not necessarily mean you do not have enough blood, but it means your blood is not of the right kind."

"All Kinds of Twisting and Turn-

BY H. W. JONES.

Where? Acts 2: 38. Why? To avoid the plain teaching of holy writ that baptism is a condition of salvation from past (or alien) sins the same as faith in the Christ and repentance from sins. I have seen and heard men emphasize the importance of faith and repentance, and try hard to show that repentance comes before faith and that "baptism is a nonessential," etc.; but, for the life of me, I have never seen one single thing in Acts 2 ("the beginning" or foundation) that would cause any one to have the least hint of an idea that repentance precedes faith, or that faith and repentance are of more importance than baptism. They were, all three, uttered, indited, and required by the same inspired men of God. Then, if one be essential, why not all? Or if one be "nonessential," then why

Of all the theological "twisting and turning done here" (Acts 2: 38), that of one James H. McConkey, in a little book on "The Threefold Secret of the Holy Spirit," is about the limit of absurdity as well as audacity. It is about as good as any "twisting and turning down here," as to that; but his mistakes and errors are so glaring that it makes the plain truth shine brighter to all those who "will to do God's will." (John 7: 17.)

True, the author of the little book sent me says many good things; but when he comes to Acts 2: 38 he makes a "wild break" for "the traditions of men," instead of accepting the plain teaching of God's hely word. He says: "The simple conditions of salvation are repentance from sins and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Now, to keep a truly penitent soul in the attitude of seeking or praying for forgiveness, instead of simple faith in God's word that he has been forgiven in Christ, is a ruinous mistake, and leads to darkness and agony, instead of the light and joy that God means him to have. On the other hand, to try to get an impenitent soul to 'only believe, instead of first repenting of his sins, will keep him in equal darkness and make his nominal acceptance of Christ a mere profession and hypocrisy."

Now, in the foregoing excerpt he certainly "hits the nail on the head" when he says that "to keep a truly penitent soul in the attitude of seeking or praying for forgiveness, instead of simple faith in God's word that he has been forgiven in Christ, is a ruincus mistake, and leads to darkness and agony, instead of the light and joy that God means him to have." But will he "stick to that" and let God's American women are right behind the U. S. troops in the trenches. Women nurses are now installed in hospitals 8 miles in the rear of the actual fighting line.

Many of our American women are unable to take up the duties of nursing at the front, but they should know how to take care of their own at home, and for this purpose no better book was ever printed than the Medical Adviser-a book containing 1,008 pages, and bound in cloth, with chapters on First Aid, Bandaging and care of Fractures, Taking care of the Sick, Physiology, Hygiene, Sex Problems, Mother and Babe, which can be had at most drug stores, or send 50 cents to the publishers, 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

The women at home, who are worn out, who are nervous or dizzy at times, should take that reliable, temperance, herbal tonic, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Tennesses City, Tenn.—"I was in very bad health for over 20 years. I had woman's trouble. At first I did not suffer pain but was low-spirited, At first I did not suffer pain but was low-spirited, had a worn-out feeling, which no amount of rest would help, and felt that something dreadful was going to happen. I had cold feet and hands and my heart bothered me. Life was a burden. I had three doctors; they did me some good while I was taking their medicines but when I was not taking medicine I felt just the same as before, so I tried Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and also the Golden Medical Discovery and am thankful to say these remedies cured me. I have no symptoms of my old trouble."

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Cirls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful-Get a small bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life, has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair; besides, it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life; and if not overcome, it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store, and just try it.

word be the witness as to who "has been forgiven in Christ?" Of course, when one is "in Christ," he is "forgiven," saved, adopted in the family of God on earth. So the question is: How do men get into Christ? Paul says we are "baptized into Christ." (Rom. 6; Gal. 3.) Hence we are "forgiven in Christ" after baptism, and not before, as many think and affirm. Rom. 6: 3 and Gal. 3: 27 are plain, and the only passages of holy writ that tell, in so many (or few) words, how we get "into Christ."

But Mr. McConkey evidently does not believe this scripture; for, after quoting Acts 2: 38, he comments as follows: "It is evident from many passages in the word that baptism was here an ordinance administered upon faith in Christ as a sin bearer, and thus God here taught through Peter this great truth: the two great conditions of receiving the Holy Spirit are repentance and faith in Christ for the remission of sins. No other conditions are required. Repent of your sins, believe in the Lord Jesus Christ for the remission of your sins (being baptized thereupon), and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. Two things for us to do, and then one thing God does."

Now, there you have it (Acts 2: 38) McConkeyized! Yes, by a new "twist and turn" he has eliminated baptism and added faith in its stead! Did he not know that faith was commanded, in the strongest terms, in verse 36? Yes, but that gets their faith before repentance, which upsets his theory, So he "doctors" on it to get repentance before faith and leave baptism as "a nonessential." Wonderful feat, this! He evidently went to Acts 2: 38 with a fixed theory in his mind; hence, God's word must be "fixed" to correspond and agree with his darling theory even if he has to "add to and take from it." (See Rev. 22: 18, 19.) Why not accept God's word at par value and believe just what it says and then say just what it says? Jesus says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" and the inspired apostles or ambassadors of Christ, on the day of Pentecost, told the inquiring multitude, who believed in Jesus as both Lord and Christ: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto [or into] the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38.) So it is plain that the divine order is: (1) Faith in Jesus, (2) repentance from sins, (3) baptized into Christ.

Don't think because you have taken many remedies in vain that your case is incurable. Hood's Sarsaparilla has cured many seemingly hopeless cases of scrofula, catarrh, rheumatism, kidney complaint, dyspepsia, and general debility. Take Hood's.

Rhumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is sub-stantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these eases are probably related and all are probably due, in whole or in part, to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the and also by eliminating. nerves, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection:

In this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, adding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there; and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten galions of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for rheumatism. I amentirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism, and, after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water, was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed severy trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

God the Author of All Things.

BY DR. G. N. MURPHEY.

In May, 1917, I saw advertised for sale a book on "Cell Intelligence and Evolution," by Nels Quevli, Mason City, Iowa. The advertisement stated that the book would be sent, postpaid, on ten days' trial; and if it was then not desired, it could be returned to the publisher without charge, etc.

I sent for the book and found it a most interesting study. I agreed with the writer in all he said about the intelligence of the cell that makes all animal and vegetable matter, but took no stock in his theory of evolution or the spontaneous origin of the cell. Mr. Quevli repudiated God as the creator of anything and ascribed the origin of all things to natural forces, cell intelligence and its evolution through thousands or even millions of years. I believe in God, because it is easier for me to explain the universe with him than without him, because it is easier to believe that the wonders which I see all about me are the results of a great creative Intelligence than it is for me to believe that they just happened.

After reading Mr. Quevli's book twice, I destroyed it and wrote him the following letter, to which he never replied:

Paducah, Ky., July 17, 1917.-Hon. Nels Quevli, Mason City, Iowa.-Dear Sir: Inclosed find $1.50 to pay for the book, "Cell Intelligence and Evolu-tion." I have read your book twice, and I find it of more than usual in-In fact, I consider it, from a scientific and literary viewpoint, one of the great events of the present time. When I say that you are a master of language and argument, I am not trying to flatter you, but speak the truth.

I agree with you in regard to cell intelligence. I even go further and say that I believe that there is an intelligence, not only in all animal and vegetable matter, but in all matter whatsoever, organic and inorganic. If not, whence comes the power of cohesion that binds into concrete bodies the infinitesimal particles as the ions of which even the atoms and molecules are composed? I cannot agree with you, however, that the cell with its intelligence came into existence chance or was self-generated. Neither do I believe in the theory of evolution. I believe that the first cell that ever existed was endowed with just as much intelligence as the last one created this moment.

You say that the cell that makes man differs in no way in form, size, and intelligence from that which makes the amœba, the lowest and simplest form of life. Then, if there lowest and is no difference in the cell intelligence that creates animal and vegetable bodies, why do some of these organisms show more intelligence and force than others? Why would the intelligent cell that builds itself into a horse or elephant, with its superior size and strength, allow puny man to capture and enslave it? Nothing but a superior intelligence could even enable man to do such things.

"More Eggs" Paid the Pastor.

I sold fortytwo and one-half dozen eggs last week, set four dozen, ate some, and I have one and one-half dozen left."-Mrs. Lena McBroom, Woodbury, Tenn.

E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, discovered the wonderful tonic "More Eggs," that revitalizes the flock and makes the hens work all the time. This remarkable egg producer means big poultry profits for you. Don't delay. Send a dollar to-day to E. J. Reefer, 3258 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package of "More Eggs;" or, better yet, send him $2.25 and he will send you three packages of "More Eggs" tonic, prepaid. This is a season's full supply. A million-dollar bank guarantees that if you are not absolutely satisfied, your money will be returned on request without question. So send either a dollar or $2.25 to-day for this wonderful egg producer; or write Mr. Reefer for his FREE poultry book that tells the experience of a man who is helping a great many people make money with their poultry and who himself has made a fortune out of the poultry business.

When God created this world and all things contained in it, he then created man and gave him dominion over all things which he had created.

Please consider the harmonious arrangement of all his works on this earth: Mountains, hills, valleys, and plains; oceans, lakes, rivers, and brooklets; forests and vegetable matter in general-all the earth, for that matter-teeming with its great variety of animal life.

Also note the useful things of the mineral kingdom. God knew that man would need more of certain kinds of minerals than of others, such as iron, copper, coal, oil, gas, stone, and marble; hence, he made these in greater quantities and placed them in the most accessible places for him. The more precious minerals, as gold, silver, diamonds, etc., he placed in more inaccessible places and in smaller quantities, to prevent avaricious man from accumulating them too fast and thereby destroying their value.

Note the regularities of our seasons spring, summer, autumn, and winter -also the marvelous arrangement of our solar system, besides thousands of other solar systems plainly visible with the telescope, and then say whether you believe all these things could come about by chance, cell intelligence and evolution.

Our Bible teaches us that God created all of these things and that he' knows all the countless stars by name and number, and I believe every word recorded in this holy book. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork." God is a Spirit of intelligence and power that fills all space. existence is from everlasting to everlasting.

You speak of the great intelligence of the little ant. Solomon knew the intelligence of the ant and admonished the sluggard to go and observe its ways and be wise. God has imparted his intelligence as far as it is necessary to all things which he has created.

I have read both the Old and New Testament Scriptures through many times, and I find in these wonderful records a parallel for every possible experience and condition of life. That cannot be said of any other book that was ever written. That fact alone ought to be sufficient to convince every reader that these books are inspired and that the spirit of God inspired them.

I do not know that anything I could say could change your opinion in regard to the existence of a personal God who is the author of all things; however, I would feel much more comfortable about your future and eternal welfare if you believed as I do.

Trusting that you will accept what I have written in the same good faith in which I offer it, I am,

Sincerely yours, G. N. MURPHEY, M.D.

A Real Thanksgiving.

BY JOHN H. ARMS.

Of course, all days should be days of thankfulness to the Most High for his constant watch care and providence, mercy, and love; but is it not fitting at this especial time to observe—especially the church—a general thanksgiving? Not a mere formal feast either at church or in the home. Really, not a feast at all, but a thanksgiving.

Let us suppose that, instead of the usual feasting and merrymaking, we were to work it out on the order of a truly Bible fast. For example, as taught in Isa. 58: 6-9: "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily: and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward. Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer; thou shalt cry, and he shall say, Here I am."

But some one may say: Why fast at Thanksgiving? Will you allow me to ask, why feast, when millions of men, women, and children are starving? Will God accept our words of thanks from mouths filled with feasting, while our fellows, our brothers, are crying to us for food? It is appropriate to remember the rich man and Lazarus at this time.

Suppose—O, that it might be a reality!—that, instead of a feast to satisfy our own appetites and those of our friends who are associated with us, or a church gathering to offer words of thanks only, either in prayer, prose, or poetry, every church and every Christian in this great and Godfavored land would leave off self-satisfying feasting and make a truly thank offering in behalf of those who by the cruel fortunes of war are destitute of daily food, and do it in the name of Christ, who made the great sacrifice for us. "I fed two boxes of 'More Eggs' to my hens and broke the egg record. I got 1.500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly twenty-one days." You can do as well. In fact, any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs" and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs; so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultryman, 6258 Reefer Building Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" tonic for $1 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day or sak Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

FIRST AID TO DIGESTION

In cases of indigestion or dyspepsia, the contents of the stomach, for lack of a proper supply of digestive juices, first ferment, forming gases, and later decompose. This process is attended with more or less discomfort and reacts to the injury of all the digestive organs, with the result of poisoning the entire system, a condition known as auto-intoxication. Three prime considerations arise in treatment of such conditions:

First, the process of decomposition must be arrested, by neutralizing the acid condition of the stomach, thus giving prompt relief from pain.

Second, the salivary glands and other glands which produce the various digestive juices must be stimulated into active secretion in order that the food may be proporly digested.

Third, the stomach nerves must be toned up into a healthy state and inflammatory conditions of the membranous lining allayed.

"Able Ministers of the New Testament."

BY C. PETTY.

The great apostle to the church at Corinth speaks of "able ministers of the new testament." They were ministers of the new testament only. (1) The law was fulfilled and nailed to the cross. (Col. 2: 14.) (2) The law was dead, and was no more than a dead husband to a wife. (Rom. 7: 3.) (3) The law "was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made" (Gal. 3: 19); and "the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster" (verses 24, 25). When the gospel came, the law was of no more use at all, for its purpose was served, and it passed away because it could not give life and could not save. Paul tells us that the blood of animals could not take away sin (Heb. 10: 4), and because of the weakness of that blood they were always conscious of sins under the law (Heb. 9: 9). But now, under the gospel age, by reason of the strength of its blood, persons are not conscious of sins, because their hearts are sprinkled from an evil conscience and their bodies are washed with pure water. (Heb. 10: 22.)

I heard a preacher say that the apostles preached the old Scriptures, because the New Testament was not written. But Paul tells us this: "For the priesthood being changed; there is made of necessity a change of the law." (Heb. 7: 12.) The New Testament is that changed law, and it is the grace and truth that came by Jesus Christ. (John 1: 17.) Paul says that we "are not under the law, but under grace." (Rom. 6: 14.) Besides this, the Savior told the apostles that when the Spirit should come it would bring to their minds all things that he had taught them, and not the things Moses taught. There was, of course, no use preaching something that no one was under.

The reason that the preacher referred to preached the law as in force was to get its sprinkling and claim this as the baptism of the New Testament, for he said the Savior was baptized into his priesthood according to Lev. 8. By turning to verse 30, any one can see that there was no water used in the consecration of priests, but it was blood and oil only. He said that Ezek. 36: 25 was fulfilled at Pentecost when the three thousand were baptized. But the sprinkling of Ezekiel was the ashes of a red heifer mixed with water, and was to be sprinkled on the Jews when the Lord gathered them out of all the provinces

Get the Habit of Drinking Hot Water Before Breakfast

Says we can't look or feel right with the system full of poisons.

Millions of tolks bathe internally now instead of loading their system with drugs. "What's an inside bath?" Well, it is guaranteed to peryou say. form miracles if you could believe these hot-water enthusiasts.

There are vast numbers of men and women who, immediately upon arising in the morning, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This is a very excellent health measure. It is intended to flush the stomach, liver, kidneys, and the thirty feet of intestines of the previous day's waste, sour bile, and indigestible material left over in the body, which, if not eliminated every day, become food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels; the quick result is poisons and toxins which are then absorbed into the blood, causing headache, bilious attacks, foul breath, bad taste, colds, stomach trouble, kidney misery, sleeplessness, impure blood, and all sorts of ailments.

People who feel good one day and badly the next, but who simply cannot get to feeling right, are urged to obtain quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make any one a real crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening, and freshening, so limestone phosphate and hot water act on the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels. It is vastly more important to bathe on the inside than on the outside, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

of the Babylonian empire where they had been scattered for seventy years (see Nehemiah and Ezra), and this was centuries before Pentecost. But if what he said was true, the apostles must have had a lot of ashes on hand on the day of Pentecost.

Baptism is a command of the gospel and not a command of the law. John the Baptist was the first to preach it. Hear Mark tell of John's work: "And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins." (Mark 1: 5.) Do you see any one mixing ashes and water for John? No. Baptism is absolutely a New Testament command, and John did the first baptizing in the river away out in the wilderness, a good way from Jerusalem, where the sprinkling of the law had to be attended to. Besides, John was no priest and could not sprinkle any one into the priesthood. Listen: "And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan. And straightway coming up out of the water [not oil and blood], he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon him." (Mark 1: 9, 10.) Now turn to Lev. 8: 30 and contrast it with this, then you will see no truth in the preacher's statement.

The apostles preached the gospel of Christ as God's power to save, and it embraced the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ as the facts of this gospel; and they preached faith, repentance, and baptism as the commands of the gospel; and when men believed and obeyed their preaching, they were saved from their past sins. Paul says: "And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." (Acts 13: 39.) This means that men could be saved by the gospel of Christ, but not by the law. He who preaches the law as binding to-day must tempt the Lord as Peter said teachers did in his day. (See Acts 15: 10.)

First Impressions.

Be careful that you do not make a disagreeable impression on people at your first meeting. If you are unsocial at first acquaintance and finally decide that those people will repay in smiles and politeness, you will have to exert yourself more than a little to do away with the first impression made by your unresponsiveness. It will take many months of faithful work to counteract in the mind of your employer that first unfortunate impression you made before you woke up to the fact that your position held promises for the future.-Selected.

GOOD NEWS

A Lady in Texas Tells How She Regained and Keeps Her Health.

Every householder should have at hand all the time a dependable remedy with which to fight catarrh and catarrhal conditions.

The experience of Mrs. M. E. Berkley, No. 1322 Twenty-seventh Street, Galveston, Texas, is not unique, but her letter does carry a vigorous "safety-first" suggestion to every American home: "I wish to tell you of the good Peruna has been to me. I have used it five years, and have never found it other than satisfactory as a remedy for colds, catarrh, indigestion, and many other ailments. I am never without Peruna."

Coughs, colds, catarrh, grip, and influenza cannot safely be neglected. Any disease due to catarrhal inflammation of the mucous lining, whether of the nasal passages, throat, lungs, stomach, bowels, kidney, bladder, or other organs, is to be feared. Catarrh is always a menace to the general health, and on account of its prevalence must be fought, and fought hard, all the time.

Thousands place their entire dependence upon the well-known, time-tried remedy—Peruna. Dr. Hartman began selling Peruna for catarrh forty-five years ago. Try Peruna first and avoid possible disappointment and expense.

The Master's Vineyard

District of Columbia.

Washington, November 24,-This has been an interesting day in the service of Christ for the church here. There were ninety-nine present at 11 A.M., and the Bible classes were well attended. Our Lord's-day contribution was fifty-seven dollars and fifty cents, and to this was added fifty-seven dollars which came through the mail to help us build a house of worship. The first to make donations are: E. E. Joynes, Philadelphia, Pa., $1; Sister Baker, New Mexico, $5; F. E. Dennis, $1; Sister M. J. Jones, Nashville, Tenn., $50. Many thanks to you. I hope others will follow your good example. The building fund is growing. Brother and Sister O. B. Curtis, of Louisville, Ky., are with us, and are of valuable help in the song service and other ways. Brethren, do not forto pray for the work in Washington, and be sure to remember us on December 22-" Washington Day." Read the Gospel Advocate and become a faithful worker .- W. S. Long.

Louisiana.

Amite, November 27.—The work here is growing, and we are thankful that our Lord has blessed us in our mission work. Several mission meetings have been held, one congregation started, and we trust to see great results from our efforts in other places.

The church here has increased its number to twenty-two this year and is still working at its building fund. I trust that we may soon accomplish our desires. Pray for us.—W. J. Johnson.

Oklahoma.

Hollis, November 24.—Seeing so many accounts of deaths of my old friends in the Gospel Advocate and also some notes from Brother Marsh, of Pikeville, Tenn., whom I baptized just before leaving Tennessee, I thought I would report my work for the first time. For forty-three years I have been trying to teach the to those who would hear it, but I never thought my work worth reporting. Now that I am old, no one can think I am trying to get before the public. I decided on the first of last January to give all I got this year to the cause of Christ, and wife and I would make our own living. I preached every Lord's day until the last of June and gave every cent to others. In July I began a protracted meeting in Harmon County (my home county), and baptized one. Then I went to Union County, N. M., and held a meeting at Thomas, baptizing twenty-one. I attended Brother Jackson's meeting at Antioch, where four were baptized and three restored. Then I went to Horn Schoolhouse for another meeting, but was rained out. Then I came home, where I got into a debate with a Seventh-Day Adventist. We did not get to finish the debate on account of the "flu." Since that time I have baptized three more, making twenty-five in all this year. I am still able to preach and make my own living, though I am nearly sixty-seven years old. If any of my old friends see this and write me, I would appreciate it. I lived at Spencer twenty years. I have been living here at Hollis eight years. I have lots of friends and brethren here, but I often dream of the happy bygone days of my early life. I have been a reader of the Advocate for over forty-five years .- R. L. Gillentine.

Lebanon, November 27.-I closed an eight-days' meeting with the church at Granville last Lord's-day The inclement weather and quite a good deal of sickness hindered in the way of attendance very much, though the brethren claim the attendance was even better than they expected. There was one restored to the fellowship, the congregation seemed to be very much encouraged and strengthened spiritually, and a good lot of prejudice was broken down. This was a very pleasant meeting to me. Having engaged in school work there for three years, twenty-five years ago, getting to meet some of the old friends and acquaintances and quite a goodly number of my old students made it a pleasant meeting indeed.—George W. Farmer.

I visited the Dunlap congregation, in Sequatchie County, on Friday night before the fourth Lord's day, and preached on Saturday night following at Atpontley, Bledsoe County; on Lord's-day morning I was at Bethel, at Lee's Station in the afternoon, and at Atpontley at night. Two young ladies made the confession and were baptized.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Ennis, November 25.-We had excellent services yesterday at the Avenue Church, with two additions. Brother W. T. Kidwill preached last night to enthusiastic listeners on his great theme, "God Experiments with Men." Brother Kidwill preached for Brother Kidwill preached for this church in its "babyhood" days. and they all love him. He preaches for the Garrett Church at North Ennis, and is doing good. Our midweek services are well attended, and the men boys unaccustomed to the platform are developing a liking to it and show much study and care in preparation of lessons on vital themes.-Ben West.

Depository Dots.

BY J. H. WHISNANT.

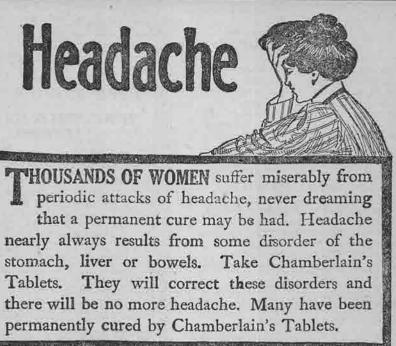

But little has been said of the Christian literature depository since its move in early spring from Atkins, Ark., to Coal Hill, Ark., owing to its manager's being busily engaged in farming, printing, and preaching. However, we have taken care of the orders which came in and are now ready to turn more attention thereto.

Now that the people's minds are released for the usual life problems, allow us to suggest that it is a good time to distribute gospel literature and put forth extra efforts to get the true way before the people. We have recently reprinted Brother John T. Hinds' four excellent gospel leaflets and have more than a dozen other good ones which we are still furnishing at fifty cents per one hundred, assorted if desired.

Our "Church of Christ Educational Calendar for 1918" was published with the thought that, if a success, one would be published for each following year. Many commendations were offered and few criticisms, those being in regard to its being so constructed that the subject-matter came off with the expired month. That feature is eliminated in this calendar; for, when the year is done, its several gospel subjects are neatly bound in pamphlet form for future reference, by cutting off back cover with front. Its size is eight and one-quarter by twelve inches. and it is artistically designed and printed in deep red and bronze blue on good stock. Do not think of it as being an ordinary calendar. It is the only calendar published directly in the interest of the church of Christ and her doctrines. Each one is a preacher for the year, and invites and exhorts every one who looks at it to attend the church of Christ services in its community. Owing to paper conditions and others, not a large edition is being published, and this may be the last notice you will see of it. Prices, prepaid: One, twenty-two cents; three, fifty-five cents; six, one dollar; twelve or more, fifteen cents each. For brevity, you may address the writer at Coal Hill, Ark., Box 115.

Holiness in the Street.

Holiness is always a very unimpressive weakling if it cannot face and endure the rigors and inclemencies of the streets. It has the inevitable paleness of all cloistered virtue. It never gets beyond the wanness of a prison plant. It is an invalid which never goes forth on daring ventures. And it was in reference to this peril of spiritual invalidism that our Lord prayed we might have deliverance: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world!"—J. H. Jowett.

Be Courteous Always.

Next to honesty, courtesy is the best asset. Remember few people or firms have such a monopoly of products that they can afford to be discourteous. There are thousands of people who prefer courteous treatment to superior goods. There is no reason why they should not have both. But if one or the other must suffer, the courteous chap will win out. That explains why the store with the highest grade of goods does not always have the crowds. People like to be treated as though they counted in the world's economy. Whether they do or not makes little difference. Let them think they do and they will boost your business to people who do. You secure their good will through courtesy and they join the ranks of your advertisers. Men of business insight have learned this long ago .- Selected.

The Power of Nature.

Everything in nature contains all the powers of nature. The world globes itself in a drop of dew. So do we put our life into every act. Every act rewards itself. A man cannot speak but he judges himself. With his will or against his will he draws his portrait to the eye of his companions by every word. Every opinion reacts on him who utters it. You cannot do wrong without suffering wrong.—Emerson.

For Insight.

Lord, as I thread the ways of life Amid confusion, toil, and strife, The sting of ill, the mystery Of hearts concealed beneath the eye; Help me to know the kindness meant, The purpose born of good intent; To feel amid distrust and fear The faith of loyal souls sincere, Whose grace, though off I knew it not, My sins discerned, forgave, forgot.

Give me the patient skill to guess
What words have perished to express;
To realize how a heart is wrung
In anguish hidden by the tongue;
To feel the cheer of prayers unheard,
The gentle wish that hath no word,
The sympathy too deep for sound;
And know in truth that these abound
For him who will his duty do
And to his fellow man be true.

"As a Man Thinketh in His Heart."

BY S. O. MARTIN.

"As he thinketh within himself, so is he." This scripture will enable a man to weigh his own life in the balances of truth; for the kind of thoughts that one has will surely bring forth that kind of deeds. The wise man has said: "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." When we stop to think and ponder well this wonderful saying, we are brought face to face with the whole truth of it. There is not an action which God places to the credit of man or against him that was not first formed in the man's thoughts. One cannot move the tiniest muscle without the action of the mind or heart. It is useless to take time here to show that the heart and mind are the same when speaking of the seat of the intellect. One cannot so much as wink the eye or nod assent to an evil or good without the idea first originating in the mind. The brain acts in all we do, if we will let it.

We hear a great deal of preaching as to how a man should conduct himself in the Christian life; but, to my mind, there should be more preaching in regard to keeping the heart. If the heart is filled with good thoughts, then there is no room for evil desires and tendencies, and thus the whole life will be transformed by the thoughts. Christ said: "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." The "abundance of the heart" must mean the kind of thoughts that one thinks or that with which the heart is filled. If the heart or mind is filled with murderous thoughts, we need not look for anything but evil from that heart. I am not speaking of the random thoughts that come to us, but I am speaking of the keeping of the heart. We often hear people say: "O, well, we can't help the kind of thoughts that we have." I say we can; if not, then the wise man was wrong in admonishing us to "keep thy heart with all diligence."

I believe one of the finest admonitions that Paul gave to his brethren is found in these words: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things. The things which ye both learned and received and heard and saw in me, these things do: and the God of peace shall be with you." (Phil. 4: 8, 9.) Please notice that the reading is, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he;" but a man is not always what he thinks he is. Not what we think we are, but as we think, so are we. Therefore, "keep thy heart with all diligence: for out of it are the issues of life."

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

Fine Mental Exercise.

The finest mental exercise we can think of is the practice of doing that which you dislike to do. If you will switch from kicking yourself every day into doing certain things that you must do, to going at them with a relish and a vim, you will be surprised at the difference it will make in your disposition.—Selected.

I have learned to hope, instead of to regret; to give, instead of to accept; to aid, instead of to complain. I have learned to look upward, not downward; to look forward, not backward. Thus my path was easier and I was less weary.—Queen Marie, of Roumania, 1917.

It would be a veritable God-send to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture and wear it. They would certainly never regret if.

My rupture is now all healed up and nothing ever did it.

Edifying as the Need May Be Another Exchange With Brother Riley.

Trezevant, Tenn., September 16, 1918.—Mr. A. B. Lipscomb.—My Dear Sir: I notice your criticism in the Baptist Builder, wherein you say that I think I have performed a feat of some note. I only failed to understand you, that is all.

As lengthy discussions are unnecessary where there is just one point involved, I want to ask you some questions as a student of the Bible, and in no bad spirit whatever.

1. Do not Jesus Christ and his merits constitute the way to heaven?

2. Does human merit enter into the plan of salvation at all?

3. Do you believe that his righteousness or our righteousness saves?

4. Does not God offer the world a complete salvation in Christ?

5. Is it not a fact that as every sin deserves a death penalty, that if we are depending on what we do for salvation, we must of necessity live above sin to get to heaven?

6. If a good life is necessary to our entrance into heaven, please tell us how good a life it takes,

7. Why did Jesus have to live a perfect life for us, if we have to live it for ourselves?

No, repentance and faith are not part of the way. They are means of getting into the way. Jesus Christ, and he alone, is the way to heaven, no matter how much man may want to claim part of the honor himself. Eternal life is a gift. (Rom. 6: 23; John 10: 28.)

I am glad to worship a God who gives salvation to men, not put it and sell it as some claim. L. R. RILEY.

Brother Riley claims to have written "in no bad spirit whatever." It is difficult, indeed, to harmonize this statement with the last sentence in his communication wherein he says: "I am glad to worship a God who gives salvation to men, not put it and sell it as some claim." He would leave the inference that the Gospel Advocate holds to such doctrine. But we will answer his questions in the order he propounds them.

1. "Do not Jesus Christ and his merits constitute the way to heaven?" His meritorious sacrifice is the "procuring cause" of salvation, and this salvation is "appropriated" by man when he believes in and obeys Jesus Christ. It takes the entire scheme of salvation to constitute the way to heaven. Without the shedding of Christ's blood, there could be no salvation for any one, but the shedding of his blood alone could save no one. Will Brother Riley deny this? If not, does not whatever else is essential to getting to heaven constitute a part of the way?

2. "Does human merit enter into the plan of salvation at all?" No.

3. "Do you believe that his righteousness or our righteousness saves?" Human righteousness can save no one. "But after that the kindness and love of God our Savior toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." (Tit. 3: 4, 5.) Brother Riley will not dare assert that the mercy of God saves without faith and repentance on the part of man. His whole effort is to get man to heaven without baptism. Unfortunately for his position, Paul teaches the reverse. The "washing of regeneration" is nothing else than baptism; and instead of its being classed among works of human righteousness, it is put over against such works, and the Holy Spirit says God saves us through such means. The trouble with Brother Riley is, he does not know or does not wish to see the difference between works of legal righteousness, by which no one can be saved, and obedience to the commands of the gospel, which is but a confession of sin and a begging of God's mercy and pardon.

4. "Does not God offer the world a complete salvation in Christ?" Most assuredly. But how do men get into Christ in order to become subjects of this salvation? "For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.) Again: "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3.) Can it be possible that Brother Riley is ignorant of this truth? Will he contend that men will be saved out of Christ? If not, does not whatever is necessary to bring one into Christ become a part of the way to heaven?

5. "Is it not a fact that as every sin deserves a death penalty, that if we are depending on what we do for salvation, we must of necessity live above sin to get to heaven?" To be saved by the law of human righteousness, one would have to live an absolutely perfect life from the moment of his accountability before God to the day of his death, without violating a single item of his law. But no one could keep such a law or live such a life. Hence, Christ fulfilled that law, nailing it to the cross, and put us under the law of grace, or the gospel. Acts of obedience to the gospel are a part of the law of grace, or the law of faith. (See Rom. 3: 27.) Faith, repentance, and baptism constitute parts of the law of faith by which men are justified.

6. "If a good life is necessary to our entrance into heaven, please tell us how good a life it takes." We will give God's answer: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven," (Matt. 7: 21.) "So, then, my beloved, even as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." (Phil. 2: 12.) "Though he was a Son, yet learned obedience by the things which he suffered; and having been made perfect, he became unto all them that obey him the author of eternal salvation." (Heb. 5: 8, 9.) "And one said unto him, Lord, are they few that are saved? And he said unto them, Strive to enter in by the narrow door: for many, I say unto you, shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able." (Luke 13: 23, 24.) "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.) This is the kind of life God says one must live in order to be saved. Just how much allowance he will make for the shortcomings of those who make an honest effort, no one knows.

7. "Why did Jesus have to live a perfect life for us, if we have to live it for ourselves?" Jesus had to live an absolutely perfect life to meet the demands of the law and in order to become an adequate sacrifice for the sins of the world. We are not required to live an absolutely perfect life, but a relatively perfect one. If the perfect life of Jesus is all that is necessary to save man, then all men will be saved and Universalism must be true. Is Brother Riley prepared to stand by the consequences of his doctrine?

We have gone to some length to enlighten our critic, and until he harmonizes the points here submitted with his idea of things he must excuse us from a further effort to set him right.

T. F. Moore's Admissions.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The following reply from the editor of the Baptist Flag contains some admissions worthy of note:

Brother Smith's title is the only thing that will indicate my dissatisfaction to the reader. Nothing in my articles will show that I am dissatisfied with my position.

I can say again, if these chief rulers were genuine believers, they must have previously repented, as repentance precedes faith in Christ. This does not help my brother in his order of mention. His hanging on to the chief rulers shows that he has to say something on some subject, as he cannot stick to the one he undertook.

I could yield to your claim to Matt. 21: 32 and then have three to your nothing left—three that you dare not question.

Brother Smith reminds me of the old servant who greased his master's wagon, and then reported that he had greased all over the wagon except the little things that worked in the hubs, and said he could not get to them. Brother Smith takes up and discusses almost any scripture but the ones that teach faith in Christ before repentance toward God, and he can't get to these for the reason that they are not even in the hubs, saying nothing of the Book.

After a long effort, he claims to have discovered one or two. What are they? Pentecost is one. "Didn't you believe in the existence of God when you were seeking after him through repentance?" To be sure, I did, Smith; but how does that help your contention? Will you tell your readers in your next reply that that faith is the faith you are contending for before repentance? If so, we are agreed and have been all the while. If that is your real faith, my friend, why are you contending against the scriptures I cite on the subject and trying to impress the readers that these scriptures do not mention them in order, when you believe with me that faith in Jesus comes after repentance? The Ninevites believed God and repented after-Yes, Nineveh believed Jonah's preaching, and it brought about the repentance in the Ninevites. Note, will you, Brother Smith quoted the scripture right where it says, "and the people of Nineveh believed God." Then a little further along he says "they believed God." Then a can't produce such a scripture, for it is not there. I deny it and demand the proof.

Brother Smith's faith is only a belief that God is, and hence he does not believe in Jesus before his baptism. This demonstrates that Smith baptizes condemned men, children of unbelief.

No, I do not believe Methodists and Presbyterians are in the kingdom, but I do believe that many of them are Christians. You say we bar this class from the Lord's table. We do no such thing. The law of approach is laid down by the New Testament, and we will not violate this law; while you and your people run roughshod over it by allowing unqualified men to approach this ordinance. Baptists will not do it.

I note your expression: "And yet he puts water between a child of God and one of the nearest approaches a child of God can make to him in this life." This is a very curious expression. It may be the nearest approach you and your people do approach to God in this life; bu' if that was the nearest approach that I ever got to God in this life, I would most certainly believe, like you, in doing the commands of my Lord for my salvation. But I know a more sure way than ordinances. When I can steal away from the business cares of life and shut myself up with God only, in prayer, then it is that I come nearest my God. Of course, ordinances should be observed in a prayerful mood; but when I want to commune with him, I don't want any ordinance between my Savior and me. The sweet hour of prayer is more precious to me than the observance of any ordinance in his house.

Had you noticed that Brother Smith used over half his space on the chief rulers, in order to keep the thoughtful reader away from his fallure to find one single scripture where the two words are found together that faith in Jesus ever precedes repentance toward God? He is a courageous disputer, however. He claims to find the scripture that so teaches. Matt. 3: 1, 2, he says: "John was talking to people who already believed in God." That is funny to have John calling on believers in God to repent of their sins. If Brother Smith will prove his statement that Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, were believers in God, I can prove from his testi-mony that this same class both killed and crucified the Prince of life. It is admitted that this class believed in his existence, but did not believe in him. If I can't get you to see the difference in faith in a fact and faith in God, I will have to give you over to a reprobate mind, that you may continue in unbelief and be lost. Don't you know that what a man believes, he is at work at? Men say they believe things they do not.

Take your own case. You believe that one must be baptized and so far as possible keep the commandments of the Savior in order that one may be finally saved. Are you not trying to live that kind of life before your fellow men? Sure you are, This is what you believe; you are honest in it. Then don't you believe that all men who are honest like you, who do the commands, will be saved? Yes, you know you do. Well, do you believe that a dishonest man will?

Take your Pentecostians and what Peter called on them to do, and to the jailer. Can't you see that the jailer was in a penitent state and was told to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, while the Pentecostians were impenitent and were told to repent and be baptized in the name, etc. Would they yield to this demand without trusting in that name? Sure they believed the preaching which produced conviction, and they discovered their lost condition and asked what to do. Peter said: "Repent ye, and be baptized in the name [trusting in the name]."

Can't any one see that genuine faith in Jesus must follow true repentance toward God? With the former you renounce and turn away from the devil; with the latter you accept the Lord Jesus—another Lord.

I have neither said nor intimated that my friend was "dissatisfied" with his position, but, on the other hand, regard it as a case of "Ephraim joined to his idols." I said: "It seems that Brother Moore is not satisfied with his efforts on repentance before faith." I did not enter this discussion with any hopes of converting my friend, but simply to show any of his readers who may be open to conviction the errors of Baptist doctrine along certain lines. I shall pass Brother Moore's "anecdote" without any attempt to reply, for two reasons. In the first place, the matters under consideration are of too grave and solemn importance to be joked about; and, in the second place, an "anecdote" is a poor substitute for argument. Hence, I will ask our readers to excuse me from any effort to be "funny." I will now note his admissions. He says: "Yes, Nineveh believed Jonah's preaching, and it brought about the repentance in the Ninevites." Here he admits that faith preceded repentance, and that that faith brought about, or was the cause of, repentance. I thank him for this candid admission, and also for saying with reference to the Pentecostians: "Sure they believed the preaching which produced conviction, and they discovered their lost condition and asked what to do. Peter said: 'Repent ye, and be baptized in the name [trusting in the name]." Now, what was the preaching he says they believed? Listen: "Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God bath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified." (Acts 2: 36.) My friend says the Pentecostians believed this so strongly that it " produced conviction" in their hearts, causing them to cry out: "Brethren, what shall we do?" All this he now admits preceded their repentance, and I ask for no more, for this is all that I have ever claimed. Of course they were baptized "in the name" (by the authority) of Christ. Peter qualified the command to be baptized with the clause, "in the name of Christ," to show by whose authority they were to be baptized. After admitting that believing the message of the apostles concerning the character and mission of Christ preceded the repentance of the Pentecostians, he tries to "differentiate" between their faith before and after their repentance. The latter he terms "genuine," and I suppose he would have us to understand that faith strong enough in the character and mission of the Lord Jesus Christ to drive conviction to the heart and produce repentance is not genuine. Hear him: "Can't any one see that genuine faith in Jesus must follow true repentance toward God? With the former you renounce and turn away from the devil; with the latter you accept the Lord Jesus-another Lord." He admits a faith preceding repentance, which leads to repentance, causing one to "renounce and turn away from the devil," and I must not be so uncharitable as to ask more, for I am abundantly satisfied on this point; only, I hold that a faith that will do all that must be "genuine." I have said that faith is progressive—a principle of growth, that continues on beyoud repentance, leading to baptism and every act of worship and service to God. Hence, if my friend contends for a degree of faith after repentance that leads us on to obedience, I have no objection. If he contends that what may be properly termed "saving faith"-that is, that degree of faith that brings us to salvation from past sinscomes after repentance, I have no objections, for this is what I believe and have taught all these years. When Brother Moore cannot meet the argument, he gives us something like this; "Brother Smith's faith is only a belief that God is, and hence he does not believe in Jesus before his baptism. This demonstrates that Smith baptizes condemned men, children of unbelief." He thus does himself great injustice in the estimation of every intelligent reader of his paper, for they all know better from this discussion.

2. 1 can but regard the following as an indirect admission: "No, I do not believe Methodists and Presbyterians are in the kingdom, but I do believe that many of them are Christians." Whether my friend intended it or not, the above is a complete surrender of his contention on the design of baptism, and a yielding of the very pith of this discussion. Let us analyze his statement in connection with what the Master taught. (1) If his language teaches anything at all, it teaches that baptism puts one in the kingdom. Why do I say this? Well, he claims to be in the kingdom, and the only thing that separates him from Methodists and Presbyterians is baptism; therefore it must have been the act of baptism that put him in the kingdom. I confess my inability to see any possible way of escape from this conclusion. (2) Since, according to my friend, his baptism put him in the kingdom, and the Master inseparably connects the "new birth" and the kingdom, it follows conclusively that haptism is essential to salvation, unless, indeed, Brother Moore will contend that one is saved before and independent of the "new birth." The Master said: "Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) Now, if the new birth does not put one into the kingdom of God, will Brother Moore please, without fail, tell us what it is that does? He tells us that people, Methodists and Presbyterians, are Christians outside of and independent of the kingdom, and I will ask him: How, then, do people enter the kingdom, and what blessings are bestowed upon one entering the kingdom? Will he answer?

Some Thoughts.

BY JAMES E, SCOBEY.

The Bible is the most important of all the books one may possess. There are thousands of other books, many of them of special worth and value to man; many of great service in all that pertains to the temporal, economic welfare of the race. Books of history, science, art, etc., have been, and still are, prime factors in intellectual development and culture necessary to civilized life. Scientific knowledge is essentially necessary in this age in which we live.

Man has done wonders in his study of the laws of nature, and his discoveries and inventions have contributed largely to his comfort, convenience, and pleasure. But his wisdom drawn from this source has not been able to pierce the realm of the spiritual. Man would know nothing concerning his origin or his destiny, if left to his wisdom, derived from the study of natural laws. While he might have vague ideas of some great supernatural power, he would be wholly ignorant of the great God who created the heavens and the earth.

The Bible is the source from which we must derive any and all truth concerning the origin of all things, celestial or terrestrial, and their end. The Bible specifically states the manner of man's creation and traces the lineage of Jesus of Nazareth up the stream of time to the first man, Adam. It gives us the history of the coming of the Messiah, who brought life and immortality to light by his resurrection from the tomb, and thus taught man that this life which we live here below is not all the life we may have. There is a life beyond the grave that may be attained, filled with everlasting honor, glory, and gladness.

The New Testament is that part of the Bible which appeals to us as of singular importance. It teaches us of the importance of the soul. The Savior himself said: "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" It clearly states that there is a heaven and a hell, and that eternity is to be passed in one or the other. Indeed, all we know in reference to our spiritual well-being for time and eternity must come from the revealed word of God. There is no spiritual truth to be obtained from any other source.

Jesus came to establish a spiritual kingdom. He chose men whom he prepared to be his apostles and ambassadors in its establishment among men. After his death on the cross, his burial, resurrection, ascension to heaven, and coronation as "King of kings and Lord of lords," his disciples and apostles, assembled in an upper room in Jerusalem, received a most wonderful baptism of the Holy Spirit on Pentecost and began making citizens by inducting them into his kingdom. Peter, the ambassador of the Christ, convinced his Jewish brethren, who were the chief instigators of the crucifixion of Jesus, that he was, indeed and in truth, their anxiously looked-for Messiah; and they then desired to know what they must do. Peter did not mince words, but told them clearly what to do to become citizens of the kingdom. (See Acts 2: 38.)

The kingdom is also called "the church." We are fully taught in God's word that the church is called "the body of Christ;" and it to-day, as it ever has been, is "the pillar and ground of the truth," which is God's revealed word. The church is the manifestation of the power and influence of this word on the hearts and lives of all loyal citizens of the kingdom. The church should not only be a nursery for helpless babes, but a home and a fortress for strong men and devoted women engaged in a warfare on all unrighteousness. Dr. Thomas Arnold has given us a pretty fair, practical definition of a church. He says: "It is a society engaged in making men like Christ, earth like heaven, and the kingdoms of this world like the kingdom of God."

Jesus is to reign till he puts all enemies under his feet, and this will be done through the church; for its members are soldiers of the cross, whose "weapons of warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds: casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ," who is the head of this body. He is the "King from whom orders have been issued to carry on the warfare he had planned for the redemption of man from the bondage of sin. Through his ambassadors (the apostles) and the supernaturally endowed prophets and evangelists of the early church, he has recorded his will and law as to the terms upon which the alien may surrender and become a citizen of his kingdom and a soldier of the cross. Every detail of service, both of work and worship, in which his soldiers may engage, has been clearly set forth. He has not left man free to do something for service which he might suppose would do just as well as, perhaps, a little better than, that which is embodied in the orders of the great Captain and Commander issued to his army. Paul, the apostle, says in his letter to the church at Ephesus: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

The work in which the Christian may be engaged has been ordained of God. It is not man's work, so far as the institution and direction of the work is concerned; but it is his to do, to the honor and glory of his Lord and Master. The church of to-day, if it would affect the world for the highest good, must be to the world in spirit and service what Jesus was to it in the days of his pilgrimage on the earth. He went about doing good. The church should at all times be responsive to suffering humanity, whether it be the suffering of the body or of the famine of the soul for the want of spiritual light. The church has been charged with the work of spreading this spiritual light in the world by sounding out the word. The plain, simple gospel, as applied to the needs of the sinner as well as to the saint, will reach the hearts of men and cause them to turn to God. What is most needed is to get Jesus in the hearts of his people, that they may manifest his spirit in their lives. We all should want to become "more and more like Jesus."

What We Wish for Christmas.

Not only one, but a great host of volunteers are wanted. A very great host is more desirable. With an active worker at every post office, our list of subscribers to the Gospel Advocate will increase very rapidly.

In this way our readers can cooperate with us in advocating the gospel of Christ. This is a splendid opportunity for doing good that is presented to every reader of this We are confident in the belief that many will readily cooperate in this work. We all need fruit to abound to our account. Say a reader becomes an agent and secures a number of subscribers to the Advocate. Out of the number, one or more may learn the truth and obey the gospel of Christ. This has been done. "My brethren, if any among you err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins." (James 5: 19.) The salvation of one soul is a great work. We often make a woeful mistake by turning away from the opportunities at our doors and looking far away for something great to do. Here is an opportunity brought to you.

Christmas will soon be here!

At this season of the year gentle hints are given out as to what gift would please the most. Those who give and those who receive are doing what they can to avoid "misfits." Parents wish to gladden the hearts of children; husband intends to give wife the very thing she craves, but is too modest to ask for; wife would surprise "dear old John" with the thing he is not looking for; everybody is trying to make it the happiest possible holiday season for everybody and yet keep within the bounds of good sense and economy.

The publishers of the Gospel Advocate here and now throw out a strong hint as to what they wish from their readers. We won't be backward about it. We take you into our confidence and speak of our heart's desire. We mention plainly the very favors we expect from our readers.

- We wish that every reader in arrears would renew at once.
- (2) We wish that every reader would send us a new subscriber
- (3) We wish and confidently expect the toyal friendship of our readers.

In short, we wish every reader to volunteer.

PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Growing Old.

A little more tired at close of day, A little less anxious to have our way;

A little less ready to scold and blame, A little more care for a brother's name;

And so we are nearing the journey's end, Where time and eternity meet and blend.

A little more love for the friends of youth, A little more zeal for established truth;

A little more charity in our views, A little less thirst for the daily news;

And so we are faring down the way, That leads to the gates of a better day.

Feel my dried, shriveled skin—then feel your own.
Take my hand in yours—it is like that of a dead man's.
Look at my thin, white lips—then look in the glass at yours.

Look at what little blood I have left running from my sheeless feet—then look at your own.

Look at my rags—then look at your warm clothing.

Look at my fingers—then look at yours with their beautiful rings.

Look at my home in ruins—then go to yours. Look into my face and see death staring at you, and then look at your loved ones and see health and life smiling back at you.

Look at my loved ones, my friends, and my neighbors dead—dying—homeless—starving—sick in body and soul; then look around at your home, and see healthy, happy, well-fed, well-clothed people.

Please—for pity's sake—put your hands under my miserable arms and help my tired body into your home—let me sit at your table and enjoy again a little food—give me just enough clothing to cover my body and protect it from the cold—let my cold body warm itself in front of your fire—and let me sleep just a few nights in a clean, comfortable bed.

God has given you everything—please, for pity's sake, share just a little of it with me.

I am one of the starving millions of fatherless children of France—one of the homeless, dying millions of Jewish war sufferers—one of the millions of Armenians and Syrians that cry out for your immediate aid.

Go without some little luxury. Give up just one bit of pleasure.

Go without your cake that I may have bread. Please—for pity's sake—if you have one spark of appreciation in your heart for all that you have—if you have one drop of red blood in your body—please give me this aid before I die of hunger and disease.

A Ohristmas Gift for the Fanning Orphan School.

BY E. A. E.

The hearts and hands of the people generally are more widely open to calls to help the orphans and other needy now than they have been in a generation or in several generations. This is a very encouraging and hopeful truth. Especially is this true of Christians. Just before Christmas, Christians are more than ever anxious to help the needy. I am not saying they should be more helpful than at any other time. I refer to the fact. The Fanning Orphan School owes in round numbers two thousand dollars; besides, it needs far more money to help and to teach still more orphan girls. A good brother says his congregation wants to give one hundred dollars Christmas to this school. He also requests us to appeal to twenty other congregations to give as much, and to other congregations, then, to give more or less for other work of the school; but, above all, to let 1919 dawn brightly on the school clear of debt. Let the fourth Sunday in December be the Sunday when all will attend to this. All acting then together, the amount will more than be raised. Send all contributions to A. N. Trice, treasurer, Washington Manufacturing Company, Public Square, Nashville, Tenn.

"Imperfect Religion in the Y. M. C. A."

BY E. A. E.

Under this impressive heading the Literary Digest of November 16 gave what a writer in The Churchman has to say by way of criticism of the religious work of the Y. M. C. A. among the soldiers. On account of the widespread and still growing irreverence for God, want of respect for his word and worship, and tendency to minimize the church, this article should be read by all with all seriousness. Let us note in advance some criticisms the author of the article has made:

- 1. The Y. M. C. A. cannot "be relied upon completely to satisfy the religious longings of our enlisted men."
- 2. The man who made this criticism in three different places was each time reported to certain officials "who formally protested to those over him against his disloyalty;" but "a 'Y' officer higher up, with a sense of humor, put a step to what might have proved an embarrassing episode."

- 3. "A flood of criticism is already commencing" against the claim for the Y. M. C. A. as a perfect institution.
- 4. "All of this is perfectly well known to the Religious Work Council of the Y. M. C. A.," and "a careful and impartial study of what such work really amounts to now" is being made and an "investigation, it is no secret to say, is already in progress,"
- 5. "There is a lack of distinction between religious services and recreational activities."
- 6. "There is no such thing as reverence in most 'Y' religious meetings."
- 7. But for the sake of showing our readers what some men call preaching and teaching religion and for the opportunity of warning all against such, I most certainly would not pen the following language: "Once," says this critic, "I heard one of them talk to the men about 'a God with guts.' He also criticized the use of "gutter language" and "a vicious tendency abroad to imitate Billy Sunday." Note the prayer of a secretary,

8. There is too much "sentimentalized revivalism," and "' conversions' are sought which mean absolutely nothing." Men are asked to "'accept Christ' without any explanation to them of what such an acceptance may involve." All the evidence the boys give in some places of their acceptance of Christ is to shake hands with the speaker. Because eighty-one did that one night the speaker said, "Eighty-one souls saved." This work, says the critic. lacks "downright sincerity." He says "the preponderating majority of 'Y' religious secretaries" are of this type.

But here is the article. Read it; read it thoroughly and note what is said about slang being sissy-goody goodmanly and decent speech, true piety, quiet, peace, reverence, drawing nigh to God, etc.

The Y. M. C. A. has reached so near to the heart of the soldier that any criticism brings forth his instant protest; yet no institution is perfect, though in some places such an assumption is noted. A writer in The Churchman (New York) refers to articles appearing in the New Republic and elsewhere in criticism of the Y. M. C. A. as "deserved because of its assumption of impeccability." Dr. Mott and men like him, say this writer, have been "too wise to make such a claim;" but he maintains that it has "been all too comments bearing the say that the maintains that it has "been all too comments bear the say that the say the say the say that the say that the say that the say the say all too common to have the Y. M. C. A. presented as the one perfect organization in a world at war, with no flaw or defect or spot or any such thing to mar it." The writer does not give his name, though The Churchman regards him as a "trustworthy observer," and he speaks after having "personally studied in a quiet unofficial way the religious work, and particularly the Y. M. C. A. religious work, in three of the largest cantonments of the country." His friends, he tells us, have supplied him with full information of the nature of such work in six more. Also he "has been in a position where he has had written to him many letters, some of them very frank, from officers, Y. M. C. A. men, chaplains, and enlisted men upon this and related subjects. He writes:

"It has been all too frequent, that attitude which almost accuses a man of pro-Germanism who ventures in the least to suggest how Y. M. C. A. work may be improved. One of the author's friends recently talked in three different cities in the interest of the Chaplains' Support Fund, and said in each place that the Y. M. C. A. could not be relied upon completely to satisfy the religious longings of our enlisted men. His speech was reported in all three places to certain officials of the Y. M. C. A., who formally protested to those over him against his disloyalty. A 'Y' officer higher up, with a sense of humor, put a stop to what might else have proved a very embarrassing episode. Whenever any organization cries, 'We are perfect,' sooner or later people of brains are going to say, 'You are not perfect, and in their resentment at the attitude are going to criticize more bitterly than facts warrant. of criticism is already commencing.

"All of this is perfectly well known to the Religious Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., and they have already taken steps to improve the religious work in the camps. The first step in this endeavor is the making of a careful and impartial study of what such work really amounts to now. This investigation, it is surely no secret to say, is already in progress. Much is sure to come of it.

'Now, possibly, with all this by way of introduction, it may be well to state what are the principal defects of Y. M. C. A. religious work in the camps as one observer sees them.

"First, there is a lack of distinctness between religious services and recreational activities. Often they are on the same night and immediately in conjunction with one another. The writer was present at one meeting where a very eminent and inspiring preacher was sandwiched between a jazz-band concert and a Chaplin movie. He has seen prayer-meetings tacked on the end of stunt nights with no intermission. He has been present at sings where 'Nearer, My God, to Thee,' was sung between 'The Henry Clay' and 'Katie.' He has been astonished to find that many of the secretaries, far from thinking this sort of thing objectionable, delight in it as 'showing how religion and life are bound up together.' It may seem that way to them; but to the ordinary decent-minded enlisted man it seems, as one of them once expressed it in this writer's hearing, 'a damn insult to the A'mighty.'

"This brings us to the second criticism. There is no such thing as reverence in most 'Y' religious meetings. remember a certain English captain who visited one of these meetings and afterwards said: 'Those men are like your Billy Sunday, very chummy with God. That sort of thing won't go down for a minute with us who have seen, in the white heat of battle, a vision of the clean, white, holy Christ.' The services are so conversational, the prayers are so smugly smiling, the talks are so casual! How rarely does one find moments of quiet, or responsive prayers, or penetrating times of self-examination! is no atmosphere. The men are tired of noise and restlessness. They dearly prize peace. Yet the services are always endeavoring to be 'hearty' and 'full of red-blooded It is not easy to be reverent in leading services. It is easy to 'get down to the men.' Well, the men don't want God and things holy brought down to the level of the barracks nearly so much as they wish to be lifted up out of the barracks into the peace of heaven, and feel the quiet arms of God beneath them. If more complete separation of services and amusements is the first need, more emphasis upon quiet devotion is the second."

The third criticism, supported by examples, is in the nature of a variation of the second. One comes to wish, the writer says, that secretaries could preach without going out of their way to be slangy:

"Once I heard one of them talking to the men about 'a God with guts.' This is possibly the worst offense against decency ever heard in a 'Y;' but why some men think it necessary to use gutter language to win men to God is beyond understanding. There is a vicious tendency abroad to imitate Billy Sunday. One can be strong, virile, effective, without this kind of talk. Even the men from the slums instinctively resent it. And the same thing applies to prayers. Addressing the Most High demands such reverence, surely at least, as one would render a commanding general. The secretary who began a prayer, 'O God, we men in the depot brigade are lonely to-night and homesick for mother. We'd give a lot to see her and eat a piece of the good old home made pie once more,' was probably, certainly, an exception; but his sort has been given too much free play so far in 'Y' work.

"The fourth criticism is that there has been too great a narrowing of leadership to men of one, and that to many a highly objectionable, type of piety. If one were to seek to characterize it in words, perhaps it might do to say it is 'the type of sentimentalized revivalism.' Its sole aim seems often to be to get men to 'accept Christ' without any explanation to them of what such acceptance may involve. 'Conversions' are sought which mean absolutely nothing. I know how in one camp there was an eminent 'Y' leader-in his own estimation-who used to stand at a narrow door and say: 'All who wish to accept Christ tonight shake my hand as they walk out.' Of course, most of the boys, to be polite, shook hands. One night he said, after the meeting; 'Wonderful, wonderful! Eighty-one accepted Christ this evening. Eighty-one souls saved. Eighty-one conversions.' The signing of decision cards and 'war rolls' is, as it is usually done, a fruitless, a meaningless thing. And yet that seems to be the principal endeavor in much of the religious work. There is in it neither the thoroughness of the sacramental method nor the downright sincerity of the evangelical method.

"This one type of conventional leaders, the type of the preponderating majority of 'Y' religious secretaries, conduct, naturally, a sentimentalized type of prayer meeting. They talk in a sentimentalized pseudo-evangelical way. Perhaps this is why many of the lads unhesitatingly say that while the 'Y' men are fine fellows when they meet you any other way, they are all sissies in religion. One of the keenest young noncoms I have ever known, who had served in five camps, told me that in his opinion the 'Y' religious work amounted to nothing save with a certain exceptional type of boy whose previous religious training had been of the same sentimental sort. 'We all go to the Y gladly,' he said, 'except when they are likely to shove on the religion. Then we stay around the barracks or slip over to the K. of C.'s.' This boy was a religious boy and a good boy. His comrades who agree with him I have known by the hundreds. The 'Y' should provide scope for differing types of religious expression and not seek to bring all men to one type of piety, and that a type not particularly attractive to virile men."

In suggesting improvements the writer places emphasis on the matter of "better leadership." The religious leader he recommends to give all his time to this work and other men do the stamp selling, sweeping out, cashing checks, running shows, etc. Then as to methods:

"First, have religious services distinct from all other activities. Clear the building for them. Let no men write or otherwise hang around the edges. Let decency and quiet prevail, and let every one know just what they are getting into when they come. This will not mean smaller crowds. From what I have seen in most camps, the crowds at religious services could not be much smaller than they are.

"Secondly, let the services be deeply reverent, with due simplicity and a restrained sincerity as their dominant note. Let the prayers be simple, short, and quiet. Let the whole thing breathe the power of 'Him who sits between the cherubin, be the earth never so unquiet.'

"Thirdly, let the speeches be couched in manly but decent terms, and let them deal of noble things without bombast, conventional pieties, or explosive emphasis.

"Fourth, encourage the boy who thinks sacramentally to find his sacraments, the man who has found Christ in the study to find him so still, the fellow who is esthetic to find a Christ of beauty. Let the whole thing not be narrowed down to a certain piety of a neo-evangelistic sort."

Some people, it seems, to put it charitably, are incompetent to see the difference between widely different things and to draw distinctions. It is almost impossible to read the above article without giving expression to the following likeness of facts: Just as the man who dared to criticize some methods of the Y. M. C. A. was adjudged "disloyal" and reported to the authorities, so preaching on the all-sufficiency of the church to do all God has committed to it and glorifying him "in the church" and quoting the Scriptures on some features of the Christian life have been erroneously considered by some church members, who know more about other things than they do about the spirit and teaching of the meek and lowly Jesus and "the gentle Nazarene," as speaking against the government. It is not brave, loyal to the government, or Christian-rather, it is cowardly-for church members, claiming to be Christians, to threaten to report other church members or Christians to civil authorities and to try to get them into trouble for their conscientious efforts to teach the whole truth. Christianity teaches men to love and help one another, not to seek one another's condemna-

This language of the slums, language of the gutter, cursing language, these "smugly smiling" prayers, being "chummy with God," this "sentimentalized psuedo-evangelical way," and "sissies" for preachers are growing outside the Y. M. C. A. and spreading in places in the church. The lack of reverence and awe for God and respect for his will are alarming to all who tremble at the word of God.

Not long since I heard a preacher of no mean ability deliver a speech to a large audience. In a day or two he approached me on the subject of his speech and invited me to hear him again. I asked him if he was still cursing neonle

Everybody knows that the words "damn," "damnable," "damnation," "hell," "hell-fire," "the devil," "Jesus Christ," "My God," "God Almighty," etc., can be used to convey the very truth of the Bible and as the Bible uses them; or they can be used as profane language, which some preachers, it seems, take advantage of the pulpit to use, and which the Bible condemns.

The Bible says: "Bless, and curse not." It is the duty of preachers to solemnly warn people against sin by pointing out in the language of the Bible the consequences of sin; but it is not their province to judge and to pronounce the curse, and that, too, in a revengeful and condemnatory spirit.

Again, not many months since, I heard a preacher of the church of Christ, of ability and influence and of twenty years' experience, say in regard to the manner in which some pray that, if he were God, he would stop his ears. That expression almost took my breath. It made me shudder. Immediately and involuntarily I sought the reason for his saying that. He, God! Men and women praying to him! He surely did not know what he was saying. He is more humble and better than that language implies; for how can a mortal, a sinful man, an ignorant human being, a poor worm of the dust, presume to say: "If I were God," I would act thus and so!" It grieves me that one who should lead in humility and reverence should make such a statement, even in an unguarded attempt to emphasize what he was saying.

Not a month since a preacher of the church of Christ, just home from his Y. M. C. A. work in the camp, dressed in his soldier's uniform, was preaching on Sunday morning, and used such language that many of his audience left the room in the midst of his talk.

It speaks well for them that they showed thus disapproval of such irreverence and disobedience to God in the pulpit. This act and this article taken from the Literary Digest are strong indications that people do not intend to receive and uphold such things for the gospel and the worship of God.

We feel with more force than ever God's command to use "sound speech, that cannot be condemned" (Tit. 2: 7); to "hold the pattern of sound words," which Paul used and teaches all to use (2 Tim. 1: 13); and to use "sound words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ." On the other hand, God declares that the man who does not consent to use such language "is puffed up, knowing nothing, but doting [is sick, and makes others sick] about questionings and disputes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railing, evil surmisings, wranglings of men corrupted in mind and bereft of the truth, supposing that godliness is a way of gain." (1 Tim. 6: 3-5.)

Notwithstanding the above criticism and the others to follow, many young men, no doubt, will return from camp with the desire that the church shall conduct its worship and do its work after the manner of this religious entertainment and recreation and "sentimentalized revivalism." Hence, it behooves the church to give the more diligence to preach the gospel, to teach what the true worship of God is, to impress upon all the fear of Jehovah, and to make clear the difference between recreation and the services of God, entertainment and the worship of God in spirit and truth, religion and Christianity. Now is the time to begin to do this.

Let all take for a text the following command:

Wherefore, receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, let us have grace, whereby we may offer service well pleasing to God [not to curselves or the world] with reverence and awe: for our God is a consuming fire. (Heb. 12: 28, 29.)

The most needed criticism yet, and the one which involves the most, is that the "religion in the Y. M. C. A." is not only "imperfect," but the Y. M. C. A. itself is not the church. It is one thing and the church is quite a different thing. The Y. M. C. A. furnishes the boys in camp a place of comfort, rest, reading and writing rooms.

recreation and entertainment with a religious tinge, and, used simply as such, it would prove, no doubt, a great blessing to them. But it is not the church or any part of it, neither can it take the place of the church. Furthermore, it is used to ease boys' consciences against engaging in carnal warfare in any form. Men are religious, and want the authority of religion for what they do. Nations waging war must maintain a religion which encourages men to fight, not one which teaches against destroying human life. Hence, no preacher can hold a place in the Y. M. C. A. or as a "camp pastor" who teaches that it is wrong for Christians to engage in carnal warfare in any form.

Not speaking irreverently, but speaking the truth in the fear of God, I say there is "a god with guts," which not a few worship. The New Testament speaks of those who are "the enemies of the cross of Christ; whose end is perdition, whose god is the belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." (Phil. 3: 18, 19.) Paul declares that some, who, "by their smooth and fair speech," beguile the hearts of the innocent," worship this god. (Rom. 16: 17, 18.) This is a popular god, and his worship, appealing to the flesh, is popular.

According to what standard are the investigations referred to above to be made? Should they be made according to the Bible and with it as the standard all the way through, great and glorious results would follow.

But, regardless of that, will the church and preachers of the church cling at all times and in all things to the Bible? Will they speak "as it were oracles of God?" Will they preach nothing but Christ crucified, and will they preach all of that?

With all this before us from thoughtful men of religious denominations, the wonder is, how can men who claim to speak where the Bible speaks and to be silent where it is silent, who know what the church is and what its mission and work are, who claim to preach nothing but the gospel and who know quite well what the gospel is, who know what the acceptable worship of God is and who claim to worship him "as it is written" in the new covenant sealed by the blood of Christ, place themselves under, or work in connection with, a human religious institution, and especially with one subject to so many criticisms?

The one thing now to do is to cling to the church, the pillar and ground of the truth, as it has always been and always will be; to preach Christ crucified, and nothing else; to study and pray together until all are of one mind and heart and soul; to endeavor "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" and to glorify God "in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever. Amen." (Eph. 3: 21.)

Does Fighting and Dying for One's Country Atone for Sin?

BY J. C. M'Q.

It has been suggested that our young men who have been called upon to shed their blood in France, fighting and contending in the cause of right, are thereby purified and saved. John Oxenham, of England, says:

For blood that is shed in the cause of right Has power of old to wash sins white.

Far be it from me to detract anything from the splendid valor and glory attained by our young men for their love of freedom and the truth and for their determination to uphold the right. For them I have only words of praise and commendation. A good brother, however, requests me to write an article showing the fallacy of the position that our young men are saved simply because they died in fighting for the right.

It is not possible for one man to die for the sins of others. Jesus Christ is the only possible sacrifice or atonement for sins. When bowed in the garden of Gethsemane beneath the sins of the whole world, he prayed the Father to "let this cup pass away from me," "If it be possible," which shows very clearly that there was no other sacrifice that could atone for the sins of the world. There have been many theories seeking to explain the atonement, but none of them explained. The wisest, simplest, and best thing to do is to accept just what the Bible says about it, which declares: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." (John 3: 16.) On this subject John S. Sweeney, in "Sweeney's Sermons," pages $6-88, says:

No man has ever been able fully to explain the sufferings and death of Jesus; and, possibly, the mystery may remain unsolved for all time. Then let it be called a mystery. That the just should have to suffer and die for the salvation of the unjust is a mystery, turn it any way you will. It is better to allow that it is beyond human comprehension than by attempted explanations to make it only more incomprehensible and objectionable. But is the doctrine to be rejected simply because it is a mystery? Is the fact that it is incomprehensible sufficient proof that it is false? Are we to reject as false everything that is to us mysterious? This will hardly be affirmed by the most rationalistic among us. For there is a great deal in nature as well as in grace that is full of mystery. Whoever attempts to bring all the ways of God within the comprehension of the human mind will ultimately find his attempt futile.

There are not only mysteries in nature wherever we look with our eyes open; but mysteries very much like that of the just suffering for the unjust, as taught in the Bible. All nature suffers, bleeds, and dies for man. Turn where we will, we see this. The very bosom of the earth has to be ripped up and torn open, and scratched about all the season, that man may be blessed—that he may live. out this chastisement, she yields only thorns and thistles and noxious weeds. The seed, too, must be threshed and smashed, and put to death, before it will reproduce itself And somebody must toil and for man's life and comfort. sweat, and hunger and thirst, and be worn out-and this is generally vicarious suffering-in producing the harvest. And when, after all, the harvest of grain is gathered, it must be threshed and mashed, and bolted and baked, fore it becomes a blessing for man. Then the tree and the vine must be pruned and bled that they may bear their fruit, and then the fruit must be mashed and squeezed to death that we may enjoy the juice or wine. Then, too, the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fish of the waters, are continually bleeding and dying that man may live. In fact, all good comes to us through toll and labor All life comes out of death. and sufferings. Every being comes into existence through pain and suffering of other beings. The man, therefore, who goes through this world with his eyes and ears open, looking upon the writhings and listening to the wails of nature for man, ought not to stumble and fall over the sufferings and death of Jesus for the salvation of sinners. Explain vicarious sufferings we may not even to our own satisfaction, but see it we must.

Somehow-and this should be enough for us-somehow, Jesus died to save sinners. It is God's plan. enough? Suppose we say that he could not be just and save the sinner in his sins, just as he cannot be just and bless the sluggard in his indolence and laziness; that he could not be just to the sinner himself; and that it was, in his wisdom, necessary that Jesus should live, and suffer, and die, to reach and reclaim him; should not even this view-imperfect and heterodox, as many would call it-inspire our hearts with love and gratitude? The sufferings The sufferings of Jesus, as they relate to God, in the scheme of redemp-tion, we may never understand; but, as they relate to us, we can see and feel a power in them. We can understand that the heart that feels something of the power of the sufferings and agony of Gethsemane and Calvary will be made a better heart for this world. Have not those scenes touched and tendered millions of hearts and made them better? Who will suffer willingly for the good of men, like those who believe the story of Gethsemane and the cross? As it relates to us, then we can see wisdom and power in the cross. As it relates to God and other beings in the universe, we may never fully comprehend it. The cross of Christ has turned thousands of hearts in streams of love toward sinners, that, before they felt the power of the love of Jesus, were like stones. But to conclude this side of our subject: If we can be content and satisfied with the simple New Testament statements on this subject, we shall avoid a great deal of unnecessary and bitter internal controversy and have less external opposition.

We may be assured that Jesus made salvation possible for all men and that without the shedding of his blood there is no remission. He is the only atonement for sin. "So Christ also, having been once offered to bear the sins of many, shall appear a second time apart from sin, to them that wait for him, unto salvation." (Heb. 9: 28.) "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive." (1 Cor. 15: 21, 22.) Jesus once for all robbed death of its sting and the grave of its victory. Through his death and resurrection a halo of light encircles the grave, and the sweet realization of the truth comes home to all that "when a man dies, he shall live again." Christ once for all answered the question propounded by Job when he queried: "If a man die, shall he live again?" All who enjoy a blissful immortality will enjoy it through obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ. For the gospel is God's power unto salvation to every one that believeth. "For if, by the trespass of the one, death reigned through the one; much more shall they that receive the abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness reign in life through the one, even Jesus Christ. So then as through one trespass the judgment came unto all men to condemnation, even so through one act of righteousness the free gift came unto all men to justification of life. For as through the one man's disobedience the many were made sinners, even so through the obedience of the one shall the many be made righteous." (Rom. 5: 17-19.)

While the death of the cross may stimulate and Inspire some to die for the rights and some to lay down their lives for the brethren, I know such death cannot ever make atonement for another. In the death of Christ, who is the one and perfect atonement and who died once for all, "God commendeth his own love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." (Rom. 5: 8.)

Christians should have too much respect for the scheme of redemption as worked out by the divine wisdom and executed by the divine love and power to intimate that it is possible to enjoy redemption from sin only through the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. If it had been possible for God to save the world and if man could be saved by fighting for a righteous cause without the death of Christ. he certainly would have spared his own Son from such an ignominious death. As we hear Christ agonizing on the cross, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" we have but a faint conception of the awful agony and suffering through which Christ was passing in order to redeem us. If this redemption could have been possible without the death of Christ and without the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation, certainly Christ would have been spared and other provisions would have been made for the redemption of mankind.

Christians should give their lives in the proclamation of the gospel, which is God's power to save. People everywhere should be encouraged to rely upon the atoning blood of the Lord Jesus Christ for the remission of their sins. They should be given to understand that they must be saved in and through the name of Jesus Christ. "And in none other is there salvation: for neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved." (Acts 4: 12.)

If we want the truth, every man ought to be free to say what he thinks without fear. If the advocates of one side are to be rewarded with mitres and the advocates on the other with rope or stake, truth will not be heard.—Anon.

Georgia and the Far Southern Field

A Thing That We, Too, Need to Be Taught.

"Lord, teach us to pray," is a request the disciples made of Christ as recorded in Luke 11: 1. The fact that this request was answered by his giving them what is known as "the Lord's prayer," or a part of it, to say the least, has made the impression that the disciples were seeking to learn how to pray. Some have claimed, however, that the desire, on the part of the disciples, was not so much the manner of prayer as it was their desire to get into the spirit and grace of prayer that they observed their Lord continually in. It seemed so naturally and easy for him to pray. They observed such a comfort and satisfaction that their Lord derived from prayer that they desired him to lead them into this grace also. Whether it was the manner or the spirit and grace of prayer, I care not to discuss. There is one thing, however. I wish to say on this point before passing it-viz.: if we have the spirit and grace of prayer, the manner will take care of itself. That our Lord found a sweetness in prayer, I doubt not; that it was natural and easy for him to pray, I firmly believe; and I am perfectly sure we need that he teach us how to get into that grace and naturalness in which he ever seemed to be, so far as prayer is concerned. Some of us do not love to pray. It does not seem to come naturally. It is, indeed, too much like the "barren waste"-scorched and burning for lack of the dew of heaven upon it.

Now, my brother, have you ever had such feelings about prayer? Does this hit you at any time and place along life's way? I confess it hits me. There have been times when it was easy for me to neglect to pray, to simply forget it. Do you think our Lord could have neglected it? Was it not as natural with him as breathing? There have been times when my prayers, and the prayers of others to whom I Hstened, seemed so dry and without life. Do you suppose Christ ever so felt? I cannot conceive how He who could lift his eyes toward heaven and so gently and sweetly say, "Father, I thank thee that thou heardest me, And I knew that thou hearest me always," could have ever felt as some of us have felt toward prayer. We need to let him lead us into this grace in prayer. Let us study him continually. Let us drink fully and freely of his Spirit by making his word, his teaching, our meat and our drink. Let us keep with us that living consciousness that the Father is in heaven, and that he lives there to love us, listen to us, and give us freely all that we really need. Nothing makes prayer so easy and natural, joyous and sweet, as the undoubting faith that "God is," and that he is listening to us now. There is a naturalness, a sweetness, in my sitting down and writing a letter to loving mother, to my faithful wife or my devoted son. This is due to my consciousness that, though I may be separated from them, they live and love, that the message I send will be gladly considered. Then there is love and tenderness in my soul for them. Just so of prayer. When we love not God, how can we love to talk to him in prayer?

"Lord, teach us to pray," in the sense we have tried to discuss in the above lines, without any doubt, should be incorporated in our prayers to-day. Christ knew not how to hate, to speak evil of his fellow man. All bitterness, wickedness, guile, hypocrisy, envy, and evil speaking was put far away from him; hence, prayer was joyfully natural with him. Self was entirely out of the way; while we, many times, have to tumble and flounder over these bowlders and flinty mounds that lie in our way as we strive to walk in the path of prayer to the throne of God's grace.

How to Pray.

But do we not also need to be taught how to pray? Appropriate prayers do not abound as they should. The preacher is about to address an audience of several hundred people. He wants God's blessing to rest upon the effort. He calls on one of the elders sitting near him to lead a short prayer. All over the world the brother rambles in prayer and, perhaps, touches slightly, or hints at, the occasion before him. Did you ever see anything like this? I have, and felt most unlike preaching when the torture ended. Have you ever dropped in to see a sick brother or sister, and after reading a few verses from God's truth, called on a brother to lead a short prayer, and be led away over the hills and mountains of the earth and from all eternity to eternity and back again, and then hear a few words hurriedly uttered in behalf of the sick in the home, after the leader had about exhausted himself? I have, with so much discomfiture that I have to know whether a man knows how to pray on such occasions before I call on him.

The point I am trying to make is this; there is a fitness of things, and wisdom demands that we lose not sight of it. Let the prayer suit the occasion. I cannot now think of an occasion of a public gathering when some of the rambling prayers I have heard would be appropriate. There have been times when I remained on my knees for quite a while; there have been times when I called by name before God's grace every child of God in my field of labor and dozens of others I had met and learned to love in other fields; but this was in the secret chamber, and, I am sure, was appropriate. I have been wendering if some folks never pray in secret is the reason they have so much to say when they pray in public. Well, I am sure, if we will do more whole-hearted secret praying, we will certainly become able to pray more appropriate public prayers. "Well," you say, "for what shall we pray in our public prayers?" I simply answer that, if you are interested in the occasion of the coming together, you will pray for what is before you, for the work that is now the object of the occasion; and if you are interested in this as you should be, you will not be able to think of so many other things.

How to Sing.

I am sure that what is said about praying applies, to a large degree, to singing. We certainly have failed to get the fact well in our minds that Paul says, "in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." Don't forget it—"in all wisdom" this must be done. Take the selections that you sometimes hear the song leader make, and you will be astonished at the lack of wisdom, the inappropriateness of the selections. Sing like you pray—viz., songs that suit the occasion, and let them come from the deep of the soul.

Songs for the Season.

Along with our talking and rejoicing over peace and the fact that our boys are coming home, let us sing songs written especially for this glorious hope. Sister Mary Farmer, of this city, who has a brother in France, has written well, "The Boys Are Coming Home," with music by Brother Flavil Hall; and Brother Hall has done equally as well in writing "The Soldier Boy is Coming Home," to which he has set appropriate music. Send us twenty-five cents and get these splendid songs and sing and rejoice with us. Address S. H. Hall, 28 Ashby Street, Atlanta, Ga.

Query Department

Brother McQuiddy: (1) Can you tell me who translated the Interlinear Greek New Testament, published by Arthur Hinds & Co., New York? (2) What Greek dictionary gives "sprinkle" or "pour" as a definition of ary gives "baptize?" T. F. MCANALLY.

(1) A new "New Testament Interlinear Greek-English with Lexicon and Synonyms" was compiled and edited by George Ricker Berry, Ph.D., of the University of Chicago and Colgate University, Department of Semitic Languages, editor of the Interlinear Hebrew-English Old Testament. (2) I know of no Greek dictionary which defines "baptizo" "to sprinkle." "Baptizo" does not mean "to sprinkle," as all scholars well know. Thayer, the standard lexicographer of the New Testament Greek, defines "baptizo" "to dip repeatedly, to immerge, submerge, to cleanse by dipping or submerging, to wash, to make clean with water" Ø 0

Brother McQuiddy: Please explain the difference in Brother Vincent's going to France in the name of the Y. M. C. A. and preaching the gospel to the soldiers and his going to Japan and preaching it to the Japanese. he glorifying Christ more through the Y. M. C. A. than he would to have gone back to Japan under the direction of J. G. MALPHURS. the missionary society?

This query is respectfully referred to Brother C. G. Vincent, as he is the proper person to answer it. I will say, however, that Brother Vincent or any one else should preach the gospel in France or in Japan in obedience to the command of the Lord Jesus Christ, who says: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." If he is going to France expecting to glorify Christ through the Y. M. C. A. or any other human institution, he will find no warrant for such expectation in the New Testament. Christians should glory only in the cross of Christ.

Brother McQuiddy: I notice in the Ballard-Borden debate that Ballard claims that the latter part of the sixteenth chapter of Mark is uninspired. Please tell me if this is E. E. DILDINE.

No scholar has ever felt justified to attempt to expunge from the book of Mark the latter part of the sixteenth chapter, from the ninth to the twentieth verse, inclusive. Some objections have been raised as to the authenticity of this section for the principal reason that it is not found in the Sinaitie or Vatican manuscripts. Some scholars tell us that Jerome, who lived in the fourth century, affirms that it was wanting in most of the Greek copies of his day, and this testimony adds also to the difficulty. The evidence for its authenticity is so overwhelming, however, that the scholars who made the Revision and those who brought out the King James Version were not willing to expunge this section as not authentic. Scholars hold that the section is found in the Alexandrian and the Cambridge manuscripts, which are said to be as old as those that omit it. It is also found in twelve uncial manuscripts and in all the cursive manuscrips. Also, in addition to this evidence, the section is quoted by Irenæus and Tatlan as written by Mark. Irenæus and Tatlan lived in the second century. The section is also quoted by Hippolytus and Dionysius of Alexandria, who lived in the third century. As all these writers lived before Jerome, their testimony should outweigh his. Scholars also tell us that the ancient versions from the Greek, as the Peshito Syriac, the old Italic, the Sahidic, and Coptic, all of which were written before the time of Jerome, contained this section. Therefore, it is clear that no man with any respect for authority would dare expunge this section from the book. It is generally thought that Mark wrote this closing section from verses 9-20; but before he did so, his Gospel got into the hands of copyists, who wrote as they found it. This will account for two facts-(1) that there were copies of Mark's Gospel without these closing verses, and (2) these verses being afterwards written by him, they were known and affirmed to have been written by Mark. We, therefore, with the King James translators and with the revisers of the American Standard Version, accept this section with all confidence and use it as inspired truth.

Brother McQuiddy: Is it scriptural to use a pool in the church to baptize in? Matt. 3: 6; Mark 1: 4; and Luke 3: 3 say that Jerusalem, Judea, and all round about Jordan were baptized of John in Jordan. It looks as though they could have built a pool in Jerusalem instead of traveling a controversy, but I want a candid answer.

J. E. Sanders. twenty miles to Jordan. I am not asking this to cause

The passages referred to by the querist are as follows: Matt. 3: 6: "And they were baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins." Mark 1: 4: "John came, who baptized in the wilderness and preached the baptism of repentance unto remission of sins." Luke 3: 3: "And he came into all the region round about the Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance unto remission of sins." The people of Jerusalem, Judea, and of all the region round about the Jordan were baptized by John in the Jordan. Mark tells us that John baptized in the wilderness. Mark further tells us that the people of Jerusalem and Judea were baptized by John in the river Jordan. The Bible nowhere says that John baptized with the wilderness or with a river. It is impossible, however, to baptize people without baptizing with, or in, water. Water is the element in which the baptizing is done. "For John baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized in the Holy Spirit not many days hence." (Acts 1: 5.) In John 3: 23 we read: "And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there; and they came, and were baptized." When God poured out the Holy Spirit upon the Gentiles at the household of Cornelius. Peter inquired: "Can any man forbid the water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Spirit as well as we?" (Acts 10: 47.) Thus it is seen that water is an indispensable necessity to baptism. As to the quantity of water required for baptism, we should be guided by the Scriptures. From the Scriptures we learn that when people were baptized they "came unto the water," they went where there was "much water," they "went down into the water," were "buried in baptism," were "born of water," and they came "up out of the water." Wherever, therefore, we find sufficient water for a burial or a birth, we find sufficient water for baptism. This water may be in a pool, it may be in a river or a creek. There were many pools about Jerusalem, among which I may mention Bethesda and Siloam. It is very probable that the people on the day of Pentecost were baptized in these pools. Professor McGarvey tells us that pools were abundant in Enon near to Salim. In years gone by I have baptized in running streams because there was abundant water for the purpose. At a later period I went to the same stream to baptize, but could not, as I found the stream as dry as a powder horn. Instead of attempting to baptize with the creek or with a river, I went where there was sufficient water to bury the candidate in baptism. It is scriptural to bury in baptism in a pool when there is sufficient water there, or in a river when there is sufficient water there. The Bible requires us to baptize in water.

AT HOME AND ABROAD

Brother McQuiddy is sick with bronchitis.

G. C. Brewer, of Winchester, Tenn., called to see us last week.

We have nothing from Brother Jelley relative to the date of return from India.

Change of address: E. Gaston Collins, from Huntland, Tenn., to 507 West Clinton Street, Huntsville, Ala.

H. T. King, of Franklin, Ky., came to see us Monday. He reports that the church at Franklin is in a growing condition.

John E. Dunn would like to get in touch with your boy in France. Address Brother Dunn at 12 Rue de Aguesseaux, Paris, France.

Brother Elam has returned from an enjoyable meeting at Highland Home, Ala. He will preach for the congregation at King's Hall, in the Highlands, Louisville, Ky., the first Sunday in January.

Married, at Russell Street Church, in Nashville, on Wednesday evening, December 4, Mr. Edward Walker to Miss Sammie Estridge, A. B. Lipscomb officiating. The Gospel Advocate extends heartiest congratulations.

The trustees of the Tennessee Orphans' Home request that a special offering be made the first Sunday in the new year for their little charges. This request should not be overlooked. How could one make a better start or provoke a happier feeling than by remembering the little children whom Jesus loyed?

From R. E. Wright, Y. M. C. A. Hut No. 261, Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., November 27: "Please state to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that I am now located at Camp Sevier. If you know of any members of the church here, write me and give me their names and camp address, company and regiment, and I will be glad to look them up and do my best for them. We will have the Lord's Supper every Sunday in Hut 261 and will be glad to have them meet with us. I have one day off in the week, and will spend this time also in looking up 'our boys' and encouraging them to be faithful as Christians."

From Arthur J. Veteto: "Please state to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that I am now located in Nashville, at 4506 Nevada Avenue, and suggest that congregations desiring my help in meetings next year let me hear from them as early as possible, so as to save some railroad fare. During the winter months I am to work here in the city in the daytime and conduct vocal classes for congregations here in the evenings, along as needed and called upon. We have a very fine class now on Charlotte Avenue, which is in its third week. Again, if the brethren will suggest to me some mission places having no one to preach for them, I will be glad to render the very best service I can in that capacity also."

From F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va., December 5: "I have received help in my work as follows: From Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Miller and daughter, $6; George Douglas, $5; Elias E. Ashcraft, $1; Mrs. M. E. Henry, $5; Allen B. Soper, $10; church of Christ at Sellersburg, Ind., $10. This help is highly appreciated. May God bless and prosper all the donors. If others will help as these have done, I can do better work when the influenza passes. It seemed to be abating some days ago and we had a few meetings, with small audiences. It seems to be much worse now, and people are still dying all around us. Many are actually perishing in their sins: I cannot help lamenting over these conditions. If I could have had the help I needed two years ago, I could have reached many who have since died. Please write me now."

From M. S. Mason, Rogersville, Mo., December 2: "I closed a meeting at Flint Hill, Dade County, on November 12. Much interference of different kinds prevented additions. I closed at Edwards Chapel, near Northview, in Webster County, with small crowds, but good interest, after a week's meeting, on November 28, on account of being called home because of my family's being sick with influenza. I will do no more protracted-meeting work till July, 1919, except a week's meeting at Bona, in Dade County, during the holidays. I shall fill appointments each Lord's day among congregations near home. I will be at Bona next Lord's day, if in the meantime I do not take the 'flu.' For the information of my friends whom I was obliged to disappoint last year because they called me after my time was taken, and also any new ones I have made since that time, I will say that I shall doubtless have my time for protracted-meeting work for 1919 booked by February 1; so, if they desire my services, they had better write me before that time."

From W. F. Ledlow, president of Thorp Spring Christian College, Thorp Spring, Texas: "We do not have the largest attendance this year, but we have the best school we have ever had. Our enrollment has reached one hundred and thirty-two. We have a fine set of young people and are having a very fine time. Not a case of discipline this year; no one demerited. We seek to create an atmosphere that is conducive to good living. I have as helpers some of the best men in Texas. There are no better teachers in the brotherhood than R. C. Bell, J. O. Garrett, and Batsell Baxter; at least, we do not think that there are any better. Our lady teachers are very fine. In fact, we think the school is better now than ever. We mean to grow and improve all the time. We have the promise of several new students after Christmas, and a number of the boys now in the army service will return and enter school. We should like to have a good number enter after the holidays. Come and be with us. We shall be glad to mail a catalogue to any one who wants one. Write for it."

A SOLDIER'S LETTER.

Camp Wadsworth, S. C., December 2.-I thought possibly it would be of interest to some of the many readers of the Gospel Advocate to receive a short letter from me stating something of conditions of affairs in camp. I entrained for service from McMinnville, Tenn., on October 25. There were a few members of the church of Christ in our company at first, but some have been transferred and others discharged from service. Only three or four remain. Shortly after I came to camp I fell a victim to the almost world-wide epidemic, "flu," and was in the base hospital for ten days. While there I was visited by Brother Philip Copeland, who is now in the post office at the base hospital. He came in touch with me through a letter of his published in the Gospel Advocate a few weeks ago. He is a splendid Christian boy. By working together, we have located, in different parts of the camp, about ten or twelve members of the church of Christ. They all met in my tent for worship last Lord's day at 7:30 P.M. (that being the only time we all could meet, on account of some being on special duty). We had a good service, but on account of not being able to procure a loaf we had to omit the Supper. I was very sorry that we could not partake of the Supper, for I consider that a very vital part of the worship. Last night we worshiped over in the Fourth Casual Detachment with a brother. We had everything in readiness and observed the Lord's Supper, which was a great pleasure to me. We hope to be able, if we remain in camp very long, to locate more members and procure a permanent place to worship. Best wishes to all readers of the Advocate.—Thomas J. Wagner, Sixty-second Pioneer Infantry, Company H.

Is Rereditary Depravity to Blame?

BY J. J. VANHOUTIN.

Hity years ago it was a very commorthing to hear a discourse preached on ereditary depravity and original sin, but now such things are seldom mentaned. Yet people desire to shift the reponsibility of their wrongs upon some ne else. It appears like the first mn, Adam, tried to throw the responsbility of his sin upon his companion, who tried to shield herself by placing he sin upon the serpent, who, John say, is called "the Devil, and Satan." 'he woman was honestly deceived, by Adam knew better. Who did Adaminherit his sin from, as it was originaly the first? The idea of inheriting in was taught in the days of Ezekiel, and a false proverb (or saying) wasused to prove it: "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children'steeth are set on edge." (Ezek. 18: 2. The Lord said they should not use hat proverb any more. I am inclined o the opinion that if they pulled the yeteeth because they were too sharp, that they could see very clearly that the grapes did not injure the teeth; bt if they had pulled the "jaw teeth," thre might not have been so much "Jwing" about inheriting sin. Person capable of being governed by law canot by the right exercise of their lental faculties blame any one for teir own individual acts. "Sin is he transgression of the law." And individual actions or violations of law are not the results of other people's individual acts. About forty-nine years ago a man in a debate tried to show that infant sprinkling was ordained in order to wash away original sin, and that on account of that hereditary depravity he was baptized in infancy. In reply, I said that I did not believe his views in regard to his hereditary depravity, but, as I had known him from early boyhood days, that I was free to admit that he was quite a sinner yet." Because Adam sinned willfully is no reason that any man should blame him for his own willful violations of God's law. Adam's sin was no greater than theirs. Why blame Adam when they are doing the same! "The sen shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him." (Ezek. 18: 20.) God knew that sin had its seat in the soul, and is implanted there by actual violations of his law. Adam paid the full penalty for his own sin; so did the angels that sinned. "So, then, every one of us shall give account of himself to God."

For Colds and Grippe Doctors Find Remedy

Physicians and druggists are elated over the fact that they have at last found a genuine and dependable remedy for colds, sore throat, influenza, and la grippe. years they have depended chiefly upon the old-style calomel, which is certainly fine; but, unfortunately, many people would not take it because of its nauseating and dangerous qualities.

Now that the pharmaceutical chemists have perfected a nausealess calomel, called 'Calotabs." whose medicinal virtues are vastly improved, the doctors and druggists are claiming that Calotabs are the ideal remedy to abort a cold overnight and cut short an attack of sore throat or la grippe. are also finding it most effective as the first step in the treatment of pneumonia.

One Calotab on the tongue at bedtline, with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea, nor the slightest interference with your sating or your work and pleasure. The next morning your cold has vanished and your whole system is purified and refreshed. Calotabs are sold only in original scaled packages; price, thirty-five cents. Your druggist recommends and guarantees them by refunding the price if you are not delighted .-- Advi.

Renwar Relieves Rheumatism.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve, or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says: "One 50-cent bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatment; and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." Who Can Improve Our Mission Plan?

BY J. G. MALPHURS.

The missionary zeal of a few brethren and sisters is to be commended, rather than discouraged. I wish we had thousands more like them. I do not care to pose as a critic, were I able: yet there is a deficiency that is becoming more apparent to many. With more missionaries on the field and more calls for more, it seems that the plan becomes more inadequate. Brother Kurfees had two commendable articles on the subject a few weeks past, and I was in hopes that the matter would be taken up by other able brethren and a better plan handed over to the churches. Could such be done without interfering with the local church rights? But let us number a few of the difficulties in the present system.

1. It is too hard for one to tell just how much a missionary is getting or how much he is expecting to get. There seems to be a vagueness on the part of the individuals as to how much is wanted from him for the needs of the missionary. One thing we are sure of is that the missionaries do not get what they deserve. We are told that some one needs funds; some funds are received by several different persons; and whether these are sufficient or not, the individual has to wait for weeks or months before he is informed through the papers that the amount was satisfactory for the needs of the missionary. These reports are published in different papers, some in all the larger papers. But suppose the average church member takes all the Christian papers, how many take the time to total up all the reports from the different contributors?

2. The present system places too many burdens on the missionary. Just think how much trouble it must be for the missionary to keep account of every contribution and have to Include these names in his general report, especially when these funds are sent by a half dozen different agents. Do we send our laborers over the seas to make out long reports to a half dozen agents and write appeals for more funds? His support should be forthcoming in a businesslike way with the least possible effort on his part, that he might be able to put in all his time preaching the gospel. Would it not be a better plan to let one agent receive funds for one missionary, and acknowledge each donation with a card, instead of burdening the publishers with a long list of contributors?

3. There is a lack of individual responsibility. When there is a call for funds for a needy missionary, the churches and brethren in Florida are liable to think: "The brethren in Tennessee are responsible; the appeal is to them; of course they will overdo the matter without the help of our little finger." But the Tennessee churches are expecting Texas to do half, or, at least, a good part; hence, the burden is shifted-no one feels the responsibility strong enough. Some one may even luquire: "Who sent him over there, anyway?" When a man is sent over there, he goes on the strength of contributions ranging from a fev cents up, and from Canada to Florida from Maine to California. The swport and responsibility are equaly scattered.

I long to see the day when while congregations will assume the responsibility of supporting the gopel in the foreign fields, and put e'ery dark spot on the earth to singing "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." We can do it, and not have to do it through the missionary society or the Y. M. J. A. Let us use system and busines in God's work; they work as well it religion as in the store and bank.

Courtesy a Business Asset.

Courtesy is the life of trade. To be sure, you must have the goods, but courtesy helps to sell them. A certain big establishment has a man whose chief business is to meet people and make them feel at home. He has a pleasant post a short distance from the door, and it is his business to see every one that comes in. He has a handshake and a smile for everybody. When people come in that do not seem to know where they want to go, he talks with them and learns their needs and sees that they get in touch with the proper clerks. The crowd buys there because it is made to feel that the store is interested in them; and they pay less for the goods, too, because they buy in such large quantity that the store can afford to sell at lower rates and still make money. That is the reason it sells more furniture, carpets, and general furnishings than all the other stores combined in that town. Courtesy and service is the watchword, and they find there is money in it .- Pennsylvania Grit.

Schoolboys on the Farms.

Care must also be taken with boys who go to work on farms. Over two hundred thousand boys responded patriotically to this call last summer. Some made good, while others did more harm than good. In general, it seemed to depend on the kind of boy, the way the farmer handled him, the kind and amount of work required. the method of training and supervision, and the opportunity for proper care and recreation. The experiences of last summer prove the advisability of being sure that boys are physically fitted for the work in hand, and that they are to live and work under conditions which make for their moral welfare. Every effort must also be made to combat the inevitable tendency of boys not to return to school in the fall. In New York City, for example, the month of September witnessed about ten thousand fewer pupils in its high schools than in the previous year.—Christian Herald.

We learned that Brother D. S. Brother Ligon did not wait till we had the money made up for him before he would start, but he heard the cry, "Come over and help us," and, while he could have been in a meeting at that time, he came on here at once and is now with us. Brother Ligon made a speech on the streets and one at the war tabernacle when they had the rally and union peace thanksgiving service, and he completely captured the soldier boys and the whole We speak of this, brethren, that you may know that we feel that we have the right man in the right place to do the work so badly needed here. We judge that the breth-ren in other States know that New Mexico is largely a destitute field, with but few churches of Christ in the whole State, but this place is especially an "open door" for good to be done. URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a Glass of Salts if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You -Drink Lots of Water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back, or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive. It cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

Don't Stay Gray! Here's a Simple Receipt that Anybody Can Apply With a Hair Brush.

The use of sage and sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy, and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded, or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out of date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a fifty-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of dis-

"The Seven Spirits."

Brother McQuiddy: In the Gospel Advocate of November 28, in the "Query Department," Mrs. B. A. Goad asks you to "explain what is meant in Rev. 1: 4 by 'the seven Spirits." You gave her what B. W. Johnson and Adam Clarke say it means, and that they differ. Will you please let me give the querist and all others who might wish to know, through the Advocate, what the Lord in his word says about it? Rev. 1: 4: "Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne." Rev. 3 1: "These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars." Rev. 1: 14: "And his eyes were as a flame of fire." Rev. 4: 5: "And there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God." Rev. 5: 6: "In the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth."

Now, when we see that the number seven is used in the Bible to indicate completeness, we can begin to see the beauty and harmony in all this. Horns signify power; then the Lion of the tribe of Judah has all power. Eyes signify light, knowledge, and wisdom; therefore he has all light, all knowledge, and all wisdom. The seven Spirits, then, are a symbolic description of his wonderful power and wisdom. Please read the whole of the verses I have quoted from and get the beauty of that wonderful picture.

G. W. WALKER.

I do not know the meaning and so answered the querist. Brother Walker claims to know; so I cheerfully publish what he says and leave the reader to draw his own conclusion.

When a Child "Fails."

When a child fails in school, must it always be the fault of the child? May it not be the fault of his parents or of the school which he attends? Investigations have shown that there is a host of children whose mental sluggishness is due to physical causes. Even conservative estimates place the percentage of children suffering from some physical ailment at seventy-five; this means about eighteen million children of school age in this country. Almost all of these ailments are removable, even preventable. They range from decayed and maladjusted teeth, with their manifold sad effects upon the efficiency and the temper of the growing child, to such serious defects as nervous disorders, tuberculosis, blindness, etc.—Selected.

After all, what do we ask of life, here or indeed hereafter, but leave to serve, to live, to commune with our fellow men and with ourselves, and from the lap of earth to look up into the face of God?—Michael Fairless.

Letters From Rheumatics.

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter; but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of rheumatism, you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many including indigestion, gout, diseases. uric-acid poisoning, and liver and kidney diseases; but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their rheuma-

"House of the Lord."

BY S. WHITFIELD.

"One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple. For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion: in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me up upon a rock. And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me: therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of joy: 1 will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the Lord." (Ps. 27: 4-6.)

We learn from this that it was David's great desire to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of his life, and that he expected to be blessed in doing this. I remember of hearing a sister say that her family got along better when they went to the place of worship. This sister's idea is in harmony with this passage, as well as with all the word of God. How could it be otherwise? It becomes every child of God to remain in the house of the Lord, and come before God with honor, glory, thanksgiving, and praise, for all of these are due him for all that he has done.

"Blessed is the man whom thou choosest, and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts: we shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple." (Ps. 65: 4.)

By the "house of the Lord" David means the temple. That was the house of the Lord, the place of prayer, praise, worship, and the place where God met the children of Israel. David was satisfied with the blessings that came upon him by dwelling in God's house. We will all be satisfied with the blessings that God bestows on us by remaining in his service, If we study and appreciate the promises of Jehovan in the truth.

"For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. For the Lord God is a sun and shield: the Lord will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee." (Ps. 84: 10-12.)

A day in God's service is better than a thousand spent in wickedness. The most humble position in doing God's will is better than living in sin. All the blessings that are good for us come to us by living a righteous life. What a blessed thing it is to put our trust in the Lord and try to do his will!

Let us go into the house of the Lord." (Ps. 122: 1.)

David was glad when he had an opportunity to go into the house of the Lord. It gave him pleasure to do the Lord's will. Some are still glad to go up to the place of worship, but how many there are that do not meet with the Lord's people! They have all manner of excuses for not doing their duty in this respect.

"Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever." (Ps. 23:6.)

Yes, goodness and mercy will follow us all the days of our lives, if we are faithful to our Creator. Let us be a part of God's house and continue in it all the days of our life.

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is hely, which temple ye are." (1 Cor. 3: 16, 17.)

Here we are taught that God's children are the temple of God, and that God's Spirit is dwelling in us. The temple was a type of the church. Each child of God is a part of God's temple. So, while David met and abode in the temple of God, we make up the temple of God now; and as David was glad to meet or go up to the temple of God, so we should be glad to meet together to worship God through Jesus Christ. It is our duty to try to keep the temple of God holy. We can do this by living as God directs.

"Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." (Eph. 2: 19-22.)

Under the old covenant the Jews went up to the temple; but under the new every child of God, of any nation, is in the temple of God, and partakers of all the privileges of God's children, and all may enjoy all the blessings of God. We are builded on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, which foundation is Christ, and he is the head and chief corner stone. Thus the whole building is a glorious structure where God dwells through the Spirit.

"But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how then oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim. 3; 15.)

Since we are the temple of God, we ought to be careful how we conduct ourselves. Let God, Christ, and the truth direct and control our whole lives. We have been bought by the blood of Christ, and we should remember that we are not our own.

"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." (Heb. 10: 25.)

"I was In the Spirit on the Lord's day." (Rev 1: 10.)

Where are we on the Lord's day? We should be glad that it is the first day of the week, or the Lord's day; and we should come before the Lord with praise, thanksgiving, and worship him in spirit and in truth.

Folks never understand the folks they hate.-Lowell.

Doctor Says Crying Need Of The Woman of Today Is More Iron In Her Blood

TO HELP STRENGTHEN HER NERVES AND PUT COLOR IN HER CHEEKS

Any woman who tires easily, is nervous or irritable, or looks pale, haggard, and worn should at once have her blood examined for iron deficiency. Administration of simple Nuxated from will often increase the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, careworn women in two weeks' time and help make them look years younger.

In commenting on the unusual de-mands being made today of women in every walk of life, Dr. Ferdinand King, New York Physician and Medical Author says: "There can be no healthy, beautiful, rosy cheeked women without iron. I have strongly empha-sized the fact that doctors should presized the fact that doctors should prescribe more organic from—Nuxated from—for their nervous, run-down, weak, largard-looking women patients. Pallor means anaemia. The skin of anaemic women is pate, the flesh flabby. The muscles lack tone, the brain fags and the memory fails, and often they become weak, nervous, irritable, despondent and melancholy. When the from goes from the blood of women, the roses go from their cheeks.

"I have used Nuxated Iron widely in my own practice in most severe aggravated conditions with unfalling results. I have induced many other physicians to give it a trial, all of whom have given me most surprising reports in regard to its great power as a health and strength builder.

Ugh! Calomel Makes You Deathly Sick

Stop using dangerous drug before it salivates you! It's horrible!

You are bilious, sluggish, consti-pated, and believe you need vile, dan-gerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here is my guarantee: Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. If it does not start your liver and straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick, I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day, and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Do not lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It is perfectly harmless; so give it to your children any time. It cannot salivate; so let them eat anything afterwards.

OBITUARIES

Chism.

The price of world freedom was heavy on me and mine. The following telegram speaks for itself: "Washington, D. C., 3:10 P.M., November 24.— Mr. Jehu W. Chism, 807 East Franklin Street, Hillsboro, Texas: Deeply regret to inform you that Private Matt H. Chism, infantry, is officially reported as killed in action November 1.—Harris, Adjutant General." "Hugh," as we called him at home, was a sunshiny boy, gentle of disposition, and a devout Christian. He was born at Pilot Point, Texas, on June 24, 1893. He became a Christian under the preaching of the lamented John T. Poe, when he was but a mere child, of possibly fourteen; and though his own mother was dead, he came under the love and devotion of a stepmother who was all that mother could be in deed, in act, and in love, and it is due to her untiring effort, advice, and prayers, mingled with her tears, that he was guided safely through the breakers of boyhood to become a devoted, Christian young man. When he registered for service in the army, he offered no excuse, believing, as he did, that God had ordained the governments of this world to overrule evildoers, and as a faithful citizen gave his life on the altar, a sacrifice to the cause of right against brutal might. He never forgot his God and the service of Christ, though in France and in the army. In his letters home he always mentioned it. "We have services in the 'Y' every Sunday evening," he wrote once; and in this last letter which we had from him, which was written to that faithful mother who had reared him and whom he loved, he said: "I wish I could be with you to go to church to-day." He never complained of his lot, though anxious for the war to be over and to return home. He was always solicitous of the welfare of others, seeming to think more of their comfort and safety than he did of himself. He wrote: "Bernie [Warlick] was transferred to the Stars and Stripes (that is the soldiers' newspaper here) just the day before we went over the top. I am glad, for Uncle Joe will not worry so now." That was the first That was the first trip over the top. But he went many times after that, for he was in the fighting from September 1 to the time he was killed, being back from the front for rest at intervals, and at which times he would write. His last letter was written on October 20, thirteen days before he was killed. He was willing to take what came his way in the army, even if it should be death, saying that some boy would be killed, and it might as well be himself as another. So unselfish in his disposition. And to his faithful and devoted stepmother he showed his appreciation of her untiring effort for him and his brothers and sisters in that

Chamberlain's Tablets

Criticism Must Be Kindly.

There is the story of a contentions man who said to his pastor: "I cannot preach or pray or sing, but I can raise objections." Such men are not rare. There is one, at least, in almost every church, club, lodge, or society of whatever kind. The critic is ever with us; and, candidly, we need him. We cannot do our best work without him. He is like the brake in the mechanism of a motor car. He holds us back when we would go too fast. If at times he delays our progress, he is necessary to our safety. His conservatism counteracts the possible evils of radicalism. Much might be said for the economy of criticism.

But the method of criticism is also important. The brake should work smoothly. The critic need not destroy the organism he proposes to reform. Often the effect of his criticism is wholly destructive. Sometimes his methods remind us of the man who set fire to a barn to rid it of rats. A sensitive spirit who had been harshly treated by a critic retorted: "I know there is a cinder in my eye, but you can't remove it with a crowbar."

The apostolic injunction, "speaking the truth in love," gives the critic a safe rule of action. No truth, however severe, is unwelcome, if it be spoken in love. It takes the spirit of Christ to take the sinner by the hand the while we take sin by the throat.—Christian Herald.

Juvenile crime doubled in Berlin from 1914 to 1915. In Munich there were as many youthful delinquents during the first three months of 1915 as in the whole of 1914. Dr. Albert Helling, a German police judge, says: "The excessive excitement of the childish imagination by events of war, especially as depicted in trashy literature, is one of the brutalizing influences acting on our young life. Our Soldler Boys.

BY J. H. LAWSON.

What shall we do for the boys while they are in camp? There has never been a better time for the people of God to render real service to the boys in the army than for the next ten months, or until they are all safely

Our danger now is in neglecting them since the real fighting is over, thinking, no doubt, that they will soon be home, and that since the fighting has ceased there is no longer a need to pay any special attention to them. This is a great mistake. The young men will now have much time to think of other things than fighting and drilling, and experience has shown that during the idle hours there is great danger.

I am truly glad that we, as a religious people, have done as much for the young men as we have, but am sorry that we have not done more. I am glad that there are those who will continue to help in every way possible, and I hope that the brethren and sisters will see that these young men are provided for in every way possible.

I rejoice in the work that was done for the Thirty-sixth Division, which trained at Fort Worth, and I am glad that I had a part in breaking the bread of life to them for several months and that many of them accepted Christ before going over. This division has seen hard service in France; the death list is heavy, and each day it increases. My heart is made sad each day I read the list, for many have fallen who were with us in our services at the tabernacle; but I am glad that the churches of Christ stood by the work and helped make it a success.

These young men will soon begin their return to our own land, and I am anxious to he p them in every way I can. I have prepared myself for this service, and shall work in the camps in this country for a few weeks while waiting for passports to France. I hope to go to France about the first of the year, and it is my hope to go to the Thirty-sixth Division as early as possible, for these young men, many of them, have urged me to come and help them. Hundreds of them are in hospitals, and a visit from one they knew would be worth much to them. I hope to be in position to help them in any way they need help. My family will remain in Sherman, Texas, while I am away. It is a great sacrifice for wife and children for me to be away so long and so far; but I enlisted in this work until the boys come home, and I shall not desert them now when I know they need help as perbans never before:

Brother N. Z. Crass, of Sherman, is looking after the finances of this work, and there is need for much more financial support than has been given. I feel sure that the faithful will not forget their obligations to help a work that should be and is so dear to so many hearts, and I ask those who desire to be helpers in this work to remember that we must labor while it is day, and not wait until it is all over before we begin.

I am sure that Mrs. Lawson would appreciate a kind letter from the sisters. Some have written her, and these remembrances help us bear the burden.

I would appreciate the names and addresses of the boys in France, that I may hunt them up when in their part and encourage them. All mail should be addressed to me at Sherman, Texas, and it will be forwarded to me.

At present I am at Call Field, Wichita Falls, and have charge of the religious work of the entire field. Every State in the Union is represented in this camp, with the excepbion of Nevada. This is a flying field. and these young men have much idle time. I shall do for them all I can, but shall not be here very long.

May the Lord enable us to do more and better work than we have ever done, and may we henceforth make greater sacrifices for his cause than we have ever made.

My overseas traveling expenses have been provided, for which I am thank-

Thousands of Useless Men.

The man who starves on an unworked farm deserves and receives little sympathy. It is his own fault. America to-day needs men. The army gets its men, but the fields cry out for hands to till them, and in the factories idle machines proclaim their need. Women are taking up tasks not only unwonted, but in many cases unsuited to them, and are making good even in the hardest places. Boys and girls by thousands are entering the ranks of industry. Yet the nation needs men; and it has more than one hundred and ten thousand of them penned up in prisons.-Christian Herald.

160 Hens-1,500 Eggs.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Wayerly, Mo., writes: "I fed two boxes of 'More Eggs' to my hens and broke the egg record. 1 got 1,500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly twenty-one days." You can do as well. In fact, any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hers. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Egga" Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs; so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultryman, 6258 Reefer Building, Kansas City. Artificial Sponge Propagation.

The growing scarcity of sponges has warned those familiar with harvesting them that unless means are provided to augment the natural supply the sponge industry will be seriously crippled in a few years more. An Englishman, living in Florida, some time ago selected a site off the Florida coast, where he started a sponge farm At present he has about six hundred thousand sponges, which are capable by subdivision of increasing about tenfold every three years. At the end of three years an annual yield of two million sponges can be had .-- Portsmouth Chronicle.

- 2. The Appliance for retaining the rup-ture cannot be thrown out of position.
- 3. Being an air cushion of soft rubber it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation,
- Unlike the ordinary so-called pads, used in other trusses, it is not cumber-some or ungainly.
- 5. It is small, soft and pliable, and cannot be detected through the slothing.
- The soft, pliable bands helding the Appliance do not give one the unpleasant gensation of wearing a harness.
- 7. There is nothing about it to get foul, and when it becomes solled it can be washed without injuring it in the least.
- There are no metal springs in the Appliance to toriure one by cutting and bruising the flesh.
- All of the material of which the Appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe Appliance to wear.

Edifying as the Need May Be

Intercession.

The ministry of intercession is one of the oldest things in Bible history. Abraham's intercession for the doomed cities is the first recorded example. There is but one greater example of utter self-abnegation and intercession than that of Moses. In his life he twice brushed aside the proffered honor of the fatherhood of a new and greater nation and stayed the flood of God's wrath, long patient and long provoked. The climax is reached in the abandon of intercession: "If thou wilt forgive their sin-; and if not, blot me . . . out of thy book." There is no patriotism that transcends this. Moses could not survive an unpardoned nation, and rested not until the dread crisis was past and he had heard the reassuring words: "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." Jesus appropriated the phrase in extending his blessed invitation. The supreme example of intercession is Jessu in the petition for his apostles and for all "who believe on me through their word," and for his murderers amid the agonies of the crucifixion. Another fine example is Paul, who could wish himself "accursed from Christ" for his brethren.

Why is it that the ministry of intercession is so painfully neglected? Has it not almost gone out of fashion? Is it not still abiding both in its responsibilities and its possibilities? With right personal relations, it is a mighty instrument which all can yield. Now as in days of old "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." And the command is plain and unmistakable. "I exhort therefore, first of all, that supplications, prayers, intercessions, thanksgivings, be made for all men; for kings and all that are in high place; that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity." (1 Tim. 2: 1, 2.)

Livingstone's Lesson.

We may even profit by some good examples of the ministry of intercession outside of the Bible. The "Life of Livingstone" is conspicuous and illuminating along this line. He prayed for himself-that God would use him for the work of winning the world for Christ; that he might be resigned to God's will and emptied of self. He committed his family and friends to God with simple confidence. He prayed for his work in all of its branches. He prayed for his geographical work because he felt that by It he was opening up the country for future missionary operations. He prayed that he might be used to help break up the slave trade in Africa. It was largely because of his reports of the horrors of this traffic that it was finally abolished. The need of prayer for those to whom he had ministered and those to whom he had not yet had a chance to speak was so strongly felt by this great missionary that when on his deathbed he found strength to rise and kneel in prayer. And from his knees God took him.

Shall not these noted intercessions stir up our hearts by way of remembrance of an almost forgotten duty, to pray for all men everywhere? But let us be sure to lift up holy hands.

All Together.

It is said that a single bee working industriously all the summer can gather but a teaspoonful of honey. Yet it is nothing unusual to take from sixty to one hundred pounds of honey from a single hive. The coral is one of the most elementary forms of life, yet, because of its incalculable number and cooperative instinct, whole islands are formed. "The locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands;" and in so doing, because they work together, they become a menace and a scourge. How did Nehemiah repair the walls? He certainly did not perform this feat alone. "So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof; for the people had a mind to work."

The motte, "United, we stand; divided, we fall," applies to the work of a congregation with the same force that it applies to a nation. Coöperation among members is absolutely essential to success. To coöperate means to work together, to associate in mutual effort for one end. It is not doing the same thing, but different things with one purpose. No man can succeed alone. "The weakest has a gift that every other needs." There are everywhere buried talents, which, if evoked, would become effective agencies for righteousness. Every person in the church should be actively engaged. "But speaking truth in love, may grow up in all things into him, who is the head, even Christ; from whom all the body fitly framed and kuit together through that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in due measure of each several part, maketh the increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love." (Eph. 4: 15, 16.)

Manna.

$ $ B

The miracle of the manna demonstrated God's ability to furnish a table in the wilderness. God is able to provide a meal at any time and place he pleases. In the Bible we find that he has provided meals that were eaten in the deserts, in caves, on mountain slopes, and in most unexpected places. David says that God provided one for him in the presence of his enemies. To Israel the manna was an utterly strange food and expressed a twofold purpose: to afford needed sustenance, and in so doing to widen the separation from their former associations and practices. The "bread from heaven" sustained their energies, but did not hamper their appetites. Paul tells us that the manna represented "spiritual meat" because it answered to the realities of a spiritual world, and the "spiritual rock that followed them . . . was Christ," Christian sustenance is not of this world. Jesus said: "I am the bread of life." With the Israelites the manner of gathering the manna afforded full recognition of personal agency and effort. They were to bestir themselves to secure the needed supply before "the sun was hot." Delay meant deficiency. Though from heaven, the bread was to be prepared by human agency. The daily supply taught the lesson of daily trust, and stands as a prominent protest against the disposition which can be content only with "much goods laid up for many years." We may learn many things from the manna given in Israel. But it is most important that we learn that God does not drop food into our mouths without any effort on our part. Let us think of this when we pray, "Give us this day our daily bread."

Old Testament Characters—Abel "Yet Speaketh."
BY H. LEO BOLES.

"By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, through which he had witness borne to him that he was righteous, God bearing witness in respect of his gifts: and through it he being dead yet speaketh." (Heb. 11: 4.) In Genesis, Jehovah said to Cain: "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." And now, after many centuries, after a long train of events and checkered history of God's people, the voice of Abel is still heard. It was still speaking in Paul's day. and many faithful Jews heard this voice and received instruction from it. If the voice of Abel could continue in unbroken verbiage through the conturies to the day of Paul, why can it not continue this side of the cross and speak unto us? It proclaims unto us the same message that was silently impressed upon Cain's heart and the same message that every faithful Jew received up to the day of

It seems that Abel's life was cut short and that he did not get to fill full his mission on earth; yet what he lacked in accomplishing while he was in the flesh, he has filled full during the period of his death, for he "yet speaketh." How does he speak though being dead? By his faith and example, by his righteousness and martyrdom, by his heroic courage and his unwavering loyalty, and by his true worship and his devoted piety. Standing at the head of the list of the catalogue of God's heroes of faith. be speaks the message of faithfulness to God to all who succeed him in this list; like a sentinel he stands silently pointing the worshipers of God to the throne of heaven. from which emanates the sovereign will of God. He also speaks a warning and admonition to those who would be tempted from the will of God or falter in courage in con-(ending for the faith. There is also a message of encouragement to us that in obeying God we must do just what he has commanded us to do, giving us assurance that God will take care of those who consecrate themselves to his service. He speaks a message of hope to all who exercise such faith in God as he did.

The enemies of righteousness, when they lay low true children of God in death, think that they have put an eternal silence upon their voices or put to silence the lives that have stood approved of God. Cain thought that he was hushing forever the pleading voice of righteousness when he struck the fatal blow. But God has the power to make vocal for centuries the voice that the enemy thought had been stilled forever in death, this voice proclaiming the righteousness of God and condemning the self-willed rebellion of the wicked. The glorious achieverents of faithful, righteous Abel encourage the heroes of faith to-day; and in the picture gallery of Jehovah there stands Abel's life, with the outline and profile of his character drawn by the pen of inspiration, silently, yet clearly, speaking unto us an encouragement which would make us beld to die for the Lord.

As we first read the brief outline of Genesis concerning Abel, we are caused to regret that his life has been cut short. He has been taken from earth without any progeny, without any one to perpetuate his name; he is removed from earth at a time when it seems that he was most needed to furnish or supply descendants upon the earth. There is no place in the philosophy of men for the bud which has never flowered; there is no place for a niche in the Hall of Fame for the life which has been only in promise. Men look with disappointment upon a young life that has Just entered upon its mission of usefulness, which has been cut short before its mission has been fulfilled; yet God has power to fill out that life and preserve as an example such a brief career. God has made it possible for the dead to speak and the work to continue and not end when the life has closed. He can prolong the influence and make it outlive the temporal life. We are impressed with the wisdom and power of our God, who is able not only to use the living to accomplish his wisdom and will, but also to make the dead speak the message and example which was intended for the living to do.

All other things may wax old as doth a garment and be colled up as a scroll, yet ever vocal is the voice of Abel. He "yet speaketh," and his voice is clear and fresh to every one who by faith draws near unto his God and who can behold the beauties and glories of a righteous life. We are taught that much of this world's work is done by the departed. The work of the Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles continues fresh and glorious even to this hour and shall continue until he comes again. The triumphant march of the armies of the Lord must continue until the last enemy is subdued. The good that men do shall live after them and is not interred with their bones. "Some men's sins are evident, going before into judgment; and some men also they follow after. In like manner also there are good works that are evident; and such as are otherwise cannot be hid." (1 Tim. 5: 24, 25.) The lives of good men cannot be hid. We sometimes think that when a good man is gone his work will stop, but this is a mistake. Good deeds have longer lives than do evil ones. The poet has said:

> Though dead, they speak in reason's ear And in example live:-Their faith, and hope, and mighty deeds, Still fresh instruction give.

Longfellow, writing on the death of Charles Sumner, says:

So when a great man dies, For years beyond our ken The light he leaves behind him lies Upon the paths of men.

But a greater than these poets has given us the encouragement that faithful service in the Lord shall have its reward in time and eternity. "Wherefore, my beloved hrethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." (1 Cor. 15: 58.) should remember that when a life is interrupted by death, it is not a failure if lived in the service of the Lord; it is not the length of life which counts so much as the faithfulness and consecration in the Master's service. We are encouraged to think, as in the case of Abel, that some of the greatest forces of earth to-day are among those whom we call "the departed;" and when we are tempted to regret the death of a faithful servant of God, we may find hope and consolation in the example of Abel, who "being dead yet speaketh."

The Two Kinds of Believers.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother Moore undertook the matter of informing me on the "condition or state" of believers, in these words: "I will have to tell Brother Smith again the condition or state of a believer in God. Faith is the dividing line between the child of God and the alien sinner. On the one side he is condemned; on the other, he is justified." To this I replied:

With reference to the first sentence of this information, I must say it is too indefinite to be information at all. There are two kinds of believers-viz., the obedient believer and the faith-alone man; and until our brother informs us to which he refers, it will be impossible to determine the condition or state of his believer. For his consideration, I will specify the two classes of believers and ask him to designate which kind he had in mind. "Nevertheless designate which kind he had in mind. even of the rulers many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess it, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they loved the glory that is of men more than the glory that is of God." (John 12: "But thanks be to God, that, whereas ye were 42: 43.) servants of sin, ye became obedient from the heart to that form of teaching whereunto ye were delivered; and being made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness." (Rom. 6: 17, 18.) Take your choice, my brother, designate your believer, and I, as well as yourself, will know his "condition or state." While on this point I will ask my friend this question: Would you baptize such believers as those mentioned in John 12: 42, 43? If you would not, please tell us why you would not.

As a reply to this request, here is what my friend submits:

"There are two kinds of believers." Brother Smith contends that one believes before he repents, and defines that one must believe that God exists before he will repent toward God. Agreed. Now, in your believing, penitent confessor before men, is this the kind of believer you claim and will baptize? Is he condemned or justified before you baptize him? If yet in condemnation is your kind of a believer, then you baptize a believing unbeliever, a monstrosity, a being that cannot exist. Pshaw, Brother Smith, why not give up such foolish twaddle and tell penitent sinners to believe on the Lord Jesus and he shall be saved? (Acts 16: 31.)

I can answer no to your question of whipping my wife, for I have never begun, and one cannot quit anything that he has never begun.

Friend Smith makes much ado over obedient faith. Does he not know that faith in Jesus is obedience? Paul quotes Isaiah in Rom. 10: 16: "But they have not all obeyed For Isaiah saith, Lord, who hath believed our the gospel. report?" Then believing in Jesus is obeying the gospel. Isaiah preached Jesus to Israel, you know. By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months by his parents, because they saw that the child was beautiful; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment. By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharach's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he looked away to the recompense. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; for he endured, as seeing him who is invisible. (Heb. 11: 23-27.) That same gospel preached to Moses is the only gospel we have to-day, which proclaimed faith in Jesus alone, not Jesus and keeping the law; not Jesus and baptism, kingdom, church, or anything else than faith in Jesus, and Jesus alone.

We Baptists may amuse your readers, Brother Smith, in deciding on a candidate's fitness for baptism, but it's strange that they are not amused at your effort to deny you decide on one's fitness for baptism by saying the Bible does it. Well, Brother Smith, if your candidate makes the good confession, according to your understanding of the Bible confession, don't you agree with him that he makes the right confession? To be sure, you do. Then, is not this your decision of the case? Again, I ask, may not Baptist churches do what you do without your churches helping even by yoting on it?

You say: "I am authorized to baptize only believers; and in order to ascertain the fact, I simply ask the question." All right, then you decide that he does believe, and won't let your church participate in said decision. This smacks of autocracy, and should be discontinued in all democratic or independent bodies.

You say: "I am authorized to baptize only believers." As you do not hold to a called ministry, who authorized you to baptize any one? Answer, please.

Spiritual or physical power. Do I understand you to teach that all miracles are performed by physical power? I do need information. Now will you give it in your reply?

It is useless for Brother Moore to attempt the clouding of the issue with such a jargon as he presents in the first paragraph of his reply. He, as well as all of our readers, knows that I baptize only those who declare they believe with all their hearts that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. His effort here is a very poor substitute for a candid dealing with the questions before him, and I am sure his own brethren cannot fail to see the weakness of his attempt. He wishes to know why I do not "tell penitent sinners to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." For the simple reason that no such people ever did, do not now, and never will exist. Furthermore, I do it not, because no apostle or evangelist of the New Testament ever did such a foolish thing.

Brother Moore says I "make much ado over obedient faith," and to this charge I plead guilty, for the simple reason that the word of God makes much ado over it. He asks the question: "Does he not know that faith in Jesus is obedience?" Of course, it is obedience to the command to believe, but it is by no means the whole of obedience to Jesus. The New Testament talks about "the obedience of faith" (Rom. 1: 5; 16: 26), which means nothing less than the obedience produced by faith. Hence, faith, the internal act of faith, is one thing, while the "obedience of faith" is another. My friend says: "Then believing in Jesus is obeying the gospel." It all depends on what is meant by "believing in Jesus." If he means believing to the extent or degree that includes repentance and baptism, I agree with him. Otherwise, I deny his proposition and call for Bible proof for his assertion.

My friend quotes a prophecy from Isaiah, in which he seeks to make it appear that people in his day obeyed the gospel! This is a misuse of God's word for which my brother should be ashamed. The gospel in the days of Isaiah existed only in prophecy, and not as an existing fact until the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ. Paul defines the gospel in 1 Cor. 15: 1-4, and a part of that definition is the resurrection of Christ. Hence, without the actual death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, there could be no such thing as obedience to the gospel. Commenting on Rom. 6: 17, 18, Macknight, a most learned Presbyterian, has this to say: "Ye have obeyed from the heart the mold of doctrine, into which mold of doctrine ye were delivered. The original word tupos, among other things, signifies a mold into which melted metals are poured, to receive the form of the mold. The apostle represents the gospel doctrine as a mold, into which the Romans were put by their baptism in order to their being fashioned anew. And he thanks God, that 'from the heart'-that is, most willingly and sincerely-they had yielded to the forming efficacy of that mold of doctrine. and were then made new men, both in principle and practice." Macknight, although a Presbyterian, was too honest and too much of a scholar to pervert the word of God in order to sustain a human doctrine. Brother Moore is wasting his time and his splendid talents in an effort to have people "obey the gospel" without being baptized. Baptism is a part of the "obedience of faith," and without this obedience, there is not one promise of salvation to any gospel subject. I know this position is unpopular, because it does not appeal to the reason of poor, puny man; but it is the truth of Almighty God, and I shall boldly, fearlessly, and uncompromisingly preach it until I die.

Our brother sees no difference between prophecy and history, for he says: "That same gospel preached to Moses is the only gospel we have to-day, which proclaimed faith in Jesus alone, not Jesus and keeping the law; not Jesus and baptism, the kingdom, church, or anything eise than faith in Jesus, and Jesus alone." Why, then, does he baptize? Neither Moses nor any one else before the day of Pentecost was baptized into the name of Christ; and unless our friend denies that baptism is connected with the gospel in any way whatever, then there is a difference between what men had to believe and do in order to be saved in the days of Moses and since the coming of Christ. He seems wholly unconscious of the fact that when by his "faith alone" he excludes baptism from the gospel, he also excludes repentance. By the very same principle that excludes baptism, I will exclude repentance, and I challenge him to the test.

He says: "We Baptists may amuse your readers, Brother Smith, in deciding on a candidate's fitness for baptism, but it's strange that they are not amused at your effort to deny you decide on one's fitness for baptism by saying the Bible does it." It is not "amusing" to me, and I would regret to know that it was "amusing" to any one, because of the seriousness of the matter. By the practice of the Baptists in requiring men and women to say before baptism, "I believe that God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins," they are required to do a thing for which there is not a vestige of authority in the word of God. I know this is true, for Brother Moore has been pushed for several months to find it and has utterly failed. Besides, there being no authority for the practice, multiplied thousands are laboring under a delusion, and because of this delusion the ordinance of baptism is discounted and wrested from its proper place and design in the economy of grace. Brother Moore seems not to know the issue between us on this matter is not about a confession before baptism, but about the nature of the confession. The only confession the New Testament requires is faith in Jesus Christ, but the Baptists require a confession of salvation before baptism. Let him find one example of the church voting on the fitness of a candidate for baptism, and that will end the matter.

He wishes to know by what authority I baptize. I answer, by the same he baptizes. If he thinks he has a special call to the ministry. I most emphatically deny it and call for his proof. The Methodist and Presbyterian preacher claims to have the same special, divine call to the ministry that Brother Moore has, but he denies the Methodist and Presbyterian the right to baptize. On what ground, pray tell me, does he repudiate their call to the ministry? I am prepared to show that when he repudiates their call he will also repudiate his own, for they have the very same evidence of a divine call that T. F. Moore has-viz., a mysterious feeling interpreted as the voice of God within, calling to the ministry of the word. But this "call" bears the stamp of fraud and superstition upon its very face, for God never called one man to sprinkle water on people for baptism and another to immerse. God never called one man to teach people to eat the Lord's Supper without being immersed, and another to withhold it from them because they had not been immersed. If my friend thinks he has a commission from the apostles to baptize handed down through an unbroken line of organized churches, let him start his proof, and I will keep him company.

A Tribute to Our Brother, William Calvin Brewer.

BY G. C. AND CHARLES R. BREWER.

William Calvin Brewer was born, in Lawrence County, Tenn., on October 24, 1891, and died, at Camp Pike, Ark., on October 14, 1918. He lacked exactly ten days of reaching the twenty-seventh anniversary of his birth. Those twenty-seven years were years of hardships, of struggles and sorrows, yet he spent the greater portion of them in laughter and song. He was the eighth child in a family of ten children; but the two younger children died in infancy, and William was, therefore, always considered the "baby" of the family, but he was never in any sense a "baby" after he reached the years of responsibility. With very little help he had made his own way in the world, and he was always able to hold his place among men. When he entered the army, he was soon made a noncommissioned officer, and later, while in the Officers' Training School, he was said by his captain to be the best soldier in his company. He was attentive to his duties, obedient to the rules, alert, quick, and always courteous. All this was told us by his officers and comrades in the army.

William was reared without a father and practically without a home. Our father died in William's early childhood, and when he was yet in the early teens, our sisters having married, mother broke up housekeeping in order to not be an expense to her boys and to allow them to work their way through school if possible. For a while mother was with her daughters and the older boys were in school, but the "baby boy" was out in the world doing the best he could. One year mother was matron of the boys' dormitory at the Nashville Bible School, and for one term of that year all four of the boys were students in the school. At the end of the term, as there was no work for William in the school and as he had no money and no one to defray his expenses, he was forced to drop out of school and go to work.

During this period of his life he was, by the weakness of youth and by the many temptations that surrounded him, led away from his Christian duties and into indifference to the church; and those were days of anxiety on our part. He still desired to go to school, however, and was ambitious to make something of himself. When Brethren Klingman and Slayden took charge of the Potter Bible College, William decided to try to enter that school. A way was found for him and he was enrolled as a student there, much to his delight and to our satisfaction. We feel, however, that we could not fulfill our brother's wishes without saying just here that he had, prior to his entrance at Potter College, been led to confess his wrongs and to renew his allegiance to God under the preaching of Brother R. H. Boll. He never ceased to credit Brother Boll with a great deal of influence for good over him. But he was well pleased with his work at Potter College and fell in love with Brother Slayden. He admired Brother Klingman also; but Brother Slayden seemed to be his type of a man, and he never ceased to love him and to imitate him in some things, either consciously or unconsciously. From Potter College he went with Brother Slayden to Texas and was a student under him at Sabinal Christian College. He advanced rapidly in his studies, but his advancement in music and sight singing was the most marked. He soon began to be in demand as a song leader, and one year he was given his tuition in Cordell Christian College in return for his teaching sight singing.

The last few years of William's life were spent in preaching and singing. One winter he lived in the Cortner home at Normandy, Tenn., and preached for the church there. He spent one summer with Brother S. R. Logue in missionary work in East Tennessee. He sang in meetings with T. B. Larimore, S. P. Pittman, E. A. Elam, G. Dallas Smith, R. H. Boll, W. S. Long, George A. Klingman, and several other prominent preachers. Brother T. B. Larimore paid him a very high tribute in the Gospel Advocate as a song leader, and many persons have spoken of his earnestness in singing the "sweet old story."

In the autumn of 1917 brother William went to Louisville, Ky., where he hoped to take some studies in the university while working at some employment for a livelihood. He was progressing very nicely in his work at Louisville when, in March, 1918, he was drafted for service in the army. He had not claimed exemption as a preacher or as a "divinity student," because he was engaged in other work not classed as "professional preacher's work." He had, however, asked for noncombatant duties on the ground that he could not conscientiously fight with carnal weapons. But this claim was not respected and his appeal was ignored by both the local and district exemption boards at Huntsville, Ala. They refused to reopen his case, to consider his appeal, or to treat either him or us with courtesy, notwithstanding the fact that both his claim and his appeal were legal and that he could have legally, truthfully, and rightfully claimed exemption as a preacher of the gospel. The boards did not know this, however, for they refused to hear anything on his case. It was not patriotism, but religious prejudice, that caused this. There was a member of the "digressives" on the board, and he told the board that William and his "bunch" should not receive any consideration, and they got none.

When William was examined at Camp Pike, his vision was found defective and he was classed for limited military service and given a clerical position. His eyes were treated and brought up to normal condition and he was transferred to other duties. Whether he sought a transfer, as published in a daily paper, or whether he was transferred without his consent, we do not know; and whether he changed his conviction about participating in carnal warfare or just decided it was useless to try to avoid it, we do not know. We do know that some time after he had been given full military duties he entered the Officers' Training School, had made good, and was just ready to be commissioned lieutenant when he died. He never came home after he went to camp, and he never wrote us as fully about his work as we often wished he would. He never referred to his attitude toward fighting. About two weeks before he died he wrote that he thought he would soon be sent to France, and he said: "Now that I am in it, let me get into the worst of it, and I don't care how soon my part of it is over." His part of it is now forever over, and, thank God, he never had to kill.

Our estimate of our brother's character is as follows: He was of a sunny disposition; he had a fine sense of humor; he was affable and courteous; he was courageous, yet tender-hearted and affectionate; and beneath his funloving, somewhat dashing youthful nature there was a substratum of piety and religious devotion.

He was baptized into Christ by Brother James K. Hill in 1902, before he was eleven years old, and, with the little exception noted above, he was faithful till the Lord took him home. He stated on his deathbed that the temptations in the army were very great and that he feared he was not as strong as he should be, but that he had never turned loose of the Lord, had never ceased to pray to him and to beg for his mercy. He said "amen" to the prayers prayed by his dying bed and fell asleep murmuring: "There is rest for the weary."

It is hard for us to give him up, for we shall miss his companionship, and we had bright hopes for his future here; but we confidently believe he has passed into that rest that remaineth for the people of God. Still we sorrow—we cannot help it; and we are thankful that the apostle does not tell us not to sorrow, but to "sorrow not as those who have no hope." Our dear little brother William—in babyhood "Willie," the pet of the family; in manhood "Will;" and in affectionate speech "Billy"—has gone to that far-away, unseen shore; but he was no stranger there. His father and four sisters had preceded him to that fair land. Of a once large, laughing, singing, happy family, the father and five children are now on eternity's strand, while the mother and five children still sail on the stormy sea of time. May we all anchor there some day.

Rejoinder by Brother Sweeney.

Editor Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother: Replying to your brotherly article in last week's Gospel Advocate, I beg to say that in order that a discussion may be profitable, a clear issue should be made. I take it that we both agree that—

First, we have no issue about instrumental music. Second, we agree that the early Christians used vocal

Third, we agree that Paul exhorted the early Christians, in singing, to do so "with grace in their hearts to the Lord." That they were to make melody in their hearts.

The point of our difference is that "God legislated upon, provided for, and appointed vocal music in the worship of Christians." This you affirm and I deny. It is necessary just here to have sharply defined the words "legislate," "provide," and "appoint." It is a primary law of interpretation that words must be taken in their most usual or best-known usage. With this before us, let us ascertain the meaning of the above-mentioned words.

Legislate, according to the Standard Dictionary, means: "To pass a law or laws." Provide: "To make a previous condition or stipulation," Appoint: "To decree or ordain the doing of a particular thing."

In the light of these definitions, the proposition to be proven is: That God has passed a law or laws, conditioning beforehand and stipulating as a decree or ordinance that vocal music should be used in the worship of Christians.

That you affirm; that I deny.

We are both too good judges of law not to know that a law cannot be proven by inference, not even by parol, as the lawyers say. A law must be specific and definite. The best legal dictionaries define law as "a command addressed by a higher power to his subjects imposing duties and enforced by punishment." In the light of the above definitions, let us examine the scriptures you quoted.

First, "They sang a hymn and went out." The "they" were every one Jews meeting to keep a Jewish feast—the Passover. In observing the Passover, it was the custom of the Jews to begin the feast by chanting the 113th and 114th Psalms, and to conclude it by chanting the 115th, 116th, and 118th Psalms. They concluded the Passover, as all Jews concluded it, with "singing a hymn." If that hymn brings vocal music into Christian worship, it also brings the keeping of the Passover, of which the hymn was a part, into Christian worship. With such an alternative, it cannot be relied upon to prove anything in Christian worship.

Second. "Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God."

Third, "In all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God."

Now, if the above passages teach that God has legislated, provided for, and appointed vocal music in our worship, they teach equally clearly that we must teach and admonish in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs; also, that we must speak to each other by the same method. Now, does the editor of the Advocate observe that law? When he speaks to his brethren, teaching and admonishing them, does he limit his speaking to psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs? If it is God's law, why should he not keep it?

These passages teach clearly (1) that the early Christians sang; (2) that Paul refers to that custom and exhorted them to make melody and sing with grace in their hearts; but they do not teach that they must sing in obedience to the law or ordinance of God. Then why should they sing? Simply because they had always sung in worship. Prayer and praise are common to all religions. The Jews sang. The Greeks, and likewise the barbarians. Becoming a Christian does not interfere with one's habits, only where they are wrong. It is the most natural thing in the world that people who had all their lives praised their false gods in song should desire to worship the true God in song.

They brought in many customs upon which God never legislated, provided for, nor appointed. They brought in the custom of feet washing, and Paul, "an inspired man," commends it. They brought in the custom of saluting with a kiss, and Paul commands them to continue it. There is as good scripture to establish that God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed the holy kiss or feet washing as there is that he has done so regarding vocal music in Christian worship.

Fourth. "Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises." You say that it was done by God's authority and appointment, because Paul was an "inspired man." Paul was as much "an inspired man" when he went into the temple at Jerusalem and purified himself according to the law of Moses as when he "sang praises." Does that act of his prove that Christians should purify themselves according to the law of Moses? I believe it is right for Christians to praise God in psalms and hymns, but I do not believe they can sing spiritual (inspired) songs to-day. I deny that we do so because God has passed any law stipulating vocal music as an ordinance in the church. If that is a fact, it can be proven, like all the other laws of God, by clear, explicit, and unmistakable testimony.

Awaiting such testimony, I am,

Sincerely and fraternally,

Z. T. SWEENEY.

A Tribute to Brother Crumley.

BY J. A. HUDSON.

A friend has gone,
Upon seraphic wings took flight;
Though not for long
A mystic throng
In God's fair land of lasting light
Shall hold him from our sight—
Shall keep him from our view;
For Death's approach, in solemn stately tread,
Shall break our life's small vibrant thread
And cast its pall
For each and all;
And though it bring a blight,
It will our lives renew.

A friend most nobly true to wavering steps of men, A preacher bold of gospel peace, He gave himself a sacrifice to save from sin His fellows here And bring them cheer, Until his spirit found release.

A brightening smile of love, Bestowed from heav'n above, C'ershadowed his remembered face— Remembered in affection's way— When he declared, With naught impaired, God's e'er-atoning, e'er-extended grace, And gave the gospel loving sway.

An audience vast he'd move to scalding tears When he, in prime of his ennobling years, Would tell the story—
So fraught with infinite love and pain, Released o'er hill and sweeping plain—
Of martyr'd glory.

But sweeter yet we hold
The message brought—
The message he has told—
A sacred thought!—
That spoke soul peace and gave a life
Beyond this fleshly veil
Where evils ne'er assail.

Rest now, so free from mortal strife,
Thou man of God,
While 'neath the sod
A "mortal coil's" repose is undisturbed;
And while your friends are left to battle on,
And to aspire, ambition all uncurbed,
To where you are, to sing a victor's song.

God's Dues.

The rights of God-they are not, like the rights of man, conferred rights. They belong to God, because he is what he cannot but be. They cannot but be his. God Almighty, as he is, cannot place anything beyond the limits of his own being. All that exists, exists in God. We live, move, and have our being in him who gave it us. We live minute by minute, because he, who gave us life so many years ago, it may be, wills, minute by minute, that we should continue to enjoy it. As our Creator then, and as our upholder in life, God has rights over us to which there is no parallel in the relations between man and man. We cannot assign limits to these higher rights. What is each human life but a drop in the ocean of the infinite-free, no doubt, to move, to act, within certain limits, but unable to pass these limits-unable to escape for one moment from the encompassing pressure-from the inevitable sovereignty-of that mighty hand which has given it being, and has assigned to it its place in his universe? . . . As the eternal truth, he claims the homage of the understanding of man. As the perfectly holy One, he claims the homage of the will of man. As the eternal Beauty, he claims the homage of the affections of man. He asks for these things at our hands. He gives us the power-the awful, the momentous, power-of refusing his request; but he asks us not to indulge a taste or a sentiment, but to do justice to a right.-H. P. Liddon.

Missionary

Report of Funds.

BY W. W. FREEMAN.

Funds for the Vincent Japan work were received last month as follows: From Dillton Church, by W. R. Harris, Tennessee (for lot fund), $10; Mrs. Murphy, Texas, $11; J. R. Cummins, Pennsylvania, $2; C. G. Vincent (a balance), $31.95; Earl M. Hodson, Alabama (for Tokashi Hiratsuka, in study to be a Christian physician), $5; S. Y. Thornton, Missouri, $8. I sent Brother McCaleb, our American missionary on the field, a draft for sixty-five dollars to allow for any slight error or oversight that may have been made in the change of the work into my hands for Brother Vincent, who has left for "Y" work in France. In case a balance is left, Brother McCaleb is requested to use five or ten dollars for helping him get his ticket home.

The amount reported above as for Brother Jelley, I forwarded to Brother J. C. McQuiddy instead of to India, as it could not reach Brother Jelley in India now. All contributors will be interested to know that, on October 5, Brother McQuiddy cabled to India thirteen hundred deliars for the passage home of Brother Jelley and family, who are probably homeward bound by this time.

Sister Armstrong-Hopkins is still in need of funds to make up her deficiency. She is keeping somewhat stronger, but worried because she is still in debt. Can you help?

Brethren McHenry and Martin write that the funds from this country have enabled them to render much assistance to the famine sufferers in India. They also report good attendance at the services and several baptisms. Further regular support is needed for Brother Govind Ram, who is doing splendid work among his own people.

Sister Lillie Cypert is not only studying Japanese, but is engaged in doing splendid missionary work. Through her teaching of some little folks, her English Bible class, etc., she hopes to be able to bring home to the hearts of some the beautiful story of our Savior, and their Savior, too. What are you doing to help?

"Over the Top."

BY F. B. SHEPHERD.

The phrase, "The brethren will do more missionary work when they are taught more," is one which, though receiving wide publicity, perhaps has not carried conviction to our hearts as it should. I, for one, confess not to have appreciated its force until the last few months. In August, when, at the solicitation of Brother Don Carlos Janes and another, I assumed, as my special work, the task of securing funds in America for the support of the South African work, there was but one person on this side of the ocean sending a regular donation to that field, and but a few knew anything of its existence. On August 15 I forwarded a draft to Brother Sherriff for $22; September 15, $22.25 (but a slight increase); by October 15 I had another, $32; and this month we break all records, I having forwarded to-day (November 15), $67. Additional to the one regular donor in August, there are now four others. Truly, the brotherhood will "do" when it "knows." My part of the work entails some little time and money, but the many encouraging expressions in the letters I receive would amply repay me were the outlay a hundredfold greater.

Following are the donations for the month: From C. W. Sewell, Texas, $1: Mrs. H. M. McRae, Georgia, $1: Mrs. Dora Chandler, Arkansas, $5: Mrs. Ella Lovell, Tennessee, $5: by F. L. Rowe (previously reported), $15: "A Sister." Florida, $5: Mrs. J. J. Walker, $1: O. A. Crisman, Tennessee, $10: Miss Lula Gammill, Arkansas, $1: Scottsboro church of Christ, $2: Garrett Avenue Church, Dallas, Texas, $5: C. W. Sewell, $1: Lometa (Texas) Bible School, $5: Beauchamp, Texas, $10.

To the regular and occasional donors and those who intend to become donors to this great work, I wish to announce my change of address from Lometa, Texas, to Amarillo, Texas.

Mrs. J. H. O'Neal writes from Penelope, Texas: "The Gospel Advocate is the best paper published."

Mrs. Duck Smith writes from Martin, Tenn.: "The Gospel Advocate is a very welcome visitor in my home, and I watch for it each week."

Brother McQuiddy has been confined to his room for several days. We are glad to report that the rest from ardnous duties has improved his health.

"I would miss the paper so much. I feel that I could not do without it. Long may it live, and much and lasting good be done!"—Mrs. Stella Odum, Statesville, Tenn.

Mrs. E. A. Woodroof writes from Montgomery, Ala.; "I wouldn't be without it (the Gospel Advocate) for twice its price. May the Lord bless you all in keeping up the good work."

From O. R. Mitchell, Telephone, Texas: "I'll not do without the Gospel Advocate as long as I can help it. It is a great help to me in living an obedient child to our Heavenly Father."

L. S. White, of Sherman, Texas, writes: "The Gospel Advocate is a great paper. I would not know how to get along without it. I have been a subscriber to it since I was seventeen years of age, and I never saw it better than at the present time."

M. E. Burnett writes from Sunset, Texas: "I can't and won't do without it, for it certainly is the best paper published by our brethren. God has certainly raised up other faithful brethren to perpetuate the work begun by Brethren Lipscomb and Sewell and others."

From G. Dallas Smith, Cleburne, Texas, December 2: "Our work is moving along nicely and the church is in good working order. I am conducting two winter Bible drills—one here and one at the Central church of Christ, Fort Worth. Both classes have started off well."

From W. M. Sweaney, Iron City, Tenn., December 10: "Our church house at Iron City was struck by lightning and destroyed on October 17. Kindly ask the Christian congregations of Nashville to help us whatever they can. Send donations to W. M. Sweaney, Iron City, Tenn. I thank you for any interest you take in this matter."

From W. G. Jernigan, Camp Travis, Texas, December 9: "Now that peace is inevitable, I will be able to be in the field again by the first of January. Any one desiring my time will please address me at Bridgeport, Ala. I thank the brethren at large for the many letters of encouragement they have sent me during the time I have been in the service of my country."

The soul that believes and prays cannot close up the doors of feeling and of thought; cannot prevent the escape of that heavenly virtue, of those powers of the eternal world, which have renewed its own deepest life. Such a soul recommends prayer, and sacraments, and all that brings men close to God by the mere fact of its own felt unearthliness.—H. P. Liddon.

Nashville Christians have started a mission at the powder plant. Alex. Perry, noted for starting new congregations, conducted the first service on December 8. F. B. Srygley preached last Sunday. Services are conducted each Sunday at 3 P.M. in the community Y. M. C. A. building. We hope all near-by congregations will volunteer to help us in this new and very promising field.

From W. M. Wilson, Homeland, Ga.: "The Gospel Advocate is a welcome, helpful visitor to my desk; and, after having been a reader of this clean, Christian paper, I am a better and happier disciple of the Lord. I am very anxious, after this year, to find a location in Tennessee or Florida, where I can teach and preach. Any assistance you might give would be thankfully received."

From Mrs. Frank L. Jenkins, Walling, Tenn., December 9; "While holding a meeting at Hebron, John T. Smith brought a copy of the Gospel Advocate to our home; and, surely, a disciple of Christ could not read it and fail to subscribe for it. I find that we need to read it each week to lift, inspire, and fill us to overflowing with that we all need most. I am praying that it may help lead the dear ones to Christ."

From Mrs. Nettie Robinson, Mount Juliet, Tenn.: "Having read the Gospel Advocate in my father's home and a goodly portion of the time since, I could not think of doing without the very best (according to my judgment) religious journal published. It comes each week as a whitewinged messenger, bringing 'glad tidings of good things.' I especially appreciate the short excerpts that are ennobling and encouraging in our everyday lives of toil and care, trials and tribulations. May the blessings of God be with you in this noble work."

From J. C. Estes, 401 Montreal Avenue, Dallas, Texas, December 13; "On last Saturday night and on Sunday and Sunday night I preached for the little congregation at Climax. Since holding their meeting this year the 'flu' has called some of their number to their eternal reward. God bless the bereaved! If any one who may chance to read this knows of a worshiping band of Christ in either of the tri-cities—Davenport, Iowa; Moline, Ill.; or Rock Island, Ill.—will you please write me, telling the location? Or should any one know of any member or members of the church of Christ living in either one of these cities, will you please write me, putting me in touch with the member or members? I shall appreciate any one's help in getting me in touch with any member of the church of Christ in either one of these cities."

T. H. Robeson, of Russellville, Ala., has addressed the following to F. W. Smith, one of our leading contributors: "You doubtless remember having preached for us here through two protracted meetings. I am calling attention to this that you might recall when and where you knew me. The purpose of this short letter is to express to you my deep appreciation of your writings in the Gospel Advocate. For twenty-five years I have been a regular reader of the Advocate, and I consider it the best religious journal I have ever read. Your recent article on 'Does Death End All?' is a fine production; it alone is worth the price of the paper. Again, in your discussion with Mr. Moore, you completely trip him at every point. If I were in his place, I think I would give up the discussion. I am sure there are hundreds of others who appreciate your defense of the truth as I do. I think the Advocate is better than it ever was before."

LITTLE VARTAN'S APPEAL

Dear Little American Child: I am a little Armenian boy. Last year I was very little and thin, for I had had no good food to make me grow. I had no mother, and no home. I was always cold and hungry and frightened. I had wandered, even in the dark night, with some other children, because I was afraid to be alone. We went on, and on, looking always for something to eat.

One cold day we saw some houses, far off. It was the town of Bethlehem. We were afraid to go too near, but a woman came down the road to meet us. She took me up in her arms. I found a place on her shoulder for my head and went to sleep. When I woke up, we were all in a warm stable. There were no horses or cows there, because it had been made into a place for children like me. Everywhere there were little white beds. The woman held me close to her while I drank all the warm milk there was in a big bowl. Then she wanted to put me into one of the little white beds. I cried, and would not take my arms from around her neck; so she put a warm blanket around me and rocked me. She sang and talked softly to me.

"Long, long ago," she said, "another little boy came to Bethlehem, and this is his birthday. It was crowded that night, as it is now, and a woman held him in her arms, in a stable, as I am holding you. His name was Jesus. The children in America know about Jesus, and for his sake they have sent these beds, and this warm milk, and me, to find you and hold you close. It is their birthday present to Jesus."

Thank you, little American. Your present has lasted all the year. I have good things to eat every day, and I never feel afraid. See my picture! I am a big, well boy. My eyes are sorry, because I know that a great many children are still walking, walking, frightened and cold, looking for their mothers.

Will you send presents to them, this Christmas? You will, because you love the baby Jesus. VARTAN.

In sending contributions, be sure and state whether they are intended for the Armenian and Syrian Fund or the Poland Fund. Make all checks and money orders payable to A. B. Lipscomb, who will forward them to the proper commissioners.

Gethsemane.

In golden youth, when seems the earth A summer land for singing mirth, When souls are glad and hearts are light And not a shadow lurks in sight. We do not know it, but there lies Somewhere, veiled under evening skies, A garden all must sometime see—Somewhere lies our Gethsemane.

With joyous steps we go our ways, Love lends a halo to our days. Light sorrows sail like clouds afar; We laugh, and say how strong we are. We hurry on, and, hurrying, go Close to the borderland of woe That waits for you and waits for me— Forever waits Gethsemane.

Down shadowy lanes, across strange streams, Bridged o'er by our broken dreams, Behind the misty cap of years. Close to the great salt-fount of tears, The garden lies; strive as you may, You cannot miss it in your way. All paths that have been, or shall be, Pass somewhere through Gethsemane.

All those who journey, soon or late Must pass within that garden's gate; Must kneel alone in darkness there, And battle with some fierce despair. God pity those who cannot say, Not mine, but thine:" who only pray,

"Not mine, but thine;" who only pray,
"Let this cup pass," and cannot see
The purpose in Gethsemane.

-Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Let us look up to our great Emancipator. Our freedom is, after all, his gift; but he has left us the power, the perilous power, of forfeiting it, that we may, if we will, retain it for his glory. Let us see that we do not forfeit it by cloaking under it the "maliciousness" which repudiates law. The laws of the land protect our social liberty. The laws of the church, the laws of natural and revealed truth, protect our mental liberty. The moral laws of God protect our spiritual liberty. All true law meets in, radiates from, the divine person of Christ, the everlasting Legislator, our Deliverer from political, intellectual, moral slavery.—H. P. Liddon.

Reply to Rejoinder by Brother Sweeney. BY M. C. K.

On page 1205 of this issue of the Gospel Advocate the reader will find Brother Sweeney's courteous rejoinder to our first reply, and we ask for it a careful examination.

To forestall any misunderstanding and consequent confusion over the mere use of terms, we wish, before proceeding a step further, to have a clear and distinct understanding of the sense, and the only sense, in which we use the terms "law," "legislate," "provide," and "appoint" in this discussion. At our first use of these terms last summer we took it for granted that all our readers, including, of course, Brother Sweeney, clearly understood that sense and would not even dream of using the terms in any other sense in this discussion; but his reference to "the Standard Dictionary" and to "legal dictionaries" seems to us to imply that he is not only using them in a radically different sense, but a sense in which God has "legislated upon," "provided for," and "appointed" nothing, absolutely nothing, in Christian worship. Hence, let it be distinctly understood here and now and once for all, that when we say that God, in the establishment of Christianity. legislated in the realm of music, and that in that realm he provided for and appointed vocal music for Christian worship, what we mean, and all that we mean, is that God, through inspired men, said that Christians are to use vocal music in their worship. And precisely in the same way and for the same reason, if God had said that Christians are to use instrumental music in their worship, we would contend that he has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed instrumental music in Christian worship. not, why not? Again, if God had said that Christians are to burn incense in their worship, we would contend that he had legislated upon, provided for, and appointed the burning of incense in Christian worship. If not, why not? What we mean, and all that we mean, is that God has named, specified, and thus indicated vocal music to be used in Christian worship, just as he has named, specified, and indicated the Lord's Supper and what is to be eaten in that Supper in Christian worship. We mean that he has "legislated upon," "provided for," and "appointed" vocal music in Christian worship precisely as he has "legislated upon," "provided for," and "appointed" the Lord's Supper in that worship. So far as "law" and "legal dictionaries" are concerned, instead of running hard and fast lines around the term, which would practically mean that God has legislated on nothing at all for Christian worship, we would better adopt the sensible language of the eminent British jurist, Sir Edward Coke: "Reason is the life of the law; nay, the common law itself is nothing else but reason." And reason here asks the question: If what God says, when he specifies an act and tells Christians to do it in their worship, is not to be taken as a law for their guidance in worship, then, what would be such a law?

Hence, the only sense in which we mean "that God has passed a law or laws conditioning beforehand and stipulating as a decree or ordinance that vocal music should be used in the worship of Christians" is that he has said use that kind of music "in the worship of Christians"-that, exactly that, and nothing more, is what we mean. "That you" deny; "that 1" affirm.

Of course, "a law," in the sense in which we are using the term in this discussion as well as elsewhere, "must be specific and definite;" and, touching that which we here affirm and for which we here contend as having been divinely appointed in Christian worship, we must show, if we make good that affirmation, that God has specifically and definitely said that it is to be used by Christians in their worship; but when we have shown this, then, by every just principle of argumentation and proof, we unhesitatingly claim that we have made good that affirmation.

Certainly "we are both too good judges of law," and of some other things, too, "not to know that" we are not here discussing, and have no issue over, whether a law can "be proven by inference" or "by parol, as the lawyers say;" but we are here discussing, and we do have an issue over, whether God has said Christians are to use vocal music in their worship; and if, when we prove that God has said Christians are to use vocal music in their worship, we have not proven to our brother's satisfaction that God has "legislated upon," "provided for," and "appointed" vocal music to be thus used, then we frankly and openly confess here and now that we cannot prove it to his satisfaction.

Concerning the inspired admonition that Christians "must teach and admonish in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs," and that they "must speak to each other by the same method," our brother asks: "Does the editor of the Advocate observe that law?" Yes. He further asks: "Does he limit his speaking to psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs?" No, for the simple reason that God has not only not thus limited him, but has told him to speak otherwise as well. On these passages and the obligation they put upon Christians, our brother makes this comment: "They do not teach that they must sing in obedience to the law or ordinance of God." But they do teach that when Christians make music in their worship, they must make vocat music, if they do what they are told to do.

Never mind just now about "the holy kiss or feet washing." We shall be glad to take up those matters at the proper time; but the issue now is whether God has legislated or spoken upon the question of music in Christian worship, and, if so, whether he has appointed vocal music in that worship. It is only necessary to add now that even if it were shown that "there is as good scripture to establish that God has legislated upon, provided for, and appointed the hely kiss or foot washing" in Christian worship "as there is that he has done so regarding vocal music," that would by no means prove "that he has" not "done so regarding vocal music." In the passages formerly cited by us and now quoted by Brother Sweeney, God distinctly says two things: (1) that Christians are to worship him; (2) that they are to worship him with vocal music. Now, we unhesitatingly say that, if Matt. 26: 30; Acts 16: 25; Eph. 5: 19; and Col. 3: 16, instead of saying the two things just stated, had said (1) that Christians are to worship God, and (2) that they are to worship him with instrumental music, then, as it seems to us, that would settle the question, beyond all doubt or quibble, with all right-thinking people, that God had legislated upon, provided for, and appointed instrumental music in Christian worship. If not, why not?

Finally, commenting on Paul's conduct when he "went into the temple at Jerusalem and purified himself according to the law of Moses," Brother Sweeney asks: "Does that act of his prove that Christians should purify themselves according to the law of Moses?" Our brother should have known that his question is a "two-edged sword;" and as the obligation to answer it rests with equal weight on him that it does on us, before we answer it, we respectfully ask him another: Does the fact that any "act" at all was done by Paul or by any other inspired man "prove that Christians should" do that act? If so, please name one.

[For the information of our readers, we publish the following note of explanation from Brother B. A. Abbott, editor of the Christian-Evangelist, St. Louis, Mo., in reply to a request from Brother Sweeney that our discussion be published in the Christian-Evangelist:

On my return from a trip east I find your letter of November 5, proposing a discussion of the music question with Brother M. C. Kurfees. I wish we had the space for such a discussion. I would be delighted to have you and also Brother Kurfees represented in our columns, and would enjoy a discussion of the music question, but the other questions are so urgent in our church now and our space is so very limited that I feel compelled to say that it seems impossible to find room for such a discussion now. If the paper situation eases up, we ought to be able to have it a little later. If you have occasion to write to Brother Kurfees, as you will, I would appreciate it if you will explain the reason why I think we cannot have it at present.

We regret that the discussion could not appear in either the Christian Standard or the Christian-Evangelist, but we hope and believe that its publication in the Gospel Advocate will do sood.—M. C. K.]

Voting in the Church is Division.

BY E. A. E.

The following questions on voting in the church have been presented for consideration:

Itasca, Texas October 15, 1918.—Brother Elam: Please explain through the Gospel Advocate the following questions: (1) Since you say it is wrong to vote on a person who is being withdrawn from, what constitutes the act of withdrawal, and how should it be done? Suppose a person who was to be withdrawn from had a few who stood by him n his wickedness, how could you withdraw from him then if all have to do the withdrawing? (2) How is the church to select eiders if they do not express this by a vote? (3) Who is to do the selecting? Brotherly, —.

There is no name to this letter. I have no idea who write it. It is the rule of all papers to publish no questions, stafements, and articles, whose author does not give his name. The name may be withheld from publication, but the publishers must have it. The reason is obvious.

These questions seem to be from some honest inquirer, and I can see only good in an attempt to answer them.

I have asked recently a good man, a Bible student and an editor, to point out the scriptural course for a church to pursue in withdrawing themselves "from every brother that walketh disorderly." I desire to learn all the Bible teaches on this and on all other "things that pertain unto life and godliness." (2 Pet. 1: 3.) Some things do not "pertain unto life and godliness," are not embraced in "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" (Jude 3), and must be avoided. (See 1 Tim. 1: 3-7, 19, 20; 4; 6, 7; 6; 3-5, 20, 21; 2 Tim. 2; 14-19, 23-26; Tit. 1: 10; 2: 7; 3: 9; 1 Cor. 2: 1-5; 2 Cor. 4: 1-5; Acts 20: 20, 25, 27; 2 Tim. 4: 1-4.) Let us stop just here and read these passages before we go any further. If we have not the desire, first, to do God's will and then to teach God's will; if we have not willed to do God's will (John 7: 17). and have not prayed for his will and not our theories and speculations and selfish ambitions and revengeful purposes to be done, it would be better never to write another article or preach another sermon Jesus came down from heaven, not to do his own will, but the will of God who sent him. (John 5: 30; 6: 37; 12: 49.) Jesus pleased not himself (Rom. 15: 1-3), but did always the things which pleased God (John 8: 28, 29). With this desire and spirit we can proceed; "but if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." (Rom. 8: 9)

I do not want any controversy with any man. I desire to know, and I desire churches to know, how a church—the whole church, not some part of a church—is to withdraw themselves from a brother who walks disorderly—not a part of a church withdraw from another part equally as faithful and good as, if not more faithful and better than, the part who performs the act of excommunication.

Some things seem very clear to me; but if the course some have pursued recently is in the spirit of Christ and according to the will of God. I confess that I am still groping my way in the dark. I am glad to point out to this inquirer the points which seem so clear.

1. The command of God is to "withdraw yourselves"the whole church, not some part of the church-"from every brother that walketh disorderly," and to "have no company with him "-not some of the church have no company with him and others of the church have company with him. This withdrawing is to be done "in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." (See 2 Thess. 3: 6-15.) So the church-not a part of the church-at Corinth was to deal with the man who had "his father's wife." A part of the church was not to cling to him and vote to retain him, while another part was to withdraw from him, as fornicators are sometimes treated now. Paul directed the church what to do-namely: "Ye being gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of the Lord Jesus, to deliver such a one unto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Instead of obeying God theretofore, they were "puffed up" and glorying, but their glorying was not good. (1 Cor. 5.) The conduct of this fornicator had not even grieved them. This withdrawing was to be done, then, when all the church had gathered together-not when a part of the church had come together in a called meeting and the other part knew not wherefore they had come together, and some, maybe, knew nothing at all of the meeting. Paul was present in spirit, and "the power of our Lord Jesus" was present. These facts-Paul present in spirit, the power of Jesus present, a soul to be rescued, the purity of the church to be preserved, and all to be done in the name of our Lord Jesus"-make this a most serious and solemn affair. God's church and the souls of men cannot be triffed with. What are the facts? This man was guilty, and God commanded the church to withdraw from him, that he might be saved, that the church might be purited. Not to have done this would have been disobedience to God. There was no voting to do. All who would vote to retain that man would vote to disobey God—to refuse to keep a plain commandment. All who vote against doing God's will are rebellious.

- 2. The purity of the church and the salvation of the wrongdoer are the objects to be accomplished by the withdrawal—"to the intent that he may be asham d," "for the destruction of the flesh, that the soul may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Only the good of the wrongdoer, so far as he is concerned, can be sought.
- 3. Then, the withdrawal cannot be made in a partisan spirit, in a factious way, through partiality and prejudice, in order to "get even" with a wrongdoer, to get rid of him, to condemn and punish him, or to seek vengeance. The wrongdoer, it may be, should be withdrawn from, but to seek retaliation in this way is as bad as to punish him by beating him with a club. Two wrong things never make one right thing. The men who would seek revenge in this way are prosecutors, judges, avengers, if (ot persecutors.
- 4. The Bible tells what disorderly conduct is: "For we hear of some that walk among you disorderly, that work not at all, but are busybodies." For the reasons the Bible gives, idlers and busybodies should be withdrawr from by the church. Not to do this is disobedience, again, to God. A preacher who is "idle," "a tattler," "a busyl ody," "a meddler in other men's matters," "going about from house to house," "speaking things which he ought rot," is a greater sinner in this respect, because he should be an example in "good works" and "sound speech," and is doing greater evil. Instead of "serving the Lord with all lowliness of mind," teaching publicly and from house to house, admonishing "every one night and day with tears" and "with all long-suffering and teaching," and ther by allaying strife and making and keeping peace, he gies about from house to house, arraying one party against another, talebearing, and declaring without the proof that certain ones are walking disorderly and should be withdrawn from. Fornication is disorderly conduct, as stated in 1 Cor. 5. All persistent disobedience to God's will is disorderly conduct. Not to withdraw from the guilty is disobedience.

5. All who "by their smooth and fair speech . . , beguile the hearts of innocent," serving "not our Lord Christ, but their own belly," cause divisions contrar to the teaching of Christ, are to be marked and turned a way from.

For there are many unruly men, vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision, whose morths must be stopped; men who overthrow whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's saite. (Tit. 1: 10, 11.)

A factious man after a first and second admonition refuse, [avoid]. (Tit. 3: 10.)

6. I cannot denounce a man as factious and try him, acting myself prosecutor, jury, and judge, and withdraw the church, or such part of it as will vote with me. In this case I am the factionist. The teaching which God condemns is that which is contrary to the teaching of Christ. The man who teaches contrary to this is factious. A man is not factious because he opposes the teaching of error—the theories and speculations of men—i stead of the word of God. All who teach contrary to the word of God, all who refuse or fail to avoid all the untaught questions and other questions which God comman is all to let alone, are the factionists and producers of division. They may "have indeed a show of wisdom in will worship, and humility" (Col. 2: 20-23), may use "smooth and fair speech," but they are dividers of churches,

- 7. The will of God is the standard. (Matt. 7: 15-27.) The "good fruit" is doing and teaching the will of God—"the whole counsel of God." All who teach contrary to the will of God or depreciate the necessity of obeying God's will in all things are false teachers.
- 8. Elders are to know the will of God-"holding the faithful word which is according to the teaching, that they may be able both to exhort [build up the church] in the sound doctrine, and to convict the gainsayers." (Tit, 1: 9.) The church at Ephesus tried them that called themselves apostles, when they were not, and found them false. (Rev. 2: 2.) The New Testament gives the qualifications and work of apostles, and it was the standard by which the false apostles were measured. There was no voting to see if they were false or true; the New Testament pronounced them false, and all who respected the will of God acted accordingly. Of course, some could have allowed their personal friendship and attachment for these false prophets to lead them to vote against the will of God and become factious and rebellious; but none did this in the church at Ephesus.
- 9. When I wrote as I did a few weeks since, I wrote for the benefit of all who love the Lord and desire, therefore, to know and to do his will-all who desire to withdraw from disorderly brethren in a godly way and for the purpose which God gives for such an action-not for those who by vote would cast a righteous man out or retain an unrighteous one-not for those who for a pretext would go technically by the New Testament, while in heart they trample it under their feet, in order to carry a point, make out a case against a brother, and get him withdrawn from as a matter of retaliation and vengeance because they could not avenge themselves otherwise. I have known this to be done and to be confessed. If this is not an outrage, how can an outrage be committed? If this is not playing politics in the church-and the dirtiest sort of politics, at that-how can that trick be performed? I cannot understand how a man who resorts to such tricks can think he is seeking to do and to teach the will of God,

Jesus, the Way.

BY E. G. S.

As to the matter of salvation, Jesus is not only the way, but he is the only way. There is no other being to whom we may look for salvation. If we ignore him and refuse to obey him, we will be eternally lost; but if we look to him and obey him, we then have the sure promise of the salvation of our souls. If we refuse Christ and fail to obey him, we need not depend upon any one else to save us. To reject Christ is to reject the only salvation that is offered us. Eternal ruin is certain to those that reject him.

Why, then, should any refuse or neglect the pure gospel of Christ? No objection can be raised against him. He gave himself up to die that sinners might be saved. And when he had thus died upon the cross and his blood had been shed "for many for the remission of sins," the apostles were sent into all the world to preach the gespel to every creature, so that all might be saved through him. All that were willing to accept him as their Savier and were willing to repent and be baptized were promised the remission of sins. It was indeed a heavenly offering when the Son of God gave himself up to die upon the cross. It was the grandest offering that has ever been made since time began, and yet only a small part of the human race truly and fully appreciate it. But it is not enough that we believe that he is the Christ. We are also commanded to repent and to be baptized in order that our sins may be forgiven. We should notice that in the word of the Lord remission of sins is not to be expected till after baptism. The word of the Lord says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," thus putting the promise of pardon, or remission of sins, after baptism. But the popular system of conversion among the denominations puts getting religion before baptism, thus upsetting God's divine arrangement. When the word of the Lord puts it thus, all the preachers of the world combined have no right to change it. Why it is that the world does not see it that way is strange, since the wisdom of God puts the promise of pardon, the remission of sins, after baptism, and not before it. To place the remission of sins before baptism upsets the word of the Lord, puts the cart before the horse, and thus makes a human arrangement of the whole matter of conversion. Why not just take the word of the Lord as given in the New Testament and go by that? There is no mistake in the word of the Lord. The opinions of men are liable to have many mistakes in them, but the word of the Lord as given by inspired men and recorded in the New Testament does not contain mistakes. It contains Inspired truth, and will lead those who follow it to a heavenly home. Why should any be lost, with such a plain spiritual guide to lead them?

People that refuse the word of God as contained in the New Testament voluntarily throw their chances for heaven away, and have no one to blame but themselves. And that is not all that they lose. They deliberately throw away all the joys that a faithful Christian life affords on this earth. It would be hard to explain how much enjoyment would be lost by a failure to become a Christian and to lead a faithful Christian life. Any one that refuses to become a Christian and to lead a Christian life voluntarily chooses to walk and live in darkness and gloom, without hope and without God in the world, and will have to plunge into a world of eternal darkness and gloom without a ray of light or hope to cheer his soul. But it is very different with the faithful Christian, who, in the light of Christianity and the hope of the gospel of Christ, views death as a passage into a brighter and happier home, into joys that never end and happy associations that never break up. Faithful Christians, therefore, do not need to suffer from fear of death. To such as these, death is only the gateway to eternal joy; but the wicked, who through life have rejected the glorious gospel of Christ, have nothing whatever to comfort them when they approach the dark river. Why, then, should not all in Bible lands be Christians?

A Christmas Gift for the Fanning Orphan School.

BY E. A. E.

Next Lord's day—the fourth Sunday in December—is the day on which to make a contribution for the Fanning Orphan School. The school is in debt to the amount of two thousand dollars, and it needs still more to enable it to care for more orphan girls than it can do at present. While helping the orphans of other countries, we must not neglect our own.

The Belmont Avenue congregation, Nashville, Tenn., has raised one hundred dollars, and asks that nineteen other congregations join it in giving one hundred dollars each on next Lord's day, thus making the two thousand dollars. If the money is not available on next Sunday, the members and, therefore, congregation, can signify the amount which can be given.

Should not the church be as liberal and as ready to respond to the call of the Lord, the head of the church, as the members have been to give whenever the government has made a call for money? A man designated to raise money for some cause for the government stated that the government was inquiring into every one's business and every one gives, and, "if not, why not?" And all have given. Now, with orphans at our doors, with a school which prepares them to fill useful positions and to maintain themselves in life, and also to help others, why not generously respond to this call to relieve the Fanning Orphan School of debt? Brother John Shaw says—and John is right—that to place the work and needs of this school before the brethren at large is to get the money necessary to carry it on. Brother Shaw is one of the Belmont Avenue church.

Any amount from any congregation or from any individual will be gratefully received by the school.

Have You Sent Us a New Subscriber?

This short article is written in the hope and with the earnest request that every reader of the Gospel Advocate consider this a personal appeal. It is our determined purpose to press the claims of the Advocate upon the people as never before. We appeal to each and every one of you not to think that this article was written for the other man, but to realize and appreciate the fact that it was written and intended for YOU. You have no idea just how much good you may do by taking a little time and sending at least one new subscriber to the Gospel Advocate. By so doing you may be instrumental in the conversion of a soul. James says: "Let him know, that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins."

We have often been assured that many people have been led to Christ by reading the Gospel Advocate. Of course we realize that we make mistakes. We know that when we do the very best we can, that fault may justly be found with that best because our judgment is at fault. We would assure our readers, however, that the mistake is one of the head and not one of the heart. Of course you can find fault; of course you can criticize, and you can increase the burdens of others who are laboring honestly and making sacrifices to advance the cause of the truth; but, before you do it, you should ask yourself the question, Is this the way that I should do in order to advance the cause of Christ?

We want YOUR help, and believe that, as a sincere, devout Christian, you will do all that you can to help forward this great work of saving souls. We cannot for a moment doubt the necessity and importance of such work. When we think of the value of a soul; when we think of the duration of eternity and of the joys of heaven, we must know that this is a work in which all should engage heartily and cheerfully. "What doth it profit a man, to gain the whole world, and forfeit his life?" If you actually knew that by getting a number of subscribers you would be instrumental in the salvation of a number of souls, would you fail to do it? Can you think of any other way in which you can do more good with so slight an investment? If you thought that the Gospel Advocate would cease to exist and that the work that it is doing would be done no more forever, would you withhold your support and hearty encouragement? What you do should be done NOW. NOW is always the time to do right, and NOW is never the time to procrastinate and put off good works. Why not follow the example of the Lord Jesus, who said: "We must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work?"

This appeal is to YOU. Will you act promptly?

How to Spend the Holidays.

The Christmas holidays are at hand, and how to best spend them should be given some thought. It will be the happiest Christmas in years to some of our mothers and the saddest to others: to the former, because their sons will be home from the army, with no more fears that they will be slaughtered on the battle field; to the latter, because mother will have to look at the empty chair and think of her hoy beneath the sod somewhere in France. To the mothers in this latter class let me say that I cannot keep the tears back as I think of you; and if dying would give back to you your boys and take that ache from your hearts, I would be so glad to go. We are so helpless as we try to comfort you, but there is One who really can. Lean upon Him with full assurance that he knows your sorrows, sees you now, and ever stands by your side to help you. To the former mothers I suggest that as you enter so joyfully into the holidays because your sons have been spared, to think of the other mothers whose sons have been taken. Be certain to find some time to spend in the secret chamber, and remember them kindly and whole-heartedly in your prayers.

But this is not exactly what I had in mind to write when I headed this paragraph. These mothers who are rejoicing and the others with broken hearts came into my mind while the first sentence was being written, and I had to write it. The thing I wanted to say is this: Make this a happy Christmas by doing your best to make others happy. I believe supreme happiness comes when we are so busily engaged in striving to make others happy that we forget that self exists. This suggests a little poem I saw some years ago, and right here I give it:

Lord, help me to live from day to day In such a self-forgetful way, That even when I kneel to pray, My prayer shall be for others. Help me in all things I do. To ever be sincere and true, And know that all I'd do for you Must needs be done for others. Let self be crucified and slain; And buried deep, and all in vain May efforts be to raise again, Unless to live for others. And when on earth my work is done, And my new work in heaven's begun, May I forget the crown I've won, While thinking still of others. Others, Lord-yes, others! May this my motto be: Help me to live for others, That I may live for thee.

It is certainly true that pleasure we receive in doing for self, but it has not the sweetness of the pleasure that comes when we unselfishly work for others. See how many sad hearts you can make glad. See how many widows you can comfort. See how many poor children you can make forget that they were ever poor. Do these things, in the name of Christ, and a happy Christmas you will have. May our Father help us to thus spend the days before us.

To the Old Students of J. A. Harding.

It occurs to me that one of the best things we could do would be to remember Brother Harding with a letter of cheer, a suitable Christmas card, and, better still, in a more substantial way, especially on the part of those to whom he has been such a blessing, and to do this, too, in time to reach him by December 24. I regret that your attention has not been called to this sooner, but it is not too late. Get your mind fixed right now on what you will do, and do it without failure. He is still able to appreciate such things; then his good wife will get just as much pleasure from what we do for him as if it were wholly for her. This may be our last chance to make him happy at this season of the year. Grasp it while it is in your hand. All letters and gifts should be addressed to J. A. Harding, 115 McLendon Street, Atlanta, Ga.

It has meant much to the Atlanta work to have Brother Harding and his good wife with us in their last days. At his last birthday the churches here remembered him in a most interesting way.

Now, don't let the suggestion above slip your mind till it is too late. $Q \cdot Q \cdot Q$

Miscellaneous Items.

Brother Flavil Hall recently conducted a short meeting for the brethren near Lumber City. He spent about ten days with us on his return home and preached for the South Pryor, East Point, and West End Avenue churches. He is, undoubtedly, one of the most unselfish preachers that we have, and moves uncomplainingly on, whether supported or not supported. Each congregation tried to remember him in a substantial way while here. It would be well for congregations that need song drills to use Brother Hall this winter in getting ready for a great work next spring and summer. There is no better teacher of vocal music than he. And, too, let me tell you there is a power in song. I feel safe in saying that half of the effectiveness of our Lord's-day morning work at West End Avenue is due to our singing.

As stated in last week's issue, some of our readers may be interested in "Songs for the Season." Brother Flavil Hall's two last pieces are "The Soldier Boy Is Coming Home." and "The Boys Are Coming Home." The words of the latter were written by Sister Mary Farmer, of this city. Send twenty cents for these two songs instead of twenty-five cents as announced last week.

Brother R. R. Brooks continues to grow in favor with the East Point brethren.

Brother John Klingman is greatly liked by the South Pryor Street brethren, and we are expecting greater things because of his able help.

We feel very thankful, indeed, to have our force strengthened with the help of Brother Silas E. Templeton. He is here arranging for a home to which to bring his wife and children.

God has ever blessed our efforts, and we are glad to say that we are ready to bring to a close the greatest year in the history of the work in this city.

"The cattle on a thousand hills are mine; Naught need I of thy gifts, O man, for I Sit all complete upon my throne on high." Thus saith the Lord, where endless line on line Of angels minister the praise divine.

"Yet, Lord," we answer, "can we not supply One strain in all creation's melody To show we seek to join our hearts to thine?"

God needs no thing of man's, but he will take, As showing love, or reverence, or fear, Whatever sacrifice that man may make, And give, in place, a thousand blessings more. But offer not from thy vain earthly store; Thou must an altar in thine heart uprear.

District of Columbia.

Washington, December 2.- The congregation in Washington had a feast of good things yesterday. Brother Dalton, who is returning to his home in Indiana this week, preached us a very effective and forcible sermon on "The Seven Christian Graces" at 11 A.M., and Brother J. W. Shepherd, has spent a few days here in behalf of soldiers who are in prison because of religious convictions, delivered a strong and feeling sermon from Heb. 4: 12 at 7:30 P.M. There were one hundred and one present at the morning services. The lessons by these two godly men will remain in our hearts and do us good. We wish for both of them many years of usefulness in our Master's vineyard. If you have friends and relatives here who are not attending services, or perhaps do not know where we meet, please send them this address: "Masonic Temple, second floor, front, corner of Eighth and F Streets, Northeast."— W. Washington, December 8.-Two interesting services were held to-day. Some new members found their way to the place of worship. We hope many more may soon find their way to "Masonic Temple, Eighth and F Streets, Northeast, second floor, front." We want all the readers of the Gospel Advocate to understand what is meant by "Washington Day." This is it: We are asking the congregations everywhere to set apart the contribution Sunday, December 22, to help the little band in Washington build a house of worship, and let that day be "Washington Day." If every congregation will do this, the workmen will be placing the material in the building in a few months. There are over four thousand congregations in the United States. How many will respond to this call? It is your work to do or neglect. If two thousand congregations will send five dollars each, the work will be done. Great things can be done for Christ when brethren work together. If ten thousand Christians will send only one dollar each, the house will be built. Will you be one of the number? Write your check at once and let it go forward. There are fifteen hundred preachers in the brotherhood, and without a very great sacrifice the preachers alone could erect a good house of worship in the national capital. Many of them could give five dollars each, some of them could give more and some could give less. preach liberality, now let us practice it. Nocona, December 2.—The influenza has broken out afresh here, worse than ever before, and our crowd was small last night and yesterday, but we had good services. I am doing all I can for the afflicted ones, but it is a big job for one man to meet the demands made on a gospel preacher in this locality. There were only two mourners there, as the rest of the family were all down sick. one expected to die. Brother Will Grimsly, of Montague, is down with pneumonia, and I must go there to-day. Well, my tract on "Feet Wash-ing" is complete, and I will furnish them at ten cents per copy. Send for them and use them. I would like to persuade some brethren and sisters to send me enough money to pay for printing them-about twenty-five dollars-and let me give them away where they will do the most good. I know where they should be circulated. but the ones who ought to read them will not buy them, of course; but if I could pay for them, I would scatter them where they would do good. Who will be the first in on this? Send to me or to F. L. Rowe, Cincinnati, Ohio, and say, "For Foot Washing' fund." I have time for a meeting next summer, from the last of June to the middle of July. Who wants it? Write soon. Now let us all pray for greater success, which will come only through greater work; or, to quote Sam Jones, "pray for our daily bread at the end of a five-foot hoe handle." Let us work and hold meetings and Bible readings. I have formed a class of forty-four here in Smith's "Outlines of Bible Study," and look for a good time this winter.-Tice Elkins.

The remarkable results produced by Nuxated Iron and its widespread sale (it being estimated that over three million people annually are today using it), has led to the offering of numerous substitutes, and these physicians say that health officials and doctors everywhere should caution the public against accepting substitutes in medicines and they especially warn against accepting substitutes for Nuxated Iron, which, instead of being organic fron may be nothing more than a metallic fron compound which may in some cases produce more harm than good. Work in Tate County, Miss. BY J. P. LOWREY.

November rounded out my fourth year with the churches in Tate County. The Thyatira, Senatobia, and Crockett congregations have stood by me loyally this year, regardless of the war conditions. I will continue my work in the county another year.

In all of the history of the past there have never, perhaps, been so many wonderful events crowded into one year as into the year 1918. Would it not be well for every Christian to pause and ask: What have I done to advance the cause of Christ while the world was being bathed in blood? Brethren, have we labored as we should during these dark days to hold out before the world the great principles advocated by the Prince of Peace? It is strange, but at a time like this, even when thousands are falling upon foreign fields and death is abroad in our own land, it is hard to reach people with the gospel. There has never been so much for churches and preachers to do.

I have labored harder this year than ever in life and can see so little that I have accomplished. I have preached one hundred and fifty-one sermons and baptized only sixteen persons in Tate County this year.

A number of our boys-from the Thyatira, Senatobia, and Creckett congregations are in the army; some of them are in France. One member of the Senatobia congregation, Brother Carl Poag, died on board a transport and was buried at sea. Carl had many friends, and it is a consolation to us to realize that the sea must one day give up the dead.

Now that the war is over, we realize that there is a greater work than ever to be done in this field. Therefore we are more anxious than ever to have a meetinghouse in Senatobia. In response to the appeal that Brother A. B. Lipscomb made in behalf of Senatobia we have received three dollars-one dollar from Brother T. M. Karnes, of Trenton, Tenn., and two dollars forwarded by Brother Lipscomb. We appreciate this; but we must have one thousand dollars if we complete a respectable house in Senatobia. This work must be done. We do not understand why brethren are so indifferent toward the cause of Christ in Mississippi. There is no place in which more good can be accomplished.

Rather than leave this field and go to where I could get a support that would meet the demands that are made of me, I have accepted the principalship of a consolidated high school and am now teaching, and preaching every Sunday. This field must not be abandoned. I am by no means discouraged with the conditions here. I have every assurance that the brethren here love me and appreciate my work. I shall continue to do my very best, always trying in a humble way to teach the truth and trust the Lord for results.

I confess that it would be much more pleasant to be located where I could be associated with other preaching brethren; but, after all, if we fight a good fight and keep the faith, we can sit down together at His feet and rejoice over these hard-fought hattles.

May the Lord bless the faithful everywhere.

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the South-land and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime ob-ject the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

Almost all men are slaves; they are mastered by foolish ambitions, vile appetites, jealousies, prejudices, the conventions and opinions of other men. These things obsess them, so that they cannot see anything in its right perspective; for most men the world is centered in self, which is misery. To have one's world centered in God is the peace that passes understanding. This is liberty: to know that God alone matters. Old Grudges.

BY F. P. FONNER.

By close observation it is easily seen that old grudges are doing a vast amount of harm both in political and religious circles. Fully one-half of all wars grow out of old national grudges finally fanned into a flame by ungodly men who pose as the rulers of nations. These rulers during past ages have claimed the right to rule by divine appointment. They have claimed this right without consulting the will of the people. Many of them have nursed old grudges against other rulers or nations until war seemed to be the only remedy. It thus appears that millions of the human race have been slain in order to satisfy the unholy ambitions of wicked men. The last exhibition of this is seen in the great war waged by the Kaiser against the free nations for the supremacy of the world; but even in this case certain old grudges more fancied than real rankled in the heart of the Kaiser. You see his end.

But while old grudges have done much harm in political circles, they have done much more harm in religious circles. Congregations have been broken up and destroyed thereby. Many souls have been drowned in perdition because both men and women persisted in holding grudges against each other that were not worth a second thought. Little, trivial things that manly men and womanly women would scarcely notice have been dwelt upon and magnified until the peace of the church of God has been destroyed in many places. This is an awful sp ctacle for men and angels to gaze upon. It is almost enough to make angels weep, and especially so when the salvation of human souls is at stake. Christians endanger their own salvation when they grudge one against another, because they thus disobey a command of God: "Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ve be condemned; behold, the judge standeth before the door." (See James 5: 9.) This is a most solemn warning addressed to all Christians. No disciple of Jesus can safely hold anything against any of his brethren; and if he does, he does it at his own peril. In fact, he must hold nothing against any man, whether in the church or out of it. He must be kind and forgiving like his Master. "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." (Matt. 6: 15.) Thus it appears that there is no forgiveness for any one who will not forgive others. This is an awful condition for any one to get himself into, but many persist in doing it. Men and women must get rid of these old grudges before pure New Testament Christianity can be established in any locality. In some places disorder and confusion reign supreme, and it is mainly due to the fact that professed Christians are continually nursing these old grudges. This is usually the way they work: "Once upon a time" a man, who professed to be a Christian, interfered in the affairs of another man, who was not a Christian; and it seems, too, that the professed Christian was wrong It seems clear that he caused the other man much trouble. But while both of these men may have been wrong, to some extent, it is plain to be seen that the greater blame attaches to the professed Christian, because he was the original offender. Finally the second man renounced all of his sins and became a Christian and an active worker in the church of God, but to this good day the first man refuses to speak to him or to attend meetings where he is. Surely the first man is not doing right. He certainly must be holding some imaginary grievance against the other. If he is, he is a lost man, unless he repents and gives his brother proper encouragement in the Lord's work.

Say, brother, is this you, or is it some other person? Perhaps this fits a number of us. If it does, let us take the medicine prescribed by the great Physician and get well, if we can. We can make a full recovery by taking it according to directions contained in the New Testament. This is no time to be nursing old grudges and imaginary grievances against any one. In these times of trouble and distress, we must make an effort to get right with God and man. This is absolutely necessary in order to our own salvation and that of others. "Save yourselves from this untoward generation."

Coonradt.

Brother Elmer Eldridge Coonradt departed this life on October 2, 1918, at his home, near Ostello, Tenn., aged eighteen years and nine months. He was baptized into Christ on September 17, 1918, by Brother Jesse E. Love. It is hard to give him up, yet we sorrow not as those who have no hope. Though his body has returned unto dust, the spirit has returned unto the God that gave it, and in whom he trusted. Funeral services were conducted by Brother Jesse Love, and the remains were quietly taid to rest at Spring Place Cemetery in the presence of friends and loved ones.

ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

Jean.

On November 12, 1918, the angel of death claimed the life of Brother Lonnie Jean. Brother Jean was in the youth of life, being twenty-two years old. He had been living the new life for only about three months, having been baptized by the writer last August. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." This was what Brother Jean had; and having this good name and living the Christian life, we conclude that he died in the Lord. Therefore his friends and loved ones should rather rejoice instead of mourning so. us live true to Christ, and we will see Brother Jean again some sweet day.

VERNON ROZAR.

Howard.

Ward D. Howard was born in Montague County, Texas, on June 12, 1894, and died at Camp Taylor, Ky., on October 24, 1918. He was the son of W. W. Howard, of Graton, Cal. Ward was a young man in the bloom of life, preparing himself to preach the gospel of Christ, when the flag called him to service for his country, in which service he gave all he had to givea spotless life, a noble life, and a memory none should be ashamed of. He was baptized in Sabinal River, by Brother W. A. Shultz, about eight years ago, and very soon became useful in the active and public service of the church. The church of Christ. in Nocona, Texas, gave him the best burial we were able, and the writer delivered the funeral oration. We laid him to rest; and while but a very few of the kindred in the flesh were present, yet there were many who mourn the loss of so good and true a soldier of the cross. He will sleep a long time, perhaps, but we will all awaken some day, and we will meet and rejoice together forever. May God comfort the father and kindred.

TICE ELKINS.

Bartlett.

William B. Bartlett was born on November 9, 1852, in Putnam County. Tenn., and grew to manhood in that community. He confessed his faith in Christ on October 12, 1880, under the labors of Elder E. G. Sewell, and was baptized, and has been a faithful member of the body of Christ. He had been an elder in the church of Christ at Potter, Kan., ever since it was organized. He was united in marriage, on January 30, 1883, to Mary C. McBride, who departed this life on December 25, 1902. To this union were born seven children, five of whom preceded their father in death. Brother Bartlett died on November 9 (his birthday), 1918, being sixty-six years of sge. A great and good man has fallen and will be greatly missed. Funeral services were held in the Potter Christian Church, conducted by Elder Ballou, of Effingham, Kan., an old-time friend. Interment in Fairview Cemetery. J. J. RUPPERT.

Ragsdale.

With much sorrow we note the death of Sister Ida Ragsdale, who died on October 10, 1918. She leaves a husband and two small children, besides a mother, a father, and a host of relatives, to mourn her death. The church has lost a good, loyal, true member; the neighborhood has lost a good neighbor; and the dear little children, of course, have lost their best friend. Loving hands may do all they can, but they cannot fill mother's place. Sister Ragsdale lived a pure life, hav-ing obeyed the gospel early in life under the preaching of Brother Meeks. All who realize what home is without a mother can truly sympathize with Brother Ragsdale and the bereaved family. But let us not mourn as though we were destitute of the blessed hope beyond the grave. Sister Ragsdale's life of devotion, consecration, sincerity, and purity, is worthy of our imitation. She was a good mother, wife, helper, and counselor. During her thirty-two years' stay on earth the affections of all drew near her. Now, if we are not prepared to meet her, let us make ready, that we may be reunited with those dearest us, where no sad good-byes are spoken. where no sickness or sorrow can come, but one unending day.

W. A. BURKE.

Robert.

Departed this life, Sunday, July 14, 1918, one of nature's noblemen, U. M. Robert. He was born in Barnwell, S. C. in 1840. He was the second son of the union in marriage of U. M. Robert, Sr., and Rachel Rodes Robert. His father subsequently lived in Georgia and Florida, where the boyhood and young manhood days were passed. He became a student at Franklin College, near Nashville, Tenn., in 1860, then under the presidency of Tolbert Fan-He obeyed the gospel while and was baptized by Brother Fanning in 1861. Soon after the close of the session of the college, on July 8, he married Mary Augusta Harris, a daughter of James S. Harris, of Wilson County, Tenn. On September 28 he became a soldier in the Confederate Army and gallantly did service till the close of the war. During the conflict he was severely wounded in his hand, losing a thumb and one finger, but, after recovery, continued in the service. After the war he lived in Wilson County for some time, worshiping with the church at Old Bethlehem, among whom he had a host of friends. He, of late years, has been a citizen of Nashville, and died at his home, 2714 Capers Avenue. He died a cherished member of Highland Church, where he was a regular attendant as long as he was able to be there. He was a modest, unassuming, Christian gentleman, who gained the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact. I have known him well for fifty-nine years, and all this time have known him to be a straightforward, earnest, consistent citizen and member of the church of Christ. He is survived by his wife, they never having been blest with children. There are many be-sides her who mourn the death of U. M. Robert. JAMES E. SCOBEY.

Collins.

On last Sunday morning news came to Mr. and Mrs. Sam Collins that their son, Gerald, was dead. He enlisted with Company 114, in Columbia, Tenn., and was at the military training camp there until the company moved to Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., where he remained until called for oversea service last April. We never heard of any trouble he had during his service to his country, and he was soon made corporal. He was at home just one time on a furlough after going to South Carolina. Last February he spent a week at home, and he looked so well and happy, as was his natural way of looking-such a strong, fine-looking soldier boy. His death was accidental, caused from an explosion of his gun. I am sure he had been in dangerous places many times, since so much has been said in the papers about the company to which he belonged; but he wrote such cheerful letters home, and interesting letters of the country "over there." He loved his home and mother and was always attentive and affectionate to his entire family. He asked his mother not to grieve and worry over his being away. He was always present at Sunday school and church at Roberson Fork, where he became a member about seven years ago during Brother Thornberry's meeting. Since he was a true soldier of the cross, we feel assured that he was a brave and grand soldier for "Uncle Sam," His dear mother worried quite a lot at first about his being away, but had become reconciled and seemed so proud of her soldier boy, and looked forward to the pleasure of his coming home and the many things he would have to tell. The entire community are in deepest sympathy with the family. "Surely the harps of angels were attuned anew to welcome him as he joined the dear ones gone before." Heaven would not be heaven if loved ones were not there. To the bereaved family I would say: Let us hope that the great day of meeting him is not over, but will be in the beautiful beyond, where no more separations come. While with broken hearts we mourn that he is with us no more, we realize that his beautiful life will be a guide to heaven, where "we will sing our Savior's praise and glory in his name always."

The Weather in the Tropies.

The days were wonderful, and the alternations of the sun and wind were as exciting as the discovery of the strange Malayan beasts and birds. The sun rose softly-no breeze moved cloud or leaf, and even the light came at first moderately, indirectly, reflected from the higher peaks, or heliographed from the mirror of a halfhidden, distant waterfall. In early afternoon-one never knew just when -the faintest of breezes sifted down and blurred the lacery of tree-fern shadows. The wind was cool and soon strengthened, and by night the air was surging violently through the gap, siphoned from the cold summits down to the hot, humid valleys. Day after day one reawakened to the sense of tropical surroundings from a conviction of a northern autumn .- William Beebe.

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart, and other organs. To relieve rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder, or liver, uric-acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, inclose the amount, and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring, Box 21B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and inclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send; and if it fails to benefit my case, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Baptists vs. Campbellites.

BY M. S. MASON.

This article will deal with Mr. Bandy's argument on the origin of the church. He begins his argument by offering two definitions whose contents I think vital in determining the validity of his contention. He defines the church thus: "A church of Christ is an assembly of baptized believers joined together in the doctrine and fellowship of the gospel." His definition of the kingdom of Christ is as follows: "The kingdom of Christ is the organic government over which he is sole lawgiver and ruler, and whose laws and ordinances are administered through his churches as executives."

Following these definitions he makes a statement with which I heartily accord. He says: "In order that any organization now existing be a church of Christ, it is absolutely necessary that such an organization had its beginning at the right time, at the right place, and by the right person." This is correct, and I would that every Baptist debater stay with this, and not, as soon as forced to the wall on his own proposition, say: "It makes no difference when and where the kingdom is set up, so we have religion."

He states then, in order to endeavor to substantiate the establishment of the church during Christ's personal ministry: "Then it follows that since Christ said, 'I will build my church,' that precludes the idea of men setting up a church." Christ could set up the church from his throne the same as he could while on earth, arguing from the scriptural basis of Mr. Bandy. Christ sent the Holy Spirit, the Holy Spirit dictated the law, men obeyed the law, and in obedience to the same men became subjects of Christ, and thus the kingdom, or church, was established. This, of course, applies to those who obeyed that day. The apostles, and doubtless the one hundred and twenty, who were prepared material, were "set in." Christ set up the kingdom, because he accomplished all these features, not man.

He next states that the church of Christ was organized in Palestine in the days of Cæsar, on which there is no controversy. He mentions several places that it could not be set up, which statement is true, but makes one statement which must be corrected. He says the Baptist Church and the Catholic Church are the only churches that make the proper claim regarding the establishment of the ehurch. This is wholly false. the people of the church of Christ. claim the same thing. The difference with us and the Baptists and the Catholics is that we are that church established at that time and place, and can prove it. They are not, and cannot disprove it.

He then, on page 9, states that the institution known as the Baptist Church had its origin with Christ and the apostles and is "my church" of Matt. 16: 18. This, as other things mentioned, will be referred to again, but at present I want to ask this question: If the Baptist Church is the church of the New Testament, why is no such thing mentioned in the New Testament record? He states further on page 9 that the setting up of the church and the building of the kingdom are coincident. In this he is correct. For scriptural references he uses Dan 2: 44; Isa. 9: 6-9; Jer. 2: 3-5. He interprets the expression, "in the days of these kings," to mean, as in Luke 3: 1, which he quotes, the days of Cæsar. He does this to secure scriptural authority for the origin of the kingdom during the personal ministry of Christ. The expression, "in the days of these kings," means this when studied in its context. Daniel prophesied of four great kingdoms which should rule the earth-Babyion, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. The respective heads of these four great powers are what is meant by "these kings." Since the last one did not fall till 476 A.D., it was during this period, or in 33 A.D. the church or kingdom originated. This tells the truth, and at the same time shows the error in Mr. Bandy's contention. On a part of Isa, 9: 6-9 there is no controversy, but to a portion of it I shall return again in the refutation of Mr. Bandy's argument. I am unable to apply Jer. 2: 3, 5 to the proposition and see its connection. In referring to "these days," he refers to several periods in which the origin of the church did not occur, all of which is very good; but he casts a very erroneous reflection on us, which must be corrected. He says it was not in the days of "the Campbells." Of course, he means to say our system of religious thought originated with the Campbells. The things we teach or preach were in existence seventeen hundred and fifty-five years before Alexander Campbell was born. We claim that the church to which we belong and the principles we espouse originated in the year 33 A.D. with Jesus Christ and his apostles. We claim that a great apostasy took place in which a people departed from these principles. We claim that in the early part of the nineteenth century men arose with the slogan: "Back to the Bible! Where the Bible speaks, we shall speak; where the Bible is silent, we shall be silent." This in detail meant that Bible things should be called by Bible names, religious ordinances should be kept in a Bible way, the gospel should be preached in the world as originated by Jesus Christ and his apostles. This was restoration and not origin. Because the Campbells had such a prominent place in this Restoration movement, we who teach that doctrine to-day are said to have had our origin with the Campbells. But there is not a single item of doctrine that we preach or practice to-day that had not been in existence eighteen hundred years when the Restoration movement took a definite place on the religious calendar. No man has ever been able to disprove this position.

Preachers Quitting.

BY C. PETTY.

I hear that a good many preachers are quitting the ministry on account of their support being so meager. Well, the preacher needs a living like other men, and has to have it or he cannot preach much, for he will be hindered from preaching by having to make a living at some other calling. Still, if money is the only object a man has for preaching, he had better quit, for he will injure the cause by keeping on. There are others, I am told, that will not enter the ministry because it does not pay enough money. I think it best for them to stay out, too. So there is nothing lost yet by the two classes mentioned. There is still another class, I am told, just coming out of some schools ready for the ministry, that value what some learned "Doctor" says at a hundred per cent and what Paul says at fifty per cent. Well, they are a tainted class that scent everything they come in contact with, and they ought to know that the learned "Doctors" will be gone and forgotten in a half century, while Paul and his teaching will abide here as long as time lasts to comfort the hearts and homes of our land until their work is done and they pass over to the other side rejoicing in hope of life eternal. I think such preachers had better stay out of the ministry until the next whale comes along and swallows them up, like Jonah's whale swallowed him up, or, it may be that some kind of a whale has already swallowed them.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a small bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless, and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength, and its very life, eventually preducing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which, if not remedied, causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen, and die; then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight, now, any time, will surely save your hair.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair. Try it!

Among the Colored Folks

A Visit Among the Congregations and Mission Points.

BY M. KEEBLE.

All the meetings that I conducted this year were a success, and only one had to be called off on account of the "flu." This meeting was to have been held at Tuscumbia, Ala. I hope to conduct a meeting there in the near future.

When I arrived at Corinth, Miss., and found that I would not be allowed to hold the meeting at Tuscumbia, I preached one night at Corinth and then started home. On the way home I stopped over at Henderson, Tenn., where I held a meeting in July and baptized sixty-nine, and this time six more obeyed the gospel. I remained at home while the "flu" ban was on and worshiped from house to house. After the ban was lifted, I began a tour among the churches. I went first to Bellbuckle, on the second Lord's day in November, where I found several of the little band of Christians sick with the "flu;" but, considering everything, we had a fine time. They are still aiming to build this spring. Brother W. R. Mingle, a white brother, is still laboring with them. May God bless this Christlike man. I then went to Tullahoma and spent one night, and preached in the sanctified people's meetinghouse. This is a fine field to labor in, with just a few Christians here. Next I stopped over at Morrison for two nights. Three young men made the good confession and were baptized on the second night. It was cold and frosty, but they were eager to obey their Master. Two were restored. I preached at Smartt two nights, with fine attendance each night. Next I went to Viola, where I preached on the third Lord's day in November. These people are working hard for Christ. I then went to Mc-Minnville and had a fine stay among the brethren and sisters, although a good many had left, some gone to war and others seeking better wages. Next 1 went to Cookeville. I have worked with these people for nearly four years, and I believe I found them in a better condition this time than ever before. I found Brother C. R. Nichol conducting a meeting at the white church, and I was blessed with the privilege of hearing him preach, and on Lord's day he and a good many of the white brethren came over and worshiped with us. The white church at Cookeville has always assisted the colored church in every way. Next I went to Lebanon and spent two nights, preaching to good crowds each night. These brethren are trying to do mission work, and I am glad to say they are doing well. From here I went home and remained three days, then left for Brownsville, where I preached on the first Lord's day in December. This is a working little congregation. They supported me this year in a mission meeting at Bells. Next I went to Belen, Miss., where I preached two nights. The attendance was good. This congregation is only a little over two years old, but they are wide awake to the work. Brother James Hamilton is the leading spirit among them, and I pray that he may live long and continue in the great work of Jesus. I am now at Helena, Ark., and will visit several points in Arkansas,

This has been a successful year in my work. I have baptized one hundred and nineteen, and sixteen have been restored. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. Let us pray the Master to send forth more laborers into his vineyard.

Civility costs nothing and buys everything.—Lady Montague.

"More Eggs" Paid the Pastor.

"I've got more eggs than I ever did in my life, paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and I paid the pastor his dues. I have money to spare now. 'More Eggs' is the remedy for me. I sold forty-two and one-half dozen eggs last week, set four dozen, ate some, and I have one and one-half dozen left."—Mrs. Lena McBroom, Woodbury, Tenn.

This remarkable egg producer means big poultry profits for you. Don't delay. Send a dollar to-day to E. J. Reefer, 3259 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package of "More Eggs:" or, better yet, send him $2.25 and he will send you three packages of "More Eggs" tonic, prepaid. This is a season's full supply. A million-dollar bank guarantees that if you are not absolutely satisfied, your money will be returned on request without question. So send either a dollar or $2.25 to-day for this wonderful egg producer; or write Mr. Reefer for his FREE poultry book that tells the experience of a man who is helping a great many people make money with their poultry and who himself has made a tortune out of the poultry business.

The Cause of Christ in Washington, D. C.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother W. S. Long, one of Tennessee's most successful evangelists and one of the soundest in the faith, gave up his work in the general field and, at the earnest solicitations of a few brethren in Washington who knew hls efficiency, went to that city to assist in planting the work permanently in the capital of our nation. There are many difficulties in the way, and none is greater than the lack of a church house. I have had experience in establishing churches in large cities, and I know there is nothing that will aid the work so much as for the people to know you have a church building, a permanent place of meeting. They look upon the church building as a home, and the heart always clings to home as a precious spot. Ground in the larger cities is always high in comparison to small towns, and it may seem to some extravagant to pay forty-five hundred dollars for a naked lot, but it is not. No doubt a cheaper lot could have been procured in some out-of-the-way place, on a back street or so far from the population that the attendance would be neglible. Church houses built in such unfavorable places is a waste of money. I believe all will agree that a loyal congregation should be established in the capital of our country, but it will require liberal offerings from the brethren at large to accomplish this desired end. The following appeal has been made:

Washington, D. C., November 24, 1918.—Beloved Brethren: Jerusalem was the capital of the Jewish nation. Jesus gave his life for you there, and there the New Testament church had its beginning.

Washington is the capital of the wealthiest nation on earth, and yet the church we so much love has no house of worship here. At present we meet in a rented hall which is inadequate for our members. You will rejoice to learn that the congregation in Washington (though few in number) have determined to build a house. We fully realize that it is a great undertaking, yet it can and will be done.

In order to accomplish this important end, we must have the prayers and fellowship of all Christians everywhere. You must work hand in hand with us until success has been attained. Young people are here from your State, and you owe this much to them, besides thousands of lost souls that are perishing for the bread of life. Read Ezek. 3: 18.

T. F. Colvin and J. W. Gibson are our elders and are doing their work well. Every dollar will be receipted for and used wisely. The property is safeguarded against all unscriptural teaching. So you can throw your heart and money into the work with full confidence.

The building site which will be secured is near the Capitol and on one of the best-known streets in the city. The cost will be about forty-five hundred dollars, which is reasonable for such a lot in the "heart" of Washington. Six hundred dollars has been placed in the bank, and we hope to have the rest soon and then begin to build.

Now, since God has given us peace, let us turn some of our money to his cause. This personal appeal is to every Christian to give, not "sparingly," but "bountifully." We believe you will come to our rescue, because this work is as much yours as it is ours. This ought to have been done many years ago! Let's not delay longer. Don't you yearn to see God's people own a house of worship in your national capital? Won't you sacrifice for it?

Organizations unknown to the Bible can raise millions of dollars, and shall we allow the church of Christ to fall into the dust? Please do not let this letter go to the wastebasket, but read it to the church on Sunday. The way is opened. Let us have your offerings at an early date. We are asking every congregation to set apart the contributions of Sunday, December 22, for this work; and if every congregation will do this, the money will be raised that day. Please send all contributions to E. L. Mills, 2002 G Street, N. W.; T. F. Colvin, 2536 Eleventh Street, N. W.; or J. W. Gibson, 2500 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E. We thank you in advance for your help.

Your brethren in Christ, T. F. Colvin. W. S. Long.

I most heartily favor this enterprise, and believe that Christians everywhere will do the same. I carnestly beg the churches wherever this worthy appeal goes to respond with a liberal contribution on Sunday, December 22. We will not regret the help we render in erecting a suitable house of worship in our capital.

160 Hens-1,500 Eggs.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed two boxes of "More Eggs" to my hens and broke the egg record. I got 1,500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly twenty-one days." You can do as well. In fact, any ponitry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hers. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs; so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultryman, 6259 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for 31 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

The Transfiguration.

Master, it is good to be High on the mountain here with thee; Here, in an ampler, purer air. Above the stir of toil and care, Of hearts distraught with doubt and grief.

Believing in their unbelief, Calling thy servants, all in vain, To ease them of their bitter pain, Master, it is good to be Where rest the souls that talk with thee.

Where stand revealed to mortal gaze The great old saints of other days; Who once received on Horeb's height The eternal laws of truth and right, Or caught still smaller whisper, higher Than storm, than earthquake, or than fire.

Master, it is good to be Here on the holy mount with thee; When darkling in the depths of night, When dazzled with excess of light, We bow before the heavenly voice That bids bewildered souls rejoice. Though love wax cold, and faith be dim:

The Passing of a Noble Life. BY FLORA TRAVIS.

On October 19, 1918, another life work was finished, another soul perfected and called home to the Father. Miss Lucie Compton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Owen, of Nashville, Tenn., was born on September 16, 1885, and, just when the autumn leaves were falling so beautifully, succumbed to an attack of pneumonia following influenza. Miss Lucie was a young woman of rare charm and ability and of unusual consecration. From girlhood the world and its pleasures held no place in her life; she chose rather to use that life for the good of her fellow man. How beautifully this purpose was carried out is best attested by the splendid influence she exerted over the numbers of young men who came under her supervision in the business world, to whom she was ever ready to lend a helping hand, and whose love for and loyalty to her was most marked. In a recent letter to the writer, one of "her boys" "over there" writes: "We come in such close contact with death on the battle field that somehow there it loses the dread we have for it; but when we have such sad news from home, it has the same old sting. Miss Lucie was always a wonder to me. She was so patient and kind to us boys, and, no matter what happened, it was a very rare occasion that caused her ever to be the least bit impatient with us. Yes, we have indeed lost a real friend." Even as she was a constant source of strength to the father, to the lover, and to the brother now in far-away France, to whom she was most devoted, so was she in the home circle so dear to her heart, and especially to the little mother whose comfort and happiness was ever her first thought. Not alone in the home circle and in the business world is she missed, but in the hearts of her myriads of friends and in the lives of the many to whose material needs she and her mother quietly and unostentatiously administered. Lawrence Avenue congregation misses her presence and her prayers. And yet we know that she is not far from us so long as we keep in close touch with the Father. Heaven and earth are not so far apart. The spiritual tie between us and those gone before is strong, and daily grows stronger if we daily make progress in the things they are growing in.

Edifying as the Need May Be

Prayer a Test of Character.

Our Savior considered prayer a good test of character. Applying this test in Luke 18, he showed how guilty were the Pharisees and how the publican was to be commended for his honest petition. If we were judged by our prayers, by what we say to God and the way we say it, or by what we fail to say, many would be found lacking in those attributes that made the publican's prayer acceptable.

In pouring out the thoughts and desires of his heart to his Father in heaven, Jesus declared that he "sanctified" himself for the good of his disciples. In the margin the word "sanctify" reads "consecrate," which gives us a better understanding of its meaning. It has no reference to a personal sanctification of Jesus, since he knew no sin. It means, rather, that he committed himself wholly and unreservedly to the Father's work. All his natural and spiritual talents, everything which he possessed, everything he did—all were devoted to one supreme purpose, the good of others.

We have some illustrations of this consecration in modern life. A scientist spends the greater part of his life experimenting in some musty, evil-smelling laboratory that he may work out some new and vital theory for mankind. A great physician inoculates his system with poison that he may perchance prove the efficacy of some new antidote for suffering humanity. A teacher gives himself with untiring devotion to the work of his profession in order that those who sit under his instruction may get the best possible training. Parents have been known to deny themselves many of the good things of this life and to toil on with unremitting patience that their children might have a goodly inheritance. All of us, in so far as we are able to make an impression, wish to make the strongest impression. We desire to have our influence count for the most. Applying this principle to our religion, it simply means that even if there were no duty to God, or no duty to ourselves, this responsibility we bear for our brother man is strong enough to make us take heed to ourselves.

This idea of influence is an old idea, to be sure. Since the time when we were little children it has been drummed into our ears and flaunted before our eyes. But unless it has found a lodgment in our hearts and has become a dominating force in our lives, the lesson is not yet learned. There is still need of teaching and exhortation.

Conscious and Inconscious Influence.

In regard to conscious influence there is little need of argument. There we understand its import and meaning because we see it used every day. Here is a merchant who has some article of worth to sell. Speech is employed, printers' ink is brought into play, comparisons are made, prices are cut, in order that his customers may be induced to buy. Here is a promoter or a politician who endeavors to persuade this one or that one to take a cer-When argument fails, he seeks, perhaps, the intervention of some one who will be listened to because of the position he occupies or the power he wields or the favors he can bestow. In some extreme cases we have heard of those who employed hypnotic measures to gain their point. This kind of persuasion is conscious influence. All of us use it, and all of us are affected to a greater or lesser extent by its use upon us.

But it is another kind of influence that is chiefly the subject of our investigation. Emerson expressed the thought in those oft-quoted words: "What you are speaks so loud, I cannot hear what you say." Every man carries a kind of atmosphere with him and, whether he wills or not, affects others for good or evil. Individually and conjointly with others, every man is a teacher from whom others learn something; a contributor from whom others receive; an impressionist who is putting the stamp of his character upon something else. Even though no word he uttered, even though no pen stroke record his wishes, out from a man's character go far and wide-yea, sometimes across the sea-the heralds which proclaim what he is at heart. We need to be reminded that through the means of this unconscious influence the greater part of this world's instruction is received. When we were children, when our minds were plastic and passive, the characteristic traits of our parents were reproduced in us. Without apparent effort we caught their petulance or their passion, their gentleness or their tranquillity. Under their molding influence the habits of life were formed, and it was due, for the most part, to impressions which they were unconscious of making upon us and which we were unconscious of receiving. But now we know that what took place there in the primary schools has been reënacted over and over again in the higher schools of life.

Tragedies That Follow Wrong Impressions.

The New Testament teaches that we are always children to the extent that we can be influenced, and we are always teachers to the extent that we can influence others. That is what the Savior meant when he said: "Let your light so shine." That is what explains the apostle Paul's tribute to the Thessalonians when he said: "Ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia." It explains, too, his circumspect behavior while in their midst, as he said, "to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us." It explains, too, the justice of that rebuke administered to the Hebrews, and to all who do not appreciate the intrinsic worth of Christian influence, when he said: " When for the time we ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God." It is hardly necessary to state that every man should exert the best influence possible in this world, and yet this is a duty that cannot be too often impressed. Only think of the disastrous consequences which accompany a wrong influence! So many examples of this pass before our eyes. How often do we hear of people who lose all their property through investments made under the influence of some one in whose judgment they had implicit confidence! How often we are distressed when we see widows and orphans deprived in this way of all their possessions! How often do we read of men from good families branded as criminals because of dishonesty brought about by speculation, the habit of which had been learned from their superiors! One party succeeded, and it was all right in the eyes of the world at least; another party failed, and it was all wrong. It would be interesting and profitable, if it were not so sad, to trace the career of the drunkard, the gambler, or the murderer, back through the tangled labyrinth of his misguided fortunes to the first wrong influence which started him on the downward road. It may have been the lack of self-control in a father or mother. It may have been the example of some one who was strong and would not deny himself for the sake of the weak. We do not know just how it happened or when. We only know that the influence was there, and somebody exerted it.

"Living Epistles."

But the ruin of the body, the loss of reputation and of fortune, is nothing when compared to the ruin of the soul. "Woe to that man," the Savior says, "by whom the offense cometh!" We consider it an awful thing to lead a sweet, innocent child into sin; we are filled with righteous indignation when we see any one take advantage of the weakness of another and deliberately induce him to do wrong; but do we stop to think that unconsciously we may be exerting an influence which will lead precious souls out upon the broad road that leads to destruction? As Christian people, we cannot escape from our responsibility to those around us. We cannot be recluses and followers of Jesus Christ at the same time. Whether we will or no, we must be living epistles, "known and read of all men." We cannot shut up ourselves, our words, and our deeds from the world. If there is anything wrong in character, if it is not animated and Illumined by an honest life, that wrong will propagate itself, and we cannot lift a hand to prevent it. The Master, under whose influence and teaching we profess to have come, whose name we wear, lived and died that he might exert the greatest power for the highest good of the whole world. All that is best for man he compressed into one sublime word, "salvation" Hence, we hear him say: "I came to seek and to save that which was lost." Toward this one end he devoted everything that he had. He desired that the uplifting and consecrating influence which had been given him might be constantly used to the world's advantage. Through the instrumentality of his disciples he kept it alive throughout all the ages. Hence the words: "For their sakes I consecrate myself, that they also may be truly consecrated." The Savior, as a man, did not expect of the disciples what he could not claim for himself. We sustain an all-important relation to Jesus Christ. It is because of his influence that it is possible for us to live in civilized lands. It is because of his influence that we enjoy good homes. It is because of his influence that we have the best educational advantages and can secure the greatest material prosperity. But, more important still, it is because of his influence and consecration that we can claim a victory over sin and the grave and live with the hope of eternal life implanted in our hears. The appeal he makes is this: "Through my consecration I have done all of these things for you. What will you consecrate for me and for my greatest work, which is salvation?" Is there not a heartsearching question here for parents? You are devoted to your children, and you would do anything in their behalf. You are ready to deny yourselves a great many pleasures you would like to enjoy and labor hard to provide what you think is best for them. What are you willing to do for their spiritual and eternal interests? Do you realize that the church of Christ is propagating itself largely through Christian homes; that the largest percentage of those who enter the kingdom have been born of consecrated parents and were reared in an atmosphere of religion? Do you appreciate, on the other hand, that it is an unspeakable misfortune for children to be born into an unchristian family where there is no reverence for hely things and where, for the most part, their religious interests are stifled and killed by the foibles and fashions of the world? Fathers and mothers, if you are not living the Christian life for your own sakes, think of your children and what your neglect may mean to them. For their sakes consecrate yourselves. But this is a lesson for all. No person lives who is not a force for good or evil. "No man liveth unto himself, and no man dieth unto himself." No man can insulate himself; no man can become a neutral personality. Each day he hinders or he helps. While engaged in the affairs of home and business, men and women take knowledge of us and are either attracted to or repelled from the religion of Jesus Christ. Day by day we are molding characters. Day by day the power of personality goes out and makes for or against the religious welfare of our neighbors. Daniel Webster once said that the greatest thought any man could cherish is that of his individual responsibility to God. His answer could not be improved upon.

Faith is not merely a speculative, but a practical acknowledgment of Jesus as the Christ, and effort and motion of the mind toward God; when the sinner accepts with thankfulness the proffered terms of pardon, and in humble confidence applying individually to self the benefit of the general atonement, in the elevated language of a venerable father of the church, drinks of the stream which flows from the Redeemer's wounded side. The effect is, that in a little he is filled with that perfect love of God which casteth out fear, he cleaves to God with the entire affection of the soul; and from this active lively faith overcoming the world, subduing carnal self, all these good works do necessarily spring which God hath before ordained, that we should walk in them.—Horsley.

The Body, or Church, of Christ.

BY F. W. SMITH.

One of the fundamental errors of our Baptist friends consists in a misconception of Bible teaching on this subject. Brother Moore is all at sea on the question, and, because of a lifelong delusion relative to the matter, he seems wholly unable to grasp one of the plainest things of the New Testament. He says:

The body of Christ seems to be an unknown quantity with my friend Smith. In answer to this question, "Do you contend that all the saved at that time were in the body of Christ, which was the church of Christ, at Ephesus?" he answered: "O, no, but I do contend that all the saved were in the body of Christ, wherever the body of Christ was." Therefore the scripture that says, "Gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body," etc., is not so. I prefer the word to Brother Smith's belief. Smith believes the church and the body are one and the same, and in his answer above he admits that there was only a part of the church and body of Christ at Ephesus is only a part of the church and body.

There was a church at Ephesus, not a part of a church; there was a body of Christ at Ephesus, not a part of the body of Christ. Pray tell me, Smith, how it could be possible, "when one member suffers, all the members suffer with it." You dare not say this means a member of a body composed of all the saved, for millions never know it. That general body you believe in does not exist. In every other institution men can understand it that the local assembly is the body there is to it and all recognize it as such. A body is a complete organism, not just the feet and the eyes. Paul tells us about the church body in Romans, twelfth chapter. He illustrates it by a human body

Your idea of getting a man into the church, or body of Christ, and then have him take membership in a local assembly, is foreign to the Bible and not even respectable nonsense. Why don't you read us something of that invisible, universal thing you write about in the Bible? I think you have the best of reasons for not doing it, and that is, it cannot be found.

Every time the word "church" or body of Christ occurs in the New Testament Scriptures, it means a local assembly, and I challenge Brother Smith to find any standard Greek lexicon, not theological, defining the word "church" in any other way than an assembly.

I am sorry that Brother Smith knows no way of getting into Christ except by baptism. I told you that he baptized a man without faith in Christ; and if he is honest, and I do believe him sincere, then Brother Smith himself is now condemned in unbelief, having no hope and without God in the world. I tell you, dear man, if your present faith is no more than believing in God's existence, and you claim more as a qualification for baptism, you are a lost man and don't know it.

I said: "Christ and the apostles taught faith in Christ alone." Brother Smith says: "If his life depended on it, he could not produce one passage that says so." Acts 16: 31: "And then said, Believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt he saved, thou and thy house." Please tell us, Brother Smith, what other did the apostles tell the jailer to believe in? If Christ alone is not the sole and only object of Christian faith, I am deceived. I am still in my sins. Help me right here, Brother Smith, if you know another object in which, in addition to Christ, I must believe. I do declare here and now, that this is the passage you said could not be found, if my life depended on it.

Did the apostles tell the truth to the trembling jailer? I think so. What do you say? If you say yes, I have the passage; if you say no, I have it.

Well, Brother Smith, is this man who believes on the Well, Brother Smith, is this man who believes on the Lord Jesus Christ, repents of his sins, and confesses him before men, a condemned or justified man before you baptize him? This is as plain as your answer. Now what will you say?

He says: "The body of Christ seems to be an unknown quantity with my friend Smith." Now that is literally the truth. I know what the body of Christ is, but I do not know where it all is as to location, nor of how many members composing it. I know that every child of God on earth is a member of that body, but I do not know where they all are. I thank my brother in complimenting me for not being wise above that which is written. An inspired apostle declared: "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all." (Eph. 4: 4-6.) Even a casual reader should not fail to see from the relation of the above seven units that the body is as general as the rest. There is only one body for the human spirit, and there is only one spiritual body for the Holy Spirit, My friend could as consistently contend that the one "faith" and one "baptism" applied exclusively to the church or congregation at Ephesus as to contend that the one "body" so applies. The scripture which says, "Gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body," does not, in any way, conflict with my contention that the body, or church, of Christ is composed of all the children of God. Yes, there was a congregation or an assembly at Ephesus, but it was only a part of the one body, or general assembly, throughout the world. My friend thinks that the expression, "When one member suffers, all the members suffer with it," operates against the position that the "one body" is composed of all his disciples, because it would be impossible for all to know of the suffering of one member. It seems that any one ought to know that all that is meant here is that when one member knows of the suffering of another, it is a duty to sympathize with the afflicted one. I dare say that there are some in every congregation, even in Brother Moore's congregation, who suffer without the sympathy of every member, because all do not know of the situation. No doubt my friend himself has failed to sympathize with suffering members of his own congregation because he knows nothing of it. The fact that he sympathizes with those who suffer that are not members of his home church, or congregation, destroys his position on this point.

Brother Moore has persistently refused to answer this question: How can you harmonize with your position that the "one body" refers to a local assembly, church, or congregation, the fact that Paul says: "For in one Spirit were we all baptized into one body," etc.? (1 Cor. 12: 13.) Paul distinctly says that he and the disciples at Corinth were baptized at Corinth. Now, unless the "one body" use of the plural form of the personal pronoun "we." Paul was baptized at Damascus, while those he addresses were baptized at Corinth. Now, unless the "one body" is general and not local, will you please tell our readers how it could be possible for Paul and the Corinthians to be baptized into the same body? You simply cannot do it, and that is the reason you will not touch it.

Here is another question my friend is afraid of: Into what was the eunuch baptized down there in the wilderness? There was no church or congregation there into which he could be baptized. You have gone to record in saying "we are baptized into the body of Christ," and now I insist that you tell us into what was the eunuch baptized, if not into a general body. You have refused to touch this also, but it will be kept before you until you in some way dispose of it.

My friend says: "Every time the word 'church,' or body of Christ, occurs in the New Testament Scriptures, it means a local assembly, and I challenge Brother Smith to find any standard Greek lexicon, not theological, defining the word 'church' in any other way than an assembly." The word "ekklesia," translated "church," means simply "that which is called out," without regard to location or numbers. It has no more reference to a local than a general assembly, and the context in which it is used must determine to which it is applied. And now, in the light of this fact, I will ask my friend again a question he has not touched-viz.; To what does "the general assembly and church of the first-born" refer in Heb. 21: 23? The writer of Hebrews was not, as you very well know, writing to a local church, or assembly, but a general epistle to all the saints everywhere; and yet he says they have all come to the same thing-viz,, "the general assembly and church of the first-born." Our brother has shied around this, but he may as well come up to it, for I intend to keep it before him. He and my departed friend, Dr. Lofton, with whom I had a most pleasant controversy, differ the width of the heavens on this matter. Here is what that scholarly Baptist said: "Christ did not say that the gates of Hades should not prevail against his 'building his church,' but against 'it,' the church, which he would 'build:' and by the word 'church' he evidently meant his universal spiritual church, of which the individual organic church would be the concrete exhibition, or visible type, on earth. ("Lofton-Smith Discussion," page 265.) Thus may be seen the radical difference between my friend Moore and one of the ablest Baptists of the South. Moore says, "That general body you believe in does not exist;" but Dr. Lofton said it does.

Of course, Christ alone is the proper "object" of our faith; but I understood Brother Moore to mean that one is saved by faith alone in Christ—that is, the internal act of faith without an external expression. If he did not mean this, but the proper "object" of faith, I agree with him. Paul told the jailer to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; and he also told him to be baptized, did he not? The man who believes on Christ, repents of his sins, is, before his baptism, resting under the guilt of sin. Is that plain enough? He has no promise of pardon before baptism. Will my friend answer this: Would you baptize such believers as those mentioned in John 12: 42, 43? If not, tell us why you would not. This is the second or third time you have been asked this question.

Old Testament Characters—Abel, Pioneer in the City of God.

BY H, LEO BOLES,

In concluding our study on Abel, it is fitting to observe that he was the first fruits of the city of God, the home of the soul, or heaven. Of all those who dwell upon earth who shall live in heaven, Abel, so far as the record goes, becomes the first; hence we may speak of him as a pioneer.

There is a wide contrast between Cain and Abel from the beginning of their worship to their eternal destinies. Cain went out from the presence of the Lord into the land of Nod, and there built a city and named it for his son; he started the first city on earth. Abel started the city above. All the hamlets, villages, towns, metropolises, and cities of earth are the duplicates and multiplication of the works of Cain; while the New Jerusalem, house of many mansions, holy city, is the home of Abel and "spirits of just men made perfect."

We are told that Abraham was sustained during his sojourn in the land of Canaan by an undying hope; "for he looked for the city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God," (Heb. 11: 10.) All who sojourned in the promised land without receiving it as their own were not discouraged. All who serve God faithfully to-day regard themselves as strangers and pilgrims and "desire a better country, that is, a heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed of them, to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city." (Verse 16.) We should not forget that we are, like Abraham, only pilgrims: "for we have not here an abiding city, but we seek after the city which is to come." (Heb. 13: 14.) It is our desire and carnest endeavor to "come unto mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to innumerable hosts of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn who are enrolled in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of a new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better than that of Abel," (Heb. 12: 22-24.)

God's people under all dispensations have been taught to look forward by faith to this city. The patriarchs dwelt in tents which were unfit for permanent abode; the children of Israel wandered for forty years in the wilderness, dwelling in frail tents and temporary booths, all of which should have reminded them that God was preparing for them a permanent home, an abiding city. All the ancient worthies have been impressed with the fact that this earth is not their home. God's people have been persecuted and have been caused to go about in sheepskins, in goatskins; the world is not worthy of them; they have wandered in deserts and mountains and caves and the holes of the earth, been destitute, afflicted, and ill treated; yet through it all they have been sustained by an unfaltering faith and a glorious hope that some day they would reach the city of God and there enjoy the rest and blessings of the eternal

The Hebrew literature, as well as Christian literature, is enriched and adorned with the figures of speech, types, and allusions to the city whose builder and maker is God. These expressions are all significant and teach us many valuable lessons. A city with its walls was considered a place of safety. When Cain went out and founded his city, he made it a place, as he thought, of safety. When Lot went into Sodom, he thought that he was going to a place of safety; and when he was brought out of Sodom, he asked to dwell in the little city of Zoar. The Israelites had cities associated in their mind as places of safety; they were instructed to set apart six cities of refuge, places of safety for accidental manslayers. The city of God should be looked upon as a place of safety, that "we may have a strong encouragement, who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us; which we have as an anchor of the soul, a hope both sure and steadfast and entering into that which is within the veil." (Heb. 6: 18, 19.) The weary pilgrims here below should be taught to look for a place of safety from all of the storms, vicissitudes, and changes of life, a place where they can be sheltered and enjoy rest. All the noble yearnings of the human heart look and long for an abiding home. Here the earthly ties of home are broken and shattered, leaving the bereaved sad, lonely, and desolate; hence the longing for an eternal home where there is no night, no sorrow, no separation.

A city suggests the idea of association, society. Normal man does not dwell alone; he is not a hermit and cannot enjoy to the full the capacities of the soul when in lonely solitude. The sweet spiritual associations begun on earth are continued and multiplied in the city above. "The everlasting anthem of the blessed will not be a solo; it will be a grand and mighty chorus." The company there with the hallowed communication will be with the sons of God, the Lord Jesus Christ, the angels, and God the Father. We will have the fellowship of righteous Abel, Enoch, Abraham, Moses, David, Isaiah, John the Baptist, Paul and the other apostles, together with all who have died in the Lord. "Through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord" (Enh.

The law of this city is love, which binds the citizenship into one community, one body, one grand and glorious temple. The light of this city will be the truth of our God. The moral glory of this city shall make the sun and the moon grow pale; "the very hours of heaven will be measured by the light of God's glory, and not by the shadows of the earth." All the varieties of human character and human joy will be melted by the warmth of God's love into one blessed brotherhood of ransomed and redeemed saints. "And the city hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine upon it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the lamp thereof is the Lamb. And the nations shall walk amidst the light thereof: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory into it. And the gates thereof shall in no wise be shut by day (for there shall be no night there): and they shall bring the glory and the honor of the nations into it: and there shall in no wise enter into it anything unclean, or he that maketh an abomination and a lie: but only they that are written in the Lamb's book of life." (Rev. 21: 23-27.) Thanks be unto God for Abel, the pioneer and first fruits of the city which bath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

A Letter to the Field Force.

Editor's Note: Brother A. M. Burton, president of the Life and Casualty Insurance Company, with headquarters in Nashville, has written a very fine letter to the field force. It contains so many good thoughts and suggestions as to how to increase one's usefulness that we think it deserves the careful consideration of our readers. We are printing it without Brother Burton's knowledge, but we think we can overcome any objection which his innate modesty might suggest. Here is the letter:

To the Field Force: We have the most true and loyal field force with which any insurance company was ever I appreciate every effort they put blessed. when I allow myself to think what our men might do compared to what they are doing, how much more they might earn than they are earning, I want to meet each man face to face and just make him see the true facts in the case as clearly as I see them myself.

They apply to me as fully as to any man with the comwho is not getting as much out of himself as he should. As an agent, I was writing two or three dollars a week in new business, and thought I was making a fair Sometimes I would feel extra good, and by concentrating my attention on the matter I would write a dollar's worth of business in one day, and I made myself believe that was my "lucky day." I had to repeat the ex-perience many a time before I tumbled to the fact that my success when I concentrated my efforts was due to the extra exertion and not to luck. With the same effort, properly concentrated, I could write a dollar's worth of business in any territory any day.

For a long time I wasted a great deal of my strength, energy, and power by using tobacco and dissipating other ways, such as eating too heartily, etc. After eating too heavy a meal at noon, I was sluggish and unable to work as I should during the afternoon. Personally, I more than doubled my power and strength by gaining self-control, quitting the use of tobacco and coffee and everything else that contained no nourishment, and also quitting the practice of overeating.

If we, as insurance men, will look after our personal welfare as carefully as its owner looks after a race horse who is entered for a ten-thousand-dollar prize event, in the matter of diet, protection against cold, and exercise, it will be worth more than ten thousand dollars to us in the course of a lifetime. A prize fighter training for a twentyfive-thousand-dollar purse would not think of taking the risk of improper diet or the eating of a heavy meal. There is more than that amount up for the individual agent who uses care to strengthen himself physically, mentally, and morally. And if gamblers and prize fighters are so careful in these matters, how much more should we be as Christian gentlemen who love our families and are engaged in a noble work of inculcating principles of thrift and forethought among laboring people!

Many men do their work from week to week without giving it any thought and study. They allow their minds to drift off on politics or something at home; they worry over troubles that loom up ahead of them, wasting about seventy-five per cent of their energy in such ways. I know this, too, from my own experience. When an agent, I did not have an inspector to go out with me for about a year. I thought I knew my people and their circumstances, and I laughed to myself when the inspector asked at the first call for an annual premium, and stepped out of the room so that he would not see my amused look. I remember that it was a ten-cent case; and when the inspector came out the door, he had a five-dollar bill in his hand. Maybe that was not a jolt to my self-conceit! He tried the same idea all along the route, and sometimes it worked; if it did not, he tried for six months; and it certainly was hard to put that man off without paying him at least a month in advance. Naturally all this ran my collections away up. and it set me to figuring.

I compared my earnings for that big week with what I had been making for an average week's work, multiplying that sum by fifty-two to see what I had been losing for a Surprised at the result, in my humiliation I went further and figured what I would lose in the course of ten years, or twenty, or thirty, at six per cent compound interest. I found that I could be a rich man in thirty years if I would only do as well each week as that inspector did the week he was with me, and right then is when I turned square about face and started up the road of achievement.

There is not a man with our company to-day who cannot produce results that will be a revelation to him if he will only wake up, regenerate his will power and, through that, his habits, his methods of working, and the aim he sets out to reach.

And not only in collecting. My inspector friend not only wanted every spare dime in the house entered on the collection book, but he wanted every insurable risk in the house to carry a policy. I had prided myself on being a close worker; but he dug up new prospects-a boarder who had been taken since I last asked for prospects or occupants of a room recently let out.

Perhaps some of you agents have had the same experience I had, when an experienced man went with you and did better than you could do or had been doing. drank the bitter medicine like a man and determined to do better, you profited by the experience and have been making more money ever since. But, unfortunately, some are not willing to see their shortcomings in the past when brought face to face with them in this way. Self-conceited or prejudiced, they refuse to see the error of their way and try to justify themselves by thinking the bettered results were due to a new face, a new man, a new broom. All they do is to deceive themselves.

want to make one special suggestion to those of our men who expect to make life insurance their life work: it is to concentrate. Try it out on a monthly basis. Work hard along all lines, but for the next month try especially hard on writing new business. Study out plans to get prospects, ways to interest people in what you have to say, and how to close them pleasantly and firmly. See just how much business you can write when you really try. For the second month concentrate just as hard upon collections. Use all your persuasion and logic to collect up every case of arrears, to pull advance pay, and to induce your policyholders wherever possible to pay annually, semiannually, quarterly, or monthly. The third month specialize on saving lapses; and so on for twelve months. you will do this and put in practice, earnestly and honestly, what you have learned, you will be earning twice as much at the end of the year as you are now.

Hoping this candid exposure of my own discomfiture when I found I was not doing half what I might have done, that I was not earning half of what I should have earned and was capable of earning, will serve its purpose of arousing in our men the same spirit that it did in me, I am,
Very truly yours, A. M. Burren, President.

One and all, we may, at some time, realize to the letter the language of Saint John to a Christian mother. Many who are here must realize it now. They have learned to love in truth, not by impulse. They have learned to bind and rivet their love by the strong bond of the common and unchanging faith. All who know anything of Jesus Christ know something of this affection for some of his servants. some of us, it may be, know much, much more than we can feel that we deserve.-H. P. Liddon.

The Peace Dawn.

BY LOUIS MARIE ADKISSON.

The war's weird night has o'ershadowed the land,
And long we've looked lor the peace dawn's first ray,
We now behold its joyous, risen day,
Whose glad beams doth light every deep, dark strand.
And God shall sooth each lone broken heart,
Time restore each rent land and shattered mart
Oft stricken by war's stern, merciless hand.

May the beautiful, newborn dove of peace
Spread its white and welcome wings, evermore,
O'er mount and vast plain, from shore to fair shore;
May the banner of Liberty ne'er cease
To wave till new suns cast their setting light—
Till eons have rolled in their onward flight,
And eternity doth tired time release.

After the War.

Many things are being said nowadays about the new world that is to come with the peace that is to follow the present great war. Some of those sayings are wise, and some, otherwise. Platform, pulpit, and press are made vehicles to carry these messages to the expectant people. It is claimed that, when the smoke of battle shall have rolled away, anew world will be discovered, whose conditions will demand a great many readjustments in things national, political, and religious. We are told that when the boys return to their homes and the pursuits of peace, they will make somewhat drastic demands upon the church, and that this institution will have to square itself to these new conditions and suit its message to these demands. It is intimated that old religious institutions will not suit this coming new world, and that old messages will not satisfy the longings of populations that are to be regenerated by the war.

Whence came the notion that this hypothetical new world is to be vastly better than the old one, and that the returned soldiery will demand better things of the church? Is it a deduction from the lessons of the history of the past? What are the indications that the war is going to purify the morals of the citizenships of the world, both civil and military, and impart to the people, everywhere, better ideas as to what the church and its message ought to be? If the war is not succeeded by a period of demoralization, history will have to quit repeating itself, and the facts of the past will have to be heavily discounted. The post-war task will not be for new conditions to reform the church and reconstruct its message, but for the church to reform new conditions, and try to keep the standard of living from descending to a lower plane than the one It occupied before the war.

No doubt, the peace that is to come through victory will bring with it some important changes in the affairs of the world, but there are two things that will not change—namely, human nature and the gospel of Jesus Christ. Human nature will be the same after the war that it was nineteen hundred years ago, and it will need the same gospel that it needed then. The gospel that was originally given to the world was designed to meet all the changing conditions of the world to the end of time, and the message that the church then received is the message she is to bear to the world till the message shall come from on high that time shall be no more. The truth of God is not subject to modifications by the changing conditions of the world, but is as permanent and unalterable as its divine and eternal Author.

The Master said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation;" and through an inspired writer the Holy Spirit said, "Contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered unto the saints." This faith—this gospel—was God's power unto salvation at the beginning of the Christian era, and it will remain so throughout the ages that are to come, and neither war nor peace can make any changes in it either necessary or allowable. God knew just what the world needed to save it when he sent his Son into the world, and he knew what it would need throughout its history, and he adapted his gospel—his power—to these needs "once for all," and any attempt to change that gospel in any way, or to any extent, is disloyalty to the King of kings, and Lord of lords. It is the old story of Jesus and his love, and of faith in, and obedience to, him that the world needs now and always will need, and it is the business of the church to tell that old story over and over again to earth's remotest bounds and to the last moment of time.

No, the task of the church after the war will not be to find a new message for the world, but to discover from Scripture the old message and press it with new zeal and energy. Jehovah says, "Let him that has my word preach my word faithfully," and to do otherwise, at any time, is unfaithfulness to both God and a needy world. The world always will need salvation from sin, and the gospel presents the only plan whereby that can be attained; and as the gospel never changes, and human nature and human needs never change, the thing to do is to present, press, and, by every possible means, enforce the gospel with all diligence. The church need not bother itself about a new world, new conditions, and a new message. If it gives due diligence to cover the earth with the old message, it will have enough in hand to occupy all its time, means, and energy without trying to revise God's great program and his life-giving message.

Every succeeding generation finds a new world and new conditions to deal with-a world and conditions that did not confront its predecessors. Indeed, the sun rises upon a new world and new conditions every day, and this may require daily changes in the affairs and methods of men. but the way of life and salvation remains the same and needs no changes. The same message that met the needs of the people who, on the day of Pentecost, cried out, "What shall we do?" will meet the needs of returned soldiers after the war, as well as their needs during the war, and the needs of all men for all time. The repentance and remission of sins that began to be preached in Jerusalem on the ever-memorable Pentecest must be preached "unto all the nations," and this applies to the world and the conditions before the war, during the war, and after the war .- J. B. Briney, in Christian Standard.

In the Divine Plan God and Man Are Allies.

In the divine plan, God and man are allies, by whom the battle for righteousness is to be won. When God and man work together, things go right; when man works at cross-purposes with God, things go wrong. Man has found that without God he cannot win; and he has found in his direct straits, that "God's arm is not shortened that it cannot save." But he has found, also, that God does not propose to save humanity's cause without man's putting in the last ounce of his own energy. It is when, using the help of God, he goes forth fearless to battle against seemingly hopeless odds, that he has been able to "save himself, not once nor twice." It may well be the mightiest triumph of this war that God and man shall find each other, and that man, in corporate or individual life, shall learn unfailingly to join forces with God, whose is the kingdom and the power forever.-Selected.

Blessed are the ears that gladly receive the pulses of the divine whisper, and give no heed to the many whisperings of the world. Blessed indeed are those ears which listen not after the voice which is sounding without, but for the Truth teaching within.—Thomas à Kempis.

Missionary

Japan Missions.

BY W. W. FREISMAN.

The report of the Vincent Japan work last month is of four baptisms. Not every church in our land has had so many. One is the woman who taught Brethren Klingman and Vincent the language, and she is to be a great help. Funds are needed for the lot and a new house to go on it, Here is a place to give a hundred dollars or more so that it will count up. Anyway, special and some regular gifts are needed for it. Our poor buildings on rented land in not the best location are not what the church of Christ in the United States of America should make them in "the Land of the Rising Sun."

Japan is the key to the entire Orient, some one has truly said. Tokyo is the greatest educational center of the world. Why should we not at once put ten thousand dollars or more in a two-story building on a favorable lot we can get and then have room for children's school and church downstairs and advanced scholars and missionary's home upstairs? Such a combination is distressingly needed, and the work of loyal men and women and the faithfulness of many Japanese brethren and sisters deserve this manifestation of our interest and appreciation.

Send in some sanctified gifts for this special work right away. There is no greater investment to be made than in such pioneer work in planting the gospel in virgin soil. Much of interest may be said of the work, but this announcement must close here. We have played at the matter long enough. Others are taking such fields. Now is the time to reach this generation of souls. Address me at Abilene. Texas.

Interesting News from Japan.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

Sister Andrews writes:

Brother Hiratsuka has just told us the good news of several who are to be baptized next Lord's day. One of them is my language teacher, who has been a Methodist, although she has been coming to church here for a long time. She is a very earnest, good woman, and we have been interested in her, hoping she would learn and obey "the way of the Lord more perfectly." I believe she will make a splendid worker.

make a splendid worker.

You asked about the Bible class. Two members of the class have obeyed the gospel, and another expects to be baptized soon, I think. I enjoy this work very much,

O Ski San, my native helper, has recovered from her long and very dangerous illness and has reentered school, I am indeed thankful for her recovery, and hope she will do great things for God among her people. She is a lovely character and has a very strong personality.

I can't speak Japanese very well yet, but can make the people understand me. I have several times given an outline of the Bible to people who do not speak nor understand any English. My Japanese is very simple yet, but I do my very best in teaching the people about Christ, even the most ignorant. How steeped in superstition and idolatry some of the people are!

And Sister Cypert writes:

I have decided not to go to school this year, the principal reason being some splendid opportunities being opened up for work that I cannot possibly reach and go. I can devote all my mornings to language study and hold these opportunities in the afternoons for at least this school year.

One of the above-mentioned openings is a new sewing school that is being opened by an Episcopalian Japanese who is very much interested in the way Brother McCaleb teaches the Bible, so has asked that one of his girls teach in his school. His principle aim is supposed to be to teach sewing, but really it is to teach the girls Christianity. The possibility is that, if we let this pass, some one who will not give them a pure gospel will be secured to fill the place. Therefore my decision.

Another one is a class of young-men clerks who have asked for an English Bible class. Their principal aim is to get the English from a foreigner, but my principal aim is to teach them Christianity. So who knows what the results will be?

I also have a class of little folks who are learning very fast, and through whom I hope sometime to reach their mothers also with the truth.

It is appalling to see the great amount of work that is to be done and the few there are to do it.

These two young ladies are doing a splendid work. What are you doing at home here? And what are you giving to help the work in foreign fields? Don't wait until to-morrow, next week, or next year, but start right in where you are with personal, earnest work, and send something now to some of our workers abroad.

Out of a population of fifty millions in Japan proper, it is said that there are yet thirty-nine millions who have not yet heard of Christ.

My expenses, including food, clothing, and traveling, have, from January to September, averaged thirty-five dollars a month. This does not include supplies used from my garden.

What a great blessing is the art of writing and the international and national postal system, by which hearts many miles apart are joined as one and mind communes with mind!

For people who are lacking in flesh the following has been recommended: Two eggs well beaten; half a cup of pure cream; thicken with sugar till it becomes a paste. Take one teaspoonful every hour.

I have lately read the life of David Livingstone, and these things impress me: His trust in God, the purity of his life, his perseverance in the face of difficulties next to impossible, and his kindliness toward the African tribes. I find his ideas and experiences as to missionary work much in accord with my own.

A Japanese newspaper, called the "Asahi," gives this item of news: "The Japanese government is contemplating the establishment of a new course in the Imperial University of Tokyo for the study of Shintoism, to encourage the patriotic spirit of the people and their reverence to the national gods, according to an announcement made by Mr. Tsukamoto, Director of the Bureau of Shrines in the Home Office."

God will have thee learn to suffer tribulation without comfort, and that thou subject thyself wholly to Him, and by tribulation become more humble. AT HOME AND ABROAD

Brother McQuiddy is still confined to his room.

L. B. Jones, of Paint Rock, Ala., came to see us last week.
Make the children at the Tennessee Orphans' Homehappy.

John Hayes, of Mooresville, Ala., writes that he has the "flu." His name is legion.

We wish for our readers unalloyed happiness during this Christmas season and ever after.

"To get behind words to the reality for which they stand is the first essential in practical affairs," (Springfield Republican.)

A large number of Christmas offerings are being received for the War Sufferers' Fund. They will be acknowledged in our next "sue.

From J. les H. Aiken, Brownsville, Tenn.: "I love the dear old Lospel Advocate. I have been taking it ever since it has been published."

The churches are asked to remember the Tennessee Orphans' Home in making the offering next Sunday. Send the contribution to John W. Fry, treasurer, Columbia, Tenn.

From H. M. Phillips, Miami, Fla., December 16: "Please state in the Gospel Advocate that I have enough 'Zion Melodies' for the present. Thanks to those who made such possible."

The number of children at the Tennessee Orphans' Home has been greatly increased and the current expenses are larger than usual. A substantial contribution at this time will be greatly appreciated.

From J. S. Dunn, Waxahachie, Texas, December 12: "The church in Waxahachie is doing well. The interest and attendance at all the meetings are good. There were two additions last Lord's day from the Baptists."

True giving has its source in the best part of our nature. It is the sweetest expression of our best feeling. It can no more be restrained than can the waters of a spring, and human life would be as desolate without the one as the earth without the other.

By friendship, I suppose you mean the greatest love, the greatest usefulness, and the most open communications, and the most exemplary faithfulness, and the severest turth, and the heartiest counsel, and the greatest union of minds, of which brave men and women are capable.—

From A. O. Colley, Dallas, Texas, December 15: "The church work here is fine. Two accessions last Sunday, one to-day. We are planning greater things for the Lord. We have had two deaths in the congregation from the flu.' Many others were afflicted, but are rapidly improving. Please announce that my address has been changed from 2018 Bennett Avenue to 5728 Junius Street, Dallas, Texas."

F. B. Shepherd sends us a report of the Forest Vale Mission Funds: From W. T. Fierbaugh, $4; Sister N. L. L., $5; by Christian Leader, $34; Scottsboro church of Christ, $7.85; A. K. Sewell, $1; Beauchamp, $22.15; church of Christ at Charleston, $10. Brother Shepherd's address is Amarillo, Texas.

From J. J. Vanhoutin, Paris, Ill., December 16: "I write to say that I was sadly disappointed by not being able to hold meetings until the 'flu' epidemic came, and that caused a postponement of all my appointments. It is very doubtful if I have another meeting this coming winter. This is, indeed, very humiliating to me, being deprived of work as well as support." We hope some of our readers will cheer Brother Vanhoutin with a good letter.

Joe L. Netherland writes from Yuma, Tenn.: "My school will close here about the middle of April. I intend then to give all of my time to preaching the word. If any congregation desires to have me with them for a series of meetings after the above date, I would like to get into correspondence with it. I would like to be kept busy during May and June. Why should we wait until July or August to begin our work? 'Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord.' (1 Cor. 15: 58.)"

From David O. Griffith, Merigold, Miss., December 17:
"I am now located at Merigold, Miss., Route 2, Box 142.
I have been very busy all the year preaching in Texas, Mississippi and Alabama. I am now located at Merigold to work and to build up a congregation at Matthews' Crossing. There are a few members near this place who meet for worship every Lord's day. The work was begun last Lord's day, and I shall keep it going. I am now ready to give my assistance to congregations within one hundred miles of Merigold. Those that desire my services for 1919 should write at an early date."

From Mrs. J. D. Northcut, Tracy City, Tenn., December 19: "I write to thank you for the courtesy shown us in publishing so many articles so kindly contributed about my dear, deceased husband, J. D. Northcut; and I also wish to express, through the Gospel Advocate, my deepest appreciation for the many letters of condolence—more than fifty in number from brethren and sisters, his friends, from almost every part of the United States and one from Canada, most of whom, I am sure, take the Advocate. The Advocate has been a weekly visitor in our home for twenty years, and now, in our loneliness and sorrow, I feel that I could less afford to do without it than ever before."

While peace marks the end of the war, that end will liself mark the beginning of the new era—the changed order of things throughout the civilized world. All the strength, the influence, and the wisdom of the best of the free and progressive nations will be needed in dealing with the new situation. To create a world, to restore a brokendown civilization to livable conditions, to rehabilitate the ruin of the best efforts of the centuries, to revitalize industry, to reëstablish law and order, will become the duty of all the peoples, combatants and neutrals alike. In this great reconstructive work America must be a leading factor. As we trained for war with zeal and thoroughness, so we must train for securing the victories of peace with just consideration.—Christian Herald.

The following notice has been sent us for publication: "We challenge any officer of the American Christian Missionary Society, any Regional Superintendent, or any officer of the Christian Missionary Society of South Dakota to debate the following questions in the city of Huron (time to be agreed upon): First, 'Resolved, That money has been collected in South Dakota from the disciples under the promise of putting evangelists into new fields to organize churches after the apostolic pattern, when, at the same time, a compact had been entered into between the American Christian Missionary Society and the denominations not to enter new fields where the denominations were sending in money.' Second, 'Resolved, That, under this agreement with the denominations, the disciples cannot enter any one of the fifty county-seat towns or the capital of the State, where the pure, unadulterated gospel has never been preached." Done by order of the church of Christ, of Huron, S. D., this 15th day of December, 1918. Mrs. Mathilda Erb, Clerk."

Training Little Children

By MRS, ETHEL G. YOUNG

(Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by The United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and The National Kindergarten Association, New York, N. Y.)

Article 32.

"Come, Let Us Live with Our Children"—To Live with the Children Means to Be Interested in Them and Play with Them, to Be Honest with Them, and to Have Faith in Them.

I am a mother of three children—Betty, aged six; Bob, four; and Jack, who is two. Up to the time Betty was four years old, she had always been a very nervous child and needed constant entertaining. I hesitated to send her to kindergarten; but after reasoning with myself, I finally decided to send her. The concentration required in the two years she spent in kindergarten made a different child of her, and she can amuse herself now for many hours at a time.

Bob entered kindergarten about three months ago. He is a quiet child and needs to be brought out of himself. He seems to be getting needed help in the kindergarten, for, in the short while he has been there, he has become more talkative and active. He now enjoys being with other children, whereas before he preferred to play alone.

There is nothing more necessary in bringing up children than to have them feel that we are interested in them. Try always to answer their questions. If you cannot satisfy their curiosity, they will surely go elsewhere for their information. When the children come home from school, I ask what they did, what songs they sang, what pictures they looked at, etc. They live the two or three hours spent in kindergarten over again by telling me what they have done. I had to leave the children for a week not long ago. When I returned, they could not talk fast enough to tell me all that had happened. The habit thus formed of caring to share their experience with you is a great safeguard as they grow older.

A story at bedtime is always welcomed by the children; and I find that it is not only enjoyable and beneficial to them, but also to myself. They never tire of good fairy stories. Nature stories are always interesting, too. My children will choose the same stories over and over again until they almost know them by heart.

Several nights ago I was called away and could not read a story, so I promised one for after breakfast next morning. When breakfast was over and I thought of all I had to do, it seemed as if I were wasting time to sit and tell stories. However, as the children became absorbed in the story and their happy faces looked up into mine, I realized that time could not be better spent. The story was that of "Hans and the Four Big Giants," the keynote of which is helping others. I knew that the children had absorbed the point of the story when they helped me afterwards to clear the breakfast table.

The kindergarten is a great help in making children independent. Each child is taught gradually and in a playful way to help himself. In a class of forty, John does not like to be the only one who cannot put on his rubbers or button his coat. Perhaps you will say you can teach independence at home. Granted, you can. The trouble at home is that we too often do too many things for our children. At home, too, we lack the group work so beneficial in the kindergarten. It develops the social side of a child as well as his ability to be of service.

Orderliness is another aim of the kindergarten. It should also be the aim of every household. In kindergarten all the material is kept in order. It is given out and collected in an orderly way and each child is taught to pack up his material after he has finished with it. There is always a place for everything in the kindergarten, and the child learns to put everything in its place.

If your child is not orderly at home, do not blame him until you first put yourself in his place and see if you are expecting the impossible. We have discovered in our family that by making things convenient the children will keep things in order. In our coat closet we have a box for rubbers and another for toys. We have put within reach two hooks for each child's clothing. On the door there is a bag of several pockets for gloves. Even the twoyear-old boy puts his things away, and I have never taught him to do so. He learned by observing the others. Just the other night he cried while I was undressing him because he remembered he had not put his train away. Let each child have a separate place for his toys, for they so enjoy being owners. If one is neat and another careless, it would be very discouraging for both to keep their things together.

Not long ago I spent a most enjoyable afternoon coasting with the children. A neighbor who saw me said: "You surely are a child with your children." She unconsciously paid me a compliment. If I can only make my children feel that I am interested in everything they do, I am certain I will have and keep their confidence.

The Value of a Smile.

The thing that goes the furthest toward making life worth while.

That costs the least and does the most, is just a pleasant, smile.

The smile that bubbles from the heart that loves its fellow man

Will drive away the clouds of gloom and coax the sun again.

It's full of worth, and goodness, too, with human kindness blent-

It's worth a million dollars, and it doesn't cost a cent.

There is no room for sadness where we see a cheery smile; It always has the same good look—it's never out of style. It nerves us on to try again when failure makes us blue; The dimples of encouragement are good for me and you. It pays a higher interest, for it is merely lent—It's worth a million dollars, and it doesn't cost a cent.

A smile comes easily enough, a twinkle in the eye Is natural—and does more good than any long-drawn sigh; It touches on the heartstrings till they quiver blithe and long.

And always leaves an echo that is very like a song.

So, smile away! Folks, understand what by a smile is meant—

It's worth a million dollars, and it doesn't cost a cent.

"The Scattered Disciples."

The following "Observations," which recently appeared in the Christian Leader from the pen of Brother F. L. Rowe, we give our readers for consideration:

A brother writing from Ontario recently made this statement: "There was no church of Christ here until we came. Now we have a church of eight members and several interested outsiders."

I have frequently had letters from brethren moving into new places, wanting to know if we had a church there. In numerous cases I have replied that we had no church there, but I was sure we would have if they stayed there.

I have thought over these cases and that Canadian report frequently. How it carries you back to the days of the dispersion! The record says the disciples, following the persecution of Stephen, went everywhere preaching the Do you ever stop to consider what a powerful ingospel. fluence the church, as individuals, would be if we carried out that same apostolic practice? How seldom you find a member who, when he goes into a new locality and discovers that he is all alone, has the courage to make an effort to build up a church! How often they will just settle down and become indifferent, or else become merged with some of the other religious bodies! This is not always the result, as we have many godly families living far removed from churches who are standing for truth with all their power and determination and who have not had any encouragement, but are faithful, nevertheless. But there are hundreds-I was going to say thousands-who move into new places, and particularly in cities, where their light goes out and their next-door neighbor does not know that they have ever made a religious profession. If, on the other hand, we show the zeal that this brother manifested, how different the result might be! In nearly every settlement you can now find some one of like precious faith, and two or three constitute a scriptural congregation. believe many times the work of the Lord could be built up by a little nuclues making the effort like this brother and letting the people know of their purpose.

Besides showing our zeal by such action, we also acknowledge our personal responsibility to our Heavenly Father; and that item alone, with me, is a mighty serious phase of the situation. α

The Two Kinds of Branches.

What Brother Rowe has said leads me to say a few words about the two kinds of branches. Christ says: "I am the vine, ye are the branches." (John 15: 5.) It is a fact that we all well know that there are two kinds of branches-viz, living and dead branches. It is also a fact that we just as well know that if you will take a living branch of a vine and plant it in the earth ever so far from the vine from which it was taken, it will continue to live and will grow and bear fruit. But not so with the dead branch; it bears no fruit, neither while connected with the vine nor when planted in the earth at some other place. The trouble with so many church members is that they are dead while having a name to live. While at home with a well-organized congregation they attend church and do some work because of the propitious circumstances; but take their surroundings from them, then they are seen as, indeed, they are-viz., dead, not living. Just as certain as there are souls to be saved, there is something radically wrong with that man or woman who claims to be a disciple of Christ, but who, when he or she moves to a place where there is no church, folds his or her arms and quits. Such will not be saved unless brought to repentance and put to work.

Just here it seems that attention should be called to a mistake that is often made by ministers. In their travels they often meet some of these scattered disciples by what I shall call, for lack of a better word here, accident. So soon as they meet them they suggest: "Let's organize a church and go to work." So a few dead sticks in the house of God are brought together and it is announced that a new congregation has been established, when, as a matter of fact, there is no house of God there, for in those people God does not dwell. The thing for ministers to do, under such circumstances, is not to think or talk about organizing a church, but to preach to those sinners who call themselves "Christians" till they are "born again"—till they become, indeed, new creatures in the Lord Jesus Christ, and they cry out, because of this life that is in them: "Let's get busy and see that a church is established here and this community won for Christ." Then it is time for the preacher to help start them into the work of a congregation and announce that a new congregation has been established.

In those communities where we have the scattered disciples calling for preachers to help them, the fact that they call demonstrates that they have life. It is the duty of the minister to answer all such calls and help them as living branches of Christ, the true vine. But where we perchance meet scattered disciples that are doing nothing in the way of establishing the work, as dead branches they should be treated. They should first be saved before organizing them into a body to save others.

The following good letter comes from Dalton, dated December 16:

Brother Hall: Brother Flavil Hall came and preached two sermons for us yesterday. He is to be with us every third Sunday. We have some new members from Trion, and Brother McArthur has also moved here and is meeting with us regularly. I think we are doing fine not to have a regular preacher; and if you will just keep coming occasionally, it will still help out. Brother Phillips is to preach every fourth Lord's day; so you see we have half the time arranged for help. We will use Cass [Cass Hall, his sonin-law] or some of the other "clod-hoppers" the rest of the time, and will make it fine with your dropping in occasionally.

The birds and opossums are still fat and waiting for you.

Come when you can.

Your brother in Christ,
J. M. Weaver.

We are glad to get the good news from Dalton, and we assure Brother Weaver that we will be there soon to take care of the birds and opossums. There is nothing better. He misses it when he calls Cass Hall a "clod-hopper," for Cass drives a "Ford" and does not work on the farm. Brother Jim, I think it is you that drives "Beck."

Brother Pettey was with the Austell brethren on the second Sunday in this month and reports a glorious time. He is to be with them again on the fourth Lord's day.

The workers here are striving harder than ever before to make this Christmas a happy one by remembering the poor, the sick, and the neglected.

Brother Brooks continues to do a good work at East Point, and Brother Klingman is doing the same at South Pryor. The writer was with the Liberty Hill brethren on the third Lord's day. The work goes well at all the places.

Voting is Division.

BY E. A. E.

To walk disorderly is not simply to make a mistake or to be overtaken in a trespass, but to pursue a course of disorderly conduct, such as to work not at all, to be a busybody, a meddler in other men's matters, a drunkard, covetous, an extortioner, to live in fornication, to cause division contrary to the teaching of Christ, to be a factionist. One who teaches the truth is not a factionist, if all others should vote that he is. The brother who has been overtaken in any trespass should be restored in gentieness and forbearance; if he resists all scriptural efforts to restore him, his-life becomes disorderly, and it is God's will that the church should withdraw themselves from him.

All know that by voting a congregation cannot change the will of God. The question of what disorderly conduct is cannot be decided by vote. God defines that. Think of babes in Christ, some of whom are only ten or twelve years of age, of others who are distressingly ignorant of the Bible and are governed more by a partisan spirit than by the spirit of Christ, voting on what the will of God is! What baptism is cannot be determined by vote. Just so, God commands the whole church to withdraw themselves "from every brother that walketh disorderly," and every one who does not do that disobeys God as much so as the one who refuses to be baptized. A church cannot decide by vote whether or not a believing penitent should be baptized; God commands him to be baptized. So a church cannot decide by vote whether or not a brother who walks disorderly should be withdrawn from, because God commands that to be done. To vote against doing that is to vote against God.

When it has been clearly seen from the will of God that a brother is really walking disorderly, in the first place, all the church should be sorry, as Paul says the church at Corinth should have mourned that one there was living in fornication; in the second place, all should endeavor to restore the wrongdoer in the spirit of gentleness and forbearance, looking to themselves, lest they also be tempted (Gal. 6: 1-3), and should use all other means specified by the Lord to save him. They should never suffer a desire to enter the heart to make out a case against him in order to take vengeance by having him "turned out of the church." They should never prosecute him in church as a criminal is prosecuted in court, and should never persecute him. There should be no two sides, no partisans. When all means have failed, then the church with one accord and one heart, in obedience to God, must withdraw themselves from him. There is no place for voting. To vote is to divide the church virtually over the question whether or not the will of God shall be done.

For a church to divide over the question of a brother's walking disorderly, one side striving in a partisan spirit to prove him guilty and the other side in the same spirit striving to clear him of the charge, is contrary to the will of God, destructive of unity and peace, and a shameful thing.

When a church has obeyed God in withdrawing themselves from a brother who walks disorderly, this brother is not then to be treated as an enemy, but admonished as a brother.

God forbids that anything shall be done through faction or vainglory-through a partisan spirit, or through a spirit of rule or ruin or to have one's way and to carry one's point. This is wrong even if a large majority should vote to do it. To divide a church in a factious and vainglorious and malicious spirit is as wicked as it was to rend the natural body of the Son of God with a spear and to tear his flesh with nails. To use the church to serve one's own personal and fleshly ends and ambitions is as bad as the betrayal of the Savior with a kiss.

God commands the church to all speak the same thing, to be perfected together in the same mind and the same judgment (1 Cor. 1: 10); to be of the same love, to be of one heart and soul, in lowliness of mind to consider others better than oneself; to look each one not to one's own selfish interest or even to one's own salvation alone, but to the good and salvation of others (Phil. 2: 1-11). Every congregation is commanded to "give diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." (Eph. 4: 3.) Not to obey God in these commands is as much rejection of his will, or is as rebellious, as to refuse to be haptized or to eat the Lord's Supper. Yet, not a few church members seem not to care whether others do right or wrong, or are saved or lost, or whether or not all are of the same mind and heart.

In case some church members do not understand the will of God on the subject, or are not certain as to the guilt of the one in question, or whether or not what he is accused of is disorderly conduct, or for any reason all are not of the same mind and judgment, the church should not vote and divide in feeling and, maybe, into two congregations, but should study the Bible together and devoutly pray together until all have learned the will of God, are of one accord, and can keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. God has not been obeyed until this has been done. Not to do this is disobedience to God. Then when all are of the same mind, of the same love, of one heart and soul concerning the one in question, that one will be withdrawn from or will not be withdrawn from, according to the will of God, without voting.

Some church members seem to know but little of the will of God concerning "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" in regard to being of the same mind, the same judgment, the same love, of one heart and one soul; or, if they know it, worse still, they have but little regard for it. Some seem to prefer rather to break this peace and to destroy this unity than to make sacrifices of opinions and selfish ends in order to maintain them. And some in theory are very exacting in regard to the importance of obedience to the will of God and of doing the sayings of Jesus, quoting Matt. 7: 21-27 and other passages, but in practice they reject much. There can never be harmony and peace until many act differently.

When I wrote as I did on the church's withdrawing themselves and on being of one mind and one heart, etc., I repeat, I was writing for all who desire to obey God, not for partisans and sinners who by their vote would thwart obedience to him. If a man knows that by his dissenting vote a church cannot be of the same mind and judgment and of one accord in withdrawing from a fornicator, and, therefore, votes to retain the fornicator, he is more of a politician than a Christian, has no regard for God, is no better than the fornicator, and both should go together. On the other hand, if a man works up a case against a brother who is not guilty of disorderly conduct and induces the church by majority vote to "excommunicate" him, he and those who vote with him are guilty of the sin of dividing the church and are responsible for the strife and sins which follow. Such a character has no respect for the body of Christ.

How is the act of withdrawing to be performed? In order to answer this question, we must know what is meant by the command, "withdraw yourselves." Each one performs the act of withdrawing himself; so all perform the act of withdrawing themselves. A preacher only, the elders only, a majority only, cannot perform this act for the rest. The elders, being older, wiser, fuller of love and forbearance, teachers, and examples, should take the lead in this, as in all other things, but the whole church must act and must obey God in withdrawing themselves. There was by far more unity and love and fellowship among the people of God in the days of the apostles than now exist among nominal church members. The church at Jerusalem, embracing thousands, were of one heart and soul. "had all things common," "sold their possessions and goods" in order to supply the wants of all in need, continued "with one accord in the temple" day by day, ate their food at home "with gladness and singleness of heart," praising God and "having favor with all the people," They continued steadfastly in this fellowship. To withdraw this daily and blessed association from a brother who walked disorderly was the act of withdrawing themselves. Not one of these thousands of Christians raised his voice against God's destruction of the Bars, Ananias and Sapphira. They were of one accord and one heart on this, too. Not one in the church at Corinth voted to retain the fornicator when God commanded that he be jurned over to Satan for the reasons given. This is what must be done now; this daily and happy association of the whole church must be withdrawn from the brother who walks disorderly, and the church must "have no company with him." This must be done "to the end that he may be ashamed." (2 Thess. 3: 14, 15.) Yet he must not be treated as an enemy, but admonished as a brother. In order to so treat him, he must be met, talked to, dealt kindly with, persuaded, and encouraged to change his course; but he cannot have or enjoy the congenial Christian association and fellowship and indorsement which Christians enjoy and in which they live. For instance, if he will not work, the fellowship of feeding him must be withdrawn. The man in 1 Cor. 5, who was living in fornication, was so treated. Just so now, "if any man that is named a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a drunkard, or an extortioner," the whole church must "not keep company" with him; "no, not to eat." "To keep company with" means more than to meet up with, to talk to, to admonish, to eat a necessary meal with; it means to mix up with, to be familiar with, to be on equality with. The eating here is that eating which places on equality, on familiar terms, and in communion with-not a necessary meal, such as eating in one's family.

An illustration will make this clear. A woman in a community is guilty of a certain sin, and all that community immediately withdraw themselves from her. They necessarily met with her, treat her always kindly, eat with her at times and her family always; but the community never does so in a familiar, congenial and social way so as to place themselves on an equality with her, so long as she continues in her sin. Let the church, the Lamb's bride, be so clean, so pure, so holy, that there can be no congeniality, spiritual equality, and fellowship between the whole number and any brother who walks disorderly. The brother who walks disorderly cuts himself off from all this fellowship. He has not simply cut himself off from the worship on Lord's day. To withhold the Lord's Supper from him and still to fellowship him in all daily life is not to "withdraw yourselves" from him, is not to "have no company with him."

How are elders to be selected, if not chosen by vote? Voting that a truthful man is a liar does not make him a liar; voting that a liar is a truthful man does not make him a truthful man. Voting cannot change facts. God plainly gives the qualifications of elders. He gave the qualifications of the seven men mentioned in Acts 6 which fitted them for their peculiar work—"men of good report, full of the Spirit and of wisdom." Voting could not change these qualifications. All men in a congregation with the scriptural qualifications are competent and worthy to serve as elders. Voting on them cannot qualify or disqualify them.

How are such men to be found? Look them out. As men work in the church, these qualifications are developed and discovered. Let a congregation look out among themselves men who are qualified to serve as elders, and let such men be appointed to this work. Neither can appointing them give them the qualifications.

But when a choice must necessarily be made between two equally well-qualified men, how can it be done without taking a vote? Such a case is found in Acts 1: 23-26. Instus and Matthias were qualified to serve as apostles in Judas' place, but only one apostle was necessary. The apostles cast lots with the perfect agreement that the one upon whem the lot should fall should be the one to fill the place. There was not a dissenting vote. They first prayed, asking God to guide the lot, since he knew the hearts of men, in order to show which man was his choice. Then they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Matthias. This settled the question and all accepted Matthias as God's choice." The lot is east into the iap, but the whole disposing thereof is of Jehovah." (Prov. 16, 23.)

Personal preferences and prejudices and ignorance of the will of God in the young and inexperienced who are incompetent to judge of the scriptural qualifications of elders can have nothing to do with selecting elders to have the oversight of God's church. God alone can select them, and he does this by giving their qualifications.

Voting calls for a division of a congregation, because some vote one way and some vote another way. Then the vote of a child or of an inexperienced person and one ignorant in the main of the teaching of the Bible will destroy the vote of the purest and wisest and most godly man.

Another thing seems very clear: When a brother who walks disorderly in spite of all scriptural effort to restore him has been withdrawn from by a church in obedience to God, every other individual Christian or congregation of Christians that receives and fellowships him and encourages him becomes a partaker of his sins and slaps God in the face.

When feelings, personal preferences, prejudices, and selfish ends are placed above the church and above the peace and harmony and unity of the church, strife and division inevitably follow.

How Long Must the Christian Life Continue?

BY E. C. S.

The Christian life must continue until death; for if we cease to live as the word of the Lord requires, that may be the very time Death will lay his icy fingers upon us and take us away. We have no fixed lease of life. No one knows how long he will be permitted to live. Some die in infancy, some die in very early youth, and some die in early manhood or womanhood days. Some live to be threescore and ten, some reach fourscore, and some few reach the hundred mark; but these are very few compared with the masses that are born into the world. I do not now think of any that I know that have reached the one-hundred mark. I may know a few, but I cannot recall them now.

I think we ought to want to live as long as we can do any good; but if we live beyond our ability to do good, we will certainly be an encumbrance to others. But this is a matter we need not build up trouble over. Most of us will likely live about as long as we will be a general blessing to others. All Christians should strive to do all the good they can as long as they live in the flesh. It is next to a disgrace to live in the world and do no real good while we live. There is always some good that we can do, if we will only look it up and do it. It will certainly make us feel bad If we live to be old and cannot look back and see any good that we have done during our past lives, but it will be a matter of much joy if we can look back over a long and useful life. We can then thank the Lord for the good we have been able to do and can well wish that we could live on and do more good.

Then let us keep thinking and studying what we can do that will accomplish the greatest amount of good. Very few men can tell how much good they are accomplishing as they pass along the journey of life; but if they make a good, earnest effort, they can know that they are trying to do good, and even this gives some consolation. But a man that has made little or no effort to do good will surely have serious regrets that he did not strive to do more, so that he could have something to look back to as evidence of some good done. Any of us to-day would feel very sad if there were no good things in our lives that we could look back to with pleasure and feel that we had been instrumental in doing some good. People that do good in this life generally get credit for it while they live and are made to realize that they have done some good, but people that have done no real good have nothing to cheer them in looking back over the past.

Those that lead a useful and busy life not only have things to look back to, to comfort and cheer them in old age, but something to help them in their declining years.

But to think of growing old and feeble with nothing in hand to help them is sad indeed. Hence, all ought to bear that in mind and not let old age overtake them without anything on hand to help to ease them down the decline of life. It is a very nice thing to save up something for old age; yet it is a dangerous thing to the interest of the soul to get our hearts too much set on earthly treasures. The love of money is said to be the root of all evil. Hence, we need to be careful not to strive after earthly treasures. to the neglect of the soul. Indeed, we should not allow any earthly interest to interfere with the salvation of our souls. Let the matter of salvation be first always. This is the only safety for the soul. Jesus knew what was of the greatest importance. Hence, he said: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." This should be our first and most serious consideration. It is generally true that the man that makes the best preparation for eternity also provides for the highest and truest interests of this mortal life. No man ever reaches the highest and best interests of this life that takes no interest in the matter of eternal life. Truly, the most interesting and happiest life that we can live on earth is to lead an earnest and faithful Christian life in the presence of others.

Use the Renewal Blank.

In every copy of the Gospel Advocate mailed out this week our readers will find a renewal blank. We sincerely hope that this will be used, not only for sending renewals, but also for new subscribers. Increased postage makes it prohibitive for the publishers to send out the number of letters that we did send formerly, and we must rely on our readers' spirit of promptness and fairness to respond without being continually reminded.

You have all heard the old saying, "One good turn deserves another." Our dealings with one another should be on the "give-and-take" basis. Applying these maxims to the Gospel Advocate, we can modestly say that for the past few months the publishers have been giving to its readers the best paper possible under the trying conditions

The Bible says: "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and it shall return to thee after many days." One party to a transaction is not expected to do all the giving. It is now the publishers' time to take something from the thousands of appreclative readers. We have implicit faith in their willingness to do their part. What we earnestly desire is that all our subscribers show their interest in the paper and the good work it is doing by sending us new names for our list. A very little effort on their part will be richly rewarded.

ECKMAN LABORATORY, Philadelphia

The Preachers and the "Flu."

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

I do not believe that any class of people have had their work more completely demoralized and have more keenly felt the force of the "fin" epidemic than have the preachers; in fact, I doubt whether any class of laborers will suffer so severely from this terrible scourge as will the laborers in the gospel. Perhaps all of our preaching brethren that are trying to be regularly engaged in the work, like myself, had promised time and planned meetings up to the close, or very nearly the close, of the year, and, not anticipating anything of so demoralizing and of so serious a nature, had laid no plans for anything else. But when this epidemic struck the country, picture shows, theaters, schoolhouses, church houses, and all places of public gatherings were closed.

Now that the epidemic in some measure has abated and the ban, in most places, has been lifted, the theaters have been opened up, the picture shows are running in full swing, the schools have reopened, and entertainment seekers and pleasure lovers and all lines of secular business and employment move on as though no epidemic had ever struck the country. The school-teachers in most cases have drawn their regular monthly salaries, which, I believe, is altogether just; other things of a secular nature will move right on and soon pick up all they have lost, and, therefore, will soon never know they have been struck.

But where is the preacher left? Without an income, or salary, and without work because he cannot get a chance to work.

Everybody concedes the fact that people are sickening and dying every day and all around us, and that the people need the gospel just as bad as they ever did. But we are in the midst of winter, and the churches are faint-hearted and timorous, not willing to pull against a cold collar and work under difficulties if need be. Consequently, the most of the meetings have been abandoned or postponed indefinitely.

But where is the preacher left? He has been thrown out of work all this time without a chance to readjust himself to conditions, and the cost of living piling up upon him greater than ever before. If the farmer or teacher or business man had to be thrown out this way, he would think it terrible and there would be a wail of woe coming at once; but it is looked upon as the fate incident to the preacher's life and to none other. But the preacher will feel the effects of this very keenly in more ways than one.

Rhumatism and Indigestion.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for dyspepsia and indigestion, relieves rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases, such as gout, sciatica, neuralgia, and nervous headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due, in whole or in part, to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism chronic indigestion, kidney and bindder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and Ind that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys, and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all polsonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians; went to Baitimore and consulted specialisis there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living, when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was entirely relieved."

work under unfavorable conditions at times. We have fallen into the idea that our meetings must be just at the most propitious times or not at allthat is, they must not come too soon or too late in the season, nor when it is too hot or too cold, nor the nights dark, nor the people too busy; in fact, everything must be just right before we shall try to have a meeting. Paul says: "I am debtor both to Greeks and to Barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish." (Rom. 1: 14.) The church owes the world the gospel and God is going to hold it to a solemn and fearful account for the same, (1 Tim. 3: 15; Eph. 3: 6-12; Phil. 2: 14-16; 1 Cor. 9: 16.) I want to insist on every one who lays claim to being a Christian to read and study prayerfully these scriptures.

We need more courage, resoluteness, energy, and "stick-to-it-ive-ness," and we must have it if the world is brought to a knowledge of the truth. One strong admonition to Joshua when upon his shoulders fell the responsibility of leading the people into the land of Canaan was: "Be strong and of good courage." (Josh. 1: 6-9.) Churches of Christ must "be strong and of good courage" and be willing to work, even though we work under difficulties, that the gospel may be preached. Give people a chance to hear and obey the gospel; then, if they reject it, the responsibility is upon them and not upon the church, as the church has given them the opportunity of accepting it.

Dread of Poverty.

A great deal of apparent poverty comes from dread of poverty. A man saves every cent and goes mind and soul hungry and, ten to one, he is starving somebody else at the same time, along with himself. He is really poor, for the time being, although he has a large bank account. Poverty will come every time as the result of the improper attitude toward money. Money is not a reality; it represents things that we consider for our good. But there is no poverty like that of the starved soul that shrinks and dries up into narrowness and compression. In getting the feeling of wealth, look about you. See all the wonders of nature: believe that wonders will happen, and then get ready for them. After the day's work is done, build air castles, and then go in and lay a strong foundation under one of them. Expect to develop into efficiency necessary for the bigger job. The key to this lies in your hands in doing the little things well.-Patrick Fenton, in the Nautilus.

There Seems to Be a Change.

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

It is well for people to make a change on some things, but others are settled for time and eternity. When we come to the Lord's will, it is the same in season and out of season, during war times and during peace. It appears to me that I can see a change in some in regard to the teaching of the Book—not that the Book has changed, but some evidently try to make it suit their views on certain propositions.

Societies taking the place of the church is one of the changes I see. Now, for many religious bodies such is not surprising, but to the body posing as the church it surely is a sad affair. Some bodies which used to cry aloud for the church as the only body through which to do the work of the Lord have lately seen fit to teach that such can be done to God's glory in other bodies. This, no doubt, causes a little fear on the part of some. If there is any other organization through which or in which a Christian can relieve the suffering and preach the gospel other than the church, I fail to see it. But I am young yet, and may not see as well as some older and more keen-sighted preachers. The church is God's organization; and when we go to or work in another, we surely are not in God's organization. Then we must not expect God to bless us, for we are not in his society where he places his blessings. Some who used to preach and write straight to the plummet now say these organizations are all right.

Now there is a change in many big preachers on another theme; but I am glad that not all of them, nor that the body as a whole, see it this way. If a man cannot be a "Y" worker or a "eamp pastor" and teach against carnal war. I do not see how he can become such. I fail to see how he can be true to God and not declare "the whole counsel of God" on any subject plainly taught in the one Book. But those who are such may think it all right to use carnal weapons, and so there is contentment on that. There used to be a great deal of teaching against such war, but it has grown less lately. Anyway, there seems to be a change.

If there has really been a change on these points, we may not be surprised at others, for the same authority that could change one thing could do so to others. Suppose a man were to try to keep up with such a process; he would have to change his sermons very often. But if a sermon fits perfectly with the word of God one time, it will always fit on similar occasions. What is the truth now was the truth nearly two thousand years ago, and will be as long as mortal man exists. If carnal war is wrong one time, it is always. If the church is the only God-given body through which to work one time, it is for all time. We need a great deal of teaching now along such lines, for there seems to me to be a change. Is there a change, and is it right?

KELLAM HOSPITAL

Some months since we wrote an article in which we cited two cases of cancer cures at Kellam Hospital, Richmond, Va. The article was due to the fact that a physician of more than thirty years' experience, and one of our most esteemed church members, had been cured of cancer, with which he had been afflicted for more than seven years. At the time he entered the hospital he was considered incurable, and, apparently, could live for only a few months. At the time we frankly stated to Mr. Kellam that we were quite sure he could not cure the patient; but if he did, we would make mention of the fact in these columns.

One of our valued readers, a physician, chided us for stating that a malignant cancer could be cured, and is well and hearty to-day.

Recently, while in Richmond, we visited the Kellam Hospital and looked into the work it is doing. In addition, we talked with a number of citizens, among them Mr. Kellam's pastor. We learned that he was a deacon in the Second Baptist Church, and greatly esteemed by his fellow citizens.

Some years ago, at the suggestion of Dr. Ben Johnson, at the time one of the leading surgeons of the city, a bill was introduced in the Legislature forbidding any one to practice medicine who was not an accredited physician. An amendment was made to the bill which excepted the Kellam Hospital from its operation. Several patients appeared before the committee that had charge of the bill, and in Dr. Johnson's presence testified they had been cured of cancer at the Kellam Hospital, after being operated on by Dr. Johnson. Dr. Johnson then concurred in the amendment excepting the Kellam Hospital.

Dr. W. P. Matthews, who ranked as high as any physician in the city, sent all his patients to this hospital, and claimed that more than ninety per cent of them were permanently cured. Dr. A. B. Anderson, health officer of Hanover County, has given a written testimony of the fact that he was cured of cancer in this institution, after other treatments had failed. A number of cases have been cured in this hospital after Johns Hopkins and other great hospitals had failed to effect a cure.

In view of the fact that thousands are dying yearly with this dread disease and the further fact that many external cancers are considered incurable, we deem it a duty and a privilege to make these statements; and should they be called in question, we the sake of suffering humanity these facts should be widely known.

"Prayer is a petition to God; an entreaty." Once, after Jesus had prayed, it appears that it was so different from what his disciples were in the habit of hearing that one of them said: "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples." John had taught his disciples how to pray, and Jesus instructed his disciples how to pray, and gave to them a formula; and the aposties have given instructions in regard to prayer-how to pray, when, and where and what to pray for-but left it with the one who prays to arrange the formula. Supplications, intercessions, and thanksgiving with praise and adoration should be inserted as the surroundings would require.

The Christian should address the Almighty with as much respect and reverence as he would the Governor of the State. If you should go into the presence of our President, or governor, you would remove your hat before you asked a favor. So, in prayer, please remove your hat.

In the ancient Jewish worship all prayers and acts of worship were offered in the name of the Great High Priest, through the mediatorship of Moses. Now, Paul says to the Christian: "And whatsoever ye do in word order to pray acceptably. In ap-Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." (Col. 3: 17.) Christ is our Mediator, through whom we approach our Father; Christ is our Advocate, who pleads our case before our Heavenly Father for us; Christ is our Great High Priest, who officiates for us in our prayers and thanksgiving offerings. Brother, do not consider prayer a mere formality. A prayer, to be acceptable, must flow from a penitent, forgiven heart. Do not wait until the very last to ask for pardon, for that is the first thing to obtain in order to pray acceptably. In approaching the Almighty, use words of reverence and respect, as Jesus taught his disciples to say: "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name." We can with propriety use many other expressions. I would not attempt to give a set form of words, only to say: "O Lord, our God and our Creator, thou the great author of life and the Father of our spirits, in the name of Jesus, thy Son, and our Savior, our great High Priest, Mediator, and Advocate, we plead thy kind forgiveness of all our sins that we may appear before thee acceptably, and that our prayers and thanksgiving may come before thee as an offering of sweet incense, and as the prayer of one be acceptable upon the great altar of mercy. O divine Father, thou who ordained that nations should exist and who ruleth in the kingdom of men, we are thankful to thee for the great manifestation of thy love in the gift of a Savior that man might be redeemed." Christians, in prayer, should make their requests known unto God, but should first consult his will and then ask in accordance with his will.

Solomon said: "Make not much babbling when thou prayest." Again, in reproving the unruly and boisterous, he said: "Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter anything before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words be few." (Eccles, 5; 2.) I have heard prayers (as they were called) which were so rash and boisterous that, had such been presented to our governor, he would have boosted the whole crowd from his office for unruly conduct God is not the author of confusion. When any one prays in the public assembly, he should speak out loud enough to be heard by all in the room, and all others should remain in profound silence, for the one who leads in prayer speaks for all, and at the close of the prayer all present should say, "Amen." Thus the prayer becomes as the prayer and voice of one, and God is honored and worshiped in the beauty of holiness. In prayer, a person should never quote poetry nor assume an agonizing voice. When shall I lead in prayer at your place of worship? For the year 1918 I bid you a kind adleu.

FOOT TROUBLES.

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem,

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the Southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the Ez-Wear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Advt.

Among the Colored Folks

Report from the Field.

BY S. W. WOMACK.

My last meeting left me at Sugar Grove, Ky., where we held four services—two at the church and two at the water—with two added by baptism. We had to close on account of the "flu." The meeting opened with fine prospects for a good meeting.

Returning to Nashville I found everything closed down; but a few of us met each Lord's day at Brother M. Keeble's house and worshiped.

I next went to Capleville, Tenn., to attend the trustees' meeting, and found things closed down; but I was there two days and nights. The people were ready and prepared for the meeting, and it was an encouraging one. The sum of four hundred and fifty-nine dollars and eight cents was collected. We are very thankful to those people for their kindness toward us.

Brother Thomas Harris, of Nashville, preached a series of sermons to the Jackson Street Church in November from the letters to the churches, and it was a treat to hear him. There was one confession. On the fourth Lord's day I spoke for the Jackson Street Church, and at night I spoke for the church in Lebanon.

On November 28, Thanksgiving Day, a boosters' meeting was held at the Silver Point Christian College. The talks, the attendance, and the contributions were encouraging. Brother A. M. Burton, of Nashville, has just donated one hundred dollars to repair the girls' building. We have received a nice donation from a large number of contributors at Sugar Grove, Ky. Other donations came in from Jackson Street Church, Capleville, Lebanon, Tullahoma, Duck River, Silver Point, and Washington, D. C. We are now making an effort to raise twenty-five hundred dollars, and we ask both white and colored to help us.

Safety First.

It is mighty easy to make little of every scratch, cut, burn, and sting. Sometimes you can neglect them and luckily get by without any serious infection. If you do, do not think you are fortunate. The next case of neglect may prove fatal. Blood poison is likely to set in unexpectedly, and the result may be fatal. Do not play with fate. Take care of your body. In every case of broken skin apply Gray's Ointment immediately and freely. It is healing and antiseptic. For nearly a century one of nature's greatest methods of insurance against infection. Telephone your druggist, or write to W. F. Gray & Co., $18 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., for sample.—Advt

LAXATIVE Aged People

THE BANE of old age is constipation. The bowels become weak and unable to perform their functions without aid. For this purpose only the mildest and gentlest laxative should be used. The use of harsh cathartics aggravates the trouble and makes the constipation worse. Chamberlain's Tablets are a favorite with people of middle age and older on account of their gentle action.

Fogs Have "Silence Zones."

Fog bells and buoys are frequently ineffective, because of the "zones of silence" prevalent in fog banks. Frequently these zones not only retard a sound, but stop it entirely. In the same bank or fog there will be a long lane through which sound will carry clerily. The result is that one ship may hear another that is far off and have no hint of a third that is close at hand.—People's Home Journal.

Peace Over Earth Again.

Rejoice, O world of troubled men; For peace is coming back again-Peace to the trenches running red, Peace to the hosts of the fleeing dead, Peace to the fields where hatred raves, Peace to the trodden battle-graves.

'Twill be the Peace the Master left. To hush the world of peace bereft-The peace proclaimed in lyric cries That night the angels broke the skies. Again the shell-torn hills will be All green with barley to the knee; And little children sport and run In love once more with earth and sun. Again in rent and ruined trees Young leaves will sound like silver

And birds now stunned by the red uproar

Will build in happy boughs once more; And to the bleak uncounted graves The grass will run in silken waves; And a great hush will softly fall On tortured plain and mountain wall, Now wild with cries of battling hosts And curses of the fleeing ghosts.

And men will wonder over it-This red upflaming of the Pit; And they will gather as friends and sav:

"Come, let us try the Master's way. Ages we tried the way of swords, And earth is weary of hostile hordes. Comrades, read out His words again; They are the only hope for men! Love and not hate must come to birth: Christ and not Cain must rule the earth."

Does it Pay to Be a Christian?

RV R. A CRAIC

Many brethren do not practice living so that they can answer this onestion in the affirmative; but all have not "bowed to Baal," and some are ready to say, "It pays."

After giving themselves to God, many brethren fail to "go on unto perfection," and, consequently, they fail to learn of, and to enjoy, the many blessings that accompany the Christian life. When considering temporal things, man seems to have a clearer vision than when considering spiritual things. When contemplating an investment, man wants to place his money where he will receive the biggest per cent on the principal invested. Of course, it pays to do that, because man has learned from experience that loss means poverty and gain means riches. When considering fraternal orders, men will say it pays to be an Odd Fellow, a Mason, a Knight of Pythias, or a Woodman of the World. Of course, these institutions thrive and grow and bless their servants in a temporal way; but to be a Christian pays dividends that far exceed the blessings of all the temporal institutions of man. What does the Christian life pay? When considering the question of conscience, we are bound to say nothing can give a good conscience but the Christian life. "To have a conscience void of offense toward God and men always' ' (Acts 24: 16) is priceless to the Christian. Some are deceived in their conscience, and because they know not the sting of remorse are ready to say they are at peace with God. The seared conscience knows no pain, because sin has burned its way deep into It, and, like seared flesh, there remains no life in it.

Brethren will stay at home on the first day of the week and ignore the plain command of God, which says: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together." (Heb. 10: 25.) Of course, the result is a seared conscience. The man who has his name on the church book and who willfully ignores any command of God when he knows his duty and is not concerned. that man has a seared conscience. A good conscience is not all that the Christian life pays. When we think of prayer, we are reminded of another blessing of the Christian life, To pray to God in Christ's name, with full assurance that your prayer will be answered, is worth more than precious gems. What a glorious thing to know by faith that God has brought to a close the great world war, because Christian people have cried to him day and night in prayer! scourge of disease stalking our country will abate also, if Christians will continue praying.

But a good conscience and the benefits derived from prayer are not all the Christian life pays. It pays to be a Christian because it teaches men to love-not our friends only, but our enemies also. God commands that we love our enemies. (Matt. 5: 44.) By loving we will have a forgiving spirit. But how can we love our enemies if we bite and devour one another? Brethren, "let us not love in word, neither with the tongue; but in deed and truth." (1 John 3: 18.)

It pays to be a Christian because it keeps one meek and humble, Worldly wisdom is the foundation of egotism and false pride. Egotism and false pride cause many to stray from the right path. The world is unsteady to-day because of egotistic minds, and Christians are being persecuted because they want the Bible as it is written, not twisted and warped by propagators of new thought. and German rationalism. God promises a blessing to the meek. (See Matt. 5: 5.) There is no way to obtain this blessing outside the Christian life. "It pays to be a Christian because it teaches us to sacrifice. Every Christian knows that God will have nothing but the best offered to him as a sacrifice. Hence, he says: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy. acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." It pays to be a Christian because some day we shall appear before the judgment seat of God. Christians will hear him say: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." To enter into the joy of the Lord, where there is no pain, nor sickness, nor sorrow, nor dying, but where we are like the angels of God in heaven, is worth more than this world could give even though we should live a billion years.

In Flanders on the Christmas morn The trenched foemen lay, The German and the Briton born-And it was Christmas day.

The red sun rose on fields accurst, The gray fog fled away; But neither cared to fire the first, For it was Christmas day.

They called from each to each across The hideous disarray (For terrible had been their loss): O, this is Christmas day!"

Their rifles all they set aside, One impulse to obey; 'Twas just the men on either side-Just men, and Christmas day.

They dug the graves for all their dead, And over them did pray; And Englishman and German said: "How strange a Christmas day!"

Between the trenches then they met, Shook hands, and e'en did play At games on which their hearts are set On happy Christmas day.

Not all the emperors and kings, Financiers, and they Who rule us could prevent these things-

For it was Christmas day.

Calomel Salivates And Makes You Sick

Acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver and you lose a day's work.

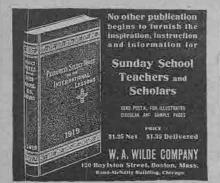

There is no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant, vegetable liquid, which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it does not make you sick and cannot salivate.

Children and grown folks can take Dodson's Liver Tone, because it is perfectly harmless.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel to-day and you will feel weak, sick, and nauseated to-morrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone Instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue, or sour stomach. OBITUARIES

Mitchell.

Felix Turner Mitchell was born on September 10, 1891, the eleventh child of J. W. and Mary Ann Mitchell. He was "born again" in September, 1908, under the preaching of Brother Charles Ward, and his life was a consistent progress along the path that leads to eternal mansions. Turner was a boy that could always be depended upon. Whatever the circumstances, wherever the place, whatever the occasion, he could always be found contending earnestly for the faith. He often met with us, some ten miles from his home, and his part of the worship was always an exhibition of zeal for the cause of Christ, linked with a knowledge of what the Lord would have done. Felix was the last boy at home, and his death leaves his father without necessary assistance at home, and for that reason he is doubly missed. But what a consolation to his loved ones that he died in the Lord and is now resting from his labors, and that they can daily see his works following him, leading others to see the way of the Lord! The entire Scottsboro congregation join me in loving sympathy to the bereaved ones. His death occurred on J. M. GAINER. July 26, 1918.

Thomas.

Fred Thomas was born in Weakley Tenn., on July 26, 1896, and County. died, of Spanish influenza, at Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Ala., on October 21, 1918. Although I have known his parents many years, I never had the pleasure of an intimate acquaintance with Fred. He obeyed the gospel under the preaching and persua-sion of John T. Smith, and, from what I have been able to learn from his associates, he must have been a mighty good boy. His soul revolted at the thought of carnal warfare, and throughout his entire stay at camp he appeared in a depressed state of mind, often weeping for the associa-tion of loved ones and home. Though quartered with men who neither respected his religion nor loved his God, he neither forsook the one nor forgot the other. All through the day before his death he quoted familiar passages of holy writ, and among his last words were: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Like the waters of the Jordan at the feet of the prophet, death recedes before such Christians. "But we would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them that fall asleep; that ye sorrow not, even as the rest, who have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus God bring with him. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." C. M. STUBBLEFIELD, Taylor.

Sister Ida Taylor was born on October 29, 1874; married J. W. Taylor on December 29, 1896; and died on October 11, 1918; aged forty-three years, eleven months, and twelve days. Sister Taylor obeyed the gospel at the age of fourteen and had lived a life of unusual devotion to the cause of Christ for thirty years. The writer has known her intimately during the past five years, and has always found her as near the ideal Christian wife and mother as he has ever known. She was always regular at any and all services of the church and manifested a keen interest in its activi-She is survived by her father and mother, two brothers and one sisher husband and five children. Brother Taylor is one of the most faithful and beloved of the Pulaski brethren, and has shown himself worthy to have had such a companion. Three of the children are devout Christians, the other two have not reached the age of accountability: One particularly sad feature of this death was that four of the children were seriously sick at the time and could not attend their mother's burial. Another sad echo of the influenza scourge that has just swept over us. The children have since recovered. After funeral services at the home by the writer, her body was carried back to Cornersville, Tenn., her girlhood home, for burial. Thus another happy home has seen its first great sorrow. May the Heavenly Father comfort them in their sorrow. J. T. CLARK.

Clements.

By request of a special friend of mine and a relative of the deceased, I write a few words concerning the life and passing of Sister Della Clemens, of Dixon Springs, Ill. Among the many who were called upon to answer the summons of the messenger of death which came as a result of the dreadful influenza epidemic was the fair, beautiful, modest, kind, loving, Christian companion of Broth er J. D. Clemens, of the Dixon Springs church of Christ. The subject of this notice did not believe in the strewing of flowers merely because one had passed into the beyond, but I believe that I could not find words to express

"More Eggs" Paid the Pastor.

"I've got more eggs than I ever did in my life, paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and I paid the pastor his dues. I have money to spare now. 'More Eggs' is the remedy for me. I sold forty-two and one-half dozen eggs last week, set four dozen, ate some, and I have one and one-half dozen left."—Mrs. Lens McBroom, Woodbury, Tenn.

This remarkable egg producer means big poultry profits for you. Don't delay. Send a dollar to-day to E J. Reefer, 3259 Reefer Building, Kansas City. Mo., for a package of "More Eggs;" or, better yet, send him $2.25 and he will send you three packages of "More Eggs" tonic, prepaid. This is a season's full supply. A million-dollar bank guarantees that if you are not absolutely satisfied, your money will be returned on request without question. So send either a dollar or $2.25 to-day for this wonderful egg producer; or write Mr. Reefer for his FREE poultry book that tells the experience of a man who is helping a great many people make money with their poultry and who himself has made a fortune out of the poultry business.

the full truth concerning the beauties 1 have known Sister Della of her life. all of my life. My father lived on her father's farm at my earliest recollec-tion, and I remember seeing her in the schoolroom in my first school days. Upon reaching about the fourth grade, I was under Brother Dee's instruc-tion for one term. She was also in Brother Dee's instrucschool at that time and place, and perhaps only they dreamed of the happiness that lay before them during their companionship. But years passed by and Della became a young woman, for it seems to me that she was only in her teens then. She obeyed the gospel at an early age, for she was reared in a church that had much preaching done. Her father's home was the home of the preacher, and he fared far from poorly while there, Brother Dee in time came to claim her hand, and it seemed as young Gabriel in the home of Evangeline. Gabriel in the nome as he. They None were so welcome as he. They became one in heart and life. A new home was begun, a model one in every sense. It always appeared that union, prosperity, and happiness reigned there. Many are the preachers that would testify that that home was the preacher's home while stopping in that community. Into this home came a bright baby boy, now fifteen years of age. Under the influence of this home, his babyhood was short. He became a young man real young, and has been himself a Christian for some four years. Wayne has every reason to be proud of being the son of such a worthy mother. She offered her life for him once; she gave it for him at the last, for in taking care of him so faithfully and tenderly during his illness she became endangered and really passed away. Della was the only daughter of S. C. and Mendoze Cletcher, so well known through the county and adjoining sections. Their loss is great, Brother Dee's is greater, while Wayne's is beyond compare. May God bless them all. The dearest thing on earth is a wife and mother. She blessed the earth thirty-six years, eleven months, and twenty-one days. Her beautiful life ended at Carbon-dale, where they were living temporarily that Wayne might attend the State Normal. It takes a strong faith to always say, "Thy will be done." The Lord says: "My grace is sufficient for thee." In our weakness, may we find strength. Many prayers are for the bereaved. F. L. PAISLEY.

Ten Reasons for Superiority of the Brooks Appliance.

It is the only Appliance of the kind on the market today and in it are embodied the principles that inventors have sought for years.

2. The Appliance for retaining the rup-ture cannot be thrown out of position.

5. Being an air cushion of soft rubber it clings closely to the body, yet herer blisters or causes irritation.

Unlike the ordinary co-catled pads, used in other trusses, it is not cumber-some or ungainly.

5. It is small, soft and pliable, and cannot be detected through the slothing.

6. The soft, pliable bands beiding the Appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.

7. There is nothing shout it to get foul, and when it becomes solled it can be washed without injuring it in the least.

There are no metal springs in the Appliance to forture one by cutting and bruising the flesh.

All of the material of which the Appliances are made is of the very best that meney can buy, making it a durable and safe Appliance to wear.

10. Our reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and our prices are so reasonable, our terms so fair that there certainly should be no healtancy in sending the free coupon today.
